

THE
INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

ISSUED EVERY SATURDAY.

Vol. XXXIX.

September 1928—August 1929.

Editor:

K. NATARAJAN.

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road, Fort,

BOMBAY.

PRICE ANNAS TWO.

PRINTED AT THE BOMBAY VAIBHAV PRESS, BOMBAY 4.

1929.

INDEX

	PAGE.
A
Abhyarthi	580	Besant on Indian Women's Progress
Advertisements, Objectionable	593	Bihar Women Enfranchised
Advice, Sound	81	Birth Control
Afghan Ex-King in Bombay, the	626	Birth Control, The Scope of
Afghan Rising, the	259	Blue lie, A
Aga Khan on Cow Killing, the	289	Bolshevism and Christian Missions
Age of Consent	18	Bombay and Prohibition
Age of Consent Committee, the	66, 129, 147	Bombay Children Aid Society
Age of Consent Committee's Recommendations	674	Bombay City, Overcrowding in Age of Consent Debate	62	Bombay Co-operative Conference
Age of Consent, Evidence on	354	Bombay Disturbances, Inquiry into
Age of Consent Inquiry ...70, 86, 103, 119, 134, 150, 167, 184, 197, 216, 233, 248, 298, 328, 343, 359.		Bombay's Educational Expenditure
Age of Consent Report	785, 790	Bombay Excise policy
Age of Consent Committee's Report	835	Bombay Legal Aid Society, The Agent in South Africa, the	193	Bombay Municipal Election
Air Mail, the	517	Bombay Public Safety Bill
Alcoholism, The New British Parliament and.	729	Bombay Situation, The Alcoholism, World League Against	73	Bombay Textile Strike, The
All Parties Conference, the	19	Bombay Under a Cloud
Alphabet, Changing the	241	Book, An Improper
Always Settlement, the	49	Booth and the Salvation Army, General
Amanullah's Abdication, King	323	Borstal Bill, The
American Election—An Interpretation, the .	196	Bose, Honoured, Sir Jagadish
American Prosperity... ..	177	Brahma Samaj Centenary
American Settlement, An	54	Brahmin Priests, Coronation by... ..
American Tribute, An	273	Bramwell Booth, The late General
American Universities, Students in	776	Britain and India
Amicable Settlement, An	370	British Elections, An Analysis of the
Andhra University, The	417	British General Election, The
Anglo-Egyptian Treaty	781	British India and Indian States... ..
Anglo-Indians or Indian Christians	818	British Ministry, The New
Annamalai University, The	114, 131	Brothel, Banishing the; Segregation
Animal Sacrifice	114	Abolition
Anniversary of the Assembly, Tenth	761	Buddha Jayanti
Anti-Purdah League	802	Buddha, The Great Social Reformer
Apologist for Government, An	465	Buddhism, A New Book on
Armistice Day, 1928	148	Buddhism Defined
Arya Bhavan	230	Buddhist Monks, European
Asoka's Political System	264	Butler Committee, Report of the
Assam Floods	690	C
Assembly Incident, The	522	Calcutta Congress Controversy, The
Attitudes Towards other Faiths... ..	20	Calcutta Congress, The Awakening of the Lingayats	456	Capital, Marx's
B
Baby and Health Week Report	786	Capital Punishment
Baby Shows, A Medical Officer on	802	Caste Conferences
Bajaj, Mr. Jamnalal	801	Caste Conferences and National Progress
Balak Ram, Dr. Paranjpye's Tribute to	670	Caste in Britain
Balak Ram, The Late Mr.	529, 535	Caste, The Protest against
Ban, An unnecessary	493	Catholics and Civil Marriage
Ban on Married Students	322	Celadon in India
Barbers and Self-shaving	129	Chatterjee's Conviction, Mr. Ramanand
Barbour Scholarships, The	178	Character Training in Home and School
Bardoli	577	Child Labour in Ceylon
Baroda, Progressive	339	Child Marriage Among Christians
Behar Women, Votes for	418	Child Marriages, Penalty for
Behring, 75th Birthday of Emil Von	457	Children, Race Attitudes in
Besant, Mahatma Gandhi and Dr.	321	Children Aid Society, Bombay Children's Aid Society
		Children who Work
		China, Reconstructing
		China, The Reconstruction of

INDEX

iii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
China, The Revolution in ...	98	Divorce Bill, Some Aspects of ...	600
Christ's Message to India ...	673	Divorce in Hindu Law ...	647
Christ, Winning Ceylon for ...	72, 83	Divorce in Hinduism ...	481
Christian Missions in India ...	163, 212, 822, 839	Divorce qualified ...	472
Christian Missions, the Failure of ...	771	Dog Shows ...	402
Christian Missions, the Future of ...	787, 840	Dominion Status And Independence ...	161
Christian Missions, the Problem of ...	659	Doubts and Difficulties ...	641
Christian Mission's Work ...	690	Doubtful Point, A ...	785
Christian Workers in India ...	594, 647	Dowry, The Evil of ...	308
Christians, the West and Eastern ...	776	Drink Among the Young ...	642
Church and Brothels ...	497	E
Church and Social Evils, The ...	522	Education, A Scheme of Primary ...	522
Civil Marriage Association, The Hindu ...	10	Education and Purdah ...	525
Civil Marriage in India, The Law of ...	132, 183	Education, Central Authority for ...	178
Cochin, Travancore and ...	371	Education Friends ...	722
Co-education ...	677	Education Fund, Bombay ...	757
Co-education in Shantiniketan ...	568	Education in Jaffna ...	690
Commercialised vice in Bombay... ..	482	Education in the Punjab, Primary ...	786
Communal Movements, The Influence of ...	739	Education of Indian Princes ...	546
Communal Problems, The Right Approach to ...	803	Education of Indian Women ...	737
Communal Conflict in Palestine... ..	833	Education, Sir Frederick Sykes on ...	817
Communalism in the Indian Census ...	834	Educational Efforts, Indian's ...	417
Communalisms, The way to weed out ...	68	Emigrants, Preparing ...	418
Confessions of a Missionary ...	626	Encouraging our Teachers ...	258
Congress Committee, The All-India ...	769, 817	English Teaching in Japan ...	353
Congress President, The Next ...	626	Englishmen, What I like about... ..	689
Congress Situation, The ...	498	Eradicating the Social Evil ...	376
Conscience Clause ...	615	European Wife in India, Status of A ...	104
Constitutional Question, A ...	566	Excise Demand ...	242
Conversion ...	325	Experiment, An Unsuccessful ...	545
Cosmopolitanism, The need of the Hour ...	259	F
Crematorium, Bombay Corporation and ...	499, 612	Fact and Law, Some Points of ...	356, 372, 388, 404, 420, 436, 532, 548, 660
Criticism, An Unmerited ...	513	Facing Facts ...	344
Cup Controversy, Drinking ...	67	Far East, Our Mission to the ...	601
Curzon, Lord ...	67	Farquhar, The late Dr. J. N. ...	753
D		Fellowship and Religion ...	789
Dagger and The Pen, The ...	515	Flood Relief ...	338, 834
Dangerous Propaganda, A ...	546	G
Davis' Munificence, Canon ...	34	Gandhi And Dr. Besant, Mahatma ...	321
Decision, A Wise ...	228	Gandhi in Burma, Mahatma ...	449
Defectives, Our ...	33	Gandhi on the Congress, Mahatma ...	306
Definition, A Curious ...	642	Gandhi's Arrest, Mahatma ...	434
Delegation To The League, Indian ...	322	Gandhi's Speech, Mahatma ...	438
Demonstration, A Practical ...	146	Ganga Ram Institutions, The ...	49
Depressed Classes and The Commission ...	194	Girl Wife Tragedy, Another ...	210
Depressed Classes in Cochin ...	306	Gondal Administration ...	452
Depressed Classes Mission, Mangalore ...	148	Gour Marriage Act, The ...	641
Depressed Classes, Simon Educational Committee And, The ...	66	Gour's Marriage Act... ..	417, 453
Depressed Classes, Work Among the ...	22	Government and Social Reform ...	370
Deserted Wives, Flight of ...	385	Government Tactics and Social Reform ...	370
Devadasi Bill, The ...	406	Government, Vacillating ...	337
Devadasi Problem, The ...	55	Government's Breach of Faith ...	376, 393
Devadasihood, Legislation to Suppress ...	792	Greaves Home, The ...	210
Devadasis, Law of succession among ...	753	Gujarat College Strike, The ...	337
Devadhar, The Late Mrs. G. K. ...	34	H
Davalaya, The ...	178	Hand-book of Indian Universities ...	514
Dewey and Tagore ...	617	Hartog Committee on Women's Education ...	530
Diamond And Charcoal ...	681	Hartog Committee's Report ...	514
Divorce Act, The Indian ...	681

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Havoc by Fire	578	India's true Womanhood
Hindu Annual, The	274	Indo-European Marriages
Hindu Civil Marriage Association, The	10	Industry, Students in
Hindu Conference	586	Individual Action and Legislation
Hindu Conversion and Indian Family law	36, 52	Infants in India, Care of
Hindu Law Amendment	57	Inter-Communal Amity Conference	481,
Hindu Reconstruction, Mr. N. C. Kelkar on	833	Interest and Usury in Islam
Hindu Law Reform	437, 612	International Gathering in India, A Unique
Hindu Law Research Society	610	International Unitarians' Visit to Bangalore
Hindu Law, Women in	4	International Women's Conference
Hindu Mahasabha, The	449	Inquiry, An unofficial
Hindu—Muslim Unity, the Basis of	341	Islam and Prohibition
Hindu Women. Legal portion of	1	J
Hindu Women's Property Rights	387	Jamshedpur Settlement at
Hindu Women's Rights of Inheritance.	423, 441	Japan, The year in
Hinduism and Christianity in India	374, 392	Japan, Women's Movement in
Hinduism in America	193	Japanese Industry, Women in
Hinduism, Problems of Modern... ..	807, 824	Juhu Tragedy, The
Hinduism, the Dead-set Against	513, 621	Joshi Committee's Report, The (See Appendix)
Hooligan Problem in Bombay, the	785	Joshi Committee's Surprise
Human Race, the Unity of the... ..	664	Journalism and its Future, Indian
"Humanism"	115	Journalists' Conference
Humanism, New	244	Judicial Murder?
Humanitarian Movement, A	2	Justice in Africa
Hume, the Late Rev. B. A. 689, 804, 818, 820,	836	K
Hygienic Scare, A	769	Kamala Lectures, Next
I		Kanara Saraswats' Meeting
Immediate Remedy needed	610	Kelkar on Hindu Reconstruction, Mr. N. C.
Incident, An Unfortunate	722	Khadder, A Case for Independence	358	Khadi Work
India and England	841	King, A much-Maligned
India and the British Labour Party	289	King's Health, The	225,
India and the Labour Government	705, 723	L
India and Prohibition	273	Labour Government, India and the:	705,
India, Britain and	51	Labour Minister, Britain's New...
India, Lectures on	18	Labour Temple
India, the English in	38	Ladies' Conference, Mysore
Indian Art, Encouragement of	50	Lahore Outrage, The
Indian Census, Communalism in The	834	Lajpat Rai, Lala
Indian Discontent, Causes of	1	Lajpat Rai's Autobiography, Lala	545,
Indian Girls, Education of	147	Lajpat Rai Number
Indian Institute of Political and Social Science	557	Land Revenue Assessment, Bombay
Indian Journalism and its future	309	Law and Custom
Indian Labour	609	League of Nations, The
Indian Music, Revival of	722	League, The Indian Delegation to the Indian National Social Conference	134	Legal Aid Society, The
Indian National Social Conference, the 41st 193,	276	Lepers, The Mission to
Indian Professor for Oxford	274	Liberate the Women
Indian Succession Act of 1865, Amendment to	806	Lingayats, Awakening of the
Indian Woman Delegate	242	Living India
Indian Women, Education of	737	Lloyd, Lord
Indian Womanhood	697	M
Indian Women's Deputation	225	Maharaja's Bad Example, A
Indian Women and Purdah	82	Mahatma Gandhi on the Congress
Indians Abroad	530	Mahatma Gandhi's Trial in Calcutta
Indians in Africa	337	Mahomedans, What I like about
Indians in Fiji	834	Malaria in India
India's Agent, Insult to	66	Manilal Parekh, Mr.
India's Excise Demand	180, 193	Marriage, A Reform...
		mantras for Sudra — p. 347.

INDEX

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Marriage Age, C. P. for Higher...	354	News of the Week ...	27, 59, 75, 97, 105, 122, 138, 154, 171, 187, 203, 219, 250, 266, 283, 299, 315, 330, 346, 362, 410, 426, 442, 458, 474, 491, 523, 538, 554, 569, 587, 602, 618, 634, 666, 714, 730, ...
Marriage Age in England ...	402	746, 778, 793, 810
Marriage bills, The Three ...	35	Newspapers and Advertisements ...	674
Marriage Expenses in China, Regulating ...	454	Non-Brahmin Movement, The ...	642
Marriage, Registration against Second ...	648	Non-Brahmin Movement, The Scope of the...	484
Marriage Law Anomalies ...	545	O
Marriage Laws, The ...	421	Occasional Notes ...	100
Marriages and Economic Pressure ...	375	Orthodoxy at Bay ...	226
Marriages, Hindu-Muslim ...	629	Orthodoxy on the War-Path ...	113
Marriages, Registration of Caste .	596	P
Marriages, Opposition to unequal ...	450	Panagal, The late Raja of ...	258
Marriages, Personal Law of ...	401	Parliament and Alcoholism, The New British	729
Marriages, unequal ...	786	Passing of a Saint, The ...	117
Married Students and Universities ...	626	Peasants Vindicated ...	577
Marwari Community, Social Reform and		Penalising Early and Unequal Marriages ...	738
The	513	Peopling of Australia, The ...	472
Marzban, The late Mr. P. B. ...	226	Persia, Social Conditions in ...	82, 84
Mass Literary Association ; Why not A ...	456	Physical Education Committee, Madras ...	66
Masses must be financed ...	456	Physical Training in Schools ...	834
Maternity Benefits Bill ...	466	Pleasant Function, A ...	770
Mayo, In Defence of Miss ...	293	Point of View, The other ...	466
Mayo, The Significance of Miss ...	581, 598	Police High-handedness in U. S. A. ...	133
Mayo's Slaves of the Gods, Miss ...	488	Policy, A Paradoxical ...	241
Medical Education in India ...	642	Politics and Social Reform ...	727
Medical Profession and Marriage Age ...	289	Political Gatherings, The ...	273
Men May all be Brothers, That ...	292, 308, 324, 340, 356, 372, 488, 404, 423, 437, 452, 469, 484, 560, 516, 533, 552, 564, 580, 597, 612, 628, 644, 663, 676, 692, 708, 724, 745, 756, 772, 788, 804, 820, 836.	Political Situation, The ...	481
Mill Strike Again, Bombay ...	561	Pope and Mussolini, The ...	643
Millicent Fawcett, Dame ...	785	Population, The World's ...	247
Mission to the Far East, Our ...	601	Prison Widows ...	353
Missions, What is given to ...	98	Prisoners' Aid Society, The Punjab ...	498
Missionary, Confessions of A. ...	645, 676, 693, 708	Prisoners, Treatment of ...	818
Monogamy and Registration ...	465	Prohibition ? ...	322
Montessori Society, Bhavnagar ...	562	Prohibition, Bombay and ...	419
Move, A Welcome ...	209	Prohibition Campaign, The ...	500
Munje and Rifle Shooting, Dr. ...	471	Prohibition Conference, Bombay ...	679
Municipal Gazette, Annual Calcutta ...	210	Prohibition for India ...	242
Municipal Schools, Bombay ...	242	Prohibition in America ...	439
Musalman, A Great ...	707	Prohibition in Bombay ...	435, 514
Music, Arabic Influence on ...	583, 822	Prohibition in India ...	675
Muslim Social Life, A Hindu on ...	344	Prohibition in Twenty Years ...	258
Muthulakshmi's Achievement, Dr. ...	386	Prohibition, India's Demand for ...	246
Muzhuruddiu, Presidential Address of Mrs. .	422	Prohibition Issue, The ...	145
N		Prohibition Movement in Japan... ..	130
Nagpada Neighbourhood, Life in ...	114	Prohibition Movement, The ...	498
Nagpada Neighbourhood, Social Survey in ...	114	Prohibition Propaganda for Madras ...	616
Naidu, An interview with Mrs. ...	113	Prohibition, Public Opinion for ...	593
Naidu in America, Mrs. ...	258, 263	Prostitution, Prevention of ...	754
Naidu in Bombay, Mrs. ...	760	Prostitution, Religion And ...	467
Naidu, Mrs. Sarojini... ..	753	Publication, Useful ...	290
Nation Builder, A Great ...	17	Public Safety Bill, The ...	33, 133, 309
National Conferences ...	266	Punjab, Floods in the ...	101
National Social Conference, The .	294	Purdah, Abolition of... ..	242
Negro Spirituals ...	823	Purdah, Indian Women and ...	82
"New Era," The ...	83	Purdah, The Aga-Khan on ...	97
New Organisation, A ...	730	Purdah Women, Influence of ...	162

	PAGE.		PAGE.
R
Race Attitudes in Children ...	819	Slavery abolished in Kelat ...	386
Racial Relationships, Discussion on ...	486	"Slaves of the Gods" ...	30
Rais Acknowledgement, Dr. ...	266	Social Conditions in Persia ...	84
Raja Ram Mohan Roy ...	84	Social Conference, Scope and Extent of ...	628
Ramaswamy Aiyar, The Late Mr. ...	553	Social Conference, U. P. ...	520
Ramkrishna Mission, The ...	178	Social Conferences, The ...	275
Ram Mohan Roy ...	23	Social Legislation in Mysore ...	162, 273
Ram Mohan Roy and an English Official ...	649	Social Life of The Burmese ...	164
Random Notes ...	164	Social Persecution ...	842
"Red Oleanders" ...	146	Social Problems ...	214
Reform, Social or Political ...	595	Social Reconstruction in India ...	453
Religion and Politics ...	738	Social Reform, A Pioneer in ...	338
Religion and Prostitution ...	487	Social Reform and Labour ...	627
Religion and the State ...	3, 65, 69	Social Reform Bars the Way ...	579
Religion, Sensationalism in ...	809	Social Reform Calendar, The ...	149
Religions Tolerance ...	466	Social Reform in Bardoli ...	130
Repatriation Tragedy, The ...	274	Social Reform in India ...	114
Reply, An Effective ...	50	Social Reform in S. India ...	468
Rescue Home, Hindu Women's ...	773	Social Reform, Political Implication of ...	101
Rescue Home, The Matunga ...	322	Social Reform, Politics and ...	737
Rescue Work in Bombay ...	562	Social Reform, Punjab ...	569
Research and Reform ...	611	Social Reform, Triumph of ...	226
Riots, Police Report on the ...	658	Social Service, Mechanising ...	2
Reviews ...	487	Social Work in South Africa ...	114
S
Sadhu Menace, The ...	657	Social Work, The Professionalising of ...	7
Salvation Army, General Booth and the ...	353	Sophistical Reasoning ...	1
Salvation Army, The ...	321	South African Election ...	674
Samaritan, A Good ...	689	South African Indian Congress ...	537
Sanatorium at Thamparam ...	546	South Africa, Racial Problem in ...	354
Sarda Bill and the Government attitude, the. ...	355	Soviet Russia ...	455
Sarda Bill, the ...	361, 402	Standardization ...	177
Sarda Bill, the Health and ...	50	States Peoples' Conference, The Indian ...	609, 625
Sarda Marriage Bill ...	17	States, The Problem of the ...	321
Sarda Marriage Bill, The ...	257	Statutory Commission, The ...	97
Sastri at Chidamburam, Mr. ...	529	Straw, The Last ...	242
Sastri for East Africa, Mr. ...	562	Strike Situation, The Bombay ...	673
Sastri in Bombay, Mr. ...	403	Strike, The End of the ...	66
Sastri in South Africa, Mr. ...	306, 417	Students' Conference, World ...	241
Sastri, the Return of Mr. ...	385	Students in Industry ...	758
Sastri, Tributes in Commons to ...	562	Succession Among Devadasis, Law of ...	792
Sastri's Succession in South Africa, Mr. ...	145	Sayed Ameer Ali, The late ...	18
Sastri's Successor, Mr. ...	290	Sykes on Education, Sir Frederick ...	817
Sastri's work, A Tribute to, Mr. ...	337	T
Sastri's work in South Africa, Mr. ...	442	Tagore, Dewey and ...	178
Sastri's work, Mr. ...	407	Tammany Hall ...	179
Satyagrahashram ...	162	Teachers' Federation, The All India ...	146
Scout Movement in India ...	807, 838	Teachers' Conference ...	161
Service, Mutual ...	37	Temple Entry ...	530
Seva Sadan, The Madras ...	20, 474	Temples and Untouchability, Hindu ...	826
Seva Sadan, the Poona ...	193	Temples, Purification of ...	757
Sex Equality League ...	642	Temperance Conference, Madras ...	593
Shinwari Demands, The ...	327	Temperance Organisation ...	58
Shraddhanand Anath Mahilashram, The ...	325	Temperance Work in India ...	665
Sikhism, Are there Sects in ...	712	Textile Strike, End of the ...	82
Simon Commission, The ...	65, 129, 146	Triveni , The ...	81
Sinha on Social Legislation, Mr. S. ...	497	Tuberculosis and the Middle Classes ...	578
Sind Herald , The ...	386	Tuberculosis in Calcutta ...	562
Sind Relief Fund ...	834	Tuberculosis in India ...	482
Skelton at the Feast, The ...	818	U
Sati Case , the Bark ...	414	"Understanding India" ...	211, 227
		Untouchables, Purification of ...	290

INDEX

vii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Untouchability	554	Women, Indian Politics and	82
Untouchability, Campaign Against	632	Women in Japan	340
Untouchability, The Removal of	449	Women's Activities, The Sphere of	744
Urgent Need, An	450	Women's Christian Temperance Union
U. S. Presidential Election, The... ..	161, 209	Convention, the 1928	128, 262
V		Women's Conference, Agra	249
Vacations, Some Thoughts on	762	Women's Conference All-India	8
Views of Life	81	Women's Constituent Conference, Bombay	264
Village Pankhursts	706	Women's Council Deputation, Bombay
Villager in the City, The	697	Presidency	489
Voice from the Past, A	755	Women's Education	738
W		Women's Education Conference, All-India	290, 310
Wages and Efficiency	338	Women's Education Conference, Madras	209
War, Profits and	54	Women's Education, Indian	516, 724
Week end in Bombay	609	Women's Education, Neglect of... ..	49
Widow Marriage	617	Women's Education, Principal Dhruva on	691
Widow Marriage and Early Marriage	578	Women's Education, Rajput	260
Widower, Injunction on	489	Women's Educational Conference.	231, 658
Widows' Inheritance on Remarriage	802	Women's Magazines	98
Wilson, Sir Leslie and Lady	227	Women's Movement in Japan	42
Wish Thinking	223	Women's Movement in England, The	113
Womanhood, India's true	756	Women's Social Conference, The All-India... ..	296
Women and Succession	96	Women's Triumph	584
Women Demand Franchise, Bengal	809	Women's Votes	578
Women in Hindu Law	4	Women's Work	2
Women in Hindu Society	194	Y
Women in India	166	Young East, The	770

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1928

No. 1

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Legal Position of Hindu Women. Causes of Indian Discontent. Sophistical Reasoning. Women's Work. Mechanising Social Service. A Humanitarian Movement. Religion and the State—III. Women in Hindu Law.	Banishing the Brothel: Segregation vs. Abolition. The Professionalising of Social Work. All-India Women's Conference. The Hindu Civil Marriage Association.
--	---

NOTES.

Legal Position of Hindu Women:—We have in previous issues expressed our great satisfaction that Mr. M. R. Jayakar has taken up the question of advancing necessary legislation for the rehabilitation of the legal position of Hindu women. The paper which we publish to-day from his pen will be read with deep interest. In it, Mr. Jayakar briefly sketches the historical aspect of the question and outlines his suggestions for reforming the law relating to Hindu women. As he is an influential member of the Legislative Assembly he is in a position to initiate himself some at least of the amending legislation. The most perplexing problem of Hindu social evolution, is how and why did the Vedic equality of men and women, come to give place to the medieval view of women's inferiority. Mr. Jayakar suggests that this was probably a result of the contact of the ancient Aryans with the indigenous races of India. We think so too but it was, perhaps, not so much the conflict with these races or rather tribes, but the taking of wives from them which led to the imposition of an inferior status on women. This, however, is a big question and has only a distant bearing on women's position to-day. The preference for sapindas is clearly traceable to this development. Of more immediate consequence, is Mr. Jayakar's indictment of the interpretation of Hindu law by Anglo-Indian Courts and particularly by the Privy Council. More than half a century ago, Sir Henry Maine, who was Law member of the Government of India, called attention to the danger to the healthy evolution of Hindu society by the British Courts stereotyping fluid custom into rigid rules of law. The enlargement of the Legislature was intended by Mr. Montagu, among other things, as a means of correcting this result of British rule by social legislation introduced by Indian members. Whatever may be said of other aims, this particular object of the reforms has been largely fulfilled. Several Bills, not all of them wise or well-conceived, have been introduced by non-official members in the Central and Provincial Legislatures. A few of them have passed into the statute-book, but all of them have been the means of stimulating wholesome interest in social questions. A sound social system is needed to work a sound political system, and the two have to be evolved side by side. More than that, social reform is the best school of politics, because in it we can never lose touch with realities.

Causes of Indian Discontent:—The Times of India in a recent issue attributed the industrial strikes in several parts of India to communal propaganda. Sir Ibrahim Rahimtulla, lately President of the Bombay Legislative Council, in a letter to the press subjects this opinion to a thorough examination and concludes that, though communist propaganda, may be operating as an influence, the real cause is the grinding poverty of the people and the failure of the Government of India to adopt measures to increase the national income. He writes "Every article of necessity for the very existence of the masses is subject to what may be called comparatively heavy taxation, taking into consideration their means. The food grains of the masses are subject to land assessment and the surplus produce has to pay heavily increased railway freights. Their clothing is taxed, their salt, their fuel, their kerosine, their sugar and even the grazing of their cattle are subject to taxation. The District Local Boards, the Municipalities, the Provincial Government and the Imperial Government are levying taxes, both directly and indirectly, which substantially reduce the savings if any, in agriculture. The petty tyrannies of the village tax gatherer and the village police are also some of the factors which affect the economic well-being of the masses. Is it any wonder that the masses, situated as they are under these conditions should fall an easy prey to political or communist agitation? They have really very little stake in the country. They stand to lose hardly anything while rosy pictures drawn for their future prosperity cannot but have an unsettling effect. The whole problem, as it appears to me, is a problem of national income. If the national income of a country is insufficient to meet the cost of administration and to supply the minimum requirements of the people, that country must slide downwards to what depths it is difficult to realise. In all civilized countries it is the primary duty of the administration to devote all attention to increasing the national income of the people and continuous action by the executive is one of the essential functions which the Government of a civilized country discharges. I wish I could say that the Government of India does this".

Sophistical Reasoning:—Dr. Manshardt in his article which we publish today exposes some of the sophistical arguments advanced against the abolition of brothels. The idea underlying the opposition to this reform, is that brothels are a sort of jails where vice as crime in jails is isolated and prevented from infecting society. We doubt if jails do so in the case of crime. We are sure that brothels do not in the case of vice. Clandestine prostitution is a very serious evil, and it exceeds many times in magnitude commercialised vice. But it pays "the homage which vice pays to virtue" of concealing itself in the cloak of decency. No vested interests are created as in commercialised vice and a strong public opinion will be able effectually to deal with secret immorality. Another point we may mention is that the brothel system is not indigenous to the country. It is an imported one like joint stock companies and the other apparatus of commercialism. Brothels flourish mostly in the principal sea-ports. The indigenous system is "the family system" which is at any rate free from the bestialities and brutalities of the brothel. A national Indian Government will feel as little hesitation in abolishing brothels as in abolishing the liquor trade, their twin brother.

Women's Work: The half-yearly report of the All-India Women's Conference, published elsewhere will repay perusal. The Conference work is making steady progress. Its energetic and enthusiastic General Secretary, Mrs. Chattopadhyaya, is very prompt in publishing her reports, and this is a precedent we should like initiated by other organizations for social work. Now that women are coming into public life, it is necessary to revise some of the terms appertaining to it. One of these is Chairman. The word was invented only when men took the Chair at meetings. Nowadays women do it as often as men and "Chairwoman" sounds queer, especially as in print it may be so easily reduced to "Charwoman" by a hasty or careless compositor. It is, therefore, desirable to devise a neutral word, and we suggest "Chairist" for consideration. Mr., Mrs. or Miss may be prefixed according to the sex and status of the presiding person.

Mechanising Social Service: We call attention to the article which we reprint to-day headed the "Professionalising of Social Work." The subject is one to which we have referred more than once before. Social service, as it grows more and more organised, has undoubtedly a tendency to harden into a trade or profession. This, no doubt, is necessary to deal with large populations but nonetheless the motives which inspire it are not the same as those which inspire reformers.

"A Humanitarian Movement." In an interesting debate instituted by the Nagpur University Union on the subject of divorce being a menace to social polity, Sir Hari Singh Gour the author of the proposed Bill made a characteristically vigorous speech in support of divorce. He opposed the proposition, painted a vivid picture of cruel husbands, husbands with incurable diseases, husbands who ill-treated their wives. What relief, he asked, could the present marriage system afford to the poor wives? While the husband could marry as many times as he liked, the wife was debarred from the man-made laws to change her partner and was tied for her whole life to the man who often ill-treated her. The speaker was surely at one with the proposer of the resolution in condemning the frequency of divorces. He stood for equality and justice. He pleaded for the dumb millions of the fair sex, who were being sacrificed at the altar of family fire. Idealism was at present one-sided. If the husband was free to marry as many times as he liked the very ethical ideas declared that the wife should have an equal chance of getting rid of a husband who ill-treated her or a husband who had himself committed a gross and severe matrimonial crime. The system of divorce was a cosmopolitan and humanitarian movement out to hoist the flag of equality and justice. If the system of divorce was introduced in our society the husband would treat his wife with great consideration lest his wife might secure divorce. If a husband seeks to be ethical, an idealist, the first thing that he should learn was the law of divorce. It is the present immorality and concubinage that the system of divorce was going to check. It would act as a salutary check on the husbands going wrong. The speaker condemned the one-sided, partial, man-made laws. Long before the West had introduced the system of divorce, the speaker contended, the system was sanctioned 15 hundred years ago in our ancient religious books. The West had copied the East. The East was the torch bearer of equality and justice and it was up to the public to up-hold the highest ideal handed down to us by our sages and Rishies.

(Continued from the Leader page).

be recognised as the highest officers of the State, and they should participate in the Coronation and all other important State functions. Whether the Indian State is independent or a Dominion of the British Commonwealth, whether it is a unitary monarchy or a federal republic, it makes no difference. The fundamental rule regarding religion will be the same. We are quite aware that the idea put forward in these articles will not appeal either to Indian politicians or to British Statesmen at present. They are both set on challenging each other, and have necessarily therefore to speak on the same political code. But we are convinced that there will be no stable settlement of the Constitutional question till the Constitution is made to rest on its proper base and not on some improvised apex utterly foreign to the history, tradition and genius of the people of this land.

"What are we, in fact," observes Bergson in his Creative Evolution, "what is our character, if not the condensation of the history that we have lived from our birth—nay, even before our birth, since we bring with us prenatal dispositions? Doubtless we think only with a small part of our past, but it is with our entire past, including the original bent of our soul, that we desire, will and act. Our past then, as a whole, is made manifest to us in its impulse; it is felt in the form of tendency, although a small part of it only is known in the form of idea." This is more absolutely true of nations than of individuals, and the work of the statesman or reformer who ignores this, though he may not live to see it, will be soon found to have been "writ in water".

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1928.

RELIGION AND THE STATE—III

The Nehru Committee Report proposes to make it a fundamental rule that "there shall be no State religion for the Commonwealth of India or for any province in the Commonwealth, nor shall the State either directly or indirectly endow any religion or give any preference or impose any disability on account of religious belief or religious status". For this negative clause, we would substitute as follows: "The Commonwealth of India holds that national well-being rests on religion and, following the immemorial tradition of the country, regards all the ancient established religions as revelations of the several aspects of Truth the full attainment of which is the highest end of a nation's as of an individual's life, and assures them all of reverential preservation and protection as integral factors in the life of the nation." The most important corollary to this fundamental rule is the prohibition of organised proselytism. Many people in this country, Indian and European, have come to think that the right to proselytise is a part of religious freedom. It will be a surprise to them to learn that it is not so recognised by the English law. The following passage is taken from Sir Hari Singh Gour's book "The Penal Law of India" :—

As regards this country the Legislature were exercised about the policy to be sanctioned for this country, but at last the policy adopted was in favour of absolute religious neutrality and freedom of religious discussion. So the Law Commissioners observed :—

"In England an attempt to convert any one from the religion of the country by the most gentle and dispassionate address, is by law an offence; to attempt the same thing by contemptuous or vituperative language is an offence which would be severely punished in practice. But the reason is that conversion is not recognised as a legitimate object. The law assumes the truth of Christianity. But it is manifest that the law and the Legislature of this country cannot assume the truth of any religion. And, as free discussion, or, in other words, attempts at conversion, is the best criterion of the truth of anything, the truth or falsehood of which is not already assumed by law to be beyond controversy, it seems to follow that a bona fide attempt to convert ought not in this country to be treated as a crime, even though the intention to convert be an intention to do so by wounding the religious feelings of the person addressed. We apprehend it is almost impossible to convert a sincere or ardent votary of any faith without wounding his religious feelings in the early stages of the process. And if that be so, and if it is admitted that attempts at conversion from one faith to another ought not to be punished in British India, then the wounding of religious feelings ought not to be punished when the wound is inflicted with that legitimate object".

"We are, though not without hesitation, inclined to think that in the very peculiar circumstances of this country, discourse addressed to any person with the intention of converting him from the faith he professes, which, however it may wound his religious feelings, is not couched in insulting language, not forced upon him in an insulting manner, should not be considered a crime."

The Indian Law Commissioners thought that as the English law assumes the truth of Christianity, it makes attempts at proselytism a penal offence. The Indian Constitution, according to our ideas, should assume the truth of all religions. It follows that organised proselytism would be a violation of this assumption and would be illegal. What prevented the framers of the Penal Code from following the English law in this matter is that they were obliged to assume that Christianity was the only true religion and all the religions of India were false religions. They confess that they had hesitation in deciding to allow organised proselytism.

How very far we have got away from this narrow view of an only true religion, is well brought out in the following words of a member of the Cambridge Brotherhood quoted by Mr. C. F. Andrews in an article in a recent number of the Fellowship: "If I had my life in India to live over again and start afresh, I should seek, to bind together those who truly believed in God and wished to live according to the dictates of conscience. For the forces of materialism are so strong to-day that it is the fundamental belief in God which needs preserving.....just as in the Christian church one denomination is fighting against another, so in the larger world of religion one faith is fighting against another. But all the while we are allowing Faith itself to be destroyed and a purely secular outlook upon life to prevail. What is needed is for all men of religion to unite in face of the common danger". It is the mission of India to give effect to this great thought in her political and social constitution.

The Sovereign of India should in accordance with this article of the Constitution include the declaration roughly sketched above in his Coronation oath. King George V held a Coronation Durbar at Delhi, and future Sovereigns will, no doubt, follow the precedent. It will be a part of the Constitution that they should solemnly swear to afford equal reverence and protection to all religions. The heads of all the great religions will

(Continued in the 2nd column of 2nd Notes page).

WOMEN IN HINDU LAW.

(BY MR. M. R. JAYAKAR, M. L. A.)

[An interesting and learned lecture was delivered on "Women in Hindu Law" by Mr. M. R. Jayakar under the auspices of the Brahma Sabha on Thursday, a short report of which we give below.]

The theme of my lecture to-day is "Women in Hindu Law." It is intended to be a sequel to my yesterday's lecture, in the course of which I briefly described the present position of women before marriage and during coverture. I shall confine myself to-day to a brief statement of women's power of acquiring and holding property, as it has varied from time to time in Hindu Law. I shall also refer to the status which they occupied as daughters, wives or widows. Curious as it may seem, the Aryan immigrant in India developed his best institutions in the free and pure latitudes in which he lived in Vedic times, and the student of the Vedic period finds scattered from place to place, evidence that women occupied a very elevated place in those times. Marriage does not appear to have been compulsory in those days and women could remain unmarried, possibly devoting their lives to learning and philanthropy. In one of the texts of the Rig-Ved maidens are referred to "who have grown old in their father's house claiming a share." One of the verses which is repeated even now at every high caste marriage ceremony by the Hindu husband, takes the form of a troth or vow by him in reply to an injunction by the father of the bride in the following terms:—"You should not prevent my daughter from acquiring wealth. . . ." The bridegroom replies:—"I will not so prevent her." There are instances on record of women having been authors of Vedic teachings and of holding open discussions with learned men in the courts of enlightened kings, and it is clear beyond doubt that women who remained unmarried all their lives took their place side by side with men owing to the respect they enjoyed.

BEST GIFT OF THE GODS.

The wife was regarded, according to one Vedic poet, as the best gift of the gods "for the purpose of domestic happiness." The gods were invited to unite the husband and the wife, and some gods were peculiar favourites for the purpose of mating the husband to the maiden of "well-developed and attained age." It was the usual form of Vedic benediction pronounced on the bride starting for her husband's house. The father said:—"Be the ruler of thy father-in-law, of thy mother-in-law and also of thy sister-in-law and brothers-in-law." The capacity to manage and govern the house was regarded as a necessary requisite of domestic happiness. The bride was grown up and a well-developed maiden. The rituals then prescribed and even observed up to now point to the very high age at which some were married. In one of the verses in the Rig-Ved the grown-up wife is referred to as Unveiling to her lord with conscious pride

Beauties which as he gazes lovingly
Seem fresher, fairer, each successful morn.

The proprietary rights of the wife apart from the husband were recognized widely, so much indeed that the husband could not make a gift even to the gods without the wife's consent. Women often re-married. One funeral hymn says, addressing a widow who had just lost her husband and was full of grief:—"Rise, woman, thou art lying by the side of one whose life is gone. Come to the world of living away from him, thy husband that is dead, and become again the wife of him who is willing to take thee by the hand and marry thee." Such was the condition of women in the Vedic period of Law spread over several centuries.

A MISQUOTED TEXT.

Their descent began at a later period, apparently at a time when, owing to the migration of the community to lower plains it was brought into conflict with inferior aboriginal races. Under the militant necessities consequent on such an environment, males acquired an artificial importance. Every male that the family could put forward was an asset in the fight. In place of the benediction cited above requiring women to rule their relatives, came another where the outgoing bride was asked to beget sons (and not daughters). Every son added to the house was a protection in the conflict. The preference of distant male agnatics over near female relatives, which is to-day the distinguishing feature of the Hindu Law in many parts of India, is also to be traced to the same period. The rule that every 'sapinda' up to the remotest degree should be exhausted before the nearest 'asapinda' can come in the order of succession, is a relic of these times. Polygamy and 'niyoga' entered in the Aryan system of life. Different kinds of marriages were incorporated in the Aryan civilisation, which were in vogue amongst inferior races. Women ceased to take part in sacrificial sessions. They ceased to receive portions of the 'Soma' juice distributed on such occasions. These, in more ancient times, were annual assemblages for the display and development of learning. Later on a wag took hold of a text in a book on Vedic rituals which says that women should not be given a portion of the 'Soma' juice ('daya') distributed at such sacrifices, because they have no capacity for valour, and made it the basis of a total exclusion of women from all rights of inheritance. He punned on the word "daya" (portion). In its proper context it meant a portion of the Soma juice. Out of its context the wag utilised it as if it meant a portion of the inheritance. He thus perpetrated a joke which has to this day deprived women of their rights of inheritance. This text has been the chief impediment in the recognition of women's rights, and in more recent times the Privy Council have based some of their retrograde decisions upon the implications of this misquoted text.

REFORMS OF MANU AND YAJNYA-VALKYA.

Many reformers came to light at the end of this period of darkness, which covered nearly 1,500 years. The best of them all, and yet the worst, was Manu, in whose writings one finds a violent conflict between the noble relics of the Vedic period and the popular doctrines of his time. He and another sage called Katyayana once more resuscitated the power and capacity of women to hold and acquire property. They began cautiously in reviving the old doctrines and laid the foundations of women's proprietary rights round acquisitions which, owing to the peculiar nature of the occasion when they were made or the person from whom they proceeded, could be safely regarded as women's special peculium. Manu allowed women's property only in six kinds of acquisitions: that which was acquired by her before the bridal fire, or at the time of the bridal procession, or under the influence of affection, or from her brother, father or mother. Even the degenerate times in which he struggled for the assertion of women's rights, could not deny women's proprietary rights over such property. Manu apparently worked on the lines of least resistance. This process went on increasing from time to time until the law-giver called Yajnyavalkya came on the scene. He very ingeniously after enumerating all the forms of female property which had come into vogue at his time, quietly stepped in, as if it was merely an explosive to complete the metre, the word "adya" which means "other acquisitions of a like character." He thereby opened the widest door for all kinds of property to come in.

THE MITAKSHARA AND STRIDHAN.

The Mitakshara, in the eleventh century, took advantage of this brief explosive "adya" and interpreted it to the fullest extent, so as to include as women's peculium, all property, howsoever acquired by her, whether by "inheritance, purchase, partition, seizure or finding." Indeed, even modern women would not desire anything more than what the Mitakshara gave them. Every species of property would, under its definition, become "stridhan." That word was interpreted by the Mitakshara in a plain natural sense as every kind of property held absolutely by women and not as having any technical meaning. If the law had stood where the Mitakshara had moulded it, or even if it had been allowed to develop on the progressive lines of interpretation adopted by the later Maratha author of the Vyavashara Mayukha, there would have been no trouble at all. But in course of time rival schools arose, and especially in the earlier stages of their decisions the Privy Council, sitting at Westminster and naturally struggling under a misconception of the historic and other antecedents of the Indian people, have unconsciously played in the hands of the orthodoxy. The Englishman was not accustomed until the eighties to regard women in his own country as independently capable of acquiring or holding property. English women get this right at a very late stage. With this bias in his mind, it is not surprising that the English Judge at Westminster, in interpreting ancient Indian texts written in a language which he did not understand and of the context of which too he was personally ignorant, adopted a position inclining more towards limited female rights than towards absolute ones.

UNNATURAL ADMINISTRATION.

In a celebrated ruling which laid down for all time that inheritance derived by women from a male in their husband's family can never become their absolute property, the Privy Council, being solely dependent upon confusing rival quotations cited on opposite sides, have actually abrogated the Mitakshara rule in favour of more ancient and doubtful texts vaguely prescribing an ascetic life for Hindu widows. The bias thus acquired by judicial decisions has unconsciously survived to the present day. The English judge in England and in India, owing to his natural caution born of his ignorance of the language and the habits of the people, has fought shy of liberal interpretations except when compelled by the clearest evidence. The whole administration has been, so far as Hindu Law is concerned, as grievously unnatural as if Japanese judges sat at Westminster in 1928 giving rulings on the domestic laws of Englishmen from Japanese translations of Bracton or Coke on Lyttleton, unconcerned with the mighty social changes which had taken place in English society since those times, but of which they had no conception owing to their isolation.

NEED FOR LEGISLATIVE REFORMS.

It is not my intention to blame individuals, but to condemn the system under which they are working. The result is that Hindu Law which has a very large resilience and power of adaptability, has remained unresponsive to the requirements of the times in the British period. The adaptability of the Hindu Law is surprising to those who study it from this point of view. Whenever a Hindu judge of learning, insight, sympathy and knowledge has had the chance of interpreting the ancient texts, he has tried his best to bring them into accord with the growing requirements of modern society. Sir Lallubhai Shah's ruling on the validity of anuloma marriages can be cited as one instance. Occasionally a gifted English judge, whose natural vision or imagination has enabled him to see clearly through the darkness of texts and quotations, has lighted on a true rule, but in such cases its effect has been nullified by his ever-cautious colleagues or successors. The result is that to-day there are a large number of anomalies waiting to be set right. To depend upon judicial interpretation for doing this work would take centuries. It is necessary, therefore, that legislation should take a hand in this work of reform. It is most urgently needed to-day in improving the position of the widow in a Hindu joint family. When the husband dies undivided, we are all aware of her miserable lot. She cannot get her husband's share if she is without male issue. The rules under which maintenance is decreed to her are unjust. They all lean in favour of her husband's coparceners. A vague sort of feeling that a Hindu widow must be an ascetic before her age and inclinations make it possible, has restrained British Indian judges from interpreting the law in a plain, natural and modern sense. Her rights of adoption have been curtailed and the beneficence of an important ruling of the Privy Council in that behalf has been limited in some provinces on the principle of 'stare decisis'. There is no reason why the wife of a separated Hindu without issue should not be allowed to take his estate absolutely. It is far more natural and human to do so than that she should enjoy a limited life estate and on her death the whole property should pass to a sapinda in the 14th remove, whose existence was not even known when the husband died nor even till after the widow's life terminated. The necessities of the times when this agnatic preference arose have all disappeared. Under the 'Pax Britannica' Hindu males are no more a fighting asset, and there is no need to favour them with preferential rights of succession unnatural on any rational theory of life. Yet the peculiar rule continues and receives daily interpretation and support.

DAUGHTER'S RIGHT TO INHERIT.

Again, there is no reason why all over India the daughter should not take her father's estate absolutely as she does in Bombay. The artificial distinction, unknown to the Mitakshara of inheritance from males and inheritance from females and again of males in her husband's family or in her father's family, all these distinctions have reference to a period which had extraordinary social and military necessities no longer operative in Hindu society. The time has come when, in thorough conformity with the true spirit of Hindu Law, which is rationalism, equity and humanity, changes should be made. One such principle, for the acceptance of which the Mitakshara struggled the hardest, was nearness or propinquity according to blood relationship and not according to funeral oblations. The author of that book, one of noblest treatises known to Hindu Law, raised a storm by reversing the current of feeling and adopting a plain sensible rule of succession, namely, whoever was nearer by blood was entitled to succeed. Blood particles, he said, are the true test and not ancestors in the heavens placated by funeral balls. In a similar spirit modern changes have to be made, in a spirit which will not depart from the true sentiment of the Hindu people and yet will discard all that is artificial or adventitious excrescence. A wise, natural and humane system of inheritance laws is an inevitable accompaniment of self-government. Women must have their proper place in the society which claims to govern itself. Therefore, to the Hindu people to know the true facts and thereafter to support the women's movement, is the purpose of this lecture. There must be knowledge before there is rectification. The purpose of this lecture will be amply served if it throws more light on some of the anomalies of the present-day system of Hindu Law and suggests the way of correcting the same.

BANISHING THE BROTHEL: SEGREGATION vs. ABOLITION.

(By DR. CLIFFORD MANSHARDT PH. D.)

In considering the question of how best to deal with the evil of prostitution, it is well not only to express opinions, but also to deal in facts. The question Bombay faces today is a question that has already been faced by hundreds of other cities, and a question to which there is an answer. Many agencies have studied the problem, but few have set forth the facts more clearly than the American Social Hygiene Association. Briefly summarised the argument runs as follows.

There is a considerable body of people who hold that prostitution is a necessary evil, and that the best way to cope with the situation is through segregation. But the answer is that segregation does not segregate. It is absolutely impossible to get all the prostitutes of any city within a given area. Officials may say that all the prostitutes of a city are centered within a district, and certainly enough of them to gather in the tolerated area to give a semblance of truth to the statement. As a matter of fact, however, the attention given to the tolerated area serves to distract attention from the outside areas—from the prostitution that is carried on in hotels, apartment houses, or other places in the city where rents are cheap and the inmates are not hampered by the restrictions that prevail in the district. It has been found by the actual investigation that in cities claiming to have model segregated areas, up to 80 per cent. of the prostitutes in the city were scattered throughout the residential sections.

This fact brings light to bear upon the argument that if the segregated district is abolished, no section of the city will be safe for women and children. The argument is generally phrased. "Do you want your wife and children to live among prostitutes?" We do not, but it is not until we have abolished the fiction that prostitutes are not scattered, and recognize that prostitution is an established business throughout the city, that we are ready to make a frontal attack upon the entire problem instead of but a section of it. In no city has it been shown that the suppression of prostitution has subjected decent women to annoyance, insult, or rape. The segregated area breeds crime rather than preventing it. And granting, though we are not prepared to grant this assumption, that the abolition of the segregated district might result in more promiscuity throughout the city, could this promiscuity have the dire social consequences that result from a special district, filled with diseased humanity, and continually recruiting new life to replace old—from somebody's daughters. The existence of a segregated area makes it easy for new girls to begin a life of shame, and increases the demand for, which means an increase in the supply of, prostitution. The presence of a tolerated area, blatant and unashamed, draws a certain type of men to it, and when men come there must be an over-increasing supply of girls to meet the demand.

The advocates of segregation believe that by a strict medical inspection social disease can be lessened, and assert that the greater part of social disease is spread by the matter. The investigations of the Social Hygiene Association point out that medical inspection is but a farce, and that the great majority of prostitutes are infected. The amateur girl may also be infected, but whereas she may infect one, two, or a half dozen men, the professional infects her hundreds. No city has yet been found that has been able to separate commercial prostitution from venereal disease.

When the issue of the abolition of segregated district is raised, there are always those who are ready to say, "Look at France, look at England, look at the United States, or some other country, where regulation is practised. We can learn from them." But the simple fact is that we cannot learn. No country had had any success in its attempt to "regulate" prostitution.

On the one side stand the criminals, the prostitutes, the madams, the pimps, the landlords, the dishonest officials, quack doctors and all others who have a financial stake in the matter. On the other side stand those citizens who have no financial stake, but who have a genuine interest in the welfare of their fellow men.

Is it hard to make a choice ?

THE PROFESSIONALISING OF SOCIAL WORK.

The zeal for case work, the tremendous wealth continuously poured into the coffers of charity, the professionalising of social work, writes a sociologist, has served to kill the soul of remedial philanthropy, to make us forget that the first object of social effort should be to remove causes of distress rather than to be a time-server in relief. The cost of cure runs into the hundreds of millions that might well be spent, in part at least, in prevention. But the axiom of the ounce and the pound apparently has been thrown into the discard. Even some of the great givers, we read, prefer to continue giving to removing the need. Let us look for a moment at Abraham Epstein's picture of social work as it is conducted to-day. Mr. Epstein is Executive Secretary of the American Association for Old Age Commission. He tells us in Current History that :—

"At the beginning of this century, social work was unorganized, and but few individuals entered the work as professionals. To-day the Russel Sage Foundation estimates that at least 25,000 persons are engaged in professional social work, exclusive of visiting nurses, of whom there may be as many more, and the numerous border-line groups, clerical staffs, caretakers, and so forth. Twenty-six schools and colleges of recognised standing are engaged in training persons for this profession. From 1915 to 1923, the number of paid social workers has increased by 65 per cent. Taking the average salary of all professional social workers to-day at $1,500 a year, the annual salary budget alone, underpaid as the profession is, amounts to $45,000,000.

"There are no exact figures regarding the total cost of social work. The available data indicate that probably from $500,000,000 to $650,000,000 is spent annually by private social workers on current expenses exclusive of the capital outlay. In 1925 public and private family agencies disbursed three times as much money for relief as in 1916. According to the Welfare Council of New York City, the 1,200 or more private welfare organizations of the city are spending an annual sum of about $75,000,000. This means a per capita expenditure of $12.60 for every man, woman, and child in the city. In Chicago, in 1923, 232 private social agencies disbursed over $180,000,000. In addition, the private hospitals spent $8,500,000. The income of social welfare agencies in nineteen cities, only one of which had a population of over 1,000,000, amounted in 1924 to $12,780,524."

A half-century ago, writes Mr. Epstein, social work laid its stress upon the alleviation of distress after the manner of the ancient Hebrews and according to the teachings of Christianity. From the beginning of this century to the World War, social work, he says, may be said to have proceeded along two dominant paths:—(1) To administer relief to the suffering and unfortunate; (2) to seek by means of vital social reforms the eradication of the social and economic conditions responsible for distress and poverty. The contributions made to American social progress by the pioneers of social work, we read, are beyond appraisal.

"Their challenge of the existing evils had aroused the conscience of the nation, and a wave of progressivism and remedial legislation followed. They were fearless in their researches and in the unmasking of the industrial wrongs. They did not hesitate either in carrying out or in publishing the Pittsburgh Survey. In consequence of their campaigns for sanitation, pure milk, visiting nursing, and the like, we are now reaping the benefits of reduced infant mortality. Our pure-foot laws, workmen's compensation, protective labour legislation for women and children, are practically all the result of the agitation and leadership of the pioneer social workers."

In the last decade, however, writes Mr. Epstein, social work has taken a definite turn of the road :

"Different times have created different songs. Social workers themselves concede that somehow the movement to-day has neither the zeal, the enthusiasm, nor the missionary spirit of its early pioneers. No longer are the voices of the early Isaiahs heard in the demand of justice. Vital social reforms are left to languish, and social workers as a group take but little interest in them. Except for campaign purposes social work no longer proclaims itself as pure altruism. When it speaks, its voice is no longer that of scorching indictment, of deep-rooted convictions, or of emotional authority. It has lost its spiritual equilibrium, and it has become too practical to be passionate. It speaks with the polished tongue of the financier through expert press agents and high-pressure publicity. Instead of denouncing wrongs, it has become merely amiable. Its only crusades are community-chest drives, which it conducts with the zip-zip of a successful team's cheer leader.....

"The modern social worker no longer appeals to the conscience of the community for the eradication of social evils. He has passed the stages of charity and preventive work. His preoccupation is with 'adjusting people to life.' He has acquired a 'technique,' and his highest aim is to do a good case-work job; his ambition is to become recognized as a 'professional technician.'" His prescriptions are no longer compounds of social panaceas and far-visioned dreams, but of all the new discoveries of psychology, psychiatry, and the 'science' of case work. The questions of a living wage, abolition of the slums, women and child labor, the lack of economic opportunity, the insecurity of life, and so forth, no longer attract him. His new faith proclaims the inequality of human beings, and he believes that 'to get socially helpful results, we have to do different things for different people.'"

What influence have conspired to bring about this change of attitude in social work? To sum up Mr. Epstein's diagnosis, the fair chances for promotion and certain advantages and freedoms not possessed by other professions, and the lower standards required, have attracted a considerable number of persons to positions of leadership and executive power who are entirely devoid of any special passion or interest in human betterment. As social work is striving to become a profession, its goal has been forsaken for a "technique." What has become essential in modern social welfare work is not so much broad understanding or social vision, but executive ability and detailed technical skill. The increase in the community chest or federation has helped to change matters. The head of a federation, concerned with a campaign to raise millions, finds it impossible to familiarize himself with the work and significance of each member organization. He is principally an executive immersed in financial details. The wealthy few who contribute from 42 to 57 per cent. of the total money raised, "are not always desirous of fundamental social reforms. Indeed, many of the largest contributors to private philanthropy are at the same time the bitterest enemies of proposed social or labor legislation." Knowing these conditions, social workers move slowly in their advocacy of social reform. While they continue to take leadership on public-health work, they keep aloof from the economic questions, such as a living wage, industrial insecurity or social and labor legislation. The high rate of turn-over among social workers may be another contributing cause, for "obviously there can be no intense spiritual or integrated social purpose under such conditions." Because of the expansion of the movement, the executive social worker is no longer in direct contact with the people he serves.

Social workers as a rule concede the truth of these statements, says Mr. Epstein. "Nevertheless, they plead not guilty. As professional group, they believe no more should be required of them than from the older professions, such as medicine or teaching. They contend that the doing of a good case job should be sufficient unto itself." It is plain to Mr. Epstein that modern social work has wandered from the path it started on, and he writes:

"Have psychological testing and psychiatric analysis become so infallible as to measure accurately an individual's deficiencies? Is one who questions the perfection of present-day social conditions a proper case for the psychiatrist? It is also not inappropriate to ask with Jane Addams: 'If social workers are now measuring up well as business men, are they doing so also on the ethical side? Or are they shirking their responsibilities to the workers and their communities?'

"In answering the above questions, social workers must not lose sight of the fact that the underlying basis of their present work is founded entirely upon voluntary private philanthropy which, in most of its manifestations, is not only repugnant to self-respecting persons, but is socially destructive of the morale of the recipient, and thoroughly out of step with the modern concept of self-reliance and social provision. If the movement is to grow and prosper, it must not only be clearly defined but justified upon the basis of indispensable ultimate social good. In the words of Professor Davine, spoken twenty years ago, 'unless we can feel that in the last analysis there is some social utility in the world of our institutions, societies, committees, State and municipal departments, they will not forever command our enthusiasm and loyalty, even though as archaic survivals they may still provide professionals an income and volunteers a congenial method of keeping in the public eye.'"

ALL-INDIA WOMEN'S CONFERENCE.

HALF-YEARLY REPORT.

The All-India Women's Conference has entered upon its second year with the definite purpose of working out in practice the ideals it had been shaping in the first year of its birth, and utilising the material it had gathered in formulating a scheme of work that will give the fullest expression to the aim it has placed before itself. The first step in this direction is the popularising of the aims and objects of the conference. This is being achieved mainly by women's educational conferences and meetings in every constituency. The conference has at present the co-operation of 21 Constituencies and 9 Indian States each of which is recognised as a Constituency by the Conference. The Constituencies are created on linguistic basis. Each of these constituencies has its centre of work, its own independent Committee and its own plan and method of execution, but all the constituencies are linked up together by a Standing Committee for the purpose co-ordinating their efforts and taking concerted action wherever necessary. The Standing Committee consists of one representative member from each of these Constituencies and is therefore of a real all-India nature. The constituencies have been very busy since the last All-India Conference organising Constituent Conferences as well as smaller district conferences in order to draw more women within the orbit of the activities of the All-India Conference, to induce them to take greater interest in affairs relating to general public welfare and to incite in them a keener sense of their larger responsibilities towards the nation and the country. Already one observes in them a more definite desire to participate in the shaping of the future education of their children. The movement has now penetrated into several new areas particularly in the Constituencies of Sind, Bihar, Orissa and Punjab, where meetings have been held to discuss educational problems of interest and pass resolutions on some of them. Sind has had as many as four meetings, all very largely attended, at Karachi, Hyderabad, Shikarpur and Sukkur. In place like Chapra and Muzafarpur in Bihar where such activities were quite unknown before, the movement has come as a great inspiration to give a strong impetus to the women's advancement and progress in that province. Many of the ladies who are participating in this work have been in strict purdah all this while, and although this is the first occasion for them to thus meet and discuss subjects of public importance, the frankness and the practical manner in which they have handled the problems, gives good hopes for the future success of the movement. At the Constituent Conference at Cuttack held recently, there were over 300 women present and many of them took an active part in the proceedings. Mrs. Hamid Ali, the Chair-woman of the Standing Committee, has in the course of her extensive tour through Punjab and Kashmir, been organising meetings and spreading the movement far and wide. She has addressed meetings on the work of the Conference at Ludhiana, Jhelum, Ambala, Rawalpindi, Cambelpur, Patiala, Srinagar and several other important places. New centres of work have now been opened at Agra, Allahabad and Jhelum. The work in each Constituency is being reorganised and put on a methodical working basis. In some of the Constituencies, notably Punjab, the work has been divided and classified into different groups, each entrusted to a sub-committee.

Representations are constantly being made to the Provincial Governments and local bodies that control education, to take note of the Conference demands and give effect to them. One of the essential points that the Conference had realised in its very initial stage was the necessity of a common language for India and had laid it down that Hindi should be introduced as a compulsory subject in schools from the secondary course as a step towards its realisation, for it was now recognised that Hindi was to be the lingua franca of India. The State of Cochin has given a splendid lead in this matter by the adoption of a resolution in its Legislative Council asking for the compulsory teaching of Hindi in schools. A good deal of the success of this resolution can be credited to the presence and the vigorous speech of the lady member of the Council, who has been an ardent worker in the activities of the Conference since its birth. The introduction of Social Science and Journalism as subjects for University Examination, is now under the consideration of the Madras University as the direct result of the efforts of one of the Conference workers serving on the Madras Senate. It has been increasingly felt that the presence of women on all boards and committees that control education is absolutely necessary. In view of this a resolution was passed at the Delhi session of the Conference on the subject and since then efforts have been made to secure for women admission in these various bodies. A deputation of the women of Lahore headed by Mrs. Hamid Ali, the Chair-woman of the Standing Committee, waited on the Minister for Self-Government on behalf of the All-India Women's Conference to request that women should be nominated wherever possible on Municipalities and Local Boards. The Minister very readily agreed to the request and a lady was subsequently nominated to the Amritsar Municipality. Many of the Conference workers are now serving in Municipalities, Local Boards, Educational Councils, University Senates etc., and the Standing Committee Member for Andhra is the President of the District Educational Council at Cocanada. It is a matter for much pride that Mrs. Kale the Standing Committee Member for C. P. South has been nominated to the Legislative Council of C. P. and another prominent worker in the South, Mrs. Pavithran to the Cochin Legislative Council. Mrs. Rameshwari Nehru, the Member for Delhi, is serving on the Age of Consent Committee which has been appointed by Government in connexion with Sir Hari Singh Gour's Age of Consent Bill. This is in direct response to an appeal that the Conference had made to the Viceroy asking for the representation of the Women's Conference on the Committee. A resolution was also passed and forwarded to the Viceroy during the Delhi Session of the Conference, asking for the nomination of at least two ladies to the Legislative Assembly. The Viceroy has replied to say the matter is receiving His Excellency's earnest attention. A list of names have been submitted to the Viceroy for selection, and it is hoped that this step will be expedited in view of the several important Bills that are coming up in the Assembly, Bills vitally affecting the interests of women. At the Delhi Conference 5

Sub-Committees were appointed to deal with the following questions. Drafting of a special curriculum, revision and creation of new text-books, investigation of conditions regarding the training of teachers abolition of child-marriage and the starting of an All-India Women's Education Fund. Although the sub-committees have started work in earnest, they have not succeeded in making much headway from want of facilities of meeting often and discussing and collecting material. They have had to depend only on correspondence and this has involved much delay. Mrs. Hamid Ali has undertaken the reviewing and revising of Urdu text-books in order to offer suggestions for their improvement particularly story books for little children and books for girls dealing with domestic science, cookery, needle-work etc.

The quick and enthusiastic response to the appeal for the All-India Women's Education Fund certainly reflects much credit on the success of the Conference in not only having created a favourable impression but also having won the confidence of the people. The Indian Royalties have shown much generosity. But many more lacs are needed before any appreciable attempt can be made in the way of starting experimental or model institutions. The Conference has as usual shown keen enthusiasm in dealing with the problem of child-marriage. Public meetings have been organised by the Conference in every nook and corner of the country condemning the custom of child-marriage and supporting Har Bilas Sarda's Child Marriage Bill and Hari Singh Gour's Age of consent Bill, but demanding that the legal age in the first Bill be raised to 16 and 21 for girls and boys respectively, and in the second the age of consent to 16. It was in pursuance of the Conference resolution on this subject that the All-India Child-Marriage Abolition League was started by H. H. The Rani of Mandi, and a resolution in support of this demand was carried through the Madras Legislative Council by Dr. Muthulaxmiammal. A similar resolution is expected to be moved in the C. P. Legislative Council by the lady member of the Council. This cause has lost one of its staunchest advocates and the Conference a very selfless worker by the sad demise of Srimati Parvathiammal Chandrasheker Iyer of Mysore, who passed away last February at Delhi, where she had gone to attend the Conference session and with the express hope of adding her personal weight to the deputation to the Viceroy in connection with the problem of child-marriage.

Two incidents, both relating to Madras, have however, been noted with much concern and regret by the Conference. One is the failure of the Vice Chancellor of the Madras University to put any lady in spite of a strong appeal from the Conference, on the Commission recently appointed by the University to tour in the mofussils and report on the working of the colleges affiliated to the Madras University. It was a grave omission particularly in view of the fact there are so many women's colleges all through the presidency affiliated to the University and which the commission will deal with. But the other matter is of a more deplorable nature. The Minister for Education, Government of Madras appointed a committee in pursuance of a resolution passed by the Legislative Council, to go into the problem of physical education of students. And although the whole question of physical education of students was to be investigated, the Minister very unjudiciously limited the scope of the committee to boys only and in spite of repeated appeals and representations from the Women's Conference and other women's associations, he did not see his way towards retracting from the position he had taken up. It is pretty obvious that it is the girls who suffer more from want of proper facilities for exercise because whereas boys have recourse to public grounds and open-air sports, the Indian girls are unfortunately deprived of this advantage partly because of the traditional disapproval of such sports for girls (a prejudice which will take time to break down,) and partly due to a false sense of modesty in them that years of suppression has created. Under the circumstances it is the absolute duty of the Government to see another committee is appointed to go into this question immediately if it wants to prevent further undermining of the Nation. The Conference notes with special pleasure the particular emphasis laid by the Cinema Enquiry Committee on the production and exhibition of educational films. The Conference had passed a resolution to this effect and forwarded it to the Committee while it was sitting. The Conference also congratulates the Committee for laying down the principle that sex will not be a disqualification for members serving on the Committees and the Boards to be set up under its recommendations. The Conference is specially indebted to Mr. M. E. Cousins, the initiator of this movement and one of its Vice-Presidents, for her creditable services to the cause rendered in the course of her tour in Europe, by addressing meetings on its work and also getting prominent personalities interested in its activities. The circular calling for the next Conference that meets at Patna early in January 1929, has already gone forth and the response so far is very encouraging indeed. Some more new Constituencies have offered to co-operate this year, the notable ones being East Bengal, West Bengal, North Bengal, C. P. (North), and Berar. An attempt is afoot to secure some of the States of Rajputana and Kathiawad to participate in the movement and send its delegates to Patna. The Education Minister of Kashmir has already accepted some of the recommendations of the Conference and promised to consider the desirability of sending a delegate to Patna. Others are expected to follow soon.

THE HINDU CIVIL MARRIAGE ASSOCIATION.

To give a better status to Hindu women with equal rights of inheritance as daughter, wife or widow, as well as to prevent child-marriages and to widen the sphere of selection for adult choice marriages without any need of changing their religion, it has now been made possible by the amending Act of 1923 for Hindu couples to marry under the Special Marriage Act of 1872 and they may belong to the same caste or sub-caste.

Ordinarily Civil Marriage in other countries is an alternative form of legal marriage when the parties do not wish to profess any particular religion, but the form of marriage does not affect any change in their personal law of inheritance. The Indian Special Marriage Act in India however, does not make this change from Hindu Law to the Indian Succession Act as well as the Indian Divorce Act. Thus it gives better rights of property and freedom than the limited rights granted by Hindu Law to women.

To promote the above objects the Hindu Civil Marriage Association has been started providing for the following classes of members:—

Rule 4.—Life members:—Persons contributing Rs. 100 or more.

Ordinary members:—Persons who pay not less than Rs. 4 a year.

Affiliated members:—Bodies paying under clause 7.

The following are the important provision relating to membership:—

Rules 5, 6 and 7—

- (1) (a) Any Hindu above the age of 21 interested in the objects of the Association shall be eligible for membership as a life or ordinary member in accordance with the rules of the Association as amended from time to time.
- (b) A Hindu, an Arya Samajist, a Brahmo, a Jain, a Sikh or a Buddhist shall all be construed to be Hindus for the purposes of the Society as they all can take advantage of the Special Marriage Act of 1872 as amended from time to time without detriment to their religious beliefs and as the culture of all these is almost all alike.
- (c) No member of the Association shall marry, while a member in any legal form other than by registration in accordance with the Special Marriage Act of 1872 as amended from time to time.
- (d) A member shall also undertake during membership not to perform the marriage of any of his or her children under the age of 21 except under the said Act.
- (e) Registration may be followed by any religious ceremony if the parties so choose. But the status of the couple shall be governed by the aforesaid Act.
- (2) (a) Any Association or body having similar objects to this Association and similar qualification for membership as contained in (1) a, b, c, d and e, shall be entitled to be affiliated to this Association on the following conditions.
 - (b) Each affiliated body shall pay an annual fee of one-tenth of its total subscription.
 - (c) Affiliated bodies shall send six-monthly reports of their activities to the Association.
 - (d) Each affiliated association or body shall be entitled to appoint 2 representatives to be members of the Managing Committee of this association and such representatives shall be entitled to attend all meetings of the Managing Committee and vote at the same and to all notices rights and powers of any ordinary member of the Managing Committee.

- (e) Such representatives shall be empowered by the Association or body appointing them to represent it in all matters and such association or body shall be bound by the actions of its representatives.
- (3) Every new member must be proposed and seconded by members of the Association and shall be admitted after election by the Managing Committee.

The form of application for membership is attached herewith.

Local lodges are intended to be formed under Rule (6) and one of them has been formed in Bombay under the name and style of "The Hindu Civil Marriage Association—Girgaum Lodge." Membership fees of this lodge are as under:—

(Lodge Rule 4.)

- (a) The payment of more than Rs. 209 at a time shall entitle a person to be elected a member for life. He shall be entitled to all the privileges of a member during his life subject to the rules and regulations for the time being.
- (b) Ordinary members who shall pay an Annual subscription of Rs. 8 payable in advance and wives of members above the age of 21 shall pay half subscription only.
- (c) Members' children and wife under the age of 21 shall be considered as Association without payment of any subscription or without any obligation on their part. They shall be entitled to attend all Sunday and picnic parties on payment of the Special per capita charge if any for each occasion.

The conditions for being a member of a Lodge are the same as in Rule 5 above, together with any further conditions that any Lodge may choose to add to maintain its particular standard of culture in the Lodge and to ensure that admission to it will be stricter through the ballot while the membership of the Central Association will not be rigid. The old days in which interdining between different castes or communities was prohibited have passed away. Though this Association does not insist on discounting marriages between couples of the same caste, it will be more possible now for persons of different Hindu castes stated above to come into closer contact with each other. With that end in view, the local Lodges will organise Sunday parties of their members and families while the Central Association will carry on propaganda and hold annual conferences in any part of India from year to year.

As a practical Social Reformer, this circular has been addressed to you and it is hoped that you will make up your mind to join the Central Association and if you are living in Bombay, you will also make inquiries about and join the Local Girgaum Lodge.

Please write to the Hon. Secretaries, C/o R. B. Lotwala Esqr., Arya Bhuwan, Sandhurst Road, Bombay 4.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs.	a.	p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0	5	0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0	5	0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0	5	0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0	5	0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0	8	0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0	8	0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0	10	0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0	12	0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1	4	0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1	14	0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2	14	0
12. Birth Control by Johanna Ferch ...	2	14	0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3	0	0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4	1	0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4	14	0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4	14	0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6	0	0

Postage extra in each case.

THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

WORLD'S FAMOUS BOOKS

	Rs.	a.	p.
Daughters of India. By Miss Margaret Wilson ...	4	8	0
Unhappy India. By Lala Lajpat Rai ...	6	0	0
Mother India. By Miss Katherine Mayo ...	6	9	0
Father India. By C. S. Ranga Iyer ...	4	8	0
Young India. By Lala Lajpat Rai ...	3	0	0
Mahatma Gandhi's Autobiography ...	6	0	0

Postage and V. P. P. charges extra.

Order to dry.

THE ENGLISH BOOK DEPOT.
Waziralli Buildings, Ferozepore.

Telegrams: "RAVI UDAYA"
Ghatkopar or BOMBAY. Telephones: BOMBAY 24999.
GHATKOPAR 87027.

M. A. JOSHI & Co.,
Kalbadevi Road, Bombay No. 2.

Agents and Proprietors:

The Ravi Udaya and Vijaya Fine Art Litho Works.

Undertake the preparation of High Class reproductions of Paintings, Pictures with up to-date Rotary Upset Machine, Wholesale and retail dealers of Pictures (Indian and English), Frames, Mouldings, Type and Litho Inks and new Printing Materials, Colours and Swedeshi Playing Cards. Specialists in calendars pictures, Mill Cloth Tickets, Cigarettes, Beedi and Match Labels.

Awarded several medals and prizes for the best workmanship and design. All orders executed promptly and neatly under the personal supervision of the Proprietor who is a specialist.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

A Human Document.—By Mr. V. S. Sohoni. The life of a Dhedi in Bombay. Reprinted from the Reformer. Price annas 4.

Apply to:

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS..

NOW READY:

1. The Re-Birth of Hindu Music.—By Rudhyar of Carlos Salzedo, America A French—American, Composer—Philosopher—Poet, considered as a friend as well as a genius. 'In his knowledge and sincerity, his strength and his industry, he is the musical peer of many celebrities who have gained real support and attention in our country.'—Los Angeles Record. Artistic get up. Price Rs. 5.
2. Gita and the Spiritual Life.—By D. S. Sarma, M.A., Prof. Presidency College, Madras, and author of Introduction to Bhagavad Gita. Boards: Price Rs. 1-8; Wrappers Rs. 1-2.
3. Lord Buckmaster's Speech on Birth Control.—A pamphlet issued on behalf of the Madras Malthusian League. Price As 2.

REPRINTS.

1. Bhagavad Gita.—Text and translation—By Dr. Annie Besant. (5th Adyar Pocket Edition). Price As. 4.
2. At the Feet of the Master.—By J. Krishnamurti (7th Indian Edition Standard Size—B g type). Price As. 8.
3. Seven Rays.—By Prof. E. Wood (3rd Edition) Price Cloth Rs. 3; Wrappers, Rs. 2-4.
4. Concentration.—By Prof. E. Wood (8th Edition) Price Cloth Re. 1-8; Boards 1-4; Wrappers Re. 1.

Shortly Ready:—Our New Publications.

1. The Quest.—By Sadhu T. L. Vaswani—No. 3 of the Glimpses series—Inspiring Poems.
2. The Diary of a Disciple.—By Sadhu T. L. Vaswani—No. 4 of the Glimpses series—Inspiring Poems.

REPRINTS:

1. Old Diary Leaves.—By Colonel H. S. Olcott, The President Founder of the Theosophical Society. Volume II (Long Out of Print).

Deals with the period from 1878 to 1883 embracing the novel and exciting incidents of the establishment for our movement in India and Ceylon from which such momentous results have followed.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
ADYAR, MADRAS, S.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland Rs 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
The Indian Social Reformer,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN
MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE;
ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Saramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh).
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Maigaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahala).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Aklaj (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ... Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :---BARODA.

Branches :--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwarka.

	Rs.
JAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS :

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. Nawroji B. Saklatwala, C.I.E., (Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay).
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8.3-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

Fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free.

To every purchaser of our "Luxorette" lever Radium Silvered Pocket Watch, guaranteed for five years, costing Rupees five, we give our fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free. Write now. The radium pocket watch has strong mechanism and well built and can be seen well in nights without the help of lights. Please order soon.

Price Rs. 5 only.

Address :--SWAN HOUSE,
P. B. No. 508. P. T. MADRAS.

WANTED

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Master's Classes. Full particulars and Railway Fare Certificate on 2 annas stamp. Apply to:--Central Telegraph College, Delhi.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).

Rs. a. p.

Inland ... 5 0 0

" " Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office : Esplanade Road, Fort, BOMBAY.

SIR D. J. TATA, Kt., CHAIRMAN.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	Rs. 6,00,00,000
SUBSCRIBED " " " "	3,56,05,275
PAID UP " " " "	71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS " " " "	1,15,36,676

FIRE INSURANCE.—A Tariff rates for all classes. Chart schedules prepared. Advice given. Facilities for dealing with total insurance of clients.

CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS, i.e. Loss of Profits etc. as a result of fire.

MARINE INSURANCE.—The aim is to provide insurance for Merchants on conditions similar to those obtainable in London, the world's largest Marine Insurance Market.

MOTOR CAR ASSURANCE.—Complete cover in every way and prompt settlements of Claims.

BAGGAGE INSURANCE at reasonable rates whilst travel ling by land or sea.

ALL RISKS INSURANCE covering jewellery and other valuables in any situation.

OTHER CLASSES OF INSURANCE also transacted.

Apply to THE GENERAL MANAGER.

London Agents :—Sedgwick Collins (Agencies) Ltd.

Manager for U. S. A. :—Summer Ballard.

Agencies also at Poona, Calcutta, Madras, Karachi, Ahmedabad, Rangoon, Penang, Singapore, Colombo, East Africa, etc. etc.

R. J. DUFF, GENERAL MANAGER.

A. K. JOSHI & Co.Kalbadevi Road, B O M B A Y.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calciam Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks & Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,

The Hindustan Review.

PATNA, E. I. R.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-
Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

VERY EFFICACIOUS

Mr. Chintoharan Blattscharji of Noakhali writes:—"I have been using your Mani Tails for 3 or 4 months. It is very efficacious. Send me one phial more and oblige."

MANI OIL

nourishes the body and cools the head. It is suitable for toilet purposes also.

Price.—Rupee one for a phial of 5 tolas of the oil.

For a detailed list write to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

BOMBAY OFFICE }
Kalbadevi Road. } Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Barma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26.

Bombay.

PAPER!PAPER!!*CHEAPEST HOUSE

FOR

ALL KINDS OF PAPER.AMERICAN BOND PAPER A SPECIALITY

Ledger Paper, Writing Paper, Printing Paper, Rough Paper, Croft Paper, Brown Paper and all kinds of Paper available at a Very Modest Price. Glazed and unglazed Creamlaid, etc., etc.

ANY COLOUR READY FOR DELIVERY.

Ruby Manila Envelopes—All Current Sizes Available.

Hoogly Printing Inks—All Colours.

Superior Quality! · Satisfaction Guaranteed!!SEND TRIAL ORDER AND SATISFY YOURSELVES.

Apply for Catalogue and quotation to:

G. A. ACHARYA & Co.,

MERCHANTS & AGENTS,

IMPORT & EXPORT,

26, Parsee Bazar Street,

FORT, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1928

No. 2

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

A Great Nation-BUILDER. Sarda Marriage Bill. The Late Syed Ameer Ali. Lectures on India. Age of Consent. The All Parties Conference. Attitudes Towards Other Faiths.	The Madras Seva Sadan. Plight of Deserted Wives. The Brahma Samaj Centenary. Ram Mohun Roy. A Case for Khaddar. News of the Week.
---	--

NOTES.

A Great Nation-BUILDER:—Sri Krishna whose Jayanti or birth anniversary fell on Thursday is the best beloved of all the avatars of the Hindu pantheon. Sri Rama is more revered but there is not in his case the same warmth of affection as in that of Sri Krishna. The reason is that while the former stands for the highest Hindu ideal of kingship, the latter's was the genius which presided over the transition of the ancient Aryanism from its tribal into the Hinduism with a national outlook. The religion of the Gita, unlike the Vedic dispensation, was valid not only for the twice-born but for women and sudras also. Nor were the untouchables left out. Though not specifically included, their claim to equal consideration with the highest is emphatically inculcated in a memorable verse. Sri Krishna was the first Indian to uphold the rights of women. Every one who is acquainted with the history of the movement for the emancipation of women, knows that the men who were prominently associated with it had at some time or other been exposed to scandal. It has been so in the past, it is so even today. The stories of Sri Krishna's so-called "loves" are to be referred to this tendency of the mass mind. Sri Krishna's greatest claim to pre-eminence among Indian nation-builders is that he brought about the fusion of the Dravidian and Aryan cultures which till then had stood against each other. Himself a dark man, he compelled by his transcendent genius for synthesis the admiration and reverence of the Aryans. More than all, he discovered and has bequeathed for all time the wonderful technique of his method of uniting conflicting elements of race and religion. The essence of his method was not to discard cherished traditions but to restate them with reference to fundamental principles in relation to the needs of the age. To Sri Krishna is due great credit for transforming India from a land of drunkards to one of abstainers. The excellence of his message is due to the fact that it is at once a sacred and secular, a national and a personal message. It will require a volume to establish these claims. Here we can only indicate them in a sketchy fashion.

Sarda Marriage Bill:—The prospects of this Bill for discouraging child marriages being passed by the Legislative Assembly this session are encouraging. The Simla correspondent of the Leader wrote on Monday:—The only non-official Bill, which is likely to raise a very lively discussion, is Mr. Har Bilas Sarda's Child Marriage Bill, now before the Legislative Assembly. The Bill is the topic of discussion not only here in Simla but in all parts of India. I approached Mr. Sarda, the author of the Bill, to find out his reading of the situation with regard to the prospects of the passage of the Bill. He replied: 'The Child Marriage Bill must in the natural course come up for consideration before the Legislative Assembly this month. The Assembly, in March last, ordered the circulation of the amended Bill to elicit opinion. As a result of its circulation, the Bill has been supported by the country in an unmistakable manner. The Bill affects women more than men, and women throughout the country have not only given the Bill their unstinted support but have in many places demanded that the Bill be made more effective and that the minimum marriageable age of girls be raised to 16. Public meetings of women held in the chief cities of India, women's district and provincial conferences and women's associations in all parts of the country have unanimously given their emphatic support to the measure. A remarkable feature of the movement is that not a single public meeting of women has been reported anywhere to have opposed the Bill. Thousands of women have signed and submitted demands that the Bill is a necessary measure and should be passed without delay. In Bombay and Madras, meeting after meeting of women has been held to support the Bill. So also, in Madras, Orissa, Sindh, Delhi, Rajputana, Hyderabad (Deccan) and other places, ladies of the highest rank have come forward to support the measure. At Ootacamund, the Maharani of Travancore presided at a ladies' meeting which supported the Bill. The Rani of Mandi is another such instance. Social conferences, caste Mahasabhas and various all-India bodies that have held meetings since last March have supported the measure in an emphatic manner. The All-India Jat Mahasabha, the All-India Sud Conference, the All-India Arorabans Mahasabha, the All-India Khandelwal Mahasabha, the All-India Jadav Mahasabha, the All-India Shinchare Mahasabha, the All-India Dulheri Vaishya Mahasabha, the All-India Kurua Kshatriya Conference, the All-India Iyagi Brahmin Mahasabha, the executive committee of the Shromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, the Bengal Provincial Hindu Sabha, the Bombay Presidency Social Service Conference, and public meetings at Lahore, Bombay, Madras, Ajmer, Delhi and other places have accorded their support to the measure. The opposition is confined to individuals and very few meetings of reactionary or ignorant small sections. Not a single public meeting in any important city is reported to have successfully opposed the Bill."

The Late Syed Ameer Ali:—Details of the life of the Right Hon. Syed Ameer Ali who died recently are not generally known. One reason is that he left India twenty-five years ago, and did not re-visit her since then. Sheik Nizamudin has contributed to the Zanzibar Voice a brief sketch of Syed Ameer Ali's life from which we take the following: "After fourteen years of arduous service, he retired in 1904. At that time it was thought he would settle in India but he chose to settle in England where he had many attractions for him. It appealed to him as a land of liberty and the world's centre of learning and progress. It is puerile to suppose that he settled there simply because it was the land of his 'better half.' Nevertheless, his love for India never waned. Mr. Amir Ali was the first Indian to enter the precincts of His Majesty's the Kings Council. That was the first occasion in the history of English polity when an Indian was invited by the King of England to take seat at the board and sworn 'to advise the King according to the best of his cunning and discretion; to advise for the King's honour and the good of the public without partiality; through affection, love, need, doubt, or dread, to keep the King's counsel secret; to avoid corruption; to help and strengthen the execution of what shall be resolved; and generally to observe, keep and do all that a true counsellor should do to his Sovereign Lord.' He was also a stalwart social reformer. He truly believed that regeneration of Moslems rests with women and as such their education should in no case be neglected. He thought that the Purdah system obtaining among the Indian Moslems was a mere drag and deserved immediate abolition. He figured as an apostle of English education and as a social reformer of an advanced type he even believed in 'mixed marriage' that he contracted. He strongly advocated the English language for the reason that it is the language of culture and progress in the modern world."

Lectures on India:—An interesting article appears in the current number of the Modern Review on the excellent work that Professor Ernest Wood and Mrs. Wood are doing to enlighten American public opinion about India and her people by means of a series of lectures. That they have succeeded in their mission is shown by the writer who says that "these remarkable series of lectures have brought to the thousands who heard them a broader and more sympathetic conception of India and her people." Mrs. Wood's knowledge of the women of India is far above the common. Addressing a meeting of American women, she said: "I would like to bring a message from the women of India. They have been so misjudged, so much that is untrue has been said about them. It has been said they are behind the veil, that their interests are confined to the home alone. But in India as elsewhere women are coming more and more into the active sphere of the outside world. Recently there was held an all Indian Women's Conference at Poona at which a great number of women from all over the country gathered and passed many very important resolutions regarding women's education and child marriage. Three times representative bodies of Indian women and men in 1924, 1925, and 1927 have demanded the raising of the age of marriage, and each time the Government of India has turned down the application. The voice of Indian women is heard abroad in clubs and associations, she is seen in numbers at many gatherings and she wields a strong hand in moulding the character of the sons and daughters of Mother India in the home. It is due to a large extent to her influence in the stories she relates to her children that the true ethical and religious thought of India is kept alive. For the East was ever a lover of stories and some of these stories Europe has inherited in all the old favourites. So the women of India are standing with their men, as in the days of old when it was thought that not even a god or a great angel could have much power without his 'better half' or his 'Shakti.'" Professor Ernest Wood and Mrs. Wood have spent many years in India and have an intimate knowledge of this country that few Englishmen and women can claim. We are glad that they intend to publish a book on India, covering much of the information brought out at the lectures. It will be an effective antidote to Miss Mayo's book.

Age of Consent:—Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas of the Vigilance Association, Bombay, in the course of his reply to the questionnaire issued by the Age of Consent Committee says:—"There are no circumstances whatsoever which justify retaining the law of the Age of Consent as it is, and there is every reason from all points of view to make an advancement on the present law, for India is bound to suffer physically, intellectually, and morally if the law is not amended. The amendment of 1925 raising the Age of Consent from 12 to 14 was only playing with reforms and Government as shown by the speech of the British Home Member were not anxious to deal seriously with the problem. It was not expected therefore that the 1925 amendment raising the Age to 14 would succeed in preventing cases of rape outside the marital case, or the improper seduction of girls for immoral purposes. To make the law effective, the Age of Consent should be raised for non-marital cases. That by itself would be enough; for so long as the system of brothels is allowed to go unchecked by the foreign British Government in India, their existence in the country is a direct incentive to traffic in women and girls, and leads to seduction, rape, kidnapping, and other similar offences. The Indian public opinion has expressed itself strongly—in Bombay for example—but the Government have so far not responded to public opinion. It would not be enough merely to raise the Age of Consent for non-marital cases to 18; not only should the Age for married girls be raised to 16 or 17 but child-marriages under that age should be forbidden."

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1928.

THE ALL PARTIES CONFERENCE.

The All Parties Conference which met at Lucknow to consider the Nehru Committee's report has finished its labours and dispersed. Dewan Bahadur M. Ramchandra Rao had suggested that the Conference should be made a permanent institution with a Secretariat to maintain continuity and to carry on work between the Conference sessions. The idea was an excellent one, but the time is not ripe for it yet. The creation of the Conference as a permanent institution would have immediately thrown the National Congress into the background and Dr. Ansari, the President of the Congress for the current year, and Pandit Motilal Nehru, the President-elect for the next session and other Congressmen who have taken a large share in bringing about the All Parties Conference, could not have agreed to it. The alternative is to throw the Congress doors wide open to all Parties, and that will have to be done eventually. We ourselves think that that would be the better course, as there is much in a name, notwithstanding Shakespeare's half sceptical observation, and the name of the Congress has become during the last forty years a household word in India, and is also recognised abroad as that of the most important national organisation of the Indian people. For the present, the leaders of the All Parties Conference have had to content themselves with deciding to call a Convention after the next Congress session to adopt the Constitution which is to be drafted meanwhile on the lines of the Nehru Committee's Report. The holding of the All Parties Conference and the proposed Convention are both signs of the great and beneficent change which has come over the political situation. The non-co-operationists, in which term we include non-changers and Swarajists, have been disillusioned as to the efficacy of their method. The Liberals, on their part, have also become disillusioned, in a different way. The result is to create a strong feeling on both sides towards a rapprochement. If we may use a metaphor, non-co-operation is a blind giant strong of limb but without vision. Indian Liberalism has keen sight but is lame in both legs. The former by itself, therefore, could only destroy, while the latter by itself had to look on and do nothing. The All Parties Conference has effected an alliance useful to both sides. The Liberal cripple on the shoulders of the non-co-operation giant gives Indian politics the conditions needed to make it a constructive force. The acceptance by the All Parties Conference of Dominion status as the goal, and its defence against the advocates of Independence on the ground that it represents the largest body of opinion in the country, is an acceptance of the Liberal creed by an influential body of Congressmen. If the next Congress endorses the decision of the All Parties Conference, the way will be paved for the formal re-union of the two wings of Indian politics. If the Congress does not endorse it, the Convention which is to follow will assuredly do so, and the Convention, as representing all parties, will necessarily carry more weight than the Congress which will come to represent only the Independence dissentients.

As a result of the Conference the Independence versus Dominion status question has assumed the front place, and all others including the communal question have been relegated to a minor position. We may, therefore, examine the merits of this controversy. The real issue in it is whether India should work out her political and national destiny within the British Commonwealth or without it. Dominion status is only a handy phrase for Indian evolution within the Commonwealth. The actual status of India in it will have to be worked out with reference to her special conditions. These conditions differ in essential particulars from those of the territories now enjoying Dominion status. To begin with, Australia, Canada, South Africa, and Ireland—to mention only the best-known Dominions—have all populations much smaller than that of Great Britain, while the population of India is six times that of Great Britain. All these Dominions have a European and Christian background to their history like Great Britain, while Indian history has for background and is the background of that of Asia, Eastern and Western. Even with these fundamental similarities, the Dominions have not been able to develop the same sort of sentiment towards Great Britain. Australia is the only Dominion which is wholly British in sentiment, but even Australia, on the question of industrial development, will not subordinate her interests to that of the mother country. The French element in Canada and the Dutch in South Africa have pushed Dominion status further than Australia, while the Irish Free State asserts at every step its ethnic and cultural distinctiveness from its predominantly Anglo-Saxon neighbour. Dominion status will have to take a larger connotation if and when it is applied to India. The case of Egypt affords perhaps the nearest parallel. In that case the question of conferring Dominion status was seriously considered by British statesmen, but it was decided that the grant of independence would be the better course from the point of view both of Egypt and Great Britain. There is, it is true, some difficulties in giving full and final effect to this decision but it is only a question of time and patience and Egypt will soon have an independent, international status. There is one important difference between Egypt and India, however, and it should not be overlooked. That is that modern Egypt is culturally more related to France than Britain, while modern India is culturally British, its political outlook is British, and on all important, international questions, it is prone to think on the lines of British opinion. This tendency is somewhat obscured at present owing to the political struggle with British Imperialism, but it is a tendency the reality of which cannot be denied. Sir Sivaswami Aiyar knows what he is writing about when he tells British statesmen in his great book "Indian Constitutional Problems" to lay aside their hesitation, on account of differences of race and colour, to grant India Dominion status.

He writes: "The fact that the people of India are not of the same race or colour would make no difference. The cultural hold that England has and will maintain over India and the tie of gratitude will prove a far better cement of empire than the control which is maintained by force of arms. Political India is not so blind as not to be able to appreciate the solid advantages of a lasting partnership in the British Commonwealth of Nations. The elevation of the status of India from that of a dependency to that of an equal partner like the self-governing dominions will be the proudest achievement of England in the pages of history."

"ATTITUDES TOWARD OTHER FAITHS"

(DR. W. S. DEMING).

One of the most pressing problems of our time is that of religious intolerance. While many of us agree that religious tolerance is greatly to be desired, we are not always clear in our own minds as to just what is involved. It is a complex and baffling question and does not yield easily to a satisfactory solution. There is no short cut to a wholesome religious tolerance. Neither a shallow syncretism nor a careless indifference meet the needs of the case. How can we be loyal to our religious experience, at the same time appreciating the validity of the religious experience of others and maintaining a sympathetic attitude toward those of other faiths,—that is our problem. It was one of the questions which aroused greatest interest at the recent Jerusalem Conference. In his most recent book entitled "Attitudes toward other Faiths", Prof. Daniel J. Fleming has discussed this problem in its various phases and has made a wholesome contribution to the subject.

Prof. Fleming neither preaches nor dogmatizes; he states situations and invites suggestions. While he undoubtedly has opinions of his own, he develops the case-method in such a way that his own views are more or less in the background and the reader is stimulated to form his own conclusions. The author takes seven fields of religious contacts:—worship, sacred scriptures, courtesies, material contributions, adaptations, cooperation in counsel and cooperation in service—and considering the issues involved he presents practical alternatives. With a wealth of illustrations drawn from countries all over the world, and a background of ten years of missionary service in India in addition to his more recent work as Professor of Missions at Union Seminary, New York City, Prof. Fleming is ideally fitted to write on this subject and his book is a gold mine of suggestiveness to those who are feeling their way along this difficult path. The verse on the opening page is an apt summary of his thesis, "Treat one another with the same spirit as you experience in Christ Jesus". Phil. 2; 5.

The day has passed when a religious person can view his own religion as exclusively true and all other faiths as entirely false. Is not Mr. Andrews right when, as a Christian, he says that God's spirit has been guiding men in the East as well as in the West? That he (and indeed many of us) has met people who in their simplicity and self-denial, in humility and thirst for God, are truly devout and to whom Christ's Beatitudes are a daily experience? To say this, however, does not mean that all religions in the world are equally effective or true; that they can all be reduced to a dead level. Dr. Fleming does not point to Theosophy as the way out. What he does do is to state some fundamental positions at the end of the book which he feels ought to meet with a fairly wide acceptance. For example, human nature is essentially the same the world over. God has been working universally in all races as best he may. There are elements of truth and godness to be found in many religious systems which must necessarily come from the one God of all truth. Yet these elements are sometimes intermingled with much that is of error or even corruption. A just attitude toward other faiths can only come by a sympathetic and openminded study of them. Nor should such study necessarily lessen one's loyalty to his own spiritual experience. When Sadhu Sundar Singh was asked by the Benares pandits what great truth he had found in Christianity, his answer was, "I found Jesus Christ." To have kindly feelings toward those of other faiths and to respect their religious loyalties, even though one may be convinced of the greater truth of his own spiritual experience and share that experience with others as opportunity affords,—such an attitude is greatly needed in India today. Moreover, all earnest seekers after spiritual truth can unite in recognizing that there is a common enemy which is seeking to undermine all religious faith, namely, the spirit of selfish materialism.

THE MADRAS SEVA SADAN.

In presenting the public of this Presidency the plan of work that is sketched for the Madras Seva Sadan—an Institution for the all-sided education of poor and middle class adult women primarily aiming at rendering them self-reliant—a few words about the circumstances that brought the Poona Seva Sadan Society into the field here to undertake the organization of its Branch in Madras will not be out of place.

ORIGIN.

2. Over five years ago, Mrs. M. E. Cousins who visited Poona and saw the working of this Society Branch at its head-quarters at Poona called the Poona Seva Sadan, thought of starting some work for the benefit of the women in Madras in doing which, as stated by her in her first prospectus, she decided to follow closely the lines of the Poona Seva Sadan. She had also submitted to Mr. Devadhar her scheme for his suggestions. After securing the general approval of her friends, she launched the "Women's Home of Service" under the auspices of the Women's Indian Association. She ran this institution with the help of a local committee for five years, during which period Mr. Devadhar and Mrs. Janakibai Bhat visited the place twice or thrice. When, however, Mrs. Cousins and her husband began seriously to make plans for their trip to Europe, she, in consultation with her helpers, desired very much to hand over the complete charge of the "Home" to some well established body working in the field of training women for independent career as social workers so that the work may be carried on and developed on right lines. With this idea in her mind she approached Mr. Devadhar in December last, when he happened to be in Madras working as a member of the Committee on Co-operation appointed by Madras Government. Mrs. Janakibai Bhat, his great colleague in the work of the Poona Seva Sadan Society, had also come here at that time to organise three Seva Sadan stalls in the Industrial Exhibition held here during the Christmas. As a result of the discussions by the members of the Women's Indian Association with Mr. Devadhar and Mrs. Bhat and of Mrs. Cousins' correspondence with Mr. Devadhar in his official capacity as the Honorary Organiser and General Secretary of the Seva Sadan Society, it was definitely resolved by the Council of that Society without minding the difficulty of distance and language with the sole object of assisting friends here to take over complete charge of the "Home" with all its assets, paying the Women's Indian Association a sum of Rs. 750 as consideration for the furniture and other equipment that belonged to the Home; and the Council deputed both Mr. Devadhar and Mrs. Janakibai Bhat to Madras with the necessary authority to settle all details in regard to the organisation of its Madras Branch. The complete transfer was effected on the 20th of April, 1928.

NATURE AND SCOPE OF THE SOCIETY'S WORK.

3. Just before this time, i.e., by the beginning of January 1928, some friends in Madras, especially the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao, were very keen on Mr. Devadhar's undertaking to start a Branch of his Society in Madras for educational and other social work of a practical nature for the benefit of adult women belonging to all classes and conditions in this province on a very large scale and on systematic basis as is done by the Society both at its head-quarters in Poona and at more than a dozen other places.

THE FIRST HELPERS.

4. It was however thought advisable that a beginning of the Society's Branch in Madras could be made by making this "small Home" with its limited associated activities a suitable nucleus by the Society for the development of its work here. The Society in Mr. Devadhar's letter to the Press, dated the 20th of April last, has already acknowledged with gratitude the initial advice, help and assistance which have been so readily given by several friends including some officials; amongst whom must be mentioned specially the names of (1) the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Venkata Subba Rao, (2) Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastri, and (3) Mrs. M. Venkatasubba Rao. Mr. Venkata Subba Rao has donated a lump sum of Rs. 10,000 to start with and Mr. Venkatrama Sastri has commenced to pay an annual subscription of Rs. 300 (three hundred) only to begin with in aid of this Branch.

CLOSED FOR SUMMER VACATION.

5. As soon as the transfer of the Home was effected it had to be closed for full two months on account of the summer vacation. The work, however, came to be resumed from the middle of July last when Mrs. Janakibai Bhat, the Lady Superintendent of the Poona Seva Sadan, came to Madras to arrange the details with the help of Mr. Venkatasubba Rao whose active co-operation has been of the highest value in the development of this work.

THE "HOME" AS IT WAS WHEN TAKEN.

6. The Women's Home of Service has been located in a small bungalow on the Mylapore high road near the Sanskrit College, for which a monthly rental of Rs. 160 excluding water and lighting charges is being paid. There were about 10 inmates supported by the Committee; they belonged to all classes and conditions; there were besides, three other women who were staying there either studying for their examination or working elsewhere and were paying moderate charges, at the rate of Rs. 25 per mensem. The Home arranged for the education of these ten inmates in a few handicrafts aiming at some kind of vocational training to make these women self-reliant. These classes were also attended by a few day scholars paying a small uniform rate of Re. 1 as fee. The Home also maintained a Baby Welcome which provided baths and simple medicines to babies and poor children in the neighbourhood. It also engaged a Midwife on its premises on a salary of Rs. 35 a month to manage the Baby Welcome and to attend to maternity calls. There were, besides, a few other classes to give elementary instruction in English and Music, but the work was not systematised ; and the total annual expenditure for running this Institution came up to Rs. 7000 on an average, the major part of which had to be collected by Mrs. Cousins from friends here as well as elsewhere.

NUMBERS TROUBLED IN TWO MONTHS.

7. When the fact of the transfer of this Home to the Poona Seva Sadan Society on the 20th of April 1928 came to be announced to the public through the columns of newspapers in Madras, a number of applications from very poor women for admission were received from several districts in this presidency ; and depending upon the promises of help, the Society has so far admitted more than 16 women mostly from outside Madras and belonging to all castes and conditions for their education entirely at its cost. In all there are to-day in the Home 28 women who are admitted free on certain conditions. This number includes 8 of the old 10 inmates, the other two having got an employment are no more in the Home. There are besides, 7 inmates in addition who stay on the premises of this Home. All of them either study for their examinations or work elsewhere and are paying Rs. 25 at present every month ; two more Christian ladies, the midwife and the embroidery teacher, both unmarried women stay on the premises. Besides, Mrs. Janakibai Bhat and three other women workers from Poona Seva Sadan are staying in the Home. Thus this little house is made to accommodate to-day in all 41 women. Leaving the 6 workers out of account, the remaining inmates represent various castes, communities, and languages. There are 35 Hindus. Of these 16 are widows, 12 are married women deserted by their husbands, and 7 are grown up unmarried girls. They come from various districts ; 15 of them speak Tamil, 16 speak Telugu, 2 know Tanjore Marathi and 2 come from South Canara and speak Canarese and Konkani. Thus, it will be seen that the number of inmates has already nearly trebled and there are still a number of applications from very poor women from several parts of this presidency pending and for sheer want of sufficient accommodation these cases have not been yet decided. Moreover, there are not sufficient rooms to hold the various literary and industrial classes separately to-day. Admission is sought by several other charitable societies working for the betterment of women on behalf of women and poor girls who are their wards. They need education and protection very badly in a special way. These and similar problems of women cannot be satisfactorily solved in the absence of a better and more commodious place. But we are conscious that these difficulties could not be removed in a day. We recognize that the first important thing is education and that work has to be reorganized on a definite plan.

