

DESCRIPTION OF THE WOODCUTS IN VOL. II.

- Fig. 1.—The name of Ptolemy Soter II. Worshipper of the god Euergetes and of the god Philopator, son of the goddess Soter, approved by Pthah, like Ra, an image of Anun.
- Fig. 2.—A second, nearly the same.
- Fig. 3.—The name of Cleopatra.
- Fig. 4.—The name of Ptolemy immortal, Alexander immortal, beloved by Pthah.
- Fig. 5.—View of the temple of Contra-Latopolis. (Denon, pl. 53.)
- Fig. 6.—A coin of Cleopatra Coeca. (Visconti, Iconographie Grecque.)
- Fig. 7.—A coin of Cleopatra and her son, with two eagles.
- Fig. 8.—A bas-relief of Ptolemy Alexander worshipping the god Horus. The spirit, in the form of a bird, is holding a sceptre over his head. (Lepsius.)
- Fig. 9.—A view of the ruins of the Memnonium. (Owen Jones.)
- Fig. 10.—A view of the portico of the temple of Quorneh in Thebes. (Hector Horeau.)
- Fig. 11.—A coin of queen Selene. (Visconti, Iconographie Grecque.)
- Fig. 12.—The names The Great Queen Berenice and Ptolemy immortal exalted, Alexander immortal beloved by Pthah.
- Fig. 13.—The name of Ptolemy Neus Dionysus.
- Fig. 14.—The statues of the gods carried out in barges on the Nile, in sacred procession. From the sarcophagus of Amyrteus in the British Museum.
- Fig. 15.—A statue of the cat-headed goddess Pasht seated. From the British Museum.
- Fig. 16.—The goddesses Isis and Nephthys laying out a dead body, and the god Anubis making a mummy. (Young's Hieroglyphics, pl. 68.)
- Fig. 17.—A mummy with its three cases, all made of wood. In the Museum of Dr. Lee at Hartwell. From its style it would seem to have been made at Memphis under the rule of the Persians.
- Fig. 18.—A drawing from a papyrus in the British Museum, of a lion playing at chess or draughts with a horned ass or unicorn. By the side of it, for comparison's sake, is placed a copy from one of the ancient sculptures, representing Rameses II. and his queen playing at the same game.
- Fig. 19.—The name of Cleopatra immortal Tryphena, followed by a sitting figure, and having after the first word the letters T, S, the feminine termination.
- Fig. 20.—A bas-relief of Rameses II. conquering his Ethiopian enemies. From the walls of the temple at Abou Simbel. (J. Bonomi.)
- Fig. 21.—The head of Cleopatra, the last queen of Egypt. From a coin in the British Museum.
- Fig. 22.—Elevation of one of the arched water-cisterns under Alexandria. (Norden's Travels.)

