If it is decided to consult the Governments at thise arly stage, the last part of Rule 4—according to which the Governments are to be requested to submit their observations in writing on the revised draft—might well be struck out. The preparatory procedure should be decided upon after the establishment of the revised draft convention. Though fully aware of the value of effective preparation, Her Majesty's Government considers that it should be borne in mind that over-long preparation is liable to destroy all initiative in this matter.

In conclusion, the Netherlands Government wishes to draw attention to the desirability of drawing up the rules regarding preparatory procedure in the matter of conventions in general, and the rules concerning the codification of international law, so far as possible on the same lines.

Sweden.

[Translation.]

The aim of the measures recommended in the resolution of the Eleventh Assembly is admirable and their application would undoubtedly lead to a more thorough preparation of the draft conventions in question, thus increasing the chances of success of international conferences meeting under the auspices of the League of Nations. The necessary flexibility would also be fully maintained, as the Assembly and Council are left free to adopt an alternative procedure whenever necessary. The Royal Government nevertheless desires to make the following brief remarks on the proposed rules:

1. Paragraph 1 deals with conventions to be concluded on the initiative of the organs of the League of Nations and paragraph 7 with the cases in which the initiative is taken either by the Assembly or by an individual Government. By the terms of the resolution, the organs mentioned in the first paragraph will be required to present a report explaining the objects which it is desired to achieve by the conclusion of the Convention and the benefits which result therefrom, but it is nowhere stated by whom this report should be drawn up in cases where the initiative is taken by the Assembly or by a Government. Nor, surely, should a report be presented on the proposals of individual Governments unless accepted in principle by the Assembly or Council. I consider therefore that it would be desirable to combine paragraphs 1 and 7 and to add to the present text of paragraph 1 some such phrase as the following:

> "If the Assembly of the League of Nations decides in favour of the conclusion of a convention, the Council shall instruct either the Secretariat or some other organ of the League or specially selected experts, to prepare the above-mentioned report, which shall subsequently be submitted to the Council."

2. Paragraph 2 contains no rule for cases in which the Council does not in principle accept the proposal. It would therefore be advisable to add the following phrase to the present text:

> "If it thinks that the proposal should not be taken into consideration, the Council shall transmit the report to the Assembly, which may, if it thinks fit, request the Council to consult the Governments."

3. Paragraph 3 refers to the convocation "of the contemplated conference", but, in the preceding passage, no mention is made of any conference. It is moreover conceivable that, in certain circumstances, the conclusion of an international convention would not necessitate the convocation of a special conference. I venture therefore to suggest the following amendment to the text:

> ". . . whether to propose to the Council the convocation of a special conference or to refer the question to a future Assembly with a view to the possible adoption of a convention."

[1] See document A.12.1931.V.

4. The proposed amendment to paragraph 3 would logically require the addition to paragraph 4 of some such phrase as the following:

"The same procedure shall be followed if the Assembly has postponed the question to a later session with a view to the adoption of a convention."

5. Similarly, paragraph 5 should provide for an alternative procedure in accordance with which the Council would transmit the proposal and the Governments' replies to the Assembly.

The following Governments state that they have no observations to offer:

India Denmark[1] New Zealand

In its reply to the Secretary-General's request for its observations, the Government of Chile makes no objection to the procedure contemplated for the preparatory work for conferences, but it raises a question of principle in regard to the whole series of decisions adopted by the Assembly on the subject of the ratification of conventions. The text of the Chilian Government's letter will be found in the document A.30.1931.V.

III. OBSERVATIONS OF THE TECHNICAL ORGANISATIONS.

Economic Committee.

The Economic Committee was asked for its observations on the procedure recommended in No. IV of a series of resolutions adopted by the Eleventh Assembly relating more particularly to the preparations for conferences convened to conclude universal conventions.

The Committee desires to point out in the first place that, according to the actual terms of this resolution, the rules proposed allow of modifications or exceptions being made, more particularly where, "owing to the nature of the questions to be treated or to special circumstances, the Assembly or the Council considers other methods to be more appropriate".

In the Committee's opinion, this reservation seems essential in order to enable particular needs to be met. The Economic Committee will probably have to prepare, especially in the future, international agreements of a commercial type, such as the two Agreements regarding the export of hides and skins, and bones, and the Commercial Convention. Such Agreements are of use only if they are prepared and concluded within a relatively short time.

Consequently, the Economic Committee should, as in the past, be in a position to obtain from the Council at any time authorisation to prepare agreements much more rapidly than would be possible by adhering strictly to the terms of the resolution, the application of which would only require a period of from three to five years.

The Committee therefore considers that it might find itself obliged to make use of the reservation in the Assembly's resolution, and to ask the Council to apply such methods and procedure as it might think suitable for the requirements of individual cases.

Financial Committee.

The Committee notes that the procedure laid down in the resolution will not be applicable where the Assembly or the Council considers other methods to be more appropriate. From its point of view, this is an essential safeguard. The Committee is constantly called upon to deal with financial questions of which the solution is extremely urgent. If it considers that solution to lie in the conclusion of a general international agreement, it must have full power to obtain from the Council measures which will enable such agreement to be concluded much more expeditiously than would be possible under the resolution, the full application of which would require a period of about three years. The Committee notes that the international instruments which have been drafted by it in connection with the financial reconstruction of various countries are, in any case, not general conventions within the meaning of the resolution.

Health Committee.

The Health Committee states "that it has no objection to raise to the rules of procedure in question, which it considers to be of a nature to facilitate the ratification of international conventions, even if they may involve some delay".

[1] The Danish Government reserves the right to return to the subject later, if it finds this desirable.

Advisory and Technical Committee for Communications and Transit.

The Advisory and Technical Committee,

Considers, in view of the resolution ofthe Assem bly of December 9th, 1920, and of the provisions of the Statute of the Communications and Transit Organisation adopted at the First and Third General Conferences on Communications and Transit, that the procedure followed by the Transit Organisation for the preparation of general conventions is among the cases mentioned by the Assembly where "previous conventions or arrangements have established a special procedure" and that, consequently, the new procedure proposed by the Assembly does not involve a modification of the rules at present followed by the Communications and Transit Organisation ;

Notes that the said rules followed by the Transit Organisation and this Organisation's practice, which involve continuous contact for the study of all questions with those specially concerned by means of discussions and enquiries carried on by the Advisory and Technical Committee and by its permanent Committees, are inspired by the prudent considerations which guided the Assembly in the adoption of the resolution of October 3rd, 1930, and that experience has shown that these methods, being peculiarly adapted to the study of the technical problems of communications and transit, guard against the premature summoning of international conferences which may be called upon to conclude conventions.

Apart from the case of communications and transit conventions, the Advisory and Technical Committee desires to draw the Assembly's attention to the fact that, within the terms of the resolution of October 3rd, 1930, it will no doubt be frequently necessary to make use of the exception provided for by the said resolution "owing to the nature of the questions to be treated or to special circumstances". It seems clear that, even if no special difficulty arises during the preparatory studies, a strict application of the rules laid down by the Assembly would involve the elapse of about four years between the moment when the attention of an organ of the League is drawn to a question on which an international convention is desirable and the moment when this convention can be concluded.

Child Welfare Committee.

The Committee noted the report adopted by the Eleventh Assembly, and devoted special attention to Part IV of Resolution I.

Fiscal Committee.

The Assembly resolution of October 3rd, 1930 (Section IV), lays down the preparatory procedure to be followed in principle in the case of all general conventions to be negotiated under the auspices of the League. The Fiscal Committee, in common with the other technical organisations of the League, is invited to examine this procedure in order that the Assembly at its next session may judge whether any changes should be made in it.

The Committee notes that, in the terms of the resolution itself, the rules of procedure which it lays down are open to modification and exceptions, particularly in cases where, in view of the nature of the questions for discussion or special circumstances, "the Assembly or the Council considers other methods to be more appropriate".

The Committee feels bound to insist on the importance of this reservation, which, from its point of view, constitutes an essential safeguard. It may sometimes be desirable to conclude within a short period international conventions for limited purposes, which do not require any lengthy procedure of consultation. The case of the Convention on the Fiscal Treatment of Foreign Motor Vehicles, which was signed after preparatory work of barely eighteen months, shows that expeditious procedure may have satisfactory results. The Fiscal Committee accordingly considers that the possibility should be left open for it to have recourse to such procedure in case of need.

ANNEX 7.

NATIONALITY OF WOMEN.

REPORT BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL.

I. Resolution of the Council placing the Question on the Assembly's Agenda.

On January 24th, 1931, the following proposal was submitted to the Council by the representatives of Guatemala, Peru and Venezuela :

> "The Council will remember that the question of the nationality of women was discussed at length at the Conference for the Codification of International Law held at The Hague in March and April 1930. The discussions did not result in an international settlement of this question. The States were, in particular, recommended to study the question whether it would not be possible (1) to introduce into their law the principle of the equality of the sexes in matters of nationality, taking particularly into consideration the interests of the children, and (2) especially to decide that, in principle, the nationality of the wife should henceforth not be affected without her consent either by the mere fact of marriage or by any change in the nationality of her husband.

"It is to be noted that there is a clear movement of opinion throughout the world in favour of a suitable settlement of this question.

"Various members of the Council have received petitions from women's organisations urging the Council to appoint a committee of women to consider the question of the nationality of women and submit a report on the subject to the 1931 Assembly.

"We venture to propose the adoption by the Council of the following resolution:

"'The Council,

"'Decides to place on the agenda of the next session of the Assembly the question of the continued study of the nationality of women and

"'Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly a report on the question after consultation of the following organisations[1], which have been specially concerned with the nationality of women:

"'The International Council of Women,
"'The International Alliance of Women for Suffrage and Equal Citizenship,
"'The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom,
"'The Inter-American Commission of Women,
"'The Equal Rights International,
"'The World Union of Women for International Concord,
"'The All-Asian Conference of Women,
"'The International Federation of University Women,
"'The World's Young Women's Christian Association.

"'The Secretary-General might, if he thinks fit, request the above-named organisations to set up a committee, consisting of two representatives of each organisation, with the task of formulating joint proposals to be attached to the report to be submitted to the Assembly.'"

The resolution proposed was adopted by the Council.

II. Convocation of a Committee of Representatives of the Women's International Organisations.

On February 13th, 1931, the Secretary-General wrote to the organisations mentioned in the Council's resolution informing them that, in his opinion, the procedure contemplated in the last paragraph of the resolution would furnish the most convenient method by which they could be consulted and their views placed before the Assembly. He therefore invited them to enter into communication with one another with a view to the establishment of a committee.

The Secretary-General's invitation was accepted by all the organisations concerned, with the exception of the World's Young Women's Christian Association, which preferred not to be represented on the Committee, as it had never adopted an official policy on the question to be discussed.

The Committee met in the Secretariat's offices on July 2nd and the following days. It drew up the report which, in accordance with the Council's resolution, is reproduced in the annex to the present document.

III. Previous Consideration of the Question under the Auspices of the League of Nations.

The League has been concerned with the question of the nationality of women as part of the general question of codification of international law on the subject of nationality.

1. Committee of Experts for the Progressive Codification of International Law.

Nationality was selected as a possible subject for codification by the Committee of Experts for the Progressive Codification of International Law in 1926, after consideration of a report of a Sub-Committee composed of M. Rundstein (Rapporteur), M. de Magalhães and M. Schücking. In the draft Convention annexed to this report, however, it was not proposed to deal directly or completely with the question of equality of the sexes in the matter of nationality. Provisions were inserted merely to provide against cases of total loss of nationality or double nationality arising as a result of marriage or change of the husband's nationality and for the purpose of enabling a woman who, on marriage, lost her nationality without acquiring that of her husband to obtain passport and enjoy diplomatic protection.

The Rapporteur was aware that the suggestions made in the report fell short of what was demanded by those who considered that both sexes should stand on the same footing as regards nationality. He had considered, in particular, a provisional draft international Convention on the nationality of married women which had been drawn up by the International Women's Suffrage Alliance. The reasons why he felt unable to go beyond the proposals above described are indicated in the following passage of his report:

> "Although the establishment of a world law on this subject, or the adoption as a basis for internal laws of the general principles embodied in the draft, is very desirable, it cannot be affirmed that the moment for such measures has come. The obstacles in the way of such a solution would seem to be very great, for it is not likely that the States of the Continent of Europe would be inclined to accept, without any limitation, the principle that the marriage of a foreign woman with a national does not involve the loss of her original nationality. Even countries which recognise the right of a woman who is a national and who marries a foreigner to refuse to acquire the foreign nationality of her husband (unilateral system) might seriously object to the reciprocal application of this principle.
> "I am of opinion, therefore, that the introduction of the general principles laid down in the above-mentioned draft Convention concerning the nationality of married women would now be premature, and can only be contemplated at a later stage in the work of codification. In the work of progressive codification, the greatest caution is required, in order not to compromise the possibilities of a general international regulation to which internal laws would be subordinated. For this reason, an attempt must be made to prevent or to remove the most acute and harmful conflicts, while taking into account the political obstacles which might make even the most modest work of codification impossible. In view of the impossibility—which I suppose to be only temporary—of settling all conflicts regarding the nationality of married women, I am of opinion that, in present circumstances, only three problems can form the subject of international regulation."

The Committee of Experts transmitted M. Rundstein's report to the Governments and ultimately to the Council as indicating the extent to which, in its opinion, the question of nationality lent itself to regulation by international agreement.

2. Preparatory Committee for the Codification Conference.

The Assembly having decided to place the subject of nationality on the agenda of the Codification Conference which met at The Hague in March and April 1930, the Preparatory Committee which was appointed to prepare bases for discussion at the Conference circulated to the Governments, in accordance with the instructions given it by the Assembly, a list of points on which the Governments were invited to state their views, both as to existing international law and practice and as to any modifications therein which might be desirable.

The question of the nationality of women formed the object of three such points—namely:

Point XI.—Effect of marriage upon the nationality of the wife;
Point XII.—Effect of dissolution of a marriage upon the nationality of the wife;
Point XIII.—Other effects of marriage upon nationality.

The conclusions drawn by the Committee from the replies which were made by the Governments were stated as follows in its report:

Point XI.

> "The replies submitted do not make it possible at present to hope for a general agreement establishing either the rule that marriage does not affect the wife's nationality or the rule that the wife takes by marriage the nationality of her husband.
> "It appears at least possible, and it is desirable, to prevent the operation of conflicting legal rules from causing a woman to lose her nationality, as the result of marriage, without acquiring another. It would be sufficient for this purpose to agree that the loss of the one nationality shall be conditional on the acquisition of the other. The two contrasting legal systems remain unaffected, but the woman will be prevented from becoming stateless."

Point XII.

> "Here the divergences between different legal systems may involve the wife either in loss of all nationality or in double nationality. It is desirable to establish a concordance between her recovery of her former nationality and her loss of the nationality acquired by her marriage, making such loss dependent on the recovery of the former nationality. On the other hand, instead of contemplating a recovery of the former nationality operating automatically and in every case, it appears proper to allow it only on application by the woman herself; it is to be presumed that she will take account of the interests of her children."

Point XIII.

> "It does not seem possible to extract from the replies any point on which a further basis of discussion is needed."

The Committee transmitted to the Conference bases of discussion in accordance with these conclusions (Bases Nos. 16 to 19: see Minutes of the First Committee of the Conference, page 277).

3. Codification Conference held at The Hague from March 13th to April 12th, 1930.

The question of nationality was discussed in the First Committee of the Conference on which all the delegations were represented.

The discussion of the question of the nationality of women was not confined within the limits of the Bases of Discussion which, as stated in the last section, had been drawn up by the Preparatory Committee.

On March 15th, the Bureau of the Conference received a joint deputation from the International Council of Women and the International Alliance of Women for Suffrage and Equal Citizenship, supported by other international and national bodies. The deputation presented to the Bureau a memorandum setting out briefly the desiderata of the organisations which it represented, and explanatory statements were made to the Bureau by various members of the deputation. The Bureau transmitted the memorandum and the record of its interview with the deputation to the First Committee.[1]

On April 1st, the Committee itself heard statements from representatives of the organisations which had put forward the memorandum.

The results of the discussion in the First Committee were summarised in its report to the Conference in the following passage of its report:

"BASIS No. 16.

"A very full discussion took place on the question of the nationality of married women. Further, the Committee, before taking its decisions, heard the views of the delegations of the women's international associations, who, after being received by the Bureau of the Conference, expressed the desire to lay their views also before the Committee itself at a plenary meeting.

"Thus, the texts of Bases 16 to 19 were adopted with a full knowledge of the facts and after an exhaustive examination both of the situation and of existing tendencies.

"Basis No. 16 provides that, if the national law of the wife causes her to lose her nationality on marriage with a foreigner, this consequence shall be conditional on her acquiring the nationality of the husband. As already observed, this text forms a compromise between two diametrically opposed conceptions—that of the countries which consider that, in the matter of nationality, there should be complete equality between the sexes, and that of the countries in which the status of the husband governs that of the wife. Although some countries admit the former principle in their laws either wholly or in part, and apply it more or less completely, the laws of many countries provide that, from the point of view of nationality, the wife must, as a rule, follow her husband.

"It was observed that the co-existence of these two principles—the freedom of the wife on the one hand and the unity of the family on the other—had the effect of increasing the number of cases of double nationality and also of statelessness. In point of fact, a woman can lose her nationality through marriage with a foreigner, and, being unable to acquire that of her husband, can become stateless; while, on the other hand, retaining the nationality she possesses by birth, she can also acquire that of her husband. For that reason the Committee, without attempting to decide in favour of either of the two existing systems —indeed, that is rather the duty of the legislatures of the different countries—simply endeavoured to remedy some of the defects resulting from existing conditions and, in particular, the case of statelessness provided for in the text of this Basis. If States adopt this text, progress will have been made in eliminating cases of statelessness among married women.

"Several delegations had proposed to add a provision to the effect that a woman who, according to her national law, is entitled, on marrying a foreigner, either to take her husband's nationality or to retain her own nationality, does not lose her nationality unless she acquires her husband's nationality under the latter's national law.

"The delegations which proposed this additional paragraph withdrew it, because the Committee thought, first, that the case was covered by the text of the Basis, and also because the possibility referred to in this proposal would, in practice, very seldom arise. A woman who, under her national legislation, is allowed an option, will certainly not renounce her nationality until she has made sure that, according to the law of her husband's country, she can acquire her husband's nationality.

"The text adopted by the Committee, by thirty-two votes to two, has become Article 8 of the Convention:

"Article 8.

"If the national law of the wife causes her to lose her nationality on marriage with a foreigner, this consequence shall be conditional on her acquiring the nationality of the husband.

"RECOMMENDATION.

"Although, in order to harmonise, as far as possible, the various opinions expressed, the Committee did not feel itself called upon to introduce any alterations in Basis No. 16, it nevertheless agreed to the suggestion, put forward by various delegations, to adopt a vœu pointing out that there was a fairly pronounced tendency to place both sexes on an equal footing in the matter of nationality, taking into consideration the interest of the children, and also to allow a woman who marries a foreigner greater freedom in the matter of retaining her nationality of origin.

[1] These documents are reproduced as an annex to the Minutes of the First Committee of the Conference.

"In this connection, the Committee combined in one text two proposals submitted, one by the Belgian delegation and the other by the delegation of the United States of America and, by twenty-seven votes to two, it adopted the following recommendation:

"VI. The Conference recommends to the States the study of the question whether it would not be possible:

"(1) To introduce into their law the principle of the equality of the sexes in matters of nationality, taking particularly into consideration the interests of the children;

"(2) And especially to decide that, in principle, the nationality of the wife shall henceforth not be affected without her consent either by the mere fact of marriage or by any change in the nationality of her husband.

"BASIS No. 17.

"The text of the Preparatory Committee, which the Committee adopted by thirty votes to two and which has become Article 9 of the Convention, is as follows:

"Article 9.

"If the national law of the wife causes her to lose her nationality upon a change in the nationality of her husband occurring during marriage, this consequence shall be conditional on her acquiring her husband's new nationality.

"BASIS No. 18.

"The Committee rejected a proposal to omit this Basis and adopted the text of the Preparatory Committee by twenty-three votes to seven. This has become Article 10 of the Convention.

"Article 10.

"Naturalisation of the husband during marriage shall not involve a change in the nationality of the wife except with her consent.

"BASIS No. 19.

"The Committee did not accept a proposal to delete this Basis. By twenty-six votes to two it adopted the following text, which has become Article 11 of the Convention.

"Article 11.

"The wife who, under the law of her country, lost her nationality on marriage shall not recover it after the dissolution of the marriage except on her own application and in accordance with the law of that country. If she does recover it, she shall lose the nationality which she acquired by reason of the marriage.

"The Committee then adopted, in the form of a recommendation, a Polish proposal, supported by the delegation of Salvador, to the effect that a woman who becomes a stateless person in consequence of her marriage may obtain a passport from the State of which her husband is a national.

"This recommendation, which was adopted by all the members except two, reads as follows:

"VII. The Conference recommends that a woman who, in consequence of her marriage, has lost her previous nationality without acquiring that of her husband, should be able to obtain a passport from the State of which her husband is a national."

On April 10th, the conclusions of the First Committee were submitted to the Conference, which adopted the draft Convention on Nationality and the two recommendations dealing with the nationality of women put forward by the Committee.

4. Resolution proposed by the Cuban Delegation in the First Committee of the Assembly in 1930.

During the course of the discussion of the question of progressive codification of international law in the First Committee of the Assembly in 1930, the following resolution was submitted by the representative of Cuba:

"Whereas the Conference for the Codification of International Law, held at The Hague in 1930, adopted a Convention on Nationality, and some States represented at the Conference did not accept it in its entirety, or submitted reservations in respect of certain articles thereof, and, further, no State has hitherto ratified this Convention;

"Whereas the same Conference, after approving the Convention on Nationality, adopted a resolution recommending the States to study the possibility of introducing into their respective legislations the principle of the equality of the sexes in matters of nationality;

"Whereas the First Committee is instructed by the Assembly to consider Item 19 of the agenda regarding the Progressive Codification of International Law;

"The Cuban delegation proposes to the Committee to submit to the Assembly, among the other points dealt with in its decisions on codification, the following resolution:

"'The Assembly begs the Council to examine whether it would be desirable to take up again, with a view to the next Conference for the Codification of International Law, the question of the nationality of women.'"

The Committee decided that the question of progressive codification should be adjourned to the Assembly's session of 1931 and no discussion of the above proposal took place.

IV. Questions to be decided by the Assembly.

As regards the nationality of women, the results attained at the Hague Conference were:

1. The adoption of a Convention the general application of which would prevent differences in the nationality laws of different countries from causing a woman to be without nationality as the result of marriage or of a change in her husband's nationality (Articles 8 and 9) and prevent automatic change of the nationality of a married woman as the result of naturalisation of her husband or dissolution of the marriage (Articles 10 and 11), together with a recommendation for the granting of passports to women who are without nationality as the result of marriage.

2. A recommendation to States to introduce the principle of the equality of the sexes more fully into their nationality laws.

At the date of the present report the Convention had been signed by:[1]

Australia	France	Mexico
Austria	Germany	The Netherlands
Belgium	Great Britain and Northern Ireland	Norway
Canada	Greece	Peru
Chile	Hungary	Poland
China	Iceland	Portugal
Colombia	India	Salvador
Cuba	Irish Free State	Spain
Czechoslovakia	Italy	Sweden
Free City of Danzig	Japan	Switzerland
Denmark	Latvia	Union of South Africa
Egypt	Luxemburg	Uruguay
Estonia		Yugoslavia

Ratifications and accessions had been given by: Monaco, Norway.

The Convention will enter into force ninety days after ten ratifications or accessions have been deposited.

The main question to be decided by the Assembly is whether it is desirable for the League to resume examination of the subject of the nationality of women in the light of the desiderata of the women's organisations, which are set out in the annex to the present report, or whether the results attained at the Hague Conference represent the maximum extent to which it is possible to secure general international agreement on this subject at the present moment.

The Assembly will doubtless, in any case, desire to bear in mind (a) the recommendation made by the Hague Conference itself that subjects should not be placed on the agenda of a conference until the Governments had been fully consulted as to the desirability of dealing with them and a substantial majority had expressed itself in favour of so doing; (b) the resolution adopted by the Assembly on October 3rd, 1930, on the proposal of the First Committee, for the purpose of ensuring careful investigation, and full consultation of the Governments, before a question is referred to a conference. The resolution of 1930 provides that, in the normal case, after the desirability of international action on a question has been recognised in principle, a first preliminary draft of a convention shall be submitted to the Governments for their observations, and that the Assembly shall decide, in the light of those observations, whether to propose to the Council to convene a conference. It the Assembly recommends that a conference shall be held, the Council is to arrange for the revision of the draft convention in the light of the Governments' replies, and the new draft, with the replies of all the Governments, is to be communicated to each Government for its observations. The final decision as to convening the conference is to be taken in the light of this second consultation of the Governments.

If the Assembly decides to take up the question of the nationality of women, it might be convenient that the first step should be the transmission to the Governments of the present report, which sets out the desiderata of the women's organisations and, possibly, also of the relevant Minutes of the discussion in the competent Committee of the Assembly, and that the Governments should be requested to submit their observations for consideration by the Assembly at its next session. If a conference is contemplated, it will doubtless ultimately be convenient for the Assembly to ask the Council to set up a special committee, on which the diverse views expressed at the Hague Conference would be duly represented, and which would report as to the possibility and desirability of action and, eventually, be charged with the preparation and subsequent revision of a draft convention. Previous consultation of the Governments would, however, probably not, in fact, involve any real delay in dealing with the matter, since the special committee could, for financial and administrative reasons, not meet until after the Disarmament Conference, and since, however representative its character, it might have difficulty in reaching conclusions without information as to how far the views of the Governments may have been affected by the consideration which they will have been able to give to the discussions at The Hague.

PROPOSALS OF THE COMMITTEE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS.

The Committee of representatives of women's international organisations, which met in response to the invitation addressed by the Secretary-General to the organisations named in the Council's resolution of January 24th, 1931, drew up the following document, which was officially transmitted to the Secretary-General on July 16th.

Report to the Secretary-General to be transmitted to the Assembly of the League of Nations by the Women's Consultative Committee on Nationality created by the January 1931 Council of the League of Nations.

STATEMENT BY WOMEN'S CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE ON NATIONALITY WITH REGARD TO THE HAGUE NATIONALITY CONVENTION.

Realising the far-reaching consequences for women—for greater freedom or greater subjection—involved in the project of the League of Nations for the codification of international law, which may lead to the establishing of a World Code of Law, this Committee presents the following statement concerning the Nationality Convention drawn up by the Hague Codification Conference in 1930, and which was designed to form the opening section of the proposed Code:

1. This Committee declares that it is opposed to the Hague Nationality Convention inasmuch as it differentiates between men and women as regards nationality.

2. This Committee wishes to express its support of the proposal put before the Hague Codification Conference by the delegation from Chile for a world agreement on nationality, reading:

"The Contracting States agree that, from the going into effect of this Convencion, there shall be no distinction based on sex in their law and practice relating to nationality."

3. This Committee, finally, urges the Assembly of the League of Nations to take immediate steps:

(a) To bring about the reconsideration of the Hague Nationality Convention; and

(b) To submit to the Governments for ratification a new Convention founded on the principle of equality between men and women with regard to nationality.

MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF PRECEDING STATEMENT.

I. Articles of the Hague Nationality Convention relating to Women.

The articles of the Hague Convention relating particularly to the nationality of women are as follows:

"Article 8.—If the national law of the wife causes her to lose her nationality on marriage with a foreigner, this consequence shall be conditional on her acquiring the nationality of the husband.

"Article 9.—If the national law of the wife causes her to lose her nationality upon a change in the nationality of her husband occurring during marriage, this consequence shall be conditional on her acquiring her husband's new nationality.

"Article 10.—Naturalisation of the husband during marriage shall not involve a change in the nationality of the wife except with her consent.

"Article 11.—The wife who; under the law of her country, lost her nationality on marriage shall not recover it after the dissolution of the marriage except on her own application and in accordance with the law of that country. If she does recover it, she shall lose the nationality which she acquired by reason of the marriage.

These articles, which are directed mainly to preventing statelessness and dual nationality, would, if ratified, give recognition in an international convention to the old idea of the subordinate position of women in the matter of nationality and to the old custom by which a woman's nationality was made to depend upon that of her husband. These articles, it should be noted further, are at variance with the point of view expressed in the Recommendation (No. VI) concerning the nationality of women, which was also adopted by the Hague Conference and which reads as follows:

"The Conference recommends to States the study of the question whether it would not be possible:

"(1) To introduce into their law the principle of the equality of the sexes in matters of nationality, taking particularly into consideration the interests of the children;

"(2) And especially to decide that, in principle, the nationality of the wife shall henceforth not be affected without her consent either by the mere fact of marriage or by any change in the nationality of her husband."

II. Opposition to the Convention.

The inclusion in the Hague Convention of articles giving an inferior position to women is a matter of the utmost gravity because of the psychological effect of the adoption of such a Convention upon the status of women all over the world. Women deeply resent the writing into an international agreement of articles founded upon the theory of the subjection of women. To recognise in practice this old idea is a refusal to treat a woman as a citizen in her own person. It is to deny her the status of an adult. Furthermore, it gives recognition to a system which has serious practical as well as spiritual consequences; a system which may deprive her of the vote; may deprive her at home and abroad of the protection of her own Government; may subject her even in her native land to the restrictions placed on aliens; may deprive her of the benefits of state insurance and other state assistance; may make it impossible for her to hold public office, to exercise her profession, to obtain paid employment, to own and inherit property, and may place her under other disabilities.

A code of international law should express the highest ideals. For this reason the Convention on Nationality should stand unequivocally for equality between men and women. The fact that some countries are not yet ready to accept such a Convention is not a reason for compromise with regard to the principle of equality. Any country not ready to accept the Convention in full with regard to this point could make reservations until a time when its legislation could be brought into harmony with the Convention.

III. Demand for re-opening the Question of the Convention.

In support of the recommendation for re-opening the question of the Hague Convention, this Committee calls to the attention of the Assembly that it is of the greatest importance for the success of the proposed codification of international law that the Code should command the support of women. This support can never be received if the Code contains discriminations against women, such as are found in the Nationality Convention adopted at The Hague.

It is also of the greatest importance for the success of the proposed codification that the Code should command the support of those countries—countries which already comprise so great a part of the world—in which there is a large measure of equality between men and women in their own nationality laws. This support can never be attained in full measure if the Code contains articles which give women a subordinate status in the matter of nationality.

Finally, in support of the demand for the re-opening of the Convention, this Committee points out that the inferior position given to women in the Convention violates that principle of justice upon which alone there can be based an enduring system of law.

IV. Present Status of the Convention.

According to Articles 25 and 26 of the Hague Convention, the Convention will only come into operation when ten countries have ratified it. Only two countries, Monaco and Norway, have ratified as yet, and there is therefore no Convention actually in existence, but only a proposal for a Convention.

Of the sixty-six countries which were invited to subscribe to the Hague Convention, twenty-seven countries have not signed the Convention or adhered to it. They are : Abyssinia, Albania, United States of America, the Argentine, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Liberia, Lithuania, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Persia, Roumania, San Marino, Siam, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Turkey and Venezuela.

Of the thirty-seven countries which have signed the Convention, seven countries have made reservations relating to the nationality of women. These seven are : Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Japan, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland.

One country, the United States of America, has not only refused to sign the Convention, but it also voted against the Convention at the Hague Conference. One of the grounds for the opposition of his Government to the Convention given by the Acting Secretary of State was : " We do not, in our laws, make differences—or make few or relatively unimportant differences—as to rights of men and women in matters of nationality ".

The above facts would seem to indicate that there is considerable dissatisfaction with the proposed Convention on the part of Governments as well as on the part of women's organisations.

V. Evolution of Position of Women in regard to Nationality.

At the end of the first decade of the twentieth century, throughout practically the entire world, with the exception of certain of the South American Republics, the nationality of a woman was made to derive from that of her husband. If she married a foreigner, she became an alien and was treated as such even in her own country. The rule applied also when the husband was naturalised after marriage in another country; his wife was forced to adopt his new allegiance.

In recent years, however, there has been a very great change in the status of women in the matter of nationality. Eighteen countries, for example, have radically amended their laws within the last thirteen years in the direction of recognising the independent nationality of the married woman. These countries, with the years in which the principal advances were made, are as follows : The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (1918); Belgium (1922); Estonia (1922); the United States of America (1922); Norway (1924); Roumania (1924); Sweden (1924); Denmark (1925); Iceland (1926); Guatemala (1926); Finland (1927); France (1927); Turkey (1928); Yugoslavia (1928); Albania (1929); China (1929); Cuba (1929); Persia (1929).

In still other countries, there have been lesser changes, though considerable in many instances in the direction of equality in nationality. The result of this evolution is that, to-day, nearly half the population of the world lives under laws which recognise in large measure the independent nationality of the married woman.

Not only has there been a great change in the actual position of women under the laws relating to nationality, there has also been an ever-growing demand on the part of women for reform in this field. Since 1905, when women began to work internationally upon this subject, one body of women after another has joined in the movement, until to-day practically all of the international organisations of women, with branches in nearly every country and representing many millions of women, are united in the demand for recognition of the right of a woman to her own independent nationality. The Hague Convention has failed entirely to take into account this new position of women. It has failed also to take into account the strength of the demand on the part of women for equality in any international convention adopted upon this subject.

VI. Consideration of Arguments against Equality in Nationality.

1. Conflicts of Law.

One of the arguments advanced against the proposal for equality between men and women in nationality is that equality would increase the conflicts in law, causing, in particular, an increase in statelessness and double nationality. In answer, it is pointed out that there will be conflicts in law as long as there exist side by side the old system under which the wife is compelled to take the nationality of her husband and the new system under which the wife has the right to retain her own nationality upon marriage. Conflicts can be lessened by a universal adoption of the new system as well as by a universal return to the old system. It is not the recognition of the independent nationality of the woman which has caused statelessness and double nationality, it is the failure to make this system universal which is the difficulty.

2. Unity of the Family.

It is also contended that equality in nationality would interfere with the unity of the family. This is using the word " unity " in a double sense. It is confusing the unity which is harmony within a family with juridical unity. It is only juridical unity which can be imposed by law. Moreover, even in countries where the old rule of the subordination of the woman in nationality is still in force, juridical unity does not necessarily exist any more than where right of a woman to her independent nationality is recognised. For instance, in some countries where the wife is compelled to take her husband's nationality upon marriage, the husband may change his nationality after marriage without affecting the nationality of his wife, so that the husband and wife would have, in consequence, different nationalities. Another example is that of a child born under the jus soli system. In such a case, the child is frequently of a different nationality from that of the parents. In addition, unity of nationality does not mean that members of a family who have the same nationality necessarily live under the same legal system. For example, in countries in which civil status depends on nationality, this status is sometimes affected by the fact that the domicile is in a country which allows civil rights to be exercised regardless of nationality. An instance is when a new domicile acquired by a husband enables him to make an effective will contrary to that allowed by the law of the country of which he and his family are nationals.

3. Facilities for acquiring Nationality of Spouse.

A further objection offered is that equality in nationality might result in husband and wife having different nationalities when it would be to their interest to have the same nationality. In answer to this point, attention is called to the fact that there are countries which have equality in nationality and which also facilitate the naturalisation of a foreigner—whether a man or woman—who marries a national of the country, so that the husband and wife are enabled to have the same nationality if they so desire.

4. Derivation of Child's Nationality from a Parent.

Another point raised is that it would be difficult to give a father and mother an equal right to transmit nationality to their child. In answer, it is pointed out that there are a number of countries which have already established equality between the father and mother in this field. For example, in some countries equality between the father and mother results, primarily, from the fact that the nationality of the child is made to depend on the place of birth of the child and not upon the nationality of the parents, neither parent having the right to transmit nationality by blood. In other countries, a man who marries a foreigner gives his nationality to his child, and, equally, a woman who marries a foreigner but does not change her nationality on marriage gives her nationality to her child. In another country, equality between the father and mother has been attained by making the nationality of the child depend either upon the residence of the parents at the time of the birth of the child or upon agreement between the parents.

In general, it may be said, with regard to the fears expressed concerning equality in nationality, there are five countries in which equality between men and women in every field of nationality is already in existence. These countries seem to consider that the results are completely satisfactory, and to have no thought of returning to the old system of inequality.

VII. Practical Application of Equality in Nationality.

The Committees wishes to point out, with regard to the demand for equality between men and women in nationality, that the most important and necessary applications of this principle are :

(a) That marriage should no more affect the nationality of a woman than it affects the nationality of a man;

(b) That the right of a woman to retain her nationality or to change it by naturalisation, denationalisation or denaturalisation should not be denied or abridged because she is a married woman;

(c) That the nationality of a woman, whether married or unmarried, should not be changed or lost except under conditions which cause a man to change or lose his nationality;

(d) That facilities of choice should be given to either spouse on marriage to take the nationality of the other;

(e) That with respect to the derivation of nationality from a parent, the nationality of one parent should be given no preference over that of the other.

In conclusion, the Committee calls to the attention of the Assembly that to write into this Convention an unequal treatment of men and women is in direct opposition to the principle laid down by the Assembly that the spirit of the codification "should not confine itself to the mere registration of existing rules, but should aim at adapting them, as far as possible, to contemporary conditions of international life"; a principle also accepted by the Preparatory Committee of the Codification Conference when it declared that "the work of codification involves the risk of setback in international law if the content of the codification instrument is less advanced than the actually existing law.".

The International Federation of University Women gives its support to the above report so far as it deals with a woman's own nationality and takes no position in so far as the report deals with the derivation of the nationality of a child from its mother, since the Federation has taken no decision on this aspect of nationality.

[1] In addition to the countries listed, there are several in which, under many circumstances, the marriage of a woman to a foreigner does not deprive her of her nationality without her consent. These countries are not included in the above list, however, as in these countries, under certain circumstances, a woman who marries a foreigner loses her own nationality as a result of the marriage, regardless of her consent. An example is France. A French woman who marries a foreigner is not deprived of French nationality without her consent, excepting when the married couple fix their first domicile after the marriage outside of France and when, in addition, the wife acquires the husband's nationality by the marriage according to the law of his country (French Nationality Law, August 10th, 1927, Article 8).

[3] In addition to the countries listed, there are several in which, under many circumstances, the marriage of a foreign woman to a national of a country does not compel her to take her husband's nationality without her consent. These countries are not included in the above list, however, as in these countries, under certain circumstances, a foreign woman who marries a national of the country in question is compelled to take her husband's nationality regardless of her consent. France may be given again as an example. A foreign woman who marries a Frenchman is not obliged to take French nationality regardless of her consent, excepting when by the law of her country she necessarily follows the nationality of her husband (French Nationality Law, August 10th, 1927, Article 8).

ANNEX 8.

NATIONALITY OF WOMEN.

DRAFT RESOLUTION SUBMITTED BY THE CHILIAN DELEGATION.

Seeing that the political constitution of Chile makes no distinction between men and women in so far as concerns their rights of nationality, and that the Chilian Government has always sympathised with those feminine aspirations which were disappointed by the conclusions of the Conference for the Codification of International Law held at The Hague in 1930,

The Chilian delegation, in conformity with these aspirations, has the honour to submit to the First Committee the following resolution :

" The Assembly,

" Having taken note of the Secretary-General's report on the question of the nationality of women submitted in conformity with the Council's resolution of January 24th, 1931, and also of the report and proposals of the Women's Advisory Committee attached thereto;

" In view of the recommendations made to the Assembly by this Committee that the necessary measures should be taken to enable the question of the nationality of women to be studied on the basis of the principle of equality between the sexes;

" Requests the Council to transmit to the Governments the Secretary-General's report on the question of the nationality of women with the Minutes of the First Committee of the Assembly, and requests the Governments to forward their observations on this subject so that they may be submitted to the Thirteenth Assembly, in order that a fresh study may be made of the Hague Convention on the nationality of women in conformity with recommendation No. VI of the Conference for the Codification of International Law held at The Hague in 1930;

" Thanks the Women's Consultative Committee for its report and begs it to continue to carry on its work."

COMMUNICATION FROM THE UNION INTERNATIONALE DES LIGUES FÉMININES CATHOLIQUES

Note by the Secretary-General :

The following letter, which was received by the Secretary-General from the Union internationale des Ligues féminines catholiques on August 19th, 1931, is communicated to the Assembly in accordance with a decision taken by the Council on September 4th, 1931.

" Nationality, as affecting married women, is a problem which the Union internationale des Ligues féminines catholiques and its associated societies have for a long time had under consideration. Examination of the problem has shown that the present situation leaves in every respect much to be desired.

" The Union internationale des Ligues féminines catholiques has learned with great satisfaction of the decision of the Council of the League of Nations of January 24th, 1931, to place on the agenda of the next session of the Assembly the question of the nationality of married women; it recognises the necessity of reforming the rules at present applicable in the matter in order, as far as possible, to avoid cases of absence of nationality, and of double nationality, and the conflicts which result from the laws in force; it ventures, however, in the name of the twenty-five million Catholic women who belong to the Union, respectfully to call Your Excellency's attention to the danger involved in any infringement of the principle of the unity of the family. The Union is convinced that to defend the integrity of the family is entirely in the interest of the social and moral well-being, not merely of nations considered individually, but of humanity as a whole.

" Accordingly, the Union internationale des Ligues féminines catholiques :

" Declares its conviction that it is the principle of the unity of the family and not that of emancipation of women which should predominate;

" Associates itself entirely with the desiderata submitted on March 13th, 1930, by certain women, doctors of law of the Netherlands universities, to the President of the Hague Conference for the Codification of International Law; and

" Expresses the desire :

" 1. That the uniform system which is to govern for all countries the question of the nationality of married persons and in particular that of the nationality of married women should be based upon unity of the family and provide guarantees against abuses due to the married persons themselves;

" 2. That, pending the coming into force of such international agreement, there may be established international rules for the settlement of conflicts and, in particular, for preventing a woman from losing all nationality as the result of marriage and for protecting women against any arbitrary change in their nationality being effected by their husbands."

DRAFT RESOLUTION SUBMITTED BY THE ITALIAN DELEGATION.

" The Assembly,

" In view of the resolution adopted by the Council of the League of Nations at its session of January 1931,

" Instructs the Secretary-General to communicate to the Governments the report of the Women's Advisory Committee and the letter to the International Union of Catholic Women's Associations, in order that they may consider in relation with the Convention of April 12th, 1930, concerning certain questions relative to conflicts of law on nationality, what action they propose to take on the said Convention, and in order that they may state whether they think it possible to proceed to a fresh study of the problem of the nationality of married women."

NATIONALITY OF WOMEN.

REPORT OF THE FIRST COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.

Rapporteur: Mr. W. E. Beckett (United Kingdom).

The draft resolution which the First Committee presents to the Assembly on this subject, and of which the text is given below, has for its object to prepare the ground for consideration by the Assembly at its next session of the very important question of the Nationality of Women. With this object, it is proposed that the Council should transmit to the Governments the documents which were officially placed before the Assembly by decisions of the Council—namely, the Secretary-General's report, the report of the Committee of Representatives of Women's International Organisations which is annexed thereto, and the letter of the International Union of Leagues of Catholic Women of August 19th, 1931. The Minutes of the discussions in the First Committee itself, which have dealt with many aspects of the problem, will also be transmitted to the Governments. The Governments will be asked to submit their observations on the whole matter, including their views regarding the Hague Nationality Convention of April 12th, 1930. It is further proposed that the Assembly should receive and consider any observations which the Committee of Representatives of Women's International Organisations may wish to put forward. It is hoped that this Committee will be able to make the necessary arrangements to continue itself in being and to serve as a medium for voicing the important current of opinion which it represents.

The nature of the First Committee's proposal in itself implies that the First Committee does not express, and does not consider that the Assembly should express at the present stage, any opinion on the merits of the question. In particular, it is desirable, in order to prevent any misunderstanding, that it should be placed on record here that the second paragraph of the proposed resolution merely takes note of the conclusions set out in the report of the Committee of Representatives of Women's International Organisations and will not constitute any expression of opinion by the Assembly with regard to the Convention. What the Committee proposes is that the Governments should include a statement of their views with regard to the convention in the observations which they will be asked to present on the general question of the nationality of women.

Draft Resolution.[1]

"The Assembly,

"Having examined with the greatest interest the report of the Secretary-General on the question of the nationality of women, presented in accordance with the resolution of the Council of January 24th, 1931, and the report and proposals of the Committee of Representatives of Women's International Organisations which are annexed thereto;

"Notes the desire of the said Committee that steps should be taken to bring about the reconsideration of the Hague Nationality Convention, bearing in mind the principle of equality between men and women;

"Thanks the Committee of Representatives of Women's International Organisations for its report; and

"Requests the Council, in harmony with the recommendation No. VI of the Conference for the Codification of International Law held at the Hague, March-April 1930, to transmit to all Governments the report of the Secretary-General on the question of the nationality of women, including the report of the Committee of Representatives of Women's International Organisations, and the letter of the International Union of Leagues of Catholic Women of August 19th, 1931, together with the Minutes of the First Committee of the Assembly on this subject, and to request Governments to submit their observations on this subject (including their views regarding the Hague Nationality Convention) for reconsideration of the matter by the thirteenth Assembly, to which any observations which the above-mentioned Committee thinks fit to present will be communicated."

ANNEX 12.

SITUATION AS REGARDS THE ENTRY INTO FORCE OF THE PROTOCOL OF SEPTEMBER 14TH, 1929, CONCERNING THE REVISION OF THE STATUTE OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

NOTE BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL.

Although the Protocol of September 14th, 1929, did not enter into force on the date originally contemplated (paragraph 4), the Assembly last year accepted the view that it could subsequently come into force, if the necessary ratifications were received. The first of the resolutions regarding the Permanent Court, which were adopted on September 25th, 1930, invited the States to continue to ratify the Protocol, and the third resolution asked the Court to take certain action as regards its sessions and the attendance of judges "pending the entry into force of the Protocol". In his oral statement to the Assembly, M. Pilotti, the Rapporteur of the First Committee, indicated that the ratifications necessary would be those of all the States which ratified the Protocol of Signature of the Court's Statute of December 16th, 1920. It should be noted further that paragraph 7 of the Protocol provides:

> "7. For the purposes of the present Protocol the United States of America shall be in the same position as a State which has ratified the Protocol of December 16th, 1920."

Thirty-eight Members of the League have so far ratified both Protocols; the ratification of Cuba is, however, subject to reservations as stated below.

The Members of the League and non-member States which have ratified the Protocol of 1920, but have not yet ratified that of 1929, are the following:[1]

Abyssinia	Lithuania	Uruguay
Brazil	Panama	Venezuela
Chile

The following Members of the League have not ratified either Protocol, but, with the exception of Argentina and Honduras, they have signed the Protocol of 1929:

Argentina	Dominican Republic	Nicaragua
Bolivia	Guatemala	Paraguay
Colombia	Honduras	Peru

The United States of America has signed but not yet ratified both the Protocol of 1920 and that of 1929. As regards putting the amendments into force on September 1st, 1930, under the special procedure established by Article 4 of the Protocol of 1929, the Secretary of State of the United States expressed the point of view of his Government in a letter of June 25th, 1930, to the Secretary-General, which states:

> "The Secretary of State. . . perceives no reason to object to the coming into force, between such nations as may have become parties thereto, of the amendments to the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice as set out in the Annex to the Protocol dated September 14th, 1929, which have not been ratified by the United States."

The Cuban ratification of the Protocol of 1929 was subject to reservation (1) of paragraph 4 of the Protocol, relating to its entry into force on September 1st, 1930, if the States whose ratifications were necessary, but which had not ratified, gave their consent and (2) of the new text of Article 23 of the Court's Statute reading as follows:

> "The Court shall remain permanently in session except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.
> "Members of the Court whose homes are situated at more than five days' normal journey from The Hague shall be entitled, apart from the judicial vacations, to six months' leave every three years, not including the time spent in travelling.
> "Members of the Court shall be bound, unless they are on regular leave or prevented from attending by illness or other serious reason duly explained to the President, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court."

In the letter forwarding the instrument of ratification to the Secretary-General, the Cuban Government further made the following declaration:

[Translation.]

> "I have, at the same time, the honour to inform you that the Cuban Government consider that the Protocol will not affect the position of judges already elected, and to request you to take note thereof."

[1] With the exception of Abyssinia, all these States have signed the Protocol of 1929.

In execution of the instructions given to him by the Council's resolution of June 17th, 1927, in regard to reservations attached to a ratification of a Convention and not provided for by the terms of the Convention, the Secretary-General by a circular letter of January 22nd, 1931 (C.L.4.1931.V), invited the other Governments concerned to inform him whether they were able to accept the reservations made by Cuba. He at the same time informed them of the declaration made by Cuba. In view of the nature of the Protocol, and the provisions of its seventh paragraph, the letter was addressed to all the Members of the League, Brazil and the United States of America.

The replies [1] to this letter, which had been received down to the date of the present document, may be summarised as follows :

1. No objection has been raised to the reservation of paragraph 4 of the Protocol.

2. The declaration of the Cuban Government is regarded as referring to a matter which the Assembly last year considered to lie within the competence of the Court itself.

3. As regards the reservation of the new text of Article 23 of the Court's Statute :

(a) This reservation has been accepted by the following Governments :

Albania.

Bulgaria.

Greece, which, however, expresses the hope that subsequently the Republic of Cuba may be prepared to abandon the reservation.

Portugal, which, however, is of opinion that the settlement of the questions involved could be undertaken by the Court itself.

Venezuela.

(b) The following Governments have not felt able to accept the reservation :

Germany, because the object of the change in the original text of Article 23 was to ensure that the Permanent Court of International Justice should be a really permanent organisation, and to make it compulsory in principle for all the judges to be present; the reservation would prevent one of the most essential of the new provisions contemplated in the Protocol from being applied in respect of all the Governments concerned. Germany expresses the hope that, after examination, the Cuban Government will decide to withdraw the reservation.

Great Britain and Northern Ireland, since the effect would be, not that the article in question would not be binding on Cuba, but that it could not come into force at all; and this would amount to altering, at the request of only one State, an instrument which has been accepted by nearly all the Members of the League.

France considers that modification of the text of one of the articles, at a time when the majority of Governments have already ratified the Protocol in the form in which it was submitted for their signature, would raise difficulties, since it would put in question the ratifications already obtained; and hopes that the Cuban Government will give this situation serious consideration.

Hungary considers it desirable that the making of the reservation should not have the effect of definitely preventing the coming into force of the article itself, since the provision contained therein constitutes one of the fundamental principles aimed at when it was decided to revise the Statute of the Court.

Italy, since such acceptance would not have the effect of freeing the Republic of Cuba from the obligations arising out of the article in question, but would lead solely to the regrettable result of preventing the coming into force of the article itself and thus modifying, at the request of a single State, an instrument accepted by almost all the Members of the League.

Persia, since acceptance involves difficulties which Persia would not wish to see arise, and which the Cuban Government will no doubt be good enough to take into consideration, as the reservation would have the regrettable consequence of preventing the entry into force of Article 23.

South Africa, since the scope and significance of the reservation not being clear, uncertainty would be left as to the legal consequence of accepting it.

(c) The following Governments, while not accepting the reservation, express the opinion that it should be examined at the Assembly or in negotiations between the Governments :

Belgium, which further considers that the Government of Cuba may perhaps find it proper to re-examine the conditions under which it has given its ratification, in the light of the new Rules of Court.

[1] As the replies were received, the Secretary-General communicated their contents to the Governments.

Denmark, seeing that the scope and significance of the Cuban reservation are not clear to the Danish Government. The Danish Government states that, as the reservation is not set out in detail, it should not prevent the revision of the Statute from coming into force in the form adopted and ratified by the other Contracting Parties.

Finland, in view of the fact that the new draft of the Article embodies one of the principal reasons for the complete revision of the Statute and that the meaning and scope of the reservation do not appear to be very clear.

Irish Free State, since it attaches considerable importance to the principles embodied in the revised version of Article 23, and would feel great difficulty in accepting any proposal the effect of which might be to weaken the position which that article was intended to create; this attitude appears to it to be justified, having regard to the resolution adopted on September 25th, 1930, at the Eleventh Session of the Assembly.

Norway.

Netherlands, since the new Article 23 embodies a principle, and the acceptance of the reservation would prevent the entry into force of the new article.

Poland.

Spain, in view of the importance of the principles laid down in the article.

Sweden, since Article 23 lays down one of the fundamental principles which were aimed at in amending the Statute.

Switzerland, since the Federal Council attaches fundamental importance to Article 23, which makes the Court a body permanently in session.

The appendix to the present document contains a communication from the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice, which has been distributed to the Members of the League, which gives a brief account of the changes in the Rules of Court which the Permanent Court has thought it proper to make as a result of the Assembly's resolutions of September 25th, 1930.

Appendix.

LETTER ADDRESSED TO THE SECRETARY-GENERAL ON FEBRUARY 21ST, 1931, BY THE REGISTRAR OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

I have the honour to inform you that on February 21st, 1931, the Court decided to put into force on the same day an amended text of certain of its Rules.

The amendments to the old text are based on the resolutions concerning the " organisation of the Permanent Court of International Justice " adopted by the Assembly of the League of Nations on September 25th, 1930, at its Eleventh Ordinary Session. The third of these resolutions reads as follows :

> " The Assembly requests the Permanent Court of International Justice to examine the suggestions contained in Part II, paragraphs 1 and 2, of the Report of the Committee of Jurists (document A.45.1930.V), which was submitted to and approved by the Council of the League of Nations on September 12th, 1930, and expresses the hope that the Court will give consideration to the possibility of regulating, pending the coming into force of the Protocol of September 14th, 1929, concerning the revision of the Statute of the Court, the questions of the sessions of the Court and the attendance of the judges on the basis of Article 30 of the Statute as annexed to the Protocol of December 16th, 1920. "

Following the terms of this resolution and the passages therein referred to of the Report of the Committee of Jurists approved by the Council of the League on September 12th, 1930, the Court considered the possibility of introducing, in virtue of Article 30 of the existing Statute and without infringing Article 23, " the system of permanent sessions " or at least of making " the functioning of the Court possible during the period necessitated by the pressure of business ". In this connection the Court also found it advisable to consider the question of the date for the opening of its annual ordinary session, and that of long vacations at fixed intervals for judges coming from distant countries.

The outcome of this examination and these enquiries is embodied in a new draft of Articles 27, 28 and 57 of the Rules of the Court, based on the theory that the judges are, in principle, at the Court's disposal at all times, and that the Court itself is at all times at the disposal of litigants.

This being assumed, a few further slight alterations in Articles 9, 12 and 13 of the Rules seemed necessary; with the same idea in view, the Court adopted a resolution to the effect that it " considers it desirable not to meet between July 1st and October 1st except for urgent business "

The Court did not, however, think it expedient to carry out a new general revision of the Rules at the beginning of the term of office of the newly elected judges. None the less, certain questions which seemed urgent have already received its attention; and this is the explanation of some new formulæ that it has adopted—for Articles 17, 19, 21, 42 and 65.

The amended articles in question have been printed under their respective numbers in a new edition of the Court's official publication containing the texts of its Statute and Rules (Series D, No. 1, of the Court's publications).

(Signed) Å. HAMMARSKJÖLD,
Registrar of the Court.

AMENDED TEXTS OF ARTICLES 9, 12, 13, 27, 28 AND 57 OF THE RULES OF COURT.

Article 9.

The election of the President and the Vice-President shall take place in the last quarter of the last year of office of the retiring President and Vice-President.

After a new election of the whole Court, the election of the President and of the Vice-President shall take place at the commencement of the following session. The President and Vice-President elected in these circumstances shall take up their duties on the day of their election. They shall remain in office until the end of the second year after the year of their election.

Should the President or the Vice-President cease to belong to the Court before the expiration of their normal term of office, an election shall be held for the purpose of appointing a substitute for the unexpired portion of their term of office.

The elections referred to in the present article shall take place by secret ballot. The candidate obtaining an absolute majority of votes shall be declared elected.

Article 12.

The discharge of the duties of the President shall always be assured at the seat of the Court, either by the President himself or by the Vice-President.

If at the same time both the President and the Vice-President are unable to fulfil their duties, or if both appointments are vacant at the same time, the duties of President are discharged by the oldest among the judges who have been longest on the bench.

After a new election of the whole Court, and until the election of the President and the Vice-President, the duties of President are discharged by the oldest judge.

Article 13.

If the President is a national of one of the parties to the case, the functions of President pass in respect of that case to the Vice-President, or, if he is similarly prevented from presiding, to the oldest among the judges who have been longest on the bench and who is not for the same reason prevented from presiding.

Article 27.

1. The ordinary session of the Court opens on February 1st in each year.

2. The session continues until the session list referred to in Article 28 is finished. The President declares the session closed when the agenda is exhausted.

3. The President may summon an extraordinary session of the Court whenever he thinks it desirable, as, for instance, when a case submitted to the Court is ready for hearing or to deal with urgent administrative matters.

4. Judges are bound to be present at the ordinary session of the Court and at all sessions to which they are summoned by the President, unless they are on leave or are prevented by illness or other serious reasons duly explained to the President and communicated by him to the Court.

Deputy-judges are bound to be present at all sessions to which they are summoned by the President, unless they are prevented by some reason duly explained to the President and communicated by him to the Court.

5. Judges whose homes are situated at more than five days' normal journey from The Hague, and who by reason of the fulfilment of their duties in the Court are obliged to live away from their own country, are entitled in the course of each period of three years of duty to leave for six months in addition to the time spent on travelling.

The order in which these leaves are to be taken shall be laid down in a list drawn up by the Court according to the seniority in age of the persons entitled. This order can only be departed from for serious reasons duly admitted by the Court.

The number of judges on leave at any one time must not exceed two.

The President and the Vice-President must not take their leave at the same time.

6. If the day fixed for the opening of a session is regarded as a holiday at the place where the Court is sitting, the session shall be opened on the working day following.

Article 28.

The general list of cases submitted to the Court for decision or for advisory opinion shall be prepared and kept up to date by the Registrar on the instructions and subject to the authority of the President. Cases shall be entered in the list and numbered successively according to the date of the receipt of the document submitting the case to the Court.

For each session of the Court a session list shall be prepared in the same way, indicating the contentious cases and the cases for advisory opinion which are ready for hearing, whether submitted to the full Court or to the Special Chambers or the Chamber for Summary Procedure. Cases shall be entered in the order which they occupy in the general list, but subject to the priority resulting from Article 57 or accorded by the Court to a particular case in exceptional circumstances.

When the list includes no cases other than those submitted to the Special Chambers or the Chamber for Summary Procedure, the session shall only continue as a session of the Special Chamber or of the Chamber for Summary Procedure, as the case may be.

If in the course of the session a case submitted to the Court, either for decision or for an advisory opinion, becomes ready for hearing, it shall be entered in the session list, unless the Court decides to the contrary.

Adjournments which are applied for in cases which are submitted to the Court for decision or for advisory opinion and are ready for hearing may be granted by the Court in case of need. If the Court is not sitting, adjournments may in such cases be granted by the President.

Article 57.

An application made to the Court by one or both of the parties, for the indication of interim measures of protection, shall have priority over all other cases. The decision thereon shall be treated as a matter of urgency, and if the Court is not sitting it shall be convened without delay by the President for the purpose.

If no application is made, and if the Court is not sitting, the President may convene the Court to submit to it the question whether such measures are expedient.

In all cases, the Court shall only indicate measures of protection after giving the parties an opportunity of presenting their observations on the subject.

ANNEX 13.

ENTRY INTO FORCE OF THE PROTOCOL OF SEPTEMBER 14TH, 1929, CONCERNING THE REVISION OF THE STATUTE OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

DRAFT RESOLUTION SUBMITTED BY THE NORWEGIAN AND SWEDISH DELEGATIONS.

The Assembly,

Notes with satisfaction that the Protocol of September 14th, 1929, concerning the Revision of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, has now obtained almost all the ratifications necessary to bring it into force;

Reaffirms the hope which it expressed at its last session that the States which have not so far ratified the Protocol will proceed to do so as soon as possible; and,

Considering that a reservation could only be made at the moment of ratification if all the other signatory States agree or if such a reservation has been provided for in the text of the Convention,

Expresses the hope that the Member of the League which has only felt it possible to ratify the Protocol with a reservation will be so good as to re-examine its position in the light of the views which have been expressed by the other Members of the League; and Decides that the Assembly at its next session shall receive and consider a report from the Secretary-General as to the progress which has been made in regard to the coming into force of the new Statute and consider what measures are to be taken in the matter.

ANNEX 14.

PROPOSAL OF THE GOVERNMENT OF FINLAND TO CONFER ON THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE JURISDICTION AS A TRIBUNAL OF APPEAL IN RESPECT OF ARBITRAL TRIBUNALS ESTABLISHED BY STATES.

REPORT BY THE SUB-COMMITTEE.

Rapporteur : M. RAESTAD (Norway).

The Sub-Committee [1] appointed by the First Committee to draw up for its consideration proposals concerning the Finnish proposal to confer on the Permanent Court in certain exceptional cases functions of a tribunal of appeal in relation to arbitral tribunals has held three meetings in the course of which it drew up the draft resolution and draft protocol now submitted to the First Committee. (Appendices I and II.)

The Sub-Committee first examined two questions of a general character.

(1) It put to itself the question whether it was necessary to determine the various causes which may render an arbitral award invalid. It felt that this procedure, which would call for difficult enquiries and long discussion, was in practice impossible. It thought that in the present state of international law it was prudent to leave determination of the causes which may render an award invalid to be effected by successive judicial decisions. It considered, however, that, in order to relieve certain apprehensions which may be felt, it ought to add that it seems to it to be clear that in the present state of international law, and except where the States concerned have expressly provided for an appeal, an arbitral award could not be treated as invalid on the ground that the arbitral tribunal had wrongly applied the substantival law.

(2) The Committee next considered whether, as between the numerous States which have accepted the obligations of Article 36 of the Statute of the Court, the Court of International Justice may not already have jurisdiction to hear and determine a dispute as to the validity of an arbitral award.

Although the Sub-Committee has the impression that Article 36 of the Court's Statute would, at least to a large extent, permit of attaining the object aimed at by the Finnish Delegation, it has been obliged to recognise that opinion was not unanimous on the question and that some doubt existed. It might be proposed to ask an advisory opinion from the Permanent Court of International Justice on this general question; but the Sub-Committee did not think that it was for it to discuss the possibility or desirability of such a course, and it felt that, in the meanwhile, while recognising the value of the possibilities offered by Article 36, it was desirable to take precautions to meet the eventuality that Article 36 might not furnish a complete remedy for the danger of a dispute as to the validity of an arbitral award remaining without solution.

The Sub-Committee then considered the methods proposed to attain the desired object.

(1) In the first place it has drawn up a draft recommendation for submission to the Assembly.

The first paragraph of the recommendation stresses the fact that the difficulties to be met are of an exceptional nature. The validity of arbitral awards has very rarely been disputed in the past; it must be expected that such disputes will be equally rare in the future.

The text in question is not inspired by any suspicion of arbitral tribunals, whose authority must not be impaired.

The second paragraph of the recommendation categorically affirms that a State contesting the validity of an arbitral award must agree to its contention being examined by a new tribunal.

Such new tribunal might be either an arbitral tribunal or the Permanent Court of International Justice. It was felt that one should avoid any appearance of placing arbitral tribunals in a position of subordination to the Permanent Court of International Justice. The aim to be attained is to secure that a dispute as to the validity of an award shall be finally settled by a different tribunal. The parties may prefer to have recourse to another arbitral tribunal rather than to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

The third paragraph contains a recommendation for submission to the Council with the object of giving practical effect to the obligation which is recognised to rest upon the parties to the award. The Council is to invite the parties to draw up a submission; and, if such a submission is not agreed upon, owing to refusal by one party or failure of the parties to agree upon its terms, the Council is to ask an opinion from the Court.

The Sub-Committee has not desired to enter upon an examination of the different cases in which the validity of an arbitral award might be questioned before the Council. It has thought it proper to cover by a single general formula all cases other than those referred to in Article 13, paragraph 4, of the Covenant.

(2) The Sub-Committee has, in the second place, drawn up a draft protocol. It feels, however, that such a protocol should not be opened for signature unless there are real probabilities of its receiving a considerable number of accessions.

Accordingly, it put to itself the question whether for the moment it would not be best to simply submit to the Governments a draft on which they would be invited to make observations.

Consultation of the Governments on the basis of a definite draft is a more fruitful method than putting to the Governments a simple question of principle as to the desirability of a convention.

The Draft Protocol contains a Preamble and four Articles, apart from the ordinary formal clauses.

Article 1.

The second sentence deals more particularly with the case where a party, recognising the validity of an arbitral award and finding itself in presence of a contention of the other party that the award is invalid, desires to have its rights immediately confirmed; with this object such a party is empowered to bring the case immediately before the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Paragraph 1.

The Sub-Committee decided, by a majority, that the recourse to the Court could only be allowed during a comparatively short period after the receipt of the award or the discovery of a new fact. The object of this limit of time is to exclude belated recourse to the Court with all the disadvantages which would result therefrom.

The minority felt that, in view of the exceptional character of the contemplated recourse to the Court and the very various nature of the defects which may make a judicial decision invalid, it would be undesirable to lay down any rule on the subject.

Owing to the great diversity of methods of arbitral procedure, the Sub-Committee felt some hesitation as to what should be the date from which the period of limitation should run. In principle, the date from which this period starts is that of the receipt of the award by the parties—i.e., the effective notification of the award.

Paragraph 2.

The operation of the award will not be suspended during the period within which recourse to the Court is permitted.

The Court will decide whether the application to it should have the effect of suspending the operation of the award, and it will have a general power to order interim measures of protection.

First Sentence.

The use of the word " nullity " in connection with awards the validity of which is disputed has been deliberately avoided. The Permanent Court of International Justice should not be set up as a court of cassation. The Court will not annul the arbitral award; it will confine itself to declaring the defects which render it invalid. It is possible that the existence of a defect established by the Court renders the award invalid in part only. The Court will determine the extent of the defect.

Second Sentence.

The Sub-Committee had to give serious consideration to the question what should be the results of a judgment of the Court declaring the existence of a defect affecting the validity of the arbitral award. If the parties were simply placed in the legal position which they occupied before the commencement of the arbitral proceedings, which have resulted in the wholly or partially invalid award, great difficulties might result. The Committee has not thought that to escape from the difficulties it should be decided that the Court should normally deal with the substance of the case. It will be for the parties to select and organise a new tribunal for this purpose; but, if they fail to do so, any one of them will be able to bring the case before the Court for a decision on the substance. This has been felt to be the only practical method of reaching a satisfactory solution of the problem.

Article 4.

The intention is that an award given in proceedings between a State and an individual should be incapable of being the object of proceedings before the Court, except where the recourse to arbitration is provided for in a treaty. The result is to exclude arbitral awards of a purely private nature.

Articles 5 to 10.

These Articles are copied from the General Act of Arbitration of September 26th, 1928.

Appendix I.

DRAFT RECOMMENDATION.

The Assembly,

Being anxious to facilitate the settlement, in accordance with law, of certain difficulties which may exceptionally arise in regard to the validity of arbitral awards;

Believing that any State or Member of the League of Nations contesting the validity of an arbitral award has the obligation of submitting its contention to further proceedings of arbitration or to judicial settlement;

Recommends that in all cases where the Council, either in connection with a claim for execution of an arbitral award or in other circumstances, finds that the validity of the award is disputed by one of the parties, the Council will invite the parties to conclude a special agreement for the submission of this contention to the Permanent Court of International Justice and, if unsuccessful in securing this result, will ask an advisory opinion from the Court.

Appendix II.

DRAFT PROTOCOL CONCERNING DISPUTES AS TO THE VALIDITY OF ARBITRAL AWARDS.

Preamble.

The High Contracting Parties,

Being desirous of ensuring the settlement of certain difficulties which may exceptionally arise as regards the validity of arbitral awards;

Believing that any State or Member of the League contesting the validity of an arbitral award has the obligation to submit its contention to a new tribunal;

Have agreed to recognise the Permanent Court of International Justice as possessing, subject to the provisions set out below, compulsory jurisdiction to hear and determine disputes as to the validity of awards given by an arbitral tribunal.

Article 1.

A party to a dispute that has been submitted to arbitration, which claims that the award made is vitiated by a defect rendering it invalid, must submit such claim to the Permanent Court of International Justice. The matter may also be brought before the Court by an application by the other party.

Article 2.

The application must be filed with the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice within sixty days after the receipt of the award or the discovery of a new fact. The parties bind themselves to notify the Arbitral Tribunal without delay of the receipt of the award. Failing such notification, the period shall begin with the date of despatch of the award by the Arbitral Tribunal.

The operation of the award shall not be suspended during the period provided for above. After an application to the Court has been filed, the Court may suspend the operation of the award and may order other interim measures of protection.

Article 3.

The Court shall decide whether, and in what measure, the award is vitiated by defects affecting its validity alleged by a party.

If the Court declares the existence of a defect affecting, in whole or in part, the validity of the award, the parties shall treat the award as not binding in the measure in which its validity has been declared to be affected by such defect. If within three months from the publication of the judgment the parties have not agreed upon a submission to arbitration, either party may file an application bringing the substance of the case before the Court for decision.

Article 4.

The provisions of the present Protocol shall also apply where recourse to an arbitral tribunal is open to individuals under a treaty, but the application to the Court may only be made by a State or a Member of the League of Nations.

Formal Clauses.

Article 5.

The present Protocol, of which the French and English texts shall both be authentic, shall bear the date of . . .

Article 6.

The present Protocol shall be open to accession by all the heads of States or other competent authorities of the Members of the League of Nations and of the non-member States to which the Council of the League of Nations has communicated a copy for this purpose.

The instruments of accession shall be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall notify their receipt to all the Members of the League and to the non-member States referred to in the preceding paragraph.

Article 7.

The present Protocol shall come into force on the ninetieth day following the receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations of the accessions of not less than two Contracting Parties.

Accessions received after the entry into force of the present Protocol, in accordance with the previous paragraph, shall become effective as from the ninetieth day following the date of receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

Article 8.

The present Protocol shall be concluded for a period of five years, dating from its entry into force.

It shall remain in force for further successive periods of five years in the case of Contracting Parties who do not denounce it at least six months before the expiration of the current period.

Denunciations shall be effected by a written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall inform all the Members of the League and the non-member States referred to in Article 6.

Notwithstanding denunciation by a Contracting Party, recourse may be had to the Permanent Court of International Justice within the period provided in Article 2 against any award given before the said Party's obligations terminate.

Article 9.

A copy of the present Protocol, signed by the President of the Assembly and by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, shall be deposited in the archives of the Secretariat; a certified true copy shall be delivered by the Secretary-General to all the Members of the League of Nations and to the non-member States indicated by the Council of the League of Nations.

Article 10.

The present Protocol shall be registered by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations on the date of its entry into force.

ANNEX 15.

NOTE ON THE FINANCIAL CONSEQUENCES OF CERTAIN DECISIONS OF THE FIRST COMMITTEE.

The reduction contemplated in the figure inserted in the budget for the expenses of the next Assembly and for printing is so considerable that the adoption by the Assembly of resolutions inviting Governments to send in observations for submission to the next Assembly does not seem possible unless a credit is obtained for the printing of such observations as may be received.

In these circumstances, it would seem necessary for the Committee to authorise its Chairman to request the Fourth Committee to accept the following credits :

	Francs
(1) Nationality of Women	1,500
(2) Finnish proposal relating to the Permanent Court of International Justice	1,000
(3) Amendment of the Covenant :
Printing of the report of the contemplated Committee	1,000
Printing of the Minutes	3,500

In accordance with a decision of the Assembly, the Minutes of this Committee cannot be printed without the authorisation of the Council; the Council will not be in a position to give such authorisation for printing unless a credit is provided in the budget.

It would, of course, be understood that the request for the credits mentioned at 2 and 3 will be withdrawn, if the decisions which the First Committee takes do not involve incurring the contemplated expenditure.

The Chairman has already asked the Fourth Committee for a credit for the question of the method of election of the Members of the Council.

ANNEX 16.

PROGRESSIVE CODIFICATION OF INTERNATIONAL LAW.

DRAFT RESOLUTION PROPOSED BY THE SUB-COMMITTEE.

Rapporteur : M. GIANNINI (Italy).

The Assembly recalls that the resolution of September 22nd, 1924, emphasised the progressive character of the codification of international law which should be undertaken, and, in view of the recommendations of the First Conference for the Codification of International Law held at The Hague in 1930, it decides to continue the work of codification with the object of drawing up conventions which will place the relations of States on a legal and secure basis without jeopardising the customary international law which should result progressively from the practice of States and the development of international jurisprudence. To this end, the Assembly decides to establish the following procedure for the future, except in so far as in particular cases special resolutions provide to the contrary.

(1) Any State or group of States, whether Members of the League or not, may propose to the Assembly a subject or subjects with respect to which codification by international conventions should be undertaken. Such proposals, together with a memorandum containing the necessary explanatory matter, should be sent, before March 1st, to the Secretary-General, in order that he may communicate them to Governments and insert them in the Agenda of the Assembly.

(2) Any such proposals will be considered by the Assembly, which will decide whether the subjects proposed appear prima facie suitable for codification.

(3) If the investigation of a proposed subject is approved by the Assembly and if no existing organ of the League is competent to deal with it, the Assembly will request the Council to set up a committee of experts, who will be asked, with the assistance of the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, to make the necessary enquiries and to prepare a draft convention on the subject, to be reported to the Council.

(4) The Council will transmit such report to the Assembly, which will then decide whether the subject is provisionally to be retained as a subject for codification. If this is decided affirmatively, the Assembly will ask the Secretary-General to transmit the said report to the Governments of the Members of the League and non-member States for their comments; the committee of experts, if it considers it desirable to do so, will revise the draft in the light of such comments.

(5) If the committee of experts revises the draft, the revised draft will be submitted to the Governments for their comments and, together with the comments received, will be transmitted to the Assembly, which will then decide finally whether any further action should be taken in the matter and, if so, if the draft should be submitted to a codification conference.

If the committee does not see any reason to revise the draft, it will be transmitted, together with the comments of the Governments, to the Assembly, which will then decide finally whether any further action should be taken and, if so, if the draft should be submitted to a codification conference.

The Assembly recommends :

(1) That in relation with the further work in connection with the codification of international law the international and national scientific institutes should collaborate in the work undertaken by the League of Nations;

(2) That the work of codification undertaken by the League of Nations should be carried on in concert with the conferences of the American States.

ANNEX 17.

PREPARATORY PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED IN THE CASE OF GENERAL CONVENTIONS TO BE NEGOTIATED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE LEAGUE.

DRAFT RESOLUTION SUBMITTED BY THE SUB-COMMITTEE.

Rapporteur : M. GIANNINI (Italy).

That, in the case of all general conventions to be negotiated under the auspices of the League of Nations, the following preparatory procedure should, in principle, be followed, exception made of the cases where previous conventions or arrangements have established a special procedure or where, owing to the nature of the questions to be treated or to special circumstances, the Assembly or the Council consider other methods to be more appropriate :

1. Where an organ of the League of Nations recommends the conclusion of a general convention on any matter, it shall prepare a memorandum explaining the objects which it is desired to achieve by the conclusion of the convention and the benefits which result therefrom. Such memorandum shall be submitted to the Council of the League of Nations.

2. If the Council approves the proposal in principle, a first draft convention shall be prepared and communicated, together with the explanatory memorandum, to Governments, with the request that, if they feel that the draft should be taken into consideration, they shall inform the Secretary-General of their views, both with regard to the main objects or the suggested means of attaining them, and also with regard to the draft convention. In some cases, it may be desirable to annex a specific questionnaire.

3. The draft convention and the observations of Governments (together with the answers to the questionnaire, if any) shall be communicated to the Assembly, and the Assembly shall then decide whether it is possible to contemplate the conclusion of a convention.

4. If the Assembly considers it possible to contemplate the conclusion of a convention, the Council shall arrange for the preparation of a draft convention in the light of the replies received from Governments, and the new draft convention (together with the replies of other Governments) shall be transmitted to each Government with a request for their opinion on the provisions of the draft and any observations on the above-mentioned replies of the other Governments.

5. In the light of the results of this second consultation of the Governments, the Assembly shall decide whether a convention should be concluded and, if so, whether the draft should be submitted to a conference, the date of which it will request the Council to fix.

6. The Council, in fixing the date for the convocation of a conference, shall endeavour, as far as possible, to avoid two League of Nations conferences being held simultaneously, and to ensure the lapse of a reasonable interval between two conferences.

7. The procedure set out in the preceding paragraphs will be followed as far as possible in the case of draft conventions, the desirability of which is recognised by a decision of the Assembly either on its own initiative or as the result of a proposal by a Government. In these cases, the Council will instruct either the Secretariat or some other organ of the League or specially selected experts to prepare the above-mentioned report, which shall subsequently be submitted to the Council.

ANNEX 18.

AMENDMENT OF THE COVENANT OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS IN ORDER TO BRING IT INTO HARMONY WITH THE PACT OF PARIS.

REPORT SUBMITTED BY THE SUB-COMMITTEE.

Rapporteur : M. Henri ROLIN (Belgium).

1. Both the written observations submitted by various Governments since the last session of the Assembly and the recent discussions in the First Committee seem to show that most of the Members of the League of Nations attach the highest importance to the continuance of the task that has been undertaken.

The importance and the legal effect of the Pact of Paris are not, of course, in question; but the prevailing opinion is that it would be undesirable to maintain in the text of the League Covenant possibilities of a lawful recourse to war which have been virtually abolished and to fail to adapt the operation of the organisation set up by them to safeguard peace to the new engagements assumed by the Members of the League of Nations.

Even those Governments which had expressed the view that the work of adjustment decided upon by the Assembly in 1929 was not indispensable have, in a spirit of conciliation, declared that they accept in principle the idea underlying that work.

2. During the previous discussions the fear had been occasionally expressed that certain difficulties might result from the fact that some Members of the League had not acceded to the Pact of Paris and that some States signatory of that Treaty were not members of the League of Nations. At the present time, it would seem that the League need have no further apprehensions on either point. On the one hand, some Members of the League which had not acceded to the Pact of Paris have either sent or announced their accession since last year; in any case, no objection is made against the continuation of the work of amendment of the Covenant of the League of Nations. As regards States signatory of the Pact of Paris which are not members of the League, obviously no decision can be taken in their absence as to the scope they should give to their obligations, but the task undertaken by the League has the same end in view as the Pact of Paris and re-enforces the authority of the principle formulated therein.

It should, however, be emphasised that the task undertaken by the League of Nations in the matter is legally independent of the Pact of Paris and aims at inserting the principle of the prohibition of war in the Covenant of the League of Nations.

3. The First Committee successively re-examined the three fundamental aspects of the proposed amendment:

(1) Prohibition of recourse to war;
(2) Organisation of pacific methods of settling disputes;
(3) Extension of the Council's mission of maintaining and restoring peace.

PROHIBITION OF RECOURSE TO WAR.

4. No objection in principle is now made against the idea of formulating in a single Article of the Covenant—namely, Article 12—and in the simplest terms, the prohibition of recourse to war.

The prevailing opinion is that the insertion of this prohibition does not require the insertion of any further elaboration or reservations in the text of the Covenant, since the questions raised on this point in the course of the discussion arise, and are equally material, under the existing text of the Covenant, so that its amendment does not make it more necessary to solve them explicitly.

It would seem, moreover, that even now an answer can be given to most of the questions which will be satisfactory and acceptable to all the Members of the League.

5. One point appears beyond dispute—namely, that neither in the amendment prepared by the Sub-Committee last year, nor in the amendment of the Committee of Eleven, nor in the Pact of Paris, nor in the Covenant of the League in its present form does the prohibition of recourse to war exclude the right of legitimate self-defence. As has been already pointed out by the Italian Government in its letter of April 16th, 1931:

> "It is not in the least necessary to include in the amendments a clause relating to self-defence, since it is obvious that a State which had disregarded the clause forbidding war could not demand that a State attacked by it should observe that clause."

6. On the other hand, in the present state of the law, the satisfactory enumeration of the distinctive characteristics either of aggression or of legitimate self-defence appears difficult and even impossible.

After examining a cognate question, the Third Committee has felt that it could not do better than refer on this point to the explanations contained in M. de Brouckère's report submitted in 1926 to the Council. The First Committee reproduces here the passage of M. de Brouckère's report, which shows to what a degree the idea of legitimate self-defence is delicate and full of fine shades of meaning.

M. de Brouckère said:

> "Every act of violence does not necessarily justify its victim in resorting to war. If a detachment of soldiers goes a few yards over the frontier in a colony remote from any vital centre; if the circumstances show quite clearly that the aggression was due to an error on the part of some subaltern officer; if the central authorities of the 'aggressor State' reprimand the subordinate concerned as soon as they are apprised of the facts; if they cause the invasion to cease, offer apologies and compensation and take steps to prevent any recurrence of such incidents, then it cannot be maintained that there has been an act of war and that the invaded country has reasonable grounds for mobilising its army and marching upon the enemy capital. The accident which has occurred has in no way released that country from the specific obligations laid down in Articles 12 and following. It could not be so released unless it were the victim of a flagrant aggression of such a serious character that it would obviously be dangerous not to retaliate at once. In short, to borrow the felicitous phrase used in the Treaty of Locarno, 'the country in question must be exercising the right of legitimate defence'.
> "Legitimate defence implies the adoption of measures proportionate to the seriousness of the attack and justified by the imminence of the danger. If a country flagrantly exceeded these limits, even if it were affronted by some incident of little intrinsic importance, it would become in actual fact the real aggressor, and it would be only fair that that country should be made the object of the sanctions provided for in Article 16."

7. An essential point to note is that the use which a State claims to make of the right of self-defence is a matter which may be considered by the other States concerned and, in the case of Members of the League of Nations, is subject to the appreciation of the Council, particularly when there may be a question of applying Article 16.

8. Obviously, in judging the facts which are placed before it the Council will have to be guided, not only by the general principles of law, but also by any special engagements for preventing war which have previously been undertaken by the parties to the dispute and been recognised as conducing to the maintenance of peace. Thus the Members of the League of Nations have frequently and unanimously recognised as conducing to the maintenance of peace, under Article 21 of the Covenant, agreements such as the Rhineland Pact; the general adoption of such agreements was recommended by the Assembly's resolution of September 25th, 1926; and, further, on the initiative of Germany, a Convention has just been drawn up the object of which is to facilitate action by the Council to prevent war.

9. These considerations, and the interpretation of the obligations prescribed in Articles 10, 11 and 16 of the Covenant, lead to the conclusion that assistance given spontaneously by a Member of the League to another Member which has been the victim of a flagrant aggression would not constitute a violation of the prohibition of recourse to war. Interventions of this kind would, however, in their turn be subject to the appreciation of their character by other Members of the League and by the Council, and to the opinion of the latter the State which had intervened would be obliged to conform.

10. On the other hand, it must be admitted that the proposed amendment of the Covenant, whether it is adopted in the form suggested by the Committee of Eleven or in that drawn up by the Sub-Committee, would deprive the Members of the League of the right to resort to war in execution of an arbitral award or a unanimous decision of the Council. Such action obviously goes beyond the notion of legitimate self-defence. It is for the Council to assure the execution of arbitral awards. If it prescribed military measures, the latter would lose their character of recourse to war and would assume a character of social defence in perfect harmony with the principles adopted. This constitutional duty of the Council is, no doubt, particularly imperative under the Covenant as amended, since it is the counterpart to the relinquishment of the individual right of execution.

11. The Committee noted the desire of the Chinese Government to meet the dangers resulting from a country creating what is in fact a state of war, while not officially recognising that a war exists. Without entering upon a discussion of the substance of the question, it felt that the case contemplated by the Chinese Government is already provided for by Article 11 of the Covenant.

12. The Finnish Government proposed an amendment the object of which was to keep the first sentence of Article 12 in the form in which it is in the present text of the Covenant, on the ground that the provisions of the Covenant should not be changed except so far as is absolutely necessary. Although, however, the Finnish proposal indicates in the second sentence that pacific measures are in general lawful, the Committee felt that the text proposed might be open to the interpretation that acts of retortion or pacific reprisals which have no aggressive character were prevented, and this is a question with which the Committee is not on the present occasion concerned.

The Government of the Irish Free State proposed an amendment suppressing the words "likely to lead to a rupture" which follow the word "dispute" in Articles 12 and 15 of the Covenant. This amendment has not been felt to have any connection with the problem of amending the Covenant so as to insert in it a prohibition of recourse to war.

The Governments of Finland, Portugal, the United Kingdom and of New Zealand proposed various changes in the text of the contemplated amendment to Article 12.

The First Committee notes that they either deal with points of detail or with the structure of the texts in question, and that, accordingly, their discussion should be reserved for a later stage.

Pacific Settlement of Disputes.

13. The present text of the Covenant only assigns a binding and executory character to arbitral awards or judicial decisions. Where, however, a case is submitted to the Council, a unanimous recommendation alone has some legal consequences, since it is forbidden to resort to war against the party which conforms to it. The mere extension of the prohibition of recourse to war would by itself give the same force to majority decisions of the Council and thus eliminate all distinction between unanimous decisions and majority decisions. In neither case would such decisions possess an obligatory or executory character.

14. It should be emphasised, in the first place, that this defect has now been removed in the case of disputes between States both of which have acceded to the General Act of Arbitration without any restriction or reservation affecting the third Part of the Act or which have concluded bilateral agreements having a similar effect. If the dispute occurs between two States which are bound to submit it to arbitration, its peaceful settlement is already ensured by the operation of the existing provisions of the Covenant.

But while we may congratulate ourselves upon the growing number of accessions to the General Act of Arbitration, it would, in the opinion of the very great majority of the Committee, be premature to seek at present to embody in the Covenant of the League, by means of an amendment, the rigid principle of obligation to resort to arbitration or judicial settlement for all disputes.

15. In view of this situation, a certain number of States have taken the view that, in accordance with the proposals made by the Committee of Eleven, it is desirable at least to provide in the Covenant that Members of the League must carry out in good faith the unanimous recommendations of the Council, and to entrust to the latter the duty of proposing suitable measures to ensure that its unanimous recommendations should be carried into effect.

To justify this extension of the effect of unanimous recommendations, it was proposed to provide that the Council might, by a majority vote, ask the Court for an advisory opinion on points of law relevant to the dispute. Further, with regard to Council reports adopted by a majority, it was contemplated that the Council should recommend to the parties the most appropriate new procedure.

The discussions in the Committee confirmed the opinion already expressed by last year's Sub-Committee that an amendment of this character would not secure the necessary ratifications.

16. The texts of the amendments to Article 15 proposed by last year's Sub-Committee must be admitted to be capable of improvement, seeing that, in paragraph 6, it is provided that the Council shall recommend the parties to comply with the conclusions of a unanimous report, and this is, after all, as is pointed out in the observations of the Government of Finland, no more than a repetition of what is already to be found in paragraph 4 of the present Article 15. It must be recognised, however, that the undertaking the other Members of the League are asked to give—namely, that they will in no way support the parties who do not comply with unanimous recommendations—does strengthen to some extent the provisions of the Covenant. In short, such a provision would have the effect of tacitly establishing for the Members of the League a kind of moral obligation to comply with the unanimous recommendations of the Council—a moral obligation whose only sanction would be the duty of the other Members of the League to refrain from action if the State in question were subjected to certain forms of peaceful pressure by the other party.

The Committee is of opinion that it would in any case be necessary to lay some stress upon the exact scope of the proposed amendment by replacing the word " recommande " by the somewhat stronger word " invitera ", the equivalent of which is already employed in the English text.

In the course of the discussion, the Finnish delegation submitted an interesting suggestion which somewhat modifies the text already put forward in the Finnish Government's observations. The Finnish delegation proposes to say :

> " If the report of the Council is unanimously agreed to by the members thereof other than the representatives of one or more of the parties to the dispute, the party which complies with the recommendations of the report may base its claim thereon, the solution recommended by the Council being incapable of being put in question except as the result of an arbitral or judicial decision. The Members of the League undertake in no way to support any party in a refusal to comply with the recommendations of a report which has been unanimously accepted. "

On examination, however, it was felt that the legal effect of such a text was too uncertain, and that it would require further examination.

17. As regards the hypothesis of the Council being divided, the Finnish delegation asks that the amended Covenant should make it clearer than the present one does that in that event the Council's deliberations, in conformity with Article 4, would have the same object as in cases where it is unanimous—namely, to bring about a solution of the dispute in the form of a recommendation.

The Finnish delegation accordingly proposes the following text :

> " If the Council has failed to reach unanimity as defined in the previous paragraph, and if the parties do not accept the recommendations made by the majority, the Council shall officially and by a majority vote suggest the best procedure to be followed in the circumstances and shall recommend it to the parties. "

The Committee decided that the foregoing proposal might usefully be accepted as a basis for subsequent discussion.

Extension of the Pacificatory Action of the Council.

18. The question which arises is whether, when the prohibition of recourse to war becomes general, it will be necessary to limit the individual obligations of the Members of the League regarding participation in sanctions.

The Governments which have pronounced for the affirmative answer have contended :

(1) That the desire to effect an extension of sanctions corresponding to the extension of the prohibitions of resort to war contained in the Covenant arose from pushing too far the analogy with the conception of crime and punishment in municipal law;

(2) That the operation of the system of sanctions presumed that the aggressor had been determined, that the Covenant itself gave no indications on this subject, and that strong differences of opinion might arise in fact in the Council which would render the application of sanctions impossible or ineffective;

(3) That the only practical way of improving the application of the system of sanctions consisted in adopting provisions analogous to the draft Convention for the development of methods for preventing war, under which the collective action would be started, not as the result of answering the difficult question as to who had violated the Covenant, but owing to the refusal of a party to comply with recommendations of the Council for the withdrawal of armed forces behind a determined line or the cessation of hostilities.

The Governments holding this opinion have expressed the desire that at any rate cases in which the Council was divided on the question as to who was the aggressor, or as to the interim measures of protection which should be recommended to the parties in order to prevent or suspend hostilities, should be excluded from the contemplated extension of sanctions. In those various cases, it seemed that the material or moral difficulties in the way of carrying out obligations of mutual assistance would be too great for it to be possible to claim execution of such obligations.

As in the discussions of previous years, however, the opinion has prevailed in the Committee that any distinction of this kind ought to be rejected. It seems, nevertheless, that the discussion has made it possible to remove certain misconceptions on the subject.

19. In the first place, it has been recognised that those who held the above opinion were right in rejecting any too narrow conception of the problem of sanctions. The primary purpose of the Council's action is to prevent or stop hostilities and effect a pacification, before it enquires into questions of responsibility and ensures the settlement of the dispute.

It is equally true that the obligations assumed by the Members of the League of Nations for the purpose of maintaining peace, although they rest upon each Member individually, imply a certain agreement among them, a co-operation in common action. If the Members of the League found themselves deeply divided in the views which they took of a particular situation, common action would no doubt in fact be suspended; but it would be for the Council to re-establish unanimity by adopting interim measures of protection such as are contemplated in the draft convention on the means for preventing war. If the continuance of too numerous divergences of view created a situation altogether different from that which Members of the League must be deemed to have contemplated, it would be impossible to expect that the Members of the League would carry out obligations undertaken on an entirely different basis. In such a case, it makes little difference whether the original dispute was submitted to the Council of the League of Nations or to arbitration.

On the other hand, it seems impossible to claim that Members of the League of Nations which considered that it was clear who was the aggressor, and that common action was possible, should abstain from carrying out the obligations which rest upon them individually under the first paragraph of Article 16 of the Covenant, for the sole reason that formal unanimity had not been obtained in the Council.

Accordingly, a reasonable interpretation of our Charter of Association seems to answer the fears which have been expressed. These fears, moreover, appear exaggerated, and it would be wrong to weaken confidence in the wisdom of the Council's action and the good faith which the generality of the Members of the League would show in carrying out their obligations.

20. Further, if the proposed exceptions were examined in the light of the existing Covenant, it would be seen that their effect would be to diminish appreciably the guarantees which the Covenant already affords. The obligations of the individual Members of the League under Article 16 of the existing text of the Covenant are not subject to the condition that the Council must have taken a decision as to who is the aggressor.

21. To make such a distinction would, from the moral point of view, have the disadvantage of making recourse to war, which would in general be forbidden under the Covenant as amended, appear in some cases not to be subject to sanctions.

22. It must, however, be recognised that the principal difficulty in the task of amendment which has been undertaken, and the only serious obstacle to its success, still lies in the hesitation of certain Members of the League to agree to an extension of their existing obligations to give assistance, even if such extension is only theoretical.

It may be hoped that agreement would be greatly facilitated by the entry into force . . . of a general Convention for the reduction of armaments. Certain Members of the League, for example, had announced their intention of making their ratification of the amendment of the Covenant conditional on the entry into force of the Convention for the reduction of armaments. Other Governments have expressed, as the date of the Conference draws near, preoccupations which would appear to be satisfied to some extent by the adoption of the proposed amendment.

Thus, on the eve of the Conference, the link between the two undertakings has been further strengthened. Certain States have expressed a desire to know, before giving an opinion on the amendment of the Covenant, to what extent and for how long the Convention for the reduction of armaments would satisfy the requirements of Article 8 of the Covenant.

Such being the case, it would be inexpedient to attempt at present to frame final texts. The most suitable method would appear to be for the Assembly to set up a temporary committee, for the amendment of the Covenant, consisting of representatives of the Members of the League, in order that they may, during the Conference for the Reduction of Armaments, endeavour to arrive at unanimous agreement on the bases set forth in the present report. The amendments might then be finally voted during the next session of the Assembly.

Draft Resolution.

The Assembly,

Approving the report of M. Rolin;

Reaffirms its intention of continuing the task of inserting in the Covenant of the League of Nations a general prohibition of recourse to war and the principle that the settlement of international disputes may only be sought by pacific methods;

Decides to create a temporary committee consisting of representatives of all the Members of the League of Nations, which may meet during the Conference for the Reduction of Armaments for the purpose of seeking unanimous agreement on the bases indicated in the report and of drawing up a final text which may be voted by the Assembly at its next session;

Requests the Council to convene the Committee for the date which it considers appropriate;

Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution and report to the Members of the League of Nations, in order that, if they consider it necessary, they may send to the Council their views as to the lines on which they think agreement could be attained.

SECOND COMMITTEE

(TECHNICAL ORGANISATIONS)

AGENDA.

1. WORK OF THE ORGANISATION FOR COMMUNICATIONS AND TRANSIT.
2. WORK OF THE HEALTH ORGANISATION.
3. WORK OF THE ECONOMIC ORGANISATION.
4. WORK OF THE FINANCIAL ORGANISATION, INCLUDING THE WORK OF THE ECONOMIC INTELLIGENCE SERVICE.
5. DRAFT CONVENTION FOR THE REGULATION OF WHALE FISHING.

FIRST MEETING.

Held on Wednesday, September 9th, 1931, at 4 p.m.

Chairman : M. JANSON (Belgium).

1. Election of Vice-Chairman.

The Committee elected M. COLIJN (Netherlands) Vice-Chairman.

2. Agenda : Appointment of Rapporteurs.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the Committee's agenda was as follows :

1. Work of the Organisation for Communications and Transit.
2. Work of the Health Organisation.
3. Work of the Economic Organisation.
4. Work of the Financial Organisation, including the Work of the Economic Intelligence Service.
5. Draft Convention for the Regulation of Whale Fishing.

The Chairman added that the Sixth Committee would probably refer to the Second Committee for examination those parts of the report of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union which relate to economic, financial, health or transit questions.

The Committee elected the following Rapporteurs :

(1) Work of the Communications and Transit Organisation : M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia);
(2) Work of the Health Organisation : M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia);
(3) Work of the Financial Organisation and Economic Intelligence Service : M. BERNÍS (Spain).

3. Publicity of Meetings.

The Committee decided, in accordance with the method followed in previous years, to hold its meetings in public.

SECOND MEETING.

Held on Monday, September 14th, 1931, at 10.30 a.m.

Chairman : M. JANSON (Belgium).

4. Draft Convention for the Regulation of Whaling : Appointment of Rapporteur.

The Committee decided to appoint M. BRAADLAND, first delegate of Norway, as Rapporteur for the question of the Draft Convention for the Regulation of Whaling.

5. Work of the Committee of Enquiry for European Union : Reference to Second Committee.

The CHAIRMAN informed the Committee that the Sixth Committee had virtually decided to refer to the Second Committee the consideration of the economic and financial questions with which the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had already dealt. Although no formal decision to that effect had yet been taken, he thought the Committee should begin at once to take these questions into consideration.

6. Work of the Communications and Transit Organisation : Draft Report submitted by M. Costa du Rels (Bolivia) (Annex 1).

M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia) read his report (Annex 1).

M. ANDVORD (Norway), speaking for the Norwegian delegation, approved the report as a whole, but had one objection to raise to the passage dealing with the Conference on Buoyage and Lighting of Coasts. He understood that the reference to the Conference being called upon to resume its work " at an early date " meant that it was proposed to convene it again in 1932.

All shipping circles in Norway and all the competent Norwegian authorities were of opinion that the principles on which it had been proposed to base the Convention were theoretical rather than practical. Geographic, hydrographic and climatic conditions varied so much from one country to another that it was hardly possible to draw up effective uniform rules. The previous year's Conference had shown the extent of the differences on this subject between the principal maritime Powers. The Norwegian delegation by no means shared the opinion that a new conference should be called at an early date. On the contrary, they wondered whether there was any use in calling a conference at all, and whether there was not reason to fear that the efforts made to unify buoyage and the lighting of coasts might lead to results the opposite of what was intended. The greater part of the world's shipping was at present lying idle in the world's ports, and the profits on the part of it which was in use barely covered the working costs of the shipping companies. It would be unwise, in these circumstances, to impose new charges on the companies in the interest of a unification, the object of which was not clear. Nor was it by any means certain that the shipping crisis would be at an end when the proposed measures for the unification of buoyage were adopted by an international conference.

He accordingly proposed the amendment of the text of the draft report in such a way as to make the reference to the prospects of a new conference less definite, and not to impose in any sense any obligation to call a new conference at an early date, but rather to hold up the question for the moment. He also proposed to alter the first paragraph of the draft resolution accordingly. If the Second Committee so decided, it would be complying with the recommendation of the Fourth Committee with regard to the avoidance, as far as possible, of any action calculated to involve new expense for the budget of the League.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) agreed that the passage referring to the probable results of the work in regard to the unification of buoyage and the lighting of coasts should be phrased less definitely, and he also thought the words " at an early date " should be omitted. It was not for the Committee to pronounce as to when a new international conference should be called. The decision should be left to the responsible authorities. Further, the British Government was about to communicate to the interested Powers new proposals which might throw new light on the possibilities of agreement between the principal maritime countries and the desirability of summoning a new conference.

He noted that the activities of the Communications and Transit Organisation were somewhat different from what they had been in previous years. They were no longer confined, as they had been in the past, to the study of the bases of law upon which the systems and practices affecting transport and communications were developed in the different countries, or to the means of dealing with difficulties arising from the differences between those bases of law. This year the Organisation had dealt with local and concrete problems. The Council of the League was at that moment considering a proposal for enlarging the field of the Financial Committee in order to enable the latter to state its views on the financial aspects of certain questions connected with international public works. If side by side with this development of the Financial Organisation there was a parallel development in the activities of the Transit Organisation, the resulting co-ordination would be in every way gratifying.

The case of China was a striking illustration of the importance of communications from the standpoint of the economic and social development of that country. In the course of his recent visit to China, he had found that this question of communications and transport was a vital point of all Chinese problems. It was impossible to raise the social level of the country until the primitive methods of transport had been superseded by the infinitely less costly modern methods. China had only 7,000 miles of railway. In the province of Che Kiang, the population of which was equal to that of England and France combined, there was not a single railway. Che Kiang represented one-tenth of the entire area of China; but it took only one-hundredth of the country's total imports.

On the other hand, China was endowed by nature with a wonderful river system, which had been supplemented in the course of centuries by a whole system of canals. Unhappily, the recent catastrophe had hit China at precisely this vital point of her internal communications. The inundation caused by the rupture of the dykes had given rise to devastation on a wide seale, and would no doubt be followed by terrible epidemics. Here there was an eminently useful field for the activities of the organs of the League. The urgency of the situation was beyond all question. The Health and Transit Organisations would be called upon to collaborate with the Chinese authorities in order to remedy the disaster as far as possible. The despatch of experts to the spot, which must be the first stage in this collaboration, was a question of the utmost importance. The choice of the experts must, no doubt, be decided by their technical qualifications alone, but the term " technical qualifications " must be understood in the widest sense. M. Haas, the Director of the Transit Section, had already been to China; and he hoped that it would not be his last journey to that country.

There was every difference between the foreign experts who used to be called in to collaborate with the Chinese authorities and the experts whose co-operation was now asked for by the Chinese Government. In the old days, the foreign experts were in a sense imposed on the Chinese Government, whether under a loan convention or in some other connection. The form of collaboration inaugurated by the organs of the League appeared to be the true solution of the problem.

M. Posse (Germany) thought that the work done by the Communications and Transit Organisation in connection with maritime questions—in particular, the registration of ships, questions of collisions, and rights in rem over vessels,—were of the first importance.

He was fully in sympathy with the programme of public works with which it was proposed the League of Nations should be associated to assist the development of China and her recovery from the havoc caused by the Yang-Tse floods.

In any attempts to deal with the economic crisis, the work of the Communications and Transit Organisation should be brought into connection with the work of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. He thought the resolution which they intended to propose for the Assembly's adoption should include some reference to the proposal made by the Director of the International Labour Office to the Commission for European Union for the organisation of public works as a remedy for unemployment. The German Minister of Labour had pointed out in reply to the proposal that there was scope in Germany for extensive development in connection with the construction of roads, electrical power development, and agricultural and irrigation works, on such a scale as to afford four or five million days of work for the unemployed in Germany. But a preliminary condition of the success of any such action was, firstly, that it should be immediate, and, secondly, that capital should be available at low rates of interest and at long term.

M. Kawashima (Japan) said that Japan, as a great maritime nation, welcomed the activities of the Communications and Transit Organisation in connection with maritime questions. Japan had been unable, for special geographical and meteorological reasons, to sign the two Conventions concluded at Lisbon, but she would be glad to see those Conventions signed by as many other countries as possible. He regretted the Norwegian amendment to the report, if it meant that the solution of these questions would be postponed sine die; but he recognised the undesirability of calling another conference on the subject without any prospect of agreement. He hoped that the League would continue its study of international maritime questions—for instance, in connection with coasting trade and the unification of tonnage measurements of vessels—and that international agreement would eventually be reached for the scope and definition of the coasting trade on lines in harmony with the freedom of commerce.

As a near neighbour of China, Japan was keenly interested in the improvement of communications and public works in that country, and hoped that the experience of foreign countries with regard to communications in China would be utilised. Moreover, Japan was prepared to co-operate wholeheartedly in any League work in this connection. But there was need for work of this kind in countries other than China or European countries; and the work of the League in this sphere should not be subject to any geographical restrictions.

Dr. L. K. Hyder (India) said he had been much struck by the universal character of the sympathy expressed with China in her recent disasters. India knew what these great natural disasters meant. All countries with great rivers were liable to suffer from them.

Sympathy was not enough. The world had a great opportunity for pooling the advice and experience of mankind in the conflict with the brute forces of nature. He was in entire agreement with Sir Arthur Salter in the emphasis which the latter had laid on the importance of choosing suitable experts in this connection.

India was closely interested in maritime questions, and he hoped that it would ultimately be found possible to arrive at a general codification of rules in connection with storm signals at sea.

M. Vennersten (Sweden) agreed with the Norwegian amendment to the report. The final text would no doubt be drafted by the Rapporteur and the Norwegian delegate in concert.

M. de Michelis (Italy) suggested that the report might include three points that had been left rather obscure. In the first place, a special Committee set up by the Communications and Transit Organisation and the International Labour Office had studied the conditions of engagement and work of the staff employed in European inland navigation. It was to be hoped that this Committee would be able to collect the documentation necessary to enable it to obtain practical suggestions from the Committee of Experts which was to meet in the near future.

He then referred to another important point. In the supplementary report on the work of the League, the Committee expressed the opinion that it was " impossible to study accurately the problems concerning the transport of agricultural produce as long as the policy of economic co-operation between States in agricultural matters has not been sufficiently fixed ".[1] He thought there were a number of questions (such as the reduction of transport tariffs, simplification of Customs formalities and the like) which might quite well be studied before agreement had been reached on the larger issue of economic co-operation in general. The International Institute of Agriculture was prepared to afford its collaboration, and the Communications and Transit Organisation would have to come to an agreement with the Institute to carry on its work in that matter. The report to be submitted to the Assembly should mention the usefulness of the study of these problems.

Lastly, he was of opinion that it was necessary in the resolution to be submitted to the Assembly to avoid losing sight of the proposals made with a view to the organisation of large-scale public works in Europe for the alleviation of unemployment in the special problem of co-operation with China. He would like the resolution to include a paragraph making it clear that the enquiries with reference to public works should be given very careful consideration by the competent organisation.

M. DE KAUFFMANN (Denmark) supported the Norwegian amendment. He agreed with Sir Arthur Salter that it was undesirable to proclaim in advance the success of the proposed new conference on the unification of buoyage.

M. DE VILLIERS (South Africa) said that, while most of the matters dealt with in the report of the Communications and Transit Organisation did not directly affect South Africa, he was disposed to consider favourably the acceptance of the formula proposed by the Committee of Experts to fix rules for the adoption of a standard horse-power measurement for aeroplane and dirigible engines.[1]

M. ANDVORD (Norway) thought there would be no difficulty in redrafting the passage of the report which he had proposed to amend, in conjunction with the Rapporteur and in the light of what had been said by Sir Arthur Salter and by M. Vennersten, but on one condition—namely, that the new conference should be regarded as a new conference altogether, and that the preparations for it should be in accordance with the Assembly's decision of October 3rd, 1930, with regard to the procedure to be followed in drawing up conventions under the auspices of the League of Nations. It would be a great mistake to call a new conference unless there was some certainty of its success. Nothing had weakened the League's prestige latterly so much as the large number of international conferences which had ended in failure. What the League literature proclaimed as " successes " were not always so regarded by the rest of the world.

M. COLIJN (Netherlands) agreed that the failures of international conferences in the past had been prejudicial to the League's prestige, and that there was every reason for not calling another conference without any prospect of its succeeding.

He had no objection to the inclusion of a paragraph in the resolution with regard to proposals for the organisation of public works; but he wanted to avoid anything in the nature of window-dressing. The resolution, as stated by the Rapporteur, expressed its confidence that the Communications and Transit Organisation " will also take all suitable steps to comply with requests for advice in respect of public works which it may receive from the various Governments ". Who was going to pay for these studies? Would the Governments be prepared to pay? In the light of the recommendations of the Fourth Committee, and Lord Cecil's suggestion that the League ought to cut down all subsidiary expenditure, he thought they should make no recommendations which involved increase in the expenditure of the League. He would like, therefore, to add a clause to the resolution embodying a reservation to that effect.

M. HAAS (Director of the Communications and Transit Section) said that, while it was impossible to be sure of the success of any conference beforehand, he had every reason to hope that the continuation of the Lisbon Conference would prove successful. It was certainly undesirable to call conferences without any reasonable hopes of their success; but there were also disadvantages in delaying the convening of conferences when the time was ripe. The question as to when the time was ripe was really a technical matter. The main reason for the adjournment of the Lisbon Conference was that no fresh British proposals had yet been received. As soon as these arrived, they would be communicated to the other Governments, and a small committee of experts would then be convened to examine them in association with the Governments. The committee of experts would then decide whether it was expedient to convene a new conference or not.

Hardly any conference convened by the Communications and Transit Organisation had ever proved to be premature, and he believed that that claim might be put forward in the case of the Lisbon Conference. The latter, after all, had produced a considerable number of points of agreement, and the divergences which had led to its adjournment were few in number.

In any case, there was no intention of convening the new conference before 1933; so that the 1932 budget would not be affected.

The Communications and Transit Organisation had gone carefully into the proposals for its co-operation in public works in China and elsewhere, but had not yet had an opportunity of discussing the proposals of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. The Organisation's co-operation would take the form mainly of sending experts to China to study the problem on the spot, and the choice of the experts would be governed by both their technical and their personal qualifications. At the same time, the Organisation would endeavour to draw on the experience and advisory capacity of as many countries as possible.

As regards the financial aspect of the proposal, to which M. Colijn had drawn attention, the Committee would appreciate that the budget of the Communications and Transit Organisation was strictly limited. If new expenditure were involved by the proposed work in China, less urgent expenditure would necessarily be postponed.

As regards the transport of agricultural products, the passage quoted by M. de Michelis showed the unwillingness of the Organisation to launch out on premature schemes. But that did not mean that it was uninterested in the question of the transport of agricultural products. There was much preparatory work which could proceed at once; and, without any additional expenditure, it would be possible to collect information on such matters as transport tariffs and the like with the aid of the International Institute of Agriculture, whose co-operation he warmly welcomed, and with the aid of other sources.

M. GAUTIER (France) remarked that the question of public works had been considered as a transit question and also from the financial standpoint; but it was not thereby exhausted. It had its economic and social aspects as well, particularly in connection with the important issue of unemployment. He hoped that what had been said that day would be regarded only as a prelude to further discussion of this issue.

THIRD MEETING.

Held on Tuesday, September 15th, 1931, at 10 a.m.

Chairman : M. JANSON (Belgium).

7. Communication from the President of the Assembly : Assembly Resolution on Economy.

M. KERNO (Secretary of the Committee) read a letter from the President of the Assembly informing the Committee of the resolution passed by the Assembly inviting the Committees to have regard in their work to the principles of economy laid down by the Fourth Committee.[1]

For the information of the Committee, M. Kerno gave the figures of the budgets for the fourteenth period of the League of the four principal organisations dealt with by the Second Committee. It appeared that, as compared with the previous year, there was a reduction of 300,000 Swiss francs on the aggregate figures of the appropriations under 19 (a) (Financial Section), 19 (b) (Economic Section), 21 (Transit Organisation), and 22 (Health Organisation). On the other hand, there was a new appropriation of some 480,000 francs for the work proposed in China; but the latter appropriation was not in connection solely with the four organisations in question. It was already certain that there would be no supplementary budgets submitted in the case of the Transit Section, the Health Organisation, or the Economic Section. On the other hand, it was very probable that additional appropriations would be asked for by the Financial Section in connection with the enquiry which was to be undertaken in Austria and Hungary at the request of those countries.

8. Work of the Communications and Transit Organisation : Draft Report submitted by M. Costa du Rels (Bolivia) (continuation) : Rapporteur's Amendments to the Report (Annex 2).

M. SZE (China) wished to associate himself with the previous speakers in congratulating the Rapporteur upon his very excellent report, and also to express his appreciation of the work done by the Communications and Transit Organisation during the past year. The Chinese delegation gladly supported the resolution before the Committee. It much appreciated the sympathetic references made by previous speakers to the part of the resolution which concerned China.

The co-operation between China and the League, which had happily been in existence for several years, had been of the greatest benefit to China, not only because she had received, and was now receiving, expert and wholly disinterested advice, but because, through her contact with the members of the technical organisations of the League Secretariat, she was obtaining a direct and clear understanding of the aims and character of the League itself.

It afforded the Chinese nation great pleasure to receive, during the past year, the visits of three of the Directors of the technical organisations of the League—namely, of the Communications and Transit Section, the Health Section and the Economic and Financial Section, and also the visits of other members of the League's Secretariat. He ventured to hope that this collaboration now existing between China and the League would continue along the same lines as in the past.

Sir Arthur Salter, who had only recently returned from China, and who on the previous day had addressed the Committee, referred to the lack of adequate means of communication in China.

He had also made mention of the fact that " the choice of the experts must, no doubt, be decided by their technical qualifications alone, but the term ' technical qualifications ' must be understood in the widest sense "; and, further: " There was every difference between the foreign experts who used to be called in to collaborate with the Chinese authorities and the experts whose co-operation was now asked for by the Chinese Government. In the old days, the foreign experts were in a sense imposed on the Chinese Government, whether under a loan convention or in some other connection. The form of collaboration inaugurated by the organs of the League appeared to be the true solution of the problem."

That was certainly true. China had greatly changed during recent years, with the result that future collaboration between her and the other nations of the world must be upon a new basis. The Chinese people lived in the present and must think and act in terms of the present, and not on the basis of out-of-date methods and purposes.

China was a large country, as large as, or larger than, the entire continent of Europe. Its different parts had different needs arising out of topographical and other features. Up till now, their development had not been uniform. Thus, of China's seven thousand miles of railways, much the greater portion was situated north of the Yangtse. In like manner, communications in general in the provinces along the coast and along the great rivers were much more advanced than in the other parts of China. In addition to topographical reasons, other reasons, which should no longer have force, had, in the past, led to this unequal and unsystematic development. It was therefore imperative that, in the future, the construction of means of communication and of other public works should proceed according to plans which would bring the parts into due co-ordination with each other, and thus cause the future whole to be in consonance with the true economic and commercial needs of the entire country. In the drafting and perfecting of such comprehensive plans, the technical advice which the experts sent out to China by the League could supply would be of the greatest benefit to China and, indirectly, to the commerce of the world.

Should China request technical advice in other directions, it was hoped that the League would find itself able to furnish it as generously and as disinterestedly as it had in the past. The Chinese were not an ungrateful people; they would not only be grateful for any aid that did not carry with it any undesirable features, but they would contribute what they could to the promotion of the welfare of the world, and, finally, that they would look to the League as the chief instrument through which this contribution could best be made.

Mr. RIDDELL (Canada) said that the Canadian delegation approved of the amendments submitted by the Rapporteur to the first draft of his report. It was encouraging to see that a special paragraph in the draft resolution was now devoted to China. He considered it a healthy sign that, at a time when so much attention was being given to Europe, the League should be directing some of its efforts towards helping countries in other parts of the world.

Assistance given to China at this time would benefit the whole world. Canada was deeply interested in the progress which China was making, and Canadian sympathy went out to her in her present difficulties. He believed that the present time offered a great opportunity to the League for service in China, and he trusted that this amendment would give satisfaction to all the members of the Committee.

M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia), Rapporteur, pointed out that the amendments proposed by him had been drafted in agreement with the delegates interested.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) and M. ANDVORD (Norway) expressed their satisfaction with the proposed amendments.

M. COLIJN (Netherlands) recognised that the amendments proposed by the Rapporteur represented a distinct improvement, especially in this respect—that they enabled a clear distinction to be drawn between the general work of the Transit Organisation and the special question of China. He would like, however, to add the words " within the limits of the budget " in the last paragraph of the amended draft resolution.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) thought there might be some objection to a limitation of this kind in a particular case. All expenditure, of course, had to be kept within budgetary limits. If the Netherlands delegate meant to limit the possibility of making transfers from one chapter of the budget to another, that would be going too far. The existing regulations afforded adequate safeguards against the abuse of transfers of this kind.

M. COLIJN (Netherlands) remarked that the possibility of making transfers from one chapter of the budget to another amounted, in practice, to a loophole for increase of expenditure. If there were no transfers, there would be economies on the budgetary appropriations. He recognised, however, that the question was a technical one, and, as such, a matter rather for the Fourth Committee. He accordingly withdrew his amendment.

M. DE MICHELIS (Italy) thanked the Rapporteur for having taken into consideration his observations on unemployment with reference to inland navigation and the transport of agricultural products. He would like, however, to see rather more prominence given in the report to the third point to which he had drawn attention—namely, the question of public works.

This question of public works had three important aspects; but the Second Committee was concerned only with the technical aspect, consisting of the relations between the public works proposal and the work of the Communications and Transit Organisation. He understood, however, that the French delegation proposed to raise the question from a more general standpoint, when the proposal submitted to the Assembly by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union came before the Second Committee. He proposed, therefore, to return to it then.

The CHAIRMAN proposed the adoption of the draft report, with the amendments added by the Rapporteur, subject to M. de Michelis' reservation with regard to subsequent modifications, if such should be found desirable on further discussion.

The Committee adopted the report with the amendments proposed.

The Committee adopted the resolution in the following form:

" The Assembly,

" Takes note of the work undertaken by the Organisation for Communications and Transit since the last Assembly and, in particular, of the success achieved by the Conference for the Unification of Buoyage and Lighting of Coasts, the Conference for the Unification of River Law and the Conference on Road Traffic;

" Expresses its confidence that the Organisation will do its utmost to secure the entire success of the co-operation established with the National Government of China for the study of questions of public works in which its assistance has been requested;

" Likewise expresses its confidence that the Transit Organisation will endeavour to take suitable steps to comply with requests for advice in respect of public works which it may receive from the various Governments, such as the requests for advice referred to in the report of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union."

9. Work of the Health Organisation : Draft Report submitted by M. Fierlinger (Czechoslovakia) (Annex 3).

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia), after having read his report, said that his experience of the office of Rapporteur enabled him to state that the Health Organisation was still doing its work zealously and conscientiously. That work had developed systematically and had been extended to a continually increasing number of countries. The Health Organisation was to-day a centre of information and documentation at the disposal of all countries. Its essential characteristic was its universality. Approval of the report meant approval of the manner in which the Organisation had done its work.

M. GAUTIER (France) referred to the resolution adopted unanimously by the Assembly some days before, on the proposal of the British delegation, expressing sympathy with China in connection with the great disaster with which that country had been afflicted.

As a result of consultation with other delegations, including the British and Chinese, the French delegation was convinced that it would be desirable to give some concrete expression to this sympathy. In view of the danger of epidemics as a result of the recent inundations, action should be taken on similar lines to that which was resorted to in 1921 and 1923 in connection with the similar disasters in Poland and Greece, when the Epidemics Commission did very useful work. With a view to making available help of this kind, the French delegation proposed to appeal to all States, Members or non-members of the League, and, in particular, to countries having relations with the Far-Eastern Bureau, to place all their resources at the disposal of the Chinese Government. Each country would retain complete freedom of action in this connection, and the work of the League would be to increase the effectiveness of the help rendered by improved co-ordination and by judicious distribution of the contributions received. Animated by these motives, the French delegation desired to submit the following draft resolution to the Committee for presentation to the Assembly :

" The Second Committee,

" Regarding the danger of the spread of epidemics as a result of the terrible disaster in the Yangtse valley, both as a humanitarian problem of the first magnitude and a matter of international concern;

" Recalling the assistance rendered in similar circumstances by the Health Organisation through its Epidemic Commission in Poland and Greece in 1921 and 1923;

" Convinced of the need to show clearly and concretely the sympathy of humanity for the victims of this appalling catastrophe :

" Requests the Assembly to invite all States Members and non-members of the League, and particularly those in contact with the Far-Eastern Bureau of the Health Organisation, to respond, so far as is in their power, to any request that may be made for co-operation with the League of Nations in taking the measures necessary to combat epidemics in the flooded areas of China."

The CHAIRMAN proposed that the discussion on the French proposal and the general discussion on the report should be combined.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia), Rapporteur, proposed that the French resolution should be added to the resolution in the report.

M. TORRES-UMAÑA (Colombia) gave expression to the importance which the Colombian Government attached to the League Health Organisation's work. The Colombian Government was so much interested in the work that it had decided to attach a special expert to the Colombian delegation in order to maintain continuous collaboration with the Health Organisation. In their view, the two main objects of the League were to be found in the struggle against the two dangers threatening the life of mankind—namely, war and disease.

He entirely approved the draft report and also the draft resolution proposed by the French delegation, but would prefer the Committee to vote separately on the Rapporteur's resolution and the French resolution.

Viscount ASTOR (British Empire), speaking for the British delegation, warmly supported the draft report and the French proposal. He was glad to note the Health Organisation's development at the present day. He had himself been present at its birth, for he had taken part in 1919 in the drafting of Article 23 (f) of the Covenant, under which the League was entitled to deal with questions of health.

The entire world owed a debt of gratitude to the Health Organisation for the services it rendered in constituting a nucleus of experts and men of science of world reputation whose opinions were at the disposal of all countries. It had shown that there were no frontiers where matters of health were concerned. It had also done valuable work in co-ordinating the activities of national health administrations. Lastly, it had been of the utmost use in connection with the struggle against epidemics by centralising epidemiological intelligence. There was at the present moment a grave danger of epidemics, not only in China, but also in neighbouring countries, and effective action would be required in 1932.

He had no limitations to make to his approval of the report; but he wished to draw special attention to the passage referring to the work done by the Permanent Commission on Standardisation. It was desirable to emphasise the indispensable character of the work being done in this field at a time when economy was strongly in vogue, and when there were many who believed that certain branches of the League's activity were useless.

He was in entire agreement with the French proposal for assistance to China. The British Government would undoubtedly do everything in its power, for it was well aware that the danger to China was a danger to the world. He did not believe the help asked for would involve heavy expenditure. The despatch of experts and of stocks of drugs and vaccines would be of great use, without involving any large outlay.

Mrs. PLUMPTRE (Canada) was in entire agreement with the terms of the report. She drew attention to the importance of the statistical information collected by the Health Organisation. Canada, with nine provinces, each of which had a separate health organisation, was in a position to appreciate the importance for the whole world of co-ordinating the records of health services, and, above all, standardising serums and drugs, as Viscount Astor had pointed out.

She drew the attention of the Committee to the importance in all countries of questions of rural hygiene, and cited, as an example, the results obtained in Canada, particularly in the province of Quebec, by the organisation of health units.

In the name of Canada, she associated herself with the resolution proposed with a view to help for China. As Mr. Riddell had already pointed out in connection with the report on the work of the Communications and Transit Organisation, Canada had a special interest in China. Any assistance that the League could give to China would benefit all countries. The Canadian delegation could not imagine any better use that could be made of the Health Organisation than the carrying into effect of the French proposal.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) stated that his Government accepted unreservedly the draft resolution proposed by the French delegation.

As regards the report, he had one observation to make on the passage relating to the Malaria Commission. It was said that enquiries made by the Malaria Commission had led to the definition of a standard product of the total alkaloids of cinchona (the " totaquina "), which was stated to have the same effect as quinine; and it was added that the results of these enquiries would meet the necessity of an increase in the supply of the active product, and probably help to bring about a decrease in the cost of treatment.

He understood that to mean that success had been achieved in regard both to standardisation and to quantity and price. He would like to know whether that was what the text of the report meant. If so, he would like to know how long a time these results were expected to require for achievement. In his opinion, it would be a matter of years. He wished therefore to draw the Committee's attention to the fact that the producers of quinine in the Netherlands Indies held unsold stocks, which they were prepared to place at the disposal of Governments at a low price, to the amount of something like 500,000 kilogrammes of quinine. He had no desire to go into the question whether it was a case of over-production or under-consumption. All he desired to do was to draw the Committee's attention to the desirability of the Malaria Commission placing itself in touch with the Kinabureau of Amsterdam, which was an organisation representing the associated interests of individuals in the Netherlands Indies and was in a position to supply large quantities of quinine.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia), Rapporteur, replied that the Health Organisation had conducted two enquiries. The first was concerned with the alkaloid content of possible substitutes for quinine. In view of the results achieved, there was a faint hope of finding substitutes which would make it possible to reduce the cost of malaria treatment. The second enquiry was concerned with the total consumption in all countries of quinine and its substitutes. It was not yet concluded, and it was possible that the present stocks of quinine might be utilised. In any case, M. Trip had done a service in pointing out that the Netherlands Indies producers had stocks at their disposal at a fairly low price. The Secretariat would note his suggestion.

M. PASCUA (Spain) approved the report and the French proposal.

M. SANDLER (Sweden) remarked that there was no mention in the report of the question of alcoholism. The ninth Assembly passed a resolution on that subject on the initiative of Finland, Poland and Sweden. Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Denmark were also associated with the proposal. The action taken as a result of this resolution was to be found in the report submitted by the Health Director to the last Assembly.

The achievements of the Health Organisation in this connection were somewhat meagre. A Swedish expert had been entrusted with the study of the quantity of alcohol contained in the blood and on the relations between alcohol and tuberculosis. Statistical information as to alcoholism in Denmark, Sweden and Norway, and particulars of delirium tremens had been communicated to the Governments of the Scandinavian countries. Information had also been supplied with regard to the legislative action taken in the matter by various countries.

As to the first point, there was a misunderstanding. The Swedish expert's task did not consist in determining the quantity of alcohol in the blood—the methods of doing this were well known in every country—but in furnishing a report on the correlation between the quantity of alcohol in the blood and the other symptom and incidental features of alcoholism.

The Health Director thought the second point the only one of any real value. If that were so, why deal with questions of no real value? M. Sandler thought that, in this case, the Health Organisation had not done what it was called upon to do under the resolution passed by the Ninth Assembly. It was surprising to find it acting as if it were doing a service to the Scandinavian Governments by sending them Scandinavian statistics. There was no point in, so to say, returning statistics across the net.

It was not only the Governments of Finland, Poland and Sweden which were interested in the matter, but the other three Governments which had supported the Finnish motion. Even if that were not so, the fact that the Assembly had passed a resolution was sufficient to show that all the States Members of the League were interested in this question of alcoholism. It must be admitted that the Health Organisation had a great deal to do, and that it was sometimes overworked. But if it was not in a position to give effect to a resolution of the Assembly, that left the question open; and it would be necessary to take some other action in the matter as occasion arose, independently of the Health Organisation.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia), Rapporteur, replied that there had been difficulties in giving effect to this resolution of the Assembly, owing to the complicated character of the problem. The obstacles encountered by the Governments of the United States, Norway, Finland and, perhaps, also Sweden in the struggle against alcoholism were common knowledge. The procedure adopted had been to ask the Governments to suggest particular points for study; but insuperable difficulties had been found in comparing the different information supplied, and particularly in comparing statistics. Only countries with considerable experience in the matter were in a position to reply to the questionnaires addressed to them. That explained why the Scandinavian Governments had received only statistics relating to their own countries. He had, however, pointed out that it was very likely that there might be omissions in his report, and he had asked members to make suggestions for its improvement.

M. DE KAUFFMANN (Denmark) approved the French resolution with regard to help for China. He did not believe it would involve any heavy expenditure. The first thing to be done was to supply anti-cholera and anti-diphtheria serums and vaccines. The Danish Government had already sent 300,000 doses of vaccine.

He associated himself with the remarks of the British and Canadian delegates in regard to the work of the Commission on Standardisation.

M. DE MICHELIS (Italy) associated himself with the French proposal in regard to China. As regards the report, he asked M. Fierlinger if he would agree to add to the passage in the report relating to rural hygiene the following words:

> "The Health Organisation will naturally continue to keep in close touch with the three great international organisations mentioned, so as to benefit by their specific competence and by their collaboration."

He also proposed to add the following passage to the draft resolution:

> ". . . and hopes that the work of co-ordination and synthesis as regards conditions, research and health measures in general, from the statistical and practical standpoint, and the work of spreading this information, may be accomplished as rapidly as possible through the agency of the Health Organisation, thus realising an achievement of instruction and propaganda of great value."

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia), Rapporteur, accepted M. de Michelis' proposal.

Dr. HYDER (India) paid a tribute to the report. The work of the Health Organisation was of special importance to his country. India had derived great benefit from the exchange of ideas which took place during the visit of the Malaria Commission. The work of the Singapore Bureau was also of the utmost importance for all Eastern countries.

He had been much struck by the fact that the Health Organisation was giving its attention to the question of indigenous drugs. India had an indigenous remedy for leprosy, the scientific value of which had been recognised. He would be glad to see an increasing amount of scientific research work in this connection take the place of mere guesswork.

He had been much interested by what had been said by the Netherlands delegate in regard to the stocks of quinine available in the Netherlands Indies. More scientific research was also needed in the case of quinine. He did not doubt that, if the quality of drugs was improved and their price reduced, both producers and consumers would benefit.

He paid a tribute to the important work done by the Organisation in centralising the exchange of information on health problems. He hoped that the meetings which the League organised of directors of health administrations would be held in Asia as well as in Europe.

In conclusion, he expressed his sympathy for the resolution proposed by the French delegation. He had not yet received instructions from his Government on the subject; but he was certain that India, who realised that her interests were at one with those of China, would do everything in her power to assist the latter.

FOURTH MEETING.

Held on Wednesday, September 16th, 1931, at 10 a.m.

Chairman : M. JANSON (Belgium).

10. Work of the Health Organisation : Draft Report submitted by M. Fierlinger (Czechoslovakia) (continuation) : Adoption of Report and Resolution : Appointment of Rapporteur to the Assembly.

M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia) expressed the thanks of the Bolivian Government to the Health Organisation for the medical mission which had been sent to Bolivia to study problems on the spot. Such work was invaluable as enabling them to compare conditions in Bolivia with European conditions. The Bolivian Government greatly appreciated the work done by the mission, and had every intention of acting on the conclusions reached, so far as the financial position allowed.

Bolivia was making studies of tropical and subtropical diseases and was enquiring into the country's resources of cinchona.

It was sometimes suggested that the collaboration of Latin America with the League was platonic in character. It might be that on political issues there was not much scope for collaboration between the two, but Latin America had shown the utmost interest in the technical activities of the League. Argentine, Brazil, Chile, Mexico and Uruguay had invited the League to enquire into infant mortality. Uruguay had established an institute for the serological study of syphilis at Montevideo. Brazil, though not a member of the League, had made the handsome offer of a leprosy institute to work in conjunction with the League Health Organisation.

The French resolution with regard to China had his cordial sympathy.

M. TORRES-UMAÑA (Colombia) explained that he had asked on the previous day for a separate vote on the Rapporteur's draft resolution and on the resolution proposed by the French delegation. He had done so because of the financial consequences which might be involved by the French resolution : but, reassured by what the French delegate had said, he now withdrew his request and hoped that the Committee would pass the French resolution unanimously.

Mr. DE VILLIERS (South Africa) said that, though South Africa (being blessed with a fine climate) had a good health bill, it nevertheless followed and appreciated, and was prepared on occasion to profit by, the work of the Health Organisation.

The French resolution with regard to China had his entire sympathy and support.

M. CHODZKO (Poland) paid a tribute to the work of the European Conference on Rural Hygiene, the success of which was due primarily to the Spanish Government's initiative in calling the Conference and secondly to the organising work of the Health Organisation. The Conference had served to emphasise, as never before, the importance of correlating all the various influences (social, financial, economic, technical, hygienic and so on) which had a bearing on the life and work of the peasant. It was a reminder that, in the majority of European countries, where the agricultural population was over 50 per cent of the whole, the economic situation and the general level of the peasant masses was a decisive factor of industrial development. The low purchasing-power of the agriculturalists of Europe was at the root of the prevailing economic crisis. That was a truth which was only just beginning to be realised. The development of agriculture by the substitution of modern machinery for primitive manual labour would benefit industry no less than agriculture : and it would benefit the agriculturist not only economically but also in respect of his physical health. The comparative figures of the health of agricultural and industrial populations, as revealed, for example, in the campaign against tuberculosis, were astonishing. Statistics collected by Wolff for the fifteen years 1913 to 1928 in the principal European countries showed that the mortality from tuberculosis was twice or three times as high in agricultural countries as in industrialised countries. Unless strong action were taken by all the authorities concerned, the rural populations of Europe were doomed to physical deterioration as a result of tuberculosis.

That raised the general question of population. Industry was being continually called upon to increase production, while at the same time the workers were being told not to have large families. The doctrine of enrichissez-vous had been exploited for the last hundred years at the expense of the national birth-rates. The result was to upset the demographic balance. Since the middle of the last century there had been a decline of approximately 50 per cent in the birth-rates of Germany, Great Britain and France. The pernicious Malthusian thesis, though long since shown to be false, had made headway even in agricultural countries like Hungary and in the Slav lands.

Unemployment was not the cause of the crisis. Belgium, the most thickly populated country in Europe, had no unemployment. The fact was that society had not adjusted itself to the new problems created by the immense increase of producing power without any concomitant increase in the purchasing power of the masses. Just as the Napoleonic wars had awakened the political consciousness of Europe, so the world war had awakened the social consciousness of the world. That fact had to be taken into account in any economic policy pursued nowadays.

There was a certain danger in over-specialisation in the work of the League. He would suggest that there might be some co-ordination of the work of the League and that of the International Labour Office, which would appoint rapporteurs-généraux (if he might use the expression) on all the principal League committees to co-ordinate the multiplicity of League and other reports before they were submitted for decision to the Council or Assembly.

He cordially approved the French resolution with regard to China.

He especially welcomed the presence of Viscount Astor, because of the work which the latter had done in the British Health Ministry in connection with the Health Organisation.

Dr. Ethel OSBORNE (Australia) added her tribute to what Viscount Astor had said on the previous day with regard to the admirable work done by the Permanent Commission on the Standardisation of Sera, Serological Reactions and Biological Products. The older methods of medicine are being largely replaced by new methods based on recent and continuing research into new realms of the biological sciences. The potentialities of this field are only just being explored. Such research is more than one country can undertake; every country is anxious to do its share, and in the Health Organisation is provided an invaluable factor for international co-ordination. She suggested the consideration of the possibility of a standardised international type of " health dossier " showing the various treatments an individual had undergone, both for prevention and cure of diseases. It would contain records of vaccine and serum treatment, operative procedures, etc., and would have a standardised nomenclature intended rather for the information of the physician than of the patient.

She had nothing but applause for the work of the Cancer Commission. It was making a beginning, in the case of cancer and its treatment, of just that kind of " stocktaking " which it was hoped would be extended to other diseases. Fortunately, Australia is able to take part in this international cancer work because of considerable purchases of radium made by the Commonwealth.

She cordially approved the resolution brought forward by the delegate of France with regard to China. The Chinese disaster showed how valuable and opportune had been the foundation of the Epidemiological Institute in the Far East. The testing time of the Institute had now come.

One question with which the Health Organisation would be concerned in connection with the disaster in China was the problem of nutrition. She suggested that the nutrition requirements of China in this emergency should be approached from the standpoint of Australia's ability to supply many of them. The comparative nutritive values of wheat and other foodstuffs which Australia was in a position to supply—and, on the other hand, those of rice, etc.—as main articles of diet would have to be taken into consideration.

As regards rural hygiene, she might add to what had already been said by the Canadian delegate on the problems of dealing with large areas that Australia had made beneficial use of aeroplanes in its health services. They had doctors in the " back-blocks " of Australia, who were able to cover districts of a thousand miles radius with the aid of aeroplanes, which are also frequently used for transport of emergency cases over long distances, of specialists and urgently necessary medicaments.

The Australian delegate in the previous year had pressed for the continuation of the hygienic studies of the League in the South Pacific islands. They were of the utmost interest. The annual report of the Health Organisation (1930) [1] gave an interesting summary of this enquiry and lists problems of high significance which have evolved from it and which need research in the near future. It would be regrettable if these problems cannot be handled for reasons of economy.

From the standpoint of nutrition in particular, the Pacific afforded a unique field of work. In the years to come, the diets of the inhabitants of the countries round the Pacific Ocean would tend to standardisation—perhaps become more Americanised—but, for the present, they still constitute a unique human laboratory for students of nutrition.

She considered the report throughout demonstrated a constructive effort towards international health and was, in addition, a record of achievement in many directions.

Dr. HYNNINEN (Finland) reverted to the question of alcoholism raised by the Swedish delegate on the previous day. He thought it was not quite fair to argue, as was often done, that the effects of the abuse of alcohol were sufficiently well known, in view of existing statistics and past research. The general effects were no doubt known; but the same might have been said of the general causes which led up to (for example) the sugar, wheat or coal crises. But it was only the systematic, detailed studies made by the League into the special factors of those crises which had made it possible to find the appropriate remedies. They should approach the problem of alcoholism along the same lines.

He highly appreciated the good work done by the Health Organisation in following up researches made and suggesting new lines of study. But more was needed. The work which required to be done would be much facilitated, not only by the fact of its importance having been recognised by the Assembly, but also by the fact that the countries which had taken the initiative in the matter had already worked out in some detail a programme of the methods to be followed.

M. KAWASHIMA (Japan) was glad to note the extension of the Health Organisation's work to all parts of the world, and its co-operation with the Chinese Government in particular. Japan, in the past, had made her contribution to the improvement of health conditions in China, and was at all times prepared to render any assistance for which the Health Organisation might ask.

He welcomed the generous offer of the Brazilian Government to establish an International Study Centre for Leprosy at Rio de Janeiro. At the Health Committee's session in October, 1930, the question of establishing another International Study Centre for Leprosy in Japan, under the auspices of the League, had been discussed : and he sincerely hoped that this beneficent proposal would shortly be realised by the conclusion of a satisfactory arrangement between the Health Organisation and the Japanese Government.

He paid a tribute to the work done by the European Conference on Rural Hygiene. He thought the resolutions of the Conference might well be applied in countries outside Europe, and he hoped that, at the next Conference of this nature, the countries in continents other than Europe would also be invited to take part.

The Japanese delegation had the greatest sympathy for the resolution proposed by the French delegation, which came as a sequel to the resolution passed by the Assembly a few days before, in connection with the Chinese disaster. Japan, as China's friendly neighbour, had been shocked by the news of the disaster, and His Majesty the Emperor and the Japanese people were uniting to render effective service so far as lay in their power.

M. Kawashima gave the following particulars of the contributions already effected by Japan to the relief work :

The subscription opened by the newly created association of sympathisers for the flood victims of China had reached the sum of 430,000 yen. The association had already despatched to Hankow, as the first emergency measure, a Japanese vessel of 4,000 tons with full cargoes of rice, wheat-flour, condensed milk and other provisions, together with blankets and various medical articles.

On the other hand, the " Dojinkai " (a fraternal association in connection with Chinese-Japanese relations) had mobilised all its personnel in Hankow, organising them into relief parties. They were now actively engaged in a campaign against epidemics. They would soon be reinforced by a large medical contingent composed of medical students, both Japanese and Chinese. It had also arranged to charter a river vessel to send to Hankow to facilitate the relief work there.

Moreover, the Red Cross Association of Japan was sending a special representative to China with 300,000 silver dollars as a gift to the afflicted population. Various religious associations in Japan, together with newspapers and other societies, were conjointly doing their utmost to collect the necessary relief fund.

He proposed that the French resolution should be strengthened by being amended as follows :

" The Second Committee,

" Regarding the danger of the spread of epidemics and the deprivation of life as a result of the terrible disaster in the Yangtse valley both as a humanitarian problem of the first magnitude and a matter of international concern;

" Recalling the assistance rendered in similar circumstances by the Health Organisation through its Epidemic Commission in Poland and Greece in 1921 and 1923;

" Convinced of the need to show clearly and concretely the sympathy of humanity for the victims of this appalling catastrophe :

" Invites all the States Members or non-members of the League of Nations, and particularly those in closer contact with the Far East, to respond so far as is in their power to any request that may be made to take all possible measures for relief in the flooded areas of China, in co-operation with the League of Nations;

" Requests the Council to take the necessary steps to render the international co-operation effective."

M. GAUTIER (France) welcomed the Japanese amendment.

M. SZE (China) welcomed the French resolution and the support it had received in all quarters. He regarded it as one more proof of the friendship the States Members of the League bore to China, and in the name of his country he extended to them all his hearty thanks.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia), Rapporteur, said that the French resolution, as amended by the Japanese proposal, was one more proof of international solidarity. He noted that Dr. Rajchman, the Medical Director, had at once proceeded to China in order to organise the relief work on the spot.

The Committee adopted the report and the resolution proposed by the French delegation, as amended by the Japanese delegation.

The Committee adopted the resolution in the following form :

" The Assembly,

" Having noted the reports on the work of the Health Organisation of the League of Nations since the last session :

" Recognises with satisfaction the value of the methods of international co-operation employed by this Organisation;

" Notes with satisfaction that the experience acquired by the Health Organisation is being made available to the States Members of the League to an ever-increasing extent;

" Expresses the hope that steps will be taken to give the widest and most rapid distribution to the information collected by the Health Organisation concerning the practical and scientific health work, carried out in the different countries, which is of international interest;

" Views with interest the work accomplished on rural hygiene, and hopes that the task undertaken in this field will be extended so that the rural populations of all countries may benefit in the near future;

" Approves the work carried out by the Health Organisation since the last session of the Assembly;

" And congratulates that Organisation on the results obtained, which give fresh proof of the concentration of its efforts on definite tasks, and the universality of its work."

The CHAIRMAN stated that the Committee, by its unanimous adoption of the above-mentioned French resolution, was anxious to testify to its sincere and heartfelt sympathy with China in her disaster. He further thanked M. Fierlinger for his services as Rapporteur, and proposed that he should report to the Assembly on behalf of the Committee.

Agreed.

11. Communication from the Sixth Committee : Reference of Certain Technical Questions to the Second Committee (Annex 4).

The CHAIRMAN read a letter addressed to him by the Chairman of the Sixth Committee (Annex 4), proposing that certain technical questions should be referred to the Second Committee. He pointed out that the Committee would have to consider what the answer to the letter should be in the matter of transit questions, but he would at once ask the Rapporteur on the Health Organisation whether the latter was in a position to comply with the Sixth Committee's wishes.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) thought that an affirmative answer might be given to the Sixth Committee. He had consulted the Health Organisation on the point, and they had replied that they would gladly put themselves at the disposal of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union for any purpose desired.

The CHAIRMAN said that M. Fierlinger's reply would be communicated to the Sixth Committee.

12. Work of the Economic Organisation : General Discussion.

The CHAIRMAN read the following draft resolution, submitted by the delegations of Belgium, Denmark, Luxemburg, Norway, the Netherlands and Sweden :

" The Assembly,

" Recognising that the normal exchange of merchandise between the nations is seriously hampered by frequent changes in Customs tariffs and, generally, by instability in commercial policy;

" Considering the statement made by the sub-committee of economic experts to the Commission for European Union to the effect that such changes greatly complicate the task of maintaining stability in the monetary and credit system of the world :

" Earnestly hopes that every country will try to the utmost possible extent to avoid any such change in tariff or commercial policy as would tend to increase the economic disequilibrium and further disturb the general balance of payments."

M. VENNERSTEN (Sweden) said that the differences of view on economic questions which had become apparent at the last Assembly still continued. The gravity of the depression had not led to the adoption of economic co-operation. A number of restrictive measures had been accepted, which had merely tended to increase existing differences. Each new restriction placed a new responsibility on the Governments, and these responsibilities could not be evaded by citing the example of others or waiting for the results of collective action. Economic co-operation would be facilitated if public opinion in every country forced the Governments to follow the same lines at home as they advocated at Geneva.

There was a close connection between trade relations and the circulation of capital, and, at the very moment when the utmost freedom in the circulation of capital was required, commercial policy was establishing new barriers to the exchange of goods which was the necessary complement of credit transactions. The Basle experts had been unable to submit any immediate proposals for facilitating long-term credits, for the reason, which they frankly emphasised, that the free movement of capital was impossible without a change in commercial policy.

Turning to special questions, he referred to the proposal by the Persian and Swedish delegations, which the Commission of Enquiry for European Union adopted in May last, to the effect that States should follow as far as possible the principles of the Commercial Convention of March 24th, 1930, and should not denounce existing commercial treaties; or, if they did so, should notify third parties with a view to appeal by the latter. He hoped the Assembly would confirm this recommendation of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union.

In the matter of preference, he recalled that, at the May meeting of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union, the Swedish delegation had made reservations and had stated that it could not give its approval to any system involving preference. The preference then proposed in the case of cereals had been understood to be in the nature of a temporary and exceptional measure. But requests had since been put forward for the extension of preference to other products, and the Commission of Enquiry had set up a special Committee to study the matter. The Swedish Government was opposed to any such system, and was convinced that, in the end, it must prejudice the States that introduced it and operate to their prejudice.

He paid a tribute to the Financial Section for the valuable volume entitled " The Course and Phases of the World Economic Depression ". The view expressed in the last paragraph of that work fully accorded with the Swedish view.

FIFTH MEETING.

Held on Thursday, September 17th, 1931. at 9.30 a.m.

Chairman : M. JANSON (Belgium).

13. Draft Convention for the Regulation of Whaling (Annex 6) : Draft Report and Resolution submitted by M. Braadland (Norway) (Annex 7) : Discussion and Adoption : Appointment of Rapporteur to the Assembly.

M. DE ARMENTEROS (Cuba) said that, at the Conference for the Codification of International Law, the Portuguese and Cuban delegates had drawn attention to the exploitation of the wealth of the seas and the need for the protection of that wealth and had proposed the conclusion of an international convention for regulating, not only whaling, but also the exploitation of other wealth of the seas, such as sponges, coral and tortoise-shell. He suggested that the report might draw attention to the need for a convention in connection with the latter objects. In the Whaling Convention, he proposed that, in Article 4, the scientific names of the Linnæan system with, if possible, a French translation, should be added to the ordinary commercial names for the different species of whales.

In Article 21, he proposed the insertion of a clause providing for the publication of the Convention at an early date in the Treaty Series of the League.

He further proposed the addition of a new article in the form of a protocol of signature as follows:

> "The Governments of all Members of the League of Nations and of all States, not being members of the League, which sign the Convention undertake not later than . . . either to submit the said Convention for the approval of their respective Parliaments, or to notify the Secretary-General of the League of their intentions in regard to the Convention."

This would be in conformity with the Assembly's recommendation of October 3rd, 1930, with regard to protocols of signature in connection with the conclusion of conventions of a general character under the auspices of the League.

M. MATSCH (Austria) said that his Government approved the Convention and proposed to accede to it, and to prohibit the use of vessels flying the Austrian flag for the purpose of whaling, in order to demonstrate Austria's loyalty to the principle of international solidarity.

M. KAWASHIMA (Japan) said that the Japanese expert at the Berlin meeting of April 1930, which drew up the initial draft of the Convention, made a reservation in regard to Article 3 (now Article 4), excluding the northern part of the Pacific from the prohibition to kill or catch right whales. The Japanese Government still maintained this reservation, although the last meeting of experts at Geneva had not seen its way to accept it.

To the general principles underlying the Convention, the Japanese Government had no objection, and he was not opposed to its being approved by the Assembly and submitted to the Governments for signature. At the same time, the Japanese Government was of opinion that there were still sufficient right whales in the Northern Pacific to preclude any apprehension of the disappearance of the species.

He had not as yet received precise instructions from his Government as to the question, but he believed that it would in all probability sign the Convention, if the reservation to which he had referred were adopted, and if all the other States of the North Pacific littoral signed it.

Mr. WATT (Australia) argued in favour of the restrictions proposed by the draft Convention. He even thought they should be strengthened, particularly in regard to the limitation of the number of whale-chasers; but he thought it wiser not to take any decision on the point pending the receipt of more accurate information from the International Bureau of Whaling Statistics at Oslo, which, under the Convention, was the institution centralising and distributing information. The information to be supplied by the Bureau would enable a definite opinion to be formed on the point. As matters stood, the Australian Government was satisfied with the present draft and would sign it, if the final text were not substantially different from the draft text at present before the Committee.

Mr. BURDEKIN (New Zealand) said that his Government was impressed with the necessity for international regulation of whaling and was therefore prepared to sign the draft Convention, provided the text finally adopted did not differ materially from that drawn up by the Economic Committee in 1930.

The New Zealand Government would have preferred to see the Convention go further in several important respects, but recognised that the present proposals represented at least a first step. His Government had some doubts as to how far the proposed Convention would prove effective. He emphasised that this would depend very largely upon the Convention being ratified by all Powers and not merely by those at present directly interested in whaling. If this were not done, the restrictions imposed upon themselves by a limited number of Powers signing the Convention might quite probably lead the nationals of Powers not at present interested in whaling, and which had not therefore signed the Convention, to take up whaling; and there would also be a danger of flag-transference by owners of whaling vessels if the Convention was not accepted generally. His Government regarded the proposed Convention as defective, inasmuch as it imposed no limitation as to the total number of whales which might be killed in any one year, although it was recognised that it would perhaps have been premature to attempt to fix such a figure until more complete statistical information with regard to whaling was available.

His Government also regretted what it regarded as a weakening of the original proposals for requiring all whaling vessels to be licensed by their Governments. The provision which permitted mere notification as an alternative to obtaining a licence would mean that, not only would there be no restriction on the number of whales which might be killed, but not even any power to limit the number of vessels which might engage in whaling. He pointed out that limitation of the number of whales which might be captured was in the interests of the whaling industry itself.

The New Zealand Government was inclined to favour a close season for whales, as its experience had been that whales captured early in the season were usually in poor condition, and that, therefore, their killing at such a time was a wasteful procedure. The period of the close season would, of course, require to be varied for different parts of the world. On August 24th, the date of the New Zealand delegation's latest instructions from its Government, the New Zealand Government had not received document E.696, dated June 1st, containing the observations of various Governments in regard to the draft Convention, and it was possible, of course, that the views of his Government might be slightly modified on certain points in consequence of those observations; but what he had said might be regarded as representing generally the views of his Government.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) said that his Government approved the Convention. He hoped it might be made available for signature in the following week, and that all countries would sign. Although the whaling industry was of interest mainly to Great Britain and Norway, it was essential to appreciate the vital importance to the efficacy of the Convention of countries not directly interested acceding to it. The accession of the greatest possible number of countries was indispensable if the abuse of flags of countries not parties to the Convention was to be avoided. Countries not directly interested were nevertheless indirectly interested as consumers.

The delegation of the British Empire proposed a number of drafting changes, and also the following amendments :

Article 10, paragraph 1.—After the words " the most complete biological information" add the word " practicable ".

Article 20, paragraph 3.—After the words " at any time" add " after the expiration of the period of three years mentioned in Article 19".

Article 20, paragraph 3.—Delete the words " or to the parts of their population".

He hoped the Cuban delegate would not press his proposal for the establishment of a connection between the Whaling Convention and the protection of other wealth of the seas. He suggested that it would be sufficient if the Committee were to request the Economic Organisation, which had already had this question under consideration, to continue the study of it.

As to the proposal for the insertion of the scientific names of the different species of whales in the Convention, that might seem at first sight a wise suggestion. But the experts who were qualified to take a decision on the point had considered it carefully and thought it better to confine themselves to the usual commercial terms.

As regards the addition to the Convention of a Protocol of Signature, as proposed by the representative of Cuba, that was a question of procedure on which he would be glad to have the Secretariat's opinion.

As regards the exception which the Japanese Government wished to be made for the Northern Pacific, the point had been considered carefully in Berlin and Geneva and the present text had been drawn up after mature reflection. It was open to the Japanese Government to make a reservation at the moment of signing the Convention, and the other countries would then be in a position to decide whether they were prepared to accept the reservation or not. He hoped, however, that the Japanese Government would ultimately decide to accept the text as it stood without any reservation.

Sir Cooverjee COYAJEE (India) said that, though India was not directly interested in the whaling industry, the Indian Government was prepared to accede to the Convention in order to demonstrate its international feeling.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) said that his country was interested in the question and had played a considerable part in the preparation of the draft. The Portuguese Government was prepared to accept the Convention subject to the reservation it had made. That reservation had been forwarded to the Central Fisheries Commission, whose decision might enable the reservation to be withdrawn.

Mr. RIDDELL (Canada) said that his country had followed with interest the preparatory work done in connection with the drafting of the Convention, and had appointed an observer at the Berlin meeting and a representative at the recent meeting of experts in Geneva. Canada had already had experience with treaties for the protection of the riches of the seas—e.g., treaties dealing with pelagic sealing and halibut fishing.

The Canadian delegation had authority to sign the Convention; but they had thought it desirable to consult their Government on one or two points. They hoped to receive instructions which would enable them to sign in a few days' time.

M. BRAADLAND (Norway), Rapporteur, read the draft resolution appended to the report, and proceeded to reply to the observations of the various speakers.

As regards the Japanese attitude, he thought the best way out of the difficulty would be for Japan, if she desired, to make a reservation when signing the Convention.

As regards the Latin terms proposed by the Cuban delegate, he pointed out that the terms used in the Convention had been selected to meet the requirements of the whalers, and he did not think the use of the scientific terms was appropriate for this purpose.

The contentions of the New Zealand delegate with regard to Article 8 were based on a misunderstanding. Article 8 was in the same form as the text communicated to the Governments.

The other observations made did not appear to involve any alterations in the report; but he was ready to revise or supplement his text as required, if any delegate so desired.

The Norwegian Government was conscious of the honour done to it by the selection of the International Institute of Whaling Statistics at Oslo as the official centre for the distribution of information regarding the whaling industry, and the Norwegian authorities would do their best to deserve the confidence placed in them.

In conclusion, he emphasised the importance to the efficacy of the Convention of the accession of countries which at first sight might not appear to have any direct interest in the matter.

M. DE ARMENTEROS (Cuba) said that he did not ask for the question of the protection of the wealth of the seas in general to be linked up with the discussion of the Whaling Convention. He had merely expressed a wish for the Committee and the League to decide that the question of protecting the riches of the seas by a convention on the lines of the Whaling Convention should be taken into consideration in the near future.

He had not asked for the substitution of the scientific terms for the customary commercial terms used in the Convention, but merely for their addition to the latter. If it were thought that there were difficulties in the way, he was prepared to withdraw his amendment. The question could be considered later.

Again, in proposing a Protocol of Signature, he had been under the impression that the Committee would be acting in conformity with the Assembly's resolution of the previous year. If there were difficulties in the way, he thought there could be no objection to the Committee passing a special resolution to that effect.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) was glad to note that the Cuban delegate did not press his proposals, in order not to raise difficulties to the final adoption of the Convention.

M. KAWASHIMA (Japan) repeated that he had received no definite instructions from his Government with reference to its attitude in regard to the Convention. The Japanese delegation wished it to be clearly understood that the Japanese Government could only sign the Convention subject to the reservation he had mentioned—that is to say, subject to the prohibition referred to in Article 4 not being applicable to the Northern Pacific. He did not insist that this view should appear in the report; it need only be mentioned in the Minutes. He hoped to receive instructions enabling him to sign the Convention subject to the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN asked the Cuban delegate whether he agreed to what Sir Arthur Salter had suggested.

M. DE ARMENTEROS (Cuba) replied that he withdrew the amendment he had proposed to Article 4, and was prepared to be satisfied with a special resolution in lieu of an additional protocol.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) pointed out that the addition of a special clause with regard to ratification would make it necessary for the majority of the delegates to apply to their Governments for new instructions, and that might delay the signature of the Convention.

M. DE ARMENTEROS (Cuba) said he would defer to what Sir Arthur Salter had said.

The CHAIRMAN proposed the adoption of the draft Convention, with the amendments to the text proposed by the various delegations. He suggested that the Rapporteur should be invited to incorporate the Cuban delegate's observations in his report.

The Committee adopted the draft Convention and report as amended.

The Committee adopted the resolution in the following form:

"The Assembly,

"Convinced of the importance and urgency of regulating whaling by means of an international agreement prohibiting the taking or killing of certain kinds of whales which have become extremely rare and of making the fullest possible use of the animals the catching of which is still permitted;

"In view of the fact that the attached Convention differs from that communicated to the Members of the League and non-member States by Circular Letter No. 158, of July 3rd, 1930, only as regards certain minor points of drafting, and that no substantial changes have been introduced therein:

"Decides to open the said Convention immediately for the signature of Members of the League and non-member States, and expresses the hope that the largest possible number of States will accede thereto without delay."

The Committee decided to appoint M. BRAADLAND (Norway) to be its Rapporteur to the Assembly on this question.

14. Communication from the Sixth Committee: Reference of Certain Technical Questions to the Second Committee (Annex 4) (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN referred to the letter from the Sixth Committee which he had read the previous day, asking whether the Health and Transit Organisations were in a position to place themselves at the disposal of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. It had been possible to give an affirmative answer in the case of the Health Organisation. The position was not the same in the case of the Transit Organisation, as the report on its work had only been adopted provisionally.

The Chairman of the Sixth Committee pressed, however, for an immediate answer. In these circumstances, he asked M. Haas, Director of the Transit Section, whether the Second Committee might give an answer in the affirmative to the enquiry made by the Chairman of the Sixth Committee.

M. HAAS (Director of the Communications and Transit Section) replied that his organisation was in a position to respond to any requests put to it by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union.

The CHAIRMAN said that a reply would be sent to the Sixth Committee in this sense.

15. Pact of Economic Non-Aggression : Reference of the Question to the Second Committee.

The CHAIRMAN drew attention to the statement made on the previous day in the Sixth Committee on the Pact of Economic Non-Aggression. It appeared that the Chairman of the Sixth Committee did not think that this question should be discussed in the Sixth Committee, and that it was preferable to leave it as far as possible in the hands of the Second Committee, though he felt, however, that not even the Second Committee could thoroughly examine the problem, which might perhaps necessitate the appointment of a special committee.[1]

The Committee would doubtless take the above observations into account in the course of its discussion.

The CHAIRMAN read the following draft resolutions submitted by the French delegation :

" The Second Committee,

" Seeing that among the measures of international solidarity best calculated to mitigate the effects of the economic depression, and to assist the resumption of activity which would benefit the workers of all countries, consideration should be given to the execution of important public works jointly undertaken by public or private groups on European or extra-European territory;

" Seeing, further, that the problem has already been approached by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union and has been laid before the competent organs of the League of Nations :

" Suggests that, in order to expedite the examination of these programmes, to co-ordinate them on an international scale, to hasten their putting into effect and to follow their execution, the Assembly should invite the Council of the League of Nations to instruct the Committee of Enquiry set up by the Communications and Transit Organisation, which needs to be completed by representatives of the International Labour Office and possibly of the economic and financial organs of the League, to undertake these various tasks.

" This Committee will examine the concrete proposals of the various Governments, particularly from the point of view of the utility and productivity of the works proposed.

" It will report to the Council of the League of Nations. The Commission of Enquiry for European Union will be called on to give its opinion on the proposals relating to Europe."

" The Second Committee,

" Considering that it is more ugent than ever to put into operation means for improving the world economic situation;

" Considering that among these means the experts consulted durirg the last few years, and, more recently, the Committee of Economic Experts, have specially emphasised the development of economic agreements on account of the beneficial effects they may exercise on the organisation of production and the regulation of trade;

" Considering that these agreements would, in particular, tend to create favourable conditions for the progressive lowering of Customs barriers;

" Considering, moreover, that assistance and guidance must be given to the parties taking steps in this direction :

" Recommends that Governments should, without delay, support all efforts of this kind made by the producers of their countries;

" It requests the Economic Organisation immediately to promote such meetings as may lead to the conclusion of these agreements and to take all steps to ensure their publicity, to follow their activities and to safeguard all legitimate interests, particularly those of consumers, either countries or persons; and

" While leaving the Economic Organisation to select the products in respect of which these rapprochements appear to it most easily obtainable, it calls the attention of that organisation to the following commodities, which seem to it likely to fulfil most satisfactorily the conditions for this purpose : cereals, coal, wood, paper, artificial silk, leather, hides and skins, electrical material and chemical products."

[1] See Minutes of the fourth meeting of the Sixth Committee.

" The Second Committee notes with satisfaction that the draft unified Customs nomenclature prepared, after an urgent request from the Committee, by the Sub-Committee of Experts appointed for the purpose, has now been completed.

" It considers the adoption of the draft to be an essential condition for the development of international economic relations.

" Being convinced that States will understand that the great advantages resulting from the adoption of such a common instrument are such as will amply compensate for the sacrifices and readjustments which its adoption may entail, it agrees with the procedure suggested by the Economic Committee and the Sub-Committee of Experts and approved by the Council.

" It therefore earnestly appeals to all States Members or non-members of the League of Nations, to which the draft unified Customs nomenclature will shortly be submitted, to examine the draft without delay, so that they may be enabled to forward their replies to the Secretariat as soon as possible."

The Chairman then read the following draft resolutions submitted by the German delegation :

" The Assembly,

" In view of the fact that the establishment of the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company has made it possible for the agriculturists of the countries concerned to obtain long-term credits at a moderate rate of interest;

" Convinced that, in present circumstances, the obtaining of medium- and long-term credits at a moderate rate of interest constitutes an urgent need for other branches of industry and is essential for the purpose of remedying the present crisis and reviving trade :

" Decides to request the Council of the League of Nations to instruct the competent organs of the League to examine without delay, with the assistance of M. Francqui, Minister of State, the bases of the establishment of an international credit institute for the granting of medium- and long-term credits to other branches of industry, and to draw up as quickly as possible a draft Convention."

" The Assembly,

" Considering that closer economic co-operation is one of the essential conditions for relieving and overcoming the present economic crisis;

" Convinced that the report of the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts of August 29th, 1931 (document C.510.M.215.1931.VII), suggests the right methods for attaining this goal;

" Recognising that the seriousness of the crisis and the distress that the coming months will bring require a speedier application of all useful remedial measures :

" Notes the resolution of the Commission of Enquiry for Economic Union inviting the European Governments to present, if possible before January 1st, 1932, their observations on the said report, and recommends all the Governments concerned in their future decisions to take account of the principles proposed by the report."

M. Stodola (Czechoslovakia) noted that the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had succeeded in establishing the main principles on which efforts to secure closer economic co-operation between European countries should be based. The work of the Commission of Enquiry had brought out the essentially political nature of the problem and had shown the desirability of developing economic relations, not only according to purely economic laws, but also in relation to psychological and political factors. It was with this idea that the Committee of Experts set up by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had laid down the principles of co-operation with a view to bringing about a European economic and Customs union.

He explained that his Government attached great importance to the question of preferential treatment for agricultural products, because it considered that such a measure, if guaranteed by European countries as well as by those of other continents, would facilitate friendly relations in general by allowing all countries to benefit by the advantages it would produce, particularly the increase of the purchasing power of populations which had suffered from the agricultural crisis. Czechoslovak commercial policy had, of course, always been based on the most-favoured-nation clause, and the idea of granting preferential treatment for agricultural products must be interpreted in this sense. He did not think that overseas countries would definitely veto this treatment when its utility was proved.

The small peasant class was socially and economically the most important in the majority of European countries. The salvation of this class would strengthen the whole social and economic fabric of Europe. There was no country in which unemployment was found side by side with prosperous agriculture. He hoped that the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company would soon materialise as a result of the thorough study of this question carried out by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union and by the Financial Committee of the League. He emphasised the importance of the efforts made by the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome for promoting short-term agricultural credits.

He regretted that, on account of the present financial crisis, the work of the Sub-Committee for the Study of Unemployment had not produced entirely satisfactory results. In spite of his essentially constructive optimism, he feared that the present difficulties might increase. The prospects for the near future were very disquieting. That was, at all events, the opinion held in Czechoslovakia, but the world must have confidence in the future and believe that human nature still had enough energy to combat the fresh difficulties with which it was threatened. Since the present crisis was not due to direct destruction of capital as the result of a war or a natural disaster, it was always possible to restore the economic equilibrium of the world by re-organising supply and demand.

One of the main causes of the crisis had been the fall in price of raw materials, and attention must therefore be concentrated on this problem. The crisis had reached its climax so suddenly that it had been impossible to make the necessary adaptation in time. It was obviously dangerous at the present time to prevent the free development of creative forces, which alone could secure a solution of the problem.

Up to the present, the schemes proposed were too often like films which were continuously repeated. Economic laws were too often superseded by theories for which there was no authority.

He considered that the general lines of the report were admirable and logical, and he approved its conclusions, according to which there was hope of a European Customs union.

He would draw particular attention to the importance of the report of the economic experts, which contained good principles embodying sound suggestions. It would, however, have been much more complete if it had dealt in a more complete and concrete manner with certain practical problems which had long been studied by the League organs. One of these was the question of the Customs truce. Although the last Conference with a View to Concerted Economic Action had reached an impasse when the application of the Convention of March 24th, 1930, was proposed, the study of this question should, in spite of all difficulties, be continued. Perhaps the Council would consider the possibility of taking up the matter again. In conclusion, M. Stodola paid a tribute to the effort made by the League in the field of economics. He hoped that this international co-operation would continue and that its advantages would be felt, not only by each individual State, but by the whole of Europe, which was at present suffering so severely from the crisis, and by all the countries of the world.

M. Rollin (France) said he had no intention of entering upon the discussion with any implication of criticism in regard to the magnificent work done by the League, but he would like to point out that, in present circumstances, the League was expected to pass more and more into the field of action and to translate deliberations into realities. The world's economic crisis called for immediate solution; it was tending to increase, and there was every prospect of further unemployment.

In connection with mutual economic assistance between nations, it had been urged that help should be given to the countries of Central and Eastern Europe to facilitate the marketing of their cereals. The machinery proposed for the purpose was simple. It consisted in the granting of a preferential tariff to the countries exporting cereals, in order to allow producers to sell on a remunerative basis and not, as they were doing to-day, at a figure below cost price. In exchange for the preference granted to exporting countries tariff reductions would be granted to countries importing cereal surpluses, either directly or in the form of 30 per cent rebates on the import duties. These advantages were not given only to countries accorded preferential treatment, but to all countries without distinction. Here was a case where action had already been taken. Agreements had been signed—for example, by Germany with Hungary and with Roumania. France had initialled an agreement with Hungary, and negotiations of the same kind had been begun with Yugoslavia and Roumania. The method had given rise to a certain amount of criticism—in particular, on the part of the Swedish delegate. Sweden held that preferential treatment involved infringement of the most-favoured-nation clause, and urged that the system of preference should not be erected into a new permanent and final dogma, but be regarded as a provisional and exceptional measure justified by unusual circumstances and unusual needs. That was also the attitude of the French delegation, and he hoped that the anxieties of third parties would be relieved by that statement. They asked third countries, if any sacrifice was involved, to accept it in the name of European co-operation, to which they were now called upon to give actual and tangible form. All third countries had an interest in the giving of help in this way, since they derived material as well as moral advantage therefrom through the improvement of the economic situation in Central Europe and the increase in the purchasing power of the Central European countries, by which all countries without distinction were bound to benefit. If, as he hoped would be the case, all the delegates could agree, subject to the understanding that it was a provisional and exceptional measure, to submit these agreements to the League with their approval, and without any opposition on the part of third countries, the League would have to its credit, not merely expert and well-documented studies, but also action and definite results of a highly interesting character.

The League already had to its credit the creation of the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company, which gave the countries of Central and Eastern Europe relief from the mortgage charges with which their agriculture was burdened. The establishment of the company might be said to be virtually complete, and within a very short time it would be in a position to begin work and to yield the happy results anticipated.

In the same spirit of mutual assistance, the French delegation was proposing the elaboration and inauguration of a big programme of public works, to which a number of speakers had already alluded in connection with the discussion of the work of the Communications and Transit Organisation. The urgent nature of this work could not be questioned. Europe was called upon to organise and unite, and to develop the system of mutual assistance to the utmost possible extent before it was too late. The programme of big public works was a response to pressing necessities, for a number of countries were suffering from the inadequacy of their equipment. But the first essential was to effect economic improvements in view of the great danger of unemployment. All countries were affected by this evil, even those where it was least apparent.

He was glad to see the prominence given by M. Rollin to the question of public works. The German delegation believed that there was to be found in this direction a highly effective means of combating unemployment.

The proposals which had been put forward with regard to industrial understandings commanded the sympathy of Germany. But he considered that there were certain precautions which must be taken in this connection, and certain restrictions which should be imposed. The process of cartellisation should be confined to industries to which it was appropriate. The one thing to avoid was undue governmental pressure of any kind.

As regards agricultural co-operation, he referred to the statements made by the German Foreign Minister. He thought that there was an opening there for a more rational organisation of agriculture.

He approved the conclusions of the economic experts' report, embodying remedies for the crisis. He suggested the consideration of the possibility of establishing, side by side with the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company, a similar institution for the benefit of industry.

Sir Cooverjee COYAJEE (India) thought that the report to the Committee on the question of agricultural policy was defective in respect of remedial suggestions. Co-operation had not been given the prominence it should have had, and too much importance was attached to rationalisation and to the conclusion of bilateral agreements, which could only be in the nature of palliatives. What was wanted was to redress the disproportion between the prices of agricultural products and the prices of manufactured articles. The adoption of a policy of preferential tariffs within the framework of the League would tend to break up the economic solidarity of the League. The solution of the problem was not to be sought in that direction. The main reason for the difficulties of agriculture was that it was not so well organised as industry. Co-operation was the proper remedy for the situation. It was argued that the organisation of co-operative movements was a lengthy task, and that the situation called for immediate remedies. He thought there was every reason to anticipate that the present crisis would be of long duration; and, if that were so, there was no reason for rejecting a good remedy on the pretext that it could take effect only in a remote future. It had often been observed that the present difficulties were due to a lack of balance between production and consumption. But the most effective way of ensuring the balance between the two was to organise agricultural production in such a manner as to adapt it to the requirements of consumption, and that was possible only by co-operation. The present crisis could not be met by an ephemeral solution. What was wanted was a permanent organisation to direct national federations of agricultural co-operatives, associated together in a single international union.

The proposal for the establishment of an International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company was undoubtedly valuable; but it would be more effective if there were some organisation to supervise the use made of the capital lent.

He suggested that the Economic Committee might be invited to make a fresh study of the potentialities of co-operation, and to collect for the purpose all possible information with regard to the development of the co-operative movement in different countries.

SIXTH MEETING.

Held on Friday, September 18th, 1931, at 9.30 a.m.

Chairman : M. JANSON (Belgium).

17. Communication from the Secretary-General : Letter from the Chairman of the Financial Committee regarding Credits for Financial Work in connection with the Crisis (Annex 8).

M. KERNO (Secretary of the Second Committee) read a letter from the Secretary-General accompanying a letter addressed to him by the Chairman of the Financial Committee (Annex 8).

18. Work of the Economic Organisation : General Discussion (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN read the following draft amendments proposed by the British delegation to the draft resolution submitted by the French delegation regarding economic agreements :

> " For the title substitute : ' International Industrial Agreements'."
> " From the beginning of the second paragraph to the end of the resolution substitute :
> " ' Considering that among these means the experts consulted during the last few years, and more recently the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts, have expressed the opinion that, under certain conditions which they define, the development of International Industrial Agreements may exercise a beneficial influence on the organisation of industry and the regulation of trade;
> " ' Bearing in mind also the relation which these experts describe between such industrial agreements and the lowering of Customs barriers;
> " ' Considering, moreover, that assistance and guidance to those who are engaged in organising such agreements and determining their form and character are desirable :

" 'Hopes that the Governments will give their early attention to the recommendations on this subject of the economic experts. It further requests the Economic Organisation to take such steps as would tend to secure that international industrial agreements are organised and operated in such a way, in accordance with the recommendations of the economic experts and the relevant chapter in the report of the World Economic Conference, as to be in the public interest of the world, and, in particular, to take all measures to secure the publicity of agreements and to follow the operation of the agreements so as to safeguard all legitimate interests, particularly those of consumers, whether countries or persons.' "

" Note.—With regard to the specification of particular industries, it would seem more appropriate that the Rapporteur should mention in his report that such and such industries have been mentioned by certain delegates as being prima facie suitable for special consideration."

M. BOTTAI (Italy) was struck by the emphasis laid both by the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts and by the general report of the Co-ordination Sub-Committee on the importance of the moral factor of the restoration of confidence.[1] Confidence depended on the restoration of economic security, and it would be a great mistake to suppose that the restoration of economic security depended only on pre-war postulates. The present crisis was not merely cyclical but structural, and new methods were called for, both in the economic policies of the several States and in international economic policy. National economic re-organisation was the prelude to international economic equilibrium.

The technical organisations of the League and the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had given careful attention to the question of the means of reducing Customs barriers. In addition to the traditional method of commercial treaties, concluded over long periods and extended to the largest possible number of countries through the operation of the most-favoured-nation clause, new methods were being suggested such as preferential treatment, Customs unions, international industrial agreements, the creation of international credit institutions for this or that purpose, and the like. The Italian delegation preferred the old method of bilateral treaties; nevertheless it was prepared to consider without prejudice any other proposals having the same ends in view. There was always the danger, however, that proposals such as these would lead to the formation of close groupings and restrictive systems based on interests not purely economic in character.

The danger was least perhaps in the case of preferential treatment: and, although Italy was in principle opposed to preferential treatment, and regarded it as inconsistent with the most-favoured-nation clause, she was prepared to consider it in the particular case of the agricultural countries of Eastern Europe, subject always to its acceptance by third parties and to the understanding that it was of a provisional and limited character.

The danger was more imminent in the case of Customs unions and industrial agreements, the effect of which was to stabilise at the expense of third parties the unbalanced conditions which it was hoped to correct, thus perpetuating the atmosphere of insecurity and distrust which was at the root of the economic difficulties.

As a means of bringing the practice of the Members of the League into closer harmony with the principles which they commonly enunciated at League meetings, he suggested the desirability of closer association with the work of the League of those bodies which had been set up in a number of countries in and outside Europe since the war under the general name of National Economic Councils. In Italy, for example, there was the "Consiglio Nazionale delle Corporazioni"; in Germany, the "Reichswirtschaftsrat", and in France, the "Conseil économique consultatif". In other countries, the corresponding bodies were less representative or less important. But it was clear that these institutions might readily become valuable instruments of international collaboration. The Italian delegation would welcome any further suggestion by other members of the Committee who agreed with its proposal as to the practical means of giving effect to it. He had embodied his proposal in the form of a resolution, which was worded as follows:

" The Assembly,

" Considering that it would be desirable to encourage the formation and development of national institutions (National Economic Councils) representing the most important economic and social elements in every State;

" Considering that institutions of this nature already exist—although with different methods and with different powers—in a certain number of countries, especially in Europe;

" Convinced of the desirability of utilising such institutions as much as possible in the work of improving international economic relations:

" Requests the Council to seek the most appropriate means of providing for the direct representation of National Economic Councils within the League of Nations."

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) reminded the Committee of a resolution passed by the World Economic Conference in 1927 urging the importance of continuous study by the League organisations of economic developments. The Financial and Economic Sections had pursued such studies continuously since that time, with very great advantage to the League and to the public. There was no mention of the fact in any of the papers before them, and he suggested that the Rapporteur might include a reference to this work in his report.

He was entirely in agreement with the Italian proposal for associating National Economic Councils with the work of the League. He thought these organisations represented a new and valuable adjunct of government which had already proved their utility. But he had a further suggestion to make which he had put in the form of an amendment to the Italian proposal. The amendment added the following clause at the end of the resolution :

> " . . . and suggests to the Council that this end might be secured by an appropriate modification of the composition of the Economic Consultative Committee."

The intention of the proposal was that the Economic Consultative Committee should co-ordinate the views of the National Economic Councils and do for the League what the latter did for their respective countries—that is to say, give expression to unofficial opinion on economic issues.

He accepted the French resolution with regard to public works.[1]

As regards the French resolution with regard to economic agreements,[1] he thought the Committee should not take any action until the report of the four special experts who had been appointed was available. All the experts consulted by the League from the time of the World Economic Conference onwards had consistently taken the view that, while these economic agreements might in certain circumstances be useful, there were certain conditions requiring careful definition which were quite essential if abuses were to be prevented. All these agreements were necessarily in the nature of monopolies, and their effect and purpose was to eliminate competition. The world was passing at present through a stage of transition from the old system of competition and the more or less unrestricted play of supply and demand to a new system of deliberate and universalised planning. In these circumstances of transition, the only safe course was to insist, as the economic experts had done in their report,[2] on the desirability of such agreements being of an international rather than a national character.