THE GOVERNING BOARD.

8. The Poona Seva Sadan Society proposes to organise and develop gradually a definite scheme for the all-round education of poor and middle class adult women of all castes, creeds and conditions. In achieving these objects we desire to bring to the notice of the people of this province the two great and urgent needs of the Society. First, much larger financial resources, inasmuch as such charitable Institutions are much more costly to maintain in an efficient state than institutions for boys and girls that charge regular fees and are in receipt of large Government grants ; and secondly, a much bigger building for better accommodation and necessary provision for the various needs of women than the one in which the "Home" is at present situated. In accordance with its present constitution for Branches and following the same policy and rules, the Society proposes to put this work under the general supervision of a Governing Board assisted by a small Executive Committee composed of men and women to be first elected by it. In making this humble beginning in this Province, we feel confident that it would succeed in enlisting the liberal help and co-operation of the Madras Government, the Madras Corporation, and other public Bodies, Charitable Trusts, as also the generous public who are all keenly interested in the education and uplift of our womenfolk.

PLIGHT OF DESERTED WIVES.

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer,
Bombay.

Sir,

May I crave the hospitality of your columns to draw pointed attention to a feature of the Hindu Law of Marriage, which though touched upon by various journals and journalists, has not as yet in my opinion received the serious attention it deserves. It is the case of deserted Hindu wives. The Widows' Cause Lahore set the ball rolling in its issue of December 1927 and has been pursuing the subject since then and thoughtful people interested in the subject shall find much material in its issues of April and May 1928. Pt. Thakur Datta of Amrit Dhara fame also published some questions in the Hindustan Times, dated 7th July 1928 which bring out the serious nature of the problem. Last of all Rai Sahib Sardar's proposed resolutions on the subject should have focussed public opinion on this important subject, but it is indeed very sad to see that even a journal like yours, which has always been extending a helping hand to all sections of the Hindus should not have considered it worth while to devote a leaderette to the subject. I would have very much liked to leave the subject for a stronger and much abler pen but as I have been feeling very strongly on the subject and as I find that the leaders of Hindu thought are just at present too much engrossed in solving the constitutional problem, I have ventured to write these lines in the hope that they may strike the responsive chord in the heart of some kind M. L. A. or would be M. L. A. and may serve as the foundation stone of an edifice worthy of the cause.

It is now practically admitted on all hands that the strict provisions of the Hindu Law of marriage are not suited to the present day life of the Hindu Society. Its rigours have been relaxed in the case of widows who now enjoy perfect liberty to marry. Pitiable indeed is the condition of a young Hindu wife who has been for reasons good, bad or indifferent abandoned by her husband. The causes leading to this shameful conduct on the part of husbands are many and are multiplying every day. The husband may have neglected her for any number of years, may have himself taken to another wife or may have gone to a foreign country with the intention of never returning to her, nay, the husband may have given her in writing that he would have nothing to do with her and may even be willing to express his consent for her second marriage but the law says to her that she may secretly live an immoral life but the moment she contracts marriage with another man all the horrors of the law of bigamy shall visit upon her and her spouse. The result is that no respectable man can be induced to marry such unfortunate women and they are cast away as condemned goods. As president of the Arya Samaj and as a humble worker in the Seva Samiti I have had experience of many such cases and Hindu friends in various parts of the country consulted me about these cases. I have lately had the honour of discussing this question with Pandit Neki Ram Sharma of Bhiwani whom I requested to give a Biwastha on the point but Panditji frankly admitted that the Shastras being the creation of males offered no solution of the problem. Are we still to leave them to their fate. This dogma shall no longer satisfy Indian womanhood. The problem has got to be faced and as a modest and harmless beginning I would suggest that some kind M. L. A. may introduce some such bill as outlined under:—

Whereas it is expedient to amend the Indian Penal Code Section 494 in certain particulars it is hereby enacted as follows:—In the exception to S. 494 I. P. C. after word 'knowledge' add the following:—"Nor to a Hindu wife who contracts marriage during the life of a former husband, if such husband would not for a period of seven years allow her to live with him as his wife".

Yours etc,
 RAM SWARUPA,
Advocate.
 President, Arya Samaj, Rohtak.

THE BRAHMO SAMAJ CENTENARY.

(By Mr. M. PERUMALLAYYA.)

The Brahmo Samaj Centennial celebrations all over India may be viewed from an historical stand point by some. Others may look at it with a social eye. The politicians may acknowledge the movement as a national force. But to those who are standing at close-quarters, the Centennial celebrations mark the spiritual, cultural and social history of modern India. The true lovers of India, clearly see that the Samaj has stood for all-round nation-building work from the beginning of the movement. It is evident from the fact that the movement has produced a good number of thinkers who are keeping the needs of the mother-land in the fore-front of the programme of national life. The Brahmo Samaj has produced leaders of men, and martyrs dedicating their lives for their country and humanity at large. Raja Rammohan Roy began the making of the 'Modern Indian History' by dedicating his life in liberating the Indian women from their sufferings and social slavery. He is the liberator of social-slavery in India, in the sense in which Abraham Lincoln is the liberator of the 'slave-trade.' Maharishi Devendranath Tagore following the Raja, lived in God for the service of men. He is verily the Maharishi of the modern times, disclosing the spiritual life of the ancient rishis of this Deva-Bhumi. Next appeared an inspired soul, a living dynamo of Bhakti and a personality of varied capacities in Keshub Chendra Sen. He was truly the Brahmananda, richly enjoying the spiritual freedom in every act of his life. It was Keshub who contributed calm-knowledge and creative force coupled with a ring of Bhakti to the modern life of India. These three mighty spiritual giants of the 1st century in the history of the Samaj were followed by a host of other spiritual recruits—Prathapa Chendra, Sivanath and Anandamohan—bringing along with them sweet torrents of love and life. Besides these, there were scores of others who lived a life of service throwing floods of pure light on the path of universal truth. Thus the hundred years' history is of one continuous growing-life of truth and service. A dedicated Brahmo does not believe in organised church codes, but feels direct relationship with truth and freedom. The practical side of the Brahmo Samaj movement better consists in its achievements of the loosening of caste-distinctions, the uplift of the down trodden classes, the spread of education, the recognition of the freedom of women, the assertion of civic-rights and the growth of national consciousness. It is not much in the light of this long chain of social and educational reform; but in the freedom of its spiritual-worship, the value of the movement is recognised. The Brahmo-Samaj is pre-eminently a religious movement in all its aspects. It is again essentially Hindu in its character, devoid of its impure orthodoxy and superstition. Therefore, we are ready to admire. It is not mere admiration from a distance, the Samaj seeks. It is practical adherence, the Samaj demands. The constructive programme of religious and social work is before the Samaj. To work the Programme is the need of the hour. Hence is the necessity for our celebrating the centenary of the Brahmo Samaj.

RAM MOHUN ROY.
 (By SIR RABINDRANATH TAGORE.)

When the Great Ones of the world come, they bring conflict with them; or their coming had no significance. The multitude which drifts down with the stream places its trust in the ebbing current of humanity. But, for him who would work the boat of life up the stream, there is unending toil. When Ram Mohun Roy came to this country he refused to go along with the moving mass of turbidity which was ever flowing out downstream and which fought him as an enemy every minute up to the very last. The height of the Himalayas is measured only from the different level of the plains all round; it is the hostility of the unenlightened that measures the magnitude of the Great.

In the history of a nation, Man marches onwards, ever amending, ever conquering himself with his own innate, conscious principle, only so long as the vital nature is all-powerful. This is, in fact, the very process of life—this never-ending fight. As we walk, our every step is a challenge to the constant pull of the earth; inertia besets us on all sides, and each of the organs of the body is ever engaged in fighting it. The heart goes on night and day, in sleep as in waking; the enormous passivity of things stands up against that unremitting exertion; it is building up, every minute, barricades of fatigue, to be fought down by the heart as long as it has the strength.

The air flows all around us in the blind laws; but the Vital Nature forcibly drags this air along into its own system of channels. The germs of disease, and conditions favourable to their growth, are everywhere, both within and without us; the army of health is all the time engaged in an unceasing combat against them. The life-process is, in fact, this never ending struggle, this continual warfare between the battalion of ill-health and the battalion of health. If this relentless struggle weakens, if the forces of rigidity, as against the forces of movement gain the upperhand in the corporal economy, then the human body begins growing more and more clogged with the accumulating filth of wastage. At last Death, in its mercy, comes down to remove this battle-weary defeat from the world of the living.

The social body, too, is a living organism; and all its evils find their opportunity when its own energy grows sluggish. Its life force, too, trained in fighting, has ever to keep up hostilities against dull intellect, feeble will, against narrow knowledge and poverty in sympathy and loving-kindness. The most powerful of its enemies is apathy of the mind. When the mind weakly surrenders its rightful dominion and wishes to remain immobile, the garbage of slovenliness accumulates and imprisons it. It is through the besetting that Death gradually advances in the field of life. The Great Person who appears at this period, brings along with him a powerful antagonism against the drag of this dead grossness. The feeble spirit, enchained by indiscriminate customs, cry out in anger and pain against the pressure of his onward urge. The history of India had been standing stagnant for a long time, giving up in weariness of spirit all independent seeking of truth, all adventures of life, and initiation of intelligent operations for its internal and external cleansing; venerating its own deterioration, it had ceased from attempting any readjustment with the changing ages. One by one, almost all the lights of its life had become dimmed through poverty of food, poverty of health and poverty of knowledge. Its defeat had been extending from century. Man's defeat comes when his own will abdicates and some external will occupies the vacant throne, when his personal intelligence retires and he clings as a parasite to some foreign intelligence, be it borrowed from his own dead past or imposed upon him from the present of some stranger nation. That is man's defect when the activities of the spirit are arrested and when he blindly goes on turning the wheels of the machine of habit, fashioned through the succession of the centuries—when he ignores reason and accepts authority, when he lowers the dignity of his innate informing principles and exalts external observances. For him, wearied with the load of decrepitude, there is no escape, through any narrow short-cuts devised by any over-subtle artifice.

Ram Mohun Roy appeared in India at this very period, when the country, in its blindness extending over many centuries, had come to regard vegetation as holiness. Such an overtowering and sudden contrast to one's own country and age is very seldom found in history, and they in a shrill loud voice repudiated him. But it was by that impatient execration that his country proclaimed to all the ages his supreme greatness, and vehemently announced that he had brought the conflict of light against the darkness of the land. He did not follow the futile path of dull intellect by repeating well-worn feeble formulas; he refused the humiliation of being the far-famed leader of the flattered multitude using its stupidity as the foundation for his power; he was never frightened by the unintelligent antagonism of the threatening mob with its upraised stick; through temptation of the ignorant reverence of the crowd, even the slightest deviation from the path of truth was for him an impossibility. He had struck at the demon of unreason, enshrined through the ages in the altar, and that demon did not forgive him.

He knew that insult to the living spirit brings about a bankruptcy of initiative. For the animal there is no Swaraj; for it is merely driven by its blind instincts. Man's Swaraj only extends as far as his own intelligent self, the master within him, occupies his social consciousness and inspires his creative activities. The history of man's progress is the history of this extension of Swaraj through the dominance of his self-thinking, self-confidence and self-respect.

The victory of the atman, of the higher self of man, has never been proclaimed from the heights of manhood anywhere except in India, with such an unhesitant voice. It was this message that Ram Mohun Roy brought anew, when in the India of his days it had become narrow and perverted, disclaimed in practice. For ages the major part of India was sunk in self-abasement through an unashamed acknowledgement of inferior rights for its multitude in religion and in social affairs, rendering the people unfit for the difficult responsibility of its self-expression. Not only did the mind of India of his times passively discard the claims of this highest right of humanity, but it actively denounced and wounded it.

The strange thing is that Ram Mohun was eager to invoke the message of the spirit not merely within the narrow boundaries of his own self-forgetful land; he assayed, by the test of the spiritual ideal, every great religious community which had in any manner obscured the true form of its own inner self in mere external forms and in irrational rituals.

Only a very few people in the whole world could, in that age, realize through the mind and spirit and express in their lives the Unity of Man as Ram Mohun had done. He realised that it was only when man regarded the external boundaries of his religion as more valuable than its infinite inner-significance that man was jealously kept apart from man.

The worldliness of sectarian piety called up pride, hatred and strife, and muddied the whole world with blood, to a degree impossible for any secular cause. In that age of religious exclusiveness he had gained in his heart and expressed in his life the Universal background of Religious Truth.

Though at that period, men had been able to find a place in the knowledge of every civilized man, they had not found the way to his heart. Even to this day, the realization of human unity is hampered, in this world, by so many prejudices born of blind instinct or bred by deliberate training. It is not possible to assert even to-day that a New Age has arrived—an age of solidarity on every side. In our age that wide highway must be opened which would bring together all the human resources in knowledge and in co-operation. A beginning has already been made in the domain of science where caste-distinctions in different departments of knowledge are being removed. Co-ordinated action, too, is gradually gaining in world-commerce—even though trafficking in trickery is still rife round the corners of that winding highway. It is also impossible to deny that a beginning has been made even in the realm of world-politics, though the way is beset with myriads of thorny obstructions. Ram Mohun Roy is the first and foremost of those brave spirits who have stood up, in the face of hostility and misunderstanding, and who in all their varied activities have eloquently welcomed the spirit of this New Age. He was the herald of India, the very first to bear her offerings to the outside world, and accept for himself and his country the best that the world could offer. He had envisaged in its entirety the truth of man and therefore his service to his country became complexly many-sided, which never narrowed its path of welfare by following the lines of least resistance and of immediate expediency.

Ram Mohun had to hew out the way in strenuous struggle, across the unexplored region of Bengali prose, when he was engaged in developing the potentialities of his own language for the self-expression of the people of Bengal. When eager to illuminate the Bengali mind with the philosophy of the spirit, he did not shrink from the difficult endeavour of expounding Vedanta in the yet-unformed Bengali prose to a reading public, some of whose learned men had ventured to scoff at the Upanishads as spurious and considered the Mahanirvana Tantra to be a scripture fabricated by Ram Mohun Roy himself.

Even in the West woman was really powerless and had her rights restricted on all sides, when Ram Mohun Roy stood up, alone, to support the rights of women in his own society.

There was not even a glimmering of political consciousness in the country when he had demanded respect for his countrymen in the world of politics.

He had faith with all his strength of conviction in the varied elements of human nature. It was not possible for him to have a dwarf's vision of man in any way; for, in him manhood had an extraordinary fullness of manifestation.

More than one hundred years have now gone by; but the true recognition of his greatness still remains incomplete: even to-day it is not an impossibility for his countrymen to do him irreverence; that generous vision to which alone would his magnitude be clearly visible is still enshrouded in mist. But the mist has nothing for which it need be proud, even if it envelope the luminary and rob the morning of its majesty. The sun is the more indelible and the more magnificent. Greatness goes on doing its own work even in the midst of rude obstructions and is not obscured even when light is withdrawn from it.

The force that Ram Mohun had set into motion is still operative to-day; and a day will yet come when the country will attain a translucence of mind freed from dense superstitions and will climb up to an altitude of unobstructed perspective which are essential for realizing Ram Mohun's place in our history and his strong unthwarted magnanimity. Those of us, who have received from him the inspiration to accept man in the completeness of his truth even against profuse contradictions, may feel deeply hurt at each insult levelled at him, but when he was alive the hundreds of insults that were his share could not in any way weaken his beneficent power, and it is this unperturbed power which even after his death will continue, in the face of all contempt and contumely, to sow seeds of fulfilment in the very heart of ingratitude itself.—The Modern Review, Calcutta.

A CASE FOR KHADDAR.

Mr. C. Rajagopalachari writes in the National Christian Council Review:

'We conquered India as an outlet for the goods of Great Britain,' said Sir William Joynson Hicks, one of His Majesty's Ministers. 'We conquered it by the sword, and by the sword we shall hold it. I am not such a hypocrite as to say that we hold India for the Indians. We hold it as the finest outlet for British goods in general, and for the Lancashire cotton goods in particular.'

What is the national consequence of this extensive business that Lancashire has established in India, and means to retain at the point of the sword? It is nothing less than distress and semi-starvation spread over an area of over a million square miles, consisting of 700,000 villages. The people affected by this chronic distress number over 230 millions. The above statement may appear strange. How can the supply of cheap cloth from England be the cause of distress in India? Until the year 1800, ninety per cent. of the people in India were employed not only in agriculture, but also in spinning all the yarn that was wanted for the clothing of the people. Agriculture is the work for only a portion of the year, often but a small part. The rest of the time was utilised in the production of yarn from the cotton grown in the country, which the hereditary, weaver castes wove into cloth. When machine-made yarn from England replaced this handspun, the supplementary occupation of the peasant families was destroyed. Without any substituted industry suitable for their condition, the result was enforced idleness and chronic poverty and semi-starvation. There is not a single publicist, including high government officials, who does not admit the extreme poverty of rural India, which consists of ninety per cent. of the total population. The average income of Indians is estimated at from one and a half annas to two and a half annas per-day, and it will be readily admitted that even the most optimistic calculation is far below the minimum level of subsistence. This is the average, but in large areas the mass of the people are in a permanent state of helpless destitution. Side by side with this poverty, there is widespread unemployment. This unemployment is not like that found in European countries, where a minority is temporarily out of occupation. Here the people are as a body unemployed for a large part of the year, varying from three months in irrigated areas, to over six months in the dry cultivation areas. If we wish to improve the condition of our peasantry, we must give them back the additional occupation that they have lost. We must guard both food and cloth against encroachment, and give to our peasantry the right to produce both these necessary articles. The khadi movement tries to restore this rural economy, which is indispensable for the economic reconstruction of Indian life.

It may be considered that in an age of industry it is impossible to revert to past conditions, and that it is, even if possible, undesirable. It is true that the substitution of power for human labour must produce a redistribution of work and a change in social conditions. In countries where circumstances favour a readjustment, no permanent distress follows as a consequence; and if there is an adequate world market for the products of power, not only does the whole population find employment, but everyone earns increased wages. In India, however, such is not the case. The conditions prevailing in this country do not permit its agriculturist population taking to other pursuits. There is no possibility of industrialising India in the sense in which England has been industrialised. Labour-saving appliances are good where labour is really saved for the worker. But what happens here is not saving of labour, but unemployment and starvation. If the State were socialistic it is conceivable that the benefits of labour-saving appliances may be distributed among the whole population; but, as things are, these labour-saving appliances save money for the capitalists and make unemployment for the poor man.

If we consider the history of Indian industries, and reflect that after a hundred years of industrialisation the total number of industrial workers in all India is under one and a half millions, as against 230 millions depending on rural agricultural work, it will be found that the alternative to the revival of cottage spinning is continued idleness.

The critics of the spinning movement have not been able to suggest any alternative cottage industry which might be a supplementary occupation to the agriculturists. Fifty million peasant families can be put to work only at an indispensable necessity of existence; and next to food, only cloth is such a necessity. Some men, notably missionary bodies, imagine that they help the solution of the problem of rural unemployment by organising industries such as carpentry, bee-farming, tailoring, knitting, embroidery work, weaving of machine-spun yarn, etc. Where the industries are new ones, they are of so little scope that they can never be hoped to go far enough to solve the rural problem. Then, again, some of these industries seem to pay very well indeed, but they supply the needs of a few people and can never be hoped to be taken up by the teeming millions. Some seemingly successful efforts, like cabinet-making and weaving, can only help individuals and particular groups of people by taking away business from other individuals and groups. Such enterprises have no value in regard to the solution of the national problem, which can only be solved if we find work for the agriculturists, such as would produce articles not now produced in India and which are needed by the nation in large quantities.

In this connection, it may be well to pause and remove a certain persistent confusion between weaving and spinning. The making of cloth from yarn is the work of a trained artisan, and in India is done by the various hereditary weaving castes. It was never, and cannot, at any time, become the universal supplementary occupation of the agriculturists. Each handloom wants the skilled labour of a family, and there is no lack of hereditary weaving families in India. Each loom wants no less than a dozen spinners at work to make the yarn. It is this spinning that was, and can again become, the universal supplementary occupation for the families whose main occupation is agriculture.

The Agricultural Commission probably gave up the problem as insoluble. It has refused to explore the possibilities of spinning. Khadi workers are not indifferent to agricultural improvement or the growth of co-operation. They claim, justly, that it is due to their propaganda that attention has been diverted from the towns to the condition of rural folk. They would be the first to welcome all programmes that really go to help the peasantry. But often improved agriculture and co-operation and other smaller industries are trotted out, not so much as effective policies in themselves, but as defences against khadi. It is obvious that hand-spinning is no rival either to improved agriculture or any other more profitable industry. It is offered only to fill idle hours and off-seasons where there is no more profitable occupation.

So far the argument holds for normal times. But in famines, spinning is really the best, and perhaps the only, mode in Indian conditions to give relief to the people. The a priori case for khadi is overwhelming, and it is the object of the All-India Spinners' Association to demonstrate the above proposition in practice.

The khadi movement had its birth in 1921 as an integral part of a great national upheaval. While this gave it a start among the nationalistic section of Indians, it also prejudiced it in the eyes of foreigners and those classes of Indians who depended on connection with Government. Now that the movement stands on its own legs and is governed by an independent non-party organisation, namely, the All-India Spinners' Association, it is hoped that it will get a just consideration from all those who are interested in the economic uplift of the Indian masses. Within the last six years, the Association has been able to give work to 60,000 spinners, distributed in about four thousand villages, and is annually producing and selling Rs. 24 lakhs worth of khadi. This is no small demonstration of the vast possibilities of spinning. The required facilities are found everywhere. Every province grows cotton; every cottage contains one or two possible spinners; and in many areas the tradition, and even the practice, of spinning still survives.

It is, no doubt, true that the work is difficult and requires great effort and patience. But these are necessary for any work in India. It is not possible to start any industry in India which does not require a great deal of careful nursing and protection. Even the great Jamshedpur Steel Works are unable to work under free competition. Khadi, too, will require some protection for growth, and, so long as no alternative industry to supplement agriculture is possible, it is obviously the duty of every well-wisher of India to support it, irrespective of political or other considerations.

But khadi is coarse, costly and not durable. How can we prefer it to cheap, uniform machine-spun cloth of fine finish and appearance?

There must be these initial difficulties in a movement of revival of a lost industry, and they can be met only by a spirit of patriotic sacrifice among the classes of the people that are comparatively well off. For the sake of giving occupation to families that would otherwise go without a full meal, we must wear coarse cloth, if only such can now be produced by their labour. Indeed, if the object of encouraging such a cloth is realised, what is coarse may well be deemed the only gentleman's cloth.

As for cost, hand-made goods are in all countries more costly than machine goods. But the extra cost is little in comparison with the national benefit. Our infant industry is of the greatest national importance, but we have not a Government willing to protect it. The people's patriotism must supply the protection that the State refuses to give.

To pay for and buy khadi instead of mill cloth is national service and reconstruction work. Such service involves sacrifice. No nation can solve its problems and better its position without sacrifice on the part of those of its classes that can afford it. Emancipation cannot come of itself, or be had without paying the price for it.

As for durability, we are apt to be prejudiced by the experience of cloth produced by raw hands. Mr. Rivett Carnac wrote in 1870:

'Machine-made piece goods have not been able to drive out of the field the stout, serviceable country cloth, which stand the smashing of the native washerman and keep out the sun, rain and the cold.'

Our spinners are producing better and better yarn, and the experience of people who wear khadi produced now shows increasing durability.

The tastes in favour of finer finish and varied colours, so far as they can be satisfied only by causing unemployment among our millions, can only be deemed a vulgar fashion of unthinking slave-mentality. Refinement can never consist in a desire for things that do harm to the nation, of which we are a part. Fashion and national good must ever be the same in a truly civilised community.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Mrs. Sarojini Naidu to leave for Europe:— Mrs. Sarojini Naidu leaves on the 12th September on a lecture tour in Europe and America. She will arrive at Naples on the 27th, will spend a short time in Italy and will proceed to Berlin and Paris. Reaching London on the 10th of October she will sail for New York on October 20.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. s. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johanna Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

THE
Central Bank of India Ltd.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	1,00,00,000

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches :—(1) Mandvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Rehman Street.

Mofussil Branches :—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharra, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Asansol, Chaudansi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jamnagar.

London Agents :—The Midland Bank, Ltd.

New York Agents :—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents :—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts :—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

Telegrams : "RAVI UDAYA"
Ghatkoper or BOMBAY.

Telephones :
BOMBAY 24999.
GHATKOPAR 87027.

M. A. JOSHI & Co.,
Kalbadevi Road, Bombay No. 2.

Agents and Proprietors :

The Ravi Udaya and Vijaya Fine Art Litho Works

Undertake the preparation of High Class reproductions of Paintings, Pictures with up to-date Rotary Upset Machine, Wholesale and retail dealers of Pictures (Indian and English), Frames, Mouldings, Type and Litho Inks and new Printing Materials, Colours and Swedeshi Playing Cards. Specialists in calendars pictures, Mill Cloth Tickets, Cigarettes, Beedi and Match Labels.

Awarded several medals and prizes for the best workmanship and design. All orders executed promptly and neatly under the personal supervision of the Proprietor who is a specialist.

Mahatma Gandhi,—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

A Human Document—By Mr. V. S. Sohoni. The life of a Dhed in Bombay. Reprinted from the Reformer. Price annas 4.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
Navsarl Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS,

NOW READY :

1. The Re-Birth of Hindū Music.—By Rudhyar of Carlos Salzedo, America A French—American, Composer—Philosopher—Poet, considered as a friend as well as a genius.

In his knowledge and sincerity, his strength and his industry, he is the musical peer of many celebrities who have gained real support and attention in our country.—Los Angeles Record. Artistic get up. Price Rs. 5. Cloth and Gold. Rs. 3-12 Double wrapper.

2. The Gita and Spiritual Life.—By D. S. Sarma, M.A., Prof. Presidency College, Madras, and author of Introduction to Bhagavat Gita. Boards: Price Rs. 1-8; Wrappers Rs. 1-2.
3. Lord Buckmaster's Speech on Birth Control:—A pamphlet issued on behalf of the Madras Malthusian League. Price As 2.

REPRINTS.

1. Bhagavad Gita.—Text and translation—By Dr. Annie Besant, (5th Adyar Pocket Edition). Price As. 4.
2. At the Feet of the Master.—By J. Krishnamurti (7th Indian Edition Standard Size—B g type). Price As. 8.
3. Seven Rays.—By Prof. E. Wood (3rd Edition) Price Cloth Rs. 3; Wrappers. Rs. 2-4.
4. Concentration.—By Prof. E. Wood (8th Edition) Price Cloth Re. 1-8; Boards 1-4; Wrappers Re. 1.

Shortly Ready:—Our New Publications.

1. The Quest.—By Sadhu T. L. Vaswani—No. 3 of the Glimpses series—Inspiring Poems.
2. The Diary of a Disciple.—By Sadhu T. L. Vaswani—No. 4 of the Glimpses series—Inspiring Poems.

REPRINTS:

1. Old Diary Leaves.—By Colonel H. S. Olcott, The President Founder of the Theosophical Society. Volume II (Long Out of Print). Deals with the period from 1878 to 1883 embracing the novel and exciting incidents of the establishment for our movement in India and Ceylon from which such momentous results have followed.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
ADYAR, MADRAS, S.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.

The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.

The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.

The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.

The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.

The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.

The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

India Rs 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
The Indian Social Reformer,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhoea and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN
MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { CANDELA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustee business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondaicha (District West Khandesh).
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Mategaon (District Nashik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ... Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:--BARODA.

Branches:--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadl and Dwarka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Str Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).

Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).

Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).

Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL B.

Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)

Mr. Nawroji B. Saklatwala, C.I.E., (Tata Sons Ltd, Bombay).

Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

Fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free.

To every purchaser of our "Luxorette" lever Radium Silvered Pocket Watch, guaranteed for five years, costing Rupees five, we give our fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free. Write now. The radium pocket watch has strong mechanism and well built and can be seen well in nights without the help of lights. Please order soon.

Price Rs. 5 only.

Address:--SWAN HOUSE,

P. B. No. 508.

P. T. MADRAS.

WANTED

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Master's Classes. Full particulars and Railway Fare Certificate on 2 annas stamp. Apply to:--Central Telegraph College, Delhi.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs. a. p.
Subscription (including postage).
Inland ...	5 0 0
Foreign ...	5 8 0
Single copy ...	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office: Esplanade Road, Fort, BOMBAY.

SIR D. J. TATA, Kt., CHAIRMAN.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	Rs. 6,00,00,000
SUBSCRIBED " " " "	3,56,05,275
PAID UP " " " "	71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS " " " "	1,15,36,676

FIRE INSURANCE.—A Tariff rates for all classes. Chart schedules prepared. Advice given. Facilities for dealing with total insurance of clients.

CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS, i.e. Loss of Profits etc. as a result of fire.

MARINE INSURANCE.—The aim is to provide insurance for Merchants on conditions similar to those obtainable in London, the world's largest Marine Insurance Market.

MOTOR CAR ASSURANCE.—Complete cover in every way and prompt settlements of Claims.

BAGGAGE INSURANCE at reasonable rates whilst travel ling by land or sea.

ALL RISKS INSURANCE covering jewellery and other valuables in any situation.

OTHER CLASSES OF INSURANCE also transacted.

Apply to

THE GENERAL MANAGER.

London Agents:--Sedgwick Collins (Agencies) Ltd.

Manager for U. S. A.:--Summer Ballard.

Agencies also at Poona, Calcutta, Madras, Karachi, Ahmedabad, Rangoon, Penang, Singapore, Colombo, East Africa, etc. etc.

R. J. DUFF, GENERAL MANAGER.

A. K. JOSHI & Co.Kalbadevi Road, B O M B A Y.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks in Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,

The Hindustan Review.

PATNA, E. I. R.

THE GUARDIANA CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-
Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

"Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise"

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
(A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY.

BOMBAY OFFICE }
Kalbadevi Road. } Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26.

Bombay.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

EYE DISEASES...	... Try "Akhyacura."
RING WORM Try "Kurain."
ASTHMA Try "Asthma Cure."
STRENGTH Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil."
TONICS Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills," "Farrish's Chemical Food." "Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo. phosphites of Lime."
GONORRHOEA Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C. Copaiba Cum Buchu."

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALHADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editors—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1928

No. 3

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Public Safety Bill.	Hindu Conversion and Indian Family Law.
A Curious Definition.	Mutual Service.
The Devalaya.	The English in India.
A Wise Decision.	Bombay Children Aid Society.
European Buddhist Monks.	Women's Movements in Japan.
Three Marriage Bills.

NOTES.

The Public Safety Bill:—The Legislative Assembly is engaged in an interesting debate on what is known as the Public Safety Bill introduced by Government. The Bill empowers the Government of India to expel from this country foreigners whose presence it considers to be undesirable. In The Statement of Objects and Reasons, it is explained that the Bill is directed against Communists. In the Bill, however, there is no mention of Communists. Undesirable persons are defined in a very general way so as to include people who preach revolutionary doctrines regarding the political and economic structure of society. There is no mention of religious and social institutions in the Bill, but in the debate in the Assembly, the government spokesmen treated the economic aspect of Communism as a minor matter, and concentrated on the danger to the ancient social and religious institutions of Hinduism and Islam. They seem to have forgotten or deliberately overlooked the fact that in taking this line they were laying themselves open to an effective retort. If Government is so anxious to protect Hinduism and Islam and their social systems from Bolsheviks, why do they permit foreign Christian Missions with the help of foreign money to seek to undermine and destroy these very institutions for which it professes so much solicitude? Government takes an undertaking from Non-British Missionaries that they would loyally co-operate with it, and then lets them free to carry on their proselytising activities throughout the country. A distinguished English publicist, Sir Valentine Chirol, in one of his books on India has hinted at the importance from the political point of view of the conversion of large numbers of the depressed classes to Christianity. He was no doubt stating his own opinion, but it furnishes a clue to the paradox of Government countenancing proselytising propaganda in one direction and wanting to exclude similar propaganda in another. So far as Indians are concerned there is absolutely no difference between the two. Government will no doubt say that Christian Missionary propaganda is favourable to it, while the Bolshevik is hostile, and that it is perfectly justified in admitting the one and excluding the other. This would be an honest and straightforward argument in favour of the Bill, but the attempt to make out that it is to protect vital Indian interests, economic, social and religious, that the Bill has been introduced, does not carry conviction. Christian Missionaries have succeeded in making converts but their greatest service to India has been that they have been the means of stimulating the spirit of social and religious reform. In the same way Bolsheviks too may be able to make converts, but they will also stimulate the spirit of reform in the same way. The Indian people have sufficient intelligence to discriminate between what is good in Bolshevism and what is unadvisable, just as they have done in Christian propaganda. They do not want Missionaries to be excluded and they are not afraid of Bolshevik propaganda either. There is one feature of Bolshevism at least which Britain will do well to imitate. It is the absolute repudiation of racial discrimination of which unfortunately the British Commonwealth to-day is the most conspicuous exponent.

A Curious Definition:—A Committee was appointed in the October of 1926 by the Travancore Government to inquire into the problem of unemployment among the educated classes in the State. The Committee was composed of two officials, one of whom presided over its deliberations, and three members of the Travancore Legislative Council elected by the non-official representatives of the Council. The Committee decided to include the unemployed holder of the Vernacular School Leaving Certificate under the term 'educated class', although many considerations—chief of them being that his 'adaptability has not been impaired to any serious extent by the education he has received'—would have justified his exclusion from the scope of the inquiry. The interpretation of the term 'unemployed' adopted by the Committee is not the generally accepted one. 'Unemployment among the educated classes', says the Report, 'does not mean destitution or failure to get any kind of work which would ensure a subsistence wage. Their chances of getting such employment as they would have got if they had not been educated remain more or less the same as before.—If the educated unemployed joined the ranks of the labouring classes, the problem will to a large extent solve itself.—The problem, as we see it, is the failure of numbers of young men and women of various educational qualifications to get the kind of work the earnings of which will fairly correspond to the efforts and sacrifices involved in acquiring those qualifications and to the standard of living customary in the grade of society to which they belong'. In other words, the Committee regard the money spent on education by a student as an investment on which he would be justified in expecting his four per cent. Should the Travancore Government decide to institute the system of unemployment doles, it would, accepting the Committee's definition of the term, have to assist the graduates of medicine, law, teaching and engineering to maintain their standard of living and 'to get the earnings which will fairly correspond to the efforts and sacrifices involved in getting these qualifications' by supplementing their earnings with 'doles' which may very often run into three figures. We wonder whether, adopting the narrower definition of the term, the Travancore figures for unemployment could be higher than the figures in the British Indian provinces. Had the Committee restricted itself to the terms of reference, the percentage given for women's unemployment would be very much below 50, whereas the Report leads one to infer that it is so high as 66.

The Devalaya :—One of the pioneers in India in promoting harmony amongst all religions, was the late Mr. Sasipada Banerji of Baranagar who died three years ago at a ripe old age. He founded the Devalaya. The Devalaya Review gives an account of the origin and objects of this institution in the current number. "From early life Mr. Sasipada Banerji keenly felt the need of an organization which would offer a common meeting ground to people of different persuasions, and aim at a better understanding and mutual co-operation between various religious bodies of the country without at the same time any surrender of their peculiar doctrines and practices. With this object in view as early as 1873 he established the Sadharan Dharma Sabha at Baranagar, and latterly, on his removal to Calcutta, he established the Devalaya Association in 1908. It is not by adverse criticism of their defects but by the appreciation of their real merits that we can acquire a love for other faiths, and the best means of doing so is to have a clear understanding of their fundamental principles. Comparative religion has established that the essential principles of all the great religions are similar, most of the differences lying in external forms. There is no doubt that spread of real knowledge about different faiths removes many prejudices and renders great help in fostering love and fellowship among men of different denominations. From its foundation the Devalaya association, with its modest resources, has been carrying on this noble work. The work is great and our capacity and resources small, but we have the satisfaction that we have been continuing the great work of our founder."

A wise Decision :—Not long ago we had entered in these columns our emphatic protest against the proposed enhancement of fees in schools and colleges as it would entail considerable hardship on students. We welcome the decision of the Bombay Government, as embodied in a recent Associated Press message, to drop the proposal altogether. In doing so the Government, it is stated, were impressed by the strong representation made against the proposal, particularly on the ground that the burden of the increase would bear heavily on the poor and the middle classes. This is one of the many instances in which the Bombay Government has shown that it is not unmindful of public opinion in the presidency.

European Buddhist Monks :—There are at the present time, writes a Berlin correspondent in Young East, a number of people in Germany who seriously contemplate going to countries such as Ceylon, Siam and Burma where Buddhism reigns in its primitive austerity, and there becoming Buddhist monks. Already before the war there was a Buddhist colony in Europe; this was on the island of Capri, and its members were mostly Germans. Another German Buddhist monastical community had formed itself in Ceylon. There Nayanatiloka was their recognised leader. He was a distinguished translator and commentator of the Pali text, wrote an excellent Pali grammar for the use of German students and was the first to publish a full German translation of the great Buddhist work, the Quarries of King Milinda. Of this work, worthy to rank among the great literary achievements of the world only the first, older part, had up till then been translated under the title of "The Quarries of King Menandros" (Milinda is an Indian form of Menandros) by F. O. Schrader, whose introduction is specially valuable. During the world war Nayanatiloka was dragged as internee to Honolulu, Australia, Hawaji, Siam, Japan and eventually China in Hank prison, he finished the monumental task of translating Buddha's speeches out of the Anguttara Nikaya, an achievement worthy of the best traditions of German thoroughness and pertinacity. The publishing house of Piper had already issued R. G. Neumann's translation of the speeches of the Middle Period, which was extraordinarily interesting for its literary quality, and during the world war, another book appeared on Buddha's Teaching which ran through edition after edition, a most unusual fate for a serious and indeed heavy work of this kind. Its author was Dr. George Grimm whom some, not altogether without reasons, have compared to Schopenhauer. Dr. Grimm gathered round him a community of German Buddhist of which he is still the leader and which, though not very numerous comprises in its membership some Germans living abroad. The members of the community endeavour to lead a religious life after the precepts of Buddha. The centre of this group is Munich.

Manager's Notice.

Reminders have been sent to subscribers whose subscriptions have fallen in arrears and to those whose subscriptions are due for the current year. Those who are in arrears are specially requested to remit the amount due without delay.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1928.

THREE MARRIAGE BILLS.

The Legislative Assembly had three Bills relating to marriage on Saturday the 8th instant. The first was the Bill for the prevention of child marriages known as the Sarda Bill after its originator Rao Bahadur Harbilas Sarda. The Bill was referred to a Select Committee and that body completely recast it. As drafted by Mr. Sarda, the Bill proposed to make marriages of girls under 11 years of age null and void. The Select Committee did not approve of this drastic proposal. It made the abetment of child marriages a penal offence and at the same time raised the age from 11 to 14 for girls. There were other changes, which necessitated the re-circulation of the Bill as revised for public opinion. Mr. Sarda moved on Saturday last that the Bill be referred to another Select Committee for consideration in the light of the opinions which had been received on it, with instructions to report within three days. The motion was supported from all sides, the only dissenting speech being that of Mr. M. K. Acharya who repeated all the old orthodox arguments in favour of child marriages. One of his assertions was that real sexual morality was impossible without child marriage. The implication is, though Mr. Acharya failed to see it, that there is no sexual morality outside the few Hindu castes which are addicted to child marriages. Not only the rest of the world, but also the large majority of Hindus themselves are involved in this sweeping proposition. To our mind, it is absurd to speak of sexual morality in connection with child marriages. Morality implies intention, knowledge, volition, all of which are totally absent when children of tender years are plunged into matrimony. Even otherwise, if the alternative is between exposing young girls to the hardships, moral and physical, of child marriage and exposing them to possible deviations from what Mr. Acharya calls "sexual morality," every humane and sensible parent would unhesitatingly choose the latter. Mr. Acharya himself realised the absurdity of his contention and added that he was not against some law against child marriage but was dead against Mr. Sarda's Bill. It is a great pity that he himself during the time that he has been in the Legislative Assembly, had not thought of producing a Bill according to his own ideas of what would be right and proper for preventing child marriage. It is an ancient device of opponents of reforms that they sympathise with reforms in the abstract but are opposed to any concrete action which is suggested to give effect to them. We trust that the Bill will be passed by the Assembly in this Session.

The two other Bills which came up before the Assembly last Saturday were both drafted by Sir Hari Singh Gour. Dr. Gour's indefatigable zeal to introduce social legislation is most praiseworthy. His outlook, however, is markedly different from that of men who have actually worked in the field of social reform. These men know that legislation comes last and is a sort of coping-stone upon a propaganda outside the Legislature. Child marriages, for example, have been condemned for over half-a century by social reformers, and there has been created a considerable volume of public sentiment in favour of legislation to put them down. Not only has a public opinion been created, but in numerous cases—which are increasing every year—the custom has been openly set at nought and society has acquiesced and is acquiescing in such departures from the strict rule of custom. The ground is thus well-prepared for legislation, and what is more, legislation is necessary to consolidate the position gained by social reform propaganda carried through a number of years. Sir Hari Singh Gour, on the contrary, starts with preconceived notions of the proper legal equipment for an ideal society as he conceives it, and proceeds to legislate for that purpose. The result is, as might have been foreseen, that he could get no support from any quarter, even the social reformers in the Assembly will not look at his proposals, and he had to withdraw both his Bills in rather a precipitate manner. The first of his two Bills proposed to extend the grounds of divorce among Christians and non-Christians contracting civil marriages on the lines of Lord Buckmaster's Bill in England. The Committee of the Parsi Panchayat which enquired into the working of the Parsi Marriage and Succession Laws and made recommendations for their amendment, adopted the Lord Buckmaster's proposals regarding divorce. And, indeed, there is much to be said for not restricting divorce to the narrow grounds to which it is limited at present. But even in England where divorce is considered as a legitimate means of correcting matrimonial mistakes, Buckmaster's Bill has failed to be regarded as a measure of urgency. The House of Lords passed it, but the House of Commons could find no time to take it up. In India even among Christian and other communities which recognise divorce, there is a wide-spread repugnance against resorting to it. The idea of marriage as a sacrament permeates even communities whose personal law treats it as a civil contract. There is evidently an atmosphere of ideas in this country which acts on and moulds men's ideas in social and religious matters. Dr. Gour's Bill, well-meaning as it undoubtedly was, encountered opposition from European and Indian Christian members of the Assembly, and his request to withdraw it was refused, and the Bill was thrown out by the Assembly.

Dr. Gour's other Bill sought to rescue the Hindu law from the chaos into which it had fallen through the decisions of British Indian courts in respect of the dissolution of marriages in which the husband suffered from incurable disease or other incapacity. This measure, in fact, merely re-affirmed the Shastric law which has been ignored by our courts. The Shastras sanction the dissolution of marriages in certain circumstances but the Courts have refused to recognise any circumstance as a valid cause of dissolution. With reference to a very painful case which came to our notice some years ago, we consulted eminent Hindu lawyers, among them the late Sir Gokuldas Parekh and the Sir Narayan Chandavarkar, and they were all of opinion that nothing can be done to help the girl out of her most unfortunate situation. We have come to know of several other cases of a like nature. Lala Lajpat Rai who opposed the Bill seems to have been carried away by personal prejudice and seems to have bestowed little thought on the merits of the Bill. The law will have to be amended if possible by members of the Legislature who are not suspected of want of appreciation of the root principles of the Hindu socio-religious system.

HINDU CONVERSION AND INDIAN FAMILY LAW.

(By Mr. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI.)

"The present state of Hindu law does not do credit either to our patriotism or our intelligence. However highly we may mount up in the ladder of political advancement, the rate of our moral and material progress will depend upon the sanity of our laws and the humanity of our social institutions".

It was the regret of the late Mr. Justice T. V. Seshagiri Aiyer of honoured memory, that these convictions came to him late in life when he felt that the years before him were "not sufficient to atone for the past failure to appraise at its true value the trend of events".

Enlightened legislation suited to modern conditions is obviously the royal remedy for these ills. But any attempt to mend the inelastic ancient law by timely legislation suited to promote health, harmony and freedom, is sure to meet with deadly resentment as treason to our sacred civilization. It has precious little chance in the Council chamber against the die-hard opposition of Indian social orthodoxy, aided and abetted by the political orthodoxy of astute foreign imperialism which affects to hold the balance of "neutrality", with the thumb, however, steadily pressing the scale against reform.

It is therefore to the learned Judges of our High Courts that we often turn for such relief as can be had by sagacious judicial interpretation of our uncoloured law. Any successful effort on their part to "appraise the trend of events at its true value" and to reconcile the letter and spirit of the existing law to the claims of patriotism, humanity and common sense, cannot therefore fail to evoke the warmest welcome from the thoughtful section of the public. Those of us especially who believe that Hinduism has a message of value to the whole world and wish to see its benefits, social as well as spiritual, extended to all who seek it voluntarily, without invidious distinction, cannot help feeling highly thankful to their Lordships, Mr. Justice Macpherson of Patna and Mr. Justice Venkata Subba Rao of Madras, for the gallant stand they recently made in their respective provinces, to vindicate "the sanity of our laws" and "the humanity of our social institutions", on the important question of the status of foreigners who have adopted the Hindu faith and married within the Hindu fold.

The Patna Case was of an Australian lady who, as "Seeta Devi", married a high-caste Hindu (the Rajah of Tikari), in 1909, after conversion under Arya Samaj rites. The Madras Case related to an Austrian lady who, as "Sulochana", was initiated into the Hindu faith and married to a Bhatia gentleman of Bombay by the Hindu Missionary Society in 1922. In both cases the Courts had to decide whether, under Hindu law the conversion was valid, and whether, even if the conversion be valid, the marriage of such convert with a born-Hindu of high caste was also valid. In both cases the courts have answered both the questions in the affirmative, making a striking advance on the previous uncertain state of the law on these points.

To Hindus belonging to the Arya Samaj especially, the judgment of Mr. Justice Macpherson (the full text of which is available in the current August number of the All-India Reporter) will come as the Magna Charta of their missionary rights and social autonomy. It is now over 17 years since I expressed my fears as follows in the "Indian Social Reformer" and the "Hindu" when pleading for the enactment of Mr. Basu's Special Marriage Bill:

"The Arya Samajists, the most pre-eminently Hindu of all Hindu mutazalas (protestants), taking a firm stand upon the imperishable Veda, have freely taken into their fold born-Christians and Mhommedans, reclaimed repentent converts to other faiths, purified the untouchable classes, and performed inter-caste, inter-communal and inter-racial marriages on a pretty large scale. They are now all in a tremble because they realise that none of these marriages will be upheld in the British Courts, since such marriages were unknown to Hindu law when the British first set foot in India". (23rd April 1911).

Again:—

"What shall we do with the Arya Samajists who are in such sore straits for a marriage law? Unsurpassed as they are for their passionate faith in the Vedas, who will dare deny that they are Hindus? And yet how can the old-world orthodoxy of present-day Hinduism tolerate the inclusion of the Dharmapalas and the Sita Devis and scores of other such persons whom our enterprising Aryan brethren have recruited from Americans, Europeans and Muhammadans by conversion into the Hindu fold?"—(7th May 1911).

Those fears were throughly vindicated in this very case by the learned Subordinate Judge who found Sita Devi's conversion as well as marriage invalid because "a Hindu is born, not made," and because no high-caste Hindu "could, under modern Hindu law, marry even a Hindu of another caste". But, fortunately for the future of Missionary Hinduism, Mr. Justice Macpherson was able to brush aside these views as "unsound". "The Arya Samaj, he declared, "is a well-known reformed sect of Hindus in Northern India, of substantial and increasing importance, the validity of whose marriages it would now be preposterous to question." He upheld the conversion of Sita Devi as "valid according to the tenets of the Arya Samaj". He upheld her marriage also as valid because "the Arya Samaj does not permit difference of caste to interfere with marriage"; and he laid down the law in the following terms:

"There is nothing to prevent any born-Hindu from renouncing his caste or shedding any part of the marriage laws of his caste. Members of the Arya Samaj may validly intermarry, and the embarrassments and inconvenience of caste discipline entailed by the mixed marriage are immaterial to the legality of the marriage itself".

Turning now to the Madras decision in Sulochana Devi's case, we can, in the absence of any report more authentic than a newspaper summary, permit ourselves to make but a few cautious observations. But one point seems to be beyond doubt. By basing the validity of this lady's conversion, not on the peculiar tenets of any particular "sect", Samaj or Missionary Society, but on the inherent power of Hindu religion and the Hindu community in general to absorb foreign elements as evidenced in their past history, His Lordship has made this ruling of wider applicability to current events than the Patna one. In holding further that caste-membership is not a pre-requisite for being a Hindu and that a non-Hindu could be validly converted as a Hindu though he could not be given any particular caste on such conversion, this decision only emphasises and gives judicial support to the basic principle underlying all Hindu Missionary effort among non-Hindus who are free from the caste system, while it also recognises incidentally that caste is a thing which cannot be improvised for those who are not born in it.

So far the Patna and Madras decisions are practically on common ground. Both courts seem also to have felt that it would be inhuman, and unfair and unindicative of the sanity of our laws to make out that, while foreigners may, if they like, enter the religious fold of Hinduism to live as unattached members and homeless saints, they cannot, under Hindu law, be allowed to enter the sacred family circle of the Hindus. But, since all indigenous Hindus born into some caste or other, and their marriage laws are unquestionably governed by the status conferred by that caste, by what legal expedient then can the casteless and caste-free Hindu convert be enabled to contract a valid marriage with a Hindu who is by birth caste-endowed and caste-ridden? That was the problem in the solution of which the two judgments have parted company and pursued opposite routes and arrived at results which are alike and adequate to the parties concerned but wholly dissimilar in their usefulness and applicability to the exigencies of modern Hindu life.

(To be continued.)

" MUTUAL SERVICE ".

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Re the article on "Mutual Service vs. Exploitation" by Dr. Clifford Manshardt, PH.D., the fundamental cause of the violations "of the primary law of reciprocity" is the practically universal ignorance of exactly what that law is in economic or financial affairs. Very few persons are yet aware of the fact that to have strict reciprocity in the matter of one person working for another, is for that other to work for the first just the same length of time as the first worked for him or her. That is, if A works for B an hour, B has an hour's duration of A's work, and for there to be strict reciprocity, B must work an hour for A, so that A will have an hour's duration of B's work.

Nowadays we cannot, as a general thing, work directly for each other, so we must have a go-between, in short a medium of exchange for we must exchange our exertion (work) if there is to be strict reciprocity in the matter. We call our present money a medium of exchange, but we do so under a misapprehension, for the present kind of money in each nation of the earth is really a medium of appropriation. And it cannot be otherwise so long as its unit represents (is issuable or receivable for) something else than a definite duration of adult human work. By representing what is not human work it puts a price on what is not human work; and to pay that price persons who work must work for others without being worked for as long in return. Any who do not work for others cannot pay either for what is not human work nor for what is human work. For human work is the one thing with which a human being can really pay for anything. And human work is the only thing we should have to pay for with it.

Thus the issue of "mutual service vs. exploitation" is that of the adoption of the work unit vs. the retention of the result unit. And it is the use of the latter that makes self-interest appear to lead to injury of others, for when true self-interest is properly understood it will be seen that it requires the existence of equal freedom for all same adults, which would necessarily benefit all. And equal freedom would make it possible for each person to get into the occupation vey was naturally best suited to.

The use of the result-unit kind of money necessarily perpetuates unequal freedom, which is what we have the world over today.

ARIZONA, U. S. A. } VAUGHN BAOHMAN BROCKAW.
28th July 1928. }

THE ENGLISH IN INDIA.*

Prof. Jadunath Sarkar, M.A., C.I.E., writes in the Prabuddha Bharata :—

The Portuguese were the first among the Europeans to settle in India. They have enriched Indian vocabulary and medical science to some extent; their descendants (usually of mixed breed) spread through all the provinces of India and were a noticeable element of the population in the Mughal age. But the Portuguese as rulers created a strong feeling of repulsion in the Indian mind, by their cruelty, their religious bigotry such as the conversion of the temples of Sauti-Durga into Christian churches, their establishment of the Inquisition at Goa, and their rapid moral decline. The Indian territory under their rule was very small in area and situated in an obscure and rather inaccessible corner of the peninsula. Hence the influence of the Portuguese on Indian life and thought has been negligible.

The modernization of India is the work of the English, and it has affected the entire Indian continent.

The Europeans have struck the undefended seaboard of India. The sole condition of their power is naval supremacy, and their hold on India can be maintained only by a regular flow of reinforcements from their distant homeland in every generation. Thus, unlike the Indo-Greeks, Indo-Parthians, Scythians, Pathans and Mughals, the English have not made India their home, they must ever be sojourners in this land and keep up a constant intercourse with their European home, in the form of the double stream of incoming recruits and home returning veterans. Their rise and fall depend not on what happens in India, but on the military and political position of their mother country, which is the central power-house of their far-flung empire.

In many respects the English have continued, but in a more thorough fashion and over a much wider area of India, the work begun by the Mughal Empire, and in some others they have introduced new forces which were unknown in the Mughal age. The English influence on Indian life and thought, which is still working and still very far from its completion, is comparable only to the ancient Aryan stimulus, in its intensity and its all-pervasive character.

* The fifth in a series of six lectures on "India through the Ages," delivered under the auspices of the Madras University.

The first gift of the English to India is universal peace, or freedom from foreign invasion and internal disorder. How valuable peace is for national growth can be best understood by contrast if we study the history of Western India before 1817 or of the Punjab in the 18th century. The British Indian Empire extends over the whole of India as well as the neighbouring lands east and west of it. A peace so profound and spread over such an extensive territory had never before been seen in India. The English have completed and carried to perfection the task undertaken by Akbar, but reversed by the anarchy that followed the dissolution of the Mughal Empire after Nadir Shah's invasion.

Secondly, the English have restored our contact with the outer world. The Mughals had communicated by sea with Persia and Arabia, Zanzibar and the Abyssinian Coast, the Malay Peninsula and Java, and by land with Central Asia. But even this limited range of intercourse had been interrupted by the decline of the Mughal Empire, when Persia and Arabia, Bukhara and Khurasan ceased to send their adventurers and traders to India.

The English have admitted us to the entire outside world,—not only in Asia, but in all other continents as well,—and they have admitted the rest of the world to us in a degree not dreamt of under Muslim rule. India has now been switched on to the main currents of the great moving world outside, and made to vibrate with every economic or cultural change there. An isolated life is no longer possible even for our remotest villages. A medicinal discovery in Paris or Toronto becomes available in India in two months. A poor harvest in Poland or Canada makes people in Lyallpur starve by sending up the price of wheat. The telegraph, railway and newspapers have completed the suction of India into the whirlpool of world movements of every kind. We cannot now sit down self-contained, secluded within our natural barriers.

And not only have these modern agencies connected us with the outer world more extensively and fully than ever before but joined by the uniformity of administrative system which characterises the British age, they have also been tending to fuse the various races and creeds of India into one homogeneous people and to bring about social equality and community of life and thought, which are the basis of nationality. The process has just begun, though its completion is yet far off.

Fourthly, the direct action of the State and even more than that the indirect example of the English people have infused a spirit of progress into the Indians. Our best thinkers are no longer content with adoring the wisdom of our Vedic ancestors, they feel an eternal discontent with things as they are and translate that discontent into action by trying to make our State and religion, education and industry, life and thought better and still better. Our most effective leaders do not repeat the pessimism of pre British days by despising the moderns as a race of degenerate pigmies and sighing for the return of the golden age of the far-off past (Satya Yuga). Their gaze is fixed forward. We have now accepted the principle of progress in practice, even when we profess on our lips to reject it and worship our old indigenous institutions and ideas.

One effect of this attitude of mind on the part of our rulers and wiser leaders is the increased efficiency and purity of the administration and the various agencies of social service, by conscious persistent effort. To take one instance only, official bribery was admitted to be immoral even in Moghul times, and yet almost all the officials practised it and no edict of the emperor could stop it. The English in the days of Warren Hastings and Cornwallis, took over the rotten remnant of the Mughal administration, and set about reforming it. Their strength lay not only in the solid phalanx of absolutely honest and dependable English officers (after deducting a small number of corrupt or weak ones),—but also in their perseverance and activity, their long-thought-out plans and ceaseless continuity of exertion for purifying the administration. The removal of this abuse has been possible because it has not been dependent on the personality of this governor or that, but has been adopted as the policy and pursued as a generally desired thing by the entire European society in India—both official and non-official. The public have cordially helped the State in purifying the administration.

In fact, modern European civilisation contains within itself a spirit of self-criticism and a perennial desire for reform by voluntary effort. The shock of foreign conquest or the creed of a foreign prophet is not required to awaken the nation to a sense of the moral canker that is eating into its vitals. The people are too self-conscious to forget the malady in their body politic. It is daily proclaimed to them from the press and the pulpit.

THE INDIAN RENAISSANCE

The greatest gift of the English, after universal peace and modernisation of society—and indeed the direct result of these two forces,—is the Renaissance which marked our 19th century. Modern India owes everything to it. This Renaissance was at first an intellectual awakening and influenced our literature, education, thought, and art; but in the next generation it became a moral force and reformed our society and religion. Still later, in the third generation from its commencement it has led to the beginning of the economic modernisation of India.

When the English power first asserted itself in India in the middle of the 18th century, the country had reached the lowest point of moral decay and political weakness. Northern India had enjoyed a fairly long spell of peace and growth of wealth during the 160 years of stable rule under the Mughal emperors from 1570 to 1730. But thereafter material prosperity had been destroyed, the population thinned, trade and communication interrupted, and culture thrown backwards, by incessant warfare among small States, or between rival claimants to the throne, and the incursions of predatory bands that took advantage of the anarchy and the administrative weakness following the eclipse of the great empire of Delhi. Over the Mysore plateau and the Madras Karnatak, the fall of the Vijayanagar empire (1565) had let loose the dogs of civil war and rapine. After 1687, the dissolution of the sultanates of Bijapur and Golkonda—which had maintained peace and order in these parts for about a hundred years—left this country a prey to four sets of contending but weak authorities,—the representatives of the old Hindu rulers, the now masterless vassals and captains of Bijapur and Golkonda, the Mughal conqueror (who claimed to be their heir-at-law), and the Maratha intruders. The economic desolation caused by these forces is graphically described in the old Factory Records of Madras and the memoirs of the founder of Pondicherry.

In the next century, i. e., the eighteenth, began the succession wars in the families of the Nizam and the Nawab of Arcot, which ravaged this unhappy land for a generation.

On the western side of the Deccan, the downfall, first of the Bahmani Empire (c. 1526) and then of its successor, the monarchy of Ahmadnagar (c. 1600), caused local aspirants to kingship to fight out their ceaseless wars of ambition throughout the first half of the 17th century, while in the second half of that century, the rise of the Marathas and then the Mughal-Maratha struggle denied peace and quiet to the troubled country till the rise of the Peshwas (c. 1730).

Northern India became a scene of plunder and slaughter after the death of the Emperor Muhammad Shah (1748), and this anarchy ceased only with Lord Lake's victorious entrance into Delhi in 1803.

Bengal had greatly prospered under the Mughal peace from the reign of Jahangir (when the last remnant of Pathan power and the refractory independent zamindars were crushed by the Delhi forces) to the battle of Plassey (1757). But that battle had encouraged up-country robber-hands, calling themselves Sannyasis or fakirs, to flock to the province which was supposed to be masterless after the fall of its old Nawabs. It taxed all the energy and organising genius of Warren Hastings to stamp out the Sannyasi pest, but he succeeded in the end.

In fact, the unsettled condition of the country and the decay of normal civilised life among the people can be best judged from the fact that just before Wellesley imposed British suzerainty over the country, i. e., at the end of the 18th century, there were a million mercenary soldiers seeking employment at any Indian Court that would hire them. These men had no loyalty, no local patriotism, no discipline. The ruin of agriculture and trade over most parts of India as the result of the disintegration of the Mughal empire, drove all strong and ambitious men to seek their livelihood by flocking to the profession of soldiers of fortune or to that of robbers.

Thus it happened that in the middle years of the 18th century, Mughal civilisation which had done so much good to India from the reign of Akbar to that of Aurangzib, was like a spent bullet; all its life and vigour were gone. This rottenness at the core of Indian Society first made itself felt in the form of military and political weakness. The country could not defend itself; royalty was hopelessly depraved and imbecile; the nobles were selfish and short-sighted; corruption, inefficiency and treachery disgraced all branches of the public service. In the midst of this decay and confusion, literature, art and even true religion perished.

Just at this time the West struck India with irresistible impact, though its full force was concealed for one generation, namely the period from Clive to Cornwallis. Then followed what we may rightly call the dark age of modern India; the period extending from Cornwallis to Bentinck (or roughly 1790 to 1830), during which the old order was dead, but the new had not yet begun, and nobody could foresee what shape the life and thought of India to come would take.

In the interests of efficiency and public good, the Indians were totally excluded from the public service, the command of the army, and the control of education.* The future seemed hopelessly dark to the great grandsons of Aurangzib's generals and Ministers, poets and scholars who found themselves reduced to obscurity and unemployment in the early British administration.

But the destruction of the old order which took place under Warren Hastings and Cornwallis was a necessary process before the new order could come into being. It was a painful, but indispensable operation, like the burning of the stubble on the reaped field, as a preparation for the next crop.... I therefore prefer to call it the "seed time of New India."

At the end of this period, i. e., in Lord William Bentinck's time, we find Indians again beginning to take an honourable and responsible part in guiding their countrymen's thoughts, shaping the national life, and conducting the country's government. But these were Indians of a new breed; they drew their inspiration and their strength not from the East but from the West. They had acquired English learning and had thus properly equipped themselves for the work of the modern age. They were the first fruits of the Indian Renaissance and their prophet was Ram

* "The system established by Lord Cornwallis was based upon the principle of doing everything by European agency.....The plan which Lord William Bentinck substituted for this was to transact the public business by native agency under European Superintendence." (Trevelyan).

Mohan Roy, whose life (1774-1833) exactly bridges this dark age in the history of modern India.

ENGLISH EDUCATION.

The history of the Indian Renaissance is profoundly interesting and deserves a detailed treatment. It began with our study of English literature and modern philosophy and science from books written in the English language. Raja Ram Mohan Roy was the first Indian to write books in English and he visited England. The beginnings of English education can be traced even earlier than his time, but the knowledge of English acquired by his predecessors,—whether in Bengal or in Madras,—was limited to the requirements of clerks and interpreters serving English masters, it was not pursued as an instrument of culture by our entire literate class. As early as 1790 we find an appeal published in a Calcutta paper by a Bengali gentleman inviting some European to write a grammar of the English language for the benefit of the Bengali people.

But from 1810 onwards we find English education, at first of the school standard, spreading throughout Bengal, thanks to the efforts of the Christian missions. Two external causes contributed to this development of schools: (i) Lord Wellesley's conquests not only established British paramountcy and gave internal peace to India, but extended the English dominion throughout that ancient home of civilisation, the Gangetic valley up to Delhi.

(ii) The missionaries were allowed by the Marquis of Hastings to carry on their propaganda in British territory instead of being confined to the Danish settlement of Serampur, as they had been by the East India Company's orders up to 1810.

The College of Fort William, which the far-sighted Wellesley had founded in 1800, though it was soon afterwards starved and curtailed, gave a great impetus to English education, by bringing European officer-students and Indian teachers together, and compelling each to learn the language of the other. This college, however, did not tend to diffuse the knowledge of English among our countrymen. Up to Lord William Bentinck's time (1835) it was held by Government that European philosophy and science should be taught to the Indians by translation into Sanskrit and Arabic, and not through the medium of English.

But long before that date the people had taken their destiny into their own hands and begun to flock to the English schools started by the missionaries and by a few enlightened Indians. English education was not a gift of E. I. Company's government, though some financial aid was given to it by the State from 1835 onwards. Previous to that date*

* There was one exception. The General Committee of Public Instruction, constituted in 1823 undertook "to take under their patronage and greatly improve the Hindu College at Calcutta, which had been founded as far back as 1816, by the voluntary contributions of the natives themselves for the instruction of their youth in English literature and science." English classes were afterwards established in connection with the Muhammadan and Sanskrit colleges at Calcutta, the Sanskrit College at Benares, and the Agra College; and a separate institution was founded at Delhi in 1829 for the cultivation of Western learning (Trevelyan, 3-4). The Scottish missionary, Dr. Duff, opened his college in Calcutta in 1830.

all the expenses of the schools had been borne by the pupils, the missionaries, or Indian donors and English subscribers. As late as 1850, nearly 47 per cent. of the total educational expenditure in Bengal was met from the pupils' fees and private subscriptions.

The passion of young Bengal to study English literature even before Lord William Bentinck opened the subordinate civil service to them in 1834, is well illustrated by Sir Charles Trevelyan.

"On the opening of the Hughli College, in August 1836, students of English flocked to it in such numbers as to render the organization and classification of them a matter of difficulty. Twelve hundred names were entered on the books of this department of the college within three days..... There appears to be no limit to the number of scholars except that of the number of teachers whom the Committee [of public instruction,] is able to provide. Notwithstanding the extraordinary concourse of English students at Hughli, the demand was so little exhausted, that when an auxiliary school was lately opened within two miles of the college, the English department of it was instantly filled and numerous applicants were sent away unsatisfied." ["On the Education of the People of India", 1836, p. 82.]

He continues: "The curiosity of the people is thoroughly roused, and the passion for English knowledge has penetrated the most obscure, and extended to the most remote parts of India. The steam boats, passing up and down the Ganges, are boarded by native boys, begging not for money, but for books.....Some English gentlemen coming to Calcutta were astonished at the eagerness with which they were pressed for books by a troop of boys, who boarded the steamer from an obscure place called Kumarkhali [120 miles north of Calcutta.]... The gentlemen at last hit upon the expedient of cutting up an old Quarterly Review, and distributing the articles among them." (p. 167).

From 1835, when Government adopted the policy of giving State aid and supervision to schools teaching English, in preference to those teaching Oriental classical languages, English schools multiplied very quickly, their number was trebled in Bengal in the next five years (1836-40). Another impetus was given to the movement by Sir Henry Hardings, who, on 10th October 1841, issued a resolution announcing that in future preference would be given, in first appointments, to candidates educated in the Government English schools. Ten years rolled by, and then our educational edifice was crowned by the establishment of a University on the model of the London University in each of our three Presidencies, —as ordered in the Despatch of 1854 and passed by legislation in 1857.

[The following foot-note to the article is from the pen of the Editor, Prabuddha Bharata :—

From this rapid survey of the beginning and establishment of English rule in India, as given in Prof. Sarkar's article, the wary reader may be led to infer that the Indians all along remained passive and dull under the growing foreign influence. Whereas it is quite true that the meeting of the East and West in India was accomplished mainly through the agency of the English and that India in seeking to adjust herself with the modern world has to adopt many Western ideas and forms, it will be quite unhistorical to think that India passively swallowed things without any consciousness of her precious heritage—a heritage which, as is being increasingly realised, has a very potent and significant message for India and the world. What happened is this: India naturally was in a very weak condition at the disruption of the Mughal rule. When the Western culture was introduced, India could not make an immediate response. But very soon the undying ancient spirit asserted itself. It is very significant that Sri Ramakrishna who represents the highest synthesis of Eastern and Western thought, was born in a village where the Western culture was totally unknown, and that his upbringing and self-realisation were absolutely untouched by any direct or indirect Western influence. Swami Dayananda who also represented modernism to a degree in his teaching and outlook was a monk and scholar of the purely ancient style. The Indian Renaissance was not, in fact, a gift of the English, but a product of the Indian spirit seeking adjustment with the new and foreign outlook and culture. Ram Mohan Roy who was a pioneer of the new era in India, surely drew his main inspiration from the Upanishads. It will be dishonouring his memory to say that he drew his strength and inspiration from the West and not from the East. Similarly, to say that the progressiveness of modern India is a gift of the English is to deny all the past progress and achievements of India. No race can rise up to new situations or even learn new lessons, unless it has the motive power already within itself. The new situation and the circumstances may have been created by the English, but the tendency and power to meet them are surely India's. It does not take away from the originality of any nation if it assimilates foreign forms and ideas to serve its own intrinsic purpose.]

BOMBAY CHILDREN AID SOCIETY.

REPORT OF A YEAR'S WORK.

It will be remembered that a little over a year ago a Society, formed for the purpose of working the Children Act and known as the Bombay Children Aid Society, was established in Bombay for which Government provided a grant of Rs. 20,250. A Juvenile Court was established under the Act and Government spent nearly Rs. 19,000 in remodelling and refitting a large portion of the old common prison at Umarkhadi so as to make it suitable for a Juvenile Court and a Remand Home. This building was handed over to the Bombay Children Aid Society rent free for five years to assist the Society in carrying out the purposes of the Society.

The results of the first year's working of the Children Act are now available. The Juvenile Court was established on the 1st May 1927 and was at first presided over by a Presidency Magistrate. Subsequently a Lady Honorary Magistrate was associated with him. The Court at first held two sittings a week but from the middle of February last these were reduced to one a week, as the work was insufficient to justify two sittings a week. Recently, however, the work has again increased and it now appears that one sitting a week is inadequate.

During the year, 120 notices were issued by the Court requiring the removal from immoral surroundings of 134 children, boys and girls, ranging in age from eight months to 16 years. Besides, the Court dealt with 494 boys and 44 girls arrested by the Police and placed before the Court for various offences. Of these 256 boys were charged under the Indian Penal Code, 94 under the Police Act, 78 under the Children Act, 19 under the Gambling Act and one under the Criminal Tribes Act. The results of the trials show that 147 boys were bound over, 90 discharged, 26 acquitted, 29 sent to the B. J. Home, Matunga, 71 to the David Sassoon Reformatory, 40 were handed over to relatives or guardians, 19 were fined, three were sent to the Happy Home for the Blind, five to the Salvation Army Industrial Home, one to the Institute for the Deaf and two to the Willingdon Boys' Home. The court tried 25 girls, of whom 11 were charged under the Indian Penal Code, seven under the Police Act and five under the Children Act. Six of these were bound over, four discharged, five were acquitted and three were handed over to relatives. There were cases of 41 boys and 18 girls still pending before the Juvenile Court on May 31st.

"It is to my mind one of the most satisfactory features of the Act" says the Chief Presidency Magistrate, "that arrangements now exist for the trial of children by methods which certainly tend to deal more sympathetically and individually with the youthful delinquent. The fact that all these boys and girls were from the time of their arrest prevented by the present methods from further contamination by association with the adult criminal is in itself a satisfactory feature."

Provisions exist in the Act for the release of youthful offenders on probation. "These provisions are of very little use" says the Chief Presidency Magistrate "unless adequate arrangements exist for the supervision of the offender during the probationary period by a Probation Officer. The voluntary Probation Officer has failed to make a favourable impression. It is in my opinion extremely desirable that posts of probation officers should be made whole time appointments on suitable salaries."

Section 32 of the Act states that no child is to be detained in a certified school beyond the time when he will, in the opinion of the Court, attain the age of 16 years. In the case of children between the ages of 14 and 16 it is considered impossible to send them to a Certified School with any hope of beneficial results. The period is far too short to permit of any institution exercising the reformatory and educative influence for which it is intended. This position has been recognised by the Presidency Magistrates for several years and it has always been the practice for Magistrates in Bombay to commit boys to the Reformatories for periods of three years and over. The Chief Presidency Magistrate therefore recommends the age limit in this section should be extended to 18 years.

A suggestion is also put forward for the appointment of an additional magistrate both to relieve the general congestion of the work in the courts and to permit of the Presidency Magistrate of the Juvenile Court devoting more time than he is able at present to this very important part of duties. This suggestion is under the consideration of Government as also the other two recommendations of the Chief Presidency Magistrate.

The Special Remand Home at Umarkhadi which is designed specially for the reception of children pending the disposal of their cases before the Juvenile Court received 537 children during the year under review and the daily average number of children in the home was 51.7.

There are at present nine schools certified under the Act. They are essential part of the machinery for its working, but unfortunately they have not always given satisfaction although the best schools available have been utilized. A good standard of discipline and the provision of adequate safeguards against escapes are essential. It is in this latter respect more particularly that some difficulty has been found. The question is however engaging the attention of Government.

The operation of the Act is on account of financial stringency at present confined to Bombay City and the Municipal Borough of Lonavla.

WOMEN'S MOVEMENTS IN JAPAN.

No change ever wrought by the advance of times and imported alien civilization is more remarkable in this country than that which has occurred in the social position and status of the fair sex. If the enlightenment attained by Japan during the Meiji era is wonderful, still more wonderful is the steadiness with which have the women of Japan come to the forefront of society in the course of the Taisho era,—the women, indeed, whose world was, until but recently confined in name and fact within the compass of their families, and whose position in that extremely narrow world closely bordered on slavery in a broad sense.

The first public movement by Japanese women ever made in any cause of public cognizance was the one which first got its impetus from the Russo-Japanese War, culminating in the organization of the Women's Patriotic Association in 1907 with the members now exceeding 1,500,000. Subsequently more than a score of women's organizations of different causes were brought into existence, but it was not before 1921 that the first movement tinged with a social policy was launched in this country. In the early part of 1921 the Association of the Proletarian Women was for the first time established by that veteran pioneer of the women's cause in Japan, Madam Umeo Oku. As the years advanced later, the number of the women's organizations looking towards one or another cause of the fair sex or society has been briskly multiplied until it has swelled to something like 43 inclusive of the local establishments but exclusive of branch organizations.

An interesting phase of the Japanese women's movements is that the movements were first confined to social causes such as the protection of children, rescue of the helpless, relief of the bereaved families of the soldiers killed in war, and salvation of the degenerated women: but that it has gradually come to assume a peculiar political colour with a bold departure towards women's emancipation.

This tendency has become all the more conspicuous since the birth of the proletarian associations and political parties, and now asserts itself with such positivity in various affairs of society and politics, that not a little response has been called forth in its own favour.

As in the case of any emancipation movement, the Japanese women's movements in social and political causes are making no very speedy progress, and yet with sure and steady steps towards the goal. To cite the most salient of instances where the movements of the women have by this time been duly rewarded, the following may be noted with no small interest:

Legal:—The women have practically succeeded in getting the attorneys' license act and criminal code so revised as to render the women eligible to the attorneyship, and also to share equally with their husbands the duty of chastity which has hitherto been unilateral with the fair sex. In this country in trying a fornication case the Court used to find the women alone guilty, but according to the Government bill introduced in the preceding session of the Diet, which unfortunately proved abortive on account of the dissolution, the man fornicator will in future be punished as much as the female fornicator.

Political:—The women have succeeded in passing through the Diet for enforcement by the Government in the near future their petition for investment of the fair sex with public citizenship, and also in asserting the women's liberty of participating in any political organizations. As a consequence in many local cities and towns in the country, women are entitled to membership of various administrative and other systems and establishments. In Tokyo, for instance, a female member is returned already for the Atago-oho town assemblage in Shiba ward, while in Yamaguchi prefecture out of the 20 members of the Yuzuno village agricultural society 19 are female members.

Then again, in Osaka a woman has recently been appointed Head of the Osaka Public Intelligence Office, this first woman head of a public institute in Japan being Madam Yoshiko Tsutsumi.

Social:—The freedom of the factory girls to go out of their workshops at any time they want has been recognized by the Tokyo Muslim Company, although the factory girls have hitherto had to lead in their manufactories a practically imprisoned life for the terms contracted. The example will be followed by all the other factories in the near future. The general shipping companies have come to recognize the eligibility of women to ships' captainship, and as the first captain ever registered in this country has already been appointed Miss Tsuchiko Katayama.

Educational:—A success has been secured at length by the women movers in persuading the Government authorities to estimate the sum of ¥ 350,000 next year for the creation of the first Government Higher Technical School of Women.

A private women's college called Bunka Gakuin has been established by Dr. Yoshino and other scholars interested in the women's cause, for three years' economic course for graduates from the higher girls schools, while the women's higher commercial school, the first of the kind in Japan has been brought into existence by Mr. Yoshijiro Kobayashi, principal of the Hinode Higher Girls School. The school authorities have been persuaded to entitle women as well to the right of gaining the degree (scholastic), and already the Doctorship of Science has been conferred on Professress Konoko Yasui, of the Tokyo Higher Women's Normal School, this being the first female Doctor in this land.

The women's movements have gained momentum as they succeeded in the above movements in various fields of activities, social and political, and with renewed force they are going to push on the following still more important causes to be accomplished.

Social:—Abolition of prostitutes system.

Stricter temperance act.

Exclusion of the geisha girls from public assemblages of any nature.

No more licence to be granted for geisha girls, dancers, and cafe-maids.

Patriotic Savings movement among the women's associations and higher girls school students to girls school students to persuade them to save one sen per diem for six years to redeem the Empire's foreign debts.

Protection of women workers and juvenile workers.

Political:—Enfranchisement of the women.

Election of Mayors by citizens.

Legal:—To so revise the existing civil code as:—

To make wife's consent essential to the legal validity of husband's recognition of his illegitimate children.

To give the legitimately born girls the right of precedence over illegitimately born boys recognized by the husbands later, in succeeding to the headship of a family.

To entitle women to the right of sharing the the privilege of inheriting parents' estates with their brothers.

Educational:—Elevation of women's school status.

International:—Apart from peace movement, the women of Japan have come to small interest in the various international conferences of the fair sex and will always insist to send their delegates whenever any subjects of their own interest are to be discussed at such conferences.

For the attainment of these aims the women bodies and associations are making efforts at the same time for the closer co-operations among themselves by establishing association halls and leagues of associations. The most salient of the instances in point is the proposed shakehand between the Proletarian Women's League and the Women's Suffrage Union for their common aim of acquiring the right of voting.—The Young East, Japan.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Ra. a. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER-BOOK DEPOT.,
 Royapuram, Madras.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

A Human Document.—By Mr. V. S. Sohoni. The life of a Dhed in Bombay. Reprinted from the Reformer. Price annas 4.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
 THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
 Navsarl Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

UNDER THE PUBLIC PATRONAGE.

The Bombay Swadeshi Co-operative Stores Company Limited, will open their New Premises at Cruikshank Road, Near Esplanade Police Court on Thursday the 27th September 1928 at 5-30 P.M. (S. T.)

ALL ARE CORDIALLY INVITED.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY:

1. The Re-Birth of Hindu Music.—By Rudhyat of Carlos Salzedo, America A French—American, Composer—Philosopher—Poet, considered as a friend as well as a genius.
 'In his knowledge and sincerity, his strength and his industry, he is the musical peer of many celebrities who have gained real support and attention in our country.'—Los Angeles Record. Artistic get up. Price Rs. 5. Cloth and Gold. Rs. 3-12 Double wrapper.
2. The Gita and Spiritual Life.—By D. S. Sarma, M.A., Prof. Presidency College, Madras, and author of Introduction to Bhagavat Gita. Boards: Price Rs. 1-8; Wrappers Rs. 1-2.
3. Lord Buckmaster's Speech on Birth Control.—A pamphlet issued on behalf of the Madras Malthusian League. Price As. 2.

REPRINTS.

1. Bhagavad Gita.—Text and translation—By Dr. Annie Besant. (5th Adyar Pocket Edition). Price As. 4.
2. At the Feet of the Master.—By J. Krishnamurti (7th Indian Edition Standard Size—Big type). Price As. 8.
3. Seven Rays.—By Prof. E. Wood (3rd Edition) Price Cloth Rs. 3; Wrappers. Rs. 2-4.
4. Concentration.—By Prof. E. Wood (8th Edition) Price Cloth Re. 1-8; Boards 1-4; Wrappers Re. 1.

Shortly Ready:—Our New Publications.

1. The Quest.—By Sadhu T. L. Vaswani—No. 3 of the Glimpses series—Inspiring Poems.
2. The Diary of a Disciple.—By Sadhu T. L. Vaswani—No. 4 of the Glimpses series—Inspiring Poems.

REPRINTS:

1. Old Diary Leaves.—By Colonel H. S. Olcott, The President Founder of the Theosophical Society. Volume II (Long Out of Print).
 Deals with the period from 1878 to 1883 embracing the novel and exciting incidents of the establishment for our movement in India and Ceylon from which such momentous results have followed.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 ADYAR, MADRAS, S.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

India Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
The Indian Social Reformer,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhoea and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lochra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex", Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000
London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh).
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Mategaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Aklaj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulla (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorized Capital Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ... Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :--BARODA.

Branches :--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwarka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS :

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).

Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).

Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd. Baroda.)

Mr. Nawroji B. Saklatwala, C.I.E., (Tata Sons Ltd, Bombay).

Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26. C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

Fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free.

To every purchaser of our "Luxorette" lever Radium Silvered Pocket Watch, guaranteed for five years, costing Rupees five, we give our fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free. Write now. The radium pocket watch has strong mechanism and well built and can be seen well in nights without the help of lights. Please order soon.

Price Rs. 5 only.

Address :--SWAN HOUSE,
P. B. No. 508. P. T. MADRAS.

WANTED

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Master's Classes. Full particulars and Railway Fare Certificate on 2 annas stamp. Apply to:--Central Telegraph College, Delhi.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).

Rs. s. p.

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office : Esplanade Road, Fort, BOMBAY.

SIR D. J. TATA, Kt., CHAIRMAN.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	Rs. 6,00,00,000
SUBSCRIBED " " " "	3,56,05,275
PAID UP " " " "	71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS " " " "	1,15,36,676

FIRE INSURANCE.—A Tariff rates for all classes. Chart schedules prepared. Advice given. Facilities for dealing with total insurance of clients.

CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS, i.e. Loss of Profits etc. as a result of fire.

MARINE INSURANCE.—The aim is to provide insurance for Merchants on conditions similar to those obtainable in London, the world's largest Marine Insurance Market.

MOTOR CAR ASSURANCE.—Complete cover in every way and prompt settlements of Claims.

BAGGAGE INSURANCE at reasonable rates whilst travelling by land or sea.

ALL RISKS INSURANCE covering jewellery and other valuables in any situation.

OTHER CLASSES OF INSURANCE also transacted.

Apply to THE GENERAL MANAGER.

London Agents :—Sedgwick Collins (Agencies) Ltd.

Manager for U. S. A. :—Summer Ballard.

Agencies also at Poona, Calcutta, Madras, Karachi, Ahmedabad, Rangoon, Peking, Singapore, Colombo, East Africa, etc. etc.

R. J. DUFF, GENERAL MANAGER.

A. K. JOSHI & Co.Kalbadevi Road, B O M B A Y.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,

The Hindustan Review.

PATNA, E. I. R.

THE GUARDIAN

—:0:—
A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-
Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

"Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise."

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
(A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

BOMBAY OFFICE }
Kalbadevi Road. } Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 51, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

C-11-26,

Bombay.

PAPER!

PAPER!!

CHEAPEST HOUSE
FOR
ALL KINDS OF PAPER.

AMERICAN BOND PAPER A SPECIALITY

Ledger Paper, Writing Paper, Printing Paper, Rough Paper, Croft Paper, Brown Paper and all kinds of Paper available at a Very Modest Price. Glazed and unglazed Creamlaid, etc, etc.

ANY COLOUR READY FOR DELIVERY.

Ruby Manila Envelopes—All Current Sizes Available.

Hoogly Printing Inks—All Colours.

Superior Quality! Satisfaction Guaranteed!!
SEND TRIAL ORDER AND SATISFY YOURSELVES.

Apply for Catalogue and quotation to:

G. A. ACHARYA & Co.,

MERCHANTS & AGENTS,

IMPORT & EXPORT,

26, Parsee Bazar Street,

FORT, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1928

No. 4

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Ganga Ram Institutions. Neglect of Women's Education. The Always Settlement. The Health and Sarda Bill. An Effective Reply. Encouragement of Indian Art. Settlement at Jambhedpur. Britain and India. Hindu Conversion and Indian Family Law.	Women's World Convention in Lausanne. Profits and War. An Amicable Settlement. Legislation to Suppress Devadasihood. Hindu Law Amendment. Temperance Organisation. News of the Week.
--	---

NOTES.

The Ganga Ram Institutions:—The Annual Report of the Sir Ganga Ram Trust Society for the year 1927 has been just published. The delay in publication is due to the death of Sir Ganga Ram as it has taken some time for the present workers to gather the threads of the system. Originally the various institutions of the Trust used to publish separate reports but it has been decided by the Trust Society to publish the report of the working of the Trust as a whole. The institutions conducted by the Trust are a free hospital, an organisation for popularising widow marriages, a business bureau and library, an industrial shop, an ashram for the old and the infirm, and a students' career society. The Vidhya Vivah Sabha Sabha is an all-India organisation with offices at Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Hardwar, Muttra and Jaipur. The Sabha is anxious to push forward this reform in all the provinces but the work can only be done if there is some local response and if a band of honorary workers can be secured locally. It is due to this that the Sabha has not extended its activities to the Central Provinces, Central India, and most Indian states. The ambition of the Committee is to popularise widow marriages. The free hospital which enters into the ninth year of its existence has extended its work and is now installing an X-ray plant. The various departments are conducted under the supervision of highly qualified men and the hospital is one of the most successful institutions founded by Sir Ganga Ram. The Hindu Students' Career Society advances loans to students in order to enable them to prosecute their studies in India. The Business Bureau aims at attracting young men to neglected fields of business and to manual labour. The Industrial Shop was started in 1926 with the object of selling articles made by widows and other women at a fair price. A workshop, attached to the Industrial Shop, is designed to afford work for ten widows. The Hindu Apahaj Ashram affords refuge to those who are incapacitated either by old age or disease from earning their livelihood and who have no one to support them. There are besides these institutions, three others—the Hindu Widows Home, the Lady Maynard Industrial School, and the Hailey College of Commerce—which owe their existence to Sir Ganga Ram. A fund was started with foundation of the Trust to help poor Hindus. The death of Sir Ganga Ram is a great loss to these institutions in which he took a personal interest. We are glad, however, to note that the work is in capable hands and that the institutions are being conducted in the spirit in which he started them.

Neglect of Women's Education:—The discussion on Mr. Chatterjee's resolution in the Legislative Assembly recommending that steps may be taken for the furtherance of female education in the centrally-administered territories by establishing an up-to-date college, revealed that only eight pies per head were spent on girls' education in these areas. Considering the appalling illiteracy among women, one would have expected that Lala Lajpat Rai's amendment for the establishment of a women's college with departments for Arts, Science and Training would have found acceptance. Instead the experience of Lady Hardinge Medical College at Delhi was cited to show that a sufficient number of girls was not attracted. The experience of provinces like Madras and Bombay, where Arts colleges attracted more students than the professional colleges seems to have completely escaped the attention of the Secretary for Education of the Government of India. We are glad that the repeated attempts of Mr. Chatterjee to withdraw the resolution as he was satisfied with the sympathetic assurance of Government to appoint a Committee of inquiry were not allowed and the resolution as amended was carried. By this resolution the Government of India have agreed to appoint a Committee, consisting of educational experts and prominent women, which will be guided by the following terms of reference to inquire into: (1) the existing facilities for primary education for girls and boys; (2) the possibilities of expansion, whether on a voluntary or compulsory basis, with special regard to the attitude of the local population; and (3) the necessity of providing special facilities for communities generally known as 'untouchables' and to make certain recommendations.

The Always Settlement:—Much real and earnest work has been done for the education and uplift of the poor and the "outcaste" at the Always Settlement during the first year of its existence. The Settlement started with 10 children to care for and educate and in the course of a year it was able to extend its help to 10 more. To those who are aware of the rigidity of the caste system prevalent in the extreme south it will be particularly interesting to know that all the twenty are children of converts from the "outcastes" in different parts of Travancore and Cochin. They are the children of Pariah and Pulaya converts to Christianity. The work of the settlement is carried on by trained men and women with a devotion and zeal worthy of the cause they have espoused. The education of the children is conducted in modern lines by what is known as "the Project Method" or "the Moga System". Besides this the children are encouraged to busy themselves with such activities as agriculture, carpentry and poultry farming. The satisfactory progress of the institution is due to the liberal support of sympathisers. Having no funds of its own and admission of children being free, the Settlement depends solely on public charity. It is run on the most economic lines in that the total cost of maintaining a boy is only Rs. 5 a month. The public, we are sure, will not fail to recognise the real spirit of sacrifice underlying this work and the surest form of recognition is to help to place the Settlement on a firm financial footing.

The Health and Sarda Bill:—The Health, a monthly magazine conducted by two well-known doctors, gives its warm support to Sarda Bill in its September number. Our contemporary gives facts and figures to show how important Sarda Bill is with regard to the health and well-being of the Indian nation. "No other country in the world", writes the journal "than this unhappy land presents the sorry spectacle of having in its population, child widows, who according to the customs of the country cannot re-marry. The cruelty, horror and inhumanity of this social custom can only be apparent if we closely study the census figures of 1921. The Report says that in 1921 there were in India 612 Hindu widows who were babies not even 12 months old, 493 between 1 and 2 years, 1285 between 2 and 3, 2863 between 3 and 4 and 6758 who were between 4 and 5 years of age making a total of 12,016 widows under 5 years of age. The number of Hindu widows between 5 and 10 years of age was 85,580 and those between 10 and 15, 2,33,533. The total number of widows under 10 was 97,596 and under 15 was 3,31,793. A further analysis of the figures disclose the gruesome tale that out of every 1000 Hindu married women, 14 are under 5 years of age, 111 below 10 and 437 under 15 years of age. This means that a little over 11 per cent of the Hindu women are supposed to lead a married life when they are below 10 years of age i.e., when they are mere children playing in the pials and streets and that nearly 44 per cent of them lead married lives when they are less than 15 years of age i.e., when they are not yet out of their teens and before they have attained real and full physical puberty and maturity befitting them to bear the strain of marital relations and the burden of motherhood."

An Effective Reply:—To those who question the right of Government to interfere in Social legislation, the Health gives an effective reply as follows:—"In answer to this question, we would say, the Government have every right to interfere, when the social evil transcends all moral law and when it tends to lower the society in the estimation of the outside world. Had not the Government abolished sati—a cruel and barbarous custom though it might have proceeded, as some contend, from the purest of motives on the part of the widow to resolve to ascend her dead husband's pyre and be burnt alive with him rather than suffer life-long widowhood and misery in this world? What is the motive behind infant-marriage? Is there anything beyond greed and love of wealth? Are the infant-brides in a position to understand the meaning and import of the marriage rituals? The advanced section of the society must lead the way and the Legislative Assembly representing the people have done the only thing they could do, with their limited powers, viz., to bring in a non-official Bill and force a wavering Government to eradicate a long-standing social evil. Penalty for social offences of this sort is not new or unknown to India."

Encouragement of Indian Art:—The Society for the Encouragement of Indian Art has once again given the public of Bombay an opportunity to witness and appreciate what is truly beautiful in Indian Art. The Exhibition of Ancient and Modern Art in the Townhall, organised by the Society was opened by Her Highness the Maharani of Kapurthala on Wednesday evening. Her Highness the Maharani Saheba made a fine speech in which she said:—"Art in India has become a special subject which in reality should be part of the nations' existence, and, because of its departure from its natural basis, the organising of such exhibitions has evidently become a necessity. In the days of old it was always the woman's function to give attention to art as a necessary in the course of every day life and that is why in every part of life it asserted itself unconsciously and made its home in every corner of the country. A huge pile of stones and hills were turned into exquisite pieces of art and we have these monuments still whispering to us the spirit and mind of our people. Of late India however has suffered a good deal in its culture as the conditions are not conducive to its progress. The history and tradition of art originated with a woman and its subsequent distribution fell to her lot, so why should not the same tradition be taken up by the present generation and continued in a manner adapted to the conditions of to-day and thus give it a place in the history of art in our times? It appears for the first time in the modern history of India, attempts are made to place before the public the indigenous art of the country so that the true spirit of the culture of our nation should be understood by them. I have had the occasion to see many exhibitions organised and termed Indian Art. But they have been more mockery than a compliment to our national culture. Therefore we have to welcome such attempts as the present one made by the society. I have heard that on the last occasion a proposal had been made for establishing a National Academy of Indian Art and in the interest of the country I hope the promoters of this body will bring it to function."

Settlement at Jamshedpur:—Much satisfaction is felt at the admirable way in which the dispute between the workers at Jamshedpur and

(Continued in the Leader page.)

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1928.

BRITAIN AND INDIA.*

In his book "The British connection with India", Mr. K. T. Paul seeks an answer to two questions: "What does India want?" and "What does Britain want?" His answer to the first question is clear. India wants to perfect her nationhood and she wants an international position. But Mr. Paul leaves the second question practically without an answer. And so does Lord Ronaldshay, the late Governor of Bengal, who writes an appreciative Foreword to the book. Perhaps, an answer to the second question is immanent in the answer to the first. What India wants for herself, provided she wants it intensely, she must get. Mr. Paul shows how India has been stimulated to want her perfected nationhood and an international position by the influence of British rule and western education. The most striking feature of the book is the special care which the author has taken to show that the desire for a larger life did not originate, but has only been stimulated by the British connection. The originating causes lie deeply imbedded in the history of India the remarkable continuity of which Mr. Paul emphasises at the outset. "India", he observes "perhaps, is the one 'ancient' culture which has maintained a continuity of life and development right on to these 'modern times'". He continues:—

From the immortal Vedas and Upanishads for a thousand years to Gautama Buddha, who enlightened the whole of Asia; from him on for one thousand one hundred years till Sankara finally established on a high intellectual basis the movement toward the establishment of a rehabilitated Hinduism; then onwards to the arrival of Britain through another millennium which saw the rise of the various Bhakti movements, there is an even flow of thought and inquiry, of religious experience and social discipline. Meanwhile, empires had risen and fallen, dynasties had flourished and dwindled away, invaders had arrived, settled, and been assimilated, all these and their heroic deeds had been numbered with the accumulating "past glories" of India. Hindus knew better than to trust to the shifting sands of political power for conserving or developing their priceless culture. They entrusted it to something more fundamental to human nature—to a social organisation—and entrenched it in religious sanctions, engraven not in stone or metal, but in the tablets of the living hearts and consciences of the people.....

The deeper one realises the meaning of the inner history of Hindu culture, the clearer is the conviction that the continuity of its history, in spite of the most potent adverse circumstances within and without, is because its content, as also its discipline, is derived from certain eternal verities of human life and relationship.

Mr. Paul is a devout Christian, but he is nonetheless a devoted son of India and his ancestral faith. Unlike many Indian Christians, his Christianity does not oblige Mr. Paul to look down upon the Hindu faith and culture. On the contrary, it has helped him to a truer and more sympathetic understanding of Hindu and Indian history, just as a journey to a foreign land makes one's love for his own country, dormant so long as one was in it, manifest to oneself. We say that Mr. Paul is a better Hindu than many professing Hindus, just as some Hindus are better Christians than many professing Christians. His view-point is essentially identical with that of Ranade to whose "greatness of thought, at once solid and brilliant, his nobility of nature and capacity for hard work", he pays his heart-felt tribute. Ranade first taught us to view Indian history as a river into which many streams have poured their contents brought down from their distant hills; to regard each of the streams as a valuable contribution without which the main current would have been much the poorer; and to focus all our efforts on the task of utilising the main current through many channels to enrich the soil of our national life. Every particle of good in the past and the present should be jealously conserved; everything jarring and hurtful in them should be put aside. In his annual addresses to the Indian National Congress, Ranade applied this principle—the key principle—to various aspects and stages of Indian social and political history. His way of thinking, based on the true historic method, is at present not very popular. But there are signs which show that there is a reaction towards it, and of them none is more satisfactory than Mr. Paul's book which we heartily commend to our readers.

(Continued from the 2nd column of and Notes page.)

the management was settled. On this subject the Servant of India writes:—"There is hardly any one who will not rejoice at the successful termination of the protracted dispute at the Tata Works at Jamshedpur. The management ought to be heartily congratulated on the liberal terms they have offered to the men. Continuity of service has been promised to the men of the boilers and of sheet mills; increment up to Rs. 700,000 has been stipulated for; the most important feature is that there is to be no victimisation; in future men will not be dismissed without their grievances being considered by a Central Committee. Excepting wages during the strike period, the men have got substantially everything that they have a right to expect. As "Eaves-dropper" has said in Indian Finance, Mr. S. C. Bose has shown himself to be fair, open-minded and unwilling to pick a quarrel". Frequent strikes are hardly things which a pioneer industry can look on with perfect equanimity and the Jamshedpur works cannot withstand many such shocks. It is to be hoped that the settlement at Tata Works will have the result of expediting the adjustment of the outstanding issues between the employers and men in the Bombay Textile Industry."

* Student Christian Movement, London. 5 shillings.

HINDU CONVERSION AND INDIAN FAMILY LAW.

(By Mr. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI).

(Concluded from the last issue).

Obviously, the only possible expedient is to equalise the status of the two parties to a marriage. But this may be done either by helping the caste-endowed individual to become casteless, or by endowing the casteless person with the necessary caste. Each learned Judge chose his method according to his circumstances.

Mr. Justice Macpherson declared in favour of casteless equality. He conceded to every individual Hindu the right of renouncing caste or freeing himself from its marriage laws. He also gave the right of self-determination to the organised group of reformed Hindus, the Arya Samaj, recognising it as a "Sect". How far these principles of individual liberty and group-autonomy can be applied to other cases and other Missionary and Reform Organizations of the present day, may be considered after the Privy Council has decided any Appeal that may be preferred before it. But this much may, we hope, be said at once: In recognising and declaring the right of the Arya Samaj to govern its members by its own laws, although it is but a recent organization which came into existence long after the social laws and customs of the country had been consolidated and crystalized by the British Law Courts, and the power of replacing or remodelling them had been wrested and locked up by the British legislatures, his Lordship made a just attempt to release from improper duress those natural life-processes by which Hindu society progressed and Hindu law kept itself virile, elastic, up-to-date, beneficent and responsive to the needs of the people in pre-British times.

His Lordship of the Madras High Court, however, chose the other method, namely, that of conserving the caste of the party who had it and providing the necessary caste to the one who had it not. The impossibility of assigning any caste to a caste-free stranger did not stand in the way of admitting her into the religious fold of Hinduism. Within the Hindu family circle however, caste reigned supreme and must be propitiated, at least by some legal reasoning. But it seems to have been found difficult to assign to such convert any caste higher than that of a Sudra. The male party in question being a Vaisya, the case was precluded from coming under the ordinary law which requires that both parties shall be of equal caste-status. The aid of an ancient law-text permitting, though not favouring, marriage of any Hindu male with a woman of lower caste (but never on any account with a woman of higher caste), had therefore to be invoked. Such marriages have long been in disuse, but the law itself had never been abrogated and is therefore perfectly valid even now. It had also the advantage of having been in recent years applied in a case of two born-Hindus of unequal caste by the Bombay High Court. That law has therefore been adopted and extended to the present case of a Hindu convert of foreign origin, and her marriage with a born-Hindu of the Vaisya caste has been accordingly held valid.

Now it must be gratefully acknowledged at once that by this remarkable decision, the Madras High Court may be said to have advanced the cause of the reformers a long way. If we recall to our mind that even such a stalwart friend and leader of social reform like Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair had to throw overboard marriages of this kind as prohibited to Dwijias by Hindu law, in order to distinguish and save the marriage in hand which was of a Sudra, and further felt constrained to seek support from a special custom of the particular caste-division to which the bridegroom belonged and also its actual recognition of this very marriage by a long course of conduct (20 M. L. J.), we can appreciate at a glance the tremendous leap forward taken by the present decision without any adventitious aids. But at the same time we must recognise equally that the reformer is still left hung up in the air, as it were, though only by one leg. It is no consolation to him that this decision has salvaged half the cargo jettisoned by Sir Sankaran Nair. It has created a situation which is perhaps more uncomfortable to the reformer because more awkward and humiliating to self-respecting foreign converts than the wholesale jettisoning of the Dwijias, male and female. But no one can blame the learned High Court if, with all the good-will in the world to give due weight to the "trend of events", it has failed to make old bottles hold new wine. If it could have seen its way to recognise the Hindu Missionary Society, which officiated at the conversion and marriage in this case, as a legitimate autonomous off-shoot of the parent Hindu community, with inherent power therefore to frame a new family law for its members, as in the Patna case, the decision would have helped to revive and set in active operation an age-old life-principle of perennial youth by which Hindu society and Hindu law kept growing together hand-in-hand in the past. But barring that method, the only adequate and desirable source of relief to the reformer is the Indian Legislative Assembly. Luckily, since 1923, when Act III of 1872 was partly amended at the instance of Dr. Hari Singh Gour (though not as liberally as he wished and as the times are clamouring for), all persons claiming to profess the Hindu religion are free to intermarry under that Act without reference to their caste at all, and the distinction between Anuloma and Pratiloma has ceased to be a live issue except to those who have failed to avail themselves of that royal road. Hindu social reformers will, let us hope, realise hereafter that they will have themselves to blame if, on the question of marriage at any rate, they do not refuse to put themselves at the mercy of ancient law-texts and expect honourable judges to play the impossible role of legislators.