- Fig. 23.—An Alexandrian galley or ship of war, having the roof of the steersman's hut shaped like the queen's helmet. From a coin of Cleopatra in the Pembroke Collection.
- Fig. 24.—The names of Cleopatra and her son Cæsarion, spelt Cleopatras and Caisaros in the Greek genitive, as is usual upon their coins.
- Fig. 25.—The ruins of the Temple of Mandoo at Hermonthia. (H. Horeau.)
- Fig. 26.—An alabaster jar for ointment. (J. Bonomi.)
- Fig. 27.—A coin of Cleopatra and Antony.
- Fig. 28.—Another of the same.
- Fig. 29.—Another of the same. From the British Museum.
- Fig. 30.—View of the interior of a Roman fortress at Alexandria, called by Antony the Timonium. (Description de l'Égypte, vol. v. pl. 35.)
- Fig. 31.—Capital of a column formed of Lotus flowers, out of which rise four full-faced heads of a goddess, and upon these rests the model of a temple. From the temple of Dendera. (J. Bonomi.)
- Fig. 32.—Rameses II. as a young man, suckled by the goddess Athor. From the temple of Kalabsche. (H. Horeau.)
- Fig. 33.—The name of Augustus Cæsar, written Autocrator Caisaros immortal, beloved by Pthah and Isis. The second name is in the genitive case, while the first is in the nominative.
- Fig. 34.—Statue of an Egyptian playing upon the back of a crocodile. It is of Roman workmanship. In the British Museum.
- Fig. 35.—View of the Nilometer in the island of Elephantine, being a flight of steps with a scale of cubits on the wall. (Young's Hieroglyphics, pl. 62.)
- Fig. 36.—Ground plan of ancient Alexandria. D is the palace of the Ptolemies, joined by an underground passage to Q the theatre. R is the Cæsarium or new palace, in front of which stood the two obelisks. K is the Museum, S is the Soma, afterwards perhaps the monastery of St. Athanasius.
- Fig. 37.—Plan of a circular room in the Catacombs under Alexandria. (Norden's Travels.)
- Fig. 38.—View of a part of the same. (Hector Horeau.)
- Fig. 39.—A coin of Augustus, with the title Autocrator Cæsar the son of God.
- Fig. 40.—The name of Tiberius Cæsar.
- Fig. 41.—A marble sun-dial in the British Museum. The notch at the top would receive the horizontal gnomon, and then the lines would divide the time of daylight from sunrise to sunset into twelve hours.
- Fig. 42.—Elevation of the portico of the temple of Tentyra. (Denon, pl. 39.)
- Fig. 43.—View in the interior of the same. (Owen Jones.)
- Fig. 44.—A stone pillow for a priest's head. From a model of the same size.
- Fig. 45.—The name of Caligula, written The king of kings autocrator, beloved by Pthah and Isis, Caius Caisaros Germanicus immortal.
- Fig. 46.—The name of Claudius, written The king of kings autocrator, Tiberius Claudius.
- Fig. 47.—The papyrus plant in flower.
- Fig. 48.—A wine jar in which the Greek and Sicilian wines were imported into Alexandria.
- Fig. 49.—View in the interior of the temple of Latopolis. (Wilkinson's Thebes.)
- Fig. 50.—The hieroglyphical word Year.
- Fig. 51.—The name of Nero, written approved by four emperors, beloved by Ra and Amun, autocrator Neroni.
- Fig. 52.—A ship of burden for the voyage between Alexandria and Italy. It has two masts each carrying a sail, a rudder on each side near the stern, the horse's head of the Phœnicians at the prow, and a shelter for the steersman at the helm. (From the Roman Coins.)
- Fig. 53.—A coin of Malta, bearing Osiris between two winged goddesses. British Museum.

- Fig. 54.—Plan of the temple of Chem on the island of Malta. It is not unlike the plan of the church of St. Vitali at Ravenna, and that of a temple at Canusium, and that of the temple of Minerva Medica in Rome. (Bartlett's Overland Journey.)
- Fig. 55.—A coin of the island of Cossyra. The female head upon it is ornamented with the sacred snake of the Egyptians fastened to the forehead. British Museum.
- Fig. 56.—A coin of Nero, bearing the ship in which he sailed. British Museum.
- Fig. 57.—A coin of Galba, dated Lukabantos, B, in the second year; with the head of Serapis, being a Jupiter with a basket on his head.
- Fig. 58.—The name of Vespasian.
- Fig. 59.—The goddess of the sacred tree pouring wisdom into the mouth of a philosopher, and into the mouth of his soul. (Egypt. Inscript. 2nd Series, pl. 81.)
- Fig. 60.—The name of Titus, written Autocrator Titus Caisaros.
- Fig. 61.—The name of Domitian, written Autocrator Caisaros Domitianus blessed Germanicus. The word Blessed is written with NT, for NOUTE, followed by a whip, the sceptre of Osiris, as the demonstrative sign to explain these two letters, which in other places would have another meaning.
- Fig. 62.—The side and back of the mummy of a fish. In Dr. Lee's Museum. It is not impossible that this mummy, though not a modern forgery, may contain no fish, but be a false mummy forged by the ancients. (J. Bonomi.)
- Fig. 63.—A triangle representing the trinity of Osiris, Isis, and Horus, as described by Plutarch. From a small stone of the same size.
- Fig. 64.—The infant Horus with a finger to his mouth, and the large lock of hair over his right ear. From a porcelain figure of the same size. At the back is a hole through it, so that it might be worn upon a string like a charm.
- Fig. 65.—Isis nursing the infant Horus on her lap. From a porcelain group of the same size.
- Fig. 66.—A Roman engraved gem with the bust of Harpocrates.
- Fig. 67.—Coins of Domitian, one the front with his head, and three reverses :
 1st. Of the year eleven; figure of Hope.
 2nd. Of the year nine; a god in form of winged sphinx, holding with one paw the wheel of eternity.
 3rd. Of the year eleven; a horse at full gallop, carrying a snake as its rider.
- Fig. 68.—The trinity of Horus, between the two goddesses Isis and Nephthys. From a porcelain group of the same size.
- Fig. 69.—A coin of Nerva with a palm tree, and the words Fisci Judaici Calumnia Sublata; and the letters S C, meaning By the decree of the Senate. In the British Museum.
- Fig. 70.—The name of Trajan, written Autocrator Caesar Nerva Trajanus blessed Germanicus Dacicus. The D in Dacicus is written with Nt, as it is in the name of Darius in Fig. 158, Vol. I. The R in Nerva is here a hawk, a character which is more usually an A, but sometimes the syllable Hor, for the name of the god Horus, and hence an R.
- Fig. 71.—Six coins of Trajan. In the British Museum :
 1st. Of the year seven; the triune god under the form of a winged sphinx, with three faces, holding with one paw the wheel of eternity.
 2nd. Of the year fifteen; a sphinx in the form of a crocodile's body, with the upper half of a woman.
 3rd. Of the year fifteen; two jars each with the head of a god, representing the good and evil principle of the Gnostics.
 4th. Of the year sixteen; Plenty, under the form of a woman holding a cornucopia, standing between two sphinxes.
 5th. Of the year one; the Nile with its rise of sixteen cubits, represented by a bearded old man leaning on his left elbow, and holding in his right hand a cornucopia, on the top of which sits a little Cupid, who points to the figure 16, to say that that year the river had sixteen such cupids, cubits, or measures of increase.