With the French resolution on Customs Nomenclature,[1] he agreed in substance; but he would like to submit an amendment which was based on the feeling that it was unwise to make the adoption of the particular draft proposed by the Sub-Committee " an essential condition for the development of international economic relations".

This amendment was worded as follows :

> " For the second paragraph of the French draft resolution substitute the following :
> " 'It considers that the adoption of an agreement to utilise a uniform Customs nomenclature would facilitate the development of international economic relations.' "

The Governments had not yet had time to consider the draft unified Customs nomenclature; and there were some of them—the British Government, for example—which had not been represented on the Sub-Committee.

He was in entire agreement with the proposal of the Belgian, Danish, Luxemburg, Norwegian, Netherlands and Swedish delegations.[3]

Replying to points made in the discussion of the previous day, he assured the German delegate that he would bring his observations with regard to negotiations with Great Britain to the serious attention of the British Government.

A number of delegations were in favour of schemes for a system of moderate preference for cereals and possibly other commodities. Great Britain was anxious not to put difficulties in the way of any of these preference proposals. But, at the same time, he did not feel that the Committee should make any recommendation that the Assembly should approve such schemes. The Commission of Enquiry for European Union had not asked for any such approval : nor was it necessary to enable the scheme to be put into effect. All these proposals were distinctively European in scope, and the League was a world institution, which should not be asked to be more European than the European Commission itself.

He agreed entirely with what the Indian delegate had said in regard to co-operation. The Financial Committee had done admirable work in sending experts to advise Bulgaria in this connection.

As regards the extremely important report of the economic experts, he again suggested that the Committee should follow the line taken by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union—namely, to refer the report to the Governments for consideration and for the submission of their views before the end of the current year. At the same time, the Economic Committee might be asked to consider the repercussions of the report's proposals on other States. He felt that the Committee should not anticipate the views of the Governments.

Speaking no longer as British delegate, but as one who for ten years past had been associated with the economic work of the League, he reflected that, ever since 1927, the resolutions of the World Economic Conference had served as an economic charter for the League. Though they had not been applied, or had scarcely been applied, they still remained unchallenged. If a sick man did not take his medicine and failed accordingly to recover, the medicine was not to blame! The Economic Conference was a big frontal attack on tariffs. To all appearance it failed: but it was noticeable, that in the years which followed, industrial duties—the same could not, he must admit, be said of agricultural duties—had remained more or less stable in Europe, though not in other countries. That was, he thought, an after-effect of the Conference. The most-favoured-nation clause, which had, sometimes in its history shown itself adaptable to special circumstances, still remained, and had been re-affirmed by every conference and every body of experts (including the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts) as the best and only general basis of international economic relations, and the one essential safeguard.

Looking back over the years 1927 to 1931, one was struck by the shifting of the emphasis from the height of tariffs to the inequality of tariffs. In the years 1927-28, which were dominated by the results of the World Economic Conference, the demand was for " more liberty ". From 1929 to 1930, when M. Briand's proposal for European union dominated the position, the demand was for " more fraternity ". Now, under the dominance of the economic crisis, the demand was for " more equality ". Liberty, fraternity and equality were the permanent bases of the world's economy; but the emphasis shifted from time to time from one to the other of the three.

M. Colijn (Netherlands) asked the Committee to pass the resolution submitted by the Netherlands delegation in concert with five other delegations.[1] He commended to their notice the recommendation in the last sentence of the resolution.

He accepted the French resolution on Customs nomenclature, subject to the British amendment.

He also agreed with the Italian resolution, but he would prefer to omit the word " direct " in the last paragraph as being perhaps difficult for some countries to accept. The Netherlands, for example, had an economic council: but it was a purely advisory body and he could not see how it could be directly associated with the work of the League.

He entirely agreed with the British amendment to the Italian resolution. The Economic Consultative Committee, as it was, could not be said to be of much use; but it might conceivably be useful if reconstructed, and Sir Arthur Salter's proposed reconstruction seemed to him promising.

What had become of the various progeny of the World Economic Conference of 1927?

There had been a convention on import and export prohibitions, and three conferences had been held on the subject. The child was still alive, but was very delicate, and (to judge by the symptoms) might die at any moment. Import restrictions had already made their appearance, and import prohibitions might any day follow.

Then there had been a Conference on the Treatment of Foreigners; and this child had been treated as illegitimate children too often were treated by their fathers.

As for the Tariff Truce, that child had been stifled before birth.

Lastly, there was the Commercial Convention; and that infant was in a foundling hospital waiting for its parents to appear and claim it, and likely to go on waiting.

" Qui trop embrasse mal étreint." A year before, it had been decided to abandon the comprehensive treatment of world problems as such and to concentrate on Europe. The outward and visible sign of this tendency was the appointment of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. Eventually, in the previous May, the French delegation had brought forward a number of resolutions relating to European economy. They were referred to three separate committees, and finally to a co-ordination committee. The reports of all four committees were now before the present Committee.

First, there was the Cereals Committee. It had laid down a number of conditions intended to prevent treaties with preferential clauses from clashing too grossly with the most-favoured-nation clause. In his own opinion, the most important of these conditions was the provision for publicity of all agreements embodying preferential treatment. Whether it would be observed remained to be seen.

Again, the Committee of Economic Experts had produced a very remarkable report, remarkable both for its clearness and for its boldness. It bore out at every point what the World Economic Conference had said in 1927. Indeed, it went further; for, whereas the experts of 1927 pleaded for freer trade, the experts of 1931 pleaded for completely free trade—i.e., for a universal European Customs union as the ultimate goal.

Thirdly, there was the Credits Committee, which would be discussed later. For the moment, he would simply say that the report made pleasant reading but proposed no immediate solutions.

Last came the Co-ordination Committee. What did it say? Merely that it felt a little staggered at the number and variety of the problems raised. Without any expression of opinion on any points of substance, it simply suggested that the report of the economic experts should be referred to the Governments for study. The Commission of Enquiry for European Union thereupon decided accordingly; and so they stood . . . just where they were before! All the issues were left in suspense or referred to the Governments for further study. He was irresistibly reminded of what M. Litvinoff had said to the Co-ordination Committee in another connection with regard to tennis balls served and returned across the net. And all the while the economic and financial structure of the world was collapsing because of the refusal to take the one and only step that could bring relief—to free the movement of goods and capital. The longer matters were allowed to slide the more countries would be forced to cut their coat to suit the Russian fashion.

Sir Arthur Salter had said that the demand now was for " more equality ". He still preferred the old solution of liberty in preference to either equality or fraternity.

As for economic agreements, he was not enthusiastic. He agreed with the experts that there were occasions when they might be of use; but he also agreed very strongly with what they said as to no " artificial encouragement " being afforded " to the creation of international industrial combines, which should be the outcome of economic conditions alone, and the spontaneous initiative of manufacturers " .[1] The French resolution contained no such qualification; on the contrary, it recommended government pressure of the kind condemned by the experts.

Similarly with the French resolution in regard to public works. Where was the capital to come from? Every country in Europe, with one possible exception, was at present finding difficulty in financing its own unemployment problem. Who was in a position to find capital for other countries, to say nothing of the interest and amortisation payments? Even if the capital were forthcoming, there was the further difficulty of labour. Capital might be pooled: but it was not possible to pool labour. English or Dutch workmen would not go and work in the remoter regions of Europe.

As regards the problem of cereals, M. Rollin had had some remarkable observations to offer to the third parties. He might reply that one thing was perfectly certain—that the Governments would insist on examining each case of preference on its own merits. There were countries which might be prepared to accept the two treaties already published. But if it was proposed to extend the preferential system to products other than cereals, the issue would be very much more complicated. The more exceptions were made, the less the third countries would be prepared to swallow. Let the Committee remember always the psychological factor of the ridicule which was being poured on the League outside of what were called League circles. It was folly to pretend they were holding up a bright light to the nations when really it was only a will-o'-the-wisp.

He personally had no new contribution to make to the discussion, except to repeat what he had always maintained—namely, that the only road to recovery was along the lines of natural and unforced adaptation of production to consumption.

But, speaking as the Netherlands delegate, he could assure the Committee that the Netherlands Government was ready to consider carefully any proposal submitted to it and would welcome any solution which might bring even the slightest improvement in the situation.

M. Stucki (Switzerland) desired to tell the Committee what had happened in a Commission of the Swiss Parliament a few days previously.

He was called upon to review in that Commission the economic activities of the League and the conclusions to be drawn from the point of view of Switzerland. He explained how, in 1927, the World Economic Conference, amid universal applause, proclaimed the necessity of making an end of economic nationalism. He added that by 1929 it was clear that that aim was unrealisable, and that it was then decided to try a tariff truce, but that the proposal was rejected and a much weaker proposal for a Commercial Convention adopted, which did not secure the necessary ratifications.

He was asked by members of the Commission in question whether it was a fact that certain countries were imposing import restrictions or prohibitions in defiance of existing treaties and conventions. He had to admit that that was so. He was asked whether in certain countries there were official or semi-official organisations which were in principle making no purchases outside the home market. He had to admit that that was so. He was asked whether indirect protectionist measures were being taken in almost every part of Europe. Again he had to admit that that was so.

He was then asked for his opinion as to what policy he considered Switzerland should pursue. Was it possible for Switzerland to collaborate with other countries? Or if it was not possible at the present time, was there any chance of its becoming possible in the near future? He could only reply that after carefully considering the three possibilities of economic collaboration with other countries—by autonomous, bilateral or multilateral action—he could not honestly say that any one of the three afforded any prospects to a country in the position of Switzerland.

He saw no State which was prepared to open its markets to Swiss products by autonomous action.

Bilateral action had had useful results for a time; but for the last two years no progress had been made, and he feared that there was no sign of any appreciable change for the better in the immediate future. Such bilateral agreements as had recently been concluded seemed to be based on the principle of least-favoured-nation treatment. Reference had been made to the German-Hungarian and German-Roumanian draft Conventions: but he could only point out that these Conventions were not yet in force, that they provided for the consent of third parties and that there was little prospect of that consent being obtained.

As regards multilateral agreements, there was even less hope of a change in the immediate future.

Let the Committee consider the case of Switzerland, a country which was dependent primarily on its production for the home market and for export. Owing to Customs and other barriers and the general decline of purchasing power in all markets, Swiss exports had declined alarmingly and imports had increased no less alarmingly. He did not attack others. He did not complain of dumping. Those who dumped did so only because they could not help themselves. But had those countries which were suffering from an abnormal and alarming increase of imports no right to defend themselves? On the previous day, in the Swiss Parliament, the Federal Government had been asked, by a resolution which bore the signatures of nearly all the political parties, to take steps to protect the home market. He believed with all his heart that an ultra-protectionist course was a false course ; but what answer was to be given to such representations as these? Could those who urged defensive measures be told that the country must shoulder its difficulties, submit to sacrifices, multiply and increase its unemployment subsidies and so on, on the ground that the time was coming when other countries would make compensatory concessions as regards exports. It was not possible to say that. The position of those who, like himself, had for the last five years maintained an optimistic outlook and retained their belief in the economic policy of the League was hard indeed. But this much was certain that no one had any right to hide disagreeable truths behind a screen of false optimism.

As to the solutions which had been put forward in the Committee he agreed generally with what Sir Arthur Salter and M. Colijn had said. The Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company and the other proposed measures were merely palliatives, as M. Rollin had himself admitted, and could not greatly change the situation.

M. Rollin had said that their aims should be to replace disorder by order. How? By industrial agreements enforced by Government pressure? He was not prepared to deny that in certain cases or in certain branches of industry such agreements might have their use; but, in the majority of cases, they held out no prospects of relief. The Economic Organisation had already considered and rejected this solution in the case of coal, cement, wood and paper.

He was prepared to vote for the Italian proposal, but he had little hope of its producing much result. Could it be suggested that there was any present shortage of organisations or conferences? The Committee knew that in most cases it was the same people who met together again and again at conference after conference.

Like M. Colijn, he had no positive suggestions to put forward beyond the suggestions which 150 experts from all parts of the world had put forward in 1927, and which had been confirmed anew by a fresh body of experts in 1931. He only doubted, in regard to the report of the latter, whether they had been wise to pronounce so outspokenly for full free trade. He thought that, if they had declared, like their predecessors in 1927, merely for " freer " trade, they might have had more chance of securing a hearing. Free trade for Europe—i.e., a European Customs Union-postulated a tariff wall round Europe. Neither the Co-ordination Committee nor the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had made any pronouncement on that point; and he thought it unwise to raise any such suggestion at the present time.

SEVENTH MEETING.

Held on Friday, September 18th, 1931, at 4 p.m.

Chairman : M. JANSON (Belgium).

19. Work of the Economic Organisation : General Discussion (continuation) : Appointment of Rapporteur.

The CHAIRMAN read the following amendment submitted by the delegations of Denmark, Norway and Sweden to the draft resolution submitted by the German delegation [1] :

" The Assembly,

" Considering that closer economic co-operation is one of the essential conditions for relieving and overcoming the present economic crisis;

" In view of the report of the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts of August 29th, 1931 (document C.510.M.215.1931.VII), suggesting the right methods for attaining this goal :

" Notes the resolution of the Committee of Enquiry for Economic Union inviting the European Governments to present, if possible before January 1st, 1932, their observations on the said report, and recommends this report to the attention of all the Governments."

The Chairman then read the following draft resolution submitted by the delegations of Belgium, Denmark, Luxemburg, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden:

"The Assembly,

"Having noted the resolution adopted by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union regarding the appointment of a special committee to study the extension of a system of special facilities to agricultural products other than cereals;

"Considering that such extension would raise difficult questions of principle, in particular as regards the relation between such a system and the most-favoured-nation clause:

"Deems it desirable that the findings of the special committee referred to above should be examined by the Economic Committee before being submitted to the Commission of Enquiry for European Union."

M. ANDVORD (Norway) shared M. Vennersten's apprehensions regarding the extension of the exceptions to the principle of the most-favoured-nation clause to goods other than cereals. He thought the northern countries of Europe could not be accused of carrying on a selfish commercial policy. During the negotiations which had led to the Convention of March 24th, 1930, some of those countries, and in particular Norway, had stated that they were willing to contract heavier obligations than other countries in order to help to put the Convention into force. To-day, however, the position was quite different; the circumstances which had arisen were such that there was reason to fear the abolition of the principle of the most favoured nation. Measures leading up to this result, far from being of lasting value, would be of the greatest harm to all States, as they would mean that a decisive step had been taken towards the destruction of the only clear line which at present existed in commercial policy.

In the previous spring, Norway had not wished to take up a negative attitude when requested to admit an exception to the principle of the most favoured nation in respect of cereals coming from certain countries, because it was emphasised that this was an exceptional measure, restricted in respect both of duration and quantity. The demand had now arisen on various sides to extend preferential treatment to further classes of goods. This tendency would inevitably give rise to apprehension, since the manufacturers of various countries suffering from the absence of markets were asking why preferential treatment should not be granted to their products too.

Norway had been surprised to learn that the study of such a serious problem had not been entrusted to the Economic Committee, which was particularly qualified to study this question, as the object of its work was to confirm the most-favoured-nation principle. M. Andvord proposed that the conclusions of the Special Committee, to which the Commission of Enquiry intended to entrust the examination of further exceptions to most-favoured-nation treatment, should be referred to the Economic Committee before being submitted to the Commission of Enquiry.

The Norwegian delegate emphasised the importance that his Government attached to the draft resolution submitted by the delegations of Belgium, Denmark, Luxemburg, the Netherlands and the Scandinavian countries.[1] Stability in the sphere of commercial policy recommended by this resolution was the primary condition for all constructive work proposed by the Committee of Experts and certain delegates. Although the Commercial Convention of March 24th, 1930, which aimed at this object, had not been put into force, it must be recognised that its moral effect was not negligible, since it prevented certain increases in tariffs and the denunciation of certain commercial treaties.

The Norwegian delegate referred to the efforts made since the rejection of the Convention to bring about, as far as possible, stability in commercial relations, and mentioned in particular the Oslo Convention of August 12th, by which the contracting States undertook before increasing Customs duties to study the effects which such increases might have on the interests of other countries, and to take into consideration any observations which the latter might submit. The resolution in question had the same object. The formula proposed was, it is true, more elastic than that of the Convention, but its adoption would nevertheless constitute an affirmation of the desire felt by various States to help each other as far as possible to overcome a difficult situation.

M. TARGOWSKI (Poland) stated that the agricultural countries of Central and Eastern Europe had asked him to submit their common point of view regarding the efforts to improve the position of the agricultural countries of Europe. In the name, therefore, of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Poland, Roumania and Yugoslavia, the Polish delegate wished to submit certain remarks of a general nature on the results of one year's working of their common organ—namely, the Permanent Committee of Economic Studies in Central and Eastern Europe, the statutes of which had been fixed during the Conferences at Bucharest and Belgrade.

The Ninth Assembly of the League of Nations and the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had pointed out that the problems dealt with at the Warsaw Conference came within the sphere of the League of Nations; the Second Committee should therefore be acquainted with the result of the efforts made by those countries in that respect. With regard to the immediate facilities to be granted to the trade in cereals and their derivatives, M. Targowski reminded the Committee of the proposals made by M. Madgearu on behalf of five States exporting those products. The system in question was one of temporary and conditional Customs preference for cereals and their derivatives. This system was in accordance with the rules laid down by the Conference with a View to Concerted Economic Action, and by the Wheat Commission of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union, which had adopted the work of the Permanent Committee for Economic Studies in Central and Eastern Europe as a basis for its investigations. Previous speakers had stated that this system in no way affected the most-favoured-nation principle. The agricultural countries of Eastern Europe were partisans of that principle and had no intention of creating a new system.

The Polish delegate paid a tribute on behalf of this group of agricultural countries to the energy with which the organs of the League had realised the proposal to create an International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company. He hoped the Convention on that subject, which had already been signed by a sufficient number of countries, would shortly be ratified so that the company could begin its work. He also referred to the efforts made by the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome to create an organ for facilitating short-term agricultural credits.

A problem which was of the greatest importance to agricultural countries was the organisation of the trade in products of the soil. In the previous year, efforts had been made in this respect, but only as regards the trade in cereals. The agricultural countries contemplated the creation of organisations for controlling this trade in order to bring about European and even world agreements. Unfortunately, the first attempt in this direction—namely, the convocation of an international conference in London at the instance of the High Commissioner of Canada—had not given the results expected. In spite of this unfortunate setback, the Conference had led to the creation of a special Committee of Enquiry for the wheat trade. There was reason to hope that this Committee's work would find a basis for a world agreement on the subject. This was of primary importance, as any international agreement regarding agricultural and forest products contributed to the improvement of the present economic position. Mention should also be made of the very important question of the trade in livestock products. The Economic Committee of the League had prepared three draft conventions on questions concerning the transit and trade in certain animal products. The agricultural countries of Central and Eastern Europe urged that a diplomatic conference should be convened at an early date to conclude international conventions on the basis of these drafts. These conventions, however, did not exhaust the problem, and the same countries urged that effect should be given as early as possible to the resolution passed by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union regarding the preparation of a preliminary draft international convention relating to the import and export of animals, meat and other products of animal origin. M. Targowski wished to point out a characteristic of the present crisis. The impression existed that the crisis had a tendency to become worse in industrial countries, while it would appear that countries with a predominant agricultural character had passed the culminating point of the crisis. In order to illustrate this tendency, it would suffice to note the percentage of unemployed in comparison with the total population. In agricultural countries, this percentage was small and showed no tendency to rise, which was an evident proof of the social stability of those countries. This was due to the fact that it was much easier to restrict the standard of living in the case of the former than in that of any other producing class of society. While this phenomenon was an advantage from the point of view of the special interests of each State, it was prejudicial to the general interests of the community of States. Indeed, the reduction in the standard of life in certain countries took the form of a reduction in international trade. The excessive obstacles placed by certain States which consumed agricultural products in the way of trade in those products ultimately injured their own export trade in industrial products.

The Polish delegate ended with the following conclusions. The economic improvement of agricultural countries depended upon a system of credits which, if granted at a reasonable rate, would constitute one of the safest investments, the agriculturist being universally recognised as the best kind of debtor; the economic improvement of agricultural countries presupposed the distribution at a remunerative price of surplus agricultural products. If that condition were fulfilled, these countries could, on their side, play their part in the political and economic affairs of the world, not only by constituting an element of stability, but also by providing the necessary markets for the industrial products of other countries.

M. VAN LANGENHOVE (Belgium) said that the balance-sheet of the work of the Economic Organisation was not reassuring, though that was not the fault of the League, which had no power to impose a definite policy on States. He drew attention to the failure of the Commercial Convention of March 24th, 1930, which should have constituted the first stage in concerted economic action, as contemplated by the tenth Assembly. The Customs negotiations which should have followed the conclusion of that Convention, and in regard to which the British Government had taken the initiative, had remained in suspense before they had really been started. The Belgium-Luxemburg Economic Union, which had accepted the requests for the reduction and consolidation of duties as a whole, could not be held in any way responsible for this failure. The Belgian delegate then drew attention to the failure of the efforts to extend the application of the Convention on import and export prohibitions and restrictions. Those prohibitions and restrictions, which it had been thought could be finally removed, were reappearing at the present time, and it was to be feared that they would spread.

Thus, in spite of the encouraging prospects offered by the progress made in the conversations entered upon by a number of States in regard to the treatment of foreigners, the outlook was still dark. That did not mean that no solution was to be found along the lines on which the League was working. The principles hitherto put forward had been most thoroughly examined on several occasions, and each time their justice had been recognised. Recently, the economic experts appointed by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had stated unanimously that there was no possibility of improving the world economic situation until the movement of goods, capital and labour was more free. The same opinion had lately been expressed by the financial experts who met at Basle. They had stated that so long as there existed obstacles to the free movement of goods, the movements of the capital which the debtor countries needed in order to pay their debts to the creditor countries were found to upset the financial equilibrium of the world. At a time when these facts were recognised by the most competent persons, however, and when Governments unanimously recognised that there could be no salvation apart from confident co-operation between the nations, obstacles were everywhere being raised to international co-operation. States were defending their own interests regardless of the harm they were doing to others. That short-sighted policy was contrary to the general welfare, and threatened the existence of small States which could exist only provided that they were able to export their products. Naturally, the small States were becoming alarmed. The Committee had been impressed by M. Stucki's statement with regard to his own country. Belgium was continuing to press for a policy of international solidarity and was resolved, in spite of everything, to pursue that policy in her relations with other countries.

The Belgian delegate was of opinion that there should be no surrender to the feeling of powerlessness to which the magnitude of the present crisis gave rise. In the first place, the guarantees which international trade still enjoyed should not be destroyed. In this connection it was essential to maintain commercial agreements. It was also necessary to avoid sudden changes in the Customs regime which might disturb trade. Belgium had joined with other States in submitting to the Committee a draft resolution in this sense. In preparing the new measures, a State should be guided by the desire to reconcile its own interests with those of other States.

M. van Langenhove supported the appeal which the Italian delegate, M. Bottai, had made in that sense at the previous meeting. This fundamental principle of international solidarity had been affirmed by the 1930 Commercial Convention, which had instituted a procedure of notification and recourse adopted by the signatories to the Oslo Convention as a basis for their policy of economic rapprochement. On its side, the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had recommended the States represented on the Commission to comply immediately, as far as possible, with the principles laid down in the Commercial Convention. In the absence of any contractual undertaking, there was a moral undertaking, the importance of which should not be underestimated.

As regards the proposals before the Committee, the Belgian delegation was prepared to accept the Italian proposal with regard to Economic Councils, subject to M. Colijn's reservation concerning direct representation on those Councils. It further supported Sir Arthur Salter's amendment.

There were certain objections to the French proposal relating to industrial agreements. While it was true that certain industrial agreements might promote the lowering of Customs barriers, others, on the contrary, ensured complete protection for the national markets, and it could easily be understood that States which were obliged to export a large proportion of their industrial produce felt some apprehension in this connection.

Belgium accepted the proposal with regard to the carrying out of extensive public works, though she was well aware of the difficulties. In this connection, she had submitted to the Commission of Enquiry for European Union a proposal relating to the international exchange of electrical power, which proposal had been referred to the Communications and Transit Organisation.

Belgium unreservedly approved the third French proposal, relating to Customs nomenclature.

M. de Armenteros (Cuba) asked whether the reports of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had been submitted to the Second Committee, in order that it might study them and state its views, or whether they should merely be regarded as providing valuable material for solving a world problem on an international basis.

Mr. Riddell (Canada), on behalf of the Canadian delegation, supported the French resolution relating to Customs nomenclature, subject to the British amendment. He also supported the Italian resolution concerning national economic councils. Canada did not have, as yet, a national economic council, but he was confident that if such a council were organised it would offer further means of collaboration with the economic work of the League.

The Canadian delegation hesitated to express an opinion with regard to the work of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. It was generally recognised that individuals, nations and groups of nations knew best how to look after their own interests; but when once these question were brought before the League, it was only right that the non-European countries should have something to say, particularly as it appeared from the letter addressed to the President of the Assembly by the Chairman of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union that the Commission of Enquiry did not think it proper to take action on the resolutions it had adopted until they had been laid before the Assembly.

The Canadian delegate, in referring to the London Wheat Conference mentioned in the report of the Co-ordination Sub-Committee, considered that it must be a matter of satisfaction to all those who were interested in the exportation of cereals that the representatives of all the exporting countries were able to meet and to agree upon a form of organisation that should ensure continued collaboration among those countries.

The Canadian delegation pointed out that concerted action by the European States necessarily concerned the non-European States, which felt some apprehension with regard to the action contemplated by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. The effects of that action could only be examined by a body on which all the continents were represented.

Mr. Riddell expressed the hope that the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company would be successful, but stated that he would have liked to see a clause in its Statute to the effect that the credits it granted would not lead to over-production of cereals.

The Canadian delegate wished to be informed definitely whether the resolution concerning preferential treatment for European grain implied the Assembly's approval of the introduction of such treatment.

The Canadian delegation, he stated, could not agree to such approval being given by the Assembly. He pointed out that he had nothing to say here as regards any preference arrangements that might be entered into outside the League; he did formally object, however, to the League's approving in any way of such arrangements. He remarked that there were enough forces at work in the world encouraging discrimination without the League's being asked to lend a hand. The aim of the League should be to bring about commercial peace as well as political peace. It was regrettable that the first attempt made under the auspices of the League to help agriculture had had the result of dividing rather than uniting the agricultural countries. A better organisation of farmers on the lines laid down on the previous day by the delegate of India, or an endeavour to secure unanimity among the grain-exporting countries for a common solution of the problem, like that made at the London Conference, would have squared better with the objects of the League.

The agricultural depression was as acute in other parts of the world as in Europe, and among the agriculturists the chief sufferers were the grain-growers. It was difficult to estimate accurately what the effect of this would be upon the production of cereals, but it seemed safe to predict that, unless a change in outlook came soon, shortages were bound to occur.

In Canada, the wheat harvest for the current year would be little more than half the normal harvest. It seemed strange to speak of a shortage at a time like the present when there were surpluses of wheat. A shortage would, however, be felt one day. A systematic policy of discouraging the overseas wheat-exporting countries might appear at first sight to affect only the countries directly concerned, but a more careful study would show that the general problem of the world supply of raw materials was at stake. If, so far, Europe had succeeded in providing for the needs of her industrial population, it was because the overseas agricultural countries like Canada, the Argentine, Australia and the United States of America had had a permanent wheat surplus which they had exported to Europe. The European countries could not export cereals in sufficient quantity to meet the needs of Europe except when there was a good harvest. Soviet Russia had reappeared on the international market in 1926, but from that year she had dropped out again until 1930. The needs of Europe could normally be supplied only by the overseas countries which were regularly able to export 60 to 80 per cent of their harvests each year.

The Canadian delegation felt the deepest sympathy for the Danubian countries and appreciated the difficulty of their position. They, however, like the overseas wheat-producing countries, had suddenly found it impossible to liquidate their stocks at a time when the policy of restriction adopted by certain importing countries deprived them of their markets. A policy involving the mitigation of those restrictions would have been far more beneficial to the Danubian countries than preferential treatment.

Apart from the foregoing considerations, the Canadian delegation was opposed in principle to the Assembly's approving inter-European preferential treatment. In its opinion, the League should not use its influence or resources to grant special advantages or privileges to one country or group of countries or even to any geographical area whatever.

The CHAIRMAN thought that the discussion had made sufficient headway to allow the Committee to appoint a Rapporteur.

On the proposal of M. Posse (Germany) supported by M. Bottai (Italy), Sir Arthur Salter (British Empire) and M. Kawashima (Japan), M. ROLLIN (France) was appointed Rapporteur.

M. MICHALAKOPOULOS (Greece) was more optimistic than certain other speakers. The great achievements effected in economic policy had required years of effort. Even to-day, there were certain encouraging signs, such as the creation of the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company and the French proposal with regard to public works.

With reference to preferential treatment for agricultural products, he might call attention to a proposal put forward by his Government to the Commission of Enquiry for European Union and seconded by the Portuguese, Spanish and certain other Governments. The proposal was that the preferential system adopted for grain should be extended to other agricultural products as well. It was not fair that countries which, by reason of their soil or climate, were unable to produce grain but which, like all other countries, suffered from the agricultural depression, should not receive the same assistance as the wheat-producing countries.

That proposal had given rise to certain apprehensions. The objection had been made that any attempt to extend preference to other products might involve the collapse of the entire system.

The Greek delegation entirely realised that the agricultural products of Greece had, owing to their nature, certain special aspects for which allowance must be made when the time came to take remedies to overcome the crisis in which they were involved. Greece had done everything within the limits of her national economic structure to improve the critical position of her farmers, but she had at length come to the conclusion that there was no prospect of any real improvement unless the matter were examined on the international plane. The Committee asked to undertake that examination would have no difficulty in determining the methods that might be employed to remedy the depression. If among them that of preferential tariffs were considered, the Committee would enquire into the possibility of applying such tariffs and would be perfectly free to judge of their utility and the conditions on which a system of that kind could be recommended. The important thing in the Greek Government's view was not to recommend definite remedies, the need for which might be debated in the sub-committee which it was suggested should be set up, but to embark on the study of a problem the gravity of which was not open to question.

The Greek delegate hoped that, defined in this way, the Greek Government's proposal, which had already been approved by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union and the Sub-Committee on Co-ordination, would encounter no difficulty in the Committee or the Assembly, which gave the problems affecting the economic life of all countries equally careful and favourable consideration.

Mr. WATT (Australia) shared Sir Cooverjee Coyajee's view that the success of the World Economic Conference was very limited, partly because the problem of increasing tariffs was attacked directly as a separate problem. At this stage, it would be better to deal with the subject on a more fundamental basis. One way of doing this would be to work for better organisation, especially international organisation, amongst producers and consumers of agricultural products. He could not agree with the proposal of the French delegation to make special efforts, just now, to improve the organisation of industrial cartels. It seemed to him more urgent at the present stage to organise agricultural producers and consumers. This would help to bring about better domestic and international equilibrium. He therefore strongly supported the suggestion that the Economic Section of the League should collect and co-ordinate information concerning co-operative enterprise in relation to agriculture, especially co-operative banking and credit systems. Difficulties of organising primary production and distribution, on any quota basis, for example, were far too obvious to be overlooked. Nevertheless, international regulation of some kind or other was the logical objective for which the League must strive ceaselessly. Who could say that such regulation was impossible? Soon it might be inevitable. No statesman worthy of the name could overlook the risks of social explosions, nor would anyone with a social conscience wish to do so, with armies of unemployed increasing day by day. Obviously the first thing to do was to co-ordinate information. The way for political action would then be clearer.

Mr. Watt entirely agreed with the Canadian delegate's statement as to the need to maintain agricultural production, as booms had a very fatal habit of being followed by slumps.

M. TODOROVITCH (Yugoslavia) said that his Government was unable to enter into any undertaking, whether legal or moral, as to the stabilisation of Customs duties and treaties of commerce. Yugoslavia was determined to preserve their stability in so far as lay in her power. She had not raised her Customs duties, but it was impossible to say whether the position would not one day force her to increase her tariffs and denounce her treaties of commerce. The Yugoslav Government could not enter into any such engagement unless it received guarantees for the export of its agricultural products, this being the sine qua non for any stabilisation of Customs duties. The disposal of the surplus agricultural production of the Danubian countries could be assured only by preferential treatment. It was, of course, understood that the countries asking for such treatment, among them Yugoslavia, were prepared to furnish all feasible guarantees with a view to preventing third parties, including overseas countries, from being aggrieved.

With reference to Mr. Riddell's statement, M. Todorovitch did not see why the Assembly could not take a decision on the question of preferential treatment among the European countries.

Certain advocates of preferential treatment wished to make the granting of such treatment contingent on the assent of third parties. The agricultural countries of Eastern Europe had themselves made that suggestion. M. Todorovitch accordingly did not propose to criticise that view. He wished merely to explain what should be understood by the assent of third parties. If it meant the right of every third party to consider whether the conditions for the application of preferential treatment were, in point of fact, fulfilled, he would have no objection. If, however, it was taken to mean that the third parties would be entitled, after finding that the conditions laid down by the League were effectively fulfilled, to demand some offset in return for their consent, that would be unacceptable. Previous speakers, in particular M. Colijn and M. Stucki, had said that they had no proposal to make to remedy the position. The agricultural countries had made a concrete proposal which was calculated to improve their situation. True, there were only eight countries involved, whereas the economic depression was universal, but if some improvement, however slight, could be made in the economic condition of the Danubian countries, all the other countries would probably benefit.

The agricultural countries were merely asking that objections for which there was no warrant should not be set up against the solution they had proposed. In their view, it was a sound solution.

EIGHTH MEETING.

Held on Saturday, September 19th, 1931, at 9.30 a.m.

Chairman : M. JANSON (Belgium).

20. Work of the Economic Organisation : General Discussion (continuation).

M. KAWASHIMA (Japan) said that the economic crisis was a world crisis and should be approached from a world angle. Japan, for example, bought more from Europe than Europe bought from Japan. In 1929, Japan's imports from Europe exceeded her exports to Europe by 273 million yen; but, in 1930, when the crisis had become acute in Japan, the corresponding figure was 154 million yen. That was a striking illustration of how conditions in the one continent affected conditions in the other.

Further, while the volume of European exports increased between the years 1925 and 1929 by 11 per cent, the volume of exports from Asia in the same period decreased by 11.5 per cent. That meant that Asia was even more hard hit by the depression in those years than Europe.

It was essential, therefore, that the problem should be studied from the standpoint of the extra-European as well as the European countries; in the extra-European countries, there were special economic factors in operation, such as the sudden fall in the price of silver or the catastrophic collapse in the prices of such raw materials as silk, cotton, rice, rubber, tea and coffee, which were not products of Europe. The Japanese delegation considered that the Economic and Financial Organisation of the League was the most suitable body for undertaking a study of the problem from the wider point of view. It might be desirable to appoint a special sub-committee including a number of members from non-European countries. The sub-committee should not only study the relations between European and non-European countries, but also questions which affected the latter only. For that purpose, it might send experts to non-European countries to study the depression on the spot, as suggested by the German delegation. He might also call attention to the recent report of the Tokio Office of the League, which, at the request of the Economic Intelligence Service of the League, had undertaken an investigation into the effects of the depression in Japan. It had sent out questionnaires to 150 organisations and individuals in Japan. Its conclusions were entirely independent of Japanese Government influence.

In the years when Europe was recovering from the effects of the war, the foreign trade of other continents was declining; but, until 1927, all the countries of the Pacific littoral maintained their tariffs practically unchanged. Since that time, all of them, with the exception of Japan and one or two other countries and colonies, had inaugurated a policy of tariff increases. Japan, who had not increased her Customs tariffs, was now, therefore, in a bad position for bargaining commercial treaties. Japanese export trade was no longer adequately protected by the most-favoured-nation clause, and further safeguards were needed against such measures as the unjust specialisation by Customs tariffs or by bilateral agreements embodying convertional tariffs.

So far, the proposals for preference mentioned in the report of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union which had been put forward did not relate to industrial goods, and Japan abstained from raising any objection in present circumstances to the proposal for agricultural preference for certain countries of Europe, on the understanding, always, that there was provision for obtaining the consent of third parties enjoying most-favoured-nation treatment through the diplomatic channel. He had to state, however, that, whatever resolution the Committee might pass on this subject, he was not in a position to commit the future attitude of his Government on the subject.

As regards the French resolution on industrial agreements, the Japanese delegation would raise no objection if the Committee was in favour of passing the resolution; but he himself was inclined to agree with the comments of the Netherlands and Swiss delegates. In any case, any international rationalisation of particular products must be preceded by national rationalisation. There was some control in the case of a national monopoly, but none in the case of an international monopoly, and some safeguards must be provided to protect the legitimate interests of newly created industries of certain countries.

The Japanese delegation was prepared to accept the French resolution on Customs nomenclature, in the h· pe that, by the application of such unified Customs tariffs, the undue specialisation of Customs tariffs by which Japanese goods are at present adversely affected may be mitigated.

The Japanese delegation was also in favour of the Italian proposal for the association of National Economic Councils with the work of the League; but, in view of the number of existing League organisations, he thought the British delegation's suggestion to utilise the already existing Economic Consultative Committee to co-ordinate the recommendations of the National Economic Councils was sound.

The resolution presented by six delegations on changes in tariff policy was in entire accordance with the Japanese attitude. He suggested, however, that it might be strengthened by the addition of the following amendments :

I. Insert the following : " to discontinuation of commercial agreements now existing or . . ." after the words " as would tend " ;

II. Insert at the end of the third paragraph the following : " and where no such agreements exist, to conclude them on as liberal a basis as possible ".

As regards the French resolution on public works, he agreed, subject always to the exigencies of the financial situation.

M. DE WINCHKLER (Hungary) said he hoped to dispel the apprehensions of the Canadian, Australian and Japanese delegates. It had always been intended that treaties embodying preferential treatment should in every case be submitted to all the countries interested. The Governments of all the wheat-exporting countries would therefore have every opportunity to state their views through the diplomatic channel on these treaties before they were put in force. The most-favoured-nation clause was completely safeguarded. The European countries which had combined in this movement to obtain agricultural preference wished to be perfectly open and above suspicion and to avoid any sort of misunderstanding. Their action had never been directed against the extra-European wheat-growers; on the contrary, they believed that their proposals would ultimately prove to be in the interest of the latter.

The fall in wheat prices was a consequence of over-production in America. But, whereas America could do something to meet the fall in prices by rationalising production, the peasants of the Danube basin could not. The resulting margin between the cost of production in America and in Europe was enormous; and all that the preference was intended to do was to compensate that margin. It did no more, and, consequently, it could not be maintained that there was any discrimination against oversea countries. Moreover, the proposed preference treaties related only to a definite quantity of cereals. There was no danger, therefore, of any increase in the output of the Danubian countries. The output of the latter was not more than it was before the war, whereas America had enormously increased her output—in many cases by as much as 100 per cent—as Mr. Riddell had himself admitted. Those who had increased output should give a lead in reducing it, as and when reduction was needed.

In any case, there was no question of excluding these oversea surpluses from the European market. They would be sold in Europe in any case; the only question was at what price. The oversea countries should remember that any other solution—such as a monopoly or quota system —would be infinitely more prejudicial to their interests.

Mr. Riddell had appealed to " equal rights " and " justice ". He might remember the maxim : " Summum jus, summa injuria ".

M. NECULCEA (Roumania) said that, although the question of agricultural preference had already been studied by the Economic Committee, the Commission of Enquiry for European Union, the Second International Conference for Concerted Economic Action and by a special Sub-Committee of the latter, it would appear from some of the observations which had been made in the discussion that the position was still not clear. At the third meeting of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union in the previous May the question again came up before the Agricultural Committee and the Co-ordination Committee, and certain rules and conditions were laid down to ensure that this derogation from the most-favoured-nation clause should be of a provisional and restricted character.

The opponents of preference claimed that it was fundamentally inconsistent with the most-favoured-nation clause. The objection would be justified if there were any intention of replacing the most-favoured-nation clause by a system of preference; but there was no such intention. The preference was only to continue for so long as the effects of the crisis made it necessary. In normal circumstances of production and exchange, the most-favoured-nation clause must remain the basis of international relations, and his own Government claimed to be amongst its most ardent supporters; but exceptional circumstances called for exceptional remedies.

As to the German-Roumanian and German-Hungarian treaties to which reference had been made, both these agreements had been considered by a Sub-Committee and found to be in accordance with the principles and conditions laid down.

After all, the agricultural countries of Europe—unlike the industrial countries of Europe—were not competing, and were not in a position to compete, with the extra-European countries. The volume of their exports was negligible as compared with the volume of oversea exports. Of the 200,000,000 quintals of export surpluses in all the grain-producing countries of the world in 1929, the States of Eastern and Central Europe exported only 9,000,000 quintals, or barely 4.8 per cent of the total. Moreover, the wheat was of a different quality from oversea wheat, and was bought by a different class of consumer. In these circumstances, to talk of sacrifice on the part of the oversea countries was an exaggeration.

The publication, " The Course and Phases of the World Economic Depression ", showed that production had greatly increased in oversea countries since the war, whereas the European countries in the same period had done no more than work slowly and painfully up to their pre-war production.

M. Posse (Germany) said that, although, according to the Polish delegate, the agricultural countries believed they were over the worst of the depression, that was not the case with the industrial countries.

The German delegation was in duty bound on every occasion and in every connection to draw attention to the appalling problem of unemployment in Germany, and to point the moral of the consequences that must ensue. There were at the present time 4.1 million unemployed in Germany, which, assuming a family of three persons to each unemployed worker, meant that every fourth German was out of work. The imagination boggled the prospect of what would happen in the coming winter.

He had recently drawn attention, as so many speakers had done, to the difference between the utterances of statesmen addressing the League and the actual practice of their several countries. A week before, a delegate of a certain European country had told the Assembly that the great lesson of the economic crisis had been the evidence which it had afforded of general solidarity. In their own Committee on the previous day the delegate of the same country had said that the plain and blunt truth was the very opposite.

From the proposed changes in the economic system of Europe, to which that delegate was referring, Germany stood to lose most, and she would contend against such changes until the last. But the economic interdependence of nations at the present day was such that those who sought to break the existing links would be the first and the worst sufferers from the resulting situation. To shatter the economic system of Europe was relatively easy; to build it up again was another matter. He for his part would not care to have upon his conscience the burden of the responsibility for having taken the first step towards destruction.

M. Stucki (Switzerland) replied that the Committee could judge for itself whether what he had said the day before on behalf of his Government in all loyalty and sincerity merited such a castigation as it had received at M. Posse's hands.

It was common knowledge that negotiations had been proceeding between Germany and Switzerland since the previous January, and he had every hope that they would ultimately lead to an agreement.

He had spoken as he had yesterday because he did not want his Government to be open to the criticism of saying one thing and doing another. He had also wished to cite the case of Switzerland as illustrating the economic effect of financial difficulties. He had made it perfectly plain that Switzerland was a wholehearted believer in solidarity; but a country could not practice solidarity alone, least of all a small country. He had said that Switzerland might be compelled to take steps to defend itself against an excess of imports; but he had at the same time frankly recognised that certain countries—he was also thinking of Germany—were forced to increase their exports because they were saddled with the burden of debt payments. Switzerland was not responsible for the war or for the Peace Treaties. Why should she suffer unduly from the effects of them? How, in any case, could it be said that, when a small country of four millions defended itself, it was shattering the economic system of Europe? Moreover, Switzerland was not the first country to have recourse to measures of defence. Others, including Germany, had imposed restrictions on imports. Or was it suggested that "quod licet Jovi non licet bovi"?

The Press reports of his speech had misrepresented his attitude in regard to the resolutions before the Committee. His Government did not oppose any of these resolutions; all he had done in his speech was to express some doubts as to their efficacity.

Sir Thomas Wilford (New Zealand) asked for enlightenment as to the meaning of the second paragraph of Chapter IV, No. 2, of the Co-ordination Sub-Committee's report on the subject of public works.[1] Did it mean that, if a demand was made to the League for a big loan —and it would need to be a very big loan, if it was to do the unemployed any good—to finance a programme of public works, it would first be submitted to financial advisers for their report? It was obvious that the League had no funds for the purpose.

He had at different times attended a great variety of committees of the League, and experience confirmed him in his original impression, which was that the League was putting the cart before the horse. Before they could have a United States of Europe, they must develop a united state of mind.

21. Communication from the Sixth Committee: Reference of Certain Technical Questions to the Second Committee (continuation): Second Committee's Reply (Annex 5).

The Chairman referred to the letter from the Sixth Committee,[2] asking whether the organisations of the League were in a position to place themselves at the disposal of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union.

M. Stoppani (Director of the Economic Relations Section) stated that his organisation was in a position to respond to any requests, but that, in view of unknown eventualities, it could not give too categorical an answer.

[2] See Annex 4.

Mr. Loveday (Director of the Financial Section and Economic Intelligence Service) stated that the Financial Organisation was technically equipped to meet normal demands for information and assistance, subject always to the limitations imposed by the budget.

The Committee decided to reply to the Sixth Committee in this sense (see Annex 5).

22. Pact of Economic Non-Aggression : Reference to the Second Committee (continuation).

The Chairman understood the opinion of the Committee to be that it agreed with the Sixth Committee's proposal to appoint a special committee to consider the proposal for a pact of economic non-aggression. He further understood that it was desired that the special committee should include representatives of oversea countries. He proposed that they should suggest to the Sixth Committee the inclusion of representatives of Australia, China, India, Japan and Uruguay. He further proposed that the Council should be requested to invite the United States of America to be represented on the special committee.[1]

Agreed.

23. Work of the Financial Organisation : Statement by M. Bernis (Rapporteur) : General Discussion.

M. Bernis (Spain), Rapporteur, made the following statement :

" Since we met last year, the world has passed through a period of very grave economic and financial difficulties. One crisis has succeeded another. Financial problems of the first magnitude have arisen for solution—problems, however, which, at the stage reached until quite recently, have demanded either joint action by banks or day-to-day co-operation between a relatively restricted number of Governments. It is not my function in this speech, the object of which is to record briefly the work of the Financial Organisation of the League during the last twelve months, to make suggestions concerning the work that lies before that organisation in the immediate future. That question will no doubt arise in the course of the discussion which will take place. But to the importance of that work I wish to refer at once.

" As you are all no doubt aware, the Financial Committee is sitting at the moment, having had referred to it during the course of the present month two requests—those of the Austrian and Hungarian Governments—to examine into the difficulties in which the repercussions of the world depression have involved them. The Committee is still at work, and, until it has completed its report to the Council on these subjects, I must content myself with this simple reference to its activities. I hope to be able to report further on the subject during the course of the next few days.

" At the same time, I must ask you to give some consideration to this work which is now in hand. We shall have to decide by Monday night the very serious question of what should be the policy of the League in the face of this unprecedented crisis, and what assistance it should be prepared to offer to its constituent members.

" Whatever your decision may be, it is at least clear that the Council and the Committee which is its financial adviser must be in a position to afford the full measure of help that lies in the power of the League. The present crisis is so acute, its possible further development so widespread and serious, that the Commission will no doubt feel it necessary to emphasise that an ample provision for unforeseen expenditure should be made in the budget for next year, so that the Council may be in a position to meet the calls that may be made upon the League by States Members.

" That part of the Financial Organisation's work on which I am in a position to report to-day has, I am glad to be able to record, been exceptionally wide in its scope. The late Director of what was formerly the Economic and Financial Section visited India in the winter of this year on the request of the Government of that country, and went on directly from India to China. His report on the creation of an Economic Council for India was published simultaneously by the India Government and with its consent by the League of Nations. Its interest in view of the attention which is to-day being paid to this question of Economic Councils and economic planning is of much more than national interest. His visit to China was in response to a request received from the Chinese Government that he should discuss with it the effects of the present depression on China's economic activities. It is, I venture to think, by means of consultations of this sort and by expert enquiries that the League of Nations can perform one of its most useful services. During the course of the past year they have not been confined in the financial field to the Continent of Asia. A financial expert took part in the work of the mission sent to Liberia in the summer of this year by the Committee of the Council in order to study the problem raised by the request for assistance submitted by the Government of that country. Another visited Lithuania on the request of the Lithuanian Government to report on certain outstanding problems arising out of the Memel Convention. The Deputy-Secretary-General and the present Director of the Financial Section paid a visit to Vienna after the request of the Austrian Government, to which I have already referred, was received.

" The most important piece of new constructive work carried out by the Financial Committee until its present session has been in connection with agricultural credits. When the Committee met last year, one of the most insistent problems with which European countries especially were faced was that of providing long-term credits to agriculture.

" Accordingly, the Financial Committee, acting on the instructions it received, elaborated in the first half of the year an International Convention, which has already been signed by eighteen States, for the creation of an International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company and the Constitutive Charter and Statutes for this institution. This is a sound and practical scheme which is fully described in the report to the Assembly (document A.6.1931), and should come into operation as soon as the conditions of the financial markets permit the capital to be subscribed.

" The financial situation has, it is true, radically changed and worsened since the Convention was drawn up, and new urgent problems have been superimposed on those which occupied our minds last spring.

" Even if these new circumstances should delay the application of the Convention, we must have the mechanism available for use as soon as the appropriate moment has arrived. The attention of the signatory States should therefore be called to the necessity for ratification, and an appeal should be made to the European States which have not yet signed the Convention.

" Other Long-term Credit Problems.

" This Convention was designed to meet the special difficulties of the agricultural countries. But, since May, the need for long-term capital has spread far beyond these countries. In view of this new situation, the French Government put forward certain proposals to the Commission of Enquiry for European Union which were afterwards examined by a special Committee appointed by the Council. The report of this Committee (document C.504.M.211.1931.VII) was approved by the Council on September 14th.

" I would draw your particular attention to the document which should be read in conjunction with the report of this Committee last year to the eleventh Assembly.

> " 'The problems of international loans', it is pointed out, 'can no longer be considered by the League solely with regard to their effect on individual borrowing States, but should be viewed rather in connection with the general problem of international credit, and any action likely to promote a flow of capital to-day would promise valuable international advantages.'

" The Committee recommended, therefore, that the League's policy with regard to the issue of loans under its auspices should be developed, and that, as the French Government had suggested, the Financial Committee, acting in accordance with the instructions received from the Council of the League, should be prepared to consider such applications from borrowing States as may be made to it for its assistance. These proposals, it is observed, constitute rather a development of, than a departure from, the policy approved by the Assembly last year. As I have just stated, they have received the approval of the Council, who decided in this connection that the collaboration of Treasury officials should be obtained in all cases where requests from Governments for help or advice involve the examination of questions of public finance. I have no doubt that the Second Committee will desire to emphasise the necessity of giving the Financial Organisation of the League every opportunity to afford all the assistance in its power.

" Other Work of the Financial Committee.

" With the other work of the Financial Committee I will deal more briefly. The great undertaking of settling 1,400,000 refugees in Greece has been successfully concluded, and the similar work conducted in Bulgaria is nearing completion. A special enquiry has been conducted on the request of the Bulgarian Government into the co-operative system in that country.

" Bulgarian Budget.

" The general depression has had serious consequences for the Bulgarian budget. The 1930-31 financial year closed with a large deficit, which threatened to be renewed in the current year.

" The Financial Committee took active steps to deal with the position. It made urgent representations to the Bulgarian Government on the necessity of taking energetic measures to restore the balance between revenue and expenditure, both by cutting down expenses and increasing the yield from existing taxes or creating new ones. The Bulgarian Finance Minister has submitted to it a detailed plan under which it may be hoped that the budget will be balanced, and the Treasury position, which was compromised by the previous deficit, will be gradually improved.

" Greece and Estonia.

" The Financial Committee continued to follow the situation of the Banks of Greece and Estonia, which, with its support, had restored the stability of the currency in these two countries. At its three previous sessions, it heard representatives of the Bank of Greece, which consulted it on the different steps to be taken, and at its last session the President of the Bank of Estonia submitted to it for approval amendments in the statute of his institution.

" At the same time, the Committee kept in touch with the economic and financial situation in these two countries.

" Counterfeiting Currency.

" A first Conference of the representatives of the central police offices with a view to the suppression of counterfeiting currency met at Geneva from March 4th to 7th, 1931. This Conference, whose chief aim was to develop international co-operation between these offices for the prevention and suppression of counterfeiting currency, adopted, for this purpose a certain number of recommendations, and a series of administrative regulations.

" Gold.

" The Gold Delegation pursued its important work and devoted itself, in particular, to the study of the distribution of gold, to the examination of the influence of fluctuations in the purchasing power of gold on the economic life of nations, and to seeking the most suitable methods of measuring these fluctuations.

" It drew up an important report on the question of the distribution of gold, in which it studied the normal operation of the gold standard.

" The Gold Delegation expects to conclude its work at its next session, and to publish on that occasion a general report on the whole complicated question of the purchasing power of gold and make certain practical proposals in this sphere.

" Fiscal Committee.

" During its second year of existence, the Fiscal Committee continued to devote its efforts to numerous and varied tasks. It notably drew up a plurilateral convention for the avoidance of double taxation of the chief categories of income. Owing to the numerous differences which still subsist between the legislations of the various States, it has not yet been able to draft a uniform convention; but it submitted to the Council two model drafts which it recommended to the attention of the Governments.

" Further, the enquiry initiated, with the help of the grant made by the Rockefeller Foundation, into the apportionment of profits of undertakings operating in several countries and the possibility of unifying the methods employed in this connection by the different fiscal administrations is making satisfactory progress. The legislation of several important countries has been carefully examined, and it is hoped to reach final conclusions in the comparatively near future.

" The Committee also dealt with the taxation of instruments of international commerce, double taxation in respect of the turnover tax, and the Customs and fiscal duties on newspapers and periodicals.

" The draft Convention which it had prepared with the help of the Transit Organisation on the taxation of foreign motor vehicles was adopted almost as it stood by the European Conference on Road Traffic, and was signed by twelve countries.

" It seems that, thanks to the efforts made in this sphere by the Financial Organisation of the League of Nations before the Fiscal Committee came into existence, the field of double taxation is being more and more restricted. Certain bilateral conventions of a general nature have recently been concluded between France and Italy, Finland and Sweden, Belgium and France and Belgium and Italy. They are generally based on the model drafts prepared by the Conference of Government Experts in 1928. As regards maritime navigation, numerous agreements have already been concluded between the nations concerned.

" Committee of Statistical Experts.

" In January, a new permanent Committee—the Committee of Statistical Experts—was appointed in accordance with the terms of the International Convention relating to Economic Statistics. This Committee held its first meeting in March, when it laid down the lines of the large programme of work that lies before it. At the same time, it took action on two specific and urgent questions—the compilation of a common list of statistical territories to be specified in national statistics of external trade and of a list of commodities entering into such trade.

" Economic Intelligence Service.

" (a) Study of the Economic Depression and Future Studies of Economic Cycles.—The eleventh Assembly instructed the Economic and Financial Organisation of the League : (1) to undertake an enquiry into the course and phases of the present economic depression; and (2) to examine, after getting in touch with international organisations, advisory councils, research institutes, etc., by what means the work already undertaken on the problem of the recurrence of periods of economic depression might be co-ordinated.

" Professor Ohlin, of Stockholm University, was appointed at the beginning of the year to take charge of the enquiry referred to in the first of these resolutions. He has been assisted by a small special staff and by the existing staff of the Economic Intelligence Service.

" In accordance with the wishes of the Assembly, the enquiry has been carried out in close collaboration with the International Labour Office and the International Institute of Agriculture, which have furnished information relating to the subjects with which they are concerned, and with a number of National Economic Councils and Economic Research Institutes. At the beginning of March last, and again in July, meetings of experts from these councils and institutions, together with representatives from the International Labour Office, the International Institute of Agriculture and the International Chamber of Commerce, were held at Geneva to discuss the plan of the enquiry and certain of the technical problems involved. The majority of the national organisations represented at these meetings and a number of Governments prepared special memoranda concerning the conditions in their own countries.

"On the second resolution a special report has been drawn up[1] by representatives of those advisory and technical organisations with whom the last Assembly decided contact should be established. In this report, which has received the approval of the Council subject to budgetary provision for the work involved, it is recommended that meetings of representatives of such of these institutes and of any national or international organisations as are engaged upon work on the question and of individual experts should be convened at suitable intervals.

"On the importance of this proposed work this Committee laid special emphasis last year in a striking passage of its report.

> " 'When we consider the magnitude of the losses', it remarked, 'from which the world suffers during a period of economic stagnation similar to that through which the world is now passing, it is impossible not to be impressed by the almost absolute failure of society up to the present to devise any means by which such disasters may be averted. The Committee felt that this problem was one which imperatively demanded co-ordinated and concerted study.'

"It will be observed that the proposal put forward by the representatives of the economic councils, research institutes and other bodies consulted by the Financial Organisation is a conservative one. Such conservatism is wise to-day. What is essential is to begin the work in the hope that we may ultimately—however slowly and falteringly—find means to avert or to lessen depressions such as that which we are experiencing to-day. If the proposal made is approved, a small supplementary credit will be required.

"(b) Other Publications.—Lastly, mention should be made of the periodical publications of the Economic Intelligence Service. Since the last meeting of the Assembly, the Service has issued new editions of the Memorandum on International Trade and Balance of Payments, the Statistical Year-Book of the League of Nations, and the Memorandum on Production and Trade. The Monthly Bulletin of Statistics has been published regularly and a Memorandum on Commercial Banks is now in the press.

"These publications are of exceptional interest and importance at the present day, for accurate and up-to-date statistical information covering, not only a single country, but, so far as possible, the whole world, is the essential condition of any considered action to alleviate the economic crisis."

NINTH MEETING.

Held on Monday, September 21st, 1931, at 9.30 a.m.

Chairman : M. JANSON (Belgium).

24. Applications to the Fourth Committee for Budget Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN read the following documents relating to requests for appropriations for the work of the Financial Committee to be submitted to the Fourth Committee: (a) letter of September 7th, 1931, from the Chairman of the Financial Committee to the Secretary-General (Annex 8); (b) extracts from the report to the Council on the work of the Financial Committee, forty-second session, paragraph 8, Budget Provisions (document A.55.1931.II.A); (c) extract from the report to the Council of the Norwegian representative on the work of the forty-second session of the Financial Committee, dated September 18th, 1931 (document C.572.1931.II.A).

Mr. LOVEDAY (Director of the Financial Section and Economic Intelligence Service) said that the budget as drawn up in May endeavoured to effect all possible economies. For the normal work of the Financial Committee and its sub-committees and delegations there was an appropriation of 77,000 Swiss francs, which was intended to cover the cost of three ordinary meetings of the Financial Committee and three meetings of special delegations or sub-committees. The Financial Committee had already sat three times, and would probably have to sit once more, as a result of which the estimates were already exceeded by 35,000 francs.

On September 12th, the Council had approved a recommendation of the Credits Committee accepting the French proposal submitted in May with regard to the Financial Committee being in a position to give its opinion or advice, if called upon, in regard to Government loans of an international character. That recommendation implied new expenditure. Again, in the previous week, the Council had approved a resolution to the effect that the Financial Organisation of the League should be prepared, in the event of an extension of the crisis, to intervene if necessary. The budget as it stood contained no appropriation to cover the additional work implied by that resolution.

In the previous year, the Assembly had passed a resolution calling upon the Economic Organisation of the League to study the causes of the periodicity of business cycles. In execution of that recommendation, meetings had been summoned of representatives of national economic councils and research institutes, in the course of which a recommendation was passed on the desirability of summoning the representatives of those organisations from time to time and the need of appointing a competent economist with the necessary qualified staff—the latter to be attached permanently to the Secretariat of the League—in order to undertake the necessary scientific preparation for these meetings with a view to the successful conduct of the studies proposed. The latter recommendation was approved by the Council subject to the grant by the Assembly of the necessary appropriations.

To give effect to this recommendation would involve an annual expenditure of 28,000 Swiss francs for the salary of the economist, 12,500 Swiss francs for the staff (who would be engaged on the spot), 19,400 Swiss francs for the organisation of the various meetings, 5,000 Swiss francs for the travelling expenses of the economist, and 400 Swiss francs for printing charges, plus an addition of 10 per cent for unforeseen expenditure—making a total of 71,000 Swiss francs. Next year, however, the appropriation need not amount to this total, since the economist in question would probably be occupied by his own work at any rate until the close of the university year, so that he would not be working for the League for more than six months in 1932. Consequently the appropriation for 1932 need not be more than 45,250 francs.

There was no appropriation in the May budget for the study of the causes of the economic depression, for the reason that no decision on the point had been taken at the time when the budget was drawn up. In the event of any decision as to the principle of the proposal, the appropriation would figure in the special chapter of the budget relating to these questions. The proposal for an appropriation to enable the Financial Organisation to give technical opinions was justified by the probability of unexpected expenditure implied in the case of work of this kind, which would involve a rather different form for these credits.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) agreed with Mr. Loveday, but was anxious not to exclude the possibility of the Committee's applying for further financial provision, if necessity arose in the course of subsequent discussion.

M. TRIP (Netherlands), speaking as a member of the Fourth Committee, thought he ought to make a distinction between the ordinary work of the Financial Committee, which was of vital importance and for which supplementary credits would certainly be available, and work in connection with the study of the causes of business cycles. However important studies of this sort might be, the result of them could not have any effect on the existing depression. To conform with the principles laid down by the Fourth Committee, the study of the question should be postponed at any rate until 1933.

The CHAIRMAN requested the Rapporteur to draft a letter to the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission.

M. BERNIS (Spain), Rapporteur, agreed.

In reply to M. Trip, he said that, in his opinion, the present crisis was far from having reached its culminating point. It threatened to involve new countries which had hitherto seemed comparatively immune. In these circumstances, he thought the study of the causes of trade cycles had its interest even in connection with the present crisis.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) said he fully recognised the importance of these studies, but it seemed to him that they were studies of the means of avoiding or diminishing future depressions. He thought, therefore, the work should be postponed to 1933 in order not to burden the 1932 budget, which was already so heavily charged with the expenditure for the Disarmament Conference.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) urged the Commission to insist emphatically on the need for study of the causes of the crisis and the remedies which might be available at this tragic moment. The sum of 50,000 Swiss francs was an insignificant amount in comparison with the hundreds of millions sterling which were at stake.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) agreed with Sir Arthur Salter and the Rapporteur.

Sir Cooverjee COYAJEE (India) protested vigorously against any interruption of the work on the study of the causes of trade cycles. He thought the work in this connection was as important as the work in connection with disarmament.

M. DE ARMENTEROS (Cuba) supported the Rapporteur's proposal.

The CHAIRMAN asked M. Trip if he was prepared to withdraw his objection.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) said that he was in duty bound to put to the Committee the standpoint of the Fourth Committee in regard to economies. If the majority of the Second Committee felt that the study of trade cycles was so important as not to admit of postponement, he was prepared to defer to it.

25. Statement by the Representative of the British Empire in regard to the Suspension of the Gold Standard in Great Britain.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) said that, in view of the events that had taken place in his country during the previous twenty-four hours he did not propose to say anything on the world crisis; but he had an announcement to make to the Committee on what had happened in his own country. He then read the following statement :

" His Majesty's Government have decided, after consultation with the Bank of England, tha tit has been necessary to suspend for the time being operation of subsection 2 of section 1 of Gold Standard Act, 1925, which requires the Bank of England to sell gold at a fixed rate.

" A Bill for the purpose will be introduced immediately and it is the intention of His Majesty's Government to ask Parliament to pass it through all stages on September 21st. In the meantime, the Bank of England has been authorised to proceed accordingly in anticipation of the Act of Parliament.

" The reasons which have led to this decision are as follows : Since the middle of July, funds amounting to more than two hundred million pounds sterling have been withdrawn from the London market. The withdrawals have been made partly from gold and foreign currency held by the Bank of England and partly from the proceeds of a credit of fifty million sterling which shortly matures secured by the Bank of England from New York and Paris, and partly from the proceeds of the French and American credit amounting to eighty million sterling recently obtained by the Government. During the last few days, the withdrawals of foreign currency have accelerated so sharply that His Majesty's Government have felt bound to take the decision mentioned above.

" This decision will not of course affect obligations of His Majesty's Government or the Bank of England which are payable in foreign currencies.

" The gold holding of the Bank of England amounts to some one hundred and thirty million sterling, and having regard to the contingencies which may have to be met, it is inadvisable to allow this reserve to be further reduced.

" There will be no interruption of the ordinary banking business. The banks will be open as usual for the convenience of customers; and there is no reason why sterling transactions should be affected in any way.

" It has been arranged that the Stock Exchange shall not be open on Monday, the day upon which Parliament is passing the necessary legislation. This will not, however, interfere with the business of current settlement of the Stock Exchange, which will be carried through as usual.

" His Majesty's Government have no reason to believe that the present difficulties are due to any substantial extent to export of capital by British citizens. Undoubtedly the bulk of the withdrawals have been for foreign account.

" They desire, however, to repeat emphatically the warning given by the Chancellor of the Exchequer that any British citizen increasing the strain on the exchanges by purchasing foreign securities himself or assisting others to do so is deliberately adding to the country's difficulties.

" The banks have undertaken to co-operate in the restriction of purchases by British citizens of foreign exchange, except those required for the actual needs of trade or for meeting existing contracts; and should further measures prove to be advisable, His Majesty's Government will not hesitate to take them.

" His Majesty's Government have arrived at their decision with the greatest reluctance. During the last few days, the international financial markets have become demoralised and have been liquidating sterling assets regardless of their intrinsic worth. In these circumstances, there was no alternative but to protect the financial position of this country by the only means at our disposal.

" His Majesty's Government are securing a balanced budget and the internal position of the country is sound. This position must be maintained. It is one thing to go off the gold standard with an unbalanced budget and uncontrolled inflation; it is quite another thing to take this measure, not because of internal financial difficulties, but because of excessive withdrawals of borrowed capital. The ultimate resources of this country are enormous and there is no doubt that the present exchange difficulties will prove only temporary."

He said he had only to add to his statement that the record of Great Britain since the war showed she had been determined to honour her obligations to the full and would continue to do so; that the internal position of Great Britain was wholly sound, thanks to the sacrifices made to secure a balanced budget; that the immediate crisis was due to wholesale liquidation of investments in foreign markets, which forced Great Britain to protect herself; and that the banks were remaining open for ordinary business, which would be continued on entirely normal lines.

He added that no restrictions whatever would be placed on the free disposal of gold held in safe custody in Great Britain for account of foreign customers, or on gold sent to Great Britain for custody on foreign account or for sale in the market.

His Majesty's Government were fully aware that the step which they had taken might cause serious trouble and some confusion, especially in countries which in the past had been particularly dependent upon the London market to supply them with credits and other financial facilities.

His Majesty's Government were most anxious to minimise these difficulties as far as possible, and would be ready to co-operate with any measures which could be devised to attain that end.

The CHAIRMAN was sure he was voicing the feelings of the entire Committee in assuring Sir Arthur Salter of the deep sympathy which they felt for his country in its present difficulties. He was confident that the traditional resolution of Great Britain would enable that great country shortly to emerge from the temporary financial difficulties with which it was assailed.

26. Work of the Financial Organisation : General Discussion (continuation).

Sir Cooverjee COYAJEE (India) said that, with reference to the report by Sir Arthur Salter on Economic Councils in India, he shared the Rapporteur's view that the drafting of economic programmes was of more than national interest, and that a document from such a personality as Sir Arthur Salter must be of quite special value in this connection.

Referring to the report of the Gold Delegation, he said that the crisis had taken the world by surprise at a moment when a solution was being sought for the problems connected with the international operation of the gold standard. The various banking systems had come to realise the task devolving on them in connection with the control of investment and prices. The adoption of the gold exchange standard had been more or less general, and there was every reason to anticipate that they were on the point of evolving a satisfactory system for the international regulation of the functions of gold.

That was the stage reached when they were interrupted by the crisis. The action advocated by the Gold Delegation appeared well calculated to lead to a resumption of the progress already made, in particular the measures proposed with a view to increasing the powers of control of the central banks in relation to the operation of the gold standard. The suggestions for modification of the percentages of gold stocks held in reserve under the legislation of the various countries were of particular interest and importance.

The gaps in the report were explained by its provisional character. The terms of reference of the Gold Delegation did not include the study of the relationship between the present economic depression and the distribution of gold. The final report was still in course of preparation, and the terms of reference might be appropriately widened to enable it to deal with this point.

The account given in the report of the economic depression throughout the world represented a very valuable contribution to the other work done in this connection. The statistical studies of Professor Ohlin should be continued, and special attention should be directed to the trend which the crisis was taking.

Turning to the special report on the periodicity of economic depressions, he welcomed the studies already made and the meetings which had been held by representatives of National Economic Councils and research institutions. He thought it should be possible to prevent the recurrence of depressions by permanent machinery for the adjustment of supply and demand, which might be found in the sustained and continous co-operation of the central banks and the adaptation of production to consumption by measures of rationalisation.

He observed that the resolution with regard to the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company treated the proposal as one which was applicable to Europe alone, though the oversea countries were asked to approve it. At the same time, there was no mention in the report of the important co-operative movement. That was a big omission; but he hoped that the proposal might be supplemented on this point in the light of the present discussion.

M. COLIJN (Netherlands) remarked that the majority of those who had been expected to speak felt some reluctance to give expression to their opinions on the subject with which the whole world was preoccupied. Their hesitation was readily intelligible. The situation was changing so rapidly that it was impossible to make any definite pronouncement on any subject whatever. The report of the Basle Committee of August 18th spoke of long-term credits. A month had passed since that time, and he imagined that there could be no single one of the members of the Committee who dreamed any longer of the possibility of placing a long-term loan at the present time.

Another feature of this attitude on the part of the majority of delegates was their reluctance to refer to the world's financial difficulties without at the same time raising the question of political and reparation debts. Those countries which were not directly concerned in these problems were unwilling to add to the difficulties by intervening; and it was only the States directly concerned which had the handling of these problems. The League of Nations was unfortunately precluded from lending its guidance and co-operation in the matter. The time had come, however, to state from the purely economic standpoint that it was impossible to transfer vast sums from one part of the world to another without accepting in exchange any corresponding values, particularly when the creditor was unwilling to accept goods in lieu of cash. Once again he was compelled to point out that there could be no free movement of capital until there was free movement of goods. The rigidity of the present system was at the root of the economic difficulties. The Basle experts had rightly pointed out that the world was at present following two contradictory policies, whereby on the one hand debtor countries paid large sums to creditor countries, while on the other obstacles were raised to the free circulation of commodities. It was this contradiction which was at the bottom of the trouble.

He referred in this connection to M. Francqui's proposal which the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had considered. While he did not believe that the proposal would do away with the current difficulties, he was firmly convinced that it was one of the few practical proposals put forward which might do something to improve the position. The bankers of all countries had been taken by surprise by the course of events, and they were waiting for the moment when it would be possible once again to set free the capital which was at present locked up in the various countries. The six months' truce for the withdrawal of capital would expire in February, and new withdrawals on a large scale would then begin. That consideration gave the Francqui proposal its urgent character, and made it desirable for them to recommend the Assembly and the Council to refer it for study to a committee of experts so that it could be put into force as soon as the need arose.

He had been deeply moved by Sir Arthur Salter's statement; but he felt sure that Great Britain would find means to overcome the difficulties of the moment, as other countries in a precisely similar position had done some years before.

Reverting to the Francqui proposal and the German delegation's proposal with regard to it, he suggested that it was not practical that the establishment of a credit institution to handle short and long-term credits on the lines of the proposal should be dependent on the conclusion of an international convention. The conclusion and ratification of an international convention would take a long time, and immediate action was urgently required. Nor should the Governments have a hand in the matter. It would be better to leave the establishment of the proposed institution to the bankers who had a direct interest in the liquefaction, at the earliest possible date, of the frozen credits.

M. Ritter (Germany) said that, as regards the issue of loans under the auspices of the League, the proposals before the Committee represented a fair compromise between the present practice of the League and the outcome of the discussions of May last of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. He thought it was a good thing that the establishment of a new organisation of the League had been abandoned and that the Governments were left free to appeal for the co-operation of the League or not as they pleased. Two Governments had already made such an appeal, and it was to be hoped that positive results would be reached in their cases. The fact that the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company was on the point of coming into being was a reply to the negative criticism so often put forward with reference to the League. It was a proof that positive results could be reached at Geneva if all the parties interested contributed the necessary modicum of goodwill.

The establishment of a special institution for short-term agricultural credits, which was at present under consideration by the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, would afford an invaluable supplement to the work already done in this field. It must be remembered that the principal difficulty with which agriculturists were confronted was the necessity of selling their harvests as soon as they were got in without waiting for more remunerative prices. The task of the new short-term agricultural credit institution would be to give advances on the harvests in the autumn.

He was astonished that the Credits Committee of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union should have treated the Francqui proposal as premature. What moment, he wondered, could be more appropriate for the establishment of an organisation of this kind than a moment when all the threads of international financial co-operation were being severed? There were some countries where the banks were not paying any interest on deposits and were even asking for a commission of one-half per cent for holding them, while at the same time in other countries undertakings of the first importance were unable to obtain capital for the most justifiable objects even at the highest rates of interest. The period for which the lenders were prepared to see their capital locked up was too short. Germany, for example, was due to repay 5 milliard marks on February 19th next. Moreover, while this term was too short to be of much use to the debtor banks, it raised great difficulties also for the creditor banks. One of the main causes for the present difficulties of the Bank of England was the fact that the English banks were not in a position to call in the credits they had given to Germany, Austria and Hungary. That was the explanation of the urgency for the Committee and the Assembly to discuss the Francqui proposal. He agreed to M. Colijn's suggestion to amend the German delegation's resolution by the omission of the passage with regard to the conclusion of an international convention. The German Government warmly agreed with the other draft resolutions and was prepared to support them.

There must, however, be no illusion as to the result of these measures. They might perhaps mitigate the position in certain particular points but would not do much to improve the general situation. As M. Colijn had observed, no statement concerning the present depression would be complete if it passed over the grave problem of political debts and reparations. The situation in which Germany was placed as a result of the payments she had to make under this heading forced her to export more and to import as little as possible. In that connection he would refer to the discussion at the previous meeting, between M. Posse and M. Stucki. The German Government was prepared to examine in the most conciliatory spirit any observations the Swiss Government might put forward concerning any changes that it might be desirable to make in certain of the German tariffs. The German Government, however, resisted, and would always resist, any contractual reduction or definite determination of its export figure. It would be ingenuous to suppose that the increase in German exports was due to deliberate action by the Government or by German industrialists. Germany had at present an export surplus of 3 billions, but that did not suffice, and it would have to be increased still further if she was to be in a position to meet her political debts.

M. Ritter agreed with M. Stucki that Switzerland was not responsible for this state of affairs, but Germany had no other way of coping with the position. M. Stucki was not right in saying that Germany refused to allow Switzerland the rights she arrogated to herself. In the past six years only one import prohibition had been established in Germany—namely, that referred to by M. Stucki. The German Government regarded that prohibition as a measure intended to bring pressure to bear with a view to the reconstitution of an international agreement which had been dissolved. Such were the considerations which had led M. Posse to express himself so frankly.

In conclusion, M. Ritter referred to the report by the Basle experts stating that it was undesirable that Germany should be forced to take active measures to increase her exports. The effects of that position in the financial sphere had found an eloquent illustration in events. It was only by chance that the countries which had to support the burden of the world war had been the first to collapse. Others would certainly follow. The countries in which there was a superabundance of gold and capital were not perhaps in the same situation, but their capital was idle, it produced no interest and did not fulfil its natural role in the capitalist system.

M. Stucki (Switzerland) paid a tribute to the tone of M. Ritter's observations. It was essential that the discussion should remain on the material, as opposed to the personal, plane if results were to be obtained. He did not propose to go further with this " bilateral " discussion: but there were certain figures which he could not refrain from laying before the Committee in connection with the issue between his country and Germany.

The purchase of German goods by the country which was at present Germany's biggest creditor was at the rate of 7 gold marks per head per annum. The purchases of Switzerland (a country to which Germany had no political debt to pay) were at the rate of 161 gold marks per head per annum. The corresponding figures for France were 28, for Poland 9, and for Italy 12 gold marks.

It was said that Germany could pay her political debts only in the form of goods; she should therefore send her goods to the countries to which she was indebted. If that was impossible, the neutral countries should not necessarily shoulder the consequences.

The adverse trade balance of Switzerland had trebled in the last four years. That was a fact to which it was no answer to speak of " international solidarity ".

27. Request for Supplementary Credit.

M. Bernis (Spain), Rapporteur, read a draft letter (Annex 9) which was to be sent from the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission with regard to the draft budget for 1932, and a request for a supplementary credit (Annex 10) (Chapter III, Item 19 A) to be provided under Nos. 2(a), 2(b) 3(a) and 4 for the investigation into the periodicity of trade cycles.

TENTH MEETING.

Held on Tuesday, September 22nd, 1931, at 9.30 a.m.

Chairman : M. Janson (Belgium).

28. Work of the Economic Organisation : Draft Report by M. Rollin (France) (Annex 11).

M. Rollin (France), Rapporteur, in submitting his report, pointed out that there was entire continuity in the League's recommendations in 1927, in 1929 and in 1930. The recommendations had not lost their force, but the course of events had made their application more difficult. The aim was the same, though the means might have to be modified.

The Committee proceeded to discuss the draft report section by section.

A. Introduction.

1. General Considerations.

Sir Arthur Salter (British Empire) thought that the paragraph beginning : " Can we allow it to be said . . . " and the next paragraph, beginning : " In the same way . . . " should be connected in such a way as to make the balance of importance equal as between the Conferences of 1927, 1929 and 1930, on the one hand, and the Commission of Enquiry for European Union, on the other hand. He accordingly proposed that the two paragraphs should be combined into one, the words "they must be brought to a true appreciation of the results obtained" being omitted.

Agreed.

M. BERNIS (Spain) wondered whether it was wise for the Committee to give its approval to the remark of the experts to the effect that the "lack of confidence . . . entails . . . reluctance to lend abroad . . ." (paragraph beginning: "The growing international distrust . . ."). There was no reluctance, as many countries knew, to expatriate capital in certain circumstances.

Section A, 1, as amended, was adopted.

2. Continuity of the Economic Work of the League of Nations.

Sir Cooverjee COYAJEE (India) moved to omit the words "which is a totally mistaken one" in the paragraph beginning: "It is important to remove . . ." as being rather too strong an expression of opinion.

Agreed.

Section A, 2, as amended, was adopted. The introduction was adopted as a whole.

B. ECONOMIC ACTIVITY OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS AND OF THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY FOR EUROPEAN UNION SINCE THE LAST ASSEMBLY.

1. Concerted Economic Action: Commercial Convention.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) was prepared to accept the section as it stood, and the draft resolution relating to it; but he was somewhat sceptical. The appeals not to increase Customs barriers had been quite unsuccessful, and his own country, among others, had suffered as a result.

Section B, 1, was adopted.

2. Economic "Rapprochements".

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) objected to the first sentence of the second paragraph. He could not agree that the small States were the principal cause of the economic difficulties. On the contrary, the splitting up of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy had set free powerful economic forces. He proposed for "mainly" to read "in some measure".

He further objected to the next sentence. Customs barriers were rather a symptom of the economic difficulties than a cause of them. He asked the Rapporteur to redraft the sentence more closely in accordance with the phrasing of the experts' report, which he understood to be in the nature of a compromise wording.

M. ROMAN (Poland) and M. ZEUCEANO (Roumania) supported M. Fierlinger's objection.

M. ROLLIN (France), Rapporteur, accepted the words "in some measure" and was prepared to follow the wording of the experts' report in the second passage.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) asked whether the second passage could not be omitted altogether.

M. ROLLIN (France), Rapporteur, asked whether the statements in question were not made by the experts themselves.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) replied that they were, but that other considerations had to be taken into account.

M. ROLLIN (France), Rapporteur, suggested that M. Fierlinger would perhaps be satisfied if the words "one of the obstacles" were used instead of "one of the greatest obstacles".

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) was prepared to accept the French delegate's proposal.

M. DE WINCHKLER (Hungary) thought that the changes in the Rapporteur's text requested by the Czechoslovak delegate would be inconsistent with the experts' report, and proposed to maintain the original text submitted by the Rapporteur. The fact that the splitting up of Europe was the cause of the weakness in the economic structure of Europe was the Leitmotiv of the experts' report.

M. POSSE (Germany) entirely agreed, and suggested as a compromise that the wording of the experts themselves might be employed and the passage might read:

> "The economic experts recognised that the weakness of the economic structure of Europe is due to the multiplicity of Customs tariffs resulting from the division of Europe into a large number of separate economic units."

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) did not dispute the experts' conclusion that:

> "The ultimate goal must be the widest possible collaboration of the nations of Europe in the sense of making Europe a single market for the products of any and every country in it," but the present issue was the existing economic structure.

After further discussion, M. ROLLIN (France), Rapporteur, proposed that the text should read :

"The economic experts recognised that the economic weakness of Europe is due, in particular, to the multiplicity of Customs tariffs, resulting from the division of Europe into a large number of separate economic units."

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) was prepared to defer to the French delegate; but the Czechoslovak delegation maintained its view on the substantial issue involved.

The paragraph proposed by M. Rollin was adopted.

M. ANDVORD (Norway) proposed that the concluding sentence of Section B, 2, should be amended to read as follows :

"They still consider the regime of the most-favoured-nation clause the essential safeguard of normal commercial relations between nations."

That quoted the experts' own wording.

Agreed.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) suggested that the fourth paragraph of Section B, 2, should read :

"The Co-ordination Committee refers to the views of the economic experts, which it summarises as follows."

Agreed.

Mr. GUTHRIE (Canada) suggested that the sixth paragraph should read :

"The Second Committee welcomes the fact that Europe is making an effort to bring about the restoration of her economic situation and thereby the improvement of world conditions."

He further suggested that the last sentence of the same paragraph should read :

"It is therefore glad to note that the experts have surrounded their proposals with guarantees for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of other countries . . . "

Mr. DE VILLIERS (South Africa) agreed. He had been very glad to see, both in the Assembly and in the Second Committee, that the interests of the oversea countries were not being overlooked. He was grateful especially for what the first German delegate had said in the Assembly, and other speakers in the Second Committee, in this connection.

Agreed.

Section B, 2, as amended, was adopted.

3. International Economic Agreements.

M. DE MICHELIS (Italy) could not help feeling that the Rapporteur—though he congratulated him on the clearness and impartiality of his report—had exaggerated the results which might be expected from these agreements. The wording proposed would have to be modified, more particularly in order to give a faithful rendering of the opinion of the economic experts whose conclusions were under consideration. He would prefer the text of the report to be based rather on that of the resolution proposed by the British delegation. M. Rollin would perhaps modify his wording, taking into account the work of the economic experts, as he had set forth the considerations they had in mind when they dealt with the agreements in question.

M. de Michelis considered that the second paragraph of the third draft resolution at the end of the report ("Bearing in mind also . . . ") and the last paragraph of the same resolution ("While leaving the economic organisation . . . ") should be incorporated in the text. Three points should be brought out—the conditions and guarantees, respect for the interests of third parties, and the spontaneity of the action taken.

M. STUCKI (Switzerland) agreed with M. de Michelis.

M. BERNIS (Spain) said that Spain was not opposed to these arguments in principle, but he was inclined to agree with M. de Michelis as to the Rapporteur's text. He proposed that the first sentence of the second paragraph should be amended as follows :

"It is undoubtedly important, in order to avoid any disadvantages which they are apt to involve and have at times involved, to provide . . . "

He further suggested that the last sentence of section B, 3, should read :

"Such agreements, provided they are concluded for a long period and on a basis balancing the strength of all the national industries concerned, except in so far as they may refuse to come in, might lead to the stabilisation of Customs duties at a reduced rate."

Agreed.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) agreed in general with the text of the report on this subject. At the same time, he wondered whether the text of the report could not be brought into rather closer line with the text of the resolution. The object should be to endorse and reproduce what, after all, was now a defined and developed doctrine of the League as to the utility, subject to certain conditions, of these agreements. Perhaps it would be well to have a small drafting committee for the purpose.

The CHAIRMAN suggested the appointment of a sub-committee to redraft Section B, 3, as Sir Arthur Salter had suggested, to consist of M. Rollin (Rapporteur), M. de Michelis, M. Bernis, Sir Arthur Salter and M. Posse.

Agreed.

4. Agricultural Questions.

Subsections (a) and (b) were adopted.

Subsection (c).

M. VENNERSTEN (Sweden) proposed the substitution for the last five-words of the subsection (" most seriously affected economic systems "), of the words : " economic systems of the countries concerned ".

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) said that, while the British delegation did not wish to raise any obstacle to these cereal preference proposals, it also did not wish to go beyond what the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had said. The Committee should neither strengthen nor water down the conclusions of the latter. The first four paragraphs of subsection (c) consisted in an enumeration of the opposing views. He thought it would be clearer if the following modifications were made :

At the beginning of the third paragraph add the words : " They argue that " before " The granting of a preferential tariff . . . "

In the same paragraph, before the words : " In return ", add the words " They add that ".

At the beginning of the following paragraph, for the words : " Certain delegations ", read, " On the other hand, certain countries ".

He also felt that the final paragraph embodied an endorsement of the preference proposals in question, which went very much further than the Commission for European Union had done, and he proposed accordingly to omit the paragraph altogether.

M. VENNERSTEN (Sweden) withdrew his amendment and accepted Sir Arthur Salter's proposal to omit the whole of the last paragraph.

M. ANDVORD (Norway) agreed with Sir Arthur Salter as to the omission of the final paragraph.

In the last paragraph but one, he proposed to omit the words : " particularly if they were of a general or permanent character ". He disliked any reference to the possibility of these schemes being general or permanent in character.

M. ROLLIN (France), Rapporteur, accepted the Norwegian delegate's proposal.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) admitted that the Committee should not go beyond the conclusions of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union; but, at the same time, they must not pull down what the Commission had built up. If it was proposed to omit the last paragraph, he suggested that there should be a reference in the first paragraph of subsection (c) to the Commission's report, stating that the Committee noted its conclusions.

M. NECULCEA (Roumania) was astonished to find a question which had been discussed at such length, and which was substantially chose jugée brought up again. All possible reassurances had been offered with regard to the most-favoured-nation clause. Figures had been given—figures which had not been, and could not be, refuted—as to the effect of the preference proposals on third countries. Now they were treated to a funeral oration, and told that the Second Committee should wash its hands of the proposals.

M. KAWASHIMA (Japan) supported the proposal to omit the last paragraph, on the ground that the League should not express any view on a special European proposal of this kind. He sympathised with the position of the countries of Eastern and South-Eastern Europe, but it would be wiser for the Committee to take note of the attitude of those countries without expressing its own view.

Mr. GUTHRIE (Canada) agreed with Sir Arthur Salter's proposal to omit the last paragraph. The Commission of Enquiry for European Union had considered the matter, but it was a body on which the oversea countries were not represented. The Second Committee of the Assembly, on the other hand, was a World Committee, and it ought not to express approval of special treatment for any one region of the world to the prejudice of others. Canada could never agree to the last paragraph of this section. If the Committee desired to reach unanimity, the only way was to omit it.

M. DE MICHELIS (Italy) said that the Canadian delegate's speech was an event of the first importance. Up till then, it had always been understood that the preference proposals were adopted subject to the approval of third countries. It was now learned for the first time that third countries were proposing a priori to withhold their approval. It was essential that this important development should find expression in the report, in the actual terms indicated by the representatives of the countries taking that view.

The CHAIRMAN proposed that the last paragraph should be referred to a second sub-committee.

It was agreed after discussion that the second sub-committee should consist of representatives of Canada, France, Germany, Great Britain, India, Italy, Japan, Roumania and Sweden.

ELEVENTH MEETING.

Held on Tuesday, September 22nd, 1931, at 4 p.m.

Chairman : M. JANSON (Belgium).

29. Work of the Economic Organisation : Draft Report submitted by M. Rollin (France) (continuation).

Subsection (d).

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) observed that it had been proposed, not merely to give agricultural products other than cereals preferential treatment, but also to consider the possibility of assisting their marketing by other means.

M. STOPPANI (Director of the Economic Relations Section) explained that, in view of the diversity of these products, he had convened a meeting of the Spanish, Portuguese and Greek delegates with a view to arriving at an agreement as to the best means of studying the matter. It was then decided to divide these products into two groups. The first group included wine, cork and hemp; and the Drafting Committee would propose to add these products to the list in the section dealing with economic agreements. As regards raisins and tobacco, he suggested that they should be added in brackets to the paragraph relating to the demand put forward by certain countries for the extension of preferential treatment to agricultural products other than cereals. He suggested that " etc." should be added, so as not to make the list exclusive.

M. BERNIS (Spain) accepted M. Stoppani's proposal. The corresponding passage in the resolution should also mention raisins and tobacco.

M. DE MICHELIS (Italy) pointed out that the Special Committee's study of the question was not limited to particular products. The Governments were, without exception, entitled to ask it to consider the question of preference for any other products in which they might be interested. That was why M. Stoppani had proposed to add " etc.", and he inferred that there were no limits to the Committee's powers with regard to the products in question.

M. ENTEZAM-WEZIRY (Persia) asked whether the extension of preference was to continue to be treated as a purely European question. He was surprised to find the Committee dealing with purely European questions.

M. STOPPANI (Director of the Economic Relations Section) replied that the Special Committee dealing with the matter was a committee appointed by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. He agreed with M. de Michelis' observation.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) accepted M. Stoppani's proposal.

M. PUSTA (Estonia) was anxious that there should be no restriction to the number of products to which preferential treatment might be given.

M. ROLLIN (France), Rapporteur, replied that the list was not restrictive; the products mentioned were given as illustrations.

M. ENTEZAM-WEZIRY (Persia) wished it to be placed on record that the question under consideration was of purely European interest. He thought it would be better for the Second Committee to deal only with problems of interest to the whole world.

M. ROLLIN (France), Rapporteur, replied that the fate of Europe could not be a matter of indifference to the rest of the world. The Persian delegate would realise that the Second Committee had before it the work and studies of various organs of the League, and one of these organs was the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. It was not possible for the Committee to leave all reference to the work and studies of the latter out of its reports. It was not expressing its own approval of the wishes expressed by certain countries; it was merely drawing attention to them.

M. ENTEZAM-WEZIRY (Persia) observed that he was well aware of the importance of Europe in the world. He suggested reading " Some European countries " instead of " Some countries " in the first paragraph of subsection (d).

Subsection (d), as amended, was adopted.

Subsection (e).

The Committee adopted the following amended text of subsection (e), submitted by the Australian and Indian delegations.

> " (e) Several delegations, voicing the views of a large number of agricultural experts, expressed their belief that the co-operative association of production and consumption has an important part to play in the organisation of the disposal of agricultural products. It also would assist to adjust and regulate production with reference to fluctuations in demand as well as to reduce disparity between agricultural and manufacturing prices. This could further be expected to reduce agricultural costs and the burden of agricultural debts.

"Finally, the collateral effect of the development of such co-operation would be to contribute towards lowering tariffs, especially emergency tariffs.

"The Second Committee considers that this question must be carefully studied by the Economic Organisation with the assistance of its agricultural experts and in close co-operation with the International Institute of Agriculture and the International Labour Office."

Subsection (f).

Subsection (f) was adopted.

5. Veterinary Conventions.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) proposed to alter the second paragraph so as to make it clear that the facilities which exporting States demand in connection with the live-stock trade relate to most-favoured-nation treatment. He felt that what the trade was afraid of was the possibility of getting round the clause on veterinary measures.

M. STUCKI (Switzerland) admitted that the most-favoured-nation clause had a bearing on the issue in one sense—namely, that the live-stock exporting countries did not want their competitors to receive preferential treatment. That was the one breach in the united front of the live-stock trade, which, during the discussion, had shown so much energy in defending its standpoint. But the object of the Veterinary Conventions was distinct from the question of most-favoured-nation treatment. The real object was to prevent protectionism in disguise in the form of alleged veterinary safeguards. He asked that the text of the report should be maintained in its entirety.

M. ROMAN (Poland) urged the Committee not to confine itself to approving the recommendation of a preliminary draft convention in regard to the import and export of live-stock, meat and other products of animal origin, but also to express a desire for the study of the question by the Economic Committee at the earliest possible date.

M. ROLLIN (France), Rapporteur, admitted the force of the objections which had been made; but he thought it would be difficult to give effect in the drafting to M. Fierlinger's amendment, which, he might point out, was opposed altogether by the Swiss delegate. He therefore asked M. Fierlinger to withdraw his proposal. He was prepared, however, to accept the Polish amendment.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) withdrew his amendment.

Section 5 was adopted as amended by the Polish delegate.

6. Unemployment.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) proposed amendments with regard to the financial considerations involved and with regard to the possible economic effect of the public works programme.

Section 6, as amended, was adopted.

30. Work of the Communications and Transit Organisation : Final Adoption of Report.

The CHAIRMAN reminded the Committee that the report on the work of the Communications and Transit Organisation had only been adopted provisionally, subject to such amendments as might be found desirable in the light of the discussion on economic questions.

M. ROLLIN (France) said that there was no inconsistency between his report and the report on the work of the Communications and Transit Organisation which had been provisionally adopted.

The report on the work of the Communications and Transit Organisation was finally adopted.

31. Work of the Economic Organisation : Draft Report submitted by M. Rollin (France) (continuation) : Adoption of Report and Resolutions : Appointment of Rapporteur to the Assembly.

M. DE MICHELIS (Italy) observed that the last paragraph of Section 7 embodied approval of the work of the Economic Committee in terms which were too definite, and that the Committee was not in a position to give that approval. The Economic Committee itself had shown more restraint in its report, and he thought that the Second Committee's report should be brought into harmony with the terms of the Economic Committees' report. It was essential to do no more than draw the Government's attention to the Committee's conclusion, without inviting them to bring their commercial policy into conformity with it.

M. ROLLIN (France), Rapporteur, agreed. He proposed the following text :

"The Second Committee is glad to note the results reached by the Economic Committee, and suggests that the Assembly should recommend to the attention of the Governments the conclusions of the Economic Committee."

Section 7, as amended, was adopted.

8. Treatment of Foreigners.

Section 8 was adopted.

9. Customs Nomenclature.

M. DE FIGHIERA (Chairman of the Committee of Experts on Customs Nomenclature) gave an account of the work done by the Committee of Experts. It had taken four years. The resulting text had met with the approval of the various countries to which it had been communicated. The object of the Committee of Experts had been to simplify Customs nomenclature, to prevent discrimination, to reduce the number of items and to introduce uniform Customs terminology. The Council had authorised the Secretary-General to send the draft proposals to those countries which had not been directly concerned with their preparation, and to ask them to consider the proposals and submit their observations. The experts hoped that the proposed nomenclature would be adopted by the largest possible number of countries. It would represent the first attempt at unification in Customs matters, and perhaps later in tariff matters. He asked the Committee to approve the draft resolution.

Section 9 was adopted.

10. Indirect Protectionism. Marks of Origin.

M. POSSE (Germany) wished some mention to be made of the fact that the Economic Committee's conclusions had been communicated by the Council to States which were not Members of the League as well as to States Members.

Section 10, as amended, was adopted.

11. Bills of Exchange and Cheques.

Section 11 was adopted.

12. National Economic Councils.

Sir Sydney CHAPMAN (British Empire) proposed the omission of the third paragraph of this section on the ground that the Committee should not recommend the establishment of Economic Councils in countries where they did not at present exist. This was a purely internal matter for the countries concerned.

M. BOTTAI (Italy) observed that, as regards the British amendment proposing to the Council that the collaboration of the National Economic Councils with the League should be effected through the Economic Consultative Committee (with appropriate modifications in the composition of the latter for the purpose), he had no objection to the suggestion with regard to the Economic Consultative Committee, but he thought it would be better to leave the Council to decide the matter. He accordingly suggested that the British delegate should withdraw his proposal, and that the last sentence of Section 12 should include a reference to what the British delegation had suggested.

M. DE WINCHKLER (Hungary) supported the Italian proposal.

Sir Sydney CHAPMAN (British Empire) withdrew the British amendment.

M. BOTTAI (Italy) agreed to Sir Sydney Chapman's proposal to omit the third paragraph.

Section 12, as amended, was adopted.

13. Economic Tendencies liable to influence World Peace.

Section 13 was adopted.

14. Pact of Economic Non-Aggression.

Section 14 was approved.

C. DRAFT RESOLUTIONS.

Resolution 1.

Resolution 1 was adopted subject to drafting amendments proposed by the British delegation and two amendments proposed by the Japanese delegation.[1]

Resolution 2.

Resolution 2 was adopted subject to the amendment proposed by the Danish, Norwegian and Swedish delegations.[2]

Section B, 3, and Resolution 3.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) wished to be clear as to the meaning of the study of means of ensuring the establishment and operation of international economic agreements in the general interest. If that meant that the League of Nations was to undertake the international control of cartels, the Netherlands delegation would be compelled to oppose the proposal.

[2] See Minutes of seventh meeting.

M. ROLLIN (France), Rapporteur, replied that the League would exercise no control over the cartels, but would merely supervise their activities in order to prevent them from becoming instruments of oppression in the hands of persons with monopolistic tendencies.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) withdrew his objection.

The Committee adopted, with certain drafting amendments, the new text proposed by the Drafting Committee for Section B, 3, and the new text proposed for resolution No. 3 (Annex 12).

Resolutions 4, 5 and 6.

Resolutions 4, 5 and 6 were adopted with drafting amendments.

Resolution 7.

Sir Sydney CHAPMAN (British Empire) proposed that the resolution should be modified so as to harmonise with the amended text of the report. He proposed that the first paragraph should read :

" Considering that it would be desirable to associate with the work of the League of Nations institutions (National Economic Councils) representing the most important economic and social elements in certain States."

Resolution 7 was adopted as amended.

Amendment to Section B, 4 (c), of the Report, submitted by the Rapporteur (Annex 13).

M. TODOROVITCH (Yugoslavia) said that the bilateral conventions to which the report referred had already been concluded. He proposed that the text should be amended accordingly.

He further suggested replacing the word " palliative " by the word " remedy " in the third paragraph.

The amendment was adopted with this modification.

The Committee adopted the draft report as a whole.

The Committee adopted the resolutions in the following form :

" 1. The Assembly,

" Recognising that the normal exchange of commodities between the nations is seriously hampered by frequent changes in Customs tariffs and, generally, by instability in commercial policy;

" Considering the statement made by the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts to the Commission of Enquiry for European Union to the effect that the increasing disparity of tariffs greatly complicates the task of maintaining stability in the monetary and credit system of the world :

" Earnestly hopes that every country will try to the utmost possible extent to avoid any such change in tariff or commercial policy as would tend to suspend commercial agreements or to increase the economic disequilibrium and further disturb the general balance of payments. It also recommends that such agreements, where they do not exist, should be concluded on as liberal a basis as possible."

" 2. The Assembly,

" Having noted the resolutions Nos. I and III to VI (document A.38.1931) adopted by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union as a consequence of the report of its Co-ordination Sub-Committee;

" Being informed that the Commission of Enquiry did not feel able to put these resolutions into effect until they had been submitted to the Assembly;

" Approves these resolutions and requests the Council to take the necessary action to put them into effect.

" In particular, as regards the report of the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts, the Assembly,

" (a) Considering that closer economic co-operation is one of the essential conditions for relieving and overcoming the present economic crisis;

" Considering that the report of the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts suggests methods for attaining this object;

" Recognising that the seriousness of the crisis and the distress that the coming months will bring require a speedier application of all useful remedial measures :

" Notes the resolution of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union inviting the European Governments to present, if possible before January 1st, 1932, their observations on the said report; it recommends the report to the attention of all the Governments;

" (b) Having noted the resolution adopted by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union regarding the appointment of a special committee to study the extension of a system of special facilities to agricultural products other than cereals;

" Considering that such extension would raise difficult questions of principle, in particular as regards the relations between such a system and the most-favoured-nation clause :

" Deems it desirable that the findings of the special committee referred to above should be examined by the Economic Committee before being submitted to the Commission of Enquiry for European Union."

" 3. . The Assembly,

" Considering that among the means likely to contribute to better organisation of production, the World Economic Conference, and more recently the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts, have expressed the opinion that, under certain conditions and guarantees, the development of international economic agreements may exercise a beneficial influence on the organisation of production and the regulation of trade :

" Draws the attention of the Governments to the recommendations of the economic experts in this connection.

" It requests, in particular, the Governments and the League of Nations to devote their attention to studying the means of ensuring that international economic agreements should be organised and operated in the general interest and with due regard to all interests concerned in accordance with the recommendations of the economic experts and the relevant chapter in the report of the World Economic Conference.

" It draws special attention to the necessity of measures to ensure as wide publicity as possible for these agreements, making it possible to follow their activities so as to safeguard all legitimate interests, particularly those of consumers, whether countries or persons.

" It further requests the Economic Committee of the League of Nations to resume and push forward its consultations concerning the most important branches of production."

" 4. The Assembly,

" Seeing that, among the measures of international solidarity calculated to mitigate the effects of the economic depression and to assist the resumption of activity which would benefit the workers of all countries, consideration should be given to the execution of important public works jointly undertaken by public or private groups on European or extra-European territory;

" Seeing, further, that the problem has already been approached by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union and has been laid before the competent organs of the League of Nations;

" In order to expedite the examination of these programmes, to co-ordinate them on an international scale, to hasten their putting into effect and to follow their execution :

" Invites the Council of the League of Nations to instruct the Committee of Enquiry set up by the Communications and Transit Organisation, to which should be added representatives of the International Labour Office and possibly of the economic and financial organs of the League, to undertake these various tasks.

" This Committee will examine the concrete proposals of the various Governments, particularly from the point of view of the utility and productivity of the works proposed.

" It will report to the Council of the League of Nations. The Commission of Enquiry for European Union will be called on to give its opinion on the proposals relating to Europe."

" 5. The Assembly notes with satisfaction that the draft unified Customs nomenclature prepared, after an urgent request from the Assembly, by the Sub-Committee of Experts appointed for the purpose has now been completed.

" It considers that the adoption of an agreement to utilise a uniform Customs nomenclature would facilitate the development of international economic relations.

" Considering that the great advantages resulting from the adoption of such a common instrument will generally compensate for the difficulties of adjustment which its adoption may entail, it agrees with the procedure suggested by the Economic Committee and the Sub-Committee of Experts and approved by the Council.

" It therefore earnestly appeals to all Members and to the States non-Members of the League of Nations to which the draft unified Customs nomenclature will shortly be submitted to examine the draft without delay, so that they may be in a position to forward their replies to the Secretariat as soon as possible."

" 6. The Assembly notes with satisfaction the valuable results of the two International Conferences for the Unification of Laws on Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes and Cheques, and strongly urges the Governments of the States concerned to take steps to ensure that the instruments of ratification of these Conventions shall be deposited as soon as possible, and in any case before the expiry of the time-limits provided."

" 7. The Assembly,

" Considering that it would be desirable to associate with the work of the League of Nations institutions (National Economic Councils) representing the most important economic and social elements in certain States;

" Considering that institutions of this nature already exist—although with different methods and with different powers—in a number of countries, especially in Europe;

" Convinced of the desirability of utilising these institutions as much as possible in the work of improving international economic relations :

" Requests the Council to seek the most appropriate means of providing for the co-operation of National Economic Councils in the work of the League of Nations."

The Committee decided to appoint M. ROLLIN (France) as its Rapporteur to the Assembly.

TWELFTH MEETING.

Held on Wednesday, September 23rd, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman: M. JANSON (Belgium)

(replaced during part of the meeting by M. Bech (Luxemburg).

32. Work of the Financial Organisation : General Discussion (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN read the following draft resolution, submitted by the German delegation in place of its previous draft resolution on M. Francqui's proposal : [1]

" The Assembly,

" In view of the fact that the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts has given favourable consideration to M. Francqui's proposal to establish an institution for long and medium-term credits;

" Decides to request the Council of the League of Nations to instruct the competent organs of the League to examine as soon as possible, with the assistance of M. Francqui, the proposal submitted by the latter to the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts."

M. KAWASHIMA (Japan) paid a tribute to the work of the Financial Committee in connection with the Statutes of the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company.

The reports of the Gold Delegation were of the utmost value. He hoped the Financial Committee was studying the question of the stabilisation of silver; and he thought there should at least be some reference to it in the report.

The Japanese delegation proposed that the following passage should be inserted at the end of the report :

" The attention of the Second Committee has been called to the insufficiency of the materials at the disposal of the organisations of the League with regard to the world economic depression in extra-European countries, and considers that the means of remedying such insufficiency might well be studied by the organisations of the League concerned."

M. FLANDIN (France) said there were few who a year previously would have anticipated that the economic crisis was about to be followed by a financial crisis such as had suddenly arisen in a country which for its wealth and credit ranked among the most powerful in the world.

They were convinced that it would surmount its difficulties, that there was no need to indulge in pessimism, no ground for the belief that the process of monetary reconstruction was compromised, or that the gold currencies were about to collapse, to the accompaniment of default, disorder and the surrender of the world to those who wished to build by force a new order on the ruins of the old. Clear-sightedness and the will to live—that was all that was required. Within the framework of the League, where the search for truth did not assume the aspect of political polemics, an endeavour must be made to evolve a collective will.

Mankind paid for its mistakes. The war and the criminal destruction of accumulated capital which it involved were one mistake. The appetite for enjoyment, feeding on falsehoods political, economic and financial, was another. Swollen budgets, over-production, over-consumption and inflated credit—those were the falsehoods to which he referred. Governments and private enterprise had vied with one another in doubling, trebling, quadrupling their budgets. There was no adjustment of requirements to realities. Where the necessary resources were lacking, the future was mortgaged. There was no shortage of gold, no deficiency in the distribution of credit. From the richest Government down to the poorest consumer, all who wanted it had been glutted with credit.

There had even been developed a quasi-mystical philosophy of the social and moral sanctity of consumption which in one form or another was responsible for appalling havoc. In the attempt to maintain an artificial wellbeing, one country had submitted to the ravages of unemployment, another had ruined itself by rationalisation; one had endeavoured to valorise its stocks of commodities and thereby arrested the movement of capital, another had endeavoured to valorise its production and thereby paralysed the circulation of commodities, while a third in defence of the interests of labour had brought to a standstill the movement of men.

Never had there been so much talk, by Governments and peoples, of international solidarity; never had there been so much action on purely national lines. There was talk of security and disarmament; but security meant one's own security, and disarmament meant the disarmament of one's neighbour. They were all to blame; and none of them was in a position to thank God that he was not as other men are.

There were clever theorists who said : " Cancel all inter-Governmental debts. They are the real cause of the economic and financial crisis, and in particular the political debts, where the debtor receives no counterpart for his payments."

But when the question of the debtor State's capacity to pay arose, it was of no importance to know whether the cause of the debt was or was not a productive transaction. These proposals to change existing international financial settlements aimed at moral and political, rather than financial, results. Many of the countries whose monetary stability was now threatened carried no burden of financial debt of political origin; and the principal debtor country itself had enjoyed for a number of years undisputed monetary security at a time when its political debts to other countries were very much larger than they were to-day.

The counterpart to the reparation debt was represented by the service of the internal loans of the creditor countries. Relief to the budget of one country merely meant additional burdens on the budget of another. The transfer problem—if there was such a problem—would never have arisen if the creditor countries had, directly or indirectly, agreed to balance the debtor's payments by the commercial equilibrium or by the balance of accounts.

As regards credits, the Basle experts' report showed that the crisis in Germany was due to the withdrawals of short-term credits. Ingenious—not to say ingenuous—arguments were put forward on the theory of credit. But this much was certain, that when a country which for a number of years had been in receipt of an influx of foreign long-term capital proceeded, on the cessation of that influx, to supply its needs by borrowing on short term from foreign banks, it was committing an abuse of credit; and, once the abuse became manifest, there was no sort of tacit agreement which could prevent the short-term credits from being called in on maturity.

When international capital sought refuge in particular countries, it was useless to ask the countries of refuge to offset the inflow of foreign capital by investing their own capital abroad. Why should the nationals of the countries of refuge take their money out of their own national securities and put it into foreign investments which the foreigners were themselves trying to get rid of? How were the Governments of these countries of refuge—however much they might dislike the accumulation of gold and foreign exchange—to induce their nationals to invest their capital abroad? The moment they attempted to do so, they were met with a demand for a Government guarantee. It was easy to preach "international financial co-operation": but international financial co-operation presupposed one of two things—either confidence on the part of foreign capitalists or the guarantee, overt or covert, of a foreign Government.

The first step to be taken was to ensure the continuance of existing short-term credits. Once this was assured, there must be vigorous disciplinary action by the Governments to control spending departments and public bodies, and by the banks of issue to control the supply of private credit.

Such disciplinary action was the essential prerequisite of any monetary consolidation. But was it also sufficient to provoke the return of confidence, the repatriation of expatriated capital, and the influx of new capital in the form of loans to consolidate the existing short-term credits? It might be so in certain cases: but he confessed he thought they must also take into account the possibility of capitalists not being prepared to give their confidence without some further action in the direction of international financial consolidation.

To propose that such further action should be accompanied by the repudiation of the public or private commitments of the debtor to his creditors was to leave out of account the psychological factor on which credit depended.

International solidarity could only mean the offer of an international guarantee for a loan in consolidation of existing foreign credits, such guarantee to be made available as and when the recipient country's own efforts at financial recovery proved adequate. But any such international guarantee was inconceivable and impracticable except on the assumption of the continuance, over a considerable period, of a peaceable spirit and the provision of real and effective safeguards against the use by the recipient of the credits accorded to relax the internal financial disciplinary measures or to embark on adventurous foreign lending.

Another panacea which was sometimes advocated was the redistribution of the world's gold. It was a fact that the United States and France at present held respectively about 40 and 20 per cent of the world's stock of gold. He did not propose to reply to the childish criticisms which had been made in this connection. To the suggestion that there was some direct relation between the accumulation of gold by the Banque de France and the German reparation payments it was sufficient to reply that the accumulation of gold by the Banque de France had proceeded much more rapidly under the Young Plan than under the Dawes Plan, and especially since the previous July 1st, when the Young Plan payments were suspended.

But, it was argued, though the accumulation of gold in the United States and France might have been purely automatic and not responsible for the disturbance of the balance of payments between the debtor and creditor countries, it was nevertheless true that, if the gold standard had been allowed to operate properly, it should not merely have registered the disturbance of the balance of payments but should have corrected it.

What should have been done? The reply was—one of two things, or rather both together.

In the first place, the issue banks with stocks of gold exceeding their legal cover requirements should have proceeded—if necessary amending their statutes for the purpose—to increase their note-issue up to the amount permissible with the existing cover by buying up Government stocks on the national market. The result would have been a rise in the internal price-level, an increase of imports and decrease of exports, and finally an efflux of gold.

But then what of the risks, the constant risks, to the national economy of systematically increasing the adverse trade balance in order to offset the effect of a temporary excessive influx of capital due to psychological factors overriding all the normal elements of economic equilibrium?

In the second place, it was said, the issue banks with a surplus of cover should have given credit to the issue banks whose cover was threatened.

It was, of course, a perfectly natural proceeding for issue banks with a surplus of gold to come to the help of others suffering from a temporary shortage of the metal: and the Banque de France had given accommodation both to the Reichsbank and to the Bank of England in amounts equal to that made available by the Federal Reserve Bank, whose gold reserves were twice as large as those of the Banque de France.

But how was it proposed to regulate such operations in advance by any form of arrangement or agreement? Was the issue bank to be compelled to give credit against its will, and without regard to its estimate of the risks involved or the productivity of the credit, while the recipient was embarking on imprudent policies at home or in relation to other countries without any consideration for his embarrassed position? If so, how would that help to restore the international balance of payments, so long as the crisis of confidence remained?

The essence of the gold standard was its automatic operation. Left to itself, it tended to maintain the balance of international payments and to regulate the distribution of capital, but only for so long as the movements of the latter continued to be governed by economic factors, primarily by the prevailing rates of interest. Once a general crisis of confidence put the economic factors out of operation, the gold standard ceased to perform its regulatory functions. It was no use then to tinker with the machinery of the system. The atmosphere of a room could not be raised by artificially raising the level of the thermometer.

At bottom, the financial and the economic problem were one. What was wanted was to let prices settle themselves free of all constraints of whatever kind. Gradually the State was beginning to regulate every branch of human activity, or alternately was submitting to be governed by combinations of interests. They were on the road to universal constraint, and some already saw at the end of the road a single international control centre in which a few thousand statisticians would decide all the various requirements of mankind.

The world's wealth was in process of re-creation; and in that process it was obvious that for some decades to come certain peoples and certain countries would require a constant influx of capital. It was the duty, as it was in the interest, of the rich countries to supply that capital. But there was no obligation in the matter. The rich countries were not bound to lend without any regard to the profits to be earned, then or in the future, on their capital.

It was equally true, no doubt, that the creditor countries could not hope to make their debtors pay while at the same time they restricted their imports and cut down their credits. But, if the creditor countries were asked to organise and guarantee big international financial operations, one thing was essential—there must be peace.

If the aim was to bring back to the world credit for production—he was thinking of the Francqui proposal—they must first liquidate the losses of the credit inflation and the spirit of the inflation itself. The present generation had to bear the burden of war charges and of post-war mistakes. They could not hope to enjoy more than a relative prosperity and well-being.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) stated that, grave though the economic crisis was, it was the financial crisis which called for more immediate action, and it was to this that the League should be asked to give its principal attention.

First, he wished to point out certain factors of the situation in Great Britain. The events of the previous few days did not alter the fact that Great Britain was still what she had been throughout modern history, a principal creditor country. Her ultimate resources were immeasurably greater than her liabilities. The freezing of British short-term credits in Germany and the subsequent loss of confidence had resulted in a large withdrawal of short-term foreign credits in England and large sales of foreign holdings of British securities. British investments in foreign countries, on the other hand, were not so liquid, and had not in fact been realised. They still represented a total of thousands of millions sterling, as compared with the hundreds of millions sterling of foreign short-term credits which were the cause of the trouble.

The upshot was that the pound sterling now stood once more where it was in 1925. The Committee was aware of the steps which had been taken to balance the budget: and he had already pointed out [1] the vast difference there was between the position of a country which had suspended the gold standard with a balanced budget and that of a country compelled, in the absence of other sources of revenue, to finance itself by inflation. Great Britain was not in the position of the latter.

What was the financial crisis at bottom? He suggested that it was essentially due to a gap in the balance of payments as between the creditor and debtor countries, a gap which was for the time being unbridged by credit. Certain countries owed more than was owed to them, and were in danger of not being able to pay in any one of the only possible ways—namely, in goods or services, or in gold, or out of the proceeds of new credits or investments.

It was a natural and normal thing at all periods that some countries lacking capital should require and obtain capital from other countries having a surplus; and the process could go on in the ordinary way to the advantage of all concerned, provided that the money borrowed was used for productive purposes and yielded a larger net return each year than the service of the loan, and that the creditor countries were prepared to lend their surpluses to the other countries in the most appropriate form—which in present circumstances meant long-term credits. But, as he had already pointed out, there were some ambitions which were incompatible. It was not possible to be a great creditor country and a great exporter and at the same time a reluctant importer and a reluctant lender.

Why had the system now broken down? He suggested that the breakdown was due to the cumulative effect of the following four factors:

In the first place, a great part of the debts represented no productive investment yielding an annual return. Part of it was government debt (war domage, war borrowing and the like); part of it was money recklessly borrowed for unproductive expenditure.

In the second place, the fall in world prices (30 per cent or more in the last few years) had increased the real burden of the debt, both for public and for private borrowers. The Dawes Plan had included corrective machinery which made the gold obligation of Germany vary with the wholesale price level. That was a principle which might with advantage have been extended; but, in fact, it had not been retained in Germany, still less extended elsewhere.

Thirdly, the annual flow of investment from the creditor to the debtor countries was abruptly arrested two years ago, when the unprecedented speculative boom suddenly collapsed in the autumn of 1929 and the economic depression began. The investor suddenly swerved from excessive rashness to extreme prudence. He became reluctant to lend abroad at all and refused absolutely to lock up his money in long-term bonds or investments. Borrowing countries with capital needs and immediate obligations to meet were thereupon compelled to follow one of two courses : either they had to accept short-term credits, or they had to surrender gold stocks. Of these two expedients, the one (the short-term credits) was precarious and the other (the surrender of gold) temporary.

The world had at last learnt that to borrow on short term for long-term purposes was a most dangerous operation, since the credit was bound to be lost at the first shock to confidence, just when it was most wanted.

In the fourth place, the gold standard had gone wrong. Instead of fulfilling its orthodox function of correcting economic disequilibria, gold had first reflected and then consolidated those disequilibria. The gold in the world was sufficient to support a much higher level of prices than the present level; but something like one-third of it was in a form which prevented it from having its normal effect upon prices. The extra accumulation of gold stocks in the last few years under conditions which prevented it from serving (as it normally should) as the basis of a volume of credit and currency structure much greater than itself had been greater than all the new gold mined from the earth. The position of the price-level was roughly what it would be if (under otherwise normal conditions) all the gold-mines in the world were suddenly put out of action for a number of years by a natural catastrophe. Moreover, of the 12,000 million dollars, worth of gold in the world, only 2,500 million dollars altogether, or one-fifth, were held by the debtor countries. That distribution was not, of course, the result of malice or even of deliberate policy. It was the expression of the gap in the balance of payments unbridged by credits to which he had referred.

What was the measure of the gap? The Macmillan Committee had estimated it at 2,000 million dollars a year—that is to say, 2,000 million dollars of new lending were required each year from the creditor countries by the debtor countries if the gap was to be bridged. That was not in itself an impossible sum. In 1928, the amount lent by the creditor countries was actually 2,300 million dollars. But, for the reasons stated, the lending by creditor countries had stopped. How, in these circumstances, was the gap to be bridged?

Certainly not to any considerable extent by further movements of gold. The whole of the gold in the debtor countries amounted only, as stated, to some 2,500 million dollars—i.e., the amount required to bridge the gap of a single year—and the great bulk of it was in any case legally assigned as the cover for the national currencies.

What other alternatives were there?

The debtor countries might to some extent, and would no doubt be forced to, increase their exports in relation to their imports. Failing any other resource, no other course was possible for them—except default. That might mean a still further lowering of the standard of life in the debtor countries, a further fall in world prices, and loss to all countries.

Another possibility which might be technically effective, if it were otherwise practicable, was suggested by the interesting action taken during the last few weeks by the Federal Reserve Bank. Within certain limits, the bank had been putting fresh money into the market by buying up securities. If this were done till prices rose—always within the limits imposed by the necessity of safeguarding the gold parity—and if the process were allowed to work itself out in increased imports and reduced exports, the world situation would be relieved, gold would begin to flow outwards, the balance of trade would turn in favour of the debtor countries, and the gap would be reduced. There would be, of course, the danger of the new credit encouraging speculation in shares instead of increasing commodity prices; and safeguards would be required against the development of a speculative boom on the lines of 1929. The great advantage of this method would be that it would not merely relieve the financial crisis, but it would do what nothing else could do—namely, raise the general level of world prices, and so perhaps mark the turning-point of the economic depression. He did not of course fail to appreciate the legal and practical difficulties in the way.

Again, the gap might be reduced, as it had already been reduced for the time being by the Hoover moratorium, by reductions in the reparation and allied debts, which totalled a little over 400 million dollars, or about one-fifth of the total gap.

Whatever was done in this or in other ways to reduce the gap, it was obvious that the greater part of it would still remain to be bridged; and that could only be by means of loans and credits from creditor countries. What was to be done in this direction?

The run on the short-term credits in Germany had happily been arrested for the moment. The banks concerned realised that if they continued their run they would be acting in a way which would ruin any one of them if their own individual depositors behaved similarly. That was not the last time that the question would arise; nor were the credits in Germany the only ones in connection with which it might arise.

In any case, the short-term credits at present frozen in the debter countries would not be sufficient to bridge the gap. They were therefore faced with the imperious necessity of creating the conditions on which new lending, to a large extent on a long-term basis, would be possible. The Basle experts had given a solemn warning to the Governments that new long-term loans would be required, and that the basis for such loans must be a restoration of confidence by the improvement of political relations and by a settlement of governmental debt on a basis within the capacity of the debtor. The improvement of political relations depended on what the Assembly and the countries not represented in the Assembly could do to restore confidence in the system upon which the peace of the world was now based, in the " universal " principle embodied in the Covenant and in the Pact of Paris. As to the settlement of governmental debt, it was not merely the temporary relief provided by the present moratorium that was required, but (as the Basle experts pointed out) a sufficiently substantial lightening of the existing burden to restore confidence as the basis of new investment.

If confidence could not be restored by these methods sufficiently to attract the investing public, he saw only one other expedient; and that was that the governmental resources of the creditor countries should be made available as security for loans to the debtor countries. He confessed that he himself felt so strongly the immense difficulty of restoring the confidence of the investing public with the rapidity for which the situation called, that he thought the possibility of resorting to this measure should be occupying the urgent attention of the Governments concerned.

To sum up the necessities of the situation, what was needed was, first, a new financial lead making it clear at once that the post-moratorium position would be considered at a very early date; secondly, a new political lead making it clear that all the great countries in the world meant to support the collective system erected against war during the last twelve years; and, thirdly, a readiness to use Government resources as a security for external loans, as and when required.

What could the League do to promote these ends? And what could the Second Committee do?

He offered the following suggestions: The Committee might urge the necessity of the new political and financial leads he had indicated. It might state that the Financial Organisation of the League was equipped, and must (if necessary) be further equipped, to bring emergency help to bear as required. The Gold Delegation might be requested to hasten its final report with the practical conclusions at which it had arrived. The Financial Committee might draw up and publish the principles which should govern public borrowing. If all public loan schemes had been as carefully examined by disinterested advisers as the League's schemes were, the gap in the balance of payments would be much smaller than it was, and the task of restoring confidence would be much easier. But it was also essential that the principal financial markets should discipline themselves in such a manner as to prevent the investing public from borrowing for purposes opposed to the public interest. Effective influence was at present centred in a single institution in London, in little more than half a dozen houses in America and in a few hands in France. He believed they could do something, while the investing public was still reluctant, to make it very difficult for any individual house in future to tempt the investing public to lend its money to public authorities for improper or unproductive purposes. But if nothing was done until the markets were again in a mood of reckless optimism, no effective action would then be possible. This and much else of the League's financial work would, he was sure, be aided by increasing collaboration with the Bank for International Settlements, which the Credits Committee recommended. The work of research, classification and analysis of financial and economic facts which had been done during the past ten years by Mr. Loveday would be indispensable at any future conference, and for the practical control of monetary policy by whatever means.

After all, the present economic crisis was not due to scarcity. It had come in a time of plenty. Famines had made men suffer in the past, and might do so again, if the population of the world increased. But nature had never been so prodigal as now, nor man's skill so highly developed. Where nature was prodigal and man skilful and yet there was impoverishment, the inference was that the system which adjusted supply to demand, the machinery connecting the producer with the consumer, was not operating as it should. That, at any rate, was a problem which should be capable of human solution; and he believed that, if they could solve it, the world would make such a leap forward in prosperity as had never been seen before.

(The Chairman and the Vice-Chairman being obliged to withdraw from the meeting, M. BECH was elected to the Chair.)

M. VAN LANGENHOVE (Belgium) referred to the German delegation's suggestion with regard to the Francqui proposal. He said the discussions of the previous week had not been very comforting. No constructive remedies for the economic crisis had been proposed; but the Francqui proposal was a definite contribution towards the solution of the financial crisis. He urged the Committee to recommend it to the Assembly. The scheme had not been fully worked out in detail and would require further technical study in co-operation with the Bank for International Settlements. But it would constitute an effective supplement to the completed scheme for the Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company.

M. BORBERG (Denmark) drew attention to the effective part which public works programmes had played in Denmark in combating unemployment and arresting the fall of prices. He hoped the necessary capital for public works in other countries would be available from the countries with capital surpluses.

M. FLANDIN (France) said that Sir Arthur Salter's theoretical proposals for filling the gap in the international balance of payments would be unassailable if the world were governed by reason and the distribution of gold were perfect, and there were no psychological factors to take into account. But once the psychological factor—i.e., the factor of confidence or distrust—came into play, the whole of Sir Arthur's machinery would be upset.

Sir Arthur might feel he had answered that criticism by his suggestions of the need for a financial and political lead, coupled with the work of the Financial Organisation and the control by private organisations of the productive character of all credits. He himself was more sceptical. He did not believe that either the harmonising of the Covenant and the Pact of Paris or the visa of the Financial Committee would suffice to cope with the psychological factors involved. He thought this part of Sir Arthur Salter's speech afforded no basis for resolutions by the Assembly.

He disagreed with Sir Arthur Salter entirely, both in regard to reparations and in regard to the distribution of gold; and he did not believe it would ever be possible for the Assembly to evolve a common policy on those subjects.

Apart from any other considerations, the fact that the revision of intergovernmental debts could not be settled without America made it extremely dangerous for the Assembly even to approach these subjects without the co-operation of that country.

He further disagreed with Sir Arthur Salter in regard to the quantitative theory of money and in regard to his qualified approval of inflation as a means of raising world prices. On these subjects also, there was no possibility of general agreement.

On one point, however, he was prepared to agree with Sir Arthur Salter, and he thought it might suitably be made the basis of a resolution. He cordially agreed with the proposal to develop the Financial Organisation and to provide it with such further resources as it might require for its valuable work.

THIRTEENTH MEETING

Held on Thursday, September 24th, 1931, at 4.30 p.m.

Chairman : M. JANSON (Belgium).

33. Communication from the Fourth Committee in Reply to the Second Committee's Application for Supplementary Credits.

The CHAIRMAN read a letter from the Fourth Committee (Annex 14) in reply to the Second Committee's letters applying for supplementary credits (Annexes 9 and 10).

The Chairman was glad to note that the credit of 250,000 francs had been granted. He regretted that the Supervisory Commission had not seen its way to grant the credit of 50,000 francs, but he considered that the Second Committee should not press the matter.

34. Work of the Financial Organisation : General Discussion (continuation).

M. BRAADLAND (Norway) agreed with Sir Arthur Salter's remarks on international payments. The following additional figures threw light on the present situation. The creditor countries had a favourable balance of payments to the amount of a little under 3 milliards of dollars a year, of which only a quarter (or three-quarters of a milliard) was paid in goods, the balance (2 milliard dollars) being covered by new investments which were the basis of the activity of the exporting industries of the creditor countries. The cessation of investment by the creditor countries was giving rise to great difficulties. The effect on the price-level was shown by comparison of the figure 2 milliard dollars with the annual production of gold, which was 400 million dollars, 60 per cent of that amount being used for money purposes.

He agreed with what Sir Arthur had said in regard to the possibility of maintaining a higher price-level on the basis of the world's stocks of gold. The world's holding of gold amounted in 1890 to 121 pence per person, in 1914 to 226 pence, and in 1929 to 282 pence—representing an increase of 130 per cent between 1890 and 1929.

He hoped that in its final report the Gold Delegation would show how and by what means fluctuations in the production of gold might influence the price-level. He was afraid some members of the Gold Delegation had been inclined up to the present to approach this question in too mechanical and, so to say, arithmetical a spirit.

35. Work of the Financial Organisation : Draft Report submitted by M. Bernis (Spain) (Annex 15): Adoption of Report.

PART I.—GENERAL.

Sir Cooverjee COYAJEE (India) proposed to point out in Part I of the report that financial and economic authorities emphasised the capital importance of a policy of regular and continuous investment by countries in which the world's resources are accumulated. He quoted Professor Sprague on the serious consequences of any interruption of the policy of foreign lending followed in recent years by the United States. He also quoted Professor Ohlin on similar questions.

Agreed.

M. FLANDIN (France) proposed the omission of the word "temporary" in regard to the obligations which the League might be called upon to assume.

He also thought it was undesirable to affirm too definitely the prospect of satisfactory results from programmes of public works in the creditor countries. The results might be unsatisfactory, if they involved too heavy a burden on the budgets of the States in question.

In view of the difficulties which various States were finding in balancing their budgets, was it wise for the League to recommend action calculated to increase budget deficits? Budgetary equilibrium was the first condition for the restoration of the financial and monetary situation of the world. Did the Committee think it desirable that the Assembly, on which the United States was not represented, should give advice to the latter or express approval of its policy? That would surprise many readers of the League of Nations publications.

He further thought it dangerous to recommend measures for encouraging production at a time when the whole world was unanimous in treating over-production as one of the reasons for the present difficulties. He therefore proposed the omission of the entire passage in the report containing a recommendation to that effect.

He did not think it could be said that the League ought to lend its aid, amongst other things, to the elaboration of new schemes of financial reform, because it was undesirable that Governments should be in a position to think that schemes of financial reform elaborated by the League might be imposed on them. He proposed a more flexible wording for the last sentence of Part I, such as would spare national susceptibilities.

The reference to "special . . . meetings" in the same sentence led him to repeat what he had said on the previous day on behalf of the French Government—namely, that the latter did not consider it desirable to summon financial conferences for the study of certain general problems.

M. BERNIS (Spain), Rapporteur, agreed to omit the word "temporary", but asked the Committee to leave the passage with regard to the stimulus to be given by Governments to individual initiative and with regard to the policy of the United States Government.

M. FLANDIN (France) pointed out that, in his opinion, it was not desirable for the League to give advice to a country which was not a member of the League. He also doubted, from the financial and technical point of view, whether it was prudent to recommend measures likely to interfere with budgetary equilibrium. That amounted to an intervention in the internal policy of the countries concerned. The suggestion made was highly disputable, and was not equally applicable to all countries. If the text was maintained, he proposed to maintain his reservations and to ask for their insertion in the Minutes.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) was also in favour of omitting the passage, and desired, on behalf of the Netherlands delegation, to make the same reservations as M. Flandin.

M. Flandin's suggestions were accepted by the Rapporteur and were approved.

M. FLANDIN (France) reminded the Committee of what he had said in connection with the summoning of special meetings. The French Government considered it unprofitable to contemplate, in present circumstances, the summoning of conferences to discuss certain problems which had been raised in the Committee's discussions, such as the question of gold and the revision of intergovernmental debts. Though not objecting to the text before them, he wished to repeat the reservations he had already made on behalf of the French Government, and he desired that they should be inserted in the Minutes.

The last sentence of Part I was adopted with the modification proposed by M. Flandin.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) proposed that the last sentence of the ninth paragraph should read as follows :

"It would be of the greatest advantage if the League on the one hand and, by their influence, the most responsible authorities in the financial markets on the other, could discourage loans to public authorities or to others for unproductive or improper purposes."

Agreed.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) proposed the omission of the second part of the second sentence of the last paragraph.

Agreed.

M. ROMAN (Poland) did not wish the impression to be given that the Internationa Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company was intended to serve the interests of countries severely hit by the economic crisis. He accordingly accepted the following text proposed by M. Flandin :

"The scheme which the Financial Committee elaborated with the experts which it called upon to assist it for the establishment of an International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company affords another example of a method by which such Government assistancel may be afforded."

Agreed.

Part I was adopted as a whole.

PART II.—WORK OF THE PAST YEAR.

M. KAWASHIMA (Japan) asked, in connection with the section, "Economic Intelligence Service", that the Committee should draw attention to the problem of the depreciation of silver and to the desirability of applying the League's economic studies to extra-European countries, as the European countries already benefited sufficiently from those carried out under the auspices of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. The Washington Conference had recommended a conference for stabilising the price of silver. He accordingly proposed the insertion in the report of a passage calling attention to the seriousness in the fall in the price of silver and its effect on the economic depression in all Asiatic countries and emphasising the desirability of information on the question. As regards his second proposal, he did not think it need be specially mentioned in the report and would be satisfied if his observations were included in the Minutes.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) thought it would be interesting to point out that a number of the leading economists of Tokio had formed, on their own initiative, a small committee to ensure adequate use being made of information collected by the League relating more particularly to Japan and the Far East, and further to assist the League in obtaining useful information on questions specially relating to that part of the world.

M. KAWASHIMA (Japan) took the opportunity to convey to Sir Arthur Salter the thanks of the Japanese Government for his visit to Japan as the representative of the League. He hoped the League would continue to devote attention to the economic situation in the Asiatic countries.

Part II of the report was adopted as a whole.

36. Adoption of the Draft Resolution : Appointment of the Rapporteur to the Assembly.

The draft resolution was adopted in the following form :

"The Assembly,

"(1) At this grave moment of financial and economic anxiety, urges on all Governments to do everything that lies in their power to promote international understanding and make possible the revival on a normal basis of national and international investment.

"(2) It welcomes the decision of the Council laying down the conditions on which the Financial Committee should be prepared to consider applications from States which are desirous to obtain the assistance of the League, and requests the Council to follow closely the evolution of events and to take all measures necessary to assure that, at any moment, the decisions demanded by the situation may be taken without delay, and that the League of Nations may be in a position to render such service as may be demanded of it; and, in particular, to provide that the Financial Organisation of the League of Nations obtains the funds and the technical assistance necessary to permit it to afford to all States Members prompt and effective assistance whenever such assistance be sought, whether by means of delegations or advice or by any other means.

"(3) In view of the fact that the Commission of Enquiry for European Union and its Sub-Committee of Economic Experts have given favourable consideration to M. Francqui's proposal to establish an institution for long- and medium-term credits, it requests the Council of the League of Nations to instruct the competent organs of the League to examine, as soon as possible, with the assistance especially of M. Francqui, the proposal submitted by the latter to the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts, and, in the event of any practical scheme being recommended under the auspices of the League, to ensure that it will be open for all countries to participate on an equal footing.

"(4) It expresses its appreciation of the valuable work carried out during the past year by the Financial Committee and its special Delegations on Gold and Agricultural Credits and by the Fiscal Committee and by the Financial Organisation as a whole, and notes with special satisfaction the Convention for setting up an International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company, the recent response to the request submitted by the Austrian and the Hungarian Governments for enquiries into their financial situation, the second interim report of the Gold Delegation and the study which has been published on the course and phases of the economic depression.

"It urges all Governments of signatory States to accelerate their ratification of the Convention of the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company, and hopes that those others who, under the terms of the Convention, are enabled to deposit their signatures before September 30th will do so.

"(5) It approves the proposal that, in order to co-ordinate the work now being conducted on the problem of the recurrence of periods of economic depression, the League should convene meetings of experts and representatives of those economic councils, research institutes and other organisations that are actively engaged on this question, and should appoint a qualified economist and adequate staff for this purpose, and decides that this work shall be begun either before or in the year 1933."

In the course of the discussion M. FLANDIN (France) said that the French delegation was not opposed to international consultations of the kind provided for in the draft resolution taking place inside the League, in the event of their proving to be desirable. He urged, however, that, if meetings of this kind were called upon to discuss certain problems, the presence of certain parties which were not members of the League was indispensable. For this reason he reserved the right of all Governments to discuss as they pleased such questions as interested them by direct negotiation. As regards the international consultations which, under the terms of the last paragraph of No. 2 of the original text, were to be convened by the Financial Committee, the French delegation would be obliged to make a formal reservation on the subject and to state at once that there was no certainty of the French Government's agreeing to be represented on conferences of this kind.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) pointed out that, when the passage of the report relating to these meetings was adopted, it had been understood that the reservation made by M. Flandin did not preclude the possibility of convening international meetings to consider the questions referred to by the French delegate. This possibility would be implied by the words "or by any other means".

M. FLANDIN (France) accepted the British delegate's interpretation.

Sir Arthur SALTER (British Empire) said that the Fourth Committee's decision regarding the credit for the study of the periodicity of economic depressions was not necessarily final, and that the Second Committee had pronounced unanimously in favour of the necessity of undertaking this work within the shortest possible period, and had recognised that it would be disastrous to abandon the idea of the work for a saving of 50,000 francs, when the world had still so much to learn from the study of these economic fluctuations and depressions. He therefore asked whether the Chairman could not take further steps to obtain, if not the whole of the credit requested, at any rate a sufficient sum to enable the work to be begun in 1932.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Committee had decided not to press the point, and to confine itself to expressing satisfaction at the acceptance of its first application for credits. He was prepared, however, to do what Sir Arthur Salter suggested.[1]

M. BERNIS (Spain) was appointed Rapporteur to the Assembly on behalf of the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN declared that the work of the Second Committee was concluded.

ANNEX 1.

WORK OF THE COMMUNICATIONS AND TRANSIT ORGANISATION.

REPORT SUBMITTED TO THE SECOND COMMITTEE BY M. COSTA DU RELS (BOLIVIA).

A feature of the work of the Communications and Transit Organisation since the last Assembly has been the success of three international conferences—one for the unification of buoyage and the lighting of coasts, to which the Governments of the maritime countries were invited, and two others on the unification of river law and on road traffic, to which the Governments of the European countries were invited.

The Conference for the Unification of Buoyage and the Lighting of Coasts met at Lisbon from October 6th to 23rd, 1930, on the invitation of the Portuguese Government. It aroused keen interest among specialists. Though the Conference did not completely finish its work, it nevertheless effected very important progress. It adopted an Agreement concerning Maritime Signals, an Agreement concerning Manned Lightships not on their Stations, and a number of recommendations on lighthouse characteristics and radio-beacons. A great many Governments signed these agreements. The problem of the unification of buoyage characteristics raised serious difficulties, and the Conference could not draw up a convention. Nevertheless, the preparatory work required for a convention on this subject was carried so far at the Conference that an agreement, which would be as universal as possible, can almost certainly be reached on this matter when the Conference, which has already expressed the desire, is called upon to resume its work at an early date.

The Conference on the Unification of River Law met at Geneva from November 17th to December 9th, 1930. It adopted, in particular, a Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules concerning Collisions in Inland Navigation; a Convention on the Registration of Inland-Navigation Vessels, Rights in rem over Such Vessels and other Cognate Questions; and a Convention on the Administrative Measures to Attest Nationality of Vessels employed in Inland Navigation. The first two Conventions, in particular, were signed by the representatives of the majority of the Governments concerned. The success of this Conference, which dealt with particularly difficult problems requiring methodical and careful preparatory work—which has been carried out by the Transit Organisation's Committee for the Unification of River Law during a number of years—will not only make it possible to prevent certain conflicts of law detrimental to the exercise of maritime navigation, but will also be of assistance to the owners of inland-navigation vessels in obtaining the mortgages which they require.

The European Conference on Road Traffic, which met in March 1931, adopted an International Convention on the Unification of Road Signalling, which is of particular importance for motor tourist traffic and the safety of transport by road; a Convention on the Taxation of Foreign Motor Vehicles, intended to do away with certain formalities and charges to which international motor tourist traffic is at present liable; and, finally, an agreement between the Customs authorities in order to facilitate the procedure in the case of undischarged or lost triptychs. The signatures already given to these various Conventions make it clear that the Conference has obtained complete success on all those points. The Conference also had before it a draft Convention on International Commercial Motor Transport. Owing to the great and steady growth of commercial motor traffic during the past few years, a great many delegations considered themselves unable to form a correct idea of the legal consequences of a convention on this subject, and the Conference decided that it would be better to hold over for a later Conference such solutions as it might be desirable to adopt internationally, after the further necessary enquiries into the legislation of the various countries had been completed.

It would appear to be unnecessary in the present report to examine the work carried out by the Advisory and Technical Committee for Communications and Transit and its organs with regard to the preparation for the fourth General Conference on Communications and Transit, which is to meet on October 12th next. This Conference, which meets, according to the Statutes, every four years, will undertake a general examination of the work of the Transit Organisation. Further, in accordance with the request of a previous Assembly, it will examine the expediency, from an economic and social standpoint, of fixing movable feasts and reforming the calendar. Its results will be brought before the next Assembly, which will be in a better position to examine them.

On the other hand, the special attention of the Assembly should be drawn to the services which the Organisation for Communications and Transit is beginning to render in a sphere which in some respects is new—namely, that of international co-operation for the study and preparation of the great problems of public works. In the past, the Communications and Transit Committee, at the request of the Polish Government, granted the assistance of experts, who submitted a report to the Polish Government on certain questions which had arisen in Poland regarding internal navigation and the draining of marshes.

The National Government of China, following the visit to China of the Director of the Communications and Transit Section of the Secretariat, requested the help of the Transit Organisation in obtaining the services of experts finally to establish a programme for the public works contemplated by the Chinese Government. The programme includes work in the river basin of the Hwai and the river system of Northern China and a scheme for the development of the port of Shanghai. The assistance of the Transit Organisation had also been requested in the organisation and development of a centre for the technical study of public works. The centre is intended to facilitate the technical training of civil engineers, and to assist in the organisation and direction of studies, more especially for the construction of roads and waterworks. It will form the nucleus of an international service of civil engineers. Further, in response to the request addressed by the Government of China to the Council of the League of Nations that the technical organisations of the League may be continuously available for advice to the National Economic Council, which the Chinese Government has set up with a view to a general scheme of reconstruction, the Communications and Transit Organisation may be called upon to assist in establishing a scheme of public works and national technical equipment in China.

The Advisory and Technical Committee, on behalf of the Organisation for Communications and Transit, has agreed to undertake these various duties and has assured the National Government of China that it will spare no effort to justify the confidence placed in it by the Chinese Government and to assist the National Government of China to carry out its work of economic reconstruction in the sphere of communications and public works. A Committee has been appointed to study methods of training civil engineers, and has been asked to examine questions relating to the organisation of the technical centre to be created for this purpose. Further, a Committee of Enquiry, appointed to deal with general questions relating to public works, has been invited to examine any questions raised in the course of the collaboration between the Communications and Transit Organisation and the National Economic Council of China concerning the establishment of a scheme of public works and national technical equipment. All the necessary steps have, moreover, been taken by the Advisory and Technical Committee to facilitate the appointment and despatch of experts required to work on the spot and to ensure, by means of technically qualified officers, seconded for short service in China, the necessary contact between the Transit Organisation and the technical bodies of the Chinese Government, particularly the technical centre entrusted with the study of public works.

Quite recently, the Commission of Enquiry for European Union requested the Council to send to the Public Works Committee of the Communications and Transit Organisation, for its examination, any requests which might be received from various European Governments for the examination of programmes of publics works of interest to those States with a view to promoting international co-operation in the execution of works of proved economic and social interest.

The Assembly will doubtless note with satisfaction the work which the Communications and Transit Organisation continues to accomplish, and will be especially gratified that the Organisation, which at first was obliged to attach special importance to questions of principle relating to the legal settlement of international difficulties in respect of communications, is at present, in view of the economic problems which occupy a predominant position in the minds of all nations, endeavouring more and more to co-operate in the work of economic reconstruction and to carry out the essential task of placing an impartial service for the study of the great economic and technical questions of communications and public works at the disposal of all nations.

I propose to the Second Committee to submit the following resolution to the Assembly for adoption :

> " The Assembly,
> " Takes note of the work undertaken by the Organisation for Communications and Transit since the last Assembly, and, in particular, of the success achieved by the Conference for the Unification of Buoyage and Lighting of Coasts, the Conference for the Unification of River Law and the Conference on Road Traffic;
> " Expresses its confidence that the Organisation will do its utmost to assure the entire success of the co-operation established with the National Government of China for the study of questions of public works in which its assistance has been requested, and will also take all suitable steps to comply with requests for advice in respect of public works which it may receive from the various Governments."

WORK OF THE COMMUNICATIONS AND TRANSIT ORGANISATION.

AMENDMENTS TO THE DRAFT REPORT SUBMITTED TO THE SECOND COMMITTEE BY M. COSTA DU RELS (BOLIVIA).

" Nevertheless, the preparatory work required for a Convention on this subject was carried sufficiently far at the Conference for there to be every prospect of reaching an agreement which would be as universal as possible when the Conference, in accordance with the desire it expressed, is called upon to resume its work. The Assembly naturally expects that the Communications and Transit Organisation will not propose the summoning of a second Conference until it has taken every care to ascertain that such a Conference would be likely to meet with complete success."

" Likewise, in regard to river navigation, the Transit Organisation, in collaboration with the International Labour Organisation, has been able to undertake the study of questions of social legislation concerning inland navigation, particularly of questions of conditions of employment of personnel in inland navigation. It is to be hoped that the studies the experts are now engaged on will enable concrete proposals to be drawn up on this subject."

" Nor does it appear necessary to examine in detail the various resolutions adopted by the Committee for Communications and Transit at its last session. It may, however, be pointed out that the Advisory and Technical Committee has taken steps to place and keep on its agenda the question of the transport of agricultural products, to which its attention was drawn by the Conference for Concerted Economic Action. Although for the study of this question to be pursued further we must wait until such time as, in the words of the resolution adopted by the Committee for Communications and Transit, the policy of co-operation between States is sufficiently fixed, it is nevertheless desirable that the Communications and Transit Organisation, with the help of the International Institute of Agriculture, should assemble more precise particulars, which would enable it to select those problems which might be approached with advantage, as well as those categories of agricultural products which appear most likely to benefit from the application of suitable measures.

ANNEX 3.

WORK OF THE HEALTH ORGANISATION.

REPORT SUBMITTED TO THE SECOND COMMITTEE BY M. ZDENEK FIERLINGER (CZECHOSLOVAKIA).

The reports submitted to the present Assembly on the work of the Health Organisation of the League of Nations—namely, the annual report of the Health Organisation for 1930 (document A.7.1931.III), the report of the Secretariat on the work of the League of Nations since the last Assembly (documents A.6 and A.6*(a)*.1931) and the report of the Singapore Bureau—are so complete that, with your permission, I shall confine myself to a brief review of those of its activities which are particularly significant from the point of view of the interesting methods of international co-operation developed by this Organisation. As you will remember, these methods were eloquently described by the Rapporteur to the last Assembly, the honourable delegate of the British Empire. She pointed out that the solution of the questions dealt with by the Health Organisation involved three stages—firstly, study of the question and collection of information; secondly, on the basis of this information pronouncement of a general opinion; and, lastly, the action stage when each Government was called upon to take the necessary measures.

I. Since last year's Assembly, the Health Organisation has developed one of its most important tasks—that of giving its assistance to Governments asking for an opinion on the methods to be employed to solve general or special administrative and medical problems in the sphere of public health. You will excuse me if in this connection I allow myself the pleasure of mentioning, in the first place, the liaison which has been established with the Ministry of Public Health and Physical Education in my country with a view to a study of the health conditions of certain districts. These investigations will, I hope, lead to recommendations which will help to make it possible to draw up a complete public health programme for Czechoslovakia. As an important stage in the putting into force of the plan of health reorganisation adopted by the Greek Government as a result of the request for assistance which this Government had previously addressed to the League of Nations, the School of Hygiene—an integral part of the Athens Health Centre—was opened in March 1931. As regards the other parts of the programme, very satisfactory progress is being made.

In Bulgaria the campaign against various diseases conducted in certain districts of this country in co-operation with the Health Organisation has already begun to bear fruit, thanks to the creation of appropriate establishments and to the efforts made in the sphere of medical assistance and health protection.

At the request of the Roumanian Government, the Health Organisation has assisted in setting up an enquiry into the causes and prevention of infant mortality and still-births on the lines of those already carried out with such excellent results, also under the auspices of the Health Organisation, in various countries of Europe and South America. The results of the enquiry at present in progress will be put into practical application in Roumania.

An expert was appointed by the Health Organisation to take part in the work of the mission sent to Liberia by the Committee of the Council in order to study the problems raised by the request for assistance submitted to the League of Nations by the Government of that country.

As a result of the report of the representatives of the Health Organisation who were sent to Bolivia at the request of that country's Government, the Director-General of Public Health has laid before the Health Committee a programme for the reorganisation of the Bolivian Health Services, and has asked the Health Organisation to co-operate in its application. The Health Committee has decided to lend its assistance to the Bolivian Government, both with a view to the training of a certain number of public health specialists and to co-operating in studies in certain tropical and sub-tropical regions, and giving the Bolivian Government an opinion on the proposed plan of reorganisation. An expert of the Health Organisation will shortly leave for Bolivia.

The report on the enquiries relating to infant mortality undertaken at these countries' requests in the Argentine Republic, Brazil, Chile and Uruguay, which were discussed at the Conference held at Lima in July 1930, has been communicated to the health administrations of the Latin-American countries, most of which had, indeed, been represented at this Conference. The results of the enquiry, which correspond to those obtained by similar enquiries undertaken in Europe, give very valuable indications to the health administrations as to the methods of combating the perils which threaten early infancy.

The report of the Montevideo Conference held in September 1930, thanks to the generosity of the Uruguayan Government and with the assistance of the Health Organisation, also contains particularly instructive information. This information relates to the value of the different methods employed for the serological detection of syphilis, and will be useful, not only to the South American authors of these methods who took part in the practical work of the Conference, but also to the whole scientific world interested in this question. The Montevideo Conference also recommended that this special serological work should be continued by all the South American countries, and should be co-ordinated by the Health Organisation.

I am glad to inform the Committee that the Brazilian Government has offered to create at Rio de Janeiro an International Study Centre on Leprosy, which will be placed at the disposal of the League of Nations. The Council has just accepted this offer and warmly thanked Brazil for her generous action, which will be of great value for the continuation of the international studies contemplated by the Leprosy Commission.

Everyone will remember the information given to the Committee last year by the distinguished delegate of the British Empire regarding the state of the reconstruction work undertaken in China, for which the services of the Health Organisation were placed at the disposal of the Government of that country.

I would remind you that, since that time, as a result of the Secretariat's missions, the assistance of other organs of the League of Nations has been requested, and I will venture to recapitulate the progress achieved in the special sphere of hygiene. The organisation of the Central Field Health Station at Nanking to form the nucleus of the National Health Service provided for in the reorganisation plan is being actively pushed on, and is already partly in operation. The first national hospital, also at Nanking, is already working at full pressure. The Chinese National Quarantine Service began its task several months ago in a number of localities. An expert appointed by the Health Organisation has visited the Chinese schools of medicine, and has assisted the National Commission in drawing up a standard programme of instruction. His report, with the Health Committee's recommendations, has been communicated to the Chinese Government, and will permit of the organisation and operation of an initial model school at Nanking. The creation of this school will constitute the first stage in the reform of medical teaching. The organisation of the campaign against cholera and smallpox in the Shanghai zone is being effectively pursued. It has also been proposed to ask the Health Organisation's assistance for the solution of other medical and hygienic problems. Moreover, individual study grants have been awarded to the holders of several posts in the new institutions provided for in the plan of health reorganisation, as has also been done in similar cases in other countries.

The work of reconstruction in China, which has extended to questions of intellectual co-operation, economics and communications and transit, after health questions, demonstrates once again the utility of the Health Organisation in the work of the League of Nations. I think I shall be expressing the feelings of all in voicing our admiration for the perseverance with which the Chinese Government, without being discouraged by the disasters which have just visited its country, is continuing to devote all its energy to the work of national reconstruction.

As you have already learnt, the Director of the Chinese National Health Administration has requested the Health Organisation to take urgent steps for concerted action by the health services of China's neighbours to prevent the epidemics by which the flooded regions are threatened. We do not doubt that China's appeal will be favourably received, and we all hope that this action, which is now in course of preparation, will shortly prove its effectiveness.

The measures taken by the Governments who have asked for the Health Organisation's help must, of course, be based on a technical opinion resulting from the experience of numerous countries and constituting a survey of the present state of science and practice in the sphere of public health. The new Health Committee, which met for the first time at the end of September 1930, has instituted a new method of work, which consists in the creation of Reporting Committees, composed of a limited number of experts, to formulate opinions capable of being utilised, not only by these Governments, but by all administrations desirous of reorganising or organising their health services. These Committees are responsible for drawing up a plan of action for the different branches of hygiene. Each subject will be dealt with in an essentially rational manner, this being of great importance owing to the economic crisis which the whole world is going through, and the plan will, at the same time, be capable of adjustment to the natural, social, economic, financial and technical resources of the different countries.

The recommendations contained in the reports of the Leprosy Commission drawn up at this Commission's meeting at Bangkok in December 1930 also represent a series of prophylactic and curative methods of universal value, conceived on the principles I have just indicated and established on the basis of the scientific and practical experience acquired in the last thirty years. Similarly, the report on schools of hygiene drawn up as a result of the meetings of directors of schools of hygiene held at Paris and Dresden in 1930 provides guiding principles of this kind, of great value to Governments which, in their efforts towards reconstruction and progress, desire to train public health officials to co-operate in this work.

The Committee will certainly agree with me in expressing its appreciation of the methods which the Health Organisation has adopted in response to the desire manifested by the last Assembly that the experience acquired by this Organisation should be placed to an increasing degree at the disposal of the States Members.

II. Among the permanent tasks of the Health Organisation, I should like to refer first to the work which it has entrusted to its Eastern Bureau. The value of the Singapore Bureau, which has been recognised by former Assemblies, is continuously increasing through the technical improvement in the transmission of notifications of infectious diseases. This Bureau is at present acting as a centre for epidemiological intelligence, and also for co-ordinating research into questions peculiar to the countries situated within its field of action. I am sure that we all desire to see this action develop so that the Bureau may become, to an increasing extent, the general agent for the East of the health work of the League of Nations. The Epidemiological Intelligence Service of the Health Section of the League of Nations Secretariat is also continuing to prove its value as the basis of an international system for combating epidemics.

Another permanent task of the Health Organisation has been carried out through collective study tours, known as " interchanges ", which provide an effective means of exchanging knowledge acquired by various countries in health matters. A tour of this kind is at present in progress in the United States for the study of questions concerning milk-supply and the fumigation of ships. In this connection, I would draw attention to the welcome offer of the French Government to establish in Paris an International School for Advanced Health Studies for the purpose of continuing and centralising, through a permanent institution available for all nations, the work already carried out in this field by periodical meetings of the directors of the various schools of hygiene, by the " interchanges ", and by the grant of individual study scholarships.

The comparative research into immunisation against diphtheria and scarlet fever undertaken in several countries was discussed at a meeting of experts, bacteriologists, clinicians and serologists held in London this summer. This meeting adopted recommendations with regard to the best methods of vaccination and the most profitable way of applying them for effectively combating these diseases, which are a matter of concern for all health administrations. The Permanent Commission on Standardisation has again taken an important step forward. This Commission has, during the current year, adopted several new international standards for serological products and for a number of vitamins. These results are very valuable both from the scientific point of view and for the testing of the innumerable preparations on the market. The activities of this Commission are another striking example of the methods of international co-operation adopted by the Health Organisation. As a result of comparative research, international standards are fixed and subsequently adopted by the national authorities as a working basis. Enquiries made by the Malaria Commission in this field have also led to the definition of a standard product of the total alkaloids of cinchona (the " totaquina "), which has the same effect as quinine. The results of these enquiries will meet the necessity of an increase in the supply of the active product, and will probably help to bring about a decrease in the cost of treatment.

III. I was particularly interested in the discussions of the European Conference on Rural Hygiene, which I was able to follow personally, and the report of which has just been adopted by the Council (document C.473.M.202.1931.III). The preparatory work and the discussions of this Conference, which was convened by a decision of the Council on the proposal of the Spanish Government, have made it possible to compare the experiences of various countries in the matter of rural hygiene, which must be regarded as one of the most important factors in the organisation of agricultural districts. Interdependence in economic and social questions, as well as in health conditions, is, in fact, particularly felt in rural districts.

I was struck by the sincere spirit of co-operation shown by all those taking part in this Conference. This spirit made it possible to adopt the recommendations unanimously, thus giving them a moral force which will be a valuable support to the action of those national or local health administrations which wish to apply them. These recommendations are, in fact, a practical guide to effective and economical rural health administration. They deal with the guiding principles and suitable methods for ensuring effective medical assistance in rural districts, the organisation of health services in rural districts, and the improvement of health conditions in such districts. While taking account of the necessity of adapting the measures advocated to local conditions, the Conference fixed a certain number of minimum standards. It emphasised the praiseworthy tendency towards the rationalisation of health organisation.

For the first time in a Conference of such importance, those taking part included representatives of social welfare, health insurance, agricultural associations and the medical profession, as well as agriculturists, architects, hygienists and engineers. Three large international organisations dealing with the protection of rural populations—the Health Organisation of the League of Nations, the International Labour Office and the International Institute of Agriculture—took part in close co-operation in the preparation and work of the Conference. The Conference was attended by eighty-six delegates and experts from twenty-five European countries, and also by eight observers from non-European States. The effect of the recommendations adopted extends far beyond Europe, and their value for overseas countries was recognised by the observers delegated by those countries.

The Conference also put forward a certain number of interesting proposals for international enquiries in the matter of rural hygiene. These enquiries are to deal with the programme and methods to be adopted for the professional training of health visitors and sanitary engineers, the cost of medical services and health services in certain specially selected rural districts, the quality of milk in rural districts, the fight against the hatching of flies, typhoid fever, methods for analysing and testing drinking-water and water used for other purposes. The various European schools of hygiene and similar institutions whose directors met during the Conference will carry out most of these enquiries according to a uniform plan co-ordinated by the Health Organisation.

I have spoken at some length on the results of the European Conference on Rural Hygiene, as I was anxious to draw particular attention to them. I am sure everyone will agree with me in recognising the value of the work accomplished, and will be anxious for its scope to be increased on the basis of the principles which proved so effective during this Conference, so that the rural populations of all countries may benefit by it in the near future.

In conclusion, I will propose the following draft resolution :

" The Second Committee,

" Having noted the reports of the Health Organisation of the League of Nations published since the last Assembly :

" Recognises with satisfaction the value of the methods of international co-operation employed by this Organisation for the accomplishment of the international task of the League of Nations;

" Notes with satisfaction that the experience acquired by this Organisation is being made available to the States Members of the League to an ever-increasing extent;

" Notes with interest the work accomplished in connection with rural hygiene, and expresses the hope that the task undertaken in this field will be developed so that the rural populations of all countries may benefit thereby in the near future;

" Approves the work carried out by the Health Organisation since the last session of the Assembly;

" And congratulates it on the results obtained, which furnish fresh proofs of the concentration of its efforts on definite tasks, and reveal the worldwide scope of its work."

ANNEX 4.

LETTER FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SIXTH COMMITTEE TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SECOND COMMITTEE REGARDING THE UTILISATION OF THE TECHNICAL AND ADVISORY ORGANS OF THE LEAGUE BY THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY FOR EUROPEAN UNION.

The Sixth Committee, at its meeting on September 16th, decided to refer, for study, to the Second Committee the technical questions—particularly economic and financial questions, as well as questions of transit and communications—dealt with in the reports of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union to the Assembly. The Sixth Committee assumes that the Second Committee, in presenting its reports, will take into consideration the material furnished by the work of the Commission of Enquiry.

The Sixth Committee reserves the right to submit to the Assembly proposals as to the constitution, organisation and methods of work of the Commission of Enquiry. In this connection, it may be observed that, in the course of the past year, the Commission of Enquiry has had to create several special committees for the study of certain economic questions the urgency of which appeared to require this mode of procedure.

The report of the Organisation Sub-Committee set up by the Commission of Enquiry, and now submitted for the consideration of the Sixth Committee, indicates the conditions under which the Commission of Enquiry may have recourse to the co-operation of the technical organs and advisory committees of the League of Nations (see report by the Secretary-General on the work of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union (document A.17), section 2, paragraph 2), a right of which it has already availed itself with the authorisation of the Council of the League.

The Sixth Committee, being aware of the desire of the Commission of Enquiry to limit as far as possible the setting up of special committees and to utilise as a general rule the existing organs of the League, would be grateful to the Second Committee if this latter would give it an assurance that the permanent organs of the League will be in a position to satisfy, with the flexibility and promptitude which may be necessary, any demands the Commission of Enquiry may make.

(Signed) MOTTA,

ANNEX 5.

LETTER FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SECOND COMMITTEE TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SIXTH COMMITTEE CONCERNING THE WORK OF THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY FOR EUROPEAN UNION.

In reply to your letter of September 16th, 1931, I have the honour to inform you that the Second Committee, in preparing its reports for the Assembly, will not fail to take into consideration the material furnished by the work of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union.

The Second Committee has also considered whether the financial, economic, transit and health organs of the League would be in a position to satisfy, with the flexibility and promptitude which might be necessary, any demands the Commission of Enquiry might make.

After enquiring into the organisation and methods of work of these permanent organs, the Second Committee considers that, as a general rule—with the exception of certain special cases which may arise—these organs seem to be in a position to afford the Commission of Enquiry for European Union any assistance which it may ask of them.

The budget of the Financial Section and Economic Intelligence Service for the year 1932 does not, however, provide for any meetings beyond the three regular sessions of the Financial Committee and three meetings of special committees which will probably be required for the normal work of the Financial Committee. The preparatory work in connection with the scheme for an International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company drawn up by the Commission of Enquiry has during the present year necessitated an outlay of 27,981 Swiss francs for meetings and 8,820 Swiss francs for printing expenses. The Financial Section and Economic Intelligence Service will not be able to satisfy any demands involving similar expenditure during the year 1932.

With regard to the problem of a pact of economic non-aggression, the Second Committee entirely agrees with the Sixth Committee that, in view of the special nature of this question, it would be advisable to entrust it to a special committee to be appointed by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. It also considers that the question is of interest to the whole world, and it would therefore seem that the non-European States which the Assembly might invite to join this committee should be: Australia, China, India, Japan and Uruguay. The Council of the League of Nations might also be requested to invite the United States of America to join the committee.

(Signed) Paul-Emile JANSON,

ANNEX 6.

DRAFT CONVENTION FOR THE REGULATION OF WHALING.

September 12th, 1931.

In Circular Letter 158, dated July 3rd, 1930, the Secretary-General of the League of Nations forwarded to the Members and States non-members of the League the text of a preliminary draft Convention for the regulation of whaling (document C.353.M.146.1930.II), drawn up by the Economic Committee with the assistance of experts.

In another Circular Letter, 259, dated September 27th, 1930, the Governments were invited to communicate their observations on this draft.

At its meeting on May 20th, 1931, the Council authorised the Secretary-General to place the question of a Convention on this subject on the supplementary agenda for the Assembly if the Economic Committee, after considering the replies of the various Governments, was of opinion, at its session in June, that it was desirable to open such a Convention for signature.

Being informed that the Economic Committee is of that opinion, the Secretary-General has placed the question on the agenda of this Assembly.

The Economic Committee felt, however, that a small committee of experts and jurists should be appointed to recast the text of the draft prepared by it in the light of the observations of certain Governments.

This Committee, which sat on September 9th and 10th, 1931, consisted of the following:

Chairman:

Professor E. LE DANOIS, Secretary-General of the Mediterranean Commission, Director of the Office scientifique et technique des Pêches maritimes, Paris (France).

Members:

Mr. J. O. BORLEY, O.B.E., Fisheries Adviser, Colonial Office, London (Australia);
Mr. E. R. DARNLEY, Colonial Office, London (Great Britain and Northern Ireland);
Dr. W. RIDDELL, Dominion of Canada Advisory Officer, Geneva (Canada);
Mr. Charles E. LYON, Commercial Attaché to the United States Legation, Berne (United States of America);
M. D. Manuel MARTINEZ PEDROSO, Professor of Law in the University of Seville (Spain);
M. GRUVEL, of the Museum, Technical Adviser to the Ministry of the Colonies, Paris (France);
M. Salvador MARTINEZ DE ALVA, Permanent Observer at Geneva (Mexico);
Dr. Johan HJORT, Professor in the University of Oslo (Norway);
Dr. J. J. TESCH, Chief of the Sea Fisheries Division of the Netherlands Institute of Oceanic Exploration, The Hague (Netherlands);
Dr. Alfredo DE MAGALHÃES RAMALHO, Director of the "Vasco da Gama" Aquarium, Lisbon (Portugal).

It may not be out of place to refer here to the idea underlying the Economic Committee's draft. Its object was to put an end to the uneconomic exploitation of the greater cetacea which particularly affects baleens or whalebone whales. These comprise two classes. First, there are the species grouped under the general name of "right-whales", which were so unremittingly hunted by the old whalers that they are becoming increasingly rare. In order to make sure of saving these species, the draft provides that their taking or killing shall be totally prohibited.

On the other hand, for the whales known as "fin-backs"—i.e., the balænoptera—whaling regulations are proposed which are designed, without injuring the essential interests of the whaling industry—and indeed in order to secure the future of that industry—to concentrate whaling on animals with a large commercial value and to prevent the killing of whales which offer little profit to the whaler but which are capable of continuing the stock.

Further, with the object of avoiding all waste, the draft seeks to ensure the fullest possible utilisation of the whales killed.

This was the idea of the original text, and the recent meeting has only confirmed these provisions, subject to certain subsidiary questions which are set out below.

The draft, as recast by the experts, is appended to this document.

The rules that would be laid down in such a Convention are, in point of fact, not applicable to certain native tribes who lead a primitive life and engage in whaling, when occasion offers, with rudimentary equipment. The losses to the whale population through the operations of these natives are negligible; consequently, certain States to which these natives are subject are anxious, while acceding to the Convention, to retain for them the privilege of whaling by their habitual methods.

A special clause to this effect has been added in the redrafted text.

Article 7 of the original draft did not contemplate the possibility of a shipowner's belonging to a different nation from that whose flag was flown by his ship. The new draft covers this contingency by specifying the authority competent to issue licences.

The information in the possession of biologists with regard to the larger cetacea is very incomplete. Accordingly, in compliance with the wishes of certain Governments, Article 10 of the draft (formerly Article 9) provides that whalers shall obtain the fullest possible information and thereby contribute to the progress of science in this field. A certain minimum of particulars is required.

Since the preliminary draft was drawn up, the International Bureau for Whaling Statistics has been established at Oslo. It has issued its first publication containing information of this kind. The experts unanimously recognised the services already rendered by this institution, and, considering it perfectly fitted for the duties provided for in Article 12, felt justified in naming it in that article.

The Committee has fixed at eight the number of States which must ratify or accede to the Convention before it could come into force, specifying that those States must include Norway and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, whose combined takings represent 80 per cent of the total number of whales killed annually.

Certain of the experts were apprehensive lest the present Article 20 (formerly Article 18) might—when certain territories under the control of the contracting parties were excepted from the operation of the Convention—enable ships flying the flag of such territories to engage in whaling in contravention of the rules laid down.

The Committee has, however, maintained the text of this article, which is necessary on account of the constitutional law of certain countries; but it has obtained an assurance that each of the countries whose participation is specially to be desired will endeavour to enforce the future Convention as widely and completely as possible.

In order to ensure the efficacy of the draft Convention, certain Governments had asked that it should include articles explicitly providing penalties for any infringements committed by their nationals.

The experts felt that these were questions either of international customary law, in the case of disputes between nationals of two States, or of the municipal law of each State, in the case of offences against their own legislation, and that it was therefore not possible to make any stipulation more far-reaching than that made in Article 1.

The Soviet Government had asked that the draft Convention should make provision for the protection of cachalots, especially females.

The experts held that this addition was unnecessary, as the species of cetacea in question is hunted very little owing to the poor quality of the oil it produces, and is therefore unlikely to become extinct.

The same Government, being aware of the attacks on balænoptera by the orca (gladiator or killer whale), thought it desirable that whalers should be given an incentive, in the form of indirect bounties, to destroy these harmful cetacea.

The experts took the view that measures of this kind must depend on the initiative of each Government, and that there was no place in the Convention for specific provisions on the subject.

The Japanese Government has repeatedly pointed out that the prohibition of the hunting of right-whales in the North Pacific would injure the interests of the Japanese whaling industry, and has consequently asked that the provisions of Article 4 (formerly Article 3) should not be applicable to the North Pacific.

On examining the available statistics, the experts were convinced that the number of right-whales killed by Japanese whalers in the North Pacific was small; moreover, other countries bordering upon the North Pacific were anxious that right-whales should be protected. They could not therefore see their way to propose this exception.

Appendix.

REVISED TEXT OF THE DRAFT CONVENTION FOR THE REGULATION OF WHALING.

DRAWN UP BY THE EXPERTS OF THE GOVERNMENTS OF AUSTRALIA, GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND, CANADA, SPAIN, UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, FRANCE, MEXICO, NORWAY, NETHERLANDS, PORTUGAL, DURING THE MEETINGS HELD IN GENEVA ON SEPTEMBER 9TH AND 10TH, 1931.

Article 1.

The High Contracting Parties agree to take, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions, appropriate measures to ensure the application of the provisions of the present Convention and the punishment of infractions of the said provisions.

Article 2.

The present Convention applies only to baleens or whalebone whales.

Article 3.

The present Convention does not apply to aborigines dwelling on the coast of the territories of the High Contracting Parties provided that :

(1) They only use canoes, pirogues or other exclusively native craft propelled by oars or sails;

(2) They do not carry firearms;

(3) They are not in the employment of persons other than aborigines nor under contract to deliver the products of their whaling to any third person.

Article 4.

The taking or killing of right-whales, which shall be deemed to include North Cape whales, Greenland whales, southern right-whales, Pacific right-whales and southern pigmy right-whales, is prohibited.

Article 5.

The taking or killing of calves or suckling whales, immature whales, and female whales which are accompanied by calves or suckling whales, is prohibited.

Article 6.

The fullest possible use shall be made of the carcases of whales taken. In particular :

(1) There shall be extracted by boiling or otherwise the oil from all blubber and from the head and the tongue and, in addition, from the tail as far forward as the outer opening of the lower intestine (the provisions of this sub-paragraph shall apply only to such carcases or parts of carcases as are not used for human food);

(2) Every factory, whether on shore or afloat, used for treating the carcases of whales shall be equipped with adequate apparatus for the extraction of oil from the blubber, flesh and bones;

(3) In the case of whales brought on shore, adequate arrangements shall be made for utilising the residues after the oil has been extracted.

Article 7.

Gunners and crews of whaling vessels shall be engaged on terms such that their remuneration shall depend to a considerable extent upon such factors as the size, species, value and yield of oil of whales taken, and not merely upon the number of whales taken, in so far as payment is made dependent on results.

Article 8.

No vessel of any of the High Contracting Parties shall engage in taking or treating whales unless a licence authorising such vessel to engage therein shall have been granted in respect of such vessel by the High Contracting Party whose flag she flies, or unless her owner or charterer has notified the Government of the said High Contracting Party of his intention to employ her in whaling and has received a certificate of notification from the said Government.

Nothing in this article shall prejudice the right of any High Contracting Party to require that in addition a licence shall be required from his own authorities by every vessel desirous of using his territory or territorial waters for the purposes of taking, landing or treating whales, and such licence may be refused, or may be made subject to such conditions as may be deemed by such High Contracting Party to be necessary or desirable, independent of the nationality of the vessel.

Article 9.

The geographical limits within which the articles of this Convention are to be applied shall include all the waters of the world, including both the high seas and territorial and national waters.

Article 10.

1. The High Contracting Parties shall obtain, with regard to the vessels flying their flag and engaged in the taking of whales, the most complete biological information with regard to each whale taken, and in any case on the following points:

(a) Date of taking;
(b) Place of taking;
(c) Species;
(d) Sex;
(e) Length measure, when taken out of water; estimated, if cut up in water;
(f) When fœtus is present, length and sex if ascertainable;
(g) Where practicable, information as to stomach contents.

2. The length referred to in sub-paragraphs (e) and (f) of this article shall be the length of a straight line taken from the tip of the snout to the notch between the flukes of the tail.

Article 11.

Each High Contracting Party shall obtain from all factories, on land or afloat, under his jurisdiction, returns of the number of whales of each species treated at each factory and of the amounts of oil of each grade and the quantities of meal, guano and other products derived from them.

Article 12.

Each of the High Contracting Parties shall communicate statistical information regarding all whaling operations under their jurisdiction to the International Bureau for Whaling Statistics at Oslo. The information given shall comprise at least the particulars mentioned in Article 10 and (1) the name and tonnage of each floating factory; (2) the number and aggregate tonnage of the whale-catchers; (3) a list of the land stations which are in operation during the period concerned.

Such information shall be given at convenient intervals not longer than one year.

Article 13.

The obligation of a High Contracting Party to take measures to ensure the observance of the conditions of the present Convention in his own territories and territorial waters, and by his vessels, shall not apply to those of his territories to which the Convention does not apply, and the territorial waters adjacent thereto, or to vessels registered in such territories.

Article 14.

The present Convention, the French and English texts of which shall both be authoritative, shall remain open until the thirty-first of March 1932, for signature on behalf of any Member of the League of Nations or of any non-member State.

Article 15.

The present Convention shall be ratified. The instruments of ratification shall be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall notify their receipt to all Members of the League of Nations and to the non-member States, indicating the date of its deposit.

Article 16.

As from the first of April 1932, any Member of the League of Nations and any non-member State, on whose behalf the Convention has not been signed before that date, may accede thereto.

The instruments of accession shall be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall notify their receipt to all the Members of the League of Nations and to the non-member States, indicating the date of the deposit of the instrument.

Article 17.

The present Convention shall enter into force on the ninetieth day following the receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations of the ratifications or accessions on behalf of not less than eight Members of the League or non-member States, including the Kingdom of Norway and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

As regards any Member of the League or non-member State on whose behalf an instrument of ratification or accession is subsequently deposited, the Convention shall enter into force on the ninetieth day after the date of the deposit of such instrument.

Article 18.

If after the coming into force of the present Convention the Council of the League of Nations, at the request of any two Members of the League or non-member States with regard to which the Convention is then in force, convene a Conference for the revision of the Convention, the High Contracting Parties agree to be represented at any Conference so convened.

Article 19.

1. The present Convention may be denounced after the expiration of three years from the date of its coming into force.

2. Denunciation shall be effected by a written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall inform all the Members of the League and the non-member States of its receipt.

3. That denunciation shall take effect six months after the date on which it has been received.

Article 20.

1. Any High Contracting Party may, at the time of signature, ratification or accession, declare that, in accepting the present Convention, he does not assume any obligations in respect of all or any of his colonies, protectorates, overseas territories or territories under suzerainty or mandate; and the present Convention shall not apply to any territories named in such declaration.

2. Any High Contracting Party may give notice to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations at any time subsequently that he desires that the Convention shall apply to all or any of his territories which have been made the subject of a declaration under the preceding paragraph, and the Convention shall apply to all the territories named in such notice ninety days after its receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

3. Any High Contracting Party may, at any time, declare that he desires that the present Convention shall cease to apply to all or any of his colonies, protectorates, overseas territories or territories under suzerainty or mandate, and the Convention shall cease to apply to the territories or to the parts of their population named in such declaration six months after its receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

4. The Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall communicate to all the Members of the League of Nations and the non-member States all declarations and notices received in virtue of this article and the date of their receipt.

Article 21.

The present Convention shall be registered by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations as soon as it has entered into force.

ANNEX 7.

CONVENTION FOR THE REGULATION OF WHALING.

DRAFT REPORT SUBMITTED BY M. BRAADLAND (NORWAY).

The main object of the draft Convention before the Second Committee is to secure the adoption by the greatest possible number of countries of certain rules intended to prevent, in the interests of the whaling industry itself, the destruction of a source of wealth available to all.