But, while conversion has its own legitimate place in Hindu religion as in every other, India, it must be remembered, has a higher mission than missionary Hinduism. If India, is the mother of Hinduism, she is also the loving foster-mother of all the religions of the world, and the native home of the universal principle of human brotherhood. The age of warring creeds—each eager to secure universal triumph for itself as the sole repository of absolute truth, and ambitious to establish a world-brotherhood of its own by manoeuvring the down-fall and destruction of all the rest—has been played out. A century of magnificent effort to establish a peaceful world-brotherhood by creating and spreading a flawless Esperanto of religions under the broad flag of Brahma-Dharma, has also discovered its limitations. Events are multiplying rapidly today which show that India has entered on a new age of strenuous endeavour to achieve world-brotherhood by the federation of all religions within her capacious bosom, where each religion, standing upright in all its strength, whole and unabashed, can proudly hold up its head and yet lovingly render brotherly service to all the rest, with perfect mutual understanding, tolerance and accomodation, that all may equally exalt and serve mankind. To bring about the first type of Universal Brotherhood, each warring creed provided itself long ago with its own family law, which the British Government has undertaken to administer to its adherents. The second type of Universal Brotherhood was implemented by the British Government itself by enacting the Special Marriage Act (III of 1872), burdening it however with a solemn declaration of unfaith in all known religions, to which the Brahma Samaj had to reconcile itself with the thought that an expurgated and composite religious scheme like theirs could not reasonably be regarded as identical with any of its contributory faiths. The third and latest type of Universal Brotherhood, which cannot, strictly speaking, be identified with any particular organisation although it is mainly fostered and propagated by the Theosophical Society, is rapidly finding practical expression in family life. But it is precluded by its very nature from disowning its faith in all religions and cannot therefore lean for support on Act III of 1872 so long as that Act continues to be disfigured and vitiated by that obnoxious declaration. It is the duty of the wise patriot and humane legislator who wants to be true to his country's lofty mission to take immediate note of the "trend" of these events, and, "appraising it at its true value", legislate accordingly and without delay, that man-made laws may not in their bigotry and shortsightedness, impiously bar the union of souls and commingling of races in one great human brotherhood on Indian soil, on the specious pretext that they are, or are not, of this religion or that.

WOMEN'S WORLD CONVENTION IN LAUSANNE.

(By Miss HELEN MAYA DAS).

Miss Campbell and I from Delhi, Miss Pinder from Bangalore were the three delegates for the world's Women Christian Temperance Union. When we landed at Naples, from the first we were struck with the fields and fields of flourishing vineyards, instead of wheat fields. As we travelled on to Rome, Florence and Venice, we saw large stretches of fine fields given over for the cultivation of the grape; even as we came on to Lausanne, Switzerland, the grape vines covered the hill sides. As a result the fermented wine is practically used instead of water in restaurants, hotels, etc. The so-called harmless light wines are having their effect on the people.

The World Women's Christian Temperance Union held its thirteenth triennial convention at Lausanne, Switzerland, July twenty-fifth to August first, 1928. It was ably presided over by the president, Dr. Anna A. Gordan of U. S. Delegates came from 32 countries, all at their personal expense. We numbered 487 but including the visiting White Ribboners from these countries, we were a thousand.

A special White Ribbon train brought 355 delegates from the British Isles and Ireland, under the leadership of Sir Henry Lun. 44 travelled eleven thousand miles from Australia to be with us. South Africa was ably represented by their members. The Canadian friends were full of hope and cheer, even though the cause has had a temporary set back in their country. India was reinforced by three more delegates from London.

It was not surprising that the main topic in this wine-growing country of southern Europe should be how best to utilize the grape, so that it may be nourishing as well as of an economic gain to the country.

South Africa and Australia told us that they are encouraging the use of raisins, in fact have a raisin week, they spared no pains or money in advertising the food value of raisins. They called on hotel, restaurant and refreshment room managers, ship agents, and talked raisins to them. White Ribboners in their towns and villages visited homes, and asked every family to help celebrate the "Raisin Week." As a result of their tireless efforts, the markets were soon overrun by raisin buyers and now they say it has become an annual event.

In Switzerland there are springing up several "Sans Alcohol" tea rooms, pensions at Montreux. A Swiss lady is running such a hotel, and in connection with it she has a large vineyard: she is demonstrating to her people, that a vineyard can be made to pay, without using the fruit to make intoxicating beverages. The Convention had the pleasure of lunching there.

I am writing this from another such hotel, under the shadow of the snowy peaks of the mighty Alps. It was opened by a Swiss German in 1926, now the house is full; the Dr. put up an annex this year; that also is occupied, the overflow he entertains in farm houses near by, the one we are at is called the "Ten minute House." (It takes us that time to climb up the hill).

The great convention is over and the one thousand White Ribboners have returned to the four corner of the globe. What will be the net gain to the cause of Temperance all over the world?

Our Swiss White Ribboners spared no pains in making the convention possible as well as a success.

The president of the Republic accompanied by other officials, came in person to extend his and his country's welcome to this great gathering of women.

PROFITS AND WAR.

(BY DR. CLIFFORD MANSHARDT, Ph. D.)

The prohibition movement in the United States has had a long history. At first individuals, so called fanatics, began to say that the sale and drinking of intoxicating liquor was wrong, and they endeavoured to convert their friends and neighbours to the same belief. The argument that was used was purely moral, and in its early stages the prohibition movement was upon a more or less emotional basis. Under the pressure of strong emotional feeling numerous small villages began to outlaw the saloon, and the prohibition movement entered upon the stage that was known as local option. Local option represented an advance, but it is a far cry from an isolated rural village abandoning the saloon to a great nation accepting the principle of prohibition as a measure of national policy. What lies between? A great many things, but no force of more importance than the conviction on the part of industry that intemperance is an economic waste, that the drinking man is inefficient, and from the pure standpoint of dollars and cents the liquor business is not a paying proposition. Heroic as were the efforts of the moral reformers, it is doubtful whether prohibition would ever have been adopted in a national way, had not the moralists received the support of the industrialists. When men became convinced that the liquor traffic was an economic loss, the liquor traffic was outlawed.

At the present time there are indications that war is being brought before the same judgment bar. For years moralists have declared that war is wrong. They have condemned it as murder and as reversion to barbarism. They have pointed out the human cost and the moral wastage involved. Powerful emotional arguments have been presented and they have made their impression. But ever since the world war, hard-headed practical men have been asking themselves the question, "What was the use?" "What did we gain by it?" "Does war really pay?" In the old days it was not hard to answer such a query. "Of course war pays. Look at the spoils that we have gained. Look at the silver, the gold, the slaves, the animals, the captured armaments. Look at the new trade routes opened, and the captured continents. Does war pay? Of course it does!" And the reader of history will have to admit that there seems to be truth in the argument. The great nations of today have without exception been enriched by the spoils of war.

But times change. The world of today is a far different world from the world of yesterday. It has entered into a new state of economic interdependence. Today the question must be faced seriously as to whether the other nations of the world can prosper when any single great nation is facing economic ruin. Germany was defeated, but when it came to fixing her punishment the allies were in a quandary. To punish Germany in accordance with the standards of a previous day would also be to bring punishment upon the victorious allies. The allies needed Germany's contribution to their own economic welfare. No one will deny that the financial penalty inflicted upon Germany is a severe one. Many would contend that the Treaty of Versailles should be revised in the direction of leniency. But the interesting fact is that the allies did not feel that they dare attempt to destroy the industrial system that had made Germany her place in the sun, and might at some future date once more bring her into position to challenge the nations for world supremacy.

This certainly is not war according to the old standards. In the light of this experience international business men are questioning. "If there is no gain in fighting, why fight?" The question with them is not primarily moral, it is a matter of profits. The same thing is happening as took place in the prohibition movement described above. Should business actually convince itself that war is an economic loss, the outlawry treaties will be tremendously strengthened. We await the result with interest.

AN AMICABLE SETTLEMENT.

We have much pleasure in publishing the terms of settlement and the resolution of the City College Council, kindly sent to us by a member of the Council:—

The City College authorities recognise the right of boarders of all communities including the Hindus to perform their worship according to their faith in the Rammohan Roy Hostel; but in view of differences of religious opinions and principles of the boarders and the College authorities, the boarders and the College authorities out of mutual deference to the religious views and feelings of each other agree and decide that no public celebrations of communal forms of worship will at any time take place within the precincts of the Rammohan Roy Hostel. The City College authorities accept the offer of the City College Professors' Union to provide a place of worship near the Rammohan Roy Hostel where Hindu boarders of the Hostel will have full facilities for the performance of their religious observances and also to raise funds to place the arrangements on a permanent basis so that no financial burden shall ever have to be borne by the students of the Hostel. Mr. S. M. Bose, in his personal capacity, will see that the above arrangements are given effect to. If any other College Hostel or mess exists or is, in future, started by the College authorities specially for Hindu students, unrestricted liberty of worship will be permitted there. The students express regret for any excess they may have committed in connection with the dispute. The City College authorities are sorry if any one among their staff has hurt the religious feelings of the Hindu students on any occasion. "Resolved that the terms be accepted".

RESOLUTION OF THE CITY COLLEGE
PROFESSORS' UNION.

In order to bring about a settlement of the present dispute between the College authorities and the orthodox Hindu students, the City College Professors' Union does hereby volunteer on its own financial responsibility, to provide a place of worship for the orthodox Hindu boarders of the Rammohan Roy Hostel, and to raise funds to place the arrangements on a permanent basis so that neither the college authorities nor the boarders will have to bear any expenses or undertake any responsibility. Resolved further that if any member has any conscientious scruple to subscribe to this fund, he be spared.

LEGISLATION TO SUPPRESS DEVADASIHOOD

(BY THE HON'BLE MR. V. RAMADAS PANTULU.)

In peninsular India and certain other provinces, there is an ancient custom, among certain castes, of dedicating their young girls to temples as Dasis. The custom obtains in South India among the 'Kalavanthas' of the Telugu districts, 'Senguthars' of the Tamil districts and certain other castes. The dedication is an elaborate ceremony attended with numerous formalities, the most important of which is the nominal marriage of the girl with the Idol. This culminating act called in different localities by different names such as tying the bottu, Gajee-puja, Falshoban and the like, has the effect of consigning the dedicated girl to lifelong spinsterhood. The girls who are variously called as Aradhinis, Boaris, Bhavanis, Devadasis, Joginis or Muralis, are compendiously described in English as "Dancing Girls", their chief service in the temples being singing and dancing at the pagoda ceremonials. They make music and nautch their trade, and also almost invariably take to a life of prostitution or concubinage as a means of earning money. They are generally literate and, in a way, accomplished when compared with the women of other castes. The custom took such a firm hold on the people that these dancing girls in course of time acquired an assured position and status in the Hindu Social Economy as a community properly set apart for nautch and professional prostitution. For centuries, not only did public opinion not discountenance the custom, but actually recognised it as unobjectionable. But in recent times a great change has come over the moral consciousness of the community in general and of the castes which are the victims of the cruel custom in particular. And there is at present a widespread desire to eradicate the evil which is a disgrace to any civilised and self-respecting people. It is true, that here and there we hear echoes, even now, in defence of the custom, especially from among the Devadasis themselves. It should however be realised that it is not easy to shake off the mental effects of prolonged imposition or sway of enforced customs. Even where one perceives something evidently wrong in one's ways of life, one tries to discover something in justification of it and resorts to the invention of preposterous theories to which frequent appeals give the form of settled philosophy. But the number of those who are afflicted with this mentality is fortunately now negligible, and the general attitude of enlightened public opinion is one of revolt against the custom.

The foundation of all social reform undoubtedly rests on a change of mentality, and social reconstruction involves a stupendous process of mental reconstruction. The desired reform can therefore be successfully brought about only when members of the Devadasi community make a religious resolve to enter into sacred marital relations and public opinion sternly discountenances or looks down upon promiscuity as a heinous offence. The springs of reform will soon dry up if there are no genuine undercurrents of moral consciousness tending to social purity. At the same time, it should be conceded that notwithstanding the existence of a genuine and widespread desire to put an end to a certain evil custom, it is not always possible to eradicate it without the aid of legislation and legal sanctions. I do not propose to enter into a defence of social legislation. My own view is that while it is undesirable for the State except in very special cases, to force social legislation on a community whose consciousness is not sufficiently awakened to the seriousness of the evil, which is sought to be legislated against, it will be wrong for the State not to react to enlightened public opinion which demands the suppression of the evil. Social law, it is true, should not be the sole creation of the legislature, but it should at least be, for the time being, at each stage of national advance, the endorsement of the social standards of the great mass of thinking men in the community to which it relates. Judged by this test, I feel that the State has not sufficiently reacted to enlightened public opinion in the matter of suppressing the custom of Devadasihood, which is an undoubted social evil of a far reaching character. I am aware that from time to time the Government of India discussed proposals to increase the rigour of the penal law and that the Imperial Legislative Council and some Provincial Councils passed certain measures for the greater protection of minor boys and girls. The origin of those discussions goes as far back as 1888. It was however in 1912, that the first serious attempt was made by the Indian Legislature to tackle the problem. Three non-official members of the Imperial Council, Messrs. Manackjee Dadhabai, Mudholkar, and Madge, introduced three different bills. The Government of India, however, realised the strength of public opinion behind the demand for reform and Sir Reginald Craddock introduced an official bill. After passing through various vicissitudes, all those bills dropped out. In 1924, the official bill of 1913 was resuscitated and with certain amendments was ultimately passed into law as Act XVIII of 1924. Its main purpose was to amend sections 372 and 373 of the Indian Penal Code so as to penalise the disposal of persons under the age of 18 years with intent that such persons shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse or for any unlawful or immoral purpose. The Provincial Councils of Madras, Bengal and Bombay passed since 1920, Children's Acts on the lines of portions of the English Children's Act of 1908. The Burma, Bombay and Bengal Councils also passed in 1921 and 1923 measures known as "Suppression of Brothels' Act," "Prevention of Prostitution Act" and "Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act."

The legislative efforts enumerated above have not resulted in placing on the Statute Book an Act to effectively prevent the dedication of minor girls to temples and consigning them to lives of open prostitution in the name of religious ritual or social custom. The wording of sections 372 and 373 even as amended by act XVIII of 1924, is not comprehensive enough to check the evil. Indeed Sir Malcolm Hailey declared in the Assembly when introducing the Bill of 1924: "We have not for instance definitely assumed that employment of Devadasis is equivalent to employment for purposes of prostitution."

In other words, the disposal of a girl as Devadasi is not necessarily a "disposal for immoral purpose" within the meaning of those sections. The prosecutor should go further and prove that the intention of those who participated in the ceremony of dedication is to make the girl lead the life of a prostitute and it may be impossible in most cases to sustain this burden for there is always the bare possibility of a Devadasi or a Basavi leading a chaste life. In some old Madras cases like 15 Madras 41 and 15 Madras 75, it was laid down that where the evidence showed that a girl who was dedicated as a Devadasi became according to the customs of the community incapable of contracting a marriage and that she was at liberty and was expected to have promiscuous intercourse with men generally, the dedication amounted to "disposal for immoral purposes" within the meaning of sections 372 and 373. But this interpretation not only did not receive legislative recognition, but has not always been followed. The legal connotation of words like 'disposal' and 'possession' in those sections gave rise to decisions of a most astounding nature. In 24 Madras Law Times 77, Justices Oldfield and Abdur Rahim laid down the following dicta: (1) The performance of Kanyarikan ceremony to a dancing girl which has the effect of an agreement by which a person has intercourse for 3 days with the girl who has just attained puberty, does not amount to disposal of the minor, under sections 372 and 373, I.P.C.; (2) Temporary making over of a minor by her guardian for the commission of isolated acts of sexual intercourse, does not bring the case within the sections and to constitute an offence, there must be making over a complete possession and control of the minor girl. Evidently their Lordships were oppressed by the Roman Law conception of possession of property. With such glaring defects in the criminal law, it is impossible to suppress the evil. So I beg to urge that the dedication of a girl to temples, involving as it does enforced celibacy and life of prostitution and the performance of any ceremony having similar effects in the name of religion or custom, should be deemed to constitute disposal for immoral purposes, within the meaning of the section, at least until the contrary is proved. An illustration may be added to section 114 of the Evidence Act—to the effect that such dedication or other ceremony shall be presumed to be for immoral purposes until the contrary is proved.

There are certain other measures of a remedial nature which are called for to effectively suppress the evil. The amendment of the law relating to guardian and wards is one such measure. It is necessary to prevent women who are leading a life of prostitution retaining custody of their minor children and wards and to give legal power to the managers of rescue homes and other recognised social workers to obtain custody of such children through the intervention of the judicial or executive authorities. Again the present state of Hindu law on the question of adoption of dancing girls is very unsatisfactory. While it is universally recognised that adoption for immoral purposes is a nullity, adoption by dancing girls for other purposes is still recognised as valid. It is impossible to prove that on the date of adoption, the adopting woman intends to put the girls to immoral uses, but it is a matter of common knowledge that these women who are largely sterile, increase their family by adoption with the ultimate intent of perpetuating their nefarious trade. So adoption by women who do not lead married lives should be definitely invalidated and it should not be left to courts to ascertain in each case whether the object with which the adoption was made was proper or not.

The legislative reforms advocated above will not be very fruitful of results unless and until we also reform the laws and customs which are connected with the Devadasi services in the temples—the very institutions to which this evil custom is traced and with which it is unfortunately associated in an inseparable manner. Mr. Salem Vijayaraghavachariar speaking in the Pre-reform Supreme Council, expressed the hope that the "subject of these eternal maids who by their accomplishments maintain schools of attractive vice under the shadow of holy temples" would be dealt with when the Government saw its way "to attend to that long-standing national grievance, the reform of law relating to religious endowments." That hope still remains to be fulfilled. The Madras Religious Endowments Acts of 1923, 1925 and 1927, even as amended and validated, have completely ignored the question which is intimately connected with temple administration. So those interested in the question should take early steps to have that Act amended. The action that is needed seems to be two-fold: Firstly, the practice of ceremonies like dedication, Gujjapujah, etc., being performed in temples and employing the women in temple services of dancing and singing, should be totally prohibited and the permitting of such ceremonies and employment should be declared to amount to misconduct on the part of the trustees, which makes them liable to removal from office; secondly, something should be done to prevent wholesale forfeiture of the Inam lands for non-performance of those services which are incompatible with married life. The first of these objects can be attained by embodying a provision to that effect in the Hindu Religious Endowments Act. The Mysore Government did it so early as 1910. The second object can be achieved in one of two ways. One way is this: With the abolition of dancing by women, a material change will necessarily come over the character of the customary services. Music may still be retained and inam holders may be allowed to employ men as deputies or gumastas to render the service of singing. It is an established practice in South India to permit services by proxies. Another way of achieving the same object is to enfranchise the inams in favour of the holders for the time being on condition of payment of reasonable assessment and transferring the assessment to the temple authorities who may spend it on the performance of music service or such other purpose as may be permissible. There does not seem to be much difficulty in the way of disassociating the services from the inams and leaving the lands in the enjoyment of the holders thereof and making over the assessment to those to whom the services are due. Fortunately or unfortunately the policy of the Madras Government had been hitherto to presume that village service inams consisted of assignment of revenue alone and to assess them to revenue whenever services were discontinued or were not required. Madras Acts II of 1894 and III of 1895 embody a statutory provision to that effect and the executive action prescribed by the Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue also follows the same principles. As a matter of fact, in the neighbouring Indian State of Mysore, His Highness's Government put an end to Tafe (dancing) service in the temples in the State and directed that the inams attached to that service be confirmed to the holders thereof as a permanent and alienable property subject to the payments of prescribed quit-rent. The quit-rents thus imposed were ordered to be credited to His Highness's Government and that an equivalent amount should be granted as cash inams to the temples concerned. This attitude of the Mysore Government is in refreshing contrast to the attitude of the Madras Government as reflected in the speech made by the late Law Member of Madras in opposing Dr. Muthulakshmi Reddi's resolution urging this modest measure of reform.

The advocates of reform and those who seek the intervention of the State and the legislatures to accomplish their social aims should cultivate understanding and sympathy and be-friend all progressive elements of the community. Movements for communal uplift will not succeed, but on the other hand will lead to bitterness and strife if the sociological maxim "that institutions are historical products and not the benevolent or malevolent work of men's minds" is not remembered by those who strive to end or mend those institutions. It is true that in the name of religion or social usage, much injustice was done to the communities from which Devadasis are drawn, but that should not be made a reason for their finding fault with other communities on the assumption that, at some remote time in the past, their ancestors should have malevolently promulgated unjust social laws. What is relevant to the reformer and social legislator, is that the present sufferings of every community have their inevitable reaction on the other communities and that the body politic cannot be healthy when its parts are diseased. So let us forget the past history of our social evils and unite in love for the common service of removing them. (The Madras Law College Magazine.)

HINDU LAW AMENDMENT.

The question of Hindu Law Amendment was taken up by the Council of State on Monday last.

Sir Sankaran Nair next moved consideration of the Bill to alter the order in which heirs of a deceased Hindu dying intestate are entitled to succeed to his estate. He said the Bill had twice been passed by the Legislative Assembly. It was a revival of a similar Bill introduced by the late Sir Seshagiri Ayyar and passed on March 27, 1923. The Bill was intended to remove a sex-disqualification which under the archaic rules, of Hindu law, excluded one's nearest female relations, namely, sister's son's daughter and daughter's son from inheritance altogether while it gave sister's son a very low place amongst "bandhus" who could only take part in the absence of "Gotraja Sapindas" and "Samanodakt", i.e., the owner's relations even up to the fourteenth degrees. The Bill was intended to include son's daughter, daughter's daughter and sister amongst the heritable “bandhus”, which they were not under Hindu law, and improved the position of sister's son by placing him immediately after the grandfather but before grand uncle. Legislation would mean that a son's daughter, daughter's daughter, sister and sister's son would in the order specified be entitled to rank in the order of succession next after a father's father and before a father's brother.

STATUS OF WOMEN.

Sir Sankaran Nair pointed out that the civilisation of every country was determined by the status of women. It was an accepted doctrine, and, if they were to rise, he submitted, they would have to recognise the rights of succession of women. He hoped the laws of inheritance would be so modified in future so as to give protection and help to the weak and the helpless. Nature had imposed disabilities on women which made them unfit for competing with men. There were no equal chances. He therefore, urged that women who had been dependent upon their deceased supporters should be given the right of inheritance. Justice was entirely on their side. Would it be wise for them to refuse that right? The Legislative Assembly, which was more representative of popular interests (Mr. Khaparde: Question), had conceded that right and, if the Upper House refused it, it would be regarded as a reactionary body, and popular interests would not hesitate to sweep it over thinking that it always impeded reform.

AN AMENDMENT.

Mr. Pantulu moved an amendment to commit this question to a select committee to report within three days. He supported the principles underlying the Bill and said the idea of giving legitimate place to women was not a new one. Women were enfranchised by the Nehru Report. It would be anomalous if they gave no place to women and yet enfranchised them. He did not intend to delay the measure, but he pointed out certain defects which must be removed by a select committee as otherwise they would give rise to many difficulties.

Sir Arthur Froom supported the select committee motion.

Sir Sankaran Nair opposed the select committee motion on the ground that a standing order said that seven days must elapse after presentation of a committee's report before the Council could discuss the question again.

Mr. N. P. Asthana also opposed the reference to a select committee, as alterations would again have to go to the Assembly and that would mean shelving the Bill altogether. Improvement could be made by amending the Act later.

NO HASTE.

Sir Maneckjee Dadabhoj did not share the observations of Sir Sankaran Nair and Mr. Asthana. He was in favour of the principles of the Bill, but they could not lose sight of the fact that the Bill contemplated serious and valuable changes. He did not find serious objection to a select committee, even if the bill was postponed till the next session. It would make little difference, but they should not proceed to work in a hasty manner.

Mr. Ramaprasad Mookerjee, in his maiden speech, said the Bill had been rushed through in hurry in the Lower Chamber. Nobody questioned the equal rights of women, but they should have free discussion before changes were made. The present state of things had existed for many centuries and delay of a few months could not upset Hindu society.

Messrs. Mahendraprasad and Khaparde also supported the select committee motion which was finally agreed to without a division.

TEMPERANCE ORGANISATION.

Mr. E. T. Cherrington, General Secretary of the World League against Alcoholism writes in his Report for the period prior to January 1927:

This is a day of world movements. Modern methods of communication and transportation in recent years have transformed the world from widely separated continents and islands into a neighbourhood of nations. Great economic, social, political, and religious questions, are no longer local or national. They are international. Problems of human welfare in this new day are of necessity world problems. Movements that attempt to cope with great evils are compelled to recognize the significant and important fact that those evils in most instances are today organized on an international scale and that adequate remedial efforts must be international. Such conditions peculiarly apply to the problem of alcoholism and the movement for its suppression.

The World League Against Alcoholism was organized at Washington, D. C., U. S. A., on June 7, 1919. The conference at which the World League was born was held in response to a call issued jointly by the Canadian Temperance Alliance and the Anti Saloon League of America. This call was sent to the leading temperance organizations in a number of the principal countries of the world. Fourteen national temperance organizations representing eleven different countries sent official representatives to Washington, who, after several days of careful deliberation, evolved a constitution and organized the World League. The official membership of the World League today consists of fifty-six national temperance organizations representing thirty-three different countries.

The object of the World League Against Alcoholism is “to attain by the means of education and legislation, the total suppression throughout the world of alcoholism, which is the poisoning of body, germ-plasm mind, conduct and society produced by the consumption of alcoholic beverages.”

The World League Against Alcoholism is an educational movement. Under its constitution the League "pledges itself to avoid affiliation with any political party as such and to maintain an attitude of strict neutrality on all questions of public policy not directly and immediately concerned with the traffic in alcoholic beverages." The mission of the World League consists in efforts to ascertain and give to the public the truth about alcoholism, the liquor problem, and methods of suppression. In this work, it endeavours to cooperate with existing temperance organizations in all lands where such organizations exist, and with other welfare agencies in those countries where temperance sentiment is not expressed by organized temperance movements.

It was evident from the beginning that the legal, legislative and political work having to do with the movement against alcoholism must of necessity be looked after by national temperance organizations of each country and by local national forces in those countries which do not have well organized temperance movements.

(To be continued).

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Indian Philosophical Congress:—The Indian Philosophical Congress will sit at Madras on December, 19, 20 and 21. Papers for the Congress are to be sent to Dr. N. N. Sen Gupta, 93 Upper Circular Road, Calcutta, before 1st November 1928, by registered post. A paper should not ordinarily exceed eight typewritten pages and should be accompanied by a type-written abstract of not more than three hundred words. For local arrangements enquiries should be addressed to Professor P. N. Srinivasachari, Pachayappa's College, Madras and Mr. S. S. Suryanarayan Sastri, Reader, Madras University.

The All-India Teachers' Federation:—The All India Federation was inaugurated in Cawnpore in December 1925 with the object of advancing the cause of Education in general but particularly for co-ordinating the work of the many Provincial Organisations that are being formed in India and securing for this country a place in the Board of Directors of the World Federation of Education Associations. Since its inception Prof. P. Seshadri of Benares University has been the President of the Federation, Mr. M. R. Paranjape of Poona has been one of the Vice-Presidents and Mr. D. P. Khattri of Cawnpore has been the Secretary. Mr. P. A. Inamdar of Aundh was elected a member of Council and member of Executive Committee for the current year. The Federation has held so far three annual conferences: at Cawnpore in 1925, President Prof. P. Seshadri of Benares; at Patna in 1926 President Prof. A. R. Wadia of Mysore; at Calcutta in 1927 President Prof. C. V. Raman of Calcutta. All its sessions were attended by about 50 to 60 delegates from different parts of India such as the Punjab, Jaypore and Jodhpur, O. P. and Bihar, Bombay and Baroda, and Hyderabad (Deccan) in addition of course to the large number of local delegates from U. P. Berare and Bengal. Last year the Federation secured affiliation to the World Federation and with the help of the Govt. of India was fortunate enough to depute a representative to the second Biennial Conference of the World Federation held at Toronto in August 1927, and secure two seats for India on its Board of Directorate. Thus Prof. Seshadri and Mr. P. A. Inamdar, the President and member of the Council of the all-India Federation are from August last Directors of the World Federation of Education Associations. But owing to the fact that its first three annual sessions were held in Northern India its work is not as widely known in this part as it ought to be, and the executive committee of the Federation resolved last year in Calcutta to hold its next annual Session in Bombay. As the Secondary Teachers of the Bombay Presidency are holding their annual Conference in Bombay in the first week of November, it is proposed that the All-India Conference should meet immediately after the Presidency Conference so that the Secondary Teachers can attend both. The Bombay Teachers have formed a strong reception committee and in order to avoid duplication of work things will be so arranged that the two Reception committees will work in perfect harmony and supplement each other's efforts. The subscription for the membership of the Reception Committee of the All-India Conference will therefore be the same as that of the other viz. Rs. three only. A meeting of the Reception Committee so formed will be convened in Bombay in the first or second week of September to elect a small executive body and to fix other minor details. Detailed accounts of the Cawnpore and Patna Sessions are now available in the form of year-books which can be obtained from the Secretary Mr. D. P. Khattri, Prithwinath High School, Cawnpore. (Price Rs. 1-8 and Rs. 2-8 respectively).

Andhras Support Sarda Bill:—More "than to quote a few out-of date, stray, and mechanical Shastric verses, the Pundits and priests who are carrying on a propaganda against Mr. Sarda's marriage Bill, appear to be capable of taking stock of nothing real in the long list of numerous items of social tyranny to which every member and more especially the weaker sex of the Hindu Society is subject, and their attempts deserve no more than to be totally ignored at every step" declared Mr. N. O. Narasimha Acharya B.A. LL.B., the President, at a meeting of the Andhras convened at Kalyan under the auspices of the Kalyan Andhra Association on Sunday the 26th August at 3-30 P. M. Themselves the offsprings of centuries of social and political tyranny, they continue interminably to follow slavishly the traditions of tyranny, and feel shy of vouchsafing the least ray of liberty to our unfortunate sisters of Hindu society, with the result the Hindu race as a whole is being domestically brought up to perpetuate the bonds of its own slavery. He criticised the latter portion of the bill as an inadequate safeguard and said that unless a concrete form of coercive influence is prescribed by way of penal state legislation, this important bill would be rendered nugatory in practical operation except for creating ceaseless civil matrimonial litigation. He finally appealed to the Andhras of the Bombay Presidency to lend an unqualified support to this measure which seeks to remove the root of the present day evils sapping the manhood of the race as a whole, and swear to follow it in their own individual cases even at the risk of facing the wrath of ignorant priests and unscrupulous orthodoxy. The meeting adopted by a majority the Resolution which reads as follows:—This meeting is of opinion that the minimum age prescribed in Mr. H. L. Sarda's Bill for contracting marriage should be at the age of discretion i.e. of eighteen in the case of boys and fourteen in the case of girls. This meeting further opines that in order to see that this provision is not rendered nugatory in practical operation it is desirable to enact that if in any case a marriage (betrothal) takes place and it is consummated when the girl is below the age of 14 either of the parties of such marriage (consummation) is major, and parents and guardians and priests officiating at the said function shall be liable to punishment."

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. a. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	14 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
 Royapuram, Madras.

Mahatma Gandhi,—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer).
 Price annas 8.

A Human Document—By Mr. V. S. Sohoni. The life of a Dhed in Bombay. Reprinted from the Reformer. Price annas 4.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
 Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

UNDER PUBLIC PATRONAGE.

The Bombay Swadeshi Co-operative Stores Company Limited, will open their New Premises at Cruikshank Road, Near Esplanade Police Court on Thursday the 27th September 1928 at 5-30 P.M. (S. T.)

VISIT OUR STORES.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY:

1. The Re-Birth of Hindu Music.—By Rudhyar of Carlos Salzedo, America A French—American, Composer—Philosopher—Poet, considered as a friend as well as a genius.
 'In his knowledge and sincerity, his strength and his industry, he is the musical peer of many celebrities who have gained real support and attention in our country.'—Los Angeles Record. Artistic get up. Price Rs. 5. Cloth and Gold. Rs. 3-12 Double wrapper.
2. The Gita and Spiritual Life.—By D. S. Sarma, M.A., Prof. Presidency College, Madras, and author of Introduction to Bhagavat Gita. Boards: Price Rs. 1-8; Wrappers Rs. 1-2.
3. Lord Buckmaster's Speech on Birth Control.—A pamphlet issued on behalf of the Madras Malthusian League. Price As 2.

REPRINTS.

1. Bhagavad Gita.—Text and translation—By Dr. Annie Besant. (5th Adyar Pocket Edition). Price As. 4.
2. At the Feet of the Master.—By J. Krishnamurti (7th Indian Edition Standard Size—Big type). Price As. 8.
3. Seven Rays.—By Prof. E. Wood (3rd Edition) Price Cloth Rs. 3; Wrappers. Rs. 2-4.
4. Concentration.—By Prof. E. Wood (8th Edition) Price Cloth Re. 1-8; Boards 1-4; Wrappers Re. 1.

Shortly Ready:—Our New Publications.

1. The Quest.—By Sadhu T. L. Vaswani—No. 3 of the Glimpses series—Inspiring Poems.
2. The Diary of a Disciple.—By Sadhu T. L. Vaswani—No. 4 of the Glimpses series—Inspiring Poems.

REPRINTS:

1. Old Diary Leaves.—By Colonel H. S. Olcott, The President Founder of the Theosophical Society. Volume II (Long Out of Print).
 Deals with the period from 1878 to 1883 embracing the novel and exciting incidents of the establishment for our movement in India and Ceylon from which such momentous results have followed.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 ADYAR, MADRAS, S.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	„ 1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	„ 1,00,00,000

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches:—(1) Mandvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Rehman Street.

Mofussil Branches:—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharla, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Asansol, Chandausi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jannagar.

London Agents:—The Midland Bank, Ltd.

New York Agents:—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents:—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts:—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

A Male Child.

“I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhoea and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex”. Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up „ 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund „ 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

“Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application.” The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh).
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akni (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital	...	Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:--BARODA.

Branches:--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwarka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).

Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).

Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent, Ahmedabad).

Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.

Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)

Mr. Nawroji B. Saklatwala, C.I.E., (Tata Sons Ltd, Bombay).

Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

Fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free.

To every purchaser of our "Luxorette" lever Radium Silvered Pocket Watch, guaranteed for five years, costing Rupees five, we give our fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free. Write now. The radium pocket watch has strong mechanism and well built and can be seen well in nights without the help of lights. Please order soon.

Price Rs. 5 only.

Address:--SWAN HOUSE,
P. B. No. 508. P. T. MADRAS.

WANTED

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Master's Classes. Full particulars and Railway Fare Certificate on 2 annas stamp. Apply to:--Central Telegraph College, Delhi,

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs.	s.	p.
Subscription (including postage).
Inland ...	5	0	0
Foreign ...	5	8	0
Single copy ...	0	8	0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

Portland Cement.

Ganapati Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office: Esplanade Road, Fort, BOMBAY.

SIR D. J. TATA, Kt., CHAIRMAN.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	Rs. 6,00,00,000
SUBSCRIBED " " " "	3,56,05,275
PAID UP " " " "	71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS " " " "	1,15,36,676

FIRE INSURANCE.—A Tariff rates for all classes. Chart schedules prepared. Advice given. Facilities for dealing with total insurance of clients.

CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS, i.e. Loss of Profits etc. as a result of fire.

MARINE INSURANCE.—The aim is to provide insurance for Merchants on conditions similar to those obtainable in London, the world's largest Marine Insurance Market.

MOTOR CAR ASSURANCE.—Complete cover in every way and prompt settlements of Claims.

BAGGAGE INSURANCE at reasonable rates whilst travel ling by land or sea.

ALL RISKS INSURANCE covering jewellery and other valuables in any situation.

OTHER CLASSES OF INSURANCE also transacted.

Apply to THE GENERAL MANAGER.

London Agents:—Sedgwick Collins (Agencies) Ltd.

Manager for U. S. A.:—Summer Ballard.

Agencies also at Poona, Calcutta, Madras, Karachi, Ahmedabad, Bangoon, Penang, Singapore, Colombo, East Africa, etc. etc.

B. J. DUFF, GENERAL MANAGER.

A. K. JOSHI & Co.Kalbadevi Road, B O M B A Y.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,

The Hindustan Review.

PATNA, E. I. R.

THE GUARDIAN

—:0:—
; A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—
Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

"Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise."

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY

(A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY.

BOMBAY OFFICE } Jamnagar (Kathiawar).
Kalbadevi Road. }

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay
Karaobi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

t-11-26.

Bombay.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

EYE DISEASES...	...	Try "Akhyacura."
RING WORM	Try "Kurain."
ASTHMA	Try "Asthma Cure."
STRENGTH	Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil."
TONICS	Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills." "Parrish's Chemical Food." "Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo- phosphites of Lime."
GONORRHŒA	Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C. Copaiba Cum Buchu."

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :-

Madras Presidency & Mysore :
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions :
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan :
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1928

No. 5

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Religion and the State. Bolshevism and Christian Mis- sions. The Simon Commission. Insult to India's Agent. The End of the Mill Strike. Work Among the Depressed Classes. Age of Consent Committee. Index to Volume XXXVIII. Lord Curzon.	The Way to Weed Out Com- munalism. Bolshevism and Christian Mis- sions. Religion and State. Age of Consent Debate. Age of Consent Inquiry. "Winning Ceylon for Christ". World League Against Alcho- holism. News of the Week.
---	---

NOTES.

Religion and the State:—We reprint the comments of the Guardian of Calcutta on our articles on this subject with reference to the Nehru Committee's report. We quite understand the surface difficulties which strike our contemporary, and we recognise that the idea is very distinct from those which are associated with modern politics. But our view is that India has a special contribution to make in the field of political thought, and we are sure that it is on lines we have outlined in the articles under reference. The argument that it is out of date is no argument at all. It was never out of date in India and as the Guardian itself shows is practised at the present time in the Indian States. But making grants to religious institutions is not the chief or only thing we have in mind. The State must accept and recognise that religion is a fundamental fact of social life and should not discard it as a thing in which it has no concern. We are not disappointed at the scant notice which has been taken by our political leaders of the point, nor do we regard the All-Parties Conference's verdict as final. The question was not raised in the Conference as the whole report on Lala Lajpat Rai's motion was passed in spite of Mr. Vijayaraghavacharya's plea that it should be taken clause by clause. There has been no discussion and no opportunity for discussion on the clause in the report about religion. The question will have to be considered when Swaraj is actually being framed. No constitution has a chance in this country which does not in practice act upon the principle set forth in our articles, though in theory and on paper religion may be shown as divorced from the State.

Bolshevism and Christian Missions:—The Catholic Leader takes exception to our comparison between Bolshevik and Christian missionary propaganda on the ground that while the latter preaches the true religion, Bolsheviks preach against all religion. Our contemporary forgets that the point is not what the missionary thinks of his mission but what effect it has on non-Christian minds. Bolshevism, too, as has been pointed out by several writers, is a religion—the true religion—for the Bolsheviks. So far as its attitude to capitalism is concerned, we doubt if the Christian Church is truer to Jesus than the Bolsheviks. Only Jesus did not believe in methods of physical violence, but the Christian Church very soon emancipated itself from the doctrine of non-violence as illustrated by the Crusades and the Inquisition. The Gita warns us against unsettling people's minds before they are prepared to receive the higher truth, and we do not wish to unsettle the mind of our Catholic friend. But if he chooses to enter into an argument, he must do so not on assumptions but on facts. While on this point, let us call his attention to the protest against Christian Missions in Japan, China, and Turkey. We reproduce the first part of an article from the Buddhist annual by Mr. J. B. Perera which is a vehement exposition of the harm done by Christian Missions in Ceylon. No reasonable person can have objection to a religious teacher going among the people teaching and praying, provided he does so as Jesus enjoined his disciples without leaving behind him a financial organisation to guarantee his pay and pension just as in Government and commercial services. We are sure that our missionary friends, some of whom are men of fine spiritual instincts, will soon realise this and refuse to have anything to do with Home Boards and Executives.

The Simon Commission:—The Simon Commission is due to return to India next month. Nearly all the provincial councils have elected committees to act with the Commission in their respective provinces. The Council of State has elected three members and the Viceroy has nominated six members of the Legislative Assembly to form the Committee of the Central Legislature. The acceptance by Sir Sankaran Nair, elected by the Council of State, of the Chairmanship of the Central Committee invests it with an importance which otherwise it would not possess to the same extent. The leading political organisations, such as the Congress and the National Liberal-Federation, have declined to be associated with the Commission, except on an absolutely equal footing which they consider the Committee procedure, notwithstanding Sir John Simon's assurances, does not provide. The abstention of these bodies which between them comprise the most active and progressive political elements in India, will involve to the Commission a deprivation which it will be absurd to underrate. To a certain extent, no doubt, this has been reduced by the publication of the Nehru Committee's Report which embodies the broad outlines of the aspirations of the politically minded classes who are capable of viewing the national problem as a whole. Those who are co-operating with the Commission, on the other hand, represent the conservative, communal and static elements of Indian life which distrust change whether in social or in political matters and ask to be left alone to work out their own destiny. The success of the Commission's labours will depend on the extent to which it is able to strike a balance between the progressive and stationary factors of Indian polity. It must be recognised that the publication of the Nehru Committee's Report has considerably mitigated, so far as the Commission is concerned, the effect of the formal boycott.

Insult to India's Agent:—The prompt apology and the promise, of the South African Government to bring to book the miscreants who were responsible for the disgraceful attack on Mr. Sastri, while he was attending a social function at Klerksdrop, has to a great extent allayed the resentment felt in India at the outrageous insult to its Agent-General. That Mr. Sastri is not deterred by attacks of this nature is shown by the advice he has given to the Rhodesian Indian Association. A recent Reuter's cable states that Mr. Sastri declared that India's destiny for good or evil lay within the British Empire. He would ask his countrymen not to have any misgivings, but to go ahead fearless of consequences with trust in their fellow citizens and in the magnanimity of the British people everywhere in the world. Within the Empire there should be no subordination and no exploitation of any one people in favour of another. There should be the utmost scope for the development of every race within this glorious organisation. "With that principle dwelling ever in our hearts, we are not likely either now or hereafter to go back on the honour of Great Britain."

The End of the Strikes:—We are glad to see that the strike fever has subsided. The strike among the workers in the Tata's iron and steel works at Jamshedpur has come to an end and the strike in the Bombay Textile Mills which has dragged on for nearly five months is nearing settlement. The Indian Daily Mail writes:—"Negotiations between the Sub-Committee of the Bombay Millowners' Association and the representatives of the Joint Strike Committee in connection with the Standardisation of Wages Scheme are taking place. The Sub-Committee consists of Messrs. F. Stones, S. D. Saklatwalla, T. Watts and Taylor while the Strike Committee is represented by Messrs. R. S. Nimbkar, S. H. Jabwalla, Alwe and Bradley. The Sub-Committee of the Association is stated to be responsible for framing the scheme. On Thursday both parties freely discussed till late in the evening, the Spinning Section of the Standardisation Scheme and certain modifications in it were mutually agreed upon. The most important section of the scheme is the Weaving Section, which is still under consideration. As the proceedings are in camera, it is difficult to state at present how far the discussion has proceeded. There is not the least shadow of a doubt that earnest efforts are being made by certain millowners to bring about an understanding between the parties concerned. In the event of the negotiations being not concluded the representatives of the Joint Strike Committee will not be able to go to Poona to attend the informal conference to be presided over by the Hon. Sir Ghulam Hussein Hidayatullah, General Member." It is understood that many of the points of difference have been settled, and it is expected that the remaining ones will be agreed and that the Mills will re-open on Monday. The prospects of a satisfactory settlement are very hopeful."

Work Among the Depressed Classes:—It was mainly due to the efforts of the late Swami Shradhanand that the Dalit Uddhar Sabha at Delhi was started in 1921 to improve the conditions of the depressed classes by general uplift and education and save them for the Hindu religion. From the annual reports published recently of its work, it is gratifying to find that the Sabha has been making very good progress and has remained true to the ideals set before it by its founder. In their efforts to better the condition of the depressed classes in Northern India, the workers have to face much insane opposition from the higher castes. It is stated in the report that the zemindars in villages are the worst enemies of the depressed classes, being opposed to their reform. "It is within the experience of the Mission," says the report "that the zemindars when approached to show better treatment to the poor on the plea of brotherhood turn a deaf ear to all sane reasoning and declare rather than touch them they would prefer them to become Christians." In spite of many obstacles, the Dalit Uddhar Mission has succeeded in establishing as many as five centres round about Delhi to carry on its laudable work. The Mission has been persistently fighting against the practice of exacting Begar, has afforded protection to many who were the victims of fanaticism, has promoted inter-dining, improved the housing conditions of the untouchable classes and afforded medical relief to them. The most important of the Sabha's activities is the education of the depressed classes, which shows considerable progress. The number of pathshalas increased, during the year under report, to 51 and a daily attendance of 655 students was maintained. In these schools, besides general instruction and industrial education, habits of cleanliness are inculcated and sedulously fostered. The Mission has also succeeded in obtaining facilities from the Government in the shape of grants and of scholarships amounting to Rs. 1,500 annually. With such an admirable record of work, the Shradhanand Dalit Uddhar Mission merits the whole-hearted support of the Indian public.

Age of Consent Committee:—As the personnel of the Age of Consent Committee did not include even a single member of the Legislative Assembly, the Standing Finance Committee refused to sanction the expenses of the Committee. To remedy the defect Government have appointed four members from the Assembly to the Age of Consent Committee. They are Mr. S. C. Mitra, Pandit Bhargava, Maulvi Muhammad Yakub and Mian Shah Nawaz. The Committee has concluded its session at Lahore. The additional members will probably join the Committee at Peshawar which is the next stage of its itinerary.

Index to Volume XXXVIII:—Copies of the Index to volume XXXVIII of the Indian Social Reformer are now ready and will be available on application.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1928.

LORD CURZON.

A Reuter's message published a few days ago stated that in the third volume of the life of the late Lord Curzon, just published in London, the author, Lord Ronaldshay, shows that the ex-Viceroy, then a member of the Coalition Cabinet, was totally against the Indian constitutional reforms formulated by his colleague, the late Mr. Montagu, who was Secretary of State for India, and that in a letter to the latter Curzon declared that the reforms would infallibly destroy the British Indian Empire. The same Lord Curzon had subsequently to support the reforms as the Government spokesman in the House of Lords, and he did so with his accustomed force and eloquence. This, it is clear from Lord Ronaldshay's Life, was no new thing with Lord Curzon. As Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Curzon was strongly opposed to some of the methods and policies of his chief, the Marquis of Salisbury. And yet he had to defend in the House of Commons these methods and, observes his biographer, "it was in keeping with his temperament that the vehemence of his defence should have been in proportion to what he believed to be the weakness of his case." "At such times," Lord Ronaldshay goes on to observe, "the artist triumphed over the man; the satisfaction which he experienced was derived from the skill which he was called upon to exercise in presenting his case." On the Chinese question, this inconsistency was too glaring to escape notice. Curzon had written a book on China in which he had expressed strong views on the right policy for Britain to pursue in that country. Lord Salisbury; however, took a different line altogether, and in expounding his Chief's policy in the Commons Curzon went out of his way to attack those who criticised it. The Times was one of the critics and Curzon specially directed his attack on that journal. The Times replied with spirit, and Curzon who was always thinking of himself, wrote privately to the editor, Mr. Buckle, attributing the criticisms to personal animus against him on the part of the editorial staff. The editor repudiated the suggestion, "You must bear in mind", he wrote "that we of the Times base our Chinese policy largely on your writings, to the teaching of which we think most of your speeches in the House run counter; and that you have lost no opportunity of endeavouring to create the impression that our Peking correspondent, who has been substantially right and far ahead of other sources of information throughout, is not to be trusted."

Lord Ronaldshay who, it is evident, is temperamentally almost at the opposite point of the compass to Curzon, explains why George Curzon did not resign rather than permit himself to be associated with a policy with which he totally disagreed. The same dilemma, he points out, arose at a much later period in his life, when as Foreign Secretary, he seemed to acquiesce in a policy with which he was not in sympathy, and which to all appearance was imposed upon him by the masterful will of the then Prime Minister, Mr. Lloyd George. It is hard to believe that Lord Ronaldshay is himself quite satisfied with the validity of the explanation which he offers. He writes:—

In both cases, resignation would have been easy—though from a personal point of view distasteful. But would resignation have advanced the cause which George Curzon had at heart? He was, I think, quite sincerely convinced in each case, not merely that his resignation would not help matters, but that it would be positively injurious to the interests of the country. So long as he remained he could bring influence to bear upon his colleagues, and could hope to carry them some part of the way, at least, if not the whole way with him. True, such a decision necessitated his defending in public some things that in other circumstances he would have preferred to attack. But this seemed to be the lesser of the two evils.

A well-known Indian faced by a similar question with reference to a high office which he happened to be holding in circumstances which were obviously incompatible with his previous career, was more straight-forward. He did not pretend that his continuing in office was necessary in the public interests. He asked what chances there were of no other Indian accepting the office if he vacated it. If an assurance were given that none else would take it, he was prepared to resign at once. If not, of course, it could not be, then, he asked, why should his friends wish him to deprive himself of the advantages of office? It seemed to him hardly friendly of them to insist on that course. A similar and perhaps truer explanation than Lord Ronaldshay's would be that Curzon without office would be like a fish out of water. He stuck to the Viceroyalty of India until he was compelled to quit, and he stuck to the British Foreign Office until Mr. Baldwin politely told him that he would serve his country better as the holder of a sinecure office. Political job-hunting is not peculiarly an Indian pastime as our Anglo-Indian monitors are at pains to make out.

Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty of India was, and will always be, a paradox. He was as much against the bureaucracy as the National Congress: his contempt of the bureaucrat was, in fact, not shared by the Indian politician. Curzon, however, loved the educated Indian even less than he loved the sun-dried bureaucrat, and his substitute for the bureaucracy was autocracy, and not democracy. In another article we shall give a few illustrations of Curzon's administrative contrarities in India.

THE WAY TO WEED OUT COMMUNALISM.

(By Mr. J. E. ROSAIR, MADRAS).

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru concluded an interesting address to the students of the Madras Law College on the 14th instant with this appeal, "The time has really come, when young men, whatever be the creed to which they may belong, whatever be the faith they may profess or inherit, should band themselves together into a sort of league and take solemn vow that whatever else may deflect their course, communalism shall not."

If we seek for the true reason for the great dissensions in India, Political and Religious, it will be found there is unanimity of opinion that communal discord in India is due to economic causes created through unemployment among the masses in each community affecting every province.

If India is to be saved from increasing disruption through communal discord, what better league can the young men of India establish than a League for prevention of Unemployment?

The present-day world has innumerable Leagues, from the foremost League of Nations to countless minor leagues, but no League for prevention of Unemployment has yet been established as a permanent institution in India and under the existing circumstances of the country the best way to maintain and strengthen the spirit of goodwill and unity is to establish a broad popular basis of prevention of unemployment.

The question however, of prevention of unemployment is fundamentally one of finance to help our workless neighbour by finding for them the funds to undertake some remunerative work, and every reasonable person will admit that it is neither pernicious nor an offence against society to create funds for the purpose through the sporting spirit of the public by holding annual lotteries controlled by an influential Committee.

Considering that India has a population of about three hundred and fifty millions, it is quite feasible to raise annually twenty million rupees by sale of one rupee lottery tickets, and allot 20 per cent in prizes, 5 per cent. for working expenses and advertisements, and 72 per cent for granting loans, free of interest, to the unemployed to undertake work in agriculture farming, or cottage industries for the development of the country in the nation-building departments.

Grants allotted to workless individuals to be refunded by them, say in course of three to five years, and the refunded amounts to form a Revolving Fund to be used for juvenile unemployment centres, making technical training a condition of the receipts of benefit by young persons under 18. Thus in a few years the money available by this scheme for granting loans to provide work, will be manifold twenty millions running into several crores.

Taking all the factors in India into consideration, we find for every 100 persons employed there are three employed in superior posts 26 skilled and 71 unskilled workers. In other words, for every crore of rupees which India could invest in agriculture farming and cottage industries to aid rural reconstruction, there will be employment also found for the educated classes of India, as well as for skilled and unskilled labour.

The scheme aims at well-being: for every boy and girl that enters upon the battle of life, and for every workless man and woman the means to earn a living wage without any distinction of caste or creed, so as to give a feeling of security to all communities by granting them financial help for economic advancement. It is the safest way out of present national strife.

Bearing in mind that a socially strong India would also be a much stronger political India, it rests with the political leaders to sponsor the scheme and mitigate the appalling condition of the workless millions in India. Can anyone be surprised that such conditions will result in the most awful consequences? Look at Kharagpur!

BOLSHEVISM AND CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

The Catholic Leader, Madras, writes:—The speeches of the officials in the Legislative Assembly in the debate on the Public Safety Bill have furnished a handle to the Indian Social Reformer for a curious comparison between the agents of Communism and Christian Missionaries. The Bill empowers the Government of India to expel undesirable foreigners from the country without trial. In advocating the introduction of the Bill, Government spokesmen stressed the danger of Communist propaganda to the ancient social and religious institutions of Hinduism and Islam. And the Reformer retorts:—"If Government is so anxious to protect Hinduism and Islam and their social systems from Bolsheviki, why do they permit foreign Christian Missions with the help of foreign money to seek to undermine and destroy these very institutions for which it professes so much solicitude?" We are surprised to note that such a well-informed and liberal paper as the Reformer places Bolsheviki agents and Christian Missionaries in the same category. The avowed object of Bolsheviki is the destruction of all religions and a revolutionary transformation of the economic and social structure of the country. The aim of Christian missionaries is wholly different. They are here to teach men the truths of religion and morality. And certainly Hindus and Muslims do not accept Christianity unless they are convinced of truth and excellence of its teaching. Christianity is not a disruptive force; it substitutes truth for error, and perfects and ennobles one's life and mental outlook. The messengers of the Christian faith have been pioneers in every good cause. They make great sacrifices for their religion and are foremost in every effort for their good of the people among whom they labour. Certainly there can be no comparison between the noble band of foreign missionaries, who have left their parents and friends and their native land to spread the Gospel of Christ, and the agents of Bolshevism whose object is to attack the Indian social structure and prepare the ground for the wild growth of Communism.

RELIGION AND THE STATE.

Our Bombay contemporary, The Indian Social Reformer, has had a series of articles on the above subject with especial reference to the Nehru Committee Report and its acceptance of religious neutrality as the proper function of the State. Our contemporary takes strong exception to the proposal of the Report, which has since been accepted by the All-Parties Conference at Lucknow, that 'there shall be no State religion for the Commonwealth of India or for any province in the Commonwealth, nor shall the State either directly or indirectly endow any religion or give any preference or impose any disability on account of religious belief or religious status.' In objecting to this the Reformer pointed out that both Hindu and Muhammadan sovereigns in India had accepted as part of their duty the protection of religion in their State, even though it might not be the dominant religion of the country or the particular religion with which they themselves were connected, and that they had carried out this duty on the whole with impartiality in regard to all religions. The example of the rulers of Mysore and Travancore may be cited in support, both of whom have regarded it as their duty to give aid to their Christian and Muslim subjects in the performance of their specifically religious subjects. The Reformer would therefore substitute a positive clause for the negative clause included in the Report. The following is the clause suggested by the Reformer :

"The Commonwealth of India holds that national well-being rests on religion and, following the immemorial traditions of the country, regards all the ancient established religions as revelations of the several aspects of Truth, the full attainment of which is the highest end of a nation's and of an individual's life, and assures them all of reverential preservation and protection as integral factors in the life of the nation."

In addition to the clause quoted by the Reformer, the Nehru Report has the following as clause II of the Fundamental Rights :—

'Freedom of conscience and the free profession and practice of religion are, subject to public order and morality, hereby guaranteed to every person.'

The clause suggested by the Reformer is open to many objections, which will be apparent on the surface to most readers. The very first statement will be questioned by many, and the second clause with its theological implications involves going into a realm where the State has no place. It will be rather a difficulty to determine which are the 'ancient established religions', and there is certainly no reason in these days of youth movements why this privilege of protection and support should be given only to the ancient religions. What about the new Order of the Star in the East, for example? We agree with the Reformer in what seems to be its view that the State should not be debarred from giving aid to the varying religious life of the people by grants in materials or money or land, provided that it is done with impartiality in regard to all religions, as the Maharajah of Travancore has done for Muslims and Christians as well as Hindus. We should therefore wish that the declaration quoted by the Reformer from the section on Fundamental Rights should read as follows :—

'There shall be no State religion for the Commonwealth of India or for any province in the Commonwealth nor shall the State give any preference or impose any disability on account of religious belief or religious status.'

This omits the middle clause which prohibits the State from helping any religion. The attempt to impose any kind of religious authority upon the State is hopelessly out of date and would lead any government into difficulties impossible to surmount. To make religion the basis of national well-being necessarily means some kind of a religious test for all officers which is quite unthinkable. Religion will not be helped but rather injured by the introduction of any such clause in the constitution. Religion is first individual and then corporate in the sense of the expression of a body of free individuals drawn together by religious agreement, but to expose it to the legal atmosphere of a constitution is to deprive it of its spontaneity and freedom which are essential to its very existence. There are two other clauses in the list of Fundamental Rights which have reference to religion. They are as follows :—

XII. No person attending any school receiving State-aid or other public money shall be compelled to attend the religious instruction that may be given in the school.

XIII. No person shall by reason of his religion, caste or creed be prejudiced in any way in regard to public employment, office of power or honour and the exercise of any trade or calling.

We believe that these clauses adequately protect the religious life in the citizen of the Commonwealth from interference and give that freedom of conscience which is the prerogative of citizens of a free state:—
The Guardian, Calcutta.

AGE OF CONSENT DEBATE.

Under the auspices of the Servants of India Society Study Circle, Sir Moropant Joshi, Chairman of the Age of Consent Committee, led a discussion last week on the 'Age of Consent'. Professor Ruchi Ram Sahni presided.

Sir Moropant Joshi said as he was the chairman of the Age of Consent Committee he should not have any decided views on the Age of Consent Bill, although he had long held progressive views about social work. They were confined to the consideration of the Age of Consent Bill though Mr. Sarada's Bill was more or less a cognate on the same subject. They would have liked to have more witnesses who would have given oral evidence but he regretted not many came to them from the Punjab. He thought that they would have some tough work in Madras and in a less degree in Bengal. They expected a different phase of opinion in those two provinces but they would have consulted all shades of opinions. He had come to them more with a view to learn about the Age of Consent than to tell them much. He then traced the history of the age of consent from 1891 down to the present time. The trend of evidence in the Punjab, he found, was progressive. He understood a large body of opinion was in favour of advance. The Mahomedan view was also not very non-progressive. He thought the Province was generally in favour of progress. Prof. Ruchi Ram Sahni said he was grateful to Sir Moropant for the compliments paid by him to the Punjab for the progressive views they had expressed before his committee. He assured Moropant that the Punjab would support the age of 16 and they would be quite agreeable to the age of 18 if other provinces supported the latter age. But they would prefer to have higher age in the Punjab.

AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

EVIDENCE AT SIMLA.

The Age of Consent Committee commenced its session at Simla on the 5th instant. The terms of reference to the Committee are to examine the state of law relating to age of consent as contained in sections 375 and 376 of the Indian Penal Code specially with regard to its suitability to conditions in India, to inquire into the effect of amendments made in law in 1925, and to report whether any further amendment of law is necessary as regards offences without and within marital state.

The Committee consists of Sir Moropant Joshi (Chairman), Rai Bahadur Kanhaiyalal, Mr. Ramaswamy Mudaliar, Khan Bahadur Mahbub Imam Kadri, Mrs. O'Brien Beadon and Mrs. Brijlal Nehru (members).

On the opening day Raisahib Gangaram, President Hindu Sabha Kasumti, was examined.

MR. JAGAT PRASAD.

On the second day Mr. Jagat Prasad, Accountant-General, Posts and Telegraphs, giving evidence before the Committee said he would retain the law as it was at present in the case of married girls. Even in their case the age of consummation should be higher than the law provided for. In the case of unmarried girls he will put this age at 18 years. He thought that the root cause of the desire to marry girls early was the legal position of girls. In India, marriage was looked upon as only a means of settling down a girl in life and giving her legal status.

MRS. A. C. SCOTT.

Mrs. A. C. Scott, Chief Medical Officer, Womens' Medical Service next witness, said that the circumstances which justified advance in law was prevalence of social evil of child marriage and forbidden custom of widow remarriage which led to abhorrent custom of marriage between adults and middle age with immature girls. She considered that early consummation and early maternity was responsible for high infantile mortality and for maternal morbidity and vitally affected girls' intellectual and physical progress. It also vitiated moral development. She also opined that the large prevalence of hysteria was due largely to early marriage of girls. In her opinion girls ought to be married three years after puberty. She was for fixing the minimum age for marriage.

THE RANI OF MANDI.

The Rani of Mandi in her evidence before the Committee said that the Age of Consent should be raised as girls do not develop sufficient understanding at the age of 14. Puberty was not always an unfailing sign of physical maturity. Eighteen years was the minimum age at which consummation of marriage was not likely to cause any injury either to the girl or her progeny. She advocated separation of marital and extra-marital offences. She would not make marital offence cognisable and would prefer proceedings of trial in such cases to be in camera. She was also for fixing the minimum age of marriage which was more likely to have the desired result than penal legislation, fixing a higher age of consent for marital cases. She was for fixing the age of consent at sixteen.

SIR UMAR HAYAT KHAN.

Nawab Sir Umar Hayat Khan, appearing before the Age of Consent Committee, on the 10th instant, elucidated the Moslem Law bearing upon the fixing the marriage limit and the age of consent. He declared that a uniform law for the population of India would be a mistake and any member bringing in legislation would see things from the view-point of his own province which would not be safe for India as a whole. He stated that Mahomedan lawgivers fixed the age limit to natural puberty in Arabia, which is more or less midway between the East and the West, and it is a religious law. For Mahomedans to interfere with it would be against the declared policy as well as with Nature. Interference with it would be tantamount to fighting against Nature and would create a barrier against the natural law. "By now many have read Mother India and books written against it, and that shows there are exaggerated cases one way or the other, and thus there is a necessity of a via media."

Replying to Sir Moropant Joshi, witness refused to fix any age limit for marriage, but agreed that the age of consent be raised to 14 years.

The President pointed out that the feeling among social reformers was that many cases of early consummation did not come to notice, and he asked how the witness proposed to make the law effective.

Sir Umar Hayat Khan said:—"You want to stop murders, but they exist. Since British law has been introduced thefts in the country has increased."

Replying to Mrs. Brijlal Nehru he, however, suggested that Mullas in villages should be made responsible for filing a complaint where the law has been violated. It would be useful to entrust this work to social reformers also, but he feared Moslems had not been taking any part in the social reform movement.

Mrs. Nehru:—What punishment would you suggest in marital cases?

Sir Umar Hayat:—Six months. Fine alone would not meet the ends of justice, and he insisted on corporal punishment. Witness' advice was to hear such cases in camera.

Questioned by Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliar whether there was any injunction in the Mahomedan law with regard to the age of consent Sir Umar Hayat replied there was nothing explicit, but the age of majority was implied.

MRS. RAMA RAO.

Mrs. Ramarao, appearing on behalf of the Delhi Provincial Council of Women before the Age of Consent Committee on the 12th instant, strongly pressed for an advance on the present law relating to the age of consent, both within the marital state and without.

She enumerated the evils, justifying reform, that resulted from too early consummation of marriage—the high death rate amongst women between the ages of 15 and 20 in those communities where it was customary to marry girls before puberty, the high mortality amongst mother's who were too young to bear children, and the permanent injury to the health of girls who had to submit to an early consummation of marriage. Mrs. Ramarao contended that even, according to the Law of Manu, a girl should be married three years after she had attended puberty; and thus the practice of early consummation of marriage could not be supported by religious injunction.

Adverting to the amendment of the law in contemplation, witness stated she would not rest contented with 14 years being fixed for the age of consent, but would rather raise it to 16. In extra-marital cases such consent should take place between 16 and 18.

The right of complaint against an infringement of the law in married cases should rest with the head of communal organisations, social reform movement and other recognised associations. To entrust this right to village panchayats would not be practical. Witness would like women magistrates to be associated in the trial of such cases. But the offence should not be made cognisable by the police. She favoured registration of marriages, responsibility for information devolving upon the priest. Mrs. Ramarao did not approve of punishment by imprisonment, but a fine and separation for some time, would, in her opinion, meet the ends of justice.

MRS. CHATTOPADHYAYA.

Mrs. Kamaladevi Chattopadhyaya, Secretary of the All India Women's Conference in the course of her evidence before the Age of Consent Committee on the 14th instant urged the fixing of the age of consent at 16 years within the intra-marital and 18 years in the extra-marital cases.

At present, the married couple started life under many unpleasant circumstances and the difficulty was the fear of desertion on the part of the husband. He had nothing to lose as he could marry again but the poor girl would be subjected to a single life, a life of loneliness.

Witness, however, did not favour heavy penalty as provided for in the present law. Husbands above 21 should be punished by imprisonment or both, fine and imprisonment according to the gravity of the case. Mrs. Kamaladevi emphasised that penalising of marriage below the prescribed age should alone answer the purpose embodied in the legislation under contemplation. The law could be made effective by spread of education and popularising of advantages of the law, registration of births and marriages and holding of enquiries in camera and an offer of solid protection to girls from being deserted. The right of complaint should rest with the girls, her parents or the Social Reform Associations and societies and village panchayats but on no account with the police.

Before the Age of Consent Committee left for Lahore on the 17th instant the Hon. Mr. V. Ramdas Pantulu and Dr. U. Rama Rao, were examined, the former on behalf of himself and the Dharma Paripalan Sabha of Madras and the latter as a medical practitioner for several years.

MR. RAMDAS PANTULU.

Mr. Ramdas Pantulu advocated the raising of the marriage age to fourteen and that of consent to sixteen. He opined that the raising of the age of consent alone would not be to any advantage unless the marriage age was also raised. He deprecated legislation by instalments and recommended the age should be effectively raised once and for all. Penal laws, he thought, should not be frequently altered as such attempts always gave rise to irritation and social opposition. With regard to extra-marital relations, Mr. Ramdas Pantulu said that modern conditions brought young women into frequent contact with young men in schools, colleges, public offices and factories and therefore there was greater reason to give protection to them now than was felt some years ago.

Asked whether orthodox opposition was so great as to obstruct the passing of any measure for raising the age of consent, Mr. Ramdas replied in the negative and added that many orthodox people who felt helpless under the Dharma Shastras would welcome the change in law and rapidly avail themselves of the legislation as an excuse for not marrying girls in their early ages and thereby also avoid economic difficulties of dowry system.

DR. U. RAMA RAO.

Dr. Rama Rao also supported raising both the marriage age and the age of consent. He said early marriage was the primary cause of infantile mortality. About one-third of the number of children born to parents of tender age died within one year and fell victims to consumption and such other diseases. He had known cases where girls at the age of eleven attained puberty and became mothers at twelve. This was certainly serious and steps should be taken to prevent early motherhood. At the same time, he was against punishments being provided in law.

(To be continued.)

“WINNING CEYLON FOR CHRIST.”

Mr. G. K. W. Perera writes in the Buddhist Annual of Ceylon :—

Christian missionaries protest more and more vigorously each year that they are “out to win the island for Jesus Christ,” and that “this island is in need of Christianity as much as any other land.” That the Sinhalese after fifty centuries of civilisation and twenty-two centuries of Buddhism should still be ranked among the least civilised peoples in the world, and as much in need of the civilising influence of Christianity, is a serious charge, and requires to be examined as much for the sake of the country as for its religion. Here is an island, seemingly prosperous and desirable, and admittedly the home of the best form of Buddhism, remaining in need of Christianity in spite of continuous effort on the part of missionaries during the last four hundred years. It is rather a peculiar situation for us, to want a thing badly during four hundred years, to have had willing friends to supply us, who have tried every means of forcing it on us, and yet to look yearly less and less like getting it.

If we consider, even casually, the history of missionary enterprise in Ceylon we are bound to admit that, whatever the intrinsic value of the wares they have to sell, whatever their merits as merchants and travellers there could be no question as to their patience or, what is the same thing, the patience and determination of the patrons of mission organisations in England. For four hundred years by persuasion and cajolery, by fraud and bribery, by threat and penalty, they have attempted to sell us a place in heaven but without success, but the unexhausted patience with which they pursue their object leaves us undecided whether more to admire the zeal which prompts their perseverance or to deplore the necessity which reduces men to exploit religion for the sake of a living. It would seem almost a pity to enquire into the success or otherwise of missionary work in Ceylon if such enquiry is likely to result in getting any of those high-salaried officers of Christ out of work. When we remember that Christian work is their living we can understand the apparent earnestness with which they assert that Ceylon is in need of Christ, for it is necessary not only to keep up their own spirits but also to keep alive that spirit of pity and piety for the blinded and helpless natives whose salvation has been made the special trust of ignorant but well-meaning Christian people. I wonder if these zealous people could ever be induced to believe that so far as religions go there are a few to-day which in Asia could give Christianity a start and a beating, and that in its battle with Buddhism the betting would be very much against Christianity.

Like the modern clergyman who is “out to win the island for Jesus Christ,” others have expressed opinions just as absurd, opinions which perhaps have led the Christians to continue this futile struggle against Buddhism and Hinduism. Robert Knox, an early historian of Ceylon, marvelled at the attitude of the Buddhist king and people of Ceylon, and concluded that “Both king and people do generally like the Christian religion better than their own; and respect and honour the Christian as Christians; and do believe there is a greater God than any they adore. And in all probability they would be very easily drawn to the Christian or any other religion,” and in his ignorance thanked his God for “not suffering the King of Ceylon to distrust or molest the Christians in the least in their religion, or ever attempt to force them to comply with the country’s idolatry.” It is not surprising that a man brought up in the traditions of the Christian religion should have misinterpreted the generosity of our kings, or he would have thanked, not his God, but the beautiful principles of the Buddhist religion which urged upon all its adherents the toleration of the religious beliefs of others. Buddha taught that false doctrine, the same as all evil, was the result of ignorance. Buddhism does not permit the coercion or oppression of the ignorant to whom the greater kindness has to be shown according to their ignorance. Knox must be forgiven for thinking that the consideration shown by the Buddhist king, so unchristian and so contrary to the accepted principles of religious propagation among Christian peoples, must have been due to an instinctive recognition of superiority in the God of the Christians. How could Knox know that the Buddhist is so honest and has such faith in the unassailability of his doctrines that he could say to the preacher of any strange religion: “If your doctrine is false doctrine the Buddhist will not embrace it; if on the contrary it is true, what have we to fear? How can truth be prejudicial to man?” (words actually used by a lama of Tibet to a Christian missionary). But the Buddhist forgets that though honest himself all religionists do not consider themselves bound by the same strict moral code in matters of religious conversion. The missionary is not one whit concerned with the truth or falsity of forms of belief: he wants converts and is not particular about the means he adopts to gain his purpose. His success and whatever merit depends on it is measured by the number of scalps he has sprinkled holy water upon. Conversion in the proper sense of the word has never been, and seems unlikely could ever be, out of Buddhism.

A Cambridge Don who estimated foreign missionary work at its true value never tried of relating the story of a native butler engaged by a truly Christian, but narrow, English family in China. He agreed to the wages proposed, but, said he, “If you want me to believe in your Christ, it is fifty dollars a year extra.” There are people no doubt who would consider the extra dollars well spent, but they will not deny that that convert would not have belonged to a very high order of Christianity. The converts in Ceylon were never of a higher order, but their children and their children’s children have often blossomed out as the flowers and ornaments of the Christian Church. Better Catholics never kissed the Pope's ring, and in their outward devotion and regularity at church they might many of them have been bishops. It is in keeping these devoted religionists within the church that such an army of priests of all nationalities is perpetually engaged. If these "dusky devotees" of foreign religion would but remember the disgraceful manner in which the foundations of Christianity were laid in Ceylon and India, and the "rapacity, bigotry and cruelty which characterised every stage" of its progress in the East (Sir Emerson Tennent) they would be more restraint in their blind enthusiasm and ignorant zeal. The ostensible motto of the missionary all over the world has been "amity, commerce and religion," but the Portuguese invaders never made a secret of the fact that their instructions were "to begin by preaching, but that failing, to proceed to the decision of the sword." They, the Christians, brought their barbarity into the civilisation of the East, to gain wealth and power in the name of the Catholic Church. They converted the Hindus in the North in their time-honoured fashion and established themselves for the glory of their religion as close to the pearl fisheries as possible before paying court to the rest of the island.

The Dutch were the next to bring a different edition of the Christian Bible, and with the aid of the Sinhalese succeeded in driving the Portuguese away, and themselves in turn, by less violent if not more excusable methods, made a regular host of "converts." Their numbers must have been very large for they ordained that nobody could get employment unless he professed the Christian faith, and no marriage would be registered except between Christian parties. What particular pleasure the Dutch invaders took in this form of conversion it is difficult to gather, but it may have been necessary to keep the Dutch home Government in humour by reports of the vigour with which their religion is being pushed so that the local Governors and other officers may carry on their trade of oppression and misappropriation of revenue unmolested. These two missionary efforts had been so "successful" that we find that in 1801 out of a total population of one and a half millions there were 342,000 Protestants and a larger number of Roman Catholics. In 1921 with the total population increased three times to 4½ millions the Christians of all denominations amounted to only 443,400 of whom only 74,900 were Protestants.

The British next took a turn at proselytising the country, and conversions went on just the same as under the Dutch, for by that time the people had come to recognise that becoming Christian was a necessary formality before obtaining rights of citizenship. In taking over the central provinces by treaty the British Government undertook to protect the Buddhist religion. In spite of this the Government continued to subsidise and encourage the building of churches all over the country, and to create incumbencies for Christian priests. But the giving up of its open interest in conversions had a remarkable effect on the people. They no longer saw the necessity for religious hypocrisy and commenced to assume their real religions with the result that the numbers of the converts fell steadily particularly among the Protestants. From 342,000 in 1801 they fell to 240,000 in 1803-4 and continued to fall to 150,000 in 1810, to 130,000 in 1814, down to 40,000 in 1864, the Catholics having fallen at this date to 100,000.

Though the Government gave up its open work of conversion it did so only after substituting a more insidious and effective form through the intervention of privately organised missionary effort. The Government handed over the education of the people in the English language, a subject in which the people must necessarily seek the aid of Government, to the missionary bodies, who were given freedom for religious conversion on the ground of necessity to remove the ignorance and superstition of the country by means of the educative and civilising influence of Christianity. Nobody was really deceived by this; it has been done in India and other countries. Civilising the native has been the excuse for introducing all manner of British institutions and customs which create wants to be satisfied by the importation of British goods. This cry of civilisation has been done to death and it is to this day being made the excuse for destroying the culture, language and religion of different people who have the misfortune to come under the complete domination of unprincipled governments. The free influx of the British exploiter and the missionary into India and Ceylon has accounted for the economic and national degeneration of India and Ceylon a condition from which the people are now delivering themselves. The claim to civilise us is as absurd as to civilise the Indian. Sir Thomas Munro said: "I do not understand what is meant by the civilisation of the Hindus;... But if a good system of agriculture, unrivalled manufacturing skill, a capacity to produce whatever can contribute to convenience and luxury; schools established in every village for teaching reading, writing and arithmetic; the general practice of hospitality and charity amongst each other; and above all, a treatment of confidence, respect and delicacy, are among the signs which denote a civilised people, then the Hindus are not inferior to the nations of Europe; and if civilisation is to become an article of trade between the two countries, I am convinced that this country (England) will gain by the import cargo."

(To be continued.)

WORLD LEAGUE AGAINST ALCOHOLISM.

The general offices of the World League Against Alcoholism are located at Westerville, Ohio, at which place the Legal Department, the Publicity Department, and the International Service Departments are located. Under the leadership of Mr. Boyd P. Doty, the Legal Department, through questionnaires and by direct correspondence, has gathered information as to the laws, the legal status of the liquor traffic, and progress of anti-liquor legislation in practically every land. The Publicity Department, under the leadership of Mr. J. H. Larimore, has helped greatly to keep the public in our confidence. Through this department there has been published, far and wide, the facts about the program, the methods, the procedure, the limitations, activities and finances of the World League Against Alcoholism. Every effort thus has been made and continues to be made to give to the public the facts about what the League is, what it is doing, and how it is doing it.

The Research Department of the League, under the able leadership of Robert E. Corradini, who is in charge of the World League Research Officer in New York, has been able to gather and correlate data on all aspects of the liquor problem and the results of prohibition to such a degree that that department of the World League has come to be recognised as a reliable authority when it comes to do with the question of beverage alcohol or with prohibition and enforcement.

The Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, which has been the student department of the World League Against Alcoholism, during the last several years has rendered a distinct service in the colleges and universities of the United States and to some extent through college and university groups in other countries. The opportunity presented in connection with this department of work is unlimited. There is great opportunity also for this particular kind of a movement to make a real contribution to the cause of temperance education by contracts of the 25,000 high schools in the United States of America. This great work is as yet only in its infancy.

The Scientific Temperance Federation of Boston, which is the American Scientific Temperance Department for the World League Against Alcoholism, is rendering a great service not only to the World League but to almost every temperance organisation in the United States and to most of the leading temperance organisations in other countries. The well classified library, consisting of the latest books, manuscripts, reports and data of every kind on the scientific phases of the liquor question, which is one of the great assets of the Federation, is one of the best equipped libraries of its kind on the American Continent. The quality of the work of this Federation is of the best. The amount of its work is limited only by the meager financial support which has been available.

The work of the several international offices of the World League, and the value of their efforts in the interest of world sobriety, can never be adequately estimated. The London Office, at Fleet Street, London, which has been under the direction of William E. Johnson and Rev. J. Richardson, has for the last eight years been the nerve center of the international temperance news service for the world. All the great international news organisations and agencies head up in that section of Fleet Street, London. During these years our office at No. 69, Fleet Street has through these international organisations been in frequent touch with the thousands of leading newspapers in the several countries of the world. From forty to fifty special representatives in London who send daily letters to the leading metropolitan newspapers of the world's great cities have for many years secured their facts from the London Office. Thus has it been that news of the movement against alcoholism has during these years appeared in the leading newspapers of the world, published in every language on earth in which newspapers are published.

The Scandinavian Office of the World League, under the able leadership of Rev. David Ostiund, has been responsible in a large degree for the organisation of the temperance forces in Sweden and Norway during recent years. The League, which he was mainly instrumental in organising in Sweden brought on a vote on national prohibition in that country in 1922, at which 900,000 Swedish voters voted for national prohibition. The number lacked about 30,000 of a sufficient number to have made Sweden a prohibition nation.

The International Temperance Bureau at Lausanne, Switzerland, which is the European Scientific and Information Department of the World League Against Alcoholism, under the leadership of the Director, Doctor Robert Herod, has for many years been recognized not only by the temperance forces but by the governments of Europe as the most reliable and authoritative bureau of information on the liquor question to be found anywhere in Europe. Bulletins which are constantly being sent from this office at Lausanne, Switzerland, prepared in all languages in which European newspapers are published, go out from that office to every great newspaper and journal in European countries. Equally important has been the work of this department in the efforts to secure recognition by the League of Nations of the important international aspects of the question of alcoholism and to secure a proper study of that question by a regular commission appointed by and under the direction of the League of Nations. The principal purpose in connection with this work is to secure the proper consideration for and protection of the native races with regard to the alcoholic liquor problem, not only in harmony with the spirit of the Treaty of the League of Nations on this point, but in full harmony with the spirit of the Brussels Conference.

Doctor Andres Osuna, former Commissioner of Education for the Republic of Mexico, is the outstanding leader of the temperance movement in that country. For several years he has been the representative of the World League Against Alcoholism and has been able through temperance educational methods and through his relationship with the President and the principal officers of the Republic to secure such consideration of the problem of alcoholism that at present the literature having to do with this subject, sent out from his office, is carried, postage free, in Mexican mails, by order of the government. Many local sections of Mexico, including one state, are already under prohibition. Progress is being made in the teaching of scientific temperance in the public schools. The greatest difficulty now faced is that of lack of funds to press the work which has been so splendidly started under Professor Osuna's leadership.

The heroic work of Prof. Villem Ernits, who left his position as a professor in the University of Tartu and resigned his position as a member of the national legislative body of Esthonia in order to become the special representative of the World League Against Alcoholism in the Baltic States, presents a splendid report of progress. One of the remarkable achievements of Professor Ernits during the past several years has been that of placing in the public schools of Esthonia, Latvia and Lithuania, by consent of the governments of these countries, the Scientific Temperance charts originally made by the Scientific Temperance Federation, printed in the several languages by the World League Against Alcoholism, translated and proof-read by representatives of those governments in the legations at Washington, and supplied to those countries by virtue of contributions made to the World League by friends of the temperance Federation, printed in the several languages by the World League Against Alcoholism, translated and proof-read by representatives of those governments in the legations at Washington, and supplied to those countries by virtue of contributions made to the World League by friends of the temperance movement in America.

Time would fail to tell of other activities of the World League Against Alcoholism through other special representatives and offices, including those of the Rev. Ben H. Spence, Canadian Secretary, who from the beginning has been one of the outstanding leaders in the world movement both in Canada and in other countries; Mr. Mark R. Shaw, special representative of the World League in Japan, and other national representatives whose efforts have had to do with the great revival of the temperance movement in Australasia, Africa, South America and Asia.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Child Marriage Bill:—The Select Committee to which Mr. Harbilas Sarda's Bill to regulate child marriage among Hindus was recommitteed, has reported without any substantial change. The Committee considered the suggestion of reducing the minimum age of marriage for girls to 11 to 12 years. The Committee is emphatically of opinion that such a reduction would nullify the object of the Bill. The Committee also negatived the proposals for sanctioning child marriage on the ground of conscientious belief that it is enjoined by religion. The Bill as it now emerges from the Select Committee fixes a minimum age of marriage for boys at 18 and for girls at 14 years. The marriage of persons below that age is child marriage and is to be punished by law. The Select Committee report is signed by Mr. Harbilas Sarda, Lala Lajpat Rai, Mr. Jayakar, Col. Gidney, Sir Hari Singh Gour, Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar, Mr. Rangbhari Lal, Rev. Chatterjee, Mr. Shillidy, Mr. Yusuf Imam, Pandit Malaviya, Mr. Birla, Mr. Ganganand Singh Bargay, Pandit Nilkantadas, Messrs. Yakub and Rafique sign under a note of dissent. Pandit Malaviya in his minute of dissent says that he is strongly opposed to making marriages with girls above 12 and below 14 years punishable as a large majority of orthodox Hindu opinion regard it as violent interference with their religion. He deprecates that neither his suggestion of fixing the minimum age of girls at 11 or Mr. Ganganand Singh's at 12 was accepted by the Committee. He would like to leave the question of raising of age of marriage to greater spread of education. The tide has already turned in this direction. It was unwise to ignore it. Messrs. Yakub and Rafique consider that the Bill is inapplicable to Moslems as it is opposed to their religious injunction.

Home for Lady Students:—Mrs. D. N. Sirur, President, Committee Variety Entertainment in aid of the Home for Women Students, writes to the press:—A Variety Entertainment was held at the Baliwala Theatre on September 12 in aid of the Home for Women Students. A short account of the Home has already appeared in the papers. As the funds of the Home were found to be inadequate, it was decided to organise a Variety Entertainment. A Concert Committee was formed with Miss Narmadabai Samarth as the Honorary Secretary. Mrs. Sonabai Jayakar, Dr. Kashibai Nowrange, Mrs. Kashibai Kothare, Miss Pirojabai Anandkar, Miss Kriehabai Javere, Mrs. Sitabai Annegiri, Mrs. Kamalabai Rajadhyaksha as members and Miss Godubai Samarth as the Honorary Treasurer. A Sub-Committee was formed from among the members which took upon itself the arrangement of the programme. Taking into consideration that Hindu ladies are novices in organising such functions, there might have been many draw-backs. But if the public realises the difficulties that the Hindu ladies have to encounter in persuading their friends to take part in such functions to help a charitable cause I am sure they will appreciate the earnest efforts of the young ladies who came forward to help the noble cause. The Sub-Committee, Miss Sayyad, Miss Kamaladevi, Pradhan, Miss Samant and members of the Saraswat Mahila Samaj who took part in the programme are to be congratulated on the success of the function. It is all the more creditable that with very little time at their disposal for practice and rehearsals the young ladies who took part in the Entertainment acquitted themselves very well. The Committee has handed over to the Home an amount of Rs. 224-9-0 being proceeds of the sale of tickets and copies of programme. The following donations were also received with thanks:—(1) Mrs. R. Row Rs. 100-0-0, (2) B. R. Madgaokar Esqr. Rs. 25-0-0 (3) Ishwardas Laxmidas Esqr. Rs. 10-0-0, (4) Mrs. Sonabai Jayakar Rs. 21-0-0, (5) Dr. Kashibai Nowrange Rs. 21-0-0, (6) Mrs. Sundrabai D. Sirur Rs. 21-0-0, (7) Mrs. Kashibai Kothare Rs. 10-0-0, (8) Sums below Rs. 10, Rs. 18-8-0 Total Rs. 226-8-0.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs.	a.	p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0	5	0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0	5	0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0	5	0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0	5	0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0	8	0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0	8	0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0	10	0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	0	12	0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1	4	0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1	14	0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2	14	0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2	14	0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3	0	0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4	1	0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4	14	0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4	14	0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6	0	0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT.,
 Royapuram, Madras.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

A Human Document—By Mr. V. S. Sohoni. The life of a Dhed in Bombay. Reprinted from the Reformer. Price annas 4.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
 THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
 Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

The Bombay Swadeshi Co-operative Stores Co., Ltd.,

Have removed to their New Premises, Near Esplanade Police Court,
 Cruikshank Road, Fort, Bombay.

WE SOLICIT YOUR PATRONAGE

THE CHEAPEST HOUSE FOR INDIAN-MADE GOODS.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY:

1. The Re-Birth of Hindu Music.—By Rudhyar of Carlos Salzedo, America A French—American, Composer—Philosopher—Poet, considered as a friend as well as a genius. 'In his knowledge and sincerity, his strength and his industry, he is the musical peer of many celebrities who have gained real support and attention in our country.'—Los Angeles Record. Artistic get up. Price Rs. 5. Cloth and Gold. Rs. 3-12 Double wrapper.
2. The Gita and Spiritual Life.—By D. S. Sarma, M.A., Prof. Presidency College, Madras, and author of Introduction to Bhagavat Gita. Boards: Price Rs. 1-8; Wrappers Rs. 1-2.
3. Lord Buckmaster's Speech on Birth Control.—A pamphlet issued on behalf of the Madras Malthusian League. Price As 2.

REPRINTS.

1. Bhagavad Gita.—Text and translation—By Dr. Annie Besant. (5th Adyar Pocket Edition). Price As. 4.
2. At the Feet of the Master.—By J. Krishnamurti (7th Indian Edition Standard Size—Big type). Price As. 8.
3. Seven Rays.—By Prof. E. Wood (3rd Edition) Price Cloth Rs. 3; Wrappers. Rs. 2-4.
4. Concentration.—By Prof. E. Wood (8th Edition) Price Cloth Re. 1-8; Boards 1-4; Wrappers Re. 1.

Shortly Ready:—Our New Publications.

1. The Quest.—By Sadhu T. L. Vaswani—No. 3 of the Glimpses series—Inspiring Poems.
2. The Diary of a Disciple.—By Sadhu T. L. Vaswani—No. 4 of the Glimpses series—Inspiring Poems.

REPRINTS:

1. Old Diary Leaves.—By Colonel H. S. Olcott, The President Founder of the Theosophical Society. Volume II (Long Out of Print). Deals with the period from 1878 to 1883 embracing the novel and exciting incidents of the establishment for our movement in India and Ceylon from which such momentous results have followed.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 ADYAR, MADRAS, S.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Island Rs 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
The Indian Social Reformer,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Write: Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN
MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up " 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund " 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Saramatl (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh).
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Maigaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulla (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ... Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE: --BARODA.

Branches:--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patid, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwarka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd. Baroda.)
 Mr. Nawroji B. Saklatwala, C. I. E., (Tata Sons Ltd, Bombay).
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26

C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay
 Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26.

Bombay.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs. a. p.
Subscription (including postage).
Inland ...	5 0 0
Foreign ...	5 8 0
Single copy ...	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office: Esplanade Road, Fort, BOMBAY.

SIR D. J. TATA, Kt., CHAIRMAN.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	Rs. 6,00,00,000
SUBSCRIBED	3,56,05,275
PAID UP	71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	1,15,36,676

FIRE INSURANCE.—A Tariff rates for all classes. Chart schedules prepared. Advice given. Facilities for dealing with total insurance of clients.

CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS, i.e. Loss of Profits etc. as a result of fire.

MARINE INSURANCE.—The aim is to provide insurance for Merchants on conditions similar to those obtainable in London, the world's largest Marine Insurance Market.

MOTOR CAR ASSURANCE.—Complete cover in every way and prompt settlements of Claims.

BAGGAGE INSURANCE at reasonable rates whilst travelling by land or sea.

ALL RISKS INSURANCE covering jewellery and other valuables in any situation.

OTHER CLASSES OF INSURANCE also transacted.

Apply to THE GENERAL MANAGER.

London Agents:—Sedgwick Collins (Agencies) Ltd.

Manager for U. S. A.:—Summer Ballard.

Agencies also at Poona, Calcutta, Madras, Karachi, Ahmedabad, Rangoon, Penang, Singapore, Colombo, East Africa, etc. etc.

R. J. DUFF, GENERAL MANAGER.

A. K. JOSHI & Co.Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,

The Hindustan Review.

PATNA, E. I. R.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-
Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

"Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise."

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
(A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

Fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free.

To every purchaser of our "Luxorette" lever Radium Silvered Pocket Watch, guaranteed for five years, costing Rupees five, we give our fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free. Write now. The radium pocket watch as a time mechanism and well built and can be seen well in nights without the help of lights. Please order soon.

Price Rs. 5 only.

Address:—SWAN HOUSE,
P. B. No. 508. P. T. MADRAS.

PAPER!PAPER!!

CHEAPEST HOUSE
FOR
ALL KINDS OF PAPER.

AMERICAN BOND PAPER A SPECIALITY.

Ledger Paper, Writing Paper, Printing Paper, Rough Paper, Croft Paper, Brown Paper and all kinds of Paper available at a Very Modest Price. Glazed and unglazed Creamlaid, etc., etc.

ANY COLOUR READY FOR DELIVERY.

Ruby Manila Envelopes—All Current Sizes Available.

Hoogly Printing Inks—All Colours.

Superior Quality! Satisfaction Guaranteed!!

SEND TRIAL ORDER AND SATISFY YOURSELVES.

Apply for Catalogue and quotation to:

G. A. ACHARYA & Co.,

MERCHANTS & AGENTS,

IMPORT & EXPORT,

26, Parsee Bazar Street,

FORT, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925-BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:

BEST & CO, LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO.,
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1928

No. 6

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Triveni. Views of Life. Sir Jagadish Bose Honoured. Sound Advice. Social Conditions in Persia. Indian Women and Purdah. End of the Textile-Strike.	Indian Politics and Women. "The New Era". Raja Ram Mohan Roy. Social Conditions in Persia. Age of Consent Inquiry. "Winning Ceylon for Christ". News of the Week.
---	--

NOTES.

The Triveni:—This is the name of a biennial magazine published from Madras. The get-up of the magazine first attracts attention. It is beautifully printed on good paper. An introductory editorial states that the Triveni is devoted to Art, Literature and History, and that its main function is to interpret the Indian Renaissance, particularly as reflected in Andhra, Dravida, Vanga, Karnataka, Kerala and Maharashtra. All movements that make for idealism in India or abroad, we are told, will receive particular attention in the pages of the Triveni—the triple stream of Love, Wisdom and Power. This is a very high ideal, difficult to maintain even in a magazine issued once in two months. We have received the first three numbers, and it is evident from their contents that the Editor already finds it necessary to admit articles on Land Mortgage Banks, the Defence of India, the Reserve Bank Bill and such other current topics along with others dealing with the renaissance. This difficulty will increase rather than decrease as time passes. There is need for a good quarterly review in India dealing with all subjects from the calm and detached point of view of the student rather than that of the active politician. Perhaps, it may be possible in course of time to develop the Triveni to supply the want.

Views of Life:—In our leading article we refer to Lord Haldane's contribution to the New Era. We commend to our readers the article in the same number by Mr. B. K. Mallik. The writer is somewhat elusive, but he suggests a point of view which is worth following up. In his article entitled "Christianity's Supreme Rival," the well-known American thinker, Dr. Fosdick, maintains that the crucial conflict to-day is between Christianity and Nationalism. We are making a fetish of nationalism in India. It may be that before we grasp it, the West might have turned aside from it as from an outworn creed. "The dogma of nationalism", says Dr. Fosdick, "means anarchy. If I should say this morning that I am an anarchist, that would cause a stir. But what is an anarchist except one who says that each individual is a sovereign unit with no co-operative control over him to represent the interests of the community? And what is nationalism but that very doctrine that each nation is a sovereign unit, that if it wishes to make war it may make war, that if it wishes to build a great army and navy, it is at liberty to do so, that being sovereign in war or peace it may do what it will so long as it is strong enough to get away with it. That is anarchy." Sir Hari Singh Gour in his article "Religion and Reality" lays down that "it is much better to beget a race of truthful atheists than a rabble of religious hypocrites." Why should truthfulness be assumed to be a concomitant of atheism and hypocrisy of religion? We can think of no reason except that Sir Harisingh is perhaps an atheist and believes he is truthful and that he has some pet aversions for those who are religious and whom he considers to be hypocrites!

Sir Jagadish Bose Honoured:—The eminent Indian scientist of international reputation, Sir Jagadish Bose, returned to India last week from his European and Egyptian tour. He was accorded a cordial reception in Europe where the results of his latest researches into plant and animal life created considerable stir and enthusiasm in scientific circles. In recognition of his discoveries in advancing the knowledge of plant physiology, the University of Vienna conferred on him the unique distinction of electing him a member of the Academy of Science. Sir Jagadish's visit to Egypt was no less successful. His Majesty and the Ministers of the Government evinced much interest at the important scientific contribution made by the Bose Institute. The Governor of Egypt had asked him to select post-graduate scholars of the University as his pupils for special training at his Institute so that on return they might be able to render important services to their country by the advancement of agriculture on which the prosperity of Egypt so greatly depended. The leading Egyptian journal Al Mokattam wrote about Sir J. C. Bose: "The Orientals rejoice at the fame of Sir Jagdish Bose by whose efforts new branches of knowledge have been opened up in science. Let us draw a lesson from the genius of Sir J. C. Bose and strive after his example for the welfare of our country and the welfare of the whole world."

Sound Advice:—While in Bombay, Sir Jagadish was presented with addresses both by the students and the public. Replying to the address of the Youth League of Bombay he observed:—"When a disciple comes to me I ask him whether he would carry out certain duties to be entrusted to him. He generally answers 'I will try'. That betokens true humility but cowardice which seeks a loop-hole of escape. It is the habit of weakness to throw blame on others, on the University, on the Government, on unfavourable circumstances in general. It is not for man to complain of circumstances but bravely accept them and confront them, dominate them and learn once for all to choose what you are going to do and say 'I will.' Sir J. C. Bose finally exhorted the youths to get rid of narrow provincialisms and attain the highest manhood and womanhood, to realise the privilege of being born at a time when the country needed them most, to realise that there could be no happiness for any one unless it was won for all, to pursue the doctrine of strength and build up the Greater India yet to be."

Social Conditions in Persia:—We reprint elsewhere an interesting article written with care and delicacy, touching the social problems confronting the people of Persia. In striking contrast to their compatriots in India, who, as a community, were the pioneers in education and social advancement, the Persians, it is evident, have much lee-way to make up in both respects. The depletion of the population which Persia is threatened is mainly due, as the writer of the article succinctly puts it, to the quadruple social scourge of child marriage, polygamy, concubinage and easy divorce. Nor is this all. We are also told that the appalling insanitary conditions and habits of the proletariat account for a staggering number of unintentional child murders. But there is no cause for despair. The younger generation of particularly women have made up their minds that there should be a change for the better and are working towards it.

Indian Women and Purdah:—The Literary Digest, writes after mentioning the recent anti-Purdah meeting of the Women of Bihar:—"Freedom is not wanted apparently by some women in India, altho the struggle for the liberation of women the world over, we are reminded, has long been fought with tenacity and, on occasions, with bitterness. Mr. Cliff (a correspondent of a London newspaper) has discuss the question with great frankness with an eminent Indian knight, who advised Mr. Cliff that, while he welcomed the proposal to release all women from purdah, at present his own women-folk remain secluded, and we are then advised that he wants to see women educated; he also wants to see them free, and he admits that adequate education can not reach them until they are free. Why, then, do his own women not emerge? He gives many reasons: 1. Many women who have lived in purdah prefer it. 2. High caste girls set free to walk abroad would be in constant peril. 3. They are so unused to exercise that they could not endure long journeys to colleges; and 4. The cost of setting up colleges within easy reach of their home would be so enormous as to be unthinkable." The "eminent Indian knight" who gave Mr. Cliff an interview has managed to put in as many absurdities as possible in this short paragraph. The question of college education can hardly arise when even primary education is not given to the vast majority of girls in India. The argument that women themselves like purdah is a favourite one with all reactionaries. The meeting at Patna cannot be discredited as the only one of its kind since we have had similar resolutions passed in other parts of the country. Perhaps the "eminent knight" only wished to justify his keeping his own women-folk in seclusion. It is a pity that an American paper of standing should be as ill-informed on Indian subjects as the Literary Digest. This is due to the fact that the Digest always prefers to extract its Indian views from English papers.

End of the Textile Strike:—We foreshadowed in the columns of the last issue of the Reformer a speedy termination of the prolonged mill strike in Bombay. The public of the presidency will heave a sigh of relief on learning the news that the strike is to be called off to-day, that the mills which remained closed for the last six months are to be re-opened and that the mill-hands are to resume work. Thus by the successful intervention of the Hon. Sir Ghulam Hidayatullah, the General Member of the Government of Bombay, the textile dispute has been settled and the threatened economic ruin averted. The settlement was brought about at a Conference of the representatives of the Mill-owners' Association and the Joint Strike Committee on Thursday evening. The main point of controversy centred round the wage cut in the weaving departments, and at one time it was feared that it would lead to the break-down of the negotiations. But ultimately it was agreed to refer this point and other matters of dispute to a committee of three members to be appointed by Government. The Director of Information has issued a press communiqué giving the following terms of reference of the Board of Inquiry:—(a) Whether the amended scheme of a standardized schedule of rates and of a standardized muster prepared by the Mill-owners' Association, and also the scheme prepared by the Strike Committee is fair and reasonable. (b) Whether the 17 demands advanced by the Strike Committee are fair and reasonable and to what extent, if any, they should be met. (c) Whether the Standing Orders for operatives as amended and presented by the Mill-owners' Association on the 4th October 1928 are fair and reasonable.

Indian Politics and Women:—If the women of India are to be a real force in the country, they will do well to lay to heart the words of Mrs. Kamala Devi Chattopadhyaya, the secretary of the All India Women's Educational Conference. In an interview to a press representative she deprecated the tendency of Indian women to keep aloof from politics. She is of opinion that women not only should put up candidates for the Legislatures but that they should also take an active part in elections to see that the right type of candidates got in. Mrs. Chattopadhyaya has succeeded in establishing ramifications of the organisation which she represents in such backward provinces as Sind and Behar. The next session of the Women's Educational Conference will be held at Patna and it is understood that the Maharani Regent of Gwalior has been requested to preside.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, OCTOBER 6, 1928.

"THE NEW ERA."