6th. Of the year twelve ; a charioteer driving two snakes in place of horses

Fig. 72.—A temple in the city of Petra, carved out of the rock, having Corinthian columns of the second century of our era. (Bartlett's Forty Days in the Desert.)

Fig. 73.—The name of Hadrian, written Autocrator Caisaros, Trajanus Adrianus blessed.

Fig. 74.—The restoration of a triumphal arch at Antinoopolis. (Description of l'Egypte, vol. iv. pl. 58.)

Fig. 75.—A coin of the year twenty-one of Hadrian, having on one side the head of the hero Antinous, with a lotus flower on his forehead ; on the other side Antinous on horseback in the character of Mercury.

Fig. 76.—The rose-coloured lotus, the Nymphaea Indica of Linnæus.

Fig. 77.—The two colossal statues of Amunothph III., with the sun rising over the plain of Thebes. (H. Horeau.)

Fig. 78.—A god with the characteristics of Ra, Horus, and Osiris.

Fig. 79.—A Gnostic gem, with a god having a human body and ass's head. In the British Museum.

Fig. 80.—A scarabæus and sun, meaning Horus Ra.

Fig. 81.—A Gnostic gem, having a god in the form of a sphinx riding on horseback and trampling down the serpent of wickedness. The figure of Victory is offering him a crown. This is the white horse mentioned in Rev. vi. 2, its tail ends with a serpent, like the horses described in Rev. ix. 10. In the British Museum.

Fig. 82.—A Gnostic gem, with a serpent having a glory round its head. The inscription seems to say to the spirit of death ; Hurt me not. In the British Museum.

Fig. 83.—A Gnostic gem, bearing an armed man with two serpents for his legs and a cock's head. On his shield is written I, A, O, for Jehovah, and around him Abrasax, or Hurt me not.

Fig. 84.—Six coins of Hadrian's reign. In the British Museum :

1st. Of the year ten, a jar with human head.

2nd. Of the year sixteen, Good Fortune, as a woman lying on a couch in a boat, floating down the stream. Near her feet is the rudder.

3rd. Of the year ten, two crowned serpents ; one of Goodness with the swollen chest, and the other of Evil, with the tongue out ready to bite.

4th. Of the year eighteen, Horus standing upon an eagle, between the heads of Isis and Serapis.

5th. Of the year eighteen, the busts of Isis and Serapis.

6th. Of the year eighteen, two jars with human heads, probably representing the good and evil principle, like the third and fifth.

Fig. 85.—The name of Antoninus, written Autocrator Caisaros Antoninus Sebastos. The T, S, with which the last word ends, are those with which the feminine names ended in earlier times.

Fig. 86.—A coin of Antoninus dated in his sixth year, with the bird phoenix wearing a glory, and the word Aion to mark the beginning of a new age. In the British Museum.

Fig. 87.—Six coins of Antoninus. In the British Museum :

1st. Of the year seven ; the serpent of evil with the head of Serapis.

2nd. Of the year eight ; the planet Jupiter in Sagittarius.

3rd. Of the year eight ; the moon in Cancer.

4th. Of the year two ; the planet Mercury in Gemini.

5th. Of the year eight ; the sun, as Apollo, in Leo.

6th. Of the year two ; a bust of Mercury.