The steady growth of this industry in the last few years, thanks to improvements in equipment and technique, has resulted in an ever larger annual increase in the number of balænoptera killed. Estimates obtained from various sources show that for several years past the number taken has varied from 25,000 to 30,000 each season. For the season which has just closed, the enormous figure of 40,000 has been mentioned.

Past experience shows the necessity of making an effort to prevent the extinction of the species which are chiefly hunted by modern whalers.

Biologists are not as yet very well acquainted with this branch of science, and it is impossible to determine the number of these animals which could be taken annually without endangering the species. In view of the fact, however, that certain species of whales are already practically extinct, it will be realised that those species which it is still profitable to capture are exposed to serious danger.

The draft before you is the outcome of work begun in 1925 as the result of an Assembly resolution of the previous year for the creation of a committee of experts " to prepare a provisional list of the subjects of international law, the regulation of which by international agreement would seem to be most desirable and realisable". Among the questions recommended by this Committee for examination was the " exploitation of the riches of the sea ", and, in his report, Professor Suarès emphasised the danger of extermination to which the great balænoptera were exposed.

A questionnaire was sent to the various States, and, from the general trend of their observations, it appeared that they recognised the importance of the problem and the desirability of finding a solution by international agreement.

In September 1927, the Assembly asked the Council to instruct the Economic Committee to study the question of the protection of marine fauna and to decide, with the help of experts, " whether and in what terms, for what species and in what areas, international protection of marine fauna could be established ".

In July 1929, the Economic Committee came to the conclusion that international measures might be contemplated to ensure the protection of whales, and that such measures were actually urgent. The Committee added, however, that it could not make proposals in this respect until it had consulted experts.

The Norwegian Government meanwhile had prepared a Bill providing that its whalers throughout the world should observe certain rules with a view to putting an end to the incomplete utilisation of the whales taken. These rules were framed with a view to obtaining valuable biological information. The Norwegian law came into force on June 21st, 1929.

The deliberations of the experts who met in April 1930 resulted in the drawing up of a preliminary draft which was based to a considerable extent upon the Norwegian law, and which, after being recast by the Economic Committee, was submitted by the Council to all Members of the League and to the non-member States for their observations.

The Economic Committee, after examining the communications from the Governments which, as a whole, were favourable to the draft, felt that a committee of experts appointed by the Governments should be entrusted with the revision of the proposed Convention in the light of the observations and suggestions which had been presented.

Thus the draft before you is the result of patient and careful work by qualified persons, and has already been under consideration by the Governments.

The amendments made by the Committee which has just concluded its work are not of vital importance. They are indicated in document A.II/3.1931. I shall not, therefore, go into them.

I should like, however, to draw your attention to the scheme of the draft Convention. It is determined by certain general principles.

To begin with, the Convention will apply to all the waters of the world, including both the high seas and territorial waters (Article 9). This does not imply any restriction of the sovereign rights of States within the territorial waters, for which they may, should they so desire, enact any provisions they consider useful, these provisions being added, if necessary, to those resulting from the Convention. This follows expressly from Article 8, paragraph 2.

It is, moreover, for the contracting parties themselves to take the appropriate measures to ensure the application of the provisions of the Convention and the punishment of infractions of the said provisions by their nationals and by vessels flying their flag (Articles 1 and 13).

Provisions of the Convention apply to baleens or whalebone whales (Article 2), but not to toothed whales.

The Convention absolutely forbids the taking or killing of certain species which have become very rare (Article 4).

For the other species, the prohibition applies to the killing or taking of calves or immature whales, and females accompanied by suckling whales (Article 5).

This provision is intended to prevent waste of the national source of wealth which whales represent by premature and unremunerative exploitation.

It is, indeed, difficult at times to distinguish an adult from an immature whale, and the experts who prepared the draft did not feel able to define the difference. They inserted in their draft, however, a provision under which it is to the interest of harpooners and the crews of whalers to capture adult animals, as their remuneration will depend to some extent on the nature of the whales taken (Article 7).

It was found that, in many cases, factories, whether on shore or afloat, were inadequately equipped for the extraction from the whales taken of the maximum quantity of utilisable products, and that they threw away raw material without turning it to account. With a view to preventing this waste, Article 6 of the draft provides that the fullest possible use shall be made of the animals killed.

It is important, in the interests of effective supervision, that no vessel should engage in whaling unless its owner or charterer has at least notified the Government of the country whose flag the vessel flies of his intention. Article 8 makes this notification compulsory. The same article provides that each of the contracting parties shall have the right to require that any vessel using its territory or territorial waters for the purposes of taking or landing whales, or remaining therein for the purpose of treating them, shall possess a licence issued by its own authorities.

The experience of the Norwegian Government has shown that the co-operation of whalers might be of great assistance in collecting extremely valuable biological data concerning whales, and that the classification and comparison of the information collected should be entrusted to an appropriate central body. As a result of enquiries carried out of its own accord into this matter, the Norwegian Government has been requested by the International Council for the Exploration of the Products of the Sea at Copenhagen to undertake this work regularly. The International Bureau for Whaling Statistics was accordingly founded at Oslo in 1930, and Article 12 of the draft Convention provides that the information collected by whalers shall be regularly communicated to it by the Governments of the contracting parties. A first publication has already been issued.

Among the so-called "formal" clauses of the Convention there are two which call for explanation.

Under Article 17, the entry into force of the Convention is subject to the ratification or accession of eight countries, including Norway and Great Britain. It was considered that, if the Convention was to be of service, it should be put into force by a certain number of countries, which should necessarily include Norway and Great Britain, in view of the fact that their combined takings represent approximately 80 per cent of the total number of whales killed annually.

Article 18 deals with the possibility of revising the Convention at the request of two contracting parties and on the Council's decision. The authors of the draft considered that it should be chiefly of the nature of an experiment, and that its application would probably suggest improvements to be made later. In such a case, it is important that all the contracting parties should participate in the necessary Conference.

As already stated, the draft Convention is based on the provisions of the Norwegian Law of June 21st, 1929, which naturally apply solely to Norwegian vessels and their crews, in whatever seas they are operating. Its object is to generalise the application of the majority of those measures by extending them to the vessels of the other contracting parties.

If it is to produce its full effect, the Convention should, of course, be extended to every country in the world, since it is to be feared that, under the protection of the flags of third States, vessels may engage in operations contrary to the rules adopted by common accord with a view to safeguarding an industry the very existence of which is seriously imperilled. It is therefore to be hoped that the large number of States not directly concerned will co-operate and will become contracting parties to a Convention which is essentially designed to promote general interests and which, in the case of States possessing a whaling industry, involves a voluntary limitation of their activities and positive obligations which they alone are called upon to undertake.

In conclusion, I propose that the Second Committee should transmit to the Assembly the following draft resolution:

> "The Assembly,
> "Convinced of the importance and urgency of regulating whaling by means of an international agreement prohibiting the taking or killing of certain kinds of whales which have become extremely rare, and of making the fullest possible use of the animals the catching of which is still permitted;
> "In view of the fact that the attached Convention differs from that communicated to the Members of the League and non-member States by Circular Letter No. 158 of July 3rd, 1930, only as regards certain minor points of drafting, and that no substantial changes have been introduced therein:
> "Decides to open the said Convention immediately for the signature of Members of the League and non-member States, and expresses the hope that the largest possible number of States will accede thereto without delay."

ANNEX 8.

LETTER, DATED SEPTEMBER 16TH, 1931, FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE FINANCIAL COMMITTEE TO THE SECRETARY-GENERAL REGARDING BUDGET CREDITS.

The Secretary-General has the honour to communicate to the Second and the Fourth Committees and to the Supervisory Commission the following letter which was addressed to him by the Chairman of the Financial Committee:

> "I have been asked by the Financial Committee to transmit to you the following statement, with the request that you should send it to the Second and Fourth Committees of the Assembly, and to the Supervisory Commission.

"The Committee has been informed of resolution A.54, passed by the Assembly on September 12th, and has thereupon examined the budgetary provision made for its work during the remainder of this year and in 1932.

"The Committee understands that, for 1931, there is no credit available on the relevant item of the budget for any work beyond its present meeting; and that the draft budget for 1932 now submitted to the Assembly contains provision only for its normal work—viz.,

"Three meetings of the Financial Committee of one week each;

"Three meetings of delegations or sub-committees, together with the necessary printing.

"This is a conservative estimate for the Committee's normal work, and does not include any provision for such extension of the Committee's work as is contemplated in the report of the Credits Committee, adopted on September 12th by the Council.

"In these circumstances, the Committee believes it to be its duty to state plainly its view.

"The financial crisis to-day is unprecedented. It has already affected the public finances of two of the countries—Austria and Hungary—whose finances were reconstructed under the auspices of the League, and their Governments have been authorised by the Council to obtain the advice of the Financial Committee.

"For the finances of a third—Bulgaria—the Council still bears certain responsibilities under the unexpired clauses of an international protocol, on the basis of which an international loan has been issued.

"Unless supplementary funds for the purpose are obtained, the Committee will find itself unable, during the next four months, to execute the mandate of the Council after the conclusion of its present meeting.

"Quite apart from the case of countries which have applied to the League in the past, the Committee will only be able to advise other countries which might appeal to the Council, or take action in any other form (in the event of the Council wishing further action to be taken) if more credits are made available.

"The same holds good of 1932; for the provision in the relevant item of the draft budget now submitted to the Assembly will not enable the Committee to meet any special calls which may be made upon it as a result of the financial crisis.

"But in 1932—and even in 1931—the crisis may well become, gradually or suddenly, more acute and more widespread. In the nature of the case, it is impossible to forecast. It would seem almost inevitable that, as its cumulative effects make themselves felt, calls will be made upon the League for technical advice and assistance, the nature and extent of which cannot be foreseen. It is, indeed, probable that the mechanism of the League will provide the most suitable instrument for meeting many of the pressing financial difficulties of the hour.

"It is not for the Committee to decide whether these calls should be met, or these instruments used. It suggests, however, that the exceptional gravity of the situation warrants sufficient credits, with a suitable margin for unforeseen possibilities, being made available for the remainder of this year for financial work, and a very considerable sum being specially placed at the disposal of the Council in 1932 for unforeseen contingencies in the financial field, so that it may not be precluded in advance from authorising such remedial measures as may seem possible.

"The Committee believes that it would not have discharged its duty had it not drawn attention to the seriousness of the present crisis, the occasions for action through the League to which it may give rise, and the necessity for adequate budgetary provision, if appropriate action is to be taken."

"(Signed) SUVICH,
"Chairman of the Financial Committee."

ANNEX 9.

LETTER, DATED SEPTEMBER 21ST, 1931, FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SECOND COMMITTEE TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SUPERVISORY COMMISSION REGARDING BUDGET CREDITS.

The Second Committee have taken note of a letter sent by the Financial Committee, which has also been communicated to the Fourth Committee and to the Supervisory Commission, and of the passage on budget provision in the report of the Financial Committee (document A.55.1931).

The Committee has considered amounts included in the draft 1932 budget for work connected with the Financial Committee (document A.4.1931) in the light of (a) the work contemplated for 1932; (b) the work done in 1931.

The Committee considers that work done by the Financial Committee or for it, including the work of the Economic Intelligence Service (sub-item 3 (c)), is of primary importance in the present financial crisis, and that, accordingly, no reduction should be made on the budgetary provision for such work in the draft budget (document A.4,1931).

The Committee proposes, in accordance with Article 16 (c) of the Financial Regulations, that, in view of the probability that unforeseen calls may be made upon the Council during the year 1932 for technical financial advice to individual Governments or other action to meet the financial crisis, and the desirability that the Council should be in a position to meet such calls, a supplementary credit of 250,000 Swiss francs should be added to Chapter III, Item 19 (a), sub-item 4 : " Unforeseen expenses in the budget of the Financial Section and Economic Intelligence Service ", and earmarked for these objects. This supplementary credit should only be drawn upon with the authority of the Council.

It is in the nature of the case impossible to make more detailed estimates. The total, so far as the Second Committee is concerned, depends upon an appreciation of the present financial crisis, its possible developments and effects and how far it is technically practicable and desirable for the Council and its technical advisers to contemplate taking action in the matter.

(Signed) JANSON,

ANNEX 10.

LETTER, DATED SEPTEMBER 21ST, 1931, FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SECOND COMMITTEE TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SUPERVISORY COMMISSION.

Last year, the Second Committee addressed to the Commission a report containing the following passage :

> " When we consider the magnitude of the losses from which the world suffers during a period of economic stagnation similar to that through which the world is now passing, it is impossible not to be impressed by the almost absolute failure of society up to the present to devise any means by which such disasters may be averted. The Committee felt that this problem was one which imperatively demanded co-ordinated and concerted study, and recommends, therefore, in a separate resolution . . . that an endeavour should be made to study the causes of the recurrence of periods of prosperity and depression."

As a result of this report, the Assembly of 1931 adopted the following resolution :

> " The Economic and Financial Organisation should put itself in touch with the national organisations, whether consultative or planning councils or research institutes, and should, with their aid, consider by what means the work now being conducted on the problem of recurrence of periods of economic depression may be co-ordinated. "

Two meetings of representatives of these institutions took place this year in connection with the report on the course and phases of the world economic depression. Their report (Appendix to the Financial Committee's report, document A.55 1931) is before the Second Committee and has been endorsed by the Financial Committee and Economic Committee.

These representatives state :

> " It would seem essential for the full success of these concerted studies that a qualified economist, together with an adequate staff of assistants, should be permanently attached to the Secretariat. This expert should undertake especially the scientific preparatory work for the meetings, and ensure continuity of effort and render the work of the meetings as effective as possible."

The Second Committee expressed the opinion that, in view of the serious effects of the present economic depression, this study should be begun at the earliest possible moment, and that effect should be given in 1932 to the resolution of the eleventh Assembly. It proposes supplementary credits totalling 49,550 Swiss francs. No expenditure has been made in this connection in 1931 and, in view of the necessary time required to find qualified staff, it is estimated that none will be incurred for salaries during the first half of 1932.

The figure of 49,550 Swiss francs is made up as follows :

		Initial Salaries
1. Creation of new posts as from July 1st, 1932 (sub-item 3 (a)) :
1 qualified economist	14,000	28,000
1 locally recruited clerk (div. II, cat. I)	3,750	7,500
1 locally recruited clerk (div. II, cat. II)	2,500	5,000
2. Travelling (including removal expenses on appointment (sub-item 3 (b))	5,000
3. One meeting of representatives of Economic Institutes [1] (3 days, 21 persons) (sub-item 2 (a))	19,400
4. Printing (1 report by this meeting; 8 pages in length) (sub-item 2 (b))	400
	45,050
5. Unforeseen, 10 per cent (sub-item 4)	4,500
	49,550

Chairman of the Second Committee.

A. Introduction.

1. General Considerations.

The Second Committee's debates this year bear the mark of the extremely grave situation in which we are placed.

Our position as representatives of our sorely-tried countries has in the present circumstances a painful and almost tragic character, since it seems to leave us almost helpless face to face with events beyond our control.

The peoples of the world are going through a crisis without precedent in its extent, duration and intensity, and we are feeling this crisis acutely.

We can discern the causes of the evil and the perils which are already upon us or threatening us. All of us, with the same goodwill, sincerity and fervour, desire to remove them. We have heard appeals pronounced from the Assembly platform by the most qualified authorities, who have drawn attention to the gravity of present problems and the urgency of solving them, and we should like to be able to respond by deeds to these poignant appeals.

We realise that salvation is only to be found in the union of peoples which to-day are so closely dependent on one another that they may be compared to limbs of the same body, none of which can be sick or unhealthy without all the others being immediately affected. We should like to foster their economic relations with the ardent hope that this exchange of interests will pave the way to intellectual and moral rapprochement. But we find ourselves faced with difficult barriers on which our intentions stumble, if they do not fall.

Failing a complete solution, we have to look for fragmentary and partial ones; but, when we apply them to realities, we feel that they are fragile and inadequate.

International solidarity calls for sacrifices, but the national communities which have to accept them are immediately filled with unrest and anxiety.

The work before us is long, but our sufferings require immediate relief and time presses. We should like to go full speed ahead; time is a factor which it is impossible to disregard.

We should like to open up ampler communications between the peoples, to multiply and strengthen the bonds which unite them, and to create community of interest between them, but we are hampered at every turn by the prejudices accumulated by age-long selfishness and misunderstandings.

Our great scheme of economic union requires confidence, but it is confidence which is absent.

Cruel is the conflict between human intentions, guided by the spirit of Geneva, and the brutal force of realities. We must not fear to emphasise this conflict, for the nations we represent must realise it.

Does this mean that we must give way to a gloomy fatalism and to purely negative pessimism ?

Can we allow it to be said that nothing can be done but bow before the storm and wait for greater sufferings to bring a useful lesson to mankind? We have no right to do so. Without illusion, but without discouragement, we must apply ourselves to bringing the national communities to an understanding of the principles which the League of Nations laid down in the recommendations it made to them, both at the Economic Conference of 1927 and at the later Conferences of 1929 and 1930 and also in the remarkable studies made by its economic organs.

In the same way, they must be brought to a true appreciation of the results obtained by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union.

We must call upon the Governments to examine with the greatest attention the resolutions adopted by the technical experts with regard to the solutions to be applied to the economic crisis.

Should we confine ourselves to these recommendations? The Second Committee does not think so and it has reached an agreement of principle on several proposals. These—although they certainly do not provide a general and final solution for our present ills—suggest remedies which, although only partial, may none the less be genuinely effective if supported by the goodwill of the peoples.

With great penetration and wisdom, the Committee of Economic Experts recently, at the beginning of its admirable report, emphasised the primary importance of the part played by lack of confidence in aggravating the world situation.

> " The growing international distrust " it says, " is accentuating the effects of the crisis, increasing the obstacles to the normal circulation of capital and obstructing, to an ever-increasing extent, the whole mechanism of international trade. Lack of confidence not only entails stagnation of capital, reluctance to lend abroad and refusal to enter into long-term undertakings, but also tends to paralyse and retard all forms and phases of economic life.
> " The result is a flagging of the spirit of enterprise, the postponement of programmes already decided upon, the abandonment of the search for new markets, the limitation of the purchase of raw materials to daily requirements, the dismissal of workers, excessive caution instead of productive activity and stagnation instead of progress."

These wise words must be heard and acted upon. Governments must learn the lesson they contain, must instruct their public opinion and silence the disturbing elements and the authors of hatred, fear and distrust, in order that the peoples, instead of looking backwards with regret and revengeful feelings, may resolutely advance in a new spirit and with free hearts towards a true economic solidarity, the source of well-being and pacification.

2. Continuity of the Economic Work of the League of Nations.

Two years ago, the tenth Assembly, noting that the recommendations of the World Economic Conference had been carried out only to a limited extent, took the initiative of drawing up a new programme based on two fundamental ideas—" a Customs Truce " and, by means of that truce, the execution of a detailed scheme of negotiations.

This initiative was termed " Concerted Economic Action ".

The eleventh Assembly still held to the same principle.

It is noteworthy, however, that, in the discussions which have taken place in the Second Committee, very little mention has been made of concerted economic action, whereas a prominent place has been given to the work and the programme of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. This change might give the impression of a certain lack of continuity and coherence, of an unexpected change of direction in the League's economic work.

It is important to remove this impression, which is a totally mistaken one. In point of fact, the change we have observed is really no more than a change of terms. Concerted economic action was conceived by the tenth Assembly on a world-wide scale. All countries were invited to take part in it, and it was only through a process of auto-selection, probably in response to urgently-felt needs, that the successive Conferences with a view to Concerted Economic Action acquired a definitely European character. It may therefore legitimately be said that the work of European solidarity in the economic field had spontaneously begun even before the creation of the Commission of Enquiry.

Moreover, the world aspects of the economic question were not neglected at any time either before or after the World Economic Conference. As we shall see, they reappear in the list of the various activities which follows these general observations. The Assembly and the Council have constantly taken judicious steps to maintain the work relating more particularly to the economic restoration of Europe, within the province and in the spirit of the League.

Thus the development we have witnessed, which started from the general formulæ of 1927 and passed through the various fields of concerted economic action, has now reached its culmination —without, however, losing its close connection with the world aspects of the problem—in the programme of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union.

It would therefore be incorrect to say that the League's economic work lacks coherence or continuity.

B. Economic Activity of the League of Nations and of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union since the Last Assembly.

1. Concerted Economic Action: Commercial Convention.

The last Assembly particularly urged the necessity of putting into force the Commercial Convention of March 24th, 1930, and the immediate execution of the programme of negotiation provided for in the Protocol of the same date.

(a) The Assembly this year regrets to note, however, that, despite two successive attempts in November 1930 and March 1931, it has not been possible to bring the Convention into force. The Second Committee fully realises the reasons for the failure to do so. The economic depression was bound to have a considerable influence on the commercial relations between countries. The unprecedented fall in agricultural prices led to protective measures on the part of importing countries, which were anxious as to the fate of their agriculture. It also led the agricultural countries of Central and Eastern Europe to press more and more insistently for more favourable conditions for their exports of cereals. Moreover, the shrinking of the external markets for the industrial products of the various exporting countries compelled the latter to seek on the home market compensation for the diminution of their external markets, thereby causing the parties concerned to call with growing urgency for protection, in some cases even to the exclusion of foreign competition.

Faced with this situation, many countries felt it necessary to preserve their freedom of action in tariff matters. Where that freedom was even in part restricted by agreements, they endeavoured to regain it by a process of deconsolidation, and even by the denunciation of treaties.

In view of this ill-success, the Commission of Enquiry for European Union felt grave misgivings, and at its session in May 1931 made a last effort to save at all events the essential principles of the Convention. It recognised that progress was difficult if the sudden and frequent changes in the basis of international trade could not be checked. Accordingly, the Commission of Enquiry asked the European States to conform as far as possible to the principles laid down by the Convention.

The Second Committee associates itself with that appeal, drawing the attention of all States without distinction to the obstacle to the restoration of the economic situation represented by the growing instability of commercial relations, and accordingly it welcomes the Oslo Convention. The signatory States of that Convention have undertaken to apply amongst themselves certain principles of the Commercial Convention, including notification in advance of negotiations with parties who consider themselves prejudiced by the tariff measures contemplated.

(b) The Protocol regarding Future Negotiations provided for a reduction of Customs tariffs by means of a collective agreement, and also for efforts to devise concerted methods of solving a large number of problems not connected with tariffs, but nevertheless of primary importance for international trade.

After many exchanges of views, the execution of the first of these tasks had to be left to bilateral negotiations. Was the Economic Conference wrong in pointing to collective action as one of the best means of lowering Customs tariffs? We do not think so. At that time, as the result of the conclusion of a number of important international agreements, a relative stability of international relations had been secured, which enabled further possibilities to be envisaged. At the very time when the first steps were taken in that direction, however, the world crisis developed and rendered them practically useless.

Despite the ill-success of this first attempt to regularise international economic relations, the Second Committee is more than ever convinced that a final remedy for the economic ills from which the world is suffering can be found only in common efforts on the part of all States. It is therefore glad to note the attempts which have been made with this object by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union.

2. Economic Rapprochements.

It is only natural that the Commission of Enquiry for European Union should be concerned primarily with the improvement of commercial relations among the European countries. It has asked highly qualified economic experts to seek means for providing closer economic co-operation among the countries of Europe with a view to bringing about, in the general interest, a better organisation of production and trade.

The economic experts recognised that the weakness of the economic structure of Europe is due mainly to the fact that it is divided up into a large number of markets. The existence in that continent of numerous tariff barriers which, under the pressure of the existing crisis, naturally and constantly tend to rise even higher, constitutes, in the experts' opinion, one of the greatest obstacles to the improvement of the economic situation of the world and, in particular, of Europe. The efforts which the League has hitherto made to improve international co-operation having achieved very little results, it is necessary, in the experts' opinion, to contemplate entirely new methods :

> " The ultimate goal must be the widest possible collaboration of the nations of Europe in the sense of making Europe a single market for the products of any and every country in it.
> " Even, the Co-ordination Committee says, when Europe has emerged from the present crisis, she cannot hope for a real economic revival unless she is prepared gradually to adapt the traditional conception of separate national economic units and to approximate it—with every necessary precaution and possibly in forms as yet unknown—to the conception of one vast market accessible on equal terms to all or most of the producers of Europe."

In this connection, the economic experts were led to contemplate for Europe " economic rapprochements " which might even lead to a complete European Customs union.

The Second Committee can only welcome the efforts made by Europe to bring about the restoration of her economic situation, which would, moreover, react favourably upon all countries throughout the world. But the Committee is naturally bound to consider the effects such efforts might have on relations between the European countries and countries in other parts of the world. It is therefore glad to note that the experts have surrounded their proposals with all the guarantees necessary to safeguard the interests of other countries, and that they still consider the regime of the most-favoured-nation clause the normal basis of commercial relations.

3. International Economic Agreements.

Among the means contemplated for improving world economy by substituting systematic and co-ordinated organisations for unorganised activity, the experts consulted in recent years, and, still more recently, the Committee of Economic Experts, have urged the development of international agreements. The Second Committee desires to emphasise in particular the happy effects and fruitful results which may be secured by the development of industrial or agricultural agreements between producers with a view to improving the actual conditions of production and regularising trade. Agreements of this kind are not only calculated to reduce the danger of over-production, but also provide a solid basis for international co-operation, thereby paving the way for international economic peace.

It is undoubtedly important, in order to avoid any disadvantages which they might involve, to provide all necessary guarantees in respect of such agreements and their operation. It is essential that the interests of consumers should be adequately safeguarded, and that States should not be left without means of protecting themselves against an influence which might become too powerful.

An enlargement of the European market would in itself constitute, as regards extra-European countries, a very real benefit, by providing those countries with more extensive and more remunerative markets. Similarly, agreements covering more than a single continent might, a fortiori, contribute to the better organisation of world production.

Any economic rapprochement must, however, be designed to bring about a lowering of tariff barriers in the interests of the parties to the rapprochement. Those parties must also take into account the interests of other parties by applying to them a moderate tariff policy. With this two fold object in view, international economic agreements may also play a very useful part. Such agreements, provided they are concluded for a long period and on a basis balancing the strength of the national industries concerned, might lead to the stabilisation of Customs duties at a reduced rate.

4. Agricultural Questions.

(a) With the co-operation of the International Institute of Agriculture, a large number of agricultural experts were heard by the Economic Committee in January 1931. The experts' reports were published in the form of a study of the question which enables the world-wide nature of the agricultural crisis to be realised.

The gravity of that crisis is such that the agricultural experts must continue to afford their co-operation in the examination of all economic questions affecting agriculture.

(b) Most of the experts attach particular importance to the organisation of the cereal trade. Efforts have been made to establish that organisation on a world-wide scale.

The International Institute of Agriculture held, in March 1931, a preparatory conference with a view to a world-conference on wheat. In May 1931, the London Conference, which comprised the wheat-exporting countries of Europe and overseas, did not succeed in reaching any wide measure of international agreement. The Second Committee recommends that active efforts should be continued with a view to reaching world agreement.

(c) As regards Europe, certain countries tried to establish, by bilateral conventions, agreements involving preference for purchases of cereals from Central and Eastern European States.

Those countries affirm that they have no wish to infringe the principle of the most-favoured-nation clause, nor any intention of setting up any new economic doctrine, their efforts being directed solely towards granting a temporary and limited exception which is urgently necessary in the present grave circumstances.

The granting of a preferential tariff on cereals would enable countries benefiting by it to sell their cereals at a fairly remunerative price and not, as is the case to-day, at much less than cost price; in this way their economic situation would be improved and their purchasing capacity increased. In return, the advantages granted by the exporting countries would benefit not only the country giving the assistance, but all States without distinction. The agreements would be submitted to the League and would be given wide publicity.

Certain delegations pointed out the drawbacks which might be involved by these departures from the most-favoured-nation clause, particularly if they were of a general or permanent character. In their opinion, the League should not give its approval to special benefits or privileges limited to particular groups of nations.

Taking these various views into consideration, the Committee considers that, in the exceptional conditions of the present time and in view of the economic distress which exists in certain countries but which affects all other countries, preferential tariffs might constitute an exceptional and temporary palliative, and that, subject to the agreed reservations in regard to the previous approval of the agreements, and provided they are given publicity and are in conformity with the principles laid down by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union, they may be regarded as likely to bring an appreciable measure of relief to the most seriously affected economic systems.

(d) Some countries have asked that the possibilities of extending the preference to agricultural products other than cereals should be studied.

The report submitted to the Commission of Enquiry for European Union by the Co-ordination Sub-Committee on Economic Questions provided that the study of this question should be entrusted to a special committee such as that on cereals.

The Second Committee notes this recommendation, but observes that the extension of the preference to products other than cereals is likely to give rise to anxiety in the minds of certain delegations who would like the special committee's conclusions to be carefully examined.

(e) Several delegations, voicing the views of a large number of agricultural experts, expressed their belief that the co-operative association of production and sale has an important part to play in the organisation of the disposal of agricultural products. The Second Committee considers that this question must be carefully watched by the economic organisation with the assistance of its agricultural experts and in close co-operation with the International Institute of Agriculture and the International Labour Office.

(f) The Second Committee welcomes the establishment of an International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company under the auspices of the League. International agricultural credit would have an important part to play in improving the conditions of agricultural production and trade and in developing markets. It would have most desirable moral and psychological effects in restoring confidence and bringing about, in the financial sphere, effective international co-operation among all countries.

Several delegations expressed a desire that the activities of the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company should not be confined to Europe.

The Second Committee hopes that the Conference convened by the International Institute of Agriculture for short-term agricultural credit will soon achieve practical results.

5. Veterinary Conventions.

After carrying out lengthy investigations with the assistance of veterinary experts of both importing and exporting countries, the Economic Committee in June last examined three preliminary draft Conventions relating to:

(a) The campaign against contagious diseases of animals;

(b) The conveyance in transit of animals, meat and other products of animal origin;

(c) Exports and imports of products of animal origin other than meat, meat preparations, fresh animal products, milk and products derived from milk.

Although these draft Conventions do not yet seem likely to provide the live-stock trade with the facilities which exporting States have for long been demanding, they nevertheless seem likely to help the transit of and trade in products of animal origin.

The Council therefore considered it desirable to communicate these drafts to the Governments, requesting them to send in their observations on them, and to state whether they considered them suitable to form a basis for an international Conference.

Further, the Committee noted the intention of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union to ask the Council " to request the Economic Committee of the League of Nations to prepare a preliminary draft international Convention on the import and export of animals, meat and other products of animal origin ".

The Second Committee approves this recommendation.

6. Unemployment.

(a) Among the measures of international solidarity most likely to remedy the effects of the economic depression and help to restore economic activity for the benefit of the workers of all countries, the Committee thought it desirable to contemplate the execution of large public works undertaken jointly by public or private bodies in European or extra-European territories.

Such a programme would primarily have the effect of remedying to some extent the distressing unemployment crisis. The execution of such a programme would be likely to bring relief to branches of trade in which the unemployed are particularly suffering from poverty. It would also be extremely effective in bringing about among the producers concerned the necessary co-ordination of joint efforts, and would thus indirectly help to create bonds of solidarity which could be further developed in the future.

The problem has already been attacked by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union, and the competent organs of the League of Nations are now dealing with it.

(b) The Committee approves the proposals submitted regarding international placing, and in particular proposals for the summoning of a technical Conference for that purpose.

(c) It also approves the recommendations of the Commission of Enquiry regarding the suggestions for the co-operation of factors in production for the exploitation of undeveloped territories.

7. Most-favoured-nation Clause.

The Assembly of 1930, having taken up the question of various divergences of opinion which had been revealed in the interpretation of the most-favoured-nation clause, and, desiring to eliminate this source of disputes and conflicts in inter-State commercial relations, asked the Economic Committee to study certain contested points relating to application, such as Customs quotas, anti-dumping and compensating duties, nationality of goods and like products.

The Assembly will now see that the Economic Committee has carried out most of its task. With the help of experts appointed by the countries which had laid these important questions before the Assembly, the Committee reached, in regard to Customs quotas, the nationality of goods and like products, certain conclusions which amplify and define more closely the doctrine of the most-favoured-nation clause which it formulated in 1929. It has still to give its decision with regard to the problem of anti-dumping and compensating duties.

On the other controversial points, the Economic Committee expressed a view which is in no way a rigidly theoretical one, but is based on essentially practical conceptions.

The Committee is glad to note the results reached by the Economic Committee, and suggests that the Assembly should urgently recommend Governments to take as the basis of their commercial policies the principles laid down by the Committee. It feels sure that those principles will reconcile, in the most equitable way, the legitimate interests of each country with the no less legitimate interests of international trade.

8. Treatment of Foreigners.

In the Final Protocol of the International Conference on the Treatment of Foreigners signed at Paris on December 5th, 1929, the delegates of the countries there represented urged the desirability of drafting the proposed Convention on the most liberal lines, with the possibility of allowing for the special situations of certain countries by granting them certain exceptions.

The Committee was informed that, although the enquiries made with regard to the documentation of the Paris Conference from the Governments which had taken part therein had not been completed within the prescribed time-limit, the interval had nevertheless been made use of by a certain number of Governments to initiate negotiations with a view to an agreement on a draft Convention which, in their opinion, would constitute an important progress as compared with the present situation.

The Committee was glad to hear that these negotiations were on the point of reaching a successful conclusion.

The Commission of Enquiry for European Union expressed the opinion that " a system of co-operation between European States is inconceivable unless the nationals and undertakings of one State receive in the territory of the other States equitable treatment approaching as nearly as possible to that accorded to the nationals and undertakings of the States concerned ".

The Committee entirely shares this view, but it considers that this equitable treatment should extend to all countries, and at any rate to all Members of the League. It hopes that the agreement which is on the point of being reached between a certain number of countries will facilitate the preparatory work for the second session of the Conference, and the conclusion of an international Convention established on such a basis as to provide solutions which will be likely to further the development of economic relations and international rapprochement to the various problems raised by the draft originally submitted to the Conference.

9. Customs Nomenclature.

The Sub-Committee of Experts appointed by the Economic Committee to study the unification of Customs nomenclature has to-day virtually concluded its work, after four years' assiduous labour.

Accordingly, the Council, in a resolution dated September 1st, 1931, authorised the Secretary-General to forward the draft unified Customs nomenclature, for examination, to all States Members or non-members of the League of Nations, these States being requested to say, within six months from the receipt of the draft, whether they are, in principle, prepared to adopt it, and to communicate their observations, if any, to the Secretary-General after consulting agricultural, industrial and commercial circles in their respective countries.

It considers it highly desirable that the different Governments should respond without delay to the invitation thus addressed to them, in order to allow the Economic Committee to revise the draft on the basis of the comments received from the Governments. Once this revision has been effected, the Economic Committee will have to prepare a draft international Convention for the adoption of the unified nomenclature.

The Committee is aware that the adoption of the unified Customs nomenclature will entail certain difficulties for the majority of States; but it is convinced that the adjustments which may be necessary will be amply compensated by the considerable advantages resulting from its adoption.

10. Indirect Protectionism : Marks of Origin.

The Economic Conference of 1927 pointed out that Customs tariffs did not constitute the sole obstacle to the development of commercial relations between the different countries, but that Customs barriers were often reinforced by administrative measures constituting one of the manifestations of indirect protectionism, the effects of which were often more injurious even than those of high tariffs.

In this connection, attention was drawn to a large number of similar measures. The studies which the Economic Committee had devoted to them related notably to the complaints aroused in industrial and commercial circles by the application of national laws prescribing the affixing of marks of origin to the goods themselves or to their make-up or packing.

The Economic Committee took care to examine this question in all its aspects and endeavoured to find both equitable and practicable remedies. The consultation of specially qualified experts to which it proceeded enabled it to draw up a series of conclusions which, without denying countries the right to take steps to enable consumers to distinguish between home and foreign goods, nevertheless stipulate that the means employed by States for this purpose should be chosen in such a way as to reduce to a minimum the obstacles and drawbacks which the resulting regulations may impose on the trade and industry of the exporting countries.

The Committee drew from this principle a series of conclusions which the Council has communicated to the Members of the League of Nations, recommending them to adopt the same.

The Committee is convinced that the observation of the Economic Committee's recommendations in this connection will have the most satisfactory results.

11. Bills of Exchange and Cheques.

The League of Nations achieved a further success during the year 1931 in the sphere of the unification of laws of the so-called " continental " type relating to cheques. The Conference held during the winter, like that of last year with regard to bills of exchange and promissory notes, succeeded in concluding three Conventions, which were signed within the prescribed time-limit by twenty-six States (the Convention concerning stamp duty in regard to cheques was signed by twenty-seven States).

The time-limit for the deposit of ratifications of the Conventions on Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes expires on September 1st, 1932, and that for the Conventions regarding Cheques on September 1st, 1933.

It is to be hoped that the Governments of the States concerned will take without delay the necessary steps for the instruments of ratification to be deposited within the prescribed periods. It is true that, as the application of these Conventions involves a change in the national legislation of States, Governments will have to proceed first of all to consultations and studies which cannot be effected very rapidly. It is to be hoped that, despite this difficulty, these States will be able to avoid a delay which might compromise the success of a work from which the most excellent results may be anticipated.

12. National Economic Councils.

International economic co-operation could no doubt attain more considerable results if the principal elements in each of the national economic systems, having been associated in good time with the preparation of these results, were disposed to accept the obligations which their Governments might enter into in the international sphere.

Furthermore, a more or less direct participation of the different economic circles in the studies, researches and debates initiated by the League of Nations with regard to problems of common interest would be likely to prepare in each country an enlightened body of public opinion giving international agreements the best chances of success.

The Committee therefore considers that it is in the interests of international co-operation to encourage the creation in countries where they do not yet exist, and the development in those where they do, of national consultative institutions representing in each country the most important elements in the national economic life.

During the year 1931, two meetings have already been held at Geneva between the representatives of national economic councils with a view to the common study of the causes of the present economic depression, and it appears that they have already given good results. The Committee considers that further steps should be taken in this direction. When organisations of this kind function in a larger number of countries, having studied the same questions, meetings of these organisations under the auspices of the League of Nations will bring a particularly valuable contribution to the examination of grave problems of the present day.

The Committee thinks it sufficient to draw the Council's attention to the utility of ensuring the co-operation of these national economic councils int he work of the League of Nations, leaving it to the Council to seek the best means of carrying this idea into effect. It considers, however, that this aim might be achieved by means of a suitable modification in the existing Economic Consultative Committee.

13. Economic Tendencies liable to influence World Peace.

Realising the connection which exists between economic policy and peace, the Second Committee is of opinion that the study begun in this connection by the Economic Organisation at the suggestion of the Economic Conference of 1927 should be pursued.

14. Pact of Economic Non-aggression.

The Committee shares the Sixth Committee's opinion that the proposal aiming at the creation of a Pact of Economic Non-aggression submitted to the Committee of Enquiry for European Union is a question of world-wide importance.

Leaving it to the proposed special committee to examine the substance of the question, the Second Committee is of opinion that the extra-European Members of the League of Nations should be requested to take part in the work of the special committee, particularly Australia, China, India, Japan and Uruguay. Furthermore, the Committee asks the Assembly to request the Council to invite the United States of America to be represented on this committee.

C. Draft Resolutions.

In conclusion, the Second Committee submits the following draft resolutions to the Assembly :

" 1. The Assembly,

" Recognising that the normal exchange of merchandise between the nations is seriously hampered by frequent changes in customs tariffs and, generally, by instability in commercial policy;

" Considering the statement made by the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts to the Commission of Enquiry for European Union to the effect that such changes greatly complicate the task of maintaining stability in the monetary and credit system of the world :

" Earnestly hopes that every country will try to the utmost possible extent to avoid any such change in tariff or commercial policy as would tend to increase the economic disequilibrium and further disturb the general balance of payments."

" 2. The Assembly,

" Having noted the resolutions adopted by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union as a consequence of the report of its Co-ordination Sub-Committee;

" Being informed that the Commission of Enquiry did not feel able to put these resolutions into effect until they had been submitted to the Assembly :

" Approves the said resolutions and requests the Council to take the necessary action to put them into effect.

" In particular as regards the report of the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts (document C.510.M.215.1931.VII) the Assembly,

" (a) Considering that closer economic co-operation is one of the essential conditions for relieving and overcoming the present economic crisis;

" Convinced that the report of the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts suggests the right methods for attaining this goal;

" Recognising that the seriousness of the crisis and the distress that the coming months will bring require a speedier application of all useful remedial measures :

" Notes the resolution of the Commission of Enquiry for Economic Union inviting the European Governments to present, if possible before January 1st, 1932, their observations on the said report, and recommends all the Goverments concerned in their future decisions to take account of the principles proposed by the report; [1]

" (b) Having noted the resolution adopted by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union regarding the appointment of a special committee to study the extension of a system of special facilities to agricultural products other than cereals;

" Considering that such extension would raise difficult questions of principle, in particular as regards the relation between such a system and the most-favoured-nation clause :

" Deems it desirable that the findings of the special committee referred to above should be examined by the Economic Committee before being submitted to the Commission of Enquiry for European Union."

" 3. The Assembly,

" Considering that among the means likely to contribute to better general organisation, the experts consulted during the last few years, and more recently the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts, have expressed the opinion that under certain conditions the development of international industrial agreements may exercise a beneficial influence on the organisation of industry and the regulation of trade;

" Bearing in mind also the relation which these experts descry between such industrial agreements and the lowering of customs barriers :

" Draws the attention of the Governments to the recommendations of the Economic Experts in this connection.

" It requests in particular the Governments and the League of Nations to devote their attention to studying the means of ensuring that international economic agreements should be established and should operate in the general interest in conformity with these recommendations and with the principles formulated in the report of the International Economic Conference.

" It draws special attention to the necessity of measures to ensure as wide publicity as possible for these agreements, making it possible to follow their activities so as to safeguard all legitimate interests, particularly those of consumers, whether countries or persons.

" It further requests the Economic Committee of the League of Nations to resume and push forward its consultations concerning the most important branches of production.

" While leaving the Economic Organisation to appreciate the conditions in which these meetings would offer the greatest chances of success and to select the products in respect of which agreement appears to it most easily obtainable, the Assembly calls its attention to the following commodities which seem to it likely to fulfil most satisfactorily the conditions for this purpose : Cereals, coal, wood, paper, artificial silk, leather, hides and skins, electrical material, motor cars and chemical products."

" 4. The Assembly,

" Seeing that, among the measures of international solidarity best calculated to mitigate the effects of the economic depression and to assist the resumption of activity which would benefit the workers of all countries, consideration should be given to the execution of important public works jointly undertaken by public or private groups on European or extra-European territory;

" Seeing, further, that the problem has already been approached by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union and has been laid before the competent organs of the League of Nations;

" In order to expedite the examination of these programmes, to co-ordinate them on an international scale, to hasten their putting into effect and to follow their execution :

" Invites the Council of the League of Nations to instruct the Committee of Enquiry set up by the Communications and Transit Organisation, which needs to be completed by representatives of the International Labour Office and possibly of the economic and financial organs of the League, to undertake these various tasks.

" This Committee will examine the concrete proposals of the various Governments, particularly from the point of view of the utility and productivity of the works proposed.

" It will report to the Council of the League of Nations. The Commission of Enquiry for European Union will be called on to give its opinion on the proposals relating to Europe."

" 5. The Assembly notes with satisfaction that the draft unified Customs nomenclature prepared, after an urgent request from the Assembly, by the Sub-Committee of Experts appointed for the purpose, has now been completed.

" It considers that the adoption of an agreement to utilise a uniform Customs nomenclature would facilitate the development of international economic relations.

" Being convinced that States will understand that the great advantages resulting from the adoption of such a common instrument will amply compensate for the difficulties of adjustment which its adoption may entail :

" It agrees with the procedure suggested by the Economic Committee and the Sub-Committee of Experts and approved by the Council.

[1] The delegations of Denmark, Norway and Sweden proposed the following amendment to the latter portion of this sentence :

" It recommends the report to the attention of all the Governments."

"It therefore earnestly appeals to all Members and to the States non-members of the League of Nations, to which the draft unified Customs nomenclature will shortly be submitted, to examine the draft without delay, so that they may be enabled to forward their replies to the Secretariat as soon as possible."

"6. The Assembly notes with satisfaction the valuable results of the two International Conferences for the Unification of Laws on Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes and Cheques, and strongly urges the Governments of the States concerned to take steps to ensure that the instruments of ratification of these Conventions shall be deposited as soon as possible and, in any case, before the expiry of the time-limits provided."

"7. The Assembly,

"Considering that it would be desirable to encourage the formation and development of national institutions (National Economic Councils) representing the most important economic and social elements in every State;

"Considering that institutions of this nature already exist—although with different methods and with different powers—in a certain number of countries, especially in Europe;

"Convinced of the desirability of utilising these institutions as much as possible in the work of improving international economic relations:

"Requests the Council to seek the most appropriate means of providing for the collaboration of National Economic Councils in the work of the League of Nations and suggests that this end might be secured by an appropriate modification of the composition of the Economic Consultative Committee."

ANNEX 12.

ECONOMIC WORK OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

SECTION B, 3: INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC AGREEMENTS.

TEXT OF THE REPORT PROPOSED BY THE DRAFTING COMMITTEE.

Among the means contemplated for improving the organisation of production and for substituting systematic and co-ordinated organisations for unorganised activity, the World Economic Conference and, still more recently, the Committee of Economic Experts have mentioned the development of international agreements. The Second Committee agrees with the opinion expressed by them that, under certain conditions and guarantees which they define, the development of international economic agreements may exercise a beneficial influence on the organisation of industry, agriculture and trade. Agreements of this kind may reduce the danger of over-production, and also provide a basis for international co-operation. In this connection, the Second Committee looks forward with interest to the publication of the report by the specialised experts who have studied the problem of international industrial agreements under the direction of the Economic Committee.

It is undoubtedly important, in order to avoid any disadvantages which they might involve, to provide all necessary guarantees in respect of such agreements and their operation. Is is essential that the interests of consumers should be adequately safeguarded, and that States should not be left without means of protecting themselves against an influence which might become too powerful, and that, moreover, any combines formed should be sufficiently adaptable to avoid permanently crystallising the existing conditions of manufacture in the various countries, and to give the economic life of various countries legitimate scope for expansion.

While leaving the Economic Organisation to appreciate the conditions in which these meetings would offer the greatest chances of success, and to select the products in respect of which agreement appears to it most easily obtainable, the Committee calls its attention to the fact that, in the discussion, the following commodities were mentioned by several delegations as being likely to fulfil most satisfactorily the conditions for this purpose: cereals, wine, cork, hemp, coal, wood, paper, artificial silk, leather, hides and skins, electrical material, motor cars and chemical products.

TEXT OF RESOLUTION 3 AS PROPOSED BY THE DRAFTING COMMITTEE.

Considering that, among the means likely to contribute to better economic organisation, the World Economic Conference and, more recently, the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts have expressed the opinion that, under certain conditions and guarantees, the development of international economic agreements may exercise a beneficial influence on the organisation of production and the regulation of trade:

Draws the attention of the Governments to the recommendations of the economic experts in this connection.

It requests, in particular, the Governments and the League of Nations to devote their attention to studying the means of ensuring that international economic agreements should be organised and operated in the general interest and with due regard to all interests concerned in accordance with the recommendations of the economic experts and the relevant chapter in the report of the World Economic Conference. It draws special attention to the necessity of measures to ensure as wide publicity as possible for these agreements, making it possible to follow their activities so as to safeguard all legitimate interests, particularly those of consumers, whether countries or persons.

It further requests the Economic Committee of the League of Nations to resume and push forward its consultations concerning the most important branches of production.

(The last paragraph has been embodied in the Report itself.)

ECONOMIC WORK OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

AMENDMENT TO SECTION B, 4 (c), OF THE DRAFT REPORT SUBMITTED BY THE RAPPORTEUR.

4. AGRICULTURAL QUESTIONS.

These countries affirm that they have no wish to infringe the principle of the most-favoured-nation clause, nor have they any intention of setting up any new economic doctrine, their efforts being directed solely towards granting a temporary and limited exception, which is urgently necessary in the present grave circumstances. They also expressed the opinion that the granting of a preferential tariff on cereals would enable countries benefiting by it to sell their cereals at a fairly remunerative price, and not, as is the case to-day, at much less than cost price. In this way, their economic situation would be improved and their purchasing capacity increased. They add that the advantages granted in return by the exporting countries would benefit, not only the country giving the assistance, but all States without distinction. The agreements would be submitted to the League and would be given wide publicity.

Those countries consider that, in the exceptional conditions of the present time, and in view of the economic distress which exists in certain countries but which affects all other countries, preferential tariffs might constitute an exceptional and temporary palliative, and that, subject to the agreed reservations in regard to the previous approval of the agreements, and provided they are given publicity and are in conformity with the principles laid down by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union, they may be regarded as likely to bring an appreciable measure of relief to the economic systems concerned.

On the other hand, certain countries pointed out the drawbacks which might be involved by these departures from the most-favoured-nation clause. In their opinion, the League should not give its approval to special benefits or privileges limited to particular groups of nations.

The Second Committee notes the report drawn up on this matter by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union.

ANNEX 14.

LETTER, DATED SEPTEMBER 24TH, 1931, FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE FOURTH COMMITTEE TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SECOND COMMITTEE.

With reference to the letter sent by you on September 21st to the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission, I have the honour to communicate to you herewith the report of the Supervisory Commission, which was adopted by the Fourth Committee at its meeting of September 23rd.

Endorsing the Supervisory Commission's conclusions, the Fourth Committee has decided to enter a credit of 250,000 francs in the 1932 budget for the work of the Financial Committee in 1932; on the other hand, it has not been able to accept the Second Committee's proposal to enter in the budget a supplementary credit of 50,000 francs for the study of the question of the recurrence of periods of economic depression.

(Signed) POLITIS,
Chairman of the Fourth Committee.

ANNEX 15.

DRAFT REPORT OF THE SECOND COMMITTEE OF THE ASSEMBLY ON THE FINANCIAL WORK OF THE LEAGUE.

PART I.—GENERAL.

During the past year, since the last meeting of the Assembly, the world has been subjected to an economic depression of unparalleled severity. Month by month the effects of this depression have become more acute; its scope has become more widespread. Since the early summer of this year, the financial structure within which the mechanism of production and distribution must operate has been shaken by shock succeeding shock. During the week in which the Second Committee was occupied with financial questions, events of the gravest import have taken place. How far-reaching their effects may be it is too early to foresee. Certain it is only that the problems of primordial importance to-day, the problems to the solution of which the efforts of all must be devoted, are essentially financial. Economic recovery is dependent, and must be dependent, on a betterment of the financial situation.

The Second Committee has been faced during its deliberations by the difficulty that the day-to-day evolution of events during this past week, and, indeed, during the weeks immediately preceding its session, have been too rapid and have been too largely determined by that public sentiment which in times of stress it is more easy to comprehend than to control. In these circumstances, the Committee desires to draw special attention to the Minutes of its discussions and to the important statements made by a number of delegates who took part in those discussions.

But, in spite of this momentary difficulty, the Second Committee is convinced that the League of Nations, during the months to come, may contribute much, and must be equipped and prepared to render the utmost contribution in its power. Indeed, it has already entered upon this task.

Financial problems of the first magnitude have arisen for solution—problems, however, which, at the stage reached until quite recently, have demanded either joint action by banks or day-to-day co-operation between a relatively restricted number of Governments. Such limited joint action and banking co-operation are always required, and very much still remains to be done by this means in the near future. But, in recent weeks, a further stage has been reached at which the aid of the Financial Organisation of the League is urgently demanded. Both the Austrian and the Hungarian Governments have called in the aid of the Council. Measures have already been taken with a view to solving the Austrian difficulties, and a delegation of the Financial Committee is to visit Hungary almost at once.

Similar or other action may be required elsewhere. The League must not only support and reinforce the financial reconstruction schemes already undertaken; if other countries need emergency aid or advice the League must be ready to give it. The demands that may arise cannot be foreseen; but, in the opinion of the Second Committee, it is imperative that the Council and the Committee which is its financial adviser should be in a position to afford the full measure of help that lies in the power of the League. Provision must be made for prompt and effective action. The Second Committee has accordingly recommended that a special fund now voted by the Fourth Committee should be made available in the budget of the League for this purpose. It recommends, further, that the Assembly should suggest to the Council the desirability of arranging for a special procedure for prompt action. If the existing organisation and equipment proves insufficient to bear the temporary strain which may be placed upon it, it must be strengthened and expanded.

Existing difficulties, however, will not be overcome by such special international action alone. International action on a wider scale may be required; national efforts must be made. The technical position may gradually improve by the natural impulse of economic forces; it may worsen. Individual initiative is essential, but a stimulus to such initiative may be, and, in our opinion, should be, given by Governments. When individual demand is weak and lacking in confidence, it may be necessary for Governments to stimulate social demand. We believe that such is the financial situation to-day, and that the policy of the Government of the United States of America, where monetary conditions permit and unemployment is serious, in taking the initiative in the matter of public works, might have happy results. Such a policy will create a direct demand for material and for labour. The labour employed on such works will itself create a further demand for goods, and thus may the whole mechanism of production be gradually restarted.

Active measures of this sort in the financially stronger countries cannot but have, in existing circumstances, beneficial effects. But they will need to be accompanied by a direct stimulu to production in other countries, a stimulus which can only be given by the gradual extension of foreign lending as conditions permit. Such lending will depend, not only on the willingness of those who have available funds to lend, but on the success of the efforts made by borrowing countries to create and maintain the necessary conditions. For these reasons, the Second Committee recommends that the Assembly urge all Governments to do everything that lies in their power to promote international understanding and such domestic, social and political conditions as will facilitate the movement of capital.

By all, to-day, sacrifices must be made; national endeavour must precede or accompany international aid. Foreign capital will not flow readily to countries whence domestic capital is exported owing to the lack of confidence of its citizens. But conditions may arise in which countries are so directly and so seriously affected by the economic depression that, without extraneous aid, they can hope neither to borrow without aid nor to maintain their financial equipment without borrowing. If such circumstances arise, there may be no alternative to an international guarantee by Governments of foreign loans granted. For special cases, and subject to special safeguards, such a procedure might have, in the opinion of the Second Committee, to be contemplated in the future. The scheme which the Financial Committee elaborated with the experts which it called upon to assist it for the establishment of an International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company affords an example of one method by which such Government assistance may be afforded. In other cases, direct Government guarantees may be required.

In other cases, again, it may be possible to promote international lending by establishing special machinery for that purpose. The Second Committee had before it the outline of such a scheme prepared for the Commission of Enquiry for European Union by M. Francqui, which is designed to promote lending on medium term. In the recommendations put forward at the end of this report will be found one suggesting that this scheme should be studied. But by whatever procedure the flow of international lending may be restarted, it is of vital importance to secure that the moneys advanced should be used for real productive purposes. The League will be performing a service of the greatest value if, by the measures it adopts, it can prevent the loan of moneys to public authorities or to others for unproductive or improper purposes.

The recommendations put forward in this report are concerned in part with the necessary implementing of work already undertaken by the Financial Organisation during the past year or of the resolutions adopted by the eleventh Assembly last September. That work is described and those resolutions referred to in the second part of this report.

With reference to the recommendations concerning the work which is likely to arise in connection with the present financial crisis, the Second Committee desires to emphasise again one point.

During the coming months, questions of the gravest importance must arise for solution. The arrangements which have been made concerning existing international debts are of short duration. It is the business of the creditors and debtors immediately concerned to find means for prolonging, modifying or terminating those arrangements on their expiration in such a way as to permit of a more normal conduct of business and in such a way as to avoid a further shock to confidence. The measures which they will find most appropriate to the moment must depend on the underlying economic conditions and on the state of public sentiment. The general public, no less than the banker and the entrepreneur, can thus contribute much to the amelioration of the general situation.

But the problems which arise for solution are manifold and difficult, and Governments and their international machinery at Geneva must be ready to act. It is, above all, important, in the opinion of the Committee, that the League should be prepared and equipped to help promptly and efficiently; that it should be in a state of constant alertness; that it should consider no task too great to assume, and, when the circumstances demand, no risk too great to take. Its aid will be sought, and that aid must be freely given, whether by special enquiries and advice, by the elaboration of new schemes of financial reform, by the erection of new financial machinery, or by special discussions and meetings.

PART II.—WORK OF THE PAST YEAR.

The work of the Financial Organisation during the past year has been exceptionally wide in its scope. The late Director of what was formerly the Economic and Financial Section visited India in the winter of this year on the request of the Government of that country, and went on directly from India to China. His report on the creation of an Economic Council for India was published simultaneously by the Indian Government and, with its consent, by the League of Nations. Its interest, in view of the attention which is to-day being paid to this question of economic councils and economic planning, is of much more than national interest. His visit to China was in response to a request received from the Chinese Government that he should discuss with it the effects of the present depression on China's economic activities. Expert enquiries have not, however, been confined in the financial field to the Continent of Asia. A financial expert took part in the work of the mission sent to Liberia in the summer of this year by the Committee of the Council in order to study the problem raised by the request for assistance submitted by the Government of that country. Another visited Lithuania, on the request of the Lithuanian Government, to report on certain outstanding problems arising out of the Memel Convention. The Deputy Secretary-General and the present Director of the Financial Section paid a visit to Vienna after the request of the Austrian Government, to which reference is made below.

Agricultural Credits.

The most important piece of new constructive work carried out by the Financial Committee until its present session has been in connection with agricultural credits. When the Committee met last year, one of the most insistent problems with which European countries especially were faced was that of providing long-term credits to agriculture.

Accordingly, the Financial Committee, acting on the instructions it received, elaborated, in the first half of the year, an International Convention, which has already been signed by eighteen States, for the creation of an International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company and the Constitutive Charter and Statutes for this institution. This is a sound and practical scheme which is fully described in the report to the Assembly (document A.6.1931), and should come into operation as soon as the conditions of the financial markets permit the capital to be subscribed.

It is to be hoped, therefore, that the signatory States will ratify the Convention at an early date, and that all European States which have not yet signed the Convention will do so before the end of this month.

Other Long-term Credit Problems.

This Convention was designed to meet the special difficulties of the agricultural countries. But, since May, the need for long-term capital has spread far beyond these countries. In view of this new situation, the French Government put forward certain proposals to the Commission of Enquiry for European Union, which were afterwards examined by a special Committee appointed by the Council. The report of this Committee (document C.504.M.211.1931.VII) was approved by the Council on September 14th.

> " The problems of international loans ", it is pointed out, " can no longer be considered by the League solely with regard to their effects on individual borrowing States, but should be viewed rather in connection with the general problem of international credit, and any action likely to promote a flow of capital to-day would promise valuable international advantages."

The Committee recommended, therefore, that the League's policy with regard to the issue of loans under its auspices should be developed, and that, as the French Government had suggested, the Financial Committee, acting in accordance with the instructions received from the Council of the League, should be prepared to consider such applications from borrowing States as may be made to it for its assistance. These proposals, it is observed, constitute rather a development of than a departure from the policy approved by the Assembly last year. They have received the approval of the Council, which decided, in this connection, that the collaboration of Treasury officials should be obtained in all cases where requests from Governments for help or advice involve the examination of questions of public finance. The Second Committee desires to emphasise the necessity of the Financial Organisation of the League being ready to meet all calls that may be made upon it.

Other Work of the Financial Committee.

The other work of the Financial Committee has been largely connected with the reconstruction schemes instituted in early years. The great undertaking of settling 1,400,000 refugees in Greece has been successfully concluded, and the similar work conducted in Bulgaria is nearing completion. A special enquiry has been conducted, on the request of the Bulgarian Government, into the co-operative system in that country.

Bulgarian Budget.

The general depression has had serious consequences for the Bulgarian budget. The financial year 1930-31 closed, owing to a falling-off in receipts, with a large deficit, which threatened to be renewed in the current year.

The Financial Committee has taken active steps to deal with the position. It made urgent representations to the Bulgarian Government concerning the necessity of taking energetic measures to restore the balance between revenue and expenditure, both by cutting down expenses and increasing the yield from existing taxes or creating new ones. The Bulgarian Finance Minister has submitted to it a detailed plan, under which it may be hoped that the budget will be balanced and the Treasury position, which was compromised by the previous deficit, will be gradually improved.

Greece and Estonia.

The Financial Committee continued to follow the situation of the Banks of Greece and Estonia which, with its support, had restored the stability of the currency in these two countries.

At the same time, the Committee has kept in touch with the economic and financial situation in these two countries.

Counterfeiting Currency.

A first conference of the representatives of the central police offices with a view to the suppression of counterfeiting currency met at Geneva from March 4th to 7th, 1931. This Conference, the chief aim of which was to develop international co-operation between these offices for the prevention and suppression of counterfeiting currency, adopted for this purpose a certain number of recommendations and a series of administrative regulations.

Gold.

The Gold Delegation has pursued its work and devoted itself, in particular, to the study of the distribution of gold, on which question it issued a report in the spring of this year.

The Gold Delegation expects to conclude its work at its next session and to publish on that occasion a general report on the whole complicated question submitted to it.

Fiscal Committee.

During its second year of existence, the Fiscal Committee continued to devote its efforts to numerous and varied tasks. Inter alia, it drew up two model drafts for a plurilateral convention for the avoidance of double taxation of the chief categories of income, which it recommended to the attention of the Governments.

Further, the enquiry initiated, with the help of the grant made by the Rockefeller Foundation, into the apportionment of profits of undertakings operating in several countries and the possibility of unifying the methods employed in this connection by the different fiscal administrations is making satisfactory progress. The legislation of several important countries has been carefully examined, and it is hoped to reach final conclusions in the comparatively near future.

The Committee also dealt with the taxation of instruments of international commerce, double taxation in respect of the turnover tax, and the Customs and fiscal duties on newspapers and periodicals.

The draft Convention which it had prepared, with the help of the Transit Organisation, on the taxation of foreign motor vehicles was adopted almost as it stood by the European Conference on Road Traffic and was signed by twelve countries.

It seems that, thanks to the efforts made in this sphere by the Financial Organisation of the League of Nations before the Fiscal Committee came into existence, the field of double taxation is being more and more restricted. Certain bilateral conventions of a general nature have recently been concluded between France and Italy, Finland and Sweden, Belgium and France and Belgium and Italy; they are generally based on the model drafts prepared by the Conference of Government Experts in 1928. As regards maritime navigation, numerous agreements have already been concluded between the nations concerned,

Committee of Statistical Experts.

In January, a new permanent committee—the Committee of Statistical Experts—was appointed in accordance with the terms of the International Convention relating to Economic Statistics. This Committee held its first meeting in March, when it laid down the lines of the large programme of work that lies before it. At the same time, it took action on two specific and urgent questions—the compilation of a common list of statistical territories to be specified in national statistics of external trade and of a list of commodities entering into such trade.

Economic Intelligence Service.

The eleventh Assembly instructed the Economic and Financial Organisation of the League :

(1) To undertake an enquiry into the course and phases of the present economic depression, and

(2) To examine, after getting in touch with international organisations, advisory councils, research institutes, etc., by what means the work already undertaken on the problem of the recurrence of periods of economic depression might be co-ordinated.

Professor Ohlin, of Stockholm University, was appointed at the beginning of the year to take charge of the enquiry referred to in the first of these resolutions.

In accordance with the wishes of the Assembly, the enquiry has been carried out in close collaboration with the International Labour Office and the International Institute of Agriculture, which have furnished information relating to the subjects with which they are concerned, and with a number of national economic councils and economic research institutes. At the beginning of March last, and again in July, meetings of experts from these councils and institutions, together with representatives from the International Labour Office, the International Institute of Agriculture and the International Chamber of Commerce, were held at Geneva to discuss the plan of the enquiry and certain of the technical problems involved. The majority of the national organisations represented at these meetings and a number of Governments prepared special memoranda concerning the conditions in their own countries.

On the second resolution a special report has been drawn up (document A.55.1931.IIa) by representatives of those advisory and technical organisations with whom the last Assembly decided contact should be established. In this report, it is recommended that meetings of representatives of such of these institutes and of any national or international organisations as are engaged upon work on the question and of individual experts should be convened at suitable intervals.

On the importance of this proposed work, this Committee laid special emphasis last year in a striking passage of its report.

> " When we consider the magnitude of the losses ", it remarked, " from which the world suffers during a period of economic stagnation similar to that through which the world is now passing, it is impossible not to be impressed by the almost absolute failure of society up to the present to devise any means by which such disasters may be averted. The Committee felt that this problem was one which imperatively demanded co-ordinated and concerted study."

It will be observed that the proposal put forward by the representatives of the economic councils, research institutes and other bodies consulted by the Financial Organisation is a conservative one. Such conservatism is wise to-day. What is essential is to begin the work in the hope that we may ultimately—however slowly and falteringly—find means to avert or to lessen depression such as that which we are experiencing to-day.

In spite of the large amount of work falling upon it in connection with the enquiry into the course and phases of the economic depression, the Economic Intelligence Service has, during the last year, issued new editions of the Memoranda on International Trade and Balance of Payments and on Production and Trade, and the Statistical Year-Book. The Monthly Bulletin of Statistics has been published regularly and a Memorandum on Commercial Banks is now in the press.

Draft Resolution.

In conclusion, the Second Committee submits the following draft resolution to the Assembly :

" The Assembly,

" (1) At this grave moment of financial and economic anxiety, urges on all Governments to do everything that lies in their power to promote international understanding and such domestic conditions as to facilitate lending both at home and abroad.

" It draws the attention more especially of the Governments of creditor countries on long- and short-term account where unemployment is serious to the imperative need of taking active and prompt measures to revive economic activity by the stimulation of demand by means of the initiation of public works or by any other means.

" (2) It welcomes the decision of the Council that the Financial Committee should be prepared to consider applications from borrowing States for assistance, and requests the Council to follow closely the evolution of events and to take all measures necessary to assure that at any moment the decisions and action demanded by the situation may be taken without delay, and that the League of Nations may be in a position to render the full measure of service that may be demanded of it, and, in particular, to provide that the Financial Organisation of the League of Nations obtains the funds and the technical assistance necessary to permit it to afford to all States Members prompt and effective assistance whenever such assistance be sought, whether by means of delegations or advice or by any other means; and to provide, further, that the Financial Organisation may be able to arrange for such international consultations as may prove to be desirable.

" (3) In view of the fact that the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts has given favourable consideration to M. Francqui's proposal to establish an institution for long- and medim-term credits, it requests the Council of the League of Nations to instruct the competent organs of the League to examine, as soon as possible, with the assistance of M. Francqui, the proposal submitted by the latter to the Sub-Committee of Economic Experts.

" (4) It expresses its appreciation of the valuable work carried out during the past year by the Financial Committee and its special Delegations on Gold and Agricultural Credits and of the Fiscal Committee and the Financial Organisation as a whole, and notes with special satisfaction the Convention for setting up an International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company, the recent response to the request submitted by the Austrian and the Hungarian Governments for enquiries into their financial situation, the second interim report of the Gold Delegation and the study which has been published on the course and phases of the economic depression.

" It urges all Governments of signatory States to accelerate their ratifications of the Convention of the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company, and hopes that those others who, under the terms of the Convention, are enabled to deposit their signatures before September 30th will do so.

" (5) It approves the proposal that, in order to co-ordinate the work now being conducted on the problem of the recurrence of periods of economic depression, the League should convene meetings of experts and representatives of those economic councils, research institutes and other organisations that are actively engaged on this question, and should appoint a qualified economist and adequate staff for this purpose, and decides that this work shall be begun in the year 1933."

LETTER, DATED SEPTEMBER 25TH, 1931, FROM THE SECRETARY OF THE SECOND COMMITTEE TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE FOURTH COMMITTEE.

M. Janson, Chairman of the Second Committee, has instructed me to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 24th, 1931, informing him that the Fourth Committee has decided to include in the budget for 1932 a credit of 250,000 francs for the work of the Financial Committee in 1932; but that, on the other hand, it has not seen its way to accept the Second Committee's proposal to include in the budget a supplementary credit of 50,000 francs for the study of the periodicity of economic depressions.

This last question was again studied by the Second Committee at its meeting yesterday afternoon. The Second Committee decided to ask its Chairman to approach the Chairman of the Fourth Committee again, requesting that Committee to reconsider the possibility of including in the budget for 1932 a sum of 50,000 francs, or a smaller sum, for the study of the periodicity of economic depressions. The Second Committee is of opinion that, in the present circumstances, that problem is of particular urgency and importance.

(Signed) KERNO,

Secretary of the Second Committee.

ANNEX 17.

LETTER, DATED SEPTEMBER 26TH, 1931, FROM THE SECRETARY OF THE FOURTH COMMITTEE TO THE SECRETARY OF THE SECOND COMMITTEE.

I am instructed by the Chairman of the Fourth Committee to inform you that, at its Meeting on September 25th, the Fourth Committee decided not to revoke the decision it had taken to refuse the approval of the credit requested for the study of the periodicity of economic depressions.

(Signed) J. H. BIELER,

Secretary of the Fourth Committee.

THIRD COMMITTEE

(Reduction of Armaments.)

AGENDA.

I. Questions referred to the Third Committee by the Assembly at its Meeting on September 7th, 1931.

(a) Report of the Special Committee to frame a Draft General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War (Item No. 12 on the Agenda of the Assembly).

(b) Part of the Report on the Work of the League since the Last Session of the Assembly concerning the Organisation for Communications and Transit (Item No. 17 on the Agenda of the Assembly).

II. Questions referred to the Third Committee by the Assembly at its Meeting on September 12th, 1931.

(c) Draft Resolution of the Spanish Delegation concerning the Co-operation of Women and of the Press in the Work of the League of Nations.

(d) Draft Resolution of the Delegations of Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland, concerning an Armaments Truce.

FIRST MEETING.

Held on Saturday, September 12th, 1931, at 5.30 p.m.

Chairman : M. MUNCH (Denmark).

1. Constitution of the Bureau.

On the suggestion of M. BENEŠ (Czechoslovakia), Sir Thomas WILFORD (New Zealand) was elected Vice-Chairman.

2. Publicity of Meetings.

The Committee decided that, in accordance with precedent, its meetings would be public, unless otherwise decided in special cases.

3. Agenda.

The Committee adopted its agenda and the order of discussion of the items on the agenda.

4. Presence of the Special Committee's Rapporteur during the Discussion of the Draft General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that it would be a great advantage for the Committee if a representative of the Special Committee which dealt with this question were present at the meetings in which the draft general Convention was discussed. As M. Politis, the Chairman of that Special Committee, was Chairman of the Fourth Committee, Dr. Lange, Rapporteur of the Special Committee, might be requested to be present at the meetings in order to supply any information which the members of the Committee might desire.

The proposal was adopted.

5. Election of Rapporteurs.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) and M. BUERO (Uruguay) were appointed Rapporteurs, M. de Madariaga for questions (a) and (d) of the agenda and M. Buero for questions (b) and (c).

6. Communications of Importance to the Working of the League in Times of Emergency.

The CHAIRMAN reminded the Committee that four questions came under this general heading :

1. Facilities to be granted to Aircraft.
2. Facilities to be granted to Motor Transport.
3. Construction of a League Wireless Station.
4. Layout of an Aerodrome near the Seat of the League of Nations.

At its previous session, the Assembly had adopted a resolution laying down rules regarding the facilities which should be granted by the States to air and motor transport of importance to the working of the League in times of emergency. This resolution provided that, on the one hand, the Council should decide on certain measures of detail relating to the identification of aircraft employed on the League's work, and, on the other hand, regarding the application of the rules established by the Assembly, negotiations should be undertaken between the Secretary-General and the Governments.

No new question had arisen on this subject, but the Assembly could no doubt note with satisfaction, in view of the information contained in the Secretary-General's report and of the supplementary information which the Secretariat could supply, that the discussions had given rise to no difficulty; on the contrary, the replies from the Governments showed that the regime desired by the Assembly could be put into application immediately. Moreover, the Council, at its previous session, had taken the necessary measures regarding the identification of aircraft employed by the League.

With regard to question 3, the Committee would be interested to know that, in view of the present state of its work, the station would be ready at the latest by the beginning of 1932.

The Committee might then note with satisfaction the progress achieved on these three questions.

With regard to question 4, the Assembly had received a final technical report. The technical examination appeared to be terminated, but it would appear that the discussions necessary for regulating non-technical questions had not yet been pursued between the Swiss Government and the Secretariat of the League. It was for the Committee to enquire whether, under these circumstances, the Assembly should not wait until it was in a position to have the more complete technical and non-technical information necessary for its decision.

It would be advisable to reserve this question for the next Assembly, which, after examining the detailed report, would be in a position to give its opinion on the entire scheme.

The Chairman opened the discussion on questions 1, 2 and 3.

M. FRANÇOIS (Netherlands) stated that his Government, while approving the proposed rules in principle, wished to draw attention to the advisability of the League having a distinctive emblem or mark for identifying its means of transport; this mark might also be used on other occasions.

M. MASSIGLI (France) asked that M. Haas should state the present position in regard to the questions under discussion.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) pointed out that, according to the Council's resolution regarding aircraft, it would appear that the League of Nations would only use aeroplanes placed at its disposal by third parties and that such machines would retain their nationality; while the resolution of the last Assembly stated that the advisability of the League of Nations having aircraft of its own should not be prejudged.

He urged the necessity for the League to have its own organs and a separate personality. In this respect, he also asked that the agents or staff of the League of Nations, when on offi ial missions, should be furnished with identification documents issued by the Council of the League of Nations and not by their country of origin.

Lord CECIL (British Empire), while regarding the problems raised by M. de Madariaga as of interest, thought that the only question to be discussed related to the identification of aircraft placed at the disposal of the League of Nations in times of emergency. If the League subsequently possessed aeroplanes, different provisions would then have to be made.

M. HAAS (Secretary-General of the Communications and Transit Organisation) explained that the regime adopted was essentially as follows. At times of emergency the States undertook to permit aircraft of the League of Nations, bearing certain distinctive marks, to fly over their territory. If their national defence required it, they might cause such aircraft to land at a frontier aerodrome if they undertook to provide for the continuation of the air transport. It might be concluded from the numerous replies received from the Governments that this regime would not give rise to any difficulty. Some countries had not yet replied, but there was no reason to expect that they would raise real difficulties. It might therefore be concluded that the proposed system would work. With regard to the question of identification of the aircraft, the Council had adopted a resolution which only applied to aircraft possessing a nationality. The Council had not thought fit to raise the question of aircraft belonging to the League of Nations. If this case arose, the Council could obviously settle the question of their identification.

The identification of persons was referred to in paragraph 7 of the resolution passed by the last Assembly, to the effect that " the Secretary-General will communicate the names of the persons on board — the crew and the passengers to be provided with documents certifying their status and mission ". Agents of the League of Nations would be provided with credentials signed by the Secretary-General. Members of delegations would be provided with identification documents supplied by the Governments.

There was no difficulty regarding motor transport; this method of transport did not raise the same questions of national security as air transport. The resolution regarding motor transport would certainly be applied integrally.

The CHAIRMAN repeated his proposals re questions 1, 2 and 3.

These proposals were adopted.

The CHAIRMAN opened the discussion on question 4, the construction of an aerodrome.

M. KELLER (Switzerland) agreed with the Chairman's proposals. He hoped, however, that, as in the past, the Secretariat would consult the Federal Government with regard to questions which had not yet been settled in order to obtain practical solutions.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) asked whether it was necessary to begin the discussion if the Committee adopted the Chairman's proposal to adjourn a decision till next year.

M. COLBAN (Norway) approved the Chairman's proposal to postpone the discussion until the following year. It would at the present time be impossible to ask for a credit for the aerodrome, but it should be clearly understood that the entire question should remain in its present state and that what might be done next year, after the preparatory study had been completed, would not be prejudged.

General DE MARINIS (Italy) also agreed that the question should be postponed until the next Assembly.

M. MASSIGLI (France), while not objecting to the postponement, wished to emphasise the urgency of the question. It was illogical to deal with identification marks on aircraft placed at the disposal of the League if such aircraft could not land at or leave Geneva. According to the experts' report, improvements were essential for normal traffic. Under such circumstances, it would appear that the League should not bear a substantial part of the expense necessary for improving the aerodrome.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) thought that even if it were impossible to vote credits this year, it would be useful to discuss the question. Such a discussion might show the necessity for further study which might take a certain time and might be better commenced now.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) asked what was the purpose of the military hangars shown on the plan attached to the report (document A.21.1931.VIII), what was the area and the capacity of the aerodrome, its distance from Geneva and the area of the surface to be subject to servitude.

M. HAAS (Secretary-General of the Communications and Transit Organisation) pointed out that the technical study was completed and its results were to be found in document A.21.1931.VIII. Some questions, however, in particular legal questions regarding the status of the aerodrome in times of emergency, were still unsettled. It had always been the custom of the Transit Committee to settle such questions with the co-operation of the Swiss authorities but, as it was difficult to do so during the Assembly, a postponement was necessary. With regard to the League's financial contribution, he wished to point out that this principle was not admitted in any document. The postponement of the question should, therefore, not be regarded as a result of a lack of credits, as this would imply that the League of Nations was henceforward prepared to make a substantial contribution.

In reply to Lord Cecil, M. Haas stated that the military hangars on the plan were already in existence, and there was no relation between their purpose and the use of the aerodrome by the League of Nations. The experts had not provided for any fresh construction of hangars, as they considered that in view of the present methods of manufacturing aircraft and the conditions under which the machines would remain at the aerodrome they could remain in the open air.

The aerodrome was situated about six kilometres from the centre of Geneva, but the town extended in that direction so that the enlargement of the aerodrome was somewhat expensive. In any case, it was near the boundaries of the town. M. Haas did not know exactly what area would be subject to servitude, but he would furnish this information later.

The Committee decided to reserve the question for the next Assembly.

SECOND MEETING.

Held on Monday, September 14th, 1931, at 5.15 p.m.

Chairman : M. MUNCH (Denmark).

7. Draft General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War : General Discussion.

The CHAIRMAN reviewed the history of the draft Convention. He thought it advisable to begin with a general discussion on the draft Convention and on Dr. Lange's report together, with the exception, however, of the recommendation submitted by the Polish delegation regarding the danger which might arise, in cases of international emergency, from irresponsible Press campaigns and the publication of incorrect and tendentious information. This recommendation was in harmony with a suggestion made by the Swedish Government. The members of the Committee would no doubt agree that the Polish delegation's recommendation should be discussed in connection with item (c) of the agenda — namely, Collaboration of Women and of the Press in the Work of the League (draft resolution submitted by the Spanish delegation).

The proposal of the Chairman was adopted.

M. D'AVILA LIMA (Portugal) paid a tribute to the excellent intentions of the authors of the draft, the principle of which must meet with general approval. The prevention of war was in accordance with the aspirations and general spirit prevailing among the peoples, and the task so well described in the preamble of the draft should be energetically pursued.

The speaker wished, however, to submit some observations.

The draft was restricted to the application of Article 11 of the Covenant. While appreciating the motives which had led the Special Committee to restrict the scope of the draft, he pointed out that the threat of war was also referred to in other articles of the Covenant, in particular in Article 15 as a whole, the introductory paragraph of Article 12, and the last paragraph of Article 10. All these articles referred to action by the Council. It should, however, be remembered that the maintenance of peace was the common task of the Assembly and the Council.

The speaker had some doubt as to the distinction to be drawn between a threat of war and a state of war. Should it be considered that a concentration of troops near the frontier, or blockade operations, or even hostile acts in the economic or financial sphere, constituted a threat of war, or the beginning of a state of war ? The Portuguese delegation considered, with the British delegation, that the Polish proposal relating to Article 2 deserved the greatest sympathy and might usefully be discussed on another occasion. In view of the extreme importance of air forces in modern warfare, it was regrettable that this arm was not expressly mentioned in the first paragraph of Article 2.

The Portuguese delegation recognised that the wording of Article 3 was entirely justified. It also agreed with the text of Article 4, while admitting that the question of the application of Article 16 of the Covenant was unaffected.

Lastly, Article 8 confirmed his previous remarks on the application of the draft Convention to Articles 13, 15, and 16 of the Covenant. Moreover, this article appeared to be unnecessary, since Article 20 of the Covenant abrogated all obligations or understandings which were inconsistent with the terms of the Covenant.

The general discussion was then closed.

8. Draft General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War : Discussion of the Articles.

PREAMBLE.

The Committee decided to postpone the discussion of the preamble until the end.

ARTICLE 1.

" The High Contracting Parties undertake, in the event of a dispute arising between them and being brought before the Council of the League of Nations, to accept and apply the conservatory measures of a non-military nature relating to the substance of the dispute which the Council, acting in accordance with the powers conferred upon it by the Covenant of the League of Nations, may recommend with a view to preventing the aggravation of the dispute.

" The Council shall fix the period of duration of these conservatory measures. It may extend this period should circumstances render it necessary. "

Article 1 was adopted.

ARTICLE 2, FIRST PARAGRAPH.

" In the event of a threat of war, the High Contracting Parties, parties to the dispute shall comply without delay with such measures as the Council, acting in virtue of the provisions of Article 11 of the Covenant of the League of Nations, and without prejudice to the other powers it derives from that article, may prescribe to ensure the withdrawal of the land or naval forces of that High Contracting Party which has entered the territory or waters of another High Contracting Party, or zone demilitarised in virtue of international agreements. "

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that the British delegation had proposed the two following amendments:

(1) Insert the word " territorial " before the words " waters of another High Contracting Party " ;

(2) After the words : " another High Contracting Party ", insert the words : " with which it is in dispute ".

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) submitted some observations on the idea of a threat of war. He drew attention to the following declaration by M. Sokal :

" The Polish delegation is of opinion that, in case of an invasion of a territory by hostile forces, Article 16 of the Covenant, and not the Convention, should come into play. "

The distinction between threat of war and state of war, although it was clear in the minds of people, was not clear in practice. It had happened that there had been an invasion and it was Article 11 of the Covenant that had come into play. It might be to the interest of an invaded country not to regard itself as being at war.

M. de Madariaga did not suggest any change in the text ; he merely wished to draw attention to this position.

M. SOKAL (Poland) stated that the Polish view had not changed. The Polish Government was convinced that Article 2 might lead to dangerous interpretations of the Pact of Paris. In connection with Article 2, paragraph 1, the question arose whether an accidental entry, or a mass invasion, was referred to. If this paragraph referred to minor frontier incidents, Article 11 of the Covenant was sufficient. If it referred to a forcible invasion, this would certainly constitute a violation of the Pact of Paris. The occupation of foreign territory by force of arms was equivalent to a declaration of war. The Polish Government could not admit that an armed invasion did not constitute war. Would this be the moment to take preventive measures ? Should the Council not then apply the common action provided for by the Covenant ? The adoption of the Convention by the Assembly would imply that it did not consider an invasion as a violation of the Pact of Paris.

These objections only referred to the first paragraph of the article. The other paragraphs would be very useful in case of political tension, both for avoiding incidents and for helping to decide which party was the aggressor. The Polish Government therefore proposed to omit the first paragraph.

The Polish delegation had already submitted the following text to be inserted in Article 2 to the Special Committee :

> " If, in the event of a threat of war, events should occur which might constitute a violation of an international obligation, the Council shall call upon the High Contracting Parties to put an end to the said violations, and the High Contracting Parties undertake to comply therewith without delay. "

As this text had been found to be too general, the Polish delegation now submitted a more precise text, which restricted the case to that where a contracting party violates its undertakings in respect of armaments. Such a violation would, in fact, be obvious proof of the hostile intentions of that party. This text was especially justified on the eve of the Disarmament Conference and would arm the Council with special powers for ensuring the maintenance of the undertakings given. The Conference might not be in a position to establish these powers itself, as some States participating in the Conference would be non-member States. This text would have the further advantage of emphasising the connection between the draft Convention and disarmament.

If it were adopted, Article 3 would have to be amended, in particular as regards providing for the despatch of a commission for the purpose of verifying that the contracting parties had re-established the status quo ante, in case of the violation of armament obligations.

M. Sokal submitted the following text of Article 2 :

> " 1. In the event of a threat of war, the Council may, if it should deem it necessary fix lines which must not be passed by the land, naval or air forces, and, where necessary in order to avoid incidents, by the civil aircraft of the High Contracting Parties, parties to the dispute. The High Contracting Parties undertake to comply with such recommendations as the Council, acting in virtue of the provisions of Article 11 of the Covenant of the League of Nations, and without prejudice to the other powers it derives from that article, may prescribe for that purpose.
> " 2. The lines referred to in the previous paragraph shall, if possible, be fixed by agreement with the parties to the dispute.
> " 3. Failing such agreement, the Council shall fix the lines with the consent of the party whose forces are affected, provided that this does not involve the withdrawal of the forces further back than the exterior lines of the defence organisations existing on the frontiers of the High Contracting Parties concerned at the time when the Council of the League of Nations takes its decision, and that the lines do not involve the abandonment of any other work, position or line of communication essential to the security or the supplies of the party concerned.
> " 4. It shall in every case rest with the Council to determine the period within which the said lines shall be fixed under the conditions specified above.
> " 5. In the event of the Council deciding that an international obligation concerning the state of a High Contracting Party's armaments has been violated, it shall call upon the High Contracting Party to restore the situation in accordance with the said obligation. The High Contracting Parties undertake to comply with such invitation without delay.
> " 6. The High Contracting Parties further agree to give strict orders to the commanders of their forces, if the Council so recommends, to take all necessary precautions to avoid incidents. "

Dr. Lange (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) thought his task would have been much better carried out by M. Politis, as it consisted principally in explaining the ideas by which the Special Committee had been guided when drawing up the text.

In reply to M. de Madariaga's remarks, he drew attention to the word " entered " (pénétré), used in the first paragraph of Article 2 : " the land or naval forces which have entered the territory ". The word " entered " was intended to refer to an accidental case, whereas the word " invaded " would imply a deliberate purpose. It might happen that troops or warships accidentally found themselves in the territory of a neighbouring State. This might be a threat of war, but was not certainly a state of war. The latter presupposed belligerent acts on both sides. If one of the parties refrained from any belligerent act, it would appear that a state of war did not exist.

The Special Committee confined its task to the threat of war. According to instructions received from the Assembly, it had developed Article 11 of the Covenant, without touching upon Article 16.

With regard to the Polish proposal regarding the violation of undertakings in respect of armaments, the Committee had thought that this violation, if it were incidental to a threat of war, would be a subsidiary factor which it was not necessary to provide for in the draft Convention. It thought also that the draft Convention should not provide for such violations taken by themselves.

The Minutes of the Special Committee explained why the Polish proposal was not adopted. M. Sokal submitted it again in a different form, as he was entitled to do, but Dr. Lange, as Rapporteur of the Special Committee, did not consider himself authorised to give his opinion on this new text.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) agreed with M. de Madariaga as to the possible difficulty of defining a threat of war. The conclusion to which the numerous previous discussions on this subject had led was that the Council must be given latitude to decide, in each case, what position had arisen. He thought this the wisest and most practical method.

M. Sokal's proposal included, firstly, a proposal to omit the first paragraph of Article 2 and, secondly, an amendment to cover the case of the violation of a Disarmament Convention. He regretted that M. Sokal had introduced the second point, as this question would be more in place in a Disarmament Convention than in the draft Convention now under consideration. The discussion should be confined to the first point.

The omission of the first paragraph of Article 2 would seriously weaken the Convention. M. Sokal had placed the Committee in the following dilemma : the entry of armed forces into foreign territory was either unimportant, in which case it was negligible, or it implied the invasion of the territory by large forces, in which case a state of war had arisen. This statement was doubly wrong. Frontier incidents should not be neglected unless they were quite insignificant. Their seriousness might vary and might involve a threat of war. On the other hand, a state of war would not necessarily arise, as a result of the entry of considerable forces into foreign territory, unless this was expressly stated in special treaties. In several cases, such incidents had not been regarded by the Council as constituting a state of war. It had been, and it frequently would be, much wiser not to regard such situations as constituting war and involving all the procedure laid down in the Covenant for a state of war. The object of the Convention was merely to make what had hitherto been the constant practice of the Council compulsory for States which agreed to sign and ratify this Convention.

He did not, like M. Sokal, admit that this draft Convention was contrary to the spirit of the Pact of Paris, which laid down the principle that the States abandoned war as an instrument of their national policy; the Pact did not, however, apply any sanctions. This principle would remain unaffected by any measures taken to deal with cases of the threat of war.

In conclusion, Lord Cecil again pointed out that the omission of the first paragraph of Article 2 would be a serious retrograde step.

THIRD MEETING.

Held on Tuesday, September 15th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman: M. MUNCH (Denmark).

9. Communication from the President of the Assembly regarding the League's Finances.

The CHAIRMAN announced that the President of the Assembly had communicated to him the following resolution voted on September 14th :

> " The Assembly,
> " Being convinced that it is imperative not further to increase the budget of the League for 1932, which will have to provide for the expenses of the International Disarmament Conference, and hoping that it will even be possible to reduce the draft budget;
> " Makes a strong appeal to its Committees to follow the principles of economy dictated by present circumstances;
> " Requests these Committees to limit and, if possible, to reduce to the indispensable the programme of work to be undertaken in 1932, and especially to abstain as far as practicable from making recommendations which might involve avoidable expenditure. "

10. Draft General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War: Discussion of the Articles (continuation).

ARTICLE 2, FIRST PARAGRAPH (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN opened the discussion on Article 2, first paragraph of the draft general Convention. He proposed to discuss first the omission suggested by the Polish delegation, then three British amendments, and, lastly, the addition regarding disarmament proposed by the Polish delegation.

Dr. LANGE (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) pointed out that the omission of the first paragraph of Article 2 would compromise the entire structure of the draft, the essential point in which was that the Council acted in virtue of the provisions of Article 11 of the Covenant.

M. Sokal (Poland) agreed that the first paragraph formed the basis of the draft Convention and that its omission would change the structure of the draft. He would explain later why he had proposed this important change. He pointed out, however, that his amendment preserved the reference to Article 11 of the Covenant.

Dr. Lange (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) replied that it should be clearly pointed out at the beginning of the draft that the Convention was concluded in order to apply Article 11 of the Covenant. He did not think the Polish amendment made this fact evident.

M. Hiitonen (Finland) was also surprised that the entry of armed forces into a foreign territory should be considered as a mere threat of war. He thought that this would considerably restrict the scope of the prohibition of war and of the obligation to use peaceful means for settling international disputes. Conventions already existed, such as the Rhine Agreement, which regarded the entry of armed forces into a foreign territory, or a demilitarised zone, as an act of war. He found it difficult to believe that, in the event of a flagrant violation of such a provision of an international agreement, the parties would still agree to rely on the Council providing for the withdrawal of the forces. He approved the Polish proposal as it gave greater consideration to Articles 10 and 11 of the Covenant. The principle should be laid down that any violation of Article 10 of the Covenant was a very grave occurrence. Nevertheless, it might sometimes be opportune for the Council to be given the possibility of employing conciliatory measures, even at that time. He proposed accordingly that the first paragraph of the Polish amendment be followed by the text given below :

> " In the event of the continuous entrance of the land, naval, or air forces of one of the High Contracting Parties into the territory or territorial waters of another High Contracting Party, or a zone demilitarised in virtue of international agreements, if the Council considers that the present Convention is still applicable and lays down measures for ensuring the withdrawal of the said forces, the High Contracting Parties, parties to the dispute, shall comply with these measures without delay. "

M. Colban (Norway) was in favour of maintaining the first paragraph of Article 2 for the reasons given on the previous day by Lord Cecil.

M. Massigli (France) thought the apprehensions expressed by M. Sokal and M. Hiitonen were due to a misunderstanding. The text did not mean that in all cases where a territory was violated the Council would consider that there was only a threat of war. It simply meant that in certain cases it might be considered that there was merely a threat of war, and it was for these cases that the Council was given certain powers by the Convention. M. Massigli was in favour of endeavouring to find a formula which would make this point clearer.

M. Hiitonen (Finland) recognised that M. Massigli's explanations were calculated to lessen his anxiety. He had been particularly afraid that the Great Powers might seem to be entitled to undertake armed intervention, without declaring war, in order to bring pressure to bear on small States, which in their tum would hesitate to declare war even in such circumstances.

M. de Madariaga (Spain) thonght the present wording of the first paragraph had the disadvantage of appearing to define a threat of war by assimilating it, in all cases, with an invasion of territory. He proposed to make Article 2 into two articles, the first consisting of the first paragraph and not including the words " in the event of a threat of war ", and the second beginning with these words and including the remainder of Article 2.

M. Schmidt (Estonia) stated that his Government had had similar apprehensions to those expressed by M. Sokal and M. Hiitonen. The explanations given by Lord Cecil and M. Massigli had to a great extent relieved his mind. He thought that these explanations could be incorporated in a new text.

Lord Cecil (British Empire) was very reluctant to make any change in the text, which was the result of lengthy consideration ; he was afraid a new text would give rise to still greater difficulties. If the words " in the event of a threat of war " were omitted from the beginning of the paragraph, the result would be that the provisions of the paragraph would also apply to the case of war, for which the powers given to the Council were obviously insufficient.

The text as drafted applied to serious occurrences which constituted a threat of war only if the invaded country considered them as such, and took measures in consequence. The League of Nations had already experienced such cases. He would be glad to be able to give satisfaction to his colleagues whose fears appeared to him to be groundless.

M. Choumenkovitch (Yugoslavia) thought M. Sokal had clearly stated the dilemma : either the incidents in question were insignificant, in which case the Convention was useless, or an invasion with large forces had taken place, in which case other measures would have to be applied. Another point which would make it difficult for the Parliaments to ratify the Convention was that the obligations imposed on the contracting parties were clearly defined, while the rights given to the Council were indefinite.

M. SANDLER (Sweden) expressed his Government's satisfaction at the preparation of this draft Convention. A radical change in the draft, such as that proposed by M. Sokal, would compel the Governments to undertake a further thorough investigation.

The CHAIRMAN thought that in order to continue the discussion, a decision should be arrived at on the principle laid down in the Polish delegation's amendment. He therefore wished to take a vote on the omission of the first paragraph, without prejudice to any amendments which might subsequently be made to this paragraph.

M. BUERO (Uruguay) was in favour of omitting the first paragraph. Article 11 of the Covenant dealt with war and the threat of war, while the draft, the object of which was to facilitate the application of Article 11, only referred to the threat of war. It would therefore seem to be admitted that certain acts, really calculated to give rise to war, might be considered as not involving this consequence. This was a dangerous weakening of Article 11.

M. SOKAL (Poland) noted that his doubts were to some extent justified as they had found such an echo in the Committee. He therefore thought the question should be referred to a Drafting Committee without voting on the omission of the paragraph. If the Convention were to be unanimously accepted, it was essential to draft a clear text whatever delay this procedure might involve. The explanations given by M. Massigli and Lord Cecil had convinced him that the invasion of the territory would only be considered as a threat of war if the invaded country regarded it as such. But there was nothing in the text to authorise such an interpretation. On the other hand, he was uneasy at the numerous expressions used, such as " hostilities ", " penetration ", etc., to express the intermediate stages between peace and war. This new terminology merely weakened the Covenant and, in particular, Article 16, which did not establish any procedure for these intermediate stages. This was a danger which might affect in particular the Disarmament Conference.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) did not object to the text being referred to a Drafting Committee, but he must reserve full liberty of action if the new text arrived at weakened the powers given to the Council by the present text.

Colonel Ali Khan RIAZI (Persia) wished to submit the following suggestion to theDrafting Committee : The large number of countries which had no fortified line of defence on their frontiers might agree in time of peace to fix the neutral line which the draft Convention empowers the Council to define in case of conflict. Since the Convention was to be concluded for only five years, this proposal would apparently not be difficult to put into practice.

M. MELAS (Greece) thought the difference in opinion had been greatly reduced, and that an agreement might be reached on the proposal to omit the words " in the event of a threat of war " from the beginning of the article, and to place them after the expression " enter the territory ".

M. SANDLER (Sweden) suggested that the Drafting Committee should consider the insertion of " air forces " after the expression " land or naval forces ".

M. CABALLERO DE BEDOYA (Paraguay) had only one objection to the Polish proposal; it made no mention of the withdrawal of land or naval forces, a measure which he thought it essential should be maintained among the powers granted to the Council.

The CHAIRMAN, in accordance with Lord Cecil's request, opened the discussion on the British amendment to insert the word " territorial " before the word " waters ".

Lord CECIL (British Empire) said that, as some delegations had wished the Convention to apply both to the land and sea forces, attempts were made to find the greatest possible analogy between the measures to be laid down for each of these forces. One of the difficulties was that the high seas belonged to nobody; the question arose as to when a fleet could be said to have invaded the territorial waters of the other contracting party. There was at present a difference of opinion as to the extent of territorial waters; some held that they extended three miles from land, while others said twelve miles. As the Special Committee could not settle this dispute by an article in this Convention, it used the vague term " waters ". The British Government considered that this solution was unsatisfactory, as no one could tell what the term meant. It therefore proposed the expression " territorial waters ". It would be easy for the Council in case of need to select the distance to be laid down. To choose an arbitrary distance at the present time would have the disadvantage of prejudging the question of territorial waters and would probably be inapplicable in the case of straits, channels, etc.

M. COLBAN (Norway) asked Dr. Lange to explain to the Committee why the present text had been drafted as it had been. He was not himself convinced that a distance of three miles would be sufficient for the case referred to in the draft Convention.

Dr. LANGE (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) replied that Lord Cecil had given an objective summary of the reasons which led the Special Committee to adopt the present text

Nevertheless, as it was a question of avoiding contact between the armed forces, and as at the present time the range of weapons of naval forces considerably exceeded a three-mile limit, it would be in accordance with the object of the Convention to authorise the Council not to keep to this minimum distance. It was best to leave the Council full latitude on this point. He also pointed out that the terms " eaux d'un pays " and " waters of a country " might not have exactly the same meaning.

M. Massigli (France) saw certain dangers in leaving any doubt as to the application of the measures laid down by the Council, in view of the grave consequences which would be involved, particularly in the matter of sanctions, by the prima facie evidence of aggression against the State which had not complied with those measures.

The expression territorial waters was clear, but in practice its interpretation varied considerably. If this expression were employed here, countries which had hitherto employed the narrowest interpretation might find it to their interest to adopt the opposite interpretation. Three miles was too short a distance for the Council to authorise the stationing of a war fleet so near to the coast of the other contracting party. There were two possible solutions, either to rely on the judgment of the Council, or to fix an arbitrary distance, at the same time making it clear that this did not prejudice the solution of the divergence regarding the interpretation of the expression " territorial waters ".

Lord Cecil (British Empire) urged that the sea forces should be treated in the same manner as the land forces. With regard to the latter, the Council was authorised to demand their withdrawal behind their own frontier, but if it wished these forces to withdraw beyond a certain line inside their territory, the consent of the party concerned was required. If, therefore, it were demanded that the fleets should withdraw far outside territorial waters this analogy would no longer hold good. This is what would happen if the words " the waters " were left in the text. It was therefore impossible to give full latitude to the Council, which could only be limited between the two notions of territorial waters — namely, three miles and twelve miles. The fixing of an arbitrary distance, as M. Massigli proposed, would in many cases give rise to difficulties of application.

M. Goeppert (Germany) supported the British proposal. It was considered that the frontier was violated if the military forces entered the territory of the other party; by analogy the naval forces committed a violation if they entered the territorial waters of the other party. The solution proposed by M. Massigli involved the further difficulty that it would not be known from what point of the coast the arbitrary distance fixed by the Council should be calculated.

M. François (Netherlands) stated, as Rapporteur of the Commission of the Conference on the Codification of International Law, which discussed the question of territorial waters, that the term " waters " alone was ambiguous. The use of the expression " territorial waters " was quite unobjectionable, provided the question of their extent was not touched.

General de Marinis (Italy) said that it was in regard to the object of these provisions that the analogy should be sought for. The provision regarding the withdrawal of armed forces was intended to reassure public opinion. Would this result be obtained if a fleet remained outside territorial waters but at a short distance from the coast ? In the absence of a common definition of territorial waters, and especially in view of the above consideration, he thought it preferable to rely on the judgment of the Council.

M. de Madariaga (Spain) thought it was a mistake to consider that the object of the first paragraph was to prevent battle from breaking out. The real object of the paragraph was to bring to an end the violation of the Covenant committed by the party which had entered the territory of the other country. In order to convey this idea, each country's definition of its own territory should be given in the text, and consequently territorial waters should be included, and the evacuation of this territory or territorial waters by the forces which had entered it should be provided for. The word " withdrawal " should therefore be replaced by the word " evacuation ".

The Chairman declared the discussion closed, and proposed to submit the first paragraph to the Drafting Committee, with the Polish and British amendments which had just been discussed.

This proposal was adopted.

11. Constitution of the Drafting Committee.

The Chairman proposed that the Drafting Committee should consist of the representatives of Germany, the British Empire, Spain, France, Italy, Poland, Sweden and Uruguay.

This proposal was adopted.

FOURTH MEETING.

Held on Wednesday, September 16th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman: M. MUNCH (Denmark).

12. Draft General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War : Discussion of the Articles (continuation).

ARTICLE 2 (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN stated that, as the Drafting Committee had not finished its examination of the questions referred to it, it was impossible to continue the discussion of Articles 3 and following of the draft; the Committee could, however, discuss the following amendment proposed by the British delegation :

Add to the first paragraph of Article 2 :

" It is understood that the measures referred to in the first paragraph of Article 2 of the present Convention shall not prejudice the right of free passage through the Suez Canal provided for in the Convention respecting Free Navigation of the Suez Maritime Canal signed at Constantinople on October 29th, 1888. "

Lord CECIL (British Empire) explained that, as the Suez Canal formed the most important means of communication between the East and the West, his amendment concerned all sea-going countries in whose interest it was that the canal should remain open under all circumstances, and that the Convention of Constantinople regarding the statute of the canal in time of war should be applied.

Dr. LANGE (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) thought the entire Committee agreed that the British amendment was well-founded. But unless the Suez Canal were an absolutely unique case, of which he was unaware, such a provision should not be inserted in the Convention but mentioned in the report.

The British amendment was referred to the Drafting Committee.

The CHAIRMAN opened the discussion on the Polish proposal to insert in Article 2 provisions for the case of a State violating its undertakings in respect of armaments (see second meeting, No. 8).

General DE MARINIS (Italy) found it difficult to admit that even a minor violation of an undertaking in respect of armaments might ipso facto constitute a threat of war. The draft Convention for the Reduction of Armaments provided for the existence of a Commission to supervise the execution of the Convention. If that Commission worked normally, a violation serious enough to constitute a threat of war could not take place.

Moreover, measures to be applied in case of an infringement of disarmament undertakings should be contained in the Disarmament Convention itself. If such a violation were placed on the same footing as a refusal to withdraw troops which had violated foreign territory, the Council might be placed in an impossible position.

Like Lord Cecil, he thought great caution should be shown in making changes in a text which had been under discussion for three years, and that attempts should be made to avoid introducing proposals which would involve a postponement until next year and would have a bad effect on public opinion.

Sir Thomas WILFORD (New Zealand) said he had no instructions to accept the radical proposals made by the Polish delegation; he could only accept the text as it stood with some minor amendments. In order to avoid such situations in future, it might be well to fix a time-limit for the receipt of proposed amendments, so that Governments of distant countries might have time to consider them and to instruct their delegations.

M. MASSIGLI (France) could hardly admit that delegations should not have the right to submit amendments during the discussion. Moreover, the Polish delegation's proposals had been known for some time and were included in the Special Committee's report.

The Polish proposal was of great interest; a violation of a limitation of armaments might, in certain cases, constitute a serious threat of war. The draft Convention, however, did not apply to all cases of threats of war, but only to those defined in the first paragraph of Article 2. He therefore proposed to refer the Polish proposal to the Disarmament Conference.

M. SOKAL (Poland) supported M. Massigli's remarks regarding the right of delegations to submit amendments.

He did not object to the proposal being referred to the Disarmament Conference, but pointed out that that Conference would include non-member States who did not recognise the Council's authority. His proposal therefore ran the risk of not being taken into consideration. As it could only affect Member States, it could be more suitably included in the draft under discussion than in the Disarmament Convention.

Moreover, he could not admit that the Convention should be restricted to the case of a threat of war accompanied by an invasion. If it were desired to prevent war, all cases of threats of war should be provided for, and the violation of an undertaking in respect of armaments certainly constituted such a threat.

The Drafting Committee was experiencing difficulty in drafting the first paragraph of Article 2, because invasion came so near to war that it was impossible to draw a line between the threat and war itself. On the other hand, the Polish proposal made it possible to take really preventive action in cases where war was still only threatening and there had been no invasion.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) thought the entire Committee agreed that the principle of the Polish proposal should be included in a Convention. But the Preparatory Commission had already laid down a procedure in this connection which was more effective than that now proposed by the Polish delegation. The two methods should be discussed, and this could more usefully be done at the Disarmament Conference.

M. SOKAL (Poland), in order to show his desire for conciliation, agreed to withdraw his amendment if the Committee accepted the principle. The sympathetic reception given to his proposal by Lord Cecil and M. Massigli was a sign that it would be favourably examined by the Disarmament Conference, and would have a satisfactory result.

The CHAIRMAN stated that it was for the Rapporteur to express the feeling of the Committee on the Polish proposal, the discussion of which was closed.

FIFTH MEETING.

Held on Thursday, September 17th, 1931, at 4 p.m.

Chairman : M. MUNCH (Denmark).

13. Draft General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War : Discussion of the Articles (continuation).

ARTICLE 2 (continuation).

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain), as Chairman of the Drafting Committee, stated that the latter had succeeded in drawing up the following text for the first paragraph of Article 2, to which the Polish delegation, while maintaining its own point of view, would, in a spirit of conciliation, not object.

> " If, in circumstances which, in the Council's opinion, do not create a state of war between the powers in question, which are parties to the present Convention, the forces of one of these powers have entered the territory or territorial waters of the other (or a zone demilitarised in virtue of international agreements) or have flown over such territory, the Council may prescribe measures to ensure its evacuation by these forces. The High Contracting Parties undertake to carry out without delay the measures so prescribed without prejudice to the other powers vested in the Council under Article 11 of the Covenant. "

This text obviated the Polish delegation's difficulty, which was that the original text might imply that all cases of invasion would, a priori, be regarded only as threats of war. Moreover, in order to make it clear that, when the Council had to take a decision, the injured party could be heard, the report would mention this question in the following words proposed by Lord Cecil :

> " It must be remembered that this is a Convention for the Prevention of War. It does not apply when war has broken out. When that has happened, other remedies and sanctions are provided by the Covenant. No doubt, theoretical difficulties may be raised as to when war actually has broken out. Probably nothing better can be said on the subject than the following passage in the report by M. de Brouckère . . . "

This paragraph would be followed by an extract of M. de Brouckère's report stating the conditions which must be fulfilled before a country can be regarded as having resorted to war (document A.14.1927, page 69, paragraph 5).

The present text of the first paragraph included the word " territorial ", before the word " waters ", but the report would make it clear that this was without prejudice to the solution of the difference of opinion on the extent of these waters.

The words " acting in virtue of the provisions of Article 11 " had been replaced by the words " without prejudice to the other powers vested in the Council under Article 11 of the Covenant ", and placed at the end of the article in order to show that the measures provided for were taken without the consent of the parties to the dispute. The Committee proposed to deal with the question of the Suez Canal in a special protocol attached to the Convention, but before doing so, to enquire whether there were other similar cases of channels remaining open in war-time, even when the sovereign power was itself at war.

The British proposal to insert the words " with which it is in dispute " had become unnecessary, since the present text only referred to the case which the British delegation had in view — namely, an invasion with hostile intention. The question of air forces had also been regulated. In addition, the report would make a reference in this connection to the last paragraph of Article 2, which might apply in particular to aircraft flying over a territory.

Lastly, the French delegation had proposed an amendment which would take into account the special conditions of certain demilitarised zones. The Drafting Committee had not thought fit to take a decision on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN reserved for the present the question of demilitarised zones, which did not affect the remainder of the Convention, and opened the discussion on the text proposed by the Drafting Committee.

M. CABALLERO DE BEDOYA (Paraguay) thought the wording proposed might give rise to difficulties of application in the case of countries whose frontiers had not been delimited. In such cases, it would be difficult to state whether troops had entered the territory of a foreign country or not. He thought M. Buero had had occasion to acquaint the Drafting Committee with this situation, which existed in certain countries in America.

M. BUERO (Uruguay) replied that the situation referred to by M. Caballero had not escaped his attention, and that he had intended to draft a suitable text, but the discussions in the Drafting Committee had convinced him that it was impossible to bring the numerous cases of threats of war within the sphere of application of the Convention. He had therefore abandoned the idea of referring to this particular case in order not to complicate a very delicate wording. He thought it preferable to ignore the situation referred to by M. Caballero.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) thought that the Council would be justified, in principle, in considering the territories referred to by M. Caballero as neutral. Their invasion would be prohibited in the same way as that of demilitarised zones, and the invading country would be obliged to ensure the evacuation of these territories by its troops. Such a suggestion was possible, but it was a case of such delicacy that the final decision should be left to the wisdom of the Council.[1]

M. CABALLERO DE BEDOYA (Paraguay) agreed with M. Buero's suggestion, and stated that he had only wished to make a general remark and not to refer to special cases.

The first paragraph of Article 2 was adopted as proposed by the Drafting Committee.

The Committee decided to ask the Legal Section of the Secretariat to prepare a draft Protocol regarding the Suez Canal, corresponding exactly with the British amendment.

" . . . . . .

" Further, should the Council deem it necessary to fix lines which must not be passed by their land, naval or air forces and, where necessary in order to avoid incidents, by their civil aircraft, the High Contracting Parties undertake to comply with the Council's recommendations in this matter.

" The lines referred to in the previous paragraph shall, if possible, be fixed by agreement with the parties to the dispute.

" Failing such agreement, the Council shall fix the lines with the consent of the party whose forces are affected, provided always that this does not involve the withdrawal of the forces further back than the exterior lines of the defence organisations existing on the frontier of the High Contracting Parties concerned at the time when the Council of the League of Nations takes its decision, and that the lines do not involve the abandonment of any other work, position or line of communication essential to the security or the supplies of the party concerned.

" It shall in every case rest with the Council to determine the period within which the said lines shall be fixed under the conditions specified above.

" The High Contracting Parties further agree to give strict orders to the commanders of their forces, if the Council so recommends, to take all necessary precautions to avoid incidents."

[1] This observation of M. de Madariaga did not appear in the provisional minutes.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) stated that the word " further " should be replaced at the beginning of the second paragraph by the words " in all cases of a threat of war ", so that the measures laid down in the above texts should apply to all cases of a threat of war, even if there were no invasion.

M. SOKAL (Poland) did not agree with this change.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) supported the proposed change which was indispensable. In reply to M. Sokal, he pointed out that the measures in the first paragraph, which referred only to the case of invasion, were taken without the consent of the parties, while the measures subsequently referred to in the article, which applied to all cases, required the consent of the parties.

M. SOKAL (Poland) wished to reserve his opinion until the final reading of the draft.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) thought it advisable for the Council to study in advance the lines referred to in Article 2. This did not mean that demilitarised zones should be established, but if there were a threat of war and urgent action became necessary, discussions on the position of these lines might involve the loss of valuable time. He thought it would be possible to insert a paragraph in the report to this effect.

Article 2 was adopted with the reservation of the Polish delegation.

ARTICLE 3.

" The Council shall, if it thinks fit, or if one of the parties to the dispute so requests before the Council has reached any of the decisions referred to in Article 2, appoint commissioners for the sole purpose of verifying on the spot the execution of the conservatory measures of a military character recommended by the Council under the conditions specified in the preceding article.

" When regulating the execution of the measures it has prescribed, the Council shall, at the reasoned request of a High Contracting Party which is a party to the dispute, cause that execution to coincide with the arrival of the commissioners on the spot, so far as it may think necessary.

" The High Contracting Parties undertake to afford these commissioners every facility for the performance of their duties.

" The commissioners may not make a more extensive inspection than is necessary to enable them to carry out the duty defined in paragraph 1. Nor may they make any inspection of a naval or air base, nor may they inspect military works or establishments for any purpose other than to verify the withdrawal of the forces.

" The rules to be followed for the composition and working of commissions of control shall be embodied in executive regulations which shall be prepared by the competent organs of the League of Nations, so as to enter into force at the same time as the present Convention."

Article 3 was adopted.

ARTICLE 4.

" If any violation of the measures defined in Article 2 is noted by the Council, and continues in spite of its injunctions, the Council shall consider what means of all kinds are necessary to ensure the execution of the present Convention.

" Should war break out as a consequence of this violation, such violation shall be regarded by the High Contracting Parties as prima facie evidence that the party guilty thereof has resorted to war within the meaning of Article 16 of the Covenant. "

M. SANDLER (Sweden) thought the text of the second paragraph was not quite clear. It was uncertain whether it only constituted evidence, or also considered the application of sanctions without the other conditions of Article 16 being fulfilled — namely, recourse to war contrary to the undertakings of Articles 12, 13 or 15 of the Covenant. For his part, he had no objection to extending the sanctions to cases where a State had violated the unanimous decisions of the Council, even if it had not infringed Articles 12, 13 or 15 of the Covenant. Such an extension of the sanctions had moreover been approved by the Swedish delegation during the discussions for bringing the Pact of Paris and the Covenant of the League of Nations into harmony.

Dr. LANGE (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) replied that this question had been thoroughly discussed by the Special Committee and was dealt with in its report, which stated that " the question of the methods of application of Article 16 of the Covenant remains intact ". A violation of the measures laid down by the Convention was not calculated to bring about automatically the application of sanctions. It was only prima facie evidence of aggression and formed an element for the Council's judgment, so long as proof to the contrary, which was possible, had not been brought.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) was also of opinion that the application of sanctions was not extended by the Convention. For Article 16 to come into force, a number of conditions were necessary, but the final condition was that one of the parties had resorted to war. The paragraph under discussion merely stated that the signatories of the Convention agreed to regard it as prima facie evidence that a country had resorted to war if it had violated the decisions of the Council. But this was only prima facie evidence and not proof.

M. François (Netherlands) said that the Netherlands delegation did not maintain the reservation mentioned on this point in Dr. Lange's report. It was understood that any Member of the League of Nations had full right to decide whether Article 16 was applicable or not to a definite case. Nevertheless, the fact that the violations in question constituted prima facie evidence was not opposed to the provisions of the Covenant.

M. Sandler (Sweden) said he had quite understood that the article referred to prima facie evidence, and although his remark went further, he would be satisfied with an explanation in the report.

M. Colban (Norway) proposed that, in view of the importance of this paragraph which concerned the Covenant, the First Committee of the Assembly should be consulted with regard to the wording.

Lord Cecil (British Empire) suggested that, in order not to delay the work, the legal adviser of the Secretariat should be consulted.

M. Barandon (member of the Legal Section of the Secretariat) thought it unnecessary to make a fresh study of the text, which had been drawn up by a committee composed largely of lawyers. The part of Dr. Lange's report relating to constitutional questions had been drawn up by M. Rutgers with the assistance of the Legal Section.

M. Colban (Norway) did not insist on his proposal, though he considered that the text might be improved by specifying, in the second paragraph, that the violation referred to in that paragraph was the same as that mentioned in the first paragraph — i.e., a violation noted by the Council.

Article 4 was adopted.

Article 5.

" In the cases referred to in Articles 1, 2, 3 and 4, the Council's decisions and recommendations shall, except as otherwise provided in those articles, be binding for the purposes of the present Convention, provided that they are concurred in by all the Members voting, other than the parties to the dispute. "

Article 5 was adopted.

Article 6.

" The High Contracting Parties undertake to provide, by the means at their disposal, such publicity as the Council may recommend for its proceedings, decisions and recommendations, when a dispute is brought before it in the cases contemplated by the present Convention. "

M. de Madariaga (Spain) thought the article was too weak. It was a question of putting before the public opinion of the countries concerned the point of view of such a high authority as the Council in the very words of the Council. The article, however, confined itself to the statement that the parties undertook to provide such publicity as the Council might recommend. He proposed to replace the word " recommend " by the expression " think fit".

Dr. Lange (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) supported this amendment.

This amendment was adopted.

M. Massigli (France) thought the provisions of Article 5 should be extended to this article in order to exclude from voting the parties to the dispute.

Dr. Lange (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) thought publicity was a question of procedure which the Council could decide by a majority vote.

M. Massigli (France) wished in particular to exclude the vote of the parties concerned, especially as, if he had correctly understood M. de Madariaga, the Council might draw up a special text with a view to producing certain political effects.

Lord Cecil (British Empire) thought the intention of the author was to be satisfied with a majority vote, and for that reason the text used the word "recommend" rather than the word " decide ".

M. de Madariaga (Spain) agreed with M. Massigli that, if the Council wished to exercise moral authority over public opinion, the text which it published should be drawn up unanimously without the vote of the parties concerned.

Baron RAMEL (Sweden) pointed out that this article had been inserted at the suggestion of the Swedish delegation, which considered that a majority vote was sufficient. If there were any doubt about this question, however, he proposed to refer it to the Drafting Committee.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) urged the importance of the question. It was of little consequence that the Council decide by a majority vote as to the mechanical procedure of publication. There should, however, be unanimity on the substance of the publication.

Dr. LANGE (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) thought M. de Madariaga overestimated the importance of the question. He agreed with Baron Ramel that, if unanimous decisions were taken on the substance of the dispute, there would be no difficulty in respect of the publication of these decisions.

General DE MARINIS (Italy) pointed out that unanimity was a fundamental rule of the Covenant, that the drafters of the Convention under discussion were very careful not to restrict the Council's powers, and that, under these circumstances, it was not advisable to change the rule regarding unanimity.

Dr. LANGE (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) thought the question was of no importance, and that the Committee could decide it in either sense without referring it to the Drafting Committee.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) regretted it should be stated that the Committee attached no importance to this question. This article was possibly the most necessary of the entire Convention. If a country were in a warlike state of mind it would not be stopped by the threats of Article 16 but by changing its state of mind. The article was badly drafted, and there was confusion in the use of the word " publicity ". This word implied in the first place the publication or distribution of documents, for which he agreed the Council might decide by a majority vote; but it also implied the form in which the Council brought its opinion to the knowledge of the countries concerned. In this sense, unanimity was required. In order to preclude this ambiguity, he proposed that the paragraph should be worded as follows :

> " The High Contracting Parties undertake to provide by means at their disposal such publicity as the Council, on a majority vote, may think fit for its proceedings, decisions, recommendations and opinions. "

It would thus be clear that the Council's opinions should also be given unanimously without the vote of the parties concerned. M. de Madariaga agreed that this amendment should be referred to the Drafting Committee.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) strongly urged his colleagues not to refer to the Drafting Committee a question which could be settled immediately in one way or another, without in any way altering either the value or scope of the Convention.

Baron RAMEL (Sweden) said that although he had proposed the text calling for a majority vote he was prepared to adopt Lord Cecil's opinion and did not insist on his proposal.

M. TUMEDEI (Italy) agreed with M. de Madariaga that the question was extremely important. It was for the Council itself to decide, in each case, whether the question was one of procedure or of substance. This could not be decided by the Convention. If the Council desired to publish only the final text resulting from its discussion there was no doubt that this was a mere question of procedure; if, on the other hand, the Council wished to take special political action, which might influence public opinion, by special means such as were used, for instance, for commercial publicity, it would have to decide first whether this was a question of procedure or of substance. Under these circumstances, the article should be left unchanged.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) did not share M. Tumedei's opinion, the result of which would be that the objection of one party would be sufficient to prevent publicity. A choice must be made between unanimity without the parties concerned or a majority vote.

Dr. LANGE (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) thought that any of the three solutions proposed could be accepted — namely, that of the Special Committee supported by M. Tumedei, Baron Ramel's proposal, or the proposal of unanimity, but he wished to make reservations regarding M. de Madariaga's proposal to add the word " opinions " to the expressions describing the Council's acts; this word had never been used up to the present to express one of those acts.

The Committee adopted the principle of unanimity.

The CHAIRMAN stated that this decision involved a change in the order of Articles 5 and 6, and a reference to Article 6 in the first line of Article 5.

ARTICLE 7.

> " The provisions of the present Convention shall only apply as between the High Contracting Parties. "

Lord CECIL (British Empire) stated that in the Minutes of the Special Committee (document A.14.1931.VII, page 32), he was alleged to have made a certain statement. This statement did not make sense as applied to Article 7. As it might give rise to some misconception, he asked that it should be treated as non-existent.

Mr. MURPHY (Irish Free State) said that, as representative of the Irish Free State on the Commission, he was very grateful to Lord Cecil for his remarks regarding the misleading paragraph attributed to him in the Minutes of the Special Committee. It was, of course, no more necessary to have an article in the Convention making it clear that Great Britain's signature was not binding upon the Irish Free State than it was necessary to have an article in the Convention making it clear that an Irish signature was not binding on any other Member of the League of Nations. The Irish Free State could only become a contracting party to a Convention by virtue of the signature of an Irish plenipotentiary. When the Irish Free State accepted a convention, whether by way of ratification or accession, it did so as a separate contracting party.

Mr. Murphy asked that Lord Cecil's statement, as well as his own remarks, be included in the Minutes of the Commission.

Mr. TE WATER (Union of South Africa), in regard to the Union of South Africa, associated himself with Mr. Murphy's remarks.

Article 7 was adopted.

ARTICLE 8.

" The present Convention may not be interpreted as restricting the task or the powers of the Council of the League of Nations as laid down in the Covenant. "

Article 8 was adopted.

ARTICLE 9.

" The present Convention shall remain open until ..... for signatures on behalf of any Member of the League of Nations or of any non-member State to which the Council of the League of Nations has communicated a copy of the Convention for this purpose. "

Mr. CADOGAN (British Empire) suggested that the date February 2nd, 1932, should be inserted in this article.

Dr. LANGE (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) pointed out that the Special Committee had left the date blank, as also in Article 11, so that the Assembly might insert it. He supported Mr. Cadogan's proposal.

Article 9 was adopted with the amendment by the British delegation.

ARTICLE 10.

" The present Convention is subject to ratification. Ratifications shall be deposited with the Secretariat of the League of Nations.

" The Secretary-General shall give notice of the deposit of each ratification to the Members of the League of Nations and to the non-member States mentioned in Article 9, indicating the date of its deposit. "

Article 10 was adopted.

ARTICLE 11.

" As from ..... (date), any Member of the League of Nations and any non-member State mentioned in Article 9 on whose behalf the Convention has not been signed before that date may accede thereto.

" Accession shall be effected by an instrument deposited with the Secretariat of the League of Nations. The Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall give notice of each accession to the Members of the League of Nations and to the non-member States mentioned in Article 9, indicating the date of the deposit of the instrument. "

Article 11 was adopted with the date February 3rd, 1932.

SIXTH MEETING.

Held on Friday, September 18th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman : M. MUNCH (Denmark).

14. Draft General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War : Discussion of the Articles (continuation).

ARTICLE 12.

" A procès-verbal shall be drawn up by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations as soon as ratifications or accessions on behalf of ..... Members of the League of Nations or non-member States have been deposited.

" A certified copy of this procès-verbal shall be sent by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations to each Member of the League of Nations and to each non-member State mentioned in Article 9."

M. MASSIGLI (France) pointed out that the Convention imposed on the Council, if not new obligations, at any rate new responsibilities. There must therefore be the certitude that the Council would accept these responsibilities. Two solutions were possible : either the Convention could be put into force only after all the members, or at any rate all the permanent members, of the Council had ratified it ; or, as soon as a small number of States — say, three or five — had ratified, the Council would be called upon to declare whether it accepted the responsibilities devolving from the Convention. He preferred the second solution, which would appear capable of a more rapid application.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) wondered to what extent future non-permanent members of the Council would be bound by the acceptance of a solution by the Council as at present composed.

M. MASSIGLI (France) pointed out that, if new members of the Council were not bound by its previous decisions, each new Council would have to repeat all the work hitherto accomplished.

He proposed to add the following phrase to the end of the first paragraph of Article 12 :

" . . . and as soon as the Council has accepted the responsibilities which will fall upon it in respect of the application of Articles 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the present Convention ".

General DE MARINIS (Italy) proposed to suppress, in M. Massigli's amendment, the reference to Articles 1, 2, 3 and 4.

M. MASSIGLI (France) agreed.

Dr. LANGE (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) thought the Council's responsibilities would not be increased by the Convention, which, on the contrary, would help it to apply measures for which, in certain cases, it was already responsible. Nevertheless, he did not object to drawing the Council's attention to this new instrument which was placed at its disposal.

M. MASSIGLI (France) continued in thinking that, even if the Council's responsibilities were not increased, they would at any rate be more clearly defined, especially by Article 3.

M. SANDLER (Sweden) thought M. Massigli's amendment required further reflection. Under the Convention, the Council could take grave decisions. Provision should therefore be made for cases where members of the Council might not all be in the same situation as regards the Convention. He proposed that, before the Convention could enter into force, the ratifications of four permanent members of the Council should be required.

The CHAIRMAN proposed first to fix the number of ratifications required.

M. GOEPPERT (Germany) proposed that the number should be twenty. Such a high figure would have the advantage of binding a great number of States ; he thought this preferable for a general convention, and that it would induce States to send their ratifications in more quickly.

Lord CECIL (British Empire), on the contrary, thought the Convention should be put into force as quickly as possible so that States so desiring might have the benefit of it. He proposed that the number should be five.

On M. Goeppert's new proposal, the Committee adopted the number ten.

The CHAIRMAN opened the discussion on M. Sandler's amendment to add the words " four of whom must be permanent members of the Council ". This amendment, if accepted, would make M. Massigli's proposal unnecessary.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) pointed out that this Convention would be of much greater value to the small Powers than to the big Powers; it would be a disadvantage for the small Powers to have to wait for the ratification of four big Powers.

M. MASSIGLI (France) did not think his amendment and that of M. Sandler were in contradiction. The fact that four permanent members had accepted the responsibilities would not mean that the Council as a body had accepted them.

Dr. LANGE (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) pointed out that this was a political question and the Special Committee had therefore not discussed it.

Under M. Massigli's amendment, the Council might postpone the putting into force even if M. Sandler's proposal were adopted; while, on the other hand, each State, in applying the third paragraph of Article 13, might specify that it made the coming into force dependent on the accession of four permanent members of the Council. Under these conditions, he was not certain that M. Sandler's proposal was very useful.

M. SANDLER (Sweden) recognised that Dr. Lange's argument was logical, but he would have preferred that a general rule should be established in Article 12. He wondered whether, under M. Massigli's amendment, a State not bound by the Convention was compelled to apply the rule regarding prima facie evidence contained in Article 4.

M. MASSIGLI (France) would try to reply to this particularly delicate question and he hoped his explanation would not give rise to any objections.

In so far as the application of Article 16 depended on a free decision by each State, he did not see how the provision in question could change in any way the rights granted in this matter to any Member of the League.

In so far as this provision would serve to help the Council to determine the aggressor, a State member of the Council could obviously not fail to take it into account and could not restrict, so far as it was concerned, the import which the contracting parties intended to give to this provision.

M. Sandler's amendment was rejected by eighteen votes to three.

M. Massigli's amendment was adopted.

M. SANDLER (Sweden) asked if the ten ratifications required would include those deposited subject to a reservation.

M. BARANDON (Legal Section of the Secretariat) thought the Committee would unanimously agree that, in accordance with precedents, ratifications were valid if they were deposited unconditionally or if the conditions of any reservation were fulfilled. He proposed to leave the text unchanged but to mention the interpretation in the report.

Article 12, as amended, was adopted.

ARTICLE 13.

" The present Convention shall enter into force on the ninetieth day after the date of the procès-verbal mentioned in Article 12 as regards all Members of the League of Nations or non-member States on whose behalf ratifications or accessions have been deposited on the date of the procès-verbal.

" As regards any Member of the League or non-member State on whose behalf a ratification or accession is subsequently deposited, the Convention shall enter into force on the ninetieth day after the date of the deposit of ratification or accession on its behalf.

" Each of the High Contracting Parties shall have the right to inform the Secretary-General of the League of Nations at the moment of the deposit of his ratification or of the notification of his accession, to the exclusion of all other reservations, that he makes the entry into force of the Convention, in so far as he is concerned, conditional on ratification or accession on behalf of certain countries named by him. "

Mr. MURPHY (Irish Free State) said that, under Article 18 of the Convention, a treaty could not come into force between the parties until it was registered. Article 15 of the Convention stated that it would only be registered after it had come into force. These statements were contradictory. He proposed that, while Article 15 should be omitted, Article 13 should be worded as follows:

" The present Convention shall be registered by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations on the ninetieth day after the date of the procès-verbal mentioned in Article 12. It shall thereupon enter into force . . . "

M. BARANDON (Legal Section of the Secretariat) agreed that Mr. Murphy's remarks were logical.

Article 13 was adopted as amended.

ARTICLE 14.

" The present Convention may not be denounced before the expiration of five years from its coming into force in accordance with Article 13.

" Denunciation shall be effected by a notification in writing addressed to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall inform all Members of the League of Nations and the non-member States mentioned in Article 9.

" Each denunciation shall take effect one year after the receipt by the Secretary-General of the notification, but only as regards the High Contracting Party on whose behalf it has been notified. "

M. SANDLER (Sweden) asked whether the Convention would remain in force if the denunciations received brought the number of High Contracting Parties below the figure ten mentioned in Article 12.

Dr. LANGE (Rapporteur of the Special Committee) replied that the Convention would remain in force, but that the contracting parties could denounce it.

Article 14 was adopted.

ARTICLE 15.

" The present Convention shall be registered by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations as soon as it has entered into force. "

Article 15 was omitted in view of the adoption of Article 13.

ARTICLE 16.

" The French and English texts of the present Convention shall both be authoritative.

" IN FAITH WHEREOF the above-mentioned Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention.

" DONE at ..... on the ..... in a single copy, which shall be deposited in the archives of the Secretariat of the League of Nations, and of which certified true copies shall be transmitted by the Secretary-General to all the Members of the League of Nations and to any non-member State to which the Council of the League of Nations has decided to communicate a copy of the present Convention, in accordance with Article 9. "

Article 16 was adopted.

PREAMBLE.

[Names of the High Contracting Parties.]

" Being sincerely desirous of developing mutual confidence by increasing the efficacy of the means of preventing war,

" Noting that, for this purpose, the task of the Council of the League of Nations in ensuring peace and conciliation might be facilitated by undertakings assumed voluntarily in advance by the States,

" Have decided to conclude a Convention and have for that purpose appointed as their plenipotentiaries :

[Designation of Plenipotentiaries.]

" Who, having deposited their full powers found in good and true form, have agreed as follows : "

M. MASSIGLI (France) pointed out that this Preamble was no longer applicable, since the Convention was open for signature until February 2nd, 1932; it might be possible to follow the procedure adopted for the General Act on Arbitration, which remained open for signature under similar conditions.

M. BARANDON (Legal Section of the Secretariat) agreed with this remark and requested that there should be an adjournment.

(The discussion was adjourned.)

15. Co-operation of Women in the Work of the League of Nations.

The CHAIRMAN opened the discussion on paragraph (a) of the following draft resolution proposed by the Spanish delegation :

" The Assembly,

" Considering that the organisation of peace demands the maintenance of an international spirit freed from all prejudices and misconceptions ;

" Convinced of the necessity of ensuring that the Press of all nations receives as impartial and complete information as possible :

" Requests the Council to consider the possibility of studying :

" (a) Means of associating feminine action and feminine feeling with the work of the League of Nations by an effective and direct collaboration ;

" (b) Means for preventing, with the assistance of the Press, the dissemination of such false information as may hinder the maintenance of peace and goodwill among the peoples ".

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) agreed that the ideas contained in paragraphs (a) and (b) should be discussed separately; they had only been united in the same resolution by the Spanish delegation because the action of women and the action of the Press were, in its opinion, the most powerful means of creating the moral atmosphere necessary for the maintenance of peace.

The collaboration of women was in harmony with the spirit of the Covenant, which granted equal rights to men and women in the League Organisations. Spain was particularly interested in this question. In January last, the General Association of Spanish Women suggested that a conference of women should be called to assist in disarmament and the organisation of peace. The Spanish resolution had aroused great interest among the various international feminine organisations, and this interest had been shown in various ways. He thought the resolution should be merely transmitted to the Assembly, which would forward it to the Council, which would have the question considered.

It was therefore advisable not to indicate in advance what the results of this consideration should be.

Princess CANTACUZENE (Roumania) supported the Spanish delegation's proposal. It was impossible in questions of peace and disarmament not to appeal to the women and mothers. If the Assembly adopted the resolution, the women of all countries would interpret this to mean that it had expressed a desire for the closer and more official co-operation of women with the League of Nations, and that means should be found at the Disarmament Conference to give women a part worthy of their high pacifist mission.

Madame SZELAGOWSKA (Poland) stated that the Polish Government, which greatly appreciated the collaboration of women, especially in the sphere of moral disarmament, supported the Spanish resolution and proposed the following draft resolution :

> " Considering the draft resolution of the Spanish delegation, which aims at associating feminine action and feminine feeling with the work of the League of Nations by an effective and direct collaboration;
> " Recalling Article 7 of the Covenant of the League of Nations, which declares that all positions under or in connection with the League shall be open equally to men and women :
> " The Assembly invites the Government of the States Members of the League of Nations to consider the possibility of the participation of women in the delegations to the General Disarmament Conference ".

Count BERNSTORFF (Germany) expressed his sympathy with the Spanish proposal and with the ideas of the previous speakers. In principle, his Government thought the participation of women in the Disarmament Conference would be useful.

M. HIITONEN (Finland) thought the intention of the Spanish resolution was to pay due homage to women and their work for peace, but the text gave the impression that hitherto women had done nothing in favour of the League of Nations or of peace. He proposed to amend the text as follows :

> " The Assembly requests the Council to consider the possibility of making the collaboration of women in the work of the League of Nations more intensive and productive ".

M. BUERO (Uruguay) said his Government warmly supported the Spanish resolution. If the two paragraphs (a) and (b) were separated into two different resolutions, he would propose the following text for the question of the collaboration of women :

> " Considering that the organisation of peace demands the maintenance of an international spirit free from all prejudices and misconceptions, and that, in this connection, the collaboration of women in the work of the League of Nations, which is already provided for in respect of its international officials by Article 7 of the Covenant, would be of great value, especially on the occasion of the coming Disarmament Conference:
> " The Assembly requests the Council to consider the possibility of studying means of associating feminine action and feminine feeling with the work of the League of Nations by direct collaboration ".

This would satisfy the Polish and Roumanian delegations by referring to the Disarmament Conference, without, however, imposing obligations on the Governments in respect of the composition of their delegations.

Sir Thomas WILFORD (New Zealand) pointed out that the English translation of the Spanish draft resolution was very unfortunate. He would like to know exactly the meaning of the resolution. He thought that if women wished to be delegates to the Disarmament Conference they should be appointed by the Governments of their own country.

M. D'AVILA LIMA (Portugal) had the greatest sympathy with the activity of women and supported the Spanish proposal, which was both useful and gallant.

M. POLITIS (Greece) had the greatest admiration for feminine organisations and in particular for their work in the social sphere. They could certainly do much for peace. If the object of the Spanish proposal were to request the Council to study the best method of using women for propaganda in favour of peace, he entirely subscribed to it, but he opposed the resolution if its object were to make room for feminine organisations at the side of the official delegations at the Disarmament Conference. In fact, there would be no reason not to grant the same right to older and more powerful political organisations, such as the Second International, or the Universal Confederation of Freemasons.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) entirely shared M. Politis' opinion as to the nature of the Disarmament Conference; it was impossible to admit organisations or individuals other than the official delegations.

He had always been a partisan of equal rights for men and women, but he would be opposed to any resolution placing women in a more advantageous position simply because they were women. If the Governments desired, they could delegate women to the Conference, but it was impossible to recommend them to do so.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) accepted all the changes in form which had been suggested. He preferred the text suggested by M. Buero. With regard to the substance of the resolution, the interpretation to be put upon it was the first one mentioned by M. Politis. The sole intention of the Spanish delegation had been to urge the preparation of an atmosphere favourable to the Conference by means of propaganda undertaken by women. It was possible for women to exercise influence in particular at the moment when the consciousness of the child was being formed and when the political ideas of the adult were being developed; this influence could also be exercised by supervision over school books. This idea merged into that of the practical collaboration of women in the mechanism of the League of Nations. He was not opposed to this, but it was not his main idea.

M. HIITONEN (Finland) pointed out that M. Buero's text gave the impression that it was solely the fault of men if there were not an international spirit free from all prejudice.

M. MASSIGLI (France) approved the Spanish proposal with the interpretation put upon it by M. Politis and Lord Cecil. Moreover, he approved it because, for the first time, it raised the question of moral disarmament which should be followed up and solved.

In view of the numerous changes in form which had been submitted, he proposed that the text should be referred to a Drafting Committee.

This proposal was adopted.

The Drafting Committee would be composed of representatives of France, Great Britain, Spain, Roumania, Poland, Finland and Uruguay.

16. Co-operation of the Press in the Work of the League of Nations.

The CHAIRMAN opened the discussion on paragraph (b) of the Spanish proposal.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) proposed the following text:

"Considering that the organisation of peace demands the maintenance of an international spirit free from all prejudices and misconceptions;

"Convinced of the necessity for ensuring that the Press of all nations receives as impartial and complete information as possible:

"The Assembly requests the Council to consider the possibility of studying, with the assistance of the Press, means for preventing the dissemination of such false information as may hinder the maintenance of peace and goodwill among the peoples".

Precedents were to be found in the Swedish and Polish resolutions reproduced on page 6 of the report by the Special Committee (document A.9.1931). The Polish resolution referred in particular to Press campaigns in times of crisis. The Spanish proposal was based on the idea that preparations for peace should be made in time of peace, and not when war was threatening. The Press was a formidable weapon both for good and evil, and the Spanish Government had thought fit to draw attention to this point. It had no other aim and it merely requested the Council to institute an enquiry into this question.

M. Urgoiti, the Spanish delegate to the Press Conference of 1927, had suggested that an exclusively professional international organisation should be created, to which the national associations of journalists would be responsible. In the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation, the Spanish professor, Casares, had made a similar proposal. M. de Madariaga further pointed out that, in order to solve this question, the collaboration of the journalists themselves was necessary, and in particular of those dealing specially with international politics.

M. DE SCAVENIUS (Denmark) supported the Spanish delegate's proposal. One of the methods proposed for putting this idea into effect was to create regular contact between the heads of official Press bureaux.

In this connection, the Danish Government stated that if such a conference were thought useful it was prepared to organise it at Copenhagen.

M. SOKAL (Poland) supported the Spanish delegation's proposal, coming as it did after those of the Swedish and Polish delegations. The Committee was discussing part of the important problem of moral disarmament, and sincerely hoped that a practical solution would be found. In his opinion the problem involved wider aspects, but it was at present impossible to prolong the discussion. The Polish Government had sent to the Secretary-General a memorandum on the entire problem, which would be communicated to all States taking part in the Disarmament Conference. He would be glad if this memorandum could also be circulated to all the members of the Third Committee (document C.602.M.240.1931.IX).

The CHAIRMAN replied that this would be done.

M. BENEŠ (Czechoslovakia) supported the Spanish proposal and agreed with the suggestion made by M. de Scavenius. The first experiment of this kind had shown excellent results.

Baron RAMEL (Sweden) thanked the Special Committee for the sympathy with which it had received the Swedish proposal. He supported the Spanish delegation's proposal and agreed that the matter should be left to the discretion of the Council. He hoped that the Swedish proposal would also be discussed, and accepted the suggestion made by M. de Scavenius.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) also supported the Spanish proposal and was glad of the Danish delegation's suggestion. He pointed out, however, that the independent journalists should not be overlooked. He thought it was M. de Madariaga's intention to associate them in the enquiries to be made.

The problem of moral disarmament was a very wide one, and he was not certain that some politicians were not as dangerous as journalists. Moreover, this problem could not be solved solely by negative measures. There must be international understanding in order to put an end to international suspicion.

M. LONE LIANG (China) stated that his country, which had for years suffered from tendentious information supplied by journalists who were unfortunately protected by extra-territorial rights, warmly approved the Spanish proposal.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) thanked the speakers who had approved the Spanish proposal, and in particular the Danish delegate. He would be glad if his motion were submitted at the same time to the journalists, and to the Copenhagen Conference of Heads of Press Bureaux, for examination.

M. DE SCAVENIUS (Denmark) thanked the delegates who had spoken in favour of the Copenhagen Conference. He was quite aware that this Conference only constituted one method of action.

The Committee referred the Spanish proposal to the Drafting Committee.

17. Draft General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War : Discussion of the Articles (continuation).

PREAMBLE (continuation).

M. BARANDON (Legal Section of the Secretariat) explained that the Preamble of the draft Convention had been moulded on that of conventions drawn up by conferences. A suggestion had been made that the General Act should be taken as a model, but this document had no preamble, nor did it provide for signatures, but only accessions. The same procedure might be used for the Convention under discussion, but, in that case, certain articles would have to be changed. It would be preferable to follow the procedure adopted for the Convention on Financial Assistance — namely, to leave the Preamble unchanged and to omit only the words " found in good and due form ", which are useless, since there was no verification of powers.

M. POLITIS (Greece) pointed out that the full powers which Governments had given their delegates to the Assembly for the purpose of signing the draft Convention were no longer valid, since the text had been changed. The number of signatures would therefore be very small during this session, and this might create an unfortunate effect. It would be preferable to endeavour to model the procedure on that of the General Act and to adopt the form of a convention open for the subsequent accession of the Governments.

M. KOMARNICKI (Poland) supported the proposal made by M. Politis.

The Committee adopted this proposal.

The Convention was referred to the Drafting Committee, in which M. Politis would take part.

(The meeting rose at 7 p.m.)

SEVENTH MEETING.

Held on Saturday, September 19th, 1931, at 3 p.m.

Chairman : M. MUNCH (Denmark).

18. Draft Resolution submitted by the Delegations of Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland concerning an Armaments Truce.

The CHAIRMAN opened the discussion on the following draft resolution submitted by the delegations of Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland :

" Being convinced that the crisis which is at present creating such serious disturbance among the nations of the world is due to a number of economic and political causes, one of the principal sources of which is the lack of mutual confidence between the nations ;

" Being convinced that the realisation of the undertakings contained in the Covenant regarding the reduction of armaments will be one of the most important means of re-establishing mutual confidence between the nations and alleviating their crushing economic burdens, while a resumption of competition in armaments would fatally lead to an international and social disaster :

" The Assembly addresses a solemn appeal to all who desire the application of the principles of peace and justice on which the Covenant is based to devote all their efforts to the creation of a world opinion strong enough to ensure that the General Disarmament Conference will lead to definite results involving in particular a gradual reduction of armaments which will be continued until the object mentioned in Article 8 of the Covenant is attained.

" Considering the importance of carefully preparing the ground for the work of the said Conference and, in particular, of avoiding fresh increases of armaments in the present state of affairs :

" The Assembly requests the Council to urge the Governments convened to the said Conference to show their firm determination to support the efforts to ensure peace and re-establish mutual confidence by abstaining, pending the result of the Conference, from any measure leading to an increase in the present level of their armaments ".

The Chairman said that, as this question was closely connected with the work of the Preparatory Commission, in which representatives of the United States of America, Turkey and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics had taken part, he proposed that these three countries should be invited to send delegates to this Committee when it came to discuss the armaments truce. In order not to delay the work of the Assembly, these countries might possibly appoint diplomats accredited to some capital near Geneva.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) approved the proposal, but asked why the invitation should be restricted to three non-member States.

M. MASSIGLI (France) had no objection in principle. Indeed, he would be very glad if representatives of States non-members of the League, who were, moreover, already present in the room, continued in the Assembly the productive co-operation which they had brought to the Preparatory Commission. But the proposal raised such an important point of procedure that it should be referred to the Bureau of the Assembly. Moreover, on the same day, the First Committee, in dealing with the question of the codification of international law, had seemed to consider that it could not invite States non-members of the Assembly to take part in its work.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) thought that respect for regulations should not be carried too far. Moreover, he thought there was a precedent for the proposal which had been made. A representative of the United States of America had taken part in the opium discussion in the Fifth Committee. It was clear that such representatives could not vote, but there was nothing to prevent a Committee from hearing persons who might be in a position to give information of interest.

He presumed the invitation had been restricted to the three countries mentioned because they had shown great interest in the disarmament question. There was no objection to inviting other countries who had shown equal interest. To refer the proposal to the Bureau of the Assembly would involve an unfortunate delay, and he suggested sending the invitation subject to the Bureau's approval.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) shared Lord Cecil's views regarding M. Massigli's scruples, but did not agree with him regarding the number of invitations to be sent. It was a very delicate matter for the League of Nations to choose between absent States. The invitation should be extended to all and could be accepted or refused.

General DE MARINIS (Italy) entirely approved the proposal and associated himself with Lord Cecil's remarks.

M. MASSIGLI (France) wished to avoid any misunderstanding. He would be very glad to continue the work of the Third Committee with the help of non-member States and to utilise any information their representatives might bring. But he could not help thinking that such a procedure involved a serious question of principle in regard to which the precedent quoted by Lord Cecil no doubt gave Lord Cecil the necessary assurance. He felt he should point out that it would have been opportune to forewarn the members of the Committee of the initiative taken in order to allow them to consider the matter. He regretted that this had not been done.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) did not wish to pose as an absolute authority on the matter. His recollection of the precedent was, moreover, somewhat vague, and he did not wish to make a definite statement. But he saw no objection to the Committee applying to any party in a position to give information.

If the Bureau of the Assembly disapproved of the invitation, it would always be possible to state that it constituted an exception and did not create a precedent.

M. BUERO (Uruguay) shared M. Massigli's view and expressed his astonishment that the question had been raised so abruptly.

M. de Madariaga had referred to a very important point. If certain non-member States were invited to give their co-operation, an invitation should also be given to the South American countries which did not take part in the League's work. This applied principally to two large countries, namely, Brazil and the Argentine. It would be very desirable to have their views on the question under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN agreed that it would have been preferable to have a few hours to think over the proposal which had arisen so suddenly, but such situations were not infrequent in the work of the Assembly. He had no objection to adopting M. de Madariaga's proposal, which had been supported by M. Buero. The position of the representatives thus invited would be similar to that of persons taking part in the Committee's work without being members such as the Rapporteurs of other Committees. Nevertheless, as the question was more important, he proposed to follow Lord Cecil's suggestion and to adopt the proposal subject to the approval of the Bureau of the Assembly.

M. MASSIGLI (France) pointed out that this proposal might place the Committee in an embarrassing situation in regard to the countries invited if the Bureau disapproved of the invitation. It would to some extent bind the Bureau. The Chairman of the Committee, who was also a member of the Bureau and had taken the responsibility of putting forward the proposal before the Committee, had possibly had an opportunity of obtaining the Bureau's views in this regard. M. Massigli only knew one precedent, and that was when the Assembly requested the Council to invite certain non-member States to the Preparatory Commission.

The CHAIRMAN stated that agreement, which had always existed on the substance of the question, had also been reached on the procedure. It was proposed that the President of the Assembly should request the Council to approve an invitation to be sent to all States invited to the Disarmament Conference which did not take part in the Assembly's work. As the Council was to meet at 5 p.m., a decision might be reached that day.

This procedure was adopted.

19. Question regarding the Minutes of the Fifth Meeting.

M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia) said that the delegations could not attend discussions in all the Committees and had to rely on the Minutes. At the fifth meeting of the Committee, M. de Madariaga had expressed a very judicious opinion on the neutralisation by the Council of certain territories in dispute. This opinion had already aroused comment in America. There was, however, no trace of it in the provisional Minutes. If a mistake had been made, he appealed to the loyalty of M. de Madariaga and to the Bureau of the Committee to record this opinion.

The CHAIRMAN explained that the Minutes were provisional and the speakers were entitled to make any changes which they desired. He would therefore ask M. de Madariaga if he had any corrections to make in his declarations.

General BENITEZ (Spain) said M. de Madariaga was absent and he would bring the Chairman's request to his notice.

Colonel Ali Khan RIAZI (Persia) said the remarks which he had submitted at the same meeting had been greatly abbreviated and even distorted.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that the provisional Minutes were not verbatim reports. The delegates were always entitled to reinsert anything which they considered had been wrongly omitted.

M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia) replied that, in the case to which he referred, a passage had been omitted. He reserved the right to return to the subject when M. de Madariaga was present.

20. Draft General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War (continuation).

M. BARANDON (Legal Section of the Secretariat) pointed out that the Committee, on M. Politis' proposal, had decided that the Convention should take the form of the General Act and be only open for subsequent accession. The Drafting Committee had encountered such difficulties in giving this form to the Convention that it had considered it preferable to choose the usual form of a convention open to the signature of the States. M. Politis had made his suggestion in view of the unsatisfactory experience in connection with the Convention for Financial Assistance. In view of these difficulties, he had requested M. Barandon to inform the Committee that he did not insist on his proposal.

M. BUERO (Uruguay) asked the Committee to reverse its vote of the previous day on this question and to instruct the Drafting Committee to prepare the text in accordance with this new decision.

The proposal was adopted.

(The meeting rose at 4.45 p.m.)

EIGHTH MEETING.

Held on Monday, September 21st, 1931, at 4.30 p.m.

Chairman : M. MUNCH (Denmark).

21. Invitation to take part in the Work of the Committee addressed to the Countries not represented at the Assembly.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the President of the Assembly had thought fit to bring the matter before the General Committee of the Assembly, which had adopted the following resolution :

> " The General Committee of the Assembly,
> " Having noted the request formulated by the Third Committee that States not represented at the Assembly, which participated in the work of the Preparatory Disarmament Commission, and those invited to the General Disarmament Conference, should be asked to take part in an advisory capacity in the Committee's discussions on the draft resolution concerning an armaments truce :
> " Notes that the President of the Assembly, having regard to the urgency of the matter, and in view of the decision of the Third Committee and especially of the unanimity of that decision, is qualified, in agreement with the General Committee, to take a decision in the matter without further procedure ;
> " Considers that steps should be taken to carry into effect the Third Committee's proposal ;
> " Asks the President of the Assembly to take the necessary steps with a view to giving immediate effect to the present decision and to inform the Assembly of his action at its next plenary meeting ".

The following countries were invited : Afghanistan, Argentine, Brazil, Costa Rica, the United States of America, Egypt, Ecuador, Salvador, Turkey, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. The only reply received up to the present was that of the Government of the United States of America, which accepted the invitation in the following words :

> " The Secretary of State of the United States desires me to acknowledge, on his behalf, the receipt by him of the invitation which the President of the twelfth Assembly, in pursuance of the unanimous decision of the Third Committee and in agreement with the General Committee of the Assembly, despatched to the Secretary of State on September 19th, 1931, inviting the Government of the United States to take part, in a consultative capacity, in the discussions in the Third Committee relative to the resolution looking to a truce in armaments presented by the delegations of Denmark, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland.
> " In view of the deep and continuing interest of the Government of the United States in the question of disarmament, the Secretary of State begs that you will be good enough to express his thanks to the President of the Assembly for this courteous invitation, and to inform him that he takes pleasure in accepting it on behalf of the Government of the United States.

" I have been designated to act as the representative of the United States for this purpose.

(Signed) Hugh R. WILSON."

The Chairman welcomed Mr. Wilson and asked him to take his place in the Committee.

Mr. WILSON (United States of America) thanked the Committee for its invitation and said he was very glad to continue to co-operate with the many delegations with whom he had always had such pleasant relations.

22. Draft Resolution submitted by the Delegations of Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland concerning an Armaments Truce (continuation).

M. COLBAN (Norway) said he was only speaking on behalf of his delegation and not on that of all the delegations which had signed the draft resolution. The resolution aimed, in the first place, at securing for the Disarmament Conference the benefit of an active public opinion, enlightened as to the urgent need for mutual concessions on the part of the Governments ; it further desired to stop the competition in armaments, so that the Governments might take part in the Conference in an atmosphere of tranquillity ; lastly, it wished, as far as possible, to bring about moral disarmament, so that the Conference might meet and work under the most favourable conditions.

General DE MARINIS (Italy) entirely agreed with the object of the draft resolution, which was inspired by the same ideas as the proposal made by the First Italian delegate at the general discussion in the Assembly, but the means proposed by the draft resolution were inadequate. The Italian delegation, therefore, found it necessary to submit proposals for a practical application of the Armaments Truce. M. Grandi had informed the Assembly of the reasons for such a proposal. The object was to induce the Assembly to examine the practical aspect of the disarmament problem and to suggest a means of immediate action which would give an initial impulse to the Disarmament Conference. This proposal was the result of careful consideration of the position. The Disarmament Conference was faced by a task of exceptional importance, the difficulty of which it would be dangerous to underestimate. Failure would be, if not a disaster, at any rate an extremely unfortunate event for Europe and the entire world. It was, therefore, necessary to prepare a favourable atmosphere for the future work of the Conference. This could have been done by preparatory work consisting in eliminating, or at any rate reducing, certain differences of opinion and certain special difficulties between some of the countries invited. This preparatory work had not been done or had not given the desired result. The Italian delegation therefore considered that action should be taken in the form of a truce in armaments which would show that mistrust had disappeared and have an effect on the preparation for the Conference which might exceed the most optimistic expectations.

The Italian proposal had been carefully thought out. It was only submitted after each delegation had been able to consider the general idea expressed by M. Grandi and after some delegations had approved it. The proposal must be simple, clear and applicable at short notice to all States. The fundamental idea was that, for a certain period, each country should be prevented from increasing the present strength of its armaments and that, during the same period, no country should endeavour to change to its own advantage the relationship between its armaments and those of other countries. Some countries might think this involved a sacrifice, but it would be a common sacrifice made for the common good. The Italian delegation was aware that land, sea and air armaments should be considered separately. Its proposal was as follows :

In respect of land armaments, it would be difficult to stop all manufacture or purchase of materials and to interrupt the normal working of existing military organisations. The Italian delegation, therefore, proposed that each State should undertake not to increase its expenditure for the army above the figures already voted for the current year.

With regard to naval armaments, each State would undertake not to lay down any warship during the truce, while vessels under construction could be continued and completed.

With regard to air armaments, each State would undertake not to construct new military aircraft except to replace craft which had become unfit for service during the truce.

The Italian delegation thought the length of the truce should be based on the time necessary, under the most favourable circumstances, for the Disarmament Conference's conclusions to be accepted by all the Governments. For practical reasons, it proposed that a definite period should be fixed, and it suggested one year.

In order to avoid difficulties inherent to the signature and ratification of a convention, the truce might take the form of a formal and solemn declaration by which each Government would undertake to respect the limitations in question. This form of undertaking, known as a " gentlemen's agreement ", was not legally perfect, but everyone would recognise that, in practice, it would not be less compulsory than a treaty or convention.

The application of this very simple system should not offer insurmountable difficulties, if goodwill were shown on all sides. It might be open to the objection that it would bind the States to a level of armaments which some might think inequitable. The Italian Government admitted this argument, especially as it could not itself accept the criterion of the status quo, but the acceptance of the truce did not imply a renunciation of demands which each party would be entitled to put forward at the Conference.

The objection might also be raised that the naval truce, by preventing the replacing of vessels which had been put out of commission during its period, would lead to an effective reduction in the naval forces. This reduction would, however, in practice apply, in equal proportions to all navies.

The budgetary limitation of land armaments was perhaps not a perfect system, but it was easy to apply and had the advantage of preventing any considerable increase in effectives and stocks.

The objection that some countries were not represented in the Committee lost its importance in view of the invitations addressed to them. This invitation had been already accepted by the Government of the United States of America, to which he paid a tribute for its perseverance in the cause of disarmament.

If the truce were to be of long duration, more detailed, complete and strict rules would have to be applied, and it would be necessary in advance to solve certain problems which the Disarmament Conference would have to examine and decide. The proposed truce was only a provisional measure, aiming at creating a calm atmosphere for the Conference's discussions. It involved a minimum of undertakings and limitations, but this minimum might be of the greatest moral importance and might have a beneficial effect on the future work.

In conclusion, he repeated that the recommendation with which the draft resolution put forward by the five States concluded was not adequate to the gravity of the problems and the needs of the situation. He could, therefore, not vote for the resolution unless it implied an armaments truce on the lines which he had laid down.

The discussion was adjourned.

23. Communications of Importance to the League of Nations at Times of Emergency (continuation).

M. Buero (Uruguay) (Rapporteur) read his draft report (document A.III.12.1931) (Annex 1).

The draft report was adopted.

24. Collaboration of Women in the Work of the League (continuation).

M. Buero (Uruguay) (Rapporteur) read his draft report (document A.III.13.1931) (Annex 2).

The draft report and the draft resolution with which it concluded were adopted.

25. Collaboration of the Press in the Work of the League (continuation).

M. Buero (Uruguay) (Rapporteur) read his draft report (document A.III.13.1931) (Annex 2).

Baron Ramel (Sweden) pointed out that the Swedish delegation's proposal, which had given rise to the question, was mentioned, but not reproduced. He asked that the text should be inserted at the beginning of the report before the Polish proposal.

M. Sokal (Poland) supported this proposal.

The report, with Baron Ramel's amendment, and the draft resolution at the end of the report were adopted.

26. Question regarding the Minutes of the Fifth Meeting (continuation).

M. Caballero de Bedoya (Paraguay) said that, as he could not attend the previous meeting of the Committee, he had not been able to take note of the approval given by the Bolivian delegate to ideas (which he had qualified as judicious) expressed by M. de Madariaga, regarding conservatory measures applicable to the parties in dispute in the event of a threat of war.

Paraguay, in its dispute with Bolivia, had always considered that conservatory measures should be applied at the beginning of negotiations and continued until an arbitral or judicial decision had been given. This was the only procedure by which frontier incidents or threats of armed conflict might be avoided.

In this connection, the delegate of Paraguay recalled the second Conference held at Buenos Aires in 1928, in which Bolivia and Paraguay took part, under the auspices of the Argentine Government. M. Ruiz Moreno, the Argentine observer, proposed to the representatives of Bolivia and Paraguay that the armed posts should be withdrawn to a distance of fifty kilometres from each other, or de-militarised, or that an international police force should be constituted.

The Government of Paraguay entirely approved these proposals; but the Government of Bolivia thought fit to reject them. Paraguay went so far as to propose the abandonment of all fortified places constructed after 1907 by the parties in dispute. If these recommendations of the Argentine Government had been accepted and put into effect, it was probable that regrettable frontier incidents might have been avoided. It was to be hoped that the tardy approval given by the Bolivian delegate to these ideas would in future lead to a wiser policy and to an attitude more in keeping with the requirements of peace.

M. Costa du Rels (Bolivia) was surprised that the delegate of Paraguay should consider that he had approved the opinion expressed by M. de Madariaga in the meeting of September 19th. The Bolivian delegate had only spoken in order to point out the omission in the Minutes and to ask the Chairman that the Minutes should be neither altered nor abridged. His remarks were not intended either as approval or disapproval of M. de Madariaga's ideas which had been omitted from the Minutes. Under these circumstances, M. Costa du Rels expressed reservations on M. Caballero de Bedoya's statement.

M. Caballero de Bedoya (Paraguay) referred to the Minutes which had been circulated and distributed to the Press and which contained the following passage of M. Costa du Rels' remarks :

> " A judicious opinion was expressed by M. de Madariaga regarding the neutrality of certain territories. This opinion has aroused various comments in South America, but I have found no trace of it in the Minutes ".

M. Caballero de Bedoya thought he was right in stating that M. Costa du Rels considered this opinion to be " judicious " and he noted the declaration which had just been made.

M. Costa du Rels (Bolivia) repeated that the only subject referred to in the discussion was the omission of a part of the Minutes of the Committee's meeting on September 19th.

NINTH MEETING.

Held on Tuesday, September 22nd, 1931, at 6 p.m.

Chairman : M. Munch (Denmark).

27. Draft Resolution submitted by the Delegations of Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland concerning an Armaments Truce (continuation).

The Chairman read the replies from the Governments of the Argentine, Costa Rica, Egypt, Turkey and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to the invitations addressed to them to take part in the Third Committee.

Reply from the Argentine :

> " I hasten to reply to your telegram of the 19th instant. Although the Argentine Congress has not yet reached a decision regarding the entrance of our country into the League of Nations, the Argentine Government is disposed, as on other occasions, to take part in the World Conference in February next in a spirit of active co-operation. As regards the Third Committee which is to meet to-day to discuss the armaments truce, we shall be prevented from attending by the lack of material, time and knowledge of the definite points to be discussed.
> (Signed) Bosch."

Reply from Costa Rica :

> " In conformity with the desire of the League of Nations, the Government of Costa Rica has appointed Dr. Figueredo as delegate to the Third Committee on the armaments truce.
> (Signed) Pacheco."

Reply from Egypt :

> " The Government of His Majesty the King of Egypt, in reply to your invitation, has appointed me to take part in the discussions of the Third Committee regarding the armaments truce. I am on the way to Geneva and shall have the pleasure of calling on you to-morrow morning.
> (Signed) Fakhry."

Reply from Turkey :

> " In reply to your telegram, I have the honour to inform you that in accepting with pleasure the invitation to take part in the discussions of the Third Committee regarding the proposal of the Governments of Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland, Cemel Hüsnü Bey, our Minister at Berne, has been instructed to represent us on the Committee.
> (Signed) Tevfik Rouchdi."

Reply from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics :

" I thank you for your kind telegram communicating the decision of the Third Committee to invite the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to take part in an advisory capacity in the discussion on the armaments truce. Apart from the other conditions attached to this invitation, I will merely state that the shortness of the time would in any case prevent the Soviet Government from delegating a representative to Geneva. I think it advisable, however, to inform you that the Soviet Government, which is always prepared to support any proposal for limiting armaments, would be disposed to associate itself with the proposal made by M. Grandi, Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, provided that proposal is adopted in a form obligatory upon all countries, that it covers all classes of armaments, and that the signatories of the undertaking confirm that it shall not in any case replace or postpone the essential problem of disarmament or limitation of existing armaments, which must be settled as quickly as possible.

(Signed) LITVINOV."

The Chairman welcomed the representatives of Costa-Rica, Egypt and Turkey and asked them to take their seats in the Committee.

Cemal HÜSNÜ Bey (Turkey) thanked the Committee for the invitation extended to his country, which would always be ready to give its earnest co-operation in all work connected with peace.

M. FIGUEREDO (Costa Rica) also thanked the Committee and stated that his Government was glad to offer its earnest co-operation in disarmament, in spite of the fact that the problem did not arise for Costa Rica, which had a very small armed force.

General TÁNCZOS (Hungary) said that, in view of the special situation of his country, the idea of an armaments truce would be warmly welcomed. The Hungarian delegation sympathised with every effort in this direction and with every concrete project calculated to create an atmosphere of tranquillity which would enable the coming Conference to attain a satisfactory result in regard to the reduction of armaments.

M. PFLÜGL (Austria) said that, while not underestimating the difficulty of realising the truce proposed by General de Marinis, the Austrian delegation gave its entire approval and support to this proposal.

Sir Denys BRAY (India) regretted that, in view of the great distance, he could not announce his Government's decision, but he had no doubt that General de Marinis' proposal would find the warmest welcome in India in spite of the special difficulties peculiar to his country.

The Indian delegate paid a tribute of admiration to General de Marinis for the courageous lead taken by Italy. The project was not ideal, but it was simple ; it was a concrete proposal and appeared to be workable immediately. This latter quality was of primary importance. The world needed greater confidence, and it would be regrettable if this proposal, which was good in itself, were rejected on account of a striving for something better.

M. DE SCAVENIUS (Denmark) explained that the object of the resolution submitted by his country, together with four other countries, was not to open a discussion on details, but to appeal to all the Governments invited to the Disarmament Conference to refrain from all new armaments pending the result of that Conference. It would indeed be regrettable if armaments were increased during the Conference, thus aggravating the difficulties and complicating the application of decisions which, to a certain extent, would be based on the existing position of armaments.

Such a proposal for a truce could only be based on the goodwill of the parties. The expression employed in the draft resolution " not to increase the present level of armaments " did not imply that work under way would be stopped, although it would be desirable if the States were induced to recognise that the whole or a part of their programme was unnecessary. In the same way, the replacement of old material did not change the level of armaments provided it were not a total and radical transformation of such material. The resolution gave the Council full discretion to decide on the form of the undertakings to be given. The Danish delegation would not object to a compulsory truce, but it would appear that some States would wish, before accepting it, to draw up detailed regulations, machinery for control, etc. It would seem to be sufficient if, as a result of an Assembly resolution, the States considered themselves morally obliged to conform to the spirit of that resolution. The States particularly concerned with the position of armaments in non-member States would naturally be obliged to take the attitude of the latter into consideration.

The Danish delegation urged the necessity of active preparation for the Disarmament Conference, and asked the Secretariat to inform the Governments of the position in regard to the technical preparation. He would be glad if the Secretariat could agree with the President of the Conference as to a programme of the Conference's work, which would be submitted to the Governments. With regard to the political preparation, it had been hoped that Mr. Henderson would be able to undertake this work during the Assembly. Circumstances had not permitted this, but the Danish delegation was convinced that the Governments of the great countries would find other means for examining the difficulties which divided them and of partly solving them. The most important work was to create everywhere a public opinion strong enough to ensure the success of the Conference. The Interparliamentary Union, whose disarmament project would be an important document at the Conference, would meet this autumn at Bucharest and would discuss the means of ensuring the success of the Conference. Other associations, such as the Federation of League of Nations Societies and women's associations, were carrying on active propaganda.

But, on the other hand, action in the contrary sense was being exercised by powerful forces inspired both by strong interests and by deep feelings which had their roots in history.

It was, therefore, essential that the Assembly should turn to the nations with an appeal inspired by the spirit of co-operation on which the League was based.

Mr. TE WATER (Union of South Africa) said that his country had repeatedly encouraged every effort towards disarmament, and that his Government had on many occasions stated that it was only waiting for the signature of a disarmament convention to ratify other conventions which were the complement of disarmament. He was sure that his Government would welcome a proposal aiming at creating an atmosphere favourable to the Disarmament Conference. Every nation would be judged by its reaction to the Italian proposal. He expressed his sympathy with that proposal and his admiration for the courageous lead given by the Italian delegation.

Count BERNSTORFF (Germany) was glad that representatives of the United States of America, Turkey and other non-member States were taking part in the present discussion.

Dr. Curtius had already brought his main point before the Assembly — namely, that Germany had reduced her armaments to the minimum and was impatiently waiting for other Powers to reduce and limit their own armaments by an international convention, in accordance with their promises.

The Italian proposal, which, in spirit, was in harmony with the draft resolution submitted by Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland, would facilitate the work of the Disarmament Conference. He would therefore merely express his entire sympathy with this proposal.

In agreeing with Dr. Curtius he stated, however, that he could only consider an armaments truce as a provisional measure which could not prejudice the result of the Disarmament Conference, since that result should in no case be the stabilisation of armaments at their present levels. He noted with satisfaction that General de Marinis had taken this view into account by proposing to limit the truce to one year.

M. AGHNIDES (Director of the Disarmament Section), in reply to the questions raised by M. de Scavenius, stated that, as a result of a resolution adopted by the Council in January last, the Secretary-General had asked all the Governments invited to the Disarmament Conference to send him information regarding the position of their armaments and all the technical or other data calculated to enlighten the Conference on the proposals to be brought forward. In May, the Council considered that the replies would only be of value if they were based on a uniform model, and asked the Secretary-General to request the Governments to base their replies on the schedules contained in the draft Convention and on the model drawn up by the Committee of Budgetary Experts. These replies were requested for September 15th at the latest, so that they could be circulated to the countries which had replied. This procedure had been adopted in order to hasten the despatch of the replies.

Up to the present, twenty-five Governments had replied : the United States of America, Belgium, France, Great Britain, the Netherlands, Germany, Sweden, Austria, Denmark, Italy, Japan, Estonia, Roumania, Ireland, Poland, Spain, Finland and Norway had asked that their replies should be circulated to all the Governments invited to the Conference. Twelve of these replies had been circulated and the other six were being printed.

On the other hand, seven countries had sent in their replies without making any remark. This meant that it was necessary to wait until the President of the Conference authorised the Secretary-General to circulate these replies to all the countries which had themselves replied.

With regard to M. de Scavenius' second proposal concerning the preparations to be made for the Conference by the Secretariat, it was for the Committee in the first place to decide what action should be taken. The Secretariat would then follow the instructions adopted by the Third Committee.

TENTH MEETING.

Held on Wednesday, September 23rd, 1931, at 3 p.m.

Chairman : M. MUNCH (Denmark).

28. Draft General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN stated that as M. de Madariaga could not attend the meeting he would be replaced as Rapporteur by M. Buero.

The preamble and the articles of the Convention (document A.78.1931.IX) were successively adopted without discussion.

The CHAIRMAN put the entire Convention to the vote.

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) said the Chilian delegation had not taken part in the work of the Special Committee nor in the discussions of the Third Committee on the draft Convention, and would abstain from voting for the following reasons.

The fundamental idea of the draft was that, as Article 11 of the Covenant was insufficient, the contracting parties undertook to put in force measures which were not compulsory for Members of the League of Nations, in order to reduce the risk of war. The Chilian Government was opposed to an indirect revision of the Covenant by means of general conventions, the result of which was to create uncertainty as to the duties of the Members of the League of Nations in cases where certain States were not parties to these conventions. If Article 11 were considered insufficient, it would be wiser to revise it directly.

Though the problem of security was not a serious question for Chile, it was not this selfish consideration which prevented her from voting for the Convention. She had unreservedly ratified the Pact of Paris and had in many ways shown her peaceful spirit and her desire to fulfil strictly the obligations arising out of the Covenant of the League of Nations.

In order, therefore, not to prevent the conclusion of a convention which some States considered useful and calculated to increase security, the Chilian delegation would abstain from voting.

M. SATO (Japan) said he would also abstain from voting, and he confirmed the reservation expressed by the Japanese delegate in the Special Committee.

Mr. TE WATER (Union of South Africa) had been empowered to vote for and sign the Convention, but he pointed out that his Government's ratification was subject to the adoption of a general disarmament convention.

The Convention as a whole was adopted, the Chilian and Japanese delegations abstaining from voting.

29. Report on the General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War (document A.III.17.1931.IX) (Annex 3).

M. SOKAL (Poland) considered that the report on the whole was excellent. In order to satisfy the Polish delegation, the Drafting Committee had proposed to insert a passage from a report by M. de Brouckère. This had been done. M. Sokal pointed out that M. de Brouckère's report had never been approved either by the Council or by the Assembly, which bodies had merely regarded it as a valuable guide. Under these circumstances he thought it better not to refer to it, in order to avoid creating the impression that M. de Brouckère's report was part of an official document. He therefore withdrew his request for its insertion.

Mr. CADOGAN (British Empire) attached some importance to the passage in question, which had a certain value as an argument, although it had not received the formal sanction of the Council. He proposed to add a few words explaining the position.

M. BUERO (Uruguay) (Rapporteur) pointed out that the quotation had not been merely inserted by the writer of the report, but was the result of a decision by the entire Drafting Committee. Under these circumstances the omission of the quotation might give the impression that some doubt existed as to the correctness of the arguments which it contained. He thought Mr. Cadogan's proposal should satisfy M. Sokal.

M. SOKAL (Poland) admitted that the quotation was a result of a decision by the Drafting Committee, but the latter had had the general impression that M. de Brouckère's report had been approved by the Assembly. On the other hand, this text had been inserted in order to satisfy the Polish delegation : as the latter now wished to withdraw it, he did not see why the other delegations should wish to retain it. He was willing to agree to a formula on the subject.

M. BUERO (Uruguay) (Rapporteur) proposed that the entire quotation could be placed in a footnote, and that the report should state explicitly that the passage quoted was regarded as a valuable guide in this important question and that it did not formally bind the Committee.

M. SOKAL (Poland) accepted the proposal, which satisfied him, at any rate as regards its form.

The proposal was adopted.

M. CASSIN (France) proposed to omit the second sentence in the paragraph commencing with the words " The Committee has further thought it desirable ", which reads as follows :

> " In prescribing measures of the first class, which are to be taken without delay, the Council's sole object is to put an end to what might be described as a violation of domicile ".

He thought it unnecessary to make such a comparison.

M. BUERO (Uruguay) (Rapporteur) pointed out that this sentence was merely meant to explain the following sentence regarding territorial waters.

M. CASSIN (France) replied that the important point was the statement contained in the following sentence — namely, that the States regarded their territorial waters as part of their territory — while the comparison added nothing to the force of the paragraph. He therefore proposed to omit the second sentence and the word " consequently " in the third sentence.

The proposal was adopted.

M. SOKAL (Poland) asked that, at the end of the paragraph beginning " Measures of the second category ", the following words should be inserted :

> " It is understood that the State whose territory has been invaded shall not be obliged to withdraw its forces behind the lines fixed by the Council until the complete evacuation of the said territory by the foreign forces ".

Lord CECIL (British Empire) thought it was impossible to make this addition at this stage.

M. SOKAL (Poland) asked if it were contrary to or in conformity with the principle of the Convention.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) replied that it was neither in conformity with nor contrary to the Convention, but was different from it.

M. SOKAL (Poland) thought it was an idea on which everybody must agree. He asked in what respect it differed from the terms of the Convention.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) thought it amounted to a totally new proposal. The lines to be drawn would depend on the circumstances in each case. There might even be cases where a line was drawn only on one side. The decision to send commissioners to supervise the evacuation should be sufficient to remove any apprehension.

M. SOKAL (Poland) pointed out that it was clear, from the original text, that the two operations — evacuation and fixing of the lines of withdrawal — took place successively. With the present text, this question was not clear. Nevertheless, he thought it was obvious that the withdrawal of forces behind the lines could not be demanded before the evacuation had been completed, whether there were one or two lines.

The CHAIRMAN proposed to adjourn this discussion and to continue the discussion on the resolution regarding an armaments truce.

30. Draft Resolution submitted by the Delegations of Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland concerning an Armaments Truce (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN welcomed Fakhry Pasha, delegate of the Egyptian Government, and asked him to take his seat in the Committee.

FAKHRY Pasha (Egypt) stated that the Government of His Majesty the King of Egypt had received with great pleasure the invitation from the eminent statesman presiding with such authority over the discussions of the twelfth Assembly of the League of Nations, and that the Royal Government was very glad to take part in the debates of the Third Committee regarding the armaments truce.

No cause could be nearer to the heart of His Majesty than that of disarmament and peace. In spite of his military career, His Majesty the King was more at home as a protector of letters and arts and was proud to wear the sword of a member of the Institute of France.

Since his accession to the Throne, His Majesty had constantly reiterated that the pen of the man of letters and the plough of the labourer were the arms of his choice.

The Egyptian people, heirs of the ancient civilisation of the Pharaohs, entirely shared the peaceful and humanitarian feelings of His Majesty and were proud to assist in creating better relations between the nations.

He added that he was honoured to represent his country in the League of Nations and to be the interpreter of his Government's desire for the success of the Disarmament Conference.