We welcome the New Era, a monthly journal, having for its object the promotion of cultural understanding between India and other countries, East and West. "We believe", says the editorial introduction, "that India has her own contribution to make to the world thought and progress. If hitherto there has not been an adequate appreciation, outside her shores, of her heritage and capacity to co-operate with the leading nations of the world, in the realm of thought and aspiration, India cannot escape her part of the blame. She has been too proud of her splendid isolation, and too little eager to know and let know. We think the time has arrived when she should come out of her seclusion." To a certain extent, the isolation of India during the past one thousand or fifteen hundred years, was a necessity. She had to bring the whole country into an organic unity. The Hinduisation of India, almost wholly by pacific methods, was a tremendous achievement. The ground-plan was laid on broad and lasting lines, but before the edifice could be completed Indian leaders had to face the new and aggressive factor of Islam. It took more than five centuries for them to establish an understanding with it, and when the country was starting to resume her interrupted nation-building, Europe appeared on the scene and demanded to have her influence admitted in the shaping of India's national outlook. Western influence has been doing its work of emancipation and has been largely instrumental in awakening India to her duty to herself and to the outside world. The New Era appears at the right moment, and we wish it a long and useful career.

The first number is an excellent beginning. The place of honour is accorded to a posthumous article by Lord Haldane on "India and Modern Thought". In the opening paragraph, Lord Haldane emphasises the need of a common cultural understanding to replace the political bonds of the British Commonwealth. "The British Empire" he writes "is entering on a new stage in its development. The principles recognised and adopted two years ago for that development express what is latent in the new stage. Wherever a dominion has reached a sufficient level in the practice of self-government, it is now recognised that it has freedom to govern itself without interference from London. It is open to it to recede from the British Empire if it should elect to do so". But he goes on to say that this movement which is rather centrifugal is accompanied by another movement of a centripetal character. "Each year", says Lord Haldane, "sees more of the best teachers of standpoints held in common going out to continue their work in the dominions overseas and more of the best teachers in these dominions are coming to Great Britain to teach our students, and to work co-operatively in the advancement of learning generally. The Empire is in short being unified intellectually." We must say that the evidences of the second movement are not so clear to us as they were to Lord Haldane, and that so far as there is a movement of intellectual unification, its objective is the whole world and not particularly the British Empire. So far as India is concerned, her culture is being more studied and sought to be understood outside than inside the British Empire. Lord Haldane's introduction, therefore, is rather irrelevant to his thesis, namely, the need of a better appreciation by the West of her thought. He points out the fundamental similarities between the Vedanta and Buddhism, on the one hand, and the philosophies of Hegel and Bradley on the other, and suggests that a deeper study of these will lead to a better understanding between the West and the East.

Lord Haldane says that though there has been study of Indian reflection in its various stages of development not only in Britain but in America, Germany and France, this study has been confined to the few and its results have not penetrated widely. "In India, on the other hand," he writes, "there has been study of European thought at least as keen. There too the study has been in few hands. But the hands are those of highly competent philosophers who have examined and mastered the idealism of the West more thoroughly than we have that of the East." And he names Professors Radhakrishnan, Das Gupta and Halder as possessed of penetrative insight into idealism in the West and the mastery of its standpoint. "It is but rarely," he adds, "that we find much insight of the same metaphysical quality over here." Here, again, the determining factor is a certain necessity. It is a necessity for India to understand the West, its real source of power and pre-eminence. For the West, there is no such need, and it is as an intellectual luxury that the thought of the East is studied in Europe and America. While the Indian politician or reformer has a practical object in exploring the hidden sources of Western domination, the European or American is impelled by mere intellectual curiosity in investigating Indian culture. The Indian statesman expects to find help from Western experience in solving national problems. The European statesman has no such expectation. Moreover, the Indian, more especially the Hindu, has an innate belief in the efficacy of metaphysics as capable of providing a key to world-problems. The European believes only in the resources of physical science and is not interested in the why of things. Sir Jagadish Bose has demonstrated by experimental demonstration a truth long held to be metaphysical, and there is no doubt that his example will inspire many to put the principles underlying Indian thought to the test of experiment not only in physics and physiology but in the social, economic and political field as well. If there is no barrier between living and non-living, there can be none between the individual and the social mind. India will test everything on the touchstone of metaphysics before she adopts them into her culture.

RAJA RAM MOHAN ROY.

(By MR. M. PERUMALLAYA).

Twenty-seventh September, is one of our few national days. It is the anniversary day of the fore-most of our great men. Great men come to us when there is conflict and strife. Otherwise, their coming had no significance. The multitude of the times drift down with the stream, much perturbed. As the poet, Rabindranath has said, the great ones work the boat of life, up the stream. Ram Mohan Roy is the first of such great ones, in the history of "New India", who worked the life-boat and ran upwards the current to reach the harbour of humanity. The toil in the direction is un-ending for tide after tide which unceasingly face the boat, had to be furrowed.

The history of times disclose that man in his march of life was an un-ending fight to face with. It stands a proved fact. Every step in life is a challenge. Alas! What has the poor mortal to do? Man is not left helpless. He has the innate strength in him. His strength mends him wherever he is weak and makes him fit to accept the challenge. This is the process of life. But health is generally spoiled by insanitation. Body without health grows mere filth and wastage.

What is natural to body is also the same to a society a nation for they are but a living organism. When Ram Mohan Roy was born, the history of India had been standing stagnant. The Society was weak. It was growing more and more ill-health. The religion was clogged down with evil and filth. The political mind was sleeping. The entire life was feeble, ignorant and stagnant. But one thing is to be remembered. There was religion present then, with all the eternal truths, but only covered with ignorance of the mass-mind. Its sanity was not recognised by the stupid brains of the multitude. Religion was run-over as it were, by the strength of indiscriminate customs and crushed down by the pressure of ignorance and selfishness. The very light of life had become dimmed through poverty of health and bankruptcy of knowledge. That is the scene when Ram Mohan Roy appeared. One could imagine not with much difficulty what gigantic-strength is required for one to fight out the demon of custom and unreason and restore life and light in man. Time and again, the history of human-race reminds us, how often the pioneers of progress were presented and put to death, all the world over. Jesus was crucified, Martin Luther and Mahammed were persecuted. What wonder is there if Raja Ram Mohan Roy is said to have shared the same troubles. Through it might be, the physical troubles were less in case of Ram Mohan Roy; but the agony, all the great minds realise is the same. Imagine what extreme agony, the Raja might have felt when he witnessed the terrible fortune of his brother's wife, who when she felt the flames of fire tried to escape from the pyre of Satee, was forced to stick up to the pyre till death at the points of bamboo poles. He was pained at heart as Martin or Mahammed was pained, when they witnessed their people committing similar atrocities in the name of God. Any heart which is blessed with the grace of God is the same in all, whether it be in Jesus or in Martin or in Mohammed.

Thus, Raja Ram Mohan Roy was religious at heart first and last. He perceived the Divine grace in him and began to reveal the human-heart in him. His work, therefore, was not that of an Alexander or Napoleon; but of quite a different type. He was also the Conqueror of his people. His work was strenuous but peaceful. His inspiration in the work of social, political and literary reform was from one source, which is intensely religious. To a mind essentially religious, social or political work makes little difference, and the motive underlying every such reform, remains religious. So also religion was the inherent spirit in Ram Mohan Roy, in all his capacities.

It was with the same religious spirit, he opened himself to the western culture and welcomed the spirit of this "New Age." With rational and humanising tendencies inherited in him, Ram Mohan Roy enriched his countrymen, with a new life. He is therefore rightly called the 'Father of Modern India.' Yet, one calls him a social reformer, another, a religious reformer and a third, a scholar, just as the "height of the Himalayas is measured only from the different level of the plains all round." In the lines of an English poet.

"Though round its (cliff) breast the rolling clouds are spread.

Eternal Sun-shine settles on its head".

So surely, stand out the life and work of Raja Ram Mohan Roy, as years roll on. Therefore, let us not blind ourselves from noticing the 'Eternal Sun-Shine' settling on all great men and make our lives inspired.

SOCIAL CONDITIONS IN PERSIA.

In area Persia is larger than France, Belgium, Germany and Spain put together. In population it is amazingly poor. The whole country has scarcely much over a crore of people. One of the evident causes of this scarcity of population is the dire infant mortality. This in its turn is traceable to many of the social usages and habits of the Persians. Persians who have lived abroad lay their fingers on some of those unsound spots in the moral life of the people. They are loath to appear superior. They point to the national shortcomings with due delicacy and becoming reserve. They are altogether apologetic in their observations.

CHILD MARRIAGE.

We hope the Persians will not take umbrage at seeing in print a pale reflection of the daily reality as depicted by their advanced compatriots. Recently a foreigner long resident in Persia made certain minute observations in the large city of Kermanshah. To a certain extent his remarks are applicable to the country as a whole. Kermanshah has a population of sixty thousand and a missionary hospital. The physician in charge prepared an elaborate questionnaire soliciting information on certain vital questions affecting the health of the people. The institution is not a free clinic. It admits non-paying patients. Yet on the whole it represents a group above the economic average. It can therefore clearly be taken as representative of life in an ordinary Persian town. In this investigation, astonishing figures were recorded as to the age of marriage. Child marriage, it is proved, is by no means an unenvied monopoly of India. The average marriageable age of a Persian girl is 13 years. This of course means that a great many marry below this health shattering figures. One-third of the women, they were mostly Musalman, who were examined had wedded at 12 or under. Quite 5 per cent. were married before they were ten.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

Another blight on the social life of Persia is the ease with which divorces are effected. The marriage contract includes the amount of alimony to be given in case of divorce. The clause acts as a great deterrent to divorce. On the other hand, it yokes together in unremitting sorrow many a couple, one of whom longs for separation. A large factor in the misery of the people is constituted by polygamy. It has been noted that polygamous unions are generally contracted not by youthful people but by men past prime of scarcely controllable passion. A man respectable and respected in the town of Kermanshah confessed to the physician:—"You don't need to bring any argument to me to prove that polygamy is wrong. Since I married this second wife I have had nothing but trouble. I would give anything not to have married her, but the girl has not been unfaithful to me and I cannot feel that I can divorce her." Polygamy is in vogue at least among 15 per cent. of the population. A feature in Shiah social life on which we should not care to dwell but for the pressing request of young Persians, is what are called "temporary marriages". We should not have approached the problem had it not been that to-day "civilized" Europe is beginning to consider the alliance as human and not unholy, and is prepared to experiment on these lines. This system permits a man to marry a woman for a defined period. It may range from an hour to several years. It has no recognised parallel yet in the West, though as a contemporary pointed out in indignant protest, Europe was prepared to investigate the social possibilities of preconnubial unions. It is unknown in any part of the Islamic world. Conjugal felicity under such circumstances is naturally out of the question. And the status of the issue born of such unions is a tragedy.

APPALLING INFANT MORTALITY.

As regards the appalling infant mortality, there are first the easy divorce and polygamy which result in neglect of the children, but an equally ghastly agent of death is the insanitary habits of the populace. Not long ago in the Iran-Shahar an intrepid writer dilated upon the unhygienic ways of the people of Resht. We forbore to translate it. The average child mortality due to these removable causes is not lower than sixty per cent. The conjugal relations in the country need not be scrutinised with censorious eyes. Every country has its social skeleton in the cupboard. And as a rule the higher the civilization the queerer the sex relations. The fact that the Persians were themselves aware of their weaknesses and are attempting to eradicate them, ought to hearten the friends of Persia as much as it justifies the notice of the evils by sympathetic non-Persians. Indeed, it is their only excuse for commenting on the problem. There are girls married at seven and divorced three times because of their barrenness. Men marry six times and having sixteen children, three of whom alone survive are on the record of Kermanshah. The population of Persia would undoubtedly increase but for these malign causes. India is regarded as Asia's reservoir of manual workers. Japan is looking with anxiety into the future when her Island Dominions will not be able to support her population, Persian can yet absorb millions. Granted a period of peace and no famines, her own population could develop enormously if there was not the quadruple social scourge of child marriage, polygamy, concubinage and easy divorce. But over and above all the appalling insanitary conditions and habits of its proletariat account for a staggering number of unintentional child murders. That the picture here presented has by no means been overdrawn can be established by any impartial observer with reference to insanitation among the Zoroastrians of Yezl, especially during the maternity period. The survival of 40 per cent of infants is exclusively due to the excellent climate. That it is these causes alone which retard a prosperous social Iran, is convincingly evident from the life of the Christians there, who are infinitely better off in point of health and its parent, rational hygiene.

And who can more effectively operate in this sphere than the womanhood of Persia? The women of the country are pre-ordained to be its saviours. There are societies in Teheran where the girls have resolved not to marry before 16. They need every moral support. It should be given without stint by India at least on humanitarian grounds which reach down to the bed-rock of all religions.

PROPOSED PERSIAN PERIODICAL.

A correspondent urges that the prime need of Persia is social reform and suggests that a periodical devoted exclusively to this subject may be started by the Persians. He adduces as a model the Indian Social Reformer which is edited by a Hindu of Hindus whose weekly is proving a powerful agency in bringing about the social amelioration of his community. The correspondent instances the paragraphs on "sacred prostitution" in the issue of the Indian Social Reformer of July 21. We would reply to the ardent Persian reformer that all remunerative abuses in the name of religion in any part of the world only serve to remind us of the poet who sang with as much truth as insight into human nature:—

"And the devil went back to his study;
Said he, with a wink and a nod,
'Sure the true way still
To work my will,
Is to call it, the work of God.'"

As regards Persia our emphatic position is festina lente.—Iran League Bulletin, Bombay.

AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

EVIDENCE AT LAHORE.

The Age of Consent Committee arrived here on the 17th instant from Simla to record public evidence of Punjab witnesses. All the members of the committee, including the chairman, Sir Moropant Joshi, were present. The committee met at the Council Members Club House.

Of the three witnesses in that day's programme, two, viz, Sir Shadi Lal, Chief Justice, Lahore High Court, and Mr. R. R. Kumria did not appear before the committee, and the only witness examined was Mrs. M. C. Shave, L. M. and S., lady doctor.

MRS. SHAVE.

Mrs. Shave in her statement said that many parents of her patients declared that they would like to marry their daughters at a later age, but could not defy the custom. It was of vital importance, she thought, that the present age of consent be raised. The terrible sufferings of child mothers both physically and mentally unfitted them for their ordeal, resulting in premature aging and a hopeless outlook on life. The children of the immature mothers were often weakly at birth and suffered further injury from inexperience and ignorance of their mothers.

In the Punjab, she said, girls attained puberty between the ages of 13 and 14 generally and in a few cases between 12 and 13. She did not consider that the attainment of puberty was a sufficient indication of physical maturity to justify consummation of marriage. The very earliest age for consummation of marriage, in her opinion, should be 16 and she personally favoured 18 years, which age gave a girl a fair chance to mature both physically and mentally. The age when a girl in India would be competent to give an intelligent consent to cohabitation with a due realization of consequences would depend on her up-bringing and circumstances. The average girl of 13 would certainly not have a due realisation of the consequences. She had attended in confinement of girls between 13 and 14 years of age, who had been nearly driven mad by their ordeal and whose offsprings in some cases had been puny and weakly. She thought that people of the upper and middle classes favoured an extension of the age of consent and that punishment in offences under sections 375 and 376 of the Indian Penal Code should be deterrent in both extra-marital and marital offences, those for extra-marital being heavier. She considered that fixing a higher age of consent would be more effective than legislation fixing the minimum age of marriage. She preferred to rely on penal legislation to secure the object in view than on the progress of social reform by means of education and social propaganda, as the latter methods must in India be very slow.

Examined by Sir Moropant Joshi, witness said that she had been attending maternity cases for 16 years at Lahore and her experience was confined to both Hindus and Mohammedans. She regretted that girls in India had no period of girlhood at all. They started from the very young age with motherhood and suffered from hysteria which was a most common disease among girl-mothers. If the age of marriage was raised to 18, she thought the health of girls would be much better than it was now.

To Mrs. Brij Lal Nehru witness said that the best thing was to raise the age of consent and then there would be no necessity of deterrent punishment, although she favoured such punishment. She could not say whether punishment would prevent crime or not, but it was a vital matter with her that the age be raised.

To Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliar witness said that the average duration of life, which was now very low, would increase by late marriage.

To Rai Bahadur Kanhaya Lal witness said that she would press for a measure for raising the age of consent to 18 years through the legislature in spite of the adverse public opinion in the country. If it was impossible to legislate for the age of 18, she would advocate at least the age of 16. She suggested marriage for fallen women's daughters to save them from their lives of shame. She realised the difficulties of bringing cases of breach of the law to the notice of the authorities but she suggested that doctors report all such cases of offences.

MR. BHAGWAT DUTT.

Three witnesses were examined on the 18th instant by the Age of Consent Committee. Mr. Bhagwat Dutt, Superintendent, Research Department, Dayanand College, Lahore, in his statement, referred to the Vedic injunctions which did not provide intercourse with girls of less than 14. He suggested the total stoppage of marriage of girls below that age. If some people attributed marriage below 12 as a religious injunction to the Hindu Shastras, he said it was pseudo-religious, which had sprung up in the country within the past 800 years. He thought that the fixing of the minimum age of marriage would be more effective, and favoured marriage legislation, and suggested that fifteen years should be fixed for the age of consent in marital cases. There would be opposition to the legislation of fixing the marriageable age in the beginning, but after two or three years the opposition would die and people would obey. He did not favour the reporting of cases of offence to the Police until a better Police or a new Criminal Investigation Department was created for this purpose.

MR. DUNICHAND.

Mr. Dunichand, Barrister-at-Law, the next witness, said that he would fix 15 years as the minimum age for the marriage for girls and 25 for boys in the urban areas and 18 years for girls in the villages. He did not favour legislation generally in religious and social matters, but would prefer legislation in marriage only, even risking discontent. He did not think that the cause of morality would suffer by the raising of the marriageable age, which personally he would like to put at 18.

The last witness, Mr. Jankidass, Secretary, Dev Samaj said that he would put the age of 16 all round.

Five witnesses, including three ladies were examined at Lahore on the 19th September, by the Age of Consent Committee. Of the ladies, Rani Narendranath, wife of Rani Narendranath, was examined in the vernacular and she gave replies in chaste Hindi.

RANI NARENDRANATH.

Replying to Sir M. V. Joshi, the Rani said that she would approve of late marriage legislation even at the risk of adverse public opinion. Just as Raja Ram Mohan Roy had stopped sati by legislation even though customs had considered it very virtuous for Hindus, similarly early marriage could be stopped by legislation. She would fix the minimum age at 16 for girls and at 23 for boys for marriage, though personally she would like the age of girls to be 18. She knew several cases where child mothers became life long invalids.

To Pandit Kanhayalal witness said that she would not allow girls below 16 years to live with their husbands.

MR. DIN MUHAMMED.

Mr. Din Muhammad, Advocate, Gujranwala, examined by the committee, stated that history had not proved early marriage to be the source of all evils. There were other economic and political causes for the death of the child mother and infant mortality. He was fundamentally opposed to any legislation bringing about Government interference in the social customs and domestic affairs of the people although he would allow the fixing of an age limit for marriage.

Replying to Mrs. Nehru, witness said that he would not strengthen the hands of social reformers by implementing the marriage legislation. He would prefer the husband to be punished by whipping rather than the imposition of a fine, which would ultimately fall on the parents of the boy. He wished to make known to the sisterhood of India that the mere raising of the age of consent would not solve the problem. Even if the new legislation was passed, it would remain a dead letter.

To Mr. Kadri, witness said that society was indifferent to matters of marriage and age of consent legislation. He suggested mass education.

To Pandit Kanhayalal, witness said that at the time of the attainment of puberty a girl was quite conscious of the marital consequences. He did not admit that the health of the people of India degenerated during the last 1,000 years, and attributed infant mortality to causes other than child motherhood. He thought that if the age of 15 was fixed by legislation for the marriage of girls, it would be acceptable to the Musalmans.

Six witnesses were examined at Lahore on the 20th September by the Age of Consent Committee including Mr. Justice Agha Haider of the Lahore High Court, who was examined in Camera. Two members of the Committee, viz. Rai Bahadur Pandit Kanhaya Lal and Khan Bahadur Imam Bux Kadri were absent.

MR. GANPAT RAI.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, Bar-at-law was the first witness examined. Examined by Mrs. Beadon Mr. Ganpat Rai said he was Vice-President of the Arorbans Mukh Sabha. His experience was that early marriages were dying out both in urban and rural areas. Last year their Sabha had raised the marriageable age of girls to 16 and boys to 20. There is fear in lower middle classes of immorality among young girls if they were not married early. He knew of cases of early consummation but no cases of serious injury have been brought to his notice.

To Mrs. Nehru witness said very few people knew what the age of consent was. There were breaches of the law but were not brought to court in order to avoid exposure and disgrace of families. The law was not defective but the difficulty was to enforce the law. He thought public opinion was not strong enough to take the help of the law. If any changes were made regarding punishment it won't make much difference. No parents of girls would like to drag their son-in-laws to Courts. If imprisonment was eliminated and cases were tried by lady magistrates even then there would be no effect of the law. He thought something could be done if lady magistrates with lady assessors were appointed. To Mr. Mudaliyar witness said he would fix 16 years age for marriage of girls. He would fix the age of consent at 14 for the present. If the Legislature raised the age of marriage to 16 then there would not be much necessity of age of consent. He would approve of fresh legislation and fresh Committee every now and then.

SARDAR HAZARA SINGH.

Sardar Hazara Singh, a Law College student, next appeared as a witness. Replying to the Chairman witness said he would prescribe age of 13½ for girls for marriage, and 18 for boys. His experience was that attainment of puberty in villages was earlier than in cities. He knew of cases of rape on girls below 16. He would not urge law penalising early marriages.

To Mrs. Nehru witness said he would suggest marital offences to be made non-bailable so that the offending husband may be separated from their wives.

To Mr. Mudaliyar witness said he would not prefer legislation about marriage and would fix 14 years as age of consent for intra-marital cases.

MISS. KOHLI.

Kumari Viro Bai Kohli was the next witness examined. In reply to Chairman witness said she would suggest registration of age of girls. He would fix gaona at 16 and not in earlier age. She would approve of the raising of the age of consent to 16. She knew of many cases of injury to child mothers and their progeny.

To Mrs. Nehru witness said the majority of women did not know about the existence of the present law of age of consent. But if the fact of the law was made known by beat of drum then the law would be effective. She would suggest women police as agency for prosecution in such offences. She thought it would be difficult to get good women police. She did not think the legislation would be opposed by public.

R. B. SEWAK RAM.

Rai Bahadur Sewak Ram, M. L. C., was next examined. In reply to the Chairman witness said he was the president of the Punjab Hindu Sabha. He suggested the modification of the present sections 375 and 376. For the present he would fix the age of consent to 14 within marital relations and 16 outside marital relations. If marriage was fixed at 14 it would be much better. He knew of several cases where girlmothers suffered bodily injury including the case of his own daughter who unfortunately died owing to early marriage. In the Punjab women did not desire early consummation of marriage. He would make it compulsory and penal for guardians and parents to report the birth of the child and his name. He thought the difficulty will be solved at present if the age of consent was fixed at 14. He was in favour of heavy punishment for violation of the law of age of consent. He would also suggest whipping which, he thought, would be exemplary.

To Mrs. Nehru witness said he thought fine was not a heavy punishment and would, therefore, suggest whipping. He was suggesting additional punishment in order to make it more frightful. He would suggest Hindu police to investigate Hindu cases and the Muslim police Muslim cases.

SARDAR MANGAL SINGH.

Sardar Mangal Singh, Akali leader, said early marriages were coming into disuse among the Sikhs. The age of puberty among Sikh Jats was about 15, it was lower in the case of city girls. So far as the age of consent is concerned very few people know of it and breaches of it were seldom reported. He thought if marriage age was fixed it would be better. He would not go below 14 and would prefer 16 for the marriage age of girl. In extra-marital cases he would fix the age of consent at 16. He thought Sikhs in villages would welcome marriage legislation. S. G. P. C. and Akali Dal have passed resolutions favouring Sarda's Bill. He knew of 5 or 6 cases where girl mothers as well as their children had suffered. He knew also of several cases of students ruining their health by early marriage. He would fix the marriage age for boys at 18 preferably at 20. Women generally preferred early marriage of their children but the educated persons were realising the evils effects of such marriages. If the age of girls were fixed at 14 there will be no danger of girls going wrong.

To Mrs. Nehru witness said education was responsible for late marriages. Age of consent had nothing to do.

He did not think age of consent legislation would be of any good. Parents would rather kill the girl than go to courts. Even if trials were held in camera it will have no effect.

Mr. Justice Aga Haider was the last witness examined that day. He gave his evidence in camera.

(To be continued.)

WINNING CEYLON FOR CHRIST.

(Concluded from the last issue).

The missionary took full advantage of the opportunity of effecting conversions from among the young who were entrusted to them for education in English. All the high dignities of the land were held by the Christian products of these institutions, and Buddhism began to be looked upon as a down-trodden thing unfit to be associated with high sounding name and title. But Christianity can never take the place of Buddhism for long, and to Panadura belongs the glory of having staged a public discussion on the merits of the two religions at which Buddhism was defended by the famous Migettuwatte, a specially gifted monk. Reading the reports of the debate now we find that the missionary ideas about the truths of Buddhism had been no more profound at that time than they appear to be now, but certainly the doctrines of Christianity were not mastered either. Though many of the arguments appear to us childish to-day the victory of Buddhism had a most important result, for the news brought to Ceylon in 1880 that great Buddhist worker Colonel Olcott. With the arrival of Col. Olcott commenced the slow but sure revival of Buddhism by the organising of Buddhist educational activity. From one Buddhist school in 1888 the number rose to 15 the next year, and the growth kept steadily on. Many were the obstacles the missionaries attempted to place against the advancement of Buddhist education, but it overcame them all. The missionary felt the growing strength of Buddhism and raised the cry that Buddhism was becoming aggressive, that it was not acting in accordance with its traditions of religious toleration. The cry was not justified for the Buddhist only provided accommodation in Buddhist schools for Buddhist children who chose to come and no propaganda was at any time carried on to empty the Christian schools of Buddhist children; but the alarm was justified for the census of 1921 clearly showed the influence of Buddhist activities on the increase of the Christian population. The rate of increase of the Christian population had been 11.6 per cent. for the decade ending 1881, 12.7 for the decade ending 1891, 15.6 for the next decade, rising to a maximum of 17.2 in the decade ending 1911; giving an average increase of 14.3 per cent. The figures for the next decade 1911 to 1921 showed a sudden drop to 8.4 per cent. which is less than half the rate for the previous decade.

Sections of the clergy have attempted to explain away the apparent falling off from the Christian following, but they have all failed. A responsible Protestant clergyman has lately explained, no doubt for the benefit of the patrons who support the missions with the necessary funds, that there had been a great deal of organisation which might be termed entrenchment, when all the other parties were up in arms. He admitted, however, "on the Christian side people were losing hold." If there has been entrenchment on the side of the Christians we might say that the Buddhists are certainly organising to propagate Buddhist education. I am afraid the Christian missionary is finding that there are no more people even young who are willing to allow themselves to be converted, and that it is difficult enough to keep within the fold the few Christians they now have.

What does this "Winning of the island for Christ" mean? Though our missionaries use this phrase glibly enough we are not favoured with an explanation which we can understand. They are many of them sent from England, so can we presume that they have already won England for Christ, and that their object is to make such another country as England out of Ceylon, not of course politically or economically but in a moral and religious sense? If this be so it is a condition very much to be desired. Those of us who have some acquaintance with the conditions in Europe know that religion plays no part in their life, least of all in England. It is not a good model to hold up for us who see in England a country given altogether to irreligion, with immorality plying its ugly trades in the most public way and unashamed. Ninety per cent. of its "Christians" never attend church and those that do, merely attend, for such are the observances in Christian churches that the service could take place even if the audience went to sleep as they frequently do. Contrast the Buddhist or Hindu countries and their religious ceremonies where every member does some puja or ceremonial himself, chants a text with his own lips; and in Ceylon ninety per cent. of the Buddhists attend to their religion on some day of the month. It is a mistake to let us learn the history of Christianity in Europe if the missionary wishes us to respect their religion. It is said that "Until the Reformation, Christianity was dominated by monks—parasites who lived by begging, lying, persecution; since then by capitalists—parasites who live by robbing, lying and warring." "Banish the Gods from the skies and capitalists from the earth" cry the socialists and the communists, and these are the result of winning a country for Christ. It may not be the inevitable result of embracing Christianity, in fact we know it ought not to be, for the religion of Christ is a noble doctrine as far as it goes, but this is the inevitable result of accepting the organisation which stands for the Government of Christ's religion on earth. Says a recent writer:—"The spectacle of the Churches of Europe sending up frantic appeals to the same God to give hell to each other in the recent war, so ludicrous were it not so pathetic, is the best proof, were proof needed, that Christianity has sunk back to the tribal level of a negative morality from which Christ elevated it to the height of a universal religion centuries ago. Churches have indeed killed their Christ."

What is the result of winning the country for Buddha? Can any Christian missionary point to any country in the world, either to-day or at any time these twenty-five centuries past, which has not been all the better for its Buddhist religion in spite of whatever superstition may have crept in to modify its observance? Can he point to one country in Asia which has not been all the worse for the Christianity which has weakened the influence of its ancient religion? What are the troubles in China to-day but the result of foreign religion which has attempted to denationalise the people? A militant European clergyman in Colombo said, "I make the bold assertion that religion has always been and must ever be the fundamental basis on which an enduring temple of nationhood must stand." He is quite correct, nationhood always stood and fell with its religion. The civil commotions in European countries were undoubtedly the signs of people adapting themselves to new conditions, adopting a new nationhood or modifying the old. The many sects in Christianity are due to the religion having been adapted to suit the temperament and traditions of the different peoples. If there had been many modern forms of religion in Europe the people might have saved much bloodshed, but unfortunately they had but one form to divide and adapt the best way they could, for they felt with all peoples that a religion good or bad was an essential for the development of nationhood. Such upheavals were unknown in Asia, and the civilisations of Asia are not the mushroom ones of Europe but those which have endured for many centuries.

Buddhism as a nation-building factor stands supreme as witness the strength of nationhood in Japan, China, Siam and Burma, and of Ceylon. India has shaken off its Buddhism as much owing to the invasion of the Huns as the devastating armies of the Mahomedan, but the Hinduism which has endured is undoubtedly a new thing adapted to suit the requirements of a country which once was Buddhist. Ceylon has remained Buddhist without a check for twenty two centuries and its religion, influence by Hinduism old and new, has moulded the character of the Sinhalese nation. The union between the two religions had been more complete if Christianity had not invaded the country with its wars and its denationalising influence, but to-day with the gradual weakening of whatever influence Christianity had in the island our nationhood will soon develop and the beautiful principles of Buddhism will soon assert themselves in conquering the social troubles of the country. By this means and not through any "sacrificial service to Jesus Christ" will Ceylon "come to the full greatness of her true destiny, so that the lustre of this pearl of the oceans may illuminate and radiate one and all who shall live or touch upon these emerald coast".

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Lahore Ladies Meeting:—A meeting of the ladies of Lahore was held on the 21st September in the Havell Nakain, Wachowali, to consider the Sarda's Bill and the Bill for amendment in the age of consent. Sh. Viro Bai Kohli was in the chair. Mrs. Brij Lal Nehru, a member of the Age of Consent Committee, addressing the meeting outlined grave defects of early marriage. She referring to Sarda's Bill said that it was being opposed by some members of Madras and some Mahomedans. She hoped that the Bill would be passed. She appealed to the audience to pass resolutions and send them to the Government in support of the Bill.

Child Marriages:—The Standing Committee of the Indian National Social Conference has telegraphed on the 21st September to the Home Member of the Government of India and others concerned stating that opposition to Mr. Sarda's Child Marriage Prevention Bill is artificial and interested persons and Hindus welcome the proposed legislation. The telegram urged Government to expedite the passage of the Bill.

Home for Hindus in London:—For the convenience of Indian friends "Shanti Niketan", a vegetarian hostel with comfortable arrangements for fifteen beds has been opened in London at No. 11 Belsize Park (N. W. 3.). There are sufficient number of rooms and behind the hostel a nice garden too. "Shanti Niketan" residence which is situated in a famous healthy quarter of the city receives full supply of sun's rays all day long and is only at a hundred yards' distance from the "Arya Bhawan". Hindu boarders are provided with pure vegetarian food there and the minimum weekly charges for food and lodging is £2-10-0 which is equivalent to about Rs. 34. Gentlemen, who intend to occupy rooms larger and more nicely furnished are charged according to their choice. Gentlemen, who are sailing or who intend to sail for England may write to Seth R. Bazaj at the above address or may cable to "Santi" London, (with reply paid) and make arrangements for their accommodation before-hand.

Sentence on Kharag Bahadur:—Over sixty members of the Assembly have signed an appeal for the release of Kharag Bahadur Singh, the Gurkha youth sentenced to eight years' rigorous imprisonment by the Calcutta High Court on the 23rd March 1927 in Calcutta in the Hiralal Agarwala murder case. The memorial which will shortly be presented to His Excellency the Viceroy says: "We do not question the correctness of the sentence from the legal standpoint, but we feel that the moral aspect of the case transcends the legal, and though Kharag Bahadur is guilty in the eyes of the law, he is deserving of all moral support. We are moved by the youth of this brilliant young graduate and by the fact that he was actuated by the most chivalrous and self-sacrificing motives to bring light inhuman brutalities and outrages that were practised on helpless and innocent women of the class of people to which the victims of Hiralal belonged. He committed a heroic deed which drew the applause of every community. The European Association and Indian Associations have alike pressed upon H. E. the Governor of Bengal for exercising the royal prerogative of mercy. Now that Kharag Bahadur Singh has undergone over one year's imprisonment and the honour of law has been sufficiently vindicated, we pray that Your Excellency be pleased to remit the the remaining sentence of Kharag Bahadur Singh and exercising the royal prerogative of mercy to direct his release."

Italian-Parsi Marriage:—A marriage between a Parsi girl, Hirabai, and an Italian musician, Signor Geola is reported to have taken place. It is stated, she left her father's house on Wednesday the 12th September saying that she would go out for a walk. Later it was learnt she was converted to Christianity and married Signor Geola.

The Late Mrs. Kalliani Bai Subbukrishnayya—The Secretary, Mangalore Brahma Samaj, writes:—With profound grief, I communicate the news of the death of Srimathi Kalliani Bai, wife of Reverend E. Subbu Krishnayya, Missionary of the Brahma Samaj, on Sunday the 16th of September, 1928, at 1-20 a. m. after a protracted illness for two months. She was an educated lady and a true help-mate to her husband in his Mission work. Where-ever she went she made herself very useful to the Brahma community and others who had come in contact with her. She earned a very good reputation from the orthodox people of Ouddalore, where she worked for sometime, as the Head-mistress of the Home Educational Classes conducted by the National Indian Association Branch there, and she was also acting as the Secretary of the Ladies' Club. After her marriage in 1918, she came to live with her husband at Madras, where with her hearty cooperation and help, Mr. Subbukrishnayya could receive a number of boys and girls in their house for educational purposes and their house was something like an unrecognised Hostel. When she was at Bangalore later on, she conducted services on more than one occasion from the pulpit of the Cantonment Brahma Samaj, besides being the Secretary of the Bharata Mahila Samithi and Superintendent of the Bachammal Widows Home, both of which were started by her husband in company with others, of course, with her cooperation. Even after she had left Bangalore along with her husband she had one or two helpless widows under her protection, the last of whom was married only so recently as the 29th July 1928, when owing to her illness the marriage ceremony could not take place at Mangalore, but she insisted on witnessing the registration, which was done in her presence in her sick-room. So wherever she was she tried her best to serve the Brahma Samaj, and her fellow-sisters to the best of her capacity, as the opportunities came to her. She was very devout and prayerful in her daily life and during the whole course of illness, she used to repeat very often the name of God. She left behind her, sorrowing husband, three young daughters, aged parents, brothers and a sister and a host of friends to mourn her loss. May God grant her peace and may she enjoy her everlasting bliss in the bosom of the Divine-Mother.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs.	a.	p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0	5	0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0	5	0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0	5	0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0	5	0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0	8	0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0	8	0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0	10	0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	0	12	0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1	4	0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1	14	0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2	14	0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2	14	0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3	0	0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4	1	0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4	14	0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4	14	0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6	0	0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT.,
 Royapuram, Madras.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

A Human Document.—By Mr. V. S. Sohoni. The life of a Dhedi in Bombay. Reprinted from the Reformer. Price annas 4.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
 THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
 Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

The Bombay Swadeshi Co-operative Stores Co., Ltd.,

Have removed to their New Premises, Near Esplanade Police Court,
 Cruikshank Road, Fort, Bombay.

WE SOLICIT YOUR PATRONAGE

THE CHEAPEST HOUSE FOR INDIAN-MADE GOODS.

NEW AND IMPORTANT PAMPHLETS.

By Dr. G. S. Arundale, M.A., LL.B.

The fruits of his recent meditations on current questions.

Extremely suggestive and helpful.

A series of Pamphlets will be available at Four Annas each (Postage extra).

- | | |
|---|---------------|
| 1. Krishnaji: Light-Bringer. | Now Ready |
| 2. The Joy of Catastrophe | " " |
| 3. Go Your Own Way | " " |
| 4. Fanaticism—Wholesale and Retail | Shortly Ready |
| 5. Shadows and Mountains | " " |
| 6. The Intolerable Tyranny of the Every-day | " " |

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY:

- The Re-Birth of Hindu Music.—By Rudhyar of Carlos Salzedo, America. A French—American, Composer—Philosopher—Poet, considered as a friend as well as a genius.
 "In his knowledge and sincerity, his strength and his industry, he is the musical peer of many celebrities who has gained real support and attention in our country."—Los Angeles Record.
 Artistic get up. Price: Cloth and Gold, Rs. 5. Double Wrappers, Rs. 3-12.
- The Gita and Spiritual Life.—By D. S. Sarma, M.A., Prof. Presidency College, Madras, and author of Introduction to Bhagavat-Gita. Price: Boards, Re. 1-8; Wrappers, Re. 1-2.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 ADYAR, MADRAS, INDIA.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	1,00,00,000

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches:—(1) Mandvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Behman Street.

Mofussil Branches:—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharla, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Asansol, Chandausi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jaunagar.

London Agents:—The Midland Bank, Ltd.

New York Agents:—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents:—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts:—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act

VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh).
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kafol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital	...	Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :--BARODA.

Branches :--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwaraka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS :

Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vitthaladas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. Nawroji B. Saklatwala, C.I.E., (Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay).
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26

C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay
 Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
 Agents.

Sudama House, 1, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26

Bombay.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).

Rs. s. p.

Inland ...	5	0	0
" " Foreign ...	5	8	0
Single copy ...	0	8	0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY
 DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
 POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, B O M B A Y.

We undertake every kind of Litho-graphic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for
advertisements.

THE MANAGER,The Hindustan Review.

PATNA, E. I. R.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY,
ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS

(Agencies), Ltd.,

16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
(A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

Fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free.

To every purchaser of our “Luxorette” lever Radium Silvered Pocket Watch, guaranteed for five years, costing Rupees five, we give our fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free. Write now. The radium pocket watch has strong mechanism and well built and can be seen well in nights without the help of lights. Please order soon.

Price Rs. 5 only.

Address:—SWAN HOUSE,

P. B. No. 508.

P. T. MADRAS.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

- | | | |
|-----------------|-----|--|
| EYE DISEASES... | ... | Try "Akhyacura." |
| RING WORM ... | ... | Try "Kurain." |
| ASTHMA ... | ... | Try "Asthma Cure." |
| STRENGTH ... | ... | Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil." |
| TONICS ... | ... | Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills."
"Larrish's Chemical Food."
"Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo-phosphites of Lime." |
| GONORRHŒA ... | ... | Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C.
Copaiba Cum Buchu." |

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO, LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Tonight at 9-30 and Tomorrow at 5-30 P.M.

Bandvard's New Musical Comedy Company

presents

LIDOLADY

from the Gaiety Theatre, London, with a full caste of 25 artistes.

EMPIRE THEATRE

Tonight and Tomorrow
at 4, 6-15, 8-15, and 10 P.M.

BEAU SABREUR

(Companion Picture to "BEAU GESTE")

Another gripping story of the French Foreign Legion in which a French Officer vows never to look at another woman but fails. Featuring

NOAH BEERY-WILLIAM POWELL
EVELYN BRENT-GRAY COOPER.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Tonight and Tomorrow
At 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

The Hero of "BEN-HUR" Dashing, Daring, Handsome RAMON NOVARRO

in

THE MIDSHIPMAN.

Romance and thrills ahoy!—A stirring
Picture of the daring and adventures of a Midshipman.

EMPRESS CINEMA

Tonight and Tomorrow
At 4, 6-15, 8-15 and 10-15, P.M.

BEAU-GESTE

The red-blooded Tale of the burning wastes of the Great Sahara! Featuring
RONALD COLMAN-NOAH BEERY-ALICE JOYCE-NEIL HAMILTON-WILLIAM POWELL.

If you have not seen this picture, don't miss this opportunity.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1928

No. 7

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Statutory Commission. Indo-European Marriages. The Aga Khan on Purdah. What is given to Missions. The Revolution in China. Next Kamala Lectures. Women's Magazines. Coronation by Brahmin Priests. Index to Volume XXXVIII.	Women and Succession. Occasional Notes. Floods in the Punjab. Political Implication of Social Reform. Age of Consent Inquiry. Status of a European Wife in India. News of the Week.
--	--

NOTES.

The Statutory Commission:—The Statutory Commission on Indian constitutional reforms, popularly known as the Simon Commission from the name of its Chairman, Sir John Simon, landed on Thursday night in Bombay and immediately left for Poona by special train. The members seem to have satisfied themselves during their first visit, six months ago, that India is not altogether a land of snakes and tigers and that Indian politicians have no cannibal propensities. They have, therefore, ventured to bring their woman-kind with them this time. It is a pity that these ladies will have few opportunities of coming in contact with progressive Indian women, owing to the rigid boycott instituted against the Commission and all its belongings by a large section of the politically-minded, which is, also, the socially progressive, section of Indians. The Indian supporters or rather supplicants of the Commission are as reactionary in the social as in the political sphere. Taking a hundred men at random of the pro-Commission and the anti-Commission parties, it will be found that the largest proportion of men who are opposed to the education and emancipation of women are to be found among the former, and the smallest among the latter. In fact, some of those who support the Commission are actuated by the fear that the progressive Indians, if they get the power, will deal with oppression of women with a strong hand, and liberate women from the thralldom of the purdah, polygamy, enforced widowhood and illiteracy with their concomitants of domestic tyranny. The ladies are not themselves Commissioners, but they can suggest to the Commissioners to put a few questions to the witnesses who appear before them about their views on women's position in society and the family. We are ourselves interested chiefly in social reform and we value constitutional reform as a necessary means of social reform. The ladies of the Commission may be of service to the cause of social progress, if they warn their male relatives that they would be making themselves responsible for hindering the movement for the advancement of women, if they succumb to the blandishments of the reactionaries who besiege them with their fulsome compliments.

Indo-European Marriages:—The judgment of a Bombay High Court Bench on the case in which the European woman, who married an Indian Mahomedan Merchant in South Africa, sought to repudiate the validity of her marriage and to establish her legal status as a European British subject, is reproduced in this issue. The Court held that a European woman by marrying an Indian does not cease to have the legal status, according to Indian law, of a European British subject. "It could not be contended," observed Mr. Justice Mirza "that a native British Indian woman, if she married a British European subject, would thereby come under the definition of European British subject, nor could it be contended that a European British subject who had married a native British Indian husband would thereby cease to be a European British subject as defined in the Criminal Procedure Code." His Lordship also upheld the woman's contention that the marriage itself was null and void, as the man had a Mahomedan wife living, and South Africa being "a Christian country" must be presumed to have made a polygamous marriage illegal. A Mahomedan is permitted to marry more than one wife by his personal law. Supposing, this man had married a second wife after his marriage with the European woman, would he make himself liable to be proceeded against for bigamy or would the first marriage become null and void, and the children, by it if any, branded as illegitimate? If the European woman became a convert to Islam before or after her "marriage", will the marriage be still without legal sanction?

The Aga Khan on Purdah.—His Highness the Aga Khan is not only interested in politics but has much sympathy for social reform. This has been brought out in an article by Lady Lawford, wife of Lieut.-General Sir Sydney Lawford, K. B. E., published in the London Evening News. The writer gives an insight into the early life and education of His Highness and quotes his views and those of his mother on purdah. "The ideas of the Aga Khan's mother," says the writer, "became more and more modern as years passed; and at sixty having been in purdah all her life, she decided that the system was a wrong one. In this decision her son agrees, and gives as a reason that it makes women self-centred, narrow-minded and in no way companionable. He is quite certain that by the end of this generation, purdah system will be dead in all countries." There is every sign that His Highness' words will prove prophetic. Turkey and Egypt have already sounded the death-knell of the purdah, and in Afghanistan the Queen herself has taken the lead in the eradication of the pernicious custom. In India itself, the royal family of Bhopal is working towards that end. Though much advance has not been made in the abolition of the purdah in British India, enlightened public opinion, particularly among women, has declared itself against its perpetuation. The All-India Women's Education Conference which has become an annual feature has done much to focus public attention on the detrimental effect of the purdah on the womanhood of India. While on this subject, we are not a little amused at the novel suggestion put forward before the Moslem Educational Conference, by Sir Ghulam Hussein Hidayatullah, that special correspondence courses in education should be introduced for the benefit of purdah ladies. The remedy suggested for illiteracy among purdah women is as unnatural as the evil which warps the intellect and undermines the physical constitution of women. It is a pity that our Moslem countrymen have not yet realised that this social reform is long due and that an intensive campaign is necessary to bring it about.

What is given to Missions.—The £7,761,000 which the United States and Canada have annually over the three-year period 1924-25-26, contributed to Protestant missionary work totalling approximately £12,000,000, is rather more than three times Great Britain's average over the same period. This amounts to £2,309,000. These are the figures given by Dr. A. L. Warnshuis, Secretary of the American office of the International Missionary Council, from figures supplied through the national missionary organisations represented on the Council. The figures of practically every society, except the Salvation Army, are thus included. Writes the Baptist Missionary Review for October:—In addition to the gifts from Canada which is included with the United States as the North American Unit of the Council, the British Dominions stand well as contributors to missionary work. Australia's yearly average has been £3,14,000, New Zealand £96,000 and South Africa £100,000. Of the Continental contributors Norway and Sweden give nearly quarter of a million pounds a year each (Norway £2,16,000; Sweden £2,11,000), while Germany which during the period of depreciation of her currency practically dropped out of the list, is now creeping back to her former place as a generous supporter of missionary work. Her three years' average is £1,82,000, but 1926 figures were 1,200,000, marks in excess of those of 1924. Denmark gives annually £ 1,30,000, Finland, £27,000, Switzerland £54,000, and the Netherlands £1,04,000 while last in the list is France's £18,000 and Belgium's £600.

The Revolution in China.—We had the pleasure of receiving last week a very interesting Chinese visitor, Dr. Tsemon-Hsu on his way to Bolpur to visit the poet, Tagore. Dr. Tsemon-Hsu took a leading part in organising the reception when the poet visited China some years ago. Dr. Tsemon-Hsu is less interested in politics than in cultural matters, and he expressed himself as seriously concerned at the entirely secular turn which the Revolution has taken in his country. Of the women's movement in China, he spoke in very hopeful terms. The women students are as enthusiastic as the men in the national cause. The equality of women is recognised so much so that a Chinese lady was nearly appointed to represent her country in France last year. Dr. Tsemon-Hsu has received his education in America and England.

Next Kamala Lectures.—The Kamala lectures were founded in memory of the daughter of the late Sir Asutosh Mukerji, for many years Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University. The first lecture under the endowment was delivered by Dr. Besant. Mrs. Sarojini Naidu was chosen last year and Mr. M. R. Jayakar has been invited to deliver them this year. His subject is "Ideals of Indian Culture." A more suitable choice could not have been made.

Women's Magazines.—The increasing strength of the Women's movement is reflected in the number and interest of Women's Magazines. The Indian Ladies' Magazine, which has been revived by Mrs. K. Sathianadhan, represents what may be called the conservative side of the movement, while Stri Dharma, edited by Mrs. Malati Patwardhan, voices the demand of Indian women to have an equal place in the fighting line of Indian nationalism. It is significant of the earnestness of the women's movement in this country that neither in the two English Magazines referred to above, nor in the numerous vernacular monthlies is much space devoted to the fashions in dress, doing of the hair, care of the skin and other aids to beauty which are so prominent in the ladies' pages of English newspapers which of course, are often written by men.

Coronation By Brahmin Priests:—It will perhaps be of interest to the Hindus to learn, writes the Leader, that Brahmin priests officiated at the coronation ceremony of the King of Cambodia which was held on July 22. The special correspondent of the Times giving a graphic account of the ceremony writes:—"On the entry of the eight officiating Brahmin priests the King rose and seated himself on a low chair immediately in front of the throne-dais. The eight Brahmins approached and knelt around the Sovereign, representing the eight points of the compass. One after another they repeated the traditional prayer for the King's welfare, his Majesty turning his chair so as to face each priest as he spoke. During this ceremony the King, although a Buddhist, held in his hand the images of Vishnu and Siva, the "Protectors of Cambodia"—a tradition of the old Vedic faith so deeply rooted in the country."

Index to Volume XXXVIII:—Copies of the Index to volume XXXVIII of the Indian Social Reformer are now ready and will be available on application.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, OCTOBER 13, 1928.

WOMEN AND SUCCESSION.

The slow pace of social legislation in India finds striking illustration in the Hindu Law of Inheritance Bill which the Council of State passed almost at the very end of the Simla session a few days ago. A Bill to effect the same object was introduced in 1921 in the Legislative Assembly and was circulated for opinion in the country. Opinions were received and the Bill was referred to a Select Committee. The Select Committee completely recast the Bill and it was passed as revised by the Committee. This was in 1923. The Bill then came up before the Council of State but before it could be passed, the Council was dissolved, and the Bill lapsed. It was two years before a new Bill to the same purport was introduced in the Assembly, which passed it unanimously. Three years later it came up to the Council of State and was passed last month. One could understand this inordinate delay, if the object of the Bill was a controversial one. It was nothing of the kind. The principle of it had received the support many years ago of such eminent conservative Hindu jurists as Sir V. Bhashyam Aiyangar and Sir T. Muthuswami Aiyar. In the Legislative Assembly it was supported by the late Mr. Seshgiri Aiyar and Dewan Bahadur T. Rangacharya. In the Council of State on the last occasion the Bill was in charge of Sir Sankaran Nair who made an interesting speech in moving its adoption. The purpose of the Bill may be stated in a few words. According to the Hindu law as at present administered, sons' daughters, daughters' daughters and a man's own sisters come after seven degrees of agnate relationship in the order of inheritance. The Bill rectifies this glaring anomaly and puts these categories in their natural place. Very orthodox people have for a long time felt the present law to be intolerable. Sir Sankaran Nair put it in a nutshell in his speech. He said :

With the exception of the daughter you find no females among them (about 332 heirs) at all. Females are excluded from succession. It is not a case of males being preferred to females, but of the total exclusion of females. It even comes to this, that if there are no heirs in the male or female lines as stated by me, the Government take the property by escheat to the exclusion of females. Now that is the law. What we seek to do by this Bill is to get rid of that principle and to introduce into the line of succession a few selected females whose selection is likely to find favour with the country generally, and whose selection will be a test.

The Hindu scheme of succession divides bandhus or relatives into three categories—atma bandhus, one's own descendants, pitri bandhus, the father's descendants, and matri bandhus, the mother's descendants. Descendants, however, refers only to males, with the single exception of one's own daughter. The Bill merely extends the categories so as to include women also. A son's daughter and a daughter's daughter will have precedence next after a man's son and daughter, and a father's sister and her son will have precedence next after the father's father. The principle of the Bill is to remove a disability attaching to women as women. Sir Sankaran explained why they had to be content with bringing in these four persons only for the present. "We had," he said, "included others in the first Bill, but all those names were removed, in order to conciliate opposition, that is, those who were in charge of the Bill said that they would not insist upon giving the daughter's daughter and the son's daughter the place that is rightfully theirs, but they will bring them only after the father's father and the father's brother." Sir Sankaran went into the Hindu law relating to succession, and showed how the exclusion of women was the result of a mistranslation of an ancient text. The text, rightly translated, means "Women are considered disqualified to drink the Soma juice and receive no portion of it at the sacrifice." It was translated into "Females are devoid of prowess and incompetent to inherit." Other ancient sages whose authority is unquestioned, have laid down: "Women could perform sacrifices and study the Vedas. They have proprietary rights equal to those of men." Sir Sankaran pointed out that while the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts stuck to the erroneous interpretation, the Bombay and Madras Courts favoured the right one. This divergence, he attributed to the different political histories of North and South India. "You have," he said, "the laws in South India, the commentators in Southern India and the commentators in Western India, at a time when the Hindu religion was in its glory and the Hindus were free and prosperous. But North India was then under the Mahomedans, and the Hindus had to preserve themselves against the democratic and iconoclastic tendencies of Mahomedanism. Therefore, the rules which were enacted in Northern India were rules intended to preserve Hinduism, not intended for advance or for a very progressive nation."

We do not know how far this explanation is correct. The dates of the commentators, especially the Northern, were not far later than the Mahomedan conquest. Moreover, Mahomedan law recognises the rights of women to inherit property and to deprive Hindu women of their rights, does not seem to be the best way of preserving Hinduism. The rule of the gotra, which is at the bottom of the disqualification of women, holds good all over the country, and is evidently anterior to the Mahomedan era. Above all, the Mahomedan Empire at least in India very soon settled down as merely a tax-taking system and ceased to exercise, or even attempt to exercise, any influence on the social or domestic life of the Hindus, OCCASIONAL NOTES.

(BY MR. N. LAKSHMANAN.)

Every one familiar with the history of the anti-nautch movement knows that its object is to discourage the profession of dancing by immoral women by withholding public patronage. But a South Indian ex-member of the Legislative Assembly took it into his head to say, in his evidence before the Cinematograph Committee, that respectable Indian ladies will not adopt the screen as a profession and therefore he made the jejune suggestion dancing women should be encouraged to become Cinema "Stars." He thus not only betrayed his ignorance of the main object of the Social purity movement, but also refused to see which way the wind blows. The Cinema Committee Report however claims that Cinema shows have in a way hastened the decline of the nautch system. Reviewing this Report, the Reformer observed that if men of high social and intellectual status take the initiative, it will not be difficult to attract Indian girls of respectable families to the profession which does not involve appearing before the foot-lights in large and crowded theatres. No sooner did I read this remark than I noticed in an illustrated journal the portrait of the first Indian lady to adopt the screen as a profession. She is a B.A. (Hons.) of the Madras University and is a daughter of a District and Sessions Judge. There are enough indications to show that even the foot-lights have begun to attract a small group of educated and cultured actors and actresses.

The efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Chattopadhyaya to establish a national theatre are already known to the public. Mr. T. Raghavachari, a vakil from Bellary, says after a four months study tour of the theatre in England and Europe that respectable and cultured women should take an active part in the reconstruction of the theatre. "The glaring inequalities perpetuated by men on women," he says, "cannot be effectively questioned unless woman herself takes active part and asserts her true estate," (New India: 18th September 1928). Poet Rabindranath Tagore, whose noble pioneering spirit seems to grow with his growing old age, is now taking a keen interest in bringing about the revival of Indian dancing. His great play: Natir-Pooja (Worship of the Dancing-girl) is at once a message and a method. It was an inspiration to me to see the Mahakavi himself appear on the stage in the role of a Buddhist monk. The cultured Calcutta audience that witnessed the play at the Poet's residence in Jorosanko felt this to be the artistic marvel of the epoch of Rabindranath, especially as the Poet broke new ground by allowing girls and women of respectable families to take part in this drama of dance. Tagore's letters from Java are full of descriptions of dancing parties. In Javanese dancing, as in the case of the Kathakali of Malabar, singing and dancing are totally free from unmoral or immoral associations.

Dancing in India was not always the monopoly of professional women of known immoral behaviour. As Mr. C. V. Vaidya says in his book on Epic India (pages 171-172) it might seem strange to modern Hindu ears that dancing was taught to females. The daughter of Virata in the company of several fellow students of the same sex was taught singing and dancing by Brihannada. In Virata's palace there was a special hall for girls to learn dancing. Dancing is, today, confined to a caste and this is, of course, subject to the usual "gradation and degradation of the caste system." In Europe, a woman is at liberty to end a dancing career by making her last bow at any moment, but in India the rule is: "Once a dancer, always a dancer."

The writings and speeches of the Hon'ble Mr. V. Ramadas Pantulu on legislation to suppress Devadasihood show his genuine zeal for reform. The progressive spirit of the Andhra leader is a refreshing contrast to the intellectual subtlety and the Arjuna spirit displayed by Tamil Brahman leaders like Sir C. P. Ramaswami Iyer and Srijit S. Sreenivasa Iyengar. Mr. Pantulu has already fought against the peculiar attitude of the ex-Law Member of the Madras Government and it only remains to refer to the somersaults of Mr. Iyengar. Fresh from his European tour, Mr. Iyengar is reported to have said that he has not yet made up his mind, one way or the other, on the subject of Devadasi legislation, though it is a matter of common knowledge that the agitation in favour of the suppression of Devadasihood is going on for two generations. He wants more time to make up his mind in the matter of rendering a bare act of social justice to a much, maligned minority community, probably because he is busy twisting the tail of the British lion. Public memory is proverbially short; and probably Mr. Iyengar himself has clean forgotten the learned address which he delivered, as the chairman of the Reception committee, before the National Social Conference held at Madras during the national week of 1914. It is no wonder that a handful of Madras Devadasis who pretend to speak on behalf of their sisters all over the Presidency have ventured to appeal in turn to the congressmen and the orthodox Brahmans to come to their rescue and perpetuate "the oldest profession in the world," in spite of the fact that, as Mr. Pantulu truly says, in recent times a great change has come over the moral consciousness of the community in general and of the castes which are the victims of the cruel custom in particular.

Mr. Pantulu admits that there does not seem to be much difficulty in the way of disassociating the services of dancing women from the inams and leaving the lands in the enjoyment of the holders thereof and making over the assessment to those to whom the services are due. This is actually the method successfully adopted several years ago by the enlightened State of Mysore. This being the case, I wonder why Mr. Pantulu is also suggesting the superfluous and perilous alternative of permitting services by male proxies. The self-respecting members of the unfortunate minority community concerned would never agree to continue to wear the badge of their tribe. I happened to meet His Holiness Sir Narayana Guru of revered memory sometime before his illness which proved fatal, and when discussing the Devadasi problem I told him that a High Court Vakil has seriously written in the Madras dailies that a Hindu Deity "cannot afford to lose the Nrithya, Geeta and adyams in the temples". The Guru, with his rare gift of response, said at once that in that case the gentleman should be asked to make good the loss to the Deity. The point of joke is that no self-respecting man would care to act as proxy to part of temple service to which a stigma is attached. As Sir Leslie Wilson said in his convocation address, the danger lies not in bad customs, which everyone has or ought to have the sense to avoid but in good ones—good, that is, in their day, which have outgrown their usefulness. The Reformer has been sometimes uneasy of late at social legislation being undertaken by persons of great ability and sincere purpose no doubt, who rather regard Indian Social institutions from different angle. As for the "results" of social reform, it is soul-elevating to read the following words of Mahatma Gandhi:—"I have long believed that social reform is a tougher business than political reform. The atmosphere is ready for the latter, people are interested in it, and there is an impression abroad that it is possible without self-purification. On the other hand people have little interest in social reform, the result of agitation does not appear to be striking, and there is little room for congratulations and addresses. The social reformers will have therefore to plod on for some time, hold themselves in peace and be satisfied with apparently small results." This is of course the working faith of the Indian social reformer as distinguished from social workers and social legislators.

FLOODS IN THE PUNJAB.

"It is evident from the communiqué that the Punjab Government has just issued," writes the Tribune "that the damage actually caused by the floods in the Jhelum, the Chenab and the Ravi, far exceeds the original anticipations of the Government. In the districts of Sialkot, Gujrat, Jhelum, Shahpur and Gujranwala, it is stated that no less than 850 villages have been damaged, 7,000 heads of cattle were carried away by the roaring waters, and about 16,000 houses were destroyed or damaged. These figures do not include the loss caused in Shahpur district, because full details of that district are not yet available. In view of this tremendous loss, it is absolutely essential that prompt relief measures should be taken to alleviate the sufferings of the villagers, hundreds of whom have been rendered homeless. The Government have placed eight lakhs of rupees for taccavi loans at the disposal of the Commissioners, and it is stated that one lakh and thirty thousand rupees have been transferred from the Provincial Famine Relief Fund, for the relief of the destitute. To supplement the relief measures announced by the Government and the relief fund started by the Minister for Local Self-Government, local relief committees have been started in different places. If the activities of all these bodies were co-ordinated, much could be done to remove the distress of the poor sufferers. In this matter at any rate the Government and the people can and ought to work together." The other provinces of India should also contribute to the relief of the Punjab.

POLITICAL IMPLICATION OF SOCIAL REFORM.

A correspondent writes from Coconada:—Your attention has not possibly been directed to the letter published by a Christian Missionary in the "Indian Daily Mail" and extracted in the "Hindu" dated 28th September last under the above caption. I send herewith a cutting thereof as it deserves republication in your columns in connection with the controversy now carried on in your paper on Bolshevism and Christian Missions. A perusal of the Missionary's letter will at once create an ineradicable impression that the Governments in India want the Missionaries to do nothing more hereafter than add to the number of converts annually by possible means and keep them in the Bonds of Christ as one West African Chief once subscribed himself in a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury requesting him to use his influence to send more Bible than rum into his territory. If the communication in question be of the nature of a general circular to all Mission bodies receiving Government grants, contributions or subsidies for their institutions, we should be cautious in our dealings hereafter with them even in matters pertaining to social reform including caste reform.

More than forty years ago when I was a student of the Rajahmundry College, I distinctly remember to have read somewhere that Sir Lepel Griffin seriously advised the Government of India that missionaries in this country should be severely warned not to wax eloquent on the evils of caste system and the pressing necessity of its abolition so as to make Indians a nation and establish union among them. The average missionary of to-day is of different habits temperment and attitude when compared with those with whom Rao Bahadur K. Virasalingam Pantulu and other reformers were associated in the last quarter of the last century even in Andhra Desa. With admonitions and warnings of the nature conveyed in the extract, the missionary will hereafter have to be more secluded zealously watching his flocks and making his annual reports to home boards in the customary manner. Before long, it may probably fall to the lot of the missionary in India, expecting Government grants to extol the virtues and benefit of the caste system with a view to further the object of the Government bent upon perpetuating it for its ulterior purposes. The following quotation from the introductory Chapter in Sitanatha Tatwabhusan's "Social Reform in Bengal" dedicated to His Highness the Maharajah Gaekwar of Baroda and published in 1904 may be found appropriate in this connection: "A wise Englishman has said about our caste-system that if there is anything most excellently calculated to prevent national unity in India it is the caste system and a Government desiring to keep the different classes of the Indian Community apart from one another has nothing more to do than foster and nurse the system."

POLITICAL IMPLICATIONS OF SOCIAL REFORM.

Significant warning to Missionary workers. The following is an extract from a letter written by a Christian Missionary and published in the "Indian Daily Mail":—

This summer I received a communication from Government to the effect that if I did not cease attending political meetings, they would complain against me to my board and would withdraw the Government grant which is being given to the high school with which I am connected. They said that they had no charge to make against me other than that I had attended such meetings, but they considered this to be a violation of the Boards undertaking. They even objected to my having attended such meetings as have to do even with widow marriages, the removal of caste restrictions and Hindu Muslim unity on the ground that these all have political implications."

AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

(Continued from the last issue).

The Age of Consent Committee held their last public sitting on September 21st in Lahore when they examined four witnesses. The Committee later on left for Peshawar by the Frontier mail. Rai Bahadur Pandit Kanhaya Lal one of the members of the Committee, was absent.

R. R. KUMRIA.

Mr. R. R. Kumria was the first witness examined. Replying to the Chairman, witness said he was the President of the League of Emancipated, Lahore. He fixed the age of 15 for girls and 23 for boys, for marriage and consent. The law of consent could only be effective if age of marriage was also raised.

To Mrs. Nehru witness said excepting a few educated persons very few knew of the age of consent. He suggested that some propaganda work should be done in order to make it known. He suggested a special department should be opened for registration of births and marriages.

Examined by Mr. Mudaliyar witness said he did not think older generation would oppose the registration of marriages.

MR. MOTILAL KAESTHA.

Mr. Moti Lal Kaestha, Vice-Chairman, District Board, Kangra, was the next witness. Questioned by the Chairman witness said the age of puberty in Kangra was between 14 and 16 in all classes. Marriages were solemnised generally after puberty. He knew in Kulu and Chamba girls were not married before 20. It was a big lie that there was immorality among Kangra girls. There was a system of exchanging wives by payment of money about 20 years ago, but it had now stopped. Polygamy and Polyandry had also disappeared after the return of Kangra soldiers from war centres of Europe. In Kulu sub-division the girls chose their own husbands. They moved about freely. There was a tendency for late marriages, due to women's education. It was not correct that girls in Kulu went wrong and became immoral because they remained unmarried upto a late age. The children of Kulu and Kangra were very healthy.

To Mrs. Nehru witness said the general impression was that the marriage legislation introduced in Mandi State were liked by the people.

To Mr. Kadri witness said he thought summary trials would be best so that speedy justice could be given. He would not increase punishment but only suggest six months' imprisonment for husbands. He thought it would be sufficiently deterrent. He would raise the age to 18 so far as extra-marital cases were concerned. The opposition urged by orthodox people was a mere show.

MR. DIN MOHAMMAD.

Mr. Din Mohammad of Qadian was next examined. In reply to the Chairman witness said the Ahmadiya Community would not object to raising the age of consent to 14 years. This they suggested as a precautionary measure. He would favour marriage legislation.

He thought that the law of consent had been effective in country side. He could say with certainty that consummation of marriage did not take place among Muslims before 18. His idea was that girls in India were babies even up to the age of 18 or 19. The age of 14 was an evil but at present he would not raise it straightway but would rather raise it gradually. Koran did not lay any tenets regarding age of marriage or consent. It only declared that when girls were grown up and able to use discretion they should be married.

To Mr. Kadri witness said Islam had given complete latitude to make changes according to circumstances. According to Mahomedan Law a Muslim girl had no right to surrender her person to a stranger, and laws on this point were very stiff. He suggested that there should be no imprisonment at all and only fine should be imposed. The parents should pay the fine being responsible for the marriage of their children.

SARDAR ABHAY SINGH.

Sardar Abhay Singh, Secretary, S. G. P. O. Amritsar, was the last witness examined. Replying to the Chairman witness said among the Sikhs the girls were married at the age of 16 in rural areas and there was hardly any complaint of early marriage. The Sikhs in villages considered early consummation an evil. He would not have marriages of girls before 15 and that of boys before 18. He knew of a case in Multan where a husband of 45 years had intercourse with his girl wife of 11.

To Mrs. Beadon witness said Hindu and Sikh girls in villages did not go astray even if they were not married at a late age. He knew among the rural Sikh Jats girls were neglected. He knew of cases where girls were either killed or allowed to die. Such people belonged to cultivator classes. It was a fact that certain Jats committed rape because they could not find wives owing to shortage of girls.

To Mr. Mudaliyar witness said he thought fixing of age of marriage was the only effective course. The Sikhs would not object to the fixing of marriage age.

To Mr. Kadri witness said wives would never appear as witnesses in a court in cases of breach of consent laws. Even if women organisations were set up it would not be effective in villages.

EVIDENCE AT KARACHI.

The Age of Consent Committee with Sir Moropant Joshi as its chairman and six members including two ladies, arrived in Karachi on Saturday the 29th September and that very afternoon started their work at the Frere Hall and sat from 2 to 4-30 p. m. and examined two witnesses, Dr. G. T. Hingorani and Mr. Jamshed N. R. Mehta,

The following are the seven members of the Committee present at the Frere Hall on Saturday—Sir Moropant Joshi, Mrs. Beadon O'Brien, Mrs. Brijlal Nehru, K. B. Mahbub Imam, R. B. Pandit Kanayalal, Mr. A. Ramaswamy Mudaliar and Pandit Thakurdas Bhargava.

The Committee sat on Sunday also for about one hour and examined one witness, R. B. Dr. P. T. Kothari, Civil Surgeon of Sukkur.

DR. HINGORANI'S EVIDENCE.

Replying to Sir Moropant Joshi, Dr. Hingorani said that he has been practising for the last 20 years and that he is a specialist in women's diseases and midwifery. He had treated two thousand to three thousand cases relating to confinement. At present the marriages among Hindus were being celebrated when the girl is aged between 11 to 14, previously the marriages were celebrated even earlier. In certain classes, especially the non-educated Bania class, the practice of performing marriages even before puberty was common. As the result of this there were many evils of a serious nature. Consumption and hysteria were very common diseases among girls who married before reaching puberty. Consummation of early marriages was responsible for these diseases.

He suggested that the marriageable age should be fixed between 16 and 18 years and by adopting that course he did not think that there would be any serious opposition from any community.

Replying to the question whether the age of 18 outside marriage will help in reducing the cases of elopement and abduction witness stated that the selling of girls was very common. Here the witness narrated an incident as to how a girl was being brought to Karachi by the parents, how she was sold to another person and how threatening the parents and the panchayat he took the girl and handed her over to her relative who was well off and whom he could trust. He did not believe that if the girls were kept for a long time after puberty they would become adulterous or they would elope or be enticed away, but said that it would depend upon surroundings and circumstances of each girl. It would be better to keep them till 16 years without marriage than to send them away to their husbands at an early age.

Answering Mrs. M. O'Brien Beadon, M.B.B.S., witness stated that in the Bania community marriages were being performed at the age of eleven to thirteen.

In reply to Mrs. Brijlal Nehru, Dr. Hingorani stated that he was speaking practically of the whole of Sind Province. The evils which he stated in reply to a question of the Chairman were not prevalent throughout the province but in the city of Karachi and some adjacent talukas.

REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS.

For determining the real age of girls witness suggested that when the child is born the date of birth of the child, her name and the age of the mother must also be recorded in the birth register of the district local board or municipality. If anybody violates the Bill he must be penalised. The matter should be reported to the Police.

Question: Do you think that such cases could be entrusted safely to the police?

Answer: I am not competent to say on the matter but it ought to be made a cognisable offence.

Continuing witness stated that infant mortality was due to child marriages. The age of consent bill had been well received and approved by the people of Sind. Even the Pandits had no objection to raising the age of consent and of the marriage. The local Hindu Sabha and Saraswat Brahmin Conference also passed resolutions approving of the fixing the marriageable age of girls at 16.

Replying to Pt. Thakurdas Bhargava, witness stated that the selling of girls was prevalent among the depressed classes.

There was of course no regular marriage commonly done at that time. A few fathers also offer their daughters for sale. Here the witness described the hardships of such girls how they would be sold, resold, married and remarried and quoted an instance where one girl was actually reported to have said that her condition was very bad on account of this kind of selling and marriage.

In answer to Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar's questions Dr. Hingorani said that the local Hindu Sabha was affiliated to the All-India Hindu Mahasabha. The population of Karachi city is 2,00,000 and out of this 25,000 people might be living on sale of girls. In Sind there are no main sub-castes among the Hindus. Replying to the question whether the nurses and fathers could be relied upon for giving the correct age of the child and mother at the time of the delivery witness stated that his suggestion was one of the ways to help them in obtaining the real ages of mothers and children. Many people in Sind did not know that consummation under the age of 12 is a cognisable offence. When asked if the law should make obligatory on the medical men to report the age of the mothers at the time of delivery, witness believed that the doctors would report correctly without prejudice to their profession and there should be no fear that patients would cease to go to such doctors for fear that they might report their correct age.

Continuing Dr. Hingorani said that every child should be vaccinated at the age of six months and the name of the child should also be recorded in the vaccination register.

Witness opined that the legislation should be very severe for those who perform marriages below the age of 14. The culprits should either be sentenced to transportation for life or undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of ten years. Marriages between 14 and 16 years of age might be dealt with lightly. There would not be much difficulty even in virginal cases in ascertaining the real age of the girl. Doctors, by means of X-ray examination, can determine the exact age of the girls from 16 to 23 though it would be difficult to say whether a particular girl was 18 or 17½ years of age.

Replying to Pandit Kanhaiyalal witness stated that marriages before puberty were less common among Mahomedans than Hindus. He narrated the customs that are prevailing in the Hindu community at the time of marriage and stated that there was no 'garbhadanani' ceremony in Sind as in Bengal. The consummation was done on the very night of the marriage. He did not believe that education and elopment would be increased if the girls were kept unmarried till their eighteenth year. He recommended that the name of the child should be recorded at the time of the birth of the child in the registers. As the child is called after the advice of the astrologer it would be possible to give the name of the child even on the first day as now it is done on the 6th day. The Hindu Maha Sabha branches and such other local bodies should individually report any violations of the bill to the proper authorities. Witness believed that such organisations would rise up to the occasion and do their duty properly. Village Panchayats would help a great deal in keeping registers of marriages.

STATUS OF A EUROPEAN WIFE IN INDIA.

Separate, but concurring, judgments were delivered on Thursday afternoon by Mr. Justice Mirza and Mr. Justice Baker, at the Bombay High Court, in the revisional application filed by Mabel Ferraris alias Bai Ahisa a European woman from South Africa, who was directed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay to furnish bail or surrender herself to the Navsari Court in respect of a charge of theft brought against her by her husband. The theft was alleged to have been committed within the jurisdiction of the Baroda State. Their Lordships held that the warrant issued against the applicant was illegal, discharged the warrant, cancelled the bail bonds and ordered the applicant to be set at liberty.

Mr. Justice Mirza, in giving the judgment of the Court, observed that on a warrant dated April 20, 1928, issued by the Resident at Baroda, the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay directed the applicant to surrender herself, or, in the alternative, to give bail as required by the warrant to attend before the Second Class Magistrate at Navsari in the Baroda State. The warrant was issued under the provisions of section 7 of the Indian Extradition Act and it stated that the applicant Bai Ahisa (Mabel Ferris alias Isa Bederodin), wife of Akuji Esaji of Navsari, stood charged with having committed, in the Baroda State, offences of breach of trust and theft which in British India would be punishable under sections 406 and 381 of the Indian Penal Code.

HISTORY OF THE CASE.

It would appear that on July 17, 1927, the Bombay Police at the instance of the Baroda Police arrested the applicant for the alleged offence. Proceedings were adjourned from time to time as the extradition warrant from Baroda had not been issued. On September 6, 1927, the Resident at Baroda informed the Chief Presidency Magistrate that the Baroda Government had intimated to him that there was not sufficient evidence to enable them to apply for the extradition of the applicant and that she might, therefore, be discharged. But subsequently the charge was revived at the instance of Sakharam Gangaram Surve, Naib Sub-Inspector, Baroda State, and the applicant was again arrested and placed before the Magistrate who ordered her to furnish bail and surrender herself to the Navsari Court on the ground that the facts, as disclosed, showed that she was married to a Baroda subject and hence had ceased to be a European British subject.

JUDICIAL OR EXECUTIVE?

It was contended on behalf of the Crown, his Lordship proceeded, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to revise the order of the Magistrate. It was urged that the act of the Magistrate was not a judicial, but, an executive, act. It was further urged that by section 15 of the Act, the jurisdiction of the High Court was ousted, and the Government of India or the Local Government alone were empowered to stay any proceedings in respect of such a warrant or to direct that the warrant be cancelled and the person, for whose arrest it had been issued, be discharged.

His Lordship observed that the object of the Legislature, in referring the extradition warrant to the District Magistrate or the Chief Presidency Magistrate, could not, in his opinion, be reasonably held to be to have it executed merely as an executive act; the object must be deemed to be that the Magistrate should judicially consider the matter and decide whether the warrant could be executed according to law. If the warrant was without jurisdiction or if there was some other illegality to be found on the face of it, the Magistrate, in the exercise of his judicial powers, would not be right in issuing the order for its execution. Any order judicially made by the Magistrate would be subject to the revisional powers of the High Court, under Section 459 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The High Court had also been given powers under Section 561-A of the Criminal Procedure Code, in addition to what it possessed in its Charter and Letters Patent, to interfere in order to secure the ends of justice. The Court had also power to interfere under Section 491 of the Code by which whenever it thinks fit, it could direct that a person illegally or improperly detained in public or private custody within the limits of its jurisdiction to be set at liberty.

APPLICANT'S CONTENTION.

The applicant's contention, observed his Lordship, was that she was a European British subject and that Section 7 of the Extradition Act excluded from its operations persons who are European British subjects. If, therefore, the allegation of the applicant that she was a European British subject was established, the resident at Baroda would have no jurisdiction to issue a warrant against her under Section 7 of the Extradition Act. The inquiry before the Magistrate seemed to have proceeded on the basis that the facts disclosed showed that the applicant, although a European British subject by birth, had ceased to be such owing to her marriage with a Baroda subject. It was owing to this finding that the Magistrate had given effect to the warrant.

His Lordship observed it was not disputed that the applicant was born in Cape Town of European parents. The question to be determined, therefore, was whether by her marriage to a subject of Baroda State she had ceased to be a European British subject within the meaning of the Extradition Act. It was clear from the definition of a European British subject in the Criminal Procedure Code that certain rights and privileges which belonged to that class were conferred upon it as such class irrespective of considerations of change of status owing to marriage. It could not be contended that a native British Indian woman, if she married a British European subject, would thereby come under the definition of European British subject, nor could it be contended that a European British subject who had married a native British Indian husband would thereby cease to be a European British subject as defined in the Code. It must be assumed, therefore, observed his Lordship, that by excluding European British subjects from the operation of Section 7 of the Extradition Act the Legislature had a similar intention. The onus in such a case would be on the Baroda authorities to show that by the fact of her marriage to a Baroda subject, the applicant had ceased to be a European British subject within the meaning of the Extradition Act.

EXTRADITION WARRANT ILLEGAL.

The Government Pleader had further urged that to come under the definition of European British subjects it was necessary not only that the applicant should be a European British subject by birth, but that she should also be domiciled at the time in the British Isles or in any colony. In his Lordship's opinion, the definition could not be so restricted. If it were so restricted it would exclude from its operation all European British subjects who were domiciled in British India unless British India came within the definition of a colony. That could not have been the intention of the Legislature. The applicant, in his Lordship's judgment, could claim the privilege of being a European British subject, apart from any foreign domicile she might have acquired by her marriage. In this view of the case, the extradition warrant issued by the Resident Magistrate at Baroda was clearly without jurisdiction and illegal.

The applicant's case, concluded his Lordship, had been that her marriage with Akuji was, from its inception, a nullity, as at the time of the marriage, he had a wife, Khatijabai, living. The marriage was performed at Johannesburg in 1914, according to the South African Law. That law being the law of a Christian country must be presumed to have made a polygamous marriage illegal. The prosecution had not denied the fact that the marriage in South Africa had taken place under those conditions. If the marriage was a nullity, the applicant acquired no domicile in the Baroda State, apart from her intention to adopt such a domicile. If such an intention was to be presumed from her residence in the Baroda State from 1921-25 she must be deemed, by her departure from that State in 1925, to settle down in British India thenceforward, to have obtained her former domicile of British India. His Lordship, therefore, discharged the warrant, cancelled the bail bonds and ordered the applicant to be set at liberty. Mr. Justice Baker concurred with him.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

No Right to Husband:—The Mangalore correspondent of the Times of India writes under date September 27th:—Mr. K. A. Ve-gheze, Subordinate Judge, South Kanara recently dismissed the petition of one Devandra Kamath for the recovery of the custody of Marthi Bai, his minor wife, aged 14 years and daughter of one Keshava Bhatta. The petition stated that the father-in-law, who was the respondent continued to keep his daughter in his house. As the father did not send her to the husband's house in spite of repeated requests, the latter married another girl. The contention of the respondent was that he refused to send his daughter to his son-in-law's house as the latter had married another girl. He further submitted that he was not bound to send his daughter to her husband's house as she had not attained puberty. After hearing arguments on both sides, the Judge held that the husband had no right over the person of his wife as long as she had not attained puberty and that her father was perfectly justified in keeping her in his own house. He cited the decision of the Madras High Court, Armuga Versus Veeravaghava, 24 Madras, page 258, and the authoritative books on the subject by Mayne and Bannerjee. The Judge also added that even according to the Hindu law on marriage and Stree Dharma which were supported by Manu's Laws the husband could not lay claim to the person of his wife before puberty. The petition was accordingly dismissed.

A Widow Marriage in Holy Hardwar:—Under the auspices of Vidhya Vivah Sabaika Sabha Hardwar, a widow marriage took place on the 25th of September in the Vidhya Ashram situated at Goghat with much pomp and enthusiasm. Both the parties belong to Bania caste and the widow, Ram Kali, aged 20 years was living in the local Ashram since last 6 days and the bride-groom Ganesh Lal is a Shop-keeper in Hardwar City. The marriage party came to the Ashram with the Band party, through the main bazar attracting the orthodox public and the pandas of the place. The ceremony was performed by Pandit Nava Ratna Vidyalankar, Superintendent of the Vidhya Ashram Hardwar by Vedic rites when an audience of more than 400 persons including Sadhus and a large number of ladies was present. The explanation of vedic verses and the lecturing on vedic principles by Pandit Nava Ratnaji were very impressive and won the heart of the present orthodox public, and the playing on band by the party was attracting the passers by. After a light refreshment, the party dispersed. This was the first time that a widow marriage was celebrated in the central place of Hardwar Bazar in the presence of such a large audience and the workers got real success in propagating the cause. The ladies in large numbers were witnessing the scene from the house-tops.

First Widow Marriage in Patel Community.—A Kenya Correspondent writes to us.—An interesting wedding took place at Mombasa, East Africa, in July, of Mr. Parushottam D. Master aged 28 years with Shrimati Vinumati aged 20 years. Both Mr. Parushottam and Shrimati Vinumati belong to the Patel Community from which hails the Hon'able Mr. Patel. The marriage ceremony was performed according to Vedic rites, by Pandit Nagardas and was attended by more than three hundred people. All extravagant expenses incurred in feasts etc. were abandoned. The marriage is the first of its type in East Africa. It is also the first widow remarriage in Patel Community.

Indian Ladies in America:—The Hindusthan Association of America, New York, and the Indian community of the city gave a farewell picnic in honour of Miss Pranjam Thakor, B. Sc., M.A., and Miss Sybil Pramila Peters, B.A. two Indian ladies, both of whom having specialised in education are now on their way to India where they are planning to devote themselves to the problem of education, particularly rural education. Both the ladies were among the active members of the Hindusthan Association, Miss Thakor being one of the Vice-Presidents. In the course of her special work in rural education, a subject so important to India, Miss Thakor had to travel extensively in America. She was awarded by the Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, one of Mary Scholarships of the International Institute. Speaking about her two years' work at the University, Prof. William H. Kilpatrick of Columbia University, who is one of the leading authorities on education in America and who was recently on a trip through India, remarks, "She impresses me as a woman of character and ability who by diligent application fitted herself to help the constructive work of her country". Regarding Miss Thakor's work in rural education, Prof. Mapel Carney, the head of the Department of Rural Education, speaks in these terms: "She has already demonstrated her professional ability and gives great promise of much future worth. She has a keen alert mind, a good personality and much eagerness of spirit for serving India in the most effective way possible." Miss Thakor is a B.Sc. and an M.A. of the Teachers College, Columbia University, New York. Miss Peters who comes from the Isabella Thoburn College of Lucknow, studied at Lincoln University, Nebraska, receiving her B. A. in June 1928. In her College work Miss Peters majored in education. In India she expects to devote herself to the village school organization.

Abolition of Brothels.—The Honorary Secretary, B. P. W. O. writes "The Management Committee of The Bombay Presidency Women's Council give their whole-hearted support to the resolution passed at the public meeting held in the C. J. Hall on November 26th 1927, under the auspices of the Bombay Vigilance Association re: the abolition of brothels. They further urge that in view of the resolution passed by the Bombay Municipal Corporation on August 8th 1928, in favour of making brothel keeping, whether by males or females, illegal, Government should take immediate action in the matter, and that as a preliminary step to such action Government should convene a meeting of representatives of all societies interested in the subject with a view to determining the most practicable method of carrying out the resolution of November 26th 1928."

Students' Brotherhood Essay Prize Scholarships:—The Managing Committee of the Bombay Students' Brotherhood will award a prize of Rs. 100 to any undergraduate reading in any of the local colleges, who might submit the best essay on the following subject:—"The Status of Woman in India, and How to Raise it". The Committee has appointed a Board of three judges consisting of Mr. K. Natarajan, B.A., Editor of "The Indian Social Reformer", Mr. Kanyalal M. Munshi, M. A., LL. B., Advocate, M. L. C. and Mr. Maneklal H. Vakeel, M. A. LL. B., F. S. S. who will decide the award. No essay will be admitted after 15th of January 1929 and it shall not exceed 5000 words. The Committee will also award three scholarships of Rs. 50 each to any three deserving students reading in any of the local schools. Other particulars regarding the Essay competition and the Scholarships will be available from the Jt. Hon. Secretaries, the Bombay Students' Brotherhood, French Bridge, Chowpatty.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs.	a.	p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0	5	0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0	5	0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0	5	0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0	5	0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0	8	0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0	8	0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0	10	0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0	12	0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1	4	0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1	14	0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2	14	0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2	14	0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3	0	0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4	1	0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4	14	0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4	14	0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6	0	0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
 Royapuram, Madras.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

A Human Document—By Mr. V. S. Sohoni. The life of a Dhedi in Bombay. Reprinted from the Reformer. Price annas 4.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
 THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
 Navsarl Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

The Bombay Swadeshi Co-operative Stores Co., Ltd.,

Have removed to their New Premises, Near Esplanade Police Court,
 Cruikshank Road, Fort, Bombay.

WE SOLICIT YOUR PATRONAGE

THE CHEAPEST HOUSE FOR INDIAN-MADE GOODS.

NEW AND IMPORTANT PAMPHLETS.

By Dr. G. S. Arundale, M.A., LL.B.

The fruits of his recent meditations on current questions.

Extremely suggestive and helpful.

A series of Pamphlets will be available at Four Annas each (Postage extra).

- | | |
|---|---------------|
| 1. Krishnaji: Light-Bringer. | Now Ready |
| 2. The Joy of Catastrophe | " " |
| 3. Go Your Own Way | " " |
| 4. Fanaticism—Wholesale and Retail | Shortly Ready |
| 5. Shadows and Mountains | " " |
| 6. The Intolerable Tyranny of the Every-day | " " |

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY:

- The Re-Birth of Hindu Music.—By Rudhyar of Carlos Salzedo, America. A French—American, Composer—Philosopher—Poet, considered as a friend as well as a genius.
 "In his knowledge and sincerity, his strength and his industry, he is the musical peer of many celebrities who has gained real support and attention in our country."—Los Angeles Record.
 Artistic get up. Price: Cloth and Gold, Rs. 5. Double Wrappers, Rs. 3-12.
- The Gita and Spiritual Life.—By D. S. Sarma, M.A., Prof. Presidency College, Madras, and author of Introduction to Bhagavat-Gita. Price: Boards, Re. 1-8; Wrappers, Re. 1-2.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 ADYAR, MADRAS, INDIA.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland Rs 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
The Indian Social Reformer,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
 { CALCUTTA.
 { AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up " 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund " 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,

MANAGER

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ")
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ")
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ")
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ")
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dobad (District Panch Mahals)
Belapur (" ")	Kalol (" ")
Akinj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh)
Dhulla (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE: BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amrell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Koloj, Kadi and Dwaraka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	80,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Manganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Manganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. Nawroji B. Saklatwala, C.I.E., (Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay).
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Spratt Road, Ballard Estate,

8-11-26.

Bombay.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland	5 0 0
Foreign	5 8 0
Single copy	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand,

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY
 DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
 POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
 CALCUTTA.

A. K. JOSHI & Co.Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc.

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,

The Hindustan Review.

PATNA, E. I. R.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS

(Agencies), Ltd.,

16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
(A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

Fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free.

To every purchaser of our “Luxorette” lever Radium Silvered Pocket Watch, guaranteed for five years, costing Rupees five, we give our fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free. Write now. The radium pocket watch as strong mechanism and well built and can be seen well in nights without the help of lights. Please order soon.

Price Rs. 5 only.

Address:—SWAN HOUSE,
P. B. No. 508. P. T. MADRAS.

PAPER!PAPER!!*CHEAPEST HOUSE*FOR*ALL KINDS OF PAPER.*AMERICAN BOND PAPER A SPECIALITY

Ledger Paper, Writing Paper, Printing Paper, Rough Paper, Croft Paper, Brown Paper and all kinds of Paper available at a Very Modest Price. Glazed and unglazed Creamlaid, etc., etc.

ANY COLOUR READY FOR DELIVERY.

Ruby Manila Envelopes—All Current Sizes Available.

Hoogly Printing Inks—All Colours.

Superior Quality! Satisfaction Guaranteed!!SEND TRIAL ORDER AND SATISFY YOURSELVES.

Apply for Catalogue and quotation to:

G. A. ACHARYA & Co.,MERCHANTS & AGENTS,*IMPORT & EXPORT,*26, Parsee Bazar Street,*FORT, BOMBAY.*The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. B. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Tonight at 9-30 and Tomorrow at 5-30 P. M.
Banvard's New Musical Comedy Company

presents

OH KAY

from His Majesty's Theatre, London, with a full caste of 25 artistes.

EMPIRE THEATRE

Tonight and Tomorrow
at 4, 6-15, 8-15, and 10 P. M.

Come and See

NORMA TALMADGE

With Eyes That Lure
And Lips That Love

in

THE DOVE

Supported by

NOAH BERRY, the Villainous Sergeant of BEAU GESTE

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Tonight and Tomorrow
At 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

MEN AND WOMEN

with

RICHARD DIX, NEIL HAMILTON, CLARE ADAMS AND ROBERT EDESON

A story of the pitfalls that confront young married people in New York.
For twenty years a popular stage success—now a great picture.

EMPRESS CINEMA

Tonight and Tomorrow
At 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

NOAH BEERY-WILLIAM POWELL
EVELYN BRENT AND GRAY COOPER

in Another gripping story of the French Foreign Legion.

BEAU SABREUR

Positively the most thrilling picture of the year.
Special Morning Show Tomorrow at 10 A. M.

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1928

No. 8

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard." WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Women's Movement in England.	Animal Sacrifice.
An Interview with Mrs. Naidu.	Social Reform in India.
Orthodoxy on the War-Path.	"Humanism".
The Annamalai University.	Labour Temple.
Social Work in South Africa.	The Passing of a Saint.
Social Survey in Nagpada Neighbourhood.	Overcrowding in Bombay City.
	Age of Consent Inquiry.
	News of the Week.

YOUR PAGE

NOTES.

The Women's Movement in England:—
The Chapter headed "Women in Politics", in the Memoirs of the Earl of Oxford and Asquith, gives a dispassionate and impartial account of the Women's Movement in England. Lord Oxford (better known as Mr. Asquith) was first opposed to women suffrage and then at the end of the War became a convert to it. At the outset, he corrects the mistaken view that he was an opponent of the Women's Movement. "I have been throughout," he writes, "an advocate of the admission of women on the same terms as men to professional and business callings and to the discharge of administrative functions in Municipal and local affairs. As far back as 1892, when I came to the Home Office, I was the first Secretary of State to open the Factory Inspectorate to women against the almost unbroken hostility of my expert advisers. On the other hand, I was, until near the close of the War, a strenuous opponent of the extension of the political franchise to women." He gave his reasons for the change in a speech in the House of Commons. He shows that women have exercised great influence in public affairs indirectly at all times. John Stuart Mill was the intellectual pioneer of the Women's movement in England. Jane Austen, Charlotte Bronte, Mrs. Browning, George Eliot, Mrs. Gaskell and a number of other distinguished writers and Queen Victoria herself, showed that women were not inferior to men in ability and intellect. "Perhaps, a more potent cause," adds Lord Oxford "was the opening of the platform to female oratory. Long before the militant excesses of the "Suffragettes" the cause of the enfranchisement of women had found, among the sex, advocates who could hold their own on the platform with the best male speakers." He mentions Mrs. Fawcett, Lady Frances Balfour and Lady Henry Somerset, but he omits Dr. Annie Besant who was surely among the earliest pioneers of the movement. Lord Oxford describes the "Campaign" of the Suffragettes beginning with disturbances of public meetings and reaching its climax in violence and arson. Only the War ended this campaign. And when peace came women got the franchise.

An Interview with Mrs. Naidu:—Reuter has cabled a condensed version of what purports to be an interview with Mrs. Sarojini Naidu in London prior to her sailing to the United States. She is reported to have said that after seven years absence from Britain she had not seen any great changes in England. She regarded the extension of franchise to women of 21 as "merely another step towards that freedom which we Indian women have enjoyed for a long time." She pointed out that the people of England did not realise that Indian women "hold responsible positions in all departments of public life." "What do I think of your Feminist movement? Frankly I would be ashamed to belong to such a movement. It is the confession of woman's inferiority. We have never had a Feminist movement in India. There has never been a need for anything of the kind. The question of sex does not arise in India but merely this question: Who is most fitted for the job?" Mrs. Naidu says she will lecture in America on "India" with an authority which nobody in India will challenge. It is clear on the face of it that this very sketchy summary does not convey a connected idea of what Mrs. Naidu's views are. She is not a person to use words at random and we may be sure that she had a perfectly intelligible reason for every one of her statements, though it may have eluded the grasp of her interviewer.

Orthodoxy on the War-Path:—The Bombay Municipal Corporation is responsible for Primary Education in the city. It has introduced free and compulsory education in some Wards as a first step towards extending it to the whole city. The Corporation has adopted the sound principle of not having special schools for children of the untouchable classes. Its schools are open to all castes and creeds. In pursuance of this policy of equal treatment, it recently passed a resolution discontinuing the practice of making separate provision of drinking water to the several castes and introduced a system common to all. A section of orthodox Hindus, consisting chiefly of Gujarati share brokers and merchants, has raised objections to this just and sensible arrangement. The Share Market was closed on Wednesday and on the same evening a meeting was held at Madhav Baug at which resolutions were passed condemning the action of the Corporation. The bulk of the Hindu community has not concerned itself with this opposition, and even among the commercial community, most of the recognised leaders have held aloof from it. The Hindu Mahasabha has not associated itself with the agitation. The educated class is utterly opposed to it, and supports the action of the Corporation. There is, in fact, no moral force behind the agitation which is bound to flicker and die out soon. Hinduism would have been extinct long ago if it had been actuated in its long history by the spirit of those who, in this matter, have arrogated to themselves the role of its sole exponents and defenders.

The Annamalai University :—The Annamalai University Bill was passed into law by a unanimous vote in the Madras Legislative Council. It was about five months back that the scheme was first introduced and it is creditable to all concerned that a decision should have been arrived at so quickly. All the parties in the Council gave their hearty support to the bill and paid high tribute to the munificence of Sir Annamalai Chetty, the founder of the University. The funded capital of the University consists of twenty lakhs given by the founder and twenty-seven lakhs given by the Local Government. Besides this Sir Annamalai has given a further sum of fifteen lakhs and the Government has agreed to grant seven and a half lakhs for the buildings and equipment of the University and an annual sum of one and a half lakhs to the general fund. The University will be the first residential University in South India. It is moreover the second University in India which owes its existence to the energies of one man. It differs from the Benares University, however, in this that it has funds in abundance. The University at Chidambaram has come into existence under very auspicious circumstances and we are sure it will take its place with the foremost universities in the future of this country.

Social Work in South Africa :—An influential Council has been formed in Johannesburg for development and uplift work in the city. It is composed of Europeans and members of the South African Indian Congress, and includes among its members Mr. Sastri, the Bishop of Johannesburg and several University professors. It is understood that before Mr. Sastri returns to India similar bodies will be formed in other cities. The importance of such an organisation can hardly be exaggerated. Apart from the social programme which the Council can carry out, the very fact that the members of different communities in South Africa meet together to discuss problems which confront them both is bound to lead to a better understanding between them.

Social Survey in Nagpada Neighbourhood :—A very interesting and informing leaflet entitled "Facing Facts in Nagpada", giving an insight into the local conditions and lives of the people in the Nagpada Neighbourhood and their needs, has been published recently by Dr. Clifford Manshardt who is the Director of the Association. We have on several occasions referred in these columns to the excellent work done by Dr. Clifford and his associates by way of investigation and improvement of the social and economic conditions of the people among whom they have cast their lot. Unlike all other Associations started under Christian auspices, the Neighbourhood house does not pin its faith to religious conversion but concentrates on social and economic uplift, irrespective of caste or creed. The only creed of the House, we are told, in the articles of the Association is a genuine respect for the best that is found in all creeds. This is exactly the kind of work that is much needed in India which has much to learn from trained social workers from America and other countries. We would suggest for the best consideration of the Neighbourhood House that it should include in its programme of work the training of Indian youths for social service.

Life in Nagpada Neighbourhood :—The population of Nagpada is drawn chiefly from the masses which cannot lay claim to much education. The result of the investigation into vice and crime showed that "although the neighbourhood borders on the segregated vice district with its thousands of prostitutes and debased standard of living, it has relatively high standard of family life." That Indians are by temperament not addicted to drink is also brought out in the Leaflet which says: "There are six toddy shops in the neighbourhood, but it is very seldom that one actually runs across a drunken man. The most of the drunkards confine their trouble-making to their own homes. The Jews and the Christians are the worst offenders, the majority of the Mahomedans following the precepts of their religion in this respect."

Animal Sacrifice :—The hideous practice of animal sacrifice at religious festivals, which has survived in some parts of India is being put an end to. "The Maharaja of Jamnagar" writes New India, "has again this year prohibited the sacrifice of animals on Dasara day. His action is highly commendable and will, we hope, be imitated by other States. But one cannot help feeling, however, while the killing of animals as part of a religious custom is considered objectionable, killing is allowed for other purposes, such as the gratification of the human palate and so-called "sport". We would like to see some of the Indian Princes take the lead in the matter of animal care and protection and set an example to the rest of India in this respect. As things are, those interested in the preservation of distinctively Indian and tropical fauna apprehend that soon many rare species will be completely extinct, due to the depredations of huntsmen."

Social Reform in India :—Rao Bahadur M. R. Ramaswami Sivan, addressing the students of Cawnpore, stressed on the necessity of social reform in this country. One of the earliest workers in the field of social reform, the Rao Bahadur had done much to advance the cause both by practice and precept. He pleaded in his lecture for the triple reform of widow remarriages, the abolition of early marriage and the softening of the rigidity of caste distinctions. He expressed his opinion that all these reforms were necessitated at least by elementary considerations of humanity apart from other reasons. We doubt not that his forceful eloquence would have lent added weight to his words. We expect Mr. Sivan to enlist the public opinion of the orthodox section in his own Presidency of Madras in favour of the raising of the marriage age and age of consent.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, OCTOBER 20, 1928.

"HUMANISM."

"All over the world today there are men who are the products of the different religious systems of the past, who are saying to themselves,—the important thing about me is not that I am a Jew, a Christian, a Mohamedan, a Buddhist, a Parsi, but that I am a human being, yearning to be a better man and to serve my fellows more fully. As such I belong to a fellowship that is greater than that of any religion that has ever existed. I am a member of the Church Universal that is yet to be; a worshipper in the temple of Humanity, not yet builded, but building." Thus writes Rev. E. Burdette Backus in Humanist Sermons.^{*} In the United States the men who hold these views have joined Humanism, the religious movement that has arisen in the Unitarian fold. The ideals of Humanism are the recognition of the solidarity of man and of man's supreme worth and the elimination of the supernatural element in religion. Its devotees claim that Humanism is the religion of tomorrow. "The ancient religions were characterised by a zeal for external uniformity," writes Rev. Arthur L. Weatherley. "The new will be characterised by a spiritual unity resulting from the innate tendency of the race to live together in harmony—a unity destined to bind the race together in a holy and divine fellowship. It is the basis of the civilization of the future." Humanism in short aims at substituting for the old formal religions, the ideal of service to humanity. It is an attack on all organised religions as is admitted by one of the contributors to this collection.

Every religion claims to be the universal religion and Humanism, the latest religious experiment, is no exception to this. "This universal religion cannot result simply from the triumph of any one of the present religions. Their heritage of errors unfits them for the task of being the religion of mankind in the days that are ahead," writes Dr. Backus. "Personally I have reached the point where I repudiate the name Christian in the interests of a religion which I believe to be greater than Christianity..... When Christianity becomes so broad as to include the Jew and the Mohamedan without asking him to renounce his religion, it has evolved to the point where it is no longer Christianity but a new religion." And the Rev. John Haynes Holmes says in his Sermon on Religion: "There will be no religions as we have them to-day, but just religion. There will be no sects and denominations—no confucianism, Hinduism, Judaism, Christianity. These names may survive, but they will be like the many mansions in God's home—just so many parts of the one inclusive whole, which is the divine brotherhood of man". Not more than six months ago Dr. Kurutkoti uttered these very sentiments when at the Miller conversion he spoke of Hinduism as the Universal religion. He said on that occasion: "To admit Christians and Mohamedans to Hinduism is not to ask those who seek it to give up their faiths but rather to enable them to enlarge their outlook and widen their horizon and live a broader and more tolerant life doing what lies in one's power to promote the happiness and the content of the world." Modern Hinduism and Humanism therefore have much in common. They both regard other religions in the same way—as something to be assimilated and not destroyed. They both postulate service to humanity as one of their tenets. And lastly they both desire that whilst "all who to the truth have been true, all who have dared and suffered in the long upward climb of mankind will be recognised as amongst those who have helped to smooth the way for the generations to come", the principles of the religion will not be obscured by the personality of any individual prophet.