Fig. 88.—Claudius Ptolemy's Astrolabe, drawn from his description of the instrument in the fifth book of his Constructio Magna. Its purpose is to measure the longitude and latitude of the stars and planets. The latitude is measured directly, by the angular distance of the body from the ecliptic circle ; and the longitude indirectly, by the difference of longitude between these bodies and the sun. The largest circle but one in the drawing, is the meridian which passes through the pole of the equator and the pole of the ecliptic. To this meridian the ecliptic circle is fixed at right angles, and the intersection of these two circles is the first point of Aries. This meridian is mounted, and revolves on a broken axis which is the pole of the equator, and it carries a second broken axis which is the pole of the ecliptic. To this latter axis an outer and an inner circle are attached, which revolve, and thus mark on the ecliptic their distance in longitude from the meridian circle. To use the astrolabe, the outer circle is moved and clamped to the ecliptic at the degree of the sun's known longitude, and then the instrument is moved on the pole of the equator, till that circle throws no shadow. The inner circle is then moved till the eye, looking along its plane, decides that it hides the centre of the moon. The degree it touches on the ecliptic is then the moon's longitude. Again this inner circle is double, or it carries a second which revolves round their common centre in their common plane, and carries two points to guide the sight. These points are then turned towards the moon, and they thus measure its latitude above or below the ecliptic. In the same way the difference of longitude between any other two bodies is measured, and the latitude of one of them.

Fig. 89.—The name of Aurelius, written Autocrator Caisaros Antoninus, Harvius blessed.

Fig. 90.—A statue of the god of the Nile, leaning on a sphinx, and holding the horn of plenty in his left arm. Around him are playing sixteen little cupids to mark the sixteen cubits which the river rises. The sphinx has the bust of a woman instead of that of a man, as in earlier days. (Visconti, Museo Pio-Clementino.)

Fig. 91.—Three coins of Aurelius. In the British Museum :

1st. The full-faced head of Serapis.

2nd. Of the year eighteen ; a woman seated holding in her right hand the scales of justice, and in her left the horn of plenty.

3rd. Of the year twelve ; the Pharos lighthouse, by the side of which the goddess Isis is holding up a sail, which is blown towards the lighthouse, and perhaps marks the voyage of the emperor to Alexandria in that year.

Fig. 92.—Three kinds of Alexandrian handwriting :—

1st. Quick writing from a papyrus, written A.D. 138. "In the year one of Antoninus Caesar our Lord." (Young's Hieroglyphics, pl. 52.)

2nd. Book writing from the Bpbraem MS. of the Bible, written about A.D. 450. "And confessedly great."—1 Tim. iii. 16.

3rd. Book writing in Latin from the Besa MS. of the Bible, written about A.D. 450. "All ; and they honoured God, saying."

Fig. 93.—A young man clothed with leopard's skin, and wearing the single lock of hair at his right ear. From a tablet of the reign of Cleopatra. (Egyptian Inscriptions, pl. 72.)

Fig. 94.—An ornament formed of stalks of the lotus and lily plants. It is common on the sides of the stone seats belonging to the statues of kings and gods.

Fig. 95.—The name of Commodus, written Autocrator Commodus, living for ever.

Fig. 96.—A bald-headed priest, carrying an Anubis-staff. From a small bronze.