M. Michalakopoulos (Greece) said that Greece was prepared to sign any agreement unanimously adopted on the basis of the Italian proposal. Greece had already concluded a naval truce with Turkey putting an end to the competition in armaments between the two countries. It had been agreed that each country should not order any ships or munitions without giving the other six months' notice. In this way, it was possible to investigate, in a friendly manner, whether the order was intended for a normal replacement. As a result, Greece had economised 200 million drachmæ per annum and, what was more important, a feeling of confidence and goodwill had taken the place of an atmosphere of suspicion and disagreement. This precedent should encourage the nations to conclude similar agreements which would make for the happiness and progress of humanity.

Viscount Poullet (Belgium) thought the friendly reception given to the proposal put forward by the five delegations, together with M. Grandi's proposal, would show that, in spite of certain differences of opinion as to the application of Article 8 of the Covenant, all the States had the sincere desire to attain definite results at the Disarmament Conference. The Belgian delegation, after examining all the proposals with the greatest goodwill, would agree to any which the Committee unanimously approved. After listening to the details given by the Danish delegate on the import of the proposal made by the five delegations, the Belgian delegate stated that this proposal entirely satisfied him and that it was most nearly in accordance with what the nations desired at this moment.

M. Sato (Japan), while highly appreciating the intentions of the authors of the draft resolution and of the Italian proposal, said it would not appear that the States invited to the Disarmament Conference were at present entering into a competition in armaments. The general feeling of all countries was in favour of limitation and would not permit increases in armaments before the opening of the Conference. On the other hand, the Italian proposal would directly affect the provisions of the London Naval Treaty, which had been drawn up after long negotiations. He did not think this proposal could be changed, even by a formal and solemn declaration. For that purpose, a new Convention would have to be reached between the contracting parties.

Moreover, exact information would be required as to the present level of armaments. This involved a delay until the Governments had sent in their information. Under these circumstances, he proposed to reserve the draft resolution of the five delegations and the Italian proposal and to submit them to the Disarmament Conference for examination and decision. But he insisted that these drafts should be examined at the beginning of the Conference in order to start it under happy auspices and in a favourable atmosphere.

Mr. Wilson (United States of America) said his Government, which showed the greatest interest in the disarmament problem, had gladly accepted the opportunity offered by the Assembly. M. Grandi's proposal had aroused great sympathy in many countries and, in particular, in the United States, where the Press and the public had given it a very favourable reception. The nations were showing some uneasiness at the long discussions and projects which led to nothing. Under present economic conditions, it was not surprising that the idea of an armaments truce had been accepted as a means of relieving the evils from which the world was suffering. It had been thought that this truce would reduce expenditure, create an atmosphere of goodwill, put an end to competition in armaments and enable the countries to approach with tranquil minds the problems raised by the Disarmament Conference.

It had been hoped that some questions which only concerned certain Governments might have been solved before that Conference, not only because of their intrinsic importance, but also because their solution would make for a better mutual understanding. An armaments truce accepted by all would have a still greater effect.

The United States Government had had little time to consider the question with the necessary care. It thought, however, that the drafting of a convention would involve lengthy technical discussions; he was therefore in favour of the form proposed by General de Marinis — that was to say, a simple and clear declaration of intention. With regard to the details of the proposal, the United States Government was prepared to accept them in respect of land and air forces. It had not had time to consider the proposal in respect of naval armaments with sufficient care to be able to give its final approval to any particular form of undertaking. The London Naval Treaty fixed certain levels for the cruisers of the contracting parties. The present cruiser level of the United States was considerably below the figure provided for in the London Naval Treaty. Any undertaking not to construct vessels would, therefore, be embarrassing to the United States Government and would upset its construction plans. It was nevertheless prepared, in view of the necessity of creating psychological conditions favourable to the Disarmament Conference, to forgo its rights under the London Naval Treaty for one year. There were, however, other difficulties. The United States Navy Department had opened bids for the construction of a limited number of destroyers. These destroyers were the first ships in this category which the United States would have built for over a period of ten years, and they were destined to replace existing over-age tonnage in that category. The contracts would be allocated in connection with a general programme of unemployment relief. The American Government could therefore not undertake to stop this construction.

Mr. Wilson stated that he would give further details if, as he hoped, the discussion were continued. For the moment he thought it advisable merely to know the general attitude towards the Italian proposal. On the other hand, he thought the proposal put forward by M. Sato would prejudice the main interest of the question, which lay precisely in its immediate moral effect.

M. Beelaerts van Blokland (Netherlands) said that his country attached the greatest importance to the success of the Disarmament Conference, and it was in this spirit that his Government, together with four other countries, had submitted a draft resolution. The Italian delegation had submitted another proposal which had the same object, but went into greater detail in respect of the obligations to be undertaken by the States. The Netherlands delegation considered that, as this was a moral undertaking, it was not necessary to enter into details. It thought that, in this way, it was easier to arrive at a unanimous decision. It was, however, prepared to agree to the Italian proposal; and it was essential that the Assembly should take a step proving its sincere wish to create the atmosphere necessary for the success of the Disarmament Conference.

M. Sokal (Poland) noted that the discussions in the Assembly and in the Third Committee proved the unanimous desire to hold the Disarmament Conference on the date fixed. The Polish Government was prepared to support any measure for facilitating the success of that Conference. The Italian proposal, at first sight, appeared simple and easily acceptable by all States. In view, however, of the economic and financial crisis, there was no reason to think that the military budgets of most countries could be increased next year. Moreover, it would appear to be unjust that certain States should be bound by an undertaking, while other countries in the same region, whose expenditure for national defence was not, for instance, divided up among categories of armaments or who had no public control of the budget, would be placed in a very different position. Poland could, therefore, assume no obligation as regards budget expenditure so long as similar conditions did not exist in the region which concerned her. The Polish military budget was, moreover, lower than that of certain neighbouring countries and had not reached the level required by security.

It would be difficult to assume formal undertakings regarding naval and air armaments, since the Governments had not been able to examine all the aspects of the problem and had not had an opportunity of discussing the reservations to their accession made by countries which had not had the physical possibility of attending the Committee.

The Polish delegation approved in principle the proposal made by the five countries, while asking for certain changes in detail. Any other proposal would, in his opinion, run the risk of turning the Committee into a Disarmament Conference.

Lord Cecil (British Empire) thought the proposal of the five States could be adopted without difficulty, as it was in the nature of a recommendation without any practical details. The Italian proposal was an agreement in general terms not to increase armaments and it rested on the honour of the contracting parties. The general idea of this truce was that any great war was very improbable within one year, and that the States could admit such a truce during the discussions of the Disarmament Conference.

The object of the Italian proposal was twofold. First, to prevent an increase in armaments either by competition or by the desire to take advantage of the Disarmament Conference. He agreed with M. Sokal that, in view of financial difficulties, such an increase was not very probable. The second object was far more important; it was to secure a better political atmosphere, not only for the Conference, but for every purpose. The Italian proposal would certainly attain this object; on the other hand, M. Sato's proposal, interesting as it was, would not have the same result. The discussions at the Disarmament Conference would probably be lengthy and the conclusion doubtful. This would do very little to improve the political atmosphere, while the result would be immediate if they had the courage and faith to accept the Italian proposal.

Lord Cecil agreed that there were practical objections to the proposal and he had no doubt that the experts would have little trouble in finding them. He did not think that any of these objections were insurmountable, even such objections as those referred to by the United States representative in respect of the difficulty of defining at what moment construction had commenced.

He nevertheless realised that this proposal could not be applied if the great countries refused to accept it. He therefore proposed to accept a resolution broadly containing the Italian proposal. This resolution would be forwarded to all Governments invited to the Conference, who would state before November 1st, or some other earlier date, whether they were prepared to assume the undertaking demanded and what comments they desired to make. This proposal would meet the difficulties felt by M. Sokal and some of those raised by M. Sato. It would give the Governments concerned a few weeks' time to consider the question. He thought the Italian proposal could be referred to a Drafting Committee with a view to fitting it into the proposal of the five States and preparing a text which would be passed unanimously and sent to the Governments with the object he had mentioned.

Lord Cecil proposed the following addition to the Italian proposal:

> " The Secretary-General should be instructed to request the Governments to inform him before October 24th, 1931, whether and to what extent they can accept the above rules.

" On October 25th, the Secretary-General should transmit by telegraph to each of the Governments the sense of the replies of the other Governments.

" On November 1st, the rules shall come into force for each Government that has accepted them, to the extent to which it has accepted them, unless it shall have notified the Secretary-General that it withdraws its acceptance ".

(The meeting rose at 6.15 p.m.)

ELEVENTH MEETING.

Held on Thursday, September 24th, 1931, at 3 p.m.

Chairman : M. MUNCH (Denmark).

31. Report and Draft Resolution on the General Convention to improve the Means of preventing War (Document A.III.17.1931.IX) (Annex 3).

M. BUERO (Uruguay), Rapporteur, reminded the Committee that the Polish delegation had proposed a text in order to make it clear that the contracting parties were not obliged to withdraw their forces behind the lines fixed by the Council until the complete evacuation of the invaded territory. He had no objection to adopting this text, while at the same time pointing out that the Council would not be obliged to await complete evacuation before fixing the lines.

The Polish amendment was adopted.

M. GOEPPERT (Germany) proposed that, in the paragraph beginning " The powers conferred . . . ", the words " without an invasion having taken place or after an invasion followed by an order for evacuation " should be substituted for the words " either before or after an invasion ". The present text gave the impression, wrongly, that there was, in any case, an invasion.

The amendment was adopted.

M. MASSIGLI (France) considered that the following paragraph on page 8 went beyond the intention of the Committee :

> " It has also been proposed that the Council should entrust to specialists the examination of the problem of fixing the lines provided for in Article 3. It is thought that the Council might perhaps consider this suggestion; preliminary investigations of this nature might be useful and facilitate the application of Article 3, which should be as rapid as possible. "

It seemed that it was proposed that the Council should, in times of peace, undertake these investigations on the various frontiers in order to prepare to fix, if need be, lines in case of conflict. Such investigations made by experts might cause a certain emotion. He therefore proposed that a formula be sought opening out the possibility of such investigations only if a threat of war had arisen in a certain district.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain), Rapporteur, said he had himself raised this question. It was necessary to render the working of this article of the Convention effective. When a crisis had arisen, it would be difficult to instigate investigations for the purpose of fixing the lines. The emotion that M. Massigli was afraid of would not be very great in the case of a common frontier between two countries such as Spain and France, between whom there could be no question of any conflict.

But since doubts had been raised regarding this proposal, he agreed to omit the entire paragraph.

The paragraph was omitted.

M. BUERO (Uruguay), Rapporteur, proposed that in the paragraph following that beginning : " In the event of the Council's deciding . . . ", the following sentence : " The Third Committee considered that the question did not come within the scope of this Convention, and that it could be usefully discussed at the Conference for the Reduction and Limitation of Armaments ", be substituted for : " The Third Committee shared the opinion of the Special Committee that the question did not come within the scope of the Convention, and the Polish delegation reserved its right to submit the matter to the Conference for the Reduction and Limitation of Armaments ".

Lord CECIL (British Empire) said the present text was correct, since it was the Polish delegation, and not the Third Committee, which had reserved the right to submit this question to the Conference.

M. BUERO (Uruguay), Rapporteur, thought the Polish delegation's apprehensions were shared by the Committee. He suggested that he should be instructed to bring the English and French texts into harmony, with the co-operation of the Secretariat.

The proposal was adopted.

M. GOEPPERT (Germany) proposed that, in the paragraph beginning " As regards Article 5 . . . ", the words " that it is the said Party which has resorted " should be substituted for " that the said Party has resorted ".

M. BUERO (Uruguay), Rapporteur, replied that the present text covered cases where both parties had resorted to war.

M. GOEPPERT (Germany) thought neither text covered this case and he withdrew his amendment.

M. FRANÇOIS (Netherlands) proposed to omit the whole paragraph beginning with the words " A proposal was put forward . . . ", as he thought this paragraph did not quite convey the intentions of the authors of the proposal. On the other hand, he was doubtful whether the Council was obliged to carry out every task arising out of a Convention voted by the Assembly. In this case, it would be insufficient to state that such a declaration by the Council was superfluous.

M. MASSIGLI (France) replied that the Committee had decided by formal vote to insert a text in the Convention providing for the necessity of a declaration by the Council. The Drafting Committee had criticised this proposal. As a compromise, the French delegation had agreed to the insertion of this paragraph in the report. There was no doubt that the Convention imposed definite responsibilities on the Council. If the contracting parties were uncertain as to the attitude of the Council towards these responsibilities, they woul not ratify.

M. FRANÇOIS (Netherlands) did not press his proposal.

M. CABALLERO DE BEDOYA (Paraguay) pointed out that the Convention referred to conservatory measures, whereas the report spoke of provisional measures, in particular in the fourth paragraph of the report. It would be preferable to use the expression " conservatory measures " throughout.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain), Rapporteur, replied that in this paragraph it was intended to emphasise the provisional nature of those measures.

M. CABALLERO DE BEDOYA (Paraguay) stated that, in internal or international law, conservatory measures were always of a provisional nature.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) agreed to substitute the word " conservatory " for the word " provisional " in the fourth paragraph.

The report and the draft resolution were adopted.

32. Draft Resolution submitted by the Delegations of Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland concerning an Armaments Truce (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN read the following telegram from the Brazilian Minister of Foreign Affairs :

" I acknowledge receipt of and thank you for your telegram of the 21st instant, and have the honour to inform you that the Brazilian Government, though keenly interested in the reduction of armaments which is the condition of universal peace and is in accordance with the pacifist nature of the traditions and institutions of this country, cannot appoint special delegates in view of the lack of time. It has, however, instructed M. Raoul de Rio Branco, Minister Plenipotentiary at Berne, to take part as an observer in the meetings of the Third Committee of the twelfth Assembly of the League of Nations which is dealing with this question. "

The CHAIRMAN welcomed M. de Rio Branco and asked him to take his seat in the Committee.

M. MASSIGLI (France) said that he would speak in particular on the Italian proposal, around which the discussion was at present centring. He associated himself with the tributes paid to that proposal, which he agreed was both objective and generous. He did not wish to fall into the error of those who looked for egotistic motives in the noblest actions. It was doubtless by pure coincidence that this proposal provided a temporary solution for certain difficult negotiations which had been carried on for many months, and that this solution was entirely to the advantage of one of the parties concerned.

Obviously it was desirable that the Conference should meet in an atmosphere of tranquillity, so that the discussions might be imbued with a general spirit of conciliation. It remained to be seen whether the proposal would have the desired effect. The nervousness prevailing throughout the world was due to very definite causes, which affected the daily life of peoples far more closely than a competition in armaments. The latter did not exist at the moment, and, as Lord Cecil had remarked, it would be somewhat difficult for it to spring up between now and the Conference.

The proposal before the Committee was expected to produce both a material and a moral effect.

First, as regarded the material effect, it had been said that, if the proposal were adopted, it would relieve the burden on the taxpayer. He thought this somewhat doubtful, since the majority of budgets had been voted for a period up to April or even July 1932, when the Disarmament Conference would have been sitting for several months.

It had also been said that the proposal would help to lessen economic tension. It was perfectly true that, in the long run, an alleviation of military burdens would have the best possible effect on the economic situation. But with regard to the more immediate and distressing problem of unemployment, the position was very different. That had been recognised on the previous day by the United States delegate, who, while approving the Italian proposal in principle, had made a reservation in regard to unemployment and the need to avoid aggravating the stagnation in the shipbuilding industry.

There remained the argument of the moral effect. He admitted that the truce might have a moral effect, but there were other methods that might be used, at all events concurrently, to produce a moral effect which would create a favourable atmosphere prior to the Conference. Certain Governments which would be represented at the Conference, including the French Government, had indicated their preoccupations. They had referred to political problems which would weight the atmosphere of the Conference. If it were desired to create a favourable moral atmosphere before the Conference, they might perhaps turn their attention to those problems. No one had proposed that they should do so. That was doubtless because everyone felt that they should not be too ambitious and should know where to stop.

On the other hand, the truce would not have any great effect unless it clearly marked the end of further increases in armaments. From this point of view, the Italian proposal was perhaps not so clear or practical as was supposed.

With regard to naval armaments, the proposal suspended the placing of vessels on the stocks. He asked whether that covered the laying down of vessels — that was to say, the placing of contracts and the purchase of supplies for dockyards under conditions which might enable construction to be accelerated as soon as the truce had expired. But the most serious difficulty was the question of replacements. They already knew that one important delegation would make reservations in regard to the construction of destroyers for replacement purposes. It was possible that other delegations might make similar reservations. Supposing two countries possessed fleets of comparable tonnage, and one of them had been compelled by circumstances to allow its fleet to become more obsolete than that of the other. To prevent this older fleet from losing all its value, regular replacements would be necessary. It was obvious that, if the placing on the stocks and even the laying down of vessels were suspended for one year, the older fleet would be at a disadvantage as compared with the younger.

As regarded land armaments, the principle appeared to be simple. It was that of budgetary limitation. At the same time, M. de Scavenius had already drawn attention to certain difficulties. For instance, it might happen that, during the next year, payments due on a construction programme in progress — such as a fortification programme — or a change in the date of the embodiment of recruits, producing a temporary increase in effectives, might increase the expenditure without any actual rise in the level of armaments. Another objection was that the budgetary experts, in their report, had unanimously urged that in no case should credits voted be taken as a basis of budgetary limitation; the only reliable criterion was that of actual expenditure. The reason was that credits might be voted for a smaller expenditure than that which was desired, while the expenditure might be subsequently regularised by voting supplementary credits. It would be sufficient to postpone such regularisation until the end of the truce in order to circumvent the Italian proposal in practice.

As regarded air armaments, the Preparatory Commission had found it insufficient to limit aircraft numerically, and had considered it essential also to limit their horse-power. The Italian proposal confined itself to numerical limitation, which would make it possible for Powers to observe the undertaking and at the same time to increase their air forces considerably by replacing small aircraft by more powerful machines.

He thought he had said enough to show what difficulties stood in the way of the practical application of the proposal before the Committee. Governments making the suggested declaration of intention would not on that account place themselves beyond suspicion and criticism. The same difficulties would remain, and consequently the same atmosphere, which they thought they were dissipating.

He was inclined to think that Lord Cecil realised certain of those difficulties, and that that was why he had proposed that Governments should themselves make, within a specified period, the required declaration of intention, adding any comments which they thought fit.

The comments would take the form of reservations. Either, on November 1st, those reservations would have to be regarded as depriving the proposed truce of all value, or a meeting would have to be held to bring them into harmony. Such a conference would take place between November 1st and February 2nd. It would have the disadvantage of interrupting the enquiries now being made by the Governments in preparation for the General Conference; moreover, the discussions to which it would give rise would completely destroy the moral effect which the truce was expected to have. If the discussions were prolonged, they might even create a worse atmosphere for the General Conference than that which at present existed.

There were only two possible solutions : either to make a recommendation in the sense indicated by M. de Scavenius, or to refer the question of the truce to the Conference, as M. Sato had proposed. M. Massigli, who had made a proposal in this sense (see Annex 5), was in favour of the latter solution, but did not wish it to be used as a means of shelving the proposal. Consequently, at the same time as it referred the question to the Conference, he suggested that the Assembly should ask the Council to take measures so that the Governments might be prepared to conclude the agreement necessary to establish the truce immediately after the Conference met. As that might give rise to a certain amount of discussion, Governments should be asked to communicate to Geneva, before the Conference — somewhere about the beginning of January — their proposals with a view to the conclusion of that agreement.

Reference had been made to the moral effect of the truce. If, a few days after it met, the Conference could announce that it had established an armament truce for its whole period on clear bases accepted by all, that would be more than a gesture — it would be an act.

Baron Ramel (Sweden) stated that Sweden, in signing the draft resolution, had wished to point out that, in her opinion, the League of Nations should not allow the Assembly to terminate without making a serious effort to relieve existing uneasiness by contributing to the preparations for the Disarmament Conference. It was, moreover, important not to raise fresh discussions in the Third Committee when that Conference was to meet in the near future.

The proposal made by the five Powers was clear. As the Governments were at present sending particulars regarding the level of their armaments, it was natural that they should be asked to keep to that level until the Disarmament Conference had reached a result. Otherwise the work of that Conference would be rendered particularly difficult. The discussions which had just taken place seemed to show that it was impossible to go further than the five Powers proposed. It would, however, be a source of great satisfaction for Sweden if it were found possible to conclude a real undertaking covering more concrete and definite obligations than those proposed.

Mr. Beaubien (Canada) realised that, as a representative of a distant country, he must show some caution in approaching a discussion which would appear to be of particular interest to the European countries. He could not, however, forget that, the day after war was declared, Canadian troops were called on to fight in Europe. At the present moment, thousands of petitions, signed by hundreds of thousands of people, were circulating in Canada asking the League of Nations to find a definite solution for the difficult but essential problem of disarmament.

While realising the difficulties which had been referred to, he had been under the impression that an agreement could be reached to stop, for a stated time, competition in armaments. If that were impossible, how could an agreement be reached to limit or reduce them permanently ? He did not wish to give advice ; he only wished to make clear the intense desire of his country, in which all the disturbances and conflicts of Europe were reflected, to see the disarmament problem finally settled.

M. Motta (Switzerland) admitted that the draft resolution, which his country had signed, was not perfect and that it was not so definite as other proposals placed before the Committee. But the draft resolution was the least that the Assembly could do in order not to produce a disastrous effect on public opinion. The discussion had just shown that it was also the most that could be done in order to reach that unanimity which was essential.

M. Sato had proposed to take action at the beginning of the Disarmament Conference. M. Massigli had supplemented this proposal by bringing in the idea of inviting Governments to send proposals for a truce in advance. He considered these two proposals to be quite insufficient. On the other hand, the more definite proposal of the Italian delegation had no prospect of being unanimously accepted, even with Lord Cecil's proposal to delay the decision of the Governments. Under these circumstances, there was nothing to do but to accept the proposal of the five Powers, which constituted an act of confidence, a protest against the competition in armaments, and, lastly, an appeal to public opinion.

M. Motta appealed to his colleagues' spirit of conciliation to accept this resolution.

M. Choumenkovitch (Yugoslavia) stated that the idea in the proposals submitted was universally accepted. The policy of Yugoslavia was directed towards the maintenance of peace. It was significant that this discussion only referred to the manner of realising the principles on which the proposals were based.

He agreed to some of the objections and reservations regarding the Italian proposal ; he did not think the Committee could at the present moment make an effective study of the question and reach a decision. The proposed procedure was contrary to the procedure normally admitted, under which the Preparatory Commission had drawn up a draft which the Governments were to study and to discuss on February 2nd, 1932. Lord Cecil's proposal, which would open a discussion in the month of November next, was open to the same objection.

In these circumstances, the Yugoslav delegation approved the French delegation's proposal that the question of a truce should be dealt with at the beginning of the Disarmament Conference. The draft resolution of the five Powers might, after some changes, obtain general approval.

M. ANTONIADE (Roumania) paid a tribute to the intentions which had inspired the draft resolutions. Such a manifestation would form a useful preparation for the Disarmament Conference. For that purpose, however, it should be unanimously accepted, not only by those present, but also by the States not represented.

The Roumanian delegation was in favour of General de Marinis' proposal, but, in view of the objections raised by M. Sato, M. Sokal and M. Massigli, was doubtful whether it could be unanimously accepted. On the other hand, the proposal of the five Powers, as explained by M. de Scavenius, did not prevent the execution of programmes already adopted, while it prevented competition in armaments at the last moment; it might therefore be unanimously approved. The Roumanian delegation was therefore in favour of this resolution and suggested that the truce in question should last for one year, as the Italian delegation had proposed. If it proved impossible to reach an agreement even on this proposal, the Roumanian delegation would agree that the question should be referred to the Governments for information or should be settled by the Conference.

M. BENEŠ (Czechoslovakia) agreed that the idea of a truce was bound to receive the general approval of the Governments and of public opinion. It was the basis of all reasonable discussion, and the Disarmament Conference could not dispense with such a loyal and definite measure dealing with concrete points.

The Czechoslovak Government would have little difficulty in adopting either of the proposals submitted. A Czechoslovak law restricted the possibilities of budgeting for military expenditure. This law, which had been strictly applied for two years, would be still more rigorously enforced in future years, without any undertaking being received from other Powers.

But the Committee was obliged to obtain unanimity; the text must be free from reservations, which could only cause misunderstandings. He therefore approved the proposal of the five Powers, which he thought was the easiest of acceptance by all delegations. As the discussion had been opened, it was indispensable to show public opinion that the parties were prepared to accept a minimum of obligations without any ulterior motive. Czechoslovakia was prepared to undertake this obligation immediately. If, on the other hand, the Committee wished to express that it is necessary and essential to conclude a definite and loyal truce regarding all classes of armaments during the Conference, the Czechoslovak delegation agreed in advance.

M. HOLSTI (Finland) was prepared to agree to the proposal of the five Powers. He could do it with the greater justification as the global sum the Diet was asked to grant for the expenditure for national defence during the next budgetary year was inferior to the corresponding expenditure this year.

General DE MARINIS (Italy) thanked the delegates who had approved the Italian proposal and those who, while not accepting it, had expressed their sympathy with its idea. If he had rightly understood the French delegate, the latter apparently thought the proposal had been put forward because it would bring some advantage to Italy. General de Marinis did not understand what advantage Italy could obtain from a truce which, on the contrary, would favour countries with the strongest armaments.

The objections to the Italian proposal had been, in the first place, of a technical nature. It was impossible at the present moment to open a technical discussion. But there was and could be no solution which would not give rise to technical objections. The idea of making any progress would therefore have to be abandoned unless the parties were prepared to make certain concessions.

Some speakers did not appear to attach much importance to the moral question, which, on the other hand, had been given due weight by most of the delegates. For the first time, it was proposed to make a positive gesture which would not consist merely of fine words and praise of peace and good relations.

In spite of M. Motta's arguments and his appeal for conciliation, General de Marinis was not convinced that the proposal of the five Powers would constitute definite progress towards the preparation of the Disarmament Conference. He had therefore drawn up a fresh resolution which might be discussed either in the Committee or in a sub-committee. This draft resolution began with the first three paragraphs of the draft of the five Powers and went on as follows:

> " Considering moreover that, in the present general situation, a reduction of armaments, or, at the very least, an immediate undertaking on the part of States not to increase their armaments, would be of valuable assistance in restoring confidence and, more particularly, in creating an atmosphere favourable to the success of the coming Conference:
> " The Assembly approves the following rules for the establishment of an armaments truce and requests the Council to communicate them without delay to all the Governments invited to the Disarmament Conference:
> " (1) Each Government undertakes not to increase the expenditure on land forces already authorised for the current financial year, and likewise not to exceed the total of such expenditure during the next financial year until the expiry of the truce;

" (2) Each Government undertakes not to place any warship on the stocks until the expiry of the truce, provided always that vessels under construction may be continued and completed;

" (3) Each Government undertakes to suspend the construction of additional military aircraft during the period of the truce, except to replace machines which are placed out of commission during the truce;

" (4) The duration of the truce shall be for one year, dating from November 1st, 1931.

" The Assembly requests the Council to ask the above-mentioned Governments to inform the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, not later than October 15th, 1931, whether they propose to adopt the above rules ".

Lord CECIL (British Empire) wished to clear up any misunderstanding as to his attitude. The British Government was entirely in favour of the Italian proposal. A very clear declaration had been made on this subject in the House of Commons.

Some speakers appeared to have understood that he had proposed not to adopt the Italian proposal immediately, but to refer it to the Governments. His suggestion was, in fact, to adopt the Italian proposal, and then to send it to the Governments with a request that they should state whether, and how far, they were prepared to make a declaration in the terms of the proposal. The draft resolution just submitted by General de Marinis appeared to contain the same idea.

He did not see any reason why all the declarations should be exactly the same. They might vary in one way or another. The Governments would naturally have to modify their attitude in accordance with that adopted by other Governments.

M. Massigli had treated the question in a little too technical a manner, as if there were going to be a draft convention, whereas the idea was merely to state that the parties proposed to stop competition in armaments for a given period. The plan which he had submitted would, to a great extent, achieve the result aimed at by M. Massigli, who wished that the views of the Governments should be known by January. Moreover, he thought it was not for the Third Committee to fix the procedure for the Disarmament Conference. Discussions on the truce at the beginning of that Conference might be prolonged and create serious misunderstandings; this would be an unfortunate beginning for the Conference.

Lord Cecil proposed that the two proposals should be submitted to a sub-committee, which should endeavour to combine them. If it did not succeed, they would be referred to the Committee, which would give a decision. He hoped that, under these circumstances, the minority would accept the decision of the majority.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain) said his delegation was prepared to vote for any text which was unanimously approved; it could either vote for the minimum proposal or for the Italian proposal, or it could even go further.

The Spanish delegation considered that, as the truce would be short, there was no great danger in accepting it, but, on the other hand, it would appear to be unnecessary to go into too many details for such a short period. The Spanish delegation would prefer a stronger but more elastic undertaking; it therefore proposed that the States should undertake to reduce their total expenditure for national defence by 10 per cent, while remaining at liberty to arrange this expenditure in any way they chose.

This proposal might give rise to difficulties; therefore, the Spanish delegation had not submitted a definite text; it considered, however, that such a reduction, which would amount to 500 million dollars, would be an act of the greatest value in the present crisis.

M. MASSIGLI (France) noted that no reply had been given to the technical objections which he had put forward. As he was convinced that these objections would arise again as soon as an endeavour was made to fix a text, he feared, while agreeing to the constitution of a sub-committee, that this sub-committee would only arrive at a so vaguely worded text of a resolution that it would give rise to different views and contention as soon as it had been communicated to Governments.

M. SATO (Japan) thought the moral effect, which was considered indispensable for the success of the Disarmament Conference, had already been produced by the decision to convene that Conference and the maintenance of the date of February 2nd, 1932. It was unnecessary to do more. He therefore maintained his proposal, while accepting M. Massigli's proposal that the Governments should state their views on the Italian plan in January. This would make it certain that the truce would be discussed at the beginning of the Conference.

In any case, the Japanese delegate could not agree that replies should be received by October 15th, as, on that date, his Government would not be in possession of the documents necessary for its decision.

M. VARASIRI (Siam) stated that, as he had no instructions from his Government on this question, he would abstain from discussing it or giving his vote. October 15th was not an acceptable date for his Government.

The CHAIRMAN announced that the French delegation proposed a draft resolution which began with the first paragraph of the draft resolution of the five Powers and which continued as follows:

" Being convinced that the realisation of the undertakings contained in the Covenant regarding the reduction of armaments 'to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations ' will be one of the most important means of re-establishing mutual confidence between the nations and alleviating their crushing economic burdens, while a resumption of competition in armaments would inevitably lead to an international and social disaster :

" The Assembly addresses a solemn appeal to all who desire the application of the principles of peace and justice on which the Covenant is based to devote all their efforts to the creation of a world opinion strong enough to ensure that the General Disarmament Conference will lead to definite results involving, in particular, a gradual reduction of armaments which will be continued until the object mentioned in Article 8 of the Covenant is attained.

" Considering the importance of carefully preparing the ground for the work of the said Conference, and in particular of avoiding ' a rivalry in armaments ',

" The Assembly requests the Council to urge the Governments convened to the said Conference to show their firm determination to support the efforts to ensure peace and re-establish mutual confidence, more especially by making preparations for common action in the event of aggression; and,

" Considers it necessary that, without prejudice to the decisions of the Conference or the programmes or proposals that any Government may there put forward ' corresponding to existing conditions in regard to regional and general security ', [1] an agreement should be reached as soon as the General Conference of 1932 meets in order to avoid any rivalry in armaments while the Conference is in progress. "

The Chairman proposed to refer the question to a sub-committee, which would examine the draft resolution of the five Powers and the other proposals submitted. The sub-committee would work on the idea that unanimity apparently existed as to the object, which was to stop the competition in armaments, while there were differences of opinion regarding the methods of reaching this result.

The proposal was adopted.

The sub-committee would include the Chairman and delegates from the following countries: Chile, Czechoslovakia, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Norway, Poland, South Africa, Spain, Switzerland and the United States of America.

(The meeting rose at 6.50 p.m.)

TWELFTH MEETING.

Held on Monday, September 28th, 1931, at 10.30 a.m.

Chairman: M. MUNCH (Denmark).

33. Draft Resolution regarding Information on the Position of Armaments.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain), Rapporteur, stated that it had appeared necessary to submit the following draft resolution in order to stimulate the forwarding by the Governments of information on the position of armaments :

" The Assembly,

" Noting that, of the sixty-three Governments invited to participate in the Disarmament Conference, twenty-five have up to the present communicated information on the position of their armaments in conformity with the recommendation made by the Council at its January and May sessions :

" Requests the Council to invite the Governments which have not yet transmitted their replies to the Circular Letters from the Secretary-General dated February 17th and June 13th, 1931, on the position of their armaments, to do so as soon as possible, and in any case before November 1st, 1931, in order to enable the Secretariat to provide the Disarmament Conference with adequate documentation. "

The draft resolution was adopted.

34. Draft Resolution submitted by the Delegations of Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland concerning an Armaments Truce (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN informed the Committee that the Sub-Committee had almost reached an agreement when difficulties of interpretation had arisen from the fact that some countries had armament programmes extending over several years. As it had been impossible to reach agreement, the Sub-Committee had thought fit to explain the position openly to the Committee.

[1] Assembly resolution of September 24th, 1926.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain), Rapporteur, said the idea of the authors of the resolutions was to create an atmosphere favourable to the Disarmament Conference. It was in this spirit that the Committee had requested the Assembly to invite countries convened to that Conference, and not represented in the Committee, to take part in the latter's work. The problem was to find a unanimous text simple enough to appeal to public opinion and concrete enough not to mislead it. The difficulties became apparent as soon as an attempt was made to unite these three qualities in one proposal.

The resolution submitted by the five Powers had the advantage of being simple, but, on the other hand, it was insufficiently concrete. The Italian delegation's resolution, on the contrary, was very concrete. It was, however, less simple and, in particular, it had not found unanimous acceptance. Attempts had been made to combine these two resolutions on the basis of the only element which is common to all armaments — namely, budgetary expenditure. The idea had been thought of of asking Governments not to increase their total annual expenditure for national defence. Technical difficulties arose as soon as efforts were made to define exactly the extent of the undertaking. It was therefore proposed to solve the question by introducing the idea that any fresh schemes involving an increase in expenditure should be prohibited.

The majority of the delegations in the Sub-Committee had adopted this idea. The French delegation, however, proposed to prohibit any fresh scheme involving in general an increase in armaments without reference to expenditure. In short, the Committee was faced by two tendencies. The first was to decide definitely to create an armaments truce, by which armaments would remain as they were at the present moment, while the second, which was based on explanations given by M. de Scavenius to the Third Committee, was that the truce should not apply to expenditure involved on programmes under execution or even merely adopted by parliaments.

The texts on which the discussions were based, and which were still open to amendment, were as follows :

" Convinced that the crisis which at the present time is creating such profound disturbance among the nations of the world is due to a number of economic and political causes originating principally in the lack of mutual confidence between the nations, and,

" Convinced that a renewal of the competition in armaments would necessarily lead to an international and social catastrophe :

" The Assembly addresses a solemn appeal to all those who are desirous that practical effect should be given to the principles of peace and justice upon which the Covenant is based, and urges them to devote all their efforts towards creating a world opinion strong enough to enable the General Disarmament Conference to achieve positive results, including, in particular, a gradual reduction of armaments, to be continued until such time as the object laid down in Article 8 of the Covenant is attained.

" In view of the fact that an undertaking on the part of all States not to increase their armaments would help to create an atmosphere of confidence, to prevent competition in armaments and to prepare the ground for the success of the forthcoming Conference ;

" Considering in particular that by not increasing their armaments and by thus avoiding competition in armaments the States would help to create an atmosphere of confidence favourable to the success of the forthcoming Conference,

" The Assembly,

" Requests the Governments invited to the Disarmament Conference to prepare for this event by means of an armaments truce and accordingly :

" Requests the Council to urge the Governments invited to the said Conference to show their determination to support the efforts to ensure and organise peace, and,

" Without prejudging the decisions of the Conference or the programmes or proposals submitted to it by each Government, to abstain for the period of one year from November 1st, 1931, from any new scheme which would involve an increase in the annual expenditure on national defence and a resultant increase in the present level of armaments ;

" Likewise requests the Council to ask the Governments to state, before November 1st, 1931, whether they are prepared to accept this truce in armaments. "

" Requests the Council to urge the Governments convened to the Conference to show their firm determination to support the efforts to ensure and organise peace, and without prejudging the decisions of the Conference or the programmes or proposals submitted to it by each Government to refrain from any new scheme involving an increase in their armaments ;

" Likewise requests the Council to ask the Governments to state, before November 1st, 1931, whether they are prepared for the period of one year as from that date to accept this truce in armaments. "

In the text on the left, the idea of the prohibition of any new scheme was defined by the undertaking not to increase the effective annual expenditure, while, in the text on the right, it was defined simply by an undertaking not to increase armaments.

The difficulty was that no definition was given as to the present level of armaments. Did it mean that any construction which had been begun should be immediately stopped, or would the development of the programme be regarded as an infringement of the truce ?

In conclusion, M. de Madariaga expressed the hope that, by giving an interpretation in the report, unanimous agreement, which already existed as to the object, would also be attained in respect of the wording.

Lord Cecil (British Empire) was convinced that all the delegations agreed that it would be useful to have a truce in armaments for one year from November 1st next. He was not sure if they were all agreed as to what a truce in armaments meant. The Italian proposal explained it by stating definitely what should be done with regard to sea, land and air armaments. After carefully considering this proposal, the British Government was in favour of it and was prepared to support it.

Difficulties of a technical character, which he did not wish to underrate, had been raised, and attempts had been made to find some other formula, which, while preserving the conception of a truce in armaments, would not go into so much detail. In his own view, a truce in armaments meant that for one year no country would seek to increase its armaments beyond their existing level, so as not to disturb the existing proportion of armaments between the various countries. The conception was that, after laying down this general principle, it would be left to the honour of each State to carry it out without entering into details. Provided the military strength of all countries remained for one year as it was on November 1st, trifling changes might be left out of account. It would be sufficient to state, in the simplest language, that the Governments would abstain from anything which involved an increase in their armaments. That would not prevent them from replacing one vessel by another, or one battalion by another, provided the new vessel or the new battalion were of the same type and strength as that which they replaced.

In conclusion, the truce depended on the confidence placed in the loyalty and honour of the Governments. It was for them to say whether, in their own view, what they were doing was compatible with the undertaking that armaments should not be increased.

The British Government was prepared to have this confidence, and it would be a fine thing if, pending the preparation of a more complete and scientific system, all countries could declare their entire confidence in the loyalty of the other Governments.

He hoped that, if the Committee agreed on this principle, the Drafting Committee could find a form of words in a very short time.

M. Sokal (Poland) reminded the Committee that the object of the proposals was merely to address an appeal to the Governments and to public opinion, in order to lessen the tension, by stating that, for the moment, no one proposed to engage in competition in armaments. The discussion had raised difficulties, due to the fact that the Committee had departed from the original idea of merely making a declaration. To interpret a declaration was tantamount to drawing up a convention. Other interpretations of the term " armaments truce " than that given by Lord Cecil might be found, but this did not help to reach an agreement.

In the present state of affairs, there was no danger that a State might considerably increase its armaments. Under these circumstances, it was preferable merely to make a simple declaration, without entering into details. Moreover, as the Governments were invited to reply before November 1st, they could, if they wished, go into further details.

M. Motta (Switzerland) pointed out that many shades of meaning had been brought forward in the Sub-Committee, and that any attempt to explain all these differences might lead to misunderstanding rather than to clearness. It should be sufficient if the Third Committee allowed some delegations to express their ideas on the solution of the problem. The Committee should ask the Sub-Committee to meet again in order to find a text which would be unanimously adopted. If the Committee failed to arrive at unanimity, there was danger of creating in the minds of the public a feeling of uneasiness which could but increase existing differences.

At present there was agreement on three points : the idea of a truce, the idea that the Governments should be allowed a certain time to express their opinions, and, lastly, the duration of the truce, which would be fixed at one year. Differences had arisen when going into the details of the Italian delegation's proposal. The latter had allowed certain concessions by agreeing that the truce should take the form of an undertaking not to increase expenditure on armaments. That was not sufficient, since the ideas of expenditure on armaments and budgets varied greatly in different countries. In particular, the question arose whether expenditure voted on former schemes would be authorised. All these points raised differences of interpretation.

In order to reach an agreement, the proposal of the five Powers should be taken, and it should include the expression " armaments truce ", together with the idea of a time-limit for replies and the duration of the truce. Several interpretations were possible for the expression " increase in the present level of armaments " which occurred in this draft resolution, but M. Sokal and Lord Cecil had explained that one could only place confidence in the honour of the Governments. He therefore proposed to ask the Sub-Committee to continue its discussions and to base them on the resolution of the five Powers with the amendments which he had just proposed.

M. SATO (Japan) said all categories of armaments should be treated in the same manner. With regard to naval armaments, the expression " level of armaments " was easily comprehensible, since it was synonymous with the word " plafond " or maximum authorised. In some countries the level of armaments was fixed by treaties. The construction of replacement ships provided for in the said treaties would then be accepted, as it did not imply an increase in the naval forces of the contracting party. He also could not agree that the replacement of vessels provided for by such treaties should be prohibited. In this case, if the replacement were authorised for naval armaments, it would appear to be difficult to cancel programmes for land armaments which had already been decided and voted. In this case, neither the Committee nor the Assembly had the right to fix the maximum ; this would be the task of the Disarmament Conference. It was thus obvious that, before the maximum for any State was known, it was unwise not to authorise the continuation of construction, the cessation of which would certainly result in unemployment and deterioration of the work already accomplished. It might happen that the Conference would not authorise a State to continue certain construction, but it was impossible to condemn such construction before the results of the Conference were known.

These remarks applied specially to the construction of fortifications which might have been begun by certain States, and would also apply to the construction of aerodromes and war ports. All decisions regarding the execution or stoppage of programmes must rest with the Disarmament Conference.

It had been stated in the Sub-Committee that an unfair position would be created between States which had programmes and could continue them and those which had no programmes and could make no change in the existing position of armaments. M. Sato recognised this objection, but the fact that the truce would only last one year, and that before that time the Disarmament Conference would give a decision on the utility of programmes under execution, would appear to reduce this difficulty. In any case, he had agreed to discuss a draft resolution on the truce under the idea that this truce would not affect the execution of programmes already decided. He thought this point should be raised in the Sub-Committee, but he wished in the meantime to make a reservation on the subject.

Colonel Ali Khan RIAZI (Persia) reminded the Committee that the Preparatory Disarmament Commission had agreed to consider two categories of countries — namely, those which were already sufficiently armed and for whom a reduction might be considered, and those which were insufficiently armed for their own security, for whom merely a limitation of armaments could be considered. It was for this reason that the word " limitation " had been added to the word " reduction ".

It was on this basis that Persia agreed to take part in the Disarmament Conference. Persia's position was well known and it was unnecessary to go into details. In all the resolutions proposed, only the strongly armed countries were taken into consideration, while those whose armaments were insufficient were left out of account. Under these circumstances, Persia considered that the truce did not concern her, and that the Persian delegation should therefore abstain from voting ; this did not imply that it disapproved of the generous ideas by which these draft resolutions were inspired or that it approved competition in armaments. In order, however, not to prevent unanimity from being reached, the Persian delegation would accept the French delegation's text with the addition of the word " limitation " to the words " gradual reduction ".

Mr. WILSON (United States of America) did not object to the question being referred to the Sub-Committee, but he expressed his uneasiness if the discussion was resumed on the basis suggested by M. Motta. Lord Cecil had clearly stated the question : Were they willing, or not, to undertake not to increase armaments ? The proposals put forward did not, in his opinion, accomplish the object which M. Grandi had in mind when he appealed to the other countries to establish a favourable basis for the discussions of the Disarmament Conference.

M. Sokal had proposed that the Governments should state by November 1st next how they interpreted the truce. This procedure, which consisted in giving written interpretations when there was no conference at which they could be discussed, was liable to increase the confusion.

With regard to the resolution of the five Powers, he not only regarded it as ineffective, but thought it might even be harmful. It was merely the expression of a wish. He had no doubt that the Powers would regard the wishes of the Assembly as to a great extent compulsory, but no one would be able to gauge the extent of these obligations. He feared that the result would be to destroy that favourable atmosphere which they were endeavouring to create.

The CHAIRMAN said he had understood that M. Motta's proposal was to retain the end of the draft resolution — namely, " Likewise requests the Council to ask the Governments to state before November 1st, 1931 . . . " If that were so, the difficulty raised by Mr. Wilson would not exist.

M. MOTTA (Switzerland) stated that the Chairman had correctly interpreted his idea.

The question was referred to the Sub-Committee.

THIRTEENTH MEETING.

Held on Monday, September 28th, 1931, at 10.30 p.m.

Chairman : M. MUNCH (Denmark).

35. Telegram from the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

The CHAIRMAN informed the Committee that the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom had sent him a telegram asking for the institution of an armaments truce under conditions intelligible to the masses and which would meet their aspirations.

36. Draft Resolution submitted by the Delegations of Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland concerning an Armaments Truce and Draft Report (Annex 4).

No objection was raised to the draft resolution prepared by the Sub-Committee.

M. MOTTA (Switzerland) pointed out that, at the beginning of the second paragraph of the second section of the report, the sentence " The Bureau of the Assembly, on September 19th, invited the following States " was incorrect. This should read : " The President of the Assembly, in agreement with the Bureau, invited . . . "

M. MASSIGLI (France) requested enlightenment on the meaning of the last sentence of the fourth paragraph of the fifth section : " Nevertheless other delegations, including the Italian delegation . . . "

M. TUMEDEI (Italy) said that it was desired to express the idea that to postpone the conclusion of the truce until the beginning of the Disarmament Conference would not have the effect of preparing an atmosphere favourable to the work of the Conference.

The text was referred to the Rapporteur for amendment.

M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia) proposed to delete the words " upkeep and renewal " in the sixth paragraph of the fifth section. This paragraph reads as follows :

> " Furthermore, certain delegations declared that they did not regard as incompatible with the proposed truce the normal carrying out of legal enactments relating to effectives, the regular execution of programmes for the upkeep and renewal of land, naval and air material or fortifications and the constitution of the corresponding stocks. "

This text did not take into account the situation of certain countries whose national defence had been disorganised by the war, and who needed not only to maintain and renew their material, but to constitute normal stocks.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) strongly urged M. Fotitch not to press his amendment, as otherwise there would be nothing left of the truce.

M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia) regretted that he was unable to give satisfaction to Lord Cecil, as that would mean anticipating the results of the Conference. The formal instructions which he had received prevented him from withdrawing this amendment. He would also point out that the idea of the truce was contained in the principle laid down in the preceding paragraph — namely, that the efforts at present expended should not be increased. His Government was prepared to accept that obligation. It did not wish to increase the effort which it was at present making but merely to maintain that effort.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain), Rapporteur, pointed out that, according to the terms of the resolution, the programmes or proposals which Governments would submit to the Conference were not prejudged. Moreover, the statement made in this paragraph on behalf of certain delegations only bound those delegations and the Yugoslav delegation was not obliged to subscribe to it.

M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia) said that he quite understood that anyone could make statements. That was precisely what he had done himself in explaining what he personally considered compatible with the truce.

M. TUMEDEI (Italy) thought that M. Fotitch had done well to raise the question of principle. All interpretations were permissible, provided that the principle remained intact. A State was quite justified in continuing to carry out its programmes, provided that the total effort expended on armaments was not increased, but if it wished to make an exception in regard to certain items of armaments, this exception, however slight, affected the actual principle. In particular, to increase material by degrees, as provided for in a programme, without cutting down other items to make up for this increase, would destroy the truce.

M. MOTTA (Switzerland) thought that M. Fotitch's apprehensions were not justified. He had subscribed to the principle, but had interpreted the following sentence as an attenuation of that principle and had found that it did not cover his own case. He had therefore wished to enlarge the meaning of the sentence. M. Motta did not think that it had been intended to attenuate the principle. All that was necessary was to make it more elastic. He therefore proposed that the sentence in question should read : " They did not regard as incompatible with the integrity of the principle thus laid down which must remain intact . . . "

M. MASSIGLI (France) thought it was paradoxical to attempt to make a principle more elastic while stating that it should remain intact. Moreover, the explanation given by M. Tumedei made the matter very complicated. How could an increase in certain forms of armaments, resulting from the spread-over of expenditure provided for in a programme, be set off by reductions effected elsewhere ? How was the value of the adjustment to be determined ? If a programme of fortifications required larger expenditure for one financial year than that for the previous year, although the extent of the fortifications under construction remained unchanged, it would be almost absurd to say that this increase should be set off by reductions in other forms of armaments. It was precisely because it was considered elasticity was necessary that this idea of military effort was introduced.

M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia) said that he would like to remove any misunderstanding. In his view, there was no question of renewing the competition in armaments. However, the meaning of the report was not clear, since it had given rise to divergent explanations on the part of the members of the Sub-Committee. In his opinion, the paragraph restricted the elasticity of the principle, since the limited enumeration given meant that all measures not included might be regarded as contrary to the truce.

M. MOTTA (Switzerland) pointed out that it was nevertheless the delegations which desired the greatest elasticity which had inserted the passage that M. Fotitch considered too restrictive. In order to satisfy both M. Massigli and M. Tumedei he proposed to say : " They did not regard as incompatible with the principle thus laid down, which must remain predominant ".

M. ANTONIADE (Roumania) asked M. Fotitch whether he would be satisfied if the words " renewal of material " were replaced by " restoration of material ".

Lord CECIL (British Empire) thought that it was impossible to begin such a delicate task at this late hour. The paragraph under discussion was merely part of a general summary and the resolution alone was of importance. It would rest with the Governments to formulate, before November 1st, any exceptions which they wished to make to the principle of the truce. At present it would take too long to mention all the various points of view in the report. Perhaps M. Fotitch would be satisfied if his point of view were clearly stated in the Minutes.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain), Rapporteur, asked M. Fotitch whether it would be possible for him to choose one of these two alternatives : either, to dissociate himself from the delegations which had made the statement he considered inadequate or to accept the text submitted by M. Motta — namely, " that the principle thus laid down must remain predominant " followed by an enumeration of measures which would be given as examples.

M. TUMEDEI (Italy) wished to explain how his delegation had modified its views since its original proposal was made. It had first asked for definite engagements, but had later agreed to a truce in the form of a global limitation of expenditure on armaments, which made its application very elastic.

M. Massigli was not satisfied and asked that the principle itself should be made elastic. If it were made too elastic, the whole idea of the truce would be destroyed ; however, he was prepared to accept the last text proposed by M. Motta which M. de Madariaga had just repeated.

M. MASSIGLI (France) thought that, after the explanations which had just been given and especially in view of the fact that, as pointed out by M. de Madariaga, the measures enumerated in the paragraph were to be given merely as examples, the text should meet the desires of M. Fotitch.

M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia) agreed that after M. Motta's explanations, which had been confirmed by the Rapporteur, his doubts as to the meaning of the paragraph had been removed. He would therefore accept it if it were made quite clear that the enumeration was not exhaustive.

M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain), Rapporteur, proposed the following text :

> " Certain delegations made a point of stating explicitly that they did not regard as incompatible with the principle thus laid down, which must remain predominant, such measures as . . . "

This text was adopted.

M. Colban (Norway) said that the following paragraph, where it was said that "It is to be anticipated that, in their replies, States will take into account the position of their neighbours and especially those who are not members of the League of Nations", contained an argument which might be mentioned by certain countries in the replies which they had been asked to transmit before November 1st. He did not see why the Committee should single out this argument from the rest.

Lord Cecil (British Empire) proposed that the paragraph should be preceded by the words "certain delegations considered that . . ."

M. Holsti (Finland) supported Lord Cecil's proposal.

The proposal was adopted.

Lord Cecil (British Empire) stated that the Council must be asked to take steps in order that the declarations made by the Governments might not be considered as valid before all the Governments had had the opportunity to examine them.

General de Marinis (Italy) supported this view.

The Chairman thought that it would suffice to mention the proposal in the Minutes, should it be adopted.

The proposal was adopted.

M. Gajardo (Chile) declared that the Chilian delegation was particularly pleased to note the agreement reached by the Committee on the subject of the armaments truce — that is, the undertaking to be given by the Governments that for a period of one year, from November 1st next, they would not take any steps involving an increase of armaments.

There was no doubt that this agreement, which would be ratified to-morrow by a resolution of the Assembly, would produce the best impression on public opinion throughout the world, and would create an atmosphere favourable for the success of the approaching Disarmament Conference, which was awaited with justifiable impatience by all the peoples of the world.

Agreement had only been possible after long and difficult discussions, during which the delegations of the countries most closely concerned showed a most conciliatory spirit. The spirit of Geneva clearly continued to exercise its beneficent influence, which made it possible to approach the most thorny problems with the certainty of reaching a satisfactory settlement.

If the work of the Conference were carried on in the same atmosphere, we should see one of the greatest successes of our day, and the cause of peace would gain one of its most striking victories.

The Italian delegation, and those who had put forward the so-called "draft of the Five", were deserving of great gratitude. It was to their initiative that the present happy result was due.

If, as would no doubt be the case, the armaments truce provided for in the draft resolution were accepted by the Governments, it would bring about a noticeable improvement of international relations, resulting in that truce in mental and political outlook which was essential if a way were to be found out of the present difficulties.

The speaker represented a country which, after a satisfactory settlement of the long frontier dispute with the Argentine Republic, signed with that country in 1902 a treaty of truce and reduction of naval armaments. He was therefore able to assure the Committee that his Government would examine the resolution with the greatest possible care and in the sincerest spirit of peaceful co-operation. He must not, however, conceal from the Committee that the geographical position of his country, and its long-standing attitude towards the disarmament problem, would compel it to consider the question from the regional point of view and in relation to the attitude of other States on the American continent.

In any case, the peace-loving tradition of Chile was a guarantee to the Committee that the idea of such a truce would be warmly welcomed by the Chilian population.

In conclusion, M. Gajardo desired to draw the attention of the Committee to the short period allowed by the draft resolution for the despatch of replies from Governments. His own country was very far from Geneva. If the resolution were sent by post, his Government would not have time to reply by the stipulated date; moreover, Chilian law required the assent of Parliament for an undertaking which would involve a limitation in expenditure, as such matters were the concern of Congress. He hoped that the Council would bear these facts in mind when drawing up instructions for the Secretary-General.

Cemal Hüsnü Bey (Turkey) stated that Turkey had gladly accepted the invitation to assist in the discussion of the armaments truce; his delegation had closely followed the discussion, thus proving the sincere wish of his country to co-operate in an international work on the invitation of the League, and the importance attributed by his Government to the problem of disarmament, and its earnest desire to reach a reasonable settlement of the question.

Turkey valued highly the motives which had led to the proposal of the five Powers. His country had resolved in principle to support the proposal of General de Marinis, which gave a more definite form to the same idea; the same applied to other proposals, the object of which was to modify the Italian proposal as regards the date or procedure. The discussions and negotiations which had taken place in the Committee and in the Sub-Committee had led to a formula which, in the opinion of the Committee, met the objections raised against the two first proposals.

It would, nevertheless, be understood that Turkey could not consider herself as bound by a decision involving an undertaking — particularly one concerned with disarmament — unless she had taken part in the discussion and in the voting on a footing of absolute equality with other delegations. For this reason, Turkey quite naturally reserved to a latter date her definite reply to the proposal which had just been adopted. In any case, he wished to make it clear that, in the opinion of his Government, whatever the solution arrived at, it could not be regarded as involving in any way the maintenance at the approaching Conference of the present level of armaments. At that Conference, the Turkish delegation would support a reduction in armaments, and the adoption of a system leading, if necessary by gradual stages, to universal equality in this respect. Recent observations and events had only strengthened the conviction, which the Turkish delegation had often expressed in the Preparatory Committee, that, in present conditions, the only efficient and practical means of providing security was the conclusion of treaties of neutrality. The best solution of the disarmament problem lay in bringing down the more powerful armaments, to a moderate level, in order to produce as soon as possible equality in this respect.

The CHAIRMAN remarked that as the report and the resolution were interdependent, he would put them to the vote simultaneously.

The report and the resolution were adopted, the Persian delegation abstaining.

37. Close of the Committee's Work.

The CHAIRMAN thanked the Rapporteurs, M. Buero and M. de Madariaga, and also Dr. Lange who, as Rapporteur to the Special Committee, had attended various meetings of the Committee. He also expressed his thanks to Sir Thomas Wilford, Vice-President of the Committee, to the representatives of the States who had sat on the Committee and who were not represented at the Assembly, and, finally, to the Secretariat. The Committee had undertaken a task the great difficulties of which were due, first, to the fact that they had not been able to hold a sufficient number of meetings, and, secondly, to the differences of opinion which had been expressed in the Committee, and which were the natural echo of those existing in the countries represented.

Nevertheless, thanks to its conciliatory spirit, the Committee had succeeded in agreeing on the resolutions proposed by the Spanish delegation, which were a starting point for fresh efforts towards moral disarmament, the only really sound basis of the security which was so universally desired.

The Committee had evolved a Convention which would occupy an important position in the organisation of security, and had succeeded in finding an agreed formula regarding an armaments truce, the object of which was to strengthen that mutual confidence which was so essential in the present critical times. The world was suffering from a double crisis, arising out of political and economic causes, the close interdependence of which increased their seriousness. There was a disturbing lack of balance in men's minds, and, in this difficult situation, the approaching Disarmament Conference would perhaps mark a turning point in the history of the League, and even in that of mankind. If the meetings of the Third Committee had contributed in any way to the success of that Conference, they would not have worked in vain.

M. SOKAL (Poland) expressed his warm appreciation of the admirable manner in which the Chairman had presided over the work of the Committee, and congratulated him on the noble words with which he had just closed the discussion.

(The meeting rose at 12.30 a.m.)

COMMUNICATIONS OF IMPORTANCE TO THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS AT TIMES OF EMERGENCY.

DRAFT REPORT OF THE THIRD COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.

Rapporteur : M. BUERO (Uruguay).

I. FACILITIES TO BE GRANTED TO AIRCRAFT.

At its eleventh session the Assembly adopted a resolution concerning the regime applicable to aircraft engaged in transport of importance to the working of the League at times of emergency. The resolution provided, on the one hand, that negotiations should be undertaken by the Secretary-General and the Governments concerned, with a view to the application of the rules laid down by the Assembly, and, on the other hand, that the Council should decide on certain measures of detail relating to the identification of aircraft used in the service of the League.

The Third Committee had noted with satisfaction that the replies received from the Governments and the information communicated by the Secretariat indicate that the regime desired by the Assembly could be applied immediately in the event of a situation necessitating emergency communications with the League. Some States have not yet replied to the Secretary-General's request, but there is no reason to suppose that they would raise difficulties. With respect to the identification of aircraft engaged in such duties, the Council has adopted a proposal submitted to it by the Advisory and Technical Committee for Communications and Transit, which was drawn up after consultation with the International Commission for Air Navigation. The resolution adopted by the Council applies only to aircraft possessing a nationality. It was not considered fit to raise at this time the question of aircraft belonging to the League of Nations.

II. FACILITIES TO BE GRANTED TO MOTOR TRANSPORT.

At its eleventh session the Assembly also adopted a resolution concerning the regime applicable to motor vehicles effecting transport of importance to the working of the League at times of emergency. The resolution provided that the matter should be generally governed in the same manner as that concerning aircraft. The Third Committee notes with satisfaction that the regime applicable to motor transport, as desired by the eleventh Assembly, could be put into operation immediately.

III. CONSTRUCTION OF A LEAGUE WIRELESS STATION.

The Third Committee had noted that in view of the work being carried on under contracts with various companies, the wireless station is expected to be in operation at the latest by the beginning of 1932. It believes that the Assembly will appreciate the progress achieved in this direction.

IV. LAYOUT OF AN AERODROME NEAR THE SEAT OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

A technical report (see document A.21.1931.VIII), prepared by a committee of experts appointed by the Chairman of the Advisory and Technical Committee for Communications and Transit, concerning the layout of an aerodrome near the seat of the League which would be of service to the League at times of emergency, has been submitted to the present session of the Assembly. While the technical examination of the question appears to be concluded, it would seem that some non-technical questions between the Swiss Federal Government and the Secretariat of the League have not yet been settled. In these circumstances the Third Committee considered that the discussion of this question should be postponed until the next session of the Assembly, in order that the Assembly might be in possession of all the information required for its decision.

CO-OPERATION OF WOMEN AND OF THE PRESS IN THE ORGANISATION OF PEACE.

DRAFT REPORT BY THE THIRD COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.

Rapporteur : M. Buero (Uruguay).

On September 11th, the Assembly decided to refer for examination to the Third Committee the following draft resolution submitted by the Spanish delegation concerning the co-operation of women and the Press in the organisation of peace :

" The Assembly,

" Considering that the organisation of peace demands the maintenance of an international spirit freed from all prejudices and misconceptions;

" Convinced of the necessity of ensuring that the Press of all nations receives as impartial and complete information as possible :

" Requests the Council to consider the possibility of studying :

" (a) Means of associating feminine action and feminine feeling with the work of the League of Nations by an effective and direct collaboration;

" (b) Means for preventing, with the assistance of the Press, the dissemination of such false information as may hinder the maintenance of peace and goodwill among the peoples. "

The Spanish delegate, M. de Madariaga, explained that the reason why paragraphs (a) and (b) had been inserted in the same draft resolution was that, in the opinion of the Spanish delegation, an effort was required to ensure that the work of maintaining peace was carried out in a good moral atmosphere, and that among the most important factors in the creation of this atmosphere were, in its view, the action of women and the action of the Press. The Committee, while agreeing with the Spanish delegation, nevertheless thought it preferable to treat these two questions separately, though it recognised that they had a common basis.

In consequence, it has prepared two distinct draft resolutions.

I.

Co-operation of Women in the Organisation of Peace.

The Third Committee unanimously acknowledged the results already obtained from the co-operation of women in the work of peace, whether in their individual capacities or by national and international women's organisations. During the discussions in the Third Committee, due account was taken of the interest displayed by women in the work of the League and it seems advisable to see whether schemes for closer co-operation could not be examined — especially at a time when the Geneva organisation is undertaking what may be decisive work in the sphere of peace and understanding between nations.

In view of the importance of the educative and moral rôle played by women, and of their influence in the formation of public opinion, this co-operation may be of great value and produce important results.

The Committee felt that on this occasion it should not deal with the question of admitting women to positions either in the League or connected therewith, this question having already been settled by Article 7 of the Covenant. Nor did the Committee intend to raise the question of the composition of delegations taking part in the various conferences and committees of the League of Nations, as this was a question within the competence of each individual Government.

It was only concerned now with their unofficial co-operation in the organisation of peace and the maintenance of good understanding between nations. It would be for the Council to examine the means whereby such co-operation could be promoted and intensified.

With these considerations in mind the Third Committee submits the following draft resolution for the approval of the Assembly :

" The Assembly,

" Convinced of the great value of the contribution of women to the work of peace and the good understanding between the nations, which is the principal aim of the League of Nations :

" Requests the Council to examine the possibility of women co-operating more fully in the work of the League."

II.

Co-operation of the Press in the Organisation of Peace.

During the session of the Special Committee appointed to frame a draft general Convention to improve the Means of preventing War, the Polish delegation, taking into consideration the proposal made by the Swedish Government, submitted the following recommendation :

" The Special Committee,

" Being aware of the danger which, in the event of an international crisis, may arise from irresponsible Press campaigns and publicity given in the Press to inaccurate or tendentious information ;

" Recognising that aggressive propaganda against a foreign Power may in certain circumstances constitute a veritable threat to the peace of the world :

" Requests the Assembly to consider this problem and examine the possibilities of finding a solution."

The Committee decided to lay this question before the Assembly.

The proposal of the Spanish delegation is largely based upon the same considerations as those of the Swedish and Polish delegations.

The Third Committee was unanimous in recognising that the Press could have a great influence on the relations between the peoples, and that it is in the interests of peace that the Press should receive and spread as correct and impartial information as possible.

This question presents only one aspect, although a very important one, of the general problem of moral disarmament. The Third Committee was not asked to give its opinion on the other aspects of this problem, which is dealt with in detail in a memorandum drawn up by the Polish Government for the use of the delegations to the Disarmament Conference.

The Third Committee did not feel that it could make any positive suggestion regarding the method of studying the difficult problem of the spread of false news. It confines itself to proposing that the Assembly should bring this problem to the notice of the Council, as its importance increases pari passu with the increasing interest in international relations shown by the Press. It is for the Council, if it thinks fit, to examine, with the help of experts, the best way of approaching this question.

The Third Committee noted with the greatest satisfaction the delegate of Denmark's statement to the Committee that his Government would welcome to Copenhagen the heads of official Press bureaux and thus give them an opportunity of discussing means of establishing regular unison between them which might to some extent promote the objects referred to in the Spanish resolution.

The Third Committee considers that the examination of this problem should not be confined to a meeting of representatives of official Press bureaux. It should be supplemented by a consultation of those neswpaper groups which could give valuable advice on the subject.

The Third Committee submits the following draft resolution to the Assembly :

" The Assembly,

" Considering that the organisation of peace demands an international spirit freed from all prejudices and misconceptions ;

" Convinced of the necessity of ensuring that Press information shall be as impartial and complete as possible :

" Requests the Council to consider the possibility of studying, with the help of the Press, the difficult problem of the spread of false information which may threaten to disturb the peace or the good understanding between nations."

GENERAL CONVENTION TO IMPROVE THE MEANS OF PREVENTING WAR.

DRAFT REPORT BY THE THIRD COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.

Rapporteur : M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain).

In proposing to the Assembly the adoption of the text of a general Convention to improve the Means of preventing War, the Third Committee desires first of all to offer its thanks to the Special Committee appointed by the Council. This Committee, which was presided over by M. Politis, had greatly lightened the labours of the Assembly by making a very exhaustive study of the questions which had prevented the Committee on Arbitration and Security from establishing a single text.

While the Third Committee has made certain amendments to the draft report prepared by the Special Committee, it has in no way departed from the essential principles on which that Committee had reached agreement.

First of all, the Third Committee, like the Special Committee, would emphasise that the General Convention can in no way limit the powers held by the Council under Article 11 of the Covenant. This article has proved itself very valuable in practice. To facilitate its application, texts have been drawn up and approved by the organs of the League, more especially the report of the Committee of the Council dated March 15th, 1927, approved by the Assembly on September 26th, 1927, and by the Council on December 6th, 1927, the study by the Committee on Arbitration and Security on Article 11 of the Covenant, recommended to the Council by the Assembly on September 20th, 1928, and the Council's resolution of June 7th, 1928, regarding measures to be taken in the intervals between sessions of the Council.

As, however, when a question is laid before it under Article 11 of the Covenant, the Council's decisions must be unanimous, it has seemed desirable to propose to the Governments the acceptance of new undertakings, whereby certain decisions might be taken without their votes counting for the purposes of unanimity when they were parties to a dispute and when the Council thought fit to recommend to them certain clearly specified provisional measures.

These measures may be of two kinds : Non-military (Article 1 of the Convention) and military (Articles 2 and 3).

Provision is made for two classes of measures of a military nature :

(1) Measures which, in circumstances that, in the Council's opinion, do not create a state of war between the Powers in question, are designed to secure the evacuation of the territory or territorial waters of one party or of a zone demilitarised in virtue of international agreements by the forces of the other party which may have entered that territory or may be flying over it in the course of a dispute (Article 2) ;

(2) The fixing by the Council, if it thinks this necessary, of lines in the territory of the parties which must not be passed by the land, naval or air forces of the parties to the dispute and, where necessary in order to avoid incidents, by their civil aircraft (Article 3).

The text adopted for Article 2 emphasises the fact that it refers to circumstances which, in the Council's opinion, do not create a state of war between the Powers in question. A Convention designed to prevent war cannot, after all, be applicable when war has broken out. For that case, other measures and sanctions are provided by the Covenant.

The question of the moment at which war actually breaks out may of course give rise to difficulties of a theoretical nature. It would not seem that any more satisfactory explanations can be given on this point than those furnished in the following passage from the report submitted by M. de Brouckère to the Committee of the Council in December 1926 [1] :

" We must now return to our previous remarks concerning the conditions which must be fulfilled before a country can be regarded as having resorted to war. There is no need to dwell upon the case in which the aggressor State formally declares war. Apart from this eventuality, two conditions are necessary, as we said :

" (1) One country must have committed an act of war against another;

" (2) The latter country must have admitted the existence of a state of war.

" Further, the second country must have justification for taking up this attitude.

" Every act of violence does not necessarily justify its victim in resorting to war. If a detachment of soldiers goes a few yards over the frontier in a colony remote from any vital centre ; if the circumstances show quite clearly that the aggression was due to an error on the part of some subaltern officer ; if the central authorities of the ' aggressor State ' reprimand the subordinate concerned as soon as they are apprised of the facts ; if they cause the invasion to cease, offer apologies and compensation and take steps to prevent any recurrence of such incidents — then it cannot be maintained that there has been an act of war and that the invaded country has reasonable grounds for mobilising its army and marching upon the enemy capital. The accident which has occurred has in no way released that country from the specific obligations laid down in Articles 12 and following. It could not be so released unless it were the victim of a flagrant aggression of such a serious character that it would obviously be dangerous not to retaliate at once.

" In short, to borrow the felicitous phrase used in the Treaty of Locarno, ' the country in question must be exercising the right of legitimate defence '.

" Legitimate defence implies the adoption of measures proportionate to the seriousness of the attack and justified by the imminence of the danger. If a country flagrantly exceeded these limits, even if it were affronted by some incident of little intrinsic importance, it would become, in actual fact, the real aggressor and it would be only fair that that country should be made the object of the sanctions provided for in Article 16."

The Committee has further thought it desirable to specify that there shall be equivalent treatment for land, naval and air forces as regards both measures of the first class (evacuation) and measures of the second class (fixing of lines not to be passed by the troops). In prescribing measures of the first class, which are to be taken without delay, the Council's sole object is to put an end to what might be described as an isolation of domicile. Consequently, as States regard their territorial waters as part of their territory, those waters must be evacuated by any forces that may have entered them or may be flying over them, just as the territory itself must be evacuated.

Certain doubts have been expressed as to the possibility of ensuring in practice equivalence of treatment as between air forces and the other forces, as regards measures of the first category, since the mobility of aircraft permits it very easily to fly back over foreign territory during or after evacuation.

In this connection, the Committee desires to call attention to the last paragraph of Article 3, according to which the contracting parties agree to give strict orders to the commanders of their forces, if the Council so recommends, to take all necessary precautions to avoid incidents. It is obvious that the latter paragraph will enable the Council to recommend particularly that the order not to fly over the territory or territorial waters of one party should be given to the air forces of the other party. Moreover, any raids by aircraft would, like those by land or sea forces, if necessary be verified or reported to the Council by the Commissioners which it had sent to the spot in accordance with the provisions of Article 4.

Measures of the second category — that is, the fixing by the Council of lines which the forces and, as far as may be necessary, the civil aircraft must not pass — may be prescribed, if the circumstances contemplated in Article 2 have arisen, and after the Council has prescribed measures designed to ensure evacuation, or if, in the event of a threat of war, special conditions, particularly the possibility of contact between the forces, rendered it necessary.

The powers conferred on the Council by this article may be exercised either before or after an invasion has taken place and order for evacuation has been given in accordance with the provisions of Article 2.

The Committee agrees with the Special Committee in thinking that it is obviously impossible in a general convention to formulate provisions for all the special cases which may arise. The Council will fix, within the limits of the Convention, the conditions for carrying out the measures which it prescribes. It will recommend to the parties only useful and practicable measures. Moreover, as regard civil aircraft, each party has also the right, particularly in the event of a threat of war, to notify in accordance with the rules in force, that it prohibits flying over certain zones of its territory by foreign aircraft.

Further, as regards the actual fixing of the lines which the forces must not pass, it is understood that if the Council, after endeavouring to fix these lines by common agreement with the parties to the dispute, has been obliged, failing such an agreement, to fix them with the consent of the party whose forces are affected, this does not involve the withdrawal of the forces further back than the exterior lines of the defence organisations existing on the frontier of the parties concerned at the time when the Council of the League of Nations takes its decision, nor the abandonment of any other work, position or line of communication essential to the security or the supplies of the party concerned, the natural lines of defence and vital centres being included among " the essential " works, positions, or lines of communication.

Such are the provisional measures of a military nature which the Council may, under Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention, prescribe for the parties concerned. Obviously, other measures might, in certain special cases, appear desirable. If so, it will be not in virtue of the Convention, but under the general powers which it derives from Article 11 of the Covenant that the Council will be able to prescribe them with the consent of the parties concerned.

Certain delegations have recommended, in particular, the generalisation of the system of permanent demilitarised zones, but the Committee considers that such generalisation might be brought about by way of bilateral agreements, and not by a general convention.

Other suggestions have been made with a view to facilitating the application, if necessary, of Article 3. The possibility has been considered of neighbouring States negotiating between themselves in advance the limits of the demilitarised zones which they agree to create in their territory in the event of a threat of war.

It has also been proposed that the Council should entrust to specialists the examination of the problem of fixing the lines provided for in Article 3. It is thought that the Council might perhaps consider this suggestion; preliminary investigations of this nature might be useful and facilitate the application of Article 3, which should be as rapid as possible.

The Polish delegation again defended in the Committee the point of view which it put forward in the Special Committee. It considers that, if the conservatory measures of a military character are restricted to those provided for in Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention, the latter will have little value, and the Polish delegation would, in particular, have liked to have the following clause included :

> " In the event of the Council's deciding that an international obligation concerning the state of a High Contracting Party's armaments has been violated, it shall call upon the High Contracting Party to restore the situation in accordance with the said obligation. The High Contracting Parties undertake to comply with such invitation without delay. "

The Third Committee shared the opinion of the Special Committee that the question did not come within the scope of the Convention and the Polish delegation reserved its right to submit the matter to the Conference for the Reduction and Limitation of Armaments.

The Third Committee unanimously accepted the text of Article 4 proposed by the Special Committee for the supervision of the execution of measures of a military character prescribed by the Council. It is understood that the task of the Commissioners appointed by the Council in accordance with the provisions of Article 3 will consist exclusively of verifying on the spot the withdrawal of forces prescribed by the Council under the conditions defined in Article 2 of the Convention. The Commissioners may not make a more extensive inspection than is necessary to verify the withdrawal of the forces, works or military establishments and in no case may they inspect naval or air bases.

The Committee furthermore draws the Assembly's attention to the last paragraph of Article 4 under which the rules to be followed for the composition and working of commissions of inspection shall be embodied in executive regulations which shall be prepared by the competent organs of the League of Nations so as to enter into force at the same time as the Convention. The Assembly will certainly wish to draw the Council's attention to the expediency of giving the competent organs of the League the instructions necessary for these regulations to be ready in good time.

As regards Article 5 concerning the question of penalties, the Third Committee succeeded in achieving unanimity, the Netherlands delegation having renounced the reservations which it had asked to have inserted in the Special Committee's report. It is understood that the second paragraph of Article 5 refers to the case of wars breaking out as a consequence of a violation, established by the Council, of the conservatory measures of a military character defined in Articles 2 and 3. As in all cases in which war breaks out, the Members of the League may, and, in fact, must, decide whether a State has resorted to war contrary to the obligations entered into under Articles 12, 13 or 15 of the Covenant, before considering ipso facto that a Member of the League has committed an act of war against all the Members. Furthermore, in the special case referred to in the second paragraph of Article 5 of the General Convention, the contracting parties will consider that the violation by another contracting party of the supplementary obligations which it has freely entered into under Articles 2 and 3 of this Convention constitutes prima facie evidence, if war breaks out, that the said party has resorted to war within the meaning of Article 16 of the Covenant. It is understood that this is only prima facie evidence, which does not preclude proof to the contrary.

The Committee inserted in Article 6 a clause under which the parties to the Convention undertake to provide, by the means at their disposal, such publicity as the Council may think fit for its proceedings, decisions and recommendations when a dispute is brought before it in the case contemplated by the Convention. For the application of this clause, which is aimed at preventing public opinion as far as possible from receiving one-sided information and also at influencing the public opinion of the countries involved with all the Council's moral authority, the Council must take a decision concurred in by all the Members voting other than the parties to the dispute. Naturally, this clause, like the others, cannot affect the rights of the Council under the Covenant, and particularly its right to regard publication of its discussions, decisions and recommendations as a matter of procedure under Article 5, paragraph 2, of the Covenant; but publicity only becomes compulsory under Article 6 of the Convention if it is decided upon unanimously.

The British delegation proposed the addition of a clause stipulating that it was understood that the measures laid down in paragraph 1 of Article 2 should not affect the right of free passage through the Suez Canal provided for in the Convention on the Free Navigation of the Suez Canal signed at Constantinople on October 29th. 1888. To meet the British delegation's wishes, the Committee inserted a second paragraph in Article 9 referring to this Convention.

The formal clauses of the Convention do not call for much comment.

It may, however, be well to draw attention to the fact that for the entry into force of the Convention as provided in Article 14, ten ratifications or accessions will be necessary. Moreover, the last paragraph of the said article gives each contracting party the right to accompany his ratification or accession by a reservation under which he makes the entry into force of the Convention, in so far as he is concerned, conditional on ratification or accession on behalf of certain countries named by him. It goes without saying that the ten ratifications or accessions necessary for the entry into force of the Convention must either be ratifications or accessions not accompanied by reservations, or ratifications or accessions accompanied by reservations but rendered final by the fact that the conditions laid down in the said reservations have been fulfilled.

A proposal was put forward to insert a clause making the entry into force of the Convention conditional, apart from the number of ratifications or accessions provided for, on a declaration by the Council accepting the responsibilities laid upon it by the Convention. After consideration, it was thought that such a declaration was superfluous; the Convention having to be approved by the Assembly, it was recognised that the Council would have to obey its provisions.

It was also proposed to draw up the Convention in the form of an instrument open only to the accession of the parties on the model of the General Act. The Governments would only have been able to accede after obtaining the authorisation prescribed by the national constitutions.

The Committee eventually decided on the system generally adopted for conventions concluded under the auspices of the League of Nations, because it recognised the force of the argument that it would be easier for Governments to affix their signatures before the Conference for the reduction and limitation of armaments than to obtain the necessary authorisation for accession before February 2nd, 1932, the date on which this Conference is to open. In signing the Convention, the Governments will assume a moral obligation, and it is highly desirable that a large number of them should assume this obligation before the Conference.

In conclusion, the Committee wishes to recall the passage in the Special Committee's report in which the latter appraises the value of the draft which it drew up, and which has become, with few amendments, the text of the present Convention.

After stating that it realised perfectly well the limitations of the text it had prepared, the Committee explained that it did not seem possible to ask the States to accept more extensive obligations in a general convention, " But ", it added, " whereas, in the matter of conservatory measures, the contracting parties will not be legally bound except by the obligations in the convention, there can be no doubt that they may, if they think fit, themselves agree or propose to the Council to take other measures ' that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace ' and ' the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends '.

" Moreover, although the draft represents only a modest advance in the direction of the means of preventing war, the Committee desires to emphasise its practical importance and cherishes the hope that in the future this first step may be followed by other and more important steps ".

The Committee fully endorses the Special Committee's opinion, and associates itself with the hope thus expressed.

I have accordingly the honour to submit the following draft resolution for the approval of the Assembly:

" The Assembly,

" (1) Taking note of the report submitted to it on behalf of the Third Committee;

" (2) Thanking the Special Committee for the admirable work it has done towards the framing of the draft general Convention to improve the Means of preventing War:

" (3) Approves the text of the said Convention which has been drawn up by the Third Committee;

" (4) Decides to open the Convention for signature by the States Members of the League and by those non-member States to which the Council of the League shall have communicated a copy of the Convention for that purpose;

" (5) Earnestly trusts that a large number of States will sign the Convention before the opening of the forthcoming General Disarmament Conference; and

" (6) Requests the Council to make the necessary arrangements in good time for the preparation of the rules referred to in the last paragraph of Article 4, in order that, should circumstances so dictate, the Convention may be put into effect immediately upon its entry into force. "

ARMAMENTS TRUCE: INFORMATION ON THE POSITION OF ARMAMENTS IN VARIOUS COUNTRIES.

DRAFT REPORT OF THE THIRD COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.

Rapporteur : M. DE MADARIAGA (Spain).

I.

In the general discussion of the Report on the Work of the League of Nations since the last Assembly, a number of speakers emphasised the decisive importance of the result of the coming General Conference for the Reduction and Limitation of Armaments.

The Third Committee noted with keen satisfaction that the Council had fixed February 2nd, 1932, as the date for the convening of the General Disarmament Conference, and that the confidence expressed by the eleventh Assembly in this connection had thus been justified. The representatives of many countries expressed the opinion that the Assembly ought not to adjourn without contributing to the work of the said Disarmament Conference, by preparing the moral atmosphere essential to its success by means of an act of international goodwill. This view was expressed by a large number of speakers in the Assembly, in particular by the first Italian delegate, M. Grandi, who announced a proposal for the institution of an armaments truce as a means of preparing the Conference. The matter was also the subject of a draft resolution (document A.51.1931.IX), submitted to the Assembly by the Danish, Norwegian, Netherlands, Swedish and Swiss delegations and referred to the Third Committee on September 12th last.

This draft resolution proposed that the Assembly should, in the first place, issue a solemn appeal to all who desire the application of the principles of peace and justice on which the Covenant is based to devote all their efforts to the creation of a world opinion strong enough to ensure the success of the Conference, and, in the second place, request the Council to urge the Governments summoned to the Conference to abstain, pending its result, from any steps for the increase of the present level of their armaments.

The Third Committee was of opinion that, in view of the close connection between its discussions on the subject and the work to be done by the Conference, it would be desirable for those States not represented in the Assembly, but which are invited to take part in the Conference, to take part also in the work of the Committee relating to disarmament.

On the Third Committee's proposal, the Bureau of the Assembly, on September 19th, invited the following States to be represented on the Committee : Afghanistan, Argentine, Brazil, Costa Rica, Egypt, Ecuador, Salvador, Turkey, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America. It was proposed that the States that were not Members of the League should be represented in an advisory capacity only.

The following States accepted the Assembly's invitation : Costa Rica, Egypt, Turkey, the United States of America and Brazil, the latter being represented by an observer.

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics stated that, in view, amongst other things, of the short notice given, it was unable to send a delegate to take part in the discussions of the Third Committee. Being, however, always prepared to support any proposal for the limitation of armaments, it would be disposed to associate itself with the proposal of the Italian Foreign Minister, M. Grandi, provided that proposal was adopted in a form obligatory on all countries, and that it covered all classes of armaments, and that the signatories of the undertaking confirmed that it should not in any case replace or postpone the essential problem of disarmament or limitation of existing armaments, which must be settled as quickly as possible.

The Third Committee had before it, on the one hand, the draft resolution presented by the five countries; on the other hand, a concrete proposal proposed by the Italian delegation to give effect to the proposal made by M. Grandi at the Assembly. A discussion of some importance took place in connection with these proposals.

The idea of an armaments truce as a contribution to the preparation for the Conference met with general assent. But opinion was divided as to the forms and methods of giving practical application to this idea.

In the course of the Committee's discusssions, the Italian delegation, with the support of a certain number of other delegations, and particularly of the British delegation, submitted a draft resolution which in its view, while based on the same motives as the five countries' draft resolution, was calculated to give more precise form to the idea of the armaments truce.

The Italian proposal was that each Government should undertake for a period of one year dating from November 1st, 1931 :

(1) Not to increase its expenditure on land forces already authorised for the current financial year, and not to exceed the total of such expenditure during the next financial year until the expiry of the truce;

(2) Not to place any warship on the stocks, provided always that vessels under construction might be continued and completed;

(3) To suspend the construction of additional military aircraft, except to replace machines which are placed out of commission during the truce.

The British delegation completed the Italian proposal by an amendment to which the Italian delegation agreed, with regard to the procedure to be followed for the practical application of the Italian proposal.

The Committee, moreover, had before it certain amendments by the French delegation to the five countries' draft resolution. Useful suggestions were also made by a large number of delegates.

The Third Committee was of opinion that a tangible gesture should be made, indicating not only the desire of the countries represented on the Committee to renounce for one year, as from November 1st, 1931, any increase in the present level of their armaments, but also creating before February 2nd, 1932, an atmosphere favourable to the success of the great Disarmament Conference.

The Committee was fully conscious of the fact that such an undertaking could not and should not replace the decisions that might be reached on a contractual basis at the Conference itself.

Nevertheless, it felt that it would be expedient to make a gesture which, although having a chiefly moral character, would be, in the Committee's opinion, none the less effectual in its effects on the Governments and public opinion.

The Committee's aim had been to prepare the moral atmosphere of the Conference by getting the present session of the Assembly to take a plain and palpable decision for an armaments truce. Certain delegations felt that a vague obligation was likely to lead to different interpretations and consequently to dangerous controversies, and that only definite obligations could answer to the end in view. But this made it necessary to elaborate a veritable Convention, and only the Conference itself could do so at the outset of its work. Nevertheless, other delegations, including the Italian delegation, pressed this proposal, pointing out that otherwise the truce could not be utilised as an element in preparing for the Conference.

But the Italian proposal, which had the virtue of defining the obligations to be assumed, contained, as some delegations thought, technical difficulties as regards execution, caused by the definition itself and by the short period allowed the various countries between the adoption and the execution of the plan. The Committee strove to combine the advantages of the various proposals by eliminating their disadvantages, viz., by inviting the various Governments to assume material obligations which were nevertheless sufficiently flexible to allow them to be carried out. The result was the resolution, the text of which is given later. This resolution is intended to prevent an increase in the effort at present being expended on the whole of the armaments of each country.

Furthermore, certain delegations declared that they did not regard as incompatible with the proposed truce the normal carrying out of legal enactments relating to effectives, the regular execution of programmes for the upkeep and renewal of land, naval and air material or fortifications and the constitution of the corresponding stocks.

The Armaments Truce will be brought about by means of an undertaking to be given in the form of a declaration by the various Governments before November 1st, 1931. It is to be anticipated that, in their replies, States will take into account the position of their neighbours, and especially those who are not members of the League of Nations.

If, as a result of unforeseen circumstances, such as are more likely to arise in the case of countries having responsibilities overseas, a Government should find itself compelled to suspend the operation of its declaration, the Secretary-General of the League of Nations should be immediately notified and should inform the other Governments concerned.

The Third Committee hopes that by unanimously accepting the proposed truce, the Governments Members or non-members of the League of Nations will help to create an atmosphere favourable to the work of the important Conference to which they have been summoned.

The Third Committee therefore proposes to the Assembly the adoption of the following resolution :

" Convinced that the crisis which at the present time is creating such profound disturbance among the nations of the world is due to a number of economic and political causes originating principally in the lack of mutual confidence between the nations, and

" Convinced that a renewal of the competition in armaments would necessarily lead to an international and social catastrophe :

" The Assembly addresses a solemn appeal to all those who are desirous that practical effect should be given to the principles of peace and justice upon which the Covenant is based and urges them to devote all their efforts towards creating a world opinion strong enough to enable the General Disarmament Conference to achieve positive results, including in particular a gradual reduction of armaments to be continued until such time as the object laid down in Article 8 of the Covenant is attained.

" In view of the fact that an undertaking on the part of all States not to increase their armaments would help to create an atmosphere of confidence, to prevent competition in armaments and to prepare the ground for the success of the forthcoming Conference :

" The Assembly,

" Requests the Governments invited to the Disarmament Conference to prepare for this event by means of an armaments truce and, accordingly,

" Requests the Council to urge the Governments convened to the said Conference to give proof of their earnest desire for the successful issue of the efforts to ensure and organise peace and, without prejudging the decisions of the Conference or the programmes or proposals submitted to it by each Government, to refrain from any measure involving an increase in their armaments ;

" Likewise requests the Council to ask the Governments to state before November 1st, 1931, whether they are prepared for a period of one year as from that date to accept this truce in armaments."

II.

At the request of the Danish delegate, the Secretary of the Third Committee has furnished some information regarding the technical preparations for the Conference. He informed the Committee that, out of the sixty-three Governments invited to take part in the Conference, twenty-five have so far replied to the Council's resolutions of January and May last, in which the Governments were requested to forward particulars with regard to the position of their armaments and all other data, technical or otherwise, which might help to inform the Conference and to justify such specific proposals as the Governments may lay before it.

In its May resolution, the Council asked the Governments to forward these particulars before September 15th and to make use, as far as posible, of the model tables contained in the draft Convention drawn up by the Preparatory Commission, and of the model statement drawn up by the Committee of Experts on Budgetary Questions.

The Committee considers it of the highest importance that the Governments invited to the Conference should be in possession as early as possible of full information in respect of all the countries taking part. The Third Committee therefore has the honour to propose to the Assembly the adoption of the following resolution :

" The Assembly,

" Noting that of the sixty-three Governments invited to participate in the Disarmament Conference, twenty-five have up to the present communicated information on the position of their armaments in conformity with the recommendation made by the Council at its January and May sessions :

" Requests the Council to invite the Governments which have not yet transmitted their replies to the circular letters from the Secretary-General dated February 17th and June 13th, 1931, on the position of their armaments, to do so as soon as possible and in any case before November 1st, 1931, in order to enable the Secretariat to provide the Disarmament Conference with adequate documentation."

FIRST MEETING.

Held on Wednesday, September 9th, 1931, at 5.15 p.m.

Chairman: M. POLITIS (Greece).

1. Election of the Vice-Chairman.

On the proposal of M. CAHEN-SALVADOR (France), Dr. Max HOFFINGER, delegate of Austria, was unanimously elected Vice-Chairman.

2. Publicity of Meetings.

The Committee decided to hold its meetings in public, but reserved its right to sit in private when desirable.

3. Adoption of the Agenda.

The provisional agenda (Annex 1) was adopted.

SECOND MEETING.

Held on Saturday, September 12th, 1931, at 5.30 p.m.

Chairman: M. POLITIS (Greece).

4. Appointment of the Sub-Committee on Contributions in Arrears.

The CHAIRMAN submitted the following list of members proposed by the Bureau of the Committee to serve on the Sub-Committee on Contributions in Arrears: M. COSIO (Uruguay), M. GIANNINI (Italy), Mr. LESTER (Irish Free State), Sir Annepu P. PATRO (India), Professor W. RAPPARD (Switzerland), Dr. RUPPEL (Germany), M. ZUMETA (Venezuela).

The above list was adopted.

5. Work of the Supervisory Commission during its Forty-first Session: Draft Resolutions proposed by the Delegates of Venezuela and the Netherlands and by the Chairman.

At the request of M. HAMBRO (Norway), the Committee decided to proceed, immediately after M. Osuský's statement on the work of the Supervisory Commission, with a general discussion on the financial situation and the budget of the League of Nations.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) made a statement with regard to the work of this Commission (Annex 2).

Referring, in the first place, to the closed accounts of the League, M. Osuský pointed out that the present position with regard to contributions in arrears was as follows: first financial year, nil; second and third years, about 170,000 Swiss francs; fourth to ninth years, 350,000 to 360,000 Swiss francs; tenth year, 125,000 Swiss francs; eleventh year, over 1,000,000 Swiss francs; twelfth year, 1,700,000 Swiss francs. These were the annual figures after the deduction of allowances made to certain States by decision of the Assembly.

At the present moment, the number of debtor States was five for the second to tenth years, seven for the eleventh year and fourteen for the twelfth year. Though there was no cause for alarm, the position was serious and called for the Fourth Committee's attention. Further, owing to the fact that States paid their contributions relatively late in the year, the Treasury experienced some difficulty during the first months of each year. Consequently, M. Osuský appealed to the Governments to send at least part of their contribution during January.

The International Labour Office had borrowed half a million francs from the Working Capital Fund in 1930. The Supervisory Commission proposed that this amount should be refunded to the Working Capital Fund out of the surplus for 1930, which would then be reduced to about 123,000 francs.

The expenditure of the three Administrations for the financial year 1931 was already very heavy, and the Supervisory Commission feared that at the end of the year there would be a cash deficit. This was not a reproach against the heads of those Administrations. The amounts expended had been regularly voted by the Assembly and actually placed at their disposal. At the same time, he thought the Fourth Committee should appeal to the three Organisations to endeavour not to use all the sums allocated in the budget. He was aware that the reply would be that the work had been assigned to them, and it was their duty to perform it; but he urged them to consider the difficult position of the majority of the States, and not to insist on their right to expend all the sums provided in the 1931 budget. He asked them to postpone any work which was not indispensable until next year.

M. Osuský then briefly drew attention to the conditions in which the Assembly had adopted a scheme for the construction of the League buildings, for the execution of which it had voted a credit of 23 ½ million francs. If that figure was not to be exceeded, the Assembly would have to adopt a very firm attitude with regard to the building work and to support the efforts of the Supervisory Commission, the Building Committee and the Secretary-General.

Passing to the 1932 budget, M. Osuský, stated that the Supervisory Commission had to carry out the wishes of the Fourth Committee and the Assembly. Those wishes, however, were not to be found in the Press or in private conversations, but only in the Assembly resolutions. It was for the Commission to count the cost and to supervise the way in which those resolutions were carried out.

Reference to the Minutes of the Fourth Committee and the reports of the Supervisory Commission would show that the Supervisory Commission had given many warnings in the past. On several occasions, it had objected to the excessive increase of committees and sub-committees, meetings and printed documents. With regard to the last point, it had arranged that only the Secretary-General should authorise printing, for it had observed that certain publications were losing their character as instruments of work and becoming veritable encyclopædias, accessible, moreover, only to a very small number of experts. The Supervisory Commission had often drawn the Fourth Committee's attention to the fact that the sums voted for printing did not give an accurate idea of the actual expense involved; they did not cover the cost of the additional work required of the Central Services.

The Supervisory Commission, anxious to ensure the organic development of the League of Nations, was opposed to so much work being undertaken that it could not be co-ordinated. The League of Nations had been created to work and not to act spasmodically. The Chairman of the Supervisory Commission therefore made an urgent appeal to the Assembly to co-ordinate the various proposals submitted to it before deciding whether they should be given effect.

The SECRETARY-GENERAL stated that he had not waited for the appeal of the Supervisory Commission or the Fourth Committee before asking his staff to exercise the strictest economy. In February last he had sent a circular to all the Sections, which contained, in particular, the following passage:

> " In view of the very serious financial position of many States Members of the League, it is desirable that the League should exercise the strictest economy during the current year and also in preparing the budget for the year 1932.
> " While I believe that any large measure of economy is hardly feasible without seriously affecting the efficiency of the work of the Secretariat, I should like all officials to assist in economising as much as possible. Economies which, in themselves, may be small will possibly, in the aggregate, amount to a substantial sum, and I should therefore welcome any suggestions from the staff for effecting savings of expenditure. "

The Secretary-General had received various suggestions in reply to that circular, and the officials of the Secretariat had done everything in their power not to spend more than was essential for carrying out the programme approved by the last Assembly. They would continue to practise economy. He pointed out, however, that, in accordance with the Council's decisions, certain conferences and committees should meet before the end of the year. Those meetings were outside his competence. If, however, the Fourth Committee would approve the appeal of the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission, the Secretary-General would willingly place it before the Council. He was sure the latter would do its best to postpone any conferences and committees which were not of immediate urgency.

The budget for 1932 was divisible into two parts—the ordinary budget and the extraordinary budget for the Disarmament Conference. The Fourth Committee would no doubt feel that it was absolutely essential to maintain the latter at a figure which would allow of the greatest possible success.

The ordinary budget for 1932 was the first annual budget submitted by the Secretariat which not only did not exceed that of the previous year, but was even lower. In spite of the new work which the last Assembly had entrusted to the Secretariat, the budget for 1932 was 300,000 gold francs lower than the 1931 budget. Various schemes for a European organisation had contained provisions for a separate secretariat. Nevertheless, the staff required for the Commission of Enquiry for European Union had been provided from the staff of the Secretariat, with certain temporary additions to the Central Services. That had only been possible because the staff had undertaken extra work, feeling that, in view of the world financial situation, the States Members of the League of Nations were entitled to ask them to make an extra effort.

The Secretariat was prepared to make any economies which were desired, provided the proposals put forward showed to what general provisions they related. In any case, these economies could only be made at the expense of the programme fixed by the Assembly last year. Neither the Supervisory Commission nor the Secretary-General desired to spend; on the contrary, they were anxious to economise as much as possible. It should be remembered that the budget for the coming year could only be reduced by a surgical operation. If the Committee could indicate where the cut should be made, the Supervisory Commission and the Secretary-General would willingly operate.

It had been said that the burden of the States' contributions to the League of Nations was extremely heavy, and it was to be feared that public opinion might infer that those contributions were to some extent responsible for the present financial crisis. In order to refute this view, the Secretary-General stated that, for example, New Zealand's contribution to the League of Nations represented 0.0048 per cent of its budget. Such an example being typical, it was clear that the burden imposed on a State was too small to jeopardise its financial situation.

M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) said that, even if the present were a period of prosperity, the advice of the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission should be borne in mind, and the expenditure of the League of Nations organised methodically within a rigorous framework. Each year the League's sphere of activity was extended, not with a view to its harmonious and methodical development, but in an impromptu fashion, work being undertaken which in several respects was not of immediate or paramount importance.

No member of the Committee would desire to reduce the sums necessary for the League's work in the interests of peace and for the normal development of its useful activities, but expenditure which was not of immediate urgency must be postponed.

M. Zumeta therefore submitted to his colleagues, as a basis for discussion, the following proposal, which he was prepared to amalgamate with other proposals of the same kind which might be submitted by his colleagues and to adapt it to meet the wishes of the Committee:

" The Fourth Committee,

" Convinced that, in the present situation of the world, the League of Nations must adopt the policy of budgetary economy followed in the majority of States:

" Forwards the draft budget to the Supervisory Commission, the body specially qualified to deal with it, so that, in agreement with the Secretary-General and the other competent officials, it may study the best method of making a substantial reduction in the present budgetary estimates, in any case effecting a minimum decrease of 12 per cent on the budget as a whole. "

The CHAIRMAN stated that, at the end of the general discussion, the Committee would be asked to take a decision on this and any other resolutions which might be submitted to it.

The Chairman read the following draft resolution:

" The Assembly,

" Being convinced that it is imperative not further to increase the budget of the League for 1932, the total of which is, as a result of the appropriation for the Disarmament Conference, considerably higher than that for the current year:

" Makes a strong appeal to its Committees to follow the principles of economy dictated by present circumstances;

" Requests these Committees to limit to the indispensable the programme of work to be undertaken in 1932 and to abstain from making recommendations which might involve further expenditure. "

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) did not think it necessary to take an immediate decision on this proposal. If the Venezuelan delegate's proposal were adopted, it would be preferable not to alarm the Assembly prematurely. It was not possible now to anticipate an increased budget when many delegations hoped that it would not be increased.

The CHAIRMAN replied that the sense of the motion before the Committee was not quite the same as that proposed by M. Zumeta. He admitted that reference to a budget which had not yet been examined was out of place, and thought that the word " budget " might be replaced by the words " draft budget ". The Committees should, however, be warned immediately that no new work involving additional expenditure in the 1932 budget should be suggested.

M. RÉVEILLAUD (France) observed that there was no contradiction between the two proposals. All that was needed to bring them into harmony was a slight alteration in the above text—namely, the addition of the phrase " which will have to meet the expenditure for the Disarmament Conference " in the first paragraph after the words " for 1932 ".

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) and M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) accepted M. Réveillaud's suggestion.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) reminded the new members of the Committee that practically every year the Chairman of the Fourth Committee was asked to write to the other Committees, urging them to bear in mind the necessity for economy. The procedure now suggested was a great improvement, and M. Hambro hoped it would become a tradition.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) supported the suggestions of M. Réveillaud and M. Hambro. A solemn declaration by the Assembly would be more effective than the usual circular letter to the Chairmen of the other Committees. Moreover, international public opinion was expecting a statement of that kind.

Viscount MUSHAKOJI (Japan) supported the Chairman's proposal, but thought that the closing words should be amended.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) warned his colleagues against a danger. To invite the Assembly to abstain from making recommendations which might involve further expenditure might lead to stagnation. He therefore proposed the addition of the following words: " when it is not shown to be absolutely necessary and urgent ".

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) supported M. Rappard's proposal.

Diwan ABDUL HAMID (India) proposed that the beginning of the last paragraph should be amended as follows: " Requests these Committees to reduce the programme of work to be undertaken in 1932 as far as possible ", and that the words " further expenditure " in the last line should be replaced bythe words "avoidable expenditure". He also proposed that the words " to reduce " should be substituted for the words " not further to increase " in the first paragraph.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) thought that, if anything were added to the text, it would be weakened. It would be preferable to submit the draft resolution to the Assembly as it stood. If any Committee considered that further expenditure was absolutely essential, it would inform the Assembly, which would take the final decision.

M. DE MODZELEWSKI (Poland) agreed with the Netherlands delegate that the text should not be changed. The words " as far as possible " might, however, be added in the third paragraph after the word " abstain ".

M. HAMBRO (Norway) supported the Netherlands proposal. He thought, moreover, that the Committee should instruct its officers to draw up, on the basis of the observations just made, a text satisfactory to all the members of the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN, summarising the discussion, stated with regard to the first paragraph, that the Assembly's conviction should be based on the budgetary estimates, and account should be taken of the exceptional factor in 1932—namely, the Disarmament Conference. The second paragraph would remain as it stood. In the third paragraph, it could be stated that the object of the invitation to the Committees was to limit additional work as far as possible, and to limit expenditure on such work in the same proportion.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia) desired the proposal of the delegate of India to be borne in mind. For that purpose, the resolution might state that the Fourth Committee did not undertake not to make reductions in the budget.

The CHAIRMAN replied that this would be borne in mind, and noted that the Fourth Committee was unanimous in regard to the procedure to be followed.

The Committee instructed the Bureau to draft the final text of the draft resolution to be submitted to the Assembly.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia), after paying a tribute to the statements of the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission and the Secretary-General, referred to an observation made by the latter with regard to New Zealand, whose contribution of £12,000 to the League of Nations, represented only a small proportion of that country's budget. That might, however, be put in a different light. Australia's contribution was £40,000. If the budget of the League could be reduced in the same proportion as the Australian budget, the Commonwealth would have at its disposal a large sum which would enable work to be found for several hundred unemployed workers.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) was convinced that the League of Nations and the Supervisory Commission had done all they could to avoid increasing the expenditure. It was also true, however, that, as M. Osuský had said, neither the Supervisory Commission nor the Secretariat could reduce expenditure on their own authority; the final decision rested with the Members of the League.

In the second place, the estimates for the Disarmament Conference should not be touched, and the sums necessary to ensure the best possible results should be placed at the Secretariat's disposal. That Conference would increase the League's budget by 3,700,000 francs, and it would be impossible to reduce the budget below the level of the present year. That meant that next year the Members of the League would have to pay a contribution 14 per cent higher than this year, including the supplementary budget. Those States had themselves to struggle with budgetary difficulties, and the League of Nations should set them an example. The Secretary-General had himself used the same argument in the internal circular he had read at the beginning of the meeting, which referred to the financial difficulties of the States Members. It was therefore imperative that expenditure should be adjusted to receipts, in order to bring about a general improvement in the financial position.

It was impossible to suggest immediately in what chapters of the budget reductions could be made. In any case, the 1933 budget would probably be even more difficult to draw up than that for 1932.

In conclusion, M. Trip read a draft resolution in the same sense as M. Zumeta's proposal:

> " The Fourth Committee,
> " Considering that the whole world is suffering from an extremely serious crisis involving grave difficulties, particularly of a budgetary nature;
> " Considering that it is indispensable in determining the budgetary policy of the League of Nations to take these difficulties into account:
> " Is of opinion that the budget, as submitted to the Assembly, should be considerably reduced, and invites the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee within a very short period, in agreement with the Supervisory Commission, proposals for achieving such reduction;
> " Feels that the Assembly should not sanction any new measures involving an increase in the revised total budgetary estimates;
> " And proposes that the Assembly should instruct the Secretary-General, in agreement with the Supervisory Commission, to make economies in the budget for 1933, so that this budget, in comparison with the budget of 1932—deduction made of the budgetary estimates for the Disarmament Conference—should show a reduction of at least 10 per cent upon normal expenditure. "

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) asked the Chairman to see that the discussion on these two proposals did not lead the Committee prematurely to abandon the question. The Committee should indicate on what items it thought reductions could be made. He added that, to deal with the matter en bloc, as M. Zumeta had proposed, seemed somewhat premature.

M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) replied that, far from making such a suggestion, he had clearly indicated at the beginning of the meeting that his proposal should be considered as the basis for a general discussion.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) asked the members of the Committee to urge their colleagues in the other Committees to show the same desire for economy and to support the Fourth Committee's attitude.

THIRD MEETING.

Held on Monday, September 14th, 1931, at 5.15 p.m.

Chairman: M. POLITIS (Greece).

6. Work of the Supervisory Commission during its Forty-first Session (continuation).

The SECRETARY-GENERAL apologised for having stated that New Zealand's contribution to the League represented 0.0048 per cent of her budget; the correct figure was 0.048 per cent.

Mr. KNOWLES (New Zealand) accepted the apology, but ventured to suggest that it did not add to the value of the original statement.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) observed that the budget reflected the encyclopædic character which the League's activities, and those of its auxiliary organs, were bound to assume, ranging as they did over such widely different problems as the collection of economic statistics, whale-fishing, penal administration and the spread of lyric poetry. This state of affairs arose out of the Covenant itself, which not only assigned to the League a political rôle, but also called upon it to take action in connection with economics and finance, transport, humanitarian and social questions and in intellectual matters.

The Belgian Government had never considered that the League's budget was too high in itself, especially when the contributions of its Members were compared with their own budgets. Generally speaking, moreover, the League expenditure produced valuable results. In view, however, of the financial crisis and the extra expense involved by the Disarmament Conference, the strictest economy should be observed, and he wondered whether it would not be possible in1932 to give priority to the more urgent work. The Committee might consider wether it would be seriously inconvenient to postpone work on certain questions relating, for example, to the frequency of economic cycles, the economic position of certain countries—on these matters it would be easy to obtain information by other means—and the despatch of an educational mission to China as proposed by the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation. In view of the difficult times through which the world was passing, the League owed it to public opinion to consider, in collaboration with the Supervisory Commission, whether in present circumstances certain of its activities could not be rationalised and certain of its expenses reduced to the absolutely essential.

M. GIANNINI (Italy) was of opinion that work already undertaken or in progress could not be abandoned. Every effort should certainly be made to reduce expenditure and to see that the money was spent wisely. The Italian delegation could not, however, accept the mechanical percentage reduction suggested by the Venezuelan delegate, which would not achieve the latter's object. Nor could it accept the Netherlands proposal to reduce the 1932 budget considerably and to effect economies in the 1933 budget so that, in comparison with the 1932 budget, it would show a reduction of at least 10 per cent upon normal expenditure.

He proposed that the Committee should express the opinion that the budget should be reduced as far as possible, bearing in mind the engagements already made and also the efficiency and utility of the results obtained from each item of expenditure, but without paralysing the League's work; it should ask the Supervisory Commission, in agreement with the Secretary-General, to revise the budgetary estimates for 1932 very carefully to see whether savings could not be effected.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) called attention to the gravity of the present situation. He pointed out that, in 1927, 68 per cent of the League contributions had been paid in the first eight months; in 1928, 63.7 per cent; in 1929, 63.2 per cent; in 1930, 63.8 per cent and, in 1931, only 56 ½ per cent. At the same time, contributions in arrears had increased by 21 per cent, and for the first time for many years the Secretariat had been obliged to draw on the Working Capital Fund at the beginning of 1931 in order to meet expenditure provided for in the budget. That was a very unsatisfactory state of affairs which must be remedied.

While the League's budget was not high in comparison with the budgets of its Members, it was essential, at a time when States were being compelled to reduce their expenditure to a minimum, to bear in mind certain psychological factors. It had been mentioned that their contributions to the League represented a very small percentage of the budgets of States like Australia and New Zealand. These States, however, had not been financially able this year to send home delegations; they were represented by their officials in London. What would be the effect on public opinion if members of Parliaments and Cabinets disappeared from Geneva and only the nearest diplomatic and consular representatives met there ?

Again, many States had been forced to reduce the salaries of Government officials, in some cases by as much as 40 per cent. Those officials naturally viewed with some bitterness the fact that the salaries of League officials had been increased and the entertainment allowances of the higher officials maintained at a large figure. A generous pensions fund had been created, when many Governments were reducing pensions. In spite of the Assembly's unanimous resolution in 1926 that the League budget should in future be balanced in such a way that the contributions of the Members should not exceed the 1927 figure, the draft budget for 1932 exceeded by 14 per cent that for the current year. Countries were beginning to regard their contributions to the League as a diplomatic luxury.

All hese factors tended to lead public opinion to assume that the League was aloof from ordinary men and women, and most of the speeches made in the Assembly showed that there was a certain amount of disappointment and disillusion in the results achieved at Geneva. These who were not able to participate actively in the League's work were apt to forget that the present was a period of preparation. The harvest would not be reaped for generations—not until man's mentality had changed.

M. Hambro was glad that M. Zumeta had made his proposal. Of course, a mechanical percentage reduction in the budget was difficult; but that was not what M. Zumeta had intended. He had desired to supply a basis for the general discussion, which he had certainly done. It was now important to make the Governments and peoples feel that the League was sharing their burdens and following the path of " disciplined sacrifice ".

The Norwegian delegation intended to vote in favour of the appropriations for the Disarmament Conference and the economic work of the League, which were of the utmost importance. It would vote against appropriations for work connected with the buoyage and lighting of coasts, the codification of international law—though the latter subject was of great interest for the Scandinavian countries—and the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. It also intended to vote against the suggestion that had been made to appoint a Scandinavian temporary member in the Information Section—as compensation for the only Scandinavian who had been transferred—as it would vote against any proposal for creating new posts in the Information Section.

The League would do well to use the present opportunity to concentrate its activities, to do intensive rather than extensive work. It should be remembered that international work could often be done better and more cheaply outside the League, and propaganda for the League could be done more effectively by outsiders than by officials who were not generally in a position to express an independent opinion. It was absolutely essential for the future of the League of Nations that the ordinary man and woman should be interested in it. They must feel that the League shared their lives, suffered the same hardships and sympathised with their difficulties.

In the present financial circumstances, the first step which the League could take to awaken that interest was to reduce the contributions of its Members to the greatest possible extent.

Viscount MUSHAKOJI (Japan) stated that his countrymen felt that the League was becoming more and more European in character. Though they were mistaken, the existence of such an impression made it difficult for Japan to accept any increase in the League budget. The Japanese delegation had listened with interest to the various proposals which had been put forward, but, as it was of opinion that the reduction of expenditure should not destroy the League's efficiency, it was unable immediately to express any opinion with regard to the possibility of making a general percentage reduction. He suggested that the Committee should examine the budget, paragraph by paragraph, in order to see whether the number of commissions and committees could be reduced and certain work postponed.

With regard to the salaries of officials, he felt that they should only be reduced as a last resort, when that appeared indispensable and inevitable. Instead of being discouraged, the League officials would then take the opportunity of limiting their work, while at the same time endeavouring to increase its yield.

M. BOHEMAN (Sweden) thought that, while every effort should be made to reduce the budget, it was of vital importance not to reduce the League's efficiency. There was reason to fear that any considerable increase in the budget would lead to an increase in the contribution in arrears, which was a very disquieting factor, for it would be very difficult to make good a budgetary deficit.

At a time when the Governments, faced with an economic crisis, were postponing all expenditure which was not urgent and making every effort to rationalise their public services, the League must not fail to do its share. Nevertheless, the importance of the contributions to the League of Nations should not be exaggerated. Sweden's contribution, for example, represented the cost of one infantry battalion. If the League was a guarantee of peace, which he firmly believed it was, one infantry battalion more or less was of infinitely less importance for the security of a country than one League of Nations more or less.

The chief reason why the League expenditure should be reduced was in order to set the world an example of sound financial administration. M. Boheman was of opinion that the budget could be reduced without harming the League's efficiency. Salaries could, he thought, only be reduced in agreement with the officials concerned. The Disarmament Conference was of great importance and everything must be done to ensure its success. In view of the forthcoming Conference, no one would raise any criticism if, during 1932, less urgent work were postponed. The staff released could be employed on work for the Disarmament Conference, and a saving thus effected on temporary staff.

M. Boheman suggested that the Secretary-General should be asked to draw up a preliminary list of meetings to be held in 1932, and that the Fourth Committee, or the Supervisory Commission, should consider whether some of them could not be adjourned.

The expenditure on printing might also be reduced considerably; in particular, the number of printed Minutes might be decreased. Although the Assembly had adopted a resolution on that question in 1928, no appreciable results had as yet been achieved.

M. RADULESCO (Roumania) said that, while, in view of the economic crisis, it was desirable that expenditure should be reduced, the objects of the League of Nations should be borne in mind. The League was the world's greatest hope; for only the closest international co-operation could improve the situation.

M. Radulesco laid stress on the fact that the increase in the budget was due to the coming Disarmament Conference. Apart from that chapter, the budget was lower than in the previous year, although new work involving additional expenditure had been entrusted to the League. In proposing budgetary reductions, the Committee must be careful not to paralyse the League's work, for that would be false economy. For this reason he was not in favour of an automatic reduction.

M. DE MODZELEWSKI (Poland) supported M. Zumeta's draft resolution, but did not think it necessary to fix a percentage by which the budget should be reduced. It would be preferable to leave the Supervisory Commission to make proposals. Perhaps M. Zumeta would be willing to replace the reference to 12 per cent by a suggestion that, if possible, the budget should be reduced by 8 or 10 per cent.

With regard to the Netherlands proposal, it was very difficult to foresee what would be the position in 1933. Many pessimistic opinions had been expressed, but it was the League's duty to foster courage and optimism. He was therefore opposed to placing a limit on the 1933 budget, especially on the basis of a budget which had already been reduced considerably. No doubt the authors of the two texts could reach agreement on a joint text which the Committee could approve.

M. de Modzelewski had been instructed by his Government to urge, not only that the budget in general should be reduced as far as possible, but that savings should be made on the chapters relating to telephones, missions, printing, etc. Small savings on each of these items would amount, in the aggregate, to a large sum.

The Polish Government was of opinion that considerable saving could be effected by the postponement of certain conferences. For the moment, the League should concentrate on the Disarmament Conference and on its economic work; and, although the greatest economy should be observed in these two spheres, to deprive the League of the necessary appropriations for these activities would be contrary to its aims.

Diwan ABDUL HAMID (India) agreed that drastic retrenchment in expenditure was imperative. India's annual contribution to the League was high, and the Indian delegation felt bound once more to urge the Committee to adopt a policy of economy. Generally speaking, he believed the Committee approved that principle. Unfortunately, the efforts made in the past to stabilise the budget had met with little success, and expenditure had increased year by year. The liberal scale of the League's expenditure had reflected the tendency of Governments to extend their activities and multiply their financial commitments in times of prosperity; but, during the present crisis, it was incumbent upon the Fourth Committee thoroughly to overhaul the position, and to follow the example of the Governments which were applying the axe to national expenditure in all departments of their activity.

He was confident that the Committee would not be content to pass pious resolutions, but would prove to the world that the League was fully alive to the calamitous depression through which the greatest nations of the world were passing. Any measures of economy recommended to the Assembly should be characterised by wise discrimination, due account being taken of the nature of the League's activities, and urgent requirements must be given priority.

M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) said that it had been far from his intention to propose a mechanical —that was to say, an irrational—reduction in the budget, seeing that he was temperamentally opposed to such methods. He considered it absurd and even criminal to hamper in any way the essential work of the League, and was sure that neither the Supervisory Commission nor the high officials of the Secretariat would accept such a task. M. Zumeta was ready to accept M. de Modzelewski's suggestion and would support any text approved by the Committee embodying the idea conveyed in his proposal submitted at the previous meeting.

M. PALACIOS (Spain), while fully aware of the difficulty of opposing the almost unanimous opinion of the Fourth Committee, nevertheless thought he should submit to his colleagues certain considerations regarding the economies to be made in the League budget. As M. Lerroux and M. de Madariaga had stated at the Assembly, the definite instructions issued by the Spanish Government were that the suggested reductions should be opposed. Spain was by no means against a policy of economy. If greater rationalisation were required in the working of the League of Nations to ensure a better adaptation of the instrument to its duties and of means to ends, he would urgently appeal to those in charge of League administration to use its resources with the maximum efficiency which the supreme necessities of its international work demanded.

That, however, was not the way in which the other delegations construed the recommendation made regarding economies. A wholesale reduction of credits involving a cut of from 10 to 12 per cent of the gross amount was claimed. In justification of this request, it was stated, as M. Zumeta had just done, that such a reduction would not injure either the work or the reputation of the League. That, M. Palacios thought, was a highly equivocal assertion. The effects of this suggestion might be very far-reaching and would at any rate lead to the absurdity of imagining that an organisation could function adequately and completely without elements which the same delegations had previously admitted were necessary and which, moreover, had actually proved inadequate. If the modest figures of this peace budget were compared with the exorbitant expenditure of war budgets, the anxiety to make reduction was in astonishing contrast with the reluctance shown in cutting down military expenditure.

The financial reductions suggested for the League of Nations were of two kinds—those affecting still unexpended credits for the current financial year of 1931 and the credits to be provided for 1932.

As regards the former, M. Osuský, in a speech which was a model of precision and eloquence, had urged that the credits for the last quarter of the budget voted by the last Assembly should not be fully utilised. That, in M. Palacios' view, was a rather risky recommendation. A budget was always more or less the economic and constitutional charter of public bodies and could therefore hardly be altered without raising numerous problems affecting security and guarantees. If the 1931 Assembly cancelled, in regard to such delicate matters, what had been considered, discussed and voted by the last Assembly, there could be no assurance that the work now being done would not be found to be valueless when retrospectively considered by the next Assembly.

This was a specially serious point in administrative matters which involved questions of material resources, personal positions, future prospects, cancellation of duties, etc.

Furthermore, a budgetary credit was not a power given to the Administration not to exceed a certain figure. It was a duty to appropriate an amount to a social service. It created an obligation which, after having been carefully studied with a view to its incorporation in the body of the institution, could not, without serious detriment, be left unexecuted. The argument used to justify a reduction of the 1932 budget was the world crisis. He wondered whether, in view of the confidence reposed by the world generally in the League of Nations, that argument did not rather entail the obligation to intensify League work, to increase its resources, to make its action more penetrating and to extend its influence. The crisis, it was commonly agreed, was worldwide, and the remedy must also be universal. Was the League not the international body best qualified to—the only one which could—cope with the problem ? It would therefore be illogical to curtail its activity instead of strengthening it, to deprive it of resources at a time when the world economic crisis could not be solved without League action in every sphere and when even greater resources were required. There should, certainly, be no curtailment of the economic and financial work of the League of Nations or in the work of the International Labour Office.

M. Palacios concluded by reminding the Committee that distrust of the League of Nations might be considerably stimulated by the action of the Fourth Committee if the proposal for a global reduction were adopted. No one would credit the effusive tributes paid to the League of Nations if its Members did not support their words by deeds.

7. Publication of the Collection of Laws and Regulations relating to the Traffic in Women and Children.

The CHAIRMAN read a letter, dated September 7th, 1931, from the International Council of Women, urging that the collection of laws and regulations relating to the traffic in women and children, the preparation of which had been approved by the Council and the Assembly, should be published.

FOURTH MEETING.

Held on Tuesday, September 15th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman: M. POLITIS (Greece).

8. Work of the Supervisory Commission during its Forty-first Session (continuation).

Mr. ROY (Canada) said that Canada, like other countries, had been obliged to reduce expenditure. He therefore recommended the strictest economy in the preparation of the budget of the League. There should be no panic, however, and no general reductions which were unfair to the officials and harmful to the activity of the League. One chapter of the budget in which economies might be effected was that relating to conferences held outside Geneva. This practice was costly and injurious to the League's prestige. It was therefore regrettable from every point of view. Mr. Roy asked the Fourth Committee to recommend to the Assembly that, in future, all the League's activities should be concentrated at Geneva under the immediate supervision of the Secretariat. If a sub-committee were appointed to consider with the Secretary-General in what chapters of the budget economies could be made, that sub-committee should also be asked to study and report on the question of conferences held outside Geneva.

M. OTTLIK (Hungary) pointed out that the Supervisory Commission was not only a body set up for the purpose of fiscal control; it was also a constructive body, with the duty of seeing that the instructions of the Fourth Committee and the Assembly were carried out with the minimum expense and the maximum efficacy. Like M. Giannini, he warned the Committee against the danger of a mechanical method of reducing expenditure, which could not but harm the League's activity. One principle which should be borne in mind was the desirability of postponing all conferences and meetings which were not of immediate importance, provided such action did not prejudice the League's interests.

The restoration of general confidence depended upon the solution found for the question of disarmament and for economic problems. Sight must not be lost, however, of the League's activities in the social sphere, particularly during the present crisis. As the representative of a country which was endeavouring to reduce expenditure considerably, the Hungarian delegate was in favour of effecting economies. He felt bound, however, to point out that it was undesirable to reduce the budget to such an extent that the development of the League's activities was, if not arrested, at any rate rendered more difficult. The normal course of the League's work must be respected. For that reason, he was glad the Venezuelan delegate did not press his proposal that the budget should be reduced by 12 per cent. That would be too rigid a formula, and the results of applying it might exceed the object of M. Zumeta's resolution.

Apart from the estimated expenditure on the Disarmament Conference, the budget amounted to 32,200,000 francs; a reduction of 12 per cent would reduce it to about 28,300,000 francs, the figure for 1930. Neither the Committee of Enquiry for European Union, however, nor the Pensions Fund had been in existence in 1930. The item concerning the new buildings had been lower than that for the present year, and was still lower than that for the coming year. Since 1930, as a result of the resolutions adopted by the eleventh Assembly, the budget of the Permanent Court of International Justice had increased by 500,000 francs; this could not be touched. The aggregate increase amounted to nearly 2,000,000 francs. Next year the three chapters—Permanent Court, Buildings and Pensions—would amount to 5,500,000 francs, expenditure which it would be impossible to reduce in any way. The reduction of 12 per cent. would therefore apply to a sum of about 27,000,000 francs, which would, to a large extent, paralyse the League's activities.

The only way to solve the problem was to examine the budget, item by item, with a view to making reasonable reductions.

On the other hand, it was to be hoped that the Spanish delegate's gesture in proposing that the League's means of existence should not be reduced would not remain isolated, but would be followed by others from other quarters.

M. Ottlik was not in favour of any reduction in the 1933 budget, for to prejudge the position at that time, when no one could say how the present crisis would develop, would amount to preparing to-day a plan for winding up the League of Nations. There could be no question of that.

M. Rappard (Switzerland) wondered whether budgetary considerations could justify the reduction of the League's activities, the object of which was to ensure the prosperity and security of the nations. Anything which might contribute to increased prosperity and strengthened security was an economy, in the long run, for the States Members of the League, even if for the time being expenditure was increased. For example, if the improvement of the lighting and buoyage of coasts resulted in a decrease in accidents at sea, any measure of economy which delayed this necessary improvement would be false economy. The budget of the League of Nations would be less heavy for the time being, but that would not be of real advantage to the States Members. The same might be said of other League activities which at first sight might appear unimportant, such as the reform of the calendar. This applied still more to the legal and political work of the League. The expenditure on these various activities was small in comparison with the subsequent saving to which they would lead if they succeeded. It was said that the world was ill; what would be thought of a patient who haggled over the doctor's fees ?

The expenditure of the League should be judged not by its volume but by its effect. Every effort which offered any possibility of material success was justified also from the financial aspect.

The business of economising, while at the same time ensuring better results from the organs of the League, was a matter of administration, the responsibility for which rested with the heads of the services concerned. The Fourth Committee should not shoulder their burdens. The real solution was the rationalisation of the League's services, but there were two obstacles to that method. In the first place, the bilingual character of the League of Nations, which was obligatory, was irrational and an obstacle which the most economical administrator was unable to overcome. In the second place, the international character of the Secretariat should be borne in mind. The responsible heads of the international organisations were asked to reconcile two incompatible principles—the maximum rationalisation in their administration and the maximum internationalisation. Neither of those conditions could be fulfilled without violating the other.

The question of nationality was one of the most difficult. Appointments which had recently been made to the post of Director had still further increased the number of representatives of the great Powers at the head of the scale. M. Rappard readily believed that the British, French, Italian and Swedish Directors had been selected, not on account of their nationality, but in view of their capacity. It could not, however, be said that the Under-Secretaries-General were appointed solely on account of their capacity. Their nationality was also taken into account. That could not be called administrative rationalisation.

With regard to the Supervisory Commission, while paying a tribute to its members, M. Rappard thought it would be possible to improve its composition by obtaining the assistance, when vacancies occurred, of the heads of internal services of the national administration, who had more experience of organising than diplomats. If its membership were altered in that way, the Commission might be able to devote more time to its work, and supervision would be more effective. Two or three days could not be sufficient to form an opinion with regard to the operation of the machinery of the Secretariat and the International Labour Office.

The supervision exercised by the Fourth Committee itself would be more efficacious if the form in which the accounts and budgets were submitted were more clear. The reasons for the discrepancy between the estimates and the final figures and the reasons for any saving which had been made might be explained in the accounts. The extraordinary budget should be more definitely separated from the ordinary budget. The expenditure for the previous financial year should be shown beside the corresponding figure in the budget for current expenditure and the budgetary estimates for the coming financial year.

With regard to salaries, the Swiss delegation had always considered them high. They had been based on the salaries paid in the British Civil Service, which was the best paid civil service in the world, but had been further increased in view of the insecurity due to the absence of a pensions fund. Finally, the cost of living had been very high when the scale of salaries had been drawn up. Since then, the question of reducing British salaries had arisen, a pensions fund had been established at Geneva and the cost of living had fallen somewhat, so that salaries which had been adequate in 1929 were excessive at the present time. M. Rappard did not suggest a large reduction in salaries, though he supported M. Hambro's courageous statements. He thought that, in any case, the practice of making special allowances, bonuses for special duties and bonuses in addition to salary, which heavily burdened the budget and created discontent, should be abandoned. There was no need to suggest that reductions in salary would lead to resignations. In the first place, it would be an insult to the members of the international organisations to suggest that their devotion to duty was dependent on their pay. Secondly, it would be no loss to the Secretariat if officials who were only inspired by their own financial interest left it.

In conclusion, M. Rappard stated that, while economy was essential, it should be productive economy. The League's activity should be intensified, but at the same time disciplined, rationalised and, in certain directions, speeded up. At the same time the budget should be relieved of unnecessary expenditure which needlessly slowed down the League's activities.

Viscount ASTOR (British Empire) noted the general desire for economy, but felt that a mechanical reduction of 10 or 12 per cent was not to be recommended. He did not consider that the salaries of League officials were excessive, but thought that exceptional allowances and additional bonuses might be reduced. It had been suggested that the number of officials should be decreased. It was clear that certain posts were of a political rather than an administrative nature; but, in view of the contracts already entered into, it would be difficult to suppress in 1932, or in the coming year, certain of the higher posts, even should a decision to that effect be reached. As regards the rest of the staff, the Fourth Committee was not at present in a position to reduce ts numbers.

Conferences should, he thought, be held at Geneva both for reasons connected with the League's prestige and for the sake of economy.

He was not in favour of abandoning certain of the League's activities in order to devote more attention to disarmament. All League work was important, and Article 23 of the Covenant was as definite and as important as the other articles. He hoped that the Disarmament Conference would be entirely successful, but the possibility of failure must not be overlooked. If the Conference were only moderately successful and the League of Nations had neglected the other branches of its work, there would be little, at the end of 1932, to justify its existence. Some of the League's prestige was due to activities other than disarmament, and it would be in danger of suffocation if expenditure were reduced unwisely. A saving of 300,000 francs had already been made, though it was true that it related only to the ordinary budget, and the additional budget had absorbed almost the whole sum.

In conclusion, Viscount Astor stated that he would vote in favour of economies, on condition that they did not decrease the activity and efficiency of the League.

M. RUPPEL (Germany) said that he was in favour of economy, public expenditure in his own country having been reduced considerably. At the same time, he could not recommend measures which might paralyse the League's activity. The essential activities, such as those relating to disarmament and to international financial and economic relations, should be pursued without interruption, while other work might be postponed without inconvenience. There was also the possibility of reducing expenditure by rationalising the internal services. It would be advisable to ask the Supervisory Commission to reconsider the various chapters of the budget with a view to suggesting reductions. The Commission should not, however, be authorised to make a mechanical reduction, but should see what saving could be effected without curtailing the League's activity.

M. RÉVEILLAUD (France) feared that the reiteration of the same counsels of economy might give the public the impression that the League of Nations was on the eve of a financial crisis. Any such misunderstanding should be removed. There was no question, as M. Zumeta had said, of paralysing the League's work, but only of reducing its less important activities provisionally, in order that there might be an opportunity of developing more completely the questions with which, above all, it had now to deal—namely, the Disarmament Conference and the economic restoration of the world. On the other hand, as far as possible, the printing of Minutes, reports, etc., should be permanently reduced as far as possible, together with all the additional work involved. M. Réveillaud would refrain from outlining a definite programme for economy, a duty which would be fulfilled by the members of the Supervisory Commission, in whom the Fourth Committee had entire confidence.

The draft resolutions proposed by M. Trip and M. Zumeta were a reflection of the general state of mind which prevailed among the members of the Committee. At the same time, M. Réveillaud asked, on his own behalf and on behalf of M. Modzelewski, whether it would not be possible slightly to amend M. Zumeta's proposal, by adding after the words, "it may study the best method", the phrase, "without hampering the essential activities of the League", and omitting the words, "in any case effecting a minimum decrease of 12 per cent on the budget as a whole". M. Réveillaud did not think this amendment would weaken the spirit of M. Zumeta's proposal.

M. VALDSÉ-MENDEVILLE (Chile) feared that, if the League did not resolutely follow the path of economy, public opinion in the countries which had made considerable budgetary reductions would feel that the League was removed from reality. Its essential activities should not, of course, be compromised, nor could the officials of the League be required to make the same sacrifices as the officials of certain countries, particularly as contractual obligations must be respected. In the present circumstances, however, public opinion would consider the smallest increase in salaries or bonuses as a mistake, and such action would put a ready weapon in the hands of the League's opponents.

Economies should be made in other spheres. Count Carton de Wiart had drawn attention to some of them. M. Palacios had recommended rationalisation, which, if applied conscientiously, might give excellent results. In spite of the increased expenditure necessitated by the Disarmament Conference, the total of next year's financial budget should not exceed that of the present year.

M. Valdés-Mendeville added that all the delegations of Latin America had accepted M. Zumeta's proposal, its object being to reduce certain chapters of the budget as far as possible in order to make up for the inevitable increase due to the Disarmament Conference.

Mr. LESTER (Irish Free State) said his Government had instructed him to support any reasonable proposal for the reduction of expenditure, but considered that it would be false economy to hamper any activity capable of contributing to the solution of international problems. The representatives of the various States, and not the Secretary-General of the League or the Director of the International Labour Office, were responsible for expenditure. For that reason, he hoped that those of his colleagues who had advocated economy would make definite suggestions for the benefit of the sub-committee set up to revise the budget.

M. DE BLANCK (Cuba) was in favour of any proposal which would lead to effective economy, For that reason, he had recommended last year that the establishment of the Pensions Funds the effect of which would not really be felt for about ten years, should be postponed. The budget. of international organisations must not be allowed to increase year by year, and, as far as possible, new work should not be begun until the work in hand had been completed.

M. de Blanck's instructions from his Government could be summarised in one word —stabilisation. Since the Disarmament Conference was considered indispensable, there must be a saving, if the budget were to be stabilised, of the amount represented by the cost of the Conference, about 4 million francs. That was very nearly the sum which would be saved by the percentage reduction recommended by M. Zumeta. M. de Blanck was, however, prepared to accept a more elastic formula, though this did not in any way diminish his keen desire for economy. If the Supervisory Commission were able to stabilise the budget, it would be easier in future for States to pay their contributions regularly, and at the same time all anxiety would be removed.

M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) recalled that the President of the twelfth Assembly, M. Titulesco, had uttered a warning that the League of Nations did not work miracles and that circumstances made it necessary to introduce a spirit of self-sacrifice into the discussions and resolutions.

The Venezuelan delegation, acting on this wise advice, recalled it to the Fourth Committee's attention. While M. Zumeta had mentioned figures to indicate the amount of budgetary reduction that was desirable, he had expressly warned the Committee that these figures were only to be regarded as a simple basis of discussion, and that his delegation was ready to accept the Fourth Committee's opinion. He entirely approved the modifications proposed by M. Réveillaud.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) suggested that the budget estimates should be referred to the Supervisory Commission for examination in consultation with the Secretary-General. He explained that, in asking for a considerable reduction of expenditure, he had not had in mind any mechanical system. He supported M. Réveillaud's views, and consequently withdrew his draft resolution.

M. GIANNINI (Italy) noted with satisfaction that his colleagues were, in general, agreed that, as he had proposed, the budget could not be reduced mechanically, but that expenditure must, as far as possible, be maintained within reasonable limits, without reducing the League's activity. He urged upon the members of the Fourth Committee the necessity for showing the same desire or economy in the other committees.

Many proposals had been made, but M. Giannini hoped the members of the Supervisory Commission would be wise enough to forget all they had heard, and to examine each item of the budget separately, in order to see where reductions could be made without paralysing the League's work. In any case, account must be taken of engagements already entered into for 1932. With regard to salaries, M. Giannini pointed out that, though it would be possible to revise the terms of future engagements, the League officials held contracts which could not be modified without their consent.

He thought some saving might be made by reducing the length of conferences, but he was opposed to doing away with Minutes altogether. The records of the Conference on Bills of Exchange, for example, were extremely valuable in interpreting the Conference's decisions, and probably the records of economic conferences would later be of historical value. Those of the Conference on Road Signals, however, were of less importance. Economies might be made on special publications, but here, too, discrimination was necessary. For example, a document on international air navigation had been published at the time of the Conference on the Co-ordination of Civil Aviation which contained articles that might easily have been published in specialised reviews without involving the League in the considerable cost of the French and English editions.

M. Giannini thought there had been some exaggeration during the discussion, but he was confident that the Supervisory Commission, in agreement with the Secretary-General, would be able to propose the necessary and possible economies.

Mr. BURRELL (Canada) said that two desires had to be reconciled. The first was a very widespread desire to reduce expenditure in order to give tangible proof that the League was not indifferent to the problems with which Governments and peoples were faced at the present time. The second was the desire not to curtail the League's activities, which, after all, benefited the whole of mankind.

The question was, Who and what should be sacrificed ? Mr. Burrell strongly supported Lord Astor's remarks with regard to the objection to curtailing the League's humanitarian activities. They were most valuable in breaking down the barriers of race and creed and inspiring belief in the League of Nations.

It was very important that the League should enlist the support and sympathy of the humblest member of each nation. The ultimate victory of its aims would be won only when the poorest member of every community saw in it an agency for the promotion of his happiness and welfare.

As regards the specific ways in which economy might be effected, he supported the proposal that the Supervisory Commission be asked, in the light of the discussion which had taken place, to make proposals for reducing expenditure.

The SECRETARY-GENERAL said that, happily, the consensus of opinion which had developed in the Committee dispensed him from making a lengthy speech. He did not intend to reply to certain observations made by M. Hambro, because they were a continuation of a controversy which had gone on for some years. His own views would be found in the records of past sessions. There were, however, one or two points to which he must reply.

The British delegate had mentioned political posts. It should be fully understood that there were no purely political posts in the Secretariat. The posts to which reference had been made combined political and administrative functions.

With regard to conferences, the Fourth Committee had laid down a rule that conferences should only be held outside Geneva provided the Government of the country in which they were held paid the additional expenses incurred as the result of holding meetings away from the headquarters of the League. That rule had been and would be scrupulously observed.

With regard to the cost of living, the Secretary-General pointed out that, while in many countries it had fallen appreciably, it was practically stationary in Geneva. In 1929, when the salaries of League officials had been stabilised, it was 95.9 per cent, in 1930, 96.7 per cent, and in 1931, 95.7 per cent.

He promised to do everything in his power to help the Supervisory Commission to fulfil the very difficult task entrused to it. Though he did not know how far the revised budget would meet the Committee's expectations, he urged it to realise that the only contribution which States made to the preservation of peace and to international co-operation was their contribution to the League budget.

It was fashionable to say that the League had been somewhat of a failure. Yet, in the twelve years of its existence, it had performed its two main functions—the preservation of peace and international co-operation—exceedingly well. Three or four months previously, national passions had been excited over a political question in Europe; but, immediately the dispute was referred to the League, those passions had died down. What would have happened had the League not been in existence? It was not fair, because there was an economic crisis, to say that the League had not succeeded in its task. Indeed, the crisis might have been much less violent if the Governments had followed the recommendations of the 1927 Economic Conference.

The Secretary-General added, in order to remove any misunderstanding which might exist, that, in referring to New Zealand, he had had no intention of criticising its Government's policy towards the League. New Zealand had always paid its contributions regularly and punctually, and had carried out her financial obligations to the League even at a time when it was suffering from a great national catastrophe in addition to an economic crisis. New Zealand had everyone's sympathy in its efforts at reconstruction.

Mr. KNOWLES (New Zealand) thanked the Secretary-General for his observations.

M. Albert THOMAS (Director of the International Labour Office) said that, as the proposals of M. Zumeta and M. Trip had been withdrawn, it was unnecessary for him to show that it would be impossible to reduce the budget of the Labour Office by 10 or 12 per cent without seriously interfering with its activities. In spite of all the difficulties peculiar to the organisation of the Labour Office however, he would do his best to help the Supervisory Commission to comply to a reasonable— that was to say, a very small—extent with the Committee's desire for economy.

M. HAMMARSKJÖLD (Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice) said he was at the disposal of the Supervisory Commission. He pointed out, however, that, in view of of the very special situation of the Court, he was afraid the result of the efforts of the Commission to economise would not be very appreciable.

The previous discussion had shown that an endeavour must be made to effect economies in two directions—the curtailment of activities and the rationalisation of services.

The Court was not in a position to restrict its activities, for they depended, not on its own will, but on the requirements of litigants. On the other hand, an analysis of the budget would show that efforts at rationalisation could affect only one-fourth of the budget. Moreover, the Court had expressed its present organisation, as it resulted from the Assembly's work in 1929 and 1930, in the following formula—the judges are always at the disposal of the Court, which is always at the disposal of litigants. Rationalisation must not be carried to a point where it would render difficult the realisation of this principle of organisation.

M. Hammarskjöld pointed out that the main reason for the increase in the total budget of the League of Nations for 1932 was the Disarmament Conference; it must not be forgotten, however, that the organisation of international justice was a necessary complement to the work for disarmament.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission, said he would have been able to find a formula acceptable to a political committee. Unfortunately, however, his formula had to be expressed in figures, and figures allowed of no ambiguity.

With regard to the financial year 1931, his appeal to the three Administrations to make an exceptional effort to economise on the present budget had been characterised by the Spanish delegate as dangerous. Facts, were facts however, and it was the Supervisory Commission's duty to warn the Committee while there was still time to avoid disastrous consequences. At the end of 1930, there had been a Treasury deficit of over half a million. Contributions in arrears since the beginning of the League of Nations amounted to about 2,700,000 francs. During the first eight months of the present year, only 54 per cent of the contributions due to the League had been paid. The right of the Administrations to spend the money voted by the Assembly could certainly be maintained; but, if economies were not made, they would find themselves in serious difficulties at the end of the year.

With regard to the budgetary estimates for 1932, it had been insisted that the services of the Administrations should be rationalised. Technical rationalisation would be comparatively easy; but, in an institution like the League of Nations, the technical aspect was less important than the ability to create interest in the various countries in the task for which the League had been created. Every effort must be made to give relative or partial satisfaction to all the Members of the League; otherwise, countries might find themselves contributing to activities which were of little interest to them, while the problems which specially concerned them were set aside.

With regard to concrete suggestions, M. Osuský agreed that the activities of conferences and committees could be reduced. The Supervisory Commission had often urged that point of view.

With regard to publications and printing, the Publications Committee had done exceedingly useful work. Last year, the Assembly had decided that the Minutes of the Assembly Committees should be printed in extenso. The Supervisory Commission had proposed in its report that, in view of the heavy expenditure involved, that decision should be reversed and effect had already been given to this recommendation. It also recommended the adoption of the following resolution:

> "When proposals involving publications not immediately required for work already undertaken by the League are made by a League body, no final decision shall be taken until the Secretary-General has been consulted regarding the financial and administrative consequences of these proposals."

The question of the duplication of certain committees was one of those in connection with which the Supervisory Commission had encountered great difficulty. When measures were suggested for preventing this state of affairs the claims of each committee were immediately urged.

M. Osuský had endeavoured to express in figures the saving which had been suggested in connection with telephones, missions, etc.

The 12 per cent reduction originally proposed by M. Zumeta would represent 4,300,000 francs, but the aggregate of the suggestions and proposals made in the Committee would not reduce the budget to that extent. Nevertheless, the Supervisory Commission would make an exceptional effort to comply with the Fourth Committee's desires.

The CHAIRMAN, in declaring the general discussion closed, summarised it as follows:

The Committee was unanimously of opinion that substantial economies should be made. At the same time, those economies must be reasonable—that was to say, they must not hamper the essential activities of the League of Nations.

The Committee had also agreed that the Supervisory Commission, with the help of the Secretary-General and the other competent officials, should be entrusted with the difficult task of suggesting the savings to be effected and to indicate the chapters in the budget where they could be introduced. It was understood that the Supervisory Commission should not confine its investigations to the suggestions made in the Committee. In the circumstances, it would be superfluous to adopt a resolution.

The budget for 1931 and the budgetary estimates for 1932 were referred back to the Supervisory Commission, which was requested to make suggestions in the sense explained by the Chairman.

9. Budgetary Questions: Appointment of a Rapporteur to the Assembly.

On the proposal of M. Cahen-Salvador (France), seconded by M. Gallavresi (Italy), M. BOHEMAN (Sweden) was unanimously appointed Rapporteur to the Assembly.

FIFTH MEETING.

Held on Thursday, September 17th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman: M. POLITIS (Greece).

10. Audited Accounts for the Twelfth Financial Period (1930). [1]

M. TRIP (Netherlands) asked what was the present value of the securities held by the Staff Provident Fund.

The SECRETARY-GENERAL replied that, as the valuation was made only once yearly, he was unable immediately to furnish this information.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) pointed out that, if there was no intention of selling the whole or part of the securities, it was of little importance whether they appeared in the accounts at their nominal or market value.

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) drew attention to the following sentence on page 105 of document A.3.1931.X, which answered M. Trip's question:

> "The Investments Reserve Fund, created to meet securities depreciation, which on December 31st, 1929, amounted to 69,762.15 francs, had increased to 127,654.13 francs."

If the Secretary-General and the Supervisory Commission thought this Reserve Fund sufficient to meet the depreciation, there was no cause for anxiety.

The TREASURER stated that all the securities held by the Provident Fund were long-term securities bearing regular interest. The depreciation, which was relatively small, did not exceed 10 per cent.

11. Financial Situation of the League of Nations on August 31st, 1931.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) saw no necessity for discussing this question at present (Annex 3), as it would arise when the budget was examined.

M. OSUSKY (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission), replying to a question by M. Rappard, said that the question of the new buildings would be discussed during the examination of the budgetary estimates.

12. Report of the Council and of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office on New Work involving Additional Expenditure on the Part of the League.

M. RÉVEILLAUD (France) asked why the sum of 50,000 francs advanced by the League of Nations to the Organisation Committee of the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company had been drawn from Item 3 of the Budget for 1931 (Unforeseen Expenditure subject to Special Vote by the Council), whereas it should have been charged to the Working Capital Fund (Annex 4).

Item 3 only covered expenditure which could not be recovered. This, on the contrary, was recoverable expenditure, and should have been drawn on the Working Capital Fund which, for the League of Nations, played the part of a bank account.

[1] Documents A.3.1931.X, A.3(a).1931.X and A.3(b).1931.X.

The SECRETARY-GENERAL explained that the advance had not been charged as recoverable because it was intended for an institution which did not yet exist. He had felt that, in such circumstances, he would not be justified in charging it to the Working Capital Fund.

M. RÉVEILLAUD (France) then asked where the sum would be credited when it was repaid. While the budget provided for unforeseen expenditure, it did not provide for unforeseen receipts. Article 33, paragraph 4, of the Financial Regulations, moreover, provided for advances the recovery of which was uncertain:

> "Sums drawn . . . shall be repaid to the fund, either by means of a transfer approved by the Council from some other part of the budget for the current year or by means of a specific vote for the purpose in the budget for the year following that in which they were declared by the Council to be irrecoverable."

Provision had therefore been made for the fact that recoverable advances might not be recoyered, and M. Réveillaud asked the Secretary-General to be good enough in future to conform to this principle in all similar cases.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) called attention to the fact that, while the sum spent under Item 3 for unforeseen expenditure in previous years had, with one exception, been small, it amounted to nearly 400,000 francs. The surplus to be expected on the present year's budget would be reduced considerably, since it had accrued, in the main, under Item 3. M. Hambro supported the idea of the Supervisory Commission, as expressed by M. Osuský at the beginning of the debate. He was glad M. Réveillaud had expressed a very important principle. If the sum of 50,000 francs to which the latter had referred was unforeseen expenditure, it was right that the Council should so allocate it; but, if it was an ordinary advance, it seemed doubtful whether the Council had the right to spend the money. If it were not reimbursed, he thought it should be voted on the ordinary budget, since the Council had no right to spend money which had not been passed by the Fourth Committee and voted by the Assembly. He did not think the matter had been discussed in connection with the budget last year, and objected to the Council tying the hands of the Fourth Committee or the Assembly in any budgetary expenditure.

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) agreed with M. Réveillaud that the recoverable character of the expenditure should be emphasised. This was a question of principle to which the Committee must remain faithful.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission), replying to M. Hambro, pointed out that the 500,000 francs was placed at the disposal of the Council for use in the event of an unforeseen political emergency. At the present time, the fund had been reduced by four-fifths. He did not know what the Council would do if an unforeseen event which required urgent solution should occur before the end of the year.

With regard to the advance to the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company, he was sure the Secretary-General had not known, when the advance was made, whether it would be recoverable, but it was never certain whether any sum was recoverable. M. Osuský thought, however, that, in such cases, it would be preferable for the money to be advanced from the Working Capital Fund.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) asked that mention should be made in the report to the Assembly of the discussion which had just taken place.

13. Report of the Committee appointed to give Further Consideration to Certain Questions relating to the Organisation of the Secretariat, of the International Labour Office and of the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium), Chairman and Rapporteur of the Committee, recalled the circumstances in which the new Committee of Thirteen had been established, and explained the principal questions with which it had dealt (Annex 5).

The most difficult of those questions concerned the Under-Secretaries-General. Everyone admitted that the officials of the Secretariat, no matter what post they held, should, above all, maintain a strictly international character, show the necessary competence to perform satisfactory work, and accept the rules of a normal administration adapted to the needs of an international organisation. Everyone also agreed that, as the first Committee of Thirteen had pointed out, the best method of ensuring that the interests peculiar to each country were respected was not to collect at Geneva representatives of those interests, who were still bound to defend them, since that was the duty of the responsible Government representatives and the representatives of the national administrations. If the officials of the League of Nations had to perform that task they would, of necessity, be endangering the impartiality which they should maintain. It was none the less true that the nationals of certain Powers held the highest posts in the Secretariat solely because those Powers were represented permanently on the Council of the League of Nations. It was also true that the representatives of those Powers had stated that their Governments did not consider that they had any acquired right to the posts, but that they should remain open to the nationals of all countries.

Apart from acquired rights, there were certain facts which would no doubt have an influence in the future as they had done in the past. It had been pointed out that, from the beginning, the Secretariat had had three or four Under-Secretaries-General, each belonging to a country represented permanently on the Council, as in the case of the Secretary-General himself. When the United States of America had announced that they did not intend to accede to the Covenant, the American Under-Secretary-General had withdrawn. When a French Under-Secretary-General had left, he had been replaced by a Frenchman, and when two Italian Under-Secretaries-General had retired in succession, they had been replaced by Italians. The same thing had occurred with regard to Japan. When Germany had entered the League, a post of Under-Secretary-General was created for her. It was not too much to suppose that the same methods would prevail in future if the Assembly did not immediately consider means whereby a certain amount of satisfaction might be given to the observations of the States which thought it unfair that, in its composition, the Secretariat should reflect the same national factors which were rightly, and in virtue of the Covenant, represented permanently on the Council of the League.

The Secretariat should not be composed of the same political elements as the Council. What was important was to have a system which ensured the most effective working of the administration. No one could claim that the administrative capacity of an official depended on the importance of his country of origin. There were very great administrators in the small countries.

The new Committee of Thirteen, having explained in its report, to the best of its ability, the arguments in support of the proposals submitted to it, reached a conclusion on which the Fourth Committee would have to take a decision. As it had been impossible to obtain a majority for the abolition or increase in the number of posts of Under-Secretary-General, and as it was felt that a fundamental change in the organisation of the higher posts in the Secretariat during the office of the present Secretary-General might lead to serious inconvenience which it was desirable to avoid, the Committee of Thirteen had suggested that, in three years time, at the latest, the Council and Assembly should once more deal with the problem. If by any chance the present Secretary-General resigned before that date, the de facto situation might be altered and the League of Nations would have to examine without delay whether a general reorganisation was necessary.

The Committee therefore felt obliged to recommend that all new or renewed contracts concluded with the Deputy Secretary-General or the Under-Secretaries-General (1) should have a maximum duration of three years; (2) should contain a clause to the effect that they might be denounced within one year from the date on which the Secretary-General officially notified the Council of his intention of resigning, that denunciation only to take effect as from the date on which the new Secretary-General assumed his duties, or in the following year. In order to appreciate the scope of this recommendation, the Committee should note that the contracts of all the present Under-Secretaries-General, with one exception, would expire before the end of 1932.

Without immediately expressing a final opinion with regard to the problems of Under-Secretaries-General, the new Committee of Thirteen had therefore endeavoured to prepare the way for revision and to make it possible subsequently to remove the conditions which rendered a solution impossible at the present time. The Committee of Thirteen had expressed the opinion, with regard to the draft resolution by the delegation of the Irish Free State, which it thought should be amended, that, in appointing or promoting officials to the higher posts in the Secretariat, the first and foremost consideration must be the knowledge and capacity of the candidate, which must be in keeping with the duties he would be called upon to fulfil. Though there should be no strict allocation according to nationality, account should nevertheless be taken, in making the choice, of the representation of the different forms of civilisation.

Count Carton de Wiart added that the Belgian Government accepted the conclusions of the report and hoped they would be adopted.

M. KALNIN (Latvia) asked whether the memorandum giving the names of the persons occupying the higher posts and the dates on which their respective contracts expired (document A.8.1931.X, page 9) could be distributed to the members of the Fourth Committee.

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) thought the Fourth Committee could not but reinforce the conclusions of the report of the Committee of Thirteen, and, on behalf of the Italian delegation and himself, he renewed his support of those conclusions, which he had already given.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) stated that, in order not to reopen the discussion, he would vote in favour of the compromise suggested by the Committee of Thirteen. He thought, however, that a separate vote should be taken on the various items—Under Secretaries-General, Treasurer, salaries of the Chiefs of Sections and the chef de cabinet of the Secretary-General. With regard to the Chiefs of Sections, no decision should be taken until the question of Under-Secretaries-General and Directors had been finally settled.

If it were decided to increase the salaries in question, this might lead to a final increase in the budget of 140,000 francs; but, in view of existing circumstances, such an increase would undoubtedly produce a very bad impression. He therefore thought the matter should be postponed.

Mr. LESTER (Irish Free State) expressed surprise at the attitude taken by some members of the special Committee with regard to the Irish proposal that, as a general rule, there should only be one national of any State among the Directors and Under-Secretaries-General. When that proposal was made, it had already been agreed that the candidate's capacity was the first consideration. The Irish delegation had then proposed that, among the higher officials, a general rule as to nationality should be applied. It did not touch the question of the representation of the great Powers nor the existing arrangements, which might lead to administrative difficulties and perhaps injustice to certain excellent officials. It was a general rule, subject to exceptions, to be used by the Secretary-General in making future appointments. The Committee had made a general recommendation which was not in itself undesirable, but which be believed was already covered by a decision taken by the Fourth Committee in 1930 with regard to the nationality of officials.

M. CAHEN-SALVADOR (France), speaking on behalf of the French Government, supported the conclusions of the Committee of Thirteen, although the status quo in favour of which the Committee had decided was not a real solution but a compromise. The proposal to adjourn the matter was very wise and prudent, for the time had not yet come to alter fundamentally the organisation of the Secretariat. M. Cahen-Salvador therefore asked the Fourth Committee to approve the compromise without making any alteration in it.

M. BOHEMAN (Sweden) accepted, on behalf of the Swedish Government, the compromise proposed by the Committee of Thirteen.

Referring to the point raised by M. Hambro in connection with salaries, he observed that this was not an administrative but a budgetary question, and for this reason might be examined by the Fourth Committee when the budget was discussed.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) accepted, on behalf of his Government, the proposal of the Committee of Thirteen with regard to Under-Secretaries-General.

As regards the other proposals, the Netherlands Government was opposed to any proposal involving new expenditure which was not absolutely necessary and inevitable. For that reason, M. Trip agreed with M. Hambro, considering that the proposed increase was not absolutely necessary.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) supported M. Hambro and M. Trip, and stated that this was not a suitable time to vote an increase which was not urgent.

On behalf of his Government, he accepted the compromise proposed by the Committee of Thirteen, though he hoped it would be provisional. The situation was somewhat ambiguous, and the Under-Secretaries-General, were its first victims. The ambiguity arose from the disparity between the principles laid down in Articles 1 and 3 of the Staff Regulations and the position of the present Under-Secretaries-General, who had been appointed because of their nationality, and who, in consequence, could not be required to abstain from being influenced by their Governments. That situation should not be prolonged indefinitely.

Viscount ASTOR (British Empire) supported the proposal of the Committee of Thirteen with regard to Under-Secretaries-General, but was of opinion that no decision should be taken with regard to paragraphs 21 and 26 of its report until the Committee had received the Supervisory Commission's recommendations on the budget.

Sir Annepu PATRO (India) urged, in the name of justice and international co-operation, that, in view of the area of India, her population and contribution to the League budget, India's civilisation and culture should be more adequately represented in the Committees and Secretariat of the League. She had for some time been wondering whether the benefit she derived from the League justified the size of her contribution, which was second only to that of the five Powers permanently represented on the Council.

If the principles on which the League was based were to be popularised and knowledge of its activities disseminated in India, she must be in closer touch with the central organisation at Geneva.

Count BERNSTORFF (Germany) said that the German Government, while maintaining its opinion that the best and most economical solution would have been the abolition of all posts of Under-Secretary-General, accepted the compromise recommended by the Committee of Thirteen.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia) protested against any curtailment of the responsibility placed on the Supervisory Commission, and urged that no decision be taken with regard to increases in salary until its report had been received.

M. HAMBRO (Norway), referring to the Irish resolution, said he was opposed to tying the hands of the Secretary-General either by forcing him to appoint nationals of a certain State or in such a way that he could not appoint the best man or woman to a post among the higher officials because a national of the same State already held a similar post.

He supported the suggestion of the delegate of India, and pointed out that he himself had already called the attention of the competent authorities to the absence from the library of dictionaries of languages such as Sanskrit, Urdu, Gurumukhi and Pali, which were read or spoken by millions of the world's inhabitants.

M. GIANNINI (Italy) considered that a compromise should be accepted or rejected as a whole. A decision must first be taken on this point. If it were accepted, it would be for the Supervisory Commission to consider whether, in view of the present financial situation, those portions which affected the budget should be maintained, modified or rejected. The Fourth Committee would take a final decision on the proposals when it had received the report of the Supervisory Commission. Moreover, as had been pointed ont, paragraph 6 was based on principles of justice which could not be forgotten.

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) accepted the compromise with regard to Under-Secretaries-General, but pointed out that the adoption of the paragraph relating to increases in salary would have a very bad psychological effect in view of the present economic crisis.

The SECRETARY-GENERAL said that the document to which M. Kalnin had referred would be brought up to date and circulated to the members of the Committee.

With regard to paragraph 26 of the report, he explained that, at present, its adoption would affect only one official in the Secretariat—his own chef de cabinet, whose work was comparable to that of a Director. He added that he was not sure whether the rejection of the proposal would make for economy in the long run. Its object as far as the Secretariat was concerned, was to make it possible for him in certain cases to appoint a Chief of Section at a slightly higher salary, instead of a Director.

He assured the delegate of India that he recognised India's importance to the League, and was most anxious to establish closer liaison with her. He would certainly bear in mind the desires expressed. Two years previously, the request of the delegation of India that an Indian member be appointed in the Information Section had been met. He hoped that the Fourth Committee would unanimously accept the proposal that a League of Nations Bureau be established in India, and that interchanges between the officials of the Bureau and the Secretariat would be possible.

He promised to call the Librarian's attention to M. Hambro's request, and was sure that it would receive satisfaction, provided funds were available.

M. Albert THOMAS (Director of the International Labour Office), referring to paragraph 26, said this was not a budgetary question, but one of organisation. The Assembly, on the report of the Committee of Thirteen, had adopted scales of salary for all classes of officials, with the exception of Chiefs of Section. M. Thomas appealed to the Committee's sense of justice, calling attention to the dissatisfaction created within his organisation by the fact that the status of these officials in the new hierarchy had not been settled. They were the "grey matter" of the organisation—scientists, experts, doctors, engineers—and their moral and material situation would be compromised by the decision which some members had urged the Committee to take.

The question was not only one of justice; it affected the internal solidity of the Labour Office. M. Rappard had spoken of rationalisation It had been decided to place the staff of the Labour Office on the same basis as that of the Secretariat, which made for the harmonious development of the League's organisations in Geneva; but it was impossible to apply this principle automatically, for the two organisations were in a different position. It was for that reason that the new proposal with regard to Chiefs of Section had been put forward. M. Thomas then described the staff arrangements at the Labour Office, explained the various changes that had been made in the interests of economy, and added that it was proposed that ten only of the Chiefs of Section should receive the new scale of salaries.

Constant attacks were made on what were called the exorbitant salaries paid by the League, but the number of high officials—eminent international experts of the first rank—who resigned in order to return to their countries was considerable. No doubt the question of salary was not their only consideration, but the fact that private organisations in their own countries were willing to pay them high salaries was responsible for many of these resignations.

M. Thomas urged the Fourth Committee to accept the recommendation of the Committee of Thirteen.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) denied that the Committee was dealing with a question of organisation in the true sense of the word. The question was one of salary alone. In his view, it would be irrational for the Committee to take a vote first and then ask the Supervisory Commission for its decision afterwards.

M. Thomas was well aware that some of the delegations present would vote against the budget if salaries were increased. He was also aware that the Norwegian Labour Party had always voted against the contribution to the Labour Office. There were certain countries which might even be tempted to leave the League if, at a time when millions of their workers were unemployed and all wages and salaries were cut down, their delegations returned with the news that the salaries of high officials at the Labour Office were to be increased.

Moreover, officials who left the services of the League of Nations did not always receive higher salaries from their national administrations. M. Thomas ought to bear in mind that nationals of States outside the privileged five could not be expected to stay at Geneva for any great length of time when they were well aware that, whether they were better men than the Under-Secretaries-General and Directors or not, they would never be able to obtain promotion, because of their nationality.

M. CAHEN-SALVADOR (France) supported M. Albert Thomas' request. He pointed out that, while only ten officials were affected, justice was not a question of numbers, and it was unfair that the officials in question should suffer because, though their status should have been determined the previous year, the matter had been postponed for further consideration. Justice clearly demanded that they should immediately be placed on the same basis as their colleagues.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia) pointed out that, if the Committee approved paragraphs 21 and 26 of the report, it would be indicating to the Supervisory Commission that it approved of increases in pay and expenditure. This information would hardly be pleasant reading for the millions of sufferers in all countries who were at present deprived of the necessities of life.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) suggested that the adoption of paragraph 21 would not necessarily lead to an immediate increase in expenditure. It was one thing to adopt provisions of an organic character and another to examine, as the Committee would then do, whether effect should be given to these provisions in the budget that year.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) thought that, if the Committee took any decision, the hands of the Supervisory Commission would be tied. He objected to Count Carton de Wiart's suggestion that salaries might be raised theoretically, but not in practice. Nothing was more calculated to increase discontent and unrest among the staff.

After an exchange of views as to procedure, the Committee decided to vote separately on paragraphs 21, 25 and 26.

Paragraphs 1 to 20 of the report of the Committee of Thirteen were adopted unanimously.

Mr. LESTER (Irish Free State) explained that, though there was nothing in paragraphs 14 and 15 to which he objected, he retained his right, in voting for them, to put forward his own proposal, which was a re-definition of one of the Committee's recommendations.

The Committee decided to refer paragraphs 21 and 25 (salary and status of the Treasurer and Deputy Registrar) to the Supervisory Commission.

The Committee decided to refer paragraph 26 (salaries of Chiefs of Section and of the Secretary-General's chef de cabinet) to the Supervisory Commission.

On the proposal of the Secretary-General, it was unanimously decided to postpone without prejudice the questions of the salaries of Counsellors and septennial leave until the 1932 Assembly

14. Financial Situation of the League during the Remainder of the Financial Year 1931: Draft Resolution to be submitted to the Assembly.

M. OSUSKY (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) presented the following draft resolution to be submitted to the Assembly by the Fourth Committee:

"The Assembly,

"Impressed by the difficult situation through which most of the States Members of the League are passing, and by the possible effects of that situation on the finances of the League;

"Convinced that, in the present circumstances, it is important that the whole of the appropriations provided in the budget for the present financial year should not be expended:

"Requests the competent officials of the three organisations of the League to limit to the utmost possible extent the expenditure incurred between now and the end of the year;

"Makes a strong appeal to the Council and the Governing Body of the International Labour Office to endeavour to postpone or cancel the sessions of conferences and committees convened or contemplated for the last quarter of this year, provided always that such postponements or cancellations do not interfere with the essential work of the League."

The draft resolution was adopted, the Spanish delegate abstaining.

SIXTH MEETING.

Held on Monday, September 21st, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman: M. HOFFINGER (Austria), then M. POLITIS (Greece).

15. Examination of the Report by the Supervisory Commission to the Fourth Committee, containing Proposals for Reductions in the Budgetary Estimates for 1932.

M. OSUSKY (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission), after summarising the report (Annex 6), pointed out that the original budgetary estimates for 1932 amounted to 36 million francs. The Supervisory Commission proposed the following reductions:

	Swiss francs
Secretariat	1,817,000
International Labour Office	644,000
Permanent Court of International Justice	110,000
Nansen International Office for Refugees	33,000
	2,604,000

The Supervisory Commission proposed a reduction in subsistence allowances, but had not yet come to any conclusion with regard to the League's expenditure on its officials. It hoped shortly to be able to do so.

In conclusion, the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission assured the Fourth Committee that the finances of the League of Nations were sound, and that the Commission would see that the necessary measures were taken in time to avoid endangering them.

M. BOHEMAN (Sweden), rapporteur, observed that a considerable saving had been effected, particularly as, up to the present, the Commission had not touched salaries or compromised the essential activities of the League of Nations. He recommended the Fourth Committee to adopt the Supervisory Commission's conclusions.

Viscount ASTOR (British Empire), after paying a tribute to the Supervisory Commission's efforts, said that, to examine the report paragraph by paragraph, would be a waste of time, and suggested that, after a general discussion, the Fourth Committee should accept the recommendations contained in the report.

M. GRAUŽINIS (Lithuania) drew the Committee's attention to the fact that the present world crisis was such as to justify an increase in the budget of the League of Nations rather than a reduction. Indeed, the League of Nations had been set up to take action at times of depression, and, the more serious the crisis, the heavier the League's task. Consequently, the Lithuanian delegation did not consider that, at the present time, the budget of the League of Nations should suffer from the consequences of the financial difficulties which the States were experiencing.

(M. Politis (Greece) then took the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Assembly would conclude at midday on Saturday, and the work of the Fourth Committee should therefore be speeded up in order that it might be completed on Wednesday at the latest.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) noted that the report of the Supervisory Commission provided for the suppression of the publication of certain Minutes, among others, those of the organisations which were fighting against the opium traffic. If that campaign were to continue, it was essential that the publications relating to opium should not be affected.

M. DE MODZELEWSKI (Poland) observed that, if the fixed charges (salaries, allowances to judges, pensions, buildings), which amounted to 19 million francs, and which could not be reduced, were deducted from the budget, the balance on which economies could be made was only 16 million francs. The percentage represented by the saving proposed by the Supervisory Commission corresponded to a decrease of 15.8 per cent on that part of the budget which it was possible to reduce. That was a very good result.

M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) proposed that the Supervisory Commission's conclusions be adopted.

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) thought the Committee should take a decision with regard to the British delegate's suggestion, and proposed that the original budget should be replaced by the new budget resulting from the Supervisory Commission's proposals. The Fourth Committee would then have only to examine each chapter of the budget.

He asked whether the veiled reference which appeared in paragraph 7 related to the local staff mentioned in paragraph 11.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) replying to the Chairman, pointed out that the bureau was not competent to decide when the Assembly should finish its work, and added that the delegations could not countenance any effort to stifle discussion. The Assembly met once a year, which was the only occasion on which the States Members could examine the League's work.

M. Hambro approved the procedure recommended by M. Gallavresi and was opposed to adopting the budget en bloc if that meant that the delegates were not entitled to utter any criticism.

The Netherlands delegation had put forward definite proposals for the 1933 budget. That was as necessary as the Supervisory Commission's proposals with regard to the 1932 budget. Consequently, M. Hambro proposed that the present budget should be examined chapter by chapter, and reserved his right to make suggestions for next year. He considered that many of the economies recommended by the Supervisory Commission should have been made by the competent authorities of the League before the budget was submitted to the Assembly.

Of all the Assembly Committees, the Fourth had, and must always have, the last word, since the proposals of the other Committees had to be referred to it. If it merely approved everything that had been done in a docile and subservient spirit, it would be exposed to criticism from the whole world.

In conclusion, M. Hambro said he was prepared to adopt the budget for 1932 en bloc, but considered that the Committee should be entitled to discuss it, chapter by chapter, and to give its views on the work which had been done, which had not been done, and which should have been done.

The CHAIRMAN agreed that everyone was entitled to express his opinion, and that the Assembly and Committees were masters of their agenda and of the time they desired to devote to the discussion. The Assembly, however, was competent to consider the discussion exhausted and to put an end to useless debates. It was the duty of the Chairman of the various Committees to comply strictly with this rule. No one could claim that discussion had at any time been stifled in the Assembly or in the Committees, particularly in the Fourth Committee. The latter would decide, when the time came, whether to adopt the budget en bloc or, as M. Hambro proposed, chapter by chapter.

The SECRETARY-GENERAL replied to M. Hambro's criticism by reading the following extract from the Supervisory Commission's report:

> " The budget which was examined and approved by the Commission last May was a careful estimate of the funds necessary for carrying out the decisions of the Assembly and continuing the work of the different organisations of the League under normal conditions."

He pointed out that the Norwegian delegation itself had voted in favour of the programme laid down by the Assembly last year, and said he did not consider that the budget was an unfair estimate of the sums necessary for carrying out that programme.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) regretted that the reductions proposed by the Supervisory Commission in the chapter on social questions were particularly large. He reserved his right to ask, at a suitable moment, that the reductions in regard to child welfare work and the campaign against the traffic in women and children should be reconsidered.

If, however, the Committee accepted the amended budget unanimously, without any modification, Count Carton de Wiart was prepared, in a spirit of conciliation, to support the British proposal.

M. HOFFINGER (Austria) had not wished to lengthen the list of speakers in favour of economy, although Austria, which was going through a difficult crisis, was naturally all in favour of the strictest economy. He therefore in no way wished to oppose one of the measures proposed by the Supervisory Commission, but only to express Austria's regret that, owing to the reductions made in the budget of the International Labour Office, the next International Labour Conference could not be held at Vienna. The Austrian Government maintained its invitation, however, should circumstances prevent the Conference from being held at Geneva.

M. JÄRTÉ (Sweden) after pointing out that the Financial Committee had suggested, as a solution to the crisis through which many States were passing, that they should reduce considerably their expenditure on social work, pointed out that the International Labour Office, the principal object of which was to encourage and develop social work in the various countries, could not perform this task satisfactorily without increasing the expenditure of the States. In view of the circumstances, the International Labour Office, before drawing up its future programme, should consider the position of the various countries and use its experience to bring about a rationalisation of the social services of the countries which had appealed to the League of Nations.

M. Albert THOMAS (Director of the International Labour Office) regretted that the coming International Labour Conference could not be held at Vienna and added, though without binding the Governing Body, that, if the situation improved and it became possible to hold the Conference outside Geneva, preference would be given to Vienna.

In reply to the Swedish delegate, M. Thomas drew attention to the preamble to the Peace Treaty, which laid down the principles on which the activity of the Labour Organisation should be based. In spite of the economic difficulties against which the world was struggling, the conditions of labour and the existence of workers' funds must be maintained. If doubts were raised regarding the work of the International Labour Office, the whole balance of the social structure would be seriously compromised.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) drew attention to the difficulty of completing the work of the Mandates Commission in one session as suggested by the Supervisory Commission. The Council should be authorised to allow the Commission to meet twice a year in case of necessity. M. Rappard hoped that this request would be granted.

Diwan ABDUL HAMID (India) proposed that the Committee should vote on whether the report of the Supervisory Commission should be adopted en bloc or chapter by chapter.

Mr. ROY (Canada) hoped that a permanent decision would be taken with regard to conferences and that, in future, they would always be held at Geneva. He supported the British proposal and was prepared to adopt the report en bloc after a general discussion.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia), on the contrary, was of opinion that the budget should be examined chapter by chapter for the edification of the members of the Committee and the countries they represented. The Minutes of the Fourth Committee must reflect the views of its members with regard to the budget.

M. RÉVEILLAUD (France) was also of opinion that the budget should not be adopted en bloc, not only for the reasons already put forward, but because it would be contrary to constitutional practice. This should not prevent the Committee approving as a whole the proposals of the Supervisory Commission so that the equilibrium which the Commission, in making its proposals, had endeavoured to establish would not be prejudiced. Once this vote was taken, a proposal for an increase in credits at the moment when a vote was taken on the budget, would not have much chance of success. M. Réveillaud therefore supported the British delegate's proposal.

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) supported M. Réveillaud, especially as the general discussion appeared to have exhausted everything that could be said with regard to the various headings in the budget.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) thought the Committee should adopt the new budget en bloc, on the understanding that, after the vote had been taken, the delegates would not try to destroy the balance of the budget during its examination chapter by chapter.

M. RUPPEL (Germany) associated himself with M. Rappard's observations regarding the Mandates Commission and shared M. Trip's opinion with regard to procedure.

M. PALACIOS (Spain) repeated the declaration made by his delegation before the Assembly and by himself before the Fourth Committee, and added that the observations of the speakers who had proposed reductions, whatever the cost, had not shaken the Spanish delegation's convictions.

M. Palacios supported the observations of M. Rappard and M. Ruppel with regard to the Mandates Commission.

While maintaining the reasons which he had put forward in his previous speech, he stated that, if the Committee was unanimous that the budget now proposed by the Supervisory Commission should be substituted en bloc for the original budget, the Spanish delegation would not break that unanimity, even by abstaining.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) said he was prepared to adopt the budget en bloc, provided the vote was followed by a discussion chapter by chapter.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission), replying to M. de Vasconcellos, pointed out that it would be difficult to authorise the printing of the Minutes of one Committee without extending the same authorisation to the others. Moreover, the Assembly, had already made the same proposal in a resolution dated September 26th, 1928.

With regard to the Mandates Commission, the two sessions held each year, which lasted for thirty-two days in all, cost 42,000 francs. One session of the same length would make possible a saving of 15,000 francs. The Supervisory Commission hoped that, in view of the importance of the sum involved, the Mandates Commission would accept its share of the common sacrifice.

In reply to M. Gallavresi, M. Osuský said that the Supervisory Commission had not re-examined the question of the local staff. It was possible that the proposals which it hoped to make with regard to the international staff might affect the salaries.

In reply to Count Carton de Wiart, M. Osuský said that, when any item of the budget did not appear urgent or immediately necessary in view of the present crisis, the Supervisory Commission had felt bound to suggest its postponement. Other Sections had been asked to make sacrifices as great as or greater than the Social Section.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) said that, though he was prepared to accept the new proposals en bloc, he was unable to withdraw his reservation. The Minutes of the Opium Advisory Committee were its principal weapon in its fomidable struggle against the drug traffic, and he must ask that an exception be made in its favour, as in the case of the Mandates Commission.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) pointed out that, seeing that, during a normal period, the 1928 Assembly had made an exception only in favour of the Mandates Commission, it would be hardly logical to extend the exceptions in a period of difficulty.

M. HIITONEN (Finland) asked whether the studies concerning raw material, and, in particular, timber and its derivatives, would be continued. One of the causes of the present crisis was the disorder in regard to the production, distribution and disposal of raw material.

The SECRETARY-GENERAL assured the Committee that, as far as he could tell, none of the cuts would imperil the League's work in connection with the economic crisis. Credits had been provided for a possible study concerning timber.

The CHAIRMAN, in closing the discussion, noted that the Committee desired unanimously to express its gratitude to the Supervisory Commission and the high officials who has assisted it.

The report of the Supervisory Commission was approved en bloc it being understood that the new proposals would be substituted for the original budget.

16. Examination of the Budget of the Secretariat and Special Organisations of the League for the Fourteenth Financial Period (1932).

The Committee proceeded to discuss the budget for 1932 chapter by chapter (document A.4.1931.X).

SECTION I. — ORDINARY EXPENDITURE.

Chapter I. — Assembly and Council.

Chapter I was adopted without observation.

Chapter II. — General Services of Secretariat.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) said that for some years the Committee had severely criticised the fact that the staff of the Under-Secretaries-General was composed only of members of their own nationality. During the present year, a new Member of Section belonging to the same nationality as the Under-Secretary-General in question had been appointed on probation in one of those offices. In view of the fact that the whole question of Under-Secretaries-General had been postponed that practice should cease. There could be no true international spirit in an office in which all the members belonged to the same nationality as their superior.

M. Hambro then suggested that new promotions or appointments should be subject to the reservation that the Assembly had full liberty to regulate salaries. He was aware that nothing could be done with regard to the salaries at present in force, on account of acquired rights and contracts; but it would be fatal, in view of the present financial outlook, to make future promotions and appointments on the same scale. The salaries of League officials had originally altered with the cost of living. Since then, salaries had risen and opportunities of promotion had increased, whereas the cost of living at Geneva had fallen by about 5 or 6 per cent, and the salaries of Government officials in most of the countries which were Members of the League had been reduced o nsiderably.