The Humanist's attitude towards Christianity or for that matter towards any other religion, is very similar to that of the Hindu. There is one passage in the book which best illustrates this. "We share," writes the Rev. Frederick M. Eliot, "the sense of sacredness which surrounds the figure of the Madonna; but we do not attribute that sacredness to the uniqueness of her motherhood but to the universal element which makes all motherhood a sacred thing. For as there is no monopoly of sanctity in the motherhood of Mary, but rather the exemplification of a sanctity which is as wide as the fact of motherhood itself." These very sentiments might well have come from the lips of any of the Hindu men and women who go to see the image of the Madonna at Mount Mary's Church during the annual festival at Bandra. And again the belief that by our own actions we build our future is a commonplace in Hinduism. But Humanism has this advantage over Hinduism: It is not a traditional religion and it makes only two demands on its members—the first, that they shall maintain an open mind and secondly that each shall consider himself a member of the great community of mankind,

*Edited by Curtis W. Reese. The Open Court Publishing Company, Chicago. Price $ 2.50.

LABOUR TEMPLE.

(By Dr. G. S. KRISHNAYYA, M.A., Ph. D., (Columbia) Professor of Education, Mysore University.)

Of late America has come in for a great deal of abuse hatred and contempt here in India. This because one of her fifty million daughters happened to write herself down in an attempt to describe the diseases of India. Speaking as one who was in the States until recently, I may say, that it seemed as though in digging up the dirt and filth of America, Indians had justified her muck-raking occupation. Far more sensible and immensely more worthwhile would it have been had all that energy, interest and attention been devoted to attempting to overcome some of the admittedly serious handicaps of India. Farther, while abusing America, the possibility of learning from her was considerably diminished. Now it is time that things were looked at in their proper perspective, and that nations as members of one family, sought to admire the fine qualities of other nations. And which nation that has not become debtor or defeated in competition can deny that there are high ideals, fine traits, and noble institutions in America?

In this article an attempt will be made to describe one remarkable institution of which little is known outside America. Labour Temple is a Settlement House which serves a community consisting of about twenty different creeds and nationalities. Down on the lower East side of New York it stands for the same ideal of "sharing life" which motivated some leading Oxford men years ago to go down to live in the slums of London. The principle of Settlement Houses is that men live amongst those less privileged than themselves, and seek to cross the chasm between classes through better mutual understanding. The value of such organization consists in their attempt to combine good will with the scientific method, and in their providing a channel for the flow of sacrificial compassion. So amongst these Jews, Protestants and Catholics, Italians, Russians and Hungarians, live the staff members of the House, teaching the people to live better lives and partaking in their joys and in their sorrows.

The relation of settlement Houses and Churches has not been pleasant. At first the Church could not understand this institution. There were no direct religious services. Instead were to be found recreation programmes and much concern for the people's social and physical welfare. Ecclesiastical jealousy became evident. Now however in order to meet the different aspects of the people's lives, most of the large American churches working amongst the less privileged people, have become institutional churches where provision is usually made for gymnasium, swimming pools for young people's activities. Labour temple is a Presbyterian church with a marked social and economic bias.

The efforts made to meet the people's needs are amazingly varied and numerous.

The health of the community receives serious attention. Not only are health lectures given there, but a doctor, a dentist and an optician are secured each for two hours a week. Free advice and consultation is provided. The workers visit the sick and the distressed. Further, a gymnasium is equipped for the use of the boys and girls and the young men and women who form themselves into clubs. The smaller children have supervised play. Self-government is practised to a large extent by the clubs. University students act as advisers to these clubs. The present writer had the privilege of being counsellor for one year to a club of boys 12 to 14 years old, here in Labour Temple. Cramped for space in that great city, these youngsters are fortunate to have a place like Labour Temple. Under the supervision of the clubs or the council, parties are arranged from time to time for the young people. Distinct progress towards better standards has been observed amongst the children of the Southern European immigrants. In providing a safe auspices under which young people may meet each other socially, the Temple is supplying a much felt need.

There is a free Employment Bureau which keeps in touch with a large number of employers. It is therefore usually in the know of vacancies and possible vacancies. Further, being free and disinterested, it has a good reputation. Considering the time spent on it there is no exaggeration in saying that the returns are extraordinary, and that quite a large number are being helped month after month.

More than that, when financial assistance is needed the people apply with the Temple recommendation to the Association for the Improvement of the Conditions of the Poor (A. I. C. P.) and other organisations. For tiding people over situations of emergency, the Temple has the 'Haven's Fund',—and the help is treated either as a loan or as a gift. Such assistance is invaluable especially when people are so dangerously near the verge of poverty. But for such timely aid, men might lose heart, go under and perhaps, never be able to rise again.

Labour Temple school tries to meet the needs of the industrial workers for that education which will make life more complete and more worth living. The subjects taught are both interesting and instructive, and the people seem to appreciate the opportunity. It may be interesting to know that Walter Durant, the author of the non-fiction best seller of the year 'The Story of Philosophy' was director of the school. Free educational lectures on all kinds of topics, under the auspices of the New York City Board of Education, also are given here. On Sunday evenings Forums are conducted in which such topics as the "Desirability of the Monroe Doctrine," "Miss Mayo's India," "Lenin and Gandhi", etc., are presented by some recognised authority, and discussion permitted from the flow.

A more intimate contact with the industrial workers needs to be mentioned. Strikers are allowed, invited—to make Labour Temple their head-quarters. This is in marked contrast to what 'respectable' institutions are usually supposed to do. Stranger yet, the U. S. Government does not suspect the Temple authorities of being in league with Russia! In fact the management commands the confidence of the Police and the Children's Court, and are referred to whenever any of their people are concerned. And again, the Temple assists immigrants in getting their citizenship papers and often helps those in Ellis Island. This refreshingly courageous attitude of the Temple helps to break down the hostility and indifference of labour to the Church and organized religion. Another advantage and by no means a negligible one—is that it provides them with a wholesome environment and atmosphere in which to conduct their deliberations. Labour Temple co-operates with Union officials in throwing safeguards around the girl workers. They also provide entertainment during the idle strike hours—to prevent the workers from spending their time and energy in gambling games and worse. An opportunity is therefore easily found by the Temple staff for getting to know the rank and file of labourers and to understand them and their problems.

Thus the Temple seeks to look after the health of its community, to find the members employment and assistance when they are out of job, to protect them from themselves during strikes, and to place within their reach some of the higher things of life.

"I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat. I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink. I was a stranger and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me. I was sick, and ye visited me. I was in prison, and ye came unto me.....Verily, I say unto you, In as much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." And why may not such an institution be called "Labour Temple?"

THE PASSING OF A SAINT.

(By MR. N. R. VENKATESWARAN, B.A.).

A great man is God's greatest gift to the people among whom he lives, and when he dies he leaves his memory behind to mingle with their daily life and to raise it to higher levels. Seventy two years ago a great man was born in a little known Travancore village. His father was a poor village schoolmaster, and his pious mother is said to have prayed and fasted from day to day for a long time so that God might grant her the gift of a good and pure child. Seventy-two years ago society in Kerala far more than in other parts of India was the slave of caste, and in those days children came into this land to be told their destinies, which neither they nor any power in the earth could change. In those days none could rise above his caste or shake it from its ancient setting. It is, therefore, not a little curious that the pious woman of a passive village prayed and fasted for a pure son seeing that she herself belonged to what was deemed an impure caste, a caste that the higher Hindus always asked to stand away lest they should be polluted. This caste was that of the Ezhavas or Thiyyas, as they are called to-day in British Malabar, a mild hard-working people, in days before the coming of this great man, never even dreamt to doubt the impurity that they were supposed to bear. The child grew up as most other children, but when he had grown up he varied vastly from the common way and trod a path that not only led him up to the temple of fame but also called his people to the freedom and dignity that belong to all men, though not all men always come into their own. This great man is Sri Narayan Guruswami, and hardly a greater man than this saint ever lived in Kerala.

He has now passed his great pilgrimage among men. From his peaceful mutt at Warkalai, a place specially favoured by sea and land and where noble thought and action have a bracing air to breathe, he passed to the great beyond, the immortal region of death, from where all life comes. He died on the morning of Friday the 21st September leaving behind a name that will continue to work in this land for the good of its people for some centuries. Scholar, saint, reformer and leader, he has left behind him a glory and a fulfilment that must move the living to high endeavour. A great dreamer, he lived to see his dreams come true. A lover of high ideals, a thinker of other thoughts than those of ordinary men, he lived among the people taking his ideals and thoughts to their front doors. His life-story is one to warm the heart. If he rose by study, meditation and strenuous effort he also raised his community by work that never ceased, by sacrifice that never counted cost. And for several years towards the end of his life to many lakhs of people in Kerala his word was almost that of God Himself and he himself was almost God. They worship his likeness in their homes and chant his name like that of Ramchandra.

In olden days, Nanda, the pariah, sought God and came to Him against the custom of his caste. But he sought Him alone, being unable to get his people to seek Him likewise. Sri Narayana Guru not only sought God himself but also to some extent got his people to seek him. And he has come to God, now that his earthly labours are ended. A thousand voices to-day proclaim him great, and his greatness is all the greater because he has so visibly raised a people, from lowliness to dignity, from silent suffering to self-knowledge, from passive barren subservience to self-effort and right desires.

The Swamiji showed his love of God and truth even in his very childhood. The piat schools of his village could not feed his hunger for religious writings. The boy was, therefore, sent to a well-known teacher at Karunagapalli near Quilon, from whom he learnt sufficient Sanskrit to afford him a master-key to the great Vedic lore. He could not agree with the generally accepted notion of those days that knowledge was only for the higher castes and that it was wrong for one born in a low caste to look to it for the illumination of his soul. Thus it was that he came to learn the Vedas and to get that true wisdom which alone can leave a mark such as the one he has left behind, which alone could enable one to do such lasting good to his fellowmen as he has done.

After taking farewell of this good teacher of the Nair caste at Karunagapalli he himself became a teacher perhaps teaching himself much more than he taught his pupils and thus teaching them the most that could be taught. From this day to his death he remained a teacher taking his instruction from a smallish school to a large community, and, too from a large community to the country at large. For although his main work was with his community of the Ezhavas his teaching wherever it is known has a power to persuade the people to better ways of thought and conduct.

After the death of his parents he visited all prominent temples and places of pilgrimage in South India gathering knowledge from Pundits and Puranas and from what he himself saw in those places. Returning to Travancore he established a school for the teaching of his teaching, for the landscape of his personality and vision was now definitely formed. And in this rare human landscape the idea that stood highest was that all humankind was one and that all divisions based on birth were wrong. From the establishment of this school, which was about half a century ago, his name rose to greater and greater stature till at last he came to be counted among India's greatest men. And afterwards the greatest men of India came to his mutt at Warkalai to see him and to pay him their respects. Gandhi and Tagore came, and many another too. And there they saw a pure light shining. Gandhi saw there pariah boys chanting the Vedic hymns and wondered if they were not some twice-born children risen from days of old. Tagore talked with him four hours on the philosophical wisdoms of the ancient Aryans. And these great sons of the country must have also worshipped in his temple where certainly God dwells if ever he dwells in any temple. Many such temples he has built in Kerala, where all, from the lowest to the highest, might go and pray. "Let the higher castes keep their temples to themselves, but let us build temples to the same God where we may bear our prayers." The Swamiji was a man of peace yearning for harmony among the people, and therefore, he would not rush the gates of the old temples in the land.

The famous S. N. D. P. Yogam, the Shri Narayana Dharma Paripalanayogam, was established many years ago, and the great good work that this association has been doing must take a volume to tell. The tremendous social regeneration that moves on the face of Kerala to-day has sprung from this association, and perhaps next to the Indian National Congress, the S. N. D. P. Yogam is the most intensive collective effort known in India in modern times. The toddy-tapping Ezhavas of old can vie with the highest Brahmins of the land to-day. Not all of them, perhaps, yet, but a good many, and their number will increase tomorrow.

A few years ago the Swamiji went to Ceylon on invitation from the people of the island, and he was a sort of second Buddha, himself bearing his message to that land. He has left in this island his dear pupil and follower Swami Satyavatha to work among its lowly peoples. The Swamiji might easily have taken his message further afield, and perhaps with success, but like Alfred he chose to give all of his attention to his own people rather than seek the dubious advantage of a wider ministration, and like Alfred's his greatness has left its lasting impress on the physiognomy of his people.

It must not, however, be imagined that he addressed himself only to his community. On the other hand, his teaching was for all. He was seeking the upliftment of all, but as he wanted to raise the lower castes without asking the high castes to come down he naturally worked more with the low castes than with the others. The Swamiji was not a blind preacher of equality, a mere spiritual demagogue. He knew inequalities existed and that they could not be wiped by merely shutting one's eyes to them. He, therefore, recognised these inequalities and sought to erase them by persistent education. He wanted to raise such as were low by giving them the strength to climb upward and not by asking them to put their feet on any political electric lift. He made the pariah clean and taught him wisdom. He asked the Ezhava to abjure drink and enter his temples. He asked all men to be equal by educating each other to equality. And if he preached interdining and intermarriage he never once forgot the gulfs, small and great, that divide men from men. And throughout his life his great, endeavour was to fill these gulfs in his own land rather than simply span them. This is true greatness such greatness as will not die, and although the venerable great Sannyasin is gone out and 'will be sometime' he will never cease to live in the minds of the people whom he so greatly loved.

OVERCROWDING IN BOMBAY CITY.

(By DR. CLIFFORD MANSHARDT, Ph.D.)

One of the primary steps of any sound programme of social work is to know the facts about the people and the region in which one intends to work. Otherwise a worker may find himself undertaking work which to him seems important, but which in reality is far removed from the actual needs of the people. In the attempt to make its programme more effective, the Nagpada Neighbourhood House has for the last year and a half been surveying the Nagpada region of Bombay city. Many important facts have been uncovered, of which not the least important are those concerning the effects of overcrowding. The Nagpada District is a plot of some sixty-two acres in E Ward, Byculla. The district known as First Nagpada has an area of 29.38 acres, and a population of 8,125. The district known as Second Nagpada has an area of 33.05 acres, and population of 23,562 an astounding density of 712.91 to the acre, when compared with an average density of 78 for the entire city of Bombay. But one section of the city, viz., Kamathipura, is more congested. It is only to be expected that in such a crowded area the sickness and death rate will be very high. The average death rate for the city of Bombay per 1,000 of population is 25.38. The average death rate for First Nagpada per 1,000 of population is 35.16 the highest death rate in the entire city (1925). During a period of five years the average death rate for the city per 1,000 of population was 36.37, for First Nagpada 30.43; for Second Nagpada 48.88—again the highest rate in the city. Second Nagpada also leads the city in the number of deaths from malaria and respiratory diseases.

The average birth rate for the city of Bombay per 1,000 of population is 16.10. The average birth rate for First Nagpada per 1,000 of population is 24.49. The average birth rate for Second Nagpada per 1,000 of population is 17.99 (1925). In deaths under one year per 1,000 births the city average is 355.9, against 347, for Second Nagpada, and 231, for First Nagpada. This latter group of figures would be of some satisfaction were it not for the fact that further study reveals that Second Nagpada shows the highest percentage of deaths between birth and the age of ten in the entire city. Every area of the city shows a marked decrease in deaths between the ages of one and five save Second Nagpada. In other words the region is no safer for a child under five, than it is for a baby under one. The reasons for the high death rate are poverty, ignorance, filth, open sewars, opium, venereal disease, and the root causes of overcrowding. Here indeed is food for thought. The Nagpada Neighbourhood House through its dispensary, infant centre, public centre, public health lectures, home visitation, and sanitary rounds, is doing its best to cope with the public health problem. But no one agency is powerful enough to meet such a situation. The real root of the high death rate lies in the overcrowding of the people, and this problem can only be dealt with by the forcible condemnation of unsanitary and disease breeding chawls. One whole section of the area should be dismantled as unfit for human habitation. It is hoped that by a campaign of publicity and education this result may at length be brought to pass.

AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

EVIDENCE IN KARACHI.

MR. JAMSHED MEHTA'S EVIDENCE.

Replying to the Chairman Mr. Jamshed N. R. Mehta said that he was the President of the Karachi Municipality for the last six years and as such he knew many Hindus as well as Mahomedans in Karachi. There were certain classes who sell the girls and he saw cases of abduction and elopement being reported often in the newspaper columns. Penal law should be enforced for bringing this Bill into operation. Especially rural areas require this kind of legislation. The age of consent should be fixed at 18, especially in a place where marriage and consummation go hand in hand. There was absolutely no danger if girls were kept unmarried till the age of 18, nor was there any risk in doing so.

In reply to Mrs. M. O'Brien Beadon, witness said that marriages were performed in Sind at the age of 14 or 15 years amongst the Hindus. As the marriage and consummation take place on the same day there was every possibility of women giving birth to children at an early age. Children born to such women would be weaklings. After giving birth to child the mother would become very weak. The mental, moral and physical growth of the child would be very poor. Nearly half of the women population were of this nature.

Answering Mrs. Brijlal Nehru witness stated that if people were made aware of the penal law it would do some good in minimising the crime. He opined that there would be some kind of molestation when the Bill was put into force in the beginning but that would be for a short time and then vanish. This was due to the ignorance of the people. He assured the Committee that if the Bill were to be passed and put into practice there would not be strong opposition in spite of some early marriage. Opposition to this Bill would come from the people who come from Gujerat to Sind. Even this opposition would not last for more than two years after which it would subside. The present generation of grown up boys and grown up girls who had been sufficiently educated have realised the evils of such early marriages and they would receive the Bill very gladly and it would be a great help to them. Though they were convinced of the evils they were not able to convince their grandfathers and grandmothers. He was of opinion that in the case of extra-marital cases more deterrent punishment should be awarded. Those who perform marriages of girls between 14 years and 16 years of age must be awarded a sufficiently deterrent punishment but he said he had no idea about what that punishment should be.

Replying to Mr. Thakurdas Bhargava witness stated that Hindu Sastras impose certain conditions for marriage and the old Gujratis and some other would follow according to them strictly. He was in constant touch with the girls and he had sounded the opinion of some of them. He was sure that if marriageable age and age of consent could be fixed at 18 the girls would be satisfied. Even if expert doctors would suggest that 16 years was quite sufficient for cohabitation he would not change his opinion which he deliberately formed from his past experience.

As regards the maintenance of birth registers, witness stated that there was one system by which these registers were maintained which required great improvement. These registers were maintained by Municipal and Local Boards areas. Regular system of vaccination registers was being maintained since six or seven years. It would be very difficult to know the age of the child from either the birth registers or from the vaccination registers. Unless the Government takes interest in enforcing the maintenance of such registers no improvement could be possible.

REPRESENTATIVE WRITTEN STATEMENT.

In answer to a question of Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar witness stated that his written statement submitted to the Committee was prepared by the health committee of the Karachi Municipality and it expressed the opinion of no less than sixteen members out of a total number of 54 councillors. And the sixteen members were unanimous as regards the statement that was before the Committee. There were six maternity homes in Karachi of which three were maintained by the Karachi Municipality and three were run by private people. These homes were mainly intended for women and children. In the maternity homes run by the municipality statistics showing the age of the mother at the time of delivery, condition of the health of the mother, the weight of the child at the time of its birth and its health were maintained for the last ten years and when requested to furnish those statistics to the Committee he said he would send those statistics to the Committee.

Witness did not remember any marital case coming before the court. He was for the Age of Consent Bill and believed that the punishment given by the courts to the culprits was not sufficient.

ATTITUDE OF PARSIS

Replying to Khan Bahadur Mahbub Imam, Mr. Jamshed said that Parsees would not oppose this Bill being passed into law. Their marriages would not be affected by this Bill. If the real significance of the Bill was made known to them the present small opposition too would fade away. If the school master, the postmaster and the Panchayat courts of every village and the Mukhtyarkars and revenue officers were to be in charge of that particular locality of the maintenance of registers and to see that no offences under the Bill in question were committed some good would result.

Replying to Rai Bahadur Pandit Kanhaiya Lal, witness stated that there was a scarcity of women in Sind. Early consummation before puberty was more common amongst the people who come from outside Sind and live there than among the people who originally belong to Sind. They had the religious belief that the girl should be married before she was thirteen years of age. Seduction of married girls was more common than that of unmarried girls in Sind. There would be no change even if the bill was passed into law.

DR. KOTHARI'S EVIDENCE.

Replying to Mrs. M. O'Brien Beadon, Dr. Kothari stated that he had been working as a medical officer in Sind for the last 25 years and as such he came in contact with Mahomedans and Hindus of the various places. The educated people were sufficiently advanced to welcome any changes in the social customs. There was a lot of ignorance in the laboring classes. There was a scarcity of Hindu girls at Sukkur especially amongst the Bania community. There was a certain amount of neglect on the part of the mothers regarding children. There was fraud in selling the girls. There was no direct sale by parents but the girls were stolen and sold and married. Such cases were very common in the courts of Sind.

In answer to a question as to how the exact age of a girl could be ascertained witness stated that there were only three things by which the age could be ascertained. One is by the teeth and the other is by the X-ray. The latter is more possible but even then it was very difficult to determine whether a girl was 18 or 17 or 17½. Birth registers maintained in municipal and local board areas were not satisfactorily done. People living in rural areas do not care to go to a place where there was such a register maintained and report the birth of their child. But if they were compelled to go and do it and if the defaulters were punished these registers could be well maintained and they would prove very useful. The children were given a name generally on the eighth day of their birth and the name of the child could also be given to be recorded in the birth register. As the practice common at present was the parents would report the birth of the child at their convenience but not on the same day on which the child was born. The reporting of the names of the children, both boys and girls, on the days of their birth should be made compulsory. At the time of the vaccination, too, the names of the boys and girls should be recorded.

The correctness of the vaccination registers depends upon a vaccinator.

Questioned as to whether early marriages were prevalent witness stated that he heard of girls being married at the age of nine or ten in Sukkur but he never saw them. But such cases were very rare. On account of early marriages the girls were suffering very much. The girls who gave birth to children at the early age of 15 or 16 suffered from many diseases such as tuberculosis hysteria and the like. They go on suckling their children for a long time thus losing their vitality and soon become very weak. At such a tender age she would not be developed well in her body and also she could not understand clearly her responsibility.

Insanity and melancholia were common among girls not because of the changes and environments in which they were living. Such weaklings would be about 15 per cent., and their children were very weak. He believed that children born to such weak girls at an early age were not stronger than if they were born to the same women at an older age.

EARLY AND LATE MARRIAGES.

Replying to the questions of Mrs. Brijlal Nehru, witness said that menstruation would take place at the age of 14 years. In Sind Amils were the most forward and advanced community amongst whom marriages were done at a sufficiently high age. He never heard of early marriages taking place in Sind. He did not know in which part of the province they were done. He said he heard of marital cases in the province but when questioned whether he could give any instance he pleaded his inability.

Continuing, witness stated that the Age of Consent Bill could not have any effect upon the people in Sind. On the other hand according to the present circumstances it would be of great advantage to the people if the age of consent was raised to 16 years. If culprits who had not observed the Bill under consideration to the very letter were punished severely there would not be any difficulty in the Bill being popularised soon.

CONSUMMATION POSTPONED.

To a question of Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar witness stated that cohabitation was very rare before the age of nine or ten. The girls at Kathiawar marry at nine or ten years of age but the consummation does not take place until five or six years later. The girl remains with her parents until she attains her age. It is both a custom and a religious belief that the girls should be married before they are twelve. Melancholia was due not to early consummation but to early marriages and social conditions and hysteria was due to unhappy marriages. If the girls were kept unmarried for a long time he did not fear of any danger coming to the girls. Even supposing there would be any danger that would cease after a lapse of one or two years. When asked whether there would be any opposition to the Age of Consent Bill witness replied in the affirmative and said that a large section of people would oppose. It would be a religious opposition and would be proclaimed by mere protest meetings and dissenting voices but no danger would come. Even this slight opposition would cease to exist if the Bill was passed.

Replying to Khan Bahadur Mahabub Main Imam witness said that the age of consent and age of marriage must be increased. In both cases the age 16 was more practicable and non-objectionable.

In answer to Rai Bahadur Pandit Kanhaiya Lal, Dr. Kothari said that the practice of selling girls was more common in the Sindh than in the people who come from other parts of Sind. It was a good idea if religious societies were started to report the violation of the law in question. When questioned whether people would come forward to undertake this kind of work the witness replied in the affirmative and said that good public spirited persons would come forward. The educative work and business propaganda work could be safely entrusted to them. He thought that married men and women would be willing to report early marriages without fear of becoming unpopular.

The Age of Consent Committee, presided over by Sir Moropant Vishwanath Joshi and six other members—R. B. Pt. Kanhaiyalal, Pt. Thakurdas Bhargava, Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliyar, K. B. Mehbub, Imam Baksh Kadri, O.B.E., Mrs. Brijlal Nehru and Mrs. M. O'Brien Beadon, M.B., B.S., London L.S.A.—held its third sitting in Karachi on 1st October and examined the following witnesses:—Dr. Sivaswakar, assistant director of Public Health, K. B. Wali Mahomed Hassanally, retired Deputy Collector and special first class magistrate of Karachi and Mr. Kalumal Pahlumal, Judge of the Small Causes Court, Karachi, and Dr. E. D. Shroff, Health Officer of Karachi.

Dr. Sivaswakar in his oral evidence, in answer to a question of the chairman said that he had been assistant director of public health in Sind for the last five years. Questioned about the system of maintaining the births and deaths register witness stated that in towns where there were municipalities the registers were maintained according to the District Municipal Act. The parent or the guardian of the child or the owner of the house reports the matter to the municipal office. He heard very few cases where people were prosecuted for not giving the date of births. The Vaccination Department was under his control. The vaccinator goes round the town for the purpose of vaccinating the girls and he maintains a register in which he enters the names of the children. Whenever he finds a mistake or where a case of birth was not reported to the municipal office he informs the municipal office and thus the registers are checked. In villages the maintenance of these registers was even more perfect. The Revenue Department appointed a village official called tapadar who remains in charge of villages within 25 sq. miles. His business was to tour all round these villages once in a month and gather the information regarding births. In the villages the influential people and the school master, of their own accord, maintain a register of births and record the births in the village as they occur and hand the registers over to the tapadar whenever he comes who in his turn brings the register to the office of the assistant director of public health. The system according to witness was perfect and better than that of the towns. In the cases of deaths the cause of the death was not noted properly as in many cases the true facts could not be given.

STATISTICS ABOUT CHILDREN.

He submitted to the committee statistics regarding the deaths of children from 0-5 years, 5 to 10 years, 10 to 15 years and 15 to 20 years and up to 60 years and showed that there are more births of male children than of children below the ages of five and also the death number of male children was greater than of female children in that age. In the case of 10—15—20 years the deaths of female were greater than the deaths among the males; but after the age of 25 up to 45 the death rate of men was greater than that of women. Deaths were equal amongst the two cases from 45 to 55 years. These charts had been prepared by him for one year and practically the same was the case with each of the past five years.

SCARCITY OF FEMALES IN SIND.

One interesting point about Sind, was that the province stood unique in the scarcity of females. There had been a great deal of discussion over this point. This scarcity of females was due to three factors, viz., racial, climatical and social customs. Even among Mahomedans there were as many castes as there were tribes and there were no inter-marriages. Polygamy was observed not because any particular man was in need of many wives but because there was nobody to marry the girl amongst that community. There was also incompetency to produce female children because of these internal marriages. Brain faculty of married girls was being improved but the procreative faculty was on a low ebb. From 1871 to 1901 the population of females was very high but on account of plague and influenza which had specially victimized the women the number of women had been considerably lowered.

The population of Sind was increasing on account of people coming from other parts and settling here. Such people fell an easy prey to malaria that was prevalent here. Sind was the only province where there was ample land but the labourers were not many.

NO MARRIAGE AGE IN MOFUSSIL.

Amongst rural population there was no fixed age for marriage. Sometimes marriages were arranged by exchange of girls. He had seen girls exchanged and married at the age of three or four years. As far as marriage was concerned no age was taken into consideration but the consummation came off according to the good sense of the parents. In the Jamrao Colony of Punjabees similar conditions were prevailing.

On account of early marriages the health of the girls was practically ruined. There were cases where girls of 13 years of age were given in marriage to men of 40 years. Such girls invariably suffered from diseases, and he informed the Committee of a case where a girl was attacked with menorrhagia three years after her marriage.

Replying to Mr. Thakurdas Bhargawa, witness said that the reasons which he gave for the female deaths and consequently a decline of females were not applicable to the whole of Sind.

In reply to a question of Rai Bahadur Kanahyalal witness stated the system of maintaining birth registers had been organised by the Health Department and the system of tapadars going round the villages and collecting the information was the most perfect and highly satisfactory. The local boards and municipalities had no hand in this system. The idea of vigilant societies being organized throughout the province to bring the violations of the law to light would work well only in the zamindari villages where the zamindar's word was final in all the matters but not in ryotwari villages.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Bardoli Revision Settlement:—The Director of Information writes:—In the press note issued on August 6th, 1928 Government announced that an enquiry would be held into the Bardoli Revision Settlement and that it would be entrusted to a Judicial Officer and a Revenue Officer. They are now pleased to announce that they have appointed Mr. R. S. Broomfield, I.C.S., Judicial Commissioner in the States of Western India, Rajkot, and Mr. R. M. Maxwell, C. I. E., I. C. S., Collector of Dharwar and officiating Secretary to Government in the General Department, to make the enquiry, and that it will commence at Surat on November 1st next. The enquiry will be extended to the Revision Settlement of Chorasi Taluka. The terms of reference, as already announced, will be to inquire into and report upon the complaint of the people of Bardoli and Valod and of Chorasi (a) that the enhancement of revenue recently made is not warranted in terms of the land Revenue Code, (b) that the reports accessible to the public do not contain sufficient data warranting the enhancement and that some of the data given are wrong; and to find that if the peoples' complaint is held to be justified what enhancement or reduction, if any, there should be upon the old assessment. As the enquiry is to be full, open and independent, the persons interested will be free to lead as well as to test evidence before the officers making the enquiry with the help of their representatives including legal advisers. The decision of the Judicial Officer will prevail in all matters of difference between him and the Revenue Officer.

Indo-European Council for Uplift Work:—A Johannesburg message states:—The first decisive step in connection with the Indian social movement has been taken here by the formation of a joint council of Europeans and members of the South African Indian Congress for development and uplift work in the city. The Council is exceptionally influential and includes Mr. Sastri, the Bishop of Johannesburg, Mrs. Ethelreda Lewis, the novelist, and several University professors. It is believed that before Mr. Sastri relinquishes his office similar bodies will be functioning in other centres with the object of promoting the social work suggested by the Indo-Union Agreement.

Mrs. Naidu in England:—Over one hundred letters of welcome from her numerous British friends greeted Mrs. Sarojini Naidu on her arrival at the Ladies Lyceum Club, London. Interviewed by Reuter regarding her visit to America, Mrs. Naidu declared: "People think my tour programme consists of speeches about "Mother India," but I have no time to bother about muck and mire. India has too beautiful a message to offer to the world for any Indian to be disturbed by the finding of a little patch of dirt." During her two week's tour of the Continent she received a wonderful welcome at Paris, Berlin and Rome.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	R. s. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Ailbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT.,
 Royapuram, Madras.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer).
 Price annas 8.

A Human Document.—By Mr. V. S. Sohoni. The life of a Dhed in Bombay. Reprinted from the Reformer. Price annas 4.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
 Navsarl Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

The Bombay Swadeshi Co-operative Stores Co., Ltd.,

Have removed to their New Premises, Near Esplanade Police Court,
 Cruikshank Road, Fort, Bombay.

WE SOLICIT YOUR PATRONAGE

THE CHEAPEST HOUSE FOR INDIAN-MADE GOODS.

NEW AND IMPORTANT PAMPHLETS.

By Dr. G. S. Arundale, M.A., LL.B.

The fruits of his recent meditations on current questions.

Extremely suggestive and helpful.

A series of Pamphlets are now available at Four Annas each (Postage extra).

1. Krishnaji: Light-Bringer.
2. The Joy of Catastrophe
3. Go Your Own Way
4. Fanaticism—Wholesale and Retail
5. Shadows and Mountains
6. Some Intolerable Tyrannies.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY:

1. The Re-Birth of Hindu Music.—By Rudhyar of Carlos Salzedo, America. A French—American, Composer—Philosopher—Poet, considered as a friend as well as a genius.
 "In his knowledge and sincerity, his strength and his industry, he is the musical peer of many celebrities who has gained real support and attention in our country."—Los Angeles Record.
 Artistic get up. Price: Cloth and Gold, Rs. 5. Double Wrappers, Rs. 3-12.
2. The Gita and Spiritual Life.—By D. S. Sarma, M.A., Prof. Presidency College, Madras, and author of Introduction to Bhagavat-Gita. Price: Boards, Re. 1-8; Wrappers, Re. 1-2.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 ADYAR, MADRAS, INDIA.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

THE
Central Bank of India Ltd.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	1,00,00,000

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches :—(1) Maudvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Rehman Street.

Mofussil Branches :—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharia, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Asansol, Chandausi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jamnagar.

London Agents :—The Midland Bank, Ltd.

New York Agents :—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents :—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts :—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by :

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents :

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE :

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches : {
BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	82,00,000

London Agents :—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE :—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh).
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL :—

Authorised Capital	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital	Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amrell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwarka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	50,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Shri Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent, Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Mageshji H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. Nawroji B. Saklatvala, C.I.E., (Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay).
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges-particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0.11.26.

Bombay.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs. a. p.
Subscription (including postage).
Inland	5 0 0
Foreign	5 8 0
Single copy	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY
 DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
 POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10/- Post free

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,
 The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
 CALCUTTA.

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, B O M B A Y.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.
Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long-standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,

The Hindustan Review.

PATNA, E. I. R.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW-YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS

(Agencies), Ltd.,

16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055

TOTAL FUNDS ... Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
(A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

Fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free.

To every purchaser of our “Luxorette” lever Radium Silvered Pocket Watch, guaranteed for five years, costing Rupees five, we give our fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free. Write now. The radium pocket watch as a time mechanism and well built and can be seen well in nights without the help of lights. Please order soon.

Price Rs. 5 only.

Address:—SWAN HOUSE,
P. B. No. 508. P. T. MADRAS.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

- EYE DISEASES... Try "Akhyacura."
- RING WORM ... Try "Kurain."
- ASTHMA ... Try "Asthma Cure."
- STRENGTH ... Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil."
- TONICS ... Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills."
"Parrish's Chemical Food."
"Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo,
phosphites of Lime."
- GONORRHOEA ... Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C.
Copaiba Cum Buchu."

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :-

Madras Presidency & Mysore :
BEST & CO., LTD.
MADRAS.

H. R. H. The Nizam's Dominions :
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan :
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Tonight at 9-30. Salisbury's "Quaints"

will present

"THE BLUE TRAIN"

Tomorrow at 5-30, Salisbury's "Quaints"

will present

The Screaming Ski-ing Musical Comedy

NO, NO, NANETTE

EMPIRE THEATRE

Tonight, and Tomorrow at 4, 6-15, 8-15, and 10 P.M.

HAVOC

with

MADGE BELLAMY, GEORGE O'BRIEN

and

ALL STAR CAST

A mighty drama of War-Dazed Women.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Tonight and Tomorrow at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

THE SPORTING VENUS

featuring

RONALD COLMAN

with

BLANCHE SWEET and LEW CODY

This brilliant Romance of the Screen is a Searching study of a woman who tried to deny a great love.

EMPRESS CINEMA

Tonight and Tomorrow at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

NORMA TALMADGE

in

THE DOVE

See your film beauty in this great picture.
Special Morning Show Tomorrow at 10 A.M.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1928

No. 9

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Age of Consent Committee. The Simon Commission. Barbers and Self-Shaving. Penalty for Child Marriages. Buddha, The Great Social Re- former. Prohibition Movement in Japan. Social Reform in Bardoli. Index to Volume XXXVIII.	The Annamalai University. The Law of Civil Marriage in India. Public Safety Bill. Indian National Social Con- ference. Age of Consent Inquiry, News of the Week.
--	---

NOTES.

The Age of Consent Committee:—The Age of Consent Committee presided over by Sir Moropant Joshi arrived in Bombay last Saturday and has been examining witnesses. The general trend of the evidence so far gathered favours (1) the raising of the Age of Consent as against strangers to 16 and even 18 (2) the treatment of premature consummation within marital limits as a separate offence from "rape" for which a lower "age of consent" and a lighter punishment should be prescribed, and (3) the passing of a law fixing a minimum marriage age particularly for girls. A few witnesses (none in Bombay) are altogether opposed to any interference with marriage "autonomy", and Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas at the other end recommended that parents who get their daughters married before the minimum age, should be punished with whipping! Sir Moropant was taken aback and enquired if Mr. Kanji was serious about the punishment. The latter maintained he was, but modified his suggestion to the extent that whipping should be permissible in extreme cases, such as, we suppose, when a man who has been fined and imprisoned for violating the law, is not deterred thereby from getting his other daughters married under age. Even this would be absurd, and Mr. Kanji's recommendation can be taken only to express his feelings at the injurious consequences of too early marriages.

The Simon Commission:—The Statutory Commission has been in Poona since its arrival three weeks ago, and has finished its enquiry so far as it relates to Bombay Presidency. With it have been associated the Indian Central Committee presided over by Sir Sankaran Nair and the Bombay Provincial Committee, with Mr. Bhutto, a Mahomedan gentleman from Sind, for Chairman. The greater part of the time was taken up with the examination of official witnesses. During the week devoted to non-official evidence, representatives of Mahomedans, the depressed classes, and non-Brahmins were heard. They all wanted special protection in the form either of separate electorates or reserved seats in the Legislature. The Mahomedans were afraid of the domination of Hindus, the depressed classes of caste Hindus, the caste Hindus of the Brahmins. Sometimes the Mahomedan representatives seemed to make common cause with the depressed classes against caste Hindus, and with caste Hindus against Brahmins. No representative of the Brahmins appeared before the Commission to ask for protection. We think it all to the good that the Commission has heard at the outset of its enquiry the extreme views of the main communal parties. The evidence which it will hear in other parts of the country, since the nationalists will have nothing to do with it, will be minor variations of the same views, and its work, therefore, will not entail much time or energy.

Barbers and Self-shaving:—Many of the statements made by communal witnesses before the Statutory Commission were gross exaggerations which will not bear scrutiny. Thus, Dr. Ambedkar told the Commission that he had not known of any movement to promote inter-communal dining in Bombay. The Indian Daily Mail published on Thursday a photograph of those who participated in an inter-communal dinner held in March 1923 in the premises of the Bombay Depressed classes mission. A full account of it with names was published in the Indian Social Reformer of the 17th March 1923, which was also reproduced in the Indian Daily Mail. Since then, inter-dining has ceased to be a problem with the educated classes, and it is astonishing that a man of Dr. Ambedkar's standing should have known nothing about this tendency all these years. However, the question of constitutional reform is not one of inter-dining or inter-marriage, and surprise is felt at the wide latitude given to witnesses to ventilate their social grievances before the Commission. Although, Sir John Simon once or twice remarked that the Commission can do nothing to remove social or religious disabilities, the witnesses were nevertheless allowed to enlarge upon them. Dr. Ambedkar, for example, complained to the Commission that a barber had refused to shave him. The Commissioners in their ignorance might have been led to believe that barbers are a class of Brahmins of whose iniquities they have been hearing so much from their witnesses. They may not know that in some districts barbers under the influence of the non-Brahmin movement have refused to shave Brahmins. However that may be, most educated Indians now-a-days shave themselves with safety-razors, from hygienic considerations as well as considerations which make personal service repellent to sensitive minds.

Penalty for Child Marriages :—At a recent meeting in Madras, Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastriar spoke on "Legislation and Social Reform" referring particularly to the Sharda child Marriage (Prevention) Bill. That bill, as it was first introduced in the Assembly, contained a proviso invalidating too early marriages. When it emerged from the Select Committee the proviso was dropped and a clause imposing the penalty of a fine or simple imprisonment on the parents or guardians who brought about the marriage was inserted. Mr. Venkatrama Sastriar suggested in his lecture that such marriages may be voidable by either party on coming of age or that the parents should be made to pay the penalty. Improving on this the president, Dewan Bahadur T. Rangachariar, suggested that offenders should be deprived of those privileges of citizenship such as the right of taking part in an election and, therefore, of being a member of the Council or local boards. He waged that in their days of democracy this would be an effective penalty and, lest it should appear far-fetched to his audience, he pointed out that a man who could not guard the interests of a single person under him would not be competent to look after the interests of the public. Unfortunately all men do not value their vote so much as to refrain from anything which would deprive them of it and those who do are not, generally speaking, among the class which practices early marriage. It is very doubtful whether even a fine would be sufficiently effective as a deterrent. An ineffectual penalty would nullify the law. It is, however, necessary to avoid the danger of running to the other extreme and imposing too drastic a penalty for the offence. The suggestion put forward by one of the witnesses before the Age of Consent Committee that the parent of the boy who commits this offence should be whipped is more likely to evoke public sympathy for the parent. Instead of acting as a deterrent the penalty will make the law a dead-letter.

Buddha, The Great Social Reformer :—The current number of the Young East contains an article depicting at length the social and religious tyranny under which people of India were groaning and how the advent of the Buddha brought deliverance to humanity. Our contemporary writes :—"Great, indeed, were the suffering of humanity when Prince Siddharta was born ; equally great was the reward that followed. Buddha came, he saw, he conquered—not like the conquerors of olden days who summoned blazen steel and burning fire to their aid, but like a celestial monarch who made other men's cause his own and built his throne in the hearts of the people. It was a bloodless victory, far-reaching in space and time, and paragons all virtuous and noble deeds done in the realms of religious and social reform, before or after. It was a gigantic task, perhaps the greatest that had yet befallen to the lot of a religious or social missionary and who could launch upon it except the one who had manfully equipped himself for it through the ages? Yes, a lesser personality than that of Gautama, however spiritually advanced otherwise, would have shuddered at the manifold complexity of the hydra-headed problem, which put extremely briefly, involved a total abolition of castes and sub-castes, the removal of age-long shackles of priestly tyranny, the freedom of women from the bondage of an abject social code, the extinction of cruel and ghastly sacrifices, the preservation of all sentient life, the consecration of Truth on the highest pedestal, the substitution of a practical code of religious and moral ethics for the transcendental jargon and hair-splitting theology which stalked in the name of religion, and the last but not the least, the opening of the hitherto jealously-guarded massive iron gates of Nirvana upon the Upalis (barbers), the Chandas (smiths) the Nandas (shepherds), the Vrakritis (untouchables), the Vasavadattas and Ambapâles (courtesans), the Mary Magdalens of Buddhism."

Prohibition Movement in Japan :—The progress made by the prohibition movement in Japan is so great that it bids fair to become a "dry" country in the near future. We are indebted to the Near East, for the following information :—"It is pleasant to note that the prohibition movement in Japan is steadily gaining ground. On August 31 a big parade was staged in Tokyo by the National Prohibition Federation. It was joined by 6,000 persons representing 150 social organizations. Similar demonstrations were held in principal cities of the Empire. It is remarkable that this movement is promoted by Buddhists and Christians without discrimination and is supported by public bodies. In Sendai where the second Division is stationed, prohibition has been so successfully encouraged among the rank and file that the Division has earned the reputation of Dry Division. At Otaru, a port in Hokkaido, a prohibition league is about to be organised among lower-class seamen, while so far fifteen villages in various parts of the country have banned alcoholic drinks." Still more significant is the support given to the movement by the Imperial Court. The Abkari writes :—"The Emperor of Japan—like King Boris of Bulgaria and Amanullah, Amir of Afghanistan—is a total abstainer. Not only does the Japanese Emperor abstain personally, but his guests are not served with alcohol at his table. His palace guard, numbering 300, are all abstainers, as are nearly all the palace servants. Verily, the East is far from the West. Signs are not wanting that very soon whisky and its native equivalent sake, will be exclusively the drink of Westerners in "the Land of the Lotus."

Social Reform in Bardoli :—We are glad to learn that as a distinct result of the satyagrah an important movement of social reform has started in the various Patidar communities of Bardoli as well as of the other Talukas. They have for the present resolved to stop marriage of girls under 14 years and to consummate the marriages after the girls are at least 16 years of age. This decision is a distinct step forward in view of the fact that the Patidars have been among the most conservative people of Bardoli who used to marry their girls at as early an age as 5 and even less. We are also glad to learn that there is a movement among them to amalgamate some sub-castes.

Index to Volume XXXVIII :—Copies of the Index to volume XXXVIII of the Indian Social Reformer are now ready and will be available on application.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, OCTOBER 27, 1928.

THE ANNAMALAI UNIVERSITY.

During the last twenty years the number of Universities in India have increased from five to sixteen. In 1857, three Universities were started in the three Presidency towns of Madras, Bombay and Calcutta. Several years later, two more were established at Allahabad and Lahore. The Dacca University came into existence at the time of Lord Curzon's Partition of Bengal. Two denominational Universities, the Benares Hindu and the Aligarh Moslem, followed soon after. The Oosmania University of Hyderabad (Dn.) and the Mysore University, both State Universities, came next in order of time. The Patna, Lucknow, Nagpur, Rangoon, Agra and Andhra Universities, are the creation of the Provincial Legislatures since the introduction of the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms. The latest addition to the list is the Annamalai University at Chidambaram, the Bill incorporating which was passed by the Madras Legislative Council a few days ago. The five oldest Universities were started on the model of the old London University, but they differed from it in that only students of the colleges affiliated to them were eligible for admission to their examinations. It is thus incorrect to say, as has been often said, that they are purely examining bodies. That this type of University is the best suited to present-day conditions in this country, is shown by the fact that several of the Universities which have been started in recent years have had to make provision for affiliating colleges in one form or another. It has not been found possible to reproduce the Oxford and Cambridge type of university in this country. The Benares Hindu University comes nearest to it, as it consists of a group of contiguous colleges in a single area, but it differs from them in that each of the constituent colleges teaches only one special subject and that all of them are financed, maintained and managed by the University. The only other fully residential University is the Aligarh Moslem University consisting of a single college. The Annamalai University is of this type, being like Aligarh developed out of a pre-existing College.

The conversion of Aligarh College into a University, has not been altogether beneficial, a recent enquiry into the affairs of the institution having revealed many and serious defects in the administration. The Aligarh College was started by the illustrious Syed Sir Ahmed and soon acquired and long enjoyed a great prestige as the powerhouse of Mualim progress. The Chidambaram

College which now becomes the Annamalai University, was from all accounts a very efficient institution but it has not the advantages which the Aligarh College had before it became a university. Chidambaram has a famous temple which may be said to be the principal Saivite Cathedral in South India. But otherwise it has little importance from an educational or industrial point of view. There is not any considerable educated class engaged in independent professions to provide an adequate back-ground to the new University. The Annamalai University, however, will have enormous facilities for "Oriental" studies, especially in Tamil language and literature. The great South Indian Mutts have always encouraged Tamil studies of the traditional kind, and if a part of their large resources as well as those of the Chidambaram and other temples, is made available to the University, it can easily become a great centre of Dravidian studies attracting scholars from all over the world. Sir Annamalai Chettiar's endowment of twenty five lakhs of rupees, is the most munificent gift for an educational purpose in South India since the famous century-old charities of Pacheappah Mudaliar. The Government of Madras has given a grant of twenty-seven lakhs to the University and, as observed above, there are many wealthy religious institutions which can and, no doubt, will contribute liberally to augment the funds of the University. It has a large area from which to draw its students—the Tamil districts of the Madras Presidency and Ceylon, particularly Jaffna.

Although not a denominational University the Annamalai University will have to give a large place in its studies to the distinctive products of South Indian culture. The most important of these is the Saiva Siddhanta, a unique system of religious devotion and philosophy which is the finest flower of Tamil culture. Post Buddhistic Hinduism drew its inspiration largely from the South. Shankara, Ramanuja and other great teachers were natives of South India. The history of Mahomedan contact with the South is also distinguished from its history in the North, by its pronounced nationalistic tendencies. The Moslems of the Deccan spoke the language, wore the dress and in every respect except religion led the same life as the Hindus. The Moslem kingdoms in the South were also organised on non-denominational lines and were popular sovereignties for all practical purposes. There is thus a very large and unexplored field of history and culture and the Annamalai University under capable guidance has, therefore, an immensely interesting prospect of usefulness before it.

THE LAW OF CIVIL MARRIAGE IN INDIA.

(BY MR. KOPERGAM RAMAMURTI).

The struggle for the enactment of a general civil marriage law that shall not penalise religion is by no means ended. It is only biding its time, and gathering strength every day from the steady growth and interplay of the nationalist and theosophic movements in India. The country is just now fully preoccupied with the fundamental problems affecting national honour, national freedom and national unity in its relations with a dominant foreign power. It will soon find itself forced by the logic of facts and events to find time to give its ungrudging attention to a solution of the not less fundamental problems affecting the honour, unity and freedom, social and religious, of its individuals and communities, which go to build up its nationhood.

Sir Henry Sumner Maine generously held out, for the benefit of all religion loving and progressive Indians, a fair and honourable law of Civil marriage in 1868, but he was beaten back with contumely by the combined forces of orthodoxy. His successor laid on it a bitter and repulsive coating of irreligion to save himself from the unpleasant attentions of the "religious" monopolists, and practically forced an atheistic measure, in the shape of Act III of 1872, down the throats of the hungering theists of India. Mr. Bhupendranath Basu's Amendment Bill of 1911, which sought to liberate the law from that abominable coating which vitiated the code was strangled at the very threshold of the Viceroy's Council in Calcutta. Dr. Hari Singh Gour's similar Bill of 1920 was killed with greater ceremony inside the Assembly Hall by the "reformed" Legislature at Delhi. Unbroken by the calamity, Dr. Gour resuscitated his measure and pushed it in the Assembly again in 1923 and split the ranks of orthodoxy. But orthodoxy in its turn split Dr. Gour's Bill into two halves, swallowed only one half, and destroyed the other.

Act III of 1872 had put under its ban four religions of Indian origin (Hinduism, Buddhism, Jainism and Sikhism), and four religions of foreign origin (the Parsi, Hebrew, Christian and Mahomedan religions). No two persons either of whom professed any of these eight religions could marry under the Act. The object of the amending Bills of Mr. Basu and Dr. Gour was to remove this ban on Religion altogether, so that persons belonging to any of these eight religions or other religions also, if any, may lawfully intermarry under the Act without having to make any declaration, positive or negative, about their religious faith. But Act XXX of 1923, which emerged out of the unskilled half of Dr. Gour's last amending Bill provides for a valid form of marriage between persons belonging only to the four indigenous religions of the Hindu group, in addition to the old form of marriage between persons who profess none of the eight religions. But the proposal that the ban on the four foreign religions also should be lifted, so as to permit free intermarriage among all the religionists of both groups, was sternly knocked on the head and rejected. So, under the present amended Act III of 1872, a Hindu may marry another Hindu of any caste, or a Buddhist, or a Jain, or a Sikh, both parties openly declaring their respective faiths before the Marriage-Registrar. But if any person of the Hindu group wants to marry a person of no religion or a person belonging to the foreign group of Christians, Mohamedans, Parsis and Hebrews, the Act still requires that both the bride and bridegroom shall solemnly declare before the Registrar that they do not profess any of the eight religions above named, either indigenous or foreign.

Some Marriage-Registrars, relying no doubt on the alternative wording newly inserted into the old Declaration Forms appended to the Act, take a broader view of the changes introduced by Act XXX of 1923. They are convinced that a negative declaration has to be made still by persons belonging to the foreign group, because there is no provision in the form for a positive declaration of any of the four foreign faiths. But as there is a positive form of declaration specifically provided in the alternative for persons of the Hindu group, they are of opinion that these persons can avail themselves of it under all circumstances. They therefore allow a Hindu to make a positive declaration even when the other party to the marriage is a person of the foreign group from whom a negative declaration is taken. Other Marriage Registrars however feel that their hands are tied by the terms of section 2 of the Act itself to implement which the forms in the Appendix have been drafted, and demand a negative declaration from both parties to a mixed marriage even though one of them alone belongs to the foreign-religion group.

So, there is no doubt that even, after the passing of the amending Act of 1923, there is a positive bar to intermarriage between the Hindu and foreign groups under Act III of 1872, unless both parties solemnly repudiate all religions including their own. It is with a view to get this last and serious disability also removed that notice has again been given in the Legislative Assembly of a further-amending Bill, to be sponsored this time by Mr. Tulsi Charan Goswami as well as Dr. Gour.

Nothing is known to the public yet as to the probable date of the formal introduction of the new Bill. But whenever that may come, one may be quite sure that Hindu orthodoxy will unhesitatingly rush at once to consort with Mohamedan orthodoxy in the Assembly, and also with the European orthodoxy of the Government Benches, to fight to the last ditch this impious attempt to save Hindu, Mohamedan and Christian nationalists from being forced by Act III of 1872 to repudiate their religion. When one turns however to certain provisions of the Indian Christian Marriage Act which are already in daily use, one is profoundly struck with the vanity of all this holy fervour and pious hatred against inoffensive fellow-citizens who seek no favour except that they be not coerced by law to forswear their religious faith for exercising a domestic personal right which concerns no one else.

It is a matter of public record and daily experience that, under Part V of the Indian Christian Marriage Act, Hindus and Christians have been lawfully intermarrying for over half a century without being asked to give up their religions. No possible combination of orthodoxies can abrogate that law at this date. Where then is the religious or logical sense in one's opposition to a similar marriage or a Hindu-Moslem or a Hindu-Parsi marriage being permitted under Act III of 1872 on the same liberal terms?

This absurd and farcical position was widely noticed and commented upon in the public press nearly two decades ago in dealing with the orthodox opposition to Mr. Basu's Bill (vide Educational Note : I. S. B. 13th August 1911). But in view of the doubts often thrown on the validity of such mixed marriages even under the Christian Marriage Act (vide I. S. R. 3rd Sep. 1911 ; 19th Jan. 1919 ; 13th June 1920), the following extract taken from the learned exposition by Mr. Paul Appasami, M. A., LL. B., Judge, City Civil Court, Madras, of "the Law applicable to Christians in India," just published by the Christian Literature Society, will no doubt be found interesting and instructive.

"Section 88 of the Act has given rise to a great deal of controversy. It runs thus: 'Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to validate any marriage which the personal law applicable to either of the parties forbids him or her to enter into.' The marginal summary affixed to the section is phrased, 'Non-validation of marriages within prohibited degrees.'

"Read along with this marginal note, the section seems clear enough and does not suggest possibilities of diverse constructions. But in fact learned lawyers have interpreted the section in a sense which cuts through the whole scheme of the Act.

"Obviously the section has been added, by way of supplement, merely because all churches do not publish schedules of prohibited degrees, and the table put forward by one church or denomination is not always the same as that of another church.

"It is in view of these differences that the section provides that if the personal law applicable to a member of a particular denomination prohibits him from marrying a person who stands in a certain relation to him, the marriage is invalid altogether....

"A marriage of a Hindu with a Christian who stands outside the caste system is altogether invalid according to Hindu Law. This section has been construed to imply that a marriage which is invalid according to the personal law of the parties marrying cannot be rendered valid by this Act.

"But earlier in the Act it is specially laid down that a Christian can marry a Hindu or Mohamedan ; only the marriage must be celebrated according to the provisions of this Act. The entire Act proceeds on the footing that such a mixed marriage can legally take place. Penalties will be imposed only on those who celebrated the marriage in any form not authorised by this Act, but this section however seems at one stroke, if the construction contended for is correct, to cancel the entire effect of the previous eighty-seven sections.

"This effect is certainly not what the legislation intended. It is clear to any one who studies the Act that it had in mind only the differences between the churches in their rules as regards prohibited degrees. The term personal law in the section was therefore intended to apply only to the personal law applicable to Christians of different denominations.

"Even otherwise a supplementary section like Section 88 which is in the nature of a proviso cannot be read as cancelling the whole scheme of the Act which allows mixed marriages, where one of the contracting parties alone is a Christian and the other is not, and makes specific provision as to the manner in which such marriages are to be celebrated.

It is not possible to find any legal basis for the contention put forward ; it would, it is conceived be held against if it ever came before the Courts."

PUBLIC SAFETY BILL.

The Editor,

The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir

From under heading "Public Safety Bill" in your number September 15th I venture to quote "the Government spokesman treated the economic aspect of the Commission as a minor matter, and concentrated on the danger to the social and religious institutions of Hinduism and Islam..... Why do they permit foreign Christian missions to seek to undermine and destroy those very institutions for which it proposes so much solicitude?"

The exception taken is surely viewing the matter in a very contracted manner. To the writer it seems obvious that the spokesman was not concerned with any particular creed, though specifying Hinduism and Islam, but meant to emphasise the danger to religion as such, from Bolshevism influence, and to make impression of the fact that the chief menace of Bolshevism is its violent and aggressive hostility to all religion. An instance of the catholicity of its aims is the name of the Society, centres of which it is strenuously endeavouring to establish in all countries, especially amongst children—that name is "The Anti-God Society."

Again may I quote "the Indian people have sufficient intelligence to discriminate between what is good in Bolshevism and what is unsuitable." If this were so, there would be no danger.

But how can this comfortable attitude of mind be maintained in face of the fact of their methods of work! Whatever their demerits, it may be put to their credit that they are perfectly straightforward and open as to what their aims are. From a study of them it appears that though it comes within their scope they are not so much concerned with undermining the stability of the Government in power as with concentrating all their energies upon the destruction of the "Bourgeoisie." For this they work entirely amongst the "worker and peasant", who represent in every country the most ignorant and unthinking class. In India it would mean the ryots and the Depressed Classes.

It can hardly be maintained that these people will be able to discriminate as to what is good or bad in Bolshevism, when they are worked upon by "passed masters" of the art of stirring up the fires of hatred and vengeance for real or supposed wrongs! In case of the Depressed Classes one dares not think from what depth this fire could not be stirred, or to what height of dire vengeance it could not rise, in retribution for wrongs only too real!

Not upon the British Government and its servants, but upon the "Bourgeoisie"—and to the Bolshevik the "bourgeois" appears to be the intelligent, or any one possessing anything above the mere pittance to keep life going. From the Student, the Vakil, the Merchant, the Landowner, to the Maharajah, all would fall as "bourgeois" into the Bolshevik net!

Lastly to quote "There is one feature of Bolshevism at least which Britain will do well to imitate; it is the absolute repudiation of racial discrimination....." If it is Bolshevism as it obtains among the Russians that is in the mind, admiration for this quality may be somewhat modified, if it is remembered that in dealing with Eastern races the Russians have no such temptation to discriminate as the Western European has, for the reason that the Russian is, in his racial composition nine-tenths Eastern.

Cambridge.
3rd October 1928.

Yours etc.
I. J. PITT.

INDIAN NATIONAL SOCIAL CONFERENCE.

It has been arranged to hold the forty-first session of the Indian National Social Conference at Calcutta during the National Week in December next and a strong Reception Committee with Sj. Nirmal Chunder, M.L.A. as Chairman and Sj. Subhas Chandra Basu, Sj. Kiran Sanker Roy, Dr. Prohabati Das Gupta, Sj. Bhagirath Chandra Das, Sj. Prabhudyal Himatsingka, Acharjee Muralidhar Banerjee and others as Vice-Chairmen have been formed. Any person who has sympathy with the aims and objects of the Indian National Social Conference and pays a minimum fee of Rupee one to the Reception Committee shall be entitled to become a Delegate provided he is duly elected as such by any social Reform Organisation of any Community in India or by the executive Committee of the Reception Committee.

The coming session of the Indian National Social Conference is important for the reason that it will afford opportunity to the people of all creeds and communities to discuss together about the two important social legislations—viz., Child Marriage Prevention Bill and Age of Consent Bill which are now on the Legislative anvil.

According to the rules framed by the Reception Committee, I invite all types of Social Reform Organisations of different communities in India to send their suggestions of names for Presidentship of the forth-coming forty-first session of the Indian National Social Conference which should reach the undersigned on or before the 15th November next in order to enable the Reception Committee to elect a proper person as the President of the Conference. I also invite all social reform organisations to arrange for returning of Delegates from the different Provinces in order to make the conference a success.

Albert Institute,
2nd floor,
15, College Square,
Calcutta,
17th October 1928.

DWIJENDRANATH DUTT,
General Secretary,
Indian National Social Conference.

AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

EVIDENCE AT KARACHI.

K. B. WALIMAHOMED.

K. B. Walimahomed Hassanally in his oral evidence replying to the Chairman said that he was a retired Deputy Collector, was a municipal councillor a member of the last two Legislative Assemblies and a special magistrate of Karachi. Among Mahomedans there were two main communities, namely Borahs and Khojas and there were no inter-marriages among those two communities. Generally the girls of the Mahomedans were married at the age of 16 and by this bill the Mahomedans would not in any way be affected. Generally the girls were married after puberty and marriages below the age of puberty were very rare. But among Hindus it was different. Formerly the girls were married at an early age but the Hindu girls had received latterly secondary education and college education and they had now given up the practice of early marriage. The Amil community is the most advanced and educated community and the girls in this community marry generally at a sufficiently high age and sometimes after they finish their college education. But in the Bania class the girls were married even at the age of 10 or 11.

Considering his experience of the world as a magistrate he said he never came across a marriage case into his court. He emphatically asserted that any change that might be made in this direction would not have the desired effect because coming to a court of law would mean perpetual separation of the wife from the husband. He was not of opinion that even by passing the age of consent bill fruitful changes by which the society would be benefited would come but he believed that social reform was more capable of effecting changes than legislation. He instanced this by showing how in the Amil community the girls were married at an early age previously and gradually by receiving high education, how they, of their own accord, raised the age of marriage to 16 and even greater. The Mohamedans might object to this bill on the ground that their Prophet married a minor and so they also should be allowed to do so. But witness personally considered that this was not a sufficient ground and he was not opposed to the raising of the age.

“HINDUS’ FALSE CRY.”

In answer to Mrs. Beadon The Khan Bahadur replied that he had never seen marital cases coming to the court but he was told once or twice that a girl was injured. When questioned about the girls being seduced witness stated that in his experience seduction was more manufactured than real. Some of the Hindu friends were raising this cry with a view to get the Moslems into trouble. These seductions if at all there were any were also committed by the Hindu. But on the whole such cases are very rare. The girls below the age of 14 or 15 were seduced and in order to make it a cognizable offence the police would represent that the girl was a minor. The raising of the marriageable age would not mitigate the crime of seduction. When questioned by Mr. Thakurdas whether passing of deterrent sentences upon the culprits would reduce the crime, witness replied in the negative and added that the raising of the age of consent would not be a necessary check. He was not for completely leaving the culprit unpunished, but if the people were to be educated any kind of punishment would be deterrent.

Replying to Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliyar witness stated that he came across many rape cases. If the age of marriage is raised to 16 then he did not believe there would be likelihood of the accused being punished and it would not have deterrent effect upon others.

Replying to Khan Bahadur Mahabub Mian Imam witness stated that this measure would be useful to the Mussalmans also. He believed that the birth and death registers were not kept properly in villages and challenged the statement of Dr. Sivawerkar that they were perfect. The tapadar would go round the villages at his pleasure and the schoolmaster and the postmaster could not register the births as they could not be always on that duty. But if the system was to be made perfect the Government should appoint paid patels to go round the villages from time to time and record them regularly. He liked the idea of making marriages registered compulsorily. In larger towns the difficulties would not be greater than those of villages. He was of opinion that vigilance societies would not do much work in bringing the offences to light.

MR. KALUMAL.

Mr. Kalumal Pahlmal, replying to the questions of the Chairman stated the marriageable age should be raised from 14 to 18 and the marriages under the age of 18 must be penalised. He suggested that certificates showing the age of the girl and the boy should be produced before the performance of a marriage, and the committee issuing such certificates should consist of one Government official and local influential members. If an officer could not be found the matter should be referred to a judge. The services of influential people who would be willing to serve on these committees could be obtained very easily both in the cities as well as in the villages. He did not think that a good deal of people would be harrassed by adopting this method.

Asked by Mrs. Beadon as to how many cases of injury done to girls he knew, witness stated that in six years he had heard of twelve cases.

Replying to Mrs. B. Nehru, witness believed that social societies would not be able to check the evils which are common with the females. Except in the Amil community the age of marriage was very low.

In answer to Mr. Thakurdas witness stated that if the society were to advance it should not grumble to spend money for committee, advocated by him, would have some valuable opinion as to when these marriages were taking place. He believed that if the new law were to be published and made known to the public there would be some check for the offences. Seduction was prevalent among Hindus and among some Moslems. Except by the compulsory registration of marriages there was no other way of arriving at a correct age of the boy and the girl. The method of keeping the birth and death registers in rural areas was satisfactory. The whole area was covered by the Taluka and District Boards who took care to see that these registers were maintained well. Vigilant societies and village panchayats would not help to bring the offences to light properly as such members would veil the offence committed in their community and expose the mistakes of other communities.

DR. SHROFF.

Dr. E. D. Shroff, submitted statistics showing the history of the ladies, as to their first pregnancy, second pregnancy, and their state of health. He said that women aged about 14 years were suffering very much from diseases and quoted an instance where a girl of 14 years of age after her confinement was not able to leave her bed for two years and also the diseases common among women.

Replying to Mrs. B. Nehru witness stated that the constitution of the girl would be spoiled if the girl gives birth to children too often in her prime of youth.

Regarding births and deaths the registers were kept upto date and they were perfect. There was no hard and fast rule, but they were kept in such a way for a long time. His knowledge was limited to what was contained in the book as he was not in the habit of going round all the hospitals for himself.

Replying to Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliyar, witness stated that those who fail to report deaths in 48 hours were liable to be fined Rs. 25. In addition to this there were Municipal agents appointed to go round and collect news by going to cremation grounds and burial places and report that news to their respective centres. If population was taken into consideration the deaths among Hindus were not greater than Mahomedans. In Karachi city the high mortality was reduced by 44 per cent.

Mr. Rupchand Balaram, Additional Judicial Commissioner gave evidence in camera.

MR. VIRUMAL BEGRAJ.

In answer to the question of the Chairman Mr. Virumal Begraj stated that he was the representative of the Hindu Panchayats of Sukkur. He said that cases of seduction and rape were not frequent in Sind. Such cases would not come to the court as most of them were hushed up. He was of opinion that a law preventing unequal marriages should be introduced as such marriages were common in the villages.

Replying to Mr. Thakurdas Bhargava witness stated that he was opposed to any trial of marital cases by 3rd class magistrates. A first class magistrate specially empowered to try such cases must carry on the investigation. He said he was for raising the age of consent to 18.

Answering to Mr. Mitra, witness said that there used to be a religious notion amongst Hindus in Sind that their girls should be married before they were 10 years of age. But it was gradually dying away. Widow marriages also were not received well by the people but he stated that he was working for the uplift of widows. There was a scarcity of women in Sind. One cause of it was that there were many girls who were married at the age of ten or below and became widows and people did not think of remarrying the girl but would keep her as an eternal widow, so if a man wanted to marry no proper girl would be available.

He was of opinion that in the case of non-marital cases the age of the girl should be 16. There was also an idea prevalent that after the puberty every girl was fit for consummation.

FUNCTIONS OF PANCHAYAT.

Replying to Rai Bahadur Pandit Kanyahlal, witness told that there was no Village Panchayat Act in Sind. But they had been working voluntarily. Asked about the nature of the work done by the panchayats witness stated that these would dispose of cases of marriages, cases relating to caste and also monetary cases. He also explained the procedure that would be adopted in trying these cases and how they were enforced. When questioned whether these panchayats would serve as vigilance societies to bring crimes under the Age of Consent Act to light and see that the culprits were punished, witness replied that these would certainly help a good deal. Continuing, witness said that even though the percentage of Hindus was three times less than that of Mahomedans the percentage of deaths among the former was far more than that of the latter and this was partly due to early marriages and consummation. He was of opinion that in marital cases the investigation and preliminary work should not be done by the police, but it should be transferred to the trying magistrate. He said he would have no objection if this work was carried on by a responsible police officer such as the Superintendent of Police.

SETH SHIVRATAN MOHATA.

Replying to the questions of the Chairman, witness stated that the marriageable age amongst the two prominent communities of Bikaner was 12 years for girls and 16 years for boys. He had moved a Bill to that effect in the Legislative Assembly of Bikaner and almost all the non-officials were with him. They had taken up this as a first step in the direction and as many people were agreeable to this age they had chosen it. He was of opinion that any legislation in this direction should be backed up by the people of the country. Though the Bill was for 11 years for marriage yet consummation was generally done at the age of 13. But many Cutchi and Gujarati Hindus and Marwaris performed marriages very early and as soon as the marriage was over the girl was sent to her husband's house and there was no check upon the husband from doing anything he pleased. Cohabitation as a general rule did not take place before the age of 13 but said that there had been cases of pregnancy even at the age of 13 and even below. He informed the Chairman that the amendment of law in 1925 in the Age of Consent Bill was not known to many people and so it had remained inoperative. If any case of seduction or rape was brought to the court it should be tried in camera; that is the girl must be examined at her house only but the accused might be tried before the public court. If vigilant committees and societies were formed in all the places such cases would surely be brought to light. The general age of puberty among the girls of the State of Bikaner was 12 and 13.

PENALISE PARENTS.

In order to put a stop to many of the evils that were prevalent at present witness suggested that the parents of the husband and the girl should be penalised in case consummation takes place before the prescribed age. He added that Hindus generally consider reporting of cases as a faulty thing and allow the crime to go unpunished. The parents should be penalised as the responsibility rests on their shoulders to a very great extent.

Replying to Rai Bahadur Pandit Kanayahlal witness said that outside marriage he would fix the age of the girl at 18. Orthodox Hindus might oppose this measure but the opposition would soon vanish. Now-a-days Ganaai was not so common because the ceremony meant some expenditure and people were not able to meet that expenditure. He recommended that the marital age should be fixed at 14 and consummation should take place at the age of 16.

Answering Khan Bahadur Mahabub Imam Baksh Kadri, witness stated that when a marriageable case came before a court naturally the court would be crowded. If the girl was brought to the court she might feel shy and would state all the facts so even though it was somewhat difficult the magistrate should try the girl at her house only and in no case the police should be allowed to investigate such cases.

Questioned by Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliyar, witness stated that after a continuous agitation for eight years the Bikaner State agreed to this kind of legislation and finally it was almost unanimously passed by elected non-official members of the Legislative Assembly of Bikaner. The Assembly consisted of 18 non-official members and no less than 14 of them voted for the resolution and the remaining four remained neutral. The Government members also voted for the motion. There was very little opposition outside the Assembly as the Bill was discussed threadbare.

When asked whether he would inflict punishment to the husband also for cohabiting with his wife witness stated that if he was above the age of 12 and performed the act he should be penalised.

Replying to Mr. S. C. Mitra witness stated that extra-marital cases also should not be brought to court unless the boys were also punished they would not realise the extent of the injury they were doing to the girls.

In reply to Mr. Thakurdas' question witness said that the number of Marwaris residing in Karachi was 2,000. If "Gana" ceremony took place at all generally it was performed three years after the marriage. He did not know cases where consummation took place before puberty.

When asked whether parents could be made responsible for the act of the son witness replied in the affirmative and stated that sending of the girl to the husband might be penalised.

When asked by Mrs. Brijpal Nehru whether flogging should be given to the boys so that others might not commit the offence, witness replied that in the first instance he might simply be warned and threatened and enforce the law strictly when the offence was committed for a second time.

Replying to Mrs. O'Brien Beadon, witness said that on account of custom early marriages were done. If boys and girls were engaged in education they would be busy with their education but could not think of consummation as they would have no time.

FEELING OF SINDHI WOMEN.

Miss Agnes Khemchand, organizing secretary of the All-India Women's Conference, of Hyderabad Sind in her oral evidence, replying to the Chairman said that she organised five meetings of women in the Province of Sind in various important centres. She always stood for 16 years to be fixed for marriage and 18 years for consummation and in all the women's conferences that were organised resolutions expressing the same view were passed and reaffirmed. There were many ignorant women especially at Sukkur and Shikarpur and to them the implications and the necessity of passing such resolutions were explained and wherever she went she saw ladies giving her a patient hearing and evincing great interest. At Shikarpur nearly 200 women attended the meeting in spite of the short notice. At Sukkur only 20 attended the meeting. At Hyderabad and Karachi the audience was appreciably good being 400 and 300 respectively. She said that the women had been explained that a Bill for raising the age of marriage and consent was contemplated and drafted by Mr. Harbilas Sarda and when it would come for consideration of the public all the women with one voice should support it. She added that if the Sarada Bill was passed the women in Sind would welcome it and accept it. Some people might oppose this Bill but from the educational point of view this Bill would be of great benefit to the women.

If the age of consent was raised she said, there would be no unequal marriages. She saw a few girls continuing their studies in schools and colleges even after their marriage.

Replying to Rai Bahadur Pandit Kanayhlal witness stated that she had experience 18 years in the educational field. Vigilant Societies, Panchayats and also Jamayets amongst Mahomedans would be of great use to put the Bill into operation and there would be sufficient public interest in the country to enlist themselves as members of these societies and work up. Of course at first there would be some opposition in the villages where the people were not sufficiently educated but in towns there would be no difficulty at all. People should be educated and some constructive work should also be undertaken. The age of marriage and consummation should be reported by the parents or guardians of the girl or boy and get it registered in the municipal register and similar work should be done in the villages as well. She thought it better if the Government would appoint Registrars to travel round the country and register marriage and consummation. The parents of the girl and of the husband and also the husband if his age was above 18 should be penalised for any breach of the Bill.

Replying to Khan Bahadur Mahbub Mian Imam, witness stated that the Government which was pleased to pass a Bill for uplifting the women should also see that the vigilant societies do work properly.

When Mr. Mitra enquired whether there was any religious belief among the people of this province that their girls should be married at an early age witness replied in the affirmative and suggested that propaganda work should be carried on vigorously to curb this misapprehension.

In answer to a question of Mr. Thakurdas, witness wanted that the age of marriage and age of consent should be the same in which case the chances of marriage cases coming to a court of law would be less. Early marriages were prevalent in the Bania class in Sind.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Removal of Untouchability:—The following Resolutions were passed unanimously by the 11th Session of the Hindu Maha Sabha held at Jubbulpur in April 1928 under the Presidentship of Shriji N. O. Kelkar M.L.A.:—This Hindu Maha Sabha declares that the so-called untouchables have equal rights with other Hindus to study in public schools, to take water from public wells and other sources of drinking water, to sit with others in public meetings and to walk on public roads. The Maha Sabha calls upon all Hindus to remove such restrictions as may be existing any where at present in the way of the so-called untouchable Hindus exercising these rights. This Maha Sabha declares that the so-called untouchables are fully entitled to have Dev Darshan, and the Maha Sabha calls upon all Hindus in general and all Hindu Sabhas in particular to provide the same facilities for Dev Darshan to them as are enjoyed at present by other Hindus. This Maha Sabha calls upon Purohita [Priests], barbers and washermen to offer their services to the so-called untouchables also. This Hindu Maha Sabha is of opinion that every Hindu to whatever caste he may belong has equal social and political rights. This Maha Sabha appeals to all Municipal Boards to provide healthy quarters to the so-called untouchables specially the sweepers, and directs the local branches of the Hindu Maha Sabha to draw special attention of their Local Boards towards this matter. This Maha Sabha looks upon the practice of nomination of the representatives of the depressed classes by the Government to the Local Bodies, Provincial Councils and the Assembly as most harmful and injurious to the true interests of the country and considers that this practice will become a source of creating a great gulf in the near future between other Hindus and the so-called untouchable classes. In the opinion of the Maha Sabha the right course to stop this practice is to put forward and back proper candidates belonging to the so-called untouchable classes to the elected bodies named above.

Bihari Students' Conference:—The twenty-first session of the Bihari Students' Conference was held at Motihari on Sunday the 4th instant in the premises of the Heycock Academy. But the unavoidable absence of Sadhu Vaswani, the President-elect owing to illness was very keenly felt by those present on the occasion. Besides a good number of visitors more than 500 delegates were present. The proceedings were opened with songs after which Babu Bepin Behari Verma, Chairman of the Reception Committee read out his address in Hindi. In his address he dwelt at large, on the glorious past of Motihari. He advocated removal of untouchability, Hindu Moslem Unity, popularisation of Khaddar and other standing problems of the day. He soberly mentioned the unavoidable absence of Sadhu Vaswani, expressing regret and disappointment at the situation and proposed Babu Rajendra Prasad to the chair. Having been prevented by illness from coming, Sadhu Vaswani had sent his address which Babu Rajendra Prasad the President, read out to the audience.

Training in Social Service:—The Nagpada Neighbourhood House have had the matter of training in Social Service under consideration for some time, and have decided that as a first step in this direction they will hold an intensive training course from Monday, January 7 to Friday February 15, 1929. The course will be conducted in English, and will include daily classes in the Meaning of Social Work; Social Work in the Villages; Public Health and Sanitation; The Conduct of Boys' Clubs; Recreation; Biographies of Social Workers; Child Welfare; the Social Message of Jesus and the Prophets; Practical Sociology; the New Industrialism; and the Villager in the City. There will also be occasional lectures of general interest, visits to social institutions, and opportunity for practical work. Every effort is being made to make the course as practical as possible. The enrollment fee for the six weeks is Rs. 1 only. A limited number of students can be accommodated in the Neighbourhood House Hostel. Candidates who wish to take advantage of the course may apply to Dr. Clifford Manshardt, Ph. D., the Director, Nagpada Neighbourhood House, Byulla, Bombay.

The Daniel Hamilton Prizes:—Four prizes are offered to the best essays on the undermentioned subject:—“How the Co-operative movement, confined with the issue of a Sound Paper Currency based not on gold and silver, but on organised reliable labour and the assets which that labour will create, will provide plenty and employment for all, and unify India.” The four prizes mentioned above are as follows:—1st prize Rs. 500. 2nd prize Rs. 300, 3rd and 4th prizes Rs. 100 each. These prizes are due to the generosity of Sir D. M. Hamilton whose interest in India, especially in the poor of India has been so admirable through a long life of much useful service to our country. The competition is limited to ‘South India’ which includes the Madras Presidency, Mysore, Travancore and Cochin. The prizes will be awarded on the judgment of:—1. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramdoss Pantulu Garu B.A., B.L., Santhone, Madras. 2. T. K. Dorasamy Iyer, Esq., M.A., Prof. of Economics, Presidency College, Madras. 3. Mr. K. T. Paul, B.A., O.B.E., National General Secretary, Y.M.C.A., 5 Russell Street, Calcutta. Candidates should submit their essays by registered post to Mr. K. T. Paul before the 1st of March 1929.

Ladies' Concert at Ahmedabad:—For the first time in the history of Ahmedabad, ladies of respectable and high families appeared on the public stage. The students of the Gujerat Mahila Pathshala, which is a college affiliated to the Indian Women's University, performed a variety concert on the 3rd instant at the Bharat Bhuvan Theatre. The programme consisted of a one act English play, trial scene from Bhadrabhadra, fourth act of Shakuntala, music, garba and folk-song. The students acquitted themselves very well in all they did and the audience, which consisted of the gentry of Ahmedabad, was spell-bound for three hours. Mrs. Sandamini Mehta, B.A., the cultured daughter-in-law of Sir Lalubhai Samaldas said on the occasion “This concert marks a new era in the social advance of Gujerat. This whole show is completely managed by students themselves, including the selling of tickets and securing the theatre and costumes. It has proved the capacity of women in managing things independently.” The students have realised about Rs. 1,400 from the concert, and they have decided to hand over the whole sum to their college, which is badly in need of funds. Thus the concert has proved three things in our young women viz., their capacity to act, their ability to manage and their public spirit.

Adult Education in Turkey:—A Reuter telegram from Constantinople states:—Government has published through the Ministry of Education a scheme of adult education by which twelve thousand specially recruited teachers will teach all men and women of over 46 years of age throughout the country to read and write.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs.	a.	p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0	5	0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0	5	0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0	5	0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0	5	0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0	8	0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0	8	0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0	10	0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0	12	0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1	4	0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1	14	0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2	14	0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2	14	0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3	0	0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4	1	0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4	14	0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4	14	0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6	0	0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
 Royapuram, Madras.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

A Human Document.—By Mr. V. S. Sohoni. The life of a Dhed in Bombay. Reprinted from the Reformer. Price annas 4.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
 THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
 Navsarl Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

RATES
 MODERATE

Premier Swadeshi Emporium

IMPROVED QUALITY

Suitings
 Shirtings
 Dhoters.

IVORY CURIOS
 SILVERWARE
 BRASSWARE
 ENAMELLED
 and INDEGENOUS
 PRODUCTS.

TRAVELLING
 and
 HOUSE HOLD
 REQUISITES
 TABLE LINENS
 and
 BASEL MISSION
 PRODUCTS.

Silks
 Sarrees
 Borders.

V. P. P.
 SERVICE

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
 Cruikshank Road, Fort.

PROMPT ATTENTION

NEW AND IMPORTANT PAMPHLETS.

By Dr. G. S. Arundale, M.A., LL.B.

The fruits of his recent meditations on current questions.
Extremely suggestive and helpful.

A series of Pamphlets are now available at Four Annas each (Postage extra).

1. Krishnaji: Light-Bringer.
2. The Joy of Catastrophe
3. Go Your Own Way
4. Fanaticism—Wholesale and Retail
5. Shadows and Mountains
6. Some Intolerable Tyrannies.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY:

1. The Re-Birth of Hindu Music.—By Rudhyar of Carlos Salzedo, America. A French—American, Composer—Philosopher—Poet, considered as a friend as well as a genius.
 "In his knowledge and sincerity, his strength and his industry, he is the musical peer of many celebrities who has gained real support and attention in our country."—Los Angeles Record.
 Artistic get up. Price: Cloth and Gold, Rs. 5. Double Wrappers, Rs. 3-12.
2. The Gita and Spiritual Life.—By D. S. Sarma, M.A., Prof. Presidency College, Madras, and author of Introduction to Bhagvat-Gita. Price: Boards, Re. 1-8; Wrappers, Re. 1-2.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 ADYAR, MADRAS, INDIA.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland Rs 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
The Indian Social Reformer,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up " 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund " 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,

MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Saramati (District Poona).	Dondaicha (District West Khandesh).
Nira (" ").	Sibirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ... Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

14-6-28.

Managing Director.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :--BARODA.

Branches :--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amrell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwaraka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS :

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. Nawroji B. Saklatwala, C.I.E., (Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay).
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay
 Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 81, Spratt Road, Ballard Estate,

8-11-26.

Bombay.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).

Rs. s. p.

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
 POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
 should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

A. K. JOSHI & Co.Kalbadevi Road, B O M B A Y.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,

The Hindustan Review.

PATNA, E. I. R.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS

(Agencies), Ltd.,

16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
(A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

Fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free.

To every purchaser of our “Luxurette” lever Radium Silvered Pocket Watch, guaranteed for five years, costing Rupees five, we give our fancy 30 hours Time Piece Free. Write now. The radium pocket watch is a fine mechanism and well built and can be seen well in nights without the help of lights. Please order soon.

Price Rs. 5 only.

Address:—SWAN HOUSE,

P. B. No. 508.

P. T. MADRAS.

PAPER!PAPER!!

CHEAPEST HOUSE
FOR
ALL KINDS OF PAPER.

AMERICAN BOND PAPER A SPECIALITY

Ledger Paper, Writing Paper, Printing Paper, Rough Paper, Croft Paper, Brown Paper and all kinds of Paper available at a Very Modest Price. Glazed and unglazed Creamlaid, etc, etc.

ANY COLOUR READY FOR DELIVERY.

Ruby Manila Envelopes—All Current Sizes Available.

Hoogly Printing Inks—All Colours.

Superior Quality! Satisfaction Guaranteed!!

SEND TRIAL ORDER AND SATISFY YOURSELVES.

Apply for Catalogue and quotation to:

G. A. ACHARYA & Co.,

MERCHANTS & AGENTS,

IMPORT & EXPORT,

26, Parsee Bazar Street,

FORT, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :—

Madras Presidency & Mysore :

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions :

ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan :

RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Today at 9-30.

and

Tomorrow at 5-30

"The Quaints"

will present

"THE GIRL FRIEND"

If you are looking for London's Latest Musical Comedy, here it is.

EMPIRE THEATRE

Today and Tomorrow at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15, and 10 P.M.

BUSTER KEATON

in

THE COLLEGE

A super comedy in 6 reels. You must see your most funny star in this picture.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Today and Tomorrow at 6-30, and 10 P.M.

GRAND DOUBLE ATTRACTION

Most Superb Dancing and Vaudeville Show
By the World-Famous Artists

The HARTMANS and STELLA FRENCH

And Also

"A BROADWAY BUTTERFLY"

A beautiful film version of the night-life on Broadway, as never shown before.

Don't Miss this Splendid Double Programme!

EMPRESS CINEMA

Today and Tomorrow at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

HAVOC

in

9 thundering reels, with an all star cast!
Extra show Tomorrow at 10 in the morning.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1928

No. 10

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Simon Commission. The Prohibition Issue. Mr. Sastry's Successor in South Africa. Judicial Murder ? Depressed Classes and the Commission. The All-India Teachers' Federation.	"Red Oleanders". The Age of Consent Committee. Armistice Day 1928. Simon Educational Committee and the Depressed Classes. The Social Reform Calendar. Age of Consent Inquiry. News of the Week.
---	--

NOTES.

The Simon Commission:—The Simon Commission concluded its sittings in Poona last Saturday and left for Lahore on Sunday. It was announced beforehand that the Police had made all arrangements to prevent breaches of the peace when the Commission arrived. Public meetings were prohibited. A part of the road leading to the Lahore Railway Station was barricaded with barbed wire. All the time, the pro-official Anglo-Indian press kept on saying that the boycott was dead and that the Punjab would give a rousing welcome to the Commission. Alas for the vanity of these wishes! A peaceful crowd of several thousands of people led by responsible Indian leaders, like Lala Lajpat Rai, gathered at the barricade, displaying flags and shouting that they did not want the Commission. A European Police official wantonly struck Lala Lajpat Rai and his action was imitated by some of his constables. It has been tried to make out that the blow was not deliberately aimed but fell on Lala Lajpat Rai because he happened to be in the front of the crowd which is said to have thrown stones at the Police. This is categorically denied by Lalaji who asserts that the crowd was perfectly under control and was not in the least aggressive. At a huge meeting of about 15,000 people at which he spoke the same evening Lala Lajpat Rai described the occurrence. He said: "We determined in the morning to carry out our programme without violating any of the conditions laid down in the rules and we did so. We assembled near the Railway Station and finding barbed wire barricades we made no attempt to cross it. We were absolutely peaceful and gave no provocation to the police to attack us, but unprovoked, a police officer said to be the Superintendent of Police in Lahore whose name was afterwards given as Mr. Scots began to strike with lathies. He gave me two blows and two of his constables gave me another two. One of these blows was aimed at my heart, and very near my heart I received a stroke which has caused a bruise sufficiently long and broad." Continuing Lalaji said: "Similar blows were struck at Mr. Raizada Hansraj, whose hand is profusely bleeding even now. Dr. Gopichand, M.L.C., received a blow on the head and a mark on his hand was visible. Dr. Alam, M.L.C., and Dr. Satyapal received blows on their arms which are still paining and I can swear by anything sacred to me that none of these gentlemen did anything which deserved this cowardly treatment from the Police." This unprovoked assault has caused wide-spread resentment, and has undoubtedly greatly added to the difficulties of the Simon Commission.

The Prohibition Issue:—A movement is on foot among British Christian Missionaries to make a strong representation to the Simon Commission against the Excise policy of the Government of India, urging the adoption in the new constitution of an explicit and unequivocal declaration making Prohibition an integral part of Indian policy. It is felt that, in view of the fact, that opposition to Prohibition comes mostly from Europeans and Christians in this country, such a representation from the men who stand for the moral and Christian aspect of British civilization, is necessary to apprise the Commission and the world that the best type of European Christians are entirely at one with Indians in demanding the adoption of Prohibition, in consonance with the precepts of Hinduism and Islam. We need hardly say that we wish the movement success. If there is one thing more than another which has saved the people of India from the fate which has overtaken American Indians, Australian Maoris and other ancient races as the result of contact with Europeans, it is the ancient prohibition against drink, ingrained in their moral fibre. In the hard struggle against aggressive Imperialism before them, they must inevitably collapse if to their many difficulties is added that of alcoholised brains. We, therefore, regard Prohibition as of first importance to Indian Nationalism.

Mr. Sastry's Successor in South Africa:—The Government of India is evidently having considerable difficulty in finding a suitable successor to Mr. Srinivasa Sastry in South Africa. It is understood that the Union Government prefers to have an Indian. The name of Kunvar Maharaj Singh who has been sent on some overseas missions had been mentioned as the most likely choice, but he is an official and for obvious reasons a non-official Indian would be more acceptable to the public. Few non-official Indians in the front ranks of public life, would be willing to expatriate themselves at this juncture, and fewer still have the special qualifications which have made Mr. Sastry's tenure of the Agent's office a brilliant success.

Judicial Murder?—The weekly journal, the Outlook, publishes affidavits purporting to show that Sacco and Vanzetti were not guilty of the hold-up of the cashiers in the motorcar at Bridge-water, Massachusetts on December 24th, 1919, which was followed by the murder of the cashier at South Braintree, for which they were sentenced to death. Vanzetti's alleged guilt in Bridge-water crime according to the Outlook established presumption of guilt in South Braintree crime, both cases being tried by Judge Thayer. The Outlook by laborious investigations in the underworld claims to have established the identity of the Bridge-water robbers, exculpating Sacco and Vanzetti. It publishes the affidavits of persons who admit that they planned and committed the crime. The New York World expresses the universal opinion on what has all the appearance of being a Judicial Murder, when it says in an article appropriately headed "Ghost of Banquo": "The evidence set-forth establishes the overwhelming presumption, that Vanzetti had nothing to do with the Bridge-water case, the implications of which are terrific, for if Vanzetti was not guilty in Bridgewater case, then the theory on which he was tried in South Braintree case lapses and reasons for refusal of clemency in time, when the peoples of civilised world were protesting against the execution seem to be utterly inadequate. This celebrated case rises from the grave and will haunt all connected with it. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts now faces the reckoning. It can no more ignore these findings than it can ignore the Day of Judgement."

Depressed classes and the Commission:—The close connection between the Simon Commission and Government was made clear when at Lahore a deputation of the untouchables headed by Mr. Sunder Singh was refused permission to wait on the Commission on their arrival there. In a memorandum signed by 200 members of the depressed classes of the Punjab, they have declared that separate representation will not solve their problem. "We are sorry to place on record", they say, "that the Government have so far done absolutely nothing in the matter, and more than by the higher caste Hindus, we are being handicapped by the Government at every step." They add that the Government has completely ignored the community during the last 150 years of its existence. They urge the abolition of all "discriminatory legislation such as the Punjab Land Alienation Act of 1900, the enunciation of a policy of abolition of caste, prohibition of Begar, and dissemination of more education among them."

The All-India Teachers' Federation:—Professor P. Sheshadri, the president of the Executive Committee of the All-India Federation of Teachers' Association says in the programme of the fourth session of the All-India Teachers' Federation which is to be held from the 4th to the 6th November at the Cowasjee Jehangir

Hall in Bombay: "Mr. George Arundale, M.A., LL.B., at one time Principal of the Central Hindu College, Benares, and an educationist of considerable experience of Eastern as well as Western conditions, has been elected President of the Conference. We have always believed in the need for increasing the efficiency of the profession by organisations of this kind and a special feature of this year's session will be the large number of papers on educational subjects which will be read before this Conference, followed by a discussion in each case. Elementary and Adult Education, the Education of Defectives, Secondary and University Education are the sections into which the discussions have been grouped and among the papers to be read at the Conference will be the following:—Mr. G. K. Deodhar of the Servants of India Society on Education of the Adult Woman; Dr. G. S. Krishnayya, Ph. D., of the University of Mysore, on Ex-Curricular Activities in Secondary Schools; Prof. D. K. Karve on the Higher Education of Women; Dr. Parker on the Teaching of English in Colleges; and Principal H. R. Hamely on Training Colleges and Educational Research. The occasional meetings of teachers from various parts of India for the discussion of questions of the day, cannot but be of the highest value and it is hoped that every member of the teaching profession who can benefit by these proceedings will make it a point to attend them. There can be no nobler ideal before the teacher than that of advancing his professional efficiency so that he may be of better service to the motherland."

"Red Oleanders": "Playgoer" writes:—Red Oleanders the English Translation of a Bengalee play by Dr. Tagore was presented at the Excelsior by the Shama players on Wednesday evening and it proved a great success. The close attention the audience paid and retained up to the end was a tribute to the quality of the acting no less than to the play itself. The scene is in Yaksha town where the king, a very ambitious man, without any concern for the welfare of his subjects makes them toil for him underground, digging, for gold. Nandini a beautiful, pure-hearted girl is separated from her lover and in her attempt to regain her lover Ranjan she defies and denounces the king, his Governors and the priest. In spite of all her attempts her lover is killed by the king but that killing brings disillusionment to the king, and the subjects resolve to free themselves from the thralldom of their king. The king thus learns the secret of life and the very death of Ranjan proves a sign of victory. Nandini, Chandra, the professor and the Governor were all equally good in their acting. Chandra was typically a labourer's wife and seemed to have a deep understanding of the play. Nandini in spite of the length of her part was at her best throughout and her pathetically beautiful Bengalee songs were exquisite and held the audience spell-bound. Bishu appeared rather to ill-accord with the other players, because his understanding of the spirit of the play was not quite manifest by his acting. The performance on the whole was excellent and if the interest shown yesterday by the public of this city is an index of the appreciation of the eastern stage then the Shama's players have a very bright future before them.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1928.

THE AGE OF CONSENT COMMITTEE.

Though its proceedings were overshadowed to some extent by the Simon Commission whose sittings at Poona synchronised with its sitting in Bombay, the Age of Consent Committee collected a large amount of valuable evidence from representative men and women of the several castes and communities in this Presidency. In fact, the witnesses who appeared before the Committee, both as regards calibre and disinterestedness, were in many cases distinctly superior to those who appeared before the Commission. Whatever may be the nature of the recommendations of the Joshi Committee, it will bring together for the first time a large body of reliable data regarding marriage and allied practices in various parts and among the several communities of the country, which will be of the greatest practical service to social reformers. The tour of the country which the Committee is making and its investigations which are not confined to the examination of witnesses, are in themselves of great educative value on the questions which are comprised in the Committee's terms of reference. In this connection, a special word of appreciation is due to Mrs. Brijlal Nehru who, in all the places visited by the Committee, has made it a regular part of her work as one of its members, to meet women of the locality and explain to them the issues which form the subject of investigation.

There is, as we noted last week, practical unanimity among those who have so far given evidence before the Committee, that as regards strangers the Age of Consent may and should be raised to 18 years which is the age of majority under the civil law for all contractual purposes. There is also a very strong consensus of opinion in favour of limiting the offence of rape to extra-marital relations, and of constituting a separate offence of premature cohabitation in marriage. A considerable body of opinion approves of 16 years as a proper limit to fix for the commencement of sexual relationship among married persons. The women witnesses in particular are strongly against prescribing any lower limit, and their opinion must, of course, carry the greatest weight on a question of this kind. As regards penalties for the infringement of this limit, there is general support to the proposal of the Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association that the maximum should be two years imprisonment. In several cases, a fine will be more appropriate, and in the case of very young husbands, committal to a Reformatory will best meet the needs of the case. Excessive severity of punishment, would alienate public sympathy from the law, as the offenders in this case are mostly actuated by well-meaning though ill-judged ideas as to what is good for their daughters. The need for making provision in the penal law against premature consummation of marriage is a temporary one and will in all probability disappear in about ten years' time, as the growing public sentiment against child marriages brings about their extinction. As regards the tribunal to try these cases, all that is necessary is to provide for the presence on the jury of women numbering not less than one-half of the members.

There remains the question of who is to start investigation in such cases? Ordinary Social Reform or Service organisations, if they take up the duty of initiating prosecutions in such cases, will be hampered in their normal work. A special committee of women, is a more suitable agency. If the existence of such a Committee, recognised by Government, is well-advertised, suffering young women will of their own accord seek help from it. When the Committee is satisfied that there is a prima facie case for investigation—it will be desirable to have a woman lawyer, wherever available, on the Committee, or a male lawyer attached to it as an adviser, wherever women are not available—the matter should be handed over to a responsible Police officer for further investigation. The great thing is to make a beginning at once, and adjust the machinery in the light of experience to the conditions of the work. One of the points forcibly impressed on the Joshi Committee by several witnesses, is that the masses are totally ignorant of the recent change in the law of "age of consent". In the case of ordinary crime such as theft, murder and so on, the moral conscience of the most ignorant citizen provides the necessary sanction for the law, but in the peculiar case of premature consummation of marriage, special measures are necessary to bring a change in the law home to the general public. The peregrinations of the Joshi Committee, as we said, are themselves valuable propaganda. The Indian press is reporting the proceedings of the Committee and discussing the evidence of witnesses from all points of view. When the amending Bill is passed, it will be the duty of Social Reform organizations and publications to bring its provisions to the notice of the public. The awakening among women themselves is a feature of the present situation which will greatly facilitate the work of spreading information relating to marriage legislation.

Education of Indian Girls:—The Maharani of Baroda, interviewed by the Daily Express said the purdah system was a great bar to education. The system was foreign to India, and forced on the country by the Mahomedan conquest, as it was the only way of protecting women from the invaders. Child marriage was another bar to education. A girl was unable to complete her education before she was married,

ARMISTICE DAY 1928.

(By Dr. CLIFFORD MANSHARDT, Ph. D.)

Of all the years since the signing of the armistice, the year 1928 gives us the greatest hope that our dream of a warless world is actually to be realized. By the signing of the Pact of Paris in late August, fifteen nations condemned "recourse to war for the solution of international controversies," and renounced it "as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another." Since that time more than thirty nations have signified their desire to sign, and doubtless others will follow suit. In the words of M. Briand, "For the first time in the face of the whole world through a solemn covenant involving the honour of great nations all of which have behind them a heavy past of political conflict, war is renounced unreservedly as an instrument of national policy; that is to say, in its most specific and dreaded form—selfish and wilful war. Considered of yore as of divine right and having remained in international ethics as an attribute of sovereignty, that form of war becomes at last juridically devoid of what constituted its most serious danger—its legitimacy.

"Henceforth, branded with illegality, it is by mutual accord truly and regularly outlawed so that a culprit would incur the unconditional condemnation and probably the enmity of all the co-signatories. It is a direct blow to the institution of war, even to its very vitals.

"Freed from the old bondage, the nations that have signed the new contract will gradually forsake the habit of associating the idea of national prestige and national interest with the idea of force, and this single psychological fact will not be the least important factor in the evolution that is needed to lead to the regular stabilization of peace."

Such is the hope, but there are still difficulties in the way before the hope can be realised. Certain it is that the pact represents a tremendous advance. If the signatories had but been content to accept the simple, unambiguous language of the two articles the advance would be still more significant. Unfortunately, however, certain of the contracting parties insisted upon adding "interpretative notes", which notes tend to weaken the treaty's value. The British desire to exclude certain regions from the application of the treaty gives promise of considerable trouble, for if one nation is allowed this privilege, then why not others? In time the excluded areas may conceivably cover as much territory as those actually included in the treaty. Moreover, the matter of defensive wars will be a matter for controversy, for who is to decide whether or no a war is defensive? But despite its troublesome reservations, the pact is of high significance for it has challenged the moral conscience of the world, and has strengthened public opinion on behalf of peace.

Grateful for the progress registered, the advocates of world peace must advance. Every influence should be brought to bear to remove the "interpretative notes" and to allow the pact to stand in its dangerous simplicity. Here is one field in which self-seeking diplomacy can well give way to moral idealism. Unless men are actually willing to risk something in life, what joy is there to be found in living? A world-wide anti-war educational campaign among the people would not only compel the political leaders to take notice, but would be a most fitting means of celebrating this Tenth Anniversary of the Armistice. The struggle for peace calls for the same high patriotism that was shown in the war. A united people standing resolutely together marched forward to victory and a united people can once again win victory if they do but will it. To rest upon the achievements of the Paris Pact as it now stands, is nothing but standing still at the strategic moment to advance.