- Fig. 97.—Four jars, in which were placed those less solid parts of the body which could not be preserved in the mummy. They have as lids the heads of the four lesser gods of the dead. Amset, the carpenter, has a man's head; Hepi, the digger, an ape's head; Smotef, the cutler, a jackal's head; Snouf, the bleeder, a hawk's head. (J. Bonomi.)
- Fig. 98.—A procession of a priestess, the scribe, the prophet, and the singer. From a bas-relief of Greek work. (Bartoli's Admiranda, pl. 16.)
- Fig. 99.—The statue of a Pastophorus, or shrine-bearer, of the reign of Hophra, B.C. 590. In the British Museum.
- Fig. 100.—Six Coptic letters, with the hieroglyphics from which they were copied. These were added to the Greek alphabet to form the new Coptic alphabet.
- Fig. 101.—Hieroglyphics from the Rosetta stone. "For this to him the immortal
"gods gave victory, life, and power, and the other blessings of a kingdom."
(Egyptian Inscriptions, pl. 50.)
- Fig. 102.—Hieratic writing from a mummy case. "Honour to the deified lady of "the house (her figure), Taioua (her figure), deceased." (Egyptian Inscriptions, pl. 52.)
- Fig. 103.—Enchorial writing from the Rosetta stone. "Ptolemy and Arainoë, gods."
(Young's Hieroglyphics, pl. 16.)
- Fig. 104.—The hieroglyphical words Water, Name, and Lord of Battles.
- Fig. 105.—Egypt nursing crocodiles. From a porcelain figure the same size.
- Fig. 106.—A coin of Septimia Zenobia, dated in her fifth year.
- Fig. 107.—A coin of Vaballathus Athenodorus, dated in his fifth year, having on the other side the head of Aurelian with the date of his second year.
- Fig. 108.—A coin of Domitius Domitianus, having on the other side the figure of a young man holding a cornucopia and an eagle standing beside him; with the inscription, GENIO POPULI ROMANI, and at foot A. L. E. for Alexandria. British Museum.
- Fig. 109.—A coin of Severina, dated in the seventh year of Aurelian.
- Fig. 110.—A coin of Numerianus, of his third year, struck by Trajan's second legion.
- Fig. 111.—Diocletian's Column in Alexandria, formerly known by the name of Pompey's Pillar. (Denon, pl. 9.)
- Fig. 112.—A hero in a Phrygian dress stabbing a bull in honour of Mithra. A dog and a snake are lapping up the blood. In the British Museum.
- Fig. 113.—The Doum palm of Upper Egypt, with a branching stem. (H. Horeau.)
- Fig. 114.—A coin of Constantius, having the phoenix with a glory round its head standing upon the globe. Around is written, Fel. Temp. Reparatio. On the other side is the head of the emperor with his name, Flavius Julius Constantius Pius Felix Augustus.
- Fig. 115.—Isis, as the Dog-star, rising heliacally from the zodiac of the Memnonium. (Burton's Excerpta.)
- Fig. 116.—The courtyard of the temple of Medinet Abou, showing the small Greek columns, the remains of the Christian church which was built within the area. (H. Horeau.)
- Fig. 117.—The interior of a rock temple near Ferras, above Abou Simbel, having the figure of Our Saviour with a glory round his head painted on the ceiling. The temple was built by king Anemneh, about B.C. 1200. (H. Horeau.)
- Fig. 118.—Sculpture at Asseboua, where the pagan god has been removed and the figure of St. Peter painted in his place to receive the offerings of Rameses II. (Nubie, par Gan, pl. 45.)
- Fig. 119.—Writing from Wady Mokatteb, near Mount Sinai, beginning * * *
לִדְכָרְךָ * * * לִדְכָרְךָ * * *. In memory of * * * memory of * * *; using the Chaldee form, דְכָרְךָ, for the Hebrew וְכָרְךָ. The third line ends with שָׁם, name.
- Fig. 120.—A gateway at Karnak, from a photograph.

- Fig. 121.—A picture of Science holding up a plant of mandrake to be painted by the artist and described by the author. From a MS. of Dioscorides, written A.D. 507. (Agincourt, vol. iii. 26)
- Fig. 122.—A view of the Monastery of St. Catharine, at the foot of Mount Sinai. (Bartlett's Forty Days.)
- Fig. 123.—An obelisk standing at Auxum in Abyssinia. (Salt's Travels.)
- Fig. 124.—Ruined tower at Taposiris. (Description de l'Égypte, vol. v. pl. 43.)
- Fig. 125.—A coin of Justinian, with the head in profile, and the value marked I.B. for 12. British Museum.
- Fig. 126.—A coin of Justinian. The head has a full face. The value is marked A.Γ. for 33. British Museum. These both have the cross, the emblem of Christianity, and the letters Alex. for Alexandria, where they were struck.
- Fig. 127.—View of the end of the Roman castle at Babylon or old Cairo. (Pocock's Travels.)
- Fig. 128.—Map of the country round Cairo, Memphis, and the pyramids. (Description de l'Égypte.)
- Fig. 129.—Diocletian's Column.
- Fig. 130.—The obelisk called Cleopatra's Needle.
- Fig. 131.—A fallen colossal statue of Rameses II. on the plain of Memphis, probably that mentioned by Herodotus, being forty cubits high when perfect. (J. Bonomi.)
- Fig. 132.—Arabs on camels. (H. Horeau.)
- Fig. 133.—Buffaloes crossing the inundation, with the pyramids in the distance.
- Fig. 134.—Head of an Egyptian Fellah, or labourer. (H. Horeau.)
- Fig. 135.—Date palm of Lower Egypt. (H. Horeau.)

On the Title-Page.—The figure of Neith, the goddess of the heavens. Her name is spelt NT, followed by the arch of heaven as the demonstrative sign.