Referring to the 1933 budget, M. Hambro said that the League's expenditure should not be cut down in such a way as to aggravate the present financial and political difficulties; he would even agree to an increase in any item which had a bearing on the present crisis. At the same time, he was unwilling to spend a penny on activities which were not helpful to the League's main objects. He felt there was no longer any necessity for the large offices of the Information Section in London and Paris—in fact, they were doing more harm than good. In London, in particular, the officials were paid on the same scale as the officials in Geneva, although they were not really entitled to expatriation allowances.

Journalists were doing good work in promoting the cause of the League in England and France. and broadcasting corporations and the Press were willing to pay them liberally for such work, More than one man working in the service of the League was actually being paid twice over.

M. Hambro said he did not know how necessary it might be for the Information Section to have correspondents in the various capitals of Europe, nor was he able to express an opinion with regard to the offices in the Far East. He would like to hear the views of representatives of Asia in that connection. It seemed to him that the cost of the establishment in China and of the three missions to China was very high. If useful work was being done there, however, he was prepared to agree to its continuance, but discretion was necessary.

M. Hambro thought there were too many Members of Section in the Information Section. There was a tendency, when a State demanded that one of its nationals should be appointed on the staff of the League, to put such a national in the Information Section. There was also a tendency, when it was desired to create a vacancy, to promote an official to another Section, giving him two or three yearly increments as compensation. In one case, an official had been granted three increments.

M. Hambro deprecated the inclusion in the next budget of temporary or permanent posts in the Information Section. When members were appointed, however, they should be either journalists or persons with a thorough knowledge of the work they were called upon to perform. The member in charge of the Scandinavian work of the Section, though a very good man, was not a journalist and had no knowledge of the work in Scandinavia. M. Hambro earnestly requested the Secretary-General to make considerable cuts in the budget of the Information Section. That could be done without the slightest harm to the League. The work of the Section was certainly not worth one million Swiss francs.

The Publications Department should have the services of a larger number of persons with practical ability and business knowledge of printing and publication. A comparison of the costs of printing and publication with the income derived from the sale of publications gave the impression that the income was not very large. The increase in the last two budgets had probably been due to the increased percentage on sales offered to libraries and booksellers. M. Hambro did not press for any reductions in the 1932 budget, but demanded that the matter should be very carefully considered.

He asked whether it was true that a Director could send as many members of his staff abroad as he thought fit, without obtaining permission from his superior officers. If so, this should be altered.

A wary eye must be kept on the budgets of the various Sections of the League. The suggestion made by the New Zealand delegate during the general debate in the Assembly that a special committee should be appointed to examine in detail the workings of the Secretariat and to put forward definite proposals for the budget of the coming year was a very sound one. An "axe" committee could do very helpful work for the League.

He was surprised to note that the Supervisory Commission's report stated that various Directors had "accepted" the Commission's proposals. A bureaucracy could hardly be expected to reform itself; but there were too many officials on the staff of the League who looked upon the machinery as an end in itself rather than as an instrument.

He thought the members of the Appointments Committee and the higher officials of the League should try to realise the difficulties with which the States Members were faced. They would then be in a better position to give effect to the desires of the Fourth Committee.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) asked whether the Fourth Committee could be provided next year with a statement showing the travelling done by officials in the previous year and the expenditure involved.

He noted that no mention was made in the report of entertainment allowances, unless the passage relating to the proposals which the Commission hoped shortly to submit referred to that item.

On behalf of the Netherlands delegation, M. Trip asked the Fourth Committee to authorise a study of the need for a special emblem which could be used as a distinction for motor cars used by the League. He understood that the Federation of League of Nations Associations already had a proposal for such an emblem.

M. DINO (Albania) thought there should be more equality in recruiting staff for the League. An endeavour should be made, in filling important posts, to appoint nationals of those countries which had hitherto collaborated with the League through the payment of their annual contributions.

M. HOFFINGER (Austria) was glad to note the large reductions proposed in regard to publications. He suggested that there should be, not only fewer publications, but that the number of copies printed and distributed should be reduced. After a certain date, say January 1st, 1932, persons who received League publications regularly might be informed that, in future, they would only be sent to those persons who expressed a desire to receive them.

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) asked whether in adopting Chapter II, the Committee would be approving the increases involved by paragraphs 21, 25 and 26 of the report of the Committee of Thirteen (Annex 5).

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) stated that he had been instructed to say that the publication of the Chronology of International Treaties and Legislative Measures was of no interest to his Government. The Librarian of the League had assured him that some countries attached great importance to it, and that the sales covered the cost. The Swiss Government, however, was of opinion that its publication could be discontinued without loss.

The SECRETARY-GENERAL, replying to the various questions which had been raised, said that the wish had been expressed some years previously by certain members of the Assembly—though a formal resolution had never been taken—that, as far as possible, changes should be made in the offices of the Deputy Secretary-General and the Under-Secretaries-General. Since then, there had been a change in the office of the Deputy Secretary-General, where a national of the same country as the Deputy Secretary-General had recently been replaced by the transfer of an official of another nationality. In the case which M. Hambro had in mind, it was necessary, in view of the particular circumstances of the work, to appoint an official of the same nationality as his superior officer. The general principle ought to be that no nationality had a right to any particular post in the Secretariat, and the second principle should be efficiency.

With regard to the cost of living, the Secretary-General denied that it had fallen by 5 or 6 per cent since salaries were stabilised. Taking into consideration the factors on which the decisions of the Assembly were based—which included factors other than those given in Geneva official publications, since, obviously, in an international concern certain factors had not the same weight—the figures were as follows: 1929, 95.9; 1931, 95.7.

The Secretary-General said that, while the Assembly had with great generosity instituted a system of pensions, it must be recognised that, as the Pensions Fund was on a contributory basis, the actual purchasing power of salaries in a given year had been reduced. It was not quite accurate to say that all countries had reduced the salaries of their officials. In England, as far as he was aware, the cost-of-living bonuses had been reduced because the cost of living had fallen, but salaries were not affected. He agreed that it might be advisable in future contracts to insert a clause to the effect that the salary could be altered by the Assembly. He promised to look into the matter to see what could be done.

Referring to M. Hambro's attack on the Information Section, the Secretary-General said he had thought that all the Members of the League appreciated the work of that Section. He regretted that Norway was an exception.

With regard to the suggestion that, in order to make transfers easier, officials were granted increases in salary, the Secretary-General explained that, in the case in question, his idea had been to obtain the best man for the post. As it involved greater responsibility, he had felt justified in giving the official two or three annual increments.

He deeply regretted that there was no Scandinavian member of the Information Section. The official who was doing liaison work with the Scandinavian Press, however, had been appointed in agreement with the Scandinavian Press Bureaux. He had been a journalist on the staff of a very important paper in the Netherlands.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) said that the official was not competent for his work in Scandinavia.

The SECRETARY-GENERAL, continuing, said that the statement for which M. Trip had asked could be prepared if the Fourth Committee desired, though it would involve considerable work and additional expenditure.

He was prepared to have a study made of the proposed League of Nations emblem, though that was a matter for the highest authorities of the League, and not the Secretariat, to decide.

With regard to the Albanian delegate's request, the Secretary-General said that he endeavoured, when a vacancy arose, to apply the principle of equality of treatment among the nationals of States Members of the League. It was now quite common to consider the claims of nationals of States whose representation was not very large. Their appointment must, however, be conditional on their being efficient and capable of performing the work.

When travelling for the League, every official, since February last, had to obtain the specific consent of the Secretary-General. Expenditure on this item would be reduced to the strictest minimum.

With regard to M. Hoffinger's suggestion, the Secretary-General said he would refer it to the Publications Committee for consideration.

Finally, referring to M. Rappard's proposal, he though that, if the publication in question were self-supporting, the position could be regarded as satisfactory.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission), replying to M. Hambro's criticism with regard to the offices of the Information Section in other countries, explained that the Supervisory Commission had not thought fit to recommend any alteration in the budget for 1932. It intended to examine the question during the coming year, however, and would submit to the Fourth Committee any concrete conclusions at which it arrived.

With regard to M. Hambro's criticism of the wording of certain passages in the report, M. Osuský pointed out that the Supervisory Commission could only make proposals. If the higher officials did not accept those proposals, it could only submit them to the Fourth Committee with an expression of its opinion.

The question of the entertainment allowance was covered by the additional proposals which the Supervisory Commission hoped to place before the Committee.

In reply to M. Valdés-Mendeville, M. Osuský said the French text of the passage to which he had referred was perhaps somewhat obscure. The Supervisory Commission considered that the title to be given to the Treasurer was a matter of organisation, with which the Supervisory Commission could not deal. As regards the question whether the increases in salary involved under paragraphs 21, 25 and 26 of the report of the Committee of Thirteen should be granted, the Supervisory Commission's opinion was in the negative.

M. Albert THOMAS (Director of the International Labour Office) said that, though for budgetary reasons the proposal relating to Chiefs of Section at the International Labour Office had been postponed, it would be his duty to bring it forward again in the following year. It was only just and logical that it should be re-examined later.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) said he would make no observations, not because he agreed with M. Thomas, but because the matter was adjourned until the following year.

M. Albert THOMAS (Director of the International Labour Office) replied that he was defending a just cause. M. Hambro would, of course, be entitled to bring forward his arguments next year; but, in the interests of justice and organisation, M. Thomas must ask the Fourth Committee and the Supervisory Commission to assure him once more, in view of the obscurity of the text of the report, that the fate of his Chiefs of Section would be discussed in the following year.

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) said he had made no remarks or observations with regard to various points which had been raised, in particular by M. Hambro, because he understood that any reference to the 1933 budget could only be of use as an indication for the future.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) said the Supervisory Commission had had too much experience of the administration of the League of Nations and its organisations not to have an opinion on a question of organisation. It had expressed a negative opinion simply from the budgetary aspect. There was nothing to prevent the Fourth Committee and the Assembly from examining the question in 1932.

The CHAIRMAN, in order to prevent any misunderstanding, stated that the Fourth Committee would be able to take a decision next year with regard to the principle expressed in the recommendation of the Committee of Thirteen.

M. BOHEMAN (Sweden), Rapporteur, supported by M. PALACIOS (Spain) and M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal), proposed that the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the Treasurer be given the rank of Director without any increase in salary.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) said he was in favour of giving the title of Director to the present holder of the post, on the understanding that this did not tie the hands of the Assembly with regard to future holders.

M. Boheman's proposal was adopted.

Chapter II was adopted, subject to any proposals which the Supervisory Commission might be able to submit with regard to salaries.

M. TRIP (Netherlands) said that, in view of the Secretary-General's observations, he would not insist on the preparation of a complete list of the journeys undertaken during the year. He would be glad, however, if the Committee could be given some explanation next year of the number and cost of the principal journeys.

The SECRETARY-GENERAL agreed to furnish this explanation.

Chapter III. — Special Organisations of the League.

M. CIUNTU (Roumania) regretted that the work of the veterinary experts was being cut down. He was convinced that it was of the greatest value, particularly in connection with foreign trade. He trusted that this activity was only suspended and not abandoned.

The CHAIRMAN thought that was clear from the report.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) said that in a spirit of conciliation he would accept the whole chapter. With regard to the wireless station, he asked whether any contract had been made with the Swiss wireless society which would compensate the League for the money expended. The whole matter seemed to him deplorable.

The CHAIRMAN noted M. Hambro's observations and said they would be dealt with under Part V, Chapter II, of the League budget.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) pointed out that the budget of the Social Section had been reduced to a much greater extent than the budgets for the suppression of opium traffic and the Permanent Central Opium Board. He noted that the work of the Committees of Experts for Intellectual Co-operation in connection with the education of youth, and publications such as the Educational Survey, had not been abandoned, whereas the work of the experts and the sub-committees dealing with social questions had been abandoned. In a spirit of conciliation, however, he would accept the chapter, though not without some bitterness. He hoped the reductions in question would only constitute a postponement, the Social Section by its work having proved its usefulness and effectiveness and thus having the merit of interesting in the League many important associations both in the Old World and in the New.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) pointed out, in reply, that the budgets for intellectual co-operation and health had been reduced by 20 per cent.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) urged that a credit be approved for the publication of the Minutes of the Opium Committee.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) pointed out that material which the Opium Committee thought useful for the purposes of propaganda could be placed in its report.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) said that, though he was not convinced, he would not press his point.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) suggested that it might be possible to make arrangements with a syndicate or publisher to report and publish the discussions of the Opium Committee.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) noted that it was proposed to reduce the allowances hitherto paid to the members of the Mandates Commission. He would not speak for his colleagues, but personally he had accepted without complaint this reduction of 25 per cent. He did so on the basis of the "principle of equality of sacrifice" invoked by the Supervisory Commission. But equality with whom ?

On the other hand, he strongly opposed the suppression of a credit allowing the Mandates Commission to hold two sessions per annum. An experience of ten years showed that the Commission could not properly perform its heavy task in less than four or five weeks of very hard work. But to ask his colleagues from other countries who, according to the terms of the Commission's Statute, could not be national officials, to leave their business for a session as long as was now indicated was certainly excessive.

He asked the Assembly to authorise the Council, if it considered the holding of two sessions of the Mandates Commission essential to the working of the mandates system, to allow the Commission to meet twice next year.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) said that, during 1932, great efforts would have to be made to prevent any transfers which were not absolutely essential. He therefore asked M. Rappard not to insist on his proposal.

M. Rappard's proposal was put to the vote and defeated by fifteen votes to six.

Chapter III was adopted.

Chapter IV. — Profits and Loss on Exchange.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) pointed out that, while in previous years there had been a profit under Chapter IV, this year there was a loss, and next year it would probably be greater. As far as he understood, the reason was that States Members could pay their contributions in dollars or gold francs.

The TREASURER assured M. Hambro that a profound study of the currency in which the League should operate was made every year. The conclusion had always been reached that it was advisable to keep to the gold standard and the dollar in view of the League's universal operations. He thought it unlikely that there would be a loss in the coming year, though if the dollar went off the gold standard the system of currency would have to be reconsidered.

Chapter IV was adopted.

SECTION II. — CAPITAL EXPENDITURE.

Chapter V. — Permanent Equipment, etc.

Chapter V was adopted without observation.

SEVENTH MEETING.

Held on Tuesday, September 22nd, 1931, at 5 p.m.

Chairman: M. POLITIS (Greece).

17. Examination of the Budget of the International Labour Organisation for the Fourteenth Financial Period (1932).

The Committee discussed the budget for 1932 section by section (document A.4(a)1931.X).

SECTION I. — ORDINARY EXPENDITURE.

Mme. KLUYVER (Netherlands) asked what were the reasons for the difference in the rules of the Secretariat and the International Labour Office with regard to overtime. The Supervisory Commission's report (Annex 6, paragraph 7):

> "The Secretary-General has put an end to overtime allowances in the Secretariat, but there are reasons why a similar step cannot economically be taken in the International Labour Office."

M. FLEURY (International Labour Office) replied that the International Labour Organisation gave an allowance for overtime to five officials only per month. That represented an annual expense of about 6,000 francs. The measure proposed by the Secretary-General whereby five days annual leave would be substituted for payment for overtime would mean four hundred days additional leave, or an expense of 8,000 francs a year, for the International Labour Office, where there were eighty local officials on the staff. For this reason it had been considered that the measure adopted by the Secretariat could not be applied in the International Labour Office.

Section I was adopted.

SECTION II. — CAPITAL EXPENDITURE.

Section II was adopted without observations.

18. Examination of the Budget of the Permanent Court of International Justice for the Fourteenth Financial Period (1932).

The Committee examined the budget section by section (document A.4(b).1931.X).

SECTION 1. — ORDINARY EXPENDITURE.

Section 1 was adopted without observations.

SECTION 2. — CAPITAL EXPENDITURE.

Section 2 was adopted without observations.

19. Examination of the Budget of the Nansen International Office for Refugees for the Fourteenth Financial Period (1932).

M. Max HUBER (President of the Governing Body of the Office) observed that the budget submitted (document A.4(c).1931.X) was in conformity with the scheme of liquidation for which the Assembly had asked, and which had been submitted to the Sixth Committee. The period of liquidation had been reduced from ten years to nine, and it was proposed to make a reduction of ten per cent in the budget each year.

The Office did not depend solely on the League budget; it received contributions from certain Governments and from the refugees themselves. Its income in the current year was about 30,000 francs less than last year.

The League was making certain indirect savings on the budget of the Office—viz., the officials of the Office were not receiving the regular increments to which they had been entitled when in the service of the League; the Office was meeting its treasury, typing and roneoing expenses without any increase in staff; the members of the Governing Body of the Office received no remuneration. Repeated efforts had been made to do away with the delegations, but this proposal had so far received no support from the Governments, so that the Office had been unable to reduce its departments.

In conclusion, M. Huber hoped that the Committee would not be harder on the Nansen Office than on the other League organisations.

The budget was adopted.

20. Examination of the Budgetary Estimates for Buildings at Geneva during the Fourteenth Financial Period (1932) (document A.4.1931.X) Part V.

CHAPTER I. — TERMINABLE ANNUITY PAYABLE ON ACCOUNT OF THE BUILDING OPERATIONS OF THE LEAGUE.

Chapter I was adopted without observations.

CHAPTER II. — CONSTRUCTION OF THE WIRELESS STATION.

Chapter II was adjourned pending the arrival of M. Haas, Director of the Communications and Transit Section, who was detained in another Committee.

21. Examination of the Budgetary Estimates for Pensions for the Fourteenth Financial Period (1932).

On the request of M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission), who pointed out that this part of the budget (document A.4.1931.X) was connected with the question of salaries and travelling expenses of officials taking leave in their home country, this question was adjourned pending the Supervisory Commission's recommendation with regard to salaries.

The CHAIRMAN declared the examination of the budget closed, with the exception of the three questions which had been postponed.

22. Examination of the Supplementary Budget for 1932 (document A.4(d).1931.X).

The CHAIRMAN observed that the Fourth Committee had decided to refer to the Supervisory Commission paragraphs 21, 25 and 26 in the report by the Committee of Thirteen (Annex 5). No decision had been taken on paragraphs 22, 23 and 24, and the best procedure therefore would be to request the Supervisory Commission to examine them.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) thought this procedure unnecessary. The paragraphs in question only confirmed the existing position and did not affect the budget. The Committee could therefore take a decision on them at once.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission), replied that the supplementary Budget now under discussion contained a credit which was closely connected with paragraphs 22, 23 and 24 of the report of the Committee of Thirteen. It would therefore be desirable for the Supervisory Commission to consider the point.

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) thought that the best course would be to refer the matter to the Supervisory Commission.

Mr. KNOWLES (New Zealand) said that, if he had realised that the Committee was not faced with a fait accompli, he would have proposed that paragraphs 22 to 24 should, like paragraph 25, be referred to the Supervisory Commission. He asked what the actual position was.

M. HAMMARSKJÖLD (Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice), replying to Mr. Knowles' request for explanations concerning paragraph 23, briefly reviewed the position. The Court had renewed the appointment of the present Registrar in 1929. Under Article 32 of the Statute it had made a proposal to the Council for a new scale of salary for the Registrar. That proposal had been referred by the Council to the Supervisory Commission, which had decided to await the report of the Committee of Thirteen before forming an opinion. The Supervisory Commission had endorsed the view expressed in the report of the Committee of Thirteen and had approved the proposal made by the Court in 1929. That procedure had taken some time and the Council accordingly had decided to apply the new scale of salary retroactively. It was no doubt owing to that decision that there was an impression that the Registrar had been in receipt of the higher salary mentioned in the Council's resolution. That impression was not in accord with the facts.

Article 32 of the Statute said: " The salary of the Registrar shall be decided by the Council on the proposal of the Court ", and, therefore, the Council's recent decision was a final settlement, from the Court's standpoint, of the legal and administrative aspects of the question. The Assembly could, of course, exercise its budgetary powers and, if it thought fit, refuse the necessary credits to implement that decision. It followed that, though very simple in appearance, this matter might raise an important constitutional question.

M. Hammarskjöld, however, would be averse to a question of that kind being discussed with reference to himself, especially at a time when he was at the Committee's disposal in his official capacity. To stop further discussion he would waive his claim to the credit entered in the 1932 supplementary budget.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) expressed his appreciation of M. Hammarskjöld's attitude. It would, however, be unfair that the Registrar of the Permanent Court should be the only high official to agree to make a sacrifice. The Committee must come to a decision once and for all on this point so that there would be no doubt as to the standing of the high officials of the Court. M. Hambro proposed that paragraphs 23 and 24 of the report of the Committee of Thirteen be approved.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that this would not be sufficient, since, if the two paragraphs were adopted, the means of implementing them must also be adopted and therefore the credit in the Supplementary Budget should be passed. If the Committee refused the necessary credit for the increase in the Registrar's salary, it would be in conflict with the Council and, through the Council, with the Court.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia) considered that the Fourth Committee was entitled to refuse any credit. He was instructed to resist any increase in the salary of the higher League officials. He would therefore ask that the case now before the Committee should be treated in the same way as the other cases in which the Committee had decided to refuse an increase.

The CHAIRMAN replied that equality, in the form proposed by Mr. Collins, between the Registrar of the Court and the League higher officials would necessitate a revision of the Court Statute. So long as the present Statute was in force, the Committee must comply with it, unless it was prepared to enter into conflict with the Council, which had only exercised a right conferred on it by the Court Statute.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) observed that the Assembly was absolutely sovereign in budget matters. It could not waive its sovereign right in any circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN agreed that the sovereign right of the Assembly could not be contested in principle. There was, however, at least one exception to that right. The penultimate paragraph in Article 32 of the Statute of the Court said: "The salary of the Registrar shall be decided by the Council upon the proposal of the Court".

That clause, which must be observed, could only be brought into harmony with the Assembly's sovereign right in one way. The Assembly would have to vote a resolution requesting the Council not to enforce the clause, or any similar clause giving it the right to fix salaries, without first submitting the matter, for an opinion at any rate, to the Supervisory Commission and the Fourth Committee.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) pointed out that, out of deference for the Assembly's sovereign rights in the matter of the budget, the Council had, in April, asked the opinion of the Supervisory Commission, which had reported on this point: The Council had been guided by that report and was now submitting its own to the Assembly for approval. That was further proof that the Assembly's sovereign rights remained intact.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) did not think that there need be any fear of a serious conflict. In many countries Governments were empowered by law to take decisions on financial matters without thereby impairing the sovereign right of Parliament. The situation in the present case was identical. In order to preserve the forms, the Supervisory Commission should be asked to report on the matter to the Fourth Committee.

M. GIANNINI (Italy) considered that, even if the Council had taken a decision, the Assembly retained its power to vote or refuse the credit.

In any case, the Assembly's sovereign right had not been prejudiced, because the Fourth Committee, which was a Committee of the Assembly, had been asked to take a decision on the credit required to implement the Council's resolution.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) explained that there was no conflict between the Council and the Assembly or between the Council and the Fourth Committee. That was proved by the Council's decision of May 21st, 1931 (document A.4(d).1931.X), showing that the Council had in actual fact respected the Assembly's sovereign rights in budgetary matters.

The Committee decided to refer the matter to the Supervisory Commission.

The Supplementary Budget was adopted with the exception of the foregoing point.

23. Examination of the Budgetary Estimates for Buildings at Geneva during the Fourteenth Financial Period (1932) (continuation).

PART V. CHAPTER II. — CONSTRUCTION OF THE WIRELESS STATION.

M. HAAS (Director of the Communications and Transit Section) after going over the history of this question, which went back to 1929, reminded the Committee that an estimate of the expenses for the establishment of a wireless station on the basis of an agreement with the Swiss Government and the Radio-Suisse Company had been placed before the 1930 Assembly. In spite of the somewhat elastic terms of the instructions given by the 1929 Assembly to the Secretary-General, the contracts for the construction of the wireless station had only been passed after the adoption by the 1930 Assembly of the financial measures mentioned on page 43 of the draft budget (document A.4. 1931.X). With the exception of a supplementary expenditure of 50,000 francs for a provisional antenna, the original estimate, amouting to 2,280,264 francs, would be exceeded by only a very small amount, and, so far, the estimates had been adhered to very closely. The wireless station would be opened not later than the beginning of 1932. One of the transmitters would probably be ready before the end of 1931, so that the station would be in working order for the Disarmament Conference.

The receipts accruing from communications would be shared, in accordance with Article 16 of the Convention, between the Secretary-General and the Radio-Suisse Company (document C.192.M.92.1930.VIII). The Radio-Suisse Company would receive a premium for managing the station and the premium was calculated in such a way as to rise with the development of traffic, the object of this being to interest the operating company in the development of traffic. The receipts that might be expected in the course of the first year's working could not be estimated in advance. M. Haas, however, thought he could say that, from this point of view, the Disarmament Conference would do much to further the station's operations.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) reminded the Committee that, in 1929, the cost of the station was roughly estimated at 1,600,000 francs; the figure had now risen to 2,280,000 francs. He had very few illusions about the revenue which the League would derive from the station; it was an unnecessary luxury and its upkeep would be very costly. Wireless stations soon became obsolete, and in Norway their cost was amortised in five years. In his view, the League should relinquish the station as soon as possible, making a long-term contract for its use.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) pointed out that that was what the Swiss Government had suggested.

M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) asked whether the present estimate was approximate or final.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) pointed out that, in spite of its own policy in such matters, the Swiss Government had signed the contract in its present form in deference to the League. He assured the Committee that, if the cost to the League were somewhat heavy, the outlook was no more brilliant for the Radio-Suisse Company.

M. HAAS (Director of the Communications and Transit Section) pointed out that the Assembly's decision was not based on the figure of 1,600,000 francs, a rough estimate for the purposes of the 1929 budget, but on the figure of 1,900,000 francs, which was indicated to the 1929 Assembly as the probable cost. In view of recent technical improvements and an increase in the cost of certain materials, the figure had been raised to 2,280,000 francs, which amount was accepted by the 1930 Assembly. Owing to unforeseen requirements, however, the actual cost would be about 50,000 francs more, a not unreasonable increase on so large a sum.

M. Haas thought it somewhat premature to discuss the cost of operating the station before practical experience had been acquired. The most difficult part of the negotiations between the League and the Radio-Suisse Company had related to the proportion in which receipts should be allocated, after the reimbursement of the League's outlay and of the preliminary deficit. From the point of view of traffic, the situation had certainly become worse owing to the present crisis. Nevertheless, M. Haas thought it not unlikely that the budget of the station would eventually balance.

Meanwhile, if it were handed over to the Radio-Suisse Company and the same services demanded, the cost to the League, in view of the contracts signed with the Radio-Suisse Company, would no doubt be exactly the same. The same amount of traffic would be done, and, if there were a deficit, the Radio-Suisse Company would doubtless ask the League for compensation.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) said he had no desire to discuss what had been done in the past, but merely to draw attention to the financial danger of operating a wireless station at the present time. Nor had he any intention of casting a reflection on the Swiss Government. He had some experience of the affairs of broadcasting companies, however, and feared that, if the League did not get rid of the station as soon as possible, it would be faced with yearly deficits. He therefore asked the Supervisory Commission to look into the matter carefully.

Chapter II was adopted.

24. Organisation of the Secretariat, of the International Labour Office and of the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice: Appointment of a Rapporteur to the Assembly.

On the proposal of M. Réveillaud (France), supported by Count Carton de Wiart (Belgium), M. Palacios (Spain) and M. Gallavresi (Italy), M. DE VASCONCELLOS was appointed Rapporteur on this question.

25. I. Examination of the Report of the Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund.

II. International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation: Affiliation of the Staff to the Staff Pensions Fund of the League of Nations: Resolution by the Governing Body of the Institute.

III. Nansen International Office for Refugees: Affiliation of the Staff to the Pensions and Sickness Insurance Funds of the League of Nations.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland), chairman of the Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund, presented and commented on the report (Annex 7).

That the staff appreciated the institution of the Pensions Fund was shown, he thought, by the fact that out of about a thousand officials almost two-thirds had joined it. The number would no doubt be even larger by December 31st, the date on which the time-limit for joining expired.

With regard to the fund itself, the position was less satisfactory. In fixing the contributions to be paid by the beneficiaries and by the League it had been assumed that the average yield of the investments would be 4 ¼ per cent. The greatest international financiers had been consulted for the purpose of obtaining advice and information as to the possibility of reconciling the need for absolute security with a yield of 4 ¼ per cent, but the Board had been told that that was impossible. Indeed, it had recently been advised that the best course would be to keep the money at call, even at the risk of obtaining no interest whatever. The Board had invested £12,000 sterling at 3 per cent, which fell due during the present week; but, unfortunately, owing to recent events, its value would be reduced considerably. The Board would henceforward endeavour to invest its funds in dollars, French and Swiss securities; but in view of the prevailing low rates of interest, it was faced with a difficulty which was not foreseen in 1930.

The Administrative Board was unanimously of opinion that the collaboration of the Treasurer of the League of Nations was absolutely essential. The Secretary-General had, however, appointed another official to represent him on the Board, as also the Director of the Labour Office. The Board therefore proposed that the Treasurer should be an ex-officio member. In order to preserve the balance of representation, it suggested that the number of representatives of the staff should be increased from two to three.

The Board also proposed that, in certain cases, adopted children, step-children or children not born in wedlock should be assimilated to legitimate children. The actuaries had assured it that the extra expense would be small.

M. Rappard hoped that these two amendments to the Statute drawn up in 1930 would be adopted.

The Committee had also before it proposals from the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation and the Nansen International Office for Refugees, whose officials were anxious to share in the benefits offered by the Fund. No doubt the Committee would be unanimously of opinion that it could not reach a final decision immediately, but that the matter should be referred to the Board and the competent department of the Secretariat. Difficult actuarial and other problems were involved, and there must be no danger to the Fund. The conditions under which officials of other institutions could be permitted to join it must therefore be very carefully considered, particularly in view of the fact that, if the present requests were granted, similar requests would probably be received in the future.

In conclusion, M. Rappard said that the Administrative Board was unable at present to make any definite proposals with regard to the contribution to be made by the League, as the Fund was not yet completely constituted. He therefore proposed that, in 1932, the same percentage be adopted as in 1931—viz., 9 per cent.

M. Hambro (Norway) supported the proposal that the Treasurer be made an ex-officio member of the Board.

He was doubtful as to the advisability of allowing the staff of the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation to join the Fund, the estimates for which had been based on salaries and conditions of work at Geneva. It would be highly unwise to alter and extend the fund until at least one year's experience of its working had been gained.

Mme. Kluyver (Netherlands) thought that, in view of the difficulties involved, no decision should be taken for the moment. Moreover, as the Assembly was extremely anxious to make economies and to undertake no new expenditure, it was essential to postpone the question.

M. Rappard (Switzerland) pointed out that the Committee was merely asked to consider the matter. There could therefore be no harm in referring it to the authorities concerned. He pointed out that the applicants had themselves recognised that the Fund should be involved in no additional expenditure.

The Committee decided to refer the requests of the Institute of Intellectual Co-operation and the Nansen Office to the Administrative Board.

M. Osusky (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) observed that it was understood that the general reservation he had made at the beginning of the discussion with regard to the League contribution to the Pensions Fund in the 1932 budget applied also to the maintenance, in 1932, of the League contribution at the rate of 9 per cent.

Subject to this observation, the report and its conclusions were approved.

EIGHTH MEETING.

Held on Wednesday, September 23rd, 1931, at 10 p.m.

Chairman: M. POLITIS (Greece).

26. Examination of the Report of the Supervisory Commission to the Fourth Committee regarding Supplementary Credits.

1. CONSTITUTION OF A SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY THE EXISTING SYSTEM OF ELECTIONS TO THE COUNCIL AND TO REPORT TO THE ASSEMBLY AT A LATER SESSION WITH REGARD TO ANY REFORMS WHICH MAY APPEAR DESIRABLE (Annex 6, paragraph 46).

M. GIANNINI (Italy) thought it should be stated in the report that the members of the Committee would be Government representatives.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) explained that a Committee composed of persons sitting as individuals would cost 20,000 francs, whereas a Committee composed of Government representatives would cost only 5,000 francs. The latter sum represented printing expenses, the sum of 15,000 francs representing travelling expenses and subsistence allowances.

The Supervisory Commission, noting that the Chairman of the First Committee had expressed no preference in his letter, had adopted a solution which involved the least expenditure.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) stated that he intended to vote against the appropriation. Though the present methods of election to the Council were obsolete and caused great difficulties, he was of opinion that the Members of the Council and the officers of the League could study the question without the intervention of a special Committee.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) pointed out that the States which were prejudiced by the present system were in a very difficult position, and urged the Committee to vote the necessary credit.

M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) saw no necessity for a credit for printing and intended to vote against it.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) asked that, if the credit were voted, the Minutes should state that it was desirable that the special Committee should also study the methods of election to the Permanent Court of International Justice, which were far worse and more complicated.

M. PALACIOS (Spain) said that the Committee appeared to be discussing, not only the budgetary expenditure, but also, in connection with it, the purpose for which the credit was asked. He submitted to the Chairman a question of competence on which a decision must be taken.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that the only question which the Committee was competent to decide was whether the budget could carry the necessary credit.

M. HOFFINGER (Austria) supported M. de Vasconcellos. He pointed out that the question was one which concerned all the Members of the League of Nations, particularly those who were in the same position as Portugal. A credit for printing was essential, so that the discussions of the Committee might be brought to the knowledge of all the Members of the League in order that they might take a decision.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) and Mr. LESTER (Irish Free State) approved the credit in question. Count Carton de Wiart observed that, if certain delegations were of the opinion expressed by M. Hambro that the methods of election to the Permanent Court should be altered, they could bring the matter before the next Assembly.

This section of the report was adopted by seventeen votes to six.

M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) observed that the Assembly's Rules of Procedure were applicable to the Committee's discussions, and asked that his negative vote should be given the same weight as was given to votes taken in the Assembly.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that voting in the Committees was by a majority. M. Zumeta's declaration would, however, appear in the Minutes.

2. COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE THE MATERIAL RELATING TO SLAVERY (Annex 6, paragraph 47).

Viscount ASTOR (British Empire) said the proposal to constitute a special Committee to examine the material relating to slavery was not new. Only in the present year, however, had the Sixth Committee been able to accept it unanimously. He was of opinion that the Fourth Committee should not turn down a recommendation supported by members of the delegations in other Committees. Although economy was desirable, there was a general feeling that the League's humanitarian activities, especially those which appealed to the outside world, should not in any way be hampered.

It appeared that some misunderstanding had arisen. The passage in the report to the effect that the Sixth Committee had rejected a proposal for the appointment of three experts only was a mistaken statement of what had actually occurred. The British delegate, in proposing a Committee, had not pressed for any particular number, but merely asked that it should not be limited to three.

With regard to the sum to be provided in the budget, Viscount Astor estimated that it would not amount to from 38,000 to 43,000 francs, an estimate which was based on a committee of seven or nine, but to about 11,000 or 12,000 francs.

Viscount Astor called attention to the passage relating to a possible donation from a private source, which seemed to imply that there were no precedents for accepting such a gift. He pointed out that part of the expenses of the enquiry into opium-smoking in the Far East, and of an enquiry into the traffic in women and children, which were quite as delicate as the question of slavery, had been paid out of non-League funds. He understood that certain funds in the United States of America would be available in the present instance.

With regard to the credit of 5,000 francs already provided in the budget, the Sixth Committee had contemplated that a body of experts, and not the officials of the League, would collect material relating to slavery.

The attitude that the League could not provide the money itself and would not allow anyone else to do so was unreasonable. Viscount Astor proposed that, since the Supervisory Commission had not been in possession of full data on which to base a decision, and for the reasons he had just explained, the Fourth Committee should adopt the following resolution:

> " The Fourth Committee requests the Assembly to remit to the Council of the League the proposal of the Sixth Committee to appoint for one year a temporary expert committee on slavery to sift confidentially the evidence which is available and report thereon to the Council, on the understanding that this enquiry does not involve the League in expenditure exceeding..... "

He left it to the Committee to fill in the amount.

Diwan ABDUL HAMID (India) asked how the amount of 38,000 francs had been calculated, and why it was said that the Sixth Committee had had in mind a committee composed of from seven to nine members. As a member of the Sixth Committee and its Sub-Committee on Slavery, he explained that the latter had had in mind a very small committee composed of about three or four experts, who would collect information, examine the information already collected and report to the Assembly in the following year.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) replied that, according to the information received by the Commission, the Sixth Committee had had before it a British and a Netherlands proposal. The latter, which was for a Committee consisting of three members only, had been rejected. The Supervisory Commission had therefore concluded that the Sixth Committee desired a larger committee. This interpretation was borne out by the interventions of various delegates in the Sixth Committee. The Italian and Portuguese delegations had asked for representation because Italy and Portugal were colonial Powers. It was to be assumed that other colonial Powers—France, England, the Netherlands and Belgium—would claim the same right. Apparently, it was also desired that a representative of Asia and a woman should sit on the Committee. On that basis, the Supervisory Commission had arrived at the figure of 38,000 for a committee of eight and 43,000 for a committee of nine members.

M. PALACIOS (Spain) supported Viscount Astor, but pointed out that the Committee was entering into a question of substance, which was beyond its competence. If that question were to be discussed, however, he would be in favour of a committee of eight or nine members. Spain was a colonial Power, and might also be a candidate for membership. But he persisted in the view that the Fourth Committee was running the risk of pronouncing without the necessary competence on questions which had already been settled by the delegates sitting in the proper Committees.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) said that Viscount Astor's interesting observations raised a question which had never been definitely settled—namely, whether the League of Nations could accept gifts from charitable associations or persons. There was another precedent in addition to those mentioned—an American association had borne the expense of an enquiry into the position of children in moral danger. In his view, there was no objection to accepting gifts, at any rate for humanitarian activities, though the position might be different in the political sphere.

Count Carton de Wiart asked whether any association had offered to bear the fairly high expenditure of about 40,000 francs. If so, he would have no hesitation in accepting the Sixth Committee's proposal; if not, the Committee should decide whether it was necessary, in view of the desirability of adjourning all activities which were not immediately necessary, to postpone the matter.

Sir Thomas WILFORD (New Zealand) considered that the problem was urgent, and suggested that the Committee should vote a small credit, leaving it open for anyone who desired to do so to supplement it by a donation.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) pointed out that the Sixth Committee unanimously recommended the creation of a committee of enquiry. This meant that the Sixth Committee acknowledged the continued existence of slavery, condemned it as an evil and recognised the utility of a committee as a weapon against that evil. That being so, it was essential, for reasons of humanity, to vote this credit.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) supported Sir Thomas Wilford's proposal. No one, he thought, would suspect Norway's motives.

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) thought that no credit would be better than an inadequate one. If the proposed committee was to do effective work, it must not be a small committee emanating from a charitable association.

Diwan ABDUL HAMID (India) suggested that the matter be referred back to the Supervisory Commission, on the assumption that the special committee would consist of three or four members only.

M. BOHEMAN (Sweden) proposed that the title of the credit of 5,000 francs maintained in the budget be changed in order that the money might be used for a committee of experts, if the League received a gift for this purpose.

Sir Thomas WILFORD (New Zealand), in reply to M. Gallavresi, said that many people would be glad to help the anti-slavery cause with money and voluntary services, and there would be nothing derogatory in allowing them to do so.

M. RAPHAEL (Greece) was in favour of voting a reasonable sum for the constitution of a special committee, for the reason given by the Swiss delegation.

Viscount ASTOR (British Empire) proposed the following addition to his resolution:

> ". . . 10,000 francs, on the understanding that the balance is available from other sources."

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) said the Supervisory Commission had inserted the paragraph relating to donations because it felt that, apart from its social and humanitarian aspects, slavery had a political aspect, and that no external pressure should be brought to bear on the political work of the League. The Supervisory Commission thought the latter should itself take full responsibility and provide the necessary credits for its political activities. It was for the Fourth Committee to decide, however, whether, in the preparatory stage of the work, a donation from a private source could be accepted.

The Committee agreed by nineteen votes to four to insert in the Budget a credit of 10,000 francs.

The CHAIRMAN observed that, when the matter came before the Council, it would be for any who desired to make gifts to inform the Council.

3. PROVISION OF A CREDIT OF 250,000 FRANCS FOR THE WORK OF THE FINANCIAL COMMITTEE IN 1932 (Annex 6, paragraphs 48 and 49).

These paragraphs were adopted without observations.

4. CREDIT OF 50,000 FRANCS FOR THE ENQUIRY INTO THE QUESTION OF THE RECURRENCE OF ECONOMIC DEPRESSIONS (Annex 6, paragraph 50).

This paragraph was adopted without observations.

5. LETTER COMMUNICATING TO THE SUPERVISORY COMMISSION THE SIXTH COMMITTEE'S REPORT ON REFUGEES (Annex 6, paragraph 52).

M. RAPHAEL (Greece) understood that the Supervisory Commission had no objection to the plan of liquidation submitted to the Assembly by the Nansen International Office for Refugees. He asked for an assurance that the measure taken by the Fourth Committee on the previous day was regarded as an exceptional one and would not create a precedent for future budgets.

M. OSUSKY (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission), replied that the 1932 Assembly retained complete discretion as to its decision in respect of the budget for 1933.

M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia), speaking as Rapporteur to the Assembly, said that the President of the Governing Body of the Nansen Office had told him that he was bound by the Supervisory Commission's recommendations for the current year, but that the work of the Office would be completely paralysed if reductions were demanded in future years.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Supervisory Commission's report stated explicitly that the reductions related to 1932. The 1933 estimates were an entirely different matter. He suggested that the Committee had merely to take note of the paragraph in question.

This paragraph was adopted.

6. LETTER FROM THE SIXTH COMMITTEE TO THE SUPERVISORY COMMISSION ON CREDITS FOR PUBLICATIONS, FOR LIAISON WITH CHINA AND FOR THE INTELLECTUAL CO-OPERATION SECTION (Annex 6, paragraph 53).

This paragraph was noted.

27. Examination of the Report of the Supervisory Commission regarding Miscellaneous Questions.

1. EXPENDITURE INCURRED IN 1931 ON LIAISON WITH CHINA (Annex 6, paragraphs 58 and 59).

These paragraphs were adopted without observations.

2. AMENDMENTS TO THE STAFF REGULATIONS (Annex 6, paragraphs 62 to 73).

(a) Modifications in Certain Articles as a Result of the Creation of a Pensions Fund.

These paragraphs were adopted without observations.

(b) Question of maintaining the Statute of the Administrative Tribunal or of amending it.

This paragraph was approved without observations.

(c) Definition of Locally Recruited Staff.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) said that if, under the proposed new definition, locally recruited staff were to be practically synonymous with staff of Swiss nationality, he would have to make a categorical reservation. The report did not expressly say that, but it contained certain statements the meaning of which was not altogether clear. There was, for instance, the following passage, paragraph 70:

> "It is difficult to regard any native of Switzerland as expatriated by taking work in another part of Switzerland. The linguistic and cultural differences which exist between different parts of Switzerland hardly create frontiers of such a kind that the crossing of them amounts to expatriation."

M. Rappard had been somewhat surprised to see an organ of the League of Nations state in this solemn manner such an obvious fact as the national unity of his country.

He considered, however, that an official coming, for example, from Coire or Lugano could much less be regarded as locally recruited than an official coming from Annecy; the removal expenses were at least as great, but the language was different, etc.

To avoid placing locally recruited staff on the same footing as foreigners who, although domiciled at Geneva, were not to be considered as locally recruited, the report, after referring to reasons of health—for which something could be said—mentioned reasons of recreation. Recreation, however, was a voluntary act.

Paragraph 72 (a) and (b) were equally open to criticism. He did not think that sons of foreign families domiciled in Switzerland or members of a legation, delegation or consulate could be considered as recruited abroad. How was it possible for anyone to be a member of a legation, delegation or consulate and, at the same time, belong to the League Secretariat? Point (b) was directly contrary to the recommendation of the Committee of Thirteen, and seemed to lay down as the law a state of affairs that had already been the subject of complaint.

M. OSUSKY (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) replied that an endeavour had been made to avoid the disadvantages of the old system by simplifying and widening the definition of locally recruited staff. M. Rappard's objection regarding the higher expenses of a journey from

Coire to Geneva compared with one from Annecy to Geneva had already been provided for, as it was stated in paragraph 73 that:

> " . . . The Commission would favour giving travelling and removal expenses on entering and leaving the service to locally recruited officials engaged from places at a greater distance than 25 kilometres from Geneva."

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) thought that, if the proposed text were adopted, all Swiss would be placed in a lower grade, and all foreigners, who had settled at Geneva before the decision, in a higher grade. This might not have been the real intention of the Supervisory Commission, but it would none the less be the inevitable result of the adoption of the proposal. The existing position would be aggravated and not improved.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) pointed out that the two-category system had been in existence for some years. It was not perfect and, for that reason, the Fourth Committee had been called upon to revise it from time to time. It was fair that foreign officials should receive an expatriation bonus and that, in order to keep in touch with their native country, they should have special facilities for returning occasionally to their homes. It could not be said that a Swiss official needed to return to his own country in order to keep in touch with its culture and national life.

With regard to paragraph (b), it was clear that an official who belonged to a legation, delegation or consulate ceased to belong to it on engagement by the League.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) appreciated the distinction drawn between international staff and locally recruited staff, and that those foreigners who had been, say, five years in Switzerland, or within a certain radius of Geneva, might be assimilated to the latter, unless they could prove that their residence there was necessitated by reasons of health, or was a strictly temporary matter of recreation or study.

On the other hand, he did not understand the last sub-paragraph of paragraph 73, which said that the new rule, if adopted, would only apply to appointments made after its adoption. Foreigners staying at Geneva as a result of the war and its consequences had been treated, perhaps to a too great extent, as locally recruited staff. It was necessary that a fair distinction should be drawn, not merely for the future, but also as regards the past.

The Marquis PAULUCCI DI CALBOLI BARONE (Under-Secretary-General in Charge of Internal Administration) pointed out to M. Rappard that, by maintaining the existing arrangements relating to locally recruited staff, a large number of his compatriots were excluded from the possibility of obtaining posts reserved for local staff. But it had been expressly intended that this facility should be extended to all Swiss.

In reply to the observations of Count Carton de Wiart, the Under-Secretary-General pointed out that, if the suggested measure were adopted, it would involve fresh expenditure which the Fourth Committee might not be inclined to sanction.

M. CAHEN-SALVADOR (France) was of opinion that the first solution adopted by the Committee of Thirteen, after a detailed examination of the question, appeared to be the clearest and fairest. By the terms of this formula, officials were considered as locally recruited if they had been established for five years in that part of Swiss territory referred to by the Committee as French-speaking Switzerland (La Suisse romande), or in French territory within a radius of 15 kilometres from Geneva. That was obviously an arbitrary solution, but it had the merit of being clear, and, so far, no one had shown that it had disadvantages. Perhaps it was not fair in all cases, but it was to be feared that absolute fairness could never be achieved. For that reason, M. Cahen-Salvador wondered whether it were worth while modifying the existing text, and proposed that the original formula should be maintained, at any rate provisionally.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) pointed out that the proposal did not originate with the Supervisory Commission but with the Secretary-General. The Supervisory Commission had examined it and submitted it for approval to the Fourth Committee. The international staff was a source of great expense to the League of Nations, and, moreover, the original formula excluded from the Secretariat a large number of Swiss who, under the new definition, would have a better chance of joining it.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) felt that the question closely affected his country's dignity. The new definition created an ambiguity by arbitrarily contrasting the idea of locally recruited staff with that of international staff. If locally recruited staff included officials living at Geneva at the time of their engagement, whatever their nationality, why set up distinctions like those laid down in sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) of paragraph 72 ? If the term " locally recruited " applied to staff recruited within a radius of 200 kilometres, provided it did not pass beyond the Swiss frontier, the system was completely modified, since an official from Zurich or St. Gall changed his environment possibly to a greater degree than, say, a young Frenchman from Annecy.

One of two courses must be chosen—either the idea of the place of engagement independently of nationality must be retained, or this idea, which was being abandoned in fact, must be actually so stated as abandoned, and that of nationality adopted. It was, however, enough to state this latter proposition to see how inadmissible it was from the point of view of the general principles of the League and of the dignity of one of its Members.

M. Rappard suggested that anyone living anywhere, irrespective of nationality, should be allowed to accept an inferior post by competing in the examinations restricted to locally recruited staff. The post would be one selected of his own free will and was not to be despised in these times of unemployment.

In conclusion, M. Rappard stated that he was not asking any favour for the Swiss, but equality for all.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) recalled that one of the reasons why there was a category of locally recruited staff was that the Swiss authorities were largely responsible for it.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) replied that his protest was not directed against the distinction between locally recruited staff and international staff. He merely objected to the new definition which had been given and which the Swiss authorities could never approve.

The CHAIRMAN was of opinion that this question had not been thoroughly examined, and that the Commission could not decide offhand to adopt a text which raised such difficulties. He proposed that the Committee should adopt M. Cahen-Salvador's proposal, which was the simplest.

The Committee decided to postpone its decision on the question of locally recruited staff.

28. Salary of the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice (Annex 6, paragraph 40).

This paragraph was adopted without observations.

29. Supplementary Credits requested by the First Committee.

The CHAIRMAN submitted the following letter from the First Committee:

[Translation.]

" I have the honour to inform you that, at its meeting this afternoon, the First Committee requested me to ask the Fourth Committee to include the following appropriations in the 1932 budget:

	Francs
" 1. Nationality of Women:
Printing of the observations which the Governments and the Committee of Representatives of Women's International Organisations will be invited to submit with a view to the discussion of this question at the next session of the Assembly	1,500
" 2. Proposal of the Government of Finland to confer on the Permanent Court of International Justice jurisdiction as a tribunal of appeal in respect of Arbitral Tribunals established by States:
Printing of observations which the Governments will be invited to submit with a view to the discussion of this question at the next session of the Assembly.	1,000
" 3. Amendment of the Covenant of the League. With regard to this question, a proposal to set up a committee consisting of representatives of all the Members of the League, which will present a report to the next Assembly, was submitted to the First Committee by its Sub-Committee. If the First Committee, which has not yet been able to discuss the question, adopts this proposal, the following credits will be necessary:
Printing of the Committee's report.	1,000
Printing of the Minutes, if desired by the Committee and subject to the approval of the Council.	3,500

" It is understood that, if the First Committee decides to make a proposal which does not involve the expenditure contemplated, the request for funds will be withdrawn.

" I regret that the First Committee found it impossible to submit the above-mentioned requests for credit within the period prescribed by Article 16 (c) of the Financial Regulations. The First Committee hopes that the Fourth Committee will nevertheless view the proposals with favour and agree to examine them in virtue of the powers conferred on it by the article in question.

(Signed) Vittorio SCIALOJA."

He added that point 2 of this letter need not be examined, the First Committee having decided that there was no necessity to continue the study of the Finnish proposal.

The Committee decided to refer the letter to the Supervisory Commission.

NINTH MEETING.

Held on Thursday, September 24th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman: M. POLITIS (Greece).

30. Examination of the Report by the Supervisory Commission on the Financial Situation in regard to the Construction of the New Buildings.

After discussion in secret session,[1] the Committee adopted the following draft resolution:

"The Assembly,

"Having noted the report of the Fourth Committee on the question of the new buildings;

"Painfully surprised at the information furnished to the Fourth Committee by the Supervisory Commission to the effect that it is feared that the estimate approved by the Assembly at its eleventh ordinary session may be exceeded by from 7 to 8 million Swiss francs, unless the situation is taken in hand:

"Declares that it is resolved in principle to keep within the estimate adopted last year, and

"Instructs the Supervisory Commission, after having obtained the necessary technical and legal advice and without excluding the possibility of reconsidering the contract concluded with the architects, to submit to the Council for approval as soon as possible a programme which will comply, under the best possible conditions, with the above decision."

31. Election of Two Members of the Supervisory Commission.

The Committee proceeded to a secret ballot to fill the two vacancies created by the resignation of Count Moltke and the expiration of Lord Meston's term of office, which was renewable.

Mr. Philippe Roy (Canada) and M. Boheman (Sweden) acted as tellers.

The result of the vote was as follows:

Number of delegations voting	35
Voting papers valid	35
Absolute majority	18

The votes obtained were as follows:

Lord Meston	30
M. Hambro	19
M. Ottlik	15
Count Carton de Wiart	4
Viscount Astor	1
M. Ruppel	1

The Fourth Committee will therefore propose to the Assembly that Lord MESTON and M. HAMBRO be appointed to the two vacancies on the Supervisory Commission.

32. Examination of the Report of the Supervisory Commission concerning:

(a) Requests for Supplementary Credits from the First Committee (Annex 6, paragraphs 54 to 57).

(b) New Duties of the Financial Committee during the Present Financial Period (Annex 6, paragraph 60).

(c) Transfers in the Budget for the 1932 Financial Period (Annex 6, paragraph 61).

These paragraphs were adopted without observations.

33. Examination of the Report of the Sub-Committee on Contributions in Arrears.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland), Chairman of the Sub-Committee on Contributions in Arrears, said the Committee would perhaps be struck by the extreme weakness of the Sub-Committee's recommendations (Annex 8). Everyone agreed that it was deplorable that contributions in arrears were increasing, and that moral pressure should be brought to bear on the offenders to fulfil their obligations. Everyone also agreed, however, that this pressure must not lead to withdrawals from the League.

[1] A copy of the Minutes of the discussion of this question and of the report of the Supervisory Commission has been filed in the archives of the Secretariat.

The Sub-Committee, feeling that it was undesirable to risk wounding the self-respect of the representatives of the States concerned, had departed from the practice adopted in previous years, and had not convened to its meetings the representatives of the debtor States. It had preferred to ask the two representatives of Latin America on the Sub-Committee to ask the representatives of countries whose contributions were in arrears for explanations.

M. Rappard drew attention to the fact that there were three types of States whose contributions were in arrears, and reminded the Committee that a special arrangement had been made for China. With regard to the Argentine Republic, whose constitutional position was not clear, he pointed out that she had been represented only at the first Assembly, but had paid her contributions for eight years. The change in regime had resulted in the suspension of payments for two years, the new President not considering himself competent to make contributions which had not been authorised by Parliament. It was hoped the Argentine Parliament, which would meet in the spring, would authorise the payment of the contributions in arrears.

The Sub-Committee was aware that the Fourth Committee might feel some impatience, and even irritation, on reading the text of the resolution. M. Rappard thought, however, that the members would pass through the same psychological process as the members of the Sub-Committee, and would themselves thus reach the state of resignation in which the resolution was submitted.

M. Hambro (Norway) thought the States had shown greater willingness to pay their contri. butions in 1930 than in 1929. The percentage of contributions in arrears, however, was higher- He suggested that, from January 1933, interest should be payable on contributions in arrears or a discount allowed to States which paid in advance. He pointed out, with regard to M. Rappard's observations, that no State could withdraw from the League until it had fulfilled its obligations under the Covenant.

M. Buero (Uruguay) explained that, for the first time, Uruguay had not paid her contributions in 1930 owing to a fall of 50 per cent in the exchange, which rendered insufficient the credit of Uruguayan pesos voted in the budget for foreign affairs. His Government had immediately applied to Parliament for a supplementary credit, which would, he hoped, be forthcoming shortly.

Count Carton de Wiart (Belgium) suggested that the word inquiétude in the French text of the resolution was too strong and might be replaced by the word appréhension.

The Chairman thought the words "and some measure of concern" might be suppressed.

M. Rappard recalled that M. Hambro's suggestion had been submitted to the Assembly some years previously; the latter had been unable to accept it unanimously. This year it was even less likely that such a suggestion would be accepted.

M. Rappard stated that Uruguay was one of the League's most faithful supporters and satisfactory payers. The Committee was filled with admiration for her efforts, in spite of a situation for which she was not responsible, to pay her contributions.

The Committee adopted the report and resolution, the words "and some measure of concern" being omitted from the latter.

TENTH MEETING.

Held on Friday, September 25th, 1931, at 5 p.m.

Chairman: M. Politis (Greece).

34. Financial Questions: Examination of the Draft Report of the Fourth Committee to the Assembly.

Subject to certain amendments proposed by various members of the Committee, the draft report was adopted in the form shown in the Annex (Annex 9).

Referring to the recommendation made by the Committee that the printing of Committee Minutes shall be discontinued, M. Hambro (Norway), supported by Viscount Astor, asked that roneoed copies should be sent to the various League of Nations societies and to similar societies for propaganda in favour of the League.

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) also asked that Minutes dealing with opium should be sent to associations and organisations engaged in the campaign against narcotic drugs.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) further suggested that roneoed copies of Minutes should be sent to any libraries in the United States which requested them.

Mme. KLUYVER (Netherlands) asked that the same documents should be communicated to the various Governments.

Marquis PAULUCCI DI CALBOLI BARONE (Under-Secretary-General in Charge of Internal Administration) replied that the administration noted these various requests and would instruct the Publications Committee to take the necessary action.

Referring to Chapter III of the draft report, M. KALNIN (Latvia) pointed out that it only dealt with the question of the new definition of local staff, while the question of the application or non-application of the definition to be adopted had also been referred to the Supervisory Commission with a view to a fresh examination. He therefore proposed to add after the words " local staff " the words " and the question of the non-application of the new definition to nominations made before its adoption ".

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that the definition had not been adopted, as the question had been left in suspense and referred to the Supervisory Commission for further examination.

M. KALNIN (Latvia) said that the Rapporteur's statement, confirmed by the Chairman, that the question of the application of the definition which would be adopted was also covered by the report, satisfied him, and he withdrew his proposal.

M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) recalled, in connection with the credit of 5,000 francs for the publications of the Committee appointed to study the methods of election to the Council, that he had voted against the majority while pronouncing in favour of setting up this Committee, which showed that only financial reasons had led him to oppose the credit. He thought that the publications in question would risk duplicating those of the Council, and that it was consequently unnecessary to create a special item in the budget.

M. BOHEMAN (Sweden), Rapporteur, replied that he had himself voted against this credit, but had been obliged to give way to the majority. If the Committee in question was set up, its Minutes would be of great importance to all the States Members of the League.

M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) simply asked that his remarks should be entered in the Minutes.

35. Construction of the New Buildings: Examination of the Draft Report of the Fourth Committee to the Assembly.

The CHAIRMAN said that the publication of this report would be particularly useful, inasmuch as very inaccurate information, from he knew not what source, had been published in the Press. The report which contained the Committee's official views would fortunately make it possible to rectify misleading and erroneous news.

Subject to certain drafting amendments, the report as a whole was adopted (Annex 10).

36. Organisation of the Secretariat of the League of Nations, of the International Labour Office and of the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice: Examination of the Draft Report of the Fourth Committee to the Assembly.

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) asked that it should be recorded in the Minutes that the Rapporteur had indicated the reasons for the adjournment in his draft report.

The CHAIRMAN replied that this would be recorded in the Minutes.

M. HAMMARSKJÖLD (Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice) asked the Rapporteur whether he would insert a phrase in the passage relating to Article 32 of the Statute of the Permanent Court to the effect that the Registrar had also expressed the opinion that the Council's decision with regard to the Court's proposal did not invalidate the budgetary powers of the Assembly. He was anxious to prevent any appearance of a divergence of opinion between the Court and the Supervisory Commission on this point.

M. Hammarskjöld also asked the Rapporteur to agree to omit the phrase " by a disinterested act of generosity . . . appreciate ". The statement he had made on September 22nd was a very natural and simple act. Having, in his official capacity, to provide the Committee with explanations, which unfortunately involved, as a consequence, certain pecuniary advantages to himself, M. Hammarskjöld would have been unable to do so had he not at the same time renounced those advantages. He would be particularly glad if the Rapporteur would agree to the omission, since the statement had given rise to certain comparisons which had been very far from his intentions.

M. Hammarskjöld nevertheless expressed his gratitude to the Rapporteur and M. Rappard—who had asked for the insertion in a previous report of a courteous expression—for their kind intentions.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal), Rapporteur, said that, in order to accede to M. Hammarskjöld's request, the second passage tow hich he had referred would be drafted as follows: " The Registrar of the Court spontaneously decided . . . "

Subject to certain other drafting amendments, the report was adopted (Annex 11).

37. Revision of the Regulations regarding the Granting of Retiring Pensions to Ordinary Judges and to the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice (Annex 2, Appendix I).

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that the First Committee had been called upon last year to examine what changes should be made in the Regulations regarding the granting of pensions to ordinary judges and to the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice, in view of the increase in the number of judges. The First Committee's attention had been drawn to two points which, in the opinion of certain of its members, were apparently not settled satisfactorily by the provisions at present in force. These two points were: (1) pensions for widows and children; (2) invalidity pensions.

The question had been referred to the Supervisory Commission, which had postponed its decision in the absence of definite instructions from the Assembly. He thought the Fourth Committee would agree that the Supervisory Commission should be authorised to deal with the question.

He added that, owing to a misunderstanding, the question had not been referred in time to the competent Committee. He therefore proposed that it should be adjourned to the following year, in order that the Supervisory Commission might examine it.

This proposal was adopted.

38. Examination of the Supplementary Report by the Supervisory Commission (Annex 12).

M. HAMBRO (Norway) asked whether the Supervisory Commission had studied the question of the special allowances received by a number of officials in addition to their salaries and not covered by the ordinary contracts; though the sums in question probably amounted to not more than 30,000 or 40,000 francs in all, he thought it might be wise to reconsider some of the allowances. As an example, he stated that the Secretary of the Administrative Tribunal, which had met only twice during the past year, received the extraordinary allowance of 2,500 francs. There were other cases of the same kind.

Personally, he did not desire to alter the contracts and regulations adopted at the last Assembly. He had been in a minority in the Committee of Thirteen, because he was in favour of greater economy than most of the members, but it would be dangerous to take away any of the rights now given to the staff. His remark was not intended as criticism of the Supervisory Commission, but he felt some economy might be effected in the direction he had suggested.

The Marquis PAULUCCI DI CALBOLI BARONE (Under-Secretary-General in Charge of Internal Administration) pointed out that, although the Administrative Tribunal had only met for two days, the Secretary's work was considerable.

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) proposed that the Committee should not enter in detail into the questions raised in the report, and asked the Supervisory Commission to say frankly whether it really considered that the position was as extreme as the document suggested. The Supervisory Commission deserved all the Committee's gratitude for the work it had done, but it appeared to have lost sight of its own principles. It had started by deciding " to reject systematically any proposal that might involve an attack on the contractual commitments of the League to its officials ". M. Gallavresi was of opinion that paragraph III at least was in flagrant contradiction to the Staff Regulations of the three Administrations—so much so that, as a measure of prudence, the Supervisory Commission itself had proposed that the application of certain clauses of the Regulations be cancelled for a year.

M. Gallavresi, speaking not of the legal but of the moral aspect of the question, said that, during the past few days, the staff had been considering to what extent it could contribute to the economies which the Fourth Committee was endeavouring to make, but it had been unable to reach agreement with regard to a voluntary act.

Now a measure was suggested which might be regarded as a kind of reprisal, and was of a nature to interfere seriously with the efficiency of the work on the eve of the Disarmament Conference, at a time, moreover, when the work of the staff was even heavier owing to the economic crisis.

The Supervisory Commission was proposing to stop, or at least to reduce, leave. He thought it had somewhat exceeded the object in view, and therefore proposed that the Committee should simply take note of the document and of M. Hambro's suggestions.

M. ZUMETA (Venezuela) asked that the Committee should not close its session without completely clearing up this question. The Venezuelan delegate had not been present when salaries were discussed, and he had therefore not been able to say that the budget should not be reduced beyond what was normal, for the report must not give an impression of panic. To touch the salaries of officials was to touch one of the main forces of the League of Nations, and this could not be done without diminishing the efficiency of the Secretariat.

With regard to the Pensions Fund, if the contribution of one of the parties were decreased, the contribution of the other would be increased. The Venezuelan delegation supported M. Gallavresi's proposal.

M. OSUSKY (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) pointed out that the question of salaries had been referred to the Supervisory Commission by the Fourth Committee itself, and had not been taken up by the former on its own initiative.

(The continuation of the discussion was adjourned to the next meeting.)

ELEVENTH MEETING.

Held on Friday, September 25th, 1931, at 10.15 p.m.

Chairman: M. POLITIS (Greece).

39. Examination of the Supplementary Report of the Supervisory Commission (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN urged that the report (Annex 12) should be discussed from the right angle. No blame could be attached to the Supervisory Commission, which, on the contrary, deserved the Committee's gratitude. He hoped, accordingly, that the debate would proceed in a spirit of complete objectivity.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) thought that, although the discussion could give no pleasure to any of those taking part in it, it was nevertheless impossible, while professing real devotion to the League of Nations, to observe silence at the same time. He joined in the Chairman's tribute to the Supervisory Commission. Nothing would have been easier for the Commission than to say that, having met with a refusal from the majority of officials to join in the work of retrenchment, it could only take note of the failure of its negotiations. In taking that line, the Commission would have simplified its task, but it would have failed to perform its duty to the Fourth Committee and the League.

M. Rappard had demonstrated, on a previous occasion, that there were two classes of economy possible: (1) that affecting the League's work and (2) that affecting the instrument carrying out that work—namely, the staff. The Fourth Committee had, it hoped, succeeded in making reductions in the first category without sacrificing anything that was fundamental to the League's activity. M. Rappard was convinced of the absolute moral necessity for going further. A reduction under the heading of the staff was desirable in the interests of the staff no less than in that of the League.

The advantage of economies of that kind to the League was plain. The League was the creation of public opinion and in public opinion it found the support that was essential to its growth. It was an indisputable fact that public opinion regarded the League staff as a privileged staff. Everyone was aware of the keen desire of the young to worm their way on to the staff, and that the feelings of the national civil services towards the League officials were a mixture of admiration and envy. Public opinion would see that it had been found possible to make appreciable reductions in the League's work. How would it receive the news that the only head under which no economy had been possible was that of the staff, at the very time when throughout the entire world reductions were being imposed on many officials whose position was far less enviable than that of the members of the Secretariat and other League organisations? The officials of a League which, in existing circumstances, should give tangible evidence of generosity more than any other organisation were the only ones categorically to refuse any reduction. Would not public opinion undoubtedly conclude that the work was being sacrificed to the workers?

The staff had an equally great interest in such economies. Those who upheld M. Rappard's argument were charged with being the enemies of the League and its staff. M. Rappard believed that there was no need to justify himself. Before entering the service of the League, all the time he had been in its service and since he had left it, he had devoted much of his time to creating friends and support for the League. He did not in any way share the public feeling to which he had drawn attention in the earlier part of his speech, and he combated a view which, in his opinion, was fundamentally unjust. Again, he strongly denied the charge that he was the adversary of the staff, and took the opportunity to express his appreciation of the capacities and devotion of the great majority of the officials. They subordinated their personal interests to the work to which they were devoting their energies, and the best of them were those who were most anxious to avoid even the appearance of an attitude which would be wrongly ascribed to them.

Hence, in the interests of the League and its officials, it must be possible to tell the world that they had not refused to take part in the work of retrenchment to which the entire world had put its hand.

There were two possible methods of effecting reductions under the heading of staff: (1) concessions imposed from above and (2) concessions accepted by a voluntary sacrifice. The first method was deplorable in all respects. Even supposing it was legal—and that was doubtful—it should be rejected because it would detract from a psychological and moral factor that was essential to the League's good name. The work done at the League could not be carried out in a spirit of obedience to regulation. Those performing it must do so because their hearts were in it. It would be disastrous if the staff felt that they had been ill-treated and misunderstood. Finally, such a course would be deplorable because the chief disadvantage would be that it would not safeguard the members of the Secretariat and the other organisations from the criticisms made against them in certain quarters.

There remained the second method. A gesture of spontaneous generosity was to be desired. It would confound the League's enemies and justify its admirers and friends.

There had come to M. Rappard's ears reports of certain meetings at which it had been asked whether a voluntary reduction in salaries was feasible. One of the opponents of any such reduction had come spontaneously to M. Rappard and told him that it would be intolerable to allow the staff to be accused of having been opposed to making a voluntary gift to the League. He had handed M. Rappard a declaration, and added that he was prepared to accept and to sign it second on the list if the head of the organisation would sign first. That declaration entirely exonerated, not only those who had been ready to show a spirit of self-denial, but even those who had been regarded as the opponents of any sacrifice whatever. The declaration, dated September 25th, 1931, was as follows:

"The undersigned officials, being desirous in the present world conditions of making a contribution to the work of the League, such contribution to be entered as an extraordinary receipt in the 1932 budget, without in any way affecting the regulations governing contracts and pensions, have decided to give to the League Assembly for this purpose a percentage of their salary in accordance with the following scale. This receipt, if the entire staff were to join in this offer, would amount to about 225,000 francs.

	Per cent
"Secretary-General and Under-Secretaries-General	5
Directors	4
Chiefs of Section	3.25
Members of Sections in receipt of a salary above 20,000 francs	3
Salaries from 12,000 to 20,000 francs	2.5
Salaries from 7,000 to 12,000 francs	2
Salaries from 4,000 to 7,000 francs	1
Below 4,000 francs	0.5

"The salaries to which these percentages apply are the nominal salaries, plus entertainment allowances and special allowances for the purpose of certain duties.

"Individual applications for the repayment of entertainment expenses from the joint fund will be reduced by the percentage applicable to the salary of the grade concerned."

M. Rappard emphasised, not only that he knew nothing about the drafting of the document, but also that he was not acquainted with the movements of the staff. He had seen the document for the first time that evening. The statement proved that even those who passed for opponents of any reduction in salaries were not anxious to bear the weight of so serious a reproach. If that were the Secretariat's feeling, it could not be said that nothing could be done.

M. Rappard had no advice to offer the high officials of the Secretariat; but, just as in time of war the superior officers were the first to leave the trenches, so the heads of the Secretariat and the other organisations should set the example, and not appear to be acting under pressure from below. If they took the initiative, nothing would so greatly increase their prestige in the eyes of their collaborators.

To economise on the travelling expenses of officials whose homes were at a distance from Geneva would present more injustice than advantage, for the whole burden of the sacrifice would fall on officials whose homes were farthest from Geneva. Those who were not affected would certainly be the first to protest against a method which was contrary to the interests of all, as well as to the most elementary justice.

A possible solution would be to deduct a figure similar to that mentioned in the document M. Rappard had just read, and without demanding anything of the officials, to count on them to show their self-sacrifice, discernment and sense of opportuneness by an act which all would approve, and which would enable their friends to defend them against the reproaches which would otherwise be levelled at them.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) thought the Supervisory Commission was in duty bound to put forward proposals for a possible reduction in staff expenditure. He congratulated it on having stopped, by its proposals, a debate on such essential questions as salaries granted under contract and the Pensions Fund, which for many reasons could not be touched. It remained to examine the proposals contained in the third report of the Supervisory Commission—travelling expenses of the officials and their families proceeding on leave, length of paid leave allowed and entertainment allowances.

M. Hambro was prepared to vote for M. Gallavresi's proposal with regard to paragraph III (travelling expenses and leave), and added that the Committee had not had time to consider in detail the position of officials who came from distant countries. He did not know, however, whether it was M. Gallavresi's intention that paragraph IV (entertainment allowances) should be left outside the discussion.

If the staff had spontaneously suggested any reduction in salaries as a provisional arrangement, M. Hambro would have voted against their proposal, as a provisional arrangement would only complicate matters and the same difficulties would arise the following year. It would be particularly disastrous to alter for one year only the structure of the Secretariat and the International Labour Office fixed scarcely a year previously. It would be an injustice to many officials who had been tempted by the conditions offered them.

The time when the Secretariat might have shown a spirit of sacrifice was past, and an offer made under pressure would have no value and would not make the same impression on public opinion.

Moreover, many officials of the League of Nations were not receiving high salaries as compared with those obtaining in Switzerland and in other countries. The gesture which it had been suggested they should make would have been a beau geste, but it would have meant hardship for some of them. They had framed their lives and planned their expenditure on the basis of their contracts —that was to say, in consideration, not only of their salaries, but of the increases to which they were entitled, the payment of travelling expenses and so on. It would be unjust not to respect the terms of their contracts.

For these reasons, M. Hambro was unable to accept the Supervisory Commission's proposals, which he had not had time to examine with the necessary care. The present discussion would have the advantage of enabling the competent officials to take a decision after careful consideration. Next year it might be necessary to re-examine the whole question; but the Fourth Committee would have had time to study it thoroughly. For the present year, it would be better to avoid giving the impression that it was acting in a panic.

M. Palacios (Spain) maintained the point of view of the Spanish delegation, which he had already explained. He considered that the Committee should accept M. Gallavresi's conclusions, which, in his view, applied as much to " travelling and leave " as " entertainment allowances ".

M. Hiitonen (Finland) thought the measures proposed by M. Rappard were not sufficient. If results were obtained, it would be thanks to the staff and not to the Fourth Committee or to the Assembly; the results would only apply for one year. The Fourth Committee, however, was expected to prepare a definite programme covering even the future. While it was desirable, on the one hand, that the officials of an institution like the League of Nations should enjoy certain advantages, it was obvious, on the other hand, that the League of Nations could not live in a condition of splendid isolation, if the large majority of the States Members reduced salaries.

M. Hiitonen therefore suggested that the Assembly, as a preliminary to a possible reduction in the salaries of League officials, should recommend a study of the decrease in salaries in the various countries.

M. Hiitonen supported M. Rappard's observations with regard to travelling expenses. Sacrifices could only be asked of all the officials, not simply of those who, owing to the very fact that their homes were farthest away, were already in a less privileegd position than the others. It was desirable, not only for reasons of equity but also from the political aspect, that officials from distant countries should be able from time to time to get in touch, once again, with their home countries. It should not be forgotten that the promise that travelling expenses would be paid had certainly encouraged a large number of officials from distant countries to accept a post at the League of Nations. That promise must be kept.

M. Gallavresi (Italy) feared that some of his colleagues had understood that he thought the Supervisory Commission had exceeded its mandate. That was not his idea, but he was of opinion that the whole question should simply be adjourned in order to avoid taking measures which, if not controvertible (he thought they were), had at any rate been contested. Obviously, the loss of efficiency which would result from the reduction of salaries would be far greater than the 200,000 francs it was hoped to save.

In his previous statements, M. Gallavresi had had more particularly in mind the provisions of Chapter III, but neither had he any sympathy with the provisions of Chapter IV. The entertainment allowances, if used carefully, were valuable for the League's prestige.

While he appreciated the considerable work which the Supervisory Commission had accomplished, M. Gallavresi urged that the discussion should be adjourned to the following year, and even expressed the hope that it might be adjourned sine die.

M. Cahen-Salvador (France) thought it would have been better had the discussion not taken place; but, since a question of dignity was involved, the French delegation felt bound to state its views, particularly as it could not accept all the conclusions of the Supervisory Commission, which, however, M. Cahen-Salvador congratulated on its work.

The report stated that the Commission had considered the possibility of reducing salaries and decreasing the League's contribution to the Pensions Fund. Economies of that kind, which were contrary to contractual commitments, would have been irregular and the Commission had done well to reject them. The French delegation would have combated these two proposals.

It had then been asked whether the persons concerned would not make what had been called a spontaneous gesture. M. Cahen-Salvador had little taste for these arranged " improvisations ", for these " spontaneous " acts which, in reality, were imposed or suggested. He recalled a rule of public law that constraint vitiated consent. Moreover, these reductions, even if agreed to freely, would bear more hardly on certain officials who, though accepting the decision of the majority, had their families to consider and deserved the greatest solicitude. In any case, on this point also the Supervisory Commission's report was a failure.

In the report, the Fourth Committee was asked to approve a policy which M. Cahen-Salvador did not hesitate to describe as one of " relative reprisals ". The new proposals before the Committee would lead only to the saving of an insignificant sum. On the other hand, they would create trouble and animosity. Leave was covered in the Staff Regulations. In the strictly legal sense of the word, the Regulations were perhaps not an integral part of the contracts, or at any rate not for their whole duration. Obviously, the supreme authority of the League of Nations was entitled to change the Regulations in case of necessity. As a member of the Committee of Thirteen, however, M. Cahen-Salvador affirmed that, when scarcely a year previously the new Regulations had been prepared, a moral agreement had been concluded. The French delegation considered that a moral agreement had the same value as a formal legal agreement. It should be accorded the same respect as though it were strictly and legally executable.

The measures adopted the year before by the Committee of Thirteen were based on the desire to give the staff the guarantees of security of which they were so greatly in need. Leave, however, was not given only for the pleasure of the staff. A period of rest was essential after incessant work. M. Cahen-Salvador could not understand how, in a year in which the officials would be asked to make an exceptional effort, the advantages and guarantees of security granted less than a year previously could be withdrawn. He asked his colleagues whether they had reflected on the consequences of the measure recommended in the report—namely, to reduce leave by a quarter, any official being free to take the full amount of his annual leave on condition that he regarded himself as on leave without pay. That amounted to saying that only the richer officials, or those without family ties, would be able to take all their leave. Were the staff, to whom the Committee of Thirteen had guaranteed the equal, fair and suitable treatment to which they were entitled, to be placed in a position of such glaring injustice ? Improvised measures would only compromise the stability and justice which the Committee of Thirteen had introduced in putting an end to a troubled situation which had lasted for five years. M. Cahen-Salvador feared that the economy recommended in the report of the Supervisory Commission, in spite of its praiseworthy intentions, would have disastrous consequences.

In the present period of distress, the Fourth Committee, far from introducing confusion in to the minds of those who assisted in the League's general efforts to improve the situation, should give the staff all the assurances of security which they needed. The position of League officials had been compared with that of officials of other countries. M. Cahen-Salvador refused to admit such an argument. Although French officials were among the worst paid, that did not prevent the French delegation from asking for international officials the guarantees which they deserved and which had voluntarily and with full knowledge been granted them the previous year.

In conclusion, he asked his colleagues to reflect on the consequences of an improvised vote, and stated that, in any case, the French delegation would vote against the measures proposed.

Viscount MUSHAKOJI (Japan), while appreciating the difficulties of the Supervisory Commission's task, associated himself with M. Gallavresi's proposal. As he had already stated in the general discussion, a reduction in salaries would have a very bad effect, and the economy of 2,600,000 francs already proposed by the Supervisory Commission made it unnecessary to effect any saving on salaries, and more particularly on travelling expenses of non-European officials. He had had the greatest difficulty in getting that proposal approved last year, but he was glad to see that M. Hambro had now come round to his opinion. In conclusion, he could not accept the proposals in the report.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) was glad that he had refrained from asking permission to speak at the beginning of the discussion to explain the Supervisory Commission's report and that members had had an opportunity of expressing themselves freely. He tendered his special thanks to the Chairman, M. Rappard, M. Hambro, as well as M. Cahen-Salvador and M. Gallavresi, for their remarks.

A week ago, the Supervisory Commission had submitted to the Fourth Committee the revised budget, and the Commission had then been asked what it was doing about salaries. M. Osuský had replied that the Supervisory Commission was studying the matter, but, having reached no conclusion, would have to report later. Surely that had been an admirable opportunity for the members of the Fourth Committee to point out that salaries were inviolable in virtue of the individual contracts. He had not heard a single remark to that effect. Had the Committee expected miracles of the Supervisory Commission and assumed that it could economise on salaries without touching them ?

During the discussions in the Fourth Committee on the question of the Chiefs of Section, it had been said that the Committee should not be guided by moral but only by financial considerations. Last year the moral right of Chiefs of Section to an increase had been recognised, and yet the Fourth Committee had refused to vote that increase on the ground that budgetary considerations must be paramount. For financial reasons, the Registrar of the Court had made a very noble gesture. Why had not considerations of dignity and morality preponderated in his case ? Why had the Committee accepted the offer of this devoted official ?

During the last ten days the heaviest pressure had been brought to bear on the officials to drag from them a spontaneous gesture. Who had exercised that pressure ? Was it the Secretary-General, the Director of the International Labour Office, or the Supervisory Commission ? The latter was entirely innocent. When approached by the officials, the Commission had stated that it asked for nothing because the League could not beg from its officials. The Commission, however, had been much alarmed at the pressure that was being brought to bear on the officials. To prevent any diminution of the contractual rights and the security of the officials, it had anxiously considered the ways and means of easing the pressure upon them. After much hesitation, the Commission had attempted to bring forward a concrete proposal in view of the statements made by various delegations to the Fourth Committee. It had hardly intimated that it had arrived at a result, it had not even particularised its conclusions, before it felt a wave of moral indignation. Yet the Supervisory Commission had only received instructions and endeavoured to execute them worthily.

If the result of the Supervisory Commission's report was to be a decision by the Fourth Committee that the rights of, and guarantees of stability accorded to, the staff must be respected, the report in question would not have been useless. In that case, however, the officials must be defended, not only at Geneva, but in Parliament, in the Press and before public opinion. If that were done, the Supervisory Commission would feel the greatest satisfaction. In conclusion, M. Osuský hoped that, henceforward, the officials would be left to work in peace and that they would cease to be importuned and troubled by constant criticisms and reproaches regarding their position at Geneva.

The SECRETARY-GENERAL asked for permission to reply to certain observations which appeared to reflect on the higher officials of the three organisations. He did not think that there could be any question of his devotion to the League. In 1921, when the budgetary situation had been unfavourable, he had surrendered 35 per cent of his total emoluments. Other officials had made the same gesture, and the combined sum amounted to 80,000 francs a year, or 800,000 francs over a period of ten years.

The Secretary-General thought the Swiss delegate's indignation might perhaps be more usefully employed in inducing some of his co-citizens to reduce prices in the Geneva hotels, which no delegation would say were very low.

He sympathised with the Finnish delegate's remark, but asked him to consider the position of the League officials. They were drawn from all countries, and it was on that account that the League had originally decided that the rates of pay should be based on the highest rates of any Civil Service in Europe. A reduction in the rate would have meant excluding from the service people whom the League was particularly anxious to attract. That might be hard on national officials, but the Secretary-General felt sure that, if matters were fully explained to them, they would not resent it but would appreciate the position.

It had been suggested that the highest officials had been against any voluntary offer of a reduction. So far as he was concerned, that was not the case. No member of the Fourth Committee would have wished him, or the Director of the International Labour Office, or the Registrar of the Court to put pressure on the other officials in order to extract from them a voluntary gesture. The officials had felt a certain resentment at some of the speeches made by certain delegates at the beginning of the session. Those speeches had not eased the situation, but the Secretary-General had nevertheless made the following recommendations to the staff:

> " The staff assembly,
> " Recognising the grave economic, financial and social situation in many countries and its effects on the League budget:
> " Recommends all members of the staff whose effective salary is not less than 4,000 francs on January 1st, 1932, to offer for 1932 a contribution of which the aggregate amount would be equivalent to the sum voted for the statutory annual increments of the said officials during 1932 on condition that this aggregate sum is obtained—in accordance with a progressive scale to be determined by the Secretary-General after consulting the Staff Committee—by a deduction from the salary of each official earning not less than 4,000 francs as on January 1st, 1932, including officials with fixed salaries and those who have reached the maximum of their grade."

The Secretary-General had hoped that the officials would be able to put aside their feelings and respond to his recommendations; but, unhappily, they had been unable to swallow their resentment entirely, and the motion had not been accepted, although it had been approved, apart from certain amendments proposed by him, by the Staff Committee. It was therefore clear that the highest officials had done their best to obtain a voluntary gesture, and a large number of the staff were ready to make such an offer. The ultimate refusal was entirely due to human feelings which no one could disregard. The Secretary-General therefore hoped that it was plain that the highest officials had not been against a reduction.

M. Albert THOMAS (Director of the International Labour Office) said that the remarks made by those who had spoken later in the debate had somewhat tempered his feeling of indignation at the Swiss delegate's suggestion that the staff had categorically refused to accept any reduction. That allegation was entirely unjust. M. Rappard himself had expressed his appreciation of the staffs of the Secretariat and the International Labour Office. The staff had shown that, in all circumstances, they were capable of generosity and self-sacrifice. In 1921, the staff of the International Labour Office had for six months unanimously contributed 2 per cent of their salaries for the relief of suffering children in Europe.

Why, then, had the staff appeared to hold back in the last few days ? The reasons were very simple. They had been stated by various speakers during the discussion. It was because the staff had felt that there was little substance in the references to public opinion that had been reiterated ad nauseam. M. Albert Thomas had himself suffered from such methods. Newspaper misrepresentations had made it appear that the salaries of the League staff reached astronomical figures. While, of course, there was some truth in the judgment of public opinion, the latter was, M. Rappard had said, partly actuated by jealousy. That was a perfectly human trait. But were people who had a sense of their responsibility to yield to pressure of that sort from public opinion ?

Would, as Sir Eric Drummond and the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission had asked, the officials of the League be defended in circumstances like those by men who were conscious of their responsibilities towards the League ? Were the staff to be handed over to the lions the day after the necessity of certain rates of salary had been agreed ? Would no voice be raised to justify outside the League what had been justified without difficulty in the Fourth Committee of the League Assembly ? That was the first consideration that had occurred to the staff.

There were others as well—that of M. Cahen-Salvador in particular. Last year, the Committee of Thirteen, the Fourth Committee and the Assembly had one after the other reiterated the necessity of conferring on the staff a secure and stable situation. It had been said over and over again that injustices and uncertainties that had lasted for years were to be corrected. They had been corrected. It was impossible a few months later to say, " Yes, we must respect security and stability, but the times are hard, we shall change the whole position and revert to the conditions we decided to consolidate last year ". Was that the line that was to be adopted in regard to a staff which was expected to make a generous and spontaneous gesture ? The staff might be asked to make sacrifices under certain specific circumstances, but fairness on both sides was essential.

The staff could hardly forget that they possessed contracts requiring regular, efficient work. That work they had performed for ten years. Nor could they forget that they had respected their engagements. M. Thomas had the right to ask whether everyone had kept his engagements. The question of contributions in arrears was a delicate political matter, but he might remind M. Rappard that, on the previous day, the Committee had spent some time on toning down a report that was already in a low enough tone and on discussing a suggestion to substitute the word appréhension for the word inquiétude. At the moment, when the members of the staff were asked to make a voluntary sacrifice, M. Albert Thomas could not help pointing out that certain States Members had not respected their primary obligations to the League.

As the Secretary-General had observed, the staff had been subjected for ten days to pressure from no one knew where. It had been thought that the pressure came from the Fourth Committee; but the remarks made by those who had spoken at the beginning of the debate had apparently had less force than might have been supposed. Nor, it seemed, had the pressure come from the Supervisory Commission. Perhaps it was thought that the pressure had been exercised with the utmost measure of discretion by the Secretary-General or the Director of the International Labour Office. For ten days, notwithstanding difficulties which the Committee perhaps failed to realise, and notwithstanding the heavy work entailed by the Assembly, the staff of both bodies had made an effort to reach some conclusion. They had not succeeded. Why ? The Committee itself had indicated the reasons. The staff had felt that any improvised reductions might give rise to injustice. The proposal to forgo the annual increment, although legally possible, and although it could have been passed with the consent of the staff, would, it had been observed, affect only those who were entitled to it next year. The Secretary-General's suggestion for distributing the amount thus sacrificed among all members of the staff gave rise to too many complications. It would, it had been considered, be a source of embarrassment and difficulty for which no solution had so far been found. The possibility of a reduction of annual leave, raised by the Supervisory Commission, had also been thought of by the staff, but here again it had been seen that there would be all kinds of inequality and unfairness and, therefore, because it had been asked to improvise in haste a resolution that might be a source of injustice, the staff had given up any attempt to take a decision which might cause general demoralisation and poison the whole atmosphere at a time when all its attention should be concentrated on its work.

That was the entire story. An effort was, of course, being made in the League organisations to effect certain necessary adjustments. The administration was attempting to lighten the whole organisation without, however, impairing its efficiency or radically changing the whole system.

That, however, was work that could not be improvised. The Committee must trust the high officials. They must not be expected to take a hasty decision which might be dangerous to the prestige and future of the League.

Viscount ASTOR (British Empire) had been struck by one fact in the discussion. Members appeared to be continuing a debate which had begun two years ago. It was therefore somewhat difficult for a new member like himself to pick up the threads. He would suggest that the discussion of this point be terminated to-night and should not be continued in 1932 or 1933.

He would make one practical suggestion. The Secretary-General would not, he hoped, take it as a reflection on himself if Lord Astor suggested that he should call in some outside person to carry out a general rationalisation of the League organisations. That system had been found very useful in many business organisations in England and elsewhere. In conclusion, he suggested that the discussion be now closed.

M. BOHEMAN (Sweden), Rapporteur, agreed with Lord Astor's proposal and would refrain from offering the remarks he had intended to make. He hoped that the Committee would not expect him to give a full report of the discussion to the Assembly.

The CHAIRMAN declared the discussion closed. Unless any member objected, he would take it that the conclusion of the debate was the withdrawal by the Supervisory Commission of its proposals. He would express the Fourth Committee's warmest thanks to the Supervisory Commission.

II. DISPOSAL OF THE SURPLUS FOR 1930: REIMBURSEMENT TO THE STATES OUT OF THE BUILDING FUND AND REIMBURSEMENT TO THE WORKING CAPITAL FUND.

This Section was approved without observations.

IV. MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS.

1. Annual Report of the Publications Committee.

The resolution of the Supervisory Commission (paragraph 49) was adopted.

2. Constructional Work on the New Buildings.

Paragraphs 50 to 52 were adopted without observations.

3. Salaries of Locally Recruited Staff.

M. OSUSKY (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) observed that this section had been approved by implication, but still required to be definitely adopted.

Paragraphs 53 to 59 were adopted.

41. Request by Nicaragua to be relieved of the Payment of its Contribution for at least One Year.

The CHAIRMAN read a letter from the President of the Assembly asking him to communicate to the Fourth Committee a request from the Government of Nicaragua to be relieved of the payment of its contribution for at least one year.

M. PALACIOS (Spain) supported the Nicaraguan Government's request. Owing to the earthquake which had ravaged the country and entirely destroyed the capital, Nicaragua was in a state of complete impoverishment. The League might express its sympathy with Nicaragua by relieving it of its contribution for one year.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland), speaking as Chairman of the Sub-Committee on Contributions in Arrears, thought that it would be a dangerous precedent to say that, if a country made a request to be relieved of the payment of its contribution for one year or more, that request could be granted. It was one thing to show patience to debtors in distress, and another to dispense them from paying altogether. Other States in a difficult position might have adduced special considerations.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) supported M. Rappard. It was outside the Committee's competence to take any such action.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out, first, that there was already a precedent for postponing payment on grounds of a public disaster, and, secondly, that the present request aroused special sympathy because it was made by a country whose capital had been entirely destroyed by an earthquake and where the general disorganisation was such that it was absolutely unable to pay its contribution this year. The least that could be done was to say that, in view of the exceptional circumstances and in conformity with an earlier precedent, the payment would be deferred until better times.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) could accept this proposal, but still feared the danger of creating a dangerous precedent. It would perhaps be better to reduce the contribution by one-half without granting exemption from payment. That apparently was the course adopted in the earlier case to which the Chairman had referred.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) was averse to discussing a matter of this kind in public. He would prefer M. Rappard's solution and suggested that the subject be referred to the Council, which would be asked to take the necessary steps.

The CHAIRMAN thought that it would be more in order to refer the matter to the Supervisory Commission.

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) asked why the Fourth Committee itself should not take a definite decision to reduce the contribution by half. The Committee would be perfectly competent to do so in view of the exceptional circumstances. He would, however, have no objection to the matter being referred to the Supervisory Commission.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) suggested that the Press might be asked not to report the discussion in the newspapers. He would suggest that perhaps the best solution would be for the Assembly to instruct the Secretary-General to inform Nicaragua that the Assembly hoped that it would be able to pay half its contribution, the League relieving it of the other half by reason of the terrible disaster that had overtaken the country.

The Supervisory Commission was not a body that could negotiate with States. The Secretary-General was the Assembly's executive organ, and, as he had for some time been in negotiation with the countries whose contributions were in arrears, M. Rappard's solution was the one most in accord with the traditional procedure. It would, in particular, not create a dangerous precedent.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) said that, out of sympathy for Nicaragua, he would accept M. Rappard's suggestion.

M. HOFFINGER (Austria) suggested that, in addition to remitting one-half of the contribution, the Assembly might allow Nicaragua to postpone payment of the other half to a later year.

M. BOHEMAN (Sweden), Rapporteur, pointed out that there was an objection to this solution, because Nicaragua's contribution amounted to one unit. It was impossible to distribute half a unit among the other Members of the League. The simplest solution would be to postpone the contribution for one year.

The CHAIRMAN said that it would be stated in the report—and perhaps also in a draft resolution—that, in view of the exceptional circumstances which had led to the destruction of the capital of Nicaragua, her request would be met by the remission of one-half of her contribution and the postponement of the payment of the other half.

The Chairman's proposal was adopted.

42. Preparation by the Supervisory Commission of Regulations for the Payment of Contributions at the Rate of at least One-twelfth Each Month: Draft Resolution submitted by the Delegation of Uruguay.

The CHAIRMAN recalled that the following resolution had been proposed by the delegation of Uruguay:

"The Fourth Committee,

"Considering that the absence of practical regulations with regard to the payment of contributions by the various States Members of the League of Nations involves difficulties for the regular working of the Treasury of the Secretariat;

"Considering that these difficulties are mainly due to the fact that the contributions are expressed in the scale by the total annual figure, which obliges the Government to pay the whole amount at some date during the year;

"Considering that the commitments of the Treasury of the Secretariat begin on January 1st and, as in the case of State budgets, are roughly divided into liabilitiespa yable by twelfths:

"Is of opinion that it would be well to have regulations prepared by the Supervisory Commission informing the various Governments of the necessity of paying contributions at the rate of at least one-twelfth each month beginning in January of each year;

"Accordingly requests the Supervisory Commission to study this proposal and give its opinion to the Fourth Committee."

He pointed out that the Supervisory Commission would be unable to take up this question for some time. It could not accordingly submit its conclusions to the Fourth Committee until the following year.

The draft resolution was referred to the Supervisory Commission with the request that it should present a report to the next Assembly.

43. Credit of 50,000 Francs for the Study of the Question of the Recurrence of Periods of Economic Depression: Letter from the Secretary of the Second Committee.

The following letter, dated September 25th, 1931, from the Second Committee was read:

"M. Janson, Chairman of the Second Committee, has instructed me to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 24th, 1931, in which you inform him that the Fourth Committee has decided to enter a credit of 250,000 francs in the 1932 budget for the work of the Financial Committee in 1932; but that, on the other hand, it has been unable to accept the Second Committee's proposal to enter in the budget a supplementary credit of 50,000 francs for the study of the question of the recurrence of periods of economic depression.

"This latter question was again studied by the Second Committee yesterday afternoon. The Second Committee decided to ask its Chairman to approach the Chairman of the Fourth Committee once more with a view to asking that Committee to consider afresh the possibility of entering a sum of 50,000 francs, or possibly some smaller sum, in the 1932 budget for the study of the question of the recurrence of periods of economic depression, since the Second Committee believes that, in present circumstances, this problem is of special urgency and importance.

(Signed) KERNO."

M. GALLAVRESI (Italy) suggested that 25,000 francs might be voted for this purpose. That would make it possible to contemplate making at least a start with the work.

M. OSUSKÝ (Chairman of the Supervisory Commission) pointed out that last year's budget contained a credit of 100,000 francs for the same purpose. There was, therefore, no question of work that had to be begun. He could not form an opinion on the matter without having first studied the Minutes of the discussion in the Second Committee.

M. HOFFINGER (Austria) had noticed great consternation in the Second Committee on the previous day when the Fourth Committee's rejection of this credit had been announced. The studies which had been begun would have to be suspended, and the Second Committee had been unanimous in regretting the refusal of the vote.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) replied that the Second Committee had not been unanimous. The Norwegian delegation had voted against the credit. Acceptance of this request might encourage other Committees to ask for the reconsideration of rejected credits, and he therefore hoped that the Fourth Committee would not rescind its decision.

The Committee decided to reject the Second Committee's request and to grant no credit for this subject.

44. Allocation of Expenses: (1) Contribution of Mexico; (2) Revised Scale of Contributions.

M. RÉVEILLAUD (France), Chairman of the Committee on the Allocation of Expenses, submitted the following draft resolution:

"The Fourth Committee, approving the recommendation of the Allocation Committee, fixes at fourteen the number of units allocated to Mexico in the scale of apportionment of the League's expenditure;

"Amending the decision taken on September 26th, 1928, request the Council to ask the Allocation Committee not to submit its draft revised scale until the 1934 Assembly."

M. Réveillaud explained that the Committee on the Allocation of Expenses had met in the course of the winter and had immediately taken a unanimous decision to the effect that, owing to the economic situation, it was impossible to prepare a new scale on a stable and final basis. The Committee realised that the budgets of many States were very seriously affected by the depression, and had therefore decided to request the Assembly to prolong the use of the scale now in force.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia) reminded members that, in the beginning, an attempt had been made to divide the League's expenditure according to revenue. That method, however, had been found unsatisfactory, and it had accordingly been decided to allocate the expenditure in proportion to the expenditure of the Member States.

Australia had cheerfully accepted a very high allocation of units—namely, 27—but times had changed, and Australia had recently been passing through perhaps the most severe crisis in the history of any country in the world. Australia produced raw materials, the prices of which had fallen very considerably. Formerly, it had been Australia's practice to borrow large sums of money for development purposes. She could now borrow nothing at all. Her standard of living had been maintained largely owing to this borrowing, which had now ceased. She looked forward accordingly to relief in her contribution to the League. She was perfectly willing to pay her fair share, but it was a serious disappointment to her that the revised scale should be postponed for two years. That, indeed, would be very unfair to a country like Australia, in view of her exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Collins produced figures to show that, owing to the reduction of expenditure and the fall in the exchange value of the Australian pound, the purchasing power originally of £100 now amounted only to £60. Australia's expenditure had been reduced by 20 per cent; but, nevertheless, she was unable to balance her budget. Mr. Collins, therefore, must press for relief at the very earliest date. He would consequently propose an addition to the resolution so as to enable the Allocation Committee, during the next year, to take into consideration the special situation of Australia with a view to fixing her contribution at an amount which would be commensurate with her financial position.

Viscount ASTOR (British Empire) said that he had not been forewarned that such a substantial change was to be proposed. He had no authority from his Government to agree to the postponement of the new scale for two years. To meet Mr. Collins's case for a re-allocation of the Australian contribution—other States might have an equally strong case—he would suggest that postponement should be for one year only.

M. RÉVEILLAUD (France) replied that, if the preparatory work on the new scale were postponed for only one year, the Allocation Committee would certainly be forced next year to ask for a further postponement, because it would have to base its work essentially on the 1931 budgets and possibly to some extent on those for 1932—that was to say, on budgets necessarily affected by the present depression. If, however, as appeared certain, delegates had received no instructions and could not agree to a postponement for more than one year, M. Réveillaud would make no fundamental objection to Lord Astor's proposal.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia) said that the proposal would involve such serious injustice to Australia that, if it were adopted, he would have to make a solemn protest against this violation of the League spirit. He suggested that a special allocation might be made for Australia, to be submitted to the 1932 Assembly and to take effect as from January 1st, 1933. He could give full details in support of Australia's request to the Allocation Committee.

M. RÉVEILLAUD (France), Chairman of the Allocation Committee, said that, if the Fourth Committee was of the opinion that special consideration should be given to the case of Australia, the Allocation Committee would be quite prepared to examine the figures which Mr. Collins would present. He felt, however, that there was serious objection on the part of many delegations to the adoption of special treatment for one State.

If Lord Astor's proposal were adopted, M. Réveillaud would be obliged to ask for an increase of 25,000 francs in the credit voted to meet the expenses of the sessions of the Allocation Committee next year. The preparation of a final scale demanded much arduous work, and two years would not be too long for the purpose. If the present scale were extended for only one year, the Committee would have to hold many more meetings than had originally been contemplated.

He pointed out that the British member of the Allocation Committee had supported the proposal he had made in the name of the Committee.

M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia) was prepared to assent to the Australian delegate's proposal, but was against a special mention of Australia. He feared that, if that were done, many delegates might ask for consideration of their country's position. He would prefer Lord Astor's compromise.

M. HOFFINGER (Austria) agreed with M. Fotitch.

Viscount ASTOR (British Empire) emphasised the difficulty of discussing a proposal when the papers had not been distributed beforehand. If he had had time to study the resolution, he would have consulted his Treasury expert. He did not wish to reverse the decision reached by the Allocation Committee with the assent of the British Treasury expert, and was therefore prepared to withdraw his motion.

M. HAMBRO (Norway) pointed out that the Australian delegate had made no definite proposals, but had merely stated that he would submit to the Allocation Committee particulars in support of Australia's special case. Every delegation had the same right, and the Allocation Committee would have to decide on each case. Since Lord Astor had withdrawn his proposal, the discussion could be closed.

M. RÉVEILLAUD (France) suggested, as a compromise, that the new fourteen units constituting Mexico's contribution should be placed at the Allocation Committee's disposal, so that the latter might be in a position to give, as a provisional measure, partial satisfaction to the countries asking for a reduction of their contribution; in that case, however, the Allocation Committee would ask to be granted the period of two years which it required to enable it to draw up the final scale. In this way the necessity for an additional credit of 25,000 francs would be obviated.

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) observed that the fourteen units might not suffice to meet all demands; he therefore could only accept this proposal on condition that the arrangement would be provisional. On that understanding, he would urge Mr. Collins to accept M. Réveillaud's compromise, remembering that there were other countries outside Europe which had serious difficulties and had had to reduce their budgets.

M. RAPPARD (Switzerland) could agree to M. Réveillaud's proposal, but thought it would be dangerous for the Committee, where there was now scarcely a quorum, to take a decision on so grave a matter, and thus perhaps precipitate discussion in the Assembly. He therefore moved the adjournment.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia) regretted that the serious position of his country made it necessary for him to press his request. If there were other countries in the same position, their cases could be dealt with as well. If necessary, he would have to bring the matter before the Assembly, if not this year, at any rate next year.

The CHAIRMAN thought that the Committee was in agreement with M. Valdés-Mendeville's proposal. He would request the Rapporteur to consult M. Réveillaud in drawing up his report, which would state that M. Réveillaud's draft resolution was adopted with the substitution of the year 1933 for 1934, and that countries claiming a reduction in their allocation as a result of the admission of Mexico to the League should submit their requests to the Allocation Committee.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia) was anxious to meet the Committee as far as possible, and would withdraw his proposal to bring the matter before the Assembly. He accepted the Chairman's suggestion provided he had an opportunity of laying his case before the Allocation Committee. He would then leave it to that Committee to say whether Australia should be allowed a reduction over and above the number of units that might be available out of Mexico's fourteen.

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) explained that, according to his idea, Mexico's fourteen units would not be touched. Her contribution, representing roughly 400,000 francs, would go into the general pool, and the payment of each State would thus be reduced. The question would be postponed until 1933.

The CHAIRMAN suggested that, in view of the importance of the problem and the lateness of the hour, the Committee should adjourn the discussion to another meeting.

The Chairman's proposal was adopted.

TWELFTH MEETING.

Held on Saturday, September 26th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman: M. POLITIS (Greece).

45. Allocation of Expenses: (1) Contribution of Mexico; (2) Revised Scale of Contributions (continuation).

Mr. COLLINS (Australia) hoped he could assist his colleagues to arrive at a decision acceptable to all. The way out of the difficulty could be found in the acceptance of the resolution proposed by the Allocation Committee, with one alteration—the substitution of 1933 for 1934. If other countries had met with extraordinary difficulties, it was right, of course, that their cases also should be examined. His subsequent enquiries had confirmed him in that opinion, and he did not now wish the case of Australia to be considered apart from the others. He now appreciated more fully the position of the Allocation Committee. He therefore supported the resolution, subject only to the shortening of the period for which the re-allocation was to be deferred.

Viscount ASTOR (British Empire) said he had been in touch with the British Treasury expert, and found that the difficulty was that the final budget figures were only available a year or more after the end of the financial year to which they related. It would therefore be impossible to submit to the 1933 Assembly a new scale based on figures later than those for 1930. The financial crisis, however, had not been at its worst during 1930, and the result of allocating the expenses on the basis of that year might very easily be both inequitable and unsatisfactory to the very countries which had suffered most. If 1930 was adopted as a basis for the new scale, he suggested that the latter should remain in force only for a short period.

M. RÉVEILLAUD (France) urged Mr. Collins to accept his original proposal, for the purely technical reasons which Lord Astor had explained. If Mr. Collins's suggestion were adopted, it would probably be necessary to make a provisional arrangement with which no one would be satisfied.

M. RESTREPO (Colombia) explained the Colombian Government's point of view with regard to the allocation of expenses. Colombia had paid her contribution regularly in spite of difficulties. She noted, however, that expenditure on the League had increased out of all proportion to its aims and its original budget. Instead of concerning itself with peace and security, it had grown into an enormous and complicated organisation which was performing work far removed from its original object.

M. Restrepo regretted that the States which were in arrears with their contributions were non-European. These States had, however, suffered greatly from the crisis. With the exception of Colombia, of which the Government was the result of a combination of all the political forces and which, in consequence, was supported by practically all the citizens in South America, a political crisis had arisen, which had overthrown several Governments, even the oldest and best established, and at the same time an economic crisis, affecting the countries which produced raw materials for sale to the United States and Europe. Owing to over-production and to the fact that half the factories were closed, sales of raw materials had fallen by half and the budgets of the South American countries were badly hit by the general crisis.

His Government had instructed him to ask for a revision of the scale of contributions, next year or in two years. It hoped the Allocation Committee would see that the contributions of the American States and, indeed, of all States were not too burdensome. In South America, the question was often asked: What is the League doing ? To that the authorities replied that it maintained peace in the world, combated all the difficulties which threatened peace and promoted the welfare of the peoples. That reply was not accepted without some complaint. Many felt that the American League of Nations was Pan-Americanism, and, so long as they were faithful to that idea, it was sufficient. Europe was now endeavouring to form a Customs Union, economic or political; but, if she combined against other parts of the world, she would have failed in international solidarity.

M. Restrepo regarded without any anxiety this idea of a European union, particularly if it led to the abolition of Customs barriers and the freedom of trade which America had for so long supported.

He hoped that the Allocation Committee would bear in mind the economic, financial, fiscal, moral and political situation of the South American countries, which were so seriously affected by the world crisis that they could not support additional expenditure for the League of Nations.

M. OTTLIK (Hungary) supported M. Réveillaud's resolution, which was calculated to safeguard the stability of the League and those countries which were undergoing financial difficulties.

M. HOFFINGER (Austria), as representative of a country which was suffering very severely from the economic crisis, would have been obliged to object to the special mention of the difficult situation of any particular country. He wished to express his gratitude to the Australian delegate for his understanding of the situation of other countries and the conciliatory spirit he had shown. In the interest of the very countries which had been affected by the crisis, he would prefer M. Réveillaud's proposal, since the budgets for 1931 and 1932 would certainly represent the truth more accurately than those of the preceding years.

M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia) said that Bolivia was a debtor to the League of Nations owing to unfortunate circumstances which had led to a considerable reduction in her receipts. Her budgetary deficit in 1931 was 67 per cent. He could only accept an adjournment of the matter for one year. Meanwhile, he suggested that, during the present year, the Allocations Committee should examine the possibility of readjusting the contributions of countries mortally wounded by the crisis. To maintain the contributions of those States at their present level would only increase the contributions in arrears.

M. IBARRA (Venezuela) accepted M. Réveillaud's proposal.

M. RUPPEL (Germany) thought it would be impossible to prepare a new and satisfactory scale on the basis of the budgets for 1930. He would have preferred an adjournment for three years. He would, however, accept an adjournment of two years.

Mr. LESTER (Irish Free State) presumed that the Allocation Committee would endeavour to find a scientific basis for the new scale. The fact that certain delegates had not expressed their views with regard to the present scale did not mean that they were satisfied with it.

Diwan ABDUL HAMID (India) said that, though India would welcome a reduction in her contribution, the present time was not opportune for settling the question. India would prefer to postpone the matter for two or three years.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) supported M. Réveillaud's proposal. The provisional adjournment suggested by the Bolivian delegate would, he thought, be impossible. If the contribution of one State were reduced, that of the others would have to be increased. No State would agree to an increase in its contribution unless the allocation were made on a scientific basis; it would, however, be impossible to make a provisional arrangement scientifically.

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) pointed out that, if the Committee agreed to an adjournment for one year, the Allocation Committee would not meet until 1933.

He himself was in favour of adjournment for one year—that was to say, until 1933—but in the interests of unanimity he was willing to accept adjournment for two years.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia) said that, in view of the general feeling, he would not press for any alteration of M. Réveillaud's proposal.

M. DE BLANCK (Cuba) supported the Bolivian delegate's observations.

M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia) suggested that any unforeseen receipts in the budget of the League of Nations might be used to assist countries like his own, which were in a desperate situation.

M. RÉVEILLAUD (France) appealed to M. de Blanck and M. Costa du Rels to withdraw their opposition.

M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia) and M. DE BLANCK (Cuba) agreed.

M. Réveillaud's resolution was adopted unanimously.

M. BOHEMAN (Sweden), Rapporteur, suggested that the report to the Assembly should not mention the name of any particular State.

This proposal was adopted.

46. Close of the Session.

The CHAIRMAN, after a closing speech, declared the session at an end.

Official No. : A.5.1931.X.

REPORT OF THE SUPERVISORY COMMISSION ON THE WORK OF ITS FORTY-FIRST SESSION.[1]

1. The Supervisory Commission met in ordinary session at Geneva from Wednesday, April 29th, to Saturday, May 2nd, to examine the closed accounts of the financial year 1930, the budget for 1932 and various financial and administrative questions which had been submitted to it by the competent organs of the League of Nations.

There were present at the session : His Excellency M. Stefan Osuský (Chairman), M. Jean Réveillaud (Rapporteur), His Excellency M. C. Parra-Pérez, M. Georges Ottlik, His Excellency M. Jean de Modzelewski.

I. Closed Accounts of the Financial Year 1930.

2. After taking cognisance of the report submitted to it by the Auditor, M. A. Ceresa, and of various observations with regard to details made by its Rapporteur, the Supervisory Commission decided to recommend the Assembly to adopt the accounts as submitted by the competent officials of the Secretariat and the autonomous organisations of the League. It noted with satisfaction the improved form of the accounts which now fully complied with its previous recommendations on the subject.

3. The question of contributions in arrears was discussed by the Commission with the Secretary-General. The Auditor and the Rapporteur of the Supervisory Commission having expressed some anxiety in this connection, the Secretary-General and the Treasurer, while assuring the Commission that the situation was perhaps not so serious as might appear at first sight, agreed that the number of States whose arrears in respect of the previous financial year were still outstanding at the end of April of the following year was a disquieting symptom to which the Commission was bound to devote attention. For the first time for many years — owing, it is true, to reasons of an exceptional character — the Secretariat had been obliged, for about twenty days at the beginning of 1931, to draw on the Working Capital Fund to meet expenditure provided for in the budget voted by the Assembly.

The Commission noted the detailed explanations given by the Secretary-General concerning the negotiations entered into with the Governments whose contributions were in arrears, and urged him to continue those negotiations steadily. The Commission hoped that positive results might be obtained by the time the next Assembly met.

4. Two questions were raised by the Deputy Auditor :

(a) Final allocation of the surplus handed over by the International Labour Office to the Secretariat of the League from the refugee accounts for 1929 which have, up to the present, been shown in the Suspense Account of the balance-sheet.

The Commission was of opinion that this surplus, which amounted to 895.76 francs, should be paid into the funds of the League of Nations and be shown in the 1931 accounts as an appropriation-in-aid. The last Assembly, having decided that the contributions of the League of Nations to the Nansen Office for Refugees should henceforth be a lump-sum contribution, no similar question will arise in the future, as all annual surpluses, if any, will remain in the possession of the International Office for Refugees.

[1] The present report also refers to the fortieth session of the Supervisory Commission, held at Geneva on February 9th and 10th, 1931, at which the Commission elected its officers as follows : Chairman, M. Osuský ; Vice-Chairman, Lord Meston of Agra ; Rapporteur, M. Jean Réveillaud.

A report was communicated to the Council on the revision of the regulations regarding the granting of retiring pensions to ordinary judges and to the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice (Appendix I).

(b) A series of small debts amounting in all to 340.60 francs, representing sales of publications up to the end of the financial year 1929, which still remain unpaid in spite of several attempts to recover them.

The Commission thought that there was no need to continue to mention these sums in the accounts ; it consequently absolved the Treasury from further responsibility and invited the Deputy Auditor to inform it from time to time of the existence of irrecoverable debts in regard to which similar steps might have to be taken.

II. Disposal of the Surplus for 1930 : Reimbursement to States out of the Building Fund and Reimbursement to the Working Capital Fund.

5. As the printed accounts and the auditor's report indicate, the available surplus of the League for 1930 amounts to 659,077.82 francs.

According to precedent, the Commission recommends that the reimbursement of the advances, amounting to 535,179 francs, made out of the Working Capital Fund, to the International Labour Office during 1930, should be considered as a first charge on this surplus, which would thus be reduced to a net sum of 123,898.82 francs. Under Article 38 (a) of the Financial Regulations, the latter sum should be returned to the Members of the League in 1932.

6. As regards the reimbursement to be made from the Building Fund, the Commission would advise the maintenance of the arrangement made during the last three years, whereby the sum actually repaid to the States entitled thereto was fixed at 700,000 francs.

7. On the proposal of the Supervisory Commission, the eleventh Assembly decided to take from the Working Capital Fund the difference between the total cost of setting up the new wireless station (2,330,464 francs) and the credit of 795,822 francs inserted as a first contribution in the 1931 budget. It had also recommended that the sum thus obtained should be repaid subsequently to the Working Capital Fund, " by making such special yearly financial provision as may be considered justifiable after an examination of the annual accounts ".

The Commission therefore recommends that a round sum of 250,000 francs should be added to the 123,899 francs net surplus for 1930, and that the total, 373,899 francs, should be entered in Part V of the 1932 budget — " Buildings at Geneva " under Item II : " Construction of a Wireless Station : (b) Partial Reimbursement of the Costs of Construction to the Working Capital Fund ".

III. Budget for the Fourteenth Financial Period (1932).

1. Secretariat and Special Organisations of the League.

8. Part I of the 1932 budget, which included the proposals of the Secretary-General for the Secretariat and the special organisations of the League, amounted, in the draft submitted to the Supervisory Commission, to 20,625,093 francs, an increase of 3,867,307 francs as compared with the 1931 budget, which — excluding the contribution to the International Refugees Office which is now shown in a separate part of the budget—totalled 16,757,786 francs. Two sources of expenditure which account for this unusual increase should be mentioned immediately. One is the Disarmament Conference, involving an increase of 3,700,000 francs[1] ; the other being the development of liaison with China by means of a credit of 480,000 francs. These two items together total 4,180,000 francs, so that it is only fair to note at the outset the sincere endeavour to effect economies which has made it possible for the Secretary-General to submit a budget that in reality is less by 312,693 francs than that for the present financial year. In order to obtain this result, in spite of the constant increase in the work of the various services, which he emphasised by indicating that the number of letters received and sent had increased by 10 per cent in 1930 as compared with 1929,[2] the Secretary-General explained, in submitting his budget to the Commission, that he had been obliged to arrange for the adjournment of certain meetings of commissions and conferences and had, in some cases, reduced from two to one the number of the regular sessions of League organisations. He had also endeavoured to reduce printing costs, and even proposed to adjourn for one year the publication of certain documents which had previously been contemplated.

With regard to the staff, only two new posts — which appeared to be unavoidable — had been created. Certain new charges, such as the normal salary increments provided by the Staff Regulations amounting to 214,356 francs, were entirely counterbalanced by the reductions it had been possible to make in other items of the budget.

In terminating his statement, the Secretary-General pointed out to the Commission that, although probably the 1933 budget would be appreciably less than the 1932 budget, because it would hardly be likely to include any appropriation for the Disarmament Conference, the adjournment of certain expenditure which, in normal circumstances, would have been provided for in the 1932 budget would involve the increase of certain appropriations in the 1933 budget.

[1] The 1931 budget included a credit for 300,000 francs, and the 1932 budget includes one for 4,000,000 francs (see also paragraph 20).

[2] In 1929, 59,035 and, in 1930, 65,034 — excluding (for 1930) printed petitions and the correspondence of the Refugee Service.

9. The Commission thanked the Secretary-General for his efforts to effect economies. If it had endeavoured with particular care during its examination of the budget to see whether there were still a few economies to be gleaned, that was to satisfy its conscience in view of the difficulties of the present time.

Even so, it had only been able to make a very few changes and comments.

10. Beginning with the estimates for the Assembly Session, the Commission noted that these had been drawn up on the supposition (based on the recommendation of the Publications Committee) that the Assembly would revert to the system in force up to the time of the 1930 Assembly of shortened Minutes prepared by minute-writers. The Supervisory Commission very strongly recommends this system.

11. With regard to the Salaries of the Staff, the Commission requested the competent officials of the three Organisations not to budget for any increases which might result from the adoption by the Assembly of the recommendations of the new Committee of Thirteen: as soon as the Assembly had taken a decision on that point, the necessary sums would be provided in the budget by means of supplementary credits. That was the only meaning to be attached to the reduction of 4,000 francs in item 4 (a).

Notwithstanding its desire to reduce expenditure, the Commission agreed, after hearing the Secretary-General's explanations, to insert, under the heading " Information Section ", a new credit of 45,000 francs for the establishment of a liaison office in India.

12. Reserve Fund for the Death and Invalidity Fund (Sub-head (b) of Item 13, "Special Staff Charges ").

The Secretary-General agreed to reduce the provision from 15,000 to 10,000 francs in view of the fact that this item refers solely to a possible deficit in the Provident Fund and that a large number of officials of that Fund have already opted in favour of the Pensions Fund. Moreover, this provision, which has been included in all budgets since 1926 as a safeguard, has never been employed.

13. The Commission also considered that it might without danger reduce to a certain extent the appropriations for its own sessions (item 17 (b)). A saving of 4,000 francs was thus effected in the Secretariat budget and of 2,000 francs in the budget of the International Labour Office.

14. The Commission examined with particular care the budget of the Financial Section and Economic Intelligence Service.

It noted that, with regard to staff, the Secretary-General was asking for the creation of two new posts and the transformation into permanent posts of three other posts, including one post of Member of Section, the cost of which had been previously covered under the appropriation for " Temporary Staff " in the (now abolished) chapter " Consequences of the World Economic Conference ". The Commission urgently requested the Secretary-General to consider whether these posts were really indispensable. Admitting that certain work was likely to continue or even increase, the Commission supposed that other work would probably be terminated fairly soon.

After pointing out that the permanent posts would not necessarily be occupied by officials holding permanent contracts, the Secretary-General declared that, in the present circumstances, he was prepared forthwith to defend his proposals. In view of the present economic crisis, he thought it would be most undesirable to decrease the staff of a section one of whose principal duties was precisely to seek out and propose measures for combating that crisis. The activities which would soon come to an end involved relatively little work, whereas other new activities might develop. For instance, when the present stage of the gold enquiry had been completed, the League of Nations might be entrusted with new work in the same sphere, as had already happened in the case of agricultural credits — a problem which at present formed one of the most important branches of the Section's work.

The Secretary-General agreed, however, to a reduction of 5,000 francs in the appropriation for the printing of the Section's scientific publications. It should be added that the sale of these publications is growing and constitutes one of the most important items of the appropriations-in-aid.

The draft budget proposed by the Secretary-General included an appropriation of 25,000 francs for the study in 1932 of the problem of the recurrence of periods of economic depression, in case the Assembly decided to institute an enquiry into the subject. The Secretary-General agreed to the Commission's proposal that this credit should be omitted, it being understood that the point would be reconsidered if the Assembly took any steps in the matter.

15. Section for Economic Relations. — The Commission noted the proposal to convert into permanent posts four posts already occupied temporarily by officials whose salaries had previously been provided under the appropriation headed " Consequences of the World Economic Conference ". After obtaining detailed information regarding the work done by each of these officials and noting, further, that their duties now formed part of the normal activities of the Section, the Commission accepted the proposal to raise from 21 to 25 the number of permanent posts in the Section.

The Secretary-General agreed to reduce by 15,000 francs the provision for the sessions of the committees and sub-committees, since it had become possible to decrease from three to two the number of sessions of the Committee of Experts on Customs Nomenclature owing to the advanced stage which the Committee had reached in its work. He also agreed to a reduction of 5,000 francs in the printing costs of these committees.

16. The explanatory note on the budget of the Communications and Transit Organisation showed that, owing to the Disarmament Conference, the appropriation for the meetings of the Communications and Transit Organisation had been appreciably reduced. The Secretary-General was therefore able to agree to the proposal to reduce by 1,000 francs the provision for the printing of documents for the meetings of the Organisation.

One of the delegates on the Fourth Committee of the eleventh Assembly had asked whether it would not be desirable to transfer the salaries of the officials appointed to deal with wireless work from the budget of the Transit Section to the item regarding the wireless station. The Commission, having been informed that these officials might, when not engaged on their special duties, be called upon to deal with questions coming within the domain of the Transit Section, concluded that it would be preferable to maintain the existing arrangement.

The Secretary-General, however, agreed to reduce from 25,000 to 20,000 francs the credit opened under item 32 for the meetings of the committees of experts in connection with the wireless station. The sum in question was intended to cover the cost of experts to advise the Secretary-General both on the installation and construction of the station and its operation when completed.

17. The budget of the International Health Organisation, as submitted to the Commission, amounted to the same sum as in the present year.

When strongly urged by the Commission to reduce the figures on his budget, in view of the present period of stress and in view of the fact that the Organisation would have at its disposal part of the new credits provided for the liaison with China in order to establish a new field of activity in that country, the Medical Director agreed to consider the possibility of holding only one session of the Health Committee in 1932 (instead of two sessions), thus effecting an economy of 25,000 francs under the heading "Sessions of the Health Committee", and another economy of 5,000 francs on the appropriation for general printing.

He remained, however, practically adamant with regard to the surplus of the budget of the Organisation, pointing out that any reduction in the appropriation for the activities of the Section in Europe would produce an immediate repercussion on the efficacy of the work conducted in other continents, because Europe and North America were the spheres in which the Organisation pursued its experiments. The budget of the Organisation bore all the cost arising as a result of the programme of co-operation with the Chinese Government approved in the previous year, whereas the new credit for liaison with China was only intended to cover occasional and exceptional costs such as those of any experts who proceeded to China.

The only agreement reached was that the appropriation for miscellaneous enquiries should be reduced from 200,000 to 190,000 francs, it being understood that the reduction would be made in connection with publications concerning the work carried out in the Far East.

18. At its February session, the Commission had been informed by the Secretary-General of the decision he had taken to fill the vacant post of head of the Opium and Social Questions Section. Having reached the conclusion that the time had not yet come to divide the Section into two as the Assembly had decided in accordance with the proposal he had made to the Committee of Thirteen, he had, with the approval of the Council, appointed a single Director for the whole Section instead of two Chiefs of Section, who would have been placed in charge of the new Opium Section and the new Section for Social Questions respectively. This difference did not involve any increase in the expenditure for 1931 and the Supervisory Commission recommended the Assembly to confirm it.

With regard to the Social Questions Section, the Commission agreed to the increased provision for the sessions of the Advisory Commission for the Protection and Welfare of Children and Young People in order to meet the expenditure involved by the appointment of two new assessors. Moreover, in view of the heavy increase in the budget of 1932, it proposed that the Assembly should defer until 1933 the printing of the " Digest of Laws and Regulations concerning Traffic in Women and Children ", the cost of which would amount to 12,000 francs. In addition, the Secretary-General agreed to a reduction of 2,000 francs under the heading " Printing and Documents " in connection with Child Welfare.

19. Expenditure of the Permanent Central Opium Board. The Secretary-General explained that a reduction of the appropriation for the sessions of the Board had been obtained only because the Board had agreed to meet three times instead of four times in 1932. Even if each of the sessions were longer, an important economy would be effected on travelling expenses.

20. Owing to the continued uncertainty as to the place at which the International Disarmament Conference would meet, the Commission decided to defer until a later session the detailed examination of the credits provided for this Conference. It merely pointed out that the estimates were based on the supposition that the Conference would last for six months and that the delegates would be far more numerous than the delegates to the Assembly. Consequently, a considerable allowance would have to be made for printing costs and a very large temporary increase in the staff of the central services. Figures for the other headings of the Section for the Reduction of Armaments are almost the same as those in the present budget. The Commission recommends the Assembly to adopt them.

21. The printed budget submitted to the Commission for the Intellectual Co-operation Section amounted to 291,453 francs in all, but the Under-Secretary-General, Director of the Section, submitted to the Commission a note to the effect that the original estimates would be insufficient to meet the probable expenditure for 1932.

22. According to the Under-Secretary-General's statement, only after four months' experience of the new organisation approved by the Assembly had it become possible to calculate exactly the expenditure involved by the various aspects of the recommendations put forward by the Committee of Enquiry on the working and organisation of the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation and of the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation. The Committee recommended inter alia:

(a) The creation of an executive committee to meet four times a year, either at Paris or at Geneva, in order to ensure the continuity of the work of the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation between its annual sessions ;

(b) The abolition of the sub-committees which used to meet once a year, and the creation of a permanent committee on arts and letters consisting of twice the number of members as one of the former sub-committees ;

(c) The creation of committees of experts for each of the new questions to be studied ;

(d) The creation of a League of Nations centre of educational information, the continuation of the publications on educational questions printed by the Secretariat, and the extension of the League's activity in the educational sphere.

The experience during the first three months of the present financial year had shown that it was impossible to carry out the programme approved by the Assembly within the present limits of the budget. For instance, the sessions of the executive committee had lasted longer than had been foreseen and the cost of each session would amount to 8,500 francs without counting the expenses of any experts called upon to collaborate with the Committee. It would therefore be necessary to increase from 71,500 to 96,500 francs the credit provided for the plenary sessions of the Committee and the executive committee and of the permanent committee on arts and letters. The provision made for the committees of experts had also proved to be insufficient and would have to be raised to 10,000 francs.

Finally, it was absolutely necessary to make provision for the creation of the post of a clerk (first class), to replace the secretary who would henceforth have to assist the Member of Section in charge of educational questions. In short, the Director of the Section concluded that the total appropriation necessary for intellectual co-operation would have to be raised from 291,453 to 327,853 francs.

23. The Commission desires to remind the Assembly that the budget for intellectual co-operation was stabilised two years ago at the sum of approximately 250,000 francs. That total having been exceeded, it had hoped that the appropriations might be kept below 300,000 francs. The present proposal is to raise them to about 330,000 francs, and the Commission was informed that it would probably be necessary to provide in the 1933 budget credits for a conference on the abolition of Customs duties on educational films, and for meetings of the representatives of the national committees of intellectual co-operation.

In agreement with the Secretary-General, the Commission merely lays these facts before the Assembly, leaving that body to decide what action should be taken in the light of the heavy burdens which will be laid on the next budget.

24. The appropriation in the 1932 budget for the Committee of Enquiry for European Union amounts to 150,000 francs. That sum would cover the expenditure involved by convening three sessions of the plenary committee, ten sub-committees and six committees of experts. The Committee of Enquiry having met for the first time in January 1930, it would be difficult at present to estimate with any accuracy the financial consequences of the scheme it will study. But experience since the beginning of the year seems to indicate that the figure shown in the budget is not excessive.

25. The Commission noted the explanations of the Secretary-General regarding the new appropriation of 480,000 francs for liaison with China. The expenses of the various experts which the League of Nations will place at the disposal of the Chinese Government will be covered by this new item of the budget.

The Chinese Government having given explicit assurances regarding the payment of its contributions, including arrears, the Commission does not raise any objection to the inclusion of the new appropriation in the 1932 budget.

26. For the present year, in fact, it would, on account of the desirability of immediate action along the lines desired by China, agree that, if the sums allocated by the Council for the purpose out of those which are at its free disposal (item 3 of the budget) prove insufficient, the Secretary-General might, as a quite exceptional measure and as a derogation from the Financial Regulations, be authorised to utilise part of the arrears which the Chinese Government will pay in 1931 to meet the otherwise uncovered portion of the expenditure of the various missions. Naturally, the derogation in question will only be possible if the Assembly explicitly consents.

27. With regard to Part V of the budget (Pensions), the exact sum which will have to be paid into the Pensions Fund can only be determined on the expiration of the period allowed for option (December 31 st, 1931), because the sum in question will be proportionate to the number of officials members of the Provident Fund who will leave that fund to become members of the Pensions Fund. A report by an actuary will then make it possible to estimate exactly the expenditure involved by the new regulations. This information will be submitted to the 1933 Assembly.

The Commission was informed that the election by the Assembly of two nationals of countries distant from the headquarters of the League as members of the Administrative Board of the Pensions Fund had necessitated an increase in the budgetary appropriation for that purpose. The Secretary-General agreed to a decrease of 3,000 francs on the new figure, which is thus reduced to 12,000 francs.

2. International Labour Organisation.

28. The Deputy Director said that, except with regard to the following points, the budget of the International Labour Organisation for 1932 would not involve any important increase.

(a) Conferences. — An additional sum of 150,000 francs is provided to meet the cost of a second conference which will discuss maritime questions. The convening of this conference has already been postponed several times, and it must be held in 1932 if the results of the technical meeting next October are favourable.

(b) The increase in the provision made for " Sessions of the Governing Body " is due to the latter's decision in 1930 to increase from three to six the number of substitute employers' and workers' members who may be present at each session at the expense of the Organisation. Probably also a sufficient number of ratifications will be received before the end of 1931, to bring into force the reform of the Governing Body. This reform would involve increased appropriations for that item of the budget.

(c) Salaries of Staff. — It is not proposed to create any new post in the 1932 budget. The increase as compared with the budget of the present year is solely due to the annual statutory increments and readjustment of salaries in conformity with the decisions of the last Assembly.

(d) The appropriations for the Branch Office in China have been augmented in order to allow the Office to co-operate more effectively with this great country, in which so many serious social and economic problems arise.

29. Examining the items one by one, the Deputy Director accepted a reduction of 2,000 francs on the automobile service for conferences.

The Commission raised no objection — in the item regarding salaries — to the inclusion of a sum of 8,000 francs to cover the granting, retrospectively, of the new scales of salary to Chiefs of Division and to the Deputy Director of the International Labour Office. The Deputy Director had previously explained to the Commission that according to the decisions of the last Assembly these officials had been entitled to receive the increases from the beginning of the year ; the increases had not been granted immediately because no funds were available. Applying the same principles to the International Labour Office and to the Secretariat, the Commission requested the Deputy Director to omit from the draft budget the appropriation of 13,000 francs (increase in the salary of Chiefs of Section) as no decision had yet been taken by the Assembly on the subject.

30. The following additional questions were also considered by the Commission :

(a) Brazil's contribution for the financial period 1931. — In the light of Article 22 of the Financial Regulations, the Commission held that Brazil's contribution for the financial period 1931 could not be reckoned as an appropriation-in-aid until it had actually been paid. It would therefore only be possible to include this sum if Brazil paid her contribution before the end of the next Assembly.

(b) Sale of the apartment occupied by the Rome Branch Office. — The Commission was unable to agree to the financial arrangements proposed by the correspondent of the Rome Office in case the apartment at present occupied by the Office (which the League of Nations purchased some time ago) is sold. An appropriation of 8,600 Swiss francs was therefore included in the budget to cover the rent and cost of installing the new office, it being understood that the yield of the sale of the former premises would be credited to the League's capital account.

(c) Possibility of holding the International Labour Conference in 1932 elsewhere than at Geneva. — The Deputy Director informed the Commission that it might perhaps be necessary to provide an additional credit of at least 200,000 francs in case the International Labour Conference were unable to meet at Geneva on account of the Disarmament Conference. The Commission decided not to make any recommendation on the subject until a decision had been reached by the Council regarding the place at which the Disarmament Conference would be held.

(d) Proposal to construct an annex. — The Commission had before it the following resolution adopted by the Governing Body at its last session :

" . . . the Governing Body . . . authorises the Director :

" (1) To remind the Assembly of the communication that was made to it on this subject last year ;

" (2) To inform it that, although the Governing Body has not yet decided on any definite plans for building, a preliminary examination of the question shows that it is necessary to count on an expenditure of up to one and a-half million francs, according to the plan adopted ;

" (3) To state that a formal request for a grant may be made in 1932. "

The Commission noted this resolution, which did not call for any decision on the part of the next Assembly. It felt, however, bound to point out immediately that, in any case, some time must elapse before the League of Nations could contemplate any extension of its present building programme.

3. Permanent Court of International Justice.

(a) General Observations.

31. The Commission noted the explanations of the Registrar to the effect that the budgetary estimates of the Court for 1932 had been drawn up on the same lines as those of the budget for 1931, except in so far as the effects of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly in 1930 were concerned, the aim of those resolutions being to achieve partially, within the general framework of the 1920 Statute and by administrative methods, some of the objects which it had been sought to attain by the revision of the Statute in 1929, which has not yet come into force. As an example of these effects may be mentioned a new appropriation for long leave to be granted every three years to judges coming from distant countries, this sum being to a large extent compensated by a reduction in the appropriation for removal expenses.

Moreover, the Commission specially noted the following points :

32. The Commission approved the transformation into a permanent post of a temporary post already existing under the title " Assistant in the Printing Department ".

The Commission noted the decision of the Court not to fill the temporary post for the Press Service created in the 1931 budget. It also noted the desire of the Court to create a new post in the Registrar's Office which would also be temporary with the same salary as that proposed for the Press attaché. After hearing the detailed explanations of the Registrar on this subject, the Commission concluded that the desire of the Court should be complied with.

(c) Salary of the Registrar.

33. The following report was forwarded to the Council which, under Article 32 of the Statute of the Court, is responsible for fixing the Registrar's salary.

34. By a decision taken on May 19th, 1929, the Council decided "to forward to the Supervisory Commission, for its opinion, the letter from the President of the Permanent Court of International Justice regarding the salary of the Registrar of the Court ".

There was attached to the letter of the President of the Court a resolution, dated September 10th, 1929, in which the Court, after having paid tribute to the " exceptional qualifications and unfailing devotion to duty " of the Registrar, whom it had re-elected for a further period of seven years, proposed that the maximum of his salary should be increased from 27,000 florins to 32,000 florins, this maximum being reached by annual increments of 1,250 florins.

35. On May 6th, 1930, the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission informed the Council that the Commission was " satisfied of the advantage of being in possession of the recommendations of the Committee of Thirteen before submitting to the Council its advice on the question of the salary of the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice. "

36. The question being again brought before it by a note which was shown in the Supplementary Budget of the Court for 1931, the Supervisory Commission, at its meeting on September 30th, 1930, " with reference to the suggestion which it had made in its communication to the Council in May, considered that, as a consequence of the recommendation made by the Fourth Committee in regard to the emoluments of the senior officers of the Secretariat, the question raised by the Court should be deferred until next year ".

37. The question of the salaries of the senior officers of the League having been expressly referred to it by the eleventh Assembly, the new Committee of Thirteen made, on February 5th, 1931, the following recommendation :

"22. Linked up with the question of the salaries, etc., of the principal officers of the Secretariat is that of the salaries of the Registrar and Deputy Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice, which was referred to the Committee in the terms given in the following extract from the Fourth Committee's report :

" 'The Committee adopted the chapter relating to the Registry of the Permanent Court on the understanding that paragraph 62 concerning the salary of the Registrar and

Deputy Registrar would be referred to the Special Committee in the same way as similar questions relating to the principal officers of the Secretariat.'

"23. By a resolution dated September 10th, 1929, the Permanent Court of International Justice made a proposal with a view to fixing the salary of the Registrar of the Court for the seven-year period beginning on January 1st, 1930. This proposal was to take as a basis the present salary of the holder of the office (27,000 florins) and to increase it during the new period by the same amounts (1,250 florins) and at the same intervals (annually for four years) as during the first period of service ; the maximum salary would thus be raised from 27,000 to 32,000 florins.

"24. Having regard to the provisional character of its recommendations in connection with the Under-Secretaries-General, the Committee thought it better not to adhere to the proposal made by the Committee of Thirteen last year to the effect that the Registrar should be assimilated, as regards salary, to the Under-Secretaries-General. On the other hand, it agreed to the resolution adopted by the Court in 1929 and advises the competent bodies of the League to adopt it" (see document A.8.1931.X, page 5).

38. Being in agreement with the recommendations of the Committee of Thirteen, the Supervisory Commission recommends that they should be adopted by the Council, which, in accordance with Article 32 of the Statute of the Court, is responsible for fixing the salary of the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

39. The Commission noted the explanations of the Registrar to the effect that, with an annual appropriation of 30,000 florins, together with the fund of 70,000 florins which had accumulated since 1925, the Court would be able, during the nine-year period ending December 31st, 1939, to meet its obligations under the existing pensions rules, but that at the end of that period other resources would have to be provided.

The Commission decided to ask the Registrar to submit to it a memorandum on the question, indicating, in particular, the average annual expenditure for which provision would have to be made in future in respect of pensions. On the basis of the memorandum, the Commission will, when the time comes, consider whether a pensions fund sufficient to meet current expenditure in this connection ought to be created by means of larger annual appropriations.

(e) Capital Account.

40. The Commission noted the Registrar's statements to the effect that the appropriations indicated in the two articles appearing in this section for 1931 concerning furniture and the Library were repeated in 1932 because, owing to reasons for which the Registrar was not responsible, the work to which they referred could only be completed in 1932. There would therefore probably be a considerable saving on this chapter in the closed accounts for 1931.

(f) Additional Premises for the Court.

41. Following on negotiations begun in 1930, the Secretary-General has recently received from the Carnegie Foundation a provisional proposal the result of which would be to place at the disposal of the Court ten new offices. The League of Nations would have to bear the expense (by means of annual payments spread over a long period), not only of adapting these offices, but also of the construction of a new wing to house the Academy of International Law, which at present occupies the premises in which the new offices would be established. These premises would become the freehold property of the Foundation.

The Commission felt that it could not recommend the acceptance of the proposal of the Carnegie Foundation. It therefore requested the Secretary-General to enter into negotiations on the subject.

42. Consequently, it is of opinion that it would be useless to create at present the new post of office-keeper, as proposed by the Registrar, in view of the enlargement of the premises at the disposal of the Court.

(g) Total Budget.

43. In the light of the above changes suggested by the Supervisory Commission and accepted by the Registrar, the budget of the Court for 1932 will amount in all to 1,321,981 florins (2,753,687 francs).

4. Budget of the Nansen International Refugees Office.

44. On April 28th, the Commission received, through the Secretary-General, the budget of the International Refugees Office which had been adopted on the same day by the Governing Body of the Office. M. Max Huber, President of the Office, was also good enough to place himself at the disposal of the Commission for the purpose of supplying further information.

The Commission immediately observed that the amount of the total contribution requested by the Office was approximately the same as that granted in the previous year by the League of Nations (330,847 francs, instead of 333,800 francs). It therefore asked the President how the Office proposed to give effect to the decision of the 1931 Assembly that the Office should be liquidated before December 31st, 1939.

45. M. Max Huber replied that neither he nor the Governing Body had lost sight of the decision. It had been necessary to draw up the budget now submitted to the Commission without delay, in order that it might be incorporated in the budget transmitted to the States Members. As, however, investigations were to be conducted within the next few months, the Governing Body hoped to meet on July 1st to prepare a report to the Assembly which would include a scheme for gradual liquidation.

Naturally, he could not forestall in any way the decisions the Governing Body would take regarding the plan for liquidation.

46. This statement convinced the Supervisory Commission that its sole duty at present was to embody these explanations in its report for the purpose of drawing the " special " attention of the Assembly to this case, in accordance with Article 16, paragraph 5, of the Financial Regulations, in order that the Assembly may " specially examine " the plan of the Governing Body of the Office on which the eventual budgetary solution will entirely depend.

The case in point is not an ordinary matter in which the Commission is called upon to supply funds for an organ of the League and to judge of the advisability of the various items of expenditure.

The Office is an autonomous organ which establishes its own budget. The League has only undertaken to supply it until 1939 with a lump-sum contribution. It will therefore be for the 1931 Assembly, when it has before it the proposed scheme for progressive liquidation, to decide whether it agrees to accept the scale of progressive diminution proposed. Only then will the Supervisory Commission be able to take action under the terms of Article 16*(c)* to which Article 16, paragraph 5, refers.

5. Total Budget of the League of Nations for 1932.

47. In short, the total amount of the net reduction proposed by the Supervisory Commission and accepted by the Secretary-General and the competent officials of the autonomous organisations amounts, for :

		Swiss francs
I.	The Secretariat and special organisations, and Pensions (3,000 francs) to.	120,250
II.	The International Labour Organisation to	8,400
III.	The Permanent Court of International Justice to 11,150 florins, or	23,225
	Total	151,875

The budget for 1932 is therefore as follows :

I.	Secretariat and special organisations	20,507,843
II.	International Labour Organisation	9,050,810
III.	Permanent Court of International Justice	2,753,687
IV.	Nansen International Office for Refugees	330,847
V.	Buildings at Geneva	1,748,899
VI.	Pensions	1,015,023
	Total	35,407,109

IV. Miscellaneous Questions.

1. Annual Report of the Publications Committee.

48. The Committee noted with satisfaction the fourth annual report of the Publications Committee of the Secretariat (Appendix II). The report shows that commendable efforts have been made to reduce the charges which heavily burden three chapters of the budget (staff, printing and supplies).

As has already been observed in connection with the appropriation for the Assembly, the Committee agreed to the Secretary-General's proposal to abandon the system of verbatim records — introduced as an experiment in 1930 — in the Assembly Committees.

49. With regard to the last paragraph of the report, the Commission is of opinion that the proposed safeguard would be useful. It therefore suggests that the Assembly should adopt the following resolution :

> " When proposals involving publications not immediately required for work already undertaken by the League are made by a League body, no final decision shall be taken until the Secretary-General has been consulted regarding the financial and administrative consequences of these proposals."

2. Constructional Work on the New Buildings.

50. The Supervisory Commission having been instructed by the 1930 Assembly " to deal with all future questions which may arise in connection with the new buildings ", and being determined to see that the cost of the work remains well within the bounds of the estimates adopted by the Assembly, was disagreeably surprised at its February session to learn, in a communication from the Secretary-General, that these estimates had already been exceeded in two directions — in connection with the work of levelling and draining.

The first point was to determine the exact rôle of the Supervisory Commission as compared with the Building Committee, and then to endeavour to ascertain whether the combined action of the Committee and the Commission was adequate to defend the interests of the League as against the architects and contractors.

51. The Commission instructed its Rapporteur to obtain further information on the subject — information which was forthcoming at its April session.

The Rapporteur's enquiries on this point (Appendix III) show that the Building Committee, particularly since it has obtained the assistance of an " inspector-reviser ", is in a position to keep in touch with the daily progress of the work. Unfortunately, early experience tends to suggest that the Committee is not infrequently confronted by unforeseen circumstances which may entirely or even more than counterbalance the economy obtained through the 18.5 per cent rebate granted by the contractors on the main construction work.

52. The Supervisory Commission is prepared to use all its influence within the limits of its powers to assist the Building Committee.

It therefore requests the Assembly to call upon the Building Committee :

(1) Whenever it is faced with a difficult situation which might eventually mean that the estimates would be exceeded to a considerable extent, to notify the Supervisory Commission of the fact in time to enable the latter to take such action as may be incumbent upon it ;

(2) To communicate to the Supervisory Commission quarterly a table with explanatory notes, so that the Commission may see how the work is proceeding and what expenditure is being incurred and anticipated under each item of the estimates.

3. Salaries of Locally Recruited Staff.

53. According to the decisions of the eleventh Assembly (see documents A.86.1930.X (page 8) and A.16.1930 (page 19, paragraph 38)) the Supervisory Commission examined at its February session reports submitted to it by the Secretary-General and by the Director of the International Labour Office regarding the salaries of locally recruited staff.

It should perhaps be pointed out that the Committee of Thirteen regarded the present situation as unsatisfactory inasmuch as it entails a feeling of inequality between two officials doing the same work at different salaries. The Committee therefore proposed that, in future, there should be more equality of treatment for all officials of the same category, due account nevertheless being taken of expatriation in the case of international officials. The Assembly adopted the conclusions of the Committee of Thirteen and instructed the competent officials of the various organs of the League, and the Supervisory Commission, to re-examine the question.

54. The proposals submitted by the Secretary-General were based on the following considerations :

(a) A much fairer and far more simple result was obtained by calculating the expatriation bonus at 25 per cent of the international salary for the first category of the second division and at 30 per cent for the other categories, instead of the present arrangement under which the bonus might amount to as much as 41 per cent at the beginning of the scale and 29 per cent at the end.

(b) The percentage of the deduction from the international salary for non-expatriation was considerably decreased in the maximum salaries as compared with the minimum salaries ; it was reduced to 15 per cent for the first category and to 20 per cent for the other categories.

This proposal would produce greater equality and would also take into account the following consideration : the longer the service of locally recruited officials, the less attention need be paid to comparison with local administrations. Attention was, in fact, directed, more and more, as length of service increased, to comparison with the salaries of those international officials with whom the local official came into contact.

(c) Finally, the figures for annual increments were the same for both international and local officials, so that the maximum salary would be attained in about the same number of years by both categories.

55. The memorandum of the Director of the International Labour Office pointed out that the establishment of the second division of the Office had from the beginning been modelled on the system of a single scale of salaries. Whereas in the Secretariat officials doing absolutely the same work were paid differently according as to whether their " homes " were in Switzerland or in some other country, at the International Labour Office the international categories were at the top of the scale of the second division and the local categories at the bottom. This differentiation in salaries corresponded to a differentiation in duties and responsibilities. In view, however, of the decisions of the Assembly, the International Labour Office was of opinion that equalisation between the salary conditions of international and local staff should be attained by a re-estimation of the rates and number of annual increments and of the expatriation bonuses, which latter should be a fixed sum to be kept entirely distinct from salaries.

56. The Director of the International Labour Office, acting on the instructions of the Governing Body, also thought that it would not be sufficient to decrease the existing inequality between the situation of international and local officials, but that another inequality should also be remedied — the inequality, from the point of view of their careers, between staff (whether international or local) of the second division and staff of the first division. He pointed out that whereas, in the course of his career, the salary of a Member of Section might be increased in the ratio of 100 to 233, the most favoured official from the point of view of career in the second division only passed from 100 to 160.

The Director of the International Labour Office therefore proposed a system of promotion by seniority which would make it possible for officials in the second division who had attained the maximum salary of their category to pass normally into the immediately higher category of the same division. Promotion by seniority on those lines would mean the utilisation, for a career in each group of employment (stenographers, clerks, roneographers), of two consecutive categories constituting the second and first class of each particular branch of work. Newcomers would enter the second (and lower) class, the first (and higher) class being reserved for promotion.

57. Having noted that, in the matter of figures, the difference between the proposals of the Secretariat and those of the International Labour Office was slight, the Commission requested the competent officials to combine, in a single series of scales, the proposals which they had submitted separately, taking into account the following principles :

(1) The indemnity for expatriation should be fixed at a definite figure for each category ;

(2) Annual increments should be fixed at the same figure both for local and international officials ;

(3) There should be the same possibilities from the point of view of career for both categories — i.e., the maximum of each category should be attained in an equal number of years by local and by international officials.

58. The competent officials of the Secretariat and the International Labour Office accordingly submitted to the Commission the following scale of salaries for local officials in the Secretariat and in the International Labour Office. The Commission recommends the Assembly to adopt this scale.

International Scale	Number of years necessary to obtain the maximum	Local scale proposed [1]	Number of years necessary to obtain the maximum	Constant expatriation bonus	Percentage of difference
					At the maximum	At the minimum
10,000—400—14,400	11	7,500—400—11,900	11	2,500	17	24
8,500—250—11,250	11	6,000—250— 8,750	11	2,500	23	30
7,500—200— 9,500	10	5,250—200— 7,250	10	2,250	24	30
6,500—175— 8,000	8½	4,550—175— 6,050	8 ½	1,950	24	30
No international scale.	—	3,600—150— 5,100	10	—	—	—

The adoption of these scales would cost roughly :

	Immediately	At maximum
For the Secretariat.	26,000	60,000
For the International Labour Office	15,000	50,000
	41,000	110,000

59. The Commission was of opinion that the proposals of the International Labour Office with regard to promotion by seniority lay outside the scope of its terms of reference as defined by the last Assembly, which had merely instructed the Commission to adjust the existing inequalities between the local and international staff. The Supervisory Commission therefore can do no more than bring the said proposals to the knowledge of the Assembly, with the observation that their adoption would probably involve further expenditure.

[1] Present local scales :

5,000—200— 8,000
4,500—175— 7,000
4,000—150— 6,000
3,500—125— 5,000

REVISION OF THE REGULATIONS REGARDING THE GRANTING OF RETIRING PENSIONS TO ORDINARY JUDGES AND TO THE REGISTRAR OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

Report by the Supervisory Commission to the Council.

In his verbal report to the Assembly on September 25th, 1930, the Rapporteur of the First Committee on the question of the organisation of the Permanent Court of International Justice said that the fact that the Committee had refrained from making certain amendments which might have appeared desirable in the regulations regarding the granting of retiring pensions to ordinary judges and to the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice was explained partly by motives of expediency and partly by the circumstance that these regulations could always be revised by the Assembly on the proposal of the Council.

According to the Rapporteur's statement, the following three points were those to which certain members had drawn attention :

(1) Exemption from taxation ;
(2) Pensions for widows and children ;
(3) Invalidity pensions.

At its last session, the Council decided to ask the Supervisory Commission to examine the questions raised by the First Committee, since the regulations governing retiring pensions for the members of the Court had been drawn up by the Council and the Assembly on the basis of proposals put forward by the Supervisory Commission.

At its fortieth session, held at Geneva on February 9th and 10th, 1931, the Supervisory Commission examined the question which had been referred to it by the Council.

1. As regards the question of exemption from taxation, the Commission noted that the resolution of December 18th, 1920, with regard to the salaries of members of the Court stated that " allowances and salaries shall be free of all taxes ". Further, the report adopted by the 1920 Assembly concerning the organisation of the Permanent Court of International Justice contained the following passage on the question :

> " To ensure an equal position for all the members of the Court of International Justice by neutralising the different degrees in which their salaries may be affected by taxation in the various countries, the Committee proposes that all salaries and allowances should be free of taxation. As, however, the decisions of the Assembly may be inoperative as against the fiscal laws applied in the different countries, it has been proposed that the League of Nations should reimburse the members of the Court for any taxes which they may be obliged to pay."

The Supervisory Commission has always considered, and still considers, that the idea of equality thus put forward as a basis for exemption from taxation only holds good while the judges are performing their duties. There seems no reason to grant the former holders of high international posts, once they have retired into private life, a privilege giving them an advantage over the other nationals of the countries in which they live.

2. As regards the other two points, the Supervisory Commission postponed any decision for the present; for, as any proposal on its part would involve fresh expenditure, it did not feel authorised to undertake the revision of the regulations which have just come into force in the absence of definite instructions from the Assembly. It points out, however, that, as regards one of the two points at least, that of invalidity, a specific solution is provided by the Regulations (Article 1, paragraph 3), which authorises the Court "by a special decision based on the fact that the person concerned is in a precarious state of health and has insufficient means " to grant invalidity pensions.

General Observations.

This table shows that 1930 has been a very heavy year in League publications and the question at once arises whether a reduction is possible in 1931. The Committee's answer to that question is that it is advisable both in the interests of the League's work and of economy. It believes reduction possible if the responsible League organs take greater care when adopting new proposals to restrict the amount of material to be published in connection with these proposals, and if certain reforms recently instituted and referred to later are strictly carried out.

In April 1930, the Secretary-General issued a circular demanding strict observance of the following recommendation made by the Supervisory Commission and adopted by the ninth Assembly :

> " Chairmen of all Committees are requested :
> " . . . to limit strictly at one meeting the amount of material which is to form the basis of their discussions at the next, quite apart from the question whether they have the money for publication or not :
> " (a) By framing their requests for information in a form which will induce short replies ;
> " (b) By instructing either the Rapporteur or the Secretariat to summarise that material, keeping the original replies merely for reference ;
> " (c) By emphasising the importance of conciseness in any reports requested from outside sources."

The Secretary-General's circular has had some, but not sufficient, results.

He has recently issued instructions that when information which is to form the basis of a report is asked for by questionnaire, circular letter or other means, the appropriate part of the above recommendation shall be reproduced in the letter asking for the information.

[1] Details are given in the Sub-appendix.

The following instances are given to illustrate the need of limiting in the early stages the amount to be published on a given question :

(1) The Child Welfare Committee appointed a Sub-Committee of Jurists to draw up a questionnaire to be sent to all Governments concerning auxiliary services to juvenile courts. The questionnaire drawn up by three Rapporteurs can hardly be said to be framed in a form to induce short replies, and the resulting document is 136 printed pages.

(2) The report of the Committee of Enquiry on Opium-smoking in the Far East contains, in addition to the main report, separate chapters giving detailed information on each country visited. The Committee does not feel competent to express an opinion on the necessity of including all this information, but points out that the first two volumes of the report are 576 pages and will cost about 18,500 Swiss francs. There will be two other volumes.

(3) The Economic and Financial Sections have a great many questions on their hands dealt with by a number of committees and the output of documents is naturally large (on the gold question alone over eleven hundred pages have been printed in 1930 and 1931 at a cost of about 36,000 Swiss francs); nevertheless, it is believed that these, like other League committees, would in the end welcome a reduction in the amount of material they are expected to read.

One Committee, the Opium Advisory, to which during last December 129 documents (amounting to 705 pages in roneo and 508 pages in print) were circulated, adopted in February a plan whereby information is circulated in a more condensed and much more convenient form.

Steps taken towards Economy in Documents.

On the advice of the Publications Committee, the Secretary-General recently adopted the following measures in the interest of economy :

(1) The shorter form of records arranged according to subject which is used by the Economic Committee and its sub-committees is recommended to secretaries of other League committees.[1]
In any case, the précis-writers are being instructed to write shorter Minutes than in the past.
Authorisation for the use of verbatim records has to be obtained in each case from the Secretary-General.

(2) Where outside grants are received for the publication of collections of laws, etc., the whole expense involved, including the cost of translations, should be met from these grants.

(3) Whenever Sections or committees ask persons outside the Secretariat to write a report, they should at the outset fix a maximum length for the report.

(4) In future, printers' proofs should not be sent to outside authors for correction.

(5) The maximum length of a roneoed document is reduced from 50 to 40 pages.

The Publications Committee has advised the Secretary-General that, with the introduction of these changes, considerable reductions should be possible in the printing estimates of all the technical sections.

Records of Assembly Committees.

It was decided last year to have verbatim records instead of ordinary Minutes of all Assembly Committees. It is difficult to estimate exactly the extra cost of this experiment, but it is believed to have amounted to at least 50,000 Swiss francs.

A Committee appointed by the Secretary-General to make proposals for this year has decided to revert for Assembly Committees to the 1929 system of Minutes based on a verbatim record, which could be considerably shortened by the minute-writers. The verbatim record would be kept in the Secretariat for reference and also a copy placed on the Press board. The Information Section and the secretaries of the First, Third and Sixth Committees considered it essential to have a verbatim record, and it was thought difficult to differentiate between the six committees. The secretary of the Fifth Committee thought it essential to have a verbatim, especially as regards opium.

The two members of the Publications Committee present at the meeting were in favour of ordinary Minutes only, and did not consider the verbatim record necessary except for special occasions of exceptionally important debates. They were in favour of ordinary Minutes and of not retaining any temporary verbatim reporters after the end of the general debate in the Assembly.

[1] This recommendation has not so far been favourably received. The Child Welfare Committee and the Traffic in Women Committee have not found it possible to agree to it.

The Committee discussed the question whether the Press communiqués and the accounts in the Assembly Journal could be amalgamated. This was considered impossible by a majority of the Committee, but it was suggested that it depended entirely on the individual and that it might be possible to find persons able to do both.

It is therefore suggested that for this year there should be a reversion to the 1929 system. It may be, however, that the Supervisory Commission would wish the Assembly to consider whether, for future years, it would not desire to go further and dispense with verbatims altogether for the Assembly Committees.

Other Economies considered.

During its studies of possible means of reducing expenses on publications, the Publications Committee thought it its duty to examine, among other publications, the Treaty Series, the publication of which is provided for under Article 18 of the Covenant, and it appointed a Sub-Committee to go into this question. The Sub-Committee was unanimously of the opinion that the Assembly alone could decide on any alteration to be made in the present system. A majority of the Sub-Committee considers that the Treaty Series in its present complete form is of great value, and that this value would be reduced if any changes were made. It therefore recommends no change.

A minority is in favour of not translating treaties registered in one official language into the other official language and of only translating treaties registered in other languages into one of the official languages (English or French) ; further, of allowing the Secretary-General a certain latitude in excluding : (a) treaties or parts of treaties that he considers of no international interest ; (b) treaties that can conveniently be consulted elsewhere. The Committee is advised by the Legal Section that both (a) and (b) would involve an amendment to the Covenant.

The Minutes of the Sub-Committee are available for consultation.

The expense of producing the Treaty Series has not gone up, but there has been an increase in other work. Unless there is a reduction in the other work, it will be necessary to engage extra translators, if the issue of the Treaty Series is to be kept up to date in its present form. Sales of the Treaty Series have gone up from 38,450 Swiss francs in 1929 to 43,150 Swiss francs in 1930.

On reading this somewhat critical report, the Supervisory Commission may well ask why the Publications Committee has not itself been able to do more. Its main difficulty lies in the fact that its attempted intervention usually comes too late ; an official authorisation by the Council or the Assembly to issue such and such a report has been given, the credit is available, and the resulting document is already prepared ; in addition, there is always the argument that an outside author will be offended if his report is cut down. The remedy, in the opinion of the Committee, must be applied at an earlier stage in the proceedings. Committees or individual delegates sometimes make proposals which lead to publications not immediately required for work already undertaken by the League, and the main object of which is to collect information. In such cases, it is suggested that no final decision should be taken until the Secretary-General has considered whether the proposals involve publications that put too great a strain on the existing administrative and financial resources of the Secretariat.

Publications Department.

Sales in 1930 amounted to 323,500 Swiss francs (the amount foreseen in the budget being 300,000) against 253,393 Swiss francs in 1929, an increase of 70,107 Swiss francs. In view of the economic crisis, it is hardly to be expected that such increases can continue indefinitely.

The following table shows global and other subscriptions for 1929 and 1930 :

	All-inclusive subscriptions	Sectional subscriptions
1929	117	389
1930	148	715

Receipts from the principal buying countries were as follows :

	1929	1930
	Swiss francs
United States of America	91,020	142,515
Great Britain	37,808	42,200
Japan	20,946	22,965
Switzerland	14,508	21,158
Germany	24,006	20,450
France	11,427	9,727
India	3,378	5,350
Italy	5,743	5,025
Netherlands	5,101	5,993
Czechoslovakia	1,488	4,141
Belgium	2,908	3,293
Spain	2,791	3,710

Far the greatest increase is in the United States, where a grant was made to the World Peace Foundation for publicity purposes. In Germany, France and Italy the receipts are lower than those of 1929 owing to the fact that some payments for 1930 were received and included in the accounts at the end of 1929, while this was not the case at the end of 1930. Increased publicity work by the Czechoslovak agent is largely responsible for the 260 per cent increase in sales there.

Printing Department.

All urgent printing work is given to Swiss printers at prices which may be considered low as compared with the prices generally paid for similar work in Switzerland, Germany, and England. Less urgent work is given to printers outside Switzerland (after estimates have been secured) at prices which are considerably below Swiss prices. Unfortunately, about 70 per cent of the documents are urgent and cannot be sent far away.

During 1930, the amount of printing work increased by over 11 per cent and this necessitated the engagement of a number of temporary proof-readers and other staff. Owing to the reorganisation and the willingness of the staff to work long hours, the proportional increase of staff was not as great as the increase in the amount of work, but the output has reached its limits, and a further increase in work would undoubtedly result in a demand for more staff or delay in issuing documents.

In 1930, the number of reports and memoranda containing complicated tables greatly increased ; these tables involve much more work for the department and the printers.

Appendix III.

NOTE BY THE RAPPORTEUR OF THE SUPERVISORY COMMISSION ON THE QUESTION OF THE NEW BUILDINGS.

At its session in February 1931, the Supervisory Commission considered what would be the effects of the duties entrusted to it by the eleventh Assembly.

The eleventh Assembly, " after fixing at 23,633,150 francs the credit for the construction of the Assembly Hall and the building of the Secretariat ", adopted the following resolution :

> " The Assembly requests the Supervisory Commission to deal with all future financial questions which may arise in connection with the new buildings."

It should first be noted that this resolution does not in any way derogate from the powers previously delegated to the Building Committee [1] created by the fifth Assembly at the request of the Rapporteur of its Fourth Committee (document A.82.1924.X), which instructed the Committee " to fix the details of the building operations and their supervision, and to invite and accept tenders ".

At its meeting on February 10th, 1931, the Supervisory Commission asked the Secretariat official in charge of questions connected with the construction of the new buildings to explain to it what were exactly the duties and responsibilities of the Building Committee. " According to the terms of the resolution under which it was created ", said Mr. Lloyd, " the Building Committee had to approve the final working plans, and any changes which might subsequently be proposed, to fix conditions of tender, to examine the tenders received and to make recommendations to the Secretary-General for the allotment of contracts ; to see that the probable expenditure on each contract was within the limits fixed by the architects' estimate and to take all possible precautions to avoid subsequent supplementary expenditure ; to follow closely the progress of the work by means of the architects' periodical reports or by any other appropriate means ; to keep a constant check upon progressive expenditure in relation to the estimate, and, in a general way, to advise the Secretary-General on any difficulties which may arise. "

This, then, is the situation of the body which acts as an agent for and adviser to the Secretary-General (who in the last resort is alone responsible to the Assembly). A body entrusted with the general task of seeing that the new buildings are constructed according to the Assembly's wishes and, in particular — this being one of the essential points which affect the Supervisory Commission — that the expenditure on the work remains strictly within the limits of the sum voted by the eleventh Assembly.

The report of the Building Committee, dated April 1st, 1931, which was communicated to the Supervisory Commission, conclusively demonstrates that the Committee is determined to carry out this most essential function. The report also partly dispels the anxiety felt by our Commission on hearing that the first two batches of work allocated (levelling and drainage) had resulted in the expenditure of sums considerably in excess of the estimates. It is clear now that there will be an excess expenditure of about 178,000 francs on the levelling work and about 50,000 francs on the drainage — i.e., about 14 per cent for the former (which comes under the heading " levelling and outside work " in the estimates) and 130 per cent for the latter. It should be noted that in the estimate submitted by the architects absolutely no provision was made for draining the subsoil. With regard to the levelling work, the architects hope that the levelling down of the soil will allow, as a set-off, certain economies to be realised through the reduction of the cube of the buildings. However that may be, the fact remains that the margin for " unforeseen expenditure " in the estimate which was originally 759,000 francs and which had already been reduced to 503,992 francs both by the increase from 2 to 3 per cent of the sum allowed to meet the cost of the architects' office out of the total provided in the estimate and by the need for deducting the architects' fees and office expenses in connection with this unforeseen work, has now been further decreased to the extent of some 90,000 francs spent on drainage. It is absolutely necessary that the rebate of 18.5 per cent accorded by the contractors on the main construction work, amounting to 11 millions, should not be absorbed by further unforeseen contingencies.

The question is whether the Building Committee is adequately equipped to keep in touch with the progress of the work so as to be able to take action in time.

With regard to the first point, I am glad to note that the Building Committee has, on its own initiative, created a post which seemed to us to be indispensable. Last March it selected a technical officer, having very excellent references and entirely independent of the architects, whose duties, under the title of " Inspector-Reviser ", will be " to keep a continual watch on the progress of the work and to submit daily reports on the subject ".

---

[1] The Building Committee, consisting of officials of the League of Nations and experts appointed by the Council, is at present composed as follows :

The SECRETARY-GENERAL (Chairman) (substitute, Mr. JACKLIN) ;
Marquis PAULUCCI DI CALBOLI BARONE ;
Mr. BUTLER (International Labour office) ;
M. BROESE VAN GROENOU, Architect (Netherlands) ;
M. DI FAUSTO or M. BIANCHI, Architects (Italy) ;
Dr. Wilhelm KREIS, Architect (Germany) ;
Mr. MARKHAM, Architect (Great Britain) ;
M. PEYCELON, Director of the Official Journal (Paris) ;
M. STREIT-BARON, former Contractor (Geneva).

" Thus ", the Building Committee's report observes, " the Committee and the Secretariat will be safeguarded against surprises. "

The Inspector-Reviser has also to carry out the indispensable duty of revising all the accounts sent in by the contractors after checking by the architects' department.

It will be the duty of the Building Committee, duly warned by its Inspector-Reviser of any modifications which might be contemplated as compared with the basic estimates, resolutely to defend the interests of the League.

From a theoretical point of view, the rights of the League are not open to discussion. The contract concluded between the Secretary-General (as principal) and the architects (as agents) defines the situation as follows :

" Article IV. — The agents shall remain in constant touch with the principal. Generally speaking, they shall notify him beforehand and in good time of the steps they intend to take and shall obtain his approval before taking such steps.

" The principal shall have the widest possible rights of supervision and verification ; he may ask any questions, take any decisions, order any alterations and, in general, issue any instructions he may deem necessary. In particular, the principal shall alone be entitled to approve schemes, estimates and any alterations made therein, and shall alone be entitled to allot the work. The plans of construction shall also be subject to his approval. Similarly, any changes and alterations must be approved by the principal beforehand. The agents shall adhere strictly to the orders issued to them."

We may also quote the two following paragraphs from Article V :

" (4) Estimate. — Preparation of a detailed preliminary estimate and, at the request of the principal, of a descriptive estimate or memorandum. The agents shall see that the preliminary estimate, if accepted by the principal, shall not be exceeded. For this purpose, the agents must draw the special attention of the principal to the fact beforehand whenever the result of tenders or changes in the plans or work proposed might involve additional expenditure. They must also submit quarterly a report on the expenditure incurred, the progress of the work and further estimated expenditure.

" (6) Preparation of the Invitation for Tenders. — Proposals for allotting work accompanied by a comparative table with the figures of the estimate ; negotiations with the contractors and the preparation of contracts for carrying out the work. No work may be carried out except under a contract or letter of authorisation signed by the principal or by his representative."

It must be constantly borne in mind that the estimates were drawn up by the architects with a margin for unforeseen expenditure which they thought it unnecessary to increase, in spite of certain suggestions made by the Building Committee — i.e., by the principal himself. The architects explained that the estimate had been prepared on an absolutely definite technical basis corresponding to all the requirements of which they had been notified up to date ; that the prices mentioned in the estimate were based on current prices at Geneva, calculated on a liberal scale so that there would certainly be a considerable saving after the first batch of work (which amounted to almost half the total work to be done) had been allocated. Moreover, the prices in the estimate had been calculated including Customs duty, whereas the League of Nations would certainly obtain its materials duty free. Consequently, the architects thought that the increase of 5 per cent in the estimate for unforeseen expenditure proposed by the Building Committee was not indispensable. There should be no question of any deviation from this definite basis provided by the architects.

In order that it might not be possible to argue that the obligation for the architects to adhere strictly to the letter of their contract was causing inconvenience or delay, the Building Committee set up a Sub-Committee to decide all urgent questions without awaiting the plenary meetings of the Committee.

It would seem therefore that the Supervisory Commission would have no further need for anxiety. The regret expressed by the Building Committee with regard to the excess expenditure reported direct to the Supervisory Commission in February by the Secretary-General " at not having had knowledge of this matter in time to allow of its submitting its observations to the Supervisory Commission ", is a guarantee that, if, for any reason, the Building Committee were in the future faced with a difficult situation which might involve any considerable excess of expenditure, it would duly notify the Supervisory Commission in time to allow the latter to take such action as might be incumbent upon it.

Moreover, I think I should mention the Commission's desire expressed in February that a statement with comments should be communicated from time to time by the Building Committee to the Supervisory Commission in order that the latter may keep in touch with the progress of the work and the expenditure incurred or anticipation for on each item of the estimate.

ANNEX 3.

FINANCIAL POSITION ON AUGUST 31ST, 1931.

MEMORANDUM BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The Secretary-General is directed by Article 21, paragraph 4, of the Financial Regulations to present to each Assembly a statement on the general financial position of the League, similar in form and substance to that which he prepares monthly for the information of the Council. He is also requested to include in his statement a résumé of the steps which he has taken to notify Member States as to the amounts due and overdue by way of contributions towards the expenses of the League.

1. CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE BUDGET OF 1931.

The budget for 1931 was communicated by the Secretary-General on November 6th, 1930, to all the Members of the League, together with a statement showing the amount of the contribution which fell to be borne by each State.

Out of the total amount apportioned between the Members of the League for 1931—namely, 30,868,166.13 gold francs — there has been received, during the first eight months of the current year, the total sum of 17,455,620.88 gold francs, or 56.5489 per cent of the authorised budget (for details see Appendix I).

The following payments have been made in respect of the current financial period:

	Gold Francs as adopted by the League of Nations
In January	2,194,496.15 [1]
February	1,550,160.89
March	862,713.86
April	3,326,322.38
May	3,644,823.86
June	2,493,697.68
July	2,210,696.50
August	1,172,709.56
	17,455,620.88 [1]

In the case of Members that have not made payments or advised the Secretary-General of the date when payment would be made, the request of the Secretary-General has been repeated, as directed by Article 21 (2) of the Financial Regulations.

2. OVERDUE CONTRIBUTIONS.

At the close of 1930, there was due to the League, by way of unpaid contributions appertaining to the financial periods ending on December 31st, 1930, as well as the adjusted and consolidated arrears accounts, a total sum of 15,829,227.15 gold francs.

During the first eight months of the current year, payments have been received in respect of arrears to the amount of 1,302,033.46 gold francs, leaving now outstanding the sum of 14,527,193.69 gold francs (see Appendix II).

[1] This includes the sum of 700,000 francs which, in accordance with a decision taken by the last Assembly, was drawn from the Building Fund, in order to be refunded to those Members of the League which are entitled to such refund. As this refund is effected by reducing, pro tanto, most of the contributions receivable for 1931, the sum of 700,000 francs was considered as having actually been paid by the Members of the League on January 1st, 1931.

The total cash receipts of the League from contributions have been, for the period January 1st to August 31st, 1931, as follows:

	Gold francs as adopted by the League of Nations
(a) From arrears of contributions	1,302,033.48
(b) From payments on 1931 budget	17,455,620.86
Total	18,757,654.34

The following amounts are still receivable:

	Gold francs
(a) From arrears of contributions	14,527,193.69
(b) From balances due in respect of 1931	13,412,545.25
Total	27,939,738.94

3. Working Capital Fund.

	Gold francs
On December 31st, 1930, the total paid-up Working Capital of the League amounted to	5,321,132.91
Receipts of Working Capital during the period from January 1st, 1931, to August 31st, 1931, increased this sum to	5,386,572.54

The Working Capital Fund is regarded as belonging to the States which contribute towards it, and is reckoned in terms of gold francs. From it, advances may be made, from time to time, to the financially autonomous organisations, in accordance with the provisions of the Financial Regulations. The Secretary-General is the custodian of the Working Capital Fund, and sums advanced to autonomous organisations, when no longer required by them, return to his keeping.

On August 31st, 1931, the Working Capital Fund was employed thus:

(1) With the International Labour Organisation	971,942.92 [1]
(2) With the Secretary-General	4,414,629.62
Total	5,386,572.54

The Working Capital with the Secretary-General was, on August 31st, 1931, thus employed:

(1) Advances to the Iraq Commission (balance not reimbursed)	10,000.—
(2) Advances to the Danzig High Commissariat	62,721.38
(3) Request by the High Commissioner at Danzig for an advisory opinion concerning the Railways at Danzig	27,142.85
(4) On special deposit in bank	4,314,765.39
Total	4,414,629.62

Voluntary Contributions to the Working Capital Fund.

The following sums have been paid in as voluntary contributions towards the Working Capital Fund in response to the Fourth Assembly's recommendation on this subject:

	Gold francs
Abyssinia	15,613.98
Finland	783.19
Germany	67,996.52
Latvia	21,830.98
Total	106,224.67

[1] Includes 535,179 gold francs, balance of advances made to the International Labour Office in 1930. If the Assembly accepts the proposal made by the Supervisory Commission, this sum will be withdrawn from the surplus of 1930 and reimbursed to the Working Capital Fund (see document A.5.1931.X).

4. Building Fund of the League.

The Building Fund amounted on August 31st, 1931, to the total sum of 23,389,983.07 francs.

This sum was made up as follows:

		Gold francs as adopted by the League of Nations
1.	Net surplus of the financial year 1923	1,139,580.45
2.	Total surplus of the financial year 1924	9,395,721.35
3.	Payments by the Argentine for the fourth and fifth financial years	1,927,184.35
4.	Payment by the Argentine for the sixth financial year	872,507.79
5.	Surplus of the financial year 1925	3,367,847.28
6.	Surplus of the financial year 1928	1,479,161.12
7.	Allocation from Building Annuity, 1929, 1930 and 1931	2,025,000.—
8.	Interest and other receipts	3,182,980.73
		23,389,983.07[1]

It should be noted that the sum of 23,389,983.07 francs does not include the amount of 4 million francs which corresponds to the guaranteed sale price of the building now occupied by the Secretariat.

On the other hand, the following expenses have actually been paid for:

		Gold francs as adopted by the League of Nations
1.	Payments for the new International Labour Office building	3,310,000.—
2.	Payments for the Assembly Hall and the new Secretariat building	5,408,605.85
3.	Refund to States Members	50,000.—
			8,768,605.85

The payments under No. 2 may be further subdivided as follows:

		Gold Francs	Gold francs
Non-recurring expenditure
1.	Cost of land	2,678,500.—
2.	Cost of annex	270,000.—
3.	Annex installations	122,401.60
4.	Examination expenses	401,768.55
5.	Cost of original plans on old site	126,777.25
			3,599,447.40
Current expenditure
1.	Construction of new building	1,484,676.75
2.	Advertising expenses	25.—
3.	Prints of plans	10,463.50
4.	Transport charges	148.35
5.	Telegrams and telephones	154.—
6.	Experts' fees	21,590.55
7.	Printing	1,209.—
8.	Incidental expenses	10,744.05
9.	Allowances and travelling expenses of Building Committee and staff	74,830.30
10.	Legal expenses	29,944.40
11.	Administration of property	942.40
12.	Salaries of staff	132,744.50
13.	Sundry and miscellaneous expenses	41,685.65
			1,809,158.45
			5,408,605.85

An instalment of 1,025,115.35 Swiss francs, equivalent to U.S.A. $200,000, was received during the month of August 1931, for the construction of the new Library, the cost of which will be met by donations from Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Junr.