And if all the lovers of peace cannot place their faith in outlawry, then let them follow whatever path they will. Let the believers in the League of Nations and the World Court labour strive for the strengthening of these institutions. Let the advocates of disarmament cease not their agitation, but make their voices heard. Let those who place their faith in education not despair, but let them move forward with new confidence. The day of peace has dawned. May its clear sunlight dispel once and for all the dark, forbidding, clouds of war.

SIMON EDUCATIONAL COMMITTEE AND THE DEPRESSED CLASSES.

(By Mr. P. M. GOPALAKRISHNAN.)

Rev. J. H. Maclean, President of the Madras representative Christian Council, speaking before the Committee under reference on behalf of the Missionary Educational Council of South India with regard to the depressed classes so-called desired that the concessions enjoyed by the Hindu should also be given to Christians who were drawn to the Christian Church in as much as their conversion had not improved their condition. During my twelve years of very close contact with the rural masses, Christians and non-Christians when I was under the Rural Department of the National Council of the Y. M. C. A.'s of India, Burma and Ceylon, and the Danish Missionary Society doing rural development work, I found this to be true and on various occasions, I pointed this out to Government Officers of development departments and heads of local self-Government whom I had to approach for some favour or other on behalf of these unfortunate people. Mr. Maclean hopes however, that after some time, Christians may not need any such special privileges. In my humble opinion, that rural Christians will be capable of making their own way in the world after some time is far too remote a possibility to be seriously taken into account. Thanks to the munificence of the Home Boards of the Foreign Christian Missions much has and is being done for the social, economic uplift and educational advancement of the people. After all, the benefit of these services has touched only a fringe of the numerically increasing Christian masses. Thousands of Christians are groaning under the crushing weight of numerous disabilities, and any heart must bleed when the situation is rightly grasped. Too mighty are the problems for the slender resources of the Foreign Missions to suitably cope with; yet I strongly feel that it is incumbent on the Foreign Missions to do all that they can for all-round advancement of Christians as well as non-Christians who live within their jurisdiction without any reference to their religious inclinations. The Missions realise this, and the National Christian Council through their Provincial Councils are making necessary investigations to recommend to Christian Missions, systematised programme of work for the Gospel of Christ is the Gospel of love and service to humanity at all costs, in a thoroughly unselfish spirit.

Whatever the Foreign Missions may or may not do, Christians should unreservedly and wholeheartedly unite with their non-Christian kinsmen, strive in all possible ways to better themselves, demand from the Government and the public equal privileges. Devout Christian dasas, while boldly and cheerfully proclaiming their faith, can identify themselves with, and work for the uplift of their own community, and actively participate in matters of National importance. They have no option but to do so.

In the Hindu dated 6th October 1928 I find an interesting account of Andhra Christians conference at Muthialpad under the presidency of Rev. G. Phillip. I deeply sympathise with the people there, and their resolutions, and fully support the resolutions though I very much regret the tendency to lay stress more exclusively on seeking advantages to Christians. In these days of national awakening I should be no party to suggest, or expect any preferential treatment for Christians exclusively. Not that I am unaware of the ridicule, cruel indifference, and unfair treatment meted out to Christians by non-Christians in season and out of season, but I believe, Christians directed by their trusted leaders of profound wisdom, undaunted courage, and faith in the Highest, could, in course of time mend matters steadily, but surely. Humanity being what it is, difficulties are bound to be present in a variety of ways. Their spiritual resourcefulness should come to their rescue and enable them to overcome them. Will they work towards achieving the end?

Remedies:—I would suggest some well-tried system of mass and adult education by men and women of real spiritual resourcefulness, the best type of education for boys and girls who are to be the future leaders of our country, and organisations of parents' associations who could learn to take intelligent interest in the all-sided development of the young. The Committee under reference owe this duty of thoroughly exploring into the possibilities along these lines to God, the country of their birth and to this great country India whose larger interests they try to make us believe though not with success, that they are the custodians of. Mr. S. V. Ramamurthi, I.C.S., beautifully put it in one of his addresses on 'Mass Education' sometime ago 'thus of all the activities which we are witnessing in India to-day as the beginning of a new life there is hardly any which holds the key position as mass Education'. Quite so. I hold that the central purpose of the Committee's work should not be narrowed down to 'the survey of the progress of general literacy as to give the Commission an idea of franchise requirements and the fitness for further constitutional responsibility' but to express Mr. Ramamurthi's view in my own way since the nature and extent of literacy for meeting the needs of franchise are too meagre to meet the needs of, or to be of any abiding value to the masses a liberal policy to cover the needs should be advocated. Will this Committee then, prove equal to the task of satisfying the country's needs and demands?

The Social Reform Calendar.

The Editor,

The "Indian Social Reformer".

Sir,

In your issue of the 28th July, you have mentioned that the Bombay Social Reform Association has been popularising the Social Reform movement by the annual celebration of the date of passing the Widow Remarriage Act. That is a very happy idea to keep the Social Reform movement alive. Nowadays when politics is charming away the attention of the people, very little interest is evinced in the cause of Social Reform and the Social Reform movement is suffered to pass into the limbo of oblivion. There is a Social Reform League in Madras that has not been able to do much active work, not because it lacks in energetic workers, but because the public are lethargic and do not show any vivid and lively interest in this matter.

One of the ways of rousing the public interest in Social Reform is to do as Mr. Bhajekar did in Bombay. The date of passing the Widow Remarriage Act may be celebrated. But in addition to this public meetings may be arranged to celebrate other events that have made one step forward in the cause of Social Reform. A Social Reformer's Calendar is necessary for this purpose. May I request you and your numerous readers, through your esteemed columns, to help in preparing such a calendar for the guidance of all the Social Reform Associations?

Nungambakam
Madras.
21st October, 1928.

R. V. SARMA,
Secretary, Hindu Social Reform League.

AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

FURTHER EVIDENCE IN KARACHI.

The Age of Consent Committee held their fifth sitting at Karachi on 3rd October and examined the following six more witnesses:—Seth Haji Abdullah Haroon, M.L.A., Mr. Ayubkhar, R. B. Hiranand Khemsing, Prof. C. A. Buch and two lady doctors, Miss Nunes and Miss Bolton.

KARACHI M. L. A.'S EVIDENCE.

Seth Haji Abdullah Haroon in his oral evidence, replying to the chairman, said that he belonged to the Memon community which had a population of three to four thousand in Karachi. This community was engaged in business, trade and labour. In his community as a rule the girls were not married before the age of sixteen or even eighteen. They attain their puberty at the age of 12 or 13. He denied that there was a religious imposition that the marriages of girls or boys should be done at a particular age. The proposed law for raising the age to 16 would not affect his community. In other Mahomedan communities amongst whom early marriages were prevalent witness believed that there would be a great opposition which need not necessarily result in big riots but there would be a great dissatisfaction. In order to take away this discontent he suggested that vigorous propaganda should be carried on in the villages. When asked whether this would touch the purse of the Government witness stated that if the Government wanted to introduce any new legislation it must be prepared to spend money out of its exchequer for its wide publication and success thereof just as it was spending on so many departments for political purposes. There was no fixed injunction that marriage should be performed at a particular age in Islam and any law fixing the marriageable age at a particular age would not go against the holy Quran.

In answer to the question of Mr. Thakurdas Bhargava as to how far discontent would prevail in his community by passing this bill into law witness replied that it would be only limited to some talk and fade away calmly and quietly. Though the people of Sind were illiterate yet they could count their age. He would fix 16 as the age of consent.

Asked as to which of the following three theories he would recommend:—(1) parents or guardians of the girl should report marital cases (2) Vigilance Societies should find out such cases or (3) the revenue authorities must be on the look-out for these cases and make inquiries. He replied that he would recommend for bringing the culprits to light by the first two theories. Vigilance Societies should be registered bodies. When Mr. S. C. Mitra inquired which sects of the Mahomedans would oppose the bill witness replied that Mullas alone would oppose the Bill. He preferred in camera trial in marital and such other rape cases. He thought 14 years would be the proper age for the marriage of the girl and consummation might take place at 16 or above. In the case of non-marital cases the age suggested by him was 18.

Replying to Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar, witness stated that he did not think that marriages were done before the girl was 14 years of age among the Mussalmans unless a particular family was extremely poor. But he heard of Hindus performing marriages below 12. This custom was prevalent mostly amongst the Bania class.

To Khan Bahadur Mahabub Mian Imam witness stated that educated classes would not at all oppose this bill but some mullas and moultvis might raise a hue and cry but assured that they would be unable to create any rioting or bloodshed. He favoured the idea that marriages should be registered with the municipal authorities.

In reply to Rao Bahadur Pandit Kanayhlal witness stated that under the existing circumstances he would recommend marriageable age to be 14 subject to alteration afterwards. He opined that vigilance societies would turn out great work and be of more use in enforcing this Bill than any penalty imposed upon the culprits. These societies must represent all the communities and must be registered. If they were not registered any decisions that these societies might come to would not be treated "authoritatively" by the public. When asked whether registration of so many societies would not involve hardship and heavy expenditure witness stated that the Government must solve the monetary difficulty and carry on the work ahead. The panchayats that were existing in Sind at present were not initiated by the Government but formed of their own accord. They must also be registered before a work of this kind could be safely entrusted to them. He would lay the burden of reporting the marriages on the shoulders of the parents and priests and such registers should be maintained by the Local Board and municipal authorities but not by the Mukhtarkars and Sireshtadars.

ENGLAND RETURNED ZEMINDAR'S EVIDENCE.

Rao Bahadur Hiranand Khemsing answering the questions of Mrs. O'Brien Beadon stated that marriages were done at the age of 13 or even below and it invariably happened that the child would be of poor physique and the mother a weakling.

To Mrs. Brijlal Nehru witness stated that girls abducted were kept for sometime and sold away to men who could not get wives. These girls were often brought from the hills and the Punjab and disposed off in Sind. He would fix marital age at 18 and 16 in other cases.....In his opinion there would not be much opposition to the passing of the bill. He suggested that seduction and other marital cases should be tried in camera and the cases might be left in the hands of any person who loves equity of justice, but the offence should not be made cognisable.

To a question of Mr. A. Ramswami Mudaliar witness said that amongst orthodox people marriages would be done before the girls attained their age and consummation would take place afterwards. There was no religious ceremony for consummation in Sind. He wanted to keep the punishment for offences committed on girls under 12 years of age as it existed at present but if it was above he would suggest that it should be six months' imprisonment.

Replying to Rai Bahadur Pandit Kanayhlal witness stated that registration of societies would always involve great expenditure and hardship. The voluntary punchayets that were existing in the villages of Sind were settling caste disputes and other things. He was unwilling to make the parents responsible for offences committed by their children and said that cases of seduction and other marital cases should be tried by first class magistrates.

PROF. C. A. BUCH'S EXAMINATION.

In reply to Sir Moropant witness stated that he belonged to the Gujerati community of Karachi, which numbered about the fourth of the total population. The people to which he belonged, were in his opinion more liberal minded socially, than certain interested parties would have them believe.

Replying to Dr. Beadon, witness stated that he had known several cases of very early marriages, when the brides were only ten or eleven, and he also had seen the offsprings from such marriages. Both the mothers and children of such marriages were naturally weak in physique, though he had not found them weak in intelligence. In reply to the Chairman witness said he had made a comprehensive study of this question, and was in a position to say that a great majority of his community were of the opinion that early consummation of marriages resulted in physical degeneration.

Replying to Pt. Bhargava witness said he would much rather prefer legislation against early marriages to that on the age of consent. Let not persons be married early, and the evils of early consummation of marriages will be eradicated. He was not against the present law on the subject, nor was he against the extension of the law in this matter, but he had his serious misgivings about the operation of a law which allowed marriages at any age and prohibited consummation till 16. His misgivings chiefly were that in the first instance, any breaches of this Act in intra-marital cases will be passed over in general silence by the public and the persons concerned, except when it is a case of flagrant injury to the person of the girl wife or when it serves the parents of the girl to raise a feud. The second misgiving was on the score of gratuitous interference of the authorities in matters that are very much private and sacred to some. But the most grave difficulty is about the securing of correct disinterested evidence on the points of these cases. The girls who is the aggrieved party will hardly be a fit witness, where the proving of her case against her husband would mean imprisonment for him, and practical widowhood for her. No husband would think with gratitude of a bride that sent him to jail in such matters. The witness therefore suggested that a preliminary investigation of such cases should be made by a matrimonial court composed of a judiciary assisted by a jury of the girl's own mahajan that the sentences, except when the girl is under 12 or when she is grievously injured, be only of fines ranging from Rs. 250 to Rs. 5000, and that in order to save the girl, from the aftermath of such prosecution she should also be allowed to get divorce by law, cause of the conviction of her husband with long term imprisonment being regarded a sufficient ground for the same. Otherwise the girl that ruined her husband would be tortured to death by her parents-in-law, and she might also be left adrift by the parents.

In reply to Mr. Mitter witness stated that he was in favour of raising the marriage age to sixteen and fixing the intra-marital consummation age also at sixteen. For extra-marital cases he accepted the age of 18 as beginning, but held that it should be raised to 21 gradually. In reply to leading questions witness stated that his recommendation of the age of sixteen would be acceptable even to the orthodox section of the people, because he had not witnessed any opposition to marriages of girls over sixteen which were getting common, and because the Shastraic injunctions of Manu, Ashvalayan, Shusruta and others favoured this age.

Asked by Pt. Kanayhlal if Shusruta was not only a doctor, the witness replied both Shusruta and Charaka were Acharyas.

In reply to Mr. Mudaliar, witness added that he would suggest that the fiction of "Service" in English Tort law (with regard to the complaint in cases of intra-marital infringement) be incorporated for the purposes of the intended legislation. The parents or the natural guardians of the girl including even the family priest may have a complaint in this matter. Witness was against any outsider being a complainant in such cases, though he admitted that no mischief had hitherto been done by the provisions of the existing legislation on the subject.

In reply to Khan Bahadur Kadri, witness begged to be excused for having described the Committee as trying to put the cart before the horse, but said he frankly believed that unless the Committee came to the conclusion that a law against early marriages was enacted along with a law of consent the results would be very disappointing. He at the same time advocated that a law regarding granting of divorce should also be enacted.

In reply to Pundit Kanayhlal witness again reiterated his position that he was against imprisonment as punishment for intra-marital relation with a girl wife who was above 14 and adolescent but had not reached sixteen. He advocated that in cases of serious hurt the prosecution can take the case under section of grievous hurt.

DR. NUNES' EXPERIENCE.

Dr. Miss Nunes. L. M. & S. of Karachi who was examined for purposes of purely medical experience was not subjected to strict examination. In the course of oral evidence she stated that she came across many confinement cases at an early age and consequently the mother lost her strength and the child born to such a woman was a weakling. Among girls of 15 to 16 years many confinement cases occurred.

ANOTHER LADY DOCTOR'S EXPERIENCES.

Doctor Miss Bolton was questioned about her medical experiences in Bihar, North West Frontier and Gwalior State where she worked previous to her coming to Karachi. She stated that in Behar and North West Frontier she came across confinement cases as a rule of mothers who were 16 years old or above. But in Gwalior she found younger mothers. Their children were small and weaklings. Early confinement inevitably spoilt the health of the mother. In her opinion a girl below 16 years of age was not fit to be a mother. Early consummation was the cause of the high infantile mortality and she emphatically asserted that consummation must not take place before 16 years of age.

Replying to Mrs. Brijlal Nehru witness said that during her stay of four years at Gwalior she came across 200 cases of early confinement.

In answer to Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar witness stated labouring classes came to the Gwalior hospital.

A BENCH MAGISTRATE'S EVIDENCE.

Mir Ayub Khan, special magistrate of Karachi replying to the question of the chairman stated that he was practising at the Bar for 20 years before he was given magisterial powers. He belonged to the Baluch community which was the largest community in Karachi having a population of nearly fifty thousand. They were all mostly of labouring classes. He said that marriage customs of Baluchs do not differ materially from that of the other communities except that of Makarani class who practically sell away their girls under 14 years. The price of the girl would depend upon the person to whom it was sold; the amount would sometimes be more than Rs. 500. Generally among the Mohamedans girls attain puberty at about the age of 14. It was only after puberty that they were married. He did not think that the Moslems would object to fixing the age of marriage and penalising marriage under 14. Continuing he said that his community was very strong because they were living on labour and in open air. There was no purdah system in his community and if at all they observe it, it is on rare occasions. He would fix the marriage age at 16 and consent outside marriage at 18.

At their last sitting in Karachi the Committee examined Mr. Lalchand Navalrai, M. L. A., pleader of Larkhana, Mr. D. D. Nanavati, Sessions Judge of Sukkur, Dr. K. Tarabai Punniah, L. C. P. S. and L. M. (Dublin,) Mrs. Tyebji and Mr. Hiralal Narainji. The last named gentleman was asked questions in the vernacular and his replies were also in the vernacular.

SIND M. L. A.'S EVIDENCE.

Mr. Lalchand replying to Mrs. O'Brien Beadon stated that the marriageable age amongst educated classes in Sind who formed $\frac{3}{4}$ of the population was 16. The Bania class who also are about $\frac{1}{4}$ of the population, generally follow the educated classes and the remaining $\frac{1}{4}$ of the population did perform marriages at 11 years in towns. There was no regular consummation ceremony in Sind. But as soon as the marriage was over the girl was taken away to her husband's home. If the girl did not attain her age by that time she was properly kept away from her husband until she attained puberty. The cases of rape by the husband came to light only when there was an injury done to the girl. He saw very few girls of 13 years carrying children in their hands. All such women's vitality would be reduced and their children would be weak and less in weight.

He did not think that boys would become immoral if they were kept unmarried for an year or two after 18.

Replying to Mr. Thakurdas, witness said that he had never known or heard of school going girls being seduced or taken away while going to school nor was there any fear in the minds of the parents that their wards would be enticed away. He was in favour of fixing the marriage age and age of consent at 16. Marriages might be done at 14 years but in no case consummation should take place below 16.

Very few cases of rape had come into light because there were not many such cases. He believed that if the age of consent is raised the punishment ought to be kept as it is and then alone some cases would come to the notice of the public.

To Mr. S. C. Mitra witness stated that seduction and kidnapping of girls was common amongst Mahomedans.

Replying to Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar witness stated that early marriages even in villages were gradually decreasing. People taking part in such marriages were looked down upon.

Answering Khan Bahadur Mahbub Imam witness stated that if all of a sudden the age of marriage was raised from 13 to that of 16 there might be a great opposition. As a compromise he proposed that 14 should be the marriageable age. He did not believe in the registration of marriage amongst Hindus but in the case of Mahomedans it was very essential. But even if such registers were maintained they would not be of any use as the ages given by the parties would not be correct.

In reply to Rai Bahadur P. Kanayhlal witness stated that efforts had been made to make the Panchayets in villages to work on sound lines but to no purpose. The present Panchayet members and the head of the panchayet were found a place in the Panchayet by virtue of their ancestry but they were not elected by the people. If the mukhi or the head of the Panchayet and the members of the Panchayet were elected by the people then the panchayets would work well. In any case the vigilance societies and Panchayets should not be empowered to bring the cases to light. The neighbours and relations may be given the power of initiation in marital cases.

Mr. Nanavati, I. C. S. replying to Mrs. O'Brien Beaden said that early consummation was highly detrimental to the health of the women. In a majority of cases the girls, who were married early, live with their parents till they attain their age which would be at 13 years. But there were recorded instances in hospitals where girls below 13 gave birth to children. These cases would not come to court because there would be nobody willing to prosecute them and give evidence in the court if a prosecution was launched against them.

Replying to Mr. Thakurdas Bhargava witness stated that he would never empower the neighbours or outsiders to bring the non-observance of the bill under contemplation to light. He preferred that this work should be undertaken by vigilance societies and social workers who were under the direct control of the municipalities. In the course of ten years these societies would firmly be established in all the villages. He favoured the registration of marriages.

In reply to a question of Mr. Mitra, he stated that marriages before 14 years of age should be prohibited. At least two years should elapse after the girl attained puberty to improve and develop her body. Personally he would fix age of marriage and age of consent at 16, but in view of the existing circumstances he would like that marriageable age be fixed at 14 for the present, age of consent at 16 and for extra marital cases also the age of 16 was sufficient. He had no objection to marital cases being tried in camera but that should not always be the case.

Replying to Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliar witness stated that the system of levying fines would not have the desired effect. The best way of putting a stop to cases that would come under the category of marital cases was that marriages under certain age should be prohibited.

DR. K. TARABAI'S ORAL EVIDENCE.

Questioned by the President as to her medical experience, Dr. Tarabai said that she was a L.C.P.S. of Bombay and L.M. (Dublin). She was at Poona as a medical student. For two years she was in charge of a maternity home in Karachi as honorary doctor. She had now a maternity home of her own which she was conducting for the last 3½ years. She treated female patients of all communities, mostly Hindus and Musalmans.

Q.—Could you tell us if there are any girl mothers of 13 or 14 or 15 years of age?

A.—I have seen several cases. But I cannot give a percentage of such cases. During the last ten months, i.e., from January 1928 to October 1928 I believe I have not come across mothers of 13 years. But I have had cases of between 14 and 15 years.

Q.—Do you think that such mothers and their children could be strong?

A.—No. I remember two typical cases. One is that of a girl of about 13½ years who gave birth to a still born child after very great labour. Next year she was again pregnant and that time too she gave birth to a still born child under the same circumstances of painful labour. In the third year, she was again pregnant. At that time, she was suffering from anemia and it eventually developed into tuberculosis. The child born for the third time, died a few days afterwards.

In another case the girl was aged 16 and she conceived twice before. During her first delivery she suffered from serious trouble and when she came to me for her third delivery it was a case classed under Cæsarian section. Her children were not healthy. They were almost weaklings. In these two cases the patients are Hindus. The first case came to me in 1925 and the second case occurred during the last year. There was also another interesting case which came to me. The girl was 17 or 16½ years old. She had difficult labour and the Dais mishandled her. The girl was originally of a robust constitution. She became septic and ultimately died.

Q.—With regard to the cases you have treated do you think that the diseases are due to early consummation?

A.—I cannot say that every case is due to early consummation but, generally speaking, on account of the strain at a tender age, at a time when the girl's body was not properly developed, it would often develop into some complications of the womb, lung diseases and general debility.

Q.—Can you tell us of any instance where the children of early mothers are weak?

A.—Yes. I had a case from Bombay. The mother had three children. They were all rickety and one of the babies couldn't stand up and even talk at the age of four. It was a case of early consummation bringing disaster to the children. The girl was twenty when she came to me.

Mrs. Beaden.—Have you seen any case where menstruation was brought upon a girl forcibly?

A.—I had one or two cases before I went to Europe last year. The mother-in-law of the girl brought her who was 12½ years of age. She had not yet attained puberty and she was living with her husband as wife. This girl was a Bhagnari Hindu. In another case I was asked to examine a girl who had not attained her puberty when she was 13 years and I was asked to give some medicine to force puberty on her.

Q.—Do you think these cases are frequent?

A.—In certain communities they are frequent.

Q.—Are venereal diseases among women very common in this place?

A.—They are not very common.

Mr. S. C. Mitra, M. L. A. :—When do the girls attain puberty here?

A.—Local girls generally attain their age at 13 and some of the Punjabi girls attain their age at 15.

Q.—How long does a girl require to develop her body fully after her puberty?

A.—Four or five years should lapse after the girl attains her age.

Q.—What do you propose should be the age of consent?

A.—Sixteen years at the lowest.

Replying to Khan Bahadur Mahbub Imam, Dr. Tarabai stated that she never came across child mothers amongst Muslims. They were not generally married before 16. They are on the whole better developed than the Hindu mothers although mothers and children look pale on account of the Purdah. Early consummation retards the growth of the girl, and would ruin her health.

To Rai Bahadur Pandit Kanayhlal witness said that if medical men and women were ordered to report the ages of girls of tender age becoming mothers, they would do so.

The Chairman requested Dr. Tarabai to furnish some more cases regarding child mothers and the diseases common amongst them.

MRS. TYEBJI'S EVIDENCE.

Mrs. Tyebji, replying to the Chairman referred to her experience of Mahomedan ladies at Hyderabad Deccan. She stated that Mahomedan ladies were for increasing the age to 16. When a conference of ladies was held in Karachi last December every speaker objected against retaining the marriageable age at 14. They supported Sarda Bill with an amendment that age for marriages and consummation should be fixed at 16 and for extra-marital offences 18 years. In Mahomedans the marriages were performed at a fairly advanced age. She saw marriages taking place even at 25 years in Sindh. Very seldom marriages were done at 16 or 18 years. But in Hyderabad Deccan she saw Hindus performing marriages at a very early age. On account of early motherhood the women became very weak and their children were not properly developed. Such mothers would feel much worried in bringing up their children. They often get consumption.

Replying to Mrs. Brijlal Nehru witness stated that she had seen the condition of the girls who were suffering from early motherhood in the hospitals in Hyderabad (Deccan).

CONDITION OF EDUCATED WOMEN IN SIND.

There were different communities in Sind some of which were not properly educated. Till 14 years the girls were sent to municipal schools but after 14 years they were not sent to school because of the Purdah system. The Haji Abdulla Haroon School was helping greatly girls between 14 and 25. The strength of that school was some 300. She had never heard of any opposition to the Bill. Some orthodox people would raise their voice of dissent. On the whole, Hindus as well as Mohomedans she thought were agreeable to raise the age of consent. The amendment of 1925 raising the age of consent to 13 and 14 years was not known to most of the people.

Replying to Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar witness stated 400 ladies attended the conference at Karachi when they passed the resolution that 16 should be the age of consent. Only a few of the delegates came from outside Karachi but even they had consulted their people and had the previous sanction of their locality.

To Rai Bahadur Pandit Kanayhlal witness stated that just as in Limbde State licenses were obtained before a marriage was done, so she recommended that similar measures be adopted in British India too. She was in favour of vigilance societies consisting of men and women being formed in villages and towns to bring to the notice of the public any breach of the law.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A Widow Marriage :—The marriage of Srimathi R. Lakshminarasamma, an inmate of the Victoria Hindu Widows' Home established by the late Rao Bahadur K. Veerasalingam Pantulu, with Sriyuth M. Dhanji Shaw, a Merchant of Guntur, was celebrated in the Ananda Gardens at 5 p.m. on Wednesday the 3rd October. The bride belongs to the Sistikarnam caste and the bridegroom to the Vaisya caste. The marriage was registered by the Registrar of Marriages, Mr. V. P. Raj, B. A., of Cocanada according to the amended Act III of 1872. Mr. V. P. Raj solemnized the occasion by offering a prayer and delivering a sermon. About a hundred and fifty persons attended the function. It was a conspicuous feature that ladies constituted the majority of the visitors. Messrs. Mulpuri Rangayya a doctor of Ellore, Majety Ramashandra Rao, Tallapragada Venkata Siva Ramayya, Vempali Janakayya and a few others came from outside and thus showed their active sympathy for the movement. Mr. Shaw gave a small feast in the night for outsiders and a few select friends that attended the function.

The Grihalaxmi :—Miss P. V. Anandkar and Miss T. N. Tilak have sent us the following announcement :—
“We are glad that we were able to give our voluntary services in the editing of Grihalaxmi, the women's Marathi magazine started in June last year. We resigned from the editorship on September 15th 1928, as it became impossible for us to carry on the growing work along with our other work. As the September number has not been published the subscribers and readers of Grihalaxmi had no chance of knowing about our resignation. That is why we are taking this opportunity of informing those concerned that we are not acting in the editorial capacity for Grihalaxmi any longer.”

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. a. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Ailbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	3 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
 Royapuram, Madras.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer).
 Price annas 8.

A Human Document.—By Mr. V. S. Sohoni. The life of a Dhed in Bombay. Reprinted from the Reformer. Price annas 4.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
 THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
 Navsarl Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

RATES
 MODERATE

Suitings
 Shirtings
 Dhoters.

Premier Swadeshi Emporium

IVORY CURIOS
 SILVERWARE
 BRASSWARE
 ENAMELLED
 and INDEGENOUS
 PRODUCTS.

TRAVELLING
 and
 HOUSE HOLD
 REQUISITES
 TABLE LINENS
 and
 BASEL MISSION
 PRODUCTS.

IMPROVED QUALITY

Silks
 Sarrees
 Borders.

V. P. P.
 SERVICE

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
 Cruikshank Road, Fort.

PROMPT ATTENTION

NEW AND IMPORTANT PAMPHLETS.

By Dr. G. S. Arundale, M.A., LL.B.

The fruits of his recent meditations on current questions.

Extremely suggestive and helpful.

A series of Pamphlets are now available at Four Annas each (Postage extra).

1. Krishnaji: Light-Bringer.
2. The Joy of Catastrophe
3. Go Your Own Way
4. Fanaticism—Wholesale and Retail
5. Shadows and Mountains
6. Some Intolerable Tyrannies.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY:

1. The Re-Birth of Hindu Music.—By Rudhyar of Carlos Salzedo, America. A French—American, Composer—Philosopher—Poet, considered as a friend as well as a genius.
 "In his knowledge and sincerity, his strength and his industry, he is the musical peer of many celebrities who has gained real support and attention in our country."—Los Angeles Record.
 Artistic get up. Price: Cloth and Gold, Rs. 5. Double Wrappers, Rs. 3-22.
2. The Gita and Spiritual Life.—By D. S. Sarma, M.A., Prof. Presidency College, Madras, and author of Introduction to Bhagavat-Gita. Price: Boards, Re. 1-8; Wrappers, Re. 1-2.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 ADYAR, MADRAS, INDIA.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	„ 1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	„ 1,00,00,000

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches:—(1) Mandvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Rehman Street.

Mofussil Branches:—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharia, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Asansol, Chandausi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jaunagar.

London Agents:—The Midland Bank, Ltd.

New York Agents:—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents:—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts:—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

A Male Child.

“I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex”. Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	„ 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	„ 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

“Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application.” The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,

MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ")
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ")
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ")
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals)
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ")
Akluj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh)
Dhulla (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital	...	Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :--BARODA.

Branches :--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwaraka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS :

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda).
 Mr. Nawroji B. Saklatwala, C.I.E., (Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay).
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which, may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karaohi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26

Bombay.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs. a. p.
Subscription (including postage).
Inland ...	5 0 0
Foreign ...	5 8 0
Single copy ...	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
 PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
 THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
 PUBLICATION.
 STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
 Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
 ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
 The Indian Social Reformer,
 Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
 Fort, BOMBAY.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS (Agencies), Ltd.,
 16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	...	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	...	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	...	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	...	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,
 General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
 A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

EYE DISEASES...	... Try "Akhyacura."
RING WORM Try "Kurain."
ASTHMA Try "Asthma Cure."
STRENGTH Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil."
TONICS Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills." "Parrish's Chemical Food." "Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo- phosphites of Lime."
GONORRHOEA Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C. Copaiba Cum Buchu."

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :-

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Today at 9-30.

and

Tomorrow at 5-30

New Banvard London Musical Comedy Company

OH KAY

From the Gaiety Theatre, London.

EMPIRE THEATRE

Today and Tomorrow at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15, and 10 P. M.

A Whirlwind of tempestuous romance with the Screen's Most Dynamic Lovers:—

RONALD COLMAN and VILMA BANKY

in

THE MAGIC FLAME

Come and Live These Exquisite
Moments with YOUR Favourites!

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Today and Tomorrow at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

A DRAMATIC SEA STORY

"SHIPWRECKED"

with

SEENA OWEN AND JOSEPH SCHILDKRAUT

Tense and thrilling, filmed in a raging hurricane off the coast of California—the supreme achievement of marine photoplay production.

EMPRESS CINEMA

Today and Tomorrow at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

BUSTER KEATON

in

"COLLEGE"

Enter!—All ye who love fun!

Special Matinee on Sunday morning at 10 A. M.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1928

No. 11

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

U. S. Presidential Election.	Christian Missions in India.
Dominion Status or Independence.	Random Notes.
Teachers' Conference.	Social Life of the Burmese.
Social Legislation in Mysore.	Women in India.
Influence of Purdah Women.	Age of Consent Inquiry.
Satyagrahshram.	News of the Week.

NOTES.

The U. S. Presidential Election:—The election of President of the United States of America was awaited with anxious interest by social reformers all over the world. The main, almost the sole, issue between the two candidates Mr. Hoover and Mr. Smith was Prohibition. Mr. Hoover is a firm believer in the Prohibition policy and has publicly declared his intention of enforcing it. Mr. Smith was opposed to that policy and if he had been elected he would certainly have done much to undermine it. The overwhelming majority by which Mr. Hoover has been returned, shows that the people of the United States are not going back on Prohibition, and that the chances of their doing so are practically reduced to a minimum. This happy result is a great encouragement to Indian reformers. We referred last week to a movement among British Missionaries to present a memorandum to the Simon Commission in favour of making Prohibition a fundamental law of the new Constitution. The memorandum is a very powerful indictment of the Excise policy of the Government of India which it rightly says is a great barrier to a good understanding between Government and the people. We intend to reproduce it in the Reformer. Owing to lack of time, it has had to be sent to the Commission over the signature of the Rev. J. F. Edwards, editor of the Dnyanodaya, who has thrown himself heart and soul into the movement, but it is expected that many Christian Missionaries will signify to him their acceptance of the memorandum, to be communicated to the Commission. Mr. Edwards' address is Gordon Hall House, Byculla, Bombay.

Dominion Status or Independence:—The All-India Congress Committee which met at Delhi has accepted the Nehru Committee's recommendations, excepting the one relating to Dominion Status for India. The Committee adopted an amendment to the effect that independence without the British Connection is the objective of the Indian political movement. At the United Provinces Muslim Conference held at Cawnpore last week, a curious thing happened. A member had brought in a resolution declaring for independence, which met with opposition at the Conference. While it was being debated, the women who were attending behind a Purdah sent a written statement to the President to the effect that if the men did not pass the independence resolution, they (the women) would come out of the purdah and fight for it. When the President read this out to the Conference, all opposition banished and the independence resolution was passed unanimously. It would be wrong to attach undue importance to this incident, but it undoubtedly shows that the idea of independence appeals to the mass of people and is more intelligible to them than that of Dominion Status. The better informed section of the public have, therefore, a difficult task in standing by the British Connection. Unless a large measure of Dominion status is granted without delay, so that the people may learn by practical experience that it is quite possible to have the substance of self-government without the shadow of independence, the idea that the severance of the British connection is the only way of gaining self-government is bound to grow and extend in the country. The British Government is largely responsible for this new development. If they had not excluded Indians from the Statutory Commission, the Liberals would not have boycotted it, and without the Liberals the boycott would not have succeeded. Not a single man who views the Indian problem from a broad, non-communal point of view has as yet appeared to give evidence before the Committee.

Teachers' Conference:—The All-India Teachers' Federation was inaugurated at Cawnpore in Christmas Week in 1925 with the following aims: To study educational problems with special reference to Indian conditions; to work for the adequate realisation of the educational needs of India; to co-ordinate the working of the various teachers' association in the country; to safeguard and advance the interests of the teaching profession in India and to secure for it its legitimate place in national life; To act as a vehicle of representation at International Teachers' Conferences. A very successful session of the Federation was held at Patna in 1926 and another at Calcutta in 1927 and it was believed that even greater success would attend the Fourth Session which was held in Bombay last week. In his presidential address Mr. George Arundale dwelt on the fact that the ideal of education was not to produce uniformity but to inspire the pupils. He said in the course of his speech:—"I demand that the teacher, therefore, shall avoid the word "ought" to the utmost of his power. Let him have a sense of "duty" if he must, though I think I would rather he didn't. Let him be his own example, and leave it at that. Coercion is the absolute negation of education, as is punishment, as are orders. In other words, I leave to the thoughtful the duty of recognising the truth that order and freedom are complementary terms. A teacher who has to fall back upon the crutches of authority, of whatever kind, for the effectiveness of his teaching is, to my mind no teacher at all. He may be a hammer. He may be a straight waistcoat. He may be a prison-warder. He is not a teacher."

Social Legislation in Mysore:—The Mysore Representative Assembly has passed a resolution that "with a view to encourage and legalise widow marriages among Hindus and to afford legal protection to Hindu widows choosing to remarry, the provision contained in the British Indian Widow Marriage Act 1856 be introduced in Mysore with suitable modifications." In moving the motion Mr. K. T. Bashyam pointed out that the existing law in Mysore was uncertain as there was no guarantee that the offspring of a remarried couple would be considered legitimate, and that it was necessary to give legal sanction to such marriages. It was opposed on the grounds that "widow-marriage was a mere fad of a few so-called social reformers" that the British Indian Act was passed before the Queen's proclamation which laid down the policy of religious neutrality and that the Mysore Government should not interfere with time honoured custom. The Legal Remembrancer stated that it was merely permissive legislation. The Chairman took the sense of the Assembly which was in favour of the proposed legislation. Widow-remarriage legislation has been long overdue in the Indian States and we hope that the example of Mysore will soon be followed by other States.

Influence of Purdah Women:—A correspondent writes: The account of last Tuesday's proceedings of the United Provinces All Parties, Muslim Conference describes how a party of purdah ladies who were silent witnesses in the gallery threatened to come out of the purdah and pass the resolution for complete independence if the men had not the courage to do so. This had a magical effect and the resolution was forthwith adopted by the conference. Several interesting facts emerge from this amusing episode. First and foremost it bears testimony to the immense influence wielded by the Indian Muslim women who have been the object of much unsolicited pity for their christ-like virtues of meekness and mildness. It gives the lie to the argument that the women are opposed to the removal of the purdah. On the contrary, judging from the result of the threat one cannot help coming to the conclusion that the Muslim men are keener on the perpetuation of the purdah system on their women than the latter. With such people the preservation of the purdah is of greater importance than India's political goal. It is up to such conferences to pass resolutions declaring India's political future as dependence or complete independence without a qualm about the grave issues involved. Luckily people know what value to attach to these resolutions.

Satyagrahashram:—There have been reports in the newspapers regarding radical changes in the Satyagrahashram at Sabrmati, including a change of the new famous name. With reference to these, Mahatma Gandhi writes in the current number of Young India: The constitution of the Ashram has not suffered any vital change except in its name. The reported change about brahmacharya for which I have received from some quarters undeserved congratulations and for which anxious friends have shown nervous concern was never made. The other reported change relates to the introduction of spices in the Ashram. In the beginning, the Ashram had only one joint board when the food was prepared without spices. Later when many families joined the Ashram separate kitchens were set up for them and they were free to use spices. But it was decided some months ago to revert to the joint kitchen. We tried for some time to do without spices but as I held the joint kitchen to be an important thing for corporate life and as many, if they had separate kitchens, would revert to spices, it was decided to have two varieties of food in the joint kitchen, spiced and unspiced. We want to give all the assistance and freedom the womenfolk need. Many of them have come to the Ashram because they are the wives of their husbands. They have not yet been able to argue out all the pros and cons of everything they do. The real change in my opinion is the change in the name. It has caused the original founders of the Ashram many an anxious night. We claim to be votaries of unadulterated truth and so new possibilities of the definitions of fundamental truths have dawned upon us. The name Satyagraha Ashram was adopted deliberately and with the intention of giving the fullest effect to its meaning. But the progressive realisation of the meaning of the name made us conscious of our unworthiness to bear it. And so we resolved upon voluntary self-suppression and we chose a name in keeping with the evolution of the corporate life at the Ashram. If the Ashram has done nothing else, it has at least demonstrated the necessity and usefulness of labour undertaken not for self only but for the whole nation. Therefore the name Udyoga Mandir, I felt, more answered our present evolution than Satyagrah Ashram. The co-workers accepted the suggestion though not without considerable hesitation.

(Continued from the Leader page).

Christianity—the church organisation which goes by that name. What she has done is to take Jesus and the organisation apart, and, while absorbing the former into her religious consciousness, has utilised the latter for lessons, which she sorely needs in organisation for social work. It is thus that organised social service is largely the outcome of the fear and the example of Christian missions. We do not think, that as Mr. Smith does, that an Indian Christianity will ever arise from the ashes of the old religions. What is happening is that the old religions are gaining a new life from contact with the teachings of Jesus Christ. The religion of ancient Greece succumbed to Christianity because it had lost its hold on the people even before it came in contact with Christianity. This is not the case with the Indian religions.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1928.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN INDIA.

"The Indirect Effects of Christian Missions in India" is the subject of an essay by Mr. Robert Smith Wilson who claims to speak with the experience of one who has been both a business man and a Christian Missionary in this country for several years. By "indirect effects" Mr. Wilson probably means unintended. The direct aim of Christian Missions is to convert Indians to Christianity. All their measures are conceived in some relation near or remote to this end. So far as this is concerned, Mr. Smith holds that Christian Missions and, indeed, Christianity in India have been a ghastly failure. "India", he writes, "has known Christianity for perhaps 1,500 years. The Syrian Churches have been established in Southern India—in Travancore and Cochin—for all these long centuries. In many parts of India what is now the Roman Catholic Church have had two or more centuries of established life in well-defined sections of the country. Considering the length of time, the vitality of our religion, and the quality of the Indian peoples, one would have expected Christianity to have spread over the country like a prairie fire. Instead of which, after fifteen centuries of residence in this country, some one and a half per cent. of the population is Christian." He further calls attention to the fact that the increase of the Christian community at the present day is recorded largely, not in those areas where the Church has been well established for many generations, but almost entirely in those districts where missionary work is of very recent history. The denominations which have the largest number of Indian members show also the lowest rate of increase. Mr. Smith more than once expresses surprise that the Indian Christian community seems to be quite content to leave the vast masses of their countrymen in the profession and practice of their own ancestral religions. As a matter of fact, the Indian Christian community is rather jealous of the foreign missionaries' endeavours to add to its number, and is inclined to grumble that it is not meet to cast the children's bread to strangers outside the gate. The ambition of the Indian Christian Community, which is held in check to a certain extent by the foreign missions, is to settle down like the Syrian Christians, the Jews and the Parsis into a stable and close body with clearly defined boundaries. To a large extent this attitude of mind is forced on Indian Christians by their origin and surroundings. They do not have the white skin and influence which goes with it, though to a decreasing degree, in a land where white men still enjoy several privileges of a ruling race. The defect of Mr. Smith's essay is that he makes no allowances for the inherent difficulties of the Indian Christian as well as for the foreign missionary, and expects them to achieve a spiritual and social re-birth which may be possible in the case of individuals but is impossible for a whole community or class. Neither does he pay due regard to the changed and changing conditions which affect the entire Indian population and not only Christians or Christian Missionaries. Many of his criticisms, therefore, appear to be carping, such as his gibe at the Missionary for preferring a motor car to the old bullock cart and at the Indian Christian for speaking English. Hindu sanyasis use motor cars and address audiences in English, without detriment to their vocation! No. The fault is not with motor cars or the English language. It is the essential and fundamental mistake of trying to "convert" people. The message of Jesus Christ whenever and wherever delivered without ulterior objects and simply as a message, has been welcomed everywhere with open minds and grateful hearts. In proselytising Missions, the religious purpose is overlaid with many secular purposes, personal, economic, and even political.

The "indirect" effects of Christian Missions, which lay outside the line of proselytising, are, therefore, of more importance and interest. We may sum them up in a single sentence, India has accepted Christ but has rejected Christianity. By "accepted" we do not mean accepted as the sole and final spiritual and moral Teacher of humanity. Such a conception is entirely foreign to Indian ideas. After all, even among educated Europeans few nowadays believe that Jesus has said the last word in religion. Lord Ronaldshay in his life of Lord Curzon, one of the finest flowers of Oxford culture, quotes a remarkable passage from a letter written by the latter to a lady who had lost her son. "The only thing in which we firmly and finally believe", he says "is not in each other, nor in Christ, nor in Christianity nor religion, nor philosophy, but in the God that is somewhere behind them all." The common thing in all religions that appeals to all of us, Lord Curzon goes on to observe, is the existence of an all-pervading, all-powerful, spirit (for want of a better word) which must have created the Universe and had a purpose in creating it. He concludes that to such a conception, all creeds, dogmas, and formulas are subordinate. "Jesus Christ takes his place alongside of Buddha as the preacher of a rare and sublimated ethics and as the type of a perfect humanity." Educated Indians will subscribe to every word of these sentences. It is in this sense that India has accepted Jesus Christ. It is in the same spirit that she has rejected

(Continued in the next column of next page)

RANDOM NOTES.

(By MR. S. M. KAIKANI, BAR.-AT-LAW.)

Your readers would be interested to know that on Saturday last a dinner was given in Dharwar by Mr. Sheik, the Assistant Judge here. The function took place in the Kosmos Club and about forty gentlemen took part in it. These gentlemen belonged to different religions and castes. The host himself is a Mussalman. He joined the party with one more co-religionist of his. There were besides a Parsi gentleman, two Christians, and Hindus belonging to the different castes like Prabhus, Saraswats, Lingaits, Reddis and more than a dozen of Vaishnav Brahmans, the most orthodox community in this part. The dinner was of a Hindu vegetarian nature and it was served on plaintain leaves, all the gentlemen sitting on 'pats' in rows. The sight was really a unique one.

Such dinners have become common in Dharwar lately.

As regards untouchability it is not Hindus alone that have this custom. The Mussalmans also observe it, though not in that strict and foolish way. A strict Mussalman would not drink water out of the hands of a Hindu. And the generality of Mussalmans would be very particular to see that the clothes that they wore at the time of their prayers are not touched, when dry, by a non-Mussalman. The Bohra priest would not engage a non-Mussalman washerman and if perforce he has to engage him then the priest would again dip the clothes washed and ironed by such washerman in 'Mussalman' water and dry them and then wear them.

As regards Hindu untouchability it is not the 'untouchable classes' alone that are such. A Brahmin lady would not touch a Prabhu or Saraswat lady. In 'Halad-kunku' ceremony when kunku, the vermilion is to be applied to the forehead of all ladies, the Brahmin lady would not apply it to these 'untouchable' ladies but keep the vessel on the floor for such ladies to take it and apply it on their forehead.

Barbers do not shave the 'untouchables' and in some parts they do not shave men belonging to the 'dancing girl' communities.

As regards untouchability between the 'untouchables' themselves you must be remembering the meeting of the Depressed Class Mission in the University Hall when H. H. the Gaekwar presided some time about 1905 or so. The mahars and mangs would not sit together in the same hall.

SOCIAL LIFE OF THE BURMESE.

(By MR. B. K. PARADKAR.)

The Burmese people belong to the Indo-Burman stock. They recognise individual liberty, social and universal fraternity. They lead a joyous and happy-go-lucky existence, free and careless as the birds of the air. The Burmese girls enjoy a measure of freedom which their European sisters also envy. The runaway marriages are very common here. The Burmese couple can easily prove their marriage in court by openly living together as husband and wife. They can divorce each other by mutual consent. Marriage is not a religious ceremony among the Burmese. With them the marriage is purely a worldly business, like entering into partnership. Most of the Burmese marriages are done in secret without any show of pomp or display. Two or three friends will be called quietly to the house and the man and woman will eat together and thus become husband and wife. The name of the girl does not change even after her betrothal. There is nothing to a stranger to ascertain whether she be married or not or whose wife she is. A Burman girl is free to marry any youth of any nationality, if there be good love between the two. She can divorce him if there be any reason to do so and this she can do by going to the elder of the village and putting before him her grievances. If her complaints are just, they are never refused. A married Burman woman is more free and independent than any European lady even in the most advanced states.

She keeps her property as her own. Marriage does not confer upon husband any right or title over his wife's property either. What she gets as dowry or what she earns or inherits subsequently all remain her own. But nominally the property acquired after the marriage is held jointly. All the money and possession which she brings with her on marriage are kept carefully separate for the benefit of her children or heirs and she carries her property away with her if she is divorced, besides anything she may have added to it in the interim by her own trading or by inheritance. With the Hindus marriage means to a girl an utter breaking of her old ties, the beginning of a new life, of a new responsibility. Not so with a Burmese girl. She is still true to herself enjoying the same rights, liberty and privileges that she used to enjoy before. Love is a very serious matter with average Burmese girls. They are not trained in self-restraint. They are very impulsive, full of passions and eccentric. They are very fond of luxurious and pompous life. Every Burman house is a miniature form of nicely decorated garden, well arranged and fully furnished with screens, furniture, etc. They are very fond of flowers which they fix in their hair. Looking at their sense of decoration one is apt to remember the stories of fairy tales. But like nature, when angry they are fiercer than even the worst thunderbolt. There are very many romances played out every day in the dusk beside the well, in the deep shadow of the palm groves, in the luminous nights by the river side, romances that end sometimes in terrible tragedies. Social differences are not so great as with others and the barrier is easily overcome. It is often heard that a fair damsel of a rich aristocratic family is permitted to marry an ordinary servant of the family, if there be a fair share of love between the two. A woman here has something of the passion of a man. The Burmese girls would involve all men, all earth and heaven into bottomless chaos to save one heart whom they love. That is their religion.

Nothing is further from the Burmese than the feeling of exclusiveness which we possess. When we have made a little money we keep it to be a nest egg to make more from. Not so a Burman. He will spend it. He does not care to add field or coin. The mere fact he has money causes him no pleasure. Money is worth to him what it buys. Riches have no attraction for him; when his patch of paddy land has been reaped, his only concern is how to pass the time; and that is no very difficult matter when he has plenty of cheroots and betelnuts. He prefers remaining free and poor, to being bound and rich. The Burmese give in charity far more in proportion to their wealth than any other people. It is all given straight from the giver's heart. When he does make a large sum of money he spends it all in some pious work and rejoices in the thought that this will meet with its reward in the next world. "Eat, drink and be merry" is the maxim of this race. There are innumerable rest-houses and monasteries in Burma. You cannot go five miles along any road without finding them. They are free to all. Any stranger may walk into the monastery and have his shelter there.

According to the faith of the race every Burman is to become a monk once in his life-time. He must wear yellow garments, shave his head, give up all possible connection with money and women, and lead the austere life of a Brahmachari begging his food from door to door. Females too often adopt such disciplinary religious life. Now-a-days many of these Ponghies (as the Burmese apply this term to their monks) are an idle class of people who are not following the strict dictum of their monkhood. In every Burmese dance or cinema there would be seen invariably a large attendance from this class of people.

Burmese views are always somewhat limited. They are too penny wise and pound foolish for big business. The small retail trade giving a penny here and there just suits them and they have almost made it a close profession. Most of the retail dealers here are Burmese girls and women, decent and fresh in their white jackets with flowers in their hair. The stonk for sale is at many places intended more as an excuse for people to enter the shop and have a talk than with the real idea of making any real profit out of it. They are very sweet in their talk with their customers and show him their goods even if he shows them no inclination to buy. They are more intelligent and businesslike than their males in this respect. All Burmese ladies are adepts at rolling cheroots. Both sexes are proud of the length of their hair and it is not uncommon to see it reaching below their knee and down to the ankles. Both men and women are in the habit of adding to its size by interweaving false tresses. Now-a-days in many Burmese families both male and female crop their hair in the most up-to-date western fashion.

A remarkable trait of the Burmese character is their unwillingness to interfere in other people's affair. One might commit suicide in Burma and no one would stop him. It is his own look-out they would say. If he wants to die why should we prevent him? What business is it of ours? Suppose any man drifts down from Bhamo to Rangoon in a log. I am sure no Burma boatman would try to pick him up unless he calls for help. If a similar case would have appeared in India, he would have been forcibly saved every mile of his journey. The Burmese boatman would only laugh at him and ask him humorously how he is getting on. Whereas the Indian boatman would have him out in a boat, saving him despite himself. Never believe for a moment that this is cold-heartedness. Nowhere is there any man so good-hearted as a Burman, so ready to help, so hospitable, so charitable both in act and thought. It is only that he has a different way of looking at these things from what we have. The Burmese are fond of life and full of life. They are accustomed to take every sort of animal food. Nevertheless their compassion towards animals goes very much further than a mere reluctance to kill them. His refusal to take life he shares with the Hindus. His perpetual care and tenderness to all living creatures is all his own. There are men here like in India who make a regular living by catching birds and selling them to the pious that they may gain merit by setting them free. Crafty bird-catchers are able so far to disable the bird without doing it any material or visible harm that they can catch it again immediately after their tender-hearted customer has gone his way.

The staple article of food is plain boiled rice which is piled up in a heap on a huge platter round about which the household arrange themselves, sitting like pitmen on their heels. The curry which is taken with it is placed in little bowls and one of the party has his own plate and helps himself. Instead of spoons they use sticks in their meals. After meals everyone smokes,—men, women and children.

A Burman cannot have more than one wife. The daughter has got equal right with her brother for the ancestral property. The Burmese really recognise universal brotherhood. Their religion, women and themselves are free. There is no dark place in their life where the light cannot reach. They are very fond of dancing. Burma dance here is very famous. There is no nation on the face of the earth so mad after these dances as the Burmans. Their sense of humour is in no way wanting.

The country is full of pagodas (the Burmese temples). They are always full of people with fine dresses, kneeling, saying over and over again the great precepts of their faith, trying to bring into their hearts the meaning of the teaching of the Lord Buddha of whom these wonderful pagodas form shrines.

The violent crimes are very frequent here. It is very difficult to get proper evidence in criminal cases because the witnesses do not desire to interfere with another person's karma.

Water festival is a well-known annual celebration in Burma. It marks the epoch of the Burmese New Year and commences generally here by the first or second week of April and lasts for three days. The festival resembles very much our Hindu festival Holi in which young boys and girls join freely in throwing water on one another. It has got also a religious significance attached to it, because thousands of people go to the pagodas and pour water at the feet of the image of Lord Buddha.

Burmese as a race are very fond of music. Ninety-nine per cent of the people know music. They have numerous musical accessories. You will not find a single boy or girl who does not know how to dance. The Burmese dances are mostly public and are attended always by a large number of ladies and gentlemen. These dances are exceedingly beautiful and show wonderful skill of the different curvatures of the body, hands and eyes.

Burma radiant with the lustre of the religion of the Lord Buddha, lavishly endowed by nature with resources of various kinds, having a climate equatable and salubrious, appears, as it were, to attract those who have never been here before, to enchant those who come here to remain in it longer.

In short the Burmese, like other people, have some virtues and vices but the present wave of western influence is making them forget some of the charms of their social life.

WOMEN IN INDIA.

The Right Hon. V. S. Sastri was the speaker at the monthly luncheon of the local Goodwill Club, held in Johannesburg, in St. James' Restaurant. Mrs. Rheinallt Jones presided and briefly introduced the speaker. The position of women in India and in any other country, said Mr. Sastri, and the quality of social service they were able to do depended upon their intellectual and their spiritual outlook, upon their equipment and on the facilities for such work. The women of India were still for the most part under the influence of old world ideas. Woman was still the domestic drudge, the bearer of children and the keeper of the home. Marriage was not only the ordinary destiny of woman, but was obligatory upon all. There was no class in India corresponding to the "old maids" of the Western world. Every woman must be disposed of by her parents, she never disposes of herself because of the system of early marriage. She must marry as soon as possible and bear children, and therefore her opportunities for social service were limited.

Education was exceedingly lacking, and in many parts of the country there were no schools for girls and co-education was not looked upon with favour. At a tender age it was thought that men and women were best kept apart. Out of every hundred women in India only four or five were literate. It would be a mistake, however, to suppose that because they were illiterate they were not intelligent or were without the elements of culture. Indian society for centuries has been permeated with a degree of refinement and civilisation, and it was therefore impossible for women to be without culture, even though it was not through the medium of letters. For the purpose of bringing up children and for social service women were largely ineffectual unless there was a widespread system of education. Education was now being made compulsory—first for boys, but it would not be long before it was so for girls. The Indian population had 16,00,00,000 women and if only 5 per cent. were educated it was not a large aggregate. These educated women formed the salt of the Indian earth; and their lead was being followed up eagerly. There were few mothers who did not wish for more education for their daughters than they had received, and they were justified in all looking for an early result. Many women in the large cities were receiving not only elementary but higher education. In Calcutta and Bombay there were special colleges for women, and in Madras there were two staffed entirely by women, where the examination results compared very favourably with those of men's colleges. A large number of women were preparing for teachers in the Normal Colleges. There was a large output of doctors. There was a barrister in Bombay, and another in Calcutta and several B.L. graduates. By the last mail, he had received news that a judge of the High Court in Madras had received a petition to enrol his own daughter. Women were rapidly coming into their own.

There was a saying in India that woman could not look after herself. In her childhood she was looked after by her father, in youth by her husband and in old age by her son. This was an extreme statement. Man might try to keep woman down, but in practice this did not succeed. In India women exercise great power in the home, but power ought to go along with preparation for it, and many women with the responsibility were ill-equipped to bear it. No household in India was allowed to be without a wife, and in some Indian languages house and wife were the same word.

In public institutions during the past 10 years, women had held more offices, and there was hardly a municipality without one or two members. They served on hospital committees and quite recently on Legislative Councils. They had equal franchise with men, and were allowed in all legislative bodies, and he believed their policy would in time be felt. In Madras the Deputy President of the Legislative Council was a woman, and she had used the opportunity to introduce two or three Bills which would transform society—one empowering an inquiry into the marriage laws which permitted marriage at 12 years. As things were, the laws made too much of a drudge of the woman and the results were seen in a physical degeneracy. Lastly, the speaker touched on the part women were taking in all social activities. In Bombay, where women were educated liberally, they took part in the relief expeditions in famine-stricken areas, and in the case of a famine in Sind, where the toll of life had been especially heavy, 50 per cent. of the workers had been women, and it had been headed by a woman, the widow of an eminent man.

“I cannot,” said the speaker in conclusion, “see any progress where there is a gulf fixed between the activities of man and woman.”

THE AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

EVIDENCE AT DELHI.

The enlarged Age of Consent Committee reassembled in New Delhi Secretariat on the 8th October and examined three witnesses.

Lieutenant Kunwar Jamshed Alikhan M.L.C. (U.P.) and Honorary Special Magistrate, Beghat, in his reply to questionnaire pointed out that the amendment of the Act in 1925 had practically failed to make the law more effective. Extension of age of consent was decidedly desirable. Islam did not either favour or prohibit early marriages but prescribed the penalty for early consummation to the extent of injury sustained by the girl. Witness suggested fifteen years as age of consummation for girls but in extra-marital cases it must be prolonged to eighteen years. The Quran appointed no age of marriage for its followers. Indian Musalmans, declared Kunwar Jamshed, would fight tooth and nail against any such legislation. Proceeding witness asserted if early marriage was to be penalised simply because it led to rapes or physical and intellectual degradation, he could say that marriage itself ought to be penalised because it led to excessive indulgence which ruined health.

NEED FOR PROPAGANDA.

Replying to Sir Moropant Joshi, witness urged legislation without fixing the age for marriage be so brought as to preclude possibility of a girl giving birth to a child before the age of seventeen. The need for social reform, propaganda, registration of marriages and of having licentiate priests are absolute and he favoured the idea of Government undertaking propaganda work through health officers, district officials, and tehsildars downwards. Witness admitted to Moulvi Mohammad Yakub that there was a general tendency among Musalmans to raise age of marriage. Asked if enactment of law in 1925 fixing marriageable age at thirteen interfered with Moslem law, Kunwar Jamshed replied in affirmative, but he said he did not raise any objection when bills were circulated for opinion.

S. C. Mitra: Is it a fact that marriage among Hindus is considered a sacrament while marriage among Musalmans is a mere contract?

Witness: Yes.

Mrs. Brijlal Nehru wanted to know if he opposed fixing age of marriage and favoured fixing age of consent on religious grounds.

Witness: I have consulted Ulemas and Moulvis only on the second point.

A NOVEL METHOD.

A novel method of dealing with questions of ages of consent and marriage was advocated by Mr. Sudharsi Lal Jaini, President, Jain Sabha, Aligarh U P., who urged establishment of local Panchayats authorised by law which should be empowered with the sole discretion to do as they liked in each individual case. He did not want any legislation. His reasons were that there should be no uniform law for all girls healthy and sick, strong and weak. Witness told the Committee that in his community marriage of a girl took place before the age of twelve. There were many widows among them whose age was below ten. He quoted a Sanskrit medical authority to prove that a girl attained the age of puberty in her twelfth year. If she was not married at that age, there was danger of her falling into evil ways.

WITNESS METAMORPHOSED.

Witness however was metamorphosed by clever legal cross-examination of Mr. Bhargava and rapidly changed his views which made his statements self-contradictory. He would agree to Sarda's Bill which enjoined marriageable age for girls and boys at fourteen and eighteen respectively. He would approve of marriage of girls at age of fourteen, consummation at fifteen and motherhood at sixteen.

Mr. Bhargava: But you cannot provide for motherhood.

Witness: Oh, yes, yes, yes.

Questioned by Mr. S. C. Mitra witness stated he would not stand any distinction between marital and non-marital cases.

Earlier in the day the Committee recorded evidence of Mr. Shiv Dat Pandey representing Sanatan Dharma Sabha, Meerut City. Mr. Pandey suggested marriageable age at thirteen, age of consent fourteen within marriage and sixteen outside marriage. Although cross-examined for a long time witness could not stand test of cross-examination at hands of Moulvi Muhammad Yakub, Messrs. Bhargava and Mudaliar.

The Age of Consent Committee recorded the oral evidence of three important witnesses on the 9th.

MR. K. C. ROY.

After a brief recapitulation of the legislative history of the reforms connected with the age of consent, Mr. K. C. Roy had suggested in his written statement that the age of consent should be raised to 16 within marriage and 18 in extra-marital cases. If the minimum age of marriage could be fixed by legislation, it would certainly be more effective than penal legislation fixing a higher age of consent. But Mr. Roy feared that at present public opinion was against Mr. Sarda's Bill, though he was in favour of it in an amended form. Personally he would prefer reform to legislation, but he did not agree with the view that the State had no right to interfere in social reform problems. There, however, were in the affairs of families and individuals certain natural rights which the State should not overrule. But the practice of early marriage and kidnapping of children for immoral purposes was so great an evil in India and did so much harm to the progress of the country that drastic measures might be necessary, and he thought that the time had come to have recourse to penal law. If Mr. Sarda's Bill could become law it would be the first effective step towards the physical regeneration of the country. It could hardly be denied that the practice of early marriage, of early consummation of marriage and of early child-bearing was common among the people. From the medical, physiological, and economic points of view, these were vicious practices. Consequently, whatever was calculated to improve the existing state of affairs must be welcome. An advance on the present law was, therefore, necessary to save the nation from continued national deterioration and to improve the social and economic position of children. In Bengal there was great child mortality. Child marriages and early motherhood would easily be the first causes in this connection.

Examined by Sir Moropant Joshi, witness said he would rather confine himself to the age of consent, which he would fix at 16 and leave the question of legislation on marriageable age for the present. He feared that even if Mr. Sarda's Bill were passed by the Assembly, there was a grave likelihood of its being rejected by the Council of State. The last amendment of the Act in 1925, raising the age of consent to 13 years had certainly produced a great moral effect and he had heard of very few cases of consummation below 13. Witness would not discriminate between offences committed by a husband or an outsider because a crime was a crime. He would confer the right of complaint to parents and guardians only.

Replying to Mrs. Brijlal Nehru, Mr. Roy said he could not support volunteer organisations and social reformers to have this right even though they may be recognised. He was opposed to the multiplication of authorities in Government machinery. He admitted that only the superior police authorities should investigate such crimes and there should be a graduated scale of punishment.

Asked by Mr. S. C. Mitra, witness pointed out that he was not against the passage of Marriage Bills, but there would be many difficulties to surmount. He foresaw the possibility of grave orthodox and Muslim opposition to the Bill in the Council of State.

Witness admitted to Mr. Yaqub that he had not read Miss Mayo's Mother India as he knew more of Indian condition and customs than a casual foreign visitor.

Replying to a further question, witness advised Indian Musalmans to take lessons from the revolutionary social movements in Angora and Afghanistan.

Maulvi Mohammad Yaqub.—We are much more advanced than them.

Mr. Roy.—I decline to admit it.

Questioned by Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliar, Mr. Roy stated that if the legislators framed social law, the large majority of the people, who are law-abiding, would stick to it, but deterrent punishment must be provided for lawless persons.

HEALTH OFFICER OF DELHI.

Mr. Seth, the officer of Delhi municipality, filed as his memorandum the whole of the administration report for 1927-28 compiled by him. He was mainly examined on child mortality (below one year) in Delhi. He informed the president that there were 222 cases of infantile mortality among Hindus per 1,000 in 1927, 171 among Musalmans and 11 among Christians. The high toll of about 376 per 1,000 had been reduced to the neighbourhood of 200 per 1,000 as a result of fifteen years work, but even now the conditions were alarming. The main cause of this mortality was attributable to early marriage, early child-bearing, premature births, higher birth-rates among the poor, unskilled mid-wives, insanitary surroundings, ignorance, apathy and superstition.

RAI SAHAB MITHAN LAL.

Earlier in the day the committee examined Rai Sahib Mithan Lal, president of the Arya Samaj, Ajmer. He informed Sir Moropant Joshi that his community, viz, the Bhargava community, at their last conference had agreed to fix 16 as the marriageable age for girls and 21 for boys. He wanted an improvement on Mr. Sarda's Bill as Indian girls could be seduced or induced to give their unwilling consent.

Witness admitted to Mrs. Beadon that early consummation was the cause, to a great extent, of weak children and contraction of tuberculosis. He would personally raise both the age of consent and the marriageable age to 16.

Mr. Mudaliar.—In a case where a boy is the victim and girl the aggressor, would you leave the punishment of the girl to the ordinary law?

Mr. Mudaliar quoted an instance in which a girl of 20 forced a boy of 16.

Witness.—It is a strange case. I would have a separate clause in the penal code for such offences.

A revolutionary change in the marriage laws was advocated by Dr. G. J. Campbell, principal of the Lady Hardinge Medical College, on the 10th at the sitting of the Age of Consent Committee. She

She opined that it would be a far better improvement on the existing conditions if the marriageable age be fixed for girls at 24. But since it would be impracticable, she suggested that the marriageable age should be raised to 16. Witness must have attended on more than 1,000 Hindu girls for child-birth at ages from 12½ to 16½ years, and the bad effects seen on them and on others under observation or treatment as a result of this early child-bearing could be hardly exaggerated. Tuberculosis very often developed during pregnancy or lactation as the resistance of the tissues was lowered by a strain unnatural at so early an age. This was the reason why tuberculosis was much more common among girls than among boys in India. In north India osteomalacia (softening of the bones) often developed. Before a girl's own bones were fully ossified she had to produce lime salts for the bones and other structures for developing the child.

This incomplete development of bones, contended the witness later in cross-examination, was the cause why she would fix the child-bearing age at 25 and strict adherence to it would only result if the marriageable age was put at 24. If the diet of a girl wife or other circumstances were not satisfactory, her bones became soft so that permanent deformities resulted and spontaneous fractures occurred, so that a natural delivery of the child was impossible.

Dr. Campbell held that if the mother was immature her child was of necessity below par in vigour, in its power to resist disease and in weight. The last of these could be easily compared. The average weight at birth of babies born in Calcutta was 6 lbs. 11 oz, in Delhi slightly over 6 lbs. and in England it was 7 lbs. The educated women in this province, pointed out witness, desired that the marriageable age should be raised. Indeed the orthodox Brahmins and Kshatriyas probably objected to either alternative, but more so to raising the marriageable age, as they seemed to consider it their sacred duty to give away their daughters in marriage at an early age. The time, however, had now come for raising the age of marriage or consent.

Replying to Sir Moropant Joshi, Dr. Campbell said she had 27 years' experience in India. She did not believe that there were many cases of consummation below 13.

To Mrs. Beadon, witness said that a girl mother naturally suffered more from nervous strain than an adult mother. About 40 per cent. of the children of girl mothers died in their first year and those who survived were very weak.

Replying to another question by Mrs. Beadon, witness declared that no girl under the age of 16 was capable of giving intelligent consent.

Questioned by Mr. Kanhaiyalal, witness said that there was no other way to check early consummation than to fix the marriageable age at 16.

A JAIN REFORMER'S VIEW.

Mr. Jirilal, secretary of the Jain Sabha, Meerut, urged that penal law was the only course to achieve the object in view. No amount of social reform or propaganda would be effective. He suggested the age of 14 years for girls for marriage as well as consent. In extra-marital cases the age of consent should be raised to 16.

KUNWAR C. K. SARDA ON CONDITIONS IN RAJPUTANA.

Complete support to Mr. Sarada's Bill was given by Kunwar Chand Karan Sarada, nephew of Mr. Harbilas Sarada, who is secretary of the Ajmer Hindu Sabha. Replying to Mr. Mudaliar, witness said that 80 per cent. of cases of cohabitation occurred in Rajputana before the attainment of puberty by the girl. This was due to child marriage. Explaining the extent of the injury sustained by the girl, witness said that five girl mothers he knew of died in the first year of child birth. There were hundreds of cases, to his knowledge of infantile mortality due to early consummation.

Replying to Moulvi Mahomed Yakub, Mr. Sarada thought that girl seducers of minor boys should not be punished.

Moulvi Mahomed Yakub.—Why do you say so?

Witness.—Courtesy towards women demanded such treatment of mankind.

The Age of Consent Committee held its last sitting in Delhi to-day and examined about half a dozen witnesses.

Mr. Amarnath Dutt, M.L.A., urged the fixing of the age of consent at 18 years, but keeping in view the orthodox opinion, he would put it not less than 16. He declared that an alien Government had no right to enforce social legislation. All social fossils would end with the advent of Swaraj, when India would be a paradise to live in.

The President.—Are you of opinion that it would be through a Bolshevist programme?

Witness.—Yes, that is the best form of government that I can conceive.

Replying to Moulvi Muhammad Yakub, Mr. Dutt opined that a majority of the seducers of minor girls were Mussalman. The Government was also unsympathetic towards Hindus, because the idea of Swaraj originated with them. They were the first to demand a democratic form of government.

Replying to another question, witness emphasised that the picture which Miss Mayo had painted of the conditions in Bengal was deliberately false and an inspired one.

Mrs. Beadon.—You are quiet right, Miss Mayo has discredited the people of India and published incorrect statements.

Witness insisted that the existing law was entirely wrong and favoured an entire repeal of the sections relating to this in the Penal Code.

Mrs. Nehru.—We are trying to make the law more effective.

Mr. Dutt.—Two wrongs do not make one right.

MRS. CHATTERJEE'S VIEWS.

Mrs. J. C. Chatterjee, secretary, Delhi Women's Educational League, in her written statement on behalf of her organization, advocated social reform and legislation. But she said that her personal opinion differed from it and declared that the raising of the age of consent was unnecessary in the Punjab and Delhi. She personally did not believe in legislation. Marriageable age however, could be fixed by legislation at 14, but she was opposed to any legislation for the age of consent. She was also against higher female education, which affected the physique of the girl.

HINDU SABHA SECRETARY'S EVIDENCE.

Mr. Deshbandhu Gupta, Secretary, Provincial Hindu Sabha, said that the general public opinion was in favour of law penalizing early marriages. The marriageable age for girls should be fixed at 16, but if this was not possible, the age of consent should be raised to 16.

The committee left for Ahmedabad where about 20 witnesses were examined.

EVIDENCE AT AHMEDABAD.

The Age of Consent Committee recorded the evidence of Ahmedabad witnesses from October 15 in the Premabhai Hall, Sir Moropant Joshi presiding. All the members except one were present.

The Committee examined during the day in all five witnesses including Seth Mangaldas and Rao Bahadur Govindbhai Naib Dewan of Baroda.

Miss Naniben, Superintendent of the Achratlal Maternity Home, who was the first witness said that child marriage was due to ignorance of the masses and legislation would have a good effect on the people. If the age limit of marriage was increased there would be improvement in the physique of females, in general. Legislation would stop child marriages as well as unequal marriages.

Dr. Talnalkar, another witness on the contrary, did not expect good result from legislation, but urged the education of the masses.

Rao Bahadur Govindbhai, Naib Dewan of Baroda State, stated by his oral evidence that legislation in regard to the age of consent in Baroda State was very effective and has brought about great improvement in the State.

Seth Mangaldas was the last witness examined that day.

MR. SHAH'S EVIDENCE.

Mr. Dolatram Umedram Shah, President of the Ahmedabad Municipality, Mr. Maganbhai Chaturbhai Patel, a prominent Liberal, and Lady Vidya-gowri Nilkanth, an active worker for welfare of women were examined by the Age of Consent Committee on the 16th October.

Mr. Dolatram in his evidence said that consent by girls under 16 years of age ought not to be taken as free consent as they could not realise the consequences of early cohabitation. He said there could be no healthy mind without a healthy body and so urged for an advance on the present law in the interest of the physical welfare and mental vigour of women and their future progeny. He urged that the Age of Consent should be raised to 16 years without and 14 years within marital state. In Gujarat women favoured early consummation thinking it to be a religious injunction. Further there was an apprehension of girls going astray in case of its postponement. He said that investigation of marital offences should not be made by a police officer lower than the Deputy Superintendent or Deputy Commissioner for the Presidency towns. In his opinion legislation raising the Age of Consent would be more in consonance with public opinion than legislation fixing the minimum marriage age, but to achieve the object of the reformer marriage age ought to be fixed up and for that Mr. Sarda's Bill deserved public support as it would cut at the very root of the evil which was eating into the very vitals of the society. He said in a country where the mass of people were steeped in ignorance and superstition progress only by education and propaganda was painfully slow and to accelerate progress legislation was urgently called for.

LADY NILKANTH.

Lady Nilkanth went a step forward and urged that the Age of Consent in marital cases should be 16 years and in other cases 21. She said that the weak physique of women was due to early cohabitation, but along with that there were other reasons such as poverty, the want of the necessary knowledge for nursing etc. As caste custom in Hindu society had a strong hold on the people she advised reformers to be cautiously slow. She said that at present parents would not favour the fixing up marriage age though the young generation might favour it. Yet she personally favoured to fix it at 16 years. She desired marital cases to be tried in camera and wished that their details, except judgments, should not be published as the intention of the law was not to scandalise individuals. According to her parents generally did not come forward for complaining and it would be better to try the experiment of having panchayats. She further said that the offence should not be compoundable in any case although punishment might be discretionary with the court. The marital relations would suffer in case a husband was punished; she said such cases would be very few and practically could be neglected in the interest of the general public. She also said that lower grade police officers would abuse their powers; so the investigation should be done only by higher officers:

MR. M. PATEL.

Mr. Maganbhai Patel was of opinion that the age limits should be raised but not by the interference of law such as had been contemplated. He said that social reformers had gradually done their level best and improved the condition during the last 25 years. If legislation was inevitable he said the limit should be 15 years instead of 13 and higher police officers should investigate cases of violation of age of Consent.

MRS. ARUNADEVI.

Several more witnesses were examined before the Age of Consent Committee, Mrs. Arunadevi giving evidence stated that the present law is very lax and the provisions against the husband being a dead letter. The law required to be strengthened. There should be no distinction as regards consent for husband and for others. The age should be fixed at sixteen. She said that almost all educated women were of her opinion which should count most with the legislature. She said that out of 28,000 marriages that had been consummated nearly 22,500 were cases in which the first child was born when the wife was below 13 years of age.

Mr. Lakhia Government Pleader, Ahmedabad stated that the babies of educated mothers were better than those of non-educated mothers. He would like to have the age of consent fixed at eighteen but for the practical reasons 16 would do as the change should be gradual and not sudden. He preferred the trial of cases by a Sessions Judge. He suggested that the age of the mother should be noted when the birth of the child was registered.

MR. SARABAI'S EVIDENCE.

Sheth Ambalal Sarabai's views being highly valued here a large number of persons came to hear him. He urged the fixing of the marriage age at 16. He said that there was a class of people in India who would always oppose every reform but they should not be taken notice of; as the conditions of life were, abnormal measures should be adopted and the work of social reforms should be carried on with a vengeance. He suggested a force of women police to detect offences against the age of consent, or the employment of a special police staff. He said that if the husband of a girl under sixteen cohabits with his wife his parents or guardians should be penalised and not the parents of the girl as they had no voice in the matter after the marriage and if the boy was above eighteen he should be punished for if he was old enough to be a father he should be old enough to go to jail. He suggested twenty years for consent in extra-marital cases and said none of the offences should be compoundable. He also suggested the maintenance of a register of age of the mother at the time of the birth of the child.

The committee visited the villages of Jaitalpur and Assalali where they met groups of villagers with whom they had a long talk on the subject. The villagers favoured the fixing of the marriage age and the age of consent at 15 or 16 and legislation against the dowry system. The committee also visited the Mangaldas Maternity Home and the Victoria Jubilee Hospital.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

British Unitarians and the Brahmo Samaj:—A delegation of British Unitarians, consisting of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Drummond, Mr., Mrs. and Miss F. W. Monks, Miss Nettleford and Miss Novherse, arrived in Calcutta on the 10th instant to attend the Brahmo Samaj Centenary. On Friday the 12th instant the Brahmo Samaj

Centenary Committee were at Home to the British Unitarian Delegation of the Brahmo Samaj Centenary Celebration, at the City College Hall, Calcutta. There was a large and representative gathering. The proceedings began with a hymn, and a short prayer offered by Babu Hemchandra Sarkar. Principal Maitra, in according a hearty welcome to the guests of the evening, referred to the increasing appreciation of what has been called the mysticism of the East, in the cultured circles of the West. He pointed out that the mysticism of the religion of the East would be more truly appreciated if Brahmoism in its depth and beauty could be brought closer to the heart of the West. That was a consummation devoutly to be wished for and it could be largely made possible by such spiritual fellowship and genuine co-operation as the British Unitarian Delegation to the Centenary celebration of the Brahmo Samaj symbolised. Dr. Drummond in reply gracefully referred to their reception at the ghat and made touching personal references. He spoke of the affinity of spirit that existed between the Unitarian in England and the Brahmo Samaj in India. He said that the Principal of the Manchester College and other Unitarian leaders had been anxiously thinking if something could not be done, not only for a larger interchange of ideas and spiritual experiences but also for bringing the religious leaders of the East and the West into living personal touch with each other. He incidentally referred to the keen sense of disappointment felt in England on Poet Tagore's inability owing to ill health to deliver the Hibbert Lecture. "Syrule" Dr. Drummond emphasised, "the East had much to give and the West much to take—it was a give-and-take affair all round, making for the fuller life of humanity." As the spirit is One and undivided so is, spiritual life which knows neither East nor West, and has no water-tight compartments. The Brahmo Samaj Centenary Celebration, indeed, offered a unique opportunity for testifying to the essential unity of mankind. It sent out a call for the followers of liberal religions to join hand to hand and heart to heart to the glory of our Common Father. Dr. Drummond concluded with the hope that the Centenary Celebration would forge a further link in the chain of spiritual fellowship and sincere good-will that existed between the Unitarians in the West and the members of the Brahmo Samaj in India.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	R. s. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhoea and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up " 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund " 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondaicha (District West Khandesh).
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulla (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ... Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:--BARODA.

Branches:--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadl and Dwarka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).

Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent, Ahmedabad).

Bhaskarrao Vitthaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd. Baroda.)

Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26

C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage). Rs. s. p.

	Inland ...	5	0	0
"	Foreign ...	5	8	0
	Single copy ...	0	8	0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

RATES MODERATE

Suitings
Shirtings
Dhoters.

V. P. P. SERVICE

Premier Swadeshi Emporium

IVORY CURIOS
SILVERWARE
BRASSWARE
ENAMELLED
and INDEGENOUS
PRODUCTS.

TRAVELLING
and
HOUSE HOLD
REQUISITES
TABLE LINENS
and
BASEL MISSION
PRODUCTS.

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
Cruikshank Road, Fort,

IMPROVED QUALITY

Silks
Sarrees
Borders.

PROMPT ATTENTION

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS (Agencies), Ltd.,
 16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	" 3,56,05,275
Paid up	" 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,
 General Manager.

AMRUTANJANI

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJANI DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

"Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise."

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland Rs 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
The Indian Social Reformer,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,
The Hindustan Review.
PATNA, E. I. R.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Today at 9-30.

and

Tomorrow at 5-30

The Banvard Musical Comedy Company's

FOLIES BERGERE REVUE

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Today and Tomorrow at 4, 6-15, 8-15, and 10 P.M.

EAST LYNNE

from the famous novel of the same name by the world-famous authoress Mrs. Henry Wood.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Today at 4, 6-30 and 10 P.M. Only.

Grand Daily Change of Film Masterpieces.

RAMOLA

featuring the well-known stars

LILLIAN and DOROTHY GISH and RONALD COLMAN

Tomorrow at 4, 6-30 and 10 P.M.

MONTECRISTO

FEATURING

JOHN GILBERT

from the famous novel "the Count of Montecristo" by Aleander Dumas.

For other days' programmes please see daily papers.

EMPRESS CINEMA

Today and Tomorrow at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

YILMA BANKY and RONALD COLMAN

in

THE MAGIC FLAME

Extra Show on Sunday Morning at 10 A.M.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1928

No. 12

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

American Prosperity. Capital Punishment. Standardisation. The Ramakrishna Mission. Central Authority for Education. The Barbour Scholarships. Dewey and Tagore.	Tammany Hall. India's Excise Demand. The Law of Civil Marriage in India. Age of Consent Inquiry. News of the Week.
--	---

NOTES.

American Prosperity:—We have so often been told of the prosperity of the United States nowadays, that few people know that there is a point of view from which things seem in a different light. The President-elect, Mr. Hoover, in a recent election speech maintained that Labour in the United States was better off than at any time before and than anywhere else in the world. The Labour Age contradicts this assertion. It points out that the Labour Department's Minimum Health and Decency Budget for a family of five amounts to 2500 dollars, but according to the same Department, the average annual earnings of all the workers engaged in manufacturing industries amounted to only 1222 dollars. Even allowing that in certain cases the family income is somewhat increased by the earnings of children and minors, observes the Labour Age, it is still quite clear that present wages do not permit the bulk of the American wage earners to maintain their families at the bottom level of health and decency. The two remedies for unemployment and under-employment, favoured by American politicians, are restriction of immigration and high tariffs. The Labour Age argues that while the former may bar the importation of foreign workers, it cannot prevent the "exportation of jobs." It instances the establishment of a Ford factory in England which employs 10,000 workers there to the detriment of Americans. The benefits of high tariffs too, seem to the paper to be doubtful. "Only when industry is owned and collectively," concludes the Labour Age, "do the workers share immediately and directly in every gain in productivity."

Capital Punishment. The Unity writes:—"It is good news from England that a determined campaign for the abolition of capital punishment is now under full headway in that country. It seems that the Oscar Slater case has stirred the Kingdom to its depths. This man, it will be remembered, was convicted for murder on what seemed to be sure testimony—but, owing to certain pitiful circumstances, his sentence of death was happily commuted to life imprisonment. After lying behind the bars for many years, Slater was this summer released on testimony which proved that he had nothing whatsoever to do with the crime. Such an escape as this conjures up the ghosts of hundreds, perhaps thousands, through the years, who have been convicted and executed by the State for offences of which they were innocent. Now is launched in England a great public movement for a national petition to Parliament for the abolition of the death penalty. This movement is headed by no less a man than Lord Buckmaster, formerly Lord Chancellor of the realm. It is supported by Sir Herbert Samuel, who as former Home Secretary had the painful duty of refusing reprieves for numerous convicted murderers. It is expected that this proposed petition will receive large public support, and therewith give Parliament the basis for legislation abolishing this last relic of barbarism. Sir Herbert Samuel suggests, as an ad interim measure, that Parliament request the Home Secretary to grant reprieves and commutations of death sentences to life imprisonment uniformly during a stated period, as a trial to see what effect the practice would have upon the murder rate in the British Isles. This seems scientific, if a bit fantastic. We believe that the case against capital punishment has already been proved, and we hope that the movement now launched so auspiciously in England will bring a speedy ending of this legal horror."

Standardisation:—In his speech at the dinner given by the Society of Honorary Presidency Magistrates on Tuesday last, H. E. the Governor remarked:—"We have recently heard a good deal about standardisation schemes in another connection, and it appears that such schemes sometimes lead to trouble. Obviously, punishment for any particular offence must depend on the circumstances both of the crime and of the criminal. Any attempt to lay down that such and such an offence should be punished by such and such a fine must fetter the discretion of the magistrate, and prevent him from adjusting the punishment to the comparative guilt or the comparative condition of the criminal. Under the Indian Penal Code a minimum punishment is laid down for very few offences, and only for those of the most serious nature, such as, for instance, using deadly weapons in committing a dacoity. But while I think that, on reflection, you will agree that an official scale of punishments is undesirable, and that elasticity in the punishment to be awarded for any particular kind of offences is necessary, I recognise that this Society can perform a useful function in correlating the ideas of its members as to the relative gravity of various classes of offences, and in arriving at some kind of standard which, when applied to similar cases, may ensure that the punishments inflicted are not too dissimilar." We entirely agree. If on occasions, there has been any abnormality in the punishments inflicted on criminals, it has been due to the abnormality of the individual magistrate concerned.

The Ramakrishna Mission:—We have before us the annual reports of two of the Ramakrishna Missions—the Barisal Branch-centre and the Ashram at Rajkot. The Institution at Barisal was started in 1904 and in 1911 it was affiliated to the Ramkrishna Mission Headquarters at Belur as a Branch centre. The Mission at Rajkot is a much younger institution having been started in March 1927. It is one of the two Ramakrishna Ashrams in this Presidency, the other being at Khar. The activities of the Ramakrishna Missions fall in three classes—Missionary, Charitable and Educational work. Both the institutions have a library; the older branch has a student's home and an outdoor dispensary. Besides the dispensary, volunteers from the Mission nurse the sick in their own quarters and pick up the helpless from the streets and send them to hospital. The library at Barisal has been greatly developed during the year and the help given to students has been directed to the establishment of a Student's Home. Besides this monthly help is given to the Saraswat Girls' School. Religious instruction is given at the Mission Home and at the Students' Home which are open to the public. The Rajkot institute is run on similar lines but on a smaller scale. The mission workers at Rajkot are desirous of improving their library and establishing a dispensary and students' home similar to those attached to the Barisal mission. Both the missions have been seriously handicapped by want of funds and we hope that the appeal made in the concluding paras of both reports will meet with success.

Central Authority for Education:—Mr. J. A. Richey, formerly Educational Commissioner to the Government of India, in a paper before the East India Association, Lord Winterton presiding, declared that education in India would never exercise the proper vital influence until it ceased to be treated as a purely local or provincial concern. He urged the Government to assume responsibility for elementary education, with legal authority if necessary. Mr. Richey regretted the lack of women teachers, and compared the conditions of infant classes under bright and sympathetic kindergarten mistresses with those prevailing in the Indian village. He declared that the history of the past ten years, since the introduction of Education Acts in the seven major provinces, between 1918-20, had been one of profound disappointment. Mr. Usuff Ali suggested the appointment of a Royal Commission, mainly consisting of Indians, to survey the educational system. Lady Chatterjee emphasised the need for continuation classes for girls instead of letting them lapse into illiteracy.

The Barbour Scholarships:—The Hindustanee Student prints a picture of a group of oriental women students who have been awarded the Levi L. Barbour scholarships for Oriental women at Michigan University, together with the following account of the scholarships:—"While travelling in the Orient, Mr. Barbour recognized the need there of scientifically and broadly trained women, particularly of women so trained in medicine. He was firmly convinced that his own University offered opportunities, which, if enjoyed by women from those countries, would fit them admirably for public and other service in their respective home communities. Returning, he soon made provision for the scholarships now offered. The income from the fund will be an increasing one which, in the near future, will provide for a larger number. The Barbour Scholarships, yielding $800.00 each per annum and University fees, are awarded annually upon a basis of merit by a committee. On account of the rapid progress in the education of women in the Orient preference is given to applicants who are graduates of Oriental colleges. The awards are made annually about the 1st of February to take effect at the beginning of the following fall semester in September. The scholarships are renewable at the discretion of the committee, whose policy has been to reappoint scholars doing creditable work until their selected courses have been completed. Applicants residing in India are requested to submit their credentials and letters to Miss Margaret Wilson, Chairman of the Advisory Barbour Scholarship Committee in India, 134 Corporation Street, Calcutta, India. The committee has an advisory relationship to the Committee in Charge of the Barbour Scholarships, and their certification of the academic credentials of candidates is required. The amount of the scholarships is not sufficient to meet all expenses of a scholar, but it is sufficient to enable worthy students to come to America for higher education, who could not otherwise do so." Of the 83 scholarships thus far awarded 44 went to China, 22 to Japan, 9 to India, 3 to Philippine Islands, 2 to Hawaii, and 1 to Sumatra.

Dewey and Tagore:—In the second Volume of his book "The Foundations of Education," Professor J. Q. Findlay institutes an interesting comparison between Dr. Rabindra Nath Tagore and the American thinker, Dr. Dewey. He writes:—"No two types [Dewey and Tagore] more remote from each other could be named, yet they are united by practical experience of child-life which bridges the chasm between East and West. . . . Tagore and Dewey also honor science and use it, but as a means to a greater end, the end being behavior in a social and spiritual society. For both of them the meaning and purpose of life is the one thing that matters: the life they cherish is not some future field of activity or success, for which this or that subject or method may prepare, but the life that now is, that now fulfills itself, both in individual experience and in co-operation." There is, then, for Professor Findlay but one supreme aim for all education, namely, "the nurture of the human spirit." Body-mind, intelligence; art, morals, citizenship—these are constituent values which find their places only as they serve the human spirit. No single portion of man's life is more important than another; conflict occurs in every sphere. The task of education is to harmonize the whole of life, to find rhythm, balance, and concord for the total personality—which includes the individual and the social, the one and the many, the objective and the subjective.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1928.

TAMMANY HALL.

Tammany Hall is a term of ill odour in politics. In the recent presidential election contest in the United States, some persons who had no objection to the Roman Catholicism or "wet" proclivities of Mr. Al Smith, were nevertheless opposed to his candidature because he was a Tammany representative. The New Republic which favoured him admitted that this went against him but argued that he was helpless without the support of Tammany Hall. "Al Smith started as one of the crew of a machine which was engaged in manufacturing votes. He had no money, no position and no career outside of politics, and no future as a politician, except as a Tammany representative. If he had not done what he was told, he would not have lasted longer than one term of the legislature. He was necessarily in the beginning a political worm, and politicians who begin by being worms either continue to be worms or at best grow to be boa-constrictors. The unique quality of Al Smith is that, while he began with no mind, no will and no power of his own, he has gradually earned as the result of an education in Tammany politics enough mind, will and power to occupy a position of unique independence." From this ingenious defence, it is but a step to the justification of Tammany Hall itself. And the New Republic boldly takes it. "Tammany could not have survived so many vicissitudes and come back after so many damaging exposures, unless it had tapped abundant springs of political vitality. Neither does it require any very recondite knowledge of politics to name these springs and to locate them. Tammany is, as a matter of fact, the true inheritor, in the conditions of modern American city life, of the Jacksonian Democratic tradition. The original Jacksonian Democratic party was an organization of the mass of the American people to control local and national elections and in this way to keep political power out of the hands of the "upper" classes. It initiated government in the United States by means of organized responsible parties, and in the interest of its own domination it originated those practices which have given professional politics in this country such a bad name. Tammany was in the beginning the local Jacksonian Democratic political club, which in a city like New York assumed special characteristics. Throughout the rural districts the members of the Jacksonian Democratic party were self-reliant, class-conscious, pioneer farmers who wished to exclude wealthier and more educated urban classes from political power, but who themselves expected to conquer wealth and power by their own efforts. On the other hand, the members of their affiliated group in New York were, after the volume of immigration increased, recruited from the foreign-born, in the beginning usually Irish, who in many cases were unable to lift themselves up by their own boot-straps. They were poor and somewhat lonely strangers. They craved sympathetic treatment and often needed paternal care. Neither the State nor their wealthy, educated and classbound fellow citizens did anything to welcome them and to make them feel at home. On the contrary they were treated with disdain, and they came to resent it. Tammany took advantage of their grievance. It organized these people politically for the sake of controlling the municipal government. It succeeded, and the government which it furnished was often shamelessly corrupt. But its corruption was only an incidental cause of its endurance. It successfully exploited the art of politics in a self-governing community, the majority of whose voters had been made to feel inferior. It cultivated free communication and genuine companionship between this popular majority and the leaders of the organization. Within the limits of its own membership it became a genuinely equalitarian political society. In spite of its favoritism and corruption, it established and operated a realistic combination of organized political power with democratic processes and sympathies."

Many thoughtful people in this country see a tendency to Tammany Hall methods in the methods of the National Congress organization since the inauguration of the Non-co-operation movement. The explanation and justification of Tammany by the New Republic, quoted above, will make them doubt if there is any other, not to say, better way of educating the mass of ignorant voters in democracy. Mr. Smith, according to that paper, used Tammany as a ladder which, if he has not kicked aside, has nevertheless ceased to control his political conduct. Even so Mussolini may claim that however objectionable fascist methods might be, he had to use them as the sole means of establishing his authority, and that this done, he has no longer any need for them. In other words, the end in politics justifies the means.

The Shuddhi Movement :—A Benares message of the 12th instant states that at a special session of the All-India Sanatan Dharma Conference held at Benares Jagadguru Shankaracharya Bharatikrishna Tirth of Jagannath Puri, declared that if any non-Hindu became a sincere believer in Hinduism and wished to be converted he could certainly be granted his wish. The conference passed resolutions about Samskars for boys and girls, the necessity of imparting religious instruction in schools and colleges and favouring the uplift of the depressed classes.

INDIA'S EXCISE DEMAND.

1. Why this Appeal is Made :—In an important speech delivered in London on September 25, 1928, just before leaving for his great task in India, Sir John Simon said the 'duty' of the Indian Statutory Commission was 'to bring home to the British people the realities of the Indian problem and to act as interpreters to the British Parliament of the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of India.' Recent years have shown one of the gravest 'realities' in the Indian situation to be the deep and widespread feeling throughout India against the liquor traffic and in lesser measure against the opium traffic. The almost complete silence on these two questions in the non-official memoranda placed before the Commission, as far as these have been made public, is in danger of misleading the members of the Indian Statutory Commission, the British people and the British Parliament. For that silence two reasons at least may be assigned. On the one hand India's politicians probably feel that the best and quickest way to solve the temperance question in India is to get into their own hands the power of government, hence their concentrating on the latter policy. On the other hand India's missionaries and most of India's Christian leaders so scrupulously avoid all semblance of touching politics that not even on these urgent moral problems have they felt they should intervene at this stage lest their action might be misunderstood. But the present crisis is one in which the silence may not unfittingly be broken by a missionary editor however distasteful such a course may be personally and though he may risk a charge of 'dabbling in politics.' For what is here written is intended in no sense to be a political document. It seeks to deal with two evils entirely from the moral standpoint and to deal with them in light of the fact that the overhauling of India's constitutional machinery offers a unique opportunity for righting India's Excise wrongs and for saving millions of India's citizens from temptation. If that overhauling should lead to anything like full Provincial Autonomy then some things said may be regarded as unnecessary. But not entirely so, for there would still remain the menacing problem of foreign liquor which puts India so largely at the mercy of the brewers in Britain and other countries. Until India's foreign liquor problem is solved, with all its financial implications, no real or lasting temperance reform in India is possible. Some things said in this Appeal and in the accompanying Memoranda would probably have been expressed differently or possibly omitted under conditions of greater leisure, or if the official evidence of India's Provincial Governments had been made known. Since the two Memoranda may seem to err in length already, we have avoided any reference to temperance reform in other countries. Since, however, we have stated Local Option throughout India's Provinces to be the irreducible minimum of India's Excise Demand, we may say that despite many anomalies in the 1913 Scottish Temperance Act, public opinion in Scotland holds that a powerful instrument of reform has been placed in the hands of the people. Finally, this Appeal is made to the British People and Parliament through the Indian Statutory Commission in the conviction that it represents substantially the views of educated India, Hindu, Muslim and Christian. The four following paragraphs contain the Appeal and the two accompanying Memoranda give a summary of the case on which the Appeal is based.

2. How India is Becoming Alienated from Britain :—There are certain facts in regard to the attitude of the people of India to the whole question of intoxicating liquor which ought to be fully realised by those who direct the policy of the Government and which ought to have great influence in determining that policy. Both in the case of Hindus and of the Muslims there is an ancient and powerful sentiment on this subject strongly reprobating indulgence in intoxicating drink. This is based upon religious precept and is recognised by all sections of the Indian people, though in the case of certain of the middle and lower Hindu castes the influence of this sentiment is less operative than in the case of those of the higher classes. It is obviously the course of wisdom and statesmanship to make full use of such a well-established and useful tradition and by no means to seek to overthrow it. It is obvious that it may be a means of guarding India from evils that have done serious injury to Western lands. An Excise policy directed towards abolition of the liquor traffic should accordingly be definitely accepted by any Government which aims at governing in accordance with the best ideals of the people. Such a policy has been urged upon the authorities by all the influential parties in the State. They do so, as the Director of Public Information says in 'India in 1926-27' (page 158), 'from a sincere desire to wipe out the evils inseparable from the use of liquor by the poor and ignorant classes.' The strength of the body of opinion which is behind the demand for such a policy of Liquor Prohibition is indicated by the attitude of the different legislative chambers of the country. In the autumn session of the Legislative Assembly in 1925 a resolution was passed by an overwhelming majority declaring that the ultimate policy of Government should be prohibition of the manufacture, sale, and import of intoxicating liquors and that as a first step to this policy Provincial Governments should be directed to inaugurate a system of local option. In the division on the subject almost every non-official Indian member voted for the resolution. The Governments of Bombay, Madras and the United Provinces have adopted this policy in more or less definite terms and the Government of Central Provinces have declared the ultimate extinction of the consumption of country liquor to be their goal. Lord Morley correctly described India's Drink Evil as 'a new, deadly additional plague.' Hinduism and Islam, comprising roughly seven-eighths of the population, demand complete abolition as the one remedy, and successive annual sessions of the All India Conference of Indian Christians express emphatic agreement. 'The whole country is crying itself hoarse for prohibition,' said The Servant of India on January 25, 1928, while 'the Government is still thinking in terms of maximum revenue from minimum consumption,' and Mr. Gandhi urges his English friends 'no longer to obstruct our national passion for prohibition.' The refusal of India's practically unanimous demand for the gradual abolition of the traffic in alcohol thus amounts to a flagrant denial of the rights of a whole people and the refusal is being made by the appointed representatives of the Mother of Parliaments. The liquor traffic, indeed, has become one of the most urgent problems in India's politics, and for all far-seeing statesmen it is a problem that should be invested with the deepest gravity, since there is hardly any other single factor to-day that is exercising so alienating an influence on the relations between India and Britain. How the drink traffic is poisoning those relations is shown by the fact that an ardent Nationalist in the Punjab, the Principal of a Hindu Mahasabha College, has said that he would be willing to have Swaraj put back twenty years if he could thereby win Prohibition for India; and an advocate of complete independence for India was a Moderate in politics until he studied the Government's Excise policy and realised what the stubborn refusal of Government to accept Prohibition is costing India's people in health, wealth, morals and self-respect.

3. Full Indian Control of Excise Required:—The accompanying Memoranda establish the fact that while in its Opium Policy the Government have shown a welcome change of front, on the subject of the Traffic in Alcohol there are few, if any, signs of a change in the direction desired by India's population. Writing in The Manchester Guardian on August 3rd and 4th, 1928, Mr. C. F. Andrews stated: 'It would be difficult to point to a more complete change of front on any subject than that made by the Government of India between 1924 and 1926 on the opium question. But the volte-face does the Indian Government credit, for it shows an open mind on a vital moral issue and a willingness to yield to a popular demand when it is based on reason and humanity. Both fact and inference here inspire the hope that the Government of India will by its alcohol policy as well as by that on opium fully recover the ground lost in recent years. The new Constitution to be drawn up on the basis of the Reports following on the Statutory Inquiry offers a golden opportunity for that complete restoration of British prestige in India which a right turning of the road in India the next few years so much depends. If this is to be accomplished, the supreme essential in Excise is that India be given absolute control in its own house in all matters affecting Excise administration. Dual control must be abolished in relation to foreign liquor as well as to country liquor and drugs. For there is no essential contradiction between the practically unanimous demand of India for full Provincial and local control of all Excise on the one hand and the need of a united Excise policy for the whole of India on the other. To most non-Indian minds these two propositions might appear mutually exclusive, but there is a harmonizing factor, and this is found in the authoritative affirmation of the late Hon. Mr. G. K. Gokhale in a deputation to the Secretary of State for India in 1912 when he solemnly declared: 'Total Prohibition is really in keeping with the sentiment of the Indian people;' and this affirmation made in the India Office by India's leader sixteen years ago has been repeated on innumerable occasions by India's religious leaders and moderate minded politicians as well as by the non-constructive Non-Co-operation campaign. This anti-liquor movement, when sympathetically interpreted in all its varying phases, presents to the world one of the most striking manifestations of the Indian conscience throughout India's long and chequered history. It is true that all too often the movement has been employed as a political weapon against the Government, but the true interpreter of India must regard the movement as a fundamental, unswerving expression of the national mind. No less is the anti-opium movement an unequivocal expression of the shame and anger felt by the nation's leaders. The complete eradication of the drink evil being in such close accord with India's traditional faiths, and the entire suppression of the opium traffic the deep resolve of those embodying the national conscience, any legislation with these objects will have behind it the will of the nation. For the statesman, the value of such a 'common mind' is that a united excise policy for all India becomes not only practicable but enforceable, as having behind it the overwhelming conviction of an entire people. Indian public opinion on the liquor question is of such a solid and enduring character, and has behind it such sacred sanctions, that these two factors of themselves will assist in carrying out satisfying legislative decisions and in preventing evasions of such laws as embody a policy for India's good. It is therefore because India's legislators can count on a united India on these great questions more than on any other question of the day that India's Excise Policy should be marked by an all-India character as well as by complete Provincial and local control. On these matters India's conscience can be trusted.