The expenditure so far incurred for this building amounts to 114,000 Swiss francs.

Including accrued interest, the Special Fund set up by the Assembly at its eighth ordinary session for the furnishing of the new buildings amounted, on August 31st, 1931, to 863,045.25 francs.

[1] Excluding a gift of 129,565 francs, received from the Woodrow Wilson Foundation.

ANNEX 4.

NEW WORK INVOLVING NEW EXPENDITURE ON THE PART OF THE LEAGUE.

The following is an extract from the report of the Fourth Committee adopted by the Assembly at its fifth ordinary session:

"The Committee asked the competent officials of the Secretariat and the other autonomous organisations to follow up the present practice and in future to prepare a report of the new work involving new expenditure on the part of the League.

"The Committee thanked the Secretariat for having added to this report a new section for decisions of the Council which may subsequently lead to further expenditure, and suggested that the Secretary-General should continue, in future, to supply information on that point."

I. SECRETARIAT AND SPECIAL ORGANISATIONS OF THE LEAGUE.

A. New Work involving New Expenditure immediately or in the Near Future.

1. Technical Co-operation with the Chinese Government.

On January 19th, 1931, the Council considered a request from the Chinese Government that the Directors of the Economic and Financial Section and of the Transit and Communications Section should pay brief visits to China. The Council decided to give effect to the proposals of the Chinese Government, and agreed that the expenditure involved should be charged to Item 3 of the Budget for 1931 (Unforeseen Expenditure subject to Special Vote of Council) up to a maximum of 100,000 francs (sixty-second session, Minute 2744).

On May 19th, 1931, the Secretary-General drew the attention of the Council to the following passage in the report of the Supervisory Commission to the Assembly:

"26. For the present year, in fact, it would, on account of the desirability of immediate action along the lines desired by China, agree that, if the sums allocated by the Council for the purpose of co-operation with China out of those which are at its free disposal (Item 3 of the budget) prove insufficient, the Secretary-General might, as a quite exceptional measure and as a derogation from the Financial Regulations, be authorised to utilise part of the arrears, which the Chinese Government will pay in 1931, to meet the otherwise uncovered portion of the expenditure of the various missions. Naturally, the derogation in question will only be possible if the Assembly explicitly consents" (document A.5.1931.X).

(Sixty-third session, Minute 2806.)

On May 22nd, 1931, the Council adopted the following resolution:

"The Council,

"Referring to the decision taken on January 19th, 1931:

"Decides to increase by 100,000 francs—i.e., from 100,000 to 200,000 francs—the expenditure which may be charged to Item 3 of the Budget for 1931 (Unforeseen Expenditure subject to Special Vote of the Council) for the technical co-operation of the League of Nations with the Chinese Government."

(Sixty-third session, Minute 2850.)

2. Request for Assistance from the Government of Liberia: Expenses of Committee of Enquiry set up by the Council on January 24th, 1931.

On January 24th, 1931, the Council adopted the following resolution:

"The Council decides to debit Item 3 of the 1931 Budget (Unforeseen Expenditure subject to Special Vote of the Council) with the expenditure which may be involved in consequence of the work of the Committee of Enquiry instructed to consider the request submitted to the Council on January 22nd, 1931, by the representative of the Liberian Government to an amount not exceeding 100,000 francs."

(Sixty-second session, Minute 2779.)

On May 21st, 1931, the Council decided to increase the amount which it had voted on January 24th from 100,000 to 125,000 francs. (Sixty-third session, Minute 2828.)

3. Agricultural Credits: Advance of Funds by the League to the Organisation Committee of the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company.

On May 22nd, 1931, the Council adopted the following resolution:

" The Council,

" Empowers the Secretary-General to advance to the Organisation Committee of the International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company funds up to a maximum sum of 50,000 francs;

" Decides that these advances, which will be repaid to the League as soon as the capital of the bank has been subscribed, will be drawn from Item 3 of the Budget for 1931 (Unforeseen Expenditure subject to Special Vote of the Council)."

(Sixty-third session, Minute 2849.)

B. NEW WORK WHICH MIGHT LEAD TO EXPENDITURE IN THE FUTURE.

II. INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION.

Letter addressed to the Secretary-General by the Director of the International Labour Office on August 11th, 1931.

In accordance with the decision taken by the fourth Assembly, I have the honour to inform you that, since August 14th, 1930, the date on which I made a similar statement to you, the International Labour Organisation has not undertaken any new work involving additional expenditure on the part of the League of Nations either immediately or in the future.

[Extract.]

COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO GIVE FURTHER CONSIDERATION TO CERTAIN QUESTIONS RELATING TO THE ORGANISATION OF THE SECRETARIAT, THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR OFFICE AND THE REGISTRY OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

1. The new Committee of Thirteen was constituted by, and received its terms of reference from, the eleventh Assembly, which on October 3rd, 1930, passed the following resolution:

" The Assembly,

" Having had before it the report submitted by the Committee of Enquiry appointed by the last Assembly to consider what steps could be taken to ensure, in the future as in the past, the best possible results in the administration of the Secretariat, the International Labour Office and the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice;

"Having examined the separate reports submitted by some members of that Committee and attached to the Committee's report;

"Having considered the report submitted by the Secretary-General to the Committee of Thirteen, together with notes from the Secretary-General, the Director of the International Labour Office and the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice on the financial consequences of the proposals contained in the Committee's report:

"(1) Approves the general obligations of the staff as defined in Chapter I of Part II of the Report of the Committee of Thirteen with the amendments proposed by the Fourth Committee;

"(2) Approves the rules upon the duration of engagements of the staff contained in Chapter 2 of Part II of the report of the Committee of Thirteen with the amendments proposed by the Fourth Committee;

"(3) Requests the Secretary-General to incorporate in the Staff Regulations the amendments proposed in the present report and approved by the Fourth Committee;

"(4) Instructs the Secretary-General to amend the Staff Regulations in accordance with the proposals of the Fourth Committee and requests him to submit the new Regulations to the next Assembly;

"(5) Notes the statements made by the Director of the International Labour Office and the Registrar of the Permanent Court to the effect that they will, within the same period, adapt to their respective organisations the principles laid down by the Fourth Committee;

"(6) Approves the Staff Pensions Regulations and instructs the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure their application as from January 1st, 1931;

"(7) Requests the General Committee of the Assembly to appoint a Committee of . . . Members to consider the retention or elimination, the increase or reduction of the posts of Under-Secretary-General, as well as the consequences resulting therefrom. All cognate questions which the Committee thought it necessary to adjourn in the course of its work shall be referred to that Committee. The latter will be requested to submit a report not later than May 1st, 1931, so as to make it possible for its conclusions to be examined in due time by the States Members of the League of Nations and submitted to the next Assembly; and

"(8) Approves this report and adopts its conclusions."

2. In virtue of the Fourth Committee's report and paragraph 7 of the above resolution, the terms of reference of the Committee of Thirteen were limited to the following questions:

(1) The question of the Under-Secretaries-General;

(2) The question of the salaries, conditions of engagement, etc., of the Secretary-General, Deputy Secretary-General, Under-Secretaries-General, Directors and Treasurer;

(3) The question of the salaries of Chiefs of Section and of the Secretary-General's Chef de Cabinet.

3. The Committee held that it did not fall within its province to consider the questions of the salaries of counsellors or of septennial leave for officials of the first division, these questions having been postponed to next year by the Eleventh Assembly.

4. At the beginning of their meeting, the members of the Committee were careful to point out that they were there in an individual capacity and that the decisions they might reach could in no case be binding upon their Governments.

5. In view of the importance of the questions of principle with which it had to deal, the Committee thought it desirable that the Minutes of its meetings should be printed and appended to its report.[1] It has accordingly been possible to limit the present report to a brief summary of the proceedings and a statement of the Committee's decisions.

I. QUESTION OF THE UNDER-SECRETARIES-GENERAL.

6. The Assembly's decision on this question is formulated in the following terms in paragraph 19 of the Fourth Committee's report:

"19. In approaching the question of the Under-Secretaries-General, the Committee had before it two proposals—one by the majority, to the effect that the number of Under-Secretaries-General should be raised to eight, and the other by the minority, fixing the number at five—when a third proposal was made for the abolition of all these posts. One member of the Committee then proposed that the question of the Under-Secretaries-General should be held over and investigated by a special Committee. The question of the abolition of these posts will, therefore, have to be examined by this special Committee, as well as various suggestions which emerged from a long discussion reported in the Minutes of the meetings."

[1] See document A.8.1931.X.

The Committee being agreed upon the necessity of keeping a Secretary-General and a Deputy Secretary-General at the head of the Secretariat organisation, three possibilities remained :

(a) To abolish completely all the posts of Under-Secretary-General.
(b) To increase the number of Under-Secretaries-General from three to five or even six.
(c) To maintain the status quo.

7. The complete abolition of the posts of Under-Secretary-General—which was proposed only on condition that the position of the present high officials should be safeguarded—was advocated by some members of the Committee as the best way of removing a certain atmosphere of dissatisfaction due to the fact that all the higher posts of the Secretariat were occupied by nationals of the Powers permanently represented on the Council of the League.

Supposing that this position, which does not correspond to any constitutional rule, may be of some value on account of the special opportunities for liaison work enjoyed by nationals of such countries, the fact remains that in countries which have, in practice, no hope of seeing one of their nationals in any of these higher offices, public opinion notes an inconsistency between this kind of monopoly and the principle of the equality of all States. This feeling has, indeed, found expression in several Parliaments. Moreover, there seems no reason why the abolition of these offices should cause any serious administrative difficulties, inasmuch as they were created primarily for political reasons or on grounds of prestige, and there is no essential difference between the functions of Under-Secretaries-General and those of Directors. With regard to the contingency of the Secretary-General and Deputy Secretary-General having to be replaced, should they both be away from Geneva at the same time or unable to perform their duties, arrangements could be made to meet the case. The abolition of the offices of Under-Secretary-General would also offer the advantage of a reduction of expenditure, thus complying with a desire that has become more pressing since the aggravation of the general economic depression.

8. To those considerations other members objected that the posts of Under-Secretary-General answered a genuinely useful purpose in an institution of so universal a character as the League of Nations, and that, even if this were not so, the Committee of Thirteen was now faced with an existing situation which could not be upset without the risk of various disadvantages and even difficulties of a political nature. The definitely international character which is an absolute rule for all the officials of the League of Nations, both as regards their administrative duties and all their other activities, precludes their nationality having quite as much importance as might be supposed. There is, moreover, an easy and reasonable way of still further reducing the force of the objections urged against the present composition of the higher staff; this would be to increase somewhat the number of posts of Under-Secretary-General. The increasing number of duties assumed by the League of Nations and their growing complexity justify such an increase. This solution would also promote the co-ordination of the work of the different sections. It would make it possible to find room in the higher ranks of the League of Nations for other forms of national civilisation or other nationalities than those which are at present represented. It would give the best officials of the League of Nations a better prospect of promotion to these outstanding posts and would thus stimulate a higher standard of recruitment and greater emulation among the staff.

9. Between these two alternatives, the abolition of the posts of Under-Secretary-General and the increase in the number of these posts, a half-way solution was suggested, that of maintaining the status quo. Some of the advocates of abolition pointed out that any appointment of new Under-Secretaries-General would only make it more difficult to do away with these posts subsequently, since new established rights might create fresh obstacles. Others, who were willing to enlarge somewhat the present framework of the higher ranks, regarded the status quo as a solution leaving more freedom for the future. Since the Assembly was able at its last session as a result of the work of the Committee of Thirteen and of the Fourth Committee to deal successfully with the revision of the Staff Regulations and the very difficult problem of pensions, the League would not be giving a sign of weakness but would simply be showing a due appreciation of present possibilities if it postponed the reform of the higher ranks until circumstances were more favourable.

10. Following upon a discussion of these various considerations, which is accurately reproduced in the Minutes annexed to this report, votes were taken, first on the abolition of the posts of Under-Secretary-General, and then on the increase in their number by not more than three. Abolition was rejected by seven votes to three, and one abstention. The increase was then rejected by six votes to five. These two decisions having been definitely taken, a motion was then proposed with the idea of obviating any possibility of misunderstanding. This motion was worded as follows :

" The Committee is not in favour of purely and simply maintaining the status quo."

This motion was adopted by nine votes to two, with one abstention. It remained to be seen whether the Committee could arrive at an agreement on certain modifications to be made in the status quo. There was a further exchange of views, resulting in the following conclusion :

11. The Members of the Committee having found it impossible to obtain a majority either for the abolition of the Under-Secretaries-General or for an increase in their number, and, considering that a fundamental change in the organisation of the higher ranks of the Secretariat during the term of office of the present Secretary-General might create difficulties which it would be better to avoid, came to the conclusion that it would be preferable if the framework of the higher ranks were provisionally maintained as it stands. They regard this as a quite provisional solution aimed at putting an end to differences of opinion which would be likely, if prolonged, to hamper the smooth working of the Secretariat.

It is possible that circumstances arising later may make it possible to view such modifications more favourably. Accordingly, the Committee suggests that, not later than three years from now, the Council and the Assembly should once more consider the problem either of maintaining or of abolishing, increasing or reducing the posts of Under-Secretary-General.

If it should so happen that the present Secretary-General retires before then, the position may have changed and the League of Nations will have at once to consider whether there should be a general readjustment of the higher posts.

Hence, in order to permit of the execution of the decisions which may then be taken by the Assembly and the Council, it will be well to avoid creating situations which might place obstacles in the way of the changes which may then be found necessary.

12. The Committee therefore recommends that all new or renewed contracts concluded with the Deputy Secretary-General or the Under-Secretaries-General :

(1) Should have a maximum duration of three years ;

(2) Should contain a clause under which they may be denounced within one year from the date on which the Secretary-General officially notifies the Council of his intention of resigning, this denunciation only to take effect as from the date on which the new Secretary-General assumes his duties, or in the year following.

13. Some members of the Committee, while accepting the recommendation, desired that their opinion should be recorded that the above solution was not satisfactory and they would have preferred either the provisional enlargement of the numbers of Under-Secretaries-General or their complete suppression.

Draft Resolution submitted by the Irish Delegation.

14. The Committee had before it a draft resolution which was submitted by the Irish delegation to the Fourth Committee of the last Assembly :

> " In future there shall, as a general rule, be no appointment of more than one national of any State among the higher officers of the Secretariat, from and including the rank of Director of Section upwards."

The Committee, with reference to the opinion expressed in the report submitted by the Committee of Thirteen in 1930, considered that, if it was desired to obtain the best possible officials for the League, it would be difficult to adopt rules laying down a strict allocation of nationalities. In appointing officials, the Secretary-General must, of course, always take the question of nationality into account, but this principle should not be made into a dogma.

At the outset, the Secretariat and the International Labour Office had a very large proportion of British and French higher officials, but the position is gradually changing and in the normal course of departures and fresh appointments it may be anticipated that this readjustment will continue in such a way as to provide more adequate representation of the different forms of national civilisation.

15. In these circumstances, the Committee thinks that, in the appointment or promotion of officials to one of the higher posts of the Secretariat, the first and foremost consideration must be the knowledge and capacity of the candidate which must be in keeping with the duties he will be called upon to fulfil. In making the choice, however, account should be taken of the representation of the different forms of national civilisation.

II. QUESTION OF THE SALARIES, CONDITIONS OF ENGAGEMENT, ETC., OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL, DEPUTY SECRETARY-GENERAL, UNDER-SECRETARIES-GENERAL, DIRECTORS AND TREASURER.

16. The Assembly's decision was as follows :

" The Committee decided to refer to the new Committee the whole question of paragraph 27 of the report of the Committee of Thirteen " (Rules concerning each of the principal officers of the Secretariat, see document A.16.1930, page 16).

(a) Secretary-General, Deputy Secretary-General and Under-Secretaries-General.

17. As regards the salaries of the highest officers of the Secretariat, the Committee proposes that no change should be made in the present system until the introduction of the reforms referred to in Chapter I above.

18. In future, the normal term of office of the Secretary-General should be for ten years, the Council having the right to prolong the appointment, subject to the approval of a majority of the Assembly.

Subject to the provisional arrangements contemplated in Chapter I above, the term of office of the Deputy Secretary-General should, in future, be for seven years, renewable in exceptional cases.

19. The Assembly having referred to the Committee the question of the entertainment allowance granted to these officials, the Committee did not think it desirable in present circumstances to put forward any new proposals in this respect. Some of the members of the Committee, however, expressed the opinion that economies might perhaps be effected by reducing the sums granted to certain officials as entertainment allowance and transferring part of these sums to the common fund. Other members of the Committee proposed that a committee of three persons should undertake the enquiry referred to in the Committee of Thirteen's proposal, and should make a report enabling the Assembly to judge with a full knowledge of the facts whether the rate of entertainment allowance should be maintained, increased or reduced.

(b) Directors.

20. The Committee proposes no change in the scale of salary at present in force for Directors. The minimum should continue to be 41,000 francs, rising by annual increments of 2,500 francs to a maximum of 53,000 francs.

Directors should be appointed for seven years, and their appointments should be renewable.

(c) Treasurer.

21. The Treasurer is at present in a special category, occupying an intermediate position between Directors and Chiefs of Section. In view of the importance of his duties, the Committee —subject to the reservations made by two members—adopting the recommendations made last year by the Committee of Thirteen, considered that his post should be made independent of the Under-Secretary-General in Charge of Internal Administration. The Treasurer would thereby be placed on an equality with the fourteen Under-Secretaries-General and Directors, and the principal officers would include seventeen instead of sixteen officials.

In conformity with the opinion expressed by the Secretary-General, the Committee makes no immediate proposal in this sense, leaving the Secretary-General free to introduce this change whenever he sees fit.

The change which should at present be made in the position of the Treasurer would be in regard to his rank and his salary. The Treasurer's emoluments should be the same as those of Directors, rising from 41,000 to 53,000 francs by annual increments of 2,500 francs.

(d) Registrar and Deputy Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

22. Linked up with the question of the salaries, etc., of the principal officers of the Secretariat, is that of the salaries of the Registrar and Deputy Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice, which was referred to the Committee in the terms given in the following extract from the Fourth Committee's report :

" The Committee adopted the chapter relating to the Registry of the Permanent Court on the understanding that paragraph 62 concerning the salary of the Registrar and

Deputy Registrar would be referred to the Special Committee in the same way as similar questions relating to the principal officers of the Secretariat." [1]

23. By a resolution dated September 10th, 1929, the Permanent Court of International Justice made a proposal with a view to fixing the salary of the Registrar of the Court for the seven-year period beginning on January 1st, 1930. This proposal was to take as a basis the present salary of the holder of the office (27,000 florins) and to increase it during the new period by the same amounts (1,250 florins) and at the same intervals (annually for four years) as during the first period of service ; the maximum salary would thus be raised from 27,000 to 32,000 florins.

24. Having regard to the provisional character of its recommendations in connection with the Under-Secretaries-General, the Committee thought it better not to adhere to the proposal made by the Committee of Thirteen last year to the effect that the Registrar should be assimilated, as regards salary, to the Under-Secretaries-General. On the other hand, it agreed to the resolution adopted by the Court in 1929 and advises the competent bodies of the League to adopt it.

25. As the Deputy Registrar is assimilated to a Chief of Section in the Secretariat, the Committee recommends that his maximum salary be raised to 20,000 florins by annual increments of 750 florins (see Chapter III below).

III. SALARIES OF CHIEFS OF SECTION AND OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S CHEF DE CABINET.

26. The report of the Fourth Committee reads as follows (document A.86.1930.X., section 22, page 7) :

" 22. Moreover, the Committee also decided to refer to the special Committee the question of the salaries of Chiefs of Section in charge of a Section and of the Chef de Cabinet of the Secretary-General, particularly with regard to the increase of salary proposed by the Committee of Thirteen."

The Committee, with the exception of one member, upholds the proposals put forward by the Committee of Thirteen last year, and proposes that the maximum salary for these officials be raised from 33,000 to 40,000 francs and the annual increment from 1,000 to 1,500 francs, it being understood that at the International Labour Office ten Chiefs of Section will receive salaries on this new scale.

[1] Paragraph 62 of the report of the Committee of Thirteen (document A.16.1930, page 23) was in the following terms :

" 62. As regards salaries, the Committee considers that the Registrar should receive a salary equivalent to that of an Under-Secretary-General—namely, from 55,000 to 75,000 francs. To this should be added, on the principle of assimilation, entertainment allowance equivalent to that of an Under-Secretary-General—namely, 12,500 francs—if the Court should express a desire to that effect.

" The Deputy Registrar should be graded for salary in the same way as a Chief of Section in the Secretariat."

ANNEX 6.

Official No.: C.646.M.260.1931.X.

REDUCTION IN THE EXPENDITURE OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS FOR 1932: REPORT BY THE SUPERVISORY COMMISSION TO THE FOURTH COMMITTEE [1]

I. REDUCTIONS IN THE BUDGET AND SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET.

1. As a result of the discussion which took place in the Fourth Committee on September 12th, 14th and 15th, the budgetary estimates for 1932 were referred back to the Supervisory Commission, with instructions to advise on the best method of effecting substantial savings in the proposed expenditure of the League. Although certain ratios of reduction had been suggested in the course of the discussion, no definite standard of economies was imposed on the Commission, who accordingly interpreted the wishes of the Fourth Committee as pointing to such a curtailment of expenditure as would, in the Commission's judgment, afford the maximum of relief to the Member States consistent with the minimum of interference with the permanent utility of the League. In order to exercise a wise discretion on so difficult a task, the Commission has considered it advisable to go through the estimates in fullest detail, in consultation with the responsible authorities, and to indicate step by step where the provisions already proposed can with safety be altered to meet the changed conditions. The results are set out in the body of this report.

Before describing them, the Supervisory Commission wishes to place on record its warm appreciation of the assistance it has received from the Secretary-General, the Director of the International Labour Office and the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice in framing the present proposals. It was no pleasant task to those high officials either to see their work curtailed or to reconcile their staff to the financial restraint involved; but they co-operated with the Commission in a spirit of admirable loyalty and greatly lightened the burden which might otherwise have fallen upon the Commission, besides materially expediting the completion of the task.

2. At the outset, the Commission may be permitted two general observations as to the implications of the proposals which it is now submitting. In the first place, it wishes to make it clear that the reductions which it now proposes in the draft budget originally submitted to the Assembly must not be regarded as indicating that the provisions of the original budget were in any respect superfluous or extravagant. The budget which was examined and approved by the Commission last May was a careful estimate of the funds necessary for carrying out the decisions of the Assembly and continuing the work of the different organisations of the League under normal conditions. The revised budget which the Commission now submits deals with conditions which are wholly abnormal, and is adapted to a situation of worldwide financial stress, which has developed enormously in the last five months. In proposing reductions of the original provisions, the Commission has had only one object in view — namely, to avoid expenditure, during the year 1932, upon work which, though approved and sanctioned by the Assembly or necessary to give effect to the policy of the Assembly, can yet, without harming the usefulness of the League, be postponed until 1933 or later. To that extent — and to that extent only — has the Commission exercised any discrimination between the purposes for which provision was made in the original estimates.

The second preliminary observation flows from the first. In advising the postponement of the expenditure which has been omitted from the revised budget, the Commission must not be understood to express any opinion as to the propriety of restoring the same or corresponding provisions in the budget for 1933. If it can be shown, when the budget for 1933 comes to be framed, that the provisions in question are still necessary to fulfil the purposes accepted by the Assembly, and that it is desirable to incur the expenditure within the year 1933, then the provisions will properly be introduced into the draft estimates for that year. They will then be examined on their merits and, of course, in the light of the general financial conditions which may prevail at the time. In other words, the omission of a credit in this revised budget is, per se, no bar to its re-insertion in the draft budget for 1933.

[1] This report is made up of Fourth Committee documents 14, 14(a) and 14(b). The subject-matter contained in these documents has, however, been regrouped so that all questions concerning the budget are included in Sections I and II, and all the miscellaneous questions in Section III.

With the exception of Chapters II(2) and III(4(c)), this report of the Supervisory Commission was adopted by the Assembly on September 29th, 1931.

3. In order to show clearly the estimates with which the Commission was called upon to deal, it is necessary to add to the figures of the original draft budget those proposals for supplementary credits which have thus far been referred to the Commission, as set out in the Secretary-General's memorandum of August 16th (document A.4(d).1931.X). Combining the figures, we get the following totals :

	Gold francs	Gold francs
I. Secretarial and special organisations.
Budget	20,507,843
Supplementary	182,074
		20,689,917
II. International Labour Organisation.
Budget	9,050,810
Supplementary	412,480
		9,463,290
III. Permanent Court of International Justice.
Budget	2,753,687
Supplementary	36,453
		2,790,140
IV. Nansen International Office for Refugees.
Budget		330,847
V. Buildings at Geneva.
Budget		1,748,899
VI. Pensions.
Budget		1,015,023
Grand total		36,038,116

It is unnecessary to remind the Fourth Committee that the startling increase in this total over the corresponding provision for the current year is due, almost entirely, to the 4,000,000 francs which were estimated for the Disarmament Conference to be held in 1932.

4. Before taking the detailed estimates in their budgetary order, the Supervisory Commission, in the light of its long experience of the League's accounts, concentrated upon four specific categories of expenditure on which it believed that, on purely general principles, reductions of at least a temporary character could be effected. These are :

(1) The various conferences, meetings of experts, and the like, which are held in connection with the activities of the League;

(2) The subsistence allowances paid to outsiders who are invited or authorised to attend such meetings, and to officials of the League when on duty away from their headquarters;

(3) The printing, publication and circulation of the League documents;

(4) Salaries and allowances, other than those protected by contractual obligations.

5. In regard to each of these, a few words of general explanation will avoid the necessity for repeated comments in individual items. In the matter of conferences and meetings, the guiding idea in the minds of the Supervisory Commission has been that, wherever a gathering of advisers or experts, originally fixed for 1932, could, without serious disadvantage to the work concerned, be deferred until 1933 or later, the provision for it should be withdrawn for the present. Similarly, when provision had been made for two or more meetings of a committee during the year, it would often, the Commission considered, be possible to arrange its work so as to be capable of being handled at longer intervals, or with a smaller number of meetings. As the Commission anticipated, the responsible authorities have seen their way to be satisfied with reduced provision in both classes of cases. They have, in other cases, consented to reduce the number of days for which a meeting will be held, and the number of experts, etc., who will be invited to attend it. The Supervisory Commission is confident that the arrangements, as thus altered, will not cause either inconvenience to, or be misunderstood by, those public-spirited individuals who in such matters render valuable aid to the League.

The present scale of subsistence allowances has frequently come under discussion, and has been generally accepted as not unduly generous for persons who have to maintain themselves at a distance from their homes or headquarters, as the case may be, on League duty. On the principle, however, of equality of sacrifice, the Supervisory Commission has recommended that the daily allowances now in force should, for 1932, be modified as follows :

70	francs	reduced	to	60	francs,	or by	14 per cent
60	"	"	"	54	"	" "	10 per cent
40	"	"	"	37.50	"	" "	6 1/4 per cent
30	"	"	"	28.50	"	" "	5 per cent

There will be some consequential alterations in the allowance given for days occupied in travelling between Geneva and a number of other important centres.

6. In the matter of printing and publication, a valuable preliminary survey had been done by the Publications Committee. On a review of this survey, the Supervisory Commission came to the conclusion that an all-round reduction averaging 25 per cent on the budget provisions for printing and publications could be made without imperilling the League's utility, and, indeed, in some cases with positive advantage. As part of this reduction, it proposes to suppress, as recommended by the 1928 Assembly, the publication of Minutes of all Committees, except of the Mandates Commission and of Assembly Committees. It also proposes that the Minutes of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union should still be published. Steps will be taken that a similar reduction shall be made in roneoed documents. In accordance with a system already adopted by certain Committees, the Commission would further recommend that Committee documents should not in all cases be translated. A consequential saving will be possible in the staff engaged in the work of reporting, translating, proof-reading, etc., for the various books and documents; but this belongs strictly to the next category.

7. As regards salaries which are not protected by contractual obligation, the field for economy is limited. The Commission, considering the nature of the contracts of the staff of the organisations and the principles followed in the past by the Assembly with regard to the scale of salaries, does not feel it possible to propose a reduction of these salaries; but it hopes shortly to submit certain proposals which will effect a temporary diminution in the League expenditure in connection with its officials. The Secretary-General has put an end to overtime allowances in the Secretariat, but there are reasons why a similar step cannot economically be taken in the International Labour Office. A certain number of sanctioned posts on the permanent establishment which are not actually filled to-day will be left unfilled in 1932. A certain number of temporary and subordinate appointments will disappear with the curtailment of meetings and the reduction in printing activity.

8. While the foregoing categories cover the greater part of the detailed recommendations which follow, they are not exclusive. A number of other interesting proposals for economy have been either originated or accepted by the responsible authorities, and they can best be explained in the detailed statement which occupies the following paragraphs.[1]

1. Budget of the Secretariat and of the Special Organisations of the League.

(Documents A.4 and A.4(d).1931.X.)

9. The budget of the Assembly (Item 1, Schedule A) has hitherto been based on the hypothesis that the session would last three and a-half weeks. As it seems improbable, owing to the length of time the Disarmament Conference will last, that the Assembly will sit next year for more than three weeks, the following reductions are proposed in Item 1 (Schedule A) :

		Reduction	New figures
		Swiss francs
(1)	Salaries of additional staff	12,000	78,000
(2)	Overtime	5,000	—
(3)	Travelling expenses	500	29,500
(4)	Assembly-hall rent, etc.	11,000	54,000
(5)	Special printing	52,750	127,250
(7)	Supplies and stores	2,500	13,500
(9)	Incidental expenses	1,000	9,000

[1] The present report does not mention all the reductions proposed by the Commission. Those which are the outcome of general recommendations of the Commission and which apply to all the credits provided for the same purpose — for example, effect of the reductions in the travelling allowances on the various credits for travelling expenses — are only mentioned in the appendix.

10. As regards the sessions of the Council (Item 2), the Commission considered that there was no need to make provision for a session in 1932 away from Geneva, where the representatives of the Members of the Council would already be assembled for a considerable part of the year. Since the expenses of a Council session amount on an average to 12,000 francs, the credit of 63,000 francs originally entered in the budget has been reduced to 48,000 francs.

11. Having been informed that no post in the general organisation of the Secretariat (Item 4, Sub-schedule 1) was vacant, the Commission was only able to reduce from 50,000 francs to 40,000 francs the credit provided for temporary engagements in the Information Section, delete the credit of 400 francs for a temporary engagement in the Legal Section and reduce by 2,150 francs the credit provided in Item 15(a) for temporary engagements.

In accordance with a decision of the 1930 Assembly, the Commission, at its session of last May, adopted a new scale of salaries for locally recruited staff (see document A.5.1931.X, page 10). The credits rendered necessary by these recommendations figure in the supplementary budget, and, in view of last Assembly's decision, the Commission can only recommend their adoption.

In view of the reduction of 25 per cent in printing and publications of the Secretariat, and the postponement of numerous Committees, the Commission is able to propose to the Assembly the following deletions and reductions in sub-schedule 2 of the same item and on page 3 of the supplementary budget.

Item	Service	Credit abolished Swiss francs
1, III	Pool of Typists :
	2 shorthand-typists.	18,000
3	Document Service :
II	French Translation and Précis-Writing Department :
	1 translator	14,100
III	English Translation and Précis-Writing Department :
	1 translator	13,600
V	Printing and Publications Department :
	1 first-class clerk (proof-reader)	9,500
8 (a)	Replacements and Temporary Engagements.. . .	9,700
	Total	64,900

The Secretary-General has also agreed to reduce from 25,000 francs to 22,500 francs the credit provided for overtime and temporary engagements of miscellaneous staff at Geneva (Item 4(b)).

12. The Commission examined with special care the credits provided for the telephone service. The Chief of Internal Services satisfied it that it would be difficult to abolish three posts of telephone operators. It therefore proposes that the Assembly should fix the number of telephone operators provided for in the 1932 budget at four, or a reduction of two compared to the current financial period. The installation of automatic telephones will, on the other hand, involve greater expense on material. After examining the details of the total credit of 49,000 francs entered in the budget and in the supplementary budget for the installation of telephones, telephone subscriptions and local telephone calls, the Commission is able to propose that the sum provided for this purpose should be reduced from 49,000 francs to 47,000 francs.

13. A credit of 54,975 francs figures in the supplementary budget for the rent and maintenance from July 1st to December 31st, 1932, of the new building which the Geneva authorities are erecting for the Disarmament Conference. The agreement with the said authorities provides that, subject to the Assembly's approval, these premises may be taken over by the League of Nations after the close of the Disarmament Conference at an annual rent of 60,000 francs. It seems unlikely that the Conference, in view of the fact that it may, on one or more occasions, have to suspend its session, will be able to conclude its work before October 1st, and in these circumstances the Supervisory Commission proposes that the Assembly should reduce the credit to 27,488 francs.

14. The fall in prices has enabled the Commission to make a reduction of 5,000 francs in Item 12(b), " Stationery for the Duplicating Department ".

15. The Supervisory Commission had considered at a previous session whether the creation of the Pensions Fund should not involve a modification in the policy followed in regard to the Sickness Insurance Fund. During the present session, it decided, in agreement with the administrations concerned, to reduce by 20 per cent for 1932 the League's contribution to the Sickness Insurance Funds of the Secretariat and of the International Labour Office and to reconsider the problem as a whole. This decision involves a saving of 5,400 francs for the Secretariat (Item 13(c)) and of 5,000 francs for the International Labour Office.

16. It appears from the explanations given by the Chairman of the Committee on Allocation of Expenses that the latter does not consider the time to have come to proceed to a radical reform of the scale. Should the Assembly accept the Committee's view, it would be possible to reduce from 33,840 to 7,000 francs the credit provided for in Item 17(c) of the budget since it would not be necessary to provide for special staff, and the Committee's sessions for 1932 might be reduced to one.

17. Having been informed that, as a result of a recent resignation, a post of Member of Section was vacant in the Administrative Commissions and Minorities Questions Section the Supervisory Commission considered that the credits provided for this post (18,660 francs) might be omitted from the 1932 budget, it being understood that the post itself, which in normal circumstances is indispensable, should not be abolished.

18. It is to be anticipated that the work of the Financial Section and Economic Intelligence Service will be increased and not diminished as a result of the present financial crisis. In these circumstances, the only reduction proposed in Item 19A relates to the Fiscal Committee and the Committee of Statistical Experts and to the sub-committees belonging to these Committees (saving of 62,000 francs).

19. The Director of the Economic Relations Section has been able to propose that the budget (Item 19B, Schedule L.I), which had already been reduced by 120,000 francs as compared with 1931, should be readjusted as follows :

	Reduction	New Figures
	Swiss francs
1. Conferences	50,000	—
2. Sessions of Committees and Sub-Committees :
(a) Subsistence allowances, etc.	17,500	197,500
(b) Printing	11,250	33,750
3. Administrative expenses :
(a) Salaries	14,500	326,087
(b) Travelling and removal expenses	5,000	25,000
(c) Studies	5,000	10,000
4. Unforeseen expenses	5,000	15,000

In view of the excessive expenditure imposed on the budget by the Disarmament Conference, the Technical Conference arranged for 1932 can be postponed until the beginning of 1933 ; moreover, one session of the Committee on Veterinary Questions can be eliminated and the credit for the committees for the study of questions relating to raw materials reduced by 5,000 francs.

As regards personnel, arrangements had been made to fill, as from October, one post of Member of Section which has been vacant since the beginning of the year ; in the present circumstances, however, the Director has, of his own accord, proposed that the appointment of this new official should be deferred.

20. The Commission has been informed that there is no constitutional reason why the number of sessions of the Permanent Mandates Commission in 1932 should not be reduced from two to one, which will enable the credit entered as Heading 1 in Item 20 to be reduced by 15,000 francs. Moreover, in view of the exceptional nature of the allowance of 2,000 francs granted to members of the Permanent Mandates Commission, the Commission is of opinion that the said allowances might be reduced by 25 per cent (involving a total saving of 5,500 francs), during 1932, as an exceptional measure.

Finally, the Commission feels that, in the present circumstances, the practice of supplying tea free of charge to members of League Commissions should be abolished, which would mean a saving of 500 francs on the budget of the Mandates Section, and of 3,000 francs on the budget as a whole.

Though the Director of the Mandates Section has been unable to accept any reduction in staff, he has been good enough to assure the Commission that he would place one Member of Section and one clerk at the disposal of the Secretary-General during the first five months of 1932 for the Disarmament Conference. A reduction of 2,000 francs having been accepted on the estimate for travelling and removal expenses, it has been possible to reduce the credit provided for the Mandates Section from 307,201 francs to 284,201 francs.

21. The credits provided for the meetings of the Communications and Transit Organisation have been subjected to a particularly minute and detailed examination. The Commission has been informed that, in 1932, the Transit Section will have to concentrate its attention on the question of air navigation and public works, and it seems impossible to effect any reduction as regards the committees studying these questions. On the other hand, there is no serious objection to postponing till 1933 the summoning of the Committee for Ports and Maritime Navigation, also of the Committee instructed to examine the British Government's proposal on buoyage. In view of the interest raised by this latter question, and of the harm which might result from a fresh postponement, the necessary credits for the summoning of the Committee on Buoyage must, in any case, be included in the budget for 1933.

These two postponements involve a reduction in Heading 2 of 25,000 francs ; in addition, the item " Temporary Engagements " has been reduced from 2,000 to 1,500 francs, and heading of " Cablegrams " from 5,000 to 4,000 francs, which means a reduction of 26,500 francs for the Section as a whole.

22. The Supervisory Commission has not thought itself competent to indicate the item of expenditure to which the reductions it had decided, in agreement with the Secretary-General, to make in the International Health Organisation's budget could apply. It therefore recommends that the Assembly should reduce the credit entered in the budget for this purpose from 1,279,930 francs to one million ; it is understood that a detailed budget will be prepared by the Health Committee at its October session and incorporated in the final budget for the 1932 financial period.

23. The supplementary budget provided for a credit of 11,500 francs for the creation of two new posts in the Supervision of Opium Traffic Section. The Supervisory Commission has noted that the officials of the Section were called upon to perform a large amount of work by the Advisory Committee and as a result of the various Opium Conventions. It has nevertheless considered that an increase in staff could not be justified under present circumstances, and, in declining to adopt the proposal in the budget, the Commission ventures to suggest that the Assembly should request the competent organs to limit the work they require of the officials by arranging for it to be taken up in stages. The Commission also recommends that the Advisory Committee should postpone for a further year the decision it took last year to meet twice annually instead of once, thus rendering possible a saving of 3,000 francs under the heading of " Session of the Advisory Committee ". Finally, by agreeing to postpone the leave of an oversea official to 1933, the Secretary-General has been able to reduce the credit provided for the travelling expenses of the Secretariat from 16,500 francs to 13,000 francs.

24. The Commission has not thought it possible to cancel the sessions arranged for the Child Welfare Committee and the Traffic in Women and Children Committee, but it thought that there was no need to summon the sub-committees in 1932, and that the credit opened for the work of experts could be temporarily discontinued. The Commission feels sure that the cuts which it proposes in this connection (15,000 francs), and the reduction in printing expenses, will in no way hamper the activities of the Social Questions Section during the forthcoming financial period.

25. The number of sessions of the Permanent Central Opium Board, which had been fixed at four annually under the Convention, had already been reduced to three in the draft budget ; the Commission therefore has not thought it advisable to insist on any further reduction in the credit of 60,000 francs opened for the purpose. In agreement with the competent official, it nevertheless reduced heading No. 1, " Temporary Engagements ", and heading No. 5, " Cables ", by 1,000 francs each.

26. As regards Item 24, " Reduction of Armaments ", the Secretary-General has agreed to a reduction of 5,000 francs on heading No. 2, " Travelling Expenses ", seeing that the work of the officials will be concentrated at Geneva in 1932. Moreover, having regard to the decision to reduce subsistence allowance from 70 francs to 60 francs, the Commission has thought it possible to reduce the credit entered in the budget for " Investigations " from 200,000 francs to 180,000 francs.

The Commission was of opinion that a sum of 3,500,000 francs would be sufficient to cover the costs of the International Disarmament Conference. As a result of the reduction in the number of conferences and sessions of committees held in 1932, a number of officials of the Secretariat may be attached temporarily to the Conference staff ; moreover, it appeared possible to reduce very considerably the figure originally fixed for printing. In view of the modifications made in the original draft budget, the estimates for the Conference are now as follows :

		Swiss francs
1.	Salaries of additional temporary staff	900,000
2.	Travelling expenses and subsistence allowance	94,000
3.	Printing	1,620,000
4.	Cables, telegrams and telephones	20,000
5.	Sundry supplies (including paper for duplication)	362,000
6.	Purchase of machines	67,000
7.	Automobile and cyclist service	116,000
8.	Incidental and miscellaneous expenses	40,000
9.	Expenses of the President	50,000
10.	Unforeseen	231,000
	Total	3,500,000

27. A large number of sessions of committees and sub-committees was provided for in the budget and the supplementary budget of the Intellectual Co-operation Section. The Commission thought that, under present circumstances, several of these meetings might without serious disadvantage be postponed to a year when the budget would be less heavily burdened ; and, after a particularly thorough examination of the situation, it proposes a reduction of 52,750 francs on a total credit of 326,563 francs, which may be itemised as follows :

	Swiss francs
Reduction in the number of the sessions of the Executive Committee from four to two	17,500
Postponement of committees for the preparation of the Conference on Scientific Property and two committees of experts	16,000
Reduction in the credits for the Sub-Committee of Experts for the Instruction of Youth and for the preparation of the Conference of National Committees	9,000
Cancellation of the new post of shorthand-typist	5,250
Reduction in travelling expenses	5,000
Total	52,750

While the Director of the Section felt unable to reduce his staff owing to the additional work imposed on him by the last Assembly, he informed the Commission that he would be glad to place a Member of Section at the disposal of the Disarmament Conference during the early months of 1932.

28. The International Federation for Mutual Assistance in the Relief of Peoples overtaken by Disaster still had a sum of about 4,000 francs remaining over from a gift received a few years ago. The Commission's proposal to abolish the credit of 5,000 francs will therefore involve no serious drawback.

29. The total credits entered in the budget and in the supplementary budget for Item 30, " Commission of Enquiry for European Union ", amounted to 200,000 francs. The Commission has accepted the following detailed budget involving a reduction of 62,875 francs :

	Swiss francs
Plenary meetings (three sessions)	10,000
Printing	22,125
Sub-Commissions (twelve sessions)	24,000
Printing	12,000
Telegrams and removal expenses	9,000
Committees of experts (three sessions)	60,000
Total	137,125

The documents prepared by the Commission are in great request by the Governments, and it is therefore necessary to provide a considerable sum for printing. The reduction, as compared with the original estimates, is due to the fact that, in 1932, circumstances will permit of the meetings of all the Sub-Commissions being held at Geneva, and that one of the committees for which special credits were asked for in the supplementary budget will be abolished, the necessary enquiries being carried out by correspondence.

30. The credits provided for correspondents and technical investigations (headings 2(a) and (b) in Item 31A, " Liaison with Latin America ") have been reduced respectively by 12,000 and 8,000 francs. A larger reduction would have been difficult owing to the grave drawbacks which would result from a diminution in the number of correspondents or an interruption of the technical enquiries already undertaken in Latin America.

31. After perusing the detailed programme of co-operation with the Chinese Government, the Supervisory Commission considered that a reduction of 10 per cent would not compromise the programme established for next year. It therefore proposes that the Assembly should reduce from 480,000 to 430,000 the credit provided for in Item 31B of the budget, " Liaison with China ".

32. As regards Item 32(b), " Meetings of Committees of Experts for the Wireless Station ", the Director of the Transit Section has been able to agree to a reduction of 2,500 francs.

2. International Labour Organisation.

(Documents A.4(a) and A.4(d).1931.)

33. The Director of the International Labour Office recalled that the Governing Body had made a systematic endeavour to stabilise the budget of the Organisation, and that the 1931 budget (8,661,652 francs), after ten years, only showed a very small increase over the 1921 budget. Although the draft budget had been discussed at length by the Governing Body, the Director stated that, in view of the desire for economy expressed by the Assembly, he was prepared to propose substantial reductions to the Governing Body.

34. He pointed out that the budget contained estimates for two Conferences next year, one of which was to be devoted to maritime questions. As it was impossible to hold two Conferences over a consecutive period of six weeks at Geneva at the same time as the Disarmament Conference, it had been necessary to ask for a supplementary credit of 350,000 francs to hold these Conferences away from Geneva. In response to the Assembly's urgent appeal for economy, the Director declared his willingness to propose to the Governing Body that it should postpone the Maritime Conference from 1932 to 1933, which would involve a saving of 165,000 francs. In these circumstances, it would seem that arrangements might be made to summon the ordinary session of the Conference at Geneva at a time when the Disarmament Conference was not sitting; in that case, the credit of 350,000 francs asked in the supplementary budget for a session away from Geneva could be cancelled.

The Assembly will no doubt note the Director's proposals with great satisfaction.

35. The Commission examined with particular care the possibility of reducing the credit of 507,100 francs provided for publications. Any considerable reduction appeared difficult, these publications being essential to the very life of the Office; besides, the expenses will be largely offset by the receipts from sales, which at present amount to almost 230,000 francs — i.e., to nearly half the printing expenses.

36. At the same time, the Commission managed to effect a certain number of reductions which are enumerated below.

	Swiss francs

3. Permanent Court of International Justice.

(Documents A.4(b) and A.4(d).1931.)

37. The Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice emphasised that the 1932 budget was scarcely larger than the 1931 budget. This latter was hastily drawn up during the last Assembly to enable effect to be given to the resolutions adopted on that occasion relating to the organisation of the Court, and had left them very little margin. Moreover, the statutory nature of the greater part of the expenses and the special character of the Court, which must always be in a position to place itself at the disposal of the States and of the Council for the solution of any question submitted to it, rendered any considerable reduction difficult. Despite this situation, the Registrar, of his own accord, proposed to the Commission reductions exceeding in all 50,000 florins.

Thus the Registrar, in agreement with the Secretary-General, stated his willingness, for his own part, that the item included in the supplementary budget for a sum of 10,000 florins for amortisation (supplementary) of the cost of new premises for the Court should not be maintained, even though its abolition should mean postponing to a later date the provision of fresh offices for the judges, which were urgently required.

The Registrar also proposed the abolition of the contribution to the funds to cover the expenses incurred in applying the pensions regulations for judges of the Court. As the fund already constituted amounted to more than 60,000 florins, it appeared to him that the pensions due for the year 1932 might be paid out of this fund. The Commission agreed in principle with this view and reduced this contribution from 30,000 to 10,000 florins.

Further, the Registrar, in view of the fact that two judges from distant countries will, in 1932, be taking the long leave provided for by the resolutions adopted by the Assembly in 1930, proposed that the credit for duty allowances of judges should be reduced by 10,000 florins.

38. The other reductions suggested by the Registrar and accepted by the Commission are enumerated below.

		Dutch florins
3 (a).	Travelling expenses	200
6.	Printing	4,500
6 (b).	Cost of purchasing publications	2,000
11.	Installations	5,000
5.	Administrative expenses : Supplies	2,000
	Total	13,700

39. The Commission's attention was called (see budget, page 8) to the provision of Article 27 of the revised Rules of Court in accordance with which "the President may summon an extraordinary session of the Court . . . to deal with general administrative matters"; it noted that this provision was reflected in the 1932 budget by an increase in certain items. These allocations, based on a statutory provision, cannot be cancelled or reduced; but the Commission suggests that the Assembly might possibly express the recommendation that the Court should, if possible, not hold any session in 1932 devoted principally to administrative questions.

Salary of the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

40. At its meeting of September 22nd, the Fourth Committee referred to the Supervisory Commission the question of the salary of the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

As regards the salary scale, the Supervisory Commission has already, in its report dated May 11th, 1931, acquainted the Council with its opinion on this question; and it is not called upon to re-open the matter.[1]

As regards the budget for the financial year 1932, in view of the voluntary statement made by the Registrar at the meeting of the Fourth Committee on September 22nd, the Supervisory Commission has no longer to deal with the question. In thanking M. Hammarskjöld for his action, which it deeply appreciated, the Supervisory Commission can only take note of the sacrifice voluntarily offered, and proposes that the credit of 7,500 florins entered in the supplementary budget for 1932 should be cancelled.

4. Nansen International Office for Refugees.

(Document A.4(d).1931.)

41. The President of the Nansen International Office for Refugees explained to the Commission that the anticipated receipts for 1932 amounted to 30,000 francs less than what would actually be received during the present year. Furthermore, as a consequence of the economic depression, the sums paid by the refugees would no doubt not reach the figure of 20,000 francs given in the budget; also, the constitution of the Refugees Section as an autonomous service involved a considerable increase in expenses.

In view, however, of the desire for economy manifested by the Assembly, and despite the considerable difficulties which would thereby ensue to the working of its services, the President of the Office accepted the Commission's recommendation to make a reduction of 10 per cent in the contribution of the League of Nations, thereby reducing this from 330,847 to 297,763 francs.

Paragraphs 21, 25 and 26 of the Report of the Committee of Thirteen.

(Document A.8.1931.X.)

42. In virtue of a decision of the Fourth Committee on September 17th, the Supervisory Commission were requested to advise on paragraphs 21, 25 and 26 of the report of the

[1] The Supervisory Commission expressed a favourable opinion on the Court's proposal of September 10th, 1929. The scale then proposed, which has since been adopted by the Council, subject to the Assembly's approval of the necessary credits, provides for a salary of 27,000 florins, rising by annual increments of 1,250 florins to 32,000 florins.

New Committee of Thirteen, dated February 5th, 1931 (document A.8.1931.X). The passages in question covered two separate subjects :

(a) The proposal to give the Treasurer of the League the rank of a Director in the Secretariat ; and

(b) A set of proposals for increasing the scale of salaries for certain high officials.

43. The former is primarily an administrative question, and, as such, it is not directly within the competence of the Supervisory Commission, much though they value the services of the present Treasurer, to express an opinion. As regards the purely financial aspect of the proposals, the Supervisory Commission feel strongly that, in the present circumstances of stress and in view of the heavy reductions which are being made in other directions, none of these salary proposals should be treated independently, and they should all be postponed for the time being.

44. The reductions proposed by the Commission may be summarised as follows.[1]

	Secretariat (including Pensions)	International Labour Organisation	Permanent Court of International Justice	Total
	Swiss francs
Conferences, Committees, etc. (apart from reduction of subsistence allowance)	254,500	535,000	—	789,500

II. SUPPLEMENTARY CREDITS.

A. Requests received by the Commission within the Regulation Time-limits.

45. Within the time-limits allowed by the Financial Regulations, the Supervisory Commission has received four applications for supplementary credits from Committees of the Assembly.

1. Constitution of a Special Committee to study the Existing System of Elections to the Council and to report to the Assembly at a Later Session with regard to any Reforms which may appear desirable.

46. The First Committee passed a resolution on this subject on September 18th, 1931. It did not wish to express any opinion whether the Committee should be composed of representatives of certain Members of the League selected for the purpose by the Council or of persons appointed by the Council itself. The printing expenses, estimated at 5,000 francs, would in any case be borne by the League. In the first case, the States invited to take part in the work of the Committee would defray the travelling expenses of their representatives, while in the second case these expenses would be chargeable to the budget of the League, and a credit of 15,000 francs would have to be provided for the purpose.

As the First Committee itself expressed no preference for either of the two solutions which it discussed, and in view of the present financial situation, the Supervisory Commission proposes to the Fourth Committee that a credit of 5,000 francs should be provided in the budget under item 11, for setting up a special committee to study the existing system of elections to the Council.

2. Committee to examine the Material relating to Slavery.[2]

47. At its meeting of September 18th, 1931, the Sixth Committee adopted the following draft resolution :

" The Assembly requests the Council to appoint for one year a small committee of experts to examine the material upon slavery which has been supplied or transmitted by Governments since the signature of the Convention of 1926. This Committee will

[1] This statement does not take account of the suppression, from the supplementary budget, of the credit of 7,500 florins for the salary of the Registrar of the Court, since this officer spontaneously renounced the benefit of this credit only after the first report of the Supervisory Commission had been submitted to the Fourth Committee.

[2] The Fourth Committee did not approve this chapter of the report and voted 10,000 francs to set up a committee.

submit to the Council suggestions with a view to recommending to the next Assembly the measures of assistance which the League of Nations might render to those countries which have agreed to abolish slavery and which request such assistance."

The competent official of the Secretariat explained to the Supervisory Commission that the Sixth Committee, having rejected a proposal for the appointment of three experts only, had in mind a committee composed of from seven to nine independent members and not of experts appointed by their Governments. It would also be necessary to provide for the appointment of a temporary official in the Intermediate Class. The total sum to be provided in the budget would be between 38,000 and 43,000 francs, according to the number of members of the Committee.

In view of the Assembly's desire to effect economies, which has led to the suspension or slowing down of activities carried on by the League for many years, the Commission does not consider it advisable to set up a new committee to study questions which are not absolutely urgent.

The Commission had, it is true, been informed that part of the expenses of the new committee might perhaps be covered by a donation from a private source, but it felt that in such a delicate matter it was out of the question for the League's action to depend on the initiative of persons outside the League.

The Supervisory Commission therefore recommends to the Fourth Committee that the Sixth Committee's proposal should be deferred to another year. It is understood that the credit of 1,500 francs already provided in the budget for collecting and publishing material relating to slavery is maintained.

3. Provision of a Credit of 250,000 francs for the Work of the Financial Committee in 1932.

48. In a letter dated September 21st, 1931, from the Chairman of the Second Committee, the Supervisory Commission was asked to include in the budget a supplementary credit of 250,000 francs in order to meet expenditure resulting from any unforeseen calls which might be made upon the Council during the year 1932 for technical financial advice to Governments or other action to meet the financial crisis. The Chairman of the Second Committee stated that this credit, which should only be drawn upon with the authority of the Council, should be earmarked exclusively for these objects. He added that it was in the nature of the case impossible to make more detailed estimates, as the total to be provided depended upon an appreciation of the present financial crisis, its possible developments and effects, and how far it was technically practicable and desirable for the Council and its technical advisers to contemplate taking action in the matter.

49. The Commission noted that the request made by the Second Committee was :

(1) In accordance with the desire expressed by the Fourth Committee that the work of the League with regard to economic and financial questions in connection with the present crisis should not be restricted in any way;

(2) Exceptional and could not recur from year to year;

(3) Presented in the form of a global credit, no total or estimate being given to show for what exact purpose the funds would be used.

In view of the exceptional nature of the Second Committee's proposal, and particularly of the fact that exact figures could not be given as in the case of all the other credits shown in the ordinary items of the budget, the Supervisory Commission recommends to the Fourth Committee that the sum of 250,000 francs should be provided in a new Item 3 (b).

Item 3 would thus read :

		Swiss francs
3.	Unforeseen expenditure (subject to special vote by the Council) :
(a)	Political expenditure	500,000
(b)	(Exceptional) Financial expenditure	250,000

The following note would also be inserted at the end of the explanatory note on page 7 of the budget :

" The sum of 250,000 francs is placed at the disposal of the Council during the year 1932 for the purpose of affording, if the Council thinks fit, technical financial advice to such Governments as may request it, and for other action to meet the financial crisis."

If the Fourth Committee decides to adopt the Supervisory Commission's proposal, it will no doubt wish to make clear its definite intention that the new credit of 250,000 francs must be earmarked solely for the purpose specified.

4. Credit of 50,000 francs for the Enquiry into the Question of the Recurrence of Economic Depressions.

50. In a letter dated September 21st, 1931, the Chairman of the Second Committee informed the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission that, in view of the serious effects of the present economic depression, the Second Committee considered that action should be taken as soon as possible on a recommendation made by representatives of the national organisations — consultative and planning councils and research institutes. This recommendation, which was supported by the Financial Committee and the Economic Committee, proposed that a qualified economist, together with an adequate staff of assistants, should be permanently attached to the Secretariat, in order to undertake especially the scientific preparatory work for the meetings, ensure continuity of effort, and take such action on the decisions of the meetings as may be necessary. The credit of 50,000 francs was also to cover the expenses of a meeting of the representatives of the above-mentioned organisations.

The Chairman of the Second Committee considered that the study of the problem of the recurrence of economic depressions, which would be entrusted to this expert, could not begin before the second half of 1932, in view of the time required to find a qualified staff.

The Supervisory Commission understands from the letter from the Chairman of the Second Committee that the proposed enquiry is not a matter of absolute urgency. In these circumstances, the Supervisory Commission, referring to the general considerations set forth above, proposes that the inclusion of a credit for the enquiry into the recurrence of economic depressions should be postponed to a later budget.

51. The Supervisory Commission has also received two letters from the Chairman of the Sixth Committee.

52. With regard to the first, in which the draft report of the Sixth Committee on the question of refugees was submitted for its opinion, the Supervisory Commission has nothing to add to the section of this report relating to the budget of the Nansen International Office for Refugees.

53. The second communication from the Chairman of the Sixth Committee calls for no comment on the part of the Supervisory Commission, the questions of credits for publications, for liaison with China and for the budget of the Intellectual Co-operation Section having been settled by decisions taken by the Fourth Committee on September 21st, 1931.

B. Requests received after the Regulation Time-limits.

54. By a decision adopted by the Fourth Committee on September 23rd by the majority laid down in the Financial Regulations, two requests for supplementary credits, emanating from the First Committee, were laid before the Supervisory Commission, having been received by the Fourth Committee after the expiration of the time-limits laid down in the Regulations.

55. The First Committee asked that a supplementary credit of 1,500 francs should be entered in the budget for printing the observations which the Governments and the Committee of representatives of the women's international organisations would be requested to submit with a view to the discussion of the question of the nationality of wives at the next session of the Assembly.

56. Furthermore, to meet the eventuality of the First Committee deciding to set up a committee of representatives of all the Members of the League of Nations to report to the next Assembly on the question of the amendment of the Covenant of the League, the following supplementary credits should be provided :

	Swiss francs
Printing of the Committee's report	1,000
Printing of the Minutes, if the Committee so requests and if this request is approved by the Council	3,500

It is understood that, if the First Committee decides to make a proposal which does not involve the expenditure contemplated, the request for a credit will be withdrawn.

57. The Supervisory Commission first of all pronounced in favour of the adoption of the second proposal. As regards the first, in view of the small amount of the credit asked for and the fact that the acceptance of this credit would not bind the League beyond 1932, the Commission decided to accept it also.

III. MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS.

1. Expenditure incurred in 1931 on Liaison with China.

58. At its May session, the Supervisory Commission agreed that, if the sums allocated by the Council out of Item 3 of the budget for liaison with China should prove insufficient, the Secretary-General might, " as a quite exceptional measure and as a derogation from the Financial Regulations, be authorised to utilise part of the arrears which the Chinese Government will pay in 1931 to meet the otherwise uncovered portion of the expenditure of the various missions ". The question of the method to be adopted to give effect to these views remained open.

59. The Commission had already decided last year that it could not, under any circumstances, recommend a transfer from one chapter to another, such a practice being contrary to the Financial Regulations. Although it is undesirable as a general rule to charge expenditure relating to one and the same subject to different items in the budget, the Supervisory Commission considers that, if in 1931 all the expenditure necessary for liaison with China could not be covered by Item 3, " Unforeseen expenditure (subject to special vote of Council) ", the budgets of the various technical organisations concerned should be charged with the part of the expenditure particularly relating to them. Moreover, if the credits placed at the disposal of one or more of these organisations proved insufficient, the Secretary-General might, in accordance with the Regulations, supplement them by transferring sums drawn from other items of the same chapter in the budget. Finally, should the necessary amounts not be available in other items, the Secretary-General might, as an entirely exceptional measure, be authorised to take them from Item 24, VIII, " International Disarmament Conference ", which shows an absolutely certain balance for the current year, but which, under various previous resolutions, cannot be drawn upon without the express authorisation of the Assembly.

2. New Duties of the Financial Committee during the Present Financial Period.

60. The Secretary-General explained to the Commission that the Financial Committee would probably be obliged to undertake special work not provided for in the budget during the present financial period.

In view of the exceptional importance of the Financial Committee's work and the impossibility of postponing it in the present crisis, the Supervisory Commission recommends that, if no funds are available in the budget of the Financial Section and Economic Intelligence Service, the Secretary-General should be authorised by the Assembly to transfer, if need be, the sums required from Item 24, VIII, " International Disarmament Conference ", which, in virtue of certain previous resolutions, could not be drawn upon without the Assembly's express authorisation.

3. Transfers in the Budget for the 1932 Financial Period.

61. In view of the large reductions made in the estimates for the 1932 financial period, it may be anticipated that next year the Secretary-General will find great difficulty with his budget.

In these circumstances, and as an exceptional measure applying only to the year 1932, the Commission proposes that the Assembly should authorise the Council to make transfers from one chapter to another on condition that these transfers are communicated to the Supervisory Commission for its preliminary approval before being submitted to the Council.

4. Amendments to the Staff Regulations.

(a) Modifications in Certain Articles as a Result of the Creation of a Pensions Fund.

62. At its May session, the Commission requested its Rapporteur to consider whether the entry into force of the Staff Pensions Regulations would not necessitate modifying certain articles in the Staff Regulations.

63. The Commission, accepting the conclusions of its Rapporteur, is of opinion that only Articles 39 and 70 of the Regulations would have to be amended as a result of the creation of the Pensions Fund.

The present text of Article 39 is as follows :

> " Where the nature of an official's illness is or becomes such as to render him incapable of returning to his duties during the period of his appointment, or liable to relapses so frequent as to prevent him from satisfactorily performing his duties, the Secretary-General may terminate his appointment on the ground of invalidity, notwithstanding that the sick leave allowable to him has not been exhausted, on payment of an equitable indemnity for the unexpired sick leave, which shall be independent of, and without prejudice to, any grant which can be made to the official under Article 18 of the Regulations of the Staff Provident Fund of the League of Nations or to his rights under the Staff Pensions Regulations."

64. The Commission considers that the establishment of the present system of invalidity pensions renders any additional grant of compensation " for unexpired sick leave " unnecessary. On the other hand, this right to compensation should, it seems, not be withdrawn from officials who, for some reason or other, are not members of the Pensions Fund.

Under these circumstances, the Supervisory Commission recommends that the Assembly should approve Article 39, amended as follows :

> " Where the nature of an official's illness is or becomes such as to render him incapable of returning to his duties during the period of his appointment, or liable to relapses so frequent as to prevent him from satisfactorily performing his duties, the Secretary-General may terminate his appointment on the ground of invalidity, notwithstanding that the sick leave allowable to him has not been exhausted.
> " In such circumstances, the official is entitled to an equitable indemnity in respect of his unexpired sick leave, when the Regulations of the Pensions Fund do not render him eligible for an invalidity pension. This indemnity shall be independent of any grant which can be made to the official under the Regulations of the Staff Provident Fund of the League of Nations."

65. Article 70 at present reads as follows :

" An official receiving a physical injury or incurring a disease in the course and in consequence of his employment as an official shall be allowed equitable compensation.

" Should the official's death result from the injury or disease, equitable compensation shall be paid to members of the official's family who were wholly or partially dependent upon him at the time of his death or, but for the injury or disease, would have been so dependent.

" The provisions of the present article shall not affect the application of the Staff Pensions Regulations or of the Regulations of the Staff Provident Fund."

66. The Commission considers, in the first place, that it is fair, in the case covered by Article 70 (death or invalidity in consequence of employment), the official or the members of his family should receive compensation over and above the grants to which they might be entitled under the Staff Pensions Regulations.

67. The question remains as to whether the definition of the basis on which compensation can be claimed, which was satisfactory when it was first adopted and when it was a case of providing that the administration might, at its discretion, pay such compensation as it considered reasonable, is still satisfactory now that the payment of compensation has become a matter of strict legal liability enforceable by the Administrative Tribunal.

The Commission was of opinion that it had not sufficient time during the present session to prepare a new definition, but it intends to submit a definite text to the next Assembly. Meanwhile it considers that, should a case arise between now and September 1932, an extensive interpretation should not be given to this definition, but that it would be necessary to insist that the applicant for compensation must prove both that his misfortune happened to him while he was engaged in executing his duty and also that the misfortune was the materialisation of a risk involved in the nature of the work which he was performing or the circumstances in which he was performing it, and not, for example, of a quite general risk or a risk to which by his own act or negligence he had unnecessarily exposed himself. The idea that it is sufficient to prove that the misfortune would not have happened if the official's work had not led to his being in a particular place at the moment when it happened must surely in any case be rejected. Moreover, there cannot be any liability on the League of Nations where the official brings an injury upon himself or incurs a disease by wilful negligence or misconduct in performing work of a perfectly safe kind on premises and with appliances which are perfectly suited to their purpose.

(b) Question of maintaining the Statute of the Administrative Tribunal or of amending it.

68. The Assembly resolution of September 26th, 1927, by which the Administrative Tribunal's Statute was established, contemplated that the Assembly, in 1931, would consider, in the light of the experience gained, whether there was reason to abrogate or amend that Statute. This enquiry was, however, made by anticipation last year as a result of the appointment of the Committee of Thirteen. Section 4, paragraph 45, of the Committee of Thirteen's report noted with approval the existence, composition and jurisdiction of the Tribunal as one of the safeguards enjoyed by the staff for the proper application of its terms of appointment and the Regulations to which it is subject. The Fourth Committee, on October 1st, 1930, adopted this passage of the report. In addition, Article 26 of the Pensions Regulations, approved by the Assembly on the proposal of the Fourth Committee, made the Tribunal the authority to hear and decide complaints of non-observance of those Regulations.

The present Assembly, noting that the decisions of 1927 have been confirmed by subsequent Assembly resolutions, will doubtless not desire any amendment in the Statute of the Administrative Tribunal. The Secretary-General could, moreover, be authorised to place the question on the agenda of a later Assembly if experience showed that the working of the Tribunal gave rise to difficulties.

(c) Definition of Locally Recruited Staff.[1]

69. Article 8 of the Staff Regulations, which is based on the decisions taken by the last Assembly on the report of the Committee of Thirteen, reads as follows :

. . . . . .

" The salary scales prescribed in Annex I for permanent officials of the Second Division are applicable to officials whose employment at Geneva involves their expatriation. This Annex also shows the salary scales for officials locally recruited.

" Officials are considered as locally recruited if they have been established for five years in French-speaking Switzerland (la suisse Romande) or in French territory within a radius of fifteen kilometres from Geneva.

[1] The Fourth Committee did not approve this chapter of the report and requested the Supervisory Commission to submit new proposals to the next Assembly.

" Absence for temporary reasons will not be considered as interrupting the period necessary to constitute establishment.

" The families of officials, other than locally recruited officials, and of accredited representatives of Members of the League residing in the above-indicated area will not be considered to be established in that area."

70. Experience has shown that the definition of locally recruited staff given in Article 8 is administratively, as well as theoretically, open to objection. The line of demarcation between French-speaking Switzerland and German- and Italian-speaking Switzerland does not furnish a satisfactory line of demarcation between local recruitment and international recruitment. It runs across the centre of certain cantons and even of certain towns.

It is difficult to regard any native of Switzerland as expatriated by taking work in another part of Switzerland. The linguistic and cultural differences which exist between different parts of Switzerland hardly create frontiers of such a kind that the crossing of them amounts to expatriation.

71. The Secretary-General has therefore come to the conclusion that the proposal contained in the general report on the organisation of the Secretariat which was presented by the Secretary-General to the Committee of Thirteen (document. A.16.1930, page 44) should be reverted to.

Under this proposal, the area of local recruitment was to be the whole of Switzerland and that small area in France which is within such easy reach of Geneva that employment in Geneva does not involve separation from the official's original home.

Finally, the adoption of a five years' period of establishment as a criterion of local recruitment has proved in practice to be extremely inconvenient and difficult to justify. The criterion for local recruitment should, it is thought, be that the individual belonged to Switzerland or had expatriated himself to Switzerland before appointment.

72. The Commission of Control, accepting one of the Secretary-General's proposals, therefore suggests that the Assembly should replace the present wording of Article 8 by the following :

" Officials are considered as locally recruited if they had their residence in Switzerland, or in French territory within a radius of fifteen kilometres from the frontiers of the Canton of Geneva, at the time of appointment, unless they prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary-General that they had become so resident for reasons of health, recreation or study, or for some other reason of a strictly temporary nature.

" A person will not be treated as resident in the above-mentioned area if such person's residence therein originated and has continued solely in consequence:

" (a) Of the fact that the person is the son or daughter of an official of the First Division, or a non-locally recruited official of the Second Division, belonging to the Secretariat or the International Labour Office, or of a representative of a foreign Government who is obliged by his functions to reside in the said area, and is dependent upon such official or representative;

" (b) Of the fact that the person is a member of or belongs to the staff of a legation, delegation or consulate."

73. If the above definition is adopted, the Commission would favour giving travelling and removal expenses on entering and leaving the service to locally recruited officials engaged from places at a greater distance than twenty-five kilometres from Geneva. It does not consider that it would be possible to give them holiday travelling expenses, because the Assembly has sanctioned this privilege on the ground that it is desirable for the members of the staff to have opportunities of remaining in touch with their native countries, and this consideration can hardly apply to officials who are not recruited as expatriated.

Finally, the Commission considers that it should be made clear that the definition will apply only as regards appointments made after its adoption — i.e., that the existing staff will not be reclassified on the basis of the definition.

Official No.: A.20.1931.
[C.P.34 (1).]

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD OF THE STAFF PENSIONS FUND TO THE ASSEMBLY

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund, established in accordance with Article 3 of the Staff Pensions Regulations adopted by the Assembly at its eleventh session, has held two sessions since its constitution, the first beginning on Wednesday, January 21st, 1931, and lasting until Friday, January 23rd, 1931, and the second beginning on Wednesday, July 1st, and lasting until Saturday, July 4th, 1931.

The following members have attended the sessions :

Mr. HOEL,	Appointed by the Assembly.
M. RADULESCO,	Appointed by the Assembly.
M. RAPPARD,	Appointed by the Assembly.
Mr. JACKLIN,	Representing the Secretary-General of the League of Nations,
Mr. BUTLER,	Representing the Director of the International Labour Office.
M. JORSTAD,	Representing the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice.
M. DE BORDES,	Representing the Staff of the Secretariat of the League of Nations.
M. TIXIER,	Representing the Staff of the International Labour Office.

(M. DECHAMP attended the first session in the place of M. Tixier, and M. DE JANASZ in the place of M. Jorstad. M. FLEURY occasionally took the place of Mr. Butler.)

The Board elected as its Chairman M. RAPPARD and as its Vice-Chairman M. RADULESCO.

The Board has endeavoured to administer the Pensions Fund in accordance with the provisions of the Staff Pensions Regulations. Such action as it has taken is set out below.

It wishes, however, at the outset to lay emphasis on the fact that it is not possible at the present juncture for it to present a full report on the working of the Fund and on the financial consequences in general involved by the adoption of a Pensions Scheme. At the time of writing, the actual number of officials who will become members of the Fund is not yet known, since the option to join it does not expire until December 31st, 1931, nor will the Actuary be able to present his report on the first valuation of the Fund until the opening months of 1932.

Part 1 of this report deals with the various administrative decisions which the Board has taken, Part 2 with certain interpretations which it has given of the Staff Pensions Regulations and certain amendments to those Regulations which it wishes to propose.

Part 1.

ADMINISTRATIVE DECISIONS

APPOINTMENT OF A CONSULTING ACTUARY.

The Board appointed as its Consulting Actuary, Dr. FRIEDLI, Professor of the University of Berne and Actuary of the Office fédéral des Assurances sociales, at Berne.

Appointment of a Sub-Committee.

The Board decided at the outset that, in order to carry on current business between its sessions, a Sub-Committee should be constituted, consisting of the Chairman or Vice-Chairman and two members, one representing the administration and the other the staff. These representatives would be drawn from the Secretariat and the International Labour Office alternatively. Any action taken by the Sub-Committee, except in regard to the matter of investments, is to be regarded as provisional until approved by the Board at its following meeting. The Sub-Committee, however, is empowered as a matter of routine finally to admit officials to the Fund when their application raises no special question.

The Sub-Committee has met twice, and has had the assistance of the Treasurer and the substitute members of the Board, who have attended in an advisory capacity. Its decisions, which have been ratified by the full Board, form in consequence an integral part of this report.

Rules of Procedure and Administrative Rules.

The Board adopted Rules of Procedure and Administrative Rules (see separate annex) for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Staff Pensions Regulations in accordance with Article 25 of those Regulations. It directed that the Rules in question, together with the Staff Pensions Regulations, should subsequently be issued in pamphlet form, a copy of which should be forwarded to each member of the Fund.

The Board thought that the best procedure would be to obtain the information, necessary for the purpose of admitting an official to the Fund and subsequently for granting him the prescribed benefits, from the individual applicants through the competent official of the organisation in which they were employed. It has therefore made provision for the competent official to be called upon to certify that the information supplied by the applicant to the Board corresponds with the records in his possession. The Board has further reserved its right to make any additional enquiries it thinks fit, though as a general rule it would of course rely on the information as certified by the competent authority.

The Actuary having expressed the opinion that it would be necessary to obtain details of changes in the official's family circumstances at specified intervals, the Board has decided that particulars of the official's family circumstances shall be furnished during the first year for the purposes of the valuation of the Fund. All subsequent changes shall be notified annually by a specified date.

Adoption of Commutation Tables.

The commutation tables required by Article 9 of the Staff Pensions Regulations were, at the request of the Board, prepared by the Consulting Actuary, and were based on mortality tables drawn up by Mlle. Castellani, Actuary of the International Labour Office. The material used by her was supplied by Professor Cantelli, one of the three actuaries consulted by the Assembly in connection with the pensions scheme. The tables prepared by her were further examined by the Consulting Actuary, who recommended their adoption by the Board. They were accordingly adopted.

Payment of Interest on Arrears due to the Fund.

The Board decided that in all cases in which arrears were due to the Fund, either in respect of service not involving membership of the Provident Fund or in respect of leave without pay or in respect of life insurance premiums paid by the Provident Fund, interest at 4 per cent should be charged from January 1st, 1931. In no case should the period for the liquidation of such arrears exceed seven years.

The Board has felt that members of the Fund should be allowed a wide latitude in regard to the proposals made by them for the payment of their arrears, but it decided that should a member wish to extend his payments over a longer period of time than that originally proposed by him and agreed to by the Board, he could not do so without its express authority.

Accounts of the Fund.

The Board has entrusted the accounts of the Fund to the Treasury of the League, which will be audited by the League Auditor, in accordance with Article 22 (3) of the Staff Pensions Regulations.

Investments of the Fund.

The Board, in investing the money available for the Fund, has had the advice of an Investments Committee composed of M. ter Meulen, M. Suvich and M. Odier, appointed by the Council on the recommendation of the Financial Committee of the League. The Investments Committee has drawn up lists of securities in which it recommends that the investments of the Fund shall be made.

The Board has asked the Treasurer of the League to act as its Investments Officer for the time being, until a final decision as to the procedure to be followed in the matter of investment has been taken. In the meantime, the investments of the Fund have been, and will continue to be, made by the Board in accordance with the list of securities drawn up by the Investments Committee.

The Board has decided that between its sessions any decision upon the purchase or sale of investments should be taken by the Sub-Committee, with the advice of the Investments Committee or of such of its members as it might prove possible to consult in the time available.

With regard to the general investment policy to be pursued, the Board feels that a discussion with its Investments Committee would be of great assistance. The present state of the markets is not such as to facilitate the task of those responsible for the administration of the Fund, which, while offering complete security, should yield not less than 4 1/4 per cent. It accordingly hopes that the Investments Committee may be consulted in September.

Registration of Securities.

In so far as the registration of the Fund's securities is concerned, the Board has adopted the following resolution :

> " The Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund resolves that a member of the Board, the Treasurer and the Secretary of the Board shall be authorised to sign on its behalf such documents as may be necessary to obtain the registration of marketable securities purchased by the Board in the name of the League of Nations Staff Pensions Fund."

Medical Examination of Officials entering the Fund.

The Board has noted that by the terms of the Staff Pensions Regulations, any official member of the Staff Provident Fund in the service of the League prior to January 1st, 1931, the date on which the pensions scheme came into force, could be admitted to the Pensions Fund without a medical examination. It is of course of great importance for the solvency of the Fund that only persons in a good state of health should in future be admitted. The Board accordingly addressed a letter to the heads of the three organisations concerned, drawing their attention to the matter and making various suggestions as to the medical examination of officials entering the service, and therefore the Fund, at a date subsequent to January 1st of this year. The Board received replies from the heads of the three organisations, informing it that its suggestions were approved and that detailed regulations were being prepared to enable them to be carried into effect. The Board therefore feels that the procedure to be applied in regard to medical examination of officials joining the Fund is satisfactory, and that the interests of the Fund are adequately safeguarded in this respect.

Admissions to the Fund.

Up to the date of this report the Board has admitted 313 officials of the Secretariat, 238 of the International Labour Office and 20 of the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice — a total of 570 — to the Fund.

The Board received an application for admission to the Fund from an official aged 60 years and 11 months. When the Board finally considered the case, the official in question had been reinstated as a member of the Staff Provident Fund, and, since his salary was borne on the budget of the League, the Board felt that the provisions of Article 27, paragraph 2, applied in his case, and therefore admitted him by 5 votes to 1, the Treasurer, representing the Secretary-General, dissenting. The Board noted that this was a transitional case, and decided unanimously to draw attention to it in its report.

On the other hand, the Board noted that three officials at present serving in the Secretariat had had service with the Temporary Epidemic Commission since 1921. The funds of that Commission, though placed under the control of the Health Organisation of the League by a decision of the Assembly of September 23rd, 1921, had not been subscribed by the League, which had merely made a yearly contribution. In view of this fact, the Board considered that the salaries of the officials in question had not been borne on the budget of the League during the period of their services with the Temporary Epidemic Commission, and it therefore felt unable to decide that this period of their service should be counted for pension purposes.

Applicants with Breaks in Service.

The Board considered the various proposals of the appointing authorities concerning breaks in service in the case of a number of applicants. It came to the conclusion that it was of importance that a uniform practice should be followed throughout the three organisations concerned, in order that members of the Fund should in this respect be put on a footing of equality. It accordingly adopted the general principle followed in the Swiss National Pension Fund. Under that principle the date from which an official now in possession of a contract entitling him to membership of the Pensions Fund shall be permitted to count his service shall be a fictitious date computed by counting back from the date on which he received his permanent contract the days spent in the service of the League. However, it was decided not to count back beyond any date which might be separated from a previous period of service by an interval of more than six months.

Applicants with Leave without Pay.

The Board noted that in respect of officials who have had leave without pay subsequent to January 1st, 1924, such leave does not constitute a break in service and can be counted for pension purposes, provided that the officials in question pay contributions to the Fund for the period of such leave. With regard, however, to leave without pay taken before January 1st, 1924 — i.e., before the institution of the Provident Fund — the position appeared more doubtful. The Board has accordingly instructed its legal advisers to submit an opinion on the question of leave without pay taken before 1924.

Payment of Benefits.

The Board has approved the payment of the benefits due in the case of nine members who have left the service between January 1st and July 31st, 1931, and has granted one invalidity pension, the amount of which may be revised after one year.

Part 2.

INTERPRETATION OF, AND SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS TO, THE STAFF PENSIONS REGULATIONS.

Introduction.

That part of its duties which the Board regards as of the greatest importance is the interpretation of the Staff Pensions Regulations. It has accordingly very carefully considered the bearing of certain articles, notably that of paragraph 2 (i) and (ii) (b) and (c) of Article 27, which deals with the holding of life insurance policies by the Fund, with the payment of the premiums upon them and with the consequent reduction of benefits.

Interpretation of Article 27, Paragraph 2 (i) and (ii) (b) and (c).

The Administrative Board is required to determine the conditions under which members of the Pensions Fund may pay life insurance premiums out of their contributions to the Fund, in accordance with the provisions of Article 27, paragraph 2 (i) and (ii) (b) and (c). The Administrative Board examined two points in connection with this matter. The first concerned the last date by which officials must take out life insurance policies and charge the premiums to their contributions ; the second concerned the method to be adopted for reducing the benefits for which the Fund is liable in a proportion corresponding to the amount of insurance premiums paid out of the contributions of members.

With regard to the first question, whether life insurance policies must have been taken out before January 1st, 1931, in order to ensure that the premiums should be charged to the contributions of the officials to the Fund, the Administrative Board, after having considered several legal opinions, noted that the interpretation to be given to the meaning of paragraph 2 of Article 27 was doubtful. It therefore adopted a solution inspired alike by motives of equity having regard to the position of the officials concerned, and by its desire to safeguard the financial stability of the Fund. The Administrative Board therefore decided to authorise members to charge against their contributions to the Fund the premiums on life insurance policies already taken out, or which will be taken out before December 31st, 1931. The amount of the insurance premium to be charged against the contribution, however, shall not exceed 5 per cent of their pensionable emoluments.

In regard to the second question, the Board decided to adopt the system proposed by Mr. Hoel for calculating the reduction of the benefits due by the Fund to officials or their dependants when life insurance premiums have been charged to their contributions. According to that system the premiums are to be considered as loans made to the insured persons by the Pensions Fund and bearing compound interest at such rate as the premiums would have earned had they remained in the Provident Fund up to January 1st, 1931, and thereafter at 4 per cent. Detailed rules for reducing the benefits of members who did not repay their premium debt to the Fund were drawn up and unanimously adopted. The application of these rules will completely protect the Pensions Fund against any possible loss.

Suggested Amendments to the Staff Pensions Regulations.

Although it is still at the outset of its task, the Board feels, after full consideration of the position, that it should already at the present stage suggest two amendments to the Staff Pensions Regulations for the adoption of the Assembly.

Suggested Amendment to Article 3, Paragraph 1.

The experience gained by the Board in the course of its first year's activity convinces it of the desirability of its always being assured of the continuous co-operation of the Treasurer of the League. It accordingly proposes that the Treasurer should be ex officio a member of the Board. In order that the relative influence of the representatives of the members of the Fund should not be affected by this modification, it is proposed that their number should be increased by one. If the Assembly decided to adopt this amendment, paragraph 1 of Article 3 would accordingly read as follows :

> " The execution of the present Regulations and the management of the Pensions Fund shall be effected by an Administrative Board consisting of three members elected by the Assembly, a representative of the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, a representative of the Director of the International Labour Office, the Treasurer of the League of Nations, and three members elected by secret ballot by the officials who are subject to the present Regulations. Where questions directly affecting the officials of the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice are under consideration, a representative of the Registrar shall be added to the Board."

Suggested Amendment to Article 12, Paragraph 4.

With regard to Article 12 of the Staff Pensions Regulations, the Board felt that in certain cases adopted children and step-children of deceased members should also be entitled to the benefits provided by the Fund. It took this decision after having consulted Mr. Hoel, one of the Actuaries originally concerned with drawing up the pensions scheme, who is a member of the Board. The Board was assured that the extra risk incurred by inserting a provision covering adopted or step-children in this article would be insignificant. The Board therefore ventures to propose to the Assembly that paragraph 4 of Article 12 should read as follows :

> " The Administrative Board shall decide in each particular case whether the benefits of the present article shall extend to adopted children, step-children or children not born in wedlock."

Conclusion.

The Board would once more call attention to the fact that the exact position of the Fund cannot be known until after its valuation by the Consulting Actuary. It is convinced, however, that the suggestions which it has made for the amendment of the Staff Pensions Regulations cannot have any adverse effect upon the Fund, and it accordingly requests the Assembly to consider the advisability of adopting the following resolution :

> " The Assembly ;
>
> " Takes note of the first annual report of the Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund ; and
> " Adopts the following amendments to the Staff Pensions Regulations :
> " Article 3, paragraph 1, to read as follows :
> " ' The execution of the present Regulations and the management of the Pensions Fund shall be effected by an Administrative Board consisting of three members elected by the Assembly, a representative of the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, a representative of the Director of the International Labour Office, the Treasurer of the League of Nations, and three members elected by secret ballot by the officials who are subject to the present Regulations. Where questions directly affecting the officials of the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice are under consideration, a representative of the Registrar shall be added to the Board.'
> " Article 12, paragraph 4, to read as follows :
>
> " ' The Administrative Board shall decide in each particular case whether the benefits of the present article shall extend to adopted children, step-children or children not born in wedlock.' "

Appendix.

STAFF PENSIONS FUND

Administrative Rules adopted by the Administrative Board for the Application of the Staff Pensions Regulations.

The following rules have been adopted by the Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund, in accordance with the provisions of Article 25 of the Staff Pensions Regulations. The Board has postponed the adoption of Rule 14 and has adopted the text of Rule 15 provisionally, subject to final adoption at its next session.

ADMINISTRATIVE RULES.

(Note. — In these rules, words implying the masculine gender include females.)

The Board adopts the following provisions for its Administrative Rules :

General Provisions.

I. Officials shall be admitted to the benefits and obligations of the Staff Pensions Regulations by the Administrative Board after they have fulfilled the conditions which are necessary for such admission under those Regulations.

II. No benefit shall be payable under the Staff Pensions Regulations except by order of the Board, or by the Sub-Committee provided for under Rule III, and after proof that the conditions prescribed by those Regulations and the present Rules as being necessary for the payment of such benefit have been fulfilled.

III. A Sub-Committee consisting of the Chairman or Vice-Chairman and two members of the Board shall be appointed by the Board to transact any current business when the Board is not in session. One member of the Sub-Committee, who shall be its Chairman, shall be a member of the Board appointed by the Assembly. Of the other two members, one shall represent the Heads of the Organisations and the other the members of the Fund, it being understood that the representatives of the Heads of the Organisations and of the members of the Fund shall be chosen from different Organisations alternately. Any action taken by the Sub-Committee shall be provisional until approved by the Board at its following session.

Admission to the Fund.

IV. Every official appointed before January 1st, 1931, who desires to be admitted to the Fund shall make application as soon as possible through the head of the Organisation in which he is employed — namely :

The Secretary-General ;

The Director of the International Labour Office ;

The Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

In no case shall the application of any official be lodged with the Secretary of the Board later than December 31st, 1931.

Every such application shall be made on the prescribed form (P.F.1 or 2) and signed by the applicant, who shall be held responsible for the accuracy of the information given on the form. The Board shall be entitled to rely on this information, and no liability shall be incurred by the Pensions Fund in consequence of any action taken, or authorised, by the Board in reliance upon the accuracy of such information.

The competent official of the organisation concerned shall certify on the form that the information given agrees with the records in his possession.

V. Every official appointed after January 1st, 1931, who is required to be a member of the Fund, shall complete the prescribed form (P.F.2) and forward it to the Secretary of the Board through the competent official of the Organisation in which he is employed within fourteen days of the assumption of his duties. The competent official of the Organisation shall certify that the information given agrees with the records in his possession.

VI. The Board may call for any additional proof or information it may deem necessary in the cases referred to in Rules IV and V.

VII. The Board shall notify the Heads of the Organisations concerned of all officials admitted to the Fund.

VIII. Officials who were appointed before January 1st, 1931, and who were not members of the Provident Fund, shall indicate on the prescribed form (P.F.1.) the date from which they claim their continuous service in the League to have begun, and shall make such proposals as they desire to liquidate any arrear contributions due to the Fund. The Board shall decide how and when such arrear contributions shall be paid and shall notify the competent official of the Organisation concerned accordingly.

All arrear contributions shall be liquidated before the expiration of seven years from January 1st, 1931, or, if the member's services were terminated before the end of that period, the arrears still owing shall, in accordance with the terms of Article 20 of the Staff Pensions Regulations, be liquidated out of any annuity or other payment due.

IX. Officials who are members of the Provident Fund and who desire to transfer to the Pensions Fund shall specifically state this desire on the prescribed form (P.F.1.). In all cases the transfer shall date from January 1st, 1931.

X. On receipt of any application for admission to the Pensions Fund, the Secretary of the Board shall satisfy himself that the prescribed form has been correctly completed, and, if this has not been done, the applicant shall be called upon to make the necessary corrections.

XI. Every applicant for membership of the Fund shall be required to submit with his application proof of the age of himself and, in the case of a married official, of the age of wife or husband and any children under 18 years of age, together with proof of marriage. At the end of each year, the Secretary of the Board shall forward through the intermediary of the competent official of each Organisation a form to be completed by each member of the Fund on which shall be notified any subsequent changes in the member's family circumstances (marriage, death of wife, divorce, remarriage, birth of children or death of children under the age of 18).

The present rule also applies to female officials, who shall supply the prescribed information in regard to their husbands and children.

Contributions to the Pensions Fund.

XII. As all officials who were appointed before January 1st, 1931, must, on admission, contribute to the Fund at the rates prescribed, from January 1st, 1931, they shall state, in their application for admission, how the contributions which may be due in respect of the period from January 1st, 1931, to the first day of the month in which application is made, shall be paid to the Fund. In every case, all contributions due from January 1st, 1931, shall be paid to the Fund before January 1st, 1932.

XIII. An official classed as a " Principal Officer " shall state on the prescribed form of application whether he wishes to become a member of the Fund or whether he opts for an insurance on his life. If the official elects to become a member of the Fund, he shall complete the form (P.F.1.) if he was appointed before January 1st, 1931, or the form (P.F.2.) if he was appointed after January 1st, 1931.

XIV. (Reserved).

XV. An official appointed before January 1st, 1931, who was a member of the Provident Fund and who elects to become a member of the Pensions Fund shall, if any premiums of life insurance have been made chargeable to his account in the Provident Fund, notify before December 31st, 1931, on the prescribed form (P.F.1) whether he wishes to pay to the Pensions Fund with interest the amounts which have been withdrawn from his Provident Fund account for the payments of premiums and whether or not he wishes the premiums which were chargeable to his Provident Fund account to be paid out of the Pensions Fund (Article 27, section 2, paragraph (ii) of the Staff Pensions Regulations).

The following rules shall apply in the cases where the official decides not to pay to the Pensions Fund the amounts withdrawn from his Provident Fund account with interest and assume himself the liability for the further payment of the premiums.

1. The amount which may be chargeable to the Pensions Fund for premiums in any year is limited to 5 per cent of the official's pensionable emoluments for the year. The Administrative Board shall take the necessary measures to cause the premiums to be paid direct to the insurance company. If the amount payable is in excess of the amount which can be charged to the Pensions Fund, the excess shall be deducted from the official's salary by the Administration to which he belongs before the payment is due and be paid to the Pensions Fund.

2. The amount due to the Pensions Fund in respect of withdrawals from the official's Provident Fund Account (i.e., amounts withdrawn for payment of premiums plus the interest which those amounts would have earned if they had remained in his account but deducting any payment made to the Pensions Fund) and the amounts paid for premiums out of the Pensions Fund constitute a debt owed by the official to the Pensions Fund, which shall bear compound interest at 4 per cent per annum, calculated (a) upon the first mentioned amount from the date on which the official's Provident Fund account is closed, and (b) upon each of the latter amounts from the first day of the year in which it is paid. This debt is hereafter described as the official's " premium debt ".

The official may at any time :

(a) Make payments to the Pensions Fund in reduction of his premium debt ;

(b) Prevent further accumulation of interest on his premium debt by authorising the interest due at the end of each year to be deducted from his salary and paid into the Pensions Fund, such authorisation to be revocable by the official at any time.

On the official's quitting the service or on his death, his premium debt shall become payable and shall be settled in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 8 below, either (a) by payment of the amount into the Pensions Fund or (b) by reduction of the benefits due from the Fund.

3. The settlement of the official's premium debt shall be secured by a first charge upon the policy, or policies, of insurance upon which premiums have been paid out of the Provident Fund or the Pensions Fund and upon all benefits becoming due thereunder. Until the premium debt is settled, the policies shall remain deposited with the Fund, under the control of the Administrative Board and on the terms that they may not in any way be made subject to any charge or be assigned otherwise than to the League of Nations, represented by the Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund. The official or his administrators or executors shall, at the demand of the Administrative Board, and at his own expense or that of his estate, do whatever acts may be necessary on his or their part to enable the Administrative Board to deal with the policies for the purpose of enforcing the aforesaid charge. Any expenses incurred by the Administrative Board in enforcing the charge shall be recoverable from the proceeds of the action taken in regard to the policies.

4. Any cash payment made on the policy before the official's premium debt is settled shall be paid into the Pensions Fund and operate to reduce the official's premium debt.

If the amount is in excess of the official's premium debt the balance shall be paid to the official[1] (or, at his request and with the consent of the Administrative Board, may remain in the Pensions Fund, in which case it shall be paid out to the official with compound interest at 4 per cent on the termination of his service, or to his estate in the event of his death).

5. (i) Receipts for premiums shall be attached to the policy to which they relate.

(ii) Certificates for bonuses payable on the maturity of a policy shall be deposited with the Administrative Board on the same terms as the policy itself.

6. No obligation of whatsover kind is assumed by the Administrative Board towards the insurance company.

7. The official shall sign the following Declaration :

DECLARATION.

" I, the undersigned, hereby agree and recognise that all benefits becoming due under the below-mentioned policy of insurance are subject to a first charge, and the said policy is deposited with the Administrative Board of the League of Nations Staff Pensions Fund, in accordance with the provisions of the Administrative Rules of that Fund, as security for the settlement of my premium debt to that Fund.

" I recognise that I have undertaken that the said policy may not in any way be made subject to any charge, or be assigned otherwise than to the League of Nations represented by the Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund, until the aforesaid premium debt has been paid.

" I recognise that I have undertaken that I or my executors or administrators shall, at my expense or that of my estate, do whatever acts may be necessary on my or their part to enable the Administrative Board to deal with the said policy for the purpose of enforcing the aforesaid charge.

" Description of Policy .....

" Date.....

" Signed..... "

[1] The Board will reconsider this rule at its next session after a further consultation with the Actuary and the legal advisers.

A separate declaration shall be signed in respect of each policy. The declaration shall be drawn up and signed in duplicate ; one copy shall be kept by the Administrative Board and the other lodged by it with the insurance company. If it is necessary for the declaration to be stamped, the cost of the stamp shall be borne by the official.

A statement shall be obtained from the insurance company that it will not recognise as valid any action by the official or his executors or administrators or assigns contrary to the terms of the declaration.

8. The settlement of the official's premium debt shall be effected in one of the manners set out below :

Case 1: The official is entitled to a retiring pension under Article 9 of the Staff Pensions Regulations, paragraphs 2, 3 or 4.

(i) The official may obtain the award of his pension (or of the sum which he may take in lieu of a pension) without any reduction, or with a smaller reduction, by paying his premium debt in full or in part into the Pensions Fund within a period to be fixed by the Administrative Board.

(ii) If the official does not pay his premium debt in full :

(a) The annuity which may be awarded shall be a reduced annuity bearing the same proportion to the annuity which would be payable in the absence of any premium debt as the capital value of the official's pension rights, reduced by the amount of the outstanding premium debt, bears to the full capital value of such rights.

The calculation may be made by applying the following formula :

$$p = \frac{K - A}{K} \times P$$

Where :

p = the reduced annuity,

K = the capital value of the official's pension rights,

A = the outstanding premium debt,

P = the annuity awardable in the absence of any premium debt.

(b) If the official elects to be paid a sum in lieu of pension, the outstanding premium debt shall be deducted from the amount of such payment.

Case 2: The official is entitled to an invalidity pension under Article 10 of the Staff Pensions Regulations.

(i) Award of pension without any reduction, or with a smaller reduction, may be obtained on the same terms as in the case of a retiring pension [Case 1, paragraph (i)].

(ii) If the premium debt is not paid in full, a reduced annuity shall be awarded calculated in the manner provided for reduction of retiring pensions [Case 1, paragraph (ii (a)).]

Case 3: The official dies in the service and a pension is payable for the benefit of the official's wife (or husband) and/or children under Articles 11 and 12 of the Staff Pensions Regulations.

(i) Award of pension without reduction, or with a smaller reduction, may be obtained on the same terms as in the case of a retiring pension [Case 1, paragraph (i).]

(ii) If the premium debt is not paid in full :

(a) If the official leaves a wife (or a husband to whom an annuity is granted) and/or children the annuity to be paid shall be a reduced annuity bearing the same proportion to the annuity which would be payable in the absence of any premium debt as the capital value of the wife's (or husband's) pension rights, reduced by the amount of the outstanding premium debt, bears to the full capital value of such rights.

(b) If the official leaves children only, the annuity payable for their benefit shall be a reduced annuity bearing the same proportion to the annuity which would be payable in the absence of any premium debt as the capital value of such children's pension rights, reduced by the amount of the outstanding premium debt, bears to the full capital value of such rights.

If, however, the outstanding premium debt exceeds the capital value of the wife's (or husband's) or children's pension rights, no annuity can be awarded, and the amount of such excess shall be paid into the Pensions Fund out of the official's estate within a period to be fixed by the Administrative Board. If payment is not made within this period, the Administrative Board shall be entitled to enforce the charge upon the official's policy or policies for the purpose of recovering the sum due to the Fund.

Case 4: The official is entitled to a cash payment only under Article 9, paragraph 5 (official leaving the service after completing more than three but less than ten years' service), or under Articles 16 or 18 of the Staff Pensions Regulations (forfeiture or suspension of benefit).

The amount of the premium debt shall be deducted from the payment made to the official. If it exceeds the sum due to him, the amount of the excess shall be paid by him into the Pensions Fund within a period to be fixed by the Administrative Board. If payment is not made within this period, the Administrative Board shall be entitled to enforce the charge upon the official's policy or policies for the purpose of recovering his premium debt.

Case 5: No benefit is payable out of the Pensions Fund (official leaving the service before completing three years' service or dying or being invalided out of the service before completing two years' service or dying without leaving a wife or a husband or children to whom a pension is payable).

The premium debt shall be paid into the Pensions Fund by the official or out of his estate within a period to be fixed by the Administrative Board. If payment is not made within this period, the Administrative Board shall be entitled to enforce the charge upon the official's policy or policies for the purpose of recovering his premium debt.

9. (i) On settlement at any time of the official's premium debt, his policy or policies shall be returned to him, or his executors or administrators, free of incumbrance, and the Administrative Board shall notify the insurance company or companies of the cessation of its rights in regard thereto.

(ii) The Administrative Board may at any time agree to the official's taking the surrender value of a policy or the present value of any benefit payable on the policy before maturity on condition that the sum received is applied to the reduction or settlement of the official's premium debt, and that any balance remaining after settlement of the premium debt shall belong to the official.

(iii) Where the Administrative Board enforces the charge upon a policy or policies, any balance of the sum obtained remaining after settlement of the official's premium debt and deduction of expenses incurred by the Board in enforcing the charge shall be paid to the official or to his estate. If the sum obtained is not sufficient for the settlement of the premium debt and the payment of the Board's said expenses, the balance shall remain payable to the Pensions Fund by the official or out of his estate.

XVI. (a) The contributions due by members other than contributions in respect of any period prior to their admission to the Fund shall be deducted from the members' pensionable emoluments monthly in arrear, and shall be paid to the Fund by the Organisation in which the member is employed on the following day.

The competent official of the Organisation in which the member is employed shall, on the first day of each month, notify the Secretary of the Board, by means of the prescribed form (P.F.9) of any change in the pensionable emoluments of that member, together with the reasons for such change.

(b) The contributions due by the League in terms of Article 7 (a) of the Staff Pensions Regulations shall be paid at the same time as the member's salary is paid.

(c) The sum due in terms of Article 7 (b) of the Staff Pensions Regulations shall be paid to the Fund in such instalments and at such time as the Secretary-General finds convenient, provided that the full amount voted by the Assembly shall be paid to the Fund before the first day of July of the year for which the contribution is voted by the Assembly.

XVII. Any contributions for which provision exists under the item " Provident Fund contributions " in the budget of the League for the year 1931 shall be paid to the Pensions Fund as and when members of the Provident Fund are admitted to the Pensions Fund.

XVIII. Local officials of the Second Division who are admitted as members of the Fund and who desire to contribute on the basis of the emoluments of an international official of corresponding rank shall make application on the prescribed form (P.F.1 or 2).

Accounts of the Fund.

XIX. The Treasury at the Secretariat of the League will carry out the cash operations and keep the books of the Pensions Fund under the direction of the Board.

The Treasury shall cause full and true accounts of the Fund to be kept showing :

(a) All receipts and payments in respect of members ;

(b) All particulars necessary to admit of proper accounts of the Fund being kept in accordance with the Regulations and to admit of an actuarial valuation being made at any time ;

(c) All sums of money due to the Fund by the League ;

(d) All other matters of account provided for by the Staff Pensions Regulations or the Administrative Rules.

A statement of receipts and expenditure and a list of investments made since the close of the last three-monthly period shall be prepared at the end of each three months by the Treasury and transmitted to the Board not later than fifteen days after the close of the three-monthly period.

The year shall be the calendar year, and the books of and the accounts of the Fund shall be balanced up to December 31st each year, and balance-sheets prepared showing the assets and liabilities of the Fund at that date.

The accounts and all other necessary data shall be placed at the disposal of the actuary, appointed by the Board in terms of Article 23 of the Staff Pensions Regulations, in the month of February.

The accounts shall be submitted to the Board as soon as possible after the close of the year.

XX. All the reports of the Board to the Assembly, including the accounts passed by the Board, shall become public immediately on issue and shall be available for consultation by any member of the Fund in the library of the Organisation to which he belongs.

Payment of Benefits.

XXI. On the termination of service, the official shall make application on the prescribed form (P.F.3) for the benefits he is entitled to receive.

On the termination of the official's service on the ground of invalidity, the official shall make application on the prescribed form (P.F.4), and the competent official concerned shall forward to the Secretary of the Board all departmental documents bearing on the decision, including the medical certificate on which the decision is based.

On the death of a member or a pensioner of the Fund, the wife, or, when there is no wife, the guardian of the child or children, shall make application on the prescribed form (P.F.5) for the benefits she, or they, are entitled to receive.

If a female member of the Fund dies leaving a husband, the latter may submit an application in writing for the grant of an annuity to him under the provisions of Article 11 (5) of the Staff Pensions Regulations or for the grant of an annuity for the benefit of any children of the official under the provisions of Article 12 (3) of those Regulations.

No benefit from the Pensions Fund will be granted unless the assessment is first approved by the Board or by the Sub-Committee of the Board appointed in accordance with Rule III. After the first payment, annuities may be paid without the specific approval of the Board.

In all cases where a benefit from the Pension Fund is applied for, the Board may require the applicant to appear before it, or, in the event of the applicant not being resident in Geneva, to require him or her (or, in case of children, the guardian) to appear before an agent appointed by the Board.

Similarly, any member of the Fund shall have the right to present his case in person to the Board, provided always that he has submitted it in writing to the competent official of the organisation of which he is a member for transmission to the Board at least fourteen days before the meeting of the Board.

XXII. All payments from the Fund shall be due at Geneva and made in Swiss francs.

Annuities will be paid, with effect from the last day on which salary has been drawn by the official, monthly in arrear on the last day of each month. The person entitled to the annuity may, however, if he so desires, request that the annuity be paid quarterly, half-yearly or yearly in arrears. In such cases, however, no interest shall be credited to annuities left undrawn for three, six or twelve months.

Payment will be made through banks, or other agencies approved by the Board, on presentation of a prescribed form (P.F.6), on which it is certified by such agent as the Board may approve that the person entitled to the annuity (or, in the case of children, each child in respect of whom payment is to be made) was alive on the last day of the period for which payment is to be made. In the case of an annuity payable to the widow of an official, such widow shall declare on the form that she has not contracted a new marriage during the period for which payment is to be made.

XXIII. For the purposes of Article 9, paragraph 4, of the Pensions Regulations, fractions of a month shall be disregarded in ascertaining the coefficient of reduction in accordance with the age of the beneficiary.

XXIV. The present value of the annuities referred to in Article 9 of the Staff Pensions Regulations shall be assessed in accordance with the following table :

Capital value of an annuity of 1,000 francs a year payable monthly in arrear, in fractions of 1/12th.

Age	Rate	Age	Rate
25	20,008	48	14,841

XXV. When a member of the Fund retires before becoming entitled to an annuity, interest on personal contributions and contributions paid by the League shall, for purposes of calculating the capital sum due, be reckoned from the date on which such contributions were made. In the said case, the contributions due to the Fund by the League in respect of any period prior to January 1st, 1931, shall be 9 per cent of the salary earned by that member during that period.

Investment of the Fund.

XXVI. During any period between the meetings of the Board, the investments of the Fund shall be made in accordance with the decisions of the Board taken on the recommendations of the Investment Committee.

During such period, decisions upon the sale of any investments shall be taken by the Sub-Committee of the Board appointed under Rule III after consultation of the Investment Committee or of such member or members of the Investment Committee as it is possible to consult in the time available.

Records of the Board.

XXVII. The Minutes, correspondence and records of the Board shall be private and kept in the care of the Secretary of the Board. Any member of the Board may have access to these documents.

XXVIII. A communiqué shall be prepared on the work of each session of the Board and shall be published as soon as it has received the approval of all members present during the session.

Communications with the Board.

XXIX. All communications between members of the Fund and the Secretary of the Board shall be made through the competent official of the Organisation in which the members are employed. Nevertheless, in special cases, any members of the Fund may communicate direct with the Secretary of the Board, who shall forward a copy of the communication to the competent official of the organisation in which the member is employed.

Deprivation of Right to the Benefits provided by the Staff Pensions Regulations.

XXX. The competent official of the Organisation concerned shall advise the Secretary of the Board immediately of all cases in which an official dismissed for misconduct is deprived of his right to the benefits provided by the Staff Pensions Regulations under the provisions of Article 16 of the said Regulations.

General Provision.

XXXI. The forms prescribed by these Rules shall be approved by the Board, which may amend them from time to time. They shall be supplied to the applicants by the competent official of the Organisation through whom the application has to be made.

FINAL PROVISIONS.

XXXII. All questions regarding the interpretation and application of these Rules shall be referred to the Board for decision.

XXXIII. These Administrative Rules may not be amended by the Board unless seven days' notice of the proposal to amend them has been given to all the members of the Board or the amendment is unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Board attended by all its members.

RULES OF PROCEDURE OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD OF THE STAFF PENSIONS FUND.

The Administrative Board adopts the following provisions for its Rules of Procedure :

Rule I.

The Board will hold ordinary meetings twice a year. Extraordinary meetings may be held whenever the Chairman thinks it necessary.

The Board shall be convened within reasonable time on the demand of any two of its members. Every demand for a meeting of the Board shall be made in writing to the Secretary for transmission to the Chairman, and shall include a statement of the reasons why a meeting should be convened.

The Board will be convened by the Chairman by means of a letter sent to each member generally at least fourteen days before an ordinary meeting and seven days before an extraordinary meeting. The letter will state the items on the agenda, and will, as far as possible, be accompanied by the necessary documents.

Rule II.

The Secretary, in consultation with the Chairman, shall prepare the agenda for each meeting of the Board. He shall place on the agenda any subject submitted to him in writing by a member of the Board. New items not on the agenda may be added in the course of a meeting if a majority of the members of the Board present at the meeting give their consent.

Rule III.

The Board shall take decisions by a majority ; five members shall constitute a quorum.

Rule IV.

At the first session of each year, the Board shall elect from among its members by a majority a Chairman and a Vice-Chairman for a period of one year.

The Chairman, or in his absence the Vice-Chairman, shall direct the work at the meetings and ensure that the provisions of the Rules of Procedure are observed. If the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman are absent from any meeting, the Board shall elect a Chairman for that meeting.

Rule V.

These Rules of Procedure may not be amended by the Board unless seven days' notice of the proposal to amend them has been given to all the members of the Board or the amendment is unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Board attended by all its members.

ANNEX 8.

A.IV/17. 1931.

REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE ON CONTRIBUTIONS IN ARREARS.

The Sub-Committee was composed of the following members :

Dr. RUPPEL	(Germany) ;
Sir Annepu P. PATRO, Garu Kt.	(India) ;
Mr. Sean LESTER	(Irish Free State) ;
Professor Amedeo GIANNINI	(Italy) ;
Professor William RAPPARD	(Switzerland) ;
His Excellency M. Pedro COSIO	(Uruguay) ;
His Excellency M. Cesar ZUMETA	(Venezuela).

Professor RAPPARD was elected Chairman and Rapporteur.

The Secretary-General's report to the Fourth Committee (document A.IV/2.1931) shows that there were actually, on August 31st, fifteen States in arrears with their contributions, as opposed to eleven States at the same date last year. During the present month Colombia has liquidated its arrears. Thus there remain fourteen States in arrear, which may be divided into three categories :

A. States from which contributions are due only in respect of 1930 : Chile, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Liberia, Salvador,[1] Uruguay.

B. One State which, although in arrear for more than one contribution, is punctually fulfilling its engagements in accordance with the special arrangement approved by the Assembly : China.

C. States from which contributions are due in respect of more than one financial period : Argentine, Bolivia, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Peru.

Regarding the States included in category A, all of which are only indebted to the extent of balances of the 1930 contribution, the Sub-Committee considers that for this year at least no special action need be taken.

As regards the State mentioned in category B, your Sub-Committee would point out that it has already paid one-half of its annual instalment of arrears, together with one-half of the current contribution (1931). China has now paid nearly 3½ million francs, or over 26 per cent of the total amount due for all the financial periods previous to December 31st, 1930.

There remain, therefore, in the third category seven States the situation of which would seem to require the more particular examination of the Fourth Committee. These States with their total arrears are :

	Gold francs
Argentine (1929, 1930)	1,527,848.67
Bolivia (1923 to 1930)	785,675.67
Guatemala (1929, 1930)	53,326.79
Honduras (compounded arrears and 1923 to 1930)	233,048.39
Nicaragua (ditto)	230,061.04
Paraguay (compounded arrears, 1927, 1929, 1930)	81,720.69
Peru (1920 to 1927, 1929, 1930)	1,936,115.89

Argentine. — The Sub-Committee has been informed of the very special situation of this country which, it must be remembered, has already contributed over six million francs to the League since 1920. After hearing the explanations of the Secretary-General, the Sub-Committee considers that no further action for the present is desirable.

Bolivia has paid over 36 per cent of the amount due for all the financial periods previous to December 31st, 1930. The Sub-Committee has been in communication with the first delegate of Bolivia regarding the payment of its arrears.

Guatemala has paid over 79 per cent of the amount due up to the end of 1930. The Sub-Committee has no doubt that this country, which is known to be a close collaborator of the League, will liquidate its arrears as soon as its financial situation permits.

Honduras has paid 9 per cent of the contributions due to the end of 1930. The Sub-Committee understands that this State, considering itself to be classed too high in the present scale of allocations, has made two half-payments in respect of 1928 and 1929. It is to be hoped that Honduras will continue its payments until the Assembly is in a position to reconsider the whole scale of allocations, on which occasion the claims of Honduras will no doubt be received with the sympathy which they deserve.

[1] Salvador owes for 1930 and for the annual instalment on compounded arrears for that year.

Nicaragua has paid 8.9 per cent of the contributions due for all periods previous to December 31st, 1930. The Sub-Committee noted with satisfaction that this State, which had not contributed to the expenses of the League before October 1930, began last year to make payments in respect of its compounded arrears and of the 1930 period — payments amounting in all to over 23,000 francs.

The Sub-Committee does not doubt that Nicaragua, which has recently been overcome by a national catastrophe, is now making a real effort to fulfil its financial obligations to the League.

Paraguay has paid 68 per cent of the contributions due up to the end of 1930. The Sub-Committee was informed by the delegate for Paraguay that he had telegraphed to his Government in order to obtain a payment as soon as possible.

Peru has paid 21.6 per cent of contributions due up to the end of 1930. The Sub-Committee has received from the first delegate of Peru a letter regarding the payment of that country's arrears, in which he explains the delay that has occurred and expresses the hope that the situation will be improved in future.

General Observations.

As a departure from the practice of previous years, which appears to have involved certain drawbacks, your Sub-Committee has not directly approached all the delegates of States which are in arrear with their contributions, but has delegated its powers to two distinguished Latin-American members of the Sub-Committee. These two delegates have held conversations with the representatives of the Latin-American States concerned and have elicited assurances that they would urge their respective Governments to contribute to the League as soon as possible.

In common with other members of the Fourth Committee, the Sub-Committee was at the outset greatly concerned at the figures given in the Secretary-General's report. After a thorough examination of the situation with the Secretary-General and the Treasurer, and taking into consideration the crisis prevailing all over the world, it feels that the League is not in a position this year to press too vehemently for the payment of overdue contributions. Nor does the Sub-Committee believe, after thorough discussion, that any legal action can usefully be taken by the Assembly to obtain the payment of overdue contributions. The Sub-Committee considers that, for the eventual collection of arrears, the Assembly should rely upon the goodwill of States and their devotion to the ideals of the League, as well as upon the discreet but unremitting efforts of the Secretary-General.

On the other hand, the Sub-Committee does not in any way wish to minimise the gravity of the situation. Not only do arrears now total 14 million francs, but also 30 per cent of the contributions of 1931 still remains unpaid. At the end of September 1930, the unpaid portion of the budget for that year was 22 per cent. It is true that, if the amount due by China is excluded, the total contributions in arrears come down to 5 millions.

The Sub-Committee therefore recommends that States Members should be reminded that, while the world economic depression makes the regular payment of contributions to the League particularly difficult for all States, this depression makes it all the more necessary for these contributions to be paid. The interdependence of States in the complicated system imposed by modern conditions is now painfully evident. It is to be hoped that all Members of the League will realise their duties towards one another and will remember that their contributions towards League expenses, which represent such a small proportion of national expenses, are not the least profitably spent portions of their budgets.

Moreover, it must be remembered that the drastic economies effected by the Assembly of this year, in addition to those already effected by the Supervisory Commission previous to the Assembly, have much reduced that elasticity of the League budget which in past years has enabled the League to exist during the last months of each financial year when only about 90 per cent of the contributions have been received.

The Sub-Committee would propose the following draft resolution for adoption by the Assembly :

> " The Assembly,
>
> " Observes with regret and some measure of concern that this year a greater number of States than before have not fulfilled their financial obligations towards the League ;
> " Earnestly calls upon the States which have received certain facilities for the liquidation of their arrears to fulfil the conditions of the respective arrangements ;
> " Invites the other States which, for various reasons, still owe in respect of 1929 and 1930 to remit their contributions as soon as political or economic conditions permit ;
>
> " Requests the Secretary-General to undertake or pursue negotiations for the liquidation of arrears by all the States in question, to submit a report to the Council on the action taken by him before the next Assembly, and to communicate the results to the latter. "

Official No.: A.90.1931.X.

ANNEX 9.

FINANCIAL QUESTIONS.

REPORT OF THE FOURTH COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.[1]

Rapporteur: M. E. C. BOHEMAN (Sweden).

The present report deals with all the questions on the agenda of the Fourth Committee, with the exception of those concerning the organisation of the Secretariat, the contributions in arrears and the new buildings, which are dealt with in separate documents.

I. AUDITED ACCOUNTS FOR 1930.

The Fourth Committee unanimously recommended that the Assembly should pass the accounts of the Secretariat and of the autonomous organisations of the League in the form in which they have been presented. One speaker pointed out that it would be desirable to state in the accounts the reasons for the differences between the estimates and the final figures or the reasons for any savings effected.

II. BUDGET FOR 1932.

(a) General Discussion, Ordinary Budget and Supplementary Budget.

The general discussion on the budget, which was particularly thorough and detailed this year, was extremely interesting. More than thirty members spoke, and all except the Spanish and Lithuanian delegates advocated the reduction of the budget, laying special stress on the fact that, at a time when each State Member of the League was confronted with an extremely serious economic and financial crisis and was making every effort to reduce public expenditure, the League of Nations should adopt the same policy, the more so since the increasing amount of contributions in arrears gave rise to a certain uneasiness.

It was generally recognised that the increase in the budget of the League was due mainly to appropriations voted for the Disarmament Conference in 1932, and that these appropriations should not be affected by any measures of economy that might be taken. Further, it was agreed that the proposed economies should not interfere with the essential work of the League, which, in 1932, would have to concentrate its efforts mainly on disarmament and the questions touching the financial and economic depression. At the outset, definite proposals were put forward to the effect that the budget should be referred back to the Supervisory Commission for examination with a view to a certain ratio of reduction. The attention of the Committee was also drawn to the difficulties which might arise when the budget for 1933 was drawn up. The Committee, however, in agreement with the authors of these proposals, merely referred the budget as a whole to the Supervisory Commission, requesting it to recommend any reductions it might be possible to effect. The Supervisory Commission complied rapidly and efficiently with the Fourth Committee's request. It made a detailed study of every item of the budget in close collaboration with the Secretary-General, the Director of the International Labour Office and the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice, and it then submitted to the Fourth Committee proposals providing for a reduction of 2,604,999 gold francs on the budget (including the supplementary budget).

The Committee's report made it clear that the proposed reductions were not to be regarded as implying that the estimates for expenditure entered in the original budget could on any account whatever be considered superfluous or extravagant. The draft budget was a carefully compiled estimate of the sums necessary to give effect to the Assembly's decisions and to continue the work of the various organisations of the League; whereas the revised budget was designed to meet the entirely abnormal conditions which had developed within the last five months, and provided, in many cases, for the postponement of work rather than for its abandonment.

The reductions proposed by the Committee referred chiefly to the four following categories of expenditure:

(1) Expenditure on the various conferences, meetings of experts, etc., held under the auspices of the League;
(2) Travelling allowances paid to the members of committees, experts and officials;
(3) Cost of printing, publishing and circulating the League's documents;
(4) Salaries and allowances other than those protected by contractual obligations.

[1] This is the final text of the report as adopted by the Committee.

As regards conferences and meetings, the Supervisory Commission was guided by the following principle: whenever a meeting originally fixed for 1932 could, without serious inconvenience to the work in question, be postponed until 1933 or to a subsequent year, the credits provided should be suspended for the moment. Similarly, when credits had been appropriated for two or more meetings of a committee during the year, it should in many cases be possible to arrange the work of that committee so as to be capable of being handled at longer intervals, or with a smaller number of meetings. As the Committee had hoped, the responsible authorities have seen their way in both classes of cases to be satisfied with reduced credits. In other cases, they agreed to reduce the length of the session and the number of experts, etc., invited to take part in it. The Commission was confident that these alterations in the arrangements would not cause inconvenience to persons who lent their valuable services to the League, because they would place the general interest above everything else and would not misunderstand the reasons for these measures.

It should be noted that the Supervisory Commission was of opinion that a sum of 3,500,000 francs would suffice to meet the cost of the International Disarmament Conference. This reduction in the credit of 4,000,000 inserted in the budget has been proposed, on the one hand, as an outcome of the reduction in the number of conferences and sessions of the committees to be held in 1932, which will make it possible provisionally to second to the Conference staff a certain number of officials of the Secretariat belonging to sections other than the Disarmament Section; and, on the other hand, of a revision of the estimates for printing.

As regards travelling allowances to members of committees and League officials, the Supervisory Commission proposes to reduce the present scale to the following figures:

Category	Present figures	New figures
	Swiss francs
Members of committees, experts, etc.	70	60
Officials of the rank of chiefs of section and higher rank	60	54
Members of the intermediate class and higher rank	40	37.50
Other officials	30	28.50

The Supervisory Commission further recommends the Assembly to reduce by 25 per cent —i.e., from 2,000 to 1,500 francs — in 1932, the special allowance granted to members of the permanent Mandates Commission when they have sat for more than twenty-four days in one and the same year.

The cost of printing, publishing and distributing League documents has been reduced by roughly 25 per cent. This reduction has been made possible partly by the Supervisory Commission's proposal, based on a resolution adopted by the Assembly in 1928, that all committee Minutes, except those of the Assembly, the European Union Commission and the Permanent Mandates Commission, should be discontinued.

When unanimously approving the Supervisory Commission's report, the Fourth Committee was anxious to mark its appreciation of the valuable work so conscientiously performed by the Commission. At the same time it thought it advisable to examine chapter by chapter the budgets of the various organisations as modified by the Supervisory Commission's recommendations.

During this discussion, interesting suggestions were made by several speakers, some of which will be followed, the Secretary-General or the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission having declared themselves in their favour.

The latter stated, for example, that the Supervisory Commission proposed to consider, before the next Assembly, the question of the League's branch offices in certain cities other than Geneva. Further, the Secretary-General agreed to a proposal that a clause should in future be embodied in the contracts of the staff to the effect that salaries might be varied by decision of the Assembly.

The Secretary-General undertook to examine the desirability of restricting the distribution of League documents by writing to the persons to whom they were sent and asking them to inform the Secretariat whether they really wished to continue to receive them. He also promised to give in future more detailed particulars of the cost of the principal journeys undertaken by Secretariat officials during the preceding financial year.

Other speakers, while not suggesting that certain of the Supervisory Commission's proposals should be rejected, pointed out that they might hamper the work of certain sections—for example, the Minutes of the Opium Committee are a powerful instrument of propaganda, and, the reduction of the appropriations for the Social Section might impair the prestige and restrict the influence of that section, whose value has time and again been recognised.

Certain members of the Committee called attention to the difficulties that might result from the Supervisory Commission's proposal that the Mandates Commission should hold only one session instead of two in 1932, and suggested that, if the Commission's work suffered in consequence, the Council should be empowered to take such steps as it might think desirable. Finally, one speaker called the Committee's attention to the funds allocated to the Information Section, which seemed to him excessive.

(b) Effects on the Budget of Certain Recommendations included in the Report of the New Committee of Thirteen.

The recommendations of the Fourth Committee arising out of the report submitted by the new Committee of Thirteen are the subject of a special report. Nevertheless, it is expedient to indicate here the effects of these recommendations on the 1932 Budget.

The Fourth Committee decided to postpone until next year the question of the new scale of salaries applicable to Chiefs of Sections. It has therefore been possible to deduct from the supplementary budget the supplementary credits involved, amounting to 1,500 francs for the Secretariat and 27,000 francs for the International Labour Office.

With regard to the Treasurer, the Committee proposes to the Assembly that it should immediately grant him the rank of Director, with the proviso that no increase in salary should be granted for this year. The supplementary budget for the Secretariat is thus reduced by 2,500 francs.

Lastly, the Committee agreed to the Supervisory Commission's proposal, dated September 23rd, concerning the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice. This official's position is, therefore, as follows: The scale of salary fixed by the Council on the proposal of the Court for the period January 1st, 1930–December 31st, 1936, ranging from 27,000 to 32,000 florins, by means of annual increments of 1,250 florins, is applicable as from now. On the other hand, the credit of 7,500 florins included in the supplementary budget by the decision of the Council, subject to the Assembly's approving the necessary credits, has been cancelled, as the Registrar has, of his own accord, foregone, for 1932, the benefit of the above scale. The Committee greatly appreciated this gesture on the part of a particularly distinguished official.

(c) Supplementary Credits.

The Fourth Committee approved, in certain cases by a majority vote, the various proposals for supplementary credits put forward by committees of the Assembly in the form submitted to it by the Supervisory Commission, except in connection with the constitution of a committee to examine the material relating to slavery. Although the Supervisory Commission recommended the rejection of the credit for this new committee, the Fourth Committee considered that a credit of 10,000 francs should be entered in the budget for this purpose, it being understood that, as regards any gifts which might be offered to cover the balance of the expenditure on the proposed committee, those intending to make such offers should inform the Council in good time.

The budget and the revised budget for 1932 may be summarised as follows:

	Original budget (including supplementary budget)	Revised budget [1]
	Swiss francs
1. Secretariat and special organisations of the League	20,689,917	19,174,317
2. International Labour Organisation	9,463,290	8,792,290
3. Permanent Court of International Justice	2,790,140	2,663,702
4. Nansen International Office for Refugees	330,847	297,763
5. Buildings at Geneva	1,748,899	1,748,899
6. Pensions	1,015,023	1,011,023
Total	36,038,116	33,687,994

III. Reports of the Supervisory Commission.

The Fourth Committee accepted all the proposals of a general nature contained in the various reports of the Supervisory Commission, except as regards the definition of local staff, a question which it requested the Supervisory Commission to examine afresh.

The above paragraph refers particularly to the recommendations concerning:

1. The disposal of the surplus for the financial year 1930.

The Commission recommended that the reimbursement of the advances, amounting to 535,179 francs, made out of the Working Capital Fund, to the International Labour Office during 1930, should be considered as a first charge on the surplus of 659,077.82 francs for the financial year 1930. This surplus will thus be reduced to 123,898.82 francs, which sum will, under Article 38(a) of the Financial Regulations, be returned to the Members of the League in 1932.

2. Question of publications.

The Supervisory Commission proposed that the Assembly should vote the following resolution:

"When proposals involving publications not immediately required for work already undertaken by the League are made by a League body, no final decision shall be taken until the Secretary-General has been consulted regarding the financial and administrative consequences of these proposals."

3. Salaries of locally-recruited staff.

In accordance with the decision taken by the Assembly at its eleventh session, the Supervisory Commission, in agreement with the Secretary-General and the Director of the International Labour Office, has drawn up a new scale of salaries for the locally recruited officials of the Secretariat and Labour Office.

The credits necessitated by the application of this new scale are included in the budget which has been submitted by the Fourth Committee to the Assembly.

IV. Staff Pensions Fund.

The Committee examined the report of the Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund and approved the two amendments to the Staff Pensions Regulations proposed by the Board. It noted that the first valuation of the Fund would only take place at the beginning of 1932—i.e., after the end of the time-limit granted to officials to state whether they wished to join the Fund or not. In these circumstances, it recommends that, in 1932, the League's contribution to the Fund should, as in 1931, be 9 per cent of the salaries subject to deduction, and proposes the adoption of the following resolution:

"The Assembly,

"Takes note of the first annual report of the Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund; and

"Adopts the following amendments to the Staff Pensions Regulations:

"Article 3, paragraph 1, to read as follows:

"'The execution of the present regulations and the management of the Pensions Fund shall be effected by an Administrative Board consisting of three members elected by the Assembly, a representative of the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, a representative of the Director of the International Labour Office, the Treasurer of the League of Nations, and three members elected by secret ballot by the officials who are subject to the present regulations. Where questions directly affecting the officials of the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice are under consideration, a representative of the Registrar shall be added to the Board.'

"Article 12, paragraph 4, to read as follows:

"'The Administrative Board shall decide in each particular case whether the benefits of the present article shall extend to adopted children, step-children or children not born in wedlock.'

"Decides that the contribution of the League of Nations to the Pensions Fund for 1932 shall be 9 per cent of the salaries subject to deduction as defined in the Staff Pensions Regulations."

Admission of the Staff of the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation and of the Nansen International Office for Refugees to the Pensions Fund of the League of Nations.

The Committee examined two resolutions of the Governing Bodies of these institutions asking that their respective staffs should be admitted to the Pensions Fund. It decided to refer these requests to the Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund for examination and report. It accordingly proposes the following resolution:

"The Assembly,

"Notes the resolution of the Governing Body of the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation requesting the admission of the staff of this Institute to the Staff Pensions Fund;

"Further notes a similar request from the Governing Body of the Nansen International Office for Refugees; and

"Decides to submit these two resolutions to the Administrative Board of the Staff Pensions Fund for examination and report to the Assembly at the latter's next session."

V. Miscellaneous Questions.

(a) The Chairman of the Supervisory Commission informed the Fourth Committee that, although not critical, the financial position of the League was less favourable than at the corresponding stages of the five previous financial periods, and so many contributions had not yet been sent in. The Fourth Committee therefore thought it advisable, with the object of avoiding, if possible, a deficit at the end of 1931, to forward to the Assembly a draft resolution requesting officials to make every possible restriction in expenditure, and begging the Council and the Governing Body of the International Labour Office to cancel or postpone any meetings arranged for the last three months of the present financial period.

In this connection, the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission pointed out that it would be of great advantage to the Treasury of the League if the various Governments would do their utmost to arrange for the payment of at least a portion of their contributions at the beginning of the year.

(b) The Rapporteur of the Supervisory Commission pointed out to the Committee that the Council had decided during the present financial year to charge against Item 3 of the Budget, "Unforeseen expenditure subject to special vote of the Council", expenses which, according to the terms of the Council's resolution, appeared to be recoverable. The Secretary-General had stated that, after careful examination, he had decided not to pay from the Working Capital Fund the sums required in the case in question, as repayment seemed somewhat uncertain in view of the fact that the money was to be used for the creation of a body which did not yet exist. In reply, the Rapporteur of the Commission gave it as his opinion that the terms of Article 33 of the Financial Regulations did not allow of any option, and that, should the advances prove not recoverable, the necessary sum for repayment should be provided for in a subsequent budget of the League.

In this connection the opinion was expressed that the Council, during this year, had drawn too freely on the credit provided under Item 3 for unforeseen expenses of a political nature. This tendency was doubly objectionable, in that it deprived the Assembly of the financial control which should belong to it, and diminished the likelihood of any surplus at the end of the current year.

(c) The Fourth Committee referred to the Supervisory Commission, the question of the revision of the regulations regarding the granting of retiring pensions to ordinary judges and to the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice, and a draft resolution, submitted by the delegate of Uruguay, in favour of the payment of contributions in twelve monthly instalments, and requested it to present a report on these questions to the next Assembly;

(d) Having before it a communication addressed to the President of the Assembly by the permanent Delegate of Nicaragua to the League of Nations relating to the payment of that country's contribution to the League, the Commission profoundly distressed by the catastrophe which occurred in Nicaragua recommended the Assembly to adopt the draft resolution shown at the end of this report.

VI. Rotation in Membership of the Supervisory Commission.

The Fourth Committee, after a secret ballot, proposed to the Assembly the election of the two following regular members of the Supervisory Commission for the period ending December 31st, 1934.

Lord Meston of Agra, M. C. J. Hambro.

VII. Draft Resolutions.

Finally, the Fourth Commission has the honour to propose to the Assembly the following draft resolutions:

"1. The Assembly, in virtue of Article 38 of the Regulations for the Financial Administration of the League of Nations, finally passes the audited accounts of the League of Nations for the twelfth financial period ending on December 31st, 1930."

"2. The Assembly,

"In virtue of Article 17 of the Regulations for the Financial Administration of the League of Nations,

"Passes, for the financial period 1932, the general budget of the League of Nations—of the Secretariat and Special Organisations of the League, of the International Labour Organisation and of the Permanent Court of International Justice—amounting, including supplementary credits, to the total sum of 33,687,994 gold francs, including 3,500,000 francs for the International Disarmament Conference,

"And decides that the aforesaid budget shall be published in the Official Journal."

"3. The Assembly,

"Profoundly distressed by the catastrophe which has occurred in Nicaragua and has totally destroyed its capital,

"Decides to exempt that country from the payment of half its contribution to the budget for the financial year 1932 and to defer the payment of the balance."

"4. The Assembly adopts the conclusions of the various reports of the Supervisory Commission submitted for its consideration, except in regard to the request for credits put forward by the Sixth Committee for the establishment of a committee to examine the material relating to slavery, and in regard to the alteration in the definition of 'locally recruited staff'."

"5. The Assembly appoints as members of the Supervisory Commission for the period ending on December 31st, 1934, Lord Meston of Agra and M. C. J. Hambro."

"6. The Assembly adopts the conclusions of the report of the Fourth Committee."

CONSTRUCTION OF THE NEW BUILDINGS.

REPORT OF THE FOURTH COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.[1]

Rapporteur: M. E. C. BOHEMAN (Sweden).

I.

The Supervisory Commission laid before the Fourth Committee a special paper on the subject of the new buildings dealing with a report addressed by the Building Committee to the Secretary-General on September 18th, 1931, and transmitted by him immediately to the Supervisory Commission for consideration. In this report, the Building Committee warned the Secretary-General that the estimates approved by the Assembly in 1930 would probably be exceeded by seven to eight million francs. In face of this serious situation, the Supervisory Commission considered it essential to consult the Fourth Committee immediately.

It will perhaps be convenient to summarise briefly here the different stages which led to the adoption of the estimates for the construction of the new buildings by the Assembly of 1930.

The Assembly, in 1927, approved the first report of the Special Committee of Five[2] concerning the new buildings and agreed in principle that the sum to be expended should be increased to approximately 19,500,000 francs.

In 1928, difficulties arose in regard to the lakeside site and the Assembly of that year approved the choice of the Ariana Park as the site for the new buildings.

A revised draft plan for the new site was approved by the Council in June 1929. This draft plan was accompanied by an estimate based on an average price per cubic metre, which put the cost of the buildings at 17,681,061 francs, leaving a margin of approximately 1,800,000 francs on the provisional credit of 19,500,000 francs. The architects stated that this sum would suffice for a modest layout of the grounds around the buildings, but that it would be insufficient to cover the cost of the arrangement of the park as shown in the plan, particularly the monumental terraces in front of the Assembly Hall facing the lake.

The Committee of Five instructed the architects to prepare an estimate of the cost of this latter work before the Assembly of 1929.

In the report of the Committee of Five to the Assembly of that year (document A.58. 1929) it was pointed out that the new site in the Ariana Park would involve much heavier expenditure on external work than the lakeside site and that the cost of erecting the buildings themselves would also be increased to some extent.

In view of these facts, and on the basis of further information furnished by the architects, the Committee of Five informed the Assembly that there was reason to fear that the rough estimate of cost presented by the architects with the draft plans approved by the Council in June 1929 would have to be increased by 10 to 15 per cent and that the cost of the supplementary external work mentioned above would amount to 1,500,000 francs in round figures.

The architects then proceeded with the preparation of their final plans and detailed estimates, and these were presented in June 1930. The total estimate for the Assembly Hall, Secretariat building and external work amounted to 23,633,150 francs, including architects' fees, office expenses and a margin of 759,555 francs for unforeseen expenditure. The cost of the new Library building, which is to be met out of the Rockefeller grant, was estimated at 4,250,000 francs. The plans and estimates were first submitted to the Building Committee for examination and a report was prepared by this Committee for the guidance of the Committee of Five.

[1] This is the final text of the report, as adopted by the Committee.

[2] M. Adatci, M. Osuský, M. Politis, M. Urrutia and Sir Edward Hilton-Young.

The Building Committee stated that its technical members had proposed, as the margin for unforeseen expenditure was in their opinion inadequate, that the estimates should be increased by 5 per cent.

The architects replied that, in addition to the sum of 759,555 francs, a certain margin was allowed under each heading of the estimates for unforeseen expenditure. They stated, further, that the estimates had been drawn up on a well-defined technical basis, and were founded on current prices at Geneva, liberally calculated, so that considerable reductions might safely be counted upon when tenders were received for the work. Moreover, the estimates had not taken into account the freedom from import duties enjoyed by the League of Nations, and the economies under this head would still further increase the margin available for unforeseen expenditure. In view of these considerations put forward by the architects, the Building Committee finally decided to adopt the estimates as they stood.

The Committee of Five, after careful consideration of all these points, also decided to accept the architects' estimates, and in its report to the Assembly (document A.55.1930) recommended that the Assembly should approve the detailed estimates for the Assembly Hall and Secretariat Building amounting to 23,633,150 francs and for the Library to 4,250,000 francs.

In making this recommendation, the Committee of Five reminded the Assembly that the architects had allowed for a very simple style of construction and decoration and even quoted the passage which occurred in its preceding report, which reads as follows:

> "It should be added that the rough estimate furnished by the architects for the building proper refers to a simple construction. On this point the architects state in this report which accompanied their plan:
> > "'We desire to state clearly that our provisions are based upon a very simple treatment of the buildings as a whole and in detail. That is imposed by the funds available, which certainly do not altogether correspond to the size and the character of the buildings as laid down in the programme.'
> "The architects stated that the funds available would in any case be insufficient for really imposing buildings; but the Committee believes that it has always been the Assembly's intention to have buildings worthy of the League, but simple in outline and unpretentious. It should be pointed out that no funds have been provided either for works of art or for rich decorative materials."

This report of the Committee of Five having been approved by the Assembly on October 3rd, 1930, the basis of the scheme could be considered as definitely settled.

In February 1931, the Secretary-General notified the Supervisory Commission that the estimates had been exceeded by 178,000 francs on the work of levelling, and by 50,000 francs for drainage. It was noted, moreover, that the necessity of a special system of drainage of the subsoil had not been provided for in the architects' estimates.

With regard to the overspending on the levelling work, the architects indicated that this was in part due to the lowering of the levels fixed for the buildings, but that this would be compensated by a reduction in the cubic content of the buildings which the lower levels would permit.

Subsequently, during the excavations, further difficulties due to the nature of the subsoil necessitated the enlargment and reinforcement of the foundations to an appreciable degree, which resulted in further unforeseen expenditure.

Seriously concerned by this continued overspending, the Building Committee instructed the architects during the summer 1931 to revise completely the estimates presented to the Assembly in 1930. This revised estimate, which the architects were unable to submit to the Building Committee until September 9th, 1931, showed an increase of 2,771,845 francs over the 1930 estimates for the Assembly Hall and Secretariat, the estimate for the Library remaining unchanged.

The additional expenditure on the foundations accounted for about 1,200,000 francs, and the balance was caused by a slight increase in the cubic contents of the buildings and certain increases in various chapters of the estimate.

The Building Committee observed with some surprise that the revised estimates included no margin for unforeseen expenditure and that, in order to reduce, if possible, the increase on the credit already voted, the architects were contemplating certain economies which were scarcely acceptable, such as the use of artificial stone instead of natural stone in some part of the façade. The Building Committee therefore requested the architects to revise their calculations once again and to take fully into account all the accessory work necessary for the completion of the buildings.

Pending this further revision of the estimates, and before communicating the papers to the Supervisory Commission, the Building Committee asked its technical members for an approximate estimate of the final cost of the buildings. The technical members, while pointing out that it was impossible to make anything like an exact estimate at such short notice and without going into all the details, replied that it was their impression that the 1930 estimates would ultimately be exceeded by a sum in the neighbourhood of seven or eight million francs for the Assembly Hall and Secretariat.[1] The estimates for the Library they thought might be exceeded by some 1,750,000 francs.

Following upon discussions that took place on this subject between the technical members of the Building Committee and the architects, the latter addressed to the Building Committee two letters dated September 15th and 17th, both of which modify the figures of the revised estimates submitted on September 9th, 1931.

In one of these letters the architects agreed that a margin of 10 per cent on the revised estimate would be prudent, and reiterated their previous statement as to the simple and economic lines on which their scheme was prepared. In the second letter, the architects stated that provisions for certain fittings and external work which the Building Committee had pointed out were not included in the revised estimate would still further increase the total sum required.

The architects, at the invitation of the Building Committee, also suggested certain ways in which expenditure on the buildings might be cut down if absolutely necessary, with a view to avoid exceeding the credit already voted by the Assembly in 1930. It may be stated at once that these suggestions were not such as could be entertained.

The following table gives a comparison between the figures of the 1930 estimate, those of the revised estimate of September 9th, 1931, and those which result from the two abovementioned letters from the architects:

	Swiss francs
1930 Estimate (see document A.55.1930).
Assembly Hall, Secretariat and outside work (including fees and office expenses)	23,633,150
Library (including fees and office expenses)	4,250,000
Estimate of September 9th, 1931.
Assembly Hall, Secretariat and outside work (including fees and office expenses)	26,404,995
Library (including fees and office expenses)	4,250,000
Letter of September 15th, 1931.
Assembly Hall, Secretariat and outside work (including fees and office expenses)	28,748,941
Library (including fees and office expenses)	4,671,640
Letter of September 17th, 1931.
Assembly Hall, Secretariat and outside work (including fees and office expenses)	29,925,494
Library (including fees and office expenses)	5,389,998

It is only fair to add that the architects, when questioned by the Supervisory Commission, stated that the approximate estimate of an increase amounting to seven or eight million francs emanated from the Building Committee and not from them, and that they maintained the figures of their revised estimate of September 9th, 1931, which showed an increase over the 1930 figures of 2,771,845 francs. Their two letters to which reference has been made in this report were written in reply to certain questions put to them by the Building Committee, and they regarded the further increases mentioned therein as destined to provide a margin of security and provision for certain work which need not necessarily be executed at the present time.

II.

The Fourth Committee were fully alive to the seriousness of the situation, which might even bring prejudice upon the prestige of the League. A very full and frank discussion took place, in the course of which the necessity for prompt and energetic action was strongly emphasised, in order to put the building operations on a sound basis. Various solutions were examined, even the advisability of suspending the work until the present uncertainties were cleared up.

The difficulties arising out of the fact that the work is entrusted to an association of five architects were also considered, and various means of establishing unity of direction were examined, including the revision or cancellation of the architects' contract. The Fourth Committee finally came to the conclusion that it had neither the technical and legal competence nor, at this late stage, the time necessary to go fully into the matter. It therefore decided that the question should be referred to a Committee of Enquiry, enjoying the full confidence of the Assembly, to review the whole situation and, after having obtained the necessary technical and legal advice, to propose the necessary action. This Committee should be granted the fullest liberty, but would have to bear in mind the necessity, in principle, of remaining within the limits of the credits already voted. The Supervisory Commission, already requested by the Assembly of 1930 to deal with all financial questions in connection with the new buildings, was, in the opinion of the Fourth Committee, eminently qualified to undertake this task. In order to save time it was further decided to recommend that the same procedure which was followed in the case of the reports of the Special Committee of Five should be again adopted, and that the report of the Supervisory Commission should be submitted for approval and ratification to the Council of the League. The Fourth Committee therefore ventures to submit for the approval of the Assembly the following resolution:

[1] To make this estimate of the excess complete, it should be mentioned that, under the head of accessory expenditure (meetings of the Building Committee, staff salaries, printing expenses, etc.), provision must be made for an additional amount of something in the neighbourhood of 800,000 francs (see document C.C.478).

"The Assembly,

"Having noted the report of the Fourth Committee on the question of the new buildings;

"Painfully surprised at the information furnished to the Fourth Committee by the Supervisory Commission, to the effect that it is feared that the estimate approved by the Assembly at its eleventh ordinary session may be exceeded by from seven to eight million Swiss francs unless the situation is taken in hand:

"Declares that it is resolved in principle to keep within the estimate adopted last year; and

"Instructs the Supervisory Commission, after having obtained the necessary technical and legal advice and without excluding the possibility of reconsidering the contract concluded with the architects, to submit to the Council for approval as soon as possible a programme which will comply, under the best possible conditions, with the above decision."

ORGANISATION OF THE SECRETARIAT, OF THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR OFFICE AND OF THE REGISTRY OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

REPORT OF THE FOURTH COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.[1]

Rapporteur: His Excellency M. Augusto DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal).

On October 3rd, 1930, the Assembly of the League of Nations adopted a resolution submitted by its Fourth Committee on certain questions connected with the organisation of the Secretariat, the International Labour Office and the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice. The seventh paragraph of this resolution was worded as follows:

"Requests the General Committee of the Assembly to appoint a committee of . . . members to consider the retention or elimination, the increase or reduction of the posts of Under-Secretary-General, as well as the consequences resulting therefrom. All cognate questions which the Committee thought it necessary to adjourn in the course of its work shall be referred to that Committee. The latter will be requested to submit a report not later than May 1st, 1931, so as to make it possible for its conclusions to be examined in due time by the Governments of the States Members of the League of Nations and submitted to the next Assembly."

On October 4th, the General Committee of the Assembly accordingly appointed a committee of thirteen members. The new Committee of Thirteen acquitted itself of its task and submitted a report dated February 5th, 1931 (document A.8.1931.X). After a short discussion, the Fourth Committee adopted the conclusions of this report, with the exception of paragraphs 21 to 26 inclusive, which it referred to the Supervisory Commission for subsequent decision.

The report of the Committee of Thirteen, which has so well carried on the work of its predecessor, deals with the following three questions which had been submitted to it:

1. The question of the Under-Secretaries-General.
2. Question of salaries, conditions of engagement, etc., of the Secretary-General, Deputy Secretary-General, Under-Secretaries-General, Directors and Treasurer.
3. Salaries of Chiefs of Section and of the Secretary-General's Chef de Cabinet.

[1] This is the final text of the report, as adopted by the Committee.

As regards the first question, the Fourth Committee will certainly remember the interesting discussions held in 1930 with regard to the international character of the principal officers of the Secretariat. Two different solutions were finally put forward — that of increasing the number of Under-Secretaries-General to a maximum of eight posts, in order to ensure the collaboration of nationals of countries not permanently represented on the Council, and thus to guarantee, as far as possible, the international character of the structure of the Secretariat; and that of abolishing completely all the posts of Under-Secretary-General, with the idea that this international character would be more completely ensured if persons belonging to Powers permanently represented on the Council ceased to exercise an influence.

Neither of these solutions, nor the proposal to maintain purely and simply the status quo, was able to command a majority in the Committee of Thirteen. The arguments on either side will be found in the Committee's Minutes, and a perusal of these Minutes makes it easy to understand that the Committee was unable definitely to settle the problem submitted to it, in view of the difficulty of estimating exactly the respective weight of the advantages and drawbacks of each system.

In these circumstances, the Committee decided, for the time being and as a compromise, to recommend the postponement of the question. The Fourth Committee concurred in this wise advice.

The Committee of Thirteen therefore proposes that the present organisation of the higher staff should be retained for the present, and it suggests that, in three years' time, at latest, the question of the retention or elimination, the increase or reduction of the posts of Under-Secretaries-General should be considered afresh by the Council and the Assembly. If it should so happen that the present Secretary-General retires before then, the position may have changed and the League will have at once to consider whether there should be a general readjustment of the higher posts. Bearing this in mind, the Committee recommends that all new or renewed contracts concluded with the Deputy Secretary-General or Under-Secretaries-General should:

(1) Have a maximum duration of three years;

(2) Contain a clause under which they may be denounced within one year from the date on which the Secretary-General officially notifies the Council of his intention of resigning, this denunciation only to take effect as from the date on which the new Secretary-General assumes his duties or in the year following.

The Fourth Committee unanimously agreed to these proposals, which it recommends in turn to the Assembly.

The Committee of Thirteen had before it a draft resolution submitted to the Fourth Committee last year by the delegation of the Irish Free State regarding the nationality of the higher officials of the Secretariat down to and including Directors of Section.

The Committee of Thirteen, after careful examination and considerable discussion of this matter, is of the opinion that, "in the appointment or promotion of officials to one of the higher posts of the Secretariat, the first and foremost consideration must be the knowledge and capacity of the candidate, which must be in keeping with the duties he will be called upon to fulfil. In making the choice, however, account should be taken of the representation of the different forms of national civilisation."

The Fourth Committee also accepted the conclusions of the Committee of Thirteen on this point.

It further adopted the proposals of the Committee of Thirteen as shown in paragraphs 16 to 19 of its report, and relating to (1) the salaries of the highest officers of the Secretariat; (2) the normal term of office of the Secretary-General and the Deputy Secretary-General; (3) the question of the entertainment allowance granted to these officials; and (4) the salaries of Directors.

The Fourth Committee decided to give the Treasurer the rank of Director, it being understood that he would receive no increase in salary for 1932.

As regards the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice, an important discussion took place on the application of Article 32 of the Statute of the Court, which states that the salary of the Registrar shall be decided by the Council upon the proposal of the Court. Some delegates and the Chairman of the Supervisory Commission, while recognising with the Committee of Thirteen that this provision is not open to objection, maintained, in agreement with the Registrar of the Court, that it does not invalidate the sovereign right of the Assembly on budgetary matters. This right had, moreover, been recognised and respected by the Council, since it consulted the Supervisory Commission beforehand, and its decision was conditional on the approval of the necessary credits by the Assembly. Since the application of the new scale from January 1st, 1930, made it necessary to include a credit of 7,500 florins in the budget, the Fourth Committee, in confirming the above interpretation, referred the question to the Supervisory Commission. At the meeting of the Fourth Committee during which this question was taken up, the Registrar of the Court spontaneously renounced the amount entered in the supplementary budget for 1932, thus allowing the credit to be cancelled.

On the proposal of the Secretary-General, the Fourth Committee postponed until next year the consideration of the salaries of counsellors and also the question of septennial leave for officials of the First Division.

Actuated by the same spirit of economy, the Committee decided to postpone until next year the question of the new scale of salaries applicable to the Secretary-General's Chef de Cabinet, the Chiefs of Section, and the Deputy Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

The Fourth Committee therefore proposes to the Assembly the adoption of the following resolution :

" The Assembly,

" Having examined the report and the Minutes of the meetings of the Committee appointed by the Assembly at its eleventh session to consider (1) the retention or elimination, the increase or reduction of the posts of Under-Secretary-General, as well as the consequences resulting therefrom, (2) all cognate questions on the organisation of the Secretariat, the International Labour Office and the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice which the Assembly had decided to adjourn in 1930 :

" (1) Adopts the present report ;

" (2) Decides that the framework of the higher ranks of the Secretariat should be provisionally maintained as it stands ;

" (3) Requests the Secretary-General to see that all new or renewed contracts concluded with the Deputy Secretary-General or the Under-Secretaries-General :

" (a) Should have a maximum duration of three years ;

" (b) Should contain a clause under which they may be denounced within a period of one year from the date on which the Secretary-General officially notifies the Council of his intention of resigning, this denunciation only to take effect as from the date on which the new Secretary-General assumes his duties or in the year following ;

" (4) Is of opinion that, in regard to the appointment or promotion of officials to one of the higher posts in the Secretariat, the first and foremost consideration must be the knowledge and capacity of the candidate, which must be in keeping with the duties he will be called upon to fulfil, account being taken, however, in such choice of the different forms of national civilisation ;

" (5) Approves the conclusions of the present report in regard to the salaries and conditions of engagement of the Secretary-General, the Deputy Secretary-General, the Under-Secretaries-General, the Registrar of the Permanent Court of International Justice, the Directors, the Treasurer, the Secretary-General's Chef de Cabinet, the Chiefs of Section and the Deputy Registrar of the Court. "

ANNEX 12.

A.IV. I.27.1931.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT BY THE SUPERVISORY COMMMISSION TO THE FOURTH COMMITTEE.

At a meeting held on September 25th, the Supervisory Commission examined those items in the budget which had previously been held over. At the outset it decided to reject systematically any proposal that might involve an attack on the contractual commitments of the League to its officials.

I. Salaries of the Staff of the Secretariat, the International Labour Office and the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

For the above reason, it was clear that there could be no question of interfering with salaries. On the other hand, the Commission considered whether it was possible to cancel for 1932 the annual increments provided for in the Staff Regulations without breaking the contracts between the League and the members of its staff. At first sight that seemed to be, subject to suitable adjustments, the most natural way of causing the staff to share in the exceptional efforts to reduce the budget for 1932 ; but, as the legal aspect of the question was a controversial one, the Commission deliberately took a different line. It accordingly considered, one by one, various reductions of credits affecting the League's contribution to the Staff Pensions Fund and a number of appropriations for the travelling expenses of officials and their families, and also the number of days' leave with pay allowed.

II. Contribution of the League to the Staff Pensions Fund.

The Commission was of opinion that, under Article 7 of the Pensions Fund Regulations, the Assembly had power to fix, on the advice of the Administrative Board of the Fund, the figure to be entered in the budget each year for the League's contribution to the Staff Pensions Fund ; but it realised that, before such a step could be taken, a number of technical questions would have to be cleared up, and that as time was such a vital factor this would be difficult. Above all, the Commission felt that it was essential that the system adopted should remain inviolable if the staff were to retain that sense of security which it was the object of the establishment of the Pensions Fund to implant. The Commission does not, therefore, propose any change in the appropriation for the Staff Pensions Fund.

III. Travelling Expenses of Officials and Their Families proceeding on Leave. Length of Paid Leave allowed.

After an exhaustive discussion of the legal and practical problems raised by the question, the Commission proposes to the Fourth Committee that, for 1932, those clauses of the Staff Regulations which provide for the payment of the travelling expenses of officials proceeding on annual leave to their homes be cancelled, together with the clause entitling certain officials to claim the refund of the travelling expenses of members of their families accompanying them home.

Furthermore, the journeys of officials going on leave to distant countries will be deferred for one year, those due in 1932 not taking place until 1933, those due in 1933 not until 1934, and so forth. The total saving on this item would be 239,249 francs.

Lastly, the Commission took the view that, in 1932, the period of annual leave with pay might be reduced by one-quarter for all categories of staff. Any official who wished to take the full amount of his annual leave would be allowed to do so, provided he agreed to regard himself as on leave without pay during the period covered by this reduction. If this arrangement were introduced, a number of temporary officials whom it was intended to engage, chiefly for the Disarmament Conference, could be dispensed with.

The adoption of this system would entail the cancellation by the Assembly[1] — but for the year 1932 only — of the relevant provisions of the Staff Regulations of the three organisations.

IV. Entertainment Allowances.

After an exchange of views with the high officials of the Secretariat and the International Labour Office, the Supervisory Commission recommends the Fourth Committee to cut down the joint Entertainment Allowance Fund of the two organisations by one-half. This recommendation represents a reduction of :

	Swiss francs
In the budget of the Secretariat	18,310
In the budget of the International Labour Office	15,000
Total	33,310

ANNEX 13.

Official No.: A.92.1931.X.

ALLOCATION OF EXPENSES.

REPORT OF THE FOURTH COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.

Rapporteur: M. E. C. BOHEMAN (Sweden).

M. Réveillaud, Chairman of the Committee for the Allocation of Expenses, reminded the Fourth Committee that, in accordance with a decision taken by the Assembly of 1928, the Committee for the Allocation of Expenses had been instructed by the Council to submit to the Assembly of 1932 a new and definite scale for the contributions of the States Members of the League. In view of the present economic and financial situation, however, it seemed extremely difficult to draw up a new scale which would have a permanent scientific value. The Allocation Committee was therefore of the opinion that the question of a definite scale should be deferred until the Assembly of 1934.

The Fourth Committee agreed with this proposal: its decision was preceded by a long discussion — reported in the Minutes of the meetings of September 25th and 26th — during which the delegates of several States emphasised the particularly difficult position in which their respective countries found themselves and the disadvantages which would result from the adjournment of the revision of the scale of allocation. In a spirit of mutual concession, unanimous agreement was, however, reached on the proposal of the Allocation Committee.

With regard to the number of units to be allocated to Mexico, which was admitted to the League at this session of the Assembly, the Fourth Committee was informed that the Allocation Committee had already examined the position and had recommended that Mexico should be responsible for fourteen units.

The following resolution is therefore submitted to the Assembly by the Fourth Committee:

> "The Assembly,
>
> "I. Approving the recommendation of the Allocation Committee:
>
> "Fixes at fourteen the number of units allocated to Mexico in the scale of apportionment of the League's expenditure;
> "II. Amending the decision taken on September 26th, 1928:
> "Requests the Council to ask the Allocation Committee not to submit its draft revised scale until the 1934 Assembly."

FIFTH COMMITTEE OF THE TWELFTH ORDINARY SESSION OF THE ASSEMBLY.

(HUMANITARIAN AND GENERAL QUESTIONS.)

AGENDA.

1. WORK OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON TRAFFIC IN OPIUM AND OTHER DANGEROUS DRUGS.
2. WORK OF THE TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN COMMITTEE.
3. WORK OF THE CHILD WELFARE COMMITTEE.
4. IMPROVEMENTS IN PENAL ADMINISTRATION.

FIRST MEETING.

Held on Wednesday, September 9th, 1931, at 5.15 p.m.

Chairman: M. ALÂ (Persia).

1. Publicity of the Meetings.

The Committee decided to hold its meetings in public.

2. Election of a Vice-Chairman.

On the proposal of Mlle. VACARESCO (Roumania), seconded by the delegates of Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Lithuania, Poland and Portugal, Mlle. HESSELGREN (Sweden), was unanimously elected Vice-Chairman.

3. Adoption of the Agenda.

On the proposal of the CHAIRMAN, the Committee adopted the following agenda :

1. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs.
2. Improvements in Penal Administration ; Report by the Secretary-General.
3. Report of the Traffic in Women and Children Committee.
4. Report of the Child Welfare Committee.

4. Appointment of Rapporteurs.

M. DE AGÜERO Y BETHANCOURT (Cuba) proposed the following Rapporteurs :

1. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs : M. SAWADA (Japan).
2. Improvements in Penal Administration ; Report by the Secretary-General : Professor PELLA (Roumania).
3. Traffic in Women and Children : Mrs. PLUMPTRE (Canada).
4. Child Welfare : Countess APPONYI (Hungary).

The above proposals were adopted.

SECOND MEETING.

Held on Saturday, September 12th, 1931, at 5.30 p.m.

Chairman: Mlle. HESSELGREN (Sweden) (Vice-Chairman).

5. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs : Submission of the Rapporteur's Report.

M. SAWADA (Japan), Rapporteur, emphasised the fact that many changes had taken place since the last Assembly. His report on the work of the Advisory Committee (Annex 1) was then read.

The CHAIRMAN thanked the Rapporteur in the name of the Committee for his interesting report.

She drew attention to the concluding paragraph of the report in which it was stated that the picture of the general situation was brighter this year than at former sessions of the Fifth Committee.

The discussion of the Rapporteur's report was adjourned to the next meeting.

6. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs : Question of Discontinuing the Circulation of Annual Reports to Governments.

A memorandum (Annex 2) on this subject prepared by the Secretariat was read.

The Committee decided to adjourn the discussion of this memorandum to a later meeting.

THIRD MEETING.

Held on Monday, September 14th, 1931, at 5.15 p.m.

Chairman: M. ALÂ (Persia), later Mlle. HESSELGREN (Sweden).

7. Question of the Limitation of the Programme of Work to be undertaken in 1932: Communication from the President of the Assembly.

The CHAIRMAN read the following letter dated September 14th, 1931, from the President of the Assembly:

"The Assembly at its meeting to-day adopted the attached resolution[1] submitted by the Fourth Committee regarding the limitation of expenditure in 1932.

"The Assembly's purpose in so doing was to draw the special attention of the Committees responsible for framing the programme of the League's work to the reasons which prompted the resolution.

"I would therefore be grateful if you would bring this letter to the notice of the members of the Committee of which you are Chairman, with a view to enabling them to give every consideration, throughout the course of their work, to the Assembly's wishes.

(Signed) N. TITULESCO,

President of the Assembly."

The Committee noted the above communication.

8. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs: Discussion of the Rapporteur's Report.

M. CASARES (Spain) had only one criticism to make: the Rapporteur, possibly through modesty in view of the important part he had played in drawing up the 1931 Convention, had not laid sufficient emphasis upon its good points.

M. Casares considered it very important to obtain reports with regard to dangerous drugs from territories which had hitherto never supplied them, such, for instance, as concessions, leased territories, and territories under mixed jurisdiction. One or two such territories not far from Spain were very hot-beds of the illicit traffic.

He was further anxious to draw the Committee's attention to a question in which Spain was particularly interested — namely, the convening of the Conference on the Limitation of the Production of Raw Materials. This matter had been the subject of a lively discussion at the Hague Conference in 1912, and had been raised again by Turkey, Yugoslavia and other countries during the recent Conference. It had not been dealt with at that time for constitutional reasons, but no delegation had questioned the necessity of studying the problem. Pending any final decisions, he suggested that the Committee should ask the Council to instruct the competent organs of the League, and the Advisory Committee, to begin forthwith the necessary preparatory studies. Experience had proved, at the recent Conference, that two years was not too long a period to devote to the preliminary work.

M. HOFFMANN (Panama) wished once more, on behalf of Panama, to thank the Rapporteur of the Fifth Committee for a remarkable summary of the work of the League in connection with the campaign against narcotics. His summary proved what he had so clearly pointed out, that, on balance, the work accomplished in the past year justified optimism for the future, and that the situation to-day was not so gloomy as it was a year ago.

M. Hoffmann entirely agreed with the Rapporteur's recommendation not to lose sight of the fact that the peril of the drug traffic was still a serious one. M. Hoffmann entirely agreed with the Rapporteur when he said: "We feel that public opinion is taking a greater interest in our campaign and particularly that our means of action are becoming better adapted to our purpose".

In the previous year, M. Hoffmann, as delegate for Panama, had pointed out to the Fifth Committee that public opinion was beginning to be alarmed and to call for energetic measures,

[1] The text of the resolution proposed by the Fourth Committee reads as follows:

"The Assembly,

"Being convinced that it is imperative not further to increase the budget of the League for 1932, which will have to provide for the expenses of the International Disarmament Conference, and hoping that it will even be possible to reduce the draft budget;

"Makes a strong appeal to its Committees to follow the principles of economy dictated by present circumstances;

"Requests these Committees to limit and, if possible, to reduce to the indispensable the programme of work to be undertaken in 1932, and especially to abstain, as far as practicable, from making recommendations which might involve avoidable expenditure.".

and that the countries represented on the Committee had already in 1929 unanimously urged that the evil should be attacked at its source by the direct limitation of the manufacture of narcotics.

He had, at that time, drawn attention to the fact that, while the quantity of drugs manufactured was much larger than medical requirements, the production of opium was even greater and far beyond the requirements of the factories.

To-day, the Fifth Committee was glad to note the satisfactory results of the Limitation Conference as shown by the text of a Convention which was generally recognised as a model instrument for the purpose for which it was intended.

The Convention would bear fruit even before it came into force. That would be due to the fact that the Government of Panama, in its anxiety to bring the total of the world's production as rapidly as possible within limits corresponding to the world's medical and scientific requirements, had made a proposal the importance of which the Rapporteur had recognised by drawing attention in his report to the recommendation contained in the Final Act of the Conference. The effect of this recommendation was to draw the attention of Members of the League and non-member States to definite figures representing an approximate estimate of the world's requirements in morphine, diacetylmorphine (heroin) and cocaine for use as such. M. Hoffmann had had some difficulty in obtaining the insertion in the text of the Convention itself of these definite figures. They were intended to serve as a guide to the manufacturing countries during the period which must elapse before the coming into force of the Convention ; and he did not regret that, acting on his conviction of the usefulness of such a course, he had insisted that the figures should be inserted in the very text of the Convention. Their usefulness was generally recognised to-day.

The League, in the course of the past year, had done everything that was possible to limit the manufacture of narcotics. It was now called upon to draw up a programme to be followed pending the coming into force of the Convention.

He would venture to put the question of the limitation of the production of opium in a rather different form from that which the Rapporteur had followed in his report. It was true that the Council, at its sixty-second session, had decided to request the Advisory Committee on the Traffic in Opium and other Dangerous Drugs to study and report to the Council on the question of convening a conference of the Governments concerned to consider the possibility of limiting and controlling the cultivation of the poppy. But it was still more true to say that to-day, as a result of the claims put forward during the Limitation Conference by the delegates of Yugoslavia, Turkey, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and others, the instructions to the Advisory Committee should be made much more definite.

No one now doubted that a Conference for the limitation of the production of opium was inevitable in the more or less near future.

The Fifth Committee was therefore called upon to consider the most practical steps which the League could take with a view to the possible convening of such a conference. Experience howed that two years was not too long for the preparation for a conference. In two years, the onvention for the Limitation of Manufacture would probably have come into force. It was ssential not to wait until that Convention had come into force to undertake the preparatory tudies which must inevitably precede the conference for the limitation of production. Certain data were already available, and these would find their place in the preparatory work which he was proposing. The text of the 1931 Convention contained the definite figures — 9 tons of morphine, 2 tons of diacetylmorphine and 5 ½ tons of cocaine. Other data also were available. All that was required was to co-ordinate, assemble and study those data to draw therefrom the necessary deductions and prepare the form of their presentation.

Being convinced that the Fifth Committee shared his desire to continue unremittingly the work of the League in the struggle against narcotics, M. Hoffmann requested it to accept his proposal to begin at once the study of all questions which would form part of the preparatory work for the proposed conference.

In these circumstances, M. Hoffmann proposed the following resolution :

> " The Fifth Committee,
> " Noting the manifest desire of certain Governments to hold a conference at an early date with a view to considering the possibility of limiting and supervising the cultivation of the poppy :
> " Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Advisory Committee on the Traffic in Opium and other Dangerous Drugs, together with the competent organs of the Secretariat of the League, to undertake at once the compilation of all documentary material capable of serving as a basis for the work of a conference on the limitation of production, and to that end to address a questionnaire to the Governments Members and non-members of the League. "

M. Cavazzoni (Italy) wished to draw the Committee's attention to one or two points in the Convention upon which the Rapporteur had not laid sufficient stress.

In the first place the fact that the Conference had drawn up a very comprehensive list of drugs, all of which were definitely subject to the various clauses of the Convention, was of the utmost importance. He was glad that this list at last included codeine, the manufacture of which had for years past enabled quantities of morphine to escape all control and which had, owing to its previous immunity, rendered impossible any limitation of manufacture.

The special measures taken with regard to diacetylmorphine (heroin) should also be emphasised. As the Committee knew, medical opinion was divided as to this drug. Some doctors advocated its total abolition; others considered it so valuable as to be indispensable in some cases. The Conference had taken a firm line and the Convention, in principle, prohibited its export.

A further point worthy of notice was the increased importance of the tasks and responsibilities of the Permanent Central Opium Board. In addition to all its former work, it now had to collect statistics from the various countries and establish estimates for those not furnishing them; it had to group, analyse and compare these figures in such a way as to regulate and control the whole of the world's manufacture of and trade in narcotic drugs. The clauses of the Convention, especially those regarding estimates, were framed in such a way as to ensure the Board every success in its work.

The Convention made adequate provision for the question of reserve and Government stocks; provision was also made for existing surplus stocks which would either be gradually absorbed for legitimate consumption, in which case there would be a corresponding reduction of manufacture, or the Government concerned would assume all responsibility for dealing with them in accordance with the terms of the Convention.

As regards the question of a model code, the Conference on Limitation had, in the Final Act of the Conference, adopted a recommendation on this subject. The code to be drafted should throw light on one or two points not fully brought out in the Convention and should serve as a model for national laws and regulations. It was important that it should be drafted as soon as possible, in order to be available for Governments and Government officials at the moment when the Convention should come into force.

Some proposals made by certain delegates to the Conference, which at present only figured in its Minutes, might well be taken into consideration at the same time, and he therefore felt that these should be published in a special document, which might also contain some of the provisions of the Advisory Committee's draft of February 1931.

As regarded penalties, it must be confessed that, in view of the absence of all possibility of enforcing them, the Convention, like many of its predecessors, showed some weakness. Nevertheless, the publication by the Permanent Central Board of the explanations which must be given by a State failing to fulfil its obligations inflicted a form of penalty which would not be without its moral effect.

M. Cavazzoni drew the special attention of the Committee to Recommendations IX and X of the Final Act. The former, which gave the figures for legitimate world consumption, set limits which it was every State's duty to observe, as the delegate of Panama had pointed out, even before the Convention came into force. The latter dealt with the question of awards to the inventors of non-narcotic substances producing the same therapeutic effects as the drugs at present in use.

Every effort should be made, not only by delegates, but by the Press and the associations interested in the campaign against the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs, to obtain the necessary ratifications for the entry into force of the Convention, which in its main lines fulfilled the task set by the original Assembly resolution and Council decision.

As regarded the question of a future conference on the limitation of raw materials, he could, no doubt, support, M. Hoffmann's resolution. Recent events — among them the understanding which had apparently been reached between Turkey and Yugoslavia regarding trade in raw opium, statements by the Government of the Soviet Union and proposals made by the United States — indicated the need for such a conference and he therefore endorsed the proposals made by the delegates of Spain and Panama that the Advisory Committee and the Secretariat should be asked to undertake the necessary preliminary work without delay.

He asked that very full Minutes should be taken of the Conference to be held at Bangkok in November 1931, as these would be invaluable in the preparatory work for the Conference on the Limitation of Raw Materials.

He hoped that M. Sawada would, in any revised edition of his report, embody the points he had raised.

(Mlle. HESSELGREN then took the Chair.)

M. ENTÉZAM-WEZIRY (Persia) pointed out that the last meeting of the Fifth Committee had been marked by some scepticism as to the possibility of drawing up a Convention limiting manufacture. The discussions of the recent Conference had shown that this scepticism was justifiable, for there were so many interests at stake. Nevertheless, thanks to the efforts of M. Sawada, M. Bourgois and M. Casares, the inacceptable quota system had been discarded and thanks to the goodwill shown on all sides agreement had been reached upon the text of the Convention now before the Committee. The Convention, to be effective, must be universally accepted. All the delegates should therefore use their influence to obtain the necessary ratifications. Persia had not yet signed the Convention, but he hoped to obtain his Government's authorisation before the end of the present session of the Committee.

Sir Jehangir COYAJEE (India) could not express any opinion as to the 1931 Convention on behalf of his Government, which had as yet had no opportunity of considering it. In his personal view, though it might not go so far as some people could wish, it constituted a distinct advance upon the 1925 Geneva Convention. India had already signed it, and in view of her old traditions in the matter of control, both of manufacture and the illicit traffic, he rejoiced to see that thirty-six signatures had already been obtained.

He was particularly glad to learn from the report under discussion of the new regulations issued by the Japanese Government for the control of manufacture. These were of great interest to India, which had for some years past suffered from an influx of cocaine in enormous quantities. The Turkish regulations of February 1921, under which drugs could only be exported subject to the granting of an import licence by the Government of the importing country, also presented great interest, since India was faced with the ever-present danger that cocaine might be supplanted by the more deadly heroin.

Dr. VOELCKERS (Germany) said that his Government had always endeavoured to act according to both the letter and spirit of the Geneva Convention. The new German opium law of January 1st, 1930, had brought about effective control of both imports and exports, even in the case of dealings with States not signatories of the 1925 Convention or which did not enforce the import-certificate system. Such Governments were informed that export permits granted were subject to the production of an import permit by the receiver. This was always the case as regards exports to China and Latin America. As a result of the entry into force of the new opium law, eucodal, dicodide, dilaudide, and the esters of morphine, including benzoylmorphine and paramorphine, were subject to its terms, as also was acedicone.

On the initiative of the German Government, national factories had, as from April 1st, 1931, discontinued the manufacture of benzylmorphine (peronine) although that drug came under neither the 1925 Convention nor the new German law. This example, which had been followed in other countries, constituted a definite progress, although the 1931 Convention was not yet in force.

Germany had taken an active part in the preparation of this Convention, putting on one side its doubts as regards codeine. The necessary steps for ratification of the Convention by the German Government would be taken as soon as possible.

Any cases of drug smuggling discovered in Germany would be reported to the League and, as soon as the proceedings reached a stage at which this became practicable, to the Governments concerned.

He approved the report of the Japanese delegate and repeated that the German Government would he ready in the future as in the past to do all in its power to assist in suppressing the international illicit traffic. He drew attention to two reservations made by the German representative on the Council at the meeting on May 19th, 1931, regarding two resolutions of the Advisory Committee. The first referred to the recommendations regarding Nos. 2 (a) and 2 (b) of the resolution included in the Advisory Committee's report, according to which licences granted for the manufacture of or trade in narcotic drugs could, under certain circumstances, be withdrawn. The second referred to the resolution by which Governments were to be recommended not to grant export or import certificates under certain special circumstances.

The Secretary-General's circular letter of June 15th, communicating the first of these resolutions, had also asked for information regarding certain firms engaged in illicit transactions in benzoylmorphine. The necessary enquiries were not yet completed, but information would be forwarded to the Secretary-General as soon as obtained.

He endorsed the suggestions of the delegates for Spain and Panama as to the convening of a conference for the limitation and control of poppy-growing, to which subject he would, if necessary, return at a later meeting.

The continuation of the discussion was adjourned to the next meeting.

FOURTH MEETING.

Held on Tuesday, September 15th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman: M. ALÀ (Persia).

9. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs: Discussion of the Rapporteur's Report (continuation).

Countess APPONYI (Hungary), while welcoming the new Convention, thought that the question whether it would achieve the desired result should be considered. She could not but feel that, had the 1925 Convention been applied to the letter, the work of the 1931 Conference would not have been necessary. She therefore suggested that the Committee should ask the Rapporteur to add a proposal that Governments should be compelled to carry out their undertakings in full.

As regarded the disposal of seizures, Article 18 of the Convention left so much latitude to Governments that the control provided for might give rise to the suspicion that they were not acting in good faith. Destruction was the only sure means of dealing with the drugs seized. Any other course was open to danger.

M. DOLLFUS (Switzerland) said that his Government had been convinced for some years past of the necessity for limiting manufacture and had, when the 1931 Convention was under discussion, instructed its delegation to support and adopt any measures which seemed likely to serve this purpose.

The Convention must obviously be brought into force as soon as possible and all Governments should consider themselves in honour bound to ratify it without delay. He had referred at the session held in the previous year to the request from the National Council to the Federal Council for vigorous action in the campaign against the illicit traffic — a request which testified to the fact that Switzerland would not only ratify the Convention but would do her best to carry out any suggestions for its efficient working made by the Secretariat, the Fifth Committee or the Advisory Committee.

He could give illustrations of action already taken on suggestions made by these bodies. In the matter of direct communication between the competent authorities, the Swiss Federal Council had given instructions to the Federal Health Authorities to establish direct contact with the foreign authorities concerned. In order that the illicit traffic might not spread through the post, the suggestion that packets of drugs destined for the East should be concentrated in certain offices had also been adopted. In the matter of legal proceedings, too, the Swiss authorities had done their duty. The record for 1930 showed 26 convictions, sentences being for as much as four months' imprisonment, while several thousand francs' worth of fines had been imposed.

These and other measures had resulted in a heavy decrease in the traffic, as was proved by the following figures for manufacture and export :

	kilogrammes
Manufacture :
Morphine	2,246	1,576
Heroin	952	4
Export :
Morphine	1,761	615
Heroin	1,119	83

He was convinced that other countries could show figures equally as satisfactory. Nevertheless, only the ratification and application of the Convention at the earliest possible moment would serve to rid the world of the scourge of narcotics.

M. CHODZKO (Poland) said that, though Poland was for formal reasons unable to sign the Convention, this did not mean that he would criticise it too severely. He would confine himself to pointing out some defects which were likely to prevent its successful application.

The Polish delegation readily recognised that inclusion in the Convention of figures indicating the total world needs would have been premature, but it was seriously concerned at the omission of definite figures limiting the reserve stocks referred to in Articles 5 and 6, since Article 6 was thus rendered valueless. It could only be hoped that the Advisory Committee, the Permanent Central Board and the Supervisory Body for which provision was made in Article 5 would, in practice, rectify this omission.

A second defect was the failure to standardise the method of ascertaining the morphine content of raw opium. The different methods left at the manufacturers' disposal would give infinitely varying results and no Government could be certain of obtaining accurate data on the quantity of morphine imported. Happily, there was nothing to prevent the Advisory Committee from recommending Governments to introduce an official control of the analyses in question, and it was to be hoped that it would do so.

The next defect of importance was the failure — in Article 17 — to define the term " wholesaler ". The Polish proposal that such persons should deposit a sum as security for the honesty of their transactions had not been adopted by the Business Committee.

Again, the reference to State monopolies in Resolution IV of the Final Act was wholly inadequate. The Polish delegation considered that such a monopoly was indispensable for the proper control of the traffic, and the omission of all reference to it in the Convention itself was the more surprising since Greece had already instituted, and Roumania was about to institute, such a monopoly, following the example of Spain, while Poland too was contemplating doing likewise.