4. Gradual Abolition of Excise Revenue Necessary

This will be seen to be especially true if only Excise can cease to be treated as a sheet-anchor of Provincial and Imperial Finance. As Mr. Gokhale said again to the Secretary of State for India on July 18, 1912, regarding the 'Growth of the Drink Habit in India'; 'There is after all a good deal in the saying that no person can serve God and-mammon together, and no authority can take care of the Government revenue and at the same time take great interest in temperance.' Mr. Gokhale felt it, he said, to be 'curious that the Government should at one moment claim that their officials are desirous of looking after the interests of temperance while also watching the interests of the revenue,' and he concluded his eloquent appeal by quoting 'a most distinguished English administrator in India' who 'would prefer the total abolition of this traffic because in some respects it was the weakest part of British administration; he would much prefer facing a loss of revenue from this source if it resulted in doing away with the traffic altogether. There can be no question that the very presence of the liquor trade is so repugnant to Indian sentiment that many would suffer much to be rid of it at once. Since this is impracticable for financial reasons, every Government in India, Central and Provincial alike, should be instructed so to frame its financial policies as to eliminate gradually the necessity for excise revenue as an integral part of India's financial system, stretching the process of elimination, say, over a period of two decades. This—the total abolition of liquor and opium revenue within a period of twenty years—should be the united policy laid down for the whole of India, and since such a policy would be greeted with substantial unanimity it may be regarded as both practicable and statesmanlike.

5. British Administrators To Carry Out The People's Will:—Since the whole subject of liquor consumption so vitally affects India's economic future as well as its religious convictions and social customs, British administrators must be instructed to respect the mandate of India's people as expressed on so many occasions by the leaders of almost every section of Indian opinion. In seeking to carry out the people's will the British administrator must constantly endeavour to shape the laws of the land to make them accord with the aims and ideals of the reformed sections of the nation. In this difficult and delicate task, for which the British administrator is so well qualified, he will fortify himself by remembering that far-reaching principle of one of Britain's greatest sons, Lord Bryce, who in his Modern Democracies states, 'The principle of protecting a man against his own propensities when these are injurious to the community also, is deemed legitimate, sufficient grounds have been shown.' This very principle finds rich embodiment in many of the British laws in India. It is found in the centralising and concentrating of the liquor administration in the hands of Government, in contrast with the liquor control by vested interests as in the West. This centralisation and concentration of authority greatly help to simplify the solution of India's Drink Problem and in equal measure increase the responsibility of Government for initiating such a policy as shall lead gradually and surely to the extinction of the alcoholic traffic which is such an offence to India's conscience. The unassailable strength of the Indian Government justifies the conviction that enforcement of Prohibition would provide no serious difficulty for the Administration, particularly if Prohibition were allowed to be voted by the people themselves on the basis of their life-long customs and religious beliefs. All these considerations point to the conclusion that the power of self determination must be given to India's people in a Local Option Measure for every Province. The dismal alternative—which may a merciful Providence prevent—will be the inevitable widening of the breach between India's rulers and its people, a breach already created in part by an Excise policy flagrantly against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of India's population.

J. F. EDWARDS,

English Editor, Dnyanodaya

and

Joint Editor, Indian Temperance News.

Gordon Hall House,
New Nagpada Road, Byculla,
Bombay, 5th November 1928.

THE LAW OF CIVIL MARRIAGE IN INDIA..

To The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

I have no wish to say a word against the earnest plea put forth by Mr. Kopargam Ramamurti on the above subject in your issue of the 27th October. A Sixty Years War is more than sufficient on a small domestic question like this. No one should wish it to be prolonged into a Hundred Years War. I shall not at all feel sorry if, before the present Assembly goes out, Act III of 1872 does become, as Mr. Ramamurti desires, a perfect piece of Civil Marriage legislation "that shall not penalise religions."

Nahi vandhya vijanati gurvim prasava vedanam. The exquisite pangs of a new birth are beyond the comprehension of the sterile. The travails and tribulations of non-conformity can be appreciated only by a practical non-conformist. If Act III of 1872 still hurts those who need its services, let it be further amended by all means. What has "Orthodoxy" got to do with a permissive legislation like this, that it should make it its business to oppose at every step?

Can it not put out of caste those who offend its rules? What more can it reasonably want or enforce?

I do not think anyone will mistake me for an orthodox man. I am just one of the 99½ innocent people in a hundred whose sole anxiety in social or religious affairs is to avoid straying too far from the beaten track and keep clear of caste troubles. I have no ambition to assume the baleful 'orthodox' glare sported by those who constitute themselves the special guardians of Religion and go about seeking whom they may put in the wrong in its name. But after reading Mr. Paul Appasami's learned book on "the Law applicable to Christians in India" referred to in the article under review, and seeing the way in which, in some cases, the courts have, under cover of that law, dealt with the personal liberties and vested interests hitherto supposed to have been, by Imperial firman, guaranteed to the ancient communities of this land, I must confess I feel warmly drawn to 'orthodoxy' in sheer human sympathy. I have no doubt every fairminded social reformer too, will feel likewise.

I am not in the least sorry to learn that Christians have been marrying Hindus under the Christian Marriage Act for over half a century. In fact they must have been doing so far over three quarters of a century, since the first Christian Marriage Act passed in India was Act V of 1852. I am glad too to be assured that the maxim semper prae-sumitur pro matrimonii will operate in their case as an application of the factum valet doctrine and that, even apart from that doctrine, a Hindu-Christian Marriage solemnised under the Christian Marriage Act now in force (Act XV of 1872) will be upheld by any Court of law notwithstanding section 88. But, with due respect, I am sincerely unable to follow, academically speaking, the special reasoning adopted by the learned author and judge to make out that the contrary argument based on that section is a "flimsy contention."

"Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to validate any marriage which the personal law applicable to either of the parties forbids him or her to enter into." So runs section 88 of the Indian Christian Marriage Act (XV of 1872). Hindu Law is admittedly the personal law applicable to Hindus. Marriage of a Hindu with a Christian as such is also admittedly invalid according to Hindu Law. Section 88 is therefore construed to lay down explicitly, not merely by implication, that such a marriage will not acquire any greater validity even if it is duly solemnised according to the form provided by the Act XV of 1872. Where is the flimsiness, or unfairness, or illegality in this contention? Is not the language of the section clear enough and wide enough to warrant this construction? Is it not also consistent with the British Government's declared policy of religious neutrality whereby Hindus and Mahomedans were guaranteed protection from any interference with their personal law and their vested interests?

We are asked to read section 85 along with the 'Marginal summary' affixed to it, which is phrased "non-validation of marriages within prohibited degrees," and conclude therefrom that the section refers to nothing else. In the first place, a 'summary' is obviously not a part of the section itself. It was the section which was enacted by the Legislature, not the summary. Secondly a 'summary' is no summary unless it summarises so as to bring out the full meaning of the section accurately. To summarily restrict the scope of the section by a few words unauthorised by the legislature is not to summarise the section but to take liberties with it. Thirdly, as Mr. Justice Wallace and Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair recently observed in 1926 (51 M. L. J.) referring to the Privy Council Case of Balrajkunwar (1904 I. L. R. 26 All.), "it has been frequently held that it is not a legitimate canon of interpretation" to support one's reading of a section by referring to the Marginal Note. Fourthly, the 'Marginal summary' which is found printed alongside of section 88 of Act XV of 1872 is not really a summary drafted with reference to the language of that section. It is obviously the true summary of the corresponding section of the earlier enactments of pre-mutiny times. But that section was replaced by section 88 of the present Act to give effect among other things to the Queen's Proclamation of Religious Neutrality. The old marginal note however having remained unnoticed and unerasd was, as a matter of course, reprinted along with the new section without anybody taking the trouble of preparing a new summary to fit in with the new section. Must the fate of individuals and communities turn on such a trivial accident? Well may Mr. Dalal, A. J. C. of Oudh exclaim: "Codification in India is to a certain extent a gamble, (90 I. C.)

"Earlier in the Act," so we are told, "it is specifically laid down that a Christian can marry a Hindu or Mahomedan; only the marriage must be celebrated according to the provisions of this Act." All that one can say about it is that it is no where 'specifically' laid down in that fashion. Barkis is no doubt willin. The law no doubt gives freedom to a Christian to marry any non-christian. But it also takes care to give a warning in the same breath that the Christian partner so chosen must be one who is not under a legal prohibition to marry a Christian. To give that warning and to make that proviso by section 88 is not to "cut through the whole scheme of the Act" or to "cancel the entire effect of the previous eighty-seven sections," but to make clear the real scope of all the previous sections and to define the limits of the entire scheme of the Act as conceived by the legislature. Express words of a section dealing with a specific matter prevail against the general policy of the Act, (I.L.R. 38 Mad.) It has the effect, no doubt, of shutting against the Christian Barkis the vast majority of the non-Christian population of India who follow the Hindu faith and limiting his field of choice practically to the followers of the Koran and the Old Testament. But what is the law to do if a man does not find cobras plentiful in Iceland though he has the unquestionable legal right to catch snakes?

"This effect is certainly not what the legislature intended", says the learned author, who is a Christian. But there are numerous decisions of the High Courts which hold that the intention of the legislature must be gathered from the words used, that the legislature must be deemed to have intended what it has plainly expressed, that when the terms of a statute are clear, it is contrary to all principles of interpretation to first determine the intention of the legislature in enacting the statute and then construe the language in accordance with that intention, that where the language is clear and explicit the Court must give effect to it whatever may be the consequences, for the words of the statute speak clearly the intentions of the legislature, and so forth.

Section 88 takes into account "the personal law applicable to either of the parties." It gives as much power to the personal law of the bride as to that of the bride-groom; and as much power to the personal law of the Non-Christian party as to that of the Christian party. For purposes of invalidation, either is equally sufficient. And the term "personal law" is not qualified by any words restricting its scope. One of the parties has to make an oath under section 42 before the Marriage Registrar not only that he or she believes that there is not any "other lawful hindrance to the said Marriage". Later on, as a part of the marriage ceremony, in addition to a similar declaration by the Christian party, the non-Christian party is also called upon under Section 51 to declare as follows: "I do solemnly declare that I know not of any lawful impediment why I may not be joined in matrimony to—(the Christian party)"—yet the learned author has argued over and over again that the law referred to above as 'personal' is only the law relating to prohibited degrees of relationship and that too is applicable only to the Christian party to the marriage. He says he is unable to see any reason why the personal law of the Hindu bride should be applied rather than the Christian law of the bridegroom; or "why the marriage should be judged by the Hindu standard," even if it is the bridegroom who is the Hindu party, "when the Act expressly provides that the marriage should be governed by the Christian law or the rules applicable to Civil Marriages." I do not know where the Act "expressly" provides in these terms. But it is unquestionable that section 88 is expressly provided to govern the validity of the marriages even though otherwise solemnised in proper form under the Act (33 M. L. J.). It is a saving section obviously intended to prevent among other things any interference or conflict with the personal laws governing the ancient communities of this land for which protection has been guaranteed. Those laws could not without unfairness and breach of faith be allowed to be infringed by an enactment which the Christians made for themselves without consulting the other communities. Even if this principle may not appeal to the reason of some Christians, the plain sense of the enacted law as found in section 88 cannot be lightly overridden. "The clear words of a statute cannot be disobeyed by courts of law on grounds of unreasonableness" (2 O. W. N. 872). "Where the construction of a rule of law is clear, a Court cannot go behind the rule by inquiry into the reason of the rule" (I. L. R. 48 M. 559).

The only fair way of securing to the Christians the full freedom of intermarriage to which their personal law entitles them is, therefore, not by trying to explain away section 88 but by joining hands with those Hindus who are agitating for the amendment of Act III of 1872 so as to make it a general Civil marriage law for all the people inhabiting this land irrespective of their religion.

But I shall not at all be surprised if the learned judge, Mr. Paul Appasami, proves a true prophet when he says that the contention against the validity of a Hindu-Christian marriage based on the personal law of the Hindus, "will be held against if it even came before the courts." The Indian Christian Marriage Act has been allowed by the courts to do worse harm to Hindu and Mahomedan interests than the merely sentimental injury involved in the validation of a mixed marriage, prohibited by Hindu Law.

Section 68 provides a maximum punishment of 10 years transportation against "whoever, not being authorized by section 5 of this Act to solemnise marriages, solemnises or professes and solemnise in the absence of a Marriage Registrar of the district in which the ceremony takes place, a marriage between persons one or both of whom is or are a Christian or Christians." This section, as Mr. Justice Napier fairly contended, can have reference to "nothing but marriages which purport to be solemnised in accordance with usage among Christians," and which alone the Christian Marriage-Registrars appointed under the Act can be expected to attend. A Mahomedan Kazi solemnising a Moslem-Christian marriage according to Moslem rites, as he is entitled to do under the Mahomedan Law, must in all conscience be immune, one would suppose, from the operation of this section and its dread penalties. But, as Mr. Paul Appasami informs us with quiet appreciation of the wisdom of the legislators, the poor innocent Kazi is not so immune but "is liable to be convicted under the Act". A Full Bench of the Madras High Court had similarly no hesitation in upholding the conviction of a Hindu priest who performed the marriage of a Hindu with a Christian girl according to Hindu rites, as was permitted by the caste custom of the bride and bridegroom (I. L. R. 40 Madras). Compared with this judicial tragedy, what harm can the mere validation of a voluntary mixed marriage under the Indian Christian Marriage Act do to the co-religionists of the transgressing Hindu Romeo or Juliet?

Yours etc.,
"FAIRPLAY"

THE AGE OF CONSENT ENQUIRY.

EVIDENCE IN BOMBAY.

The Age of Consent Committee arrived in Bombay on the 19th October (Friday) morning from Ahmedabad and met in the Town Hall, the same afternoon, when the evidence of two witnesses was recorded.

The Committee consists of Sir Moropant Vishwanath Joshi (Chairman), and Rai Bahadur Pandit

Kanhaiya Lal, Mr. A. Ramswami Mudaliyar, Khan Bahadur M. M. Imam Kaksh Kadri, Mrs. M. O'Brien Beadon. Mrs. Brij Lal Nehru, Mr. S. C. Mitra, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava, Maulvi Muhammad Yakub, and Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz (members). The last named has not yet joined the Committee. Mr. M. D. Sagane is the Secretary of the Committee.

Mr. S. K. Bole, who was the first witness examined, declared that the age of consent should be raised from 13 years to 18. A girl must reach 18 before she could be said to be competent enough to give an intelligent consent to co-habitation with a due realisation of consequences. But unfortunately for the Hindu girls their relatives being ignorant and shortsighted induced or forced them to give such consent. Witness said there were numerous cases in which untimely co-habitation and consequent child bearing had sapped the constitution of the girls at a tender age. Early consummation and consequent early maternity were really responsible for high material and infantile mortality. People among whom education had spread were really conscious of the evil effects of early consummation and any law raising the age limit was sure to be hailed by these people. Even the uneducated persons would not revolt against the law as they were generally guided by educated people.

CONDITIONS IN THE MOFUSSIL.

Mr. Bole, proceeding, observed that in a city like Bombay, there was not much difficulty in determining the age of girls for there was a fairly efficient system of registration of births. If in mofussil the same system was rigidly brought into force difficulty in that connection would be materially minimised. If the higher age of consent was legalised, much of the difficulty would be removed. Extra marital and marital offences should be dealt with equally. The punishment provided for in the existing law need not be changed. Legislation was essentially needed for though it was a fact that education was gradually spreading, people in general were loathe to violate the customs in vogue.

BOMBAY FOR 18.

Replying to Sir Moropant, Mr. Bole, said that the backward classes were completely ignorant of the law of Age of Consent. He was of the opinion that the age of consent as also the age of marriage should be raised to 18 for girls.

Chairman: Do you think the public of Bombay will generally accept the age of 18?

Witness: Yes.

Mr. Ramswami Mudaliyar: Do you think the working classes will accept legislation fixing the marriageable age at 13?

Witness: Yes. I think so.

What about the orthodox classes, will they accept this legislation?

Witness: They may raise a fictitious agitation, but I am sure the legislation will be effective.

SIR P. THAKURDAS'S EVIDENCE.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, the next witness examined by the committee, proposed that the age of consent should be 16 years within, and 18 years, without, the marital state. A girl below the age of 18 was not competent to give an intelligent consent with a due realisation of consequences. Whilst from the medical and social point of view, it was imperative that the age of consent should be raised without any delay, he fully realised that there were certain prejudices and even superstitions which were alleged to have almost the sanction of religious command before them, which made many honestly believe that consummation of marriage was necessary immediately after puberty was reached. Witness believed that with the spread of education and with increased toleration in the observation of social customs, the present state of affairs was bound to give way to the more enlightened and correct view, which was at present looked upon as the social reformers' view in India. Unfortunately the whole level of the society amongst Hindus and Mohamedans required to be raised in order to make this a fait accompli.

NEED OF LEGISLATION.

Sir Purshotamdas, proceeding, stated:—"I am not one of those who look forward to the ideal state of things being feasible in five or ten years. But I do believe that nothing can be achieved in this direction unless the Government, with the sanction of the Legislature, give a lead in these matters. If, therefore, the Legislatures in India agree to a higher age of consent, I think that age should be put on the Statute Book. I would suggest for this purpose that this question be discussed by a resolution moved by the Government in each Provincial Council. The debate thus raised would be instructive and the result a good guide. I believe that any such change in the Statute must be made by the Central Legislature. But the opinion expressed by the Provincial Councils will be a good guide to the Central Legislature, and I think the age to be fixed upon for immediate change should be based upon the opinion expressed in the various Provincial Councils. The next step may be taken a few years later and thus the ideal that I have indicated above would be reached.

Whilst I am anxious to give every consideration to the views of the so-called orthodox party, I do not think too much attention should be given to that section, and I certainly would support any advance towards the ideal forthwith with the safeguard suggested above."

The Committee then adjourned to October 24.

Dr. Miss M. I. Balfour, formerly connected with the Women's Medical Service, India, and now connected with the Indian Women's Research Fund Association, was the first witness examined by the Age of Consent Committee on Wednesday, the 24th October, Sir Moropant Joshi presiding.

Replying to the Chairman, Dr. Balfour stated that she had done 38 years medical work in India and been engaged in research work in Bombay for the past three years. In undertaking an inquiry on material mortality in childbirth in India, she investigated the age at which the first child was born in 1,112 women delivered in Bombay hospitals. These were consecutive cases, that is, they were unselected and were seen during a period of three years, 1925-28. The average age of the mothers was 20.5 years. Hundred and thirty-four mothers were 16 years of age or younger that is, 16 were 14, 24 were 15 and 94 were 16 years of age. She collected similar data from the report of the Madras Maternity Hospital. In the Bombay cases only 12 percent. were 16 years or under. The women were of all classes including high caste Hindus. They represented a large section of the public, seeing that in Bombay 25 per cent. of the total births took place in hospitals.

EVILS OF EARLY MATERNITY.

She compared the class of young mothers of 16 and under with those of 17 and over, as regards the incidence of stillbirth, premature birth and the average infant birth weight. The results were unfavourable to the young mothers. Their incidence of stillbirth was at the rate of 186 per 1,000 as compared with 83 per 1,000 for the older women. The incidence of premature birth was 156 per 1,000 as compared with 121 per 1,000 for the older women. She considered that early cohabitation and early unity were responsible for some part of the high maternal and infant mortality in India and consequently for some part of the poor physique of many of the people. She thought on medical grounds cohabitation should not be before 16, at the earliest.

Chairman: We are given so many reasons which attribute child mortality and mother mortality. What tests would you be able to suggest to us to find out what proportion would you put to child motherhood rather than to other causes?

Witness: Well, it is difficult to say. I suggest however, of having a special inquiry in different parts of India to watch all babies born during one year and to investigate the causes of infant mortality. Special workers such as doctors and nurses would be needed for this work, as maternity hospitals are too scantily staffed to undertake it.

MORTALITY IN BOMBAY.

Chairman: Have you been able to fix any reason for the high rate of infant mortality in Bombay?

Witness: I think it is largely due to disease during pregnancy.

Replying to a question by Mrs. Brij Lal Nehru that if the medical practitioners were asked to report whether in any maternity cases that came to them they had reason to believe that the law of the Age of Consent within marital relations had been broken or infringed, they would report such cases to the authorities, witness stated it was doubtful. because doctors would not like to lose their popularity.

To a further question witness replied that if medical men and women were enjoined by law to report such cases they would have to do it.

MR. K. DWARKADAS EXAMINED.

Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas was the next witness examined by the Committee.

Replying to Sir Moropant, Mr. Kanji stated that the Bombay Vigilance Association was not carrying on any propaganda for increasing the Age of Consent, but its activities were mainly confined to the abolition of brothels in the city. He thought the people now realised the necessity of carrying on propaganda on the subject.

Chairman: Is there any way of testing public opinion on the question of raising the Age of Consent except through the Legislative Councils?

Witness: Yes by holding public meetings and demonstrations.

Mr. Kanji proceeding stated that his personal opinion was that no girl should become a mother unless she attained the age of 23.

Chairman: If a boy of 16 or 17 has cohabitation with a girl of 13, what punishment would you inflict on him?

"PUNISH BY WHIPPING."

Witness: To my mind. if a boy commits that offence, his father should be punished. The punishment should be in the form of whipping.

Chairman: Are you serious about the punishment?

Witness: Yes. I am very very serious. I strongly recommend that whipping should be one of the forms of punishment in such cases in addition to the existing penalties.

Mr. Khanji further stated that the law of Age of Consent was often broken in Bombay. It was so in the Bhatia community. He attributed the high rate of infant mortality in Bombay to the early age of mothers, to the want of protective legislation to factory women before and after child birth, venereal disease, frequent child bearing and lack of knowledge of rearing babies. Witness thought a girl would not be competent to give an intelligent consent with a due realisation of the consequences till she was 16 years of age. In the case of boys the age of Marriage should be fixed at 21.

The Committee then rose for lunch.

PHYSICAL DETERIORATION.

When the Committee reassembled after lunch, Mr. J. R. Gharpure, Principal of the Law College, Poona, was examined. He stated that a general change in the social outlook had brought in its train a considerable change in the ideas about marriageable ages of girls. Although the orthodox opinion was against the letter and wording of the Bill brought by Mr. Sarda, there did not appear to be much difference regarding its principle. It was a remarkable fact that the opinion expressed by the intelligentsia among women was uniformly in support of the Bill. Witness did not consider, speaking generally, that the attainment of puberty was a sufficient indication of physical maturity. He would consider 16 as the minimum age for the physical development of a girl. Early consummation and early maternity were responsible for the high rate of mortality as also for the physical and intellectual deterioration of the people generally.

Replying to a question by the chairman, witness said that while in the case of marital offences he would fix the age limit to be 14 and punishment not exceeding one year, in a non-marital case he would have the age limit extended to 21. If in a marital case the age limit be fixed at 14, he did not think there would be any frequency of the offence and no occasion for collusion would arise.

Chairman: During your experience have you come across cases in which cohabitation before puberty, or after puberty but before full physical development of a girl resulted in injury to her health or body or prejudicially affected progeny?

Witness: A case occurred in the Ahmedabad District where as a result of cohabitation on the "garbadhana" night, haemorrhage occurred resulting in the death of the wife. The husband was given two years for doing a rash and negligent act.

MR. JAYAKAR'S EVIDENCE.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar, examined by the Chairman, stated that he was connected with the Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association. Asked if there was any discontent in this part of the country as to the present age of consent, Mr. Jayakar averred that public opinion would tolerate an increase in intra-marital cases. He was in favour of the Sarda Bill fixing the marriageable age of a somewhat lower rate and the age of consent at a higher rate.

Chairman: "What is the age at which girls attain puberty?"—"13 and 14."

Consummation before puberty will be uncommon."—"Yes."

"Do you think nowadays a period is allowed to elapse between puberty and consummation of marriage?"—"Yes, it does happen."

"Do you think that if we raise the age of consent to 16, the law would be effective?" "It depends upon the machinery of inquiry to gather information as to cases of the breach of the law"—"What punishment would you prescribe so as to bring such cases to light?"—"I would prescribe security bonds in the case of the first offender, and the girl may be sent to a rescue home or society, such as the Seva Sadan."

"Do you think that the main reason for these cases not coming to court is the loss of reputation, family prestige and scandal that they bring upon parents?"—"Yes, to a certain extent."

Replying to a further question of the Chairman. Mr. Jayakar said that he preferred to rely on legislative sanction to secure the aim in view, he was not opposed to progress of social reform by means of education and social propaganda.

In answer to Mr. Mitra, witness said that having regard to the illiteracy and isolation of women, 16 would be a feasible age for extra-marital cases. Personally he would go up to 18.

The Committee then adjourned to Thursday when Mr. P. M. Bhat, retired First Class Sub-Judge, Ahmedabad, will be examined.

(To be continued).

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

H. E. Governor:—His Excellency Sir Leslie Wilson and Lady Wilson will leave for England on Saturday, December 8, and Sir Frederick Sykes, Governor-Designate of Bombay and Lady Sykes are expected to arrive in Bombay on the morning of Friday, December 7.

THE

Central Bank of India Ltd.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	" 1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	" 1,00,00,000

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches:—(1) Maudvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Rehman Street.

Mofussil Branches:—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharra, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Asansol, Chandausi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jaunagar.

London Agents:—The Midland Bank, Ltd.

New York Agents:—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents:—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts:—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs.	a.	p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes	...	0	5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B.	...	0	5 0
3. Birth Control Methods.	...	0	5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D.	...	0	5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger	...	0	8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman	...	0	8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D.	...	0	10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout	...	0	12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren	...	1	4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout	...	1	14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout	...	2	14 0
12. Birth Control by Johanna Ferch	...	2	14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji	...	3	0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout	...	4	1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D.	...	4	14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout	...	4	14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D.	...	6	0 0

Postage extra in each case.

THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM,
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,

MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondaicha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ...	Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :—BARODA.

Branches :—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amroll, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadl and Dwarka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS :

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd. Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-5-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindignl.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs. a. p.
Inland	5 0 0
Foreign	5 8 0
Single copy	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati Brand

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

RATES MODERATE

Saltings
Shirtsings
Dhoters.

V. P. P. SERVICE

Premier Swadeshi Emporium

IVORY CURIOS
SILVERWARE
BRASSWARE
ENAMELLED
and INDEGENOUS
PRODUCTS.

TRAVELLING
and
HOUSE HOLD
REQUISITES
TABLE LINENS
and
BASEL MISSION
PRODUCTS.

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
Cruikshank Road, Fort,

IMPROVED QUALITY

Silks
Sarrees
Borders.

PROMPT ATTENTION

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS

(Agencies), Ltd.,

16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
 PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
 THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
 PUBLICATION.
 STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
 Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
 ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
 The Indian Social Reformer,
 Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
 Fort, BOMBAY.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
 THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
 Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,
The Hindustan Review.
 PATNA, E. I. R.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
 PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
 BEST & CO., LTD.,
 MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
 ALLADIN & SONS.
 SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
 RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
 81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
 "BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Today at 9-30 P.M. and Tomorrow at 5-30

Banvard's New London Musical Comedy Company will play

Their famous famous play

LIDO LADY

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Today and Tomorrow at 4, 6-15, 8-15, and 10 P.M.

"THE BATTLE OF CORONEL AND FALKLAND ISLAND"

The greatest sea-battle fought during the

THE GREAT WAR.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Today and Tomorrow at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

THE FIRST YEAR

featuring MATT MOORE and KATHRYN FERRY.

A funniest comedy that should be seen by all.

Cheer up, It's the first year of marriage that's the hardest after that it's a habit.

Also The Only Authentic And Official Film of the Heavyweight Championship fight.

GENE TUNNEY versus

TOM HEENEY

EMPRESS CINEMA

Tonight and Tomorrow at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

EAST LYNNE

Special Show Tomorrow Morning at 10 A.M.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1928 . No. 13

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Celadon in India. The Agent in South Africa. Hinduism in America. The 43rd Indian National Social Conference. India's Excise Demand. The Poona Seva Sadan. Depressed Classes in Cochin. A Much Maligned King.	A Maharaja's Bad Example. Women in Hindu Society. The American Election—An In- terpretation. A Unique International Gather- ing in India. The Age of Consent Inquiry. News of the Week.
--	--

NOTES.

Celadon in India :—Sir Michael Sadler sends us the following for publication by this mail from Oxford :—"Is it possible to arrange in Bombay an exhibition of the exquisite Celadon which still remains in India? Some of the great Mahomedan families possess noble examples of this branch of Chinese art. Scientifically catalogued and well arranged, such an exhibition would command interest throughout India and far beyond its borders. An illustrated catalogue would be valuable for all collectors. Such an exhibition might be arranged on the lines of that of Oxford College Plate which is being held in the Ashmolean Museum in Oxford. For the first time, these almost priceless pieces have been brought together, and among them is a Chinese celadon beaker set in plain silver-gilt, which was given to New College about 1400, probably by Archbishop Warham of Canterbury, one of its Fellows."

The Agent in South Africa :—Sir K. V. Reddi has been appointed as Mr. Sastri's successor in South Africa. Sir K. V. Reddi went to Geneva recently as a member of the Indian Delegation to the League of Nations. Leaders of the South African Indian Congress regard the choice as an exceptionally wise one and declare that no better ambassador could be found from India. Sir K. V. Reddi has an arduous task before him which is all the greater because of the remarkable achievement of his predecessor. His acceptance of the post will entail his leaving India at a critical juncture and we hope he will meet with every success.

Hinduism in America :—The following extract from the Alliance Weekly, an undenominational journal of New York, describing a Hindu religious association formed in that city will be of interest to our readers. "This society shall be called Hindu Dharma Mandal, the term 'Hindu' including, beside orthodox Hindu, Buddhist, Jain, Sikh, Brahma, and any other forms of religion that originated from Hinduism. The objects shall be to further the religious interests and cultivate the spiritual ideals of Hinduism in the West, to bring the beliefs and practises of Hinduism, in its broadest conception, before the Western public, to encourage and promote mutual contact and understanding on a spiritual basis, between India and the West, and to meet, in particular, the spiritual needs of the Hindus residing in the West. The means to be pursued for carrying out the aforesaid objects shall be religious services, rites, ceremonies, lectures, demonstrations, readings, conversaciones, and other practises of Hinduism."

The 43rd Indian National Social Conference :—As we go to press we learn from the Secretary that Mr. M. R. Jayakar has been asked to preside over the Calcutta Session of the Indian National Social Conference. A better choice of a president could not be made. Mr. Jayakar's efforts for the improvement of the legal Status and social position of Hindu women are too well known to require recapitulation here. Besides, this is not the first time that the choice of the president has fallen on Mr. Jayakar. The Gaya Session of the Indian National Social Conference held in 1922 was presided over by him and his address to that session was marked for its breadth of vision and liberal spirit.

India's Excise Demand :—Mr. J. P. Cotelingam writes to us from Bellary in support of Rev. Edwards' Appeal published in the last issue of the Reformer. He says: "I am in full sympathy with the appeal on India's Excise Demand as presented to the Indian Statutory Commission by the English Editor of the Dnyanodaya. There is no doubt that "India is becoming alienated from Britain" and the attitude of the Government with reference to the Excise policy is one potent cause. The problem involves the question of ways and means and it is for the Statutory Commission to make it possible for the Central and Provincial Governments to tackle it. The grant of Local Option can no longer be delayed or deferred and provision for the gradual abolition of Excise Revenue be made obligatory within a statutory period."

The Poona Seva Sadan :—The Poona Seva Sadan has a record of useful work of which it may well be proud. It has during the last few years received a rather belated recognition of its services from the Government. The Royal Commission on Agriculture, which took a keen interest in the work of the institution, observes in its Report that its activities extend to many branches but the underlying principle is social service. Sir Leslie and Lady Wilson have taken great interest in the activities of the Seva Sadan. The Poona Seva Sadan has applied to Government for the lease of the Vishram Bag Wada adjoining its head-quarters as the accommodation available at present is inadequate. The Seva Sadan Hostels are, as is well-known, open to girls of all castes and communities. We hope that the Government will find no difficulty in acceding to the request of this deserving institution.

Depressed Classes in Cochin:—Considering the disabilities under which the Pulayas in Ernakulam are labouring it is reassuring to learn from the Dewan of Cochin that vigorous measures are being taken by the state to help their community. The Servant of India gives interesting details of their rapid educational progress and of other schemes for their uplift. "For instance, the number of Pulaya children under instruction had risen in one single year by about 50 per cent. from 8000 to 12000. And speaking at a Pulaya meeting, the Assistant Protector of the Depressed Classes in the State said that a scheme was maturing by which it was intended to divide the community into a number of groups and to start in each group not less than 15 to 20 co-operative societies. If the two major evils of poverty and ignorance are removed the others are all bound to disappear in the course of time. The State also contemplates the development of cottage industries like basket-making, spinning and weaving, etc. There is also a proposal to assign about 200 acres of land to the Pulayas for cultivation. These are all steps that are bound to lead the community to prosperity." We entirely agree with our contemporary that the general public should actively co-operate with the state in its laudable work.

A Much Maligned King:—Mr. M. S. Purnalingam Pillai has issued an interesting booklet entitled "Ravana the Great: King of Lanka." (Published by the Bibliotheca, Munnirpallam, Tinnevely District, Price 12 as.) The author's main contention is that the references to Ravana in the "Ramayana" are in the nature of war propaganda against the Dravidian King similar to the propaganda conducted during the recent war by both parties and that Ravana was in every respect a better man than Rama, his Aryan conqueror. The main purpose of the book is to vindicate the name of Ravana—an object which the author might not perhaps have pursued with so much zeal but for the fact that the Ramayana has so great a hold on the people. The most interesting chapters in the book are the last two where the author gives a character-sketch of Ravana. On one occasion at least, Ravana contrasts favourably with his Aryan antagonists. The treatment meted out to Ravana's sister by Rama and Lakshmana does not redound to the credit of the Aryan princes. Each vied with the other in making game of Surpanaka and ultimately she suffered mutilation at the hands of Lakshmana. Contrast with this the attitude of Ravana towards Sita throughout the war. The author however goes beyond his premises when he writes: "Who would believe the statement that, passion-ridden, she went to Rama unaccompanied without a previous clandestine love with the prince of Ayodhya? It is very likely that Sita"—who the author states was a Dravidian lady "who cared for her chastity more than her life"—"was shrewd enough to detect the secret love and that Rama professed innocence to satisfy his wife." Mr. Pillai has quite a strong case without assuming incidents which reflect credit to neither Rama nor Surpanaka.

A Maharaja's Bad Example:—Under the head of "district items," the Times of India of the 22nd instant, publishes this astounding piece of news. "The marriage of the 47 year old Maharaja of Alwar to the 13 year old daughter of a Jaghirdar under Vankaner, is expected to take place this month. The Maharaja will arrive in Kathiawar on November 20." The Maharaja of Alwar is a leading figure among Indian rulers, and his Highness, if the news be true, is setting a very poor example to his subjects.

Woman in Hindu Society:—In her book entitled "Woman Awakened", Miss G. Sumati Bai, B.A., L.T., has ably analysed the present position of Hindu women in society, and has expressed her opinion that nothing short of an entire change in the prevailing customs of child-marriage, early motherhood and enforced widowhood will restore them to the status of perfect equality with men, which they enjoyed in Vedic times and which is the privilege of the modern women in other countries. Miss Sumati Bai does not hold men alone responsible for the existing evils and she apportions the blame equally to women. "If woman had only spoken out her mind in the past," writes the author, "there would not have been to-day so much trouble in bringing about marriage legislations against the evils of child-marriage and many another that keep her down from material and mental progress. The so-called orthodox custodians of the Hindu religion would not then in the face of rugged facts find a tongue to extol that social bug-bear which is the very curse of our country and nation." Though we cannot help feeling that the author has flashed on the Hindu society the fierce search light of criticism leaving all that is good in it in the shadow, we must admit that it is, as was meant, a straight talk to our countrymen and countrywomen. The writer's cogent reasoning will not fail to convince the orthodox section of Hindu Society of the necessity of reform.

(Continued from the Leader page),

in civilisation. In fact, he returned from America with the firm belief that India must westernise herself to a large extent in order to take her proper place among the nations of the world. His own instincts were not passive but active. He believed in a life of struggle, and to the end he lived a life of struggle. The last incident in his life which stirred the whole country to its depths—his being beaten at the head of a huge but peaceful procession of boycotters of the Simon Commission, by the Police at Lahore—is typical of the man. To him as to few other Indians at the present day may be applied the lines of the poet. He was—

One who never turned his back, but marched breast forward,
Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed, though right were worsted wrong would triumph
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better, sleep to wake.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1928.

LALA LAJPAT RAI.

Lala Lajpat Rai died on the morning of Saturday the 17th instant at his residence in Lahore. He was 63 years old, but has been in indifferent health for some years past. Naturally of a strong constitution, the political persecution to which he was subjected undermined his health, and since his internment twenty years ago, he has never been his old self-again. The conditions surrounding the existence of British rule in this country, make it peculiarly liable to panic. The least little occurrence out of the ordinary, is enough to arouse its apprehensions for its own safety, and fear is ever the parent of cruelty. Lord Ronaldsbay's "Life" of Lord Curzon has revealed the fact that that Viceroy was a man of a morbidly egoistic temperament, full of inconsistencies, and a life-long victim to an incurable affection of the spine which made him liable to frequent fits of physical suffering. The Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab in 1907, Sir Denzil Ibbetson was likewise the victim of a fell disease of which he died shortly afterwards. He had introduced and forced through the Punjab Legislative Council a Bill relating to land tenures, which the Governor-General Lord Minto, who had succeeded Lord Curzon took the extremely unusual step of vetoing, as he was convinced that it clearly involved a breach of faith with the settlers, mostly Sikhs, in the Chenab colony. The Bill gave rise to a strong agitation in the Punjab and there was a riot at Rawalpindi. Government at once deported Lala Lajpat Rai and one Sirdar Ajit Singh. In his book on "the Arya Samaj", Lala Lajpat Rai has incidentally refuted completely Sir Valentine Chirol's attempt to justify the action of Government. Lala Lajpat Rai was best known, prior to his deportation for his work in the educational and social spheres and his deportation evoked a storm of protest which Gokhale faithfully voiced in the Imperial Legislative Council. Even after his release, Government persisted in treating him as a political suspect, and he was practically obliged to remain out of the country during the War. Lala Lajpat Rai was dead against the policy of non-co-operation, and only acquiesced in it grudgingly out of loyalty to the National Congress. He entered the Legislative Assembly under Swarajist auspices but he never allowed himself to be unduly hampered by the party Whips in adopting his own line on questions of importance.

Tactics which fills so much space in politics, was uncongenial to his temperament. He was essentially and at bottom a lover of truth as it presented itself to him. Even in the Arya Samaj he asserted his right of independent judgement. Referring to the split in that body between, the "Cultural" and Gurukula sections, he observes in his book: "My position in relation to the two colleges of the Arya Samaj, the Dayananda Anglo-Vedic College of Lahore and the Gurukula at Kangri, is perhaps unique. For the first I feel the love of a parent, for the second that of a lover. Yet, I am not in full agreement with either scheme, and have had differences with both." As regards the Arya Samaj itself, Lala Lajpat Rai had latterly ceased to be an active member. He, like Swami Shraddanand, was for all practical purposes a Hindu and took a prominent part in the Hindu Shuddhi and Sangathan movement. A hint of the change is to be found in his book on the Arya Samaj which was published in 1915. He notes that the Arya Samaj and the Hindu community had moved towards each other since their early conflicts.

"For a short time in the history of the Arya Samaj", he observes "there was a tendency to break away from Hinduism altogether, but that was due principally to the dislike which the Aryas have to the word, Hindu, which they think is of foreign origin and means a slave." In his own view, the Arya Samaj could have no higher or nobler ambition than that the whole of its teachings, or at least its spirit should be adopted by Hinduism as its own; thus obviating the necessity of a separate propaganda. He insists that a certain amount of conservatism is absolutely necessary for orderly progress. In a remarkable passage, he indicates his belief that Hinduism is greater than the Arya Samaj. He writes:

Hinduism has vitality enough to survive, that grievous mistake (of ignorance that institutions are only means to ends); Hinduism created the Arya Samaj; Hinduism has vitality enough to save itself by other means if the Arya Samaj should fail it; but the death of the Arya Samaj would be an everlasting shame to those on whom the mantle of Dayananda has fallen.

The Arya Samaj in the Punjab like the Brahmo Samaj in Bengal was the reaction of Hinduism against the adverse conditions which prevailed through nearly three-fourths of the last century. They did valuable service in awakening Hinduism to its defects and drawbacks in the face of the new forces which it had to meet. Buddhism and subsequently Sikhism and the various other bhakti sects had the same purpose. Lala Lajpat Rai was one of the first to realise that the Arya Samaj would lose its life if it cut itself off from the parent stem. Although he lived and died a devoted Hindu, he was not one of those who think that Western Civilisation is all materialism or that materialism has no place

(Continued in the 2nd column of 2nd Notes page).

THE AMERICAN ELECTION—AN INTERPRETATION.

(By Rev. Wilbur S. Deming, Ph D.)

In view of the wide-spread interest throughout India in the American election, it seems pertinent to raise the question as to just what importance we should attach to it. It is a distinct misfortune that readers in India find it very difficult to secure an unbiased interpretation of American political events but such seems to be the case. Certain Indian publicists were perfectly correct in attaching great significance to the recent election that called forth so much interest, that polled such a representative vote, and in which women took such a prominent part, such an election was not without special significance.

In the first place, moral issues were a decisive factor and bulked large in the minds of millions of voters, the outstanding question being the attitude toward prohibition. For the first time in American history, perhaps, the story of Tammany Hall became familiar to voters throughout the country and not merely in the East. For the first time in American history; perhaps, the question of a President's religion was an absorbing topic and not something taken for granted. But overshadowing both these questions was the perennial and controversial topic of prohibition, together with the larger problem of the relation of intoxicating liquor to the home and community. The voters knew that they had to choose between Hoover who promised to do his best to enforce the present prohibition laws and Smith who declared his intention to try to modify and weaken the present laws. It is quite evident that in spite of Smith's large popular vote, a decisive majority in the country believes in the present laws and wants them enforced. The American electorate has emphatically asserted that it wants to continue the prohibition regime.

Secondly, women have now definitely emerged from the experimental stage and have come to take an important place in the political life of the country. Women's clubs were active in canvassing for voters. There were women members on important committees and some women were effective speakers at the rallies. Mrs. Willebrandt, for example, proved to be a point advocate for the prohibition forces. It is safe to say that, more women will come to occupy an important place in American political strategy and that the power of the women's vote will be fully recognised by political chieftains.

Thirdly, a realignment of political parties has probably begun. Some prophets predicted that Hoover would poll a substantial vote in the South but no one was so rash as to assert that he would carry Virginia, Florida, North Carolina and Texas, four states that have been steadily democratic since the Civil War. In carrying these states Hoover performed a political miracle but what has been done can be done again. The growing industrialism of the South and certain other factors may eventually break up the so-called "Solid South". Furthermore a growing cleavage is evident throughout the eastern part of the country between the urban and the rural voter. The New Republic may be right in saying that Jeffersonian Democracy brought Tammany Hall into being but assuredly Tammany and other city political machines are far removed today from the typical rural voter. The fact that Smith's nomination was virtually dictated by the Democratic bosses of the North-eastern states shows the growing power of these political machines and it may well be that the Democratic party of the future will look to the larger cities for its chief source of strength.

Fourth, Hoover's election is a definite assurance that the chief problems in America during these next few years will be economic. This is because Hoover's mind works that way and also because it fits in with the country's need. The unhealthy condition in certain industries such as textiles and soft coal, the unhappy comparison between industrial prosperity and agrarian adversity, the need for better arrangements in the production and distribution of goods, the necessity of finding export markets, the growing dangers connected with super trusts or industrial combinations, the whole question of the relation between government and business,—these and kindred problems will consume a large part of Hoover's energy these next four years and it is a task for which he is eminently fitted. There are some who feel that Mr. Hoover will use his influence on behalf of capitalism in the narrow sense as opposed to the interests of the working man. On the other hand, Mr. Hoover's varied humanitarian achievements have revealed a genuine interest in the welfare of average humanity.

Fifth, America's foreign policy will probably continue with few changes, a policy of co-operation without entanglement. America takes its foreign obligations seriously in spite of 'big navy' talk which is 'played up' by foreign correspondents. The recent activity of the big navy group in America was not so much a reaction from the signing of the 'Paris Pact' as it was a repercussion from the Anglo-French Compromise. America was the first country to recognize the Chinese Nationalist Government and is to-day solidly behind the movement for disarmament. It is quite possible that under Mr. Hoover's leadership, there will be a growing Anglo-American rapprochement. Mr. Hoover's familiarity with European conditions and his residence in London make him singularly fitted to lead in such a movement. Indeed if he should succeed in bringing about a closer and more friendly co-operation in the English-speaking world on matters of world policy he would be making noteworthy contribution to the cause of world peace and stability.

Muslim Educational Conference:—Mr. Justice Sulaiman of the Allahabad High Court will preside over the annual session of the All-India Muslim Educational Conference which will be held during Christmas week at Ajmere.

A UNIQUE INTERNATIONAL GATHERING IN INDIA.

During the month of December, a gathering will be held at Mysore City which, in many respects, will be of unique interest in India. The World's Student Christian Federation, which unites the National Student Christian Movements of many lands, is holding its General Committee in December next at Mysore. To this gathering, elected representatives of Students will come from all parts of the world;—from Japan, China and Korea, from Australia and New Zealand, from America and South Africa, and from almost all nations of Europe. They will be of many races, Mongolian, Negro, Aryan and of many types, men and women, University Professors, Pastors and students.

Besides these overseas delegates, who will number about 60 in all, a group of Indian leaders is being invited to meet with them, and to share in their discussions and plans with reference to the future of the Student Movement in India and throughout the World.

The General Committee will begin by reviewing the whole situation in various areas, such as Eastern Europe, South Africa, China, etc., including India. The review of the Indian situation will be presented by Indian leaders such as Prof. Radhakrishnan, Principal Zakir Husain, Mr. K. T. Paul, etc. The Committee will then devote several days to the consideration of the distinctive features of 'Christian Experience' among various races and types of humanity, and will finally discuss the main lines of policy which the Federation ought to set before itself in its world-wide task in the future.

His Highness the Maharajah of Mysore has kindly placed a furnished Camp at the disposal of the delegates, and has notified his willingness to be present at the opening meeting and to welcome the delegates. A message of welcome has also been received from H. E. The Viceroy. The Chairman of the Conference will be Dr. John R. Mott, and the delegates will represent about a score of different nationalities. It may fairly be claimed that rarely, if ever, has a gathering of such wide international range been held in India.

The meeting at Mysore will be, in the nature of a Committee, and will not therefore be open to the public; but it is hoped to arrange for some public meetings in Mysore, and perhaps in some other centres. After the close of the Mysore Committee, the delegates will attend the All-India Student Conference in Madras from December 24th to 31st; and after this some of them will be travelling throughout India, visiting Educational Institutions and other centres of interest in the country. Such visits will, it is hoped, lead to a better understanding between India and other lands, and will help to promote a spirit of international friendship and good-will.

AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

AT BOMBAY.

Mr. P. M. Bhat, Chief Judge of Bhuj (Cutch State), was the first witness examined on October 27 by the Age of Consent Committee. Sir Moropant Joshi presided.

Examined by the Chairman Mr. Bhat said that girls were married before 13 or 14 in several castes forming Hindu Society. They were not capable of exercising their will in the selection of the bridegroom. The witness thought that the crimes of seduction or rape did occur among the backward classes. The evils of seduction or rape could be remedied if the marriageable age of a girl was raised to 16 and that of a boy to 21.

The witness observed that married girls at the age of 13 had no real notions of love and it was the brute force on the part of the husband which prevailed. Girls attained puberty at 12, but it all depended on their social environments. The time had now come for Indians to keep pace with the movements taking place in the West.

MR. JAMNADAS M. MEHTA.

Mr. Jamnadas M. Mehta, the next witness, tendered a statement on behalf of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, which also represented his views. He observed that it was absolutely necessary to revise the law of Age of Consent not only on grounds of public health, but also in the interests of the personal safety of young girls. The Corporation were of opinion that the age of consent against strangers should be raised to 18. In determining the age of consent the Legislature should consider not only whether a girl was capable of giving her consent, but also whether a girl was in a position to refuse her consent. As regards husbands the main factor to be considered was the health of the girl-wife and also of the progeny, and in fixing the age of consent in this case it was not possible to ignore altogether the various religious and social customs prevailing in India. The Corporation recommended that the age of consent should be fixed at 15 against husbands. Mr. Jamnadas Mehta suggested that the age be fixed at 16.

The Corporation were not in a position to say whether the amendment of 1925 had been effective in protecting married girls against cohabitation with husbands within the prescribed age limit of 13 by postponing the consummation of marriage. There was no doubt, however, that since the amendment of 1925 public opinion had advanced in that direction, and that at present there was a general consensus of opinion that the age of marriage for girls should be raised above 13. The Corporation felt that generally 16 was the age at which a girl might be considered competent to give intelligent consent to cohabitation. They were of opinion that early consummation and early maternity were mainly responsible for high maternal and infant mortality. Further, premature consummation of marriages must adversely affect the intellectual and physical progress of the people. Early maternity also told on the health of the mothers who, in consequence, were very often affected by diseases like anaemia and tuberculosis.

NEED OF PENAL LEGISLATION.

The witness, continuing, observed that in a city like Bombay practically no difficulties were experienced in determining the age of girls; as, besides medical evidence, there was a fairly efficient system of registration of births, school certificates, etc., but in the mofussil where the above facilities were not always available, the system of registering births might be made compulsory and strictly enforced so that a medical certificate might not be the sole evidence for proving the age. The Corporation were of opinion that penal legislation fixing the minimum age of marriage will not by itself be effective in protecting girl wives from early consummation. For, after all, Mr. Sarda's Bill may not put a stop to all child marriages. Therefore it was desirable to have also penal legislation fixing a higher age of consent for marital cases. Public opinion in the city was in favour of fixing a minimum age of consent for marital cases. While it was true that the progress of social reform depended mainly on education and social propaganda, at the same time it must be obvious that the pace of reform could not be accelerated without the aid of social legislation. As regards procedure, the Corporation felt that in marital cases cognisance should not be taken except on the complaint of the girl-wife or of such persons as would have been her guardians if she were unmarried. Offences in marital cases should be constituted under a separate section of the Indian Penal Code. As regards punishment the Corporation did not recommend any change in the existing law.

Examined by the Chairman, Mr. Jamnadas said that his personal view was that the age of consent should be raised to 16, but according to the Bombay Municipal Corporation it should be fixed at 15. He opined that marriages before the age of 16 should be prohibited.

THE SARDA BILL.

Referring to the Sarda Bill he said that there were various meetings held in the city, under the joint auspices of the Rashtriya Stree Sabha and 17 other public bodies, in support of the Bill.

Chairman: Do you know of any meeting in Bombay dissenting from the general view expressed by these public bodies regarding the Sarda Bill?

Witness: Not to my knowledge.

Chairman: Would you separate extra marital and marital offences into different classes?

Witness: I am of opinion that these offences should be treated separately.

Chairman: What do you think of the general age of consummation amongst Gujaratis? Is it below 13?

Witness: Well, Sir, there is no particular age fixed. After the girl attains puberty, whatever her age, consummation takes place.

Chairman: Have you any reasons to believe that consummation takes place after the girl has attained puberty, even though she may be below 13?

Witness:—Yes. I may say that in most of the sects of the Gujarati community there is a great dearth of girls, with the result that the sale of brides is more common in Gujarat and Kathiawar than in any other part of the country. To my mind the early consummation of marriage takes a heavy toll of the lives of young girls.

MRS. MANGALGAVRI CHUNILAL H. SETALVAD.

Mrs. Mangalgavri Chunilal H. Setalvad, the next witness examined by the Committee, said women of educated classes and those who had come in contact with them did not favour early consummation, but it was not so as regards women of the uneducated classes. She thought that on the whole the ideas of even the uneducated classes had undergone a change, though a slow one, and they were gradually more inclined against early consummation. If the minimum age of marriage of girls and boys were fixed at 14 and 18, she was sure there would not be much opposition. This change in public opinion was undoubtedly due to the advance of social reform due to the spread of education. At the same time, she believed that social reform was in a transitory state, and that penal laws must be adequately strengthened to secure the object in view.

Replying to the Chairman, Mrs. Setalvad said she was in touch with village life. She considered 14 to 16 as a safe age of marriage for girls and 18 to 21 for boys. She wanted to raise the age of consummation to 17 for girls and 23 for boys. The backward classes would not resent such a step if they were educated. The uneducated required propaganda to teach them that late marriage and late consummation would do them good.

MR. S. N. VARDE AND DR. J. N. KARANDE.

Mr. S. N. Varde and Dr. J. N. Karande, then, gave joint evidence before the Committee on behalf of the Saraswat Brahmin Samaj, Bombay. They observed that there could be no justification for retaining the present age of consent and that an advance on the present law was universally advocated by all persons who had given their attention to the subject. Even at the age of 14, a girl, though somewhat more developed in body and mind than a boy of the same age, was still a child. It was then a crime to impose upon her the possibility of motherhood. So far as the Goud Saraswat Brahmin community was concerned, the general minimum age limit at which girls were married was 15 years. Even in the mofussil that limit would be generally found. It was mostly due to the custom of taking exorbitant dowries by the bridegroom and this cause had prevailed more in raising the age-limit than any other cause like spread of education.

The witnesses were of opinion that a girl should be at least 16 years of age before consummation if no injury to her health or that of her progeny was desired. They also suggested that the marriageable age should be raised to 16 in the case of girls. In fact they would favour legislation prohibiting marriages under the age of 16. In their community during the last two decades the notion favouring early consummation of marriage had mostly disappeared even from among the women.

Progress of social reform by means of education and social propaganda was too slow to meet the pressing needs of the time in this matter. Strengthening of the penal law was more advisable. They would favour the establishment of vigilance committees in villages to deal with cases of breach of the law.

The Committee, then, adjourned to Friday the 26th October.

EVIDENCE AT BOM AY.

Prof. V. N. Hate, Joint Secretary of the Daivadaya Association, Thakurdwar, Bombay, was the first witness examined on Friday the 26th October by the Age of Consent Committee.

Prof. Hate said that the present state of the Law was not in keeping with enlightened public opinion, which was in favour of raising the age limit to 16 years in the case of girls, other than wives, and 15 in the case of wives.

The amendment of the law in 1925 raising the Age of Consent to 14 years had been effective in protecting married girls. The law was effective in postponing the consummation of marriage, in stimulating public opinion, and in putting off marriage beyond 13. The early consummation of marriage was responsible for high maternal and infantile mortality and also for the intellectual and physical deterioration of the people.

SEPARATION OF OFFENCES.

On behalf of his Association, witness advocated the separation of extra-marital and marital cases as at present. But in marital cases, sentences might be simple imprisonment for two years. Penal legislation fixing the minimum age would be more effective than legislation for fixing the maximum age of consent for marital cases, but the minimum age could be fixed as high as possible.

Replying to the Chairman, Sir Moropant Joshi, witness said that as a first step, he would fix the marriageable age of girls at 15 or 16 instead of at 18.

Mr. M. G. Rao, the President and Mr. M. M. Talpade, a member of the Committee of the Pathare Prabhu Social Samaj gave evidence next. Replying to the Chairman, witnesses stated that their association had been in existence for forty years. Their community was an advanced one and generally marriages of girls did not take place before 16. The Age of Consent in the case of married girls should be raised to 15 and in the case of unmarried girls to 16.

To a further question as to why two-thirds of the men of their community died unmarried, witness said that it was not so much due to paucity of girls as to economic conditions. The witnesses advocated the inauguration of vigilance associations to bring to light cases of marital and extra-marital offences. They were for giving powers to social reform associations to take action in such matters, Witness favoured the registration of marriages and the work of registering should be entrusted to officers of Government.

SPECIAL STAFF.

To a question of Maulvi Muhammad Yakub whether generally the number of marital offences was so high as to need the appointment of a special staff to try such cases, Mr. Talpade said the number was high enough. But in most cases they did not come to light. Once the Age of Consent was raised by law, there would be the likelihood of persons preventing the offences coming to light. Therefore a special staff was quite essential.

To a question of Mrs. Nehru whether marital offences should be investigated by police, irrespective of the non-availability of women witnesses, witness said that they should be investigated and offenders punished.

Re-assembling after lunch the Age of Consent Committee examined Mr. I. S. Haji, Bar-at-Law. Replying to the Chairman, he said that he was for raising the age of consent to 16. If that were fixed, the age of marriage would automatically rise. He did not want any law penalising marriages. If the marriageable age were fixed, he thought both the Hindus and Mahomedans would raise a hue and cry on sentimental grounds. He believed strongly that there would be no opposition to the raising of the age of the consent.

To Rao Bahadur Kanyalal's questions, witness said that in cases where husbands, offended the law relating to the age of consent, investigations could be made by the police and offenders punished. A Magistrate should first satisfy himself that there was a case before any vexatious proceedings were launched. He was for such cases being tried by a tribunal consisting of one official and two non-officials.

Chairman: Do you think in rural areas you can get non-officials to sit in this tribunal to try such cases?—Yes.

MARRIAGE REGISTERS.

To Rao Bahadur Kanyalal's question, witness said that he was in favour of having all marriages registered so that anybody interested in bringing cases of infringement to light might look into them. He was for entrusting the Municipalities and local bodies with the responsibility of keeping the marriage registration records. He also suggested that when the birth of a girl or boy was registered at the Registration Office, the Recording Clerk should be made to write after questioning the informing authority, whether it was the first or second child. That would enable the Court to fix up the identity of the child. In extra-marital cases, he was for fixing the minimum age of girls at 18.

Replying to Khan Bahadur Mahbub Mian Imam Baksh Kadri, witness agreed that there were not many cases in which the existing provision of 13 years was offended. However, he was for special measures being adopted in cases where the law was broken. He did not advocate whipping as a punishment.

IN CASE OF COLLUSION.

Replying to Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar, witness stated that in cases where there was collusion of the husband with the parents of the girl wife, a medical officer ought to be called to make a report to the police. In cases of professional misconduct on the part of medical officers, he suggested that fine be imposed.

Reply to Mr. S. C. Mitra, witness said that the Mahomedan religion would not be offended if a minimum age of marriage was fixed.

Replying to Mrs. Brij Lal Nehru witness said that Mahomedan objection to the fixing of the marriageable age was mostly sentimental. He agreed that so far, there was no public expression of that opinion against the fixing of marriageable age. He personally favoured fixing the age of marriage also.

MR. M. J. MEHTA'S EVIDENCE.

Mr. Makanji J. Mehta, Honorary Secretary, Bombay Mangrol Jain Sabha, was the next witness.

Reply to the Chairman, Mr. Mehta stated that amongst the Jains, the marriageable age, was gradually rising. At present it had reached 14.

Witness considered that in marital cases the age of consent could be fixed at 16 and in extra-marital cases at 18. He agreed there was a number of widowers in the Jain community. He agreed that the orthodox section of Hindus was opposed to raising the age of marriage to 16. To conciliate public opinion, he favoured the age being raised to 14 in the first instance and to raise it further to 16 after about four years. For boys, as the first step, he would fix the marriageable age at 18. Witness favoured the enactment of a law in British India on the lines of Mr. Sarda's Bill raising the age of consent instead of an amendment of the Indian Penal Code. In that case the Indian States would also introduce the reform and there would thus be no complication if the subjects of the Indian States came to British India.

MARRIAGE REGISTERS.

Replying to Pandit Kanyalal, witness said the maintenance of marriage registers would involve trouble and expense. In rural areas, it would not be easy to keep accurate registers because in some cases the parents might not give adequate information in regard to the age. He was not for making marital cases compoundable. Discretion might be given to the presiding magistrate. In extra-marital cases, he suggested the offenders should be whipped publicly. It would be a deterrent punishment.

Replying to Mr. S. C. Mitra, witness said that the age of consent should be higher in cases of extra-marital cases, Miss B. A. Engineer (M.B.E., M.A.) Secretary Seva-Sadan was the last witness for the day. In her statement, she suggested that the age of consent should be raised to 16 in the case of husbands at 18, in the case of strangers. She thought that co-summation with wives before puberty was not uncommon among certain classes of people. In many communities, they were common soon after puberty. There were also cases before the completion of 13 years. Few cases came to courts because few people liked to give publicity to such matters.

MARRIAGE AGE AT 16.

Proceeding, Miss Engineer, considered that cases of young girls becoming mothers at the age of 12-14 were not uncommon. Compulsory registration of births and fixing the marriageable age limit at 16 might help in removing the difficulties to a certain degree.

Replying to questions, witness agreed that the Pathare Prabhu community was more advanced than the other communities amongst Hindus in the matter of marrying girls. Amongst that section of the Parsis known as Iranis, marriage of girls took place even at 14. But amongst other Parsis the marriages did not take place before 16. Amongst Indian Christians also, marriages took place at a comparatively later age.

Replying to Mrs. N. O'Brien, witness said that in the Rescue Home started by the Women's Association, there were 27 girls. After the introduction of the Prevention of the Prostitution Act in Bombay, the police began to rescue young girls from brothels. Some of the girls rescued were younger than 16.

Replying to another question, witness said that in marital cases, the husband of a girl below the age of consent might be bound over or the girl separated from him.

To a question of Mrs. Nehru witness replied that there would be a sufficient number of Women's Associations to bring to light marital cases. There would not be any public opinion against such associations.

The Committee adjourned to Saturday morning.

A CORRECTION.

In connection with his evidence before the Committee, Mr. Jamnadas Mehta writes:—"In the report of my evidence before the Age of Consent Committee published it has been stated that I was there on behalf of the Municipal Corporation of Bombay. As a matter of fact, I made a statement quite distinct to the Committee that I was not representing the Corporation, who, by the way, did not wish to tender any oral evidence; that the statement of the Corporation was also in a way my statement, because I had taken active part in formulating that statement; that my views very largely coincided with those of the Corporation expressed in their statement; and that I was appearing only in my personal capacity."

DR. JADAVJI HANSRAJ.

Dr. Jadavji Hansraj, President of the Bhatia Mitra Mandal said that the Mandal was not in favour of retaining the present law of the Age of Consent. It strongly advocated an advance on the present law. "Crimes of seduction or rape" he remarked, "are fairly frequent in our part of the country. We do not think the amendment of the law made in 1925 raising the Age of Consent to 14 years has in any way succeeded in preventing or reducing the cases of rape outside the marital state. We believe that the amendment of 1925 is known to very few people in the Presidency. We propose that newspapers should take up the subject and give it wide publicity."

Chairman :—Has the amendment of 1925 raising the age of consent to 13 years been effective in protecting married girls against cohabitation with husbands within the prescribed age limit?

Witness :—No. Whenever girls below 13 have been married, it is only rare that the consummation of marriage is postponed till they attain that age.

"In our part of the country", continued the witness, "girls attain puberty between the age of 13 and 15. Consummation is not common soon after puberty. We consider that consummation of marriage and for all practical purposes marriage itself should not take place at least 2 years after the attainment of puberty.

Chairman : At what age would a girl in India be competent to give an intelligent consent to consummation with a due realization of the consequences?

Witness : Not before the age of 18.

He added that early consummation of marriage and subsequent pregnancy and maternity were very highly responsible for high maternal and infant mortality.

Mr. Mahomed Yakub : Do you suggest that the proper age of boys for marriage should be 21?

Witness : Yes.

Chairman : What marriageable age do you fix for girls?

Witness : 16.

Chairman : Do women in your part of the country favour early consummation of marriage for their children?

Witness : Only the orthodox few. Their number is fast dwindling.

DR. MRS. MALINI B. SUKTHANKAR,

Dr. Mrs. Malini B. Sukthankar, Honorary Physician for Children, the Cama and Albless Hospitals was next examined. In her evidence she said that there was dissatisfaction with the state of the law as to the Age of Consent so far as the educated section of the public was concerned. As regards the uneducated, they were either ignorant of the present law or they were orthodox and would not like to prevent any wrong, if such wrong had the cloak of religion to protect it. She opined that a woman was not physically fit for the strain of child-bearing unless she had attained the age of 17. "Many girls do not attain puberty now-a-days till after 13 years of age, and marital relations begun before puberty is attained, is sure to cause mental or nervous injury, and may even cause serious physical injury. Parents do not feel any compunction in marrying girls of tender age to fully middle aged or even old men.

HOW LEGISLATION CAN BE MADE EFFECTIVE.

So far as I am aware cases of seduction or rape are not frequent in this part of the country. I am not in a position to give any opinion as to the effect of the change in the law of the Age of Consent. I think, however, that legislation raising the Age of Consent will not by itself be of much use. For, as a rule no wife will give evidence as to a breach of the law against her own husband, and thus the latter will invariably escape punishment. The only way to make legislation effective is to supplement it by legislation fixing the age for marriage and severely punishing infringement including in the punishment all aiders and abettors. Persons attending such a marriage should be prosecuted as being members of an unlawful assembly. I think that the womanhood of India can be protected only by legislation fixing the age of marriage, as the mere changing of the Penal Code will not bring all offenders within the clutches of the law."

PLEA FOR EXEMPLARY PUNISHMENT.

Examined by the Chairman she pointed out that 16 was the proper age for consummation of marriage. There was one case in the Cama Hospital where as a result of cohabitation after puberty, the girl was suffering from severe mental and nervous shock, resulting in hysteria and dread of marital relations. The girl was under 15 and her husband was 40 years old. Personally she would not make any difference between an offence by a husband and a stranger, so far as the age was concerned. Punishment should be exemplary, and the present punishment for rape, she thought, should be administered both to husbands and strangers.

Chairman : Do you hold that 17 is the age for safe motherhood?

Witness : Yes.

SIR LALUBHAI SAMALDAS

The Committee then examined Sir Lalubhai Samaldas. In his statement Sir Lalubhai said :—

"While there is a great deal of dissatisfaction with the existing state of Law as regards the Age of Consent amongst the majority of educated and advanced classes, I do not think the masses have given much thought to the subject. At the same time there is a certain class of persons who do not think the existing law unsatisfactory so far as it affects the consent within the marital state. The demand for increasing the age of consent against a stranger is based both on physical and moral grounds and it is supported by the fact that no agreement is binding on a girl if she signs it when she has not completed her 18th year. It is therefore necessary that the age of consent when a girl gives away her virginity should be at least as high as in the case of other contracts. On purely physical grounds the age of consent within the marital state should be 18 years also; but looking to the existing social conditions in the greater part of the country I will be satisfied if it is raised to 16 years.

"In my part of the country and among the classes about whom I have a personal knowledge, cohabitation before puberty, is, I believe, never practised, and it is very seldom practised immediately after puberty. I do not know of any religious injunction ordering consummation of marriage before, at, or even immediately after puberty; and even if such did exist, they must have been laid down in accordance with the custom and requirements of the time and cannot be taken as binding on Hindus for all time to come. I do not think that attainment of puberty is any indication of physical maturity requiring immediate consummation of marriage. As a matter of fact the marriageable age of girls has been steadily rising and in several cases in my community, the marriage ceremony takes place after the signs of puberty.

"Early maternity is responsible for high maternal mortality and to a certain extent for high infant mortality also. The vitality of children born of early marriages is usually low and even when these children grow to manhood, they are generally found deficient in physical and moral stamina.

"There has been a marked development in recent years in public opinion in favour of raising the age of consent. I would not attribute it to the amendment of law in 1925. It is due to the general improvement in the moral outlook and is confined to the educated and advanced classes."

Examined by the Chairman, Sir Lalaboy said that in the Vad Nagar Community (to which he belongs) there had been some social conferences. As far as he was aware, his community had not, so far, dealt with the question of the Age of Consent.

Chairman: What is the marriageable age amongst the Nagar community?

Witness: At present it may be 12 or 13 in the case of girls and 20 or 21 in the case of boys.

Chairman: I think you are aware of the fact that there are many widowers beyond the age of 35 who have to marry, perforce, virgin girls below the age of 12?

Witness: If they marry at all, it would be a very difficult thing for them to get a bride over the age of 18.

Chairman: Would you not say that the proportion of orthodox people amongst the Bania and Bhattia communities is larger than that of the advanced classes?

Witness: That is so.

Chairman: Do you think the health of a larger number of girl mothers between 14 and 15 suffer?

Witness: Yes. There is no doubt about it.

Chairman: Have you any reason to believe that consummation takes place in these communities in many cases before the age of 13?

Witness: No, not at present. Those days are gone when there used to be this practice.

Chairman: Do you consider that penal legislation fixing a higher age of consent for marital cases is likely to be more effective than legislation fixing the minimum age of marriage?

Witness: I would like to have both.

Chairman: What is your opinion about punishment for the breach of the law of the Age of Consent?

Witness: The question is very complicated. Light punishment will be useless, at the same time very severe punishment will ruin the moral life of the girl who may not be responsible for the offence.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Do you think educated girls are healthier than girl-mothers?

Witness: The strain of education is certainly heavy and in a sense counter-balances the strain of motherhood. But once their studies are over, I think, the educated girls are certainly better off than girl-mothers.

MISS M. KATHERINE DAVIS,

The Committee then examined Miss M. Katherine Davis, Secretary, the Children's Aid Society. In her evidence she said that there was dissatisfaction with the present law regarding the Age of Consent. All engaged in social work realized the imperative necessity of further legislation and the meeting organised by the Bombay Presidency Women Council in June last on the subject testified to the demand made by educated women in Bombay.

"The circumstances" she continued, "which in my opinion justify making an advance on the present law are as follows: (1) Physical consideration, (a) The present ages of 13 and 14 are far too low. On such a basis a married girl may be a mother at 14 years of age and an unmarried girl aged 14 is not sufficiently mature to realise what consent entails. (b) The age of consent for married girls is little protection so long as legislation is non-existent fixing a higher minimum age for marriage. Close contact tempts the husband to ask for sexual relationship before the age of consent has been reached, or immediately it has been attained when the girl is very immature and shrinks from a married life.

AN ILLUSTRATION.

During the past 16 months the following cases have come to my notice in illustration of the above:-

(1) Six runaway wives aged 14, 14, 14, 15, 12 and 12 years, three alleging the cause of their running away to be due to the husband's demand for physical intimacy and the fourth on account of cruelty and two because of ill-treatment from husband's family.
(2) One runaway wife aged 11 raped by an elderly husband. Although medical evidence in Bombay stated the girl to be 11, the husband got off in court.

by producing an up country horoscope testifying the girl to be over 13. He still demands possession although the girl has been in this home one year."

Proceeding, she pointed out that the present age of consent legalised girls of 13 years to lead a married life. At such an immature age, she thought, they were prone to become tools of bad parents or bad husbands. For example: (a) "Two cases have come to our notice of girls aged 14 and 13 the former of whom was placed in a brothel by her husband and the second who was charged for theft in the juvenile court where it was manifest that the thefts had been instigated by a gambling husband. (b) Four other cases have come to our notice of girls aged 14, 14, 15, 12 who have apparently been seduced with the connivance of the mother. (c) Three other cases have been admitted here of young girls aged 11, 12 and 12 who have been legally married by designing parents who have received money on the conclusion of the contract and who have subsequently tutored the girls to make false accusations against the husbands in the hope of getting the girls back and then making more money on a fresh contract. The higher the age of consent, the less chance of husband being willing to contract marriages with girls aged 11 and 12.

The attainment of puberty, she further said, was not a sufficient indication justifying consummation of marriage. 16 years should on medical grounds be the minimum age for consummation.

In conclusion, the witness said that legislation fixing the minimum age for marriage at a much higher age would have more protective force as it would prevent child-wives living in proximity to a husband whose sex-control amidst the crowded conditions of a poor man's life was not beyond temptation. Legislation would, however, have to give a higher age of consent (16) for unmarried girls.

"I would add that the experience of working the Children Act in Bombay has been that cases of child-wives aged 13 and over have no means of protection within its scope and until a high minimum age (14, if not 16) for marriage has been fixed and a higher age of consent (16) for unmarried girls has been provided early adolescent girl life lies in danger."

MRS. AVANTIKABAI GOKHALE.

Mrs. Avantikabai Gokhale, the President of the Hindu Mahila Samaj, was then examined by the Committee. She thought there ought to be an advance on the present law, and the age of consent should be raised to 16 or to 18 years. She would suggest the age of marriage to be 16 and not under. She attributed the high maternal and infantile mortality to early consummation and early maternity and poverty of the people. Witness would separate extra marital and marital offences. In the former the offences should be met with imprisonment for a long time and fine. In the latter heavy fine to the offender and his guardian if from a joint family. She thought imprisonment to a husband would have a serious evil effect on the girl in her future life.

Cases of married couples should not have detailed publicity. She would prefer raising the age of marriage to 16 at once.

The Committee then adjourned.

(To be continued).

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Medical Aid To Soldiers' Wives:—Under existing military regulations the wives and families of Indian soldiers are entitled to medical attendance at their quarters by the officer in medical charge of the unit to which the husband belongs or by a sub-assistant surgeon. As most of the wives of Indian soldiers observe purdah medical officers or sub-assistant surgeons find it difficult to see them when they are sick. It has been decided (says a communique) to appoint women sub-assistant surgeons as an experiment measure.

Prohibition in Tarn Taran:—The Municipal Committee of Tarn Taran, a town in the Amritsar district, with a voting strength of 2,165 out of a population of about 6,000, has decided to close all liquor shops in the town by making use of the Local Option Act. Some time ago it applied to the Government for taking a referendum on local option, which was granted. A strenuous endeavour to get a verdict in their favour was made by the Prohibitionists and the result was that about 1,600 people turned out to poll. Without a single exception all of them recorded their votes in favour of total prohibition. Most of the other voters who did not turn up are believed to have either died or left the place. The results of this referendum are described as unique. The Local Option Act lays down that there should be a two-third majority of voters for securing complete prohibition and this has been obtained.

Maratha Marries a Mahar Girl:—A social reform marriage between Mr. Dattatraya Rangneth Upasak, a Maratha and a Mahar (Untouchable) girl named Luxmibai was celebrated last month at the Depressed Classes Mission, Poona. About 200 guests were present.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. s. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.

THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

WANTED.

Very active travelling agents to sell our books. Salary Rs. 100, 200 or upwards according to ability. Apply to:—Indian Social Reformer, Bombay.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act

VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up " 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund " 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,

MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, Bombay.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akinj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:--BARODA.

Branches:--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadl and Dwarka.

				Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda).
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26.

C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs.	a.	p.
Inland	...	5	0 0
Foreign	...	5	8 0
Single copy	...	0	8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay, Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudana House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26.

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

RATES MODERATE

Sattings
Shirtings
Dhoters.

V. P. P. SERVICE

Premier Swadeshi Emporium

IVORY CURIOS
SILVERWARE
BRASSWARE
ENAMELLED
and INDEGENOUS
PRODUCTS.

TRAVELLING
and
HOUSE HOLD
REQUISITES
TABLE LINENS
and
BASEL MISSION
PRODUCTS.

IMPROVED QUALITY

Silks
Sarrees
Borders.

PROMPT ATTENTION

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
Cruikshank Road, Fort,

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS

(Agencies), Ltd.,

16, Gracechurch Street

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,00
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,27
Paid up	„ 71,21,05
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publication of Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

- | | | |
|-----------------|-----|--|
| EYE DISEASES... | ... | Try "Akhyacura." |
| RING WORM ... | ... | Try "Kurain." |
| ASTHMA ... | ... | Try "Asthma Cure." |
| STRENGTH ... | ... | Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil," |
| TONICS ... | ... | Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills."
"Farrish's Chemical Food."
"Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo-phosphites of Lime." |
| GONORRHOEA ... | ... | Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C.
Copaiba Cum Buchu." |

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :-

Madras Presidency & Mysore :
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions :
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan :
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Tonight at 9-30 P.M.

and

Tomorrow at 5-30

Banvard's Musical Comedy Company's

Famous Play

" TIPTOES "THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Tonight and Tomorrow at 4, 6-15, and 10 P.M.

ROD LA ROCQUE AND DOLORES DEL RIO

in

" THE RESURRECTION "THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Tonight and Tomorrow at 4, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

THE PARAMOUNT SUPER-JEWEL

" THE WANDERER "

with

GREAT NISSEN, ERNEST TORRENCE, AND WILLIAM COLLIER, Jr.

A Gorgeous Super Film.

EMPRESS CINEMA

Today and Tomorrow at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

TOM MIX

in

STEPPING FAST

Also two rollicking comedies with Charlie Chaplin and Jimmy Aubrey.

A Special morning show on Sunday at 10 A.M.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1928

No. 14.

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The U. S. Presidential Election. A Welcome Move. Madras Women's Education Conference. The Greaves Home. The Scope of Birth Control. Another Girl Wife Tragedy. Calcutta Municipal Gazette Annual.	"Understanding India." Christian Missions in India. Birth Control. Social Problems. The Age of Consent Inquiry. News of the Week.
--	--

NOTES.

The U. S. Presidential Election :—The Indian Witness shows that the assertion of the Anglo-Indian papers that Mr. Hoover's election to the Presidency by a very large majority of votes was due chiefly to the communal feeling against Mr. Smith on account of his Roman Catholic faith is not based on facts. The Anglo-Indian Press is accustomed to stress communal differences in this country as factors of political consideration and it applies naturally the same test to American affairs. The Witness has no difficulty in showing that religious prejudice played a very small part in bringing about Mr. Smith's defeat, and subsequent retirement from public life, and that the real issue on which the election was fought was that of Prohibition. Of the eight states that voted for Mr. Smith (the Democratic Candidate) five were predominantly Protestant which in loyalty to the Party affiliation, voted for the "wet" candidate, though they have respectedly voted "dry" on the specific issue. The normal Democratic States that voted for Mr. Hoover (the Republican) had to, because they put prohibition before party. The Witness concludes "India in common with the rest of the world has had a demonstration of the fact that Prohibition is still gaining in America. For eight years the venal and the gullible papers have been retelling to their readers the propaganda of the world liquor trade against Prohibition. They have said that the people will revolt, that the law is not enforced, that the conditions are intolerable but at every election the people have registered their support of Prohibition in larger majorities. This election may not reduce the output of propaganda and it may not make the pro-liquor papers more discriminating in what they publish but it will certainly make a multitude of people less ready to believe the anti-Prohibition falsehoods they read."

A Welcome Move :—The Non-Brahmin Party in Madras has been criticised for neglecting social reform in its zeal for politics. Some of its finest minds have fallen away from it on account of this lapse. We are glad that it has resolved to leave no further room for such criticism. It held a Social Conference in Madras last week presided over by Mr. E. V. Ramasami Naicker. The Conference was called the first South Indian Social Reformers' Conference, which is chronologically and etymologically incorrect because Social reformers have held several conferences before in South India, but is gratifying as evincing a growing sentiment among non-Brahmin leaders to slough off their communalism. The list of reforms advocated by the Conference is practically the same as that of previous conferences. This fresh accession to the social reform movement is a sign of the fast increasing recognition of social reform as the fundamental need of the country. There is one remark of Mr. M. K. Reddy, the Chairman of the Reception Committee, which was based on a complete misapprehension. Mr. Reddy referred to the truth of much that was contained in Miss Mayo's "much-maligned book." The resentment provoked by the book is not due to the truth or otherwise of the facts stated in it, but to the broad inferences reflecting on the Indian and particularly the Hindu race and religion. If Miss Mayo is right, it is no use holding Social conferences to set things right, because, as she says, Hindus are incapable of achieving any progress and are saved from extinction only by the existence of British rule.

Madras Women's Education Conference :—We welcome the optimistic note about the progress of Indian women struck by the Zemin-darini of Kumaramangalam, the wife of Dr. Subbarayan, the chief minister of Madras, in her presidential address to the third Madras Constituent Conference of women on Education. Mrs. Subbarayan testified to the rapid spread of education among women in the province in recent years and observed that the women were so educated and advanced that they could organise work for the good of their sisters and were prepared increasingly to shoulder responsibilities for the benefit of their country. In this respect Mrs. Subbarayan herself has set an example to her country-women. She is a fellow of the Madras University and has been taking an active part in all movements for promoting social reform and education. Coming as she does, from a cultured family which has contributed not a little to the levelling up of the existing social distinctions, Mrs. Subbarayan's words are such as to carry great weight with her sisters. In contrast to the opinion expressed in the South Indian Social Reformers' Conference on Miss Mayo's book, the passing reference she made to it in her address was one of severe condemnation. Laying stress on the necessity of hard work necessary for the building up of a healthy nation, Mrs. Subbarayan said "But I feel it my duty to say that we do not want stray travellers to come and pry into filthy nooks and obscure corners and then under the guise of giving advice point the finger of scorn at us. Evil exists in every country and let these unhelpful and meddling critics attend to their own affairs. We will work and work hard to cleanse our country of its evils and we are determined to succeed". Mrs. Subbarayan has spoken like a true daughter of India, who is bent on achieving her aim undeterred by criticisms. We shall publish portions of her address in the next issue of the Reformer.

The "Greaves Home":—The Calcutta Municipal Gazette Annual contains an interesting article on the origin and growth of the Greaves Home, an institution started by the Calcutta Vigilance Association to provide a suitable "home" for girls rescued from brothels and conducted under non-Christian management. Its aim is not only to save the girls from a life of shame, but also to turn them into useful and respected members of society. The following particulars of the Rescue Home will be of interest to our readers. "The Greaves Home for the protection, support and education of minor non-Christian Indian girls rescued by the Police from house of ill-fame in Calcutta is, at present, located at a garden house, at Dum-Dum rented for the purpose. The number of girls living in the Home at the present moment is 34, none over 16, and of different ages, but a few of them are married, the marriages, however, being mostly of a bogus character. In this Home, the girls are looked after by a resident European Lady Superintendent assisted by a Matron and teaching staff under the guidance of a strong Advisory Committee of ladies, European and Indian, who frequently meet at the Home, supervise its internal management and make suggestions for improvement wherever and whenever required. The Home provides for the physical intellectual, vocational, moral and religious education of the inmates." Thanks to the munificence of a Calcutta philanthropist, the Home is shortly to be removed to a commodious garden house at Panihati on the banks of the river Hoogly. "The new house" we are told, will accommodate about 100 girls, and has plenty of open land all round to admit of further extension when necessary. It has facilities for separating the girls into different groups according to their age, which may be found necessary by experience and circumstances."

The Scope of Birth Control:—We publish elsewhere an interesting lecture delivered by Sir P. Sivaswami Iyer on Birth Control at Bangalore last week. Sir Sivaswami divided his subject into three parts—the necessity for birth control, the possibility of it and the likely dangers attendant on its practice. The allowing of large families to grow leads, says the lecturer, to the breakdown of the wife. He does not favour the attempt to raise the marriage age as "any amount of evil would follow its success." Holding these views it is strange that Sir Sivaswami should proceed to say. "Now, if you do not practice birth control and if people have always this fear of a large family hanging over their heads they are not likely to enter into marriage at all. Their tendency will be either not to marry or postpone marriage and the result will be that we shall have institutions of old bachelors and old maids. This is arguing in a vicious circle. For this amounts to proposing a remedy for a disease which will only come into existence with the remedy. The real position is this, that in a society where early marriages are common birth control must be popularised but at the same time steps should be taken to prevent such marriages. Birth-control can only be introduced as a measure to alleviate the sufferings of those who are already married. It cannot be regarded as a means to perpetuate early marriages. Discussing the practicability of birth control, Sir Sivaswami referred to France as an instance of its success. The stationary population of France is as much a problem to French thinkers as over-population in India is to Indians. "The population question," says one French writer, "has somewhat changed its aspect, what Malthus called the preventive check"—and this ought by no means to be confused with birth control "has got such a hold of almost every country that modern economists are concerned not so much with the question of an unlimited growth of population as with the universal decline of the birth rate." In India a bar to the wide practice of birth control is the general poverty and illiteracy of the masses and contraceptives used with imperfect knowledge are always harmful. "There is a limit," says Sir Sivaswami, "beyond which you cannot postpone marriage." This limit has not been reached in India and as birth-control cannot be made compulsory it is no substitute to marriage legislation.

Another Girl Wife Tragedy:—Another case of the brutal treatment of a girl-wife resulting in her being burnt to death was decided last week at the criminal Sessions of the Madras High Court. The victim was a Brahmin girl of about 15 years, and her husband was a purohit or a Hindu domestic chaplain. The motive for the crime is not clear, but it would appear that it was to extort money from the girl's parents. The exposure of the crime was due to the humanity of the neighbours who insisted on opening the door of the room in which the poor girl had been shut up after she had been severely burnt. The husband was sentenced to 10 years imprisonment, which under the circumstances is not too severe.

Calcutta Municipal Gazette Annual:—The Corporation of Calcutta is the only corporation in India to have an organ of its own in which its activities are recorded week by week. We have been favoured with a copy of the fourth anniversary number of the Calcutta Municipal Gazette which both as regards its get-up and literary merit far surpasses the run of ordinary annuals which are generally published at the end of the year. Topics of civic interest from the pen of leading men who have had considerable experience in modern city government form a special feature of the annual. It also abounds in illustrations which are of a high order.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, DECEMBER 1, 1928.

"UNDERSTANDING INDIA".*

Miss Katherine Mayo's "Mother India", was the work of a writer ill-educated in methods of social study, lacking in intellectual candour, and bent on providing at any cost a sensational book on India and her people. In contrast to it, is "Understanding India" by an educated observer with a keen historical perspective, who has tried sincerely to understand India in the words of the title of her book. Mrs. Gertrude Williams herself in a preface notes the contrast. "While I was turning my notes on India into a book", she writes, "Mother India" appeared. Miss Mayo and I were in India during successive winters. I was interested and surprised that another American woman, "unsubsidized, uncommitted and unattached" as she described herself, should bring away such different impressions of the country. I think that the difference in what Miss Mayo and I saw was due in part to the way we saw it."

Miss Mayo came with the commendation of the India Office, was escorted by the Criminal Investigation Department officials, and was guided and instructed by the Anglo-Indian hierarchy as to what she should see and say. Mrs. Williams followed a different course. "I travelled", she writes, "6000 miles in India, and I travelled alone. I ignored the British convention which forbids a white woman, unless accompanied by a white man, to enter the close-built poorer quarters of Indian cities, even in broad day-light. I had no itinerary, but decided where to go as I went along. I visited Indian homes. I poked round in remote villages of aborigines. I travelled first, second, and third class. Much of the time I travelled without a bearer or servant, an almost obligatory accessory for the foreigner in India. I wanted to buy my tickets and make the other petty contacts which a servant would have saved me. As I was entertained by Indians in their homes, I lost the sense of watching a spectacle. Instead of a panorama, moving in two directions, the Indian scene took on a third dimension. Without being sentimental or blind to India's failures, it is only just to remember that many of the customs for which she is most severely condemned prevailed throughout the world until the last few centuries, and still exist in our own backward communities." That accurately describes the key-note of the book. Mrs. Williams sees the shady side of Indian life as keenly as Miss Mayo, but does not regard it as peculiar to and inherent in Indian nature, impossible of being brightened by any effort of the people themselves. "If we wish to see the lives of our ancestors of a few generations ago," she writes, "we have only to visit India with its primitive village life and lumbering wooden-wheeled bullock carts, its one-roomed huts, its dirt and flies and smells, and its precious sense of leisure to sit in the sun." America has grown out of these things, and India, too, will, with the help of science and under the influence of national ideas, do the same. The great merit of Mrs. Williams' book is that she realises throughout that Indians are "of the same essential human stuff as ourselves."

Mrs. Williams' account of her experiences on the voyage to India are vividly described. "The first morning out, as I took my place at table, I said 'Good morning' to my English neighbours. The men looked embarrassed; the women looked blank. No one replied. I never spoke to any of them again, and they never spoke to me." Mrs. Williams had letters to English people in the various services but, on landing in Bombay, she decided not to present them. "The first Indian I went to see in Bombay," she writes, "was Mr. K. Natarajan. My only introduction was to tell him that I had been a reader of his admirable weekly paper, the Indian Social Reformer, for some years. He received me as hospitably as though I had presented the most august letters, and introduced me to prominent Indians as well as to his daughters and a group of delightful Indian ladies." We remember the incident very well and have since recalled it often in conversation with other foreign visitors. Mrs. Williams walked into the room one evening with a scrap of newspaper on the margin of which Bishop Fisher had scrawled a few words indicative of his regard for her and her object in visiting India. In a few minutes, Mrs. Williams was completely at ease discussing her programme during her five months' tour in India.

She attended the National Congress at Belgaum which was presided over by Mahatma Gandhi. She was perhaps the only white visitor at that Congress. Belgaum has no hotel run on European lines, and Mrs. Williams had to shift for herself as well as she could. There are some vivid pen-pictures of what she saw and felt at Belgaum. Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, "handsome and vital, with flashing eyes and a commanding presence", did not know Mrs. Williams, but when the latter introduced herself as an American woman travelling in India who desired to meet her, she had Mrs. Williams brought to the dais and had her sit near her for the rest of the Congress. Mrs. Naidu was very busy, she could reply only in monosyllables to Mrs. Williams' questions, yet "she was kindness itself in looking out for me, and introducing me to all the Pandita and celebrities of the movement." Mrs. Williams describes Pandit Motilal Nehru as "fastidious and distinguished, looking like an European financier in fancy dress." The late Mr. C. R. Das was "tall and broad-shouldered, wrapped in a home-spun toga, whose deliberateness of bearing reminded me of American Indian chieftains I used to see on the frontier army posts of my childhood." She also met the leaders of the National Social Conference, Sir Sankaran Nair, Mr. G. K. Devadhar and others, and she remarks that meeting the leaders of these two groups at the outset of her travels proved an ideal introduction to Indian life and thought. Referring to the Social Conference group, she observes that they feel that India will not be ready for political agitation and organization until she has reformed her glaring social abuses. This is not quite correct at the present day. Social reformers have come to feel that under self-government alone would it be possible to have social reforms properly carried out. They are therefore, heartily cooperating with the other Indian nationalists in working for Swaraj. From Belgaum, Mrs. Williams went to Goa and there she discovered, contrary to what she had been told, that a white woman can sleep with doors open, without being disturbed.

* Coward McCune, New York, price $50 dollars.

Mrs. Williams admits many things in Indian life jarred upon her. But then she reminds herself that looking back a few generations, the chronicles of Europeans in the Middle Ages furnish close parallels to India's present state. As regards some of the cruelties and hardships, the afflictions of Indian women, the illiteracy of men and women, cruelty to animals, and lack of sanitation "I could" she says—and she was a journalist for five years—"match all the current gossip as to Indian misery with incidents from the police court blotters of any Western nation." "I should hesitate to describe as decadent a stage of civilisation from which we ourselves, have only recently emerged." And not wholly yet. It is this constant corrective of historical perspective and introspection that constitutes the special quality of Mrs. William's book. Nor is she at all satisfied that the civilisation of the West is the only or the best kind of civilisation attainable. She quotes Henry Adams' bemoaning the chaotic effect of this 'acceleration of vertiginous violence.' A few more centuries of progress at the present rate, she candidly says, would lead to a condition which is unthinkable—a delirium. She makes it clear that she does not want and does not approve of Indians embarking on a wholesale imitation of the West. The underlying ideas of civilisation everywhere are the same but they must be worked out in accord with the genius and requirements of each race and community by itself. The practical difficulty arising out of foreign rule is just this, that the subject race is incapacitated for thinking out the solutions of its special problems in the light of its own appreciation of its needs. Mrs. Williams refers to the shoddy imitations of the west she found in some ambitious quarters. All imitations must be shoddy, and in India we are now faced with the alternative of imitation or stagnation. British Viceroys and Governors profess that they wish India to evolve on her own national lines. But the facilities for doing so under the present regime are very few. Even under Swaraj, India will have to adapt to her own needs much gleaned from the West. But that will be adaptation and incorporation and not the mechanical imposition of institutions and practices in all their alien incongruity on the instincts and traditions of the Indian people.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN INDIA.

The Indian Social Reformer writes the Guardian, in a recent number discussed in its leading article the effects of Christian Missions in India, with especial reference to the criticism of them made by Mr. Robert Wilson who speaks both as a business man and a former missionary in this country. Mr. Wilson arrived at the conclusion that in regard to their prime purpose of converting Indians to Christianity missions in India have been a ghastly failure. He says that 'after about fifteen centuries of residence in this country, some one and a half per cent. of the population is Christian,' and calls attention to the fact that the increase of the Christian community at the present day is recorded largely not in those areas where the church has been established for many generations, but almost entirely in those districts where missionary work is of recent history. It is undoubtedly true that, judged from the mere point of view of the conversions to Christianity, Christian missions in India cannot be said to be as successful as their advocates would have it to be. It is also true that the rate of increase of the Christian community is a decreasing one in the older Christian areas, that the presence of a strong Christian Church does not usually mean a progressive increase in the community. This may be partly due to the fact that as the Reformer says, like other communities in India 'the idea of the community is to settle down like the Syrian Christians, Jews and Parsis into a stable and close body with well-defined boundaries.' It is also due to the lack of that aggressive proselytising spirit in the whole Indian religious body, which is such a characteristic of western religious organisations. It should also be said that to-day there is an increasing tendency on the part of missionaries in India to judge of the value of their work not by the numbers that are openly converted to Christianity but rather by the influence of Christian ideals on the whole people. This was the attitude of Dr. Miller of Madras twenty-five years ago and it is found to-day to an increasing extent in the whole missionary body. This attitude would be more generally adopted but for two things. First, the Christian organisations in America and Europe are apparently more concerned with the statistical results of their efforts than with the moral and spiritual results in the general community. Secondly, the Christian Church has not yet been able to adjust its thought in regard to the proselytising character of Christianity. The majority accept the command of Christ in St. Matthew to go and make Christians of all nations as a genuine saying of our Lord and the early method of the apostles of making converts and bringing them together into a separate religious organisation has been regarded as the ideal Christian method of Christ, is clear from the Gospels but it is argued that it has been the method of the primitive church from its early days and therefore should be followed by the church of to-day. In India at any rate there is a growing feeling in the church itself that evangelisation does not necessarily mean proselytisation or the changing of a man's religious and social community, and it is likely that, as the Indian Church comes to mould its own life and work, it will tend more and more to emphasise this attitude rather than the former attitude of missionary work. The Guardian concludes its article on the subject with a quotation from the Social Reformer.

BIRTH CONTROL.

Under the auspices of the Humanistic Club, Bangalore Sir P. S. Sivaswami Iyer of Madras delivered an interesting lecture at the Jayabhavan Palace Hall on "Birth Control" with Sir M. Viveesvaraya in the chair. Sir Sivaswami Iyer said:—The subject is one of great importance to all countries and to this country in particular, and having regard to the ignorance upon this great question, in many circles in our country, I do not think that some thought upon the subject, especially to the youngest generation, would be amiss.

ASPECTS OF BIRTH CONTROL.

The problem had many aspects, economic, social, hygienic, medical and moral, which were so closely interconnected that their logical separation was difficult. Control of the population was not a new subject, said the lecturer. It began from the time of Malthus more than a century ago, but when the idea started people had no very clear conceptions as to the manner and scope of birth control.

The lecturer feared it might be considered unsavoury to speak about the methods of birth control. He drew pointed attention to three questions of outstanding interest arising from the subject, namely, the necessity for birth control, the possibility of it, and the likely dangers attendant on the practice thereof—physical, moral and social.

Discussing the first question the lecturer said; there is certainly need for birth control, economically, medically, morally and socially. Economically, if the population is not restricted the standard of living becomes low, the cost of living rises, and there is deterioration in all directions affecting the life and welfare of the people. Medically, the result of unrestricted birth is that women get broken down, bringing about their premature death and leading to infantile mortality. Morally and socially, the allowing of large families to grow up leads to the breakdown of the wife and the consequent heavy care weighing down the husband and the whole family. To avoid these troubles men and women prefer postponement of marriage, with which the lecturer could not agree as, according to him, it would result in any amount of unhappiness and to lead to several undesirable results.

PROPER AGE OF MARRIAGE.

Here he referred to the movement for raising the age of marriage, and observed:—I am not saying anything against the movement. There is a great deal to be said in favour of it and a great deal against it too. What surprises me is that witnesses have come forward stating that we must compulsorily put off marriage till 18 in the case of girls and 25 in the case of boys. Now, all this is mere non-sense. You cannot possibly put off the age of marriage without any amount of evil following it. By putting off the marriage you cannot serve the cause of morality, though that kind of enforced celibacy is only nominal. Recently remarkable publications as the effect of the present social institutions in England and America have come out. One for instance is the book which appeared last year and which made a great sensation in America and in England and elsewhere. I refer to Justice Lindsay's book. Another book which also had made a great impression is the one published in England, one part of which deals with questions connected with this subject. They are both books which throw terrible light upon the conditions of these countries and the authors of these books have not certainly any faith in the postponing of the marriage to the age limit to which some of our eminent reformers are quite willing. It is not desirable that young boys and girls should be prevented from marrying. There is a limit beyond which you cannot postpone marriage.

HOW TO AVOID CHILDREN.

Now, if you do not practice birth control and if people have always this fear of a large family hanging over their heads they are not likely to enter into marriage at all. Their tendency will be either not to marry or postpone marriage and the result will be that we shall have institutions of old bachelors and old maids which should not be encouraged to a very great length, as neither of these institutions can be regarded as quite consistent with the happiness of the human being. If men and women have not been deterred by this fear of large families they will be quite willing to marry. If you want to educate your children in a proper way and to bring them up to a standard of life which we consider better, than it is necessary that there should be some restriction upon their birth. Let us remember that those who advocate birth control only say that those who do not want children should know how to avoid children. There are many evils from which we suffer, the evils of early maternity, too frequent maternity, and the unwanted maternity. We should avoid all these with such knowledge as science has brought to the aid of humanity. All these various reasons can be brought forward in favour of spreading a knowledge of the fact that it is quite possible to control birth. This question has been engaging the attention of people for a long time though it has made a great advance during the last few years.

STUPID LAWS.

Coming to the question whether it is possible to practice birth control, he would unhesitatingly say: "Yes". The population in France has been quite stationary for many, many years. Why, it is because the whole population there was versed in the art of birth control. This fact is well known to all educated classes in England, America and other countries. Of course, now and then, a wave of reaction passes over the country and sometimes they try to enact stupid laws; but the result of these laws is not to prevent upper classes from getting at the knowledge they require but it is only to prevent lower classes who probably need the information more than any other class.

And even in England though they had medical practitioners in the Ministry of Health, the Practitioners were not allowed to impart information to poor people as to the methods to be adopted. It was found necessary in the year 1926 for the Lord Chancellor to introduce a measure which permitted them to give information to persons consulting them. We in this country are free from all these, but that is no reason why the knowledge on this subject should be refused among the people.

Now, I come to the next question, whether there are any dangers arising from the practice and principle of birth control. Far from there being any physical danger, it promotes health. There is no physical danger at all. On the other hand, the absence of any restraint upon birth is far more likely to bring about the spread of loathsome diseases than the application of methods of restriction. Some people ask, and most reasonably, whether any particular method can be suggested which will be most preferable, and whether it has any injurious consequences. But that is a question which has been answered in the negative by persons who have a right to speak thereon. I would only say that medical practitioners have discovered methods which are free from being injurious.

CONSIDERATIONS OF MORALITY.

The other question is whether any dangers, moral or social, are to be apprehended from the diffusion of the knowledge of birth control. One argument brought forward is that it may lead to loose relations of morality, but I do not think that the argument is entitled to any serious weight. To these people I would only give one answer. I think the danger is a mere illusion and that those who attack the principle of birth control are not altogether conversant with facts. I have pointed that there are no great dangers to be apprehended from a diffusion of this knowledge; but even supposing that in certain cases the knowledge of these methods is liable to diffuse immorality, it does not follow that people who require it should not observe them for purposes perfectly consistent with morality. There are many things in this world which are liable to be put to a bad use, but that is not a ground for being used by people who require to use it for legitimate purposes.