Resolution IV should have been submitted to the Council, in so far as it entailed measures vis-à-vis the Governments, but the Minutes of the sixty-fourth session (September 4th, 1931) showed that this had not been done.

Nor was mention made of the possibility of an undue increase in the price of drugs required for medical and scientific purposes — a subject already considered by the Assembly and the Advisory Committee and included in the draft Convention submitted to the 1931 Conference by the British delegation ; the Polish proposal that a central organ — the Supervisory Body of Article 5 of the new Convention — should be empowered to submit to the Council a compulsory tariff of maximum prices was mentioned in the report of the Advisory Committee to the Council. It might be thought that these results were due to the unfavourable attitude of the producing countries, which justly defended the interests of the producers — namely, the peasants. This was a question which the Permanent Central Opium Board should examine.

The Polish delegation welcomed Article 21 of the Convention of July 13th. The communication of laws and regulations required by it covered future action only; in order that past legislation might also be available for reference, he proposed the resolution contained in document A.V/6.1931.

In spite of the defects which he had pointed out, he felt that no one could deny that the 1931 Convention constituted a great advance.

Dr. Ethel OSBORNE (Australia), referring to page 22 of the Advisory Committee's report, suggested the insertion of a recommendation in the paragraph dealing with the illicit traffic in drugs, and that special attention should be given to the opportunities afforded by air transport for smuggling. The high value and small volume of narcotic drugs rendered them particularly suitable for such methods.

As regarded the circulation of annual reports to Governments (Annex 2) she thought it would be well to include in any recommendation on the subject a reserving clause that any Government requiring copies of the documents in question should be able to receive them on request.

Turning to the report of the Permanent Central Board to the Council (document C.629.M.250.1931.XI), Dr. Osborne drew attention to the statement on page 6 to the effect that the figures for Australia's consumption of both cocaine and diacetylmorphine were higher than those for any other Anglo-Saxon country. Attention was directed to the statistics on pages 21, 35 and 43 of the report. Here, also, an outstandingly high consumption of opium was recorded. She had been astounded at these compararive figures, of which she had only learned from the Re port. She had no instructions from her Government and could have no access to any other figures, but felt she must endeavour to do justice to her country and offer an explanation from her personal experience.

The only possible conclusion to be drawn from these returns appeared to be that Australia ranked among the highest in the consumption of practically all forms of narcotic drugs.

It must first be remembered that consumption did not necessarily mean addiction, though there was a definite tendency in the public mind, and even sometimes among those who were devoting special study to this problem, to assume a close correlation between the two.

Australia might be accounted a pioneer in the matter of legislation on the control of foods and drugs, including those under consideration. Her own experience as a practising doctor in the hospitals of Melbourne and observations made elsewhere had demonstrated that drug addiction in Australia was comparatively rare. So far as she knew there were practically no " homes " or institutions for addicts in existence in Australia and the few cases she had met with were almost invariably the result of gross overwork and mental strain. She personally considered that the high figures were explained by the very definite tendency in Australia to use analgesia and narcotic drugs more frequently than in other countries for minor surgical and dental work and for midwifery. Again, local and spinal anæsthesias were now widely used in Australia in operations instead of general anæsthesias. These medical practices, together with the fact that the hospital service in proportion to the population was extensive, must of course raise the figures for " consumption " of these drugs.

As she had already heard the criticism that Australians were addicted to drugs — according to published figures, and as this was at total variance with the situation as it appeared to her, she would be glad if the figures could be referred back to a competent Committee of Experts in Australia for their comment, if this had not already been done.

Referring to the Final Act of the Conference for Limitation she complimented the promoters of Recommendation VI :

> " Recognising the highly dangerous character of diacetylmorphine as a drug of addiction and the possibility in most, if not all, cases of replacing it by other drugs of a less dangerous character ;
> " Recommends that each Government should examine in conjunction with the medical profession the possibility of abolishing or restricting its use, and should communicate the results of such examination to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations."

And Recommendation X to the effect that :

> " The League of Nations be enabled to give prizes as a reward for results obtained by research work for the purpose of discovering medicines which, although producing the same therapeutic effects as the drugs, do not give rise to drug addiction."

She hoped these recommendations would be put into effect before long.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) stated that if Dr. Osborne would put her two suggestions — as regarded the question of the use of aircraft for smuggling and the supply of documents on demand by Governments — in the form of a resolution, she would be glad to second them.

The Convention drawn up by the Conference on the Limitation of the Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs should meet with general approval, since, if applied by the various Governments in the spirit intended, it would undoubtedly improve the situation. A universal effort should be made to obtain the greatest possible number of ratifications.

She had been struck, in reading the report, by the sincerity and earnestness of the Turkish Government, which, although not a Member of the League, had supplied the required statistics regarding seizures. It was obvious, however, that so long as any country did not accede to the Convention or apply the export- and import-certificate system, it was not possible to exercise effective control over the drug traffic, as was demonstrated in the case of Turkey.

In the matter of the withdrawal of manufacturing licences from firms found to be involved in the illicit traffic, she had been glad to hear the Swiss delegate's statements, which proved that very real progress had been made. Unfortunately, she had not caught what the German delegate had said about the withdrawal of licences, and she hoped that he would be good enough to supply this information again.

After an absence of three years from the Committee's discussions, she had been impressed by the results of the work done by the Permanent Central Opium Board. A study of the documents dealing with this showed the progress realised.

The British Government would give its strong support to the resolution proposed by the delegate for Panama. She would propose the addition to the agenda of an item regarding the limitation of coca-leaf cultivation, upon which subject she would present an amendment later.

The date of the proposed Conference should be most carefully chosen, and very detailed preparation must be made for it. Any conditions under which certain countries might find it impossible to attend the Conference must be avoided ; for instance, the extraordinary difficulties with which China was faced must be taken into account, though its past efforts for the abolition of opium were a sure guarantee of all that it would do in the future. Moreover, the co-operation of all countries was indispensable in order to combat smuggling.

In conclusion, the Advisory Committee should be asked to decide on the date of the Conference and to set the necessary investigation and documentation in motion.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) drew special attention to the vast quantity of work carried out and the success achieved by the Advisory Committee and Secretariat in the preparation of the Conference for the Limitation of Manufacture.

He pointed out that the results obtained by the 1925 Conference should be judged by a comparison of the statistics available regarding drugs before and after 1928 — since the Convention had only been applied after the latter date. He hoped that the Secretariat would place these figures at the Committee's disposal as soon as possible.

The new Convention had one very interesting characteristic in that it was the first case of international control of an industry. A supervisory body had even been set up responsible for applying such control — an entirely new development in international co-operation.

Such a Convention had only been possible after long years of preparation — preparation which took various forms ; one form was the gathering and sifting of information — and in this connection, M. de Vasconcellos would point out that one of the most remarkable features of the Conference, and one of real permanent value, was the documentation prepared for it by the Secretariat — documentation which gathered together and analysed the valuable information that had been accumulated by the Advisory Committee over a long period of years. An even more important aspect of its preparation was what might be called the political preparation — namely, the task of bringing together and reconciling the points of view of the Governments in a field where difference of opinion as to the facts and controversies regarding the ultimate object to be secured had been notoriously acute.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of this unusually representative Conference, composed of fifty-seven Governments, was the atmosphere of unanimity and reconciliation which it ultimately achieved and which was shown in the almost record number of signatures which the Convention had already obtained. This task of reconciling different points of view had been carried on by all the organs of the League occupied in this matter, and M. de Vasconcellos wished to draw particular attention to the part played in it by the Opium Advisory Committee.

It was true that the draft Convention drawn up by the Advisory Committee had as regards its most essential feature been rejected by the Conference, but, as was obvious to anyone attending the Conference, this rejection had in no sense been a judgment on the Advisory Committee itself, but had been due rather to a change of opinion on the part of practically all the members of the Advisory Committee after further reflection and discussion as regards the best means of solving the problem before the Conference and, in particular, to the difficulty of reaching an agreement on the quota system. Governments members of the Advisory Committee had in practically all cases been represented at the Conference by the same persons as represented them on the Advisory Committee itself, and it was these members of the Advisory Committee who without question had been the chief architects of the new Convention.

The new Convention greatly strengthened the organs of the League dealing with this matter as well as the Permanent Central Opium Board established under the Geneva Convention. It was noteworthy, for example, that the execution of practically all the recommendations adopted by the Conference in the Final Act had been confided to the organs of the League — namely, the Council, the Secretary-General, the Opium Advisory Committee and the Health Committee — instead of their being left hanging in the air as mere pious resolutions which it was nobody's business to carry out. The recommendations of the Conference were linked up, for the purpose of their execution, to the permanent organs of the League.

The work of the Opium Advisory Committee had been very materially strengthened in a number of ways by the Convention ; not only was the Committee asked to draw up a model administrative code for the putting into force of the Convention, but the system of annual reports and of seizure reports which formed the essential bases of its work was effectively incorporated for the first time in an international Convention. The Advisory Committee would also have an important part to play in the work of the new Supervisory Body set up by the Convention in connection with the determination of estimates and, together with the Health Committee of the League, in connection with the placing of new drugs under the Convention.

M. de Vasconcellos wished to emphasise in particular the importance of the new Supervisory Body for the determination of the estimates to which he had just referred. The Conference had been deeply impressed with the importance of securing a body of unusual authority upon which medical opinion would be very strongly represented for the purpose of making an official judgment upon the estimates forwarded by Governments of their requirements of dangerous drugs. These estimates would, as everyone was aware, determine the total amounts which were to be manufactured each year for world needs and involve, as had been pointed out in the Conference and in the Advisory Committee, a question of medical statistics. The Conference, in view of the importance and the peculiar nature of the estimates, decided to entrust the final judging of them to a body to be known as the Supervisory Body, of which the Secretariat was to be furnished by the Secretary-General, and would, therefore, it was assumed, be undertaken by the Opium Section of the Secretariat, and which was to be composed of one person nominated by the Opium Advisory Committee, one nominated by the Health Committee, one by the Office international d'Hygiène publique at Paris, and one by the Permanent Central Board constituted under the Geneva Convention.

The estimates, which would be received and tabulated by the Permanent Central Board, would be handed to the Supervisory Body which would have the responsibility of making a final judgment upon them. That body might call for explanations from Governments. It had the duty also of framing estimates for countries which did not furnish them, and would perform similar functions in respect of all supplementary estimates forwarded by Governments.

There was no need to refer in detail to the functions of the Permanent Central Board under the new Convention, but M. de Vasconcellos wished to say, in his capacity as Chairman of the Advisory Committee, that the members of that Committee represented at the Conference had been anxious to strengthen the powers of the Permanent Central Board in order that it might receive not only the fuller statistical information necessary for the discharge of its functions, but also the powers necessary to enable it to detect or to prevent over-manufacture or excessive export or import or accumulation of stocks likely to lead to the diversion of drugs into the illicit traffic. Under the terms of the Convention, the powers of the Board had been considerably strengthened and had also been much more clearly defined than under the Geneva Convention. The new Convention, by defining more clearly the relations between the Opium Advisory Committee and the Central Board, should do much to maintain and develop the present cordial relations existing between those two bodies.

There was nothing in the Convention which was contrary to Dr. Chodzko's suggestion for the introduction of a State monopoly in the largest possible number of countries. It would, however, have been dangerous to include any such recommendation in the Convention since, in certain countries, State monopolies were forbiddem by law.

With reference to the Australian delegate's statement, it should be made clear whether the figures in question related to a period before or after 1928. It must further be remembered that cocaine had only recently been replaced by new products, such as novocaine.

In conclusion, speaking on his own behalf, M. de Vasconcellos urged that the penalties for illicit trafficking should be strengthened very considerably. Traffickers were " wholesale " poisoners and should be liable to penal servitude. He had made in the Advisory Committee a proposal that illicit traffic should be subject to the same penalties as piracy or attempted murder. His proposal had not been discussed for legal reasons, but it had not been withdrawn. Similar suggestions had been made by certain organisations, recommending him to give effect to them, while he himself could have recommended to these organisations his own proposal, which was of much earlier date than those suggestions.

Dr. VOELCKERS (Germany), in reply to the British delegate's question, explained that the enquiry conducted at Hamburg concerning the two German firms mentioned in the report had not yet been concluded, but that there had been an exchange of letters between the German delegate, the Advisory Committee and Sir Malcolm Delevingne, who had thus recevied information as to the present stage of the enquiry.

He then recalled that Dr. Curtius had already referred, at the Council session in May 1931, to the objections raised by Germany to the two resolutions mentioned in the report of the Advisory Committee (document C.168*(a).M.62(a)*.1931.XI, page 7).

With reference to the resolution concerning the withdrawal of manufacturing or trading licences (Recommendation No. 2*(a)*), the Government of the Reich could not assent to so severe a measure in respect of products outside the 1925 Convention, except in specially serious circumstances. At the Government's request, the German factories had ceased to manufacture peronine since April 1st, 1931.

With regard to Recommendation No. 2*(b)*, the Secretary-General's Circular Letter of January 11th, 1929, had only reached the German Government in October of that year, and at that time the question of including the esters of morphine in the list of substances coming under the German opium law had been under consideration. For that reason, the German Government had not communicated the Circular Letter to the factories and trading firms.

The German Government's view of the resolution concerning the refusal of import or export licences, which had already given rise to objections from another quarter in the Advisory Committee, was as follows :

The Government of an importing or exporting country which refused to deliver an import or export licence because the firm importing or exporting the goods had formerly been mixed up in a case of illicit traffic might by its action find itself in opposition with the Government of the country in which the firm in question was situated.

The procedure proposed by the Advisory Committee would be justified only in cases where there was ground for thinking that the Government of the country in which the firm applying for the licence was situated was not observing its international undertakings.

Mme. AAS (Norway) announced that the Norwegian Government had ratified the 1925 Convention on March 16th, 1931. It had been unable to do so earlier owing to the numerous amendments it had had to make in the national law which, although very complete on the subject of opium, had nevertheless had to be modified in the interest of the international campaign against narcotic drugs.

M. BOSSY (Roumania) recounted what had been done by his country in the campaign against harmful drugs. The Law of April 12th, 1928, supplemented by the Regulations of 1929, provided very severe measures (penalties of a fine of as much as 100,000 lei and two years' imprisonment) which had given very satisfactory results. A new draft law was under consideration for the object of making the trade in narcotics a State monopoly.

Dr. WOO KAISENG (China) announced that, although China had not signed the 1925 Convention, she would, as from the current year, forward to the Permanent Central Opium Board statistics of narcotic drug imports and exports.

He had only recently received the second volume of the report by the Commission of Enquiry into the Control of Opium-Smoking in the Far East and therefore was unable to present his Government's comments on that subject.

The Chinese Government was not yet in a position to sign the Convention for the Limitation of the Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs, but would not fail to take a decision on the matter within the prescribed time-limit.

He supported the resolution proposed by the Panama delegation concerning the summoning of a Conference for the limitation of poppy-growing. The Chinese Government adhered to its policy in this matter and would do all it could to secure the limitation of production.

As regards the question of annual reports on the concessions and leased territories, to which M. Casares had referred, co-operation would be required between the Chinese Government and the Powers concerned. The Chinese Government therefore was obliged to reserve its opinion on that point for the moment.

Dr. TORRES-UMAÑA (Colombia) described the practical measures adopted in Colombia for the prevention of drug addiction. The import and distribution of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific needs were placed by decree under the control of the National Board of Health. A law embodying very severe penalties for the clandestine traffic was under consideration. The recent appointment by the Colombian Government of a Permanent Adviser accredited to the League for health questions would certainly do much to promote Colombia's co-operation in the work.

As the Committee was aware, the 1925 Convention had been ratified by Colombia, and there could be no doubt that her accession to the last Convention would be secured without difficulty.

M. PARRA-PÉREZ (Venezuela) drew attention to an important question. The possibility of a change in the prices of raw materials must be avoided. M. Cavazzoni had referred to that matter at the last Conference. The question deserved enquiry, and this would facilitate the preparation of the proposed Conference.

M. GOSAR (Yugoslavia) said that his Government was prepared to co-operate actively and sincerely in the campaign undertaken, under the auspices of the League, against narcotic drugs. It must, however, defend the legitimate interests of producers, who were seriously affected, like so many others in Europe, by the present depression.

The Yugoslav delegation was prepared to accept the resolution proposed by the delegate of Panama.

M. KALNIN (Latvia) reminded the Committee that in the course of his closing speech M. de Brouckère, President of the Conference for the Limitation of the Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs, had said that the methods for the enforcement of the Convention would gain greatly in precision if the Secretariat could prepare an authentic commentary. M. Kalnin would be glad to know what action had been taken on that suggestion, which the Conference had approved in a formal resolution.

M. EKSTRAND (Director of the Opium Traffic and Social Questions Sections) replied that the Secretariat had not yet had time to begin the commentary, but that the work would be undertaken as soon as circumstances permitted, seeing that it was absolutely indispensable.

Mlle. HESSELGREN (Sweden) desired to give a few explanations concerning the high figure of Swedish drug imports. Her explanations might possibly apply also to the figures mentioned by the Australian delegate. Allowance must be made for the fact that the bases on which the different countries compiled their statistics were not identical. In the Swedish statistics, for example, the requirements of hospitals were included in the Government requirements, whereas, in those of other countries, Government requirements covered only the army and navy services, etc. That showed the need for a strictly uniform basis for all statistics. This point should be mentioned in the report.

M. GAUTIER (France) thought that particular attention should be paid, among other points, to one extremely valuable observation made by M. de Vasconcellos, because it showed what could be obtained from the Governments if they were actuated by good faith, goodwill and patience. M. de Vasconcellos had pointed out that industry was being regulated internationally for the first time. That was a fact of considerable importance. It was particularly remarkable, because the industry concerned was a powerful and enormously lucrative one. M. Gautier desired to link up this fact to the general economic situation with which the entire world was now so deeply concerned.

The French delegation supported the Panama delegate's proposal.

M. SAWADA (Japan) thanked his colleagues for the way in which they had received his report. He would take account in the final report of the various suggestions made during the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN declared closed the discussion on M. Sawada's report.

FIFTH MEETING.

Held on Wednesday, September 16th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman: M. ALÂ (Persia).

10. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs : Resolutions submitted by the Delegates of Poland, Panama and Hungary.

M. CAVAZZONI (Italy) apologised for expressing his opinion before the proposals were put to the Committee, his excuse being that he must leave Geneva immediately.

He hoped that the Rapporteur's statement at the previous meeting meant that he would include in his report all the proposed additions to which no objection had been raised.

The resolution submitted by the delegate for Panama should include also the limitation of the cultivation of the coca-leaf.

In the matter of the circulation of annual reports to Governments (Annex 2), he was strongly opposed to any restriction whatsoever and would vote against any proposal to this effect.

As regards Countess Apponyi's resolution, though Italy had more than once voted in favour of the destruction of seizures, the Fifth Committee must not contemplate adding anything to a diplomatic instrument so recently adopted by an international conference. There was, of course, nothing to prevent the formulation of a recommendation, but this should be made without reference to the Convention.

1. RESOLUTION PROPOSED BY THE DELEGATE FOR POLAND.

The following draft resolution proposed by the delegate for Poland was read :

" The Assembly,

" Recalling the recommendation adopted by the tenth Assembly instructing the Secretariat to draw up a list of the laws and regulations at present in force in the different countries on the traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs with a view to the preparation of a compilation or analysis of this legislation;

" Observing that the performance of this task has had to be delayed owing to the necessity of preparing for the work of the Conference on Limitation;

" Expresses the wish that the Secretariat, within the limits of the funds at its disposal, should undertake the preparation of this compilation of laws with a view to publishing it as soon as possible after the entry into force of the Convention for limiting the manufacture and regulating the distribution of narcotics, and that this compilation should embrace all laws or regulations concerning the supervision of the manufacture of and trade in narcotics and the measures taken to combat the drug habit ".

The draft resolution was adopted.

2. RESOLUTION PROPOSED BY THE DELEGATE FOR PANAMA.

The following draft resolution proposed by the delegate of Panama was read :

" The Fifth Committee of the Assembly,

" Noting the desire expressed by certain Governments that a Conference should be convened in the near future with a view to considering the possibility of limiting and controlling the cultivation of the poppy;

" Noting further the decision of the Council at its sixty-second session in January 1931, to ask the Advisory Committee on Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs to examine and report to the Council in regard to the possibility of convening a Conference of the Governments concerned regarding this matter :

" Requests the Secretary-General to ask the Advisory Committee on Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs and the competent organs of the Secretariat of the League of Nations to undertake as soon as possible the compilation of all documentary material likely to serve as a basis for the work of a conference on the limitation of opium production and for this purpose to send a questionnaire to the Governments Members and non-members of the League of Nations ".

Sir Jehangir COYAJEE (India) thought this proposal premature, as no decision to convene a conference had as yet been taken. He had no instructions from his Government, but India had hitherto not been in favour of the suggested conference because it believed in the simplicity and efficiency of the monopoly system which it practised, and because his Government felt that any attempt was likely to fail in view of the importance attached by some of the other producing countries to the financial and economic aspects of the problem. His personal view, however, was that, should other producing countries consider that such a conference might bear useful fruit, India would not wish to stand on one side.

M. ENTÉZAM-WEZIRY (Persia), though under no instructions from his Government, felt he must put the point of view of an opium-producing country. He fully appreciated the humanitarian motives behind the resolution. The difficulties with which Persia was faced were, however, obvious and only too well known. Whereas the limitation of manufacture meant limiting the large profits of a few wealthy industrialists, the limitation of production deprived hundreds of thousands of needy peasants of their scanty livelihood.

The question was, in any case, closely linked with the economic problem with which the world was faced and, as such, formed part of the general plan of reorganisation which the League was trying to bring about. It must, therefore, be dealt with with the utmost caution and only in close co-operation with the economic organs of the League.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) reminded the Persian delegate that the limitation of manufacture in fact meant the limitation of production also; the conference therefore was no new proposition. The Fifth Committee, moreover, could hardly lend itself to the suggestion that humanitarian activities should be subordinated to economic considerations.

She proposed the following amendment to the resolution : the addition, in paragraph 1, of the words " and the coca-leaf " after the words " cultivation of the poppy ", and, in the last paragraph, of the words " and the cultivation of the coca-leaf " after the words " limitation of opium production ".

M. CASARES (Spain) supported the resolution. Paragraph 2 made it quite clear that all the Committee could do was to ask for adequate preparation for any conference which the Council might later convene, and to point out that the question of substitute crops should be given due consideration in all its economic aspects.

As to the point raised by the Italian and British delegates regarding the inclusion of " coca-leaf cultivation ", it was technically incorrect to mention this in the same breath as poppy-growing as, while the latter plant required special cultivation, the former was a bush growing wild.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) endorsed this statement. The two cases were not comparable.

The Persian delegate need have no fear of a hasty decision as a result of the adoption of the proposal under discussion, seeing that, in view of budgetary considerations and of the necessarily lengthy preparation involved, the words " in the near future " must undoubtedly mean some years hence.

M. SZE (China) supported the resolution as amended by the British delegate.

On the statement of the British delegate that the coca-leaf was cultivated in Java and Japan, it was agreed, after discussion, that her amendment to paragraph 3 should read : " serve as a basis for the work of the Conference on the limitation of the cultivation of the poppy and the cultivation and harvesting of the coca-leaf. "

Subject to the British amendments to paragraphs 1 and 3, the resolution was adopted.

3. RESOLUTION PROPOSED BY THE DELEGATE OF HUNGARY.

Countess APPONYI (Hungary), upon a statement by M. Ekstrand (Director of the Opium and Social Questions Sections) that her original proposal of an addition to the Convention must necessarily involve the convening of a new Conference, submitted her resolution in the following form :

" The Fifth Committee of the twelfth Assembly of the League of Nations,

" Realising the danger arising from the accumulation of large quantities of narcotic drugs :

" Expresses the wish that the Council ask the Governments to destroy all quantities of seized drugs in order to prohibit their reappearance in the trade in whatever form ".

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) had no technical knowledge of the subject, but, as a " man in the street ", found it difficult to understand why Governments seizing drugs, in the interests of the public, should wish to put them back into circulation. Unless it could be proved to him that there were technical possibilities of converting these drugs into substances serving useful purposes, they were better destroyed, and he would, therefore, support the resolution.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) asked Countess Apponyi to withdraw her proposal. The 1931 Conference had finally decided to omit from the Convention any clause requiring the destruction of seizures. The League had only just submitted this Convention to the Governments, and it would undoubtedly be thought odd if a contradictory proposal were circulated so soon after the signing of the Convention.

Dr. HYDER (India) said that the Indian delegate dealing with the matter would make a statement later.

M. CONTOUMAS (Greece) supported the resolution, to which he proposed to add the words " or convert into non-narcotic drugs ", after the words " to destroy ".

M. SAWADA (Japan) strongly supported M. de Vasconcellos' view. Articles 7 and 18 of the Convention had been adopted by a body of experts after mature consideration, and it was definitely unwise to give rise, by the adoption of the present resolution, to any possibility of modifying those two articles. Governments might question the proposed invitation from the League Council, coming, as it would do, close upon the heels of a Convention adopted under League auspices. In any case, non-member States had signed the Convention, and would be in a position to call in question the Council's decision if it took the action proposed.

He too asked the Countess Apponyi to withdraw her resolution ; if she were unable to do this, he asked the members of the Committee to vote against it. The action advocated therein could always be taken at a more opportune moment in the future.

M. CHODZKO (Poland) considered that the arguments put forward by M. de Vasconcellos and M. Sawada were purely formal.

No State was precluded by the terms of a Convention from going beyond the provisions embodied therein. There was therefore no legal inconsistency between the terms of the Convention and the recommendation, which Governments could adopt or reject at will. In view of the enormous stocks in existence, the proposal was most useful and should be supported.

Countess APPONYI (Hungary), in reply to M. de Vasconcellos and M. Sawada, stated that she viewed her resolution purely as a recommendation to Governments, and could not withdraw it.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) found some difficulty either in supporting or voting against the proposal, as she was not certain that it would serve to lessen the amount of drugs in the world. The destruction of stocks would create a gap in the illicit supply of drugs, and, the demand being insistent, would lead to further manufacture.

M. SAWADA (Japan) thought it unlikely that Governments would act on the recommendation, and that the drawing up of resolutions to which States did not pay serious heed would be an unwise move on the part of the Fifth Committee and would be detrimental to the League's prestige.

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) emphasised the inconsistency of a recommendation which contradicted the recent work of the Conference on the limitation of manufacture. Under Article 18 of the Convention, it was open to Governments either to destroy the drugs seized, to convert them into non-narcotic substances or to keep them for medical or scientific use under Government control. Compulsory destruction or conversion applied to diacetylmorphine alone. Thus States which were unwilling to destroy the drugs seized would be unlikely to act upon the resolution under discussion.

M. CHODZKO (Poland) stated that, if the Council insisted, his Government would act upon the recommendation and would destroy all seizures.

There was no inconsistency between the articles of the Convention and the Hungarian proposal, and he saw no reason why the Committee should not accept a text which strengthened the provisions of the Convention.

M. GAUTIER (France) wondered how those members of the Committee who, as delegates at the Conference, had accepted the Convention should act with regard to the Hungarian proposal, which was an amendment to the Convention in question and should have been brought up at the Conference itself. Though the proposal was, in fact, a recommendation only, it would be extremely dangerous for a Committee of the League to admit that its recommendations could be disregarded without prejudice to the League's authority.

He had no instructions from his Government, which had, however, approved the Convention. The Hungarian suggestion should be further examined, for the Fifth Committee was not in a position to take a decision upon it.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) thought it useless to continue the discussion. Though struck by the arguments put forward by the Japanese, Portuguese and French delegates, he did not consider that Countess Apponyi's proposed text was inconsistent with the terms of the Convention. The latter represented one step forward, but could not be considered as a final settlement of all the aspects of the drugs problem. Such an invitation to Governments from the League must not, however, have the appearance of a criticism, direct or indirect, of the Conference's work.

Surely it would be better to express the idea underlying the Hungarian proposal in a less absolute form, indicating the Fifth Committee's wish that the problem should not be forgotten during the subsequent work of the Advisory Committee.

The CHAIRMAN read the following revised text of the resolution, drafted with a view to obtaining unanimity :

> " The Fifth Committee of the twelfth Assembly of the League of Nations,
> " Realising the danger arising from the accumulation of large quantities of narcotic drugs :
> " Expresses the hope that, in the future work of the Advisory Committee on Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs, the importance of destroying all quantities of seized narcotic drugs in order to prevent their re-appearance in trade in any form whatever will not escape attention ".

M. DE VASCONCELLOS (Portugal) supported this text.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) considered that the position had not been sufficiently explored. For instance, if a manufacturer produced both for licit and illicit purposes, his illicit transactions would not be affected by the destruction of seizures, whereas, if such drugs were put back into the licit trade, he would at least be affected so far as his licit trade was concerned. She would abstain from voting.

M. DOLLFUS (Switzerland) stated that the great majority of the States represented at the Conference which drew up the Convention were opposed to the insertion of a clause providing for the compulsory destruction of seizures. Was it likely that the same nations would heed the proposed recommendation, which would in any case mean a loss of prestige to the Council ?

Dr. ANDRITCH (Yugoslavia) thanked Countess Apponyi for bringing up an idea which had been submitted and supported by the Yugoslav delegation at the 1931 Conference. He must rectify the statement made by certain speakers that the suggestion had been rejected by a large majority at the Conference. Actually, the principle of the compulsory destruction of seizures had, in the first place, been adopted by a large majority, and it was only owing to the very strong objections raised by the delegates of certain countries that other delegates went back upon their earlier decision and in the end rejected the proposal.

The Yugoslav delegation attached great importance to this question and thought it essential that the future work of the League of Nations should be set upon the right lines. He pointed out that the Yugoslav delegation had raised no objection at a previous meeting to the adoption of a resolution regarding the reduction of poppy-cultivation, although a large proportion of the Yugoslav population gained their whole livelihood by this means.

He hoped that the Committee would adopt the present resolution in its revised form.

Dr. VOELCKERS (Germany) thought that, in view of the varying opinions expressed, the time was not ripe for a decision. It would perhaps be better to ask the Council to refer the matter back to the Advisory Committee for consideration.

Countess APPONYI (Hungary), in reply to a question by the Italian delegate, stated that she accepted the second draft proposed.

Mr. BURDEKIN (New Zealand) said that, whilst he had the greatest sympathy with the motives on which Countess Apponyi's proposal was based, he must vote against it. It risked too much to gain too little, for it was unlikely to achieve important results, while it might prejudice the chances of the acceptance of the Convention by certain Governments.

M. ENTÉZAM-WEZIRY (Persia) supported the Hungarian proposal. It was not contrary to the Convention and he saw no formal difficulty in the way of voting upon it.

He would point out to the British delegate that, if she took as her example, instead of a single manufacturer supplying both the licit and the illicit traffic, two manufacturers, one honest and one dishonest, seizures replaced on the market would in no way affect the dishonest manufacturer, but would subject his honest rival to unfair competition.

Further, the drugs which found their way into the illicit traffic were often insufficiently refined and for that reason presented a certain danger.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) pointed out, in reply to this argument, that manufacturers supplying the illicit traffic had, officially, licit factories.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) proposed that the discussion should be closed and a vote taken at the beginning of the next meeting.

Mr. GRIMES (Liberia), seeing that expert opinions had been given both for and against the Hungarian proposal, thought that the question should be studied further, that a comparison should be drawn up between Article 18 of the 1931 Convention and Countess Apponyi's draft resolution, and that a vote should not be taken until this had been done. Not only the vote, but the rest of the discussion should be adjourned.

Mrs. PLUMPTRE (Canada) recalled that Article 18 left Governments free to choose between three different methods for disposing of seizures. Not all Governments had yet signed the Convention, and the despatch at the present time of a letter urging them to single out one of these three methods would constitute a departure from the spirit of the Convention. If the delegate of Hungary pressed her resolution, countries like Canada, which had already signed, would find themselves in a difficult position, being obliged, in view of their previous action, to vote against a resolution whose apparent object was to reduce the illicit traffic.

It would be better to maintain the Conference's decision.

M. DEAK (Hungary) said that, in his personal view, the discussion turned on the point whether Countess Apponyi's resolution was or was not in conformity with the spirit of the Convention. The latter, whatever its merits, was obviously not perfect, and efforts to improve it were in no way inconsistent with it. Neither Article 18, nor any other, should stand in the way of the attempts of members of the Committee to improve upon the work of the Conference.

The continuation of the discussion was adjourned to the next meeting.

11. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs : Question of Discontinuing the Circulation of Annual Reports to Governments (continuation).

Mr. Duncan HALL (Secretariat), referring to document A.V/2 1931 (Annex 2), stated that the estimated total saving involved was 8,000 francs. The Advisory Committee had already agreed to a saving of 7,000 francs by discontinuing the distribution of the seizure reports. A total economy of 15,000 francs was thus involved.

On the suggestion of M. Casares (Spain) that the Fifth Committee might agree in principle, leaving the final decision to the Advisory Committee, Mr. Duncan Hall added that there was no doubt that the Advisory Committee would accept the suggestion, which merely involved the discontinuance of a practice only two years old. Reference to the Advisory Committee had the added disadvantage of postponing the decision and continuing the expenditure until the following March.

The CHAIRMAN informed the Australian delegate that her request that documents should be available for Governments on demand would be met.

M. SAWADA (Japan) and Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) agreed, on grounds of economy, to the action advocated in the Secretariat memorandum, subject to the Australian proviso.

Count PAGLIANO (Italy) reminded the Committee that M. Cavazzoni had already strongly opposed the suggestion. Italy advocated the greatest possible publicity in matters affecting moral and social reform. Nevertheless, in view of the explanations given by the representative of the Secretariat, he would not vote against the proposal, but would abstain.

M. CHODZKO (Poland) and M. CASARES (Spain) also expressed their intention to abstain.

It was agreed by a majority vote to abandon the circulation of the reports in question.

12. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs : Appointment of a Rapporteur to the Assembly.

On the proposal of the CHAIRMAN, M. SAWADA (Japan) was unanimously elected Rapporteur.

SIXTH MEETING.

Held on Thursday, September 17th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman : M. ALÂ (Persia) ; later, Mlle. HESSELGREN (Sweden).

13. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs (continuation) : Revised Text of the Resolution submitted by the Hungarian Delegate.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) stated that, on thinking the matter over, she had decided to vote against the resolution.

M. DOLLFUS (Switzerland) said that as the resolution had not been discussed in detail in its revised form he would abstain from voting.

M. GAUTIER (France) also intended to abstain, for the reasons he had expressed at the previous meeting.

The resolution was rejected by fourteen votes to eight.

14. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs : Statement by Dr. Ethel Osborne regarding Drug Consumption in Australia.

Dr. Ethel OSBORNE (Australia) announced that she had received, since she last addressed the Committee, a statement dated August 20th, 1931, which was thus published ten months later than the document in which the figures regarding drug consumption in Australia, of which she had spoken at the last meeting, were set out. This new document contained an explanation regarding one of the drugs in question, which was practically identical with that which she had given the Committee, based on her own experience, and which she considered might be taken to apply to all the other drugs under investigation.

Dr. Ethel Osborne then read the following extract from document C.439.M.186.1931.XI, page 11 (Report to the Council on the Work of the Permanent Central Opium Board during its eighth, ninth and tenth sessions) :

> " The Australian Government, in its letter to the Board, gave a detailed account of the measures taken by it to prevent the escape of cocaine into the illicit traffic and concluded as follows :
> > " The Commonwealth Government, as the result of the inquiries made, is satisfied that the cocaine lawfully imported into Australia is used for legitimate purposes, and the explanation as to why this lawful consumption of cocaine is so much greater per head of population in Australia than in other Anglo-Saxon countries largely lies, it is considered, in the provision made in Australia, to hospitals and other agents, for medical and dental attention to all members of the community, and in the fact that the community makes full use of the facilities provided. In children, dental and nasal pharyngeal conditions are looked for under a system of school medical inspection and, when detected, receive adequate treatment. A considerable proportion of the cocaine imported into Australia is utilised in the manufacture of dental anæsthetics ".

This matter has been set right, but only rather late in the day. It might be wise, when publishing figures relating to such social problems which might cause some anxiety in a country, to add a note to the effect that the figures in question were still under examination.

15. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs : Recommendation of the 1931 Conference regarding State Monopolies.

Mr. Duncan HALL (Secretariat) recalled that the Polish delegate had, at a previous meeting, asked why the Council had taken no action upon the recommendation regarding State monopolies, contained in the Final Act of the Convention for Limiting the Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs.

The Conference had not asked for a special communication of this recommendation to Governments, and the Rapporteur had considered that a circular letter on the subject was unnecessary. The complete text of the Final Act would be communicated to Governments as the certified text of the Convention, but, in view of the Council's decision on the subject, no special action would be taken with regard to the recommendation.

16. Improvements in Penal Administration : Discussion of the Rapporteur's Report.

M. PELLA (Roumania) read his report (Annex 3).

Lord LYTTON (British Empire) raised a point of order with reference to M. Pella's report. He submitted that the first two parts of this able and learned report, which dealt with the unification of criminal law and with international co-operation for the suppression of crime, were not matters which the Fifth Committee was competent to discuss. The report of the Secretary-General (document A.25), which dealt with penal administration, recorded the fact (page 1) that the Council at its session in January 1930 had requested the Assembly to place this subject on its agenda, in order to decide on the best means of co-operation with the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission and other organisations. By no stretch of language could such questions as international co-operation for the prosecution of criminals or the unification of criminal law be brought within the meaning of the words " penal administration ". Before the general discussion commenced he asked for the ruling of the Chair on the question of competence.

M. PELLA (Roumania), Rapporteur, thanked the British delegate for affording him an opportunity of dispelling a misunderstanding.

Though the League of Nations had as yet undertaken no co-ordinated or detailed study of the question of penal administration, he had purposely analysed in his report the various international aspects of penal problems in order to enable the Committee to choose those with which it wished particularly to deal. In his view, it was impossible to consider these aspects separately. The Committee of Experts sitting at Berne — the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission — had shown he truth of this; after years of work, it had reached the conclusion that it could not solve problems of penal administration without dealing with criminal law also ; for this reason it had changed its name to " Commission internationale pénale et pénitentiaire ". The report of the Secretariat, dated August 27th, 1931, showed that it studied subjects such as statistics of crime, repatriation of foreign delinquents, extradition, etc., subjects which, strictly speaking, were not covered by the term " penal administration ". The Howard League for Penal Reform, which had referred the question to the League of Nations, had also extended its scope ; its memorandum dealt with a number of like questions connected with penal law. The Committee could hardly decide as to the scope of a problem until it had embarked on a study of it.

Lord LYTTON (British Empire) said that if that were the sense of the Committee he would state the views of his delegation on that aspect of the problem which could properly be called penal administration.

The British delegation understood the problem of penal administration to be that of the treatment of the criminal when he had been declared to be a criminal by the court and had been handed over to the prison authorities. Even when viewed in this limited aspect, the treatment of prisoners varied greatly in the different countries, and even in the same country there were great divergences of opinion concerning the best method of dealing with offenders.

It was undeniable that there had been, and still were, abuses in the treatment of prisoners and that this was a humanitarian question which the League should take up, more especially since the victims of harsh treatment in prison might be the subjects of a foreign country. It should, however, be observed that, whereas the other evils which the League was attempting to remedy were due to natural forces or created by the action of individuals contravening their country's laws, the evil in this particular case was almost invariably ascribable to a Government. The question therefore was a particularly delicate one. No improvement could be obtained without the willing co-operation of Governments, and in obtaining such co-operation the League might exercise a very effective function. It was necessary to proceed with tact as well as with courage.

The question had first been brought before the League of Nations by the Howard League for Penal Reform after two years of unsuccessful effort. In January 1930, the Council had invited the Assembly to consider how the League could collaborate with the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission, which had its headquarters at Berne and had been in existence for about fifty years.

Last year, the Assembly had before it a memorandum from the Howard League and a set of standard minimum rules drawn up by the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission and passed a resolution inviting the opinion of Governments thereon. This year, the Secretary-General's report contained the answers of Governments, a memorandum from the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission and a further memorandum from the Howard League. The League of Nations had thus recognised the interest taken in the welfare of prisoners by organised opinions in many countries. The task of the Fifth Committee was to advise the Assembly how the League could best express its own interest in these questions.

There was already an international body dealing with the matter at Berne. The British delegation wished to know whether the States Members desired that the same question should be dealt with internationally by another body at Geneva. If so, the next question was whether this second body should increase and improve the co-operation already established with the Berne organisation or whether it should deal with the matter singly and become the only body handling it internationally.

Lord Lytton considered that, if the League were to take up the treatment of prisoners, it must have the advice of a body of experts. The Child Welfare Committee could hardly be said to possess the necessary qualifications for that function. Time was required to gain experience of the results of co-operation between the League and the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission before a final decision could be taken. If, however, the latter body were to become the League's adviser on penal administration, its membership and perhaps also its procedure in some respects would need to be amended. It was desirable that unofficial opinion should be represented on that body and that its work should be discussed annually by the Assembly.

There were three questions requiring more especially international treatment : (1) the question of collecting and publishing information (that work had already been undertaken by the Berne organisation, which would shortly publish a report) ; (2) the preparation of a set of international rules as to the humane treatment of prisoners (the Committee was acquainted with the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission's opinion on this point) ; (3) study of the condition of alien criminals who, after serving their sentence, were sent home and very commonly found themselves without means or friends (on that point, too, the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission was compiling a report).

The British delegation considered that, before taking any other decision, the League should request the Governments to intimate their views on these different points ; M. Pella's report should be included among the documents distributed to them.

Finally, it would be desirable, after the general discussion, to set up a sub-committee to examine the ways and means of harmonising the British delegation's views and M. Pella's report.

Lord Lytton concluded by moving the following draft resolution :

" The Assembly,

" Having been invited by the Council in January 1930 to consider the best way in which the League of Nations could co-operate with the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission and other organisations in their efforts to assist in the development of prisons in accordance with modern economic, social and health standards ;

" Having considered the opinions of the Governments of the States Members and other organisations which were consulted regarding the standard minimum rules for the treatment of prisoners (document A.V.21.1930), drafted by the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission) ;

" Having also considered the memorandum of the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission, and the supplementary memorandum of the Howard League for Penal Reform, which appear as appendices to the Secretary-General's report to the twelfth Assembly (document A.25.1931.IV) ;

" Believing that, if the improvement of prison administration throughout the world by the friendly co-operation of Governments is to be assisted by the League of Nations, the League may require the advice and assistance of some permanent body of experts ;

" Requests the Secretary-General to invite the opinion of the Governments of the States Members as to whether the assistance of the League of Nations in this matter is desired, and if so, whether such assistance can best be rendered by continuing and strengthening the existing co-operation with the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission, or by the establishment of a separate Commission of the League itself to deal with the subject and to submit a further report on the question to the next Assembly ".

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) had read M. Pella's remarkable report with much interest. He appreciated the British delegate's observations with regard to the scope of the report. Indeed, when the question of penal administration had first been brought to the League's notice, it had caused some surprise. It was a new question, and such questions were often received with some diffidence. Further, the problem was not one of those tasks assigned to the League in the Covenant, and it affected the internal administration of each State. It therefore seemed somewhat difficult to deal with in an international convention.

However, there was no doubt that the League's competence was somewhat encyclopædic and that some of its prestige and value was due to its social and humanitarian efforts. Moreover, the Howard League, in introducing the problem to the League of Nations, had touched on aspects of the question which were really international: extradition, comparative statistics of crime, probation (liberté surveillée), etc. It was not surprising, therefore, that the problem had been extended in M. Pella's report and that that report had been extended beyond prison reform to cover what was being done internationally to prevent crime. It was natural and desirable for the League of Nations to take action in connection with this universal phenomenon, as well as in regard to prison systems, a matter which concerned the laws of each country.

The Belgian delegate would consider the three classes of ideas dealt with in the report: (1) unification of the principles of criminal law; (2) co-operation of States in the prosecution and punishment of crime; (3) aspects of the question considered by the Committee in the previous year.

The League could not omit to take up the unification of criminal law. Unification was a movement that was taking place in public and even in private international law as well and that was a matter for satisfaction, one which reflected the solidarity of the nations. It had already found expression in the Conventions on Slavery, on the Traffic in Narcotic Drugs, and Obscene Publications. The Advisory Commission for the Protection and Welfare of Children and Young People, too, had attempted with success to bring about a certain degree of unification both with regard to the age of consent in connection with the protection of minors and with regard to the traffic in women.

The International Bureau for the Unification of Criminal Law for its part had attempted to achieve a measure of unification, particularly in the criminal law of those countries which had had to amend their codes in consequence of territorial changes. It was extremely desirable that there should be some approximation of the legislations of the various countries with regard to indictments, punishment and extradition, since, owing to easier communications, crime itself had become more and more international. In particular, an offence that was severely punished in one country must not be allowed to go unpunished in another owing to divergency in the criminal regulations.

Much valuable work had been done with a view to inter-State co-operation for the prosecution and punishment of crime. The International Penal Law Association had framed a preliminary draft model for extradition treaties. The Child Welfare Committee had drawn up a Convention whereby children who had escaped from the charge of their guardian and crossed the frontier could be repatriated without any need for complicated formalities. Valuable work too had been done by congresses like those at which the delegates of the central police offices of the various countries met periodically with a view to framing regulations for facilitating the prosecution of crime.

The British delegate had rightly emphasised the question of the carrying out of the sentence. In this matter, the Committee must attempt to reach definite conclusions. Agreement on questions of principle might be said to have been reached already. Imprisonment was no longer held to be solely the expression of public vengeance against the culprit. The object now was much more to prevent an offender from injuring society again than to chastise him.

As was shown in the replies from the Governments to the League's questions, the science of prison reform had made progress. In certain countries, the rules prepared by the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission were already in application.

The International Labour Office had also been consulted and had sent in a most interesting report, emphasising, in particular, that the work done by prisoners should not only be useful but should also be remunerated, part at least of the money earned being paid to the prisoner's family.

The Commission for the Protection of Children and Young People had urged that in no case should children be sent to prison. It had recommended the study of the system of prison schools, which was giving satisfaction in many countries, among them, Belgium.

The International Penal Law Association had, in its turn, through its Secretary-General, Professor André Roux, urged that a number of very judicious axioms should be applied in prison life. Convicts should be separated according to sex, age, the motive for their offences; prisoners awaiting trial should be isolated from convicted prisoners; there should be special rules for political prisoners, etc. It had likewise made proposals as to the size of prisons, which should not be too large or too small.

There could be no question of framing an international convention at the present stage. It would even be premature to attempt to draw up a declaration of principle as to the treatment of prisoners. The problem required further study. He suggested referring it to the Penal and Penitentiary Commission, together with a request that, if necessary, the rules, so satisfactorily formulated, be completed or revised.

It would be regrettable for the League to omit to display interest in the questions of inter-State co-operation with a view to the prosecution and punishment of crime and the unification of criminal law. It should at least watch and help to co-ordinate the work being done. It should, for instance, send an observer to represent it at recognised conferences and congresses dealing with these matters.

In its closing passage, M. Pella's report showed that it would be desirable to take advantage of the session of the Commission for the Protection of Children and Young People to be held in April 1932 to consult the Government delegates on the Commission who might be joined by a representative of each of the six following organisations: the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission, the International Penal Law Association, the Union internationale de droit pénal, the International Bureau for the Unification of Criminal Law, the International Criminal Police Commission, and the Howard League for Penal Reform. He merely saw in this suggestion a convenient formula, whereby expense to the League could be avoided, provided it were understood that the associations mentioned would, of their own accord, send representatives at their own expense to the session in question.

In conclusion, the question must be left to ripen and must be taken up again and dealt with in whatever manner seemed most suitable when it was mature.

Mme. PLAMÍNKOVÁ (Czechoslovakia) observed that the urgent need for taking up the treatment of prisoners in a serious manner was shown by various studies, enquiries and campaigns in the Press. Psychiatry must plainly take a more and more preponderating place in the prison services, thus affording the authorities concerned a better understanding of the condition of the offender and hastening the time when prisons would be replaced by sanatoria and when it would be held that punishment should be replaced by assistance.

The need for solving the problem on an international basis was proved by the work done by the various organisations which had attempted to investigate the matter, by observations of Professor Roux, of Strasbourg, concerning the general rules to be applied in the treatment of prisoners, and by M. Pella's report. Attention should be drawn to the fact that an offender who left prison with a violent feeling of resentment was a grave social and international danger, particularly in the case of political prisoners, to whom the set of rules framed by the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission made no reference.

She would have liked to see a suggestion for a special commission similar to those dealing with the traffic in women and child welfare. Such a commission should have the help of the organisations concerned, of experts in psychiatry and other qualified persons.

She was glad to inform the Committee that in her country the recommendations in the memorandum by the Permanent Committee for Legal and Political Questions of the Federation of League of Nations Unions were fully covered by a law on juvenile courts, promulgated on March 11th, 1931, and another law on political prisoners, promulgated on July 16th of the same year. Further, the Czechoslovak Ministry for Justice had held an enquiry into prisons and convict life. Various proposals for the application of modern ideas in the Czechoslovak prison services had then been discussed at a Conference of Prison Governors and " Civic Inspectors ", under the chairmanship of the Minister for Justice. The present regime in Czechoslovakia was in accordance with the set of rules framed by the International Prison Commission and even went beyond them in certain respects.

A very interesting experiment had been made in Czechoslovakia. " Civic Prison Inspectors ", chosen from among the Members of Parliament, undertook to visit prisons at least four times a year and to send to the Ministry for Justice a report to be completed by concrete proposals for improvements. These inspectors were unpaid. The Ministry took action on any observations made in such reports. The inspectors gained the trust of the convicts, who were allowed to converse with them directly and in private. This form of supervision had been in existence for only two years, but had given quite extraordinary results.

In conclusion, the Czechoslovak delegation would warmly support anything that might be done to improve the lot of prisoners. It greatly hoped that the League of Nations would take up this question.

Count PAGLIANO (Italy) shared Count Carton de Wiart's view as to the unity of the subject.

With regard to the three points of the report, Italy would do everything possible to promote the first and second, the movement for the internationalisation of criminal law, and for international co-operation in the prosecution and punishment of criminals. Action had already been taken in this second matter with regard to crimes committed abroad, the means adopted including extradition treaties and the communication of judicial and extra-judicial documents. He agreed with M. Pella that the third point — rules for the treatment of prisoners — required further elucidation. The time was therefore not ripe for the consultation on this matter proposed by the British delegate.

Count Pagliano then explained the fundamental principles of the recent penal and penitentiary reforms executed in Italy.

Mlle. HESSELGREN took the Chair.

Mme. VON ZAHN-HARNACK (Germany) stated that her delegation supported the British view; the point on the agenda was penal administration, and her Government instructions covered this matter only. She could not therefore say anything as to the proposal appearing at the end of the first chapter of M. Pella's report, other than that the " very general recommendation " which he advocated would, in her personal view, be ineffective.

Germany endorsed the proposal for closer co-operation with the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission ; the support of the Berne experts would give the League's work the greatest possible authority.

League action taken at the session of the Commission for the Protection and Welfare of Children and Young People in April 1932, mentioned at the end of the report, would be most useful, though it must of course be subject to budgetary considerations.

The importance of the reference in the International Labour Office memorandum (I.L.O. /N. 200/19/0/1) to the work done by prisoners must be emphasised from the economic as well as from the moral and educational points of view, and she would recommend the circulation of the memorandum to all Governments and relevant organisations. She advocated the closest co-operation between the Child Welfare Committee and the International Labour Office.

Conditions in most countries seemed to be rather better than was required by the Standard Minimum Rules, and her Government shared M. Pella's opinion that these were inclined to fall below the level desirable, especially in the matter of corporal punishment and of confinement in dark cells. Minimum standards tended to become normal standards, and the rules might thus hinder further development. The German delegation requested the League to ask those of its Members who were not members of the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission to comply with the requirements of these rules.

She strongly emphasised all that M. Pella had said as to the training and choice of officials without which all attempts at reform could not but fail.

Mlle. CAMPOAMOR (Spain) did not agree with the British and German view as to the Committee's competence ; M. Pella's three points should, within the limits set by his report, be discussed as a whole.

As regarded point I, the legal and social aspects of the work of the Committee were so closely interconnected that they could not be considered separately. In any case, the Committee was not asked to encroach upon the legal province, as M. Pella's proposal to which Mme. von Zahn-Harnack had referred was a recommendation only and left the technical details to legal experts.

The suggestions made at the end of the first chapter of the report, where it was stated in particular that the present time was favourable for the unification of criminal law, were of the greatest importance to Spain. Spain, which had adopted the principle that the normal standards of international law should be embodied as an integral part of its positive law, was considering its new penal code. The Spanish delegation thought it important that these standards should be drawn up as soon as possible. The jurists to whom was entrusted the preparation of the penal code would find them useful as a basis for their work. The Spanish delegation supported the proposals contained in the first part of M. Pella's report and approved the statement contained in the second part. Finally, it subscribed to what was said in the third and last part with regard to the rules on the treatment of prisoners.

It desired that all reference to children and minors should be expunged from these rules.

Two points which were not covered by the report required special study ; the first was the provision of crèches for children up to 5 years of age in women's prisons in order to enable the prisoners to do their duty as mothers. Spain had already adopted this procedure. The second was that of the special regime to be applied to political offenders. She therefore proposed the following draft resolution :

> " The Assembly, in view of the danger entailed by crime and the necessity of viewing this problem in all its aspects, is of opinion that a Committee of Experts should be set up to deal with all these problems, in particular the progressive unification of criminal law, the co-operation of Governments in the campaign against international crime, and the measures to be taken with a view to the improvement of prison conditions and to affording assistance to prisoners after their discharge ".

Count MORSTIN (Poland), after associating himself with the congratulations addressed to the Rapporteur, said he thought it most satisfactory that, in his general examination of the question, the Rapporteur had not confined himself to one aspect of the problem.

Count Morstin thought it essential to tackle the question of the unification of the various national legislations in connection with the offences sometimes known as " international crimes ". Further, at a time when rapid communications facilitated escape, it was also urgent to provide for closer co-operation between the States with a view to the apprehension and punishment of the criminal. The questions of the execution of penalties, the treatment of prisoners and assistance to prisoners after their release must also be examined.

He urged that the question should be studied as a whole and that the new Committee should deal with all its aspects.

Dr. HYDER (India) pointed out that unification, whatever form it might take, required uniform rules. Any such rules must take into account two factors : the first, humane treatment along enlightened lines — a matter in which India was, as its reply (document A.25) would show, far in advance of the minimum standard required ; the second was that of environment. Physical, climatic and social conditions varied from country to country, and this changing element required the exercise of infinite caution in the framing of any rules. He would add that he had been specially interested to read the report from the International Labour Office. Referring to the Czechoslovak delegate's speech, he observed that committees of visitors had long been established in prisons in India.

Mrs. PLUMPTRE (Canada) stated that Canada, when a member of the Council, had purposely refrained from raising the question of penal administration, considering that its international aspect — in the strict sense of the word " international " — was not yet established. The Secretary-General's report (document A.25) endorsed the view that further study was required, and she therefore supported the British resolution and the German delegate's statement on this point.

Canada, being a federal country, was still governed by inter-provincial relations in the matter. Her own province's recent action in placing certain parts of penal administration under its new Department of Social Welfare illustrated the general trend of developments in the Dominion.

Her Government felt that the present necessity for curtailing League expenditure did not justify the establishment of a new Committee, however desirable this might be.

M. GAUTIER (France), referring to the question of the extension of the powers of the Committee for the unification of criminal law, thought it would be wise to proceed slowly. He entirely agreed with Count Carton de Wiart, and felt that a detailed study of the question should be made, all the important associations being consulted, it being understood that when the League had collected sufficient documentation, it could extract the points held in common. In any case, the observation of M. Hyder, delegate of India that, the standardisation of law might present difficulties should be borne in mind.

With regard to the prison system, the French delegate agreed as to the aim in view. It was of importance to help freed prisoners, instead of exciting their worse instincts. On this account, he thanked M. Pella for his report, which was the report of a great jurist, an honest man, a man who believed with heart and soul that every living being, however guilty he might be, was entitled to a minimum of respect and culture. M. Gautier thought that, with prudence, goodwill and fellowship, the desired aim would be achieved.

M. PELLA (Roumania), Rapporteur, wished, before replying to the points raised, to propose the formation of a Drafting Committee to prepare a single resolution based on those already submitted, and on his report.

He maintained his view, in which he had had the support of several speakers, that the three points he had raised came within the Committee's competence. Crime was a social evil and the Fifth Committee was entitled to deal with social questions. The close connection between the social and judicial aspects of the questions at issue made it impossible to consider the problem other than as a whole. Obviously the competent organisations could be consulted for the purpose of determining the aims of the League's efforts in this field.

He agreed with the German delegate that, for certain States, the Standard Minimum Rules were rather below the level desirable, and thought, with Count Carton de Wiart, that they should be referred back to the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission for revision, accompanied by the observations of the various Governments and of the Fifth Committee.

With regard to the unification of criminal law, it was obviously impossible to unify criminal law over its whole field. There was no question, however, of doing this, but merely of making further progress along the lines already laid down by international conventions. He agreed with the delegate of India that every consideration must be given to existing national conditions.

The Committee was not faced with a decision on the question of substance, and the time would not be ripe for consulting Governments, as the British delegate had suggested, until the expert organisations had been consulted as to the field in which the League could work.

M. Pella thought that the Governments could only usefully be consulted with regard to the progressive unification of criminal law and the co-operation of States in the prevention and repression of crime after the competent organisations had replied to the League of Nations. In order to make it possible for the said organisations to reach conclusions regarding the various aspects of the problem, it would be desirable to suggest to them, through the Fifth Committee's report, that they should call a joint meeting of their representatives to discuss the unification of penal law and international co-operation in the prevention of crime, to which their attention had been called by the League of Nations.

M. Pella's proposal for the appointment of a Drafting Committee was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN proposed that this committee should be composed as follows : M. PELLA (Roumania), and the following members who had proposed resolutions : Lord LYTTON (British Empire), Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium), Mlle. CAMPOAMOR (Spain) and Mme. PLAMÍNKOVÁ (Czechoslovakia).

This proposal was adopted.

SEVENTH MEETING.

Held on Friday, September 18th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman: Mlle. HESSELGREN (Sweden).

17. Work of the Traffic in Women and Children Committee : Discussion of the Rapporteur's Report.

Mrs. PLUMPTRE (Canada) presented her report (Annex 4).

Mme. MATSCH (Austria) wished to state that the Austrian delegation approved the terms of the report submitted to the Fifth Committee.

She emphasised the fundamental importance of the question of women police. A certain number of women had already been engaged for some years past in the different kinds of welfare work organised by the Vienna police. As experience had shown the great advantages of employing women in this capacity, the Police Directorate, in view of the lively interest taken in the matter by public opinion, had carefully considered to what extent women could be employed in general police work. After an exhaustive examination of the question, it had come to the conclusion that, while women police could be employed with advantage in carrying out preventive measures, they could not replace men in criminal police work, and that the co-operation of women in this sphere was neither useful to the service nor desired by public opinion.

The Police Directorate of Vienna was at present employing women in the welfare service — namely, to supervise prostitution, to protect young people, and to supervise persons inclined to alcoholism and persons suspected of suicidal tendencies. At the present time, thirty-seven women were employed in the Department for Preventive Measures and thirteen in the Department for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women. In the police prisons, the police officers who formerly supervised women prisoners had been replaced by ten women. The Police Directorate of Vienna proposed to increase the number of women police to carry out the duties mentioned above. It was also proposed to use women police in foreign service, for observation work and if necessary to assist the criminal police in enquiries and the hearing of cases.

In order to fit women desirous of entering the police force for their task, a six months' preparatory course had been instituted, instruction being given in the rudiments of psychology, social medicine, first aid, social welfare institutions and certain laws relating to the constitution, civil code, penal code and administrative measures.

The results of the employment of women police had been most satisfactory, and the Austrian delegation therefore requested the Rapporteur to be good enough to insert in the Committee's report to the Assembly a paragraph worded roughly as follows :

> " Taking into consideration the fact that the countries in which women police have been established have one and all testified to the excellent services rendered by them, the Fifth Committee draws the attention of those Members not yet employing women police to the necessity of instituting such a service, particularly for questions regarding women and children ".

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) drew attention to the " Study of the Laws and Penalties Relating to Souteneurs " (document C.441.M.188.1931.IV), which brought out the curious discrepancies existing between the penalties inflicted in the various countries.

With regard to the results referred to in the last paragraph of page 8, her Government felt, in view of the steady diminution in the number of convictions in Great Britain, that the maximum sentence of two years' imprisonment was proving efficacious. In her opinion, however, another aspect of these results required further study — namely, how far did souteneurs, after serving their sentence, return to their old pursuits ? She submitted the following resolution with a view to ensuring further investigation of this point :

> " That the Advisory Committee on the Traffic in Women and Children be requested by the Assembly to consider the possibility of ascertaining the results of the penalties on souteneurs inflicted under the different legal systems, with special regard to the recurrent conviction of the same habitual offenders ".

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) supported the Rapporteur's suggestion that Assembly action should be taken in order to obtain ratification of the 1921 Convention by the twelve States Members of the League who had not yet acceded to it. It was desirable that these new ratifications should be obtained before undertaking the settlement, by means of an additional Convention, of the question of the abolition of the age limit from the Convention — a proposal which was favoured by twenty-six Governments, including Belgium.

The wording of one phrase in the report of the Traffic in Women and Children Committee (document C.267.M.122.1931.IV) might give rise to a misunderstanding. Paragraph 3 of the section on page 4 dealing with souteneurs included the words " in accordance with the legislation of each country ". This did not of course mean, as it might be read to do, that present legislation must be retained. Each country must, in fact, adapt its internal legislation when it had signed a Convention.

The adoption of an additional Protocol on the punishment of souteneurs (document C.267. M.122.1931.IV, page 9) constituted real progress, in particular, by attributing full competence to courts of all signatory countries. The definition of the term souteneur was such that it could be interpreted as covering also the owners of licensed houses. He further stressed the importance of Articles 4 and 7 of the Protocol.

It was to be hoped that the circulation of this draft additional Protocol to Governments would lead to the ultimate convening of a conference to deal both with the question of souteneurs and that of the abolition of the age-limit from the 1921 Convention.

Princess CANTACUZÈNE (Roumania) stated that the activities of the Roumanian police were steadily bringing to light the existence of powerful and wealthy associations with agents in the ports all over the Far East and South America. The convention should mention that international action should be directed against these associations and not against individuals. The Roumanian police could and did arrest the local agents of such companies, but it was impossible, without international action, to get at their employees who were engaged in the traffic in foreign ports or in ships.

She recommended the communication by cipher telegram from one country to another of information regarding the departure of vessels carrying passengers whose trafficking transactions had been learned too late for arrest ; she further advocated the encouragement of police vigilance in the matter of the traffic by the award of special medals for efficiency.

Licensed houses had recently been closed in Roumania. Unhappily, however, many hotels and pensions had been opened which served the same purpose. The Government's projected scheme of rescue homes had had to be abandoned in view of the economic crisis.

With regard to women police, a law to be placed before the Roumanian Parliament on November 15th instituted schools for candidates, which would be opened in a few months' time, and envisaged the sending of these abroad to gain six months' experience in a small number of countries already employing women in this capacity.

Mme. VON ZAHN-HARNACK (Germany) stated that Germany intended to increase the maximum penalty for souteneurs from one month to five years' imprisonment. The German law regarding this offence did not at present cover both sexes, but this difficulty could no doubt be overcome.

She drew attention to a recent article in the Shield, giving details as to child prostitution and marriage laws in the Far East, which fully proved the need for the work being carried out there by the Commission of Enquiry.

Women police had been found particularly useful in Germany, especially in matters dealing with clandestine transport of women. The German Government was not in favour of the repatriation of foreign prostitutes, considering, with the welfare societies, that this would be a retrogressive step.

The German law regarding protection against venereal diseases was working well. The abolition of licensed houses in Germany had not caused any material change in the aspect of the streets except in so far as unemployment and the economic crisis were leading women to fall back upon prostitution.

Mme. SCHÖNFELD-POLANO (Netherlands), referring to the draft additional Protocol, stated that her Government endorsed the first clause of Article 2. The Netherlands legislation drew a definite distinction between the offence of the souteneur and procuring, but not precisely that drawn by the Protocol. In the Netherlands, the distinct characteristic of the souteneur's trade was the fact that he lived on the earnings of a woman's prostitution ; he need not necessarily be the promoter of it. His offence was punished as an infraction, whereas procuring was a crime punishable by a term of imprisonment. The Netherlands Government could not, therefore, agree with the definition given in Article 1, which, under its law, applied to procuring.

This did not mean that her Government did not make every effort to repress the activity of souteneurs. It agreed with the draft in so far as this advocated the severe punishment of those offences which, under its law, were considered to constitute procuring, but, in view of its conception of the souteneur's offence, it must make reservations regarding paragraph 2 of Article 2 and the following articles.

M. CHODZKO (Poland) drew attention to the difficulties with which the Traffic in Women and Children Committee had been faced in drawing up the draft additional Protocol, which had had to be sufficiently elastic to cover the varying provisions of the different legislations. Hence the omission of all reference to such definite points as the length of the period of imprisonment; but he thought the Assembly's attention might well be drawn by the Rapporteur to the fact that this penalty amounted to as much as ten years' imprisonment in Canada and fifteen years in Poland. These considerations justified the insertion of the words " if such loss, is provided for by the legislative system of the country " at the end of Article 2 and of the words " as a general rule " in Article 4.

[1] Loss of civil and political rights.

Dr. Chodzko asked the Rapporteur to draw special attention, in her report to the Assembly, to the importance of the Protocol as a whole, omitting the words " concerning the study of laws and penalties relating to souteneurs ", which had mistakenly been made to apply to the Protocol (second paragraph of page 5.)

He also asked the Rapporteur to insert in her report a reference to the central authorities, co-operation between whom must play such an important part in stamping out the traffic. He considered that the conclusions reached by the Warsaw Congress of the International Bureau for the Suppression of the Traffic, reproduced on pages 29 and 30 of document C.441.M.188, were particularly valuable, as was the British resolution, to which he gave his warmest support.

M. GIANNINI (Italy) pointed out that the provisions of the new Italian penal code were entirely analogous to those of the international conventions and provided very wide means for dealing with these problems.

Souteneurs in Italy were liable to a period of imprisonment of from two to six years or to a fine which could amount to 10,000 lire.

The draft Protocol should be studied with particular care, for if it were to be unanimously applied its regulations should be very elastic, so that they could be included in the national penal legislation without overlapping with certain general provisions.

Dr. Ethel OSBORNE (Australia) stated that there was no information from her country in the reports before the Committee. It was seldom represented at the various Committees on these social problems, not because of its indifference to the subjects, but owing to the great distance from Geneva.

Women police had been instituted in Australia, and had been found helpful in the prevention of crime and in the relief of many social problems. They formed part of the State police organisations and were too few in number to be separately controlled. Moreover, under a single direction there was close co-operation which made for efficiency. Women police made their best contribution, not in the detection of crime, but in protecting women and children from becoming criminals.

As regards souteneurs, she supported the British resolution, which was endorsed by resolution 4 of the Warsaw Congress (document C.441.M.188, page 30).

Australia, though experiencing but few cases of the traffic, had established machinery to deal with it definitely as a result of League activity, and had set up a central organisation, which had taken drastic action in recent cases.

Referring to the 1921 Conference, she quoted Commonwealth documents as follows :

> " Australia was not represented at the Conference, but subsequently signed and ratified the Convention. A central authority was appointed by the Commonwealth Government to co-operate with the League in connection with the traffic so far as Australia is concerned — viz., the Director of the Investigation Branch, Attorney-General's Department, who is in correspondence with the several State authorities and compiles the annual report to the League of Nations on the subject ".

The German delegate had raised the point that unemployment and the economic crisis would increase prostitution. The present time was particularly favourable for investigation of the matter, and she urged that the Social Section should, if possible, gather information and statistics on this question.

There was no time to go into the question of obscene publications, but she must, however, mention the question of propaganda films referred to in the last section of page 2 in document C.267.M.122.1931.IV. Such films were often definitely pernicious, especially when they endeav our ed to point their moral by means of a human story. They could only become valuable if they dealt with the social problems of venereal disease, prostitution, etc., strictly from the scientific and hygienic points of view.

It had sometimes happened that unscrupulous firms manufacturing absolutely unwholesome and totally inartistic films had gained an otherwise impossible publicity for them under the guise of propaganda. She suggested this aspect of the subject as suitable for serious consideration by both the Social Section of the League and the Institute of Educational Cinematography.

The dangers to which young girls going abroad on professional contracts were exposed were well known. In these times of economic distress, she considered this field of enquiry should be widened to cover other contracts than those of artistes.

Mlle. RADZIWILL (Secretariat) stated that the question of films had been raised at the Traffic in Women and Children Committee by the German delegate and would be submitted to examination.

Mlle. CAMPOAMOR (Spain) was glad to note that the majority of the countries represented on the Traffic in Women and Children Committee were coming to accept its view and were now co-operating with it as far as possible.

Spain was at a turning-point in both her political and social life. It was too early to speak of improvements and reforms which were being carried out, but she could assure the Committee that her country had every intention of achieving the greatest possible measure of progress in the matter. The draft laws under consideration were based on the principle of closing licensed houses.

M. GARAY (Panama) emphasised the interest taken by Panama — an important transit country — in the questions of the traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs.

He asked whether the digest of laws and regulations regarding the traffic, referred to in the " budget " section of the Rapporteur's report, was in existence. He knew that the Assembly had decided to publish it, but that this had not been done. He would like to know whether it was possible to consult it.

M. EKSTRAND (Director of the Opium and Social Questions Sections) stated that it was in existence in draft form and could be consulted in the Secretariat. He pointed out that, as the Supervisory Commission had that very morning further reduced the sum allocated for printing, the Secretariat would not be able to publish it this year, nor could it take account of all the requests for publication which had been made.

The CHAIRMAN pronounced the general discussion closed.

Subject to a slight drafting amendment proposed by M. Contoumas (Greece), the resolution proposed by the British delegate concerning the results of the penalties inflicted on souteneurs was adopted.

Princess CANTACUZÈNE (Roumania) submitted the following draft resolution :

" The Fifth Committee requests the Council to ask the Advisory Committee on the Traffic in Women and Children to study the legal means of extending penalties to cover clandestinely formed associations carrying on such traffic ".

Mrs. PLUMPTRE (Canada) stated that she would bear in mind the suggestions made by the members of the Committee when finally drafting her report.

Delegates must use every influence with their respective Governments in order to obtain ratification of the 1921 Convention. She submitted the following draft resolution, to conclude her report :

" The Assembly,

" (1) Having taken note of the report on the Traffic in Women and Children Committee, welcomes the new accessions to the 1921 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children, and expresses the hope that further ratifications will be registered in 1932.

" (2) Considers that the studies already made on the part played by souteneurs in the traffic show the need for severer penalties against them.

" (3) Commends, therefore, to the attention of the Members of the League the draft Protocol supplementing the 1921 Convention submitted for their observations, and suggests increasing the maximum penalties applicable to traffickers.

" (4) Desires to draw attention to the necessity of developing the work and organisation of the central authorities, and commends this study to the attention of the States signatories to the 1921 Convention.

" (5) Thanks the Traffic in Women and Children Committee for its work and invites it to continue its efforts to suppress this infamous trade ".

The CHAIRMAN stated that these two resolutions would be discussed together with the final report.

18. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs : Examination of the Report of the Fifth Committee to the Assembly.

M. SAWADA (Japan) read the final text of his report (document A.V./12), drawing attention to one or two corrections to be made in it.[1]

Subject to minor drafting amendments, the report and resolutions were adopted unanimously.

EIGHTH MEETING.

Held on Saturday, September 19th, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman : M. ALÂ (Persia).

19. Improvements in Penal Administration : Draft Resolution submitted by the Drafting Committee (document A.V./11.1931).

M. PELLA (Roumania), Rapporteur, stated that the Drafting Committee appointed by the Fifth Committee had agreed on the following draft resolutions :

" The Assembly,

" Having been invited by the Council, in January 1930, to consider the best way in which the League of Nations could co-operate with the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission and other organisations in their efforts to assist in the development of prisons in accordance with modern economic, social and health standards ;

" Having noted the observations of the States Members and non-members of the League of Nations and of the organisations which have been consulted regarding the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (see document C.620.M.24.1930.IV) ;

" Considering that, if the improvement of penal administration by co-operation between Governments is to receive the support of the League of Nations, the latter will need the advice and assistance of a body of experts ;

" Considering, further, the importance of the efforts which have already been made, both by means of a number of international conventions, and by certain organs of the League of Nations and various institutions, to achieve a gradual unification of penal law and to establish co-operation of States in the prevention and suppression of crime :

" Requests the Secretary-General :

" (1) To refer to the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission the replies and observations received regarding the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, and also the report and Minutes of the Fifth Committee, and to ask it to reconsider these rules in the light of the aforementioned replies and observations ;

" (2) To develop the policy of co-operation with organisations dealing with the international aspect of penal penitentiary problems ;

" (3) To ask the International Labour Office to continue its study in connection with prison labour ;

" (4) To forward the report and the Minutes of the Fifth Committee to the International Penal Law Association, the International Bureau for the Unification of Penal Law, the International Criminal Police Commission, the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission, the Howard League for Penal Reform, the International Law Association, the International Penal Law Union and any other international organisations which may be proposed by the Governments to the Secretary-General, and to ask them in what manner they consider that the assistance of the League of Nations might be of value with a view to achieving a gradual unification of criminal law and the co-operation of States in the prevention and suppression of crime ;

" (5) After having received the observations of these organisations, to forward them, together with the report and Minutes of the Fifth Committee, to the States Members of the League, and to ask them whether they wish the League of Nations to assist also in the questions referred to in No. 4.

" The Secretary-General is asked to submit a report on all these questions to the next Assembly.

" The Sub-Committee refers the following text to the Fifth Commission, which has been proposed as point 6 of the resolution, and on which no agreement could be reached :

" 'Requests the Secretary-General to ask the Governments of States Members of the League whether they consider that the League could best assist, in connection with the treatment of prisoners, by co-operation with the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission, or by setting up a special Committee of the League to study this problem'. "

The above text had been unanimously adopted by the Drafting Committee with the exception of the last point, to which the Fifth Committee would perhaps confine its discussion.

The Committee unanimously adopted the first five points of the resolution.

Count PAGLIANO (Italy) stated that the Italian delegation, considering that the question of the treatment of prisoners was not yet ripe for discussion, could not accept point 6.

Lord LYTTON (British Empire) pointed out that, if the League of Nations were to do more than merely co-operate with the International Prison Commission at Berne, delegates must have their powers extended to cover the question. The intention of point 6 was to acquire the necessary powers and point 6 was, moreover, the only point in the resolution which dealt directly with the subject before the Committee — Improvements in Penal Administration.

Upon a vote being taken, the Committee approved point 6 by thirteen votes to six.

After some further discussion, the Committee decided to ask the Drafting Committee to draw up a fresh text for point 6, with a view to obtaining unanimity.

20. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs : Statement by the Delegate of Uruguay regarding the Report of the Fifth Committee to the Assembly.

M. DE CASTRO (Uruguay) had not intended to speak on the report on the League's work in the matter of narcotic drugs (document A.V./12.1931). His colleagues in the Advisory Committee and at the Limitation Conference had made their comments on M. Sawada's first report. He regretted, however, that the final text had been adopted in accordance with a new procedure which was contrary to the Assembly Rules.

Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Assembly Rules said that: " As a general rule, no proposal shall be discussed or put to the vote at any meeting of the Assembly unless copies of it have been circulated to all Members not later than the day preceding the meeting ".

M. Sawada's final report, which was dated September 18th, 1931, had been distributed towards the end of the afternoon meeting on that date and had at once been adopted, in spite of the fact that the Persian delegate had drawn the Committee's attention to the irregularity of such procedure.

It might be argued that the agenda of the meeting included the question of the traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs, and that delegates wishing to speak on the subject should therefore have been present at the meeting. He, however, had understood — as had several of his fellow-delegates — that this point on the agenda referred merely to the presentation of M. Sawada's final report which would not be discussed until the 19th. The discussion of this report, since it had been adopted on the 18th, was in theory closed, but he would draw the Committee's attention to the fact that it did not refer, amongst others, to Recommendation X of the Final Act of the Conference, dealing with the question of awards to inventors. The Committee had appreciated the importance of this recommendation, and mention of it should therefore have been made in the report.

He regretted, moreover, that M. Sawada had not emphasised the very legitimate wish which had been expressed that the Minutes of the Bangkok Conference should be as full as possible in order to enable the members of the Advisory Committee, the Permanent Central Opium Board and the Fifth Committee to take full account of the trend and importance of the discussions. This material would also be useful to the Conference on the Limitation of the Production of Raw Materials, and it was thus the more important that the Minutes should not be merely a general interpretation which, he thought wrongly, was becoming the general tendency, but a verbatim record of the Bangkok discussions.

His delegation found it impossible to estimate the true value of the votes taken on the question of the destruction of seizures of narcotic drugs, since these had not been taken in accordance with the procedure laid down in Rules 20 and 27 of the Assembly, which stipulated that such votes should take place by appel nominal. The members of the Committee could not ignore the value of knowing the attitude of the various Governments in a question of such importance. For instance, it was impossible for him to base his information to his Government regarding this matter on the individual votes of the different delegations.

He also regretted that he found no mention in the report of the missions sent to Turkey and Yugoslavia under the Director of the Opium Section, an omission which made it impossible for the Committee and the Assembly to appreciate the work carried out there.

There were other points, too, on which M. Sawada might have dealt with greater length as a result of the discussion on his report, but he would confine himself to drawing the Committee's attention to the unfortunate impression created in his mind by the procedure followed at the previous meeting which constituted, he thought, a dangerous precedent.

M. de Castro made full reservations on this matter and asked, in the interests of all concerned, that his statement should be reported in full in the Minutes.

21. Work of Child Welfare Committee : Discussion of the Rapporteur's Report.

Countess APPONYI (Hungary) read her report (Annex 5).

She asked the members of the Committee, in view of the urgency of the problem of assistance to destitute foreigners, to press for the convening at the earliest possible moment of the special committee mentioned in the report.

She recalled the three main principles upon which assistance to foreign minors was based, which had been laid down by Count Carton de Wiart in his report and approved by the tenth Assembly (see Minutes of the Fifth Committee (1929), page 68) :

" (1) With respect to assistance, the foreign minor has the same rights as the minor who is a national of the country, except that the former may be repatriated ;

" (2) The interests of the minor must always be the first consideration whenever there is any question of affording him assistance ;

" (3) Repatriation is not to be looked upon as being necessarily the best method of affording assistance ".

Mlle. PÜNDER (Germany) shared Countess Apponyi's view as to the importance of the work done by the Child Welfare Committee and the need for restricting its enquiries to a few subjects. Excellent results had been obtained by the co-operation of special experts from certain countries.

She had no objection to the draft Convention on the repatriation of minors. She asked, however, why the title chosen for the Convention was " Convention on the Return of Young People to their Homes ", instead of " Convention on Repatriation ".

She regretted that the first session of the Special Committee on Assistance to Foreign Minors had been fixed for October 1932 only, since the problem was a very urgent one.

With reference to the work proposed by the Child Welfare Committee for the coming year, she asked what the Secretariat meant by " social measures more directly concerned with the welfare of illegitimate children ".

M. EKSTRAND (Director of the Traffic in Opium and Social Questions Sections) replied that the phrase " return to their homes " had been chosen in preference to " repatriation " because the child's home was not necessarily situated in the country to which it officially belonged.

Mlle. COLIN (Member of the Social Questions Section) said, in reply to the German delegate's second question, that the " social measures more directly concerned with the welfare of illegitimate children " might be arranged in three principal classes :

(1) Financial — such as social insurance, maternity allowances, etc. ;

(2) Social — such as welfare of the mother and child during the period of pregnancy, maternity homes, etc. ;

(3) Administrative — such as compulsory guardianship of illegitimate children, assistance to mothers and children in claiming their rights on the father, etc.

Mlle. VACARESCO (Roumania) said that the question of child welfare came before the Fifth Committee each year with the regular persistence of a tide that finally altered the configuration of the shore. The subject was of special importance this year, in view of present events. The world crisis should force men to turn their eyes to the future and think of the children.

She would deal more particularly with the passage in the report concerning juvenile courts. Financial considerations had so far prevented Roumania from setting up such courts, but they existed in several countries. They were not complete unless they had their necessary complement of auxiliary services (medical, legal, etc.). The membership of those services should consist as far as possible of women who were accustomed to dealing with children. Technical experts of both sexes would study, in all its aspects, the appalling problem of juvenile crime and would defend young criminals in the courts. The Fifth Committee would have less need to concern itself with distressing subjects, like the traffic in women and children, if more care were taken of children from their earliest days.

She regretted the omission to deal with the question of films in the report. It would be helpful to know what were the relations between the Child Welfare Committee and the International Educational Cinematographic Institute in Rome.

Finally, she drew attention to one matter deserving of interest — the position of minors abroad and their urgent need of relief.

Count DE PENHA GARCIA (Portugal) observed that child welfare was an essentially national problem. It had, however, its international aspect, and in that the League could play a very important part. The League's action must necessarily be confined to two principal channels — first, the study and development of legal questions connected with children and, second, the co-ordination of the work of the national and international associations dealing with child welfare. It must be agreed that considerable results had already been obtained by the League in these two matters.

With regard to legal questions, the League had this year succeeded in preparing a draft Convention on the return of children to their homes. Other questions, in particular assistance to foreign minors and the execution of maintenance orders abroad, were being investigated, and there was reason to hope that a solution would be found, in spite of the difficulties created by the variety of cases and conditions in different countries. The method of work mentioned in the report was admirable. It was highly desirable that a committee of experts should take advantage of the work done hitherto and that model draft conventions should be drawn up. In this way, each country would have the benefit of the experience acquired by others in the solution of certain aspects of the very perplexing problem of child welfare.

He seconded Mlle. Vacaresco's suggestion concerning auxiliary services in juvenile courts. In Portugal, the term " juvenile courts " had been replaced by " tutoria ", the object being to express the idea that the judge should, to a certain extent, act as the children's guardian.

An International Congress on Child Welfare was to meet at Lisbon on October 24th, 1931, and Count de Penha Garcia issued a warm invitation on behalf of his Government to all delegations.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) drew special attention to the new direction given to the legal and international problems under consideration by the Child Welfare Committee. The latter had for many years been engaged in drawing up three international conventions. In the matter of the return to their homes of children and young people, the Committee had succeeded in preparing a draft which had finally been communicated to the Governments and which might serve as a model for bilateral or multilateral agreements.

The Committee had felt that it could not settle the questions dealt with in the other two drafts — assistance to foreign minors and the enforcement of maintenance orders abroad — without exceeding its jurisdiction to a certain extent, since they referred to assistance to the mother or relatives responsible for the child and to decisions which might also concern adults. This difficulty had been successfully overcome by a proposal to set up a special committee of experts and jurists on which twelve countries would be represented. Count Carton de Wiart was glad to note that the problem of assistance to foreigners had been included in the League's programme in this form.

He was sure the Child Welfare Committee would give very careful attention to the question of illegitimate children. One of the first practical steps would be to facilitate the marriage of the parents by some such measure as making only a very small charge for registration papers and other necessary documents which so often prevented working people, particularly abroad, from contracting regular marriages. As to the legal status of illegitimate children, there were various classes to be considered : natural children who had been recognised and who, generally speaking, enjoyed the same legal facilities as legitimate children, with the exception of inheritance ; secondly, unrecognised natural children, and, lastly, natural children born in incest or adultery, whose legal status, more particularly in countries where the law was based on the Napoleonic Code, warranted certain criticism. It might be urged that the principle of guardianship should be extended by law to natural children, so that no illegitimate child would be without a legal representative to defend his rights. Count Carton de Wiart was glad to announce that his Government had prepared a Bill to complete the provisions of the Civil Code on this point.

Count Carton de Wiart turned next to Mlle. Vacaresco's question concerning the relations between the Child Welfare Committee and the International Educational Cinematographic Institute. The object of the Committee was to ensure that films did less harm to children on the one hand and more good on the other. The harm they did might be lessened, not merely by educational measures, but by physical and material measures as well, in particular, as regards the sanitation of the theatres, non-inflammable films, etc. More good might be secured by encouraging the production of films that would not only instruct but give recreation, without which their success would be small. As a result of the Committee's efforts, the Rome Institute had made an appeal to certain authors, and scenarios were being prepared, many of which had already been published in the Educational Cinematographic Review. A draft Convention had been drawn up with the object of allowing Customs exceptions for educational films.

He thought it unnecessary to dwell on the problem of juvenile courts. He noted with satisfaction that the Fifth Committee took a particular interest in this institution and that one of the members of the Child Welfare Committee was a magistrate in a juvenile court and a woman as well. He also pointed out that, at the request of an important American association, the question of crippled children was included in the programme for the first time. That question would have to wait its turn, but he was grateful to Countess Apponyi for having mentioned it in her report.

In conclusion, some order of priority should be followed in the various questions which the Child Welfare Committee was asked to undertake. That Committee was convinced that, in order to obtain good results, too much should not be attempted at the same time.

Mme. SCHÖNFELD-POLANO (Netherlands) stated that her Government welcomed the suggestion to set up a Special Committee to deal with the whole question of assistance to indigent foreigners, but was not in favour of giving prior attention to assistance to minors in an endeavour to reach a partial solution, as was suggested in Section III (b) of the Child Welfare Committee's report, even if the Special Committee thought that a complete solution of the entire problem would involve considerable delay.

The Netherlands Government based this view on the principle that it was essential to respect family ties. It could not but view Article I of the preliminary draft Convention, providing foreign minors with the same treatment as national minors, as valueless, since the Netherlands gave no assistance to national minors other than that rendered to their families. Respect for the same principle meant that it could not subscribe to any undertaking involving the special treatment of minors which might affect its right to expel a foreign family.

As regarded the problem as a whole, it must be remembered that, under Article 29 and Protocol VI, ad Article 6, of the Draft Convention on the Treatment of Foreigners, the country in which the foreigner desired to settle was entitled to judge whether he could or could not do so. It was therefore impossible to impose an obligation on a country to permit an indigent foreigner to reside in it. Once the State of residence had declared its willingness to tolerate indigent foreigners in its territory responsibility for the upkeep of such persons should in any case rest with the State of which they were nationals, either in the form of direct aid to the persons concerned or of a refund to the State of residence of any sum spent on assistance ; failing this, their State of origin should receive them back into its own territory.

She cited the Convention of 1906 between Germany and the Netherlands, regarding the treatment of nationals of the one in the territory of the other, further to illustrate her point. It was based on the conviction that, in case of expulsion, the family as a whole should leave the country and, though the right to expel was recognised in principle, a special administration established at Arnhem was responsible for assistance to indigent Netherlands nationals in Germany, with a view as far as possible to preventing expulsion on the grounds of their indigence.

Her Government was convinced that any special measures envisaging minors only were doomed to failure and agreed with Sweden that no partial solution of the problem should be attempted.

Dr. Ethel OSBORNE (Australia) drew attention to the increased social danger to the adolescent brought about by the world economic crisis and present unemployment conditions. In view of this, two points mentioned in the International Labour Office's report and one by the Health Section, on page 2 of the Child Welfare Committee's report, should receive special attention :

> " It was pointed out that it would be desirable to ensure that, wherever this is not already done, the age of admission for children to all forms of employment should coincide with the end of the compulsory school-age. This should be brought about by raising the school-age and not by lowering the age of admission to employment ".
> " The International Labour Office was asked to collect information on the protection of the children of seasonal workers. "
> " It was suggested by several delegates that, in order to cope with the social causes of this (infant) mortality, it would be desirable to extend the system of social insurance, to increase the number of social workers or visiting nurses, and to introduce courses of training in child-rearing for girls in order to raise the level of education among the mothers. "

The adolescent must be trained for life, for Australian statistics showed that remarkably few criminals came from the classes trained as skilled workers through years of apprenticeship. Modern industrialism tended to require less and less of these skilled workers and more and more persons without specialised training, but capable of executing repetition work of a monotonous character. The interest of the young must therefore be turned to other pursuits, such as agriculture, gardening, organised sports, etc. This was especially to be recommended in view of the present tendency in some countries to cut educational grants to meet the urgent need of national economy. There was no doubt that such retrenchments would in the main operate unfavourably on the educational provision for the post-primary and adolescent grades.

She urged that the Committee should place on record its apprehension of the special danger in which the present economic world situation placed the adolescent, boy or girl, from the point of view of employment, education, nutrition and health, and that the Child Welfare Committee should direct attention to this particularly urgent problem.

She stressed the importance of the suitable training of crippled children. The Australian Commonwealth was engaged at the present time on a complete survey of its cripples, including children, and the records on this matter might constitute a valuable guide for future study of the problem. Crippled children were least fitted to be turned out into the unskilled labour market and, for that reason, their education should be particularly adopted to equip them for life work in other directions.

M. CHODZKO (Poland) considered the preliminary draft conventions dealt with in Section III. of the Committee's report were the most important part of its work. He had an objection to raise to that on assistance to foreign minors in that he did not think it possible to deal with these without dealing with their families also. Hence he asked the Rapporteur to lay particular stress upon the value of the Special Committee to be instituted to review the subject as a whole.

He asked for elucidation from the Secretariat as to the differences of principle between the convention drawn up in Paris in 1912 on the treatment of foreigners and the draft submitted by the Legal Sub-Committee of the Child Welfare Committee.

In the Minutes of the second meeting of the Council, held on September 4th,[1] an invitation was extended to twelve Governments to appoint experts to serve on the Special Committee. The countries represented were to be those of emigration and immigration as well as certain others asked in view of their interest in the subject. This last qualification was scarcely a basis for selection, since no country could fail to be interested in such a matter.

The Committee's work on juvenile courts and their auxiliary services (Section V, page 3, of the report) also deserved attention. Documentation regarding the educational institutions to which young offenders were sent must be collected and the questionnaire to be drawn up on this subject should be circulated as soon as possible.

In conclusion, he supported the Australian delegate's recommendation.

Mlle. COLIN (Member of the Social Questions Section), in reply to Dr. Chodzko, stated that the 1912 Paris Convention and the new preliminary draft convention were alike in that they both assimilated foreigners to nationals in all matters of assistance and in that they both recognised the right of foreigners to demand repatriation or a refund of the expenses necessary for their return to their home. The difference between the two conventions was that that drawn up by the Child Welfare Committee subordinated everything to the interests of the minors. Such was the case, for instance, as regards repatriation under the terms of Article 7.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) stated with reference to juvenile courts, that these had been used in Great Britain for some years. The auxiliary services, some of which were paid and some voluntary, had been found particularly valuable.

The basic principle, in the treatment of young offenders, was the avoidance of all atmosphere of crime. Hence, children were tried, not in police courts, but in an ordinary hall or room, and were sent for correction, not to prison, but to schools or homes.

She could not overemphasise the value of women magistrates, who perhaps better than men understood the working of children's minds and the impulses which prompted their actions. She would therefore like to present a resolution urging the representatives of countries in which no such courts existed to press for their establishment and for the employment of women officials therein.

M. GIANNINI (Italy) pointed out that the Committee's work had two aspects. It dealt, in the first place, with general humanitarian problems which countries must in the main solve by internal action. In this respect Italy had made great strides. The National Government regarded child welfare as a fundamental problem of national life and was launching throughout the country an extensive scheme in regard to this matter, of which he would indicate the main lines. In the second — the international — aspect of the Committee's work Italy was particularly interested, since ten million Italians resided abroad.

On a purely practical point, it was difficult to advocate economy when sitting on the Fourth Committee while recommending fresh expenditure at the meetings of the Fifth. He therefore proposed that the Committee should rationalise its expenditure and, without entirely renouncing any of the measures proposed, postpone those which were not immediately essential and concentrate upon achieving the completion of a few of the more urgent tasks in hand. He therefore asked the Australian delegate with whose recommendation he agreed, to modify it in such a way as to imply that the proposed action should be taken as soon as financial conditions might permit.

Mlle. FORCHHAMMER (Denmark) supported the recommendation proposed by the Australian delegate.

Countess APPONYI (Hungary) stated that she would endeavour when drawing up her report to take into account the various suggestions made. She could not, however, agree with the view expressed by the Netherlands delegate that a partial solution of the problem of indigent foreigners, covering minors only, was inadvisable. Problems affecting children could not wait, and, unless immediate action was taken, the young men and young women of a few years hence would have a right to take the Committee to task for its neglect of their welfare.

22. Child Welfare : Appointment of the Rapporteur to the Assembly.

On the proposal of the CHAIRMAN, Countess APPONYI was unanimously appointed Rapporteur.

23. Improvements in Penal Administration : Draft Resolution submitted by the Drafting Committee (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN stated that the Drafting Committee had prepared the following amended text for point 6 :

> " Requests the Secretary-General, after having received the answer of the International Prison Commission on the Standard Minimum Rules, to ask the Governments of States Members of the League . . . "

[1] See Official Journal, November 1931, page 2036.

Count PAGLIANO (Italy), Lord LYTTON (British Empire) and M. PELLA (Rapporteur) stated that they accepted this text.

Point 6, as amended by the Drafting Committee, was adopted unanimously.

NINTH MEETING.

Held on Monday, September 21st, 1931, at 3.30 p.m.

Chairman : Mlle. HESSELGREN (Sweden), later M. ALÂ (Persia).

24. Work of the Traffic in Women and Children Committee : Examination of the Draft Report of the Fifth Committee to the Assembly.

Mrs. PLUMPTRE (Canada) presented her report (Annex 6), to which the following amendments were accepted :

Paragraph 1 : Deletion of the words " which represented the endeavour to secure a common understanding between the Governments with a view to united action " ; proposed by Dr. Chodzko (Poland), since the use of the expression " représente une tentative " in the French text in connection with a convention concluded in 1921 was somewhat inappropriate.

Deletion of the words " and consolidated the work previously undertaken by the International Bureau for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children " ; proposed by Mlle. Forchhammer (Denmark), since the wording as it stood failed to take into account the earlier Conference and Convention of 1910.

Paragraph b : Insertion of a reference to the heavy maximum penalties adopted by countries such as Canada and Poland, proposed by Dr. Chodzko (Poland).

In accepting this proposal, Mrs. Plumptre (Canada) asked the Committee to permit her to insert a reference to the fact that, in Canada, an additional penalty in the form of whipping could be added to the ten years' sentence in the case of a second offence.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) stated, on behalf of the delegate for India, who was absent, that, in view of an amendment which he had submitted to her amendment, she proposed a fresh draft resolution embodying the definition of the souteneur contained in Article 1 of the draft Protocol. The Indian delegate felt that the bare word " souteneur " did not cover as broad a field as he could wish.

It was agreed that the revised draft resolution should be discussed later.

Paragraph 2 : Substitution of the words " on the other hand, taking into consideration that the countries in which women police have been established declared their complete satisfaction with the same, the Fifth Committee suggests . . . ", for the words " on the other hand, the success . . . in dealing with matters relating to women and children, suggests . . . ", in the paragraph dealing with women police ; proposed by Mme. Matsch (Austria).

Paragraph 2 : Substitution of the words " ostensibly prepared as propaganda against venereal disease, prostitution and the traffic ", for the words " as propaganda against prostitution and the traffic ", in the paragraph dealing with obscene publications ; proposed by Dr. Ethel Osborne (Australia).

Last paragraph : Before the sentence beginning " The co-operation of States . . . ", the addition of the words " It was pointed out that the present world situation seems to provide a unique opportunity for obtaining conclusive evidence on the relation between economic need and prostitution, and that information and statistics relative to this problem should as far as possible be collected and analysed " ; proposed by Dr. Ethel Osborne (Australia), in order to bring out the point which both the German delegate and she had already raised.

Subject to these amendments, to some minor drafting changes, and to subsequent approval of the resolution submitted by the British delegate, the report was adopted.[1]

(M. ALÂ (Persia) took the chair.)

25. Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs : Reply by the Chairman to the Question raised by the Delegate of Uruguay at the Eighth Meeting regarding the Report of the Fifth Committee to the Assembly.

The CHAIRMAN recalled that, in the course of his declaration made at the last meeting of the Committee, the delegate of Uruguay complained that the adoption, on the previous afternoon, of the draft report of the Rapporteur to the Assembly on Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs was a new procedure and contrary to the rules of procedure of the Assembly, Article 17 (2), of which read :

" As a general rule, no proposal shall be discussed or put to the vote at any meeting of the Assembly unless copies of it have been circulated to all representatives not later than the day preceding the meeting ".

He considered it unnecessary to remind his colleagues that they had frequently in the past adopted reports which had been circulated on the day on which they had been discussed. Even such an important report as that adopted by the Fifth Committee in the year 1929 regarding the Limitation Conference had been adopted on the same morning as it had been distributed; a great many similar precedents existed in other League Committees. The adoption of this procedure was, of course, wholly dependent upon the unanimous consent of the members of the Committee. The Committee would remember that before the item in question had been discussed on the previous Friday afternoon, the Chairman had been most careful to ask whether any member of the Committee had any objection to the discussion of the report. No objection having been raised, the report had been discussed paragraph by paragraph and adopted section by section. It was only at the end of those proceedings that a member of the Committee had asked whether the formal adoption of the report could be postponed until the following day. After discussion, the member in question had withdrawn his suggestion in order to enable the report to be adopted. In those circumstances, neither the Chairman nor the Committee could, he thought, be regarded in any way as having adopted an irregular procedure. The item had been put on the agenda, the Committee had unanimously agreed to discuss it and the report had been adopted unanimously.

Furthermore, at the beginning of the next meeting, the delegate mentioned above had referred to his abstention on the previous day which had been due to the fact that he had not finished examining the report, and had said that, after completing his examination of it, he accepted it in its entirety and desired that his previous declaration should not figure in the Minutes. It was evident that this fact, as well as the events that had taken place in this connection at the meeting on the previous Friday, must have been unknown to the Uruguayan delegate, who had not been present during the discussions.

The delegate of Uruguay had raised a second question of procedure — namely, that the vote on the resolution on the destruction of seizures was not in accordance with the rules of procedure of the Assembly, since a roll-call had not been taken.

The members of the Committee, as well as of any other of the League Committees, would remember a great many occasions upon which votes on the resolutions had, in the absence of any demand from any delegation for a roll-call, been taken by a show of hands. That, the Chairman believed, had been the practice of the Fifth Committee in the past. If no delegation asked for a roll-call to be taken, this method of voting was not adopted. On the occasion in question, it had not, he thought, been the function of the Chair to suggest a roll-call if no delegation present expressed any desire that such a roll-call should be taken.

M. CHODZKO (Poland) said that, though the incident was closed, there was no guarantee that a similar incident would not occur another year.

The Assembly's main work was done in committee, and he had for several years past viewed with considerable anxiety the growing pressure exercised upon the Committees to complete their work as quickly as possible. The wise procedure laid down in the Assembly Rules was not followed, and this merely in order to gain a day or two. This haste tended to create a very trying atmosphere prejudicial to the work both of the Committees and of the Secretariat, and he hoped that in future years the Rules would be observed to the letter.

The Chairman having remarked that the Committee was master of its own procedure, Dr. Chodzko suggested that the General Committee of the Assembly was the body responsible for exercising the pressure to which he had referred.

The CHAIRMAN replied that this was incorrect. The General Committee, of which he was a member, had only that day stated that it did not wish to hurry the work unduly.

[1] For the final text of the report, see records of the plenary meetings of the Assembly (Official Journal, Special Supplement, No. 95).

M. CHODZKO (Poland) took note of this fact.

M. DOLLFUS (Switzerland) endorsed M. Chodzko's view, but agreed with the Chairman that the matter was one which the Committee itself must regulate.

M. SAWADA (Japan) noted that the question of procedure raised by the delegate of Uruguay had been settled by the Chairman. He wished, however, to say that he could not understand the interpretation given by the delegate of Uruguay regarding the reference made in the agenda of the previous Friday to M. Sawada's report. This reference was : " Item 3 : Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs. — Draft Report to the Assembly presented by the Rapporteur, A.V.12.1931." M. Sawada considered that this could only mean that it was proposed to discuss and to adopt the report at the meeting on which it figured on the agenda.

The delegate of Uruguay had drawn attention to the omission from the report of certain questions which, in his judgment, should have been included. These questions were the following : the tenth recommendation in the Final Act of the Limitation Conference, the question of a verbatim record for the proceedings of the Bangkok Conference, the results of the Secretariat mission in Turkey. M. Sawada regretted that the delegate of Uruguay had not informed him that he wished these matters to be mentioned in the report. A Rapporteur could only sum up the discussion which had actually taken place. It was not his duty to include in his report every matter which was mentioned during the discussion by individual members of the Committee. He could hardly mention matters which had not been discussed at all, and, so far as M. Sawada was aware, the third of the questions mentioned above had not been raised in the Committee before the close of the discussion and the adoption of the report.

None of the questions to which the delegate of Uruguay had drawn attention appeared to the Rapporteur to have received such special emphasis during the discussion that they should have been included in the report, nor, so far as he was aware, had any request been made by any member of the Committee that they should be dealt with in the report. Moreover, when the report had been discussed paragraph by paragraph not a single member had asked that these matters should be mentioned in it.

26. Work of the Child Welfare Committee : Examination of the Draft Report of the Fifth Committee to the Assembly.

Countess APPONYI (Hungary) presented her report (document A.V.16.1931), the first two pages of which were adopted without discussion.

Page 3.

Mme. SCHÖNFELD-POLANO (Netherlands) pointed out that the statement " Consequently, the Fifth Committee . . . a solution, even if only a partial one of the problem, " had not been included in the previous report. She had already stated her Government's reasons for disapproving of a partial solution, upon which she based her request for the deletion of the sentence.

Countess APPONYI (Hungary) and Mlle. VACARESCO (Roumania) opposed this suggestion, since the matter brooked of no delay.

Mlle. PÜNDER (Germany) proposed the insertion of the words " and provisional " after the word " partial " to meet the point.

Mme. SCHÖNFELD-POLANO (Netherlands) did not insist, as she did not desire to prolong the discussion. She pointed out, however, that if it were concluded that a partial solution would be ineffective or impossible, it would be illogical to suggest such a solution, even as a provisional measure.

The Committee agreed to accept Mlle. Pünder's proposal.

Page 5.

Mlle. FORCHHAMMER (Denmark) stated that the reference to " the Assembly " in the first paragraph did not make it clear to which Assembly the report referred.

M. CONTOUMAS (Greece) suggested that the first words of the sentence should read :

> " The Fifth Committee recommends that the Assembly should inform the Child Welfare Committee of the great importance it attaches to the improvement of the position of illegitimate children, requesting it . . . "

The Committee adopted this suggestion.

Mlle. CAMPOAMOR (Spain) pointed out that the wording of the second half of the sentence in question implied that the marriage of parents was the one meagre proposal that the Committee could make. This proposal was in any case weak, since it failed to take into account the fact that in certain countries legitimisation could be effected by other means than the marriage of the parents, whereas, in others, the legislation in no circumstances permitted the legitimisation of a natural child. She therefore proposed the more general formula : " examination of the best means of improving the position of illegitimate children ".

Countess APPONYI (Hungary) replied that the necessity for facilitating marriage was a point worth stressing, since the problem of distance and the difficulty of obtaining accommodation often prevented the legitimisation of the child.

After discussion, it was agreed to adopt the following wording proposed by the Rapporteur :

" Requesting it at the same time to maintain on its programme, among other questions, the examination of the best means of facilitating the marriage of parents, with a view to legitimising the children ".

Mlle. VACARESCO (Roumania) informed the Committee that she was in touch with a new and far-reaching international organisation called " Le Message ", whose aim was to further international goodwill. She would be glad to arrange to place the broadcasting facilities of this organisation at the disposal of the Child Welfare Committee for purposes of greater publicity. She proposed the inclusion of a suggestion to this effect in the report.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) thought it was not possible for the Fifth Committee to make recommendations to the Child Welfare Committee on a subject of which it had so little knowledge. The Committee certainly could not commit itself to any expression of opinion as to the methods of the organisation without fuller information.

Countess APPONYI (Hungary) considered that it was worth referring the matter to the Child Welfare Committee for its consideration. Such action would in no way commit the Fifth Committee, while it might be of value to the Child Welfare Committee in its attempt to gain further publicity.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the question would be referred to the Child Welfare Committee.

Subject to the above amendments the draft report to the Assembly was adopted.[1]

27. Traffic in Women and Children : Publication of the Collection of Laws and Regulations regarding the Traffic : Letter from the International Council of Women.

The CHAIRMAN stated that he had received a letter from the International Council of Women which contained the following resolution :

" The International Council of Women, in view of the great importance, from the point of view of the moral reforms for which it is working, of the Collection of Laws and Regulations regarding the traffic in women and children, which the Council on March 27th, 1923 and, later, the Assembly decided should be published and kept up to date, respectfully asks the League of Nations to publish the said collection, since publication would not entail any considerable expenditure and would contribute greatly to the realisation of the recommendations adopted by the League of Nations in this matter ".

The letter also contained the information that the International Council had recommended its national councils to institute special courses for the re-establishment of women rescued from licensed houses when these were closed down.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) expressed the view that, though anxious to help the International Council of Women in every possible way, the Committee must resign itself, for financial reasons, to postponing, until better times, any action involving new expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN stated that this was the general opinion of the Committee. As regarded the second item of information in the letter, the matter had, he felt sure, the full sympathy of all those present.

28. Preparation of the Minutes of the Committee.

M. ENTÉZAM-WEZIRY (Persia), though fully realising the necessity for short Minutes, considered that the points made by various speakers were not always well brought out. He was not asking for a verbatim report of every speech, but for a summary which could be relied upon to bring out the sequence of the speaker's reasoning. He asked that the final Minutes should be as detailed as possible.

Count PAGLIANO (Italy) and M. PELLA (Roumania) supported this view : the latter had noticed, when drawing up his report, that vital parts of the discussion on penal and penitentiary questions had been so much cut down as to be of but little value to the various associations which would be consulted on these questions by the League of Nations and which depended on the Committee's Minutes for their information.

The CHAIRMAN stated that this point had been raised in other Committees also, and would be given due consideration.

29. Work of the Traffic in Women and Children Committee : Revised Text of the Draft Resolution submitted by the British Delegate.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) submitted the following draft resolution, explaining that the text had been prepared in agreement with the Indian delegate :

> " The Assembly recommends that the Traffic in Women and Children Committee should consider the possibility of ascertaining, with special reference to the recurrent conviction of habitual offenders, the results of the penalties on souteneurs, as defined in Article 1 of the Additional Draft Protocol to the International Convention of 1921 for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children ".

Dr. HYDER (India) supported the resolution, the wording of which would allow of no misunderstanding. Uniform data from which definite conclusions could be drawn could thus be acquired, and the work of the Secretariat would be facilitated.

Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium) would have preferred more precise wording in order that the Traffic in Women and Children Committee should be quite clear as to the work expected of it. Was it to undertake some kind of enquiry in the various countries with a view to ascertaining the results of the legal provisions applied to souteneurs ? In his view it was, above all, to seek for new arguments in favour of severer measures for the prevention of this special and odious offence. The penalties inflicted on souteneurs rarely improved such offenders. He saw no objection, however, to such an enquiry as was proposed, which he thought should be based on the statistics of crime for the various countries.

M. DOLLFUS (Switzerland) felt that the Committee had agreed as to the substance of the resolution, which need not further be discussed.

The draft resolution was adopted.

30. Improvements in Penal Administration : Examination of the Draft Report of the Fifth Committee to the Assembly.

Lord LYTTON (British Empire) said that, as he had unfortunately been unable to be present at most of the Committee's meetings, he had no remarks to make on the passages in the report which summed up the views of the various delegations (document A.V.15.1931). As regarded the parts which contained expressions of opinion attributed to the Committee, he accepted no responsibility for any opinions other than those which he had expressed on behalf of his delegation.

M. PELLA (Roumania), Rapporteur, explained that the report summarised the opinions expressed by the various speakers. Asto the views of the Committee as a whole, the Rapporteur had merely explained the resolution which he had prepared as a result of the conciliating formulas adopted by the Drafting Committee. That resolution, which dealt with the gradual unification of criminal law, the co-operation of States in the prevention and suppression of crime, and the execution of penalties, had been accepted unanimously by the Drafting Committee, on which was a representative of the British Empire. The resolution had also been adopted unanimously by the Fifth Committee.

As the request of Lord LYTTON (British Empire) the English text of the paragraph dealing with the ultimate convening of the representatives of the institutions referred to under Point 4 of the resolution was altered to bring it into harmony with the French text and in order that it might be quite clear that the League was expressing a wish and would not itself convene a meeting.

Count PAGLIANO (Italy) said that, as he understood Point 4 of the resolution, the Committee considered that the Minutes of the present session were intended to provide preparatory studies for the use of the organisations responsible for the further work contemplated. He therefore asked the Chairman to ensure that the Secretariat should arrange for the Minutes to be drafted in accordance with the suggestions previously made by the Persian delegate.

The CHAIRMAN stated that he would take the necessary action.

Subject to a few drafting amendments, the report to the Assembly was adopted.[1]

In answer to Mr. Burdekin (New Zealand), the CHAIRMAN stated that M. Pella would present the report to the Assembly.

31. Close of the Session.

The CHAIRMAN thanked the members of the Committee for their co-operation. He considered that useful work had been done.

M. DOLLFUS (Switzerland), seconded by Mlle. PÜNDER (Germany), speaking in the name of the Committee, thanked the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman, the Rapporteurs and the members of the Secretariat who had assisted in the Committee's work.

ANNEX 1.

A.V/1.1931.

TRAFFIC IN OPIUM AND OTHER DANGEROUS DRUGS.

REPORT PRESENTED BY THE RAPPORTEUR, M. SAWADA (JAPAN).

The past year marks a date of the utmost importance in the campaign against the traffic in narcotic drugs, in view of the fact that the League of Nations, in accordance with the resolution of the 1929 Assembly, going beyond mere measures of control, has succeeded in drawing up a convention for limiting the manufacture and regulating the distribution of narcotic drugs, which should enable it to strike at the very root of the evil. I will begin with a description of this important part of the task accomplished this year, thanks to the preparatory work of the Advisory Committee and to the Conference held in May last.

I. Conference for the Limitation of the Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs.

It will be remembered that, in accordance with the resolution of the 1929 Assembly, the Advisory Committee had, in January 1930, drawn up a plan which was accepted by the Council in May 1930 as a practical basis for the work of the Conference and was communicated to the Governments with a request for their observations on the subject. At its meeting of September 1930, held during the last meeting of the Assembly, the Council asked the Committee to examine the Governments' replies, at the same time taking into consideration the results of the preliminary Conference of manufacturing countries held in London in October-November 1930. The Council also suggested that the Committee should prepare a draft convention as the outcome of its study of the problem.

The Advisory Committee, during the first part of its fourteenth session, held in January and February 1931, drew up on this basis a draft convention to be submitted to the Conference for the Limitation of the Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs, to which, in accordance with the eleventh Assembly's resolution, all the States Members and non-members of the League were to be invited and the date of which had been fixed by the Council for May 27th, 1931.

I cannot enter here into the details of the long discussions to which the framing of this draft gave rise in the Committee, which based its work on the principles of the original plan accepted by the Council in May 1930 — namely, establishment of the world's needs for medical and scientific purposes with the assistance of the estimates furnished by the Governments; allocation of world manufacture among manufacturing countries on a quota system: control of distribution by a central body in order to ensure the receipt by every country of supplies of narcotic drugs in accordance with the amounts set forth in its estimates. I need only say that, although the members of the Advisory Committee agreed to accept this quota system, with certain adaptations made in accordance with various amendments to the original plan, some countries had already raised objections to it, fearing that it would affect freedom of trade. These objections were voiced afresh during the long discussion held during the general Conference which met from May 27th to July 13th, with M. de Brouckère in the chair, and at which were present delegations from fifty-seven States, among them several non-members of the League of Nations.[1]

It then became apparent that agreement could not be reached upon the quota system contained in the draft Convention drawn up in January 1931 by the Advisory Committee. The Japanese delegation, with the support of the French delegation, proposed the substitution for this system of provisions authorising the contracting parties to manufacture the quantities of narcotic drugs necessary for national needs and for the execution of legitimate export orders under the control of a central body. On the proposal of its Committee for Limitation, the Conference accepted this draft as the basis of its discussion. On July 13th, it finally adopted a " Draft Convention for limiting the Manufacture and regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs ".

To describe the work accomplished by the Conference, I cannot do better than to quote the following extract from its President's closing speech :

> " The Conference's task was to limit manufacture — that is, to elaborate a system which would not allow the production of more drugs than the world could legitimately consume. There were two methods of reaching such a result : one seemed simple — the allocation to every one of his share, each undertaking not to exceed it. The other was particularly difficult to realise ; it meant that every country must be left to buy and sell freely, at the same time setting up machinery so well regulated that the sum of the production of all the competitors would nevertheless remain within the limits set. After some hesitation, the Conference adopted this second course and has, in spite of all difficulties, achieved its object ".

I am certain that my colleagues will realise only too gladly that the conclusion of this Convention constitutes a marked progress in the efforts made to eliminate the scourge of narcotic drugs.

The Convention drawn up by the Conference, which had at its disposal the most highly qualified experts — able to draw up a list of narcotic drugs as complete as present-day science permits — covers a far larger number of drugs than preceding Conventions : it covers all the known or possible narcotic derivatives of opium and the coca leaf ; moreover, new preparations derived from these two substances can only be placed on the market under certain conditions.

Thanks to a system of estimates fixed by Chapter II of the Convention, it will be possible to establish a world total of the quantities to be manufactured corresponding to legitimate needs, with a margin for the laying down of reserve and Government stocks. Estimates of the quantities of each drug required for their medical and scientific needs are to be submitted by the contracting parties to the Permanent Central Board. Further, a Supervisory Body, composed of members of the Advisory Committee on the Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs of the League of Nations, of the Permanent Central Board, of the Health Committee of the League and of the Office international d'Hygiène publique, will examine each estimate and, except in matters regarding national needs, can ask for any explanation or information required to supplement or throw light on the estimate ; basing its action on the information thus received, it can, with the consent of the State concerned, modify the estimates. The work of the Secretariat of the Supervisory Body will be provided for by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, in close co-operation with the Permanent Central Board.

Chapter III of the Convention establishes the limitation proper of manufacture. There shall not be manufactured in any country a quantity of any of the drugs greater than the quantity required by the estimates for its medical and scientific needs, for purposes of conversion either for domestic consumption or for export, for the execution during the year of orders for export, and, lastly, for the maintenance of reserve and Government stocks at the level specified.

Certain delegations would no doubt have liked to see the establishment of a total figure for world manufacture which could not be exceeded. Had this been done, limitation would have been realised in an even more tangible form, but it seemed difficult to achieve such exactitude before the new mechanism had been tested. The Conference, however, gave this point its consideration and, in the recommendation which it adopted and which will be found in the Final Act, requested the Council of the League of Nations to instruct the Secretary-General to draw the attention of the Members of the League and the States non-members to the figures set out in the documents drawn up by the Secretariat, estimating the total present world requirements of drugs for use as such approximately as follows :

	Tons
Morphine	9
Diacetylmorphine	2
Cocaine	5½

Chapter IV provides for prohibitions and restrictions, the importance of which must be stressed.

The Conference was not unanimously in favour of the suggestion of certain delegations that diacetylmorphine (heroin) manufacture should be totally abolished but, under the terms of the Convention, the contracting parties undertook to prohibit the export of diacetylmorphine and its salts except when intended for the Government of a country in which diacetylmorphine was not manufactured, and then only under clearly defined conditions. Further, trade in or manufacture for trade of any product obtained from any of the phenanthrene alkaloids of opium or from the ecgonine alkaloids of the coca leaf not in use on the date of signature of the Convention for medical or scientific purposes shall only be permitted if the medical or scientific value of the product in question has been ascertained to the satisfaction of the Government concerned. Should the Health Committee consider that the product is capable of producing addiction it shall fall under the regime laid down in the Convention.

In the event of the Health Committee deciding that the product is not itself capable of producing addiction, but is convertible into such a drug, the question as to which group the drug in question shall belong shall be referred to a body of three experts.

In Chapter V, the Convention establishes a system of control, the principal objects of which are to render the provisions of the Geneva Convention or any equivalent provisions applicable to drugs and, further, to ensure through the Permanent Central Board that exports to any particular country do not exceed the total estimates for that country. The Permanent Central Board shall each year prepare for every country or territory a statement showing the estimates in respect of each drug and the amounts consumed, manufactured, converted, imported and exported ; if such statement indicates that one of the contracting parties has failed to carry out its obligations, the Board shall have the right to ask for explanations, through the Secretary-General of the League, and the procedure specified in paragraphs 2 to 7 of Article 24 of the Geneva Convention shall apply in any such case.

Thus, by means of the simultaneous action of the Permanent Central Board and the Supervisory Body provided for in Chapter II, the Convention will, in fact, institute a central counting-house for the world traffic in drugs.

The system of control is supplemented by a group of " administrative provisions ". If they have not already done so, contracting parties shall create a special administration for the purpose of applying the provisions of the present Convention regulating, supervising and controlling the trade in the drugs and organising the campaign against drug addiction. Strict supervision shall be exercised over the amounts of drugs manufactured or in stock and on their distribution upon delivery from the factory. The amounts of raw materials in the possession of manufacturers are also to be subject to limitation. All drugs seized in the illicit traffic are to be destroyed, or converted into non-narcotic substances, or reserved for medical or scientific uses, either by the Government or under its control. Diacetylmorphine must always be destroyed or converted.

Lastly, the Convention includes certain general provisions regarding its application. Under one of these provisions, the contracting parties shall, through the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, communicate to one another the laws and regulations promulgated in order to give effect to the Convention and shall forward an annual report on the working of the Convention in their territories in accordance with the form drawn up by the Advisory Committee on Traffic in Opium and other Dangerous Drugs.

My colleagues will remember that the 1930 Assembly, as the result of a proposal made to the Fifth Committee by the Chinese delegate, voted a resolution requesting the Governments to undertake a detailed enquiry into the illicit traffic and to communicate to the Secretary-General full information likely to assist in the suppression of the traffic, such as the kind of drugs seized, their origin and destination, the action taken, etc. I would point out that Article 23 of the Convention fulfils the desire expressed by the Assembly. It stipulates that the contracting parties shall communicate to each other through the Secretary-General of the League of Nations particulars of this nature, reproducing the Assembly resolution almost word for word.

The Conference carried its task even further. It decided to insert in the Final Act a series of recommendations which I will not enumerate, some of which are intended to ensure the execution by the organs of the League of Nations of certain proposals made during the Conference, others to serve as landmarks in carrying out future tasks destined to strengthen the control of the traffic in narcotic drugs.

In the resolution, to which I have already referred when dealing with Chapter III (Limitation), the Conference recommended that, pending the entry into force of the Convention, countries manufacturing narcotic drugs should, so far as possible, limit such manufacture to the quantities necessary for domestic consumption and export for medical and scientific purposes.

At its sixty-fourth session, the Council, at its meeting on September 4th, 1931, approved the provisions of the Convention, the application of which requires action on its part — namely, those regarding the composition of the Supervisory Body, the measures to be taken by the Health Committee regarding new drugs, and the provisions referring to the participation of the Advisory Committee in the Committee of Three Experts. These Council decisions are subject to the consent of the Assembly so far as concerns any financial provisions which may be necessary, but their application is not immediate, and I have no doubt that, when the time comes, the Fourth Committee will take measures to this effect.

The Council also noted the various recommendations contained in the Final Act, entrusting any necessary execution thereof to the organs of the League.

The Convention concluded by the Conference was immediately signed by numerous delegations; up to the present, thirty-six signatures have been received, including those of the manufacturing countries with the exception of Turkey and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The League of Nations is now in possession of an instrument for combating the drug evil more directly than in the past, but a number of conditions must be realised before this means of action becomes really effective.

In the first place, the responsible delegates of this Committee should do their utmost to hasten the ratification of the Convention by their Governments. Under Article 30 it is to come into force ninety days after the Secretary-General of the League of Nations has received ratifications or accessions from twenty-five Members of the League of Nations or States non-members, including four of the following States : Germany, United States of America, France, United Kingdom, Japan, the Netherlands, Switzerland and Turkey. Even when this indispensable minimum of ratifications has been received, the Convention will have to be universally adopted without delay. It constitutes a coherent whole, and the abstention of one or more States would seriously affect the working of its mechanism and could not fail to facilitate smuggling.

In the second place, the States which have not ratified the Hague and Geneva Conventions should do so as soon as possible, since, as was frequently observed in the Advisory Committee, the Convention drawn up by the Conference is not intended to replace the other Conventions but to supplement and strengthen them.

Lastly, the value and effect of the new Convention will depend on the strictness of the administrative control to be instituted by the Governments in order to put it into effect. The history of the illicit traffic in recent years shows that this traffic has only been enabled to develop to such an extent because the traffickers have always managed to take advantage of the difficulties and weaknesses in the administrative provisions for carrying out the Conventions, and, a fortiori, of the absence of adequate provisions in non-signatory countries.

All the other methods used by the Advisory Committee for combating the drug traffic are therefore of great importance. I would therefore now draw your attention to this subject.

II. General Position regarding the Campaign against the Drug Traffic: Position of the Ratifications of the Conventions : Examination of Annual Reports.

Position of the Ratifications of the Conventions.

The Advisory Committee noted with satisfaction that progress had been made in the ratification of the Geneva Convention. At the Committee's last session in January 1931, forty-two ratifications had been received. This number has now been raised to forty-seven, as a result of the accession of Lithuania (February 16th, 1931), Norway (March 16th), Iraq (August 8th) and the ratification of Cuba (July 6th) and of the Irish Free State (September 1st). As the Rapporteur of the Fifth Committee pointed out last year, the Geneva Opium Convention now more than ever heads the list of League Conventions as regards the number of ratifications received. Although the progress accomplished in this sphere is satisfactory, there is still a long list of States which, in spite of the urgent and repeated appeals of the Assembly and Council, have not ratified the Convention; as the Committee's report shows, this list includes an important group of Latin-American countries and three States Members of the Council. Last year Chile, Nicaragua and Panama informed the League of Nations that they intended to ratify the Convention or submit it to their Parliaments for approval or ratification, but the Secretariat has received no further information on the subject.

The Geneva Convention can only be fully effective if it is universally applied. This is proved by the very extensive information which the Committee this year obtained from the documents prepared by the Secretariat. As the Committee's report points out, this documentation shows that a favourable change took place in the position in 1930. This change is due to the fact that the Geneva Convention was put into force in all European manufacturing countries except Turkey, and that the esters of morphine were placed under control at the beginning of that year.

The year 1930 was marked by a great decrease in the manufacture and export of the drugs in a number of the principal European countries; nevertheless, the large seizures of drugs and the illicit transactions still recorded in some countries show that, even in 1930, there were extensive defects in the control of the traffic.

Annual Reports.

As usual, the annual reports provided the Committee with an abundant source of valuable information on the traffic in drugs in various countries and on the results of the new legislative measures adopted. The Fifth Committee will be gratified to note that, for the first time, the Advisory Committee received reports from several South-American countries. The Committee, however, recommended that these reports should be as detailed as possible, and it appealed to the large number of Latin-American countries which still did not transmit reports to assist the Committee in its task by supplying the necessary information in an annual report based on the revised form drawn up by the Advisory Committee and communicated to the States. For this purpose, the Secretary-General addressed a circular letter to the Latin-American Governments on August 12th, 1931.

III. Illicit Traffic and Control Measures for suppressing it.

In its report, the Committee noted that the illicit traffic on the whole was being more effectively combated but that its ravages were still felt on an enormous scale and continued to prove that much larger quantities of drugs were being produced and circulated than were required for the medical and scientific needs of the world.

As a result of the activity of the police and Customs and closer co-operation between the Governments and the police departments, it has been possible to make a large number of important seizures and to discover regular gangs of traffickers; this result justifies the insistence with which the Committee has requested the Council to recommend the Governments to take a number of steps to strengthen the control.

The Committee devoted special attention to India, Egypt, Turkey, Persia and China.

India. — For some years, the Committee has been disturbed by the growing ravages caused in India by the illicit traffic in cocaine from the Far East; it therefore learned with real satisfaction that the new Japanese regulations provided for stricter methods of control than in the past. It hopes that their effect will soon be felt, and I can give the Committee the assurance that the Japanese Government is taking any necessary measures to supplement or strengthen these regulations.

Egypt. — The Committee was gratified to note the great improvement in the position in Egypt, where, according to the Egyptian Government's report, the drug habit among the fellahs has been decreased by half. It congratulated the Egyptian Government and police on their efforts. Unfortunately, about 250,000 inhabitants are still affected by the drug habit and the country continues to be flooded with considerable quantities of foreign drugs, including hashish.

Turkey. — The position in Turkey has occupied the Committee's attention, especially since that country, which is not a party to the Hague and Geneva Conventions, has become a manufacturer of drugs and in view of the fact that large quantities of Turkish drugs have been found in the illicit traffic. The Committee has always been convinced that only the application of the control measures laid down in Chapter V of the Geneva Convention and, in particular, the adoption of the system of import certificates would make it possible to introduce an effective control over the international drug traffic. It therefore proposed that the Council should address an urgent appeal to the Turkish Government to co-operate in the work of the League of Nations and to consider the possibility of acceding to the Geneva Convention. The Secretary-General is now addressing a communication to this effect to the Turkish Government.

Since the Committee's report was drawn up, the Turkish Government in May 1931 addressed a memorandum to the Secretary-General on drug regulations in Turkey. The representative delegated by the Turkish Government to the Council at its sixty-third session in May 1931 read an extract from this memorandum to the effect that the decree adopted by Turkey on February 15th, 1931, established strict control over the manufacture, export and domestic sale of drugs. In accordance with the Turkish delegate's statements, the import and sale of drugs in Turkey are strictly regulated and controlled by methods in conformity with the provisions of the Hague and Geneva Conventions ; the manufacture of these products is also subject to permanent control which is becoming more and more rigorous and is exercised by agents specially appointed for the purpose ; the export of manufactured products has been subject, since February 15th, 1931, to the grant of an import licence by the competent authorities of importing countries in accordance with the corresponding article which forms the basis of the Geneva Convention.

The Council, at its meeting of May 19th, 1931, expressed its satisfaction that the Turkish Government had begun to co-operate with the League of Nations in regard to opium. This co-operation was again demonstrated by the presence of a numerous delegation to the Conference on Limitation. I am sure the Fifth Committee will join in the Council's satisfaction by expressing the earnest hope that the measures taken by the Turkish Government will have the expected effect and will thus effectively close one of the serious gaps in the international system for suppressing the illicit traffic. The Committee will also be glad to learn that, according to a letter of July 30th, 1931, from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Turkish Republic to the Secretary-General, the Etkin Drug Factory at Eyoub (Istambul), in view of certain irregularities discovered in its accounts, was closed by order of the Council of Ministers until it could give an account of its operations ; this firm was mentioned in the Committee's report as being implicated in the illicit traffic.

Persia. — As regards Persia, in which country the position has in recent years been a matter of concern for the Committee in view of the large quantities of Persian opium despatched illicitly from Bushire to the Far East, the Council and the Committee noted with interest the statement made by the Persian delegate to the Council on January 22nd, 1931. This statement was to the effect that " a formal clause in the exclusive concession recently granted by the Monopoly Service for the total export of Persian opium obliged the concession-holder to submit for each case of opium that left the country a certificate from the importing country ". The Committee expressed the desire that the Persian Government should, if possible, communicate a copy of the contract concluded with the concession-holder and, in accordance with the Council's decision, the Secretary-General is now addressing a letter to that effect to the Persian Government. The Committee hopes that, under this new regime, it will be possible to close one of the sources of the illicit traffic in drugs destined in particular for China.

China. — As regards China, the Committee at its thirteenth session adopted a recommendation that an investigation should be made in respect of concerted action by China and the Powers having treaties with China. The Council referred this recommendation to the Governments for examination. This co-operation is especially desirable as, according to the statements made by the Chinese delegate in the Advisory Committee, the position in China in respect of the illicit traffic is still very serious and is shown by the very high seizure figures reported by the Chinese delegate to the Commission ; a further communication on this subject gives the figures for a period of five years. The Committee decided to let the resolution of the previous year take effect and, at its request, the Secretary-General is now communicating to the Governments for their information the statements made by the representative of the Chinese Government to the Committee, laying down the principles which, in his opinion, must form the basis of the proposed co-operation, and adding observations submitted by the members of the Committee. The point of view of the Chinese Government and of the Powers is set out in the report of the Committee to the Council on the work of its fourteenth session. Though the Chinese Government and the Powers unanimously support the principle of co-operation, there are certain differences of view with regard to the rules to be applied in the settlements, concessions or leased territories. In conformity with a decision of the Committee and of the Council, the Secretary-General is now sending a letter to the Governments concerned to ask them whether it would not be possible to obtain annual reports for the foreign concessions and settlements in China. The Chinese delegate had reserved his Government's opinion on this point.

General Measures with a View to combating the Illicit Traffic.

The Committee adopted various recommendations regarding more general provisions for strengthening the campaign against the illicit traffic, which must be based on three fundamental conditions : adequate laws, adequate administration to apply those laws, and international co-operation.

Under the terms of these recommendations, a firm which is well known to be manufacturing or supplying for the illicit trade any drugs coming within the terms of the Geneva Convention, or any derivatives of morphine or cocaine, even if they are not yet covered by the Convention, or benzoylmorphine or any other ester of morphine, since the Secretary-General in his circular letter of January 11th, 1929, communicated to the Governments the recommendations of the Health Committee on this subject, should not be allowed to hold a licence for the manufacture of or trade in drugs to which the Geneva Convention applies.

The Council having approved these recommendations, the Secretary-General forwarded them in his circular letter of June 15th, 1931, to the Governments of the countries concerned, with a request that these countries should inform him of the measures adopted in respect of such firms. In its reply to this circular letter, the Turkish Government informed the Secretary-General that it had closed down one of the three Turkish factories referred to in the report of the Advisory Committee as implicated in the illicit traffic, together with two German firms. The German Government announced, through the German representative who was President of the Council at the May 1931 session, that it would state subsequently how it proposed to give effect to these resolutions. I am sure that the fifth Committee will insist that this salutary international action should be pursued with vigour.

The other recommendations referred to similar subjects. One proposes that persons known as habitual smugglers should be deprived of their passports.

Again, I would draw attention to the recommendation concerning the need for effective control of seizures ; under the decision approved by the Council, the Secretariat has been instructed to request Governments to indicate exactly how they dispose of seized drugs and the provisions of their laws on the subject, particularly the manner in which the seizures are included in national statistics.

During the discussion on the illicit traffic, the Committee's attention was drawn to the necessity of strengthening co-operation between the police authorities and the League of Nations. The Committee also had submitted to it by the delegates of the International Police Commission, who had been invited to be present at some of its meetings, a draft international convention similar to the Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency and providing for the establishment in each country of a central police office. It formed a Sub-Committee to study all the aspects of the question. This Sub-Committee, in a meeting held at the time of the Conference for the Limitation of the Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs, decided to request the Chairman of the Advisory Committee to send a preliminary questionnaire on the subject to the members of the Committee and to the Canadian and United States representatives on the Sub-Committee. The replies to this preliminary questionnaire might be used to prepare a more detailed questionnaire which the Advisory Committee could ask the Council to communicate to all Governments, as was done in the case of the Convention on Counterfeiting Currency.

Finally, the Committee decided to study the question of the chartering of vessels by foreigners for illicit traffic in opium from the Persian Gulf and recommended that this point should be submitted to experts in law and maritime custom. The Council referred this question to the Advisory and Technical Committee for Communications and Transit. The latter Committee, at its sixteenth session in June 1931, decided to refer the matter to its Committee on Ports and Maritime Navigation, to be reinforced for the purpose of this enquiry by one or more members of the Permanent Legal Committee as selected by the Chairman of that Committee.

Finally, I would refer to the action taken in connection with the important recommendation adopted by the 1930 Assembly which, as I stated above, led to the insertion of an article in the Convention for Limitation. The object of this recommendation was that a very minute enquiry should be conducted into the illicit traffic and that information of every kind regarding the traffic should be communicated to the Secretary-General. This would make it possible to ascertain whether the various measures already recommended by the Advisory Committee for many years were being effectively applied.

Following on the Circular Letter 330.1930.XI, of November 26th, 1930, addressed by the Secretary-General to the various Governments on this subject, the Secretary-General had received (on September 7th, 1931) replies from the following States : Albania, Argentine, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Ecuador, Estonia, Finland, Germany, Great Britain, Guatemala, Haiti, Irish Free State, Italy, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxemburg, Mexico, Monaco, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Siam, Sudan, Union of South Africa, Uruguay and Venezuela. South Africa, Belgium, Estonia, Latvia and Monaco have, in their replies, forwarded certain information concerning seizures. A number of countries — Albania, Argentine, Canada, Egypt, Great Britain, Luxemburg, the Netherlands, Portugal, Sudan and Venezuela — stated that they were already applying the measures recommended by the Advisory Committee. Denmark, Italy and Poland stated that they would continue to communicate or would henceforth communicate information concerning seizures. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Germany, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Siam and Uruguay have promised to forward replies from the competent authorities. Finally, Finland, the Irish Free State, Lithuania and Norway stated that the question did not arise in their territories, there being no illicit traffic there.

IV. Enquiry into the Drug Habit.

In the second part of the resolution to which I have referred, the eleventh Assembly invited the Advisory Committee to consider whether Governments should be requested to conduct an enquiry regarding the approximate number, for each kind of drug, of addicts in their respective countries, the approximate amount of the drugs consumed and the methods of treatment employed.

Certain members of the Advisory Committee pointed out the difficulties which such an enquiry would encounter and expressed doubt as to its utility. They said that the information which might be obtained would only be approximate, that there was no average dose of consumption in the case of drug addicts, nor any standardised method of treatment. On the other hand, those who supported the enquiry declared that it was relatively easy to obtain statistics for certain countries and that it was of great importance for the combating of an evil to ascertain the exact extent thereof. The Committee finally decided to consult the Health Committee on this subject and to request Governments, not necessarily to undertake a special enquiry, but at least to supply the fullest information they may possess on the subject. This decision was approved by the Council.

V. Various Questions.

The Committee examined a number of questions connected with other more special branches of its work. It instructed the Secretariat to consult the various Governments with regard to the proposal of the Uruguayan Government for the improvement of the system of import and export certificates.

It has re-formed a Special Committee of Experts to amend and amplify on the basis of the replies received from the various Governments the provisional lists of substances and preparations referred to in the Hague and Geneva Conventions which it had established and communicated to the various countries. This Sub-Committee, which met during the Conference for the Limitation of the Manufacture of Narcotics, has prepared the draft of a new list which it proposes to examine at a second meeting to be held shortly.

Finally, the Committee reached important decisions concerning the organisation of its work, which is still growing. It decided to hold two sessions in future ; one in the spring and the other in the autumn, and to appoint a small Sub-Committee to meet before each session in order to make a preliminary examination of the seizure reports. The Committee appointed the delegates of Germany, China, Spain, France, Great Britain, Japan and the Netherlands as members of this Sub-Committee, which will hold its first meeting during the present Assembly.

VI. Permanent Central Opium Board and Commission of Enquiry into the Control of Opium-Smoking in the Far East.

I do not think it will be necessary for me to give any details regarding the work of the Permanent Central Opium Board, which has been summarised in the report on statistics for 1929, submitted to the Council in January 1931. This document is analysed in the report of the Secretary-General to the Assembly (document A.6.1931). At its session held from August 10th to August 20th, 1931, the Committee examined the statistics for 1930.

Nor need I dwell upon the work of the Commission of Enquiry into the Control of Opium-Smoking in the Far East, whose report, submitted to the Council on January 22nd, 1931, is at the disposal of the members of the present Committee. The Conference to deal with this question will meet at Bangkok on November 9th this year on the invitation of the Siamese Government. I wish, however, to mention the fact that the Council at its sixty-second session, at the meeting held on January 22nd, 1931, decided, on the suggestion of the Commission of Enquiry, to ask the Advisory Committee on the Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs to examine and report to the Council in regard to the possibility of convening a Conference of the Governments concerned to decide whether poppy-growing could be limited and supervised and to report to the Council on the subject.

This, then, is a brief outline of the year's work. Whereas ordinarily, at former meetings of the Fifth Committee, the dominant impression produced by this survey of the general situation was extremely sombre, this year the picture is a brighter one. Although, of course, the drug peril is still serious, we feel that public opinion is taking a greater interest in our campaign and particularly that our means of action are becoming better adapted to our purpose : the wider application of the Geneva Convention and the new weapons which the Convention for the Limitation of Manufacture will place in the hands of the League justify, I think, a hope that effective results will be secured. In order, however, to ensure the best possible result, we must not relax our efforts, but intensify them, and ensure even closer co-operation than in the past.

TRAFFIC IN OPIUM AND OTHER DANGEROUS DRUGS

QUESTION OF DISCONTINUING THE DISTRIBUTION OF ANNUAL REPORTS TO GOVERNMENTS.

MEMORANDUM BY THE SECRETARIAT, SUBMITTED TO THE COMMITTEE ON SEPTEMBER 12TH, 1931.

At its tenth session, the Assembly, on the proposal of the Fifth Committee, decided that the annual reports of Governments on traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs should in future be circulated textually to all Governments as well as to the Advisory Committee.

The Advisory Committee, at its fourteenth session, came to the conclusion that, subject to the approval of the Assembly, the circulation both to the Committee and to the Governments of the annual reports of a large number of colonies and territories, indicated in a list in its report to the Council, should be discontinued, more attention being given than in the past by the Secretariat to such reports in its yearly summary of annual reports.

In view of the need for economy, the Fifth Committee may wish to consider the desirability of discontinuing the circulation of reports to Governments, this being confined, as in the past, to a circulation to the Advisory Committee of the reports in extenso and the circulation to the Committee and to all Governments of the printed summary of the annual reports prepared by the Secretariat. The cost of the circulation to Governments (cost of postage, paper, roneoing, etc.) is fairly considerable.

In a certain number of cases, annual reports which reach the Secretariat in printed form are too long to roneo—i.e., exceed forty roneod pages. Usually, in such cases, the Governments forward a sufficient number of copies for distribution in the original language to both the Advisory Committee and to States Members. But, owing to the length of such reports, it is necessary for the Secretariat to print them for purposes of distribution in the other language of the League. The expense of printing could be avoided if the Secretariat were instructed by the Assembly in such cases to abridge the report, for the purpose of roneoing it in the other League language.

An estimate of the total saving involved in the carrying out of the change in procedure indicated above will be circulated later to the Fifth Committee.

IMPROVEMENTS IN PENAL ADMINISTRATION

REPORT PRESENTED BY THE RAPPORTEUR, M. V. PELLA (ROUMANIA).

INTRODUCTION.

The introductory portion of the report on penal administration, which was submitted to us by the Secretary-General, contains a summary of the resolutions adopted by the League of Nations since 1930 ; there is then no need for me to trace here the history of the question brought before the League of Nations by the Howard League for Penal Reform.

Nevertheless, it might be well to mention that, as far back as 1924, a proposal was made to the League of Nations relating to international co-operation for the prevention of ordinary crimes (see Revue internationale de Droit pénal, No. 1, 1924). In 1927, as representative of Roumania, I pointed out at the eighth Assembly that the League cannot remain indifferent to the increase in crime which is keeping pace with the continuous transformation and internationalisation of contemporary social life by becoming international itself. Accordingly, on behalf of the Roumanian delegation, I suggested to the eighth Assembly that the League should also turn its attention to this scourge of humanity. The suggestions I made during the discussion of the problem of the codification of international law at the 1927 Assembly (see document C.548.M.196.1925.V, page 40) were referred to by the Howard League in its memorandum to the League of Nations (document A.P.1).

In this document, the Howard League stated that " in connection with the progressive codification of international law, the Committee of Three Jurists, whose report was presented to the Council of the League in June 1929, suggested that there should be conventions on international criminal law and conventions on mutual assistance between States with a view to the punishment of criminal offences ", and added that, in its opinion, it was surely the concern of the States Members of the League that the methods of such punishment should be enlightened and humane.

I believe that an international solution of the problem of penal administration is essential and that the League of Nations would be discharging its duty by organising international co-operation for the suppression of crime.

Internationally, the problem of penal administration, or rather of international criminal policy, may be regarded from several angles.

For the purpose of preparing a systematic plan for the League's activities, mention may first be made of the question of unifying in the various systems of national law certain charges relating to offences which threaten the interests of humanity at large — i.e., offences sometimes called " international crimes ".

Secondly, an improvement is desirable in international co-operation for the prosecution and punishment of criminals, particularly in regard to extradition, regulations governing the despatch and execution of letters of request, police co-operation, etc. In this connection, the settlement of certain conflicts of competence, as a result of which in some cases (negative conflicts of competence) international offenders now escape punishment altogether, should be examined.

A third aspect of the problem is the execution of the penalty and the measures of security, particularly terms of imprisonment (treatment of prisoners) and the assistance to be given to prisoners on discharge.

The dictates of humanity and the necessity for finding the best means of ensuring the offender's readaptation to his social environment fully demonstrate the international importance of this last aspect of the problem.

As the League of Nations is now displaying, or tends to display, activities in all these fields, it would be worth while, not only with a view to co-ordinating its own activities, but also for the purpose of co-ordinating the activities of other institutions in these matters, to give a succinct account of what has been done by all these organisations in the last few years.

International Offences and the Unification of Indictments.

As far as the first subject is concerned — i.e., the unification of criminal law, we must acknowledge that the activity of the League with regard to certain offences of an international character, such as the traffic in women and children, slavery, the traffic in drugs, obscene publications and, recently, counterfeiting currency, has been most productive.

The fact that international conventions concerning the offences referred to have been drafted or supplemented through the lead given by the League and under its auspices bears eloquent witness to the League's increasing activity in this field.

An examination of these conventions shows, first of all, the tendency to secure international solidarity against criminality by the unification of certain indictments in the law of the various countries. Although the results obtained in the older conventions as regards the unification of indictments cannot be regarded as altogether satisfactory, we must nevertheless acknowledge that, as far as counterfeiting currency is concerned, the Convention of April 1929 reached a satisfactory solution.

This Convention constitutes in some sort a model to be kept in mind when previous conventions concerning the prevention and punishment of certain other international offences are revised.

The Conference for the Limitation of the Manufacture of Narcotic and Other Dangerous Drugs, which was held under the auspices of the League in July 1931, and which (in the Final Act) contains the following recommendation, expressed a similar view :

> " The Conference,
> " Considering that the Advisory Committee on Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs has been presented by the International Criminal Police Commission with a draft international Convention for the suppression of the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs, the main features of which are based on the Convention of April 20th, 1929, against counterfeiting currency :
> " Expresses the wish that, on the basis of the work undertaken by the Advisory Committee, a convention may be concluded with the least possible delay for the prosecution and punishment of breaches of the law relating to the manufacture of, trade in and possession of narcotic drugs. "

Clearly, the tendency to unify certain indictments in municipal law is also facilitated by the way in which the juridical conceptions of the civilised nations are being influenced by the international spirit, the effect being to internationalise municipal law. At a more distant date, we may even contemplate the possibility of embodying all the provisions of existing Conventions in a general convention, which would include all the rules relating to the punishment of offences declared to be international offences by treaty provisions. All other offences which the Governments might agree to regard as international in character could be inserted within the framework of such a convention, without it being necessary to draft fresh conventions.

But it is not only in the matter of indictments that certain of the existing Conventions referred to tend towards international unification, or have even succeeded in reaching it. A similar unification is now being carried out with regard to the fundamental principles of criminal law. For instance, the Convention of April 1929 for the suppression of counterfeiting currency contains provisions concerning attempts to commit forgery, complicity and habitual criminality.

It may be recalled that the League is at present undertaking investigations for the purpose of preparing fresh conventions for the punishment of certain other offences which are regarded as having an international character. We shall merely mention the Financial Committee, which is dealing with the question of the possible preparation of a convention for the prevention and international suppression of the forging of documents of value other than paper money and bank-notes — e.g., shares and bonds, cheques, bills of exchange, etc.

Certain private or governmental institutions, such as the Association internationale de droit pénal (Brussels Congress, 1926) and the International Prison Commission (Prague Congress, 1930), reflecting the contemporary tendency towards the international unification of criminal law, have discussed the problem of unification and passed resolutions clearly favourable to such unification.

A special international institution for the unification of criminal law has also been set up. The aim of the International Bureau for the Unification of Law, as the institution is called, is to study the proposals made by Governments, the various organisations of the League of Nations and international associations for harmonising and co-ordinating criminal law; to carry out preparatory work for the purpose of deciding which questions of criminal law can form the subject of uniform regulations in the various countries, and to take the necessary steps for summoning international conferences for the unification of criminal law.

Proceeding with the caution necessary for the accomplishment of such a task, the three official Conferences for the Unification of Criminal Law which have so far been held have secured encouraging results. The aim of these Conferences (Warsaw 1927, Rome 1928, and Brussels 1930) was, inter alia, the unification of indictments for offences covered by the Conventions for the suppression of the traffic in drugs, the traffic in obscene publications and the suppression of counterfeiting currency. The next Unification Conference, which is to meet in Paris at the end of this year, will deal particularly with the traffic in women and children, slavery and piracy.

The present time is clearly favourable for the unification of criminal law, and we ought to take advantage of the opportunity. Many States are now engaged in framing new criminal codes. These countries may at present unify the principles relating to punishment — particularly the punishment of international offences — more easily than when they have framed and passed their codes.

Accordingly, taking into account the desires indicated both in international Conventions drawn up under the auspices of the League and in resolutions adopted by international Conferences and Congresses, the Fifth Committee might, in connection with the general problem of penal administration, submit a very general recommendation to the Assembly concerning the progressive unification of criminal law.

At one of its previous sessions, the League Assembly pronounced itself in favour of the principle of the unification of private law. It would, therefore, have no reason for objecting to the principle of the unification of criminal law.

Of course, specialists will have to establish carefully the scheme of unification — i.e., determine the scope of such a unification.

International Co-operation for the Prosecution and Punishment of Criminals.

Reference must also be made to what the League has done in connection with the second part of the problem.

The Committee for the Codification of International Law investigated the question of extradition, the competence of States with regard to offences committed outside their territory and the communication of judicial and extrajudicial documents in criminal matters. Although its work did not lead to the conclusion of multilateral conventions, it nevertheless provided models for certain countries in framing bilateral conventions.

A case in point is the Convention regarding Extradition and Judicial Co-operation in Criminal Matters between Portugal and Roumania, which was signed at Lisbon in February 1930. The preliminary draft was prepared by your Rapporteur, and was directly based on certain provisional and tentative results obtained by the League Committee for the Progressive Codification of International Law.

This Convention between Roumania and Portugal was a step forward, not only from a humanitarian point of view, but also from the point of view of the principles of criminal law in regard to extradition and judicial co-operation.

The codification of international criminal law is often seriously impeded by national susceptibilities, which will continue as long as important differences exist between the codes of the various countries in regard to the fundamental principles of prosecution and punishment. That is why the Interparliamentary Union, at its Paris Conference (August 1927), bearing in mind the difficulties encountered by the Committee for the Codification of International Law, adopted a recommendation which was supported by Professor Schücking, to prepare the ground for the codification of international criminal law by first of all removing the differences in the various codes — i.e., by a preliminary unification of certain principles of criminal law.

Clear evidence that a large number of States are decidedly in favour of the unification of certain principles of criminal law is furnished by Recommendations 12 and 14 of the Diplomatic Conference on Counterfeiting Currency.

The said recommendations ask " that the rules for the extradition of accused or convicted persons should be unified on an international basis with a view to obtaining a really effective suppression of crime, and that the despatch and the execution of letters of request should be regulated by an international convention, so as to produce a uniform system of rules ".

It is also interesting to recall that the first Conference of Central Police Offices, which met at Geneva under the auspices of the League in March 1931, unanimously adopted a recommendation in favour of the conclusion of multilateral and regional extradition treaties, to replace, in the case of certain groups of States whose legal codes present no fundamental differences of principle, the many existing bilateral treaties (see document C.193.M.76.1913.II.A, page 15).

It has also been urged that the opposition between countries whose penal system is based on strict territoriality and those whose systems admit as a general rule of the punishment of crimes committed abroad constitutes a serious difficulty in arriving at international agreements on criminal matters.

Experience, however, has proved the contrary. Indeed, in the Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency, drawn up under the auspices of the League, compromise formulæ of a most satisfactory nature were devised, which, none the less, respect the principles of competence in criminal matters maintained by the different countries. This is the case with Article 4 (complicity, distinct offences), with Article 6 (international recognition of previous convictions), with Article 8 (principle of active personality) and with Article 9 (partial application of the principle of the universality of punishment).

Reference may now be made to the work accomplished in the matter of international criminal law by governmental or private institutions. Without calling further attention to what was done before the war by the International Criminal Law Union and the Institut de droit international, or to the more recent work of the International Law Association, a special committee of which, at its congress in Warsaw, adopted a draft model extradition treaty, mention should be made of the fact that the International Penal Law Association, the International Prisons Commission, the International Criminal Police Commission and the International Bureau for the Unification of Criminal Law have undertaken theel aboration of certain principles of international criminal law.

As regards international police co-operation, we would here recall a recommendation made by the Conference of Central Police Offices held this year in Geneva under the auspices of the League. This Conference recommends :

> " . . . that the Council of the League of Nations should, if it thanks fit and expedient, in view of the increasingly international character of crime in its various aspects, study the possibility of preparing a Convention on international co-operation between police forces and the establishment of an official police information bureau forming a link between the various police forces, with the general object of ensuring more effective prevention and punishment of crime " (See Document C.193.M.76.1931.II.A).

It is clear that, in this branch of its work, the League of Nations can derive advantage from collaborating with an important institution — namely, the International Criminal Police Commission. The work of this institution — the value of which has been unanimously recognised by specialists — the valuable assistance which it has afforded and is affording to States in identifying and arresting criminals, as well as its congresses on scientific police work, show clearly how useful and helpful the Commission can be in securing the general application of international measures relating to identification and arrest.

Execution of Penalties, Preventive Measures and Aid to Discharged Prisoners.

A penalty can no longer in these days be regarded merely as the infliction of pain or the expiation of a crime. Apart from quite exceptional cases, when the criminal has to be segregated from his fellows, a penalty is to be looked on as a means of readapting the offender to social life — as means of reclamation. It is, moreover, this characteristic of punishment which has contributed to the great development of penology.

Owing to the great importance of the problem, it has been suggested that the question of drawing up a special code for the execution of penalties might be examined. This question has been submitted to the Third Congress of the International Penal Law Association to be held at Palermo in April 1932.

If, in the immense majority of cases, the penalty is regarded as a means of reclaiming the delinquent, and if it is intended to influence the whole character of the criminal, it must obviously not be executed in a barbarous spirit, as thereby it would fail in its real aim, which is to reform and humanise the delinquent.

Thus it is not without a certain uneasiness that we have to draw attention to the abuses in the execution of penalties, to which reference has been made by the Howard League in its memorandum addressed to the League of Nations.

In view therefore of the social and humanitarian importance of this problem, it is clear that the question of the regulation of the execution of penalties of imprisonment, in the light of these fundamental principles, concerns and must concern the League of Nations.

Naturally, in this sphere, the League of Nations can be assured of the co-operation of two international organisations particularly qualified to assist it in its work — namely, the Howard League for Penal Reform and the International Prison Commission.[1]

[1] As regards the organisation and work of these institutions, see documents A.P.1. and A.P.2.

In reviewing the discussions which have taken place between the Secretariat of the League of Nations and the representative of the International Prison Commission, in pursuance of the resolution of the last Assembly, it would be desirable for the Fifth Committee to accept the proposal for establishing closer relations between the League of Nations and this organisation on all questions dealing with the execution of penalties and preventive measures.

It is of course understood that these relations would not prevent the League from approaching other institutions in regard to the same questions with a view to adding to its documentary material.

Bearing in mind also the important work of the International Prison Commission, there should be a discussion as to the advisability of proposing to the Assembly a recommendation to the effect that States Members of the League which do not as yet form part of this Commission should be invited to belong to it.

Another question on which the Fifth Committee will be called upon to give an opinion is that of the action to be taken in regard to the enquiries carried out and the observations submitted by the various Governments on the General Body of Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners drawn up by the International Prison Commission. These Rules give rise to a large number of problems. It would be impossible for the Assembly at the present stage to pronounce upon the substance of this question.

While recognising the great value of these Rules, it is obvious that they might be regarded by certain countries which have made considerable progress in this matter as falling below the minimum requirements desirable.

Moreover, in fixing the minimum conditions, care must be taken to avoid giving the impression that certain other countries whose systems conform to those conditions need make no further efforts. We are therefore of opinion that it would be preferable to convert these minimum Rules into a declaration of fundamental principles for the treatment of prisoners.

Without attempting a full analysis of the Rules drawn up by the International Prison Commission, which, generally speaking, have had a favourable reception, we would point out that the international institutions consulted, and also the International Labour Office and certain organs of the League, have raised objections in regard to certain special points.

The International Labour Office has submitted to the Secretary-General a learned memorandum on prison labour (document 200.19.01), in which it raises objections, inter alia, to Rule No. 13 concerning remuneration for work. This Rule is not imperative, but is a simple recommendation. The International Labour Office also regrets that the General Body of Rules does not deal with the quantity of work given to the prisoner.

As regards the principles upon which the reclassification of offenders should be based, it is obvious that the problem of juvenile delinquents should receive special attention, and more stress might perhaps be laid upon this problem in the General Body of Rules. The Child Welfare Committee recommends that detention in prisons should be absolutely forbidden in the case of children.

As regards the treatment of juvenile delinquents, certain countries are very backward, while others have made considerable progress. Among the most recent reforms, we would mention the entry into force of the new Italian Penal Code (July 1931).

The League's Child Welfare Committee has already undertaken enquiries into the question of juvenile delinquents, and it is to be hoped that its efforts will help to improve the methods of their treatment.

The problem of habitual criminality, and the special measures to be taken in regard to the treatment of regular criminals might also be dealt with more definitely in the General Body of Rules.

We would also mention the special treatment of abnormal criminals; when the Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners are revised, this question should be dealt with more fully.

Lastly, in certain replies from the organisations consulted, special reference is made to the question of the treatment of political offenders. Without going more deeply into this matter, one fact is certain — namely, that there is a great difference between political offences and common law offences. The consequences of this difference should therefore not be overlooked in devising a model prison system.

Moreover, the International Penal Law Association (Memorandum by Professor Roux) considers that the question whether maintenance of very large prisons is or is not desirable should also have been settled in the General Body of Rules. The International Penal Law Association is in favour of medium-sized prisons, because if these institutions are too large the moral influence of the director cannot be effectively exercised. The International Labour Office states in its memorandum that it entirely agrees with the observations of the International Penal Law Association.

As regards the separation of offenders (separation by sex, age, and separation of untried from convicted prisoners) this Association also suggests that they should be separated according to the motives of the crime.

It would also be desirable, when the General Body of Rules is revised, to lay further stress on the application of the progressive system, which is based on a careful classification of prisoners and is designed to avoid the risk of moral contagion.

The delicate problem of the cell system is also dealt with in the observations submitted by the various organisations. For instance, the International Penal Law Union (memorandum by Professor Grünhut) states that permanent solitary confinement is no longer admissible in any case. The length of time during which a prisoner may be confined in a cell should be strictly limited by the legislation of every country.

Certain other problems, such as disciplinary measures, corporal punishment of a disciplinary nature, and instruments of restraint, have also given rise to interesting observations.

Finally, the problem of prisoners' health has given rise to certain suggestions on the part of the Health Committee, which also proposes to continue its investigations into this special matter.

Other questions which have been dealt with in certain countries (the sex problem in prisons, etc.) might also form the subject of further enquiries.

The most careful attention should also be given to the choice of officials. The question may be asked whether it would not be best to entrust the management of women's prisons entirely to women. The International Labour Office considers that, if enquiries were made, they would show that, in order to ensure satisfactory organisation, it is in no wise necessary to entrust the management of women's prisons to men. In all countries in which these duties have been assigned to women, they have been equal to their task. In Spain, the general control of prisons has recently been entrusted to a woman.

Certain other important questions, such as the conversion in certain countries of a fine, in the case of non-payment, into imprisonment might also be dealt with. In this connection, the desirability, in accordance with the provisions of certain draft penal codes, of converting the fine into a certain number of days' labour without detention, or, if it is impossible for the person convicted to work, into a number of days' arrest at home, should be examined with a view to preventing the imposition of short-term penalties of imprisonment, which in many cases tend to corrupt him.

It would also be of interest to examine the conditions under which the system of open-air labour, which, when it is well organised, produces admirable results in certain countries, might be made general.

Greater attention should be given to remuneration for the prisoners' labour. Certain countries, such as Poland (Decree of March 7th, 1928), have gone so far as to allow prisoners the legal right to substantiate their claim to the sum placed to their account.

Lastly, the formation in all countries of a fund derived in part from the prisoner's labour should be considered. The object of this fund, which was introduced in Amsterdam prisons as long ago as the seventeenth century, is to make it possible to readapt the offender and fit him for an honest life after he leaves prison, and also to assist the members of his family. In certain countries it is possible for a portion of the prisoner's earnings to be given to the members of his family; this is the case in Austria, Belgium, Finland, Germany, Norway, Sweden and some other countries.

Before concluding this survey of the execution of the penalty, we should like to refer to one of the most delicate problems, which has given rise to a great deal of discussion — namely, deportation (banishment, transportation).

From a humanitarian point of view, it would obviously be of interest to consider whether the actual system of deportation should be abandoned, or whether all that is necessary is to improve the conditions of application of such a system, so that the life and health of convicts may no longer be endangered.

From this standpoint also, attention might be drawn to the necessity of limiting the period during which convicts are required to work in mines.

In view of the above particulars and of the fact that a large number of questions still remain to be cleared up, it is obvious that we are not in a position to reach a decision on the real problem of the treatment of prisoners. The General Body of Rules might perhaps be referred to the International Prison Commission, with a recommendation that it should examine the relevant observations. The Commission might be asked, after revising the General Body of Rules, to refer them back to the League.

The International Labour Office might also be asked to continue its investigations into prison labour.

Finally, the moral support, assistance and repatriation of foreign prisoners who have been discharged represent some of the grave problems which cannot be ignored in considering the whole question of international policy in regard to crime.

In this connection, the establishment of an international federation of the different associations dealing in each country with the welfare of prisoners might perhaps be encouraged.

In view of the necessity for considering the problem of penal administration in the three aspects referred to above, we think it would be desirable for the League, whose different committees already deal with certain questions of penal law, to co-ordinate its work in this connection, since these questions are interconnected and all come within the scope of the general problem of the prevention and punishment of crime.

It would also be advisable for the League to endeavour to co-ordinate the multiple activities of the governmental and private organisations mentioned in this report — namely, the International Prison Commission, the International Penal Law Association, the International Penal Law Union, the International Bureau for the Unification of Criminal Law, the International Criminal Police Commission and the Howard League for Penal Reform.

The League of Nations might perhaps take advantage of the meeting of the Commission for the Protection and Welfare of Children and Young People in April 1932 to consult the Government delegates serving on this Commission (to whom might be added a representative of each of the six organisations mentioned above) in regard to a systematic programme of work in the domain of penal administration. This meeting might also serve as a means of establishing closer co-operation between those organisations and the League.

The results of this consultation in April could then be submitted to next year's Assembly for its decision.

In conclusion, we must record our conviction that the work to be undertaken by the League in the sphere of penal administration will be greatly facilitated by the fact that there can be no difference of opinion among the Governments as to the necessity for the effective prevention and punishment of crime.

In the campaign against the common danger of criminality, all that is needed is to give concrete form to the sentiments of solidarity by which all civilised nations are inspired, and to co-ordinate their means of preventing and punishing crime. This will make it possible to organise the more effective protection of society against crime, and, what is still more important, to readapt the offender to his social environment.

By intensifying the means of action and by stimulating international co-operation for the prevention of criminality, the League will help to destroy the spirit of violence and rapacity which leads individuals as members of society, and also nations as members of the international community, to commit crime.

WORK OF THE TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN COMMITTEE

REPORT PRESENTED BY THE RAPPORTEUR — MRS. PLUMPTRE (CANADA).

The tenth session of the Traffic in Women and Children Committee was held in Geneva in April 1931, under the presidency of His Excellency M. Chodzko (Minutes of meeting, document C.401.M.163.1931.IV).

The members of this committee have received the report of the session and the other documents distributed by the Secretariat.

The Council, at its session of May 1931, took note of the report of the Committee and commended it to the attention of the Members of the League.

PROGRESS REPORT.

The members of this committee will be deeply interested in the question of the accession of Members of the League to the 1921 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children. Apart from colonies, possessions and mandated territories, there are at present thirty-seven Governments parties to the 1921 Convention, the last accession being that of Lithuania, the delegate of that country having deposited the signature last Monday.

The Advisory Committee of the Traffic in Women and Children devoted special attention to this problem at its last sessions, and stated that in order effectively to suppress the traffic the Convention must be extended to as large a number of countries as possible, and the Council directed the Secretary-General to ask Governments not Members of the League who had not adhered to the Convention, whether they were prepared to do so. The following countries were approached : Afghanistan, Argentine Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Hedjaz, Iceland, Liechtenstein, Mexico, San Marino, Sudan, Turkey, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America.

I am glad to be able to inform you that the Government of Monaco acceded to the Convention on July 18th, 1931, and that the Governments of Turkey and Mexico have declared their intention of considering their accession. On June 27th, 1931, the Egyptian Government informed us that the competent authorities had reported in favour of accession and that the ratifications of the Agreement of 1904 and of the Conventions of 1910 and 1921 will be forwarded shortly. The Government of the United States stated in a letter dated August 18th that it was unable to become a party to this Convention, as the Convention of 1910 contains projects which pertain, under the constitution of the United States, to the police functions of the several States of the Union, and are therefore outside the competence of the Federal Government. It adds, however, that it is in full sympathy with the aims of the Convention and does not wish it to be understood that the United States would be unable in the future to co-operate in the formulation of an International Convention which might enable the Government of the United States to become a party.

On the other hand, it must be noted with regret that fourteen States Members of the League have not yet acceded to the Convention, and that five have not ratified their signature. It would be of great importance to the work of this committee, if it were possible to discover the reasons for these abstentions, and to secure further ratifications before the Assembly of 1932.

Annual Reports from Governments.

The Advisory Committee noted that the annual reports of Governments were more detailed than in former years but that many of them did not respond to the Council's request for reports on national cases of trafficking and procuring. As this seemed to be partly due to a misunderstanding of the questionnaire, a revised questionnaire has been prepared and sent out to all Governments represented on the Advisory Committee for their observations and suggestions.

Up to the present time, reports for 1930 have been received from twenty-three Governments, and it is hoped that reports will be received before the next meeting of the Advisory Committee from all the signatories to the Convention. The largest number of reports received in any previous year is twenty-six.

As usual, the reports received from the voluntary organisations represented on the Committee by assessors were of great interest and proved how valuable the help of these organisations is in the suppression of this traffic.

In connection with the work of the voluntary organisations, I would like to draw attention to the resolution adopted by the International Bureau for the Suppression of Traffic in Women and Children at the Congress held last October at Warsaw. This resolution has been communicated to the Members of the Committee in document C.441.M.188.1931.IV, and the resolutions contain suggestions worthy of study.

Central Authorities.

The work of the central authorities is of the utmost importance for the effective suppression of the traffic, and the Council instructed the Secretariat to prepare a preliminary report. In view of the limited number of replies received, the Secretariat could only indicate the lines of an enquiry and the existing defects and remedies, of which one of the serious defects is the lack of co-ordination and standardisation.

This report has still to be studied by the Governments represented on the Committee, and it was therefore agreed to defer the examination of this question until the next meeting, which will take place on April 4th, 1932.

Penalties to be imposed upon "Souteneurs".

A concise study of the laws and penalties relating to souteneurs and copies of a revised draft Protocol supplementing the 1921 Convention for the Suppression of Traffic in Women and Children have been supplied to the members of this committee (document C.441.M.188.1931.IV). This valuable document embodies much careful research into both laws and penalties, and should guide the deliberations of this committee in dealing with the suppression of this most repulsive aspect of the Traffic in Women and Children.

Protection of Young Female Artistes and the Repatriation of Foreign Prostitutes.

The Advisory Committee discussed both these questions at its meeting last May, but, in both cases, considered that fuller information and further consideration were necessary before a report could be brought forward. Both questions will, therefore, be further discussed at the next meeting of the Advisory Committee.

Women Police.

A preliminary study on the use of women police was submitted by the Secretariat to the Advisory Committee, which decided that at the present stage of the enquiry conclusions would still be premature. It stated, however, that women police may be very useful in connection with the protection of women and children in moral danger, and that they played a particularly effective part in the campaign against the traffic in women and children. It was of opinion that the question of the organisation of this police cannot be determined in any uniform way applicable to all countries and that it should be adapted to national conditions.

Obscene Publications.

Thirty-three Governments have replied to the questionnaire on obscene publications sent out in 1930, enquiring as to the circulation of such publications and the steps taken to suppress it. A very complete collection of laws relating to this question has been compiled by the Secretariat (document C.T.F.E.500 (a)). The Advisory Committee recommends further standardisation in the methods used to deal with this problem, which depends upon the co-operation, etc., of all States Members of the League, and this Committee will no doubt wish to do all in its power to secure this co-operation as suggested by the Council at its meeting held in May 1930. The Council has already drawn attention to the difficulty that Governments find in giving annual replies to the whole questionnaire on obscene publications and the British representative on the Advisory Committee suggested that it would be better to include in the amended questionnaire on traffi in women one or two questions on obscene publications. Such questions have been included i the new questionnaire now submitted to the Traffic in Women and Children Committee.

LAWS AND REGULATIONS TO SAFEGUARD PUBLIC HEALTH AGAINST THE DANGERS OF PROSTITUTION

In accordance with the suggestion made by the Assembly in 1930, the Advisory Committe decided at its meeting last April that, as investigations into this matter were being made b both the Health Organisation of the League and the International Union for Combating Venerea Disease, it would be wise to await the reports of these two bodies before deciding whether an further investigations were necessary. My colleagues will be interested to hear that the town o Nancy has just closed its licensed houses. In France, this question belongs to the province o municipal authorities.

ABOLITION OF AGE-LIMIT CONTAINED IN THE 1910 CONVENTION.

Twenty-six Governments have replied in favour of abolishing the age-limit of twenty-on years laid down in the 1910 Convention as amended by the Convention of 1921. This shows a marked increase in the number of replies in favour of abolishing the age-limit, but, in view o reservations made by certain Governments, the Advisory Committee asked that the matte might be reconsidered the following year in connection with other amendments to the 192 Convention and previous international agreements.

ENQUIRY INTO TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN IN THE FAR EAST.

The Travelling Commission of Enquiry has completed only half its itinerary and therefor no report of its work can be presented at this time. The Commission has already visited th following countries: Siam, Indo-China, Hong-Kong, Macao, the Philippine Islands, China, Japan and Java. Everywhere, the Commission has been welcomed and afforded every facility in collecting information.

BUDGET.

I have finally to draw the attention of the Committee to a budgetary question. The Advisory Committee recommended in 1923 that the Secretariat should cause a digest of the laws and regulations against the traffic in women to be prepared and distributed to the Members of the League. The Assembly of 1924 endorsed this decision on September 25th. The last Assembly, at its meeting of September 27th, stated that it thought " this collection of laws and regulations would be of great value ", and asked that it should be published as soon as possible. The Secretariat therefore included the sum of 12,000 Swiss francs in the budget for this purpose. The Supervisory Committee at its meeting of last May did not agree to this provision in view of the necessity of cutting down the budget of the League as much as possible. The publication of the collection of laws will therefore have to be postponed.

This brief survey of the present conditions of the subjects under discussion by this Committee is presented with the hope that it may be found useful in the deliberations of these questions during the present session.

WORK OF THE CHILD WELFARE COMMITTEE.

REPORT PRESENTED BY THE RAPPORTEUR, COUNTESS APPONYI (HUNGARY).

The Child Welfare Committee held its seventh session at Geneva from April 14th to 20th last. The report on the work of this session (document C.249.M.113.1931.IV) has already been distributed.

I therefore think it unnecessary to review the Committee's proceedings in detail. I shall merely call the attention of the Fifth Committee to those questions in which success has been achieved or on which the Council has given fresh directions.

In my opinion, the question of the return of children and young people to their homes, which has been on the Child Welfare Committee's agenda for several years, has been solved most satisfactorily. The Committee submitted a draft Convention to the Council, which, at its meeting on May 20th last, approved the draft and instructed the Secretary-General to submit it to all Governments as a model for the conclusion of bilateral or plurilateral agreements. The Secretary-General also requested all Governments to inform him of any agreements they might conclude on that model.

Two other questions to which the Child Welfare Committee has also been devoting attention for several years are those of assistance to foreign minors and the recognition and execution of maintenance orders abroad. A draft Convention on Assistance to Foreign Minors, prepared by the Legal Sub-Committee of the Child Welfare Committee and redrafted in the light of the observations made by Governments, was again submitted to the Child Welfare Committee at its last session.

Some Governments found this draft Convention acceptable, while others put forward objections of principle, which might perhaps have disappeared if a few modifications were made in the text. Many Governments, however, declared that the question of assistance to foreign minors could not be dealt with in a satisfactory manner without reference to the families to which the minors belonged.

In conclusion, the Child Welfare Committee recognise that the problem of assistance to foreign minors was connected with the problem of assistance to destitute foreigners generally, a question which exceeded the limits of its competence. It accordingly recommended the Council to set up a special committee composed of experts appointed by a small number of countries interested in the question, which would study the question as a whole and prepare a preliminary draft international Convention.

When the Committee came to consider the question of the recognition and execution of maintenance orders abroad, it was obliged to recognise one thing — that, while the question has an important bearing on child welfare, it may be argued that the Child Welfare Committee is not competent to deal with it, since maintenance orders may benefit adults at the same time as children. The Committee accordingly came to the conclusion that the study of this question could best be undertaken by a special committee, which might be the same as that which it proposed should be appointed to study the problem of assistance.

At its meeting on May 20th, the Council accepted the Child Welfare Committee's suggestion, and decided to set up a temporary special committee to investigate these two questions. At its meeting on September 4th, it named twelve countries whose Governments would be invited to appoint experts to form this special committee. In making its selection, the Council took into consideration the interest manifested by certain countries in questions relating to assistance at previous international conferences, and also the desirability of having emigration and immigration countries represented.

The twelve countries selected are: Argentine, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain, Hungary, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Poland and Switzerland.

The Council also fixed the first session of this special committee for October 1932, unless circumstances should call for any change.

The question of assistance to foreign minors has been constantly on the Child Welfare Committee's agenda for the last five or six years. Owing to differences of opinion among the Governments, it goes on from questionnaire to questionnaire and has been the subject of a preliminary draft Convention which has been more than once redrafted in the light of the observations of Governments. The question has now been referred to a special committee which will not meet until October 1932.

I hope the Fifth Committee will express a strong desire that the meetings of this special committee should not be further postponed. It might be well to call the attention of the experts to the main ideas on the subject of assistance to foreign minors put forward by Count Carton de Wiart in 1929 in his report to the tenth Assembly.

The questions of assistance to foreign minors and the recognition and execution of maintenance orders abroad, to which the Child Welfare Committee has devoted so much attention, are now, therefore, to be attacked on new, more general and more comprehensive lines. I have no doubt that the Fifth Committee will wish to remark that the work and the investigations carried out by the Child Welfare Committee, which have led to the appointment of this special committee, have been of real value in the advancement of social and humanitarian causes.

The Child Welfare Committee very carefully examined the reports laid before it by the Rapporteurs and by the Secretariat on the auxiliary services of juvenile courts. It recognised that the three main factors in the treatment of delinquent children — juvenile courts, auxiliary services and institutions entrusted with the execution of the measures prescribed — cannot be considered separately. It decided to publish, in collaboration with the International Prison Commission, all the information collected concerning the existence and organisation of juvenile courts, and it appointed a sub-committee to draft, in agreement with the International Prison Commission, a questionnaire to be sent to all Governments with the object of obtaining information regarding institutions for erring or delinquent minors in all countries, whether they do or do not possess juvenile courts. In a few years, therefore, the Child Welfare Committee will be in possession of full information with the aid of which it will be able to study the whole question — one of the most important in connection with child welfare.

Owing to lack of time, the Committee was obliged to postpone to its next session all discussion on the subjects of illegitimate children and the cinematograph; I think the Fifth Committee will agree with me in approving this decision, and encouraging the Committee not to consider more questions at one time than it can deal with thoroughly and conscientiously.

Various interesting communications were made to the Child Welfare Committee by the liaison officers of the International Labour Office and the Health Organisation, and by certain members and assessors, with regard to blind children, crippled children, the cinematograph, etc. You will find them set out in the report I have already referred to on the work of the Committee's seventh session.

In conclusion, I propose that the Fifth Committee take note of the Child Welfare Committee's report on its seventh session, recommend that the Committee continue its work in conformity with the suggestions and decisions contained in that report, and express its satisfaction with the work done.

A.V/14.1931.

WORK OF THE TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN COMMITTEE

DRAFT REPORT OF THE FIFTH COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY PRESENTED BY THE RAPPORTEUR, MRS. PLUMPTRE (CANADA).

The Fifth Committee has the honour to lay before the Assembly an account of the progress made by the League during the past year in its efforts to suppress the Traffic in Women and Children. Ten years have now elapsed since the conclusion of the Convention of 1921, which represented " the endeavour to secure a common understanding between the Governments with a view to united action ", and consolidated the work previously undertaken by the International Bureau for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children.

The Fifth Committee is happy to announce that, apart from colonies, possessions and mandated territories, thirty-eight Governments are now parties to the Convention — the last signature having been deposited during the present Assembly.

The Traffic in Women and Children Committee devoted special attention to this Convention at its last session; as a result of its deliberations, the Council directed the Secretary-General to ask Governments not members of the League, who had not adhered to the Convention, whether they were prepared to do so. It is of the greatest importance that as many Governments as possible should adhere to this Convention. Therefore the following Governments were approached: Afghanistan, Argentine Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Hedjaz, Iceland, Liechtenstein, San Marino, Sudan, Turkey, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America.

The Government of Turkey has declared its intention of considering accession, and, in June, the Egyptian Government informed the League that the ratifications of the Agreement of 1904 and of the Conventions of 1910 and 1921 would be forwarded shortly. The Government of the United States, while regretting that it was unable to sign the Convention, since some of its provisions pertain to the police functions of the several States of the Union and are therefore outside the competence of the Federal Government, added that it is in full sympathy with the aims of the Convention and hopes to be able to co-operate in the future in the formulation of a Convention to which the United States might become a party. The Committee announces with pleasure that the Governments of Monaco and Lithuania have acceded to the Convention since the last Assembly, and that the British Government has informed the Secretariat of the accessions of the Colony and Protectorate of Gambia, of the Protectorate of Uganda, and of the Territory of Tanganyika.

Yet there are still twelve States Members of the League who have not yet acceded to the Convention and five others who have not yet ratified their signatures. In the resolution with which this report concludes, the Assembly is requested to bring this important matter once more to the attention of Governments.

The Traffic in Women and Children Committee at its tenth session dealt also with two matters directly connected with the Convention.

(a) The Convention of 1910 as amended by the Convention of 1920 fixed the age of consent at twenty-one years; but there is a growing desire to abolish this limit. Twenty-six Governments have replied in favour of abolition; but, in view of the reservations made by certain Governments, the Committee decided to reconsider the matter at a future meeting.

(b) The definition of the souteneur — as differentiated from the procurer, and the penalties which might properly be imposed upon such persons were discussed at great length by the Traffic in Women and Children Committee.

A draft Protocol supplementing the 1921 Convention is now before the Governments for their observations and suggestions. The Secretariat has prepared a Concise Statement of the Laws and Penalties relating to Souteneurs, which embodies much careful research. It should be of great value for study of the matter.

The following resolution, introduced by the representative of Great Britain, and adopted unanimously, suggests a further line of inquiry into this problem:

> " That the Advisory Committee on the Traffic in Women and Children be requested by the Assembly to consider the possibility of ascertaining the results of the penalties on souteneurs inflicted under the different legal systems, with special regard to the recurrent conviction of the same habitual offenders. "

The attention of the Committee was directed by the representative of Roumania to the activities of certain secret societies which carry on the traffic in women and children. It was suggested that the Committee should study the methods by which penalties might be inflicted upon their members.

The Committee on Traffic in Women and Children also dealt with the matter of women police on which a preliminary study was submitted by the Secretariat. It decided, however, that it had not yet sufficient information, based upon experience, to justify the formulation of definite conclusions. On the other hand, the success of women police in some of the places where they had been organised, more especially in dealing with matters relating to women and children, suggests that this matter should be brought again to the attention of the States Members of the League who do not yet employ women in their police service.

It seems evident, from the discussions of the Traffic in Women and Children Committee that the time is approaching when it will be necessary to prepare for a conference to deal with amendments and additions to the 1921 Convention. In addition to the subjects already referred to above, the work of the central authorities appears to need further co-ordination and standardisation. The preliminary report on this subject, prepared by the Secretariat on the instructions of the Council, has still to be studied by the Governments. The Traffic in Women and Children Committee expects to deal with this report and with the replies of the Governments at its 1932 session.

The repatriation of foreign prostitutes has been the subject of preliminary discussions : but there is a great diversity of opinion among States Members of the League as to the advisability of such a measure ; and no conclusions have been reached.

The suppression of the circulation of, and traffic in, obscene publications was brought to the attention of Governments by a questionnaire in 1930. Thirty-three Governments have already replied. The Secretariat has compiled a collection of the laws relating to this question which will be of great assistance in the further standardisation of methods employed in dealing with it. The Traffic in Women and Children Committee suggested that the Secretary-General be instructed to publish these in a handy form as soon as possible.

Particular attention is drawn to the Belgian bill establishing around the schools a protective zone where it is forbidden to exhibit anything which might be of a nature to disturb the imagination of the child, as it is known that the first approaches by agents of the traffic to children and young people are often made through the exhibition of indecent postcards which are printed in certain centres and distributed to all parts of the world. It is therefore evident that the co-operation of all States Members of the League is necessary for effective action.

In connection with Obscene Publications, the influence of pornographic films should not be overlooked. Even some of those prepared as propaganda against prostitution and the traffic are likely to do more harm than good owing to their crude methods of presentation.

The Committee reports, with deep regret, that the present financial conditions of the League do not permit of the printing and distributing of the Digest of the Laws and Regulations against the traffic in women which has been prepared by the Secretariat. Since the last Assembly stated that " this collection of laws and regulations would be of great value ", the Committee hopes that the publication is merely deferred.

In presenting this report, the Fifth Committee desires to direct the attention of the Assembly to the dangers that attend the present conditions of unemployment and economic pressure. Such conditions may tend to make many women and young girls peculiarly open to the approaches of the procurer and the souteneur and to the tempting profits of prostitution. It is especially necessary to control the transfer of young girls, under contract, from one country to another. The co-operation of States in preventing all phases of the Traffic in Women and Children is therefore particularly important now. The signing of the 1921 Convention by those Members who have not already adhered, and the careful implementing of responsibilities by those who have already ratified it, will enable the League to fulfil its duty at this time of special need and difficulty.

In conclusion, the Fifth Committee submits the following resolution :

" The Assembly,

" (1) Having taken note of the Report of the Traffic in Women and Children Committee, welcomes the new accessions to the 1921 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children, and expresses the hope that further ratifications will be registered in 1932.

" (2) Considers that the studies already made on the part played by souteneurs in this traffic shows the need for further consideration of this subject.

" (3) Commends therefore to the attention of States Members of the League the draft protocol supplementing the 1921 Convention, submitted for their approval.

" (4) Thanks the Traffic in Women and Children Committee for its work and invites it to continue its efforts to suppress this infamous trade, especially at this time, when unemployment and economic distress afford special opportunities for the activities of its agents. "

FIRST MEETING.

Held on Wednesday, September 9th, 1931, at 5 p.m.

Chairman : M. MOTTA (Switzerland).

1. Election of the Vice-Chairman.

On the proposal of Lord LYTTON, M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia) was elected Vice-Chairman.

2. Publicity of the Meetings.

On the proposal of the CHAIRMAN, the Committee decided that its meetings should be held in public.

SECOND MEETING.

Held on Tuesday, September 15th, 1931, at 10 a.m.

Chairman : M. MOTTA (Switzerland).

3. Adoption of the Agenda.

The Commission adopted its agenda as follows :

1. Work of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union.
2. Protection of Minorities (referred by the Assembly to the Sixth Committee on the motion of the German delegation).
3. Slavery (referred by the Assembly to the Sixth Committee on the motion of the British delegation.)
4. Mandates (referred by the Assembly to the Sixth Committee on the motion of the Norwegian delegation).
5. Refugees.
6. Intellectual Co-operation.

4. Necessity for Economy in preparing the Budget for 1932 : Resolution adopted by the Assembly on September 12th, 1931.

The CHAIRMAN read the following resolution, adopted by the Assembly on September 12th, on the proposal of M. Politis, Chairman of the Fourth Committee :

"The Assembly,

"Being convinced that it is imperative not further to increase the budget of the League for 1932, which will have to provide for the expense of the International Disarmament Conference, and hoping that it will even be possible to reduce the draft budget :

"Makes a strong appeal to its Committees to follow the principles of economy dictated by present circumstances ;

"Requests these Committees to limit and, if possible, to reduce to the indispensable minimum the programme of work to be undertaken in 1932, and especially to abstain, as far as practicable, from making recommendations which might involve avoidable expenditure."

5. Work of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union.

The CHAIRMAN said that, although the members were of course entitled to discuss the principle of continuing the work of the Commission of Enquiry (documents A.36.1931.VII, and A.38.1931. VII), he trusted that the need for continuing it would not be disputed, and that there would not be much difference of opinion on that point.

The Committee would have to decide at the present meeting to refer to the Second Committee the economic and financial questions examined by the Commission of Enquiry, and then to consider the constitution and methods of work of the Commission, which had submitted a report on this matter, on which the Sixth Committee would have to take a decision.

He drew attention to the draft Pact of Economic Non-Aggression submitted by the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to the Commission of Enquiry for European Union, which had decided, subject to the approval of the Assembly, to set up a Sub-Committee for the study of this question instead of referring it to the Economic Committee of the League.

The Chairman read the following draft resolution submitted by the Estonian delegation :

"The Commission of Enquiry for European Union is instructed to include forthwith and permanently in the programme of its work the question of the various possible methods for the constitution and organisation of European Union.

"The Secretariat of the League is instructed to facilitate the task of the Commission of Enquiry by bringing together and collating all existing scientific information on the subject."

M. SATO (Japan) paid a tribute to the considerable results already achieved by the Commission of Enquiry, and observed that it must be remembered that non-European countries might be deeply concerned in the solution of certain problems which, although of particular interest to Europe, were, in fact, of worldwide scope. For this reason, the Japanese delegation, at the time of the creation of the Commission of Enquiry, had insisted that the resolution of the Assembly which set up the new body should take account of the interest which non-European countries might have in certain of these universal questions. He referred to the fact that the report presented by M. Motta in March 1931 on the organisation and procedure of the Commission of Enquiry was based upon the Assembly resolution, and that the Commission had decided that its meetings should be open to States Members of the League which were not represented on the Commission, and that they should be entitled to submit their views should they think fit. There was no need for him to emphasise the importance of that very desirable decision.

While Japan was glad to see European countries attacking the serious problems of the present day, and while he did not doubt that the Commission would be able to find useful solutions for them, he was of opinion that such solutions could only be fully effective with the co-operation of non-European countries. The Japanese market alone, for example, absorbed European products to the value of more than a thousand million Swiss francs, and was thus able to some extent to relieve the economic depression in Europe. It was therefore important that the non-European countries should, either directly or indirectly, be able to share in the work of the Commission of Enquiry so far as concerned matters of universal interest.

The Japanese delegation was of the opinion that a final solution of these questions must always be sought within the Economic and Financial Organisation of the League ; such a procedure would undoubtedly remove certain apprehensions which were felt by non-European countries in this respect.

With regard to the proposal of the Soviet Government concerning a Pact of Economic Non-Aggression, the Japanese delegation was unable to consider such a pact as not being of universal importance. The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics had economic relations with all parts of the world, and an enquiry into this problem by a sub-committee under the ægis of the Commission of Enquiry would give a European character to a question which concerned the interests of numerous non-European countries. For this reason, the Japanese delegation considered that the Soviet proposal should be referred to the Economic Organisation of the League. If, nevertheless, the Commission of Enquiry felt it necessary to maintain its resolution by which a sub-committee would be set up for the examination of this question, the Japanese delegation would insist that all non-European States Members of the League should be admitted, if they so desired, to take a part in the work of the sub-committee on a footing of equality with the European non-member States who might be present at the discussion of this question. One of those States had even put forward a proposal in this sense.

The Japanese delegate drew the attention of the Committee to the overlapping which was involved by the creation by the Commission of Enquiry of sub-committees for the examination of certain economic problems which were already within the competence of the Economic and Financial Organisation of the League. He considered that it would undoubtedly be of advantage to send direct to this organisation general matters of interest to the entire world. It was necessary to avoid the partial study of questions by ad hoc bodies when there were already in existence other bodies which could examine them in a wider and more universal manner.

Mirza Hussein Khan ALÁ (Persia) supported the remarks of M. Sato, and reminded the Committee that he had already drawn the attention of the Assembly to the interdependence of all the countries in the world, and had stated that it would be desirable to extend the beneficial influence of the League to all Asiatic countries.

M. LANGE (Norway) said that the Norwegian delegation had been very happy to note last year that the Commission of Enquiry had been explicitly instructed to work within the framework of the League and, on the other hand, that it was called a "Commission of Enquiry", which name was proof that it was still in the experimental stage.

He pointed out that this first year of experiment had had an interesting secondary result, in that, during the year of unprecedented crisis through which Europe was passing, European statesmen had had an opportunity to meet and exchange ideas on the situation, not only at the Assemblies of the League, but also on two other occasions, thanks to the existence of the Commission of Enquiry.

M. Lange had two observations to make on the work undertaken by the Commission of Enquiry and on the report submitted to the Sixth Committee.

In the first place, he had been struck with the overlapping which was revealed in the documents which had been submitted to the Sixth Committee. Many questions which were already being studied by other League organs were on the programme of the Commission of Enquiry ; as an example, he might quote the enquiry concerning concerted economic action, questions of communications and transit, and questions of unemployment.

Moreover, as had been pointed out by the Japanese delegate, the problems which were of particular interest to Europe, far from being exclusively European, were questions of universal interest. There was, however, a residue of questions of exclusively European interest, among which might be mentioned the Belgian suggestion regarding the distribution of electrical energy.

M. Lange agreed with the criticisms made by M. Sato and expressed disapproval of the excessive number of bodies, documents and meetings which had resulted from the activity of the Commission of Enquiry and involved considerable expense to the League in addition to a great deal of work.

Without depreciating in any way the importance of the activity of the Commission of Enquiry, and while desiring that this activity should continue, the Norwegian delegation was of opinion that certain definite limits should be set.

Carrying the matter a little further, the Norwegian delegate felt that the idea at the basis of European union belonged to the past. At the present time, life was no longer lived in continents, but in a world that economically formed a single unit. In these circumstances, it appeared to him to be a mistake to work for a more or less permanent organisation of European States. In his opinion, more useful work might be done by following the German method of "Zweckverband"—that was to say, an association with very definite and practical ends.

In conclusion, therefore, the Norwegian delegate felt bound definitely to oppose the Estonian delegate's suggestion.

M. CURTIUS (Germany) said that, if present events proved that, from the economic point of view, Europe could not be isolated from the rest of the world, that was not a reason for asking the Assembly at the present stage to put an end to the mandate of the Commission of Enquiry. The latter had been in existence for only one year, and its mandate should be renewed.

In reply to the criticisms of the Commission's methods of work, and, particularly, of the number of committees and sub-committees it had set up, M. Curtius pointed out that this was the procedure adopted by all international organisations and that, moreover, every one of the committees and sub-committees had done very valuable work, some of them in a very short period of time and even, perhaps, at less cost than would have been incurred by the League Economic Committee. The Commission, therefore, could not be forbidden to set up such committees and sub-committees as were indispensable, it being understood, of course, that there must not be too many of them.

As regards the participation of non-European States in the Commission's work, M. Curtius appreciated their anxiety in the matter. It must, however, be remembered that the Commission's regulations authorised the non-European countries to send representatives to its meetings as observers and even to submit suggestions and memoranda. Though they had not so far exercised that right, it was none the less true that the Commission would be glad of the assistance of non-European States along the lines just indicated.

Again, the Commission of Enquiry had been set up by the League, and all its decisions must be submitted to the Assembly, where all countries, including the non-European countries, were entitled to submit their observations. Further, the Governments were not committed by any decision of the Commission. These two facts should allay any legitimate misgivings felt by the non-European countries.

As regards the Pact of Economic Non-Aggression, submitted by the Soviet Government, M. Curtius intended to ask the Assembly to authorise the Commission to set up a sub-committee to study it.

Dealing next with the Estonian delegation's draft resolution, M. Curtius thought it would be premature at the present stage to attempt to determine the constitution and political organisation of the United States of Europe. The question should, he thought, be held over, and the Commission should concentrate its attention on economic questions, which, in view of the existing difficulties, constituted the essential part of its task for the time being.

M. Briand (France) recalled that he had been the prime mover in the setting up of the Commission of Enquiry, and had urged the peoples of Europe carefully to examine the question of uniting within the framework of the League of Nations for the purpose of attempting to solve the problems besetting them. After an important discussion, the question of principle had been answered in the affirmative. That question could not now be reopened. The Commission had been set up within the League. It had worked in accordance with the League's views and with the help of its organs.

Complaints had been made in the Assembly of the League's lack of activity. It would hardly be a proof of activity to undo this year what had been done last year—that was to say, to abolish the Commission which had been set up.

M. Briand then reviewed the criticism advanced against the Commission's methods. He agreed that, under the impulse of events, the Commission had somewhat exceeded the functions laid down for it. But it must be remembered that, faced with the awful sufferings of Europe, it had been unable to do otherwise than respond to the cry of those in distress. It had believed that, in so doing, it was acting in accordance with the wishes of the entire League. M. Briand considered that the Commission had done useful work. If it had not succeeded in relieving the countries where the economic depression was particularly severe, it had nevertheless done something to reconcile divergent interests. It had helped to create markets and had thus restored confidence in the countries affected. In the sphere of agricultural credit—mortgage loans—it had secured quite appreciable results. It could not, therefore, be charged with inactivity. The only reproach that could be made against it was that it had been over-zealous and had taken up problems that exceeded the European horizon. It would be well to call the Commission's attention to that point.

M. Briand thought that, in order to render the League the important services, which the latter had the right to expect of it, the Commission of Enquiry must, as the previous speakers had suggested, be prepared to examine all problems on a broad basis and confer with non-European countries as well as with States non-members of the League, as was laid down in the Assembly resolution of September 17th, 1930.

Consequently, M. Briand thought it would be desirable to confirm the last Assembly's resolution and to ask the present Assembly to extend the Commission's mandate.

M. Pusta (Estonia) explained his delegation's draft resolution. The Commission of Enquiry had by no means finished its work. It still had before it the question of the final form to be assumed by the co-operation of the European countries within the framework of the League. That question had been dealt with in the eleventh Assembly's resolution of September 17th, 1930, which contained the phrase, "sharing their unanimous opinion that such co-operation, whatever form it may assume, should be within the framework of the League . . . " He emphasised the words "whatever form it may assume", which were very significant.

The Commission had so far concerned itself mainly with economic problems, but it still had before it the second part of the task assigned to it—namely, the organisation of co-operation among the States.

The Estonian proposal did not ask the Commission to bring about European union in one of the known forms of associations of States. Its only object was to confirm the terms of the Commission's mandate.

There was no need to comment on the second paragraph of the draft resolution. The League Secretariat was at the same time the Secretariat of the Commission of Enquiry, and should therefore be responsible for collecting all the necessary documentation. In conclusion, M. Pusta stated that, if his proposal could be given a more general and wider form, he would be the first to welcome it.

M. Beneš (Czechoslovakia) concurred in the ideas expressed by M. Curtius and M. Briand on the question as a whole.

The plethora of committees and documents to which the Norwegian delegate had taken exception was explained by the desire to perform as much work as possible in the shortest possible time. Moreover, in an undertaking of such wide range, it was not always easy at the outset to discriminate between vital questions and less urgent matters. A judicious compromise could be reached on this point.

M. Beneš considered that, in raising the question of principle, M. Lange had gone somewhat too far. The idea of a Commission of Enquiry for European Union was a sufficiently practical one. The results which had already been obtained owing to its work showed that the Commission was not only justified, but that it met a genuine need. M. Beneš had been able to appreciate that, in Czechoslovakia and the neighbouring countries, great hopes were placed in the Commission's work. The community of international interests was already being appreciated more keenly, and the Commission's work had strengthened in Czechoslovakia, as in many other countries, the feeling that close and intimate co-operation was essential. That was an appreciable moral result,

As M. Briand had observed, the interests of the non-European States must be borne in mind. That, however, did not rule out the possibility of a reasonable compromise.

With regard to the Estonian proposal, a solution might be sought on the lines suggested by M. Curtius. M. Beneš therefore supported the proposal to continue the Commission's work, and he urged that the Assembly should take a decision in that sense.

Sir Jehangir COYAJEE (India) said that, if there was the least suspicion of criticism in the way in which the non-European countries regarded the work of the Commission of Enquiry, it was not because they felt anxious that they were being left out of a great movement, but because they appreciated the importance of the task undertaken.

He recognised that the Commission implied a certain amount of duplication of effort and a divergence of effort which were inevitable owing to the fact that certain world problems were sometimes considered from the Continental point of view as well.

However that might be, the Commission's work would be justified if Europe achieved union, and thus set an example of rapid and decisive action in the economic sphere. If the original idea of European union and the actual results were considered, it was plain that there was a certain weakening in action and a watering down of ideals. If the Commission contributed by its activities to the political and economic stability of Europe and thus created a confidence of which the whole world had such great need to-day, it would amply justify its existence. He hoped that that would be the case, but emphasised that it must act promptly.

In conclusion, he would enquire whether the policy of Europe in the economic depression of the 'seventies and 'eighties had not been to develop trade with the non-European and overseas countries and whether the depression had not been cured in that way. This might perhaps afford a useful suggestion for overcoming the present depression.

M. MICHALAKOPOULOS (Greece), in reply to the criticisms advanced against the creation of committees and sub-committees by the Commission of Enquiry, pointed out that this was the procedure adopted by Parliaments when they wished to do careful work. He believed, therefore, that the efficacy of the Commission's work would be lessened if its powers were restricted. It should also be remarked that each country's share in the expenses resulting from the Commission was trifling.

The view that the idea of European union belonged to past ages was, he thought, unduly pessimistic. Even if it was a very old one, was that a reason for dropping it ?

M. Michalakopoulos considered that, although he was justified in hoping that the union of European States would be achieved as promptly as possible, undue haste must be avoided in order to prevent failure. The best method was the empirical method. There was no question of isolating European policy from world policy. The object was to organise the life of Europe within the general structure of the whole globe. There was no reason for apprehension regarding the Commission, since its decisions must always be submitted to the League Assembly.

In conclusion, he supported M. Beneš' proposal that the Assembly should be requested to authorise the Commission to continue its work.

M. DEKIEN TUNG (China) appreciated the great utility of European co-operation, and stated that M. Briand's proposal had met with a sympathetic reception in China. While there were certain purely European interests, it was none the less true that the interests of all countries throughout the world were so closely related at the present moment that they could not be circumscribed by geographical frontiers.

The Chinese delegation shared the view that it was necessary for the non-European countries to take part in the work of the Commission of Enquiry.

M. CHOUMENKOVITCH (Yugoslavia) entirely agreed with earlier speakers as to the need for continuing the Commission's work. While it was true that the subject of its studies went far beyond the bounds of Europe, it was, however, impossible to set geographical limits to an enquiry of such wide scope.

The Commission had decided to investigate the world depression with regard to its effects on the European countries in particular. The depression subsisted and the European countries were more especially affected. As the causes which had brought it into being still existed, the Commission must continue its work. True, it had done much, but it had not concluded its task, and it should be a point of honour for the Commission to finish what it had begun. As representative of an agricultural country which was particularly severely affected, M. Choumenkovitch was anxious that the Commission should finish its work in that sphere. The actual text of the Sub-Committee's recommendations led to the inference that they should be carried out first and foremost within the framework of Europe. The Commission of Enquiry was the most competent body for that work.

There were certain other moral reasons in favour of continuing the Commission's work. The eyes of the world, and particularly those of Europe, were fixed on Geneva, and more especially on the European Commission. The work must continue until the depression had been overcome.

For these reasons, M. Choumenkovitch agreed with earlier speakers and urged that the Commission's mandate should be renewed.

The CHAIRMAN summed up the discussion. He noted, first, that no speaker had questioned the principle that the Commission's work should be continued ; that, therefore, could be regarded as accepted unanimously.

Next, the delegates of the non-European countries had urged that most of the problems taken up by the Commission were not exclusively European problems, but, in part at least, extra-European as well. The delegates of the non-European countries who had spoken had, however, assented to the Commission's continuing its enquiry.

Nevertheless, the Commission would not be adhering to the general spirit underlying the discussion unless it continued its work under the conditions in which it had been begun. It must preserve its character as a Commission of Enquiry for European Union.

Another point that seemed to emerge from the discussion was that the financial and economic questions considered by the Commission should be referred to the Second Committee.

Many speakers had expressed a desire that the Commission should employ the technical organs of the League to the fullest possible extent. It had, however, been generally admitted that, in certain cases, the Commission could set up special committees.

With regard to the Pact of Economic Non-Aggression proposed by the Soviet Government, M. Sato had said that he would prefer the question to be referred to the Economic Committee; but that, if the Commission adhered to its proposal to appoint a special committee, it must be understood that representatives of non-European countries would be invited to sit on the special committee. If, however, non-European countries were to be allowed to sit on a committee of that kind, it must necessarily be recognised that they must act on the same lines as those on which they acted in the plenary Commission.

The Chairman would suggest that a formula, which would be drafted later, should be adopted, to the effect that the Committee agreed in principle that the Commission of Enquiry for European Union should make use of the League's technical organisations in all cases where there was no warrant for exceptions to this procedure, but that special committees could be set up in exceptional circumstances. It might, however, be asked whether the League organisations would be always able to do such work as the Commission might place upon them. The Chairman would be glad to have the views of the Second Committee on this point. He asked for authorisation to send a letter on this subject to the Chairman of the Second Committee, and suggested that a small drafting committee be set up to consider the texts of the letter and of a draft resolution which would be submitted to the Committee for approval.

The Committee decided to appoint a Drafting Committee consisting of M. BRIAND, M. CURTIUS, M. SATO. M. LANGE. M. BENEŠ, M. GRANDI, Lord LYTTON, M. PUSTA and Sir Jehangir COYAJEE.

THIRD MEETING.

Held on Wednesday, September 16th, 1931, at 10 a.m.

Chairman : M. MOTTA (Switzerland).

6. Work of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union (continuation).

The CHAIRMAN read a draft letter from the Chairman of the Sixth Committee to the Chairman of the Second Committee prepared by the Drafting Committee appointed at the last meeting (Annex 1).

The draft letter was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN, referring to the Pact of Economic Non-Aggression, expressed the view that the substance of this question could not be discussed in the Sixth Committee, and that it was preferable to refer it to the Second Committee. In the course of the previous day's meeting of the Sixth Committee and of the Drafting Committee, it had been considered advisable that extra-European States should share in the discussion on this question. It therefore appeared necessary that the Assembly should decide that, when the Commission of Enquiry for European Union and the special committee entrusted with this particular question came to deal with the Pact of Economic Non-Aggression, the non-European States should co-operate in this work on equal terms with the European States. Before taking a definite decision on this matter, he thought it would be advisable to await any communications concerning it which might be received from the Second Committee.

The Chairman read the following draft resolution prepared and adopted unanimously by the Drafting Committee :

> "The Assembly notes with satisfaction the results of the work done by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union ;
> "It approves the report of the Commission of Enquiry regarding its constitution, organisation and methods of work ;
> "It requests the Commission to pursue the work undertaken in conformity with the principles laid down in the resolution of September 17th, 1930.
> "It recommends it to have recourse whenever possible to the technical organs of the League of Nations and to refer to the League the settlement of any problems which it thinks capable of solution on a universal plane ;

"It requests the Commission to submit a report on its further work to the next session of the Assembly."

The draft resolution was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the Drafting Committee was of the opinion that the draft resolution proposed by the Estonian delegation at the previous meeting, together with the observations made upon it in the Sixth Committee, should be regarded as a matter for the Commission of Enquiry. The Commission might, if it thought advisable, deal with it later, and it was in this sense that the Rapporteur of the Sixth Committee might refer to the proposal in his report to the Assembly.

The Chairman's proposals were adopted.

7. Work of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union (continuation : Appointment of a Rapporteur.

On the proposal of M. BRIAND (France), M. MOTTA was appointed Rapporteur.

The CHAIRMAN agreed to carry out the duties of Rapporteur, and expressed the belief that there would be no necessity for him to submit a written report to the Assembly, but that a verbal comment on the resolution would suffice. He pointed out that a rapporteur would also be required on the subject of the Pact of Economic Non-Aggression and that, should the Committee so desire, he would be prepared to agree to act as Rapporteur for this question also.

The Chairman's proposal was adopted.

8. Protection of Minorities.

M. CURTIUS (Germany), taking as the starting-point of his observations the report presented by M. Motta to the Assembly in the previous year, pointed out that, at the time of the discussion of this report, it was generally agreed that the problem of minorities was of fundamental interest for the peace of the world.

In connection with a case of particular importance, the Council had once more defined its attitude regarding the obligations of the League in this matter, and he quoted certain declarations on this subject made by Mr. Henderson, at that time President of the Council.

M. Curtius noted, from the figures available, that the activities of the Minorities Committees had considerably increased. Referring to the decision of the Council at Madrid that the members of the Minorities Committees might be increased from three to five when particularly important questions were under consideration, he observed that, so far, use had only been made of these powers on one occasion. He considered that it would be advisable to take this course more frequently in future.

Referring to the position of petitioners under the existing procedure, M. Curtius pointed out that, although receipt of a petition was acknowledged, and although petitioners had the right to submit additional petitions, they played absolutely no part in the actual procedure. They were not even informed of any observations made by the Governments concerned. Serious inconvenience might arise from this procedure, as had been shown in connection with a certain case which had been brought before the Council. The Minorities Committees no doubt had the right, when they considered it advisable, to ask for further information from the petitioners ; but they had up to the present scarcely made use of this right, which was an important means of increasing the confidence of minorities.

M. Curtius recalled the conclusions of the Council at Madrid regarding publicity for the decisions taken. He considered that publicity was an important guarantee for minorities and often made it possible to avoid misunderstandings. Publicity was particularly necessary in two cases—in the first place, when the procedure before the Committee terminated in an undertaking on the part of the Government concerned ; and, secondly, when the Government concerned put an end to the procedure by declaring that it was negotiating direct with the minority. Of the twenty-nine cases dealt with in 1930 by the Minorities Committees, in only three had the decisions taken been published. Similarly, of the sixty-one cases examined since the Madrid decisions, only eleven had been published. He considered it highly necessary to publish decisions in a larger proportion of cases. On the other hand, he pointed out that no information was available on the decisions taken in the fifty other cases. It was not even known in regard to some of them whether the Committees dealing with them had not met with opposition, as regards publication, on the part of the Governments concerned. It would be interesting to have figures on this point, as it would then be possible to ascertain to what extent the Minorities Committees were acting on the Madrid decisions.

Finally, he urged that all decisions on minorities questions should be applied in as liberal a spirit as possible. The League should not avoid its obligations in the matter of the protection of minorities, which were sacred rights and must be safeguarded.

M. GHIKA (Roumania) recalled that, during the discussions in the Sixth Committee in 1930, the delegates of Greece, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Roumania and Yugoslavia had expressed their views with regard to the question of minorities. They had nothing to add to these declarations, which they reaffirmed in toto, it being clearly understood that their declarations excluded any widening of the decisions taken at Madrid.

Count APPONYI (Hungary) maintained the position he had taken up in 1930. He agreed with the German delegate as to the necessity of improving the procedure for petitions and suggested (1) that observations made by the Governments on the subject of petitions should be brought to the notice of petitioners; (2) that the publicity given to the decisions taken should be much extended—in other words, that publicity should be the rule and not the exception.

M. BEAUBIEN (Canada) pointed out that the minorities question was not an exclusively European one, and that it had effects in distant countries, among others, in Canada, where there lived considerable minority groups faithfully attached to their country of origin.

The Canadian delegation maintained the view previously taken up on this question. While expressing satisfaction with the progress accomplished in the administration of the regulations relating to minorities, he thought that there was room for considerable improvement in the procedure adopted. Justice must be blind, it was undesirable that she should be occult, still less that she should be irresolute and dilatory.

The Canadian delegation considered that a Permanent Consultative Committee might render very useful services in connection with minorities.

Such a Commission, administering justice openly, would instil in the minorities that confidence which was so essential to the maintenance of harmonious relations. By doing away with vexatious delays, which at present were perhaps inevitable, it might be able at the outset to ease irritation, which otherwise might lead to conflict.

Lord CECIL (British Empire) supported fully the declarations previously made by Mr. Henderson, to which M. Curtius had referred. They represented accurately the British Government's point of view. The moment was not suitable for a discussion of principle. Lord Cecil was convinced that the suggestions of M. Curtius would receive the attention they deserved, and noticed with satisfaction that the procedure was being improved. It would be well to maintain the procedure in its present form, as it would undoubtedly continue to improve with time.

M. PETSCHE (France) agreed with Count Apponyi and Lord Cecil that the time was not ripe for reopening a discussion which in many respects might be extremely difficult. M. Petsche adhered to the statement of principle made last year by M. Briand, and was glad to note from the speeches which he had just heard that the present system was not directly under discussion, but only the method of its application. The French delegation felt it should be applied in a liberal spirit and was confident that the Committees of the Council would continue to base their action both on the sacred rights of the minorities and on the rights of sovereign States, which were also sacred.

M. HURTADO (Spain) would not suggest any change in the procedure followed hitherto or in the legal situation relative to the minorities problem. The minorities would obviously feel greater confidence if the decisions of the Minorities Committees were made more widely known. All that was needed was to find a way of giving the decisions of these Committees greater publicity without wounding the susceptibilities of the States concerned or making them feel that they had in any way accepted permanent supervision. The decisions should only be published with the agreement of the countries concerned. The important point was to make them understand that it was to their advantage to assent to publicity.

Whatever the procedure adopted, the main thing to be borne in mind was the psychological aspect. M. Hurtado might cite his own country to illustrate his meaning. The new Spanish Republic was far more seriously affected by the mistrust felt abroad as to the stability of the Government than by internal difficulties. Two important Bills had been placed before the Cortès: a Bill for the Constitution of the Republic and a draft Charter of Catalonian autonomy. These two Bills embodied all the principles enunciated by the League with regard to the rights of minorities. It followed that, whereas last year the Spanish minorities had come to the League and tried to obtain protection against the sovereign State, they now formed part of the League and felt it an honour to represent the State of which they had previously had cause to complain.

In conclusion, M. Hurtado drew attention to the practical lesson which might be learnt from the example of the Spanish Republic and which might be summed up in the following rule: The surest method of overcoming the supposed or real disaffection of national minorities is to have confidence in them and to grant and respect their due rights.

The CHAIRMAN suggested that, as there was no definite proposal before the Committee, one of the members should be requested to sum up the discussion in a report which would be submitted to the Assembly. The Council might deduce from the report such conclusions as it thought desirable when dealing with the minorities questions under its jurisdiction.

9. Protection of Minorities (continuation) : Appointment of a Rapporteur.

The CHAIRMAN proposed that Baron YRJÖ-KOSKINEN, delegate of Finland, should be appointed Rapporteur.

The Chairman's proposal was adopted.

10. Slavery.

Lord LYTTON (British Empire) said that the British Government's position with regard to slavery was the same as in previous years. He reminded his colleagues of the resolution submitted to the Committee last year by the British delegation for the establishment of a Permanent Bureau of Experts on Slavery. Although the draft resolution submitted this year was slightly different, the delegation's attitude had not altered with regard to the establishment of such a bureau.

The Commission set up in 1922, following the New Zealand delegation's proposal, to deal with slavery had not completed its work when it was disbanded in 1925. The Convention subsequently drawn up—and since ratified by forty countries—could not be regarded as the end of the League's work in the matter of slavery, but rather as the starting-point of new activities. His Government would never be satisfied until the status of slavery was finally abolished and the British delegation would continue to recommend any course which, in its opinion, would help to achieve the abolition of this evil until slavery ceased to exist, not merely in name, but in fact. That aim was still remote. The number of persons at present in a state of slavery might without exaggeration be estimated at five millions. The question now was how to assist in the liberation of these five millions.

The British Government did not desire to condemn the Government of any country in which slavery still existed. It recognised the very great difficulties with which those countries were faced in fulfilling their obligations and appreciated the efforts they were making to do this. It was their knowledge of the difficulty of the task to be achieved that had convinced the British Government of the need for establishing a Permanent Advisory Bureau, not to criticise, but to help the Governments concerned, and to save them from condemnation by insufficiently instructed public opinion.

The British delegation did not think it expedient to submit again this year the proposal for such a bureau ; first, for financial reasons of which everyone was aware, and, second, because it hoped that the experience derived from the temporary committee which was being proposed would remove the objections which had hitherto been raised to the establishment of a permanent bureau. These objections, he thought, were largely due to a misunderstanding. The analogy which had been suggested between the proposed Permanent Advisory Bureau and the Permanent Mandates Commission was, perhaps, responsible for this misunderstanding. The functions of the two would really be quite different.

The British delegation's new proposal was to reconstitute the Temporary Slavery Commission which had been disbanded in 1925. It was plain from a letter dated July 25th, 1925, from the Chairman of the Commission to the President of the Council of the League (document A.19.1925. VII) that, when the Commission was disbanded, it did not regard its work as completed.

Lord Lytton would also suggest that the earlier British proposal for the establishment of a Permanent Advisory Bureau should be referred to the reconstituted temporary Commission. If a sub-committee were appointed to consider the matter, he would submit to it a proposal that the Assembly should request the Council to reconstitute the Temporary Slavery Commission for one year, on the understanding that the expenses involved should be reduced to the lowest possible point. In making that proposal, the British delegation reserved its right to revert next year to its original proposal for the establishment of a Permanent Advisory Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN drew attention to a letter he had received from the first delegate of New Zealand forwarding correspondence between the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society and the Emperor of Abyssinia (Annex 2).

Count DE PENHA GARCIA (Portugal) was obliged to make the same objections of principle as those he made two years previously, when the British proposal had first been brought forward. There were two additional reasons for voting against the proposal this year : (1) the need for economy, and (2) the fact that the Sixth Committee had adopted the principle that, whenever the existing League organisations were sufficient for the performance of any work, it was useless to set up others. Very strong legal arguments could be opposed to the British proposal. He would develop them during the discussion in the sub-committee of which Lord Lytton had just spoken. Another reason why Count de Penha Garcia objected to the proposal was that the methods adopted by the Assembly on two occasions to accelerate the effects of the Convention on Slavery had been found excellent in practice, and consequently no new method should be adopted unless there were very serious reasons for doing so. The procedure adopted by the Assembly in its resolutions of 1929 and 1930 had given admirable results, as was proved by the number of new ratifications to the Convention received by the Secretariat since the procedure in question had been applied and, as well, by the information supplied by the States under the terms of the Convention.

Further, the documents received by the Secretariat, as a result of the methods established by the Assembly, gave every reason to be satisfied with what had been done in recent years to abolish slavery in the countries in which this deplorable condition still existed. Among the documents supplied by the British Government was a report by the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society. That report provided information in somewhat measured terms with regard to slavery in certain countries. After showing the extent of the evil, it indicated the means of fighting it and eradicating it completely.

According to the above report, three factors were required to achieve the latter result. The first was time. It was difficult to make a rapid change in usages founded on old traditions, and a commission of experts would be unable to take effective action to change this situation which the report of the Anti-Slavery Society rightly placed in the forefront.

The second factor was money for compensation to dispossessed slave-owners, expenses for the upkeep of schools, organisations of all kinds for freed slaves, etc. While the Commission could draw attention to the importance of this factor, it would be unable to obtain the money.

The third factor was the pressure of public opinion. Public opinion, however, was kept on the alert in a matter of this kind, not only by anti-slavery societies, but by the discussions at the League.

To sum up, there was nothing to show that the Commission proposed by the British delegation would be useful. Count de Penha Garcia thought that, not only was it doubtful whether it would be of value, but it was not covered by the Covenant, and, above all, it was incompatible with the legal situation created by the Slavery Convention. A new Convention would be required before the principle of a temporary or permanent commission on slavery could be accepted. The Portuguese Government was not prepared to agree to the creation of any Commission the duties of which were not in accordance with those legal principles which the Assembly was bound to respect. Count de Penha Garcia proposed to develop these arguments later.

(The continuation of the discussion was adjourned to the next meeting.)

FOURTH MEETING.

Held on Thursday, September 17th, 1931, at 10 a.m.

Chairman : M. MOTTA (Switzerland).

11. Slavery (continuation).

Count APPONYI (Hungary) supported, as he had done in the previous year, the British proposal, in spite of the altered form in which it was submitted. He thought it desirable that there should be a permanent body to supervise the progress of the campaign against slavery, an institution which was universally condemned. He did not wish to blame any countries in which slavery still existed, recalling the fact that the Civil War in America had been partly due to the support of slavery by States which, from the standpoint of culture, were highly developed.

He did not agree with the Portuguese delegation that the present position was satisfactory. The information received so far was incomplete, and the permanent committee now proposed would be able to collect information systematically and procure it from quarters which, up to the present, had not supplied any. Its existence would also be evidence of the keen desire of the League of Nations that this evil should be abolished.

With regard to the important action taken by the Emperor of Abyssinia, in spite of considerable difficulties, he pointed out that, according to the latest decree, slaves were to be liberated immediately on the death of their master and not after an interval of seven years, as had previously been the case. The loan of slaves was also prohibited, and a tribunal had been set up to enforce the decrees. Slave-trading was also being satisfactorily dealt with. He handed to the Chairman an English translation of these decrees (Annex 3) and suggested that the League of Nations should congratulate the Emperor of Abyssinia on his action.

M. SOTTILE (Liberia) supported the British proposal for the restoration of the old Committee on the understanding that it did not concern itself with the internal policy of the States. His views on this matter had undergone a change, as he had previously opposed the British proposal. Last year his Government, giving an unprecedented example of courage and loyalty which everyone must appreciate, decided to ask an international Committee to conduct an enquiry into slavery, forced labour and the pawn system in his country. That committee, after five months of work, completed its investigations in September 1930. Unfortunately, at the time of this investigation, there was a Presidential election in Liberia, and the situation had been exploited for electoral ends by means of wrong moves and forged documents, etc. The result of this unfortunate atmosphere had been to prevent the Committee from obtaining a fair view of the facts, and it had, as a consequence, exceeded its terms of reference.

There were undoubtedly exaggerations and inaccuracies in the report of the Committee, and they were no doubt due to the above causes. The publication of the report last December had been followed by a newspaper campaign against Liberia which had not confined itself to the statements, already inaccurate and exaggerated, made in the report, but had added many other unfounded assertions. The result was that Liberia had had a very bad advertisement, which, although it drew the attention of the world to the existence of Liberia, was in other respects regrettable.

The Liberian Government had taken energetic action with a view to carrying out the recommendations made in the report, within the limits of its constitutional and financial powers.

It would go still further in this direction and would willingly examine any offers of assistance it might receive and which were within the limits of the Covenant of the League.

The Council of the League had appointed a special Committee to examine in what practical way assistance might be given to his country. This Committee had sent three experts to Liberia, one in administrative matters, one in finance and one in hygiene. The experts had returned to Geneva on August 17th, and he hoped that their report would soon be in the possession of the Committee.

His reason for supporting the British proposal was that the result of the Press campaign against Liberia had been a general conviction that Liberia was a hotbed of slavery. This he strongly denied. He could produce evidence to show that forms of slavery and forced labour were in existence in other parts of the world which would not be tolerated in his own country. He desired to contribute to the eradication of slavery and to prove to public opinion that Liberia had not, as had been stated, a monopoly in slavery and the various forms of the slave trade, and, further, that in many other parts of the world these evils existed in far greater proportions.

M. Loudon (Netherlands) proposed a via media between the British suggestion that the old Slavery Committee should be revived and the views of the Portuguese delegate, who considered that the existing system should continue. A small committee of, say, three people—colonial experts—might be set up to make suggestions as to the best means effectively to combat slavery. It would be difficult to reconstitute the old Committee, and there would be the further disadvantage of the expenditure involved. He hoped that this proposal would meet with the support of those who were in favour of the British proposal, and suggested that it should be discussed by a sub-committee.

Diwan Abdul Hamid (India) supported the British proposal, particularly as the cost involved was to be as low as possible. He saw no fundamental difference between Lord Lytton's proposal and that of M. Loudon, apart from the small matter of the number of members.

There was no slavery in India. It had formerly existed in the so-called non-administered areas of Burma ; but, in the last five years, the Government of India had sent expeditions to those areas, and slavery and human sacrifice no longer existed there. He suggested that one of the members of the committee proposed by Lord Lytton should be a representative of Oriental countries. He supported Count Apponyi's suggestion that the Emperor of Abyssinia should be congratulated on his action against slavery. As a Moslem, and particularly as it had been stated that slavery existed in Arabia, he wished to say that his religion afforded no protection to this practice, and the liberation of slaves was stated in their Holy Books to be a meritorious action.

M. Loudon (Netherlands) emphasised that the chief object of his proposal was to save expense.

M. Dekien Tung (China) wished to correct a statement made by the British delegation that slavery still existed in China. The rights of man had been recognised in his country long before the French Revolution, and the principles of Confucianism and of family morality in China made it impossible for the institution of slavery to exist.

With regard to the traffic in women and children referred to in a letter from the Anti-Slavery Society of June 11th, 1931, that practice was a breach of the law and a crime which, unfortunately, went on in all parts of the world, including Europe. There were numerous laws in the Chinese Criminal Code against this practice, and a law was in preparation to abolish prostitution altogether. Traffic in children did not exist in China—in fact, could not co-exist with the Chinese traditions of filial piety and the well-known readiness of Chinese mothers to adopt other children in cases of disaster.

As regards the reference in the Secretary-General's report to police-court cases, it was recognised that Hong-Kong was a centre of crime, and this, he considered, was largely due to the existence of treaties under which an unequal regime had been established. Although not directly concerned in this matter, his Government was considering ratifying the Convention for the abolition of slavery.

Mr. Pienaar (Union of South Africa) stated that his delegation had voted against the British proposal last year on the ground that several delegations had asked for a further year's experience of the present system. The year had passed, and he did not consider that the position had sufficiently improved to warrant further delay. As the British delegation's proposal this year was in a milder form, he hoped that the delegations with whom he had voted last year would be prepared to agree to it. It was desirable that the League should stand forward as definitely opposed to slavery and as being anxious to do all that could be done to bring it to an end. Slavery was, in fact, a deeper form of degradation than war, which had been declared a crime by the League.

M. Aubert (France) said that France had had no difficulty in ratifying the Slavery Convention, which was in entire harmony with her national legislation and colonial policy. This ratification had not involved any legislation.

He would be glad to support the proposed temporary committee if the Sixth Committee considered it desirable, provided that its temporary character was emphasised and that it contained members with colonial experience and confined itself to the examination of information voluntarily supplied by the countries concerned and by associations acting with the approval of those countries. The committee might well consider other matters, such as serfdom ; but it should be clearly understood that there were constitutional questions which were beyond its scope and which involved the relation of the League of Nations to colonial Powers, a matter with which the Committee would clearly not be competent to deal.

M. GORGÉ (Switzerland) was of the opinion that the existing measures were not adequate, and warmly supported the British proposal. He would, indeed, have supported the fuller proposal for the establishment of a Permanent Bureau if that had been put forward again by the British delegation. As regards the economic objections put forward by the Portuguese delegate, he pointed out that, if the Committee turned out to be superfluous, the expenditure involved would be small ; whereas, if it produced valuable results, no one would regret having voted the credits. He did not consider the fact that the ratifications of the Slavery Convention had been considerably increased in number during the past year was evidence of the success of the existing system. Many of the acceding countries had no slavery problems in their territories, and their accession was rather the expression of the desire that something more should be done than evidence that the existing state of affairs was satisfactory.

Lord LYTTON (British Empire) pointed out that no serious opposition had been made to the British proposal, which contained nothing inconsistent with any speeches subsequently made. As regards finance, he was anxious that the setting up of the committee should not involve any increase in the League's budget. The views expressed by the French and Liberian delegates were satisfactorily met by the proposal he had put forward. He therefore suggested that it might be possible to settle the question without reference to a sub-committee.

With regard to the remarks of the Chinese delegate, Lord Lytton pointed out that his statement was based upon a paragraph contained in document A.29 to the effect that, according to Reuter's agency, "about 400,000 persons have been sold into slavery during the last few years in the province of Shensi, according to the Government Special Commissioner who was sent to the province recently to investigate famine conditions". It was far from his desire to be unfair to any country, and he only quoted the statement as it was apparently authorised by the Chinese Government.

M. DEKIEN TUNG (China) stated that news agency reports were not necessarily reliable, and he wished emphatically to deny the statement in question.

Sir Thomas WILFORD (New Zealand) said he could not add anything to Lord Lytton's remarks, which had perfectly expressed his views.

The CHAIRMAN regretted that he could not see his way to doing without a sub-committee, as various differences of opinion had come to light, which would require to be reconciled.

After discussion, it was agreed that a sub-committee should be formed, including representatives of the following countries : Abyssinia, Belgium, Denmark, France, Great Britain, India, Italy, Liberia, The Netherlands, Portugal, Spain.

12. Mandates.

M. LANGE (Norway) said that, although at the beginning there had been some imperfections in the working of the mandates system, which had been an innovation, these mistakes had been rectified largely owing to the valuable work of the Permanent Mandates Commission. Various important questions were under consideration. In the first place, there was the question of the conditions under which a mandate could be brought to an end. This had arisen in the case of Iraq, Great Britain having stated that she would support a request from that country for admission to the League. A State seeking independence should be able to point to certain de facto conditions —for example, that it was able to maintain order in the country and to assure an effective administrative system. The interests of foreigners in such countries had also to be borne in mind, and he was glad to see that, in the case of Iraq, it was proposed to deal with this problem, not by the revival of capitulations, but by a special judicial agreement subject to the approval of the League.

As regards the guaranteeing of minority rights, about which some apprehension was already being felt in Iraq, there were in that country half a million Kurds, and also two religious minority groups (40,000 devil-worshippers, and an equal number of Assyrian Christians) whose rights must be protected. The present form of protection would end with the mandate, and guarantees must be required from any country anxious to obtain its independence. This matter was one which might be arranged between the Council and the mandatory Power concerned.

Amongst other questions of interest was that of public health, concerning which recommendations had been put forward by the Permanent Mandates Commission. It was important that the Government of a country under mandate should be provided with the necessary resources and should have a medical corps capable of performing the work required of it. Doubtless it could obtain some help from experts sent, for example, by the Health Organisation of the League If necessary, it should also call upon States Members of the League to send it young doctors. This procedure would perhaps go some little way to relieve the present difficulties felt in professional and industrial circles. He suggested that the principle of the open door should be observed in the matter, and that it might be possible for foreigners to be admitted to work in these countries.

Referring to Palestine, he expressed the opinion that, although affairs were now considerably improved, there was some doubt whether the present state of tranquillity was permanent. He quite realised the difficulties arising as between the Arabs, who regarded Palestine as their country, and the Jews, who had taken up residence there as a result of the Balfour Declaration. The existence of the Jewish National Home in Palestine had aroused amongst Israelites throughout the world a great national sentiment of personal dignity, and, in view of the fact that a large number of Jews belonged to the proletariat and lower middle classes, he considered it inadvisable, from the point of view of the present social crisis, to lessen in any way that feeling of dignity, which no doubt exercised a restraining influence on Jews throughout the world. He therefore suggested that, in its resolution, the Assembly might emphasise the fact that the present policy of the League of Nations towards the Jews should be continued in future.

(The continuation of the discussion was adjourned to the next meeting.)

13. Mandates : Intellectual Co-operation : Appointment of Rapporteurs.

On the proposal of the CHAIRMAN, M. LANGE was elected Rapporteur for mandates questions, and M. SATO for intellectual co-operation.

FIFTH MEETING.

Held on Friday, September 18th, 1931, at 10 a.m.

Chairman : M. MOTTA (Switzerland).

14. Mandates (continuation).

M. BODRERO (Italy), referring to the statements made by the Italian representative to the Council on September 4th on this subject, observed that the object of the mandates system was to provide for the eventual independence of certain peoples. The League should therefore satisfy itself, before agreeing to the termination of a mandate, that the country concerned was in a position to maintain its independence, and should examine any guarantees to be given by the country under mandate to the States Members of the League. This principle implied the maintenance of economic equality and the application of the most-favoured-nation clause, limited to a reasonable time. Reciprocity and the open door were the two fundamental bases on which the new States should establish their economic independence.

M. MUHLSTEIN (Poland) said that Poland was particularly interested in the question of Palestine, both as a Member of the League, and because of the large Jewish population of Poland. He noted with pleasure the endeavour made to develop the constitutional system in Palestine, a step which was necessary for the protection of the Jewish population. He wished to draw a distinction between the Jews in Palestine and "minorities" as the term was understood in the League. He felt that it was not a question of securing to this people the rights inherent in minorities, as the circumstances arising out of the Balfour Declaration placed the Jewish population of Palestine in a special category.

M. PETSCHE (France) observed that, at the meeting on September 4th, the French representative on the Council gave further indications of the French Government's views as to the conditions on which the termination of a mandatory system should depend. In particular, he pointed out that, both as regards the position of foreigners and the protection of minorities, the change must be accompanied by guarantees sufficient to reassure all the interests at stake. He also stated, in agreement with the Italian representative, that he regarded the maintenance, subject to reciprocity, of the most-favoured-nation clause for the benefit of Members of the League as compatible with the sovereign rights and interests of the new State and with the interests of the community of nations.

M. Petsche wished merely to mention these statements and to define the special points which had been touched upon in the discussions either in the Council or in the Sixth Committee.

In the matter of Iraq, which had, and rightly so, attracted the particular attention of the Committee—since Iraq was, so to speak, opening out the path which the other territories under A mandate might follow subsequently—he did not wish, in asserting here and now the friendly interest which France took in Iraq's development, to trespass on the sovereign right of the next Assembly to take a decision. There was, however, one condition for the admission of new States into the League which the Sixth Committee of the next Assembly would, in the ordinary course of events, have to examine in connection with Iraq, and which France, as a mandatory Power, could, as Iraq's neighbour, assist Iraq to fulfil—he referred to the existence of a "defined territory". Since the occasion now arose, he desired to state that the French Government was, as it had already informed the British Government, prepared to settle without delay all outstanding frontier questions between Iraq and Syria.

One question concerning Syria and the Lebanon had been raised before the Council by the representative of Persia. His Excellency Mirza Hussein Khan Alâ complained that France had not yet accorded to Persian nationals the judicial regime which other foreign nationals enjoyed in these territories. In order to dispel all doubts, M. Petsche desired to state first, most categorically, that there was no discrimination in respect of Persians. Under the mandatory regime, whereby capitulations had only been suspended, the system of mixed tribunals could only apply to nationals of the capitulatory Powers. The question would naturally arise in another form under the treaty regime. The precedent of Iraq was calculated to allay the Persian delegate's anxiety on this subject.

Colonel Ali Khan RIAZI (Persia) stated that, before the institution of the mandates system, Persian nationals were in the same position as nationals belonging to other capitulatory Powers, and they asked that they should remain so, pending the introduction into the territory under mandate of a judicial system such as that in Iraq.

Mr. COLLINS (Australia), as the accredited representative of the Commonwealth of Australia, and as the representative of His Majesty's Government in connection with the administration of Nauru, wished to express his appreciation of the work done by the Permanent Mandates Commission. The difficulties involved in the administration of the archipelago of New Guinea were very great, owing to the widely scattered nature of the territory. Progress was necessarily slow, and the work was by no means easy. His Government welcomed the scrutiny of the Permanent Mandates Commission and realised that the aim of the mandatory system was to place the responsibility for the control of a backward race upon an efficient and civilised nation. Australia regarded itself as responsible for the intellectual and cultural development of the peoples entrusted to her ; the Permanent Mandates Commission's criticism had always been constructive in spirit, and was warmly welcomed.

M. CURTIUS (Germany) thanked the Norwegian delegate for enabling the question of mandates to be dealt with by the Sixth Committee. He considered that the tradition in this matter was a sound one.

He noticed that a recommendation had been made that foreign doctors should be granted admission into mandated territories ; this principle had already been adopted in respect of one large mandated area, and he hoped that the practice would extend.

With regard to the problems raised by the termination of mandates, he did not think it was possible to lay down clear and precise conditions applicable to every case. He considered that the policy taken by the Mandates Commission in this matter was satisfactory. The principles established by the Commission applied to Iraq. He welcomed the approaching end of the mandate in that country, and had no doubt that the change would be carried out in a manner satisfactory to all concerned. He looked forward also to Iraq's entry into the League.

M. SATO (Japan) summarised the work of the Japanese Government in the territories under C mandate in the Pacific. He pointed out the great material difficulties involved and mentioned that the Marianne Archipelago, the Caroline and the Marshall Islands contained about 1,400 islands scattered over an area of 800,000 square kilometres. The total area of the islands was less than 2,150 kilometres. The Japanese Government's task included education, communications, public health, the development of economic activities and the setting up of a judicial system ; it was also endeavouring to improve the conditions of a native population which was naturally inclined to indolence.

Owing to the rudimentary development of these islands, the cost of this work fell on the Japanese Treasury, which granted subsidies to natives and settlers for the development of the resources of the territories, and for public health. From 1922 to 1930, the Japanese Treasury had provided subsidies amounting to more than 50,000,000 Swiss francs. In 1925, it had established five primary schools ; in 1926, an occupational school had been organised. To-day, the primary schools numbered thirty-one, nine of which were for Japanese children, while twenty-two were for the natives. Education was free ; the children in some cases were maintained and fed by the Government. Attendance on the whole was good, varying from 95 to 22.5 per cent, according to localities. In April 1930, the number of native school-children was 3,729, of whom 346 received free board and lodging. The subjects taught in the occupational school were carpentry, agriculture, hat-making, ironwork, knitting, etc. The religious life of the natives was not neglected, Catholic, Protestant and Buddhist missions being granted Government subsidies.

Since undertaking the mandate, Japan had investigated the very serious death rate in these islands and had built eight hospitals, provided with a large staff. In remote areas, tours by doctors had been organised and depots set up for drugs and bandages. Enquiry into the question of the reduction in the population of Yap, which had been referred to by the Mandates Commission, showed that 50 per cent of the deaths in that island were due to tuberculosis. A strenuous campaign had been undertaken against leprosy, three establishments having been set up to deal with this scourge. The expense was covered by a special fund given by the Emperor of Japan.

Medical work in the Islands was much hindered by the unwillingness of the natives to have recourse to foreign medical science rather than to their own traditional remedies.

Subsidies had also been provided for the construction of drinking-water reservoirs, public baths, physical culture, etc. Agriculture was still in a very primitive stage, apart from the cultivation of the cocoanut ; but encouragement was being given to the cultivation of sugar-cane, coffee and vegetables. Steps were also being taken to further the stock-breeding and fishing industries.

A spirit of thrift had been developed in the natives, and in 1929 more than 60,000 yen had been deposited in the savings banks. Exports for 1929 reached 7,638,000 yen ; imports amounted to 7,122,000 yen.

It was the Japanese Government's firm intention to carry on this work, and he hoped that its efforts would be duly appreciated by the League.

Mr. CADOGAN (British Empire) was glad to take note of the declaration of the French delegate as to the readiness of his Government to settle frontier questions still outstanding between Syria and Iraq. The British Government would do all in its power to bring about a satisfactory solution.

Sir Thomas WILFORD (New Zealand) congratulated the Japanese delegate upon the report which he had just made ; the difficulties inherent in a task of this nature were perhaps not fully understood by all the delegates present. The Japanese Government had clearly dealt satisfactorily with the suspicion and distrust of modern methods which were, quite naturally, entertained by these people. New Zealand had a large Maori population, and, after the signature of the Treaty of 1840, there had been some difficulty and misunderstanding between the two races ; but understanding and forbearance had resulted in the fact that the Maori people and the Europeans to-day were living in perfect harmony and accord. The people in Samoa were related to the Maoris and had much in common with them.

Sir Thomas Wilford had been much struck with the statement of the Japanese delegate regarding the sums deposited in the savings banks. The teaching of thrift was one of the most difficult problems in dealing with these people. He also appreciated its success in dealing with the prejudice that obtained against modern medical methods.

In New Zealand, the mandate for Samoa was regarded as a sacred trust, and it was hoped that, under wise and considerate administration, the wish of the Permanent Mandates Commission —that those for whom the mandatory Power acted as guardian and trustees might in the near future be able to stand alone—might be accomplished. The New Zealand Government desired to congratulate the members of the Permanent Mandates Commission for their untiring vigilance in the interests of mandated territories, and the ability with which they had handled the multifarious duties imposed upon them.

M. SATO (Japan) thanked Sir Thomas Wilford for his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN pronounced the discussion closed.

15. Slavery (continuation) : Report of the Sub-Committee.

M. LOUDON (Netherlands) read the report of the Sub-Committee (Annex 4). It would be noticed that Count Apponyi's draft resolution congratulating the Emperor of Abyssinia had not been included in the report. The Sub-Committee had considered that, in view of the tributes which had been paid to the Emperor of Abyssinia, both in the Committee and in the documents, a special resolution was not necessary. The Liberian delegate had agreed to this procedure so far as the tribute to his own Government was concerned.

The CHAIRMAN suggested that, provided the Sub-Committee's report were approved by the Fourth Committee, any remarks of a congratulatory nature should be included by the Rapporteur in his report to the Assembly.

Count DE PENHA GARCIA (Portugal) said that it gave him great satisfaction to be able to approve, to a certain extent, the proposal made by the British delegation, to which he had at first objected. During the discussion in the Sub-Committee, the British delegation had accepted the amendments he had suggested. The Portuguese delegation could not agree to the revival of the former Slavery Commission which had concluded its mission ; nor could it countenance any Commission that was not in conformity with the Covenant or with the legal situation created by the Slavery Convention. The legal reasons which had prevented the Portuguese delegation from assenting to the British proposal for three years still obtained, and it would adhere to them. Subject, however, to these reservations, it was glad to support the resolution adopted by the Sub-Committee.

Financial considerations came within the jurisdiction of the Fourth Committee, and the Portuguese delegation reserved its right to examine them in connection with the question of the urgency of taking action on the Sub-Committee's resolution.

M. LOUWERS (Belgium) said that the Sub-Committee had taken care to give the resolution a legal basis. It must be borne in mind that the States represented at the Assembly could take no resolution that would be binding on them except to the extent to which such resolutions were in accordance with the Covenant or the Conventions in force.

For instance, the Assembly could not pass a simple resolution and so create, in the matter of slavery, institutions implying supervision, of whatever kind, over the action of the countries concerned, since neither the Covenant nor the 1926 Convention made provision for supervision. The votes and the discussions that had taken place during the framing of the Convention even ruled out supervision categorically.

The same remark might be made of any institution implying, in this subject, any kind of intervention by the League in the life of the States concerned. If such supervision or intervention were necessary or expedient—and he would pass no judgment on that point at the moment—they must be set up in due and regular form. The Sub-Committee had considered, and M. Louwers still held this view, that no objection could be taken to the resolution from this point of view. Nevertheless, certain highly qualified persons had expressed to him certain apprehension regarding it. As time was short, M. Louwers would not ask that the text should be examined by a qualified Committee of jurists—the First Committee, for example—but he thought it useful for the Sixth Committee to take note of the reservation he had made, so that the resolution might not constitute a precedent.

M. GORGÉ (Switzerland) asked that his country might be included amongst those which had unreservedly supported the British proposal.

On the motion of the CHAIRMAN, New Zealand was also added to this list.

It was further decided that the Rapporteur, when mentioning the countries supporting the motion, should make it clear that, in doing so, they were merely voicing the general attitude of the whole Committee.

Mlle. VACARESCO (Roumania) wished to thank the Chairman for remembering that silent States were also consenting States.

Mr. CADOGAN (British Empire) said he was sure Lord Lytton would wish him to express his satisfaction at the agreement which had been reached.

The Committee adopted the report and draft resolution submitted by the Sub-Committee.

16. Russian, Armenian, Assyrian, Assyro-Chaldean and Turkish Refugees.

M. Max HUBER (President of the Nansen International Office for Refugees), reminded the Committee that the Assembly last year had set up a Nansen International Office for Refugees, which was to submit an annual report, and a plan for winding up its activities (document A.27).

The Office had endeavoured to follow the principle laid down by the League that its budget should be decreased by 10 per cent annually. It had not been possible to keep to this rate of reduction as regards the budget for 1932, but the plan prepared would reduce the life of the Office from ten to nine years, and thus wind it up definitely in 1938. The absence of any considerable reference in its report to actual work done would be understood when it was remembered that the report had had to be prepared only two months after the Office had started operations.. The resources of the Office, and in consequence its work, had been considerably hampered by the economic depression, which had much reduced subscriptions. The widespread unemployment, moreover, made it more difficult to provide for the settlement of refugees.

M. Huber was glad to say that there was a prospect of reviving the Erivan scheme, which Dr. Nansen had, to his great regret, felt bound to abandon. Though he had no official information from the Erivan Government, M. Huber had been informed by the various Armenian Refugee Associations that the Erivan Republic was prepared to take 6,000 refugees at once, and hoped to take 4,000 more towards the end of the present year. The only condition was that the cost of the transport of the refugees to Batum should not be a charge on the State of Erivan. M. Huber had applied to the Greek Government in this matter, and M. Venizelos had very generously agreed on behalf of the Greek Government, to be responsible for the cost of transport of 10,000 Armenians, from Greece to Batum. He was sure the Committee would agree with him in thanking Greece for the assistance, which would involve an expenditure on her part greater than the annual budget of the Office. It was expected that 1,000 Armenians would be sent from Bulgaria, and the Bulgarian Government had also undertaken to consider favourably the payment for the transport of these refugees. He hoped that the Council and the Assembly would support this scheme, and that some assistance might be given to the Erivan Government in this matter, either in monetary payments or in kind.

The French Government had requested the continuance of the work of the Office in Syria, and a plan was being prepared for dealing with the refugees still there. Financial difficulties were considerable, but he was hoping much from the generosity of the Armenians themselves, with whose help it might be possible to complete the settlement within two years.

A further matter to be dealt with by the Office was that of Russians in Manchuria and China. The difficulties in this case arose largely from the vast distances concerned, and it was only owing to lack of funds that it was impossible to contemplate the transfer of some of the refugees to South America. There was, further, the cost of the maintenance of the refugees themselves. He referred particularly to the difficulties of the Russian refugees of German origin, whose lot was a very hard one.

The work of the Office could be extended greatly if the Nansen stamp system were widely applied. In the case of 70 per cent of the refugees it was not applied at all or only on a voluntary basis. In this connection, he referred to the appeal which had been made by a number of statesmen on the anniversary of Dr. Nansen's death, and wished to thank them for what they had done. Some result had already been obtained from this appeal: £4,000 had been subscribed by Denmark, and a similar amount by the Armenian (Lord Mayor's) Fund and the "Save the Children" Fund in England. While M. Huber was very grateful for these contributions, he pointed out the vast extent of the work to be done. He appealed to the Assembly to give the Office all the assistance in its power to enable the work to be continued.

M. VON MUTIUS (Germany) wished to associate himself with M. Huber's remarks regarding the hard lot of the Russian refugees of German origin.

The CHAIRMAN expressed the thanks of the Committee for the work done by M. Huber, to whom he wished to pay a personal tribute. He did not think that the Fourth Committee would raise difficulties about contributions, as this was a question of life and death for the Office.

Mlle. FORCHHAMMER (Denmark) was very glad to hear that the Erivan scheme was being revived. She was sure that this would have given great pleasure to Dr. Nansen.

With regard to the contributions of Denmark to the funds of the Office, she paid a tribute to the Chairman of the Committee—Count Moltke. It was largely due to his personal efforts that Denmark had been able to make what was a not unimportant contribution for so small a country. She wished to support M. Huber's appeal to the various nations for constructive assistance in this great work.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia), agreeing with the remarks of previous speakers, hoped that private charity would respond to the appeal made on behalf of the Nansen Fund.

As regards the question of juridical protection for refugees, he stated that the Czechoslovak Government would treat all passport questions with the greatest possible liberality, and, as regards entry and transit, would put the refugees on an equality with other nationals. He hoped that other countries would follow the same policy.

M. LANGE (Norway) was glad to see that his great compatriot, Dr. Nansen, had found so worthy a successor in M. Huber. He felt that the humanitarian work for refugees which the League performed through the Office did it great credit. The position of the refugees would be serious when the Office was wound up. In this connection, M. Lange referred to the statement of the Inter-Governmental Commission found on page 38 of the Supplementary Report on the Work of the League (document A.6 (1)). He realised that, at the end of this period, the League would remain responsible for watching over the juridical and political position of the refugees, but he hoped that the Office, and more particularly the Inter-Governmental Commission, would succeed in ensuring that, at the conclusion of their activities, the refugees were not in a worse position.

M. Lange had read with interest the report of the Office on its work during the past year, and he fully approved its Statute and Regulations. He felt, however, that it would be wise to insert in future reports information with regard, not only to the administrative work of the Office, but also to its actual efforts on behalf of the refugees. That was essential if a favourable response were to be obtained to the appeal issued by certain statesmen on behalf of the creation of a fund for refugees.

Mlle. VACARESCO (Roumania) felt that Dr. Nansen was present in spirit with the Committee. She herself had constantly been concerned with refugees in her own country, and the various Governments in Roumania had, without exception, given close attention to this question. They were faced by the spectre of lack of funds and the spectre of economy, but these spectres were now so familiar that she suggested that an endeavour might perhaps be made to hustle them somewhat.

In conclusion, she advocated more strenuous propaganda in support of this work.

M. RAPHAEL (Greece) said that his Government entirely approved of the report, and had followed the work of the Office with great interest. He hoped that the Assembly would not refuse the contribution requested, which represented but a small expenditure from each of the Member States.

M. DEKIEN TUNG (China) thanked the President of the Office for his report, and paid a tribute to the work of the late Dr. Nansen. He called the attention of the Office to the situation of more than 100,000 Russian refugees in China, and particularly to that of more than 1,500 of German origin in Harbin.

M. HUBER (President of the Nansen International Office for Refugees), in thanking the Committee for their remarks, wished to add that he had been greatly assisted by members of the Secretariat and by the various refugee organisations. He was also greatly indebted to Major Johnson, who was familiar with the details of the work carried out by Dr. Nansen, and had been of inestimable assistance to him in the work which he had so recently undertaken.

The CHAIRMAN, on behalf of the Committee, endorsed M. Huber's remarks.

17. Russian, Armenian, Assyrian, Assyro-Chaldean and Turkish Refugees (continuation) : Appointment of a Rapporteur.

On the proposal of the Chairman, M. FOTITCH was appointed Rapporteur.

SIXTH MEETING.

Held on Saturday, September 19th, 1931, at 10 a.m.

Chairman: M. MOTTA (Switzerland).

18. Russian, Armenian, Assyrian, Assyro-Chaldean and Turkish Refugees (continuation : Examination of the Draft Report to the Assembly.

M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia), Rapporteur, read his report (Annex 5).

He stated that he had reason to believe that the Supervisory Commission would propose a reduction of 10 per cent in the budget of the Office. He considered that it would be for the President of the Office to consider to what extent this step might affect the liquidation proposals and the working of the Office in 1932, and to discuss the matter with the Governing Body of the Office.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that it would be premature to discuss the question until the report of the Fourth Committee on this matter had been received, in order to see whether a reduction in the budget of the Office was, in fact, proposed.

M. LANGE (Norway) regretted that no mention had been made in the report of a matter on which he had laid emphasis on the previous day, and which he considered of great importance—namely, the necessity that the reports should contain, in future, information regarding the work carried out by the Office. It was not possible to appeal for funds on the basis of a purely administrative and legal report, and it was important that the public should be informed of the work done. He asked that this point should be mentioned, if not in the resolution, at least in the body of the report.

M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia), Rapporteur, was ready to accede to the request of M. Lange. He explained that the Nansen Office had only been in existence three months, and its President had expressed the opinion that a fair idea of the practical work of the Office could not be obtained in so short a time. It was, moreover, understood that future reports would certainly contain this information.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) was of the opinion that a resolution of the Assembly could not fail to be of assistance to the Nansen Office.

Mlle. FORCHHAMMER (Denmark) wondered whether, without waiting for the next session of the Assembly or the Council, it would be possible, when launching an appeal for funds, to publish some sort of interim report, giving details of the work done by the organisations dealing with refugees.

She noted that reference was made in the report to the Armenian refugees of the "Armenian Republic", whereas, previously, the term "Republic of Erivan" had been employed. She thought some confusion might arise in the minds of the public which did not know of the change that had been made.

Major JOHNSON (Secretary-General of the Office) stated that the Governing Body intended to give full information in its reports on the work done by the Office, and was about to publish a very complete handbook to accompany the appeal for funds. This handbook would give a clear idea of the work done by the High Commission and the Office up to the present time, and information regarding its future programme. The Governing Body, during the first three months of its existence dealt with in the report, had been compelled to follow the very clear instructions of the last Assembly, and to concentrate its attention on drawing up a liquidation scheme ; that was the main reason why only brief mention was made in the report of refugee work undertaken by the Office. This information would certainly be given in future reports.

The CHAIRMAN thought that this explanation would satisfy Mlle. Forchhammer and M. Lange. The second remark of Mlle. Forchhammer might be met by inserting the word "Erivan" in parentheses after the word "Armenia".

M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia), Rapporteur, stated that the Inter-Governmental Advisory Commission for Refugees had expressed the wish that its members should include a representative of the Belgian Government ; he had only that morning received information that the Belgian Government agreed to be represented on the Commission, and he asked permission to mention this fact in his report and in the resolution.

This proposal was adopted.

The draft report and resolution were adopted.

M. FOTITCH was appointed Rapporteur to the Assembly.

19. Work of the Organisation for Intellectual Co-operation.

The CHAIRMAN welcomed the attendance of M. de Reynold, Member of the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation ; M. Dufour-Feronce, Under-Secretary-General ; M. de Montenach, Secretary of the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation at the Secretariat ; and M. Bonnet, Director of the Institute of Intellectual Co-operation.

The report of M. Sato (Japan), Rapporteur (document A.VI/7.1931), was read.

M. DE REYNOLD (International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation) made the following statement :

(1) The machinery of the Organisation was in working order and was giving results, largely owing to the reforms of the previous years. The Assembly might therefore now be asked to complete this reform by taking up again, in the sense indicated in the report of the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation, its resolution of September 24th, 1926, in which the Organisation of Intellectual Co-operation was approved.

(2) The work of international co-operation in intellectual life was being rapidly developed. It already existed as between national institutions concerned with intellectual rights, international associations of students, directors of national university offices, institutes for the scientific study of international relations and in relation to museums and popular art. It was in course of completion as regards libraries and archives, and, in the field of primary education, for educational museums and exchanges of material ; preparations were being made for co-operation between institutes for the history of art ; attention was also being paid to co-operation in the matter of translations and that of the natural and exact sciences. It was gratifying to note that the Committee was now being approached for assistance in such matters and in the establishment of international co-operation in general.

(3) The development of science, art and letters was gaining much from the Organisation of Intellectual Co-operation, and that in two ways—in the first place, thanks to its organisation and procedure, and, above all, the system of expert committees, which was much more flexible and less clumsy than the previous method of congresses. The conclusions of these committees were rapidly brought before the Council or the Assembly through the Committee, and were finally transmitted to the bodies concerned, in the first place to the Governments. Secondly, this development was fostered by the work of the Organisation of Intellectual Co-operation itself ; evidence of this could be seen in the field of museums and of popular art.

(4) By means of intellectual co-operation, the work of the scientist, the writer and the artist was receiving material assistance in the more rapid supply of information, in meetings between workers in different countries, and in defending intellectual rights.

(5) The tendency of the work was to become still more universal, and, in particular, as was mentioned by M. Sato, contact was being established between European and Asiatic civilisations. This was shown by the recent proposals of the Chinese Government and by the despatch of two missions to China. A further proof was to be seen in the interest taken in the subject in Latin America where the Ibero-American collection had been published.

(6) Intellectual co-operation was also of assistance in bringing the nations together.

(7) Intellectual co-operation also assisted the cause of the League by making it more widely known, by spreading abroad its ideas and principles and by associating with its work an ever-increasing number of intellectuals.

The development of national committees and the increasing importance of their work deserved special mention. They were becoming more and more the basis of intellectual co-operation, to which they were constantly giving most valuable assistance. The recent successful reorganisation was largely due to the efforts of these bodies. It was therefore essential that they should meet at regular intervals, in order that they might be acquainted with the results of the reforms.

Finally, he wished to draw attention to the desire expressed by the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation that the Assembly might show itself in future as generous as possible in the free distribution of documents concerning the League.

M. PETSCHE (France) regarded the work of intellectual co-operation as a sign of the vitality of the League, and considered that the results of last year's reforms promised well for the future.

He reviewed the work done in France in this field and mentioned, in particular, the new school of peace set up in 1930 on the initiative of Mlle. Louise Weiss ; the propaganda carried out on behalf of intellectual co-operation ; M. Roger Lévy's remarkable book, Intellectuels, unissez-vous.

M. Petsche read the following extract from the Minutes of the sixth meeting of the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation, on July 23rd, 1931 :

> "M. Oprescu and M. de Reynold pointed out, in this connection, that, in accordance with a recommendation by the Committee of Enquiry, it was no longer necessary for the Committee to invite the representatives of the various associations, confederations, etc., with which it was in touch to attend its meetings."

He thought it would be a pity to exclude the Confederation of Intellectual Workers from the meetings of the Committee, and hoped that the Confederation would be given satisfaction in this matter.

The International Institute had considered the educational value of broadcasting. It was sure that broadcasting, like cinematography, and, in the future, television, undoubtedly raised educational problems ; but they also raised intellectual problems of a much wider scope than those of mere education. The results of this invention might be very good, but they might also be very dangerous, and the League should keep a watchful eye upon the effect of these new methods for the diffusion of knowledge upon the human mind. He suggested that a resolution should be passed authorising the International Institute and the International Committee to consider the problem of broadcasting in all its aspects.

M. CASARES (Spain) referred, in the first place, to the resolution by the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation regarding the official recognition of the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation and suggested that the Sixth Committee should address a recommendation to the Assembly on this subject.

He pointed out that the new Organisation had not yet had time to make good, but that a considerable improvement in the Institute was already noticeable, and that there was every reason to hope that results would finally be achieved.

As regards the instruction of youth, a question which had always keenly interested the Spanish delegation, no one could deny that the work of moral disarmament in the elementary schools and the education of the rising generation in the spirit of international co-operation and cordiality constituted a specific part of the League's work. For that reason, he had conducted a strong campaign in order that the question of instruction should be placed on the Committee's programme, in spite of the opposition of all his colleagues in the Committee of Enquiry. Since that time, he had had the satisfaction of seeing his point of view adopted by other members of the Committee, including M. Painlevé. It had also been adopted by M. Briand, who had made an urgent appeal to teachers at the last Assembly.

M. Casares was very glad to see the consolidation of the educational information centre.

Turning to the revision of school text-books, he noted that the resolution adopted in 1925 by the Assembly included machinery for making corrections. The system had already shown good results and could be still more useful if it were better known and more frequently utilised. This resolution was, in fact, insufficient at present, and should be supplemented by more direct and effective measures. M. Casares, in agreement with M. Munch, had therefore, in 1930, submitted to the Sub-Committee of Experts for the Instruction of Youth a resolution with a view to organising an enquiry regarding school text-books used for instruction in history and geography, civics and morals. This enquiry was summarised in a report which M. Casares thought should be given the greatest possible publicity.

In order to draw the conclusions from the enquiry, it was proposed to form a Committee of Experts composed of representatives of the Commission on History Teaching of the International Committee for Historical Sciences, pedagogical circles, institutes for the scientific study of international relations and the Sub-Committee of Experts for the Instruction of Youth in the Aims of the League of Nations. M. Casares suggested that a representative of the International Bureau of Education of Geneva should also be included among the members of this Committee of Experts.

The Spanish Government was greatly interested in the studies undertaken with a view to reaching a universal agreement on the basis of the Berne and Havana Conventions.

In conclusion M. Casares personally drew attention to a resolution adopted by the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation regarding the universal adoption of Roman characters. The support of the League of Nations would be very useful to this movement.

M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia) concluded from the documents placed at the Committee's disposal that last year had been particularly fertile. He praised the systematic efforts of the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation and the Institute, the new management of which had given proof of intelligence and firmness. He did not overlook the International Museums Office, and he paid a tribute to the men who had devoted their learning and faith to this work.

With regard to the programme drawn up by the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation, he noted with satisfaction the efforts to form a collection of Ibero-American works. Thanks to the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation and to the Institute, the countries of Latin America would henceforward have a means of direct co-operation in the sphere of thought.

In South America, national centres of intellectual co-operation had been created. He referred, in particular, to the centre at La Paz.

Intellectual co-operation helped to bring about closer relations between the nations by means of the cinematograph, broadcasting, and all methods of disseminating thought. He was, however, particularly interested in the question of instruction in the history of art. He pointed out in this connection that, thanks to the collection of engraving plates and casts, by which the American youth were enabled to study the works of European museums, this instruction would no longer be so uninteresting as it had formerly been in Latin America.

He noted the great progress made in educational matters by the exchange of pupils, professors and school material.

Lastly, M. Costa du Rels was glad that, henceforward, the treasures of European culture and the marvels of the museums and libraries could be shared by all nations.

M. LANGE (Norway) assured the Committee that Norway attached great importance to the work of intellectual co-operation and asked, in the interest of the work itself, that the greatest care should be taken to preclude any overlapping. He was not convinced that this had been completely avoided. In this connection, M. Lange referred to the creation of an educational information centre. If this institution was intended to give instruction in the works and aims of the League of Nations, its title was likely to lead the public astray, since it created the impression that it was an institution dealing with education in general ; there was already an International Bureau of Education, with which the centre in question would overlap.

He would like to say a few words regarding private action taken last year at Geneva by a Scandinavian group. A Folk High School had been created at Geneva, by means of funds collected in the Scandinavian countries, where instruction was given in the three Scandinavian languages on the work of the League of Nations, etc. This instruction was given in two stages. First, an important place was given to the history, literature and social conditions of the Scandinavian countries themselves. The students were thus made aware, within a limited sphere with which they were familiar, of the possibilities and means of co-operation between nations. In the second place, the school dealt with political and economic problems of international importance, and the manner in which the Geneva institutions endeavoured to solve them.

This was an example which might well be followed. M. Lange thought he was not too bold in imagining that one day a sort of university city would arise at Geneva, where would be assembled students of various national groups, following the courses of a popular university at Geneva, organised in accordance with this model and giving teaching in the languages of the students, who would be able at the same time to study the working of the Geneva institutions on the spot. The Scandinavian school in question proposed to organise, on the eve of the Disarmament Conference, a special course for Scandinavian journalists, with a view to their better comprehension of the technical problems of disarmament.

M. Gorgé (Switzerland) congratulated the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation, its secretariat, its executive committee, the Institute, its collaborators and, in the first place, its distinguished Director, M. Bonnet, on the rapidity with which the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation had overcome the growing pains from which it had suffered in the previous year. He regretted that time did not permit of his dwelling on the various resolutions adopted by the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation at its last session. He would confine himself to calling attention to the following resolution adopted by that Committee :

> "The International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation feels that it should call the particular notice of the Assembly of the League of Nations to the Exhibition of Popular Arts which it is proposed to hold at Berne in 1934, and begs it to urge the Governments of States Members of the League to undertake to associate themselves with this great international manifestation, either by appointing delegates to the Grand Committee of the Exhibition or by sending exhibits. Small credits might be provided from now onwards in the budgets for 1932, 1933 and 1934."

The French representative on the Council had strongly supported the project when it was brought before the Council. It was not surprising that the Committee and the French representative were supporting the Exhibition, seeing that the idea was French rather than Swiss. It was nevertheless a French idea which had developed and taken shape within the League of Nations itself.

M. Gorgé then reviewed the various stages in connection with this proposal—M. Henri Focillon's initiative in favour of organising a Congress and Exhibition of Popular Art, the decision, in the first place, merely to convene a congress to express an opinion on the organisation of the Exhibition, and the step taken in 1927 by the city of Berne in soliciting the honour of being the seat of the future Exhibition.

M. Gorgé then recalled the resolutions passed by the Council and the Assembly on this subject, the meeting of the First Congress at Prague, the creation of an International Committee on Popular Arts, which had formed a bureau under the direction of M. Lehmann, the Director of the Altona Museum, and, lastly, the acceptance by the Prague Congress of the offer made by the city of Berne.

M. Gorgé stated that, in 1929, the city of Berne had created the provisional organs of the Exhibition. Those organs had decided, in agreement with the Bureau of the International Committee on Popular Arts, that the Exhibition should include all æsthetic products emanating from the people and intended for popular use—that was to say, useful products to which the artisan's traditional work had added an element of grace, art and beauty.

The International Committee, at its Rome session in 1929, entirely approved the steps taken by the city of Berne. In 1930, the city of Berne prepared a provisional plan of the Exhibition, providing for an expenditure of about 14 million Swiss francs, of which 4 millions would be supplied by the city of Berne, the canton of Berne and the Confederation. The Second Congress on Popular Arts was held at Antwerp, Liège and Brussels during the same year and unreservedly approved the measures taken by the city of Berne.

In 1931, the Swiss Federal Council issued invitations to all Members of the League of Nations and to fourteen States non-members. In the meantime, the provisional organs of the Exhibition were replaced by definitive organs and the Exhibition was given a well-defined juridical status in accordance with the Swiss Civil Code. A Committee known as the "Grand Committee" had also been formed, including not only representatives of the city of Berne and the Swiss cantons, but also of all the States which had decided to take part in the Exhibition. The Secretariat of the League of Nations was represented, as was also the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation and the Institute. In this connection, M. Gorgé referred to the very important part which M. de Reynold had played in this Committee as representative of the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation.

The success of the Exhibition obviously depended on the co-operation of the States. In calling the attention of the members of the Sixth Committee to the urgency of the question, M. Gorgé ventured, as representative of the Swiss delegation, to express the hope that the Governments would examine the question of their possible participation as early as possible.

Count DE PENHA GARCIA (Portugal) said that when, two years ago, the Committee and Institute had endeavoured to solve the problem of intellectual co-operation, he had had some uneasiness as to the scope of the reform contemplated. Since the reform had been introduced, the results had convinced him that the new method was full of promise. In the first place, the principle had been laid down that, if effective work were to be done, the best elements should be chosen as collaborators from that select group which formed the intellectuals. On the other hand, a certain reorganisation had taken place with a view to making the office administration more effective. Lastly, a careful choice had been made of the questions to be studied.

Nevertheless, the human mind was so vast and its field of action so extensive that it could not be expected that organisations, however powerful they might be, would obtain very great results in the space of a few years.

The report before the Committee showed that the work of intellectual co-operation, as in the previous year, was directed towards education; but that on this occasion it had a wider view. Education was evidently the most important instrument, since it made it possible to influence the rising generations, in whose hands the future lay. Work among the young should be pursued with insistence and intelligence, so that future generations might be better prepared to receive the instruction of the League of Nations and, above all, to support its work.

Count de Penha Garcia urged the necessity of taking the greatest possible advantage of the journeys of young men to foreign countries.

The question of extending the work of intellectual co-ordination was very important. A large number of associations, international and national, were studying or cultivating the sciences, literature and the arts. To bring them together and co-ordinate their efforts was of great importance to the future of the nations. The Committee on Arts and Letters had a fine piece of work before it.

Count de Penha Garcia also approved the idea of publishing a collection of Ibero-American classics. He recommended that a fairly large section should be reserved for Portuguese classics. Portuguese literature, very abundant and powerful, was one of the earliest literatures in Europe, and it had also taken root in Brazil.

Count de Penha Garcia welcomed the step taken by the Athens Conference, which should study problems connected with the conservation of historic monuments, and thought the Governments should follow that Conference's work.

With regard to the remarks made by the Swiss delegate on the Berne Exhibition, the Portuguese delegate made several observations about the importance of the popular arts, and stated that he would urge his Government to accept the invitation received from the city of Berne. The popular art of Portugal was full of grace and spontaneity, and he would be delighted to see it represented at Berne.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) wished to make remarks on two points in the report. The first referred to the co-operation of institutes devoted to scientific research in political, economic and social questions. According to the report, it had been decided that these institutions should hold a study conference each year for the purpose of comparing their work.

In M. Fierlinger's opinion, this conference should be organised on the model of those held by the Institute of Pacific Relations at Honolulu and elsewhere, in which discussions took place, without votes or resolutions, on the American round-table system ; this method had given excellent results. The Czechoslovak Government hoped this conference would be carefully prepared and would bring together as large a number as possible of institutions for political science.

The second point referred to the International Exhibition of Popular Arts at Berne. M. Fierlinger thought that as large a number as possible of States Members of the League of Nations should give a favourable reply to the Swiss Government's invitation. In this connection, he submitted the following draft resolution :

"The Assembly,

"Recalling its resolution of September 22nd, 1927, concerning the Popular Arts Exhibition and concerning the assistance to be rendered by League organs towards the success of this undertaking ;

"Endorsing the proposals contained in the resolution of the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation and bearing in mind the recommendation made by the Council in its resolution of September 4th, 1931 :

"Draws the attention of States Members of the League of Nations to the initiative taken by the city of Berne and to the invitation sent by the Federal Government requesting States Members of the League to take part in this Exhibition ;

"Would ask States Members to associate themselves with this great international demonstration and to take suitable measures to that end."

(The continuation of the discussion was adjourned to the next meeting.)

SEVENTH MEETING.

Held on Saturday, September 19th, 1931, at 9.30 p.m.

Chairman : M. MOTTA (Switzerland), then M. COSTA DU RELS (Bolivia).

20. Work of the Organisation for Intellectual Co-operation (Continuation).

Count APPONYI (Hungary) wished to draw attention to slight difficulties which had arisen owing to the refusal of certain neighbouring countries to permit the import of Hungarian printed matter—not merely newspapers, but scientific works as well. Such action was clearly opposed to the idea of intellectual co-operation, and he hoped that it would be possible to settle the question amicably. If, however, this should not be the case, he wished to reserve the right of Hungary to return to the matter later.

Mlle. VACARESCO (Roumania) gave an account of the work done by the Permanent Committee on Arts and Letters, particularly in connection with the cinema. She had raised that question herself four years previously, and the fact that there were at the present time 650,000 cinema halls in the world, holding something like 100 million persons, emphasised the importance of the question. The Permanent Committee had been working in co-operation with the International Educational Cinematographic Institute at Rome and had been pleased to learn that an annual prize for the best scenario dealing with peace and international friendship had been instituted. Referring to broadcasting, gramophones, etc., she emphasised the importance of using such machinery as a tool and not allowing it to dominate humanity. The real task of the Committee was to contribute towards setting up new standards of ethics and to make men not merely perfect but happy. She hoped the Committee would emphasise the importance of publicity for its work, both by the Press and by the League.

(The Chair was taken by M. Costa du Rels, Vice-Chairman.)

Mr. BURRELL (Canada) noted that the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation had now so consolidated its position as to have gained recognition as an integral and highly important part of the League's organised activities. Congratulating those who had last year successfully worked out the best methods of securing success in the attainment of their ideals, he remarked that the remoteness of his country, and the fact that its constitutional arrangements divided federal from provincial activities, had, perhaps, hitherto prevented that close association with the practical programmes of the Committee which might otherwise have been the case. But it should be remembered that Canada, as a Member of the League from its inception, had never failed in its financial obligations, and had for many years been able, alone on the North American continent, to raise an authoritative voice on the general aims and ideals of the League. Into the details of the reorganised programme of the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation he would not enter. His country approved such matters as exchange professorships, encouragement of travelling students, the use of that powerful modern agency, the cinematograph, and especially the widespread efforts for the education of the young. Canada had already released educational films from the burden of a Customs duty, and had in various ways helped to disseminate a wider knowledge of the League's aims and activities.

He would be remiss in the discharge of his duty if he did not register his satisfaction with the Committee's expressed wish that progress should be made in the plans for disarmament and the promotion of international peace. The children of to-day would soon be bearing the responsibilities which now rest so heavily on older shoulders. It was upon the young, and upon the women of the world, that the long agony and bitterness of modern war must chiefly fall, and how was the present generation to meet the challenge of those accusing and questioning eyes if it failed in its great task ? In every way possible the flow of those intellectual activities which fertilise and enrich all that they touch must be strengthened. If ignorance were banished, half the miseries of the world would disappear. It was the crass stupidity of war as a settlement of disputes which was so astonishing and appalling. It was only by the co-operation of intellect and heart that there could be an effective control of those disordered passions which from time to time gained ascendancy over, and swayed the actions of, nations and men.

The League was not a vast and elaborate piece of machinery, creaking at times for lack of oil, its wheels revolving, now fast, now slowly, at the will of individual men, or groups of men, but rather was it a living thing, containing within it the power of growth—that power which differentiates the living from the dead. If it failed to reach its objectives as fast and as fully as some would wish, let them firmly believe that attainment would come, and that, in the end, an enduring peace among the nations of the world, and a greater happiness for all the peoples in its far-flung Member-States, would amply justify the existence of this great institution.

M. BODRERO (Italy) called attention to the dangers which should be avoided in what he might call the convalescent period of the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation. In the first place, intellectual co-operation should be officially recognised by the League ; secondly, it should be realised that there were certain forms of intellectual work which were unsuitable for co-operative treatment, since they essentially demanded solitude for their execution. Thirdly, funds were necessary, and M. Bodrero did not think the sums requested should be diminished by a single franc.

He agreed that broadcasting was a matter which should be carefully watched by the Committee. He expressed on behalf of M. Rocco and M. de Feo their regret at their inability to be present at the meeting.

M. PUSTA (Estonia) noted that several delegations had called the attention of the Committees and the Assembly to the importance of broadcasting and the cinema in developing an international outlook and making known the work of the League. The Estonian delegation, for instance, had put a proposal of this kind before the Commission of Enquiry for European Union, and the Polish delegation, in a recent memorandum to the Secretariat of the League, had also emphasised the value of the cinema in connection with moral disarmament.

He desired to support M. Lange's proposal that the efforts of those organisations which were following the same aims should be co-ordinated. In this connection, he pointed out, with regard to the educational cinema, that there was a private organisation in Paris—the International Committee for the Diffusion of Artistic and Literary Works by the Cinematograph—a voluntary committee composed of diplomats and scholars, which was doing work similar to that of the Rome Institute. That Committee, as Mlle. Vacaresco had pointed out, had instituted at its own expense a prize of 150,000 French francs for the best scenario of a film calculated to bring the nations together. He thought it would be useful to co-ordinate this measure with the work of the Rome Cinematographic Institute.

With this in mind, he proposed that the Committee should make the following recommendation to the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation :

> "The Sixth Committee invites the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation to bear in mind the steps taken by the International Committee for the Diffusion of Artistic and Literary Works by the Cinematograph in connection with educational cinematography.
> "The International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation is also requested to give its secretariat the necessary instructions to include this Committee in its consultations relating to the production and financing of educational films on the work of the League of Nations."

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) mentioned that she was a member of the National Committee on Intellectual Co-operation in her own country, which had already been able to do useful work. She desired to draw attention to the broadcasting experiments now being made in a number of countries. She would submit a resolution on the matter later. She understood that there were 100 million people in the world who were able to listen every day to the radio ; of these, 50 million were in Europe ; in England over three million homes had wireless sets.

Dame Edith Lyttelton had had an opportunity of listening to the broadcasting to America of a daily report on the work of the League, and emphasised the important effect of wireless in this particular case. In England, instructional talks were broadcast and were listened to by some five thousand schools without payment. These talks interested children very much, particularly those which told them what was going on in the world ; these she had read herself and found extremely interesting. There were also in England thousands of wireless study groups of about fifty members which debated the talks given over the wireless. It was important to avoid commercialising broadcasting, and this was a matter which particularly concerned the Committee. She regarded the present time as one of very rapid evolution, and it was important that mankind should be prepared for the changed conditions of the near future.

Mirza Hussein Khan ALÂ (Persia) referred to the recent foundation in Paris of a society for the study of Iranian studies and Persian art which was open to orientalists and scholars of all countries. All the Persian students in Europe, most of whom were studying in France, were members of this society, which was seeking to advance the ideals of peace and co-operation of the League. It was, perhaps, not too much to say that the collection of objects of art sent by his Government to London, by awakening a strong interest in the artistic achievements of Persia in the course of 5,000 years, had assisted intellectual co-operation.

(M. Motta (Switzerland) took the Chair.)

Mlle. PÜNDER (Germany) was pleased to recognise the successful reorganisation of the Committee. In view of the great amount of unemployment now prevailing, her delegation thought it highly important that the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation should co-operate with the International Labour Office to secure that workers should use their spare time in more intellectual pursuits. Her country sympathised with the efforts made to instil into the young the true spirit of international understanding, and was glad that one of its best experts had been sent to China to assist in the reorganisation of Chinese education.

In Germany, much importance was attached to the deletion of objectionable passages from school text-books and to the teaching of history, geography and languages in such a way as to help international understanding. Mlle. Pünder suggested that an international conference of school-teachers should be held on the subject as soon as possible, and her delegation hoped that the Committee would endorse this proposal.

Dr. CHODZKO (Poland) congratulated all concerned on the successful reorganisation of the Committee. He was glad to see that an enquiry had been made regarding methods of international exchange of secondary-school children. This subject had first been submitted to the 1928 Assembly as the result of the Polish proopsal.

He had been asked to present the following resolution passed by the Fifteenth Plenary Congress of the International Federation of League of Nations Societies, concerning the convening of a world conference on training in world citizenship.

> "The Fifteenth Plenary Congress requests the League of Nations :
> "(a) To summon at the earliest opportunity a world conference on training in world citizenship ;
> "(b) To invite to that conference administrators and teachers as well as representatives of voluntary educational organisations (including the League of Nations Associations), such administrators and representatives to be nominated by, but not representatives of, their respective Governments ;
> "(c) To ask the conference to consider how best :
>
> "(1) By administrative action ;
>
> "(2) Through the courses of instruction in history, geography and other subjects ;
>
> "(3) With the assistance of voluntary organisations, > to give further effect in the training colleges and schools to the recommendations of the League's Sub-Committee of Experts upon how to make the League of Nations known and to develop the spirit of international co-operation."

It was proposed that this conference should include administrators and teachers, as well as representatives of voluntary educational organisations, to be nominated by, but not representatives of, their respective Governments. He handed in the text of this resolution, which he hoped would be adopted by the Sixth Committee, since no expenditure was involved.

In a report submitted to the Assembly in 1930 by M. Fierlinger, it was proposed that an enquiry into the methods of teaching in secondary schools should be undertaken as part of a wider enquiry into intellectual life. At the meeting of the Second Committee on September 24th, 1930, the Polish delegate had asked for an enquiry on the methods of teaching in secondary schools in various countries in relation to higher education. The report of the Director of the Institute, while drawing attention to the Educational Information Centre, apparently proposed to exceed the limits of the work already being undertaken by the International Bureau of Education, and he hoped that there would be no overlapping between the two bodies. He drew attention to the great value of the work of the Committee of Scientific Advisers, and stressed the importance of the question of intellectual and technical relations. Every effort must be made to avert the threatened mechanisation of humanity. Gina Lombroso had pointed out that the resistance of the French peasant to these methods had considerably assisted France in the present economic crisis.

The Polish Government had raised the question of the League of Nations literary prize offered by the Congress of P.E.N. Clubs, and in more favourable circumstances it would be happy to make its contribution. Poland had been pleased to be able to send M. Falski, Director of Primaty Education, to take an active part in the great work of the modernisation of China.

He suggested that the reports from the Committee and from the Institute would be more valuable if they were accompanied by an analytical table showing : (1) resolutions passed by the Committee, Assembly or the Council ; (2) action taken by the Institute on these resolutions ; (3) any results (if possible).

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) wished to support the draft resolution regarding the World Conference for Education.

Dr. HYDER (India), speaking, not as a delegate representing a Government, but as a representative of the people to whom he belonged, said that his country took a very great interest in intellectual co-operation ; intellectual co-operation was in consonance with the whole philosophy of India. It was, indeed, the essential element of the League, and he was anxious that it should not be obscured by the necessary work of organisation and by preoccupation with practical problems. These practical problems could not be solved if the spirit of co-operation were absent. He therefore proposed that a systematic effort should be made to educate the masses in the aims of the League, and, in order to avoid any tendency to sentimentalism, these efforts should be accompanied by written or oral examination at various stages.

It was true that there was no national committee in India, but there were national organisations, inter-university boards, and boards for secondary and primary education. A university, the name of which he could give if desired, was prepared to publish gratis a translation of the League publication, "Aims and Organisation of the League", and other Indian universities would be found willing and anxious to assist the League in its work. Free interchange of ideas and free intercourse between East and West would be wholeheartedly supported by the people of India.

M. GARAY (Panama) mentioned that he had first heard of the proposed Berne Exhibition of Popular Arts when he was in Paris in 1929 in connection with a work he was undertaking on the subject of the folklore of his country. He had since done his best to persuade his Government to participate in this Exhibition and he hoped that he would shortly be able to inform the Assembly that his efforts had been successful.

Count MENSDORFF (Austria) referred to the remarks in M. Sato's report on the subject of National Committees. The Austrian National Committee had been instituted seven years previously on the same lines as the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation at Geneva. Since that time the Austrian Committee had endeavoured to get into touch with the Austrian organisations and institutes dealing with questions of intellectual co-operation. That collaboration had given very satisfactory results, and he therefore ventured to suggest that the Rapporteur should, if he thought fit, mention in the Committee's report the value of active collaboration between the National Committees on intellectual co-operation and the organisations and institutes in the various countries dealing with questions relating to the organisation of intellectual co-operation. He had in mind associations for the exchange of professors and students, for propagating the ideas and aims of the League of Nations, etc.

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) referred to the progress which had been made since the days when the Committee had been chiefly occupied with the crisis threatening intellectual workers. The work of intellectual co-operation was free from the reproach that it was becoming regional in character, as was sometimes alleged in connection with other activities of the League. He welcomed the Ibero-American publications, and hoped that his Government would be able to participate in the Berne Exhibition. He endorsed what had already been said regarding the importance of avoiding overlapping.

The CHAIRMAN, on behalf of his country, desired to thank those speakers who had referred so kindly to the Exhibition of Popular Arts to be held at Berne in 1934.

M. DE REYNOLD (Member of the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation), referring to points which had been raised in previous speeches, said, in reply to the remarks of M. Petsche, that the Committee had no intention or desire to separate itself from other international bodies, but hoped to increase its co-operation with them in the future. The International Federation of Intellectual Workers would be welcomed at the meetings of the Committee, as would also all international intellectual bodies which might be created in future.

There was some slight misunderstanding on the subject of the Educational Information Centre, for which its title was perhaps responsible. This body had branches both in Geneva and Paris, whose respective spheres of work had been carefully defined. The Geneva body would deal with the preparation and execution of work connected with the instruction of youth in the aims of the League, and the Paris body would deal with general pedagogical questions, or matters specifically concerning educational methods. Every effort would be made to avoid overlapping, competition or trespassing on the special territory of education.

Owing to the limited means at the disposal of the Committee, very careful consideration was necessary before taking up fresh subjects. The Committee had already decided to enquire into the question of broadcasting, and he was glad to receive the support of the British and French delegations on this matter. The Committee was also studying the proposal of the International Federation of League of Nations Societies, to which reference had been made. The question of the influence of the cinema was now under consideration by the Committee, which would meet next July. Meanwhile, the International Institute at Rome was working on the subject.

In reply to the delegate of India, he mentioned that negotiations were being carried on for the translation of the League text-book into the five principal languages of India. He would be glad if the remarks of Count Mensdorff might be incorporated in the report of M. Sato. He thanked the Committee for the interest and support it had shown.

M. BONNET (Director of the Institute of Intellectual Co-operation) wished to remove any misapprehensions which might exist on the subject of overlapping. Work was often undertaken by the International Institute in response to a request from a Government department or inter-governmental body, and was always submitted to the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation. The work was entrusted to the officials concerned, who submitted the result of their researches to the various committees of experts and organs of the League of Nations. There were no doubt other bodies well able to assist in such matters, and he could assure the Committee that every possible use would be made of them in the future, as had been done in the past. In this connection, he referred particularly to enquiries such as that on the exchange of school-children and the use of broadcasting. The result of these various enquiries would subsequently be submitted to the Council and the Committee, and there was therefore no real danger of any overlapping. It would be a simple matter to study the suggestions of the British and French delegations regarding broadcasting at the same time as other matters of the same kind which were already under consideration by the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation.

M. SATO (Japan), Rapporteur, wished to thank the members of the Committee for the welcome they had given to his report. He would endeavour to draw up a summary of the very interesting observations which had been made in the course of the discussion, and would prepare a draft resolution for submission to the Assembly.

EIGHTH MEETING.

Held on Monday, September 21st, 1931, at 9.30 a.m.

Chairman: M. MOTTA (Switzerland).

21. Mandates (continuation) : Examination of the Draft Report to the Assembly.

M. LANGE (Norway), Rapporteur, read his report (Annex 6).

Mirza Hussein Khan ALÂ (Persia) expressed his regret that he had been prevented by indisposition from attending the meeting on September 18th. In reading the Minutes of that meeting he had been surprised to note that the French delegate, when referring to the declarations of the Persian representative on the Council on the subject of the grant of guarantees to Persian subjects in Syria and Lebanon in judicial matters, had spoken of a "misunderstanding", and had made a formal declaration that no discrimination to the detriment of Persian subjects was made in countries under French mandate.

He felt bound to remove this further misunderstanding, and he repeated respectfully but definitely the statements he had made to the Council on September 4th. He did not wish to deal with economic matters, although on that subject the Persian Government had good ground for complaint, as Persian products were subject to heavy, he might almost say prohibitive, duties and taxes in Syria. Confining himself to the legal question, he stated that Persian subjects in Syria and Lebanon were compelled to have recourse to native courts, whereas nationals of other States Members of the League could apply to the mixed tribunals.

It was not unreasonable of Persia to demand that all Members of the League should be treated on a footing of absolute equality. Persia was, at the present moment, the only Member of the League whose subjects were placed in an inferior position in Syria and the Lebanon, and this in spite of the fact that, before the war, Persian nationals resident in Ottoman territory enjoyed the privilege of consular jurisdiction, receiving in that respect "most-favoured-nation" treatment.

After the war, and following on the exercise by France, on behalf of the League, of the mandate over Syria and the Lebanon, these consular jurisdictions were replaced by mixed tribunals, which were intended to provide foreigners with guarantees of justice equal to those which had been given by the consular jurisdictions. In requesting that its nationals should have access to these mixed tribunals, the Persian Government did not claim that its position as an ex-capitulatory Power gave it any further rights than those which its nationals had enjoyed under the Ottoman regime. The Persian Government merely asked that its nationals should, like those of all other ex-capitulatory Powers (and several others), continue to enjoy the legal guarantees which had previously been provided by the capitulatory system and which, under the mandates system, took the form of mixed tribunals.

Mirza Hussein Khan Alâ quoted Articles 5 and 6 of the Mandate for Syria and the Lebanon, dated July 24th, 1922. He stated that, with the object of providing a fresh legal system which should give foreigners guarantees equal to those under the capitulatory system, the mandatory Power had drawn up in 1921 various plans which had finally taken the form of the Decrees of July 7th, 1923. These Decrees set up a kind of mixed tribunal for matters in which one of the parties was of foreign nationality, no discrimination being made between foreigners. They also gave to natives the power to lay a matter before the mixed tribunal, even when neither of the parties was of foreign nationality. This system had been modified in Syria by a Decree of the High Commissioner dated February 17th, 1928, and in the Lebanon by a law of the same date. These Decrees introduced distinctions between foreigners and set up classes of foreigners who were entitled to apply to the mixed tribunals for matters in which foreigners were concerned. The result was that the mixed tribunal, which until then had been open to all foreigners without exception, and without any stipulation for reciprocity, was limited to the classes of foreigners mentioned in the Decree and the Law (Article 8). Persia did not appear in any of these lists, and thus without her consent had been deprived in 1928 of the benefits of a legal system which, when first set up (1921), had been intended to take the place of the old capitulatory system, during such time as might be necessary for a thorough reorganisation of the national jurisdiction, which reform had not yet been completed.

The Mandates Commission, when laying down the general conditions to be fulfilled at the time of the termination of the mandatory system in any given country, had recommended the conclusion of preliminary agreements between the mandatory Power and the country under mandate, in order that all the Members of the League might be placed upon a footing of perfect legal equality, as had been done in the Anglo-Iraqi Agreement. This procedure would entail a possible delay of some years, but a continuation of the present state of affairs could not be regarded as satisfactory, as it might lead to friction and to the impairment of good relations between the two countries.

On several occasions, therefore, particularly at the Council meeting of September 4th, he had begged the French Government to put an end as soon as possible to the system which discriminated unfairly between his compatriots and the nationals of other States Members of the League. Her renewed that request to-day. The object in view might be attained by a special Convention, for which provision was made in Article 8 of the Lebanon Law of February 17th, 1928, and in the Decree No. 1820 of the High Commissioner of Syria of the same date.

Mr. TE WATER (Union of South Africa) stated that his Government, in its position as the mandatory Power for South West Africa, was directly interested in the conditions to be laid down for the termination of existing mandates, and wished to draw attention to the fourth paragraph of the draft report as follows :

> "The Sixth Committee has approved the rules laid down in the Council's resolution of September 4th, 1931, with regard to the general conditions to be fulfilled before the mandate regime can be brought to an end in respect of a country placed under that regime. Like the Mandates Commission and the Council, it considered that the emancipation of the territories covered by Article 22 of the Covenant should be made dependent on the fulfilment of certain de facto conditions and on the existence of certain guarantees stipulated in the interests both of the territories concerned and of the international community."

Major Pienaar, who had represented South Africa at the meeting of the Council held on September 4th, 1931, had made some reservations regarding the Council resolutions on this point. After reading the declarations of Major Pienaar at the second meeting (September 4th) of the sixty-fourth session of the Council, Mr. te Water reiterated that his Government could not accept the report presented that day to the Committee without making the same reservations. The delegation of the Union of South Africa did not regard the rules referred to in the fourth paragraph of the draft report as applicable to the case of C mandate, and reserved its right to demand modifications for mandates of this class. In order to avoid delay, he merely asked that his reservations should be mentioned in the Minutes. In the name of his Government, he supported the views expressed in the third paragraph of M. Lange's report.

M. PETSCHE (France) approved, in the name of his delegation, the draft report.

He added that he had taken note of the declarations of the Persian delegation and would transmit them to his Government. He regretted that he was not able to make any further remarks at present and was glad to state that the Persian and French Governments were now in agreement regarding the future treatment of the question.

Mirza Hussein Khan ALÂ (Persia) coud only repeat the request which he had already made that something should be done at once to meet the wishes he had expressed. It seemed the easier to meet this request in that the laws and treaties of Syria and the Lebanon provided expressly for the conclusion of special agreements with the object of giving to nationals of foreign States the right to appear before mixed tribunals. Persia asked for no special privileges. If, as the result of a general agreement, all privileges were suppressed, Persia would be the first to agree to the new state of affairs.

The draft report submitted by M. LANGE was approved, and M. LANGE was appointed Rapporteur to the Assembly.

22. Work of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union (continuation) : Letter from the Chairman of the Second Committee to the Chairman of the Sixth Committee.

The CHAIRMAN read a letter from the Second Committee (Annex 7), and pointed out that it was in agreement with the resolution of the Sixth Committee. It therefore only remained for him, as Rapporteur, to make any short explanations to the Assembly which might be necessary. There remained the special resolution which must be passed regarding the Pact of Economic Non-Aggression, and he proposed to submit a resolution on the following lines :

> "1. The Assembly approves the proposal of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union that a special committee should be set up by the Commission for examining the Pact of Economic Non-Aggression.
> "2. The Assembly decides that the following States shall be invited to take part in the work of this special committee on an equal footing with the members which the Commission of Enquiry may appoint ; Australia, China, India, Japan and Uruguay.
> "3. The Council of the League might also be asked to invite the United States of America to join this committee."

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) pointed out with regard to paragraph 2 of the draft that the American continent was insufficiently represented amongst the non-European States proposed as members of the special committee. It was not known whether the United States of America would accept an invitation to share in this work ; but, failing such acceptance, Uruguay would be the only representative of the American continent as against three representatives of great Asiatic Powers. He therefore proposed to add to the five countries mentioned in paragraph 2 Canada and one other American country.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Commission of Enquiry was a committee of the League, and had to submit its report and conclusions to the League organs, and that it did not appear absolutely essential that a large number of States should be asked to examine the question. It was none the less true that the American continent, in view of its economic importance, might be represented in greater strength on the special committee, and he therefore proposed to add Canada and Chile to the five countries already named.

The Chairman's proposal was adopted.

The draft resolution, as amended, was adopted.

23. Protection of Minorities (continuation) : Examination of the Draft Report to the Assembly.

Baron YRJÖ-KOSKINEN (Finland), Rapporteur, read his draft report (Annex 8). He had not prepared any draft resolutions, as he had merely been called upon to make as correct a summary as possible of the discussion which had taken place in the Committee.

The draft report was adopted, and Baron YRJÖ-KOSKINEN was appointed Rapporteur to the Assembly.

24. Work of the Organisation for Intellectual Co-operation (continuation) : Examination of the Draft Report to the Assembly.

M. SATO (Japan), Rapporteur, drew attention to the various additions he had incorporated in his report (Annex 9).

He declared that, when drawing up the resolution to be submitted to the Assembly after approval by the Sixth Committee, he had endeavoured to give as full an account as possible of the discussion which had taken place on the subject. He had been much struck with the number of suggestions dealing with the importance of educational matters. He might instance the remarks of Mlle. Pünder, M. Petsche, M. Casares, M. Costa du Rels, M. Lange, Mr. Burrell, Count de Penha Garcia, Dr. Chodzko and M. Hyder.

The proposals of the British delegation and M. Petsche regarding broadcasting could be suitably combined in a sentence of the resolution. The Committee on Intellectual Co-operation had already asked the International Institute to undertake an enquiry into the educational side of broadcasting. The Sixth Committee might ask it to broaden the basis of this enquiry, so that it would deal with the use of wireless for increasing good understanding between the peoples. These suggestions might later on be extended, as M. Petsche had requested, to the cinematograph and to television.

M. Sato hoped that the terms of the resolution would meet the wishes of M. Gorgé, M. Garay and M. Fierlinger as regards the Exhibition of Popular Arts at Berne, and those of Mlle. Vacaresco concerning the completion during the year of the programme drawn up by the Permanent Committee of Arts and Letters. A further paragraph would pay a tribute to the activity of the International Educational Cinematographic Institute.

He had borne in mind, in drawing up his report, the remarks of Count Mensdorff on the part to be played by National Committees, and also those of Mlle. Pünder regarding workers' spare time. Count Apponyi had reserved the right to refer at a later date to the question of the free circulation of literary and scientific works.

The suggestion of M. Petsche that the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation should keep in touch with associations of intellectual workers would no doubt be borne in mind by the Secretariat. M. Sato was sure that, in any enquiries which the International Institute and the Secretariat might carry out, they would, whenever possible, make use of the assistance of competent private bodies, as had been requested by M. Lange, M. Pusta and M. Valdés-Mendeville. An endeavour would be made next year to simplify the arrangement of the report of the Committee, as had been suggested by Dr. Chodzko.

At the suggestion of Dr. CHODZKO (Poland), the sentence relating to the suggestion for a world conference of educators should be amended to read as follows. :

> " . . . and according to which the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation would be requested to study the suggestion of the Union of League of Nations Societies for a world conference . . . "

M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia) noticed that M. Sato's report contained a reference to the remarks made at the meeting of September 19th by Count Apponyi to the effect that he reserved the right to refer again to the subject of the free circulation of literary works. No country was more anxious than Yugoslavia to encourage intellectual intercourse with its neighbours, as could be instanced by the exhibition of modern Hungarian art in Belgrade in the spring of 1931, which was very successful. If intellectual works of this kind were the only ones in question, M. Fotitch would be quite ready to agree with Count Apponyi, but there was, in addition, a regular crop of literature and printed works of another kind the dissemination of which the Yugoslav Government had been compelled to control. There were Press articles, periodicals and books in which his country and its institutions were held up to ridicule and in which the most absurd and tendentious news was published daily, and there was also a violent propaganda among the youth in favour of the revision of the treaties. Such writings could not fairly be described as intellectual works, and the Yugoslav Government considered it its duty to take steps to stop their circulation.

M. BARANYAI (Hungary), in order to avoid any misunderstanding, emphasised the fact that Count Apponyi, no less than the previous Hungarian speakers, was concerned simply with the free circulation of intellectual and technical literature. Until M. Fotitch was able to prove that the Review of Classical Philology, the Review of Higher Mathematics, or the Review of the Hungarian Shoemakers' Association, periodicals published in Budapest which were not permitted to enter Roumania, Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia, endangered the safety or public order of the State, the Hungarian delegation would be forced to continue to raise the question.

M. LANGE (Norway) regretted that the draft report made no reference to the observation which he had made at the previous meeting on the necessity of avoiding overlapping. He would like, for instance, to see inserted at the end of the paragraph closing with the words "well planned and well equipped organisation", a phrase to the following effect :

> "The Committee desires to emphasise the fact that the International Committee is essentially a co-ordinating body, and that it will doubtless avoid any overlapping by making use of existing associations and spreading the knowledge of their work."

M. DE REYNOLD (Member of the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation) said, in reply, that it must in any case be clearly understood (1) that the whole reform of the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation had been carried out with the main object of avoiding overlapping ; (2) that any fresh passage inserted in the report would merely emphasise this intention. He was anxious that the proposed addition should be drawn up in such terms as to make it clear that there was no question of censuring the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation.

M. LANGE (Norway) said that a sentence of this kind would meet his wishes entirely.

M. de Reynold's suggestion was approved.

M. SATO (Japan), Rapporteur, turning to the resolution, stated that the Australian delegation had suggested an addition to the section dealing with broadcasting.

After remarks by M. BODRERO (Italy) and M. PETSCHE (France), it was decided, on the suggestion of M. BONNET (Director of the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation), that the additional phrase should be worded as follows :

> "Requests the Institute to get into touch for that purpose with the principal national and international broadcasting organisations."

M. PETSCHE (France) referred to the previous remarks of the French delegation concerning the various international problems arising out of broadcasting. He thought that these remarks had received the support of the British delegation and proposed to replace the third paragraph of the resolution in question by the following :

> "Recommends that this enquiry should cover all international questions raised by broadcasting and, in particular, in regard to the possibility of its use as a means for establishing good international relations."

This proposal was accepted in principle, and it was understood that M. Petsche should agree with M. Sato on a final form of words.

M. GORGÉ (Switzerland) thought that the last section of the draft resolution, which dealt with the Berne Exhibition of Popular Arts in 1934, was perhaps somewhat too compressed, and he suggested the insertion between the two paragraphs in question of the following paragraph :

> "Having regard to the Council's resolution of September 2nd, 1927, and the Assembly's resolution of the 22nd of the same month . . . . "

M. SATO (Japan), Rapporteur, accepted this addition.

M. FIERLINGER (Czechoslovakia) supported the proposal of M. Gorgé.

M. Gorgé's proposal was adopted.

M. VALDÉS-MENDEVILLE (Chile) suggested (1) that, in paragraph 4 of the first section of the draft resolution, the following words should be added after the words "among the young" : "and a spirit of cordiality among the peoples" ; (2) that the paragraphs of the draft resolution should be numbered for convenience of reference.

These two proposals were accepted, subject to a modification as regards (1) on the suggestion of the Chairman, as follows : replace the words "spirit of cordiality" by the words "mutual understanding".

Mlle. PÜNDER (Germany) enquired, in view of the intention of her country to summon an international conference of teachers, whether the paragraph under discussion referred to the proposal of Dr. Chodzko, the Polish delegate.

M. SATO (Japan), Rapporteur, stated that the resolution in question referred to the past. The Polish proposal, which referred to the future, was mentioned in the report. There had been considerable difficulty in reaching agreement on this point, and he hoped that Mlle. Pünder would agree to let the present wording stand.

Dr. CHODZKO (Poland) did not know what would be the fate of Mlle. Pünder's proposal, but he was anxious to express his thanks to her for having raised the question.

The CHAIRMAN, in view of the slight misunderstanding which had arisen recently on this point, said that the Minutes of the Sixth Committee would no doubt be carefully considered by the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation, which would also take account of the suggestions of the Federation of League of Nations Societies. The Committee had not taken up a definite position owing to the great difficulty of reaching an agreement. He therefore suggested to the German and Polish delegates that things should be left as they were.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) was in agreement with the German delegate, and thought that the passage concerned was rather vague, and would be improved by the addition of the words "for a world conference" after the words "that a plan".

The CHAIRMAN agreed that the present wording was vague, but the vagueness was intentional. It would be difficult to reach an agreement on the proposal itself, and for that reason the report merely mentioned the Polish suggestion. If the Committee made the resolution less vague, it would no longer be in agreement with the report, which had avoided a definite statement.

M. DE REYNOLD (Member of the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation) said that the International Committee had been dealing with problems of this kind for years and had been compelled to reject several similar requests last year. The Committee would none the less examine very carefully any suggestions which might be put before it. The International Committee had not at the present time the funds necessary for such large congresses, for which it had substituted a less costly, speedier and more reliable method.

The CHAIRMAN, summing up the discussion, stated that the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation would examine carefully the suggestions of the Polish delegate, which had been supported by Dame Edith Lyttelton and Mlle. Pünder, and would see whether it was possible to take action upon them. Nevertheless, in view of the difficulty of the question, the seriousness of the present financial situation and the doubts of the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation, it was not possible for the Sixth Committee to take an immediate decision.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) withdrew her suggestion, but remarked that they had been asked not to insist on their point of view because the question could not be discussed, but it had apparently been settled in a negative sense.

The CHAIRMAN thanked Dame Edith Lyttelton for withdrawing her suggestion, but stated that the matter was not settled. It remained a completely open one and might be taken up at a later session, on due notice being given by the International Committee after consideration of the subject.

Dame Edith LYTTELTON (British Empire) requested that the Chairman's remarks might be inserted in the Minutes.

The draft report and resolution were approved.

M. SATO (Japan) was appointed Rapporteur to the Assembly.

The CHAIRMAN pronounced the session closed.

ANNEXES

ANNEX 1.

A.VI/4.1931.

WORK OF THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY FOR EUROPEAN UNION.

DRAFT LETTER FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SIXTH COMMITTEE TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SECOND COMMITTEE, SUBMITTED BY THE DRAFTING COMMITTEE.

The Sixth Committee, at its meeting on September 16th, decided to refer for study to the Second Committee the technical questions—particularly economic and financial questions, as well as questions of transit and communications—dealt with in the reports of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union to the Assembly. The Sixth Committee assumes that the Second Committee, in presenting its reports, will take into consideration the material furnished by the work of the Commission of Enquiry.

The Sixth Committee reserves the right to submit to the Assembly proposals as to the constitution, organisation and methods of work of the Commission of Enquiry. In this connection, it may be observed that, in the course of the past year, the Commission of Enquiry has had to create several special committees for the study of certain economic questions whose urgency appeared to require this mode of procedure.

The report of the Organisation Sub-Committee set up by the Commission of Enquiry and now submitted for the consideration of the Sixth Committee, indicates the conditions under which the Commission of Enquiry may have recourse to the co-operation of the technical organs and advisory committees of the League of Nations (see document A.17, page 18, Section 2, paragraph 2), a right of which it has already availed itself with the authorisation of the Council of the League.

The Sixth Committee, being aware of the desire of the Commission of Enquiry to limit as far as possible the setting up of special committees and to utilise as a general rule the existing organs of the League, would be grateful to the Second Committee if this latter would give it an assurance that the permanent organs of the League will be in a position to satisfy, with the flexibility and promptitude which may be necessary, any demands the Commission of Enquiry may make.

ANNEX 2.

A.VI/5.1931.

SLAVERY.

LETTER FROM THE FIRST DELEGATE OF NEW ZEALAND TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SIXTH COMMITTEE, TRANSMITTING A LETTER, DATED MAY 20TH, 1931, FROM THE ANTI-SLAVERY AND ABORIGINES PROTECTION SOCIETY TO THE EMPEROR OF ABYSSINIA, AND THE REPLY, DATED JULY 12TH, 1931, FROM THE EMPEROR OF ABYSSINIA.

Geneva, September 14th, 1931.

You may recall that, when I spoke in the Assembly, I stated I desired to bring under the notice of the Sixth Committee a letter regarding slavery from His Majesty the Emperor of Abyssinia, and the letter from the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society which evoked it.

I now have the honour to transmit to you two copies of each letter, with a view of their being circulated to the members of the Committee.

(Signed) Thomas M. WILFORD.

A LETTER FROM THE ANTI-SLAVERY AND ABORIGINES PROTECTION SOCIETY TO THE EMPEROR OF ABYSSINIA, DATED 20TH MAY, 1931.

Our Committee has received, through Sir Sidney Barton, Great Britain's Minister, accredited to your Imperial Majesty, the welcome intimation of your resolute intention to attempt the great task of the abolition of slavery throughout your dominions.

We desire to thank you for your intimation, and we are confident that, in expressing our appreciation of your decision, we voice the views of the whole British people, who desire only the peace and prosperity of your country and the establishment of complete goodwill between the British and Abyssinian peoples.

Sir Sidney Barton has emphasised to our Committee the immensity of the task before your Imperial Majesty and the need for wisdom on your part and patience on the part of others. We are glad to have this further evidence of your belief in the words of your great traditional ancestor, King Solomon, that "it is righteousness that exalteth a nation", and we trust that to you may be given the full measure of wisdom of that great ruler, which has become common currency in the language of all nations.

We understand from Sir Sidney Barton that you would like to be informed of action taken on the part of our Committee with other Governments, and of what help British people can give you in the great task you have undertaken.

In the first place, we would point out that our society is composed of people drawn from all sections of British public life. It includes members of all political parties, of all religious denominations, and leading men unattached either to any political body or any religious denomination. We are entirely disinterested as a body in any commercial development of overseas territories, and are dominated by a single objective—namely, that of the abolition of slavery in all its forms and of assisting backward races in their striving after progress. The assistance we are able to render must necessarily take different forms according to the peculiar features possessed by any subject which comes before us.

We can best illustrate the society's work by submitting for your consideration a few of the questions in which we have been concerned during the hundred years' efforts of the society. The first two of these illustrations concern your own country of Abyssinia.

Abyssinia, 1875.

In 1875, Abyssinia and Egypt were in conflict. Our Committee did not enter into the merits of this conflict, but they were concerned deeply that there should be no alienation of Abyssinian territory. They decided in these circumstances to send an important deputation to Lord Derby, the British Foreign Minister. This deputation, of which we can forward you, if desired, a full account, waited upon Lord Derby on December 3rd, 1875, and set forth reasons why the British Government should take some action if there was any danger of the annexation of Abyssinian territory. The British Minister, replying to our deputation, gave eminently satisfactory assurances, which included the following declaration :

> "I do not at all hesitate to say that, if there were any intention to conquer and annex the country, I think it would be an unwise proceeding on the part of the ruler of Egypt . . . "
> "I should be quite prepared to advise the abandonment of any scheme for the annexation of Abyssinia, if I had reason to believe that any such scheme were in prospect."

In 1879, our society received the following letter, dated December 14th, 1878, from the Emperor Menelik, who was then King of Shoa. This letter was received in July 1879.

> "May this writing of Menelik, King of Shoa, safely reach my friends of the Anti-Slavery Society in London. With the greatest respect I ask you how it goes with you. I, my people, and my army are well. God be praised therefor.
> "Dear Friends,—You formerly wrote to me and advised me that, for a Christian King, the institution of the slave-trade in his kindgom was an inconsistency. Herewith I send you the joyful message, as answer, that I have abolished the slave-trade, in my whole kingdom and in its borders, for I am a Christian. Therefore, consider me, henceforth, with all goodwill, as your friend.
> "My country is far distant from your country. My road to the coast, to Zeyla, Tajura, and Aden is at present closed to me by the Mussulmans—to wit, the Egyptian Government. They prevent my receiving into my country either provisions, arms, agricultural implements, artisans, or even messengers of the Gospel. Will you kindly raise your powerful voice in order that I may have this way opened to me, for I desire to inaugurate in my kingdom European civilisation, intelligence and art."

The Committee, under the signatures of Joseph Cooper and Edmund Sturge, at once forwarded a memorandum to the Marquis of Salisbury, a full copy of which we could, if desired, send to you, in which the Committee urged the British Foreign Minister "most earnestly" to "move at once", in order to secure the removal of the restrictions to which the King of Shoa referred. The society received in September of the same year a most satisfactory reply from the Marquis of Salisbury, in the course of which he stated that :

> "I am, in reply, to request that you will state to the Committee of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society that negotiations are at present going on between King John of Abyssinia and the Egyptian Government with the view to arrive at an arrangement satisfactory to both parties in regard to the trade to be carried on between Abyssinia and the outer world. Her Majesty's agent and Consul-General in Egypt has been authorised to address a communication to King John, tendering the good offices of Her Majesty's Government with a view to a settlement of his differences with Egypt, and Lord Salisbury is not without hope that the negotiations now pending may result satisfactorily."

Egypt.

In 1888, Mr. Charles Allen, the secretary of the society, and Mr. Joseph Allen, treasurer of the society, visited Egypt and were received by the Khedive and Sir E. Baring (later Lord Cromer), with whom they discussed the question of the slave-trade and a home for freed slave women in Cairo. This home, through which several hundreds of slaves were passed each year, trained the free slaves in suitable occupations, and was ultimately established under the joint patronage of Her Majesty Queen Victoria and His Highness the Khedive. The President was Lord Cromer and the Treasurer Sir Colin Scott Moncrieff, with a London Committee composed of the principal members of the Committee of our society, the duty of the London Committee being to publish information with regard to the emancipation work being done by the Khedive and Lord Cromer, and the collecting of funds in Great Britain for the purpose of maintaining the home.

Morocco.

During the years 1840 to 1890, the society made considerable efforts to secure the abolition of slavery in Morocco ; but, owing to various difficulties, it was impossible to approach the Sultan of Morocco until the year 1887. In that year, the society was fortunate to secure the help of Mr. Donald Mackenzie, who undertook to convey to His Shereefian Majesty an appeal from the society. On April 27th, 1887, the society's envoy secured an interview with the Vizier of the Sultan, to whom he presented the appeal of the society, and discussed with the Vizier the abolition of slavery in Morocco. At a later date, the members of the society were able to co-operate in the creation of a home for freed slaves in that country.

Liberia.

From the inception of the Liberian State, the Aborigines Protection Society, now united with this society, published impartial information received, and, so long as it was possible, defended in the Press and in its organ the Liberian Government and people. In some cases, the society was able to say that the charges made were exaggerated ; but, as the years went by, it became impossible to ignore any longer the fact that the statements of maladministration were so unanimous and serious that the society had no alternative but to make every effort to secure reforms.

Portugal.

In November 1910, the society sent six of its members to Lisbon in order to confer with the Portuguese Government with regard to certain conditions in the Portuguese colonies. The deputation was received by Senhor Bernardino Machado, Minister for Foreign Affairs, who assured the deputation that the new Government would deal adequately with the question.

Nepal.

In 1926, His Highness the late Maharaja of Nepal announced his intention to abolish slavery throughout his Kingdom of Nepal. At the time of the decision, there were 52,000 slaves and 15,000 slave-owners. We have asked Sir Sidney Barton if he would kindly convey to you a copy of the speech of His Highness the Maharaja of Nepal. It will be observed from this speech how carefully the ground had been prepared over many years for the great act of abolition, one of the principal features being the creation of an anti-slavery office at Katmandu. It is interesting to note that the Maharaja, who had thought it might cost £500,000, found that the estimate was far too high, as it only cost £275,250 in order to set the whole of the slaves free within two years. His Highness the Maharaja of Nepal came into touch with the society at an early date, and the only co-operation we were called upon to render was that of making known to Europe periodically the result of the steps taken by the Maharaja of Nepal. We still act as distributors in Europe of the speech of which we are transmitting you a copy.

China.

We have every reason to fear that the system of Mui Tsai is as widely spread in China as the system of slavery in Abyssinia, whilst it is probable that the difficulties attendant upon its abolition are no less serious than those which confront Your Imperial Majesty. This society is doing all it can to make the facts known and to secure sympathetic support for any steps which the Chinese Government may take in the work of abolition. Within recent months a joint Committee of Chinese and Europeans has been established in one of the provinces for the purpose of maintaining a home for released Mui Tsai. The society issued an appeal for funds and has already been able to send a few hundred pounds for this purpose.

British Territories.

A large part of the society's activities concern British colonial territories. We enclose for the perusal of Your Imperial Majesty our last annual report and certain copies of the society's journal, from which you will observe that we approach our own Government by means of deputations and memoranda upon the treatment of backward races within the British Empire.

The Society and Abyssinia.

The Society, as we have already pointed out, warmly welcomes the step which Your Imperial Majesty has taken in getting into touch with us through Sir Sidney Barton, thus following the valuable precedent set by the Emperor Menelik and King John. We readily assure you of our active co-operation in any direction which may be open to us with a view to providing any assistance we may be able to render.

The society, having learnt from Mr. Bentinck in 1926 of the proposed establishment of a school for freed slaves in Addis Abeba, has under consideration an appeal for funds in aid of such a school, provided mutually satisfactory arrangements could be made. We are still prepared to offer such assistance to the extent of a sum of £250 in cash and £100 annually, if the British Minister for the time being, or his nominee, could be allowed to occupy a position on the Committee of the school.

It may be that Your Imperial Majesty would like to meet a small deputation from the society. If so, we think we could prevail upon two or three persons with knowledge and experience to visit you in Addis Abeba in order that they might confer with you, laying before you more fully their experience, and ascertain from you some of the difficulties involved in the work of abolition, and discuss with Your Majesty what assistance British public opinion could render. This deputation would then be in a position to place before the society some fuller details than it has at its disposal at the present.

REPLY FROM THE EMPEROR OF ABYSSINIA TO THE ANTI-SLAVERY AND ABORIGINES PROTECTION SOCIETY, DATED JULY 12TH, 1931.

We have received your letter in reply to Our verbal communication which We sent you through the intermediary of Sir Sidney Barton, His Britannic Majesty's Minister at Our Court in Addis Abeba.

After reading your letter, We are pleased to find that We agree on principles. We confirm to you that We are definitely decided to improve progressively the regulations concerning the status of slavery and to suppress slavery altogether. We say We are definitely decided with reference to the task We have undertaken for freeing the slaves still owned by the public, and not with reference to traffic in slaves which We have already prohibited by decree. In some of the worst cases We have even gone so far as to inflict the death penalty.

Ever since We communicated with you candidly through Sir Sidney Barton, We have decided to decree a new law to supplement that of the Year of Grace 1916 (1924 European calendar), which We hope will give better scope for the increase of freed slaves. We will send you a copy immediately.

We have no doubt that you realise the seriousness of Our efforts and the labour it has cost Us to obtain the preliminary results known to you, and to lay the foundations of the great emancipation work. Certain persons, forgetful of the fact that slavery was once a universal institution and probably unconscious of what We have already accomplished or are about to accomplish, exaggerate for their own private ends when referring to Abyssinia. We are confident that you, who have made it your special duty to study these problems, know better than these sensation-mongers what a delicate task it is to abolish this old custom, and how over-hasty steps may easily have unhappy consequences. History shows that time is an important factor for the liberation of slaves.

Although the status of slavery still exists in Abyssinia, it would undoubtedly be an unjust thing to put Abyssinian slavery on a par with the industrialised forms of slavery of Europe and America in former days, which the Western mind of nowadays connects with this word. The difference is, above all, that slaves in Abyssinia are not deprived of anything to hope for in life, as were their former brethren in the West. Our Christian people is not averse to seeing slaves hold posts, own property, embrace Christianity and learn trades, and in this respect it is a people that deserves praise.

We have perused in your letter the good work done by His Highness the Maharaja of Nepal for liberating slaves. No doubt, beside spending so much money, he must also have encountered difficulties. Your letter has proved to Us that money was a weighty factor, which helped for materialising his wish. We would, in this respect, draw your friendly attention to the financial reforms presently to be inaugurated by Us, in order to ameliorate the economic situation. By these means, We aim at erecting a basis for the final abolition of slavery and also, in progress of time, for the gradual improvement of the condition of the free servants, workmen and agricultural labourers who are so much more numerous than the slaves.

As We mentioned above, Our statements in connection with the liberation of slaves are then far from being a mere talk; the school for freed slaves which We have opened in Addis Abeba, Our Capital, also proves this, and it is Our wish that the present British Minister, Sir Sydney Barton, be a member of the Committee.

We tender to you Our thanks for your good intentions in offering to help the upkeep of this school by a pecuniary contribution. It would give Us pleasure to receive a member of your society, to listen to his advice and to hear from him how far you are able to help Us, and on Our part to explain to him the particular circumstances of Our task so that on his return he will expound to you the situation.

Your work for this Christian people and Abyssinia, when the Egyptians had designs upon them, is never to be forgotten, and, as a memento of your good work, it would give Us pleasure if you would send Us details of what you did in 1875.

Given at Addis Abeba on the 4th day of Hamle 1923 (the 12th day of July, 1931, according to European calendar).

REGULATIONS CONCERNING THE LIBERATION OF SLAVES IN ABYSSINIA.

(Circulated to the Sixth Committee at the Request of the Hungarian Delegation.)

[Translation.]

[Imperial Seal.]

THE CONQUERING LION OF THE TRIBE OF JUDAH, HAILE SELLASE THE FIRST, THE ELECT ONE OF GOD, EMPEROR OF ABYSSINIA.

May this reach the President of the Anti-Slavery Society,

Peace be unto you.

By Our letter of the 4th of Hamlé (July 11th) last we informed you of Our intention to improve gradually upon Our Decree of the 23rd of Megabit of the Year of Grace 1916 (March 31st, 1924) concerning the liberation of slaves until the total abolition of the status of slavery in Our country, Abyssinia, is accomplished.

In accordance with Our above-mentioned letter, We are sending you enclosed a copy of the Decree of the 8th of Hamlé (July 15th, 1931), which forms a supplement to Our Decree of the 23rd of Megabit 1916.

The 9th day of Nehassé of the Year of Grace 1923 (August 15th, 1931).

Given at Addis Abeba.

SUPPLEMENTARY REGULATION AMENDING THE "REGULATIONS CONCERNING THE LIBERATION OF SLAVES".

In conformity with Article 45 of the "Regulations concerning the Liberation of Slaves", dated 22 Megabit in the Year of Grace 1916 (March 31st, 1924) providing that the said Regulations might be amended in the future as necessity arises, the following stipulations have been added on this day 8 Hamlé in the Year of Grace 1923 (July 15th, 1931):

Article 1.

Repeals the provision of Article 7, which declares that slaves purchased before the publication of the edicts and whose liberation is not provided for in their master's will are free after a period of seven years from the date of their master's death (during the said period of seven years they must remain peacefully in their master's houses). The above-mentioned article is amended in the following sense: Slaves in the aforesaid condition shall be free from the date of their master's death. In such cases as slaves thus liberated by their master's death are accountable to the heirs for property or work entrusted to them, they shall nevertheless remain for a year for this purpose, before going away with their certificate of liberation.

Concerning the conditions of life of these slaves we enact as follows :

(a) In the case of adult slaves able to work and being in possession of their certificate of liberation, their course is to seek repatriation with the assistance of the Governors of their respective provinces and to maintain themselves by whatever work they may choose (cf. Articles 23 and 24).

(b) If the slaves in question are too old to work or are incapable to the extent of not knowing what to do, after receiving their certificate of liberation, they may, if they declare it is their desire, remain with the children of their former master or mistress, being engaged for wages, in order that they may not fall into trouble for lack of protection (cf. Articles 26 to 28).

(c) Such of these slaves who may be at the moment of liberation too young to be repatriated or to earn their living by work, if their parents are unable to support them, will be admitted to the special school founded expressly by the Government to be there brought up and trained (cf. Articles 26 to 28).

(d) Finally, the record office of the tribunal entrusted with the duty of watching over the freedom of slaves shall, for the future, draw up every year a report to the Minister of the Interior showing both the number of adult slaves repatriated and the number of slaves who are minors who have been admitted to the school.

Article 2.

To the stipulation of Article 8, worded as follows :

"Until the date when slaves purchased before the publication of the edicts are liberated, they shall serve their own masters only. To dispose of them in consideration of payment or gratuitously to relations or to a third person is expressly prohibited. Slaves who have been disposed of to other persons will be liberated", e following provision is added :

"If slaves purchased before the publication of the edicts are disposed of to other persons, both he who has disposed of them and he who has entered into possession of them will be subject to the same penalty as slave-hunters."

Article 3.

Repeals the provision of Article 15, worded as follows :

"The judges appointed ad hoc, in addition to the Governors of provinces, shall make a census and enter in a register the names of slaves with whom the peasants of the interior have intermarried before the publication of the edicts, and shall take steps to ensure their being maintained at their master's house. If there is a death among the slaves in question, the masters must immediately notify the judges and have the death registered. If they fail to notify the judges of such decease, they will be subject to the same penalty as slave-hunters."

The article is amended as follows :

"In those provinces where there may be grounds to suspect the existence of the slave trade there shall be a census of all the inhabitants, men, women and children without exception, the names being entered in a register. Both the chief of the district and the headman of the village, in addition to the census officials specially entrusted with this work, shall affix their signatures to the said register, which shall then be forwarded to the Governor of the province. The Governor, having lodged a copy in the provincial secretary's office, shall send the original to the Minister of the Interior. Afterwards, a census shall be renewed every five years in order that information may be available on births and deaths which may occur in the interval, showing the same particulars as in the original register sent to the minister of the interior."

Article 4.

In future, the "Regulations concerning the Liberation of Slaves" will be progressively amended and improved until the time when slavery has completely disappeared.

SLAVERY.

REPORT SUBMITTED TO THE SIXTH COMMITTEE BY JONKHEER J. LOUDON, CHAIRMAN OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE ON SLAVERY.

The British delegation proposed that the Sixth Committee should recommend the Assembly to adopt a resolution to reappoint the Temporary Commission on Slavery which sat in 1924-25. This Commission would have been instructed to examine the material on slavery collected since the publication of the report of the Temporary Commission in 1925, and to recommend to the next Assembly the measures of assistance which the League of Nations could render to those countries which have agreed to abolish slavery.

This proposal having given rise to a number of objections during the plenary meetings of September 16th and 17th, the Committee referred it for examination to a Sub-Committee composed of the representatives of Abyssinia, Belgium, the British Empire, Denmark, France, India, Italy, Liberia, the Netherlands, Portugal and Spain. This Sub-Committee, which did me the honour of electing me Chairman, met once—in the afternoon of September 17th. The proposal of the British delegation received the unreserved support of the representatives of Denmark, India, Liberia and Spain. The representative of the Netherlands submitted another draft resolution, which might be described as an amendment to the British proposal. These two texts gave rise to an exchange of views. Certain doubts were expressed as to the expediency of reappointing the Temporary Commission on Slavery, as to its practical value, and as to its correctness from a legal point of view. After this exchange of views, the Sub-Committee unanimously agreed on the following draft resolution, which it proposes that the Sixth Committee should recommend the Assembly to adopt :

> "The Assembly requests the Council to appoint for one year a small committee of experts to examine the material upon slavery which has been supplied or transmitted by Governments since the signature of the Convention of 1926. This committee will submit to the Council suggestions with a view to recommending to the next Assembly the measures of assistance which the League of Nations could render to those countries which have agreed to abolish slavery and which request such assistance.

RUSSIAN, ARMENIAN, ASSYRIAN, ASSYRO-CHALDEAN AND TURKISH REFUGEES.

DRAFT REPORT OF THE SIXTH COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.

Rapporteur : M. FOTITCH (Yugoslavia).

The Sixth Committee had under consideration the report of the Governing Body of the Nansen International Office for Refugees prepared in conformity with the resolution of the eleventh session of the Assembly, and the report of the Inter-Governmental Advisory Commission for Refugees on its fourth session. The Committee also had the great advantage of a detailed statement on the refugee work and on the activities of the Office made by Dr. Max Huber, the President of the Governing Body of the Office.

The Committee wishes to express its gratitude to Dr. Max Huber for having agreed to act as President of the Governing Body of the Office and for the devoted efforts he has applied to his difficult task, to the Governing Body of the Office, and to the Inter-Governmental Advisory Commission for Refugees.

The Committee was gratified to learn from the report of the Governing Body of the Office and from the supplementary statement made by Dr. Huber that, in drawing up the plan of liquidation proposed in the report of the Office, the Governing Body had endeavoured to give the maximum possible effect to the suggestion made by the Supervisory Commission that the budget of the Office should be reduced approximately by 10 per cent per annum. The Committee noted that the Governing Body of the Office had taken as a basis for its plan of liquidation the total budget which the League would have been called upon to grant in the event of the budget of the Office being reduced by annual decreases of 10 per cent up to the end of the year 1939. The plan of liquidation proposed by the Office does not exceed the sum thus contemplated ; but, to achieve that result, the Office has been obliged to propose the termination of its existence at the end of 1938 instead of on December 31st, 1939. In conformity with the recommendation made by the Inter-Governmental Advisory Commission at its first session in 1929, the Office proposes that budgetary reductions should be accentuated during the last five years of the existence of the Office, thus enabling the Office, during the early period of its existence, to exert its maximum efforts and accelerate the liquidation of the material side of the refugee problem. Taking into consideration the precarious situation of the refugees, owing to the existing economic conditions, the Committee considers that the proposals of the Office are sound and reasonable.

The liquidation of the Office raises the question of the staff actually employed by the Office. In order to facilitate the liquidation of this staff and to save the payment of any indemnities which that liquidation might involve, the Committee ventures to recommend the Secretary-General of the League and the Director of the International Labour Office to give, as far as possible, preference to the members of the staff of the Office when vacancies occur in their respective organisations.

The President of the Governing Body of the Office reminded the Committee of the resolution adopted by the eleventh Assembly to the effect that the High Commissioner for Refugees should continue to keep in touch with the movement for the transfer of Armenian refugees to the Armenian Republic and to acquaint the Council if and when the High Commission's co-operation might appear to be opportune. The President of the Governing Body informed the Committee that he had been approached recently by representatives of responsible Armenian organisations with the request to facilitate the transfer of some thousands of refugees from Bulgaria and Greece to the Armenian Republic, where provision had been made for their settlement. The Committee feels confident that the Office will examine with the greatest attention and interest the opportunities for the settlement of such an important number of refugees, and requests it to obtain and afford all possible facilities for the transfer of those refugees if it is satisfied that such transfer is in their best interests.

The Committee learned with satisfaction of the progress made towards the liquidation of the problem of the Armenian refugees in Syria, and noted that, of the 40,000 refugees who were in the refugee camps at Aleppo, Alexandrette and Beyrut when the co-operation of the High Commission for Refugees was invited at the end of 1926, there now remain only 15,000, and that steps had been taken by the Office to effect their transfer from the refugee camps and their settlement under satisfactory conditions before the end of 1933.

Owing to the prevailing economic depression and to the re-organisation of the refugee work, the activity of the Office has naturally, during the first months of its existence, been somewhat handicapped. Nevertheless, considerable assistance has been afforded to refugees in small groups, to enable them to take up employment in various countries, and the Office, within the limits of its exiguous resources, has made grants to refugee organisations to enable them to continue their relief work in favour of the refugees. In this way, it has prevented the closing-down of certain organisations whose activities in favour of the refugees are extremely useful.

The Committee listened with interest to a statement made by the Chinese delegate concerning the very difficult situation of about 100,000 Russian refugees in China, and particularly of about 2,000 Russian refugees of German origin who are at present in Harbin. The Committee supported the request made by the Chinese delegate that the Office should examine the possibility of securing the transfer of those refugees to other countries.

The Committee noted that the funds at the disposal of the Office for its manifold activities in favour of the refugees were at present altogether inadequate. The only revenue at the disposal of the Office for its relief activities is that derived from the issue of the Nansen stamp. The revenue from that source amounts at present to a little more than 100,000 Swiss francs per annum and is derived from about 30 per cent of the total number of refugees. If the Governments of the other countries offering hospitality to the remaining 70 per cent of the refugees could find it possible to enforce the Nansen stamp system, there is every reason to believe that the revenue from that source would reach at least 300,000 Swiss francs per annum. The Committee therefore urges the interested Governments to consider the possibility of applying in their countries the Nansen stamp system.

The Committee learned with very great satisfaction of the efforts made by the signatories to the Nansen Appeal to obtain funds for the Office, of the success obtained by the national committees for the appeal formed in Denmark and Great Britain, which had both succeeded in obtaining contributions of 100,000 Swiss francs to the Nansen Memorial Fund, and of the promise of the yearly interest on the relief fund administered by Dr. Alexander Nansen on behalf of the late Dr. Nansen. The Committee ventures to recommend that the work of the Office in raising additional funds should be facilitated by the creation in other countries—especially in those which were not already incurring heavy expenditure in favour of the refugees—of national committees for the Memorial Fund similar to those in Denmark and Great Britain.

The Committee had under consideration the statement of the Inter-Governmental Advisory Commission for Refugees concerning the eventual preparation of a Convention to ensure the protection of the refugees on the liquidation of the Office. As this question is of interest both to the Office and to the Inter-Governmental Advisory Commission, the Committee recommends that those two organisations should examine the advisability of the preparation of such a Convention.

The Committee also took note of various recommendations in the report of the Inter-Governmental Advisory Commission concerning the definition of the term "refugee", the validity of the Nansen certificate, the issue of visas, the renewal and extension of the Nansen certificate, and the expulsion and refusal of entry of refugees. The Committee feels sure that the Assembly will agree that a request should be made to the Council to communicate to the various Governments the recommendations mentioned in the report of the Inter-Governmental Advisory Commission.

The Committee ventures to submit, for the approval of the Assembly, the following resolutions:

"The Sixth Committee,

"Recognises the endeavours made by the Governing Body of the Office to comply with the request of the eleventh Assembly to prepare a plan for the liquidation of the Office before the end of 1939, and notes that it has prepared a scheme which gives effect to the spirit of the suggestions made by the Supervisory Commission that the budget of the Office should be reduced by approximately 10 per cent per annum;

"Recommends the adoption of the plan of liquidation proposed by the Governing Body and of the Rules of Procedure and Financial and Staff Regulations of the Office;

"With a view to facilitating the liquidation by the Office of its staff, invites the Secretary-General of the League and the Director of the International Labour Office to accord, as far as possible, a preference to that staff when vacancies occur in their respective organisations.

"Having noted the proposals made for the transfer to Armenia of some thousands of Armenian refugees, and bearing in mind the resolution on this subject adopted by the tenth Assembly:

"Invites the Office to examine carefully the possibility of facilitating the transfer of such of those refugees who desire to proceed to Armenia, if it is satisfied that such transfer is in the best interests of the refugees;

"Requests the Office to devote particular attention to the precarious situation of more than 100,000 Russian refugees in China, with a view to their settlement in employment in other countries;

"Urges the interested Governments which have not already done so to put into full application the Nansen stamp system;

"Invites the Governments to encourage and facilitate the creation in their territories of national committees for the Nansen Memorial Fund;

"Requests the Governing Body of the Office, in consultation with the Inter-Governmental Advisory Commission for Refugees, to consider the advisability of preparing a Convention to ensure the protection of the refugees on the liquidation of the Office:

"Requests the Council to communicate to the Governments the recommendations adopted by the Inter-Governmental Advisory Commission for Refugees at its fourth session concerning certain facilities for the refugees."

MANDATES.

DRAFT REPORT OF THE SIXTH COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.

Rapporteur: Dr. LANGE (Norway).

The annual reports of the mandatory Powers, the reports of the Permanent Mandates Commission and the Minutes of the discussions of the Council on mandates questions during the period which has elapsed since the close of the eleventh session of the Assembly have, as in previous years, been submitted to the Sixth Committee.

The Committee has noted that, thanks to the efforts of the Council, of the Permanent Mandates Commission and of the mandatory Powers the essentially humanitarian experiment instituted by Article 22 of the Covenant has, after only a short period, been crowned with indisputable success. Hence the Permanent Mandates Commission has again received the praise of several delegations for an achievement for which it is mainly responsible.

Furthermore, the delegates of the mandatory Powers have again emphasised the value of the co-operation which has been established between their Governments and the Mandates Commission, to the great advantage of the task undertaken.

The Sixth Committee has approved the rules laid down in the Council's resolution of September 4th, 1931, with regard to the general conditions to be fulfilled before the mandate regime can be brought to an end in respect of a country placed under that regime. Like the Mandates Commission and the Council, it considered that the emancipation of the territories covered by Article 22 of the Covenant should be made dependent on the fulfilment of certain de facto conditions, and on the existence of certain guarantees stipulated in the interests both of the territories concerned and of the international community. The guarantees relating to the safeguarding of the rights of foreigners, the effective protection of racial, linguistic and religious minorities and the maintenance, as far as possible, of economic equality are, in the Sixth Committee's opinion, of quite special importance and deserve the Assembly's particular attention.

Another problem common to all the territories under mandate was raised in the course of the debate—that of the development of the public health services in the mandated territories, which has recently been dealt with in a Council resolution. The recommendations put forward in this connection by the Permanent Mandates Commission, which the Council has endorsed and which it has forwarded to the mandatory Powers, seem likely to contribute largely to the success of the work of civilisation undertaken in the mandated territories under the auspices of the League of Nations.

Lastly, the Sixth Committee has once again manifested the importance which it attaches to the settlement, in Palestine, of the controversies that have arisen owing to the establishment of the Jewish National Home in that territory. The Committee noted that order had not again been disturbed since the regrettable incidents of 1929, and associated itself with the hope expressed by the Mandates Commission and the Council that the efforts made by the mandatory Power to facilitate Jewish immigration without infringing the rights of the Arab population would be crowned with success.

The Sixth Committee has the honour to recommend to the Assembly the adoption of the following resolution:

"The Assembly,

"Having taken note of the work accomplished by the mandatory Powers, the Permanent Mandates Commission and the Council in regard to the execution of Article 22 of the Covenant:

"(a) Renews the expression of confidence in them voted by the past sessions of the Assembly and again congratulates them on what has been achieved through co-operation between them;

(b) Expresses its gratification at the constructive and particularly useful work which the Council has just performed with the help of the Permanent Mandates Commission in determining the criterion to be applied when it is proposed to bring to an end the mandate regime in respect of a country placed under that regime;

(c) Specially notes in the Council's resolution on this question the importance attached to guarantees for the effective protection of racial, linguistic and religious minorities;

(d) Expresses the hope, as in previous years, that, through the prosecution of the joint efforts of the mandatory Powers, the Council and the Permanent Mandates Commission, the mandatory system may continue to ensure the achievement of the ideal of civilisation proclaimed in Article 22 of the Covenant."

WORK OF THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY FOR EUROPEAN UNION.

LETTER FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SECOND COMMITTEE TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SIXTH COMMITTEE.

In reply to your letter of September 16th, 1931 (Annex 1), I have the honour to inform you that the Second Committee, in preparing its reports for the Assembly, will not fail to take into consideration the material furnished by the work of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union.

The Second Committee has also considered whether the financial, economic, transit and health organs of the League would be in a position to satisfy, with the flexibility and promptitude which might be necessary, any demands the Commission of Enquiry might make.

After enquiring into the organisation and methods of work of these permanent organs, the Second Committee considers that, as a general rule—with the exception of certain special cases which may arise—these organs seem to be in a position to afford the Commission of Enquiry for European Union any assistance which it may ask of them.

The budget of the Financial Section and Economic Intelligence Service for the year 1932 does not, however, provide for any meetings beyond the three regular sessions of the Financial Committee and three meetings of special committees which will probably be required for the normal work of the Financial Committee. The preparatory work in connection with the scheme for an International Agricultural Mortgage Credit Company drawn up by the Commission of Enquiry has, during the present year, necessitated an outlay of 27,981 Swiss francs for meetings and 8,820

Swiss francs for printing expenses. The Financial Section and Economic Intelligence Service will not be able to satisfy any demands involving similar expenditure during the year 1932.

With regard to the problem of a pact of economic non-aggression, the Second Committee entirely agrees with the Sixth Committee that, in view of the special nature of this question, it would be advisable to entrust it to a special committee to be appointed by the Commission of Enquiry for European Union. It also considers that the question is of interest to the whole world, and it would therefore seem that the non-European States which the Assembly might invite to join this committee should be : Australia, China, India, Japan and Uruguay. The Council of the League of Nations might also be requested to invite the United States of America to join the committee.

Chairman of the Second Committee of the Twelfth Assembly.

PROTECTION OF MINORITIES.

DRAFT REPORT OF THE SIXTH COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.

Rapporteur : Baron YRJÖ-KOSKINEN (Finland).

The Sixth Committee devoted its meeting on September 16th to an examination of that part of the Secretary-General's report on the work of the League since the last session of the Assembly which deals with the protection of minorities.

The German representative, who had moved that the question should be referred to the Sixth Committee, began by referring to the principles enunciated by M. Motta in the report he had submitted to the last Assembly and by Mr. Henderson in the speech he made before the Council on January 24th, 1931. He then gave a general analysis of the application of the system for the protection of minorities by the League of Nations during the past year, taking, in particular, as a basis the statistics published by the Secretariat in the Official Journal of August last in regard to petitions and the working of the Minorities Committees. The German representative indicated the direction in which he desired to see the present system developed. In his view, it would be advisable that Minorities Committees consisting of five Members of the Council should be constituted more frequently, that the Committees should ask the petitioners more often for information, and that means should be found for ensuring that the petitioners would be in a position to take note of the contents of the observations sent by the Governments concerned on the subject of their petitions, though that would not necessarily imply any recognition of their status as parties in a procedure in which both sides were to be heard. In this connection, the German representative emphasised the importance of securing the publicity of the result of the examination of questions by Minorities Committees in the largest possible number of cases. He pointed out, in particular, that, under the present system, it was impossible to know in which cases the non-publication of these results was due to the fact that the Committees did nothing in the matter, and in which cases the initiative of the Committees did not meet with the approval of the Government concerned. The German representative added that, in his view, further efforts would be necessary to arrive at a system for the protection of minorities which would operate without creating friction, but that he did not intend on that occasion to make definite proposals.

The Roumanian delegate pointed out, on behalf of Czechoslovakia, Greece, Poland, Roumania and Yugoslavia, that these States had an opportunity during the discussions in 1930 in the Sixth Committee to state their point of view on the question of minorities. These States have nothing to add to the declarations which were then made and which they maintain in their entirety, it being understood thereby that they are opposed to any extension of the Council resolution of June 13th, 1929.

The representatives of Hungary, Canada, the British Empire and France have also stated that they maintain the divergent and well-known views which their delegations had previously upheld. The delegate of Spain, after emphasising, in particular, the psychological side of the minorities problem, quoted the example of Spain, which is now engaged in settling the Catalan problem in accordance with the principles enunciated by the League of Nations in regard to the protection of minorities.

I would only add that I think we can express satisfaction, as our distinguished Chairman has already done, with the impartiality and moderation that have marked the discussion, and I would propose that the Committee transmit this report to the Assembly in order that it may take note of it.

ANNEX 9.

A.VI/7(1).1931.

WORK OF THE INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATION ON INTELLECTUAL CO-OPERATION.

DRAFT REPORT OF THE SIXTH COMMITTEE TO THE ASSEMBLY.

Rapporteur : M. SATO (Japan).

Last year the Assembly of the League of Nations was informed of the re-organisation plan prepared by the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation to give a more clearly defined direction to its own activities and also to improve the methods of work of its executive organs, and, in particular, the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation. The Assembly warmly approved the entire scheme laid before it by the Committee. This year we see the first results and are in possession of the authoritative opinion expressed by the distinguished men who met at Geneva in July under the chairmanship of Professor Gilbert Murray and M. Paul Painlevé on the value of the work accomplished.

I am glad to state that the Committee's opinion is, without exception, favourable to the new methods adopted, and that, generally speaking, it is entirely satisfied with the reforms recommended last year. I feel sure we can unreservedly endorse this verdict, and that for several reasons.

In the first place, the methods of work adopted by the Committee and its executive organs are based directly on the experience of the other technical organs of the League. These methods, skilfully adapted to the special requirements of the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation, will enable it to assume its appropriate place in the general scheme of the League's work, and to render to the several countries, and also to the community of States, the immense services we are entitled to expect. Without an intellectual rapprochement of the nations, without good mutual understanding and without concerted action to improve by mutual assistance and co-operation the conditions governing thought, scientific work and the education of the young, it is to be feared that the future of the League would be uncertain and the efforts we are elsewhere making to establish a durable peace would be largely wasted.

The feature of these new methods as applied by the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation is to bring together, under its ægis, the best minds of the various countries to deal with education, art, literature or science. The international questions with which we have to deal in these spheres are innumerable. The Committee has made no pretence to elucidate all of these at once. It has made a judicious selection, and, when handling those which it has retained, it invariably calls upon the Institute of Intellectual Co-operation to summon a Committee of Experts consisting of the distinguished persons to whom I referred a moment ago. It thus enjoys the benefit of the best advice. It brings into intimate touch the different forms of culture, the most varied experience and the great tendencies of thought. It allows the experts to discuss direct, and without any intermediary, the questions with which they are concerned, to compare their methods and to communicate those that are most satisfactory. It thus proposes to promote and extend progress in all the various branches of intellectual activity. There is no need to add that, in many cases, it thus establishes a new international link between the national departments of education and fine arts and between the learned bodies and scientific institutions of the various countries. That is, if I am not mistaken, the supreme purpose of the League of Nations—that association of Governments and countries which we represent here.

The International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation places at the disposal of the Committees of Experts which I have just mentioned a body of officials whose work is arranged on the same lines as that of the Secretariat of the League. That number has been reduced, but the organisation has been made less rigid, so that the work as a whole does not suffer and their activities may be directed according to circumstances along the desired lines. Thus, a large proportion of the funds generously placed at the disposal of the Institute by the French Government and various other Governments—and I take this opportunity of thanking them—may be devoted to summoning the Committees of Experts. A large number of these will meet next year at the Institute of Intellectual Co-operation, which performs services of the utmost importance. Fairly large sums are also available for special investigations carried out by qualified specialists ; accordingly, the Council of the League of Nations, when dealing with international questions relating to intellectual organisation, has at its command, in the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation itself and the various bodies dependent on it, a well-planned and well-equipped organisation.

In reading the reports submitted to the Committee and the resolutions adopted by it, one is struck first of all by the important place it has given to educational questions. It is endeavouring to create direct contact between Ministries of Education both in connection with the universities and with secondary and elementary teaching. As regards universities, it has taken the opinion of the international students' associations and of the university offices, and soon their suggestions will be submitted by the Institute of Intellectual Co-operation to a committee of directors of higher education, which will have on its agenda such important problems as the equivalence of diplomas and the overcrowding of our universities.

It has undertaken an enquiry into the best methods to be employed to gain satisfactory results from the increasingly numerous journeys abroad undertaken by the young people of our secondary and elementary schools. In the course of the year, it proposes to bring our respective administrations into contact in order to ensure regular interchanges of scholastic documentation, material and methods and, in a word, to co-operate in pedagogical questions.

Special mention should be made of the work entrusted to the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation in regard to educational broadcasting. The use of wireless in schools, and its utilisation in the teaching of adults and, more generally, for bringing about the rapprochement of nations and better mutual understanding between them, are subjects which have engaged the Committee's attention, and to which it will revert next year in the light of the information supplied to it and obtained both from the competent official department and the big international organisations, and especially from qualified experts in regard to the teaching of the young. The observations of the British and French delegations have strongly emphasised the importance of this question.

Among the fresh tasks undertaken during the year, there is one which deserves special mention. A certain number of institutes engaged in scientific research in the sphere of political, economic or social sciences have regularly sent representatives to the Paris Institute to study jointly various technical questions which interest them. It was decided this year that those institutions should henceforward hold an annual study conference, at which they would compare the results of their work during the year on one of the main international problems which call for attention from the political angle of the League of Nations. The originality of their work will consist in its being done in a purely objective spirit of scientific and disinterested research ; the results of their discussions should not take the form of recommendations or resolutions, and they should aim only at elucidating the questions submitted to them. Thus, in one of the most vital and topical domains of intellectual co-operation, that of present-day international relations and of economic and political contacts, a fresh contribution of great value will be brought to the League of Nations.

I ought also to speak of the work of the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation in the sphere of scientific co-ordination resulting from the proposals of the Committee of Advisers presided over by Mme. Curie, in arts, bibliography, etc. A general feature which characterises the various reports devoted to these questions is the practical character of the work undertaken. The Committee of Librarians and the Museums Office are concentrating their efforts on facilitating co-operation between the great national institutions. Thus, to take one example, an important conference, summoned and organised by the International Museums Office, will shortly be held at Athens, and will bring together delegations of nearly all our Fine Arts Administrations. This conference will study a question which is of great importance to numerous countries in every continent —that of the conservation of artistic and historical monuments. New technical methods have recently been introduced ; these will be compared and studied, and the best of them will be noted and generalised, and thus, in a few days, the technical administrations concerned will be able to give each other valuable assistance which will facilitate their future work and will undoubtedly save them a great deal of time and perhaps money.

In this connection, I must not forget to thank the Greek Government, which has generously helped the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation to organise this great meeting.

The protection of intellectual rights also remains on the agenda of our Intellectual Co-operation Organisation. Valuable co-operation has been established in this respect between the institutions concerned, the Berne Bureaux, the Secretariat of the League of Nations, the Rome Institute for the Unification of Private Law and the International Labour Office, which henceforward will hold an annual meeting at the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation to organise jointly the work to be done in this connection.

But it is not only the material rights of intellectual workers of all kinds which preoccupy our Committee. It has decided to approach the great problems which are of most direct importance to human culture and to give men of science and thought the place which is their due in national and international contemporary life. These lofty considerations belong to the sphere of the Permanent Committee of Arts and Letters, which met this year at Geneva. It drew up a programme which will be carried out in the course of the year and which will respond to the request so often made to the League of Nations to arrange for a wide interchange of thought between those who devote themselves to the sphere of intellect. Several delegations have expressed their satisfaction in the Sixth Committee at seeing the question reach the stage of practical realisation.

It remains for me to refer rapidly to two or three particular points which deserve the Assembly's attention. First of all we have instruction with regard to the League of Nations and the methods of international co-operation which it has introduced. A fresh impulse has been given this year to the work undertaken in liaison with the Ministries of Education and with the main international associations. Last year, the Assembly approved the programme drawn up by the Committee to solve the often-debated question of school handbooks. A complete documentary report has been drawn up by the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation. It relates all the measures taken in the different countries to remove from schoolbooks passages harmful to friendly international relations. It outlines the methods employed and the results obtained. When it came before the Committee, the latter decided that a committee of historians and educational experts should study it and should draw the necessary conclusions, and that these conclusions would be submitted to us next year.

The Intellectual Co-operation Organisation has this year received two requests for assistance of which we are glad. One came from the International Labour Office, which was already so closely associated with our work through its Committee on Intellectual Workers. At its request, the Institute of Intellectual Co-operation has undertaken an enquiry into the utilisation of libraries and popular arts for the purpose of workers' spare time. In this way, the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation will contribute to the solution of a social question which is of interest to all of us; and it will do so in a most useful way by endeavouring to open the spheres of art and culture to the working classes.

Secondly, the League of Nations has received from the Chinese Government a request with a view to a larger development of intellectual collaboration between China and the other Members of the League of Nations. This request has as its object that the League should "find advisers to assist the development of the Chinese educational system and facilitate the intercourse between the centres of intellectual activity in China and abroad."

As far as education is concerned, the request has been referred by the Council of the League of Nations to the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation, which immediately made arrangements to send four distinguished educational experts to Nanking. The eminence of the persons which it reappointed is in itself a sufficient proof of the importance attached by the League of Nations to the Chinese Government's request. I am sure that the Assembly will warmly approve of the steps already taken and will unanimously associate itself with this great enterprise.

Lastly, the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation asks us to urge Governments to take an active part in the preparation of the International Exhibition of Popular Arts which the Swiss Government is organising on a magnificent scale at Berne in 1934. Thanks to the initiative of the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation, which held a general congress of popular arts at Prague in 1928, new vigour has been infused into the study of this essential and popular form of culture. The beautiful volumes published by the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation on the Prague Congress show the importance of these researches, which will be given full prominence by the generous initiative of the canton of Berne and the Swiss Government.

During the debates, the Polish delegate presented to the Committee a draft resolution, which is reproduced in the Minutes of the meeting, and according to which the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation would be requested to study a scheme for a world conference of educators on international co-operation.

Owing to lack of time, the Sixth Committee was unable to discuss this suggestion. M. de Reynold, Rapporteur of the International Committee, who was present at the meeting, expressed, however, the opinion that the programme of the International Committee in regard to education was already in conformity with the aims of the Polish resolution. It should be noticed that the object of this draft resolution was to obtain the opinion of the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation on this question. In these conditions, and as, moreover, the International Committee will give very careful attention to the records of this Committee, it would seem that the desire of the Polish delegation will be attained.

In conclusion, and referring to the observations expressed by several members of the Sixth Committee, I would draw the Assembly's attention to the universal character of all the work undertaken by the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation. It is concerned equally with all continents and all countries. Though some activities may appear at first sight to be more limited in scope, their object is to secure closer relationship between the various great cultures of the world. This applies, for example, to the publication of a collection of Latin-American classics, for which the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation is arranging.

The common interest of all nations in this international work is, moreover, shown by the development of the National Committees on Intellectual Co-operation, whose activities are steadily expanding and whose number has again increased this year. During the Committee's discussions, attention has been drawn to the utility of the liaison work carried out by the national committees between the learned bodies and institutions dealing with intellectual work in their respective countries. A further proof of this interest is the growing tendency of the various national administrations interested in intellectual questions to establish contact with the Central Organisation of the League. There is now a regular machinery of intellectual co-operation with a centre which is international, but is connected more and more closely to the bodies representing in each country the interests of the mind and of literary, artistic or scientific culture. As a representative of an Asiatic State, I am particularly gratified by the development of these intellectual exchanges, through which the countries of the East, and particularly my own country, are united ever more firmly with the other Members of the League.

In these circumstances, the Assembly will be happy to approve the proposal submitted to it that a Conference of the National Committees on Intellectual Co-operation should be convened in 1934.

It will also be glad to accede, like the Council, to the desire of the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation that the existence of the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation, composed of the bodies to which I have referred in the course of my statement, should be explicitly recognised. Furthermore, I would ask it to urge the various Governments to give material support to the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation in response to the wish expressed by its Governing Body, after noting the work which the Institute had accomplished and the results secured.

Finally, we would offer our sincere thanks to the eminent members of the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation and the Committees connected therewith. The League of Nations is proud to have the assistance of such collaborators. It is happy to see these representatives of intellectualism, these unselfish workers devoting themselves to international tasks; it deeply appreciates, for example, the resolution which they unanimously adopted in favour of the reduction of armaments. It realises that, for the success of all its enterprises, it must rely first and foremost on the support of those who direct and form public opinion and who have the noble task of training the minds of the young generations.

It is one of the pleasant duties of the Rapporteur of the Committee to give an account of the results of the work of the International Educational Cinematographic Institute at Rome. These results have been consistently encouraging, and the Governing Body of the Institute, which meets every year in October, is thus able to show in its report that the work accomplished already fulfils in a large measure the high aims which led to the creation of this Institute.

Up to the end of the year 1930, the efforts of the Institute were especially devoted to extending its relations with international organisations pursuing similar objects. For example, arrangements were made, in agreement with the Secretariat of the League of Nations, for promoting the production of educational films concerning the League.

The Institute has also undertaken enquiries in close co-operation with the International Child Welfare Committee, the Health Section of the League of Nations, the International Labour Office, the International Institute of Agriculture and the League of Red Cross Societies with a view to securing more co-ordination between the parallel efforts of theses institutions in the matter of education by the cinematograph.

The list of the results achieved by the Institute is too long for me to be able to mention them all ; they are concerned with the most various objects—hygiene, particularly social hygiene, education, etc. Comparative studies have been carried on the censorship of films in different countries, on cinematography as applied to agriculture, and on the social aspects of the cinematograph, among which may be mentioned its use for the prevention of labour accidents.

The preparatory work for a conference for the abolition of Customs barriers in respect of educational films is being continued. Thirty-eight replies, of which many are favourable, have been received from Governments. An impartial study of the opinions collected will be made by a Committee of Experts, so that any measures which the Governing Body of the Institute may finally take may be based on the wishes expressed by the Governments themselves.

One of the most notable achievements of the Educational Cinematographic Institute is the publications of its Review, which appears in five languages and to which contributions have been made by specialists throughout the world. This Review has aroused such great interest in the circles for which it was intended that the cost of its publication has been entirely covered by subscriptions and sales, which is very rarely the case with a publication of this kind. This shows that its success is most encouraging and that the monographs which are published in it reach a very wide range of readers.

I am sure the Committee will agree with me that the results realised by the Educational Cinematographic Institute are very satisfactory ; we hope and believe that they are not only a reward for efforts of the past but a promise of future achievements.

The Italian Government, to which the League of Nations is indebted for the creation of the Institute, continues to interest itself in the work and to give it support. It has once more shown its generosity this year by making the Institute an additional grant of 200,000 lire.

Draft Resolution.

The Assembly,

Having noted the reports of the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation and of the Governing Body of the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation (documents A.23 and A.24, 1931) ;

Noting with great satisfaction the results achieved during the year by the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation as a whole and expressing its gratification that the re-organisation effected last year has made it possible to carry on in the most effective way possible the international work of liaison and co-ordination which in the intellectual sphere appears essential to the future of the League of Nations ;

Approves the work undertaken in the different branches of intellectual activity and the programme of work drawn up for the coming year ;

Is particularly glad that special importance is being attached to education, and that a plan has been drawn up for promoting international co-operation in this respect and for spreading still further a knowledge of the League of Nations among the young ;

Expresses its satisfaction at the measures proposed to ensure regular co-operation between the official institutions dealing with the protection of intellectual rights ;

Has noted with satisfaction the new work undertaken to ensure an objective and disinterested study of the major international problems through the institutes engaged in the scientific study of international relations, and of the programme drawn up by the Committee of Arts and Letters for the League of Nations to assist, by arranging for regular intellectual exchanges in the international sphere, in defending the interests of culture and civilisation ;

Approves the steps taken by the Committee in response to the Chinese Government's request and anticipates the most happy results from this co-operation ;

Recognises the existence of the Intellectual Co-operation Organisation, comprising the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation, which is the advisory body of the League of Nations ; the commissions and committees dependent on it ; the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation, its executive organ, and the International Educational Cinematographic

Institute, these two institutes having been placed at the League's disposal under the conditions laid down in their respective statutes ; and the National Committees on Intellectual Co-operation, whose representatives may be called upon to meet occasionally in conference on the proposal of the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation ;

Approves the summoning of a meeting of the National Committees on Intellectual Co-operation in 1934.

Having noted the report of the Governing Body of the International Educational Cinematographic Institute ;

Expresses its gratification at the results achieved ;

Is happy to note the progress of the preparatory work for the Conference for the abolition of Customs barriers for educational films ;

Expresses its satisfaction at the gratifying development of the International Review of Educational Cinematography.

Draws the attention of the States Members of the League of Nations to the experiments being made by a certain number of countries with regard to the use of broadcasting as a means of education ;

Approves the step taken by the Committee on Intellectual Co-operation in asking the Institute to undertake an enquiry, in co-operation with the other competent organisations, into the educational aspects of broadcasting ;

Recommends that this enquiry should cover all the possibilities of using broadcasting as a means for international rapprochement ;

Asks the States Members of the League to encourage the use of broadcasting to create better mutual understanding, to secure a more thorough comprehension of the international character of a large number of urgent problems and to permit of a more complete appreciation of the task of the League of Nations and of the aims which it has before it.

Drawing the attention of the States Members of the League of Nations to the initiative taken by the city of Berne and the invitation addressed to them by the Federal Government to participate n the Exhibition of Popular Arts in 1934 ;

Urges the Members of the League of Nations to associate themselves with this great international manifestation and to take suitable steps for this purpose.