"It is a subject of the greatest importance to this country," reiterated the lecturer in conclusion, "and early steps have to be taken by the public and by Government to disseminate knowledge of the methods of birth control among the people. But the best methods seems to me to be those which have been adopted recently in England, Denmark, and other places by the establishment of the birth control clinics in charge of eminent people. You can do far more by establishing such things under sympathetic lady doctors by giving information to those who are in need of it and by instructing them in the application of these methods. Mere lecturing or writing about these things is not likely to advance the cause of this question. A course of theoretical study is likely to do something. For instance, in Madras a new association has been formed, called the Neo-Malthusian League. We have formed an association, and we have collected a small library and are trying to publish pamphlets from time to time giving opinions on these subjects. It is the duty of all of us to think seriously on this subject and to think that we have to do to disseminate details for the progress and welfare of this great country.

SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

Mrs. Brijlal Nehru, member of the Age of Consent Committee addressed last week at the Gokhale Hall, a well attended meeting convened under the joint auspices of the League of Youth, Women's Indian Association and other similar organisations.

Dr. Annie Besant, who presided, said that the object of the meeting was the uplifting of women, the getting rid of various obstacles that were in the way of giving them their place in India, where woman in public as well as private life was the comrade and helpmate of man. She looked upon women as the collective incarnation of Shakti and believed that when the women of a country took up any cause for good of the people that cause was destined to thrive. In some cases women in India had come forward very very rapidly and were really ahead of women in England so far as equality of the sex was concerned. Women in India had never had the legal obstacles which had so long kept back women of England. Except prejudice and family objection, there were no laws preventing Indian women's entrance to universities. But absolute enactment had stood in the way of women in England and Scotland. Another advantage Indian women had was that the sympathy of the men went readily to their side. While speaking to Mr. Montague on the question of franchise she had said that there was no reason why a difference should be made in this matter in India, because the habit in India was to let woman do what she wanted. There were no laws to shut her out from universities, or keeping her away from any profession that she desired to take up as was the case for a long time in England. But Englishman could not see that point of view. On the question of raising the age of marriage Indian women were practically united. If this rapid progress was to be helpful to the country the education of girls should be carefully attended to. After referring to some of the important positions occupied by women in India, the speaker said that if the women had courage to break through the dead weight of custom and conventions, they would not find any laws ranged against them—barring the law of inheritance which was not fair to women.

Another striking thing she noticed, when she attended a gathering of women in Delhi (Educational Conference) was that they had no communal prejudice. It was not that women were not religious.

They were more religious than men. They had the real spirit of religion, brotherhood and friendliness and did not fight over communal questions.

MRS. NEHRU'S SPEECH.

Mrs. Brijlal Nehru spoke at length on the imperative need for raising the age of consent. She said that among the numerous evil customs and practices prevalent in India, early marriage was the worst: Looked from the intellectual, physical and moral points of view, in no circumstances could child marriages be justified. But the difficulty was that in spite of the fact that people knew the evils which would result from this, the custom of early marriage had taken a deep root in India.

She then described what she saw in the different provinces she had visited as a member of the Age of Consent Enquiry Committee, as to the evils arising from the practice of child marriage; and gave some interesting incidents also. She drew pointed attention to the growing deterioration in the physique of boys and girls and said that though it was not possible to assert that the one cause of this deteriorated physique was due to early marriage, there was no denying the fact that this custom was a contributory factor. Taking the condition of the whole of India at present it must be said that the infant mortality was greater than anywhere else in the world. So also was maternal mortality. The death of girls between the ages of 10 and 13 was twice that of boys of the same age. She also knew the fact that the average age of Indians was 22 years which was only half of that of those other countries. She would repeat that early marriage was a potent cause for this. When the case was so bad, there was no doubt they ought to make efforts to root it out from their midst. There were two means of doing it, one by propaganda and the other by legislation. Propaganda has been going on in one form or another since the days of Raja Ram Mohan Roy and Dayananda Saraswathi and the results achieved so far could not be said to be satisfying. She then traced the history of the various pieces of legislation in the Central Legislature; and then proceeded to describe the law of the age of consent as it stood to-day. There were two sections governing it, she said; one as to relations of husband and wife, and the other as to extra marital relation, for ages below 12 punishment was 10 years rigorous imprisonment and penal servitude. As regards extra marital relations the punishment was the same but the age was 14. Both were cognisable under 12 years of age; and for ages over 12 and up to 13, it was not cognisable and any member of the public had a right to make a complaint. As a result of the Committee's enquiries so far, it had been found that this law was not known to the public at all, and the Government never devised any means of making it known to the public. She hoped by the end of the enquiry in which they were engaged they would be able to find out the reasons why the public had not taken advantage of this law which so far remained a dead letter. The few cases that had gone to Courts were hardly from those who had the welfare of the girl at heart, but because of enmity of the husband or his relations. The evidence that was recorded by the Committee so far was, she was glad to say for the raising of the age. (Applause) But there had been opposition too. Much of it was from the intellectual city of Madras.

The grounds on which this reform was opposed could be brought under five heads. The first was that it was against the religion. Brahmins stated that it was against the Shastras to get their daughters married post-puberty and it was a sacrilege to perform post puberty marriages. So far, however, the Committee had not been able to get definite proofs to show this contention was really right. It had been a controversial topic for a very long time; and no one could say that the Slokas governing this question were not permissive but mandatory. She was not a Pandit and she could not enter into the controversy; but she ought to put the opposite opinions so that her hearers might judge for themselves as to which of them was right. The second ground of objection to post-puberty marriage was that if girls were allowed to remain unmarried after puberty there was danger of their becoming immoral. On the other side it was contended that it was an unreasonable and imaginary fear. There was absolutely no danger on that account. Besides, it was known that in advanced sections of communities there were great many girls who were being married long after puberty; and there were large numbers of girls going to schools and colleges who remained unmarried for a very long time after puberty. No one heard anything wrong about their morals. The third ground on which the opposition was based was custom; but it must be remembered that custom was always changing and was never a constant factor. The fourth reason was that legislature ought not to interfere in domestic affairs of people such as marriage. It was stated that their homes were sacred and it was no business of the Government to interfere in their domestic affairs. The answer to this was that there were occasions and times when Government had to interfere even in the domestic matter. The health of the race and the nation was the concern of the Government because it was responsible for the health and welfare of the citizens under its charge. Further it was stated that a foreign Government had no right to interfere in the socio-religious questions of the people. The answer to this point was that the Government was not so foreign as it had been when the present law was enacted. Moreover, this was not the only occasion when social legislation had been resorted to. Before this, there had been other laws which affected the liberty of the people.

The fifth ground of opposition, she said, was that so far the law was ineffective and fresh laws also were likely to be ineffective in the future. The reply to this was that at worst it might be said that the law as it stood was inoperative: but it might be possible by some changes to make it operative and effective. It had been suggested that if the Government or certain committees were given the power to receive complaints and investigate cases, it might serve the purpose of bringing such cases to light, which so far remained undetected. But unless men and women of India make up their minds definitely to get rid of these evils from amongst them, a thousand laws in the statute book would not eradicate them. No amount of legislative reform could come to their rescue, if they were not sincere and honest enough to work for the wiping out of the evils, which were eating into the vitals of the Hindu society. Before they thought of political liberty, which was their ideal, they must try to set their house in order and reform themselves.

Mr. Imam Kadri next spoke stating that the Committee was hearing evidence for and against and they would give their best consideration to the evidence recorded.

Dr. Besant spoke a few words in concluding the proceedings and with a vote of thanks proposed by Mrs. Krishna Bai, the meeting terminated.

AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

AT BOMBAY.

The Age of Consent Committee on reassembling in the town Hall on 29th October, examined Rao Bahadur G. V. Pradhan, President of the Widows' Remarriage Association, Nasik.

Replying to Sir Moropant Joshi, the Chairman, witness declared that in the Nasik District the present law regarding the age of consent was hardly known among the uneducated people. He was of opinion that marriages were consummated in some parts of the District below the age of 13. Witness suggested that the age of consent should be raised to 16. He thought legislation penalising child marriages would be more effective than the law of the age of consent.

Mr. Pradhan proceeding stated that intelligent public opinion was distinctly in favour of a higher age limit both for marriages and consent. The uneducated classes were no doubt slow to understand the evil effects of child marriages and they could be brought to the required level only by legislation. For the purpose of determining the age of girls, witness urged the introduction of a better system of registration of births.

IGNORANCE OF MASSES.

Mr. Y. V. Bhandarkar, Honorary Secretary Prarthana Samaj, Bombay, examined by the Committee said that people in Maharashtra hardly seemed to be aware of the state of the law regarding the age of consent. When the age of consent was raised in 1925 hardly any notice of it was taken by the vernacular press. Prosecutions for breach of the law were rare, especially among the higher classes. That being so, there was scarcely any means for the ordinary people to know what the law

(as to the age of consent) actually was. The general trend of public opinion, witness continued was to extend the age of marriage, so that early consummation would be rare, and if there be any at all, neither the wife nor her relations would like to complain. In these circumstances, people had no opportunity to form or express any opinion on the actual state of the law. The usual age at which girls attained puberty in Maharashtra was 13 to 15. He did not attribute the practices of early consummation of marriage before or at the time of attaining puberty to any religious injunction, but said it was due to the force of custom among women. He was of opinion that a girl in India would be competent to give an intelligent consent to cohabitation with due realisation of consequences at the age of 21. He considered that early consummation and early maternity were responsible for high maternal and infantile mortality. Orthodox women in Maharashtra, witness said, favoured early consummation of marriage for their children.

NEED OF PENAL LAW.

Mrs. Faiz B. Tyabji, in the course of her evidence before the Committee thought that an amendment of the present law was urgent. She believed early marriages were harmful to the health of the mother and the children. So far as Islam was concerned consummation before puberty was prohibited and there was no injunction requiring consummation on attainment of puberty. Custom alone was responsible for early marriages amongst the poorer classes of Mahomedans in some parts of the country and the amendment and the present Bill if passed would effectively help these classes as nothing else could. Witness favoured marriage being compulsorily deferred till the age of 16, though in many individual cases it would be much more desirable that marriage should not take place till the age of 18 or 19. She thought penal law and social reform should be employed to combat early marriages as it was of vital importance to the Indian race.

MR. MASANI'S EVIDENCE.

Mr. R. P. Masani, Vice-President of the Bombay Vigilance Association, tendered a statement containing the views of the Association and his personal views. The views of the Association were the same even in the year 1891 when the legislation regarding the age of consent was first enacted, an appreciable section of the public felt strongly that the age then prescribed, twelve, was much too low. When the Government agreed with them, they thought that the social conditions then prevailing did not warrant the adoption of a higher age. Since then owing to the spread of education and contact with Western countries, there was growing dissatisfaction with the existing state of the law on the subject. In the opinion of the Association, the nation was bound to suffer physically, intellectually and morally if the age was retained as at present. The amendment of the law raising the age of consent to 16, outside wedlock, had not appreciably reduced the number of cases of seduction, which were hardly ever brought to court. Ncr had it been instrumental in protecting girls against cohabitation with husbands within the age limit of 13.

PENALISE CHILD MARRIAGE.

The Association was in favour of penalising child marriages as well as raising the age of consent in marital cases. The offence in marital cases should not be included in the sections dealing with rape, and trials should be held in camera. Education and social propaganda could not achieve much without the aid of social legislation.

In his personal statement Mr. Masani observed that as Honorary Secretary to the Society for the Protection of Children in Western India, as a member of the Committee of the Children's Aid Society and as Vice-President of the Bombay Vigilance Association, he had many opportunities of ascertaining the public sentiment on the subject, and he believed he was correct in saying that while the more advanced section of reformers asked that the age be fixed as high as 21, the moderates among the reformers and the general intelligent public were of opinion that the age limit should be at least 16. The existing legislation condoned serious offences against girls who could only be regarded as children. No Government that called itself enlightened could have any excuse for delaying an advance on the existing state of the law, which had a vital bearing on some of the most fundamental conditions of national life.

16 YEARS FAVOURED.

To make the law effective, the age limit should be at least 18 outside the marital state. The mere appearance of puberty was one thing and the actual attainment of physical development sufficient to take to married life and to endure the travails of motherhood was another. A girl's physical development should not be considered sufficient to justify the consummation of marriage without injury to her own health and that of her progeny until at least 5 years after the apparent attainment of puberty—that is to say, not before she was 18. However, as this would appear to many to be an extreme view, he would be content if the age limit was fixed at 16. Outside wedlock it should be 18 if not 21.

He had come across several cases of girls ruined by cohabitation at a tender age. One of the most distressing cases was that of a girl scarcely ten years old who had been wronged and who was suffering from venereal disease when she was sent by the police to the Home of the Society for the Protection of children.

GOVERNMENT'S APATHY.

He had often to complain that Government had been backward in regard to social legislation of this kind. In his opinion it was against all principles of good Government not to move in advance of public opinion. The articulate public opinion was overwhelmingly in favour of the reform. As regards the inarticulate, illiterate masses, already a grievous wrong had been inflicted on them by suffering them to remain illiterate, and if they appeared to be unconcerned, Government should not do further harm to them by refusing to listen to the opinion of those who were qualified to speak on their behalf.

WORK OF VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

Examined by the Chairman, Mr. Masani said that for all practical purposes the age of consent should be fixed at 16.

Replying to Mrs. Beadon, witness said that the Vigilance Association had played a prominent part in bringing to light several cases of seduction from time to time.

Asked by Mrs. Nehru why there had been a paucity of people coming forward to report marital cases, witness said the relatives of the girls who were usually in the know would be unwilling to bring such cases to light.

To Mr. Mahomed Yakub, Miss Dickinson who appeared jointly with Mr. Masani on behalf of the Vigilance Association, replied that five cases of rape under 12 years of age, 39 cases of seduction under 16 were dealt with by the Association.

Rao Bahadur Kanyalal: Would you like to make marital cases cognisable by the police?

A SPECIAL TRIBUNAL.

Mr. Masani: Yes. They should be made cognisable by the police. I may add that such cases should be tried by a special tribunal such as the "Court of Domestic Relations".

Do you recommend that in cases between husband and wife the law should allow the cases to be compounded in order to restore good relations between the parties? Yes, if the Court allows it.

There is a complaint that marital cases are not brought to light. Will your Association help Government in that direction? We shall be glad to do whatever we can, to help Government for the enforcement of the marital law. In rural areas I suggest committees of elders should bring such cases to light.

STRONG ARM OF LAW NEEDED,

PROTECTION OF MINORS.

Mr. Masani made the following appeal at the conclusion of his oral evidence:—

"We hoped that after the Children's Act was passed we might see the dawn breaking after the long, long night of children's sorrow and agony, but we are still in the gloom of night. We harboured similar hopes when the Prevention of Prostitution Act was passed, but, those dens of vice, those slave markets which encourage and facilitate traffic in girls and women, are still left untouched. We want the strong arm of the law to protect minors effectively and to stay the hand of the brutal from offending against rational life."

Dr. Miss Kashibai Nowrange, Honorary Secretary Arya Mahila Samaj, Bombay, was the first witness examined on the 30th. She declared that the Committee of the Samaj was not aware of any circumstances which would justify retaining the law of the age of consent as it is. Even the orthodox section had now realised that in the interest of national progress, it was desirable to have a higher age of consent. If the object underlying the law of consent, namely, safety of the girls from physical, moral and intellectual points of view was to be secured, there was no doubt that a substantial advance on the present law was imperative. In the opinion of her Committee one of the most effective steps in protecting married girls against premature cohabitation would be to have a law fixing 16 as the minimum age of marriage for girls. In other words the age of consent against husbands should be fixed at least at 16. The age of consent should be raised to 18 as against strangers.

EARLY MOTHERHOOD.

Witness thought that cases of young girls becoming mothers at the age of 13 or 14 were not uncommon. Early motherhood of this nature not only resulted in birth of weaklings but also shattered the health of the mothers. The maternal and infantile mortality in India was largely due to early consummation followed by early maternity. She would favour the separation of marital and extra marital cases. The same punishment as at present should stand in extra marital cases, but as regards marital offences if the age of marriage was raised sufficiently high, very few marital cases would arise and she would suggest that a lighter punishment should therefore be provided in such cases. Marital cases should be tried in camera.

GREATER PROTECTION NEEDED.

The next witness who gave evidence before the Committee was Mr. D. G. Dalvi, Secretary of the Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association. Some of the circumstances which in the opinion of the Council of the Association justified an advance in the present law were as follows:—(1) From the physiological point of view, increasing the limit from 12 to 13 was of little consequence and it was therefore necessary to increase it still further; (2) owing to the growing sentiment in favour of the higher education of women, an increasing number of grown up girls remained unmarried up to a late age. Further, owing to the relaxation of purdah and removal of restraints on the freedom of movement in the case of women, larger number of grown up girls moved about freely in the public. The number of women employed in the factories was on the increase. There was also a growing feeling against the obligatory rule of marriage. These circumstances had made it necessary to afford greater protection for the safety of young women. The one step which the Legislature could take to make social reforms more effective was to discountenance child marriage with an ultimate view to its prohibition.

NO RELIGIOUS INJUNCTION.

Fourteen was perhaps the usual age at which girls attained puberty in most parts of India. The Council of the Association did not believe that early consummation of marriage was due to any religious injunction. Wherever it prevailed it was based upon local custom. The question of Sastric authority in social reform was no longer a live issue as it was 30 years ago. The Council were, therefore, of opinion that having regard to prevailing custom and sentiment, 15 should be deemed to be the minimum age for consummation of marriage for girls, though they were inclined to believe that the health of the girl and her progeny was the only consideration, the age limit should be still higher. Not many Indian girls were competent to give an intelligent consent under 18 years of age.

The Council were strongly of opinion that extra marital and marital offences should be distinct and placed in different categories. They would urge that in the case of strangers the age limit of the girl should be not less than 18 and the present punishment should not be reduced. When dealing with the case of the husband, the Council thought different considerations ought to prevail. The age limit for the wife in this case must be 15 and strenuous efforts must be made for preventing marriage of the girl below the age limit. A special provision of law might be made to place marital offences in a different category and lighter punishment might be provided for these offences.

Witness proceeding observed that public opinion would not tolerate a great diversion between the age of marriage and the age of consent if both were fixed by law. But as there were far greater difficulties in the way of raising the minimum age of marriage as contrasted with fixing the higher age of consent, the Council thought that the easier remedy of increasing the age of consent should be availed of, while making every effort to raise the minimum age of marriage so as to approximate it to the age of consent. Social legislation was essential to secure the objects in view.

RAISE AGE OF MARRIAGE.

Replying to the Chairman, Mr. Dalvi said that the Social Reform Association had been holding conferences every year for the past ten years, at every one of which resolutions were passed for a higher age of consent and were sent to the proper authorities.

Chairman: You seem to think that the raising of the age of consent being the easier remedy should be availed of?—What I mean is in the first instance the age of marriage ought to be raised, but as it was, in my opinion, more difficult to attain I would suggest that the age of consent should be raised to 15, while efforts should be made to raise the age of marriage also. I would have these two things secured by legislation as well as social propaganda.

Can you suggest any means by which marriages may be permissible at any age as orthodox people require it, and yet raise the age of consent and make it effective?—I cannot suggest any effective means other than social legislation inflicting deterrent punishment,

REMEDY FOR BREACHES OF LAW.

Witness strongly urged the establishment of a suitable machinery by which breaches of the law could be brought to light. He would delegate to certain bodies, such as the Vigilance Association, the power to make complaints. As regards investigation of cases, he would entrust them to police officers not below the rank of Superintendent of Police in a city like Bombay and Inspector of Police in villages. The Trials should be conducted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate in the City and District Magistrates in the mofussil.

Replying to Dr. Mrs. Beadon, witness said he could recall instances where married girls studying in colleges died after the first or second confinement. Early consummation was common among the backward classes. In his community, namely the Gowd Saraswat community, the age of marriage had been increasing during the past 15 years and early consummation was unthinkable.

EFFECT OF CINEMA FILMS.

To Mrs. Nehru witness replied that there was a general feeling that sensational cinema films produced evil effects on the minds of the young.

Dr. Miss Cama, Inspectress of factories, Bombay Presidency, was examined orally by the Committee. She said she was in charge of maternity homes in factory areas in the Presidency. She declared that there was great infantile mortality among the labouring classes owing to economic and other causes. According to her, the marriageable age for girls should be fixed at 18.

The Age of Consent Committee concluded its public sittings in Bombay on the 30th with the examination of three more witnesses. The Committee then left for Poona on Wednesday afternoon and took evidence there in the New District Court Building from 1st to 5th November excluding Sunday, proceeding from there to Bangalore and thence to Calicut. The evidence collected in all three places was overwhelmingly in support of raising the age.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Tuberculosis Hospital:—Lala Lajpat Rai's scheme for a women's tuberculosis hospital in a suburb of Lahore in memory of his mother, for which he has donated Rs. 1,00,000 is gradually maturing. Besides his donation, the Lala has collected Rs. 75,000 cash from different provinces in India and has been promised another Rs. 20,000 and hopes to collect the balance of Rs. 2,00,000 before the end of the present year. Lala Lajpat Rai has appointed trustees for the administration of the funds of the hospital and requested them to fulfil the two conditions laid down by himself: that the institution shall bear the name of his mother Shrimati Gulabdevi, and that it shall be open to women of all classes with special preference to women of the depressed classes.

Inter Provincial Widow Marriage:—Prof. S. V. Paadri, Hon. Secretary, Vidhya Vivah Sahaik Sabha, Bombay Branch, Arya Samaj writes:—A marriage of Shrimati Vatealabai of Kayastha Prabhu

Community, lady teacher of Surat, took place on the 24th instant, at the Arya Samaj Hall, Girgaum Bombay, with Shah Ishwarlal Jawerchand Choksey. The marriage was attended by distinguished gathering. The ceremony was performed according to Vedic rites. A Social terminated the function. This is an important widow marriage celebrated under the auspices of the Sir Gangaram Trust Society Bombay Branch; the bride is a Deccani lady and the bridegroom comes from the Gujarathi community.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. a. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.

THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

THE

Central Bank of India Ltd.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	,, 1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	,, 1,00,00,000

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches:—(1) Maudvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Rehman Street.

Mofussil Branches:—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharis, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Aqsansol, Chandausi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jamnagar.

London Agents:—The Midland Bank, Ltd.

New York Agents:—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents:—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts:—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhoea and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM,
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Saramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Isiampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Aklaj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulla (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ...	Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:--BARODA.

Branches:--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amrell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwaraka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,60,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd. Baroda.)
Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs.	a.	p.
Inland ...	5	0	0
" " Foreign ...	5	8	0
Single copy ...	0	8	0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudams House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26.

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

RATES MODERATE

Saltings
Shirtings
Dhoters.

V. P. P. SERVICE

Premier Swadeshi Emporium

IVORY CURIOS
SILVERWARE
BRASSWARE
ENAMELLED
and INDEGENOUS
PRODUCTS.

TRAVELLING
and
HOUSE HOLD
REQUISITES
TABLE LINENS
and
BASEL MISSION
PRODUCTS.

IMPROVED QUALITY

Silks
Sarees
Borders.

PROMPT ATTENTION

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
Cruikshank Road, Fort,

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office:— Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS

(Agencies), Ltd.,

16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NIQRAN PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

- | | | |
|-----------------|-----|--|
| EYE DISEASES... | ... | Try "Akhyacura." |
| RING WORM ... | ... | Try "Kurain." |
| ASTHMA ... | ... | Try "Asthma Cure." |
| STRENGTH ... | ... | Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil," |
| TONICS ... | ... | Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills."
"Parrish's Chemical Food."
"Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo-phosphites of Lime." |
| GONORRHOEA .. | ... | Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C."
Copaiba Cum Buchu." |

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :-

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO, LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Saturday at 6 and 9-30 P.M. and Sunday at 9-30 P.M.

THE HAWAIIAN TROUBADOURS

will present

LATEST HAWAIIAN SONGS AND DANCES.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Saturday and Sunday at 3-30, 6-15, and 9-45 P.M.

Paramount's Colossal Epic of the Air

"THE WINGS"

with

CLARA BOW, CHARLES ROGERS AND RICHARD ARLEN.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Saturday and Sunday at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

"SVENGALI"

from the world-famous novel

"TRILBY"

A thrilling mystery drama featuring

PAUL WEGENER AND ANITA DORISS.

EMPRESS CINEMA

Saturday and Sunday at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

"RESURRECTION"

featuring

DOLORES DEL RIO AND ROD LA ROCQUE.

from the world-famous novel by

COUNT LEO TOLSTOY

Special morning show on Sunday at 10 A.M.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1928

No. 15

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The King's Health.	Wish Thinking.
Indian Women's Deputation.	Our Defectives.
The Mission to Lepers.	Arya Bhavan.
Orthodoxy at Eay.	Women's Educational Conference.
Triumph of Social Reform.	Tamil Nadu Women's Educational Conference.
The Late Mr. T. B. Marzban.	The Age of Consent Inquiry.
Dr. Rai's Acknowledgment.
"Care of Infants in India."

NOTES.

The King's Health:—The latest news (Friday morning) about the health of His Majesty the King is more re-assuring than it has been for a week past. The bulletin issued on Thursday morning stated that he passed a fair night. The temperature was lower and the general condition was slowly improving. "The infective process which remains severe is becoming localised." It was authoritatively stated the King's condition at 4 O'clock on Thursday evening was unchanged. A Reuter's message says that the Royal household regards the significant omission of "anxiety concerning the heart" in the bulletin as encouraging. The vicissitudes of His Majesty's illness have been followed with world-wide sympathy and there is every probability that the crisis has been passed. In view of the prolonged rest which would be necessary before the King resumes his normal duties, a Royal Commission, with the queen and the Prince of Wales included, was nominated this week to deputise for His Majesty.

Indian Women's Deputation:—A deputation headed by the Dowager Rani of Mandi and consisting of Mrs Ahmed Shah, who was for a short time a member of the United Provinces Legislative Council and other ladies waited on the Simon Joint Conference at Lucknow on Wednesday last. The deputation pressed the claims of women for special representation in the local Legislative council and demanded a broadening of the franchise so that more women could exercise their right to vote. The deputation submitted that out of 1,500,000 votes in the province women possessed only 50,000. They stated that the reason for this glaring disparity between the proportion of men and women electors to actual population was due to the fact that the same qualifications had been prescribed for women as for men. They pointed out that women did not ordinarily possess property in their own names, nor did they pay income-tax or house rent. They generally shared property with the male members of their family, the name of one or more of whom appeared in the electoral roll. The deputation therefore urged that in order that women may possess a franchise which would bear some reasonable ratio to their numerical strength, the franchise should not be based solely on the property possessed by a woman herself. They suggested that if a father or a husband possessed qualifications which were twice in excess of the minimum qualifications prescribed for a man the daughters or wife should ipso facto acquire the franchise. This would be in addition to those women who at present possessed the franchise by virtue of their having necessary qualification in their own rights. They further requested that four separate seats should be reserved in the U. P. Council for women for which purpose the Province should be divided into four suitable territorial constituencies and in each of which women who had reached certain standard of education, say upper primary or middle class school certificate, should be registered as an elector. The suggestion that the daughters and wives who have no qualifications in their own right should derive it from their fathers or husbands is a good idea. But there is this fear that it would mean so many extra votes for the men themselves, the man having many daughters and wives will be decidedly a gainer. There is much in the suggestion that literacy test should be adopted as a qualification for women. As regards the suggestion that the purdah should be introduced in polling booths as a transitory measure in some parts of the country, it cannot be avoided at present but in view of the obvious possibilities of its abuse the sooner we are able to do without the better would be for the women's cause. As for the reservation of seats for women in the local council, women should not constitute themselves into a separate class of which we have only too many and should take their chance along with men. When capable women offer themselves for election, they are bound to succeed. This has been amply borne out by elections to the Bombay City Corporation which has three elected women representatives on it. In elections as in other matters defeats are to be expected and should be taken in a sporting spirit.

The Mission to Lepers:—We have just received a copy of the annual report of the Mission to Lepers. The mission has completed its fifty-fourth year of service and has met with greater success during the year under review. The mission has established leper asylums all over India—three in Bengal, six in Bihar and Orissa, two in Burma, eight in Bombay, six in the Central Provinces, six in Madras, three in the Punjab and four in United Provinces, besides the Leper homes established in the Indian States.

Larger numbers have gone for help to the Asylums than in previous years—a fact which proves conclusively that people are coming to recognise the usefulness of these institutions. The Report points out, however, that a good deal of the work rendered by these homes is invisible. It says: "No one knows who might be infected by contagious cases in our homes if they were not living away from contact with healthy people. One only knows that there are large numbers with the contagious types of the disease in our homes, and that medical opinion is united in its witness of the fact that it is by contact between diseased and healthy that the scourge of leprosy is transmitted. The largest leper institution not only in India but in the whole Empire is the Mission's Leper Colony at Purulia. Seven hundred lepers are resident in the Asylum though there is only accommodation for six hundred and forty. "It is now the melancholy task at many Homes," says the Report, to have to turn away applicants." It is the duty of the public in this country to give the whole-hearted support to the Mission which it so richly deserves and thus enable it to extend its activities.

Orthodoxy at Bay:—The Age of Consent Committee had on the whole sailed on smooth seas until it reached Madras. In the Punjab, only one Mahomedan witness, so far as we remember, demurred to the proposition that too early marriages led to physical deterioration of both mother and off spring. Elsewhere there were few persons who supported the continuance of child marriages. All women witnesses, even in Madras, deplored the effects of child marriages and strongly pleaded for legislation to discountenance them directly and indirectly. In direct opposition some highly educated Brahmin gentlemen maintained before the Committee that child marriages—between the ages of 8 and 12 for girls was imperatively enjoined by the Sastras and that they were not injurious to the health of the mothers or the children. In reply to a pertinent question from Mrs. Brijlal Nehru whether Brahmins in the South followed all other injunctions of the Sastras or only this one, the witness boldly replied that most of the Brahmins followed all the injunctions and if some of these were overlooked, there were prayaschitha or purificatory rites much as the uttering of the Gayatri Mantra a number of times, but there was no prayaschitha for adult marriages!

Triumph of Social Reform:—No doubt owing to force of public opinion the contemplated marriage between the Maharaja of Alwar and a Rajput girl of the Vankaner State has been abandoned. The following information is from an Associated press message:—Devubha Ravaji, a Rajput of the Vankaner State, whose 18 year old daughter was proposed to be given in marriage to the Maharaja of Alwar as his fourth wife, has addressed a letter to the Maharaja conveying his decision against the proposal. He says it is a custom among the Rajput community not to marry parties with a wide disparity in their ages. He had thought this custom was not applicable to Rajas, but was now informed that it applied to all, and that if the Maharajah went against it he was likely to be outcasted. Devubha adds that his daughter is also unwilling to marry the Maharaja. The Alwar State party, who are touring these parts, will, it is stated, now turn their attention to other States in search of a bride for their Ruler. We welcome the decision of the father not to entertain the Maharaja's proposal for the hand of his daughter. If he had stuck to the wholesome custom of his caste, he would have been saved from the criticism that his action invited. The one saving grace of the caste system is that it is no respecter of persons. It is still to be regretted that the fear of ostracism rather than the well-being and happiness of his daughter has dictated the step he has taken. The girl's unwillingness is assuredly to be taken for granted. No young girl can be expected to accept the unenviable position of a fourth wife in a Maharaja's household! But what surprises us most is, instead of learning a lesson from this refusal, the Alwar State people are scouring the other parts of Kathiawar for a bride for their ruler. We ardently hope that their search will be ineffective and that parents and daughters will follow the example set by Mr. Ravaji and his daughter. It is high time that our much married Maharajas ceased collecting wives and that younger generation among them professed and practised the principle of monogamy.

The Late Mr. T. B. Marzban:—We regret to record the death of Mr. T. B. Marzban at the age of 81 on Wednesday the 5th. The late Mr. Marzban was one of the oldest journalists in Bombay. He was the proprietor of the "Jame-Jamshed", a Gujerati newspaper which has been in existence for the last 96 years. His connection with Bombay journalism extends over a period of 60 years, and he was the author of several Gujerati works. He was also a public worker. He took a keen interest in women's education and was for a period of 30 years the Hon. Secretary of the Zoroastrian Girls' Schools in the Fort. Dhobi Talao and Mazagon. He was also connected with the Committee of the Alexandra Girls' School.

Dr. Rai's Acknowledgement:—Dr. Amrit Rai, the son of Lala Lajpat Rai writes: "I shall be highly obliged if you kindly let me, on behalf of my dearest mother, myself, and my brothers including my nephew and the members of the Servants of the People Society, gratefully acknowledge through your columns the touching messages (too numerous to enable us to acknowledge them personally) we have received on the sudden and untimely death of our beloved father Lala Lajpat Rai Ji. To us the loss is irreparable, but we feel it no small consolation in this hour of trial that our grief is shared by so many of our compatriots."

"Care of Infants in India":—We have received a copy of the new and revised edition of "Care of Infants in India," published recently by the Mellin's Food Limited London. The handbook is intended as a guide to mothers in India in the proper up-bringing of their babies. The booklet contains valuable information on nursery hygiene based on simple scientific facts. With special care in matters of diet and general surroundings, there is no conceivable reason why infants should not thrive in India as in colder countries where the infantile mortality is very low. We welcome this booklet as an indispensable aid to mothers.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER
BOMBAY, DECEMBER 8, 1928.

SIR LESLIE AND LADY WILSON.

Sir Leslie Wilson's five year period as Governor of Bombay terminates to-day (Saturday, the 8th) when he starts with Lady Wilson on his return voyage to his native land. His lot has been cast in a troublous time. The political awakening of the masses consequent on the non-co-operation movement has naturally been greatest in the Bombay Presidency and particularly in Gujarat where Mahatma Gandhi had established his Satyagrah-ashram. The European community in India is peculiarly prone to panic and the manifestations of popular discontent, to it, deserve only to be met with rigorous suppression. The task of the British statesman in India has always been rendered difficult by having to consider the susceptibilities of the community which naturally exercises much direct and indirect influence over Government in devising measures to allay Indian discontent. Sir Leslie Wilson has from the first instinctively taken a right view of the political situation, and constitutionally he was not a believer in the virtue of "Martial law and no damned nonsense." His Excellency's patience in dealing with popular movements has no doubt often seemed to the European community as an indication of weakness. But unlike Lord Reay who was, perhaps, the greatest British Governor Bombay has had Sir Leslie Wilson by his personal qualities, prominent among which is affability, managed to retain to a large extent a strong hold on the good will of his fellow-countrymen. For the rest, the achievements of the administration during the last five years have been of a negative rather than a positive character. For this, Sir Leslie Wilson is not to blame. The Meston settlement, which determined the share of the provincial revenues, left this Presidency with utterly inadequate financial resources. These were heavily encumbered with liabilities undertaken during his predecessor's regime in the shape of the Back Bay reclamation and the Sukkur Barrage. The money left for expenditure on the nation building departments entrusted to Indian Ministers was barely enough to keep them going. Owing to the communal composition of the Legislative Council, the Governor was obliged to choose his Ministers not for administrative capacity but according to the measure of communal support they could rely upon in the Council, and Ministers so chosen were perforce obliged to consider communal claims before general interests. The result was that the Governor realised that he could do very little through the medium of administration and threw himself into a scheme for promoting the extension of the uttlerly inadequate Hospital accommodation in Bombay city through private benefactions. In this and kindred movements, he had the valuable co-operation of Lady Wilson who has shown herself to be a woman of broad sympathies. But for her frequent ailments, she would have been able to leave her impress on Indian social activities to a larger and deeper extent. As it is, however, her work for the Maternity and Child Welfare movements, and her warm-hearted sympathy with all activities having for their object the education and amelioration of the condition of women, have been considerable factors in the great personal popularity which has, through the whole period of their stay in India, surrounded Sir Leslie and Lady Wilson. They leave behind them many friends and a very large circle beyond their personal ken, of persons who have watched their career in India with a sincere appreciation.

"UNDERSTANDING INDIA."

There have been several inquiries regarding "Understanding India" by Mrs. Gertrude Williams which was noticed in the Reformer last week. We have not been able as yet to ascertain whether copies of the book are available in India, but we expect to know in the course of the next few days. The following pen-picture of Mahatma Gandhi as Mrs. Williams saw him will be read with interest:

"I like best to remember him as I saw him at Belgaum on the last day of the congress. The speakers' dais was framed in festoons of flowers and red, green and white bunting, stamped in black with Gandhi's beloved Charka. Beyond the arched entrance to the tent lay a wilted formal garden and fountain, framed in receding arches of bamboo. Beyond the garden, yellow matting arches marked the street intersections. Crossing the long perspective of these arches flowed a mass of men and women, their homespun draperies and turbans a dazzling field of colour in the sunlight. In their aimless multitude they were a symbol of India herself and the problems with which the men in the tent were groping.

High above us, rose the speakers' rostrum, wreathed in jasmine and marigold. Here stood Gandhi, a slim dark wisp of a man, barelegged, naked to the waist. He ended his closing speech and turned to go. On the top step he paused and stood, looking out over the tensely silent delegates, down the avenue of bamboo arches to the throng flowing past like a river. There was utter silence, and the air was charged with an amazing sense of mutual love. It was a benediction, issuing from Gandhi over the heads of these people he loved with all the sublimated passion of his being. At last, without a word, he came slowly down the steps."

“WISH-THINKING”.

(By Dr. Clifford Manshardt, Ph. D.).

In his recent book, About Ourselves, Professor H. A. Overstreet devotes a chapter to the problem of “wish-thinkining,” which is really the rationalisation of our prejudices. Because we strongly desire to assign good motives to our actions we do so, conveniently forgetting the baser motives that may underly them. Because certain ideas are displeasing to us, we hang out the “No Admittance” sign and refuse them entrance. We like to appear heroic and honourable in our own sight, and so even though defeated we create a series of fictions which in our own minds turns defeat into victory. We spend much time in building up a philosophy to defend our own weaknesses. In other words our desires and wishes lead us into that self-deception and evasion which is the enemy of factual thinking, honesty, and human progress.

Although Professor Overstreet draws his examples from American life, it is equally possible to apply the above principles to India, for human nature is pretty much the same, the world over. Here for example, is a politician. He professes loudly and earnestly that his only desire is to serve his country, and when he has repeated it often enough he probably believes it. But as a rule the motive is not so simple. This man is faced by many desires. He loves the excitement of politics. He enjoys the feeling of mastery that comes to the leader of men. He likes to see his name in the papers, and to read the published addresses of the brilliant Mr. Thus-and-So. He cherishes the prestige that comes through holding public office. He dreams of political advancement, and the rights and privileges thereof. He wants to serve his country, but unless he is a very unusual person he wants to serve himself. I am not suggesting that this is wrong. I am simply suggesting that our motives are more mixed than we ourselves often realise, and that even the best of us must continually be on our guard lest we think more highly of ourselves than we have any business to think.

Then what about those ideas that we do not like. If we are ardent Nationalists we close the door to the good which is foreign. If we are autocrats we can see little good in democracy. If we are democrats we can see no good in autocracy. If we are militarists we despise the pacifists. If we are pacifists we suspect the militarists. Truth is of small importance, we believe the things we want to believe, and lock out the others. To admit a truth that would weaken our position is the rankest heresy. In the political and religious movements within India to-day, the “No-Admittance” sign is strongly to the fore. Propaganda tends to assume a larger importance than fact. Our leaders ask us to believe the things they would like to have us believe, and try to minimise the things they do not care to admit. Such a procedure may hold the rank and file in line, but is no sound basis upon which to build enduring institutions. The development of an educated, straight-thinking people, able to form independent judgment must be the highest aim of every true patriot.

The classic example of “giving defeat the semblance of victory,” is the action of Potiphar’s wife in causing the young Joseph to be cast into prison because he had spurned her advances. Hate is far too often but a “balm to.....wounded self-respect.” The fanatical zeal of many communal leaders is not so much inspired by love of their own religion as by disappointment resulting from political weakness. The readiness to interne troublesome political leaders on minor charges is part and parcel of the same process. The true reason for action is displaced by a nobler, fabricated one, which endeavours to turn attention from one’s own disgrace through the discomfiting of another. The scape-goat is ever with us.

“Defending our weaknesses”—who doesn’t. We carry on activities in the traditional, conventional method, and then although realising that a new method is superior to the old, we bring forward every support to convince ourselves that the inferior method is the best one. Sometimes we do it out of race pride, and sometimes simply because we do not care to go through the painful process of learning something new. Outworn social customs are clung to tenaciously and defended by reference to the sacred books, not because we believe in them, but because we lack the energy to agitate for social change. In other words, “respect for the fathers” is often thrown up as a smoke screen for laziness.

The remedy is honest thinking—the kind of thinking that is exacted by the sciences. Some day we shall probably recognise that our schools must generate thought instead of encouraging conformity. When that day dawns we shall have registered a real advance.

OUR DEFECTIVES.

(By A Lady Social Worker).

One of the special features of the Conference of the All-India Federation of Teachers’ Associations, which met in Bombay in the first week of this month was the Demonstration of the work of the defectives. On the 7th of November 1921, eight institutions for the defectives met in the Victoria Memorial School for the blind to show what was possible for them to do. That marks the success which steady propaganda had achieved. We wish such demonstrations are more frequent. The delegates rightly congratulated Mr. H. D. Chhatrapati, Principal of the Victoria Memorial School for the blind, on his unique success in inducing not only all the four institutions for the Blind, and the one for the Deaf Mutes of Bombay but in bringing together under the same roof the Deaf Mutes from Ahmedabad and Poona again. For the first time in the History of India the defectives of various parts stood shoulder to shoulder and attempted to know one another. It was a sight to see pupils from the American Mission School for the Blind, inmates from the Industrial Home for the Blind and three of the Happy Home for the Blind wending their way to the Victoria Memorial School for the Blind. The presence of pupils from the Deaf Mutes Schools of Ahmedabad and Poona with that strong contingent from Prof. Date added immensely to the attraction.

The band of the Blind put in the door enabled even strangers to easily spot the School. The wall sheets with figures in bold presented items of interest which clearly indicated the magnitude of mischief wrought by State and Society alike. Equally, showed they, with lantern slides the triumph Science had achieved, in the work of the Blind Relief Association, Bombay. The special place assigned to them in the central door with the western light easily helping the visitors to appreciate their worth, marked, how important is the work of the conservation and restoration of vision. They showed, as Mr. Chhatrapati so singularly urges upon every audience that we can by proper efforts wipe off 60 to 70 per cent of our blindness and deafness. They showed, again, that hope loomed equally large even for those whose eyes or ears or both were lost. The central place assigned to Helen Keller, that world-renowned blind and deaf mute girl, whose life and writings inspire others in similar distress, rung the deathknell of all despair. It will much assist Sanitary Associations, Local Boards, Municipalities, Schools, Colleges and Baby Week and other organisations of their type to stock these slides, which have been specially made available practically at cost price.

On either side, again, stood tables presenting teaching apparatus and appliances. Another big table showed the circulating library for the Blind and another, again, the craniums of the horse and the lion and specimens of stuffed animals. The embossed maps and the globes in bamboo and cane with arrangement for actual rotation indicate the directions in which efforts are made for the education of the Blind. They point, again, to the possibilities that pastime occupation properly encouraged could achieve in education.

To an outsider coming for the first time in contact with the Blind, Braille presented an attraction all its own. To mark the Blind open their ponderous volumes and read as their tiny fingers moved over the raised dots seemed so captivating. The interest deepened as one watched the Blind working Arithmetic with line. It was interesting again to dictate to the Blind and carry the paper, pitted all over, which some blind friend, in some other room, turned and read, without so much as an effort. A sightless student on the sewing machine was a picture to behold. But the visitor halted quite, and watched and watched, as urchin after urchin threaded his needle, at a speed which puzzled even the sighted. It seemed all play and fun with them. The singularly clean compound with samples of cane work, of students past and present, and the arrangement for gymnasium and sports were—other memorial features of attraction. It was a pleasure to watch a line of boys, all blind, working their way simultaneously up and down the plank, ladder, trapiz, the see-saw, the horizontal bar and so forth. The tug-of-war and all other items of sports and the playing cards were marked in Braille and a large cane-ring showed that there was room enough for work and play again for the Blind.

The Deaf Mutes had their own halls for their work. Though mute they were not the less vociferous in attracting attention. Under the enthusiastic guidance of Mr. T. L. Desai, the boys from the Ahmedabad School showed how they were learning to speak. Their specimens of work showed what was possible for Deaf Mutes to do. Belonging to Bombay, Prof. Date had come with a number of pupils and took special pains to explain how his method of teaching the Deaf Mute boys to speak had succeeded. A passing visit of the type could ill-afford opportunities to pronounce an opinion. But everyone seemed struck with the clear intonation and faultless pronunciation of the pupil from Poona, whom Mr. Gondhalekar his teacher, allowed to show the limit to which patient, persistent work could reach. The public owes a deep debt of gratitude to these silent workers in the field of our defectives.

Such sacrifice at the hands of voluntary workers in the field of Social Service marks an era of welcome progress. The quinquennial report of the Bombay Educational Department presents figures re. our defectives which reflect this progress. The all round increase in the number of our schools and pupils both for Blind and Deaf with corresponding increase in institutional expenditure ought to prove an eye-opener.

Depressing, however, is the outlook as one notices the steady decrease of Government grant. While with Society the State seems to be actively up in mitigating, the many miseries it has manufactured as a result of its neglect in the West, Government in India seems to practically believe it to be no concern of theirs to think of our Defectives. As the handicap of the workers grows greater, Society ought to share the full responsibility and bear all the burden of the many whom it daily blinds, maims, lames, and cripples in ways too numerous to note. Our appeal, therefore, to all to stand by these voluntary workers deserves support at the hands of all who love our Motherland. We advise all interested in this direction to communicate with Mr. H. D. Chhatrapati, Secretary of the All India Workers for the Defectives at the Victoria Memorial School for the Blind, Tardeo, for all information and advice in this direction.

ARYA BHAVAN.

(By MR. C. F. ANDREWS).

One of the most difficult problems to be solved in England is the question of the residence of Indian visitors who come over from time to time and wish to keep up their vegetarian habits, which are a matter of principle to them.

Hitherto this problem has been extremely difficult, and many who have come over have suffered very severely on account of this difficulty of finding food suitable to their principles.

In the autobiography of Mahatma Gandhi it is made very clear how great were the difficulties which he himself had to undergo in order to maintain his principles. Others who have come to England since his time have found hardships not much less severe than his. It is true that there are many more vegetarian restaurants in London than there used to be, but it is extremely difficult to find a house in which vegetarian food can be properly prepared. If rooms are taken on the understanding that vegetarian dishes will be provided, the food is then given in a very unpalatable form and health immediately suffers. In a great number of cases Hindus whose principles were very strict in this matter before they came to the West, found themselves very gradually letting go their fixed principles not because of any change in their convictions, but rather on account of the hardship involved in carrying them out.

It was an exceedingly happy thought of Mr. Ghanshyamdas Birla, when he came over to England in the year 1927, to make, as far as he possibly could, provision for the needs of those of his own fellow-countrymen who had their strict principles with regard to vegetarian diet and could not find suitable arrangements in London for carrying out those principles to the full. Before he left England in 1927 he made arrangements and took the first steps whereby a house in a very healthy part of London should be occupied and fitted out for Indian residents on the understanding that all who came there to reside should strictly abide by the vegetarian and temperance principles which Mr. Birla himself holds so strongly.

Along with Mr. Ghanshyamdas Birla, Mr. Ramgopal Mohta has been acting as founder. These two friends, who are also relatives, have between them purchased the property and entrusted the house at 30 Belsize Park called "Arya Bhavan" to a Board of Trustees of which Mr. Birla, Mr. Ramgopal Mohta, Seth Jamnalal Bajaj of Wardha and Sir A. C. Chatterjee are the members.

Mr. Ramgopal Mohta himself has given half a lakh of rupees towards the object. The rest of the cost, which amounts to nearly £10,000, has been provided by Mr. Ghanshyamdas Birla himself.

Since Mr. Birla's visit to England last year as the Employers' Delegate to the Tenth International Labour Conference at Geneva, his scheme, which I have outlined above, has been carried into effect by Mr. K. M. Banthiya and Mr. Devi Prasad Khaitan, who have personally given every possible attention to every detail in it and spent much time and energy in carrying out Mr. Birla's own wishes. In everything, they have consulted Mr. Birla himself, and the house is now not only made ready for occupation, but also fully occupied day by day by visitors such as merchants and others who have found it the greatest possible convenience in carrying out any work in England without any interference with their strict religious principles as Hindus.

It has been not only a great pleasure, but also a matter of health and power, of continuous and strenuous work for me to be allowed to be in residence with my friends in this house and to take part in its life. Whenever I have been passing through London, or staying in London, I have had the great privilege of coming to "Arya Bhavan" as a welcome guest and making my home there in every sense of the word. I am thus able to write not only from fact, but actually from my own daily personal experience concerning the extraordinary value of such a house in London when used for the purposes which Mr. Ghanshyamdas Birla intended it.

In order to carry out Mr. Birla's scheme successfully he appointed a Managing Committee consisting of the following members:—Mr. Henry S. Polak, Chairman, Mrs. N. C. Sen, Vice-Chairman, Mr. K. B. Mavlankar, Mr. R. J. Udani, Dr. R. Paranjpye, Mr. S. Mallick, Mr. K. P. Kotva, Dr. K. Pardy, and Mr. K. M. Banthiya, Secretary. This Committee has met regularly and is very keenly carrying out the wishes of the founders in order to make the Institution as successful as possible. The house now contains actual accommodation for 10 guests and has been furnished with all the necessary conveniences for interesting visitors who may wish to come there after application has been made. It is intended in the course of time to erect a small temple in the grounds at the back of the house for private worship of the guests and the authorities have been approached for the necessary permission in this direction. The rules regulating the house for boarders and visitors are of a very simple character. The first two lay down the principles of the house which can never be departed from on any account.

1. Arya Bhavan is intended to be a strict vegetarian lodge from which are excluded even eggs and fish.

2. No alcohol, intoxicants or narcotic drugs are permitted on the premises.

The 3rd rule states that the conduct and management of the house shall be left entirely in the hands of the Committee of Management appointed by the Trustees, and that this committee may add to the number from time to time with the consent of the Trustees.

Other rules state that preference shall be given to visitors from India, but whenever room is available students also can be admitted for such time and on such condition as the committee may decide. Visitors from India will ordinarily not be allowed to stay for more than four months without special permission from the Committee of Management, and it is therefore stated that these visitors should as far as possible make their application for residence addressed to Mr. K. M. Banthiya, Hon. Secretary, Arya Bhavan, 30, Belsize Park, N. W. 3, at least two months before the date of arrival in England.

The ceremony of opening the house was performed on June 25th, when Sir Atul Chatterjee, High Commissioner for India, opened the house in the name of the founders. Photographs of the opening ceremony and a picture of the house itself are included with this article and will be of interest to those in India who have read news in the press of the intention of this Institution.

The day was a delightfully fine one and the ceremony itself was tremendously successful. Mr. Khaitan made the speech on behalf of the guests, who thanked Sir Atul Chatterjee for his presence and gave the warmest welcome from India to those who were working in England in the cause of those from India who had come into residence in England. The opening ceremony was well reported in the English Press, and I have felt anxious after my own experience during the past two months of the value of "Arya Bhavan" to make known personally in India how great a privilege has now been given in England to those who wish to come to England and to keep up their strict vegetarian and temperance principles.

I can assure them that within the house itself everything is being done which can possibly be done to provide good, simple and pure food of vegetarian character, which as far as possible, is cooked in Indian style and has all that will satisfy their simple Indian taste in the way of vegetables, curries and cereals. Puri is provided at each meal as well as rice dishes and an abundance of fruit is given which makes the meal as wholesome as possible.

One of the advantages of the Arya Bhavan as the centre of this new venture, is the fact that it stands on one of the highest parts of London above many of the fogs and mists which are often very thick along the sides of the River Thames in the lower area. It also is conveniently situated in a street which has very little through traffic for motors and heavy lorries. Thus it is extremely quiet compared with other streets in London. Furthermore, it certainly has much more sunshine in the somewhat sunless land of England than more low lying quarters. For instance, I have gone through the city where there was a dark misty atmosphere up to Belsize Park, and have found there sunshine instead of shadow. The house is also very conveniently situated as far as the underground railway is concerned. It lies between the two stations of Swiss Cottage on the Metropolitan and Belsize Park on the Hampstead tube. It is quite easy to get to the city from either station and the journey to Charing Cross from Belsize Park does not occupy more than a quarter of an hour in the tube. It is also possible to get to the Bank and Mansion House in the same period of time.

It is not possible to speak too highly about such an arrangement for Indian visitors as this. The need was so great that it almost seems surprising nothing had been effectively done to fulfil such a want before, but now that it has been fulfilled, it is already quite clear that every use will be made of it, and it is likely that the same principle will be chosen in the same neighbourhood in order to provide for those who cannot get accommodation owing to want of space in Arya Bhavan.

My own good wishes go with the founders and with the Hon'ble Secretary, Mr. K. M. Banthiya, and with Mr. Deviprasad Khaitan who have been so splendidly carrying out the founders' design, and Mr. and Mrs. Polak have also given most valuable assistance. Considering in how short a time the house has been prepared for occupation, it is quite remarkable to see how quickly full use has been made of it. It is also equally interesting to be able to state that the kindest feelings among members who are in residence have been fully manifested, and not a single hitch has yet occurred in any of the arrangements, which has been due, more than to any other cause to the strenuous work of Mr. K. M. Banthia.

WOMEN'S EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE.

MADRAS WOMEN'S CONFERENCE.

In the course of her presidential address Mrs. Subbarayan said:—The education that our girls receive should be such that it should make them imbibe principles of charity and service and also prepare them to put these ideals into practice when they go out into the world. Education should give our girls a broad outlook on life, removing all narrow-mindedness of bigoted orthodoxy, of caste and class prejudices, and of belief in superstitious tradition. It is only when our men and women begin to realise the dangers of many of our social customs, and the necessity for abolishing them, that our country will really advance and attain true freedom. Those weak men who now preach high sounding nationalism, but when asked why they do not live up to their theories, cowardly put the blame on their women, will have no excuse and no argument left if our women themselves urge the reform of our social customs.

The resolutions that will be discussed at the Conference deal with some of the most important and urgent of the reforms at present necessary, and I shall not therefore speak on them now. But I feel I must mention one subject which I consider most important and that is, the removal of caste prejudices. Unfortunately, I do not find it included among the resolutions even though the problem of untouchability is the burning question of the day. The sooner we realise that we are all equals, children of the same Father, citizens of the some motherland, the sooner shall we attain that object which is very near to our hearts, and that is, the creation of a united nation with undivided aims. It is most inhuman to treat human beings like ourselves as "untouchable". To believe that the very touch, nay even the shadow of one fellow creature pollutes another, just because one is born in a caste which superstition has termed high caste and another in what is termed low caste, is certainly cruel, terribly cruel. It is no fault of an individual that he is born in any particular caste. Let us, we women, who have had the light of education to see the fallacy of these old inhuman beliefs, boldly work to do away altogether with this caste evil.

Compulsory elementary education for all children and for our girls in particular is a subject which interests me very much. Whenever I have occasion to travel, I take note of the progress of elementary education in our villages, and I am glad to say that even in the most lonely and out-of-the-way villages people are beginning to appreciate education; and girls and boys have begun to go to school. There is nevertheless plenty of scope for progress and it is clear that if education is to reach our masses, compulsion should be introduced. This is no doubt an expensive and therefore a difficult problem, and like all such problems can be solved by the State, only with the generous aid of the public. In the West, most of the educational institutions are private benefactions. In India, we are just beginning to understand the need for such secular benefactions and let us hope that our fortunate rich will think of the unfortunate poor, and help them by founding schools and scholarships.....I noticed in England that the most expensive item in the family budget is "children's education" and that the parents attach the greatest importance to this expenditure. But here we are inclined to grudge such expenditure. Even those who can easily afford to spend more than three times the required sum grumble to pay a few rupees a month as school fees for a child. Only the other day, I was surprised to hear some parents grumble that they had to pay Rs. 5 a month as school fees for a child when those parents' monthly income was about as many or more thousands. Yet, at the same time, these very parents do not like the children of the poor to attend the same schools to which they send their children. We must think out this problem of compulsory education and help the local bodies and Government to carry it out as early as possible.

Elementary education should be made more interesting and attractive. Instruction in three Rs alone will not suffice. General knowledge, kindergarten, music, drawing, painting, games and physical culture should also be taught; and sewing as well to girls. Women, I need hardly say, are really best fitted for teaching in Elementary Schools especially in infant classes. Women possess the natural gift of understanding and managing little children. I am glad that a resolution on this subject is to be discussed to-day. As regards Secondary and University Education, these again should not be literary, especially for women. It should be so framed as to equip them to fulfil the duties they will be called upon to perform after they finish their school and college career and these duties will for the majority of them be those of house-wife and mother.

The other important point is about religious instruction.....Unfortunately in India, we have till now been giving no kind of religious instruction in schools on the plea that we have children of various sects in the same school. As a result there is a grave danger of our young men and women growing up without that moral and religious background, which is so very essential for the healthy formation of character. Though it is not a pleasant thing for me to say, I think it must be admitted that this danger confronts us Hindus more than it does the other communities, Muhammadans and Christians receive religious instruction out of the school or generally attend schools run by their co-religionists, but what does a Hindu child get?.....When I was a child, parents used to talk to children of holy and religious matters and have family worship every morning and evening. Children were made to learn and recite devotional songs. But that custom, I am sorry to say, is fast dying. Parents to-day hardly ever devote any attention to these matters.

TAMIL NADU WOMEN'S EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE.

The Tamil Nadu Constituent Conference of the All-India Conference of Women's Education was held yesterday afternoon at 3-30 p.m. in the bungalow of Dr. C. Appavu Pillai, at Viraraghavapuram. Over a hundred ladies attended, and among those present were Mrs. Galletti, Mrs. Sankara Aiyar, the President, Mrs. K. L. Rao, Honorary Magistrate, Mrs. Sadhu Ganapati Pantulu, Mrs. Hamsa Doraikannu of Madura, Mrs. Daniel Thomas, Mrs. Ponnuswami, M. B. E., Mrs. Paul Municipal Councillor, and others.

MRS. GALLETTI'S OPENING SPEECH.

In declaring the conference open Mrs. Galletti made an interesting speech in which she said that the education of the women of the country was such a vital and stupendous problem as to be beyond the capacity of private enterprise. The State ought to be legitimately saddled with the entire responsibility for spreading education among girls. Continuing the speaker said:—"India is one of those countries where people believe that there is such a thing as Government money. This is entirely wrong. There is no money called Government money as such. Every pie of it is paid for by the people. A Government governs well if all the money received as tax is spent for the benefit of the people; if not it governs ill. A foreign Government is always a bad Government because it has not the courage to tax the people and spend the money on their welfare. There is one aspect of the educational problem in India to which I wish to draw your attention. The cry has been raised for universal compulsory education for both boys and girls. This is as it should be. But if you are serious in your demand you must be prepared for further taxation. If you want that all the children of the Madras Presidency ought to be educated by the State, I am afraid the whole of the present revenue of the province will have to be spent. Italy is only as big as this province and it spends about Rs. 15 crores on education. Therefore if you want an intensive spread of education you must not grudge to be taxed further. After all, when I compare it with many continental and other countries, India is not highly taxed. Proceeding the speaker pointed out that the freedom of India would be impossible of achievement if women were not properly trained to take their share in the fight. Touching on the need for legislation for reforming social institutions the speaker believed that more could be achieved by the example of educated and courageous persons, and by the development of public opinion than by punitive legislation.

WELCOME ADDRESS.

Mrs. Lazarus Srinivasan, an Indian Christian lady of Palamcottah, then read an address welcoming the President and the delegates, in which she explained the objects of the conference and the significance of the women's movement. There was no denying the fact, she said, that women in India had not been given their rightful place. The apprehensions of the elders about the effect of education of women on family solidarity were groundless. She emphasised that the first and foremost duty that a woman owed was to her home and family, but this need not necessarily prevent her from participating in public movements and supporting men, in their efforts at the regeneration of the country.

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

Mrs. R. S. Sankara Aiyar, the President then read her address in Tamil. She began by observing the complexity of modern life and referring to the need of tackling it by both men and women. She said that those simple days when men could toil outside and women could enjoy the fruits of such toil from within the home were gone. Progress in the modern age is impossible, if women do not take their proper place by the side of men. The President said that at present a good deal was being done to improve the lot of the women and spread education among them but all this was being done by men. It was time, observed the President, that the leadership and organisation in all women's movements passed into the hands of women themselves. The speaker then referred to the Child Marriage Bills of Harbilas Sarada and Dr. Muthulakshmi Reddi and vigorously attacked them. The president examined in detail the reasons adduced in support of the Bills and argued that they were all unconvincing. She said that early marriage was sought to be penalised on the ground that it was a hindrance to the education of girls, that early maternity was dangerous to health and that the number of child widows could be lessened. The President argued that what was hindrance to education of girls was not early marriage but the age-long custom of the people to keep the girls when they attain puberty within the homes, until they are consummated, if they are married, or they are married in castes where post puberty marriage prevails. Secondly early maternity could be prevented by raising the age of consent. Proceeding the President observed that the punishments suggested for: penalising early marriages, were monstrous. In the present conditions of Hindu society, said the President, this law will not only be not useful but harmful. It was pointed out that women had no rights of inheritance and all that they were entitled to from the family property was marriage expenditure. The law could prevent parents from marrying their girls before 16, but can there be a law to compel them to educate them till that age? If this was not done what would the girls do in their paternal homes except to be glorified maid servants? The President said that even now public opinion was having its slow effect and owing to one cause or another a majority of marriages among the Brahmins at any rate were performed only after the age of 12. Though our marriage institution was in need of some improvement, those who talked of penal legislation, had not correctly grasped our ideals and they seemed to be moved more by Western notions than by Indian ideas. In conclusion the President appealed to her sisters to think deeply on questions of legislation connected with social matters and give their considered views.

Mrs. K. L. Rao then explained the objects of the All-India Conference of Education which would shortly meet at Poona and the conference dissolved to meet to-day when resolutions will be taken up for discussion.

THE AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

AT MADRAS.

The committee proceeded from Calicut to Madras where it sat for a week. Sir Moropant Joshi made a preliminary statement wherein he said that there was a general impression that the committee would meet with the toughest opposition in Madras and Bengal. He also pointed out that the committee took evidence not only in English but also in the vernaculars. The first witness was Mr. C. V. Viswanatha Sastri. He said in the course of his replies that the youth of the country had absolutely no instruction in sex matters and the only education they got was from the cinemas. The number of cases where puberty was concealed was increasing daily. He would fix the minimum age for consummation of marriage at 21 for boys and 14 for girls. He was not in favour of establishing matrimonial courts. Vigilance associations and social reform associations might be given some power to bring to court cases of disobedience of the laws. For the present the associations must be communal ones. He was also of opinion that the guardianship law must also be amended. In cases of disobedience in marital cases some form of imprisonment for the accused was essential. In extra-marital cases the minimum age of consent must be fixed at 16. He strongly advocated the making of marriages invalid if they were done in disobedience of the marriage laws.

Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar who followed him, advised that "legislation should be regarded as primarily educative."

The third witness was Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar who was opposed to the reform. He said in his oral evidence that he knew of cases where girls of 14 and 15 had given birth to children and there had been no difficulty in such cases. If mothers and children born at that age were weak, it was due more to poverty than to other causes. He had known of difficulties in child birth even in cases where the girls were 17 and 25 years old. Asked if he would modify his views in the light of medical opinion he said, "When my experience is otherwise I would not regard the medical opinion as binding. In the case of Brahmins I know that that is the custom from time immemorial. The Brahmin community has survived and is physically, morally, intellectually and spiritually as good as any other community." Holding that the true cause of under weight babies being born to early married girls was poverty, the witness stated that Government should reduce taxes instead of raising the age.

Mr. N. Srinivasacharya an orthodox Brahmin leader, was the next witness. He said that although orthodoxy opposed interference by legislation in social matters, he wanted 14 as the age of consent, and stated that the consummation of Brahmin girls is usually at 16. But he opposed marriage legislation on shastric grounds. He believed that the English educated youth deteriorated all round and wanted consummation earlier than 16.

Mrs. Malati Patwardhan, Secretary, Women's Indian Association, in the course of her replies said most women would in their heart of hearts like to fix the age for marriage of girls, but they were afraid of the custom. Even girls would like a law fixing the marriage age. Legislation was essential in such questions as child marriage. She was also of opinion that punishment of marital offences should involve imprisonment. Replying to Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar, the witness stated the women's meetings she had referred to were attended by orthodox women also. The Women's Indian Association was not a theosophical movement. It was a wrong impression. In her opinion women were much more interested in these matters than men. She would fix the age at 16 as the minimum for marriage but if that was not possible it might be fixed at 14. With regard to punishment she said that the parents of the offending party should be punished. Even if consummation was done without the knowledge of parents within the fixed age-limit, the parents ought to be held responsible and must be punished. In such cases the punishment might be lenient.

Dewan Bahadur Rangachariar examined said that he wanted legislation for consent. He preferred 14 for consent and wanted only 12 for marriage. He believed in marital courts and in vigilance and reform associations. Exemptive clauses would prove ineffective.

Questioned by Mrs. Nehru whether witness would go apace with the world's social progress, the witness said because he was for it he would recommend twelve for marriage and fourteen for consent.

Rao Bahadur Chengiah Pantulu was in favour of an effective legislation for consent. He believed that social service associations would favourably co-operate with marital courts to work marriage laws.

Sister Subbalakshmi Ammal, Superintendent of the Madras Widows' Home, referred to the large number of widows in the Presidency. She advocated raising the age of consent and the minimum age of marriage to sixteen, and favoured legislation with that view.

Shrimati Krishna Bai, Secretary of the Madras League of Youth urged that the age of consent as well as the minimum age for marriage should be raised to sixteen. She said that girls desired to have more time for their studies, and raising the minimum age of marriage was therefore desirable. In reply to Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliar, she said that youths did not believe in sticking to the letter of the Sastras but were for keeping pace with modern progress. They were working for the abolition of the dowry system and the prevention of early motherhood. Replying to Mrs. Nehru she said that given the necessary facilities, her League would undertake the detection of offences against the proposed legislation.

Mr. C. Venkatsubbaramiah, a Brahmin advocate examined, said that he wanted legislation both for consent and for marriage at 16 and 12 respectively. He favoured the constitution of matrimonial courts.

Mr. P. Ramanathan, a Non-Brahmin advocate, favoured penal legislation and rise in the age of consent to 16.

Pandit Krishnamachari of Benares examined by the Age of Consent Committee said that the people were perfectly satisfied with the present marriage law and any further raising of the age within marital state would be unnecessary and such a course would affect the religious susceptibilities of the people as it would increase social evil. He was against codification of penal laws in matters social and socio-religious.

MR. SARVOTHAMA RAO.

Mr. Sarvothama Rao, M.L.A., pleaded for a reform of the marriage law. He prescribed a minimum punishment of one year's imprisonment to major husbands and fathers of boys and girls and purohitis violating the law.

MR. SWAMI VENKATACHALAM CHETTY.

Mr. Swami Venkatachalam Chetty advocated formation of panchayats to prevent early marriages. He suggested 14 for marriage of girls and eighteen outside marital state.

PUNDIT NARASIMHACHARI.

The first witness examined was Pundit Nadadur Narasimhacharya Swami, retired Sanskrit Pandit, Presidency College, Madras. He stated that the present law of age of consent needed improvement. He was of opinion that instead of fixing an arbitrary age, the attainment of puberty might be fixed as the period. The law might be made effective by amending it into two distinctive parts as Brahmin and Non-Brahmin castes. But he was of opinion that the very idea of legislation in matters like marriage was wrong. The real cause of physical and mental deterioration was the lack of discipline in the matter of eating and sexing as enjoined in the Sastras, due to the present type of education and meaningless western imitations.

MR. T. VARADARAJULU NAIDU.

Dewan Bahadur T. Varadarajulu Naidu, Secretary, Madras Social Service League, examined stated that an advance on the present law was necessary for the improvement of the nation physically at any rate. Amongst most Indians motherhood commenced too early and anything that would help to raise the age of motherhood was to be welcomed. If the State legislated either for an age of marriage or consummation the people would generally abide by them. At present the parents generally were not moved by any religious injunctions in the matter of the consummations of the marriage of their sons and daughters. They were moved by social opinion and their own convenience. Public opinion among the educated classes had developed in favour of the extensions of the age of consent and the age of marriage. The educated did not favour consummation until 16 years had well passed. He was in favour of constituting special benches to try marital offences. Such trials should always be in camera.

MRS. LAKSHMIPATHI.

Mrs. A. Lakshmipathi was the next witness examined. Replying to the chairman the witness said that she had opportunities to move in the middle class of the Brahmin orthodox section and even they, she was of opinion, would not mind marrying their girls at 13 or 14 years of age. At the present time she did not think that the idea of pre-puberty marriage was deep-rooted in the minds of the orthodox ladies. Some time back it was so. She remembered also that about 10 or 12 protest meetings of the orthodox ladies were held against Sarda's Bill. Their chief objection was based on religion and the other objection was the false fear about the girls that they would be misled, if remained unmarried. Continuing, the witness said that her personal view was that 18 years be fixed as the age of marriage. At any cost she was in favour of a marriage law and as a compromise she would agree to 16 years. The application of the law of age of consent could be facilitated only when a collated law penalising child marriages was enacted. She was of opinion that even orthodox Hindu opinion was strongly in favour of raising the age of consent though they were much opposed to the raising of the age of marriage. The cry of raising the consummation age came more piteously from women for it was they who suffered most.

The Age of Consent Committee concluded its sittings here to-day after examining five more witnesses. Dr. Govinda Pillai, Health Officer, Madras Corporation, attributed the high percentage of maternity below 16 to early consummation. Mr. S. V. Ramaswami Mudaliar advocated legislation raising the age of consent to 16 as also marriageable age. He suggested the issue of a certificate by two doctors on the day of consummation, one of them being a lady doctor. Witness urged that trial of marital cases should be in camera.

Mr. Ayyakutti Iyengar, Vakil from mofussil, wanted legislation fixing the age of marriage at 14.

Khan Bahadur Haji Abdul Aziz said that Moslem religious codes were enough to guard against errors in marital affairs and did not think a legislation was called for. A penal legislation fixing a higher age of consent for marital cases was, he opined unlikely to be effective.

Mr. Justice Ramesam who was the last witness examined said the chief cause of high maternal and infantile mortality lay not in early consummation but in high birth-rate and frequent child bearing. The remedy lay in birth control which was intended to better the health of the offspring. As to the minimum age of marriage though 16 might be desirable the society must work up to it labouring along other means than legislation. He would prefer a consent legislation to a marriage law.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. a. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.

THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM,
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFFS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nashik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulla (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ...	Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :—BARODA.

Branches :—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadl and Dwarka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED ... ' ...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	50,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,60,000

DIRECTORS :

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd. Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-5-26 C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs. a. p.
Inland ...	5 0 0
Foreign ...	5 8 0
Single copy ...	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Barma calling at Galle Taticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26.

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati Brand,

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

RATES MODERATE

Suitings
 Shirtings
 Dhoters.

V. P. P. SERVICE

Premier Swadeshi Emporium

IVORY CURIOS
 SILVERWARE
 BRASSWARE
 ENAMELLED
 and INDEGENOUS PRODUCTS.

TRAVELLING
 and
 HOUSE HOLD REQUISITES
 TABLE LINENS
 and
 BASEL MISSION PRODUCTS.

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
 Cruikshank Road, Fort,

IMPROVED QUALITY

Silks
 Sarees
 Borders.

PROMPT ATTENTION

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, KT.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS (Agencies), Ltd.,
 16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,
 General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
The Indian Social Reformer,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,
The Hindustan Review.
PATNA, E. I. R.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Saturday at 6 and 9-30 P.M. and Sunday at 6 P.M.

The World-Famous

KAAI'S HAWAIIAN TROUBADOURS

will present

LATEST HAWAIIAN SONGS AND DANCES

Something quite new in entertainment.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Tonight and Tomorrow at 3-30, 6-15, and 9-45 P.M.

The World's Greatest Film

"THE WINGS"

Amazing Spectacle of Aeroplanes in Action

with

AN ALL STAR CAST.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Tonight and Tomorrow and Daily only Two Shows at 6-30 and 10 P.M.

FOR THE FIRST TIME IN BOMBAY

The Youngest Professional Dancer in the World

BABY LORNA BLACKBURN

In Modern Eccentric and Classical Dances in conjunction with the Startling Screen-Play

THE DARK SWAN

featuring

MARIE PREVOST with Monte Blue and Heleme Chadwick

Also see the Wonders of Motion Picture in "DAYS FOLLY."

EMPRESS CINEMA

Tonight and Tomorrow at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

The Screen's Charming Actress

POLA NEGRI

in

THE BARBED WIRE

Special Morning Show on Sunday at 10 A.M.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1928

No. 16

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

A Paradoxical Policy.
Changing the Alphabet.
World Student's Conference.
Prohibition for India.
Excise Demand.
Abolition of Purdah.
The Last Straw.
Indian Woman Delegate.
Bombay Municipal Schools.

New Humanism.
Mysore Ladies' Conference.
India's Demand for Prohibition.
The World's Population.
The Age of Consent Inquiry.
Agra Women's Conference.
Rajput Women's Education.
News of the Week.

NOTES.

A Paradoxical Policy:—The Times of India publishes the following from its Madras correspondent. "The latest information about the proposals of the Madras Government regarding propaganda against drink is to the effect that out of the sum of four lakhs of rupees set apart for propaganda work one lakh will be allotted to such local bodies as are willing to take up propaganda work, and three lakhs for other agencies, such as temperance associations, lecturing tours, etc. Government officials are not debarred from participating in such propaganda work. It is expected that this propaganda will commence from April, 1929. Local bodies and municipalities will be addressed by the Government in this connection. The Government expect a loss of revenue to the extent of Rs. 20 lakhs from this source during the year 1929-30 and funds have been allotted to meet the expected loss." We understand from this that the Government of Madras want first to see how for the drink evil can be abolished by propaganda. If the propaganda is effectively organised much can be done as was proved in the picketing days in 1921. But we doubt if picketing will be permitted as part of this subsidised propaganda. For the rest, the prohibition sentiment being already strong in the community, the removal of temptation is the chief thing to reduce consumption of liquor. Government cannot keep open shops with one hand and with the other offer to help propaganda against drink. We should like to know more details of what seems to be a paradoxical policy.

Changing the Alphabet:—To bring Turkey nearer to the nations of the West, Mustapha Kemal Pasha has introduced the most revolutionary of his reforms—the adoption of the Latin alphabet in place of the Arabic script. From the 1st. of this month all newspapers were ordered to abandon the Arabic for the Latin characters. Kemal Pasha himself supervises the work of teaching his officials and the journalists the new letters. The London Times describes the Ghazi at work:—"On the famous Palace of Dolma Baghtche, over two hundred Turkish Deputies, officials, officers, and journalists took a five hours' lesson in the Latin alphabet, which will come into general use on January 1, 1931, and is already competing with the doomed Arabic letters. Their teacher was Ibrahim Nedumi Bey, but he taught and they learned under the stern and watchful eyes of one who has Albanian blood on the distaff side, of no less a headmaster than Ghazi Mustafa Kemal himself. The Ghazi's method of correcting unwilling or troublesome pupils was marked by a humor and originality which are not always discovered among professional pedagogs. Casting his eyes about the assembly he descried certain temerarious members of Parliament, who during his absence from Constantinople had attacked the works and ways of the commission which drew up the new alphabet. He now invited them to mount the platform and explain their criticisms. The deputies, our correspondent relates, were at first 'loth to recede from the position which they had taken up,' but they seem nevertheless to have eaten their words against the commission and were doubtless relieved to escape with no more than an official rebuke." The reform we are told is to facilitate the spread of education as the Arabic script is difficult to master. Writing on this the Times points out that "years of study were needed for the mastery of written Turkish and that the written language was overcrowded with Arabic words, many of which were not used, in colloquial speech." To the Turk the mastery of the Latin script will, we are afraid, be as hard a task as the study of the written Turkish appears to the correspondent of the English journal.

World Students' Federation:—It was a happy idea to hold the World Students' Christian Federation in the beautiful and historic city of Mysore. The Conference held last week was attended by a large number of students hailing from different parts of the world and representing many races and languages. From the meagre reports available of the session it seems to have been a great success. Dr. Mott of America who presided over the Conference struck a happy note by emphasising the need for unity. To promote international and inter-racial good will regardless of religious creeds or dogmas is the main object of the Federation. His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore who opened the session made a lucid and informing speech which is published elsewhere. Though this was the first time that such a Federation of international importance was held in India, we are sure it will not be the last.

Prohibition for India:—Miss Mary J. Campbell, the President of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of India, sends us the following resolution passed unanimously by that association in support of Rev. J. F. Edwards' Memorandum: "Whereas the aim of the Indian Statutory Commission is to bring home to the British people the realities of the Indian problems and believing that one of the gravest realities of the Indian situation is the deep and widespread feeling throughout India against the liquor traffic, both country and foreign, and whereas the Rev. J. F. Edwards of Bombay, has prepared an "Appeal", outlining how India is becoming alienated from Great Britain as a result of the drink trade, and showing the necessity of full Indian control of excise and the gradual abolition of the excise revenue, and asking that the power of self determination be given to India's people in the granting of a Local Option measure for every Province and whereas the above Appeal is to be sent to the British people and Parliament through the Indian Statutory Commission, resolved, that the National Women's Christian Temperance Union of India, representing nine Provinces and 7000 members, now in session in Delhi, express to Mr. Edwards their hearty appreciation of his Appeal and pledge their full co-operation and support and request him to send to the Indian Statutory Commission copy of this resolution."

Excise Demand:—Sir Lalubhai Samaldas writing to the Rev. J. F. Edwards in support of his Memorandum on Excise says:—"The Memorandum correctly represents the Country's demand—by country I mean the vast majority of Hindus and Muslims. Both communities must feel very grateful to you for your having taken the trouble of studying the whole question and of putting their viewpoints in such lucid manner. There is only one remark I have to make re the policy of the Central Government. That Government must financially assist those provincial Governments that may have to face a deficit by adopting the rigorous policy of Total Prohibition. Thanking you once more most heartily for your support in our demand".

Abolition of Purdah:—Under the caption "Purdah and the Musalmans" Mr. Ch. Abdur Ghani has given his considered views on purdah in a letter to the Leader. We make no apology for reproducing the following from it:—"In the struggle for existence the purdah is a heavy weight tied to our necks and hinders us from coming to the forefront. Just imagine what would be the condition of the wealth of the nations of the West without the cooperating hand of the womenfolk. The commands for the purdah, in the holy Koran and in the sayings of the Prophet, are not so rigid as to debar women from all public activities. Islam is a universal religion. Its commandments are very elastic and can hold good for all times and circumstances. It is the interpretation of the Mullahs and the Moulvis that makes them look narrow. One should follow the spirit and not the literal translation of the words. 'Pouring old wine into new bottles' is not always a pleasant task. In the great work of nation-building no foundations can be well and truly laid without the cementing hand of our women. The test of morality is that it should hold fast and good under temptations. With the increase of female education on right lines the character of our girls will become strong enough to withstand all occasions and vicissitudes. The different forms of purdah in the various provinces shows that it is more a matter of custom and established tradition than of religion."

The Last Straw:—Mr. Jamanlal Bajaj, the patron of the Satyagrahashram at Wardha, has recently been excommunicated for opening the temple at Wardha to the "untouchables", but an influential section of his community has reconciled itself to the reform and has decided to support him. Mr. Bajaj, however, not content to rest at that has again offended by partaking of food cooked by "untouchable" boys at Rewadi. Young India reports the outcome of this:—"It was to understand the motive of this action of his that a deputation of Agarwal Marwadis waited upon Gandhiji the other day. Shet Ghan-shyamdas Birla whose opposition to untouchability is no less strong than Jamnalalji's offered to act the part of advocatus diaboli. 'These friends' he said, "are anxious to help Jamnalalji in his work of social reform such as widow remarriage, prevention of child marriage and so forth. They would not even mind his throwing open temples to the untouchables but they feel very strongly about his partaking of food at the hands of untouchables. Since these friends are prepared to go so far they hope that Shetji would at least meet them halfway".....'But how can I' expostulated Jamnalalji, 'in this Ashram I am bound to dine with everybody who comes and untouchables are freely admitted here'. 'We don't mind that', they rejoined. 'You may do as you like in the Ashram. The Ashram is a sacred spot and no restrictions need be observed there.'—In answer to a question from Mahatmaji the deputationists frankly admitted that their objection was on the score of social prejudice rather than on any religious ground. We do not know what effect Mahatma Gandhi's appeal to the Agarwal Marwadi's had on them but the incident shows what a hold the idea of caste has over even those sections of the people who are willing to give their support to other reforms.

Indian Woman Delegate:—We learn that Mrs. Kamala Devi Chattopadhyaya has been nominated as a delegate on behalf of the All-India Teachers' Federation to the world Federation of Educational Associations at Geneva. She is leaving for Europe next May and will also attend the international women's congress at Berlin and the international labour conference. We welcome the participation of an increasing number of Indian women in international movements.

Bombay Municipal Schools:—"The Indian Daily Mail writes:—"It is under contemplation to extend compulsory education to two more wards. Another most gratifying feature of the year's development in this direction is the inclusion of a Muslim Girls School in the scheme of compulsion, which the Muslims earnestly desire and requests all leaders of the Muslim Community who felt that it must be left behind in the race of life if Muslim Girls had not the same chances of education as their non-muslim sisters."

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, DECEMBER 15, 1928.

A NEW BOOK ON BUDDHISM.

Those who have perused Professor James Bissett Pratt's book on "the Religious Faiths of India" need no assurance that his attitude towards Asiatic religions and nations is one of the broadest sympathy and understanding. We, therefore, expected to find in his latest book on Buddhism a fair and just estimate of that great religion as it is practised in the countries of Eastern Asia. We may say at once that the expectation is amply fulfilled. The book is entitled "The Pilgrimage of Buddhism"*. Dr. Pratt pictures Buddhism as "a great Traveller who is also an exile and a pilgrim driven from his native land and carrying the blessings of insight and love to the long and colorful succession of peoples and countries that fringe the Indian Ocean, the Bay of Bengal, the Gulf of Slam, the China Sea and the Western Pacific." The word "driven" is not quite accurate because Buddhism was not driven from India but absorbed into the parent faith. It is certain that Sakyamuni, like Jesus Christ, did not intend to found a new religion. "It is hardly correct," as Dr. Pratt himself observes, "to picture him as an Indian Martin Luther, but if not a "Protestant" he was at least a protestor against the various forms of conservative superstition and radical nonsense with which his times were seething. It is obvious that his object was to rationalise and humanise the old religion than to found a new one. In this he succeeded far more than Luther in reforming Christianity. Post-Buddhistic Hinduism bears the impress of Buddha at every turn. Animal sacrifices against which he most strongly protested, were given up. Sankara's Advaitism was largely inspired by Buddhist philosophy. The links have been traced. Mr. Narmadashankar Mehta in a paper which he read before the Bombay Buddha Society and which was reproduced in the Reformer, showed that Asvagosha's writings must have been familiar to Sankara and that whole passages in the latter's compositions were closely paralleled in those of the former. Dr. Pratt, we see, quotes from Vasudev Jagganath Kirtikar's Essays on the Vedanta to show the close resemblance between the fundamental idea of Buddhism and Vedantism. Buddhism did not, therefore, die out in India. It did its appointed task and overflowed into the Far Eastern countries, to enrich their own national heritage. For, wherever it went, Buddhism, unlike Islam and Christianity, did not antagonise the pre-existing national culture. "The wise monks who guided the development of Buddhism during its first centuries in China," Dr. Pratt observes, "were quick to see the character and customs and the needs of the people, and being bound by no rigid rules or dogmas they were able to adapt their teachings and their services to the new conditions. The monastic order, indeed, cannot be given up but Buddhist monks learned how to make themselves useful in the Chinese family. They adopted into their teaching the Confucian ideal of filial piety, laying almost as much stress upon this as upon the Five Precepts. The Chinese piety toward departed parents, indeed, Buddhism was able to serve in what seemed a much more efficient way than Confucianism, by its masses for the dead; and this did much to enlist the family sentiment in favour of the new religion." Filial piety was not a new or alien element in Buddhism. Buddh Gaya where Gautama obtained his great enlightenment is still the centre of ancestral offerings for the whole of Hindu India. Whoever goes to Benares goes to Gaya to perform the Shradh for his ancestors.

The same was the case in Japan. Dr. Pratt himself contrasts the methods of the Buddhist and those of the Christian and Moslem missions. The propaganda of Buddhism, he remarks, was not regarded in any way an attack upon Shinto: for the very good reason that it really was not an attack upon Shinto. "This lack of destructive animus against other religions," he goes on to say, "is regularly one of the distinctive marks by which Buddhist missionary work is differentiated from the work of Christian and Moslem missionaries. The Christian-Moslem view has usually been (it is not universally so any longer) that destruction must precede construction, or at any rate the two must go hand in hand. The Buddhist aim has usually been to do no destroying and to put all the emphasis on the constructive and positive side. Hence Buddhism was quite generally accepted in Japan from the first as an additional insight, and the Buddhas and Bodhisattvas were simply united with the native Kami as proper and helpful objects of reverence and worship. Shinto shrines and Buddhist temples were spoken of in one breath as forming a kind of religious unity—the "ji-sho" or temple-shrines." We should say here that Moslem missionaries at least in India have been more constructive in this respect than Christians as shown by the fact that several sects of converts still follow the Hindu law as their personal law. A Japanese scholar, Mr. M. G. Mori, writing in the July number of the Young East of Tokyo, suggested a synthesis of Buddhism with Jesus Christ. He said: "As long as twelve hundred years ago the priest Gyoki was brave enough to maintain that Japanese Shinto gods were at bottom identical with Buddhas and Bodhisattvas. The time seems ripe for us to declare with as much courage and conviction that the same relationship holds good between Amida and Christ, namely that both are manifestations of the Supreme Spirit of the Universe, and that those who look up to either for salvation are assured of the same spiritual beatitude. What if the physical Christ died nineteen hundred years ago, or if Amida never trod the ground. Both are more alive as spiritual forces than the most powerful statesmen and the highest Ministers of the Christian Church and Buddhist sects now living. For they symbolise Infinity with its measureless space and time and its boundless wisdom and mercy." Amida, we may explain, is the Japanese Buddhist name for the Cosmic Soul, the Brahman of the Upanishads, who incarnates from time to time to help mankind, who took flesh as Buddha in India and Christ Jesus in Galilee. A vigorous protest against Mr. Mori's suggestion appears in the November number of the magazine from the pen of Mr. B. L. Broughton, Vice-President of the British Maha Bodhi Society. "In the first place Mr. Mori really ought to know," he writes "that the Christians will never return the compliment. They will never accord the Buddha, the nearest place in their system, for they will always regard us as heathens, and any recognition of Christ will be regarded by Christians not as an act of inter-religious courtesy but as an admission of their superiority." We do not think that this is much of an argument against Mr. Mori. Whether the Christians respond or not, is not the main point. It is whether it is right to do as Mr. Mori suggests. As a matter of fact, such a self-centred Englishman and European as Lord Curzon wrote to a friend (the letter is quoted by Lord Ronaldshay in his "Life") that to him Christ stood by the side of Buddha as one of the greatest of world-teachers. Educated Europeans will, if not at once, gradually become responsive to the gesture of fellowship suggested by Mr. Mori. But Mr. Broughton does not stop there. He goes on to point out that there is an utter incompatibility between the minds and teachings of Christ and Buddha, so much so that any juxtaposition of the two would be incongruous and impossible. Here, again, we do not agree. Allowing for the different conditions and cultures of the places and times of the two Teachers, allowing also for their differences of temperament—the one expansive, the other explosive—there is an essential similarity between their thoughts and teachings. We are, therefore, inclined to think with Mr. Mori the synthesis, such as he suggests is both possible and desirable. In fact, that has for years been our own humble endeavour. This is also, we are glad to see, Dr. Pratt's view. His concluding chapter "Buddhism and Christianity" is a very candid and thoughtful contribution to the solution of the conflict between the two faiths. "In a very real sense" he writes "Jesus seems in the process of being taken over into the nobler forms of Hinduism. What is being done for India we may well expect will be done for all Buddhist lands and for all lands and all religions. In the end it may well transpire that the great work of Christian missions has not been to convert the 'heathen' to Christianity but to permeate all the non-Christian religions with the spirit of Christ".

* Price three dollars.—(Messrs. Macmillan & Co., New York.)

NEW HUMANISM.

In welcoming the delegates of the World's Student Christian Federation, which was held last week in Mysore presided over by Dr. John R. Mott of America, His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore said:—

Ladies and Gentlemen,—It gives me very great pleasure to welcome to Mysore the delegates who compose the meeting of the World's Student Christian Federation for the year 1928. I am proud that you should have chosen the State of Mysore for the meeting of your world-wide fellowship, and I am proud to welcome distinguished representatives of so many races and languages, I might almost say, of so many worlds. For, I take it, you are worlds apart, at least in the starting points from which you have reached your common goal. In your origins are to be found the strongest contrasts of brilliant inspiration and unwearying research, of stolid fatalism and feverish activity, of blind acceptance and obstinate questioning.

Yet you have met together in one common faith, and you have met in what may not unfitly be described as the holy land of another. Here in Mysore, before the beginning of your era, the King Chandragupta, having turned Jain and left his kingdom on pilgrimage, found peace in death. Here again each of the three great teachers of Hinduism spent a part of his life. Sankaracharya, the apostle of the absolute unity of God and all life and the soul, founded here the school in which his memory is enshrined and his work continued. Ramannacharya, fleeing from persecution by the Chola kings, found in Mysore, even at that early date, that toleration and freedom of speech, which, following the example of my predecessors, I have always tried to make one of the watchwords of my Government. Later followed Madhya, with his doctrine of the duality of the soul and God, and what may perhaps be most attractive to you as Christians his teaching of the necessity for Bhakti, the love and devotion of the soul for God. Thus you are surrounded here by places in which some of India's best and noblest have breathed out their lives in intense aspiration, in profound meditation, in the eager desire for absorption in God, and trust you will be able to learn something of their spirit and practice, something of their methods.

While, however the paths are different by which you and we in Mysore seek to reach the common goal of the ultimate truth, I would fain believe that they are not so divergent as might at first sight appear. In his very interesting account of the origin and achievements of the Federation, writing in 1920, Dr. Mott said of it:—"It stands not for the oneness of uniformity, but for unity in diversity." Unity in diversity is exactly the ideal that I have many times commended to the people of the diverse castes and creeds of Mysore. The truth is that in these latter years we have been coming to understand that there is a deep unity underlying the apparent differences between religions, and that the quest of the human spirit after God is so important, so universal, so heroic, and at best falls so far short of perfect fulfilment, that we have all much to learn one from another, and that any manifestation of a desire for the life of the spirit, however crude, is deserving of a sympathetic understanding. Such an understanding has done much already to bring us together. Through the labours of generations of Western scholars, the ancient languages of the East have been brought to the knowledge of the Western world; Sanskrit grammar and philosophy have been placed on a scientific basis; texts have been edited; philosophies unravelled; and the poetry and history and art of India made part of the common heritage. Now Indian scholars, enriching their inborn passion for learning by the methods of the West, have rivalled or even outdone their teachers. Nor would I have you think that we in India are unappreciative of Christianity and of the teachings of Christ. For some centuries, missionaries, many of them men and women who would have won the highest distinction in their own countries, have commended the teachings of Christ to us, not only in word and writing, and by their own blameless lives, but by countless practical activities for the good of the people of India. My own dominions have long been enriched by their most admirable medical and educational work.

While I welcome you, I wish also to thank you for the work the Federation have done for students from India, and especially for students from Mysore. You have made possible, as I have said, the beginning of a science of the moral and religious culture of students. The need of such a science must be obvious to us all, especially in these days of world-wide movements, world-wide migration, and I hope, in time to come, world-wide understanding. It is becoming the ideal of more and more of our Indian students to visit Europe, America or Japan; and those of us who remain behind cannot but be filled with anxiety as we watch every year more and more of our young men leaving us. What will be the effects on them of complete separation from the ties of home and country and religion? Will they find friendly hands stretched out to help them in times of loneliness and temptation? I am glad to think that in so many universities and colleges, the members of your Federation supply the answer to these questions by making it part of their business to watch the shy and lonely Indian student, and by friendship and understanding, to enrich and humanize his experience of life in other countries. At the same time the students who travel the world in search of higher learning are generally students of the more enterprising, adventurous and ambitious class, and are therefore those most likely to have an abiding influence on their return. It is therefore above all things desirable that in the course of their studies abroad they should have the assistance of the victaries of such a science as you practise. We send many such students from Mysore, and I thank you and members of your Federation for the service it has rendered to them.

It is not possible for me to share in your discussions or to follow you in your work. But I should like to assure you that I am at one with you in all that tends to clear the jungle of dogma and tradition from the path of truth, as well as in what you have described as "eagerness to work together for the common good of all men." You have a very crowded programme, but I trust that you will also find time for the silent, absorbed and rapt contemplation of the spirit which we in India regard as more important than the feverish activity of the West. And I close with the prayer which is used by the King-Emperor when he opens the Imperial Parliament: "I pray that the blessing of Almighty God may rest upon your labours."

MYSORE LADIES' CONFERENCE.

A large gathering of ladies representative of all classes and communities attended the third session of the Mysore Ladies' Conference to-day at Vani Vilas Institute. Mrs. Mirza Ismail, Dewan's wife, presided.

Opening the proceedings, the president referred to the sad depletion in their ranks. She dwelt upon the vital problems affecting the sex like women's franchise, inheritance laws relating to women and raising of marriageable age of girls and laying particular emphasis on the last question. She said enquiries by the Age of Consent Committee had furnished abundant material demonstrating the necessity for immediate reform in marriage laws and expressed gratitude to the State Government for undertaking an investigation of these questions. She stressed the need of intensive campaign for female education.

The progress of the people, she thought, depended primarily upon women. The future advancement of the country would be determined even more by the extent to which education advanced amongst women. She drew attention to the condition of the rural population in this connection which was characterised by abject poverty, joyless surroundings, providing almost unlimited field for the conference's work. She concluded appealing to the members for earnest co-operation for making the conference a recognised organ of the public opinion.

Miss Lazarus, Secretary presenting the report of the work said that the girl-guide movement was now well developed. Arrangements were being made to constitute branches of these throughout the State. She particularly referred to the petition presented to the Maharaja's Government signed by 2,000 ladies from all parts of the State for raising of the marriageable age and other reforms connected therewith.

The conference had been instrumental in rousing considerable public interest in the questions relating to women. Beneficial measures of social legislation had, she felt, greatly helped its advocates in countering opposition and giving great impetus to the advancement of education and other means of securing their political equality.

INDIA'S DEMAND FOR PROHIBITION.

I.

While America has been recording her purpose that Prohibition shall continue within her borders, a worthy son of Great Britain, writes the Indian Witness Lucknow, has been giving a new and powerful expression to India's demand for Prohibition. The Rev. J. F. Edwards, Editor of the Dnyanodaya, a great Englishman and a great Indian, has written and published an appeal to the British Parliament and people through the Indian Statutory Commission. This he introduces with a quotation from a speech delivered in London September 25, 1928, to the effect that the "duty" of the Indian Statutory Commission is "to bring home to the British people the realities of the Indian problem and to act as interpreters to the British Parliament of the wishes and aspirations of the people of India."

In as much as neither the Prohibition League of India, nor the National Christian Council, nor any other of the organizations that are deeply interested in the removal of the drink evil is making any representation to the Commission, Mr. Edwards' appeal takes on very great importance. It may be the only effort to place before the Commission the facts with reference to the terrible curse of alcoholic liquors and narcotic drugs in India and India's strong feeling on the subject. Without taking sides on the broad issue of co-operating with or boycotting the Commission in its enquiry, he makes a powerful statement of the case for righting India's excise wrongs at the first opportunity. If the Commission can be induced to recommend the righting of these wrongs by removing all the restrictions that prevent India's people from putting a stop to the baneful alcoholic liquor and narcotic drug trades, much will be done to re-establish friendly feelings towards Great Britain in India.

Mr. Edwards rightly points out that "both in the case of the Hindus and of the Muslims there is an ancient and powerful sentiment strongly reprobating indulgence in intoxicating drink" and that "it is obviously the course of wisdom and statesmanship to make full use of such a well-established and useful tradition and by no means to seek to overthrow it." The situation calls for Prohibition, and the Servant of India is quoted as saying early this year, "The whole country is crying itself hoarse for Prohibition while the Government is still thinking in terms of maximum revenue from minimum consumption." The conclusion is stated that the refusal of India's practically unanimous demand for the gradual abolition of the traffic in alcohol thus amounts to a flagrant denial of the rights of a whole people and the refusal is being made by the appointed representatives of the Mother of Parliaments.

The procedure that the Commission should recommend is clear. There is no proposal for the British Parliament to enact Prohibition for India. But there is a demand that the Parliament shall no longer stand in the way or allow any other power to stand in the way and prevent India's people through their duly constituted legislatures from enacting Prohibition. Foreign liquor as well as country liquor must be put under the control of the Indian Provincial and Imperial Governments and Legislative Councils. Figures recently secured by Sir Purshottamdas Thakurdas from the Government of India show a steady growth in the importation of foreign liquors throughout India, thus clearly proving that there has been a bad breakdown in the whole idea underlying the scheme whereby foreign liquor is a subject dealt with by the Central Government, for there is strong reason to believe that a large part of the foreign liquor brought into India under this protection for the supposed use of Englishmen and other non-Indians is really consumed by Indians.

The appeal is concluded with these arresting words: "The enforcement of Prohibition would provide no serious difficulty for the Administration, particularly if Prohibition were allowed to be voted by the people themselves on the basis of their life-long customs and religious belief. Self-determination must be given to India's people in a Local Option Measure for every Province. The dismal alternative—which may a merciful Providence prevent—will be the inevitable widening of the breach between India's rulers and its people, a breach already created in part by an Excise policy flagrantly against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of India's population."

II.

A Powerful and Earnest Appeal, writes the Hita-vada, Nagpur, has been made to the British Parliament and people through the Simon Commission to give effect to India's national will in the matter of prohibition. This movement to rouse the conscience of England in the matter is headed by some of the most earnest Christian Missionaries in India as, apart from moral and economic considerations involved in the issue, in the matter of adoption of a wholesale policy of prohibition for India, it is the present British rulers of India that are held entirely responsible for preventing this country from reaching towards the goal of prohibition on which both Hindu and Moslem opinion is entirely agreed. Even if there were no other considerations involved, the memorandum of appeal issued on behalf of the Christian Missionaries urges that the British rulers of the land should rid themselves as quickly as possible of the accusation that, for considerations of revenue, the Government of India and the British Parliament force this drink evil on the people of India irrespective of the rooted prejudice against the use of alcoholic drinks in the minds of both the Hindu and Moslem communities. It is a fact, as Dr. Datta pointed out in the course of a debate in the Assembly, that the Government of India and the various Provincial Governments between them make a revenue of 147 crores annually from alcohol and intoxicating drugs in India. The best Indian opinion, both Hindu and Moslem, has always looked upon this portion of Government revenue as 'tainted money' and has always demanded its gradual reduction and substitution by other sources of revenue. But the attitude of the British portion of the personnel of Government has always treated the unanimous sentiment of this country as a matter for a joke and with utter indifference. It is to overcome this that the present appeal has been issued. The financial aspects of the constitutional changes that the Simon Commission might recommend will soon be brought under a comprehensive review and it is with a view to persuade Parliament to mark this drink revenue for total extinction that this timely appeal has been issued. Foreign liquor is under the direct control of the Government of India at present for the reason mainly that it is required mostly for the British people in India and the Army. But such centralized control has resulted in making it impossible for the Provinces to adopt or enforce any policy of prohibition effectively. The adoption of a partial policy of prohibition as regards "country liquor" only, as has been done in this province for instance, has only produced the result of giving a fillip to the consumption of more foreign liquor a result not surely aimed at or desired by those who stand for prohibition. Fortunately the Excise policy of the Government of India which has centralised all control in its own hands has prohibited the creation and establishment of powerful private vested interests such as has been the case in England. The solution of the drink problem should be to that extent comparatively easier in India. The least Parliament and the Government of India can and ought to do in the matter is to adopt a wholesale policy of local option and at the same time begin to develop new sources of revenue to take the place of the present one so that the financial equilibrium might not be disturbed. The rapid industrialization of India makes the problem of local option more urgent than it has ever been in the past. Already millions of Indian working class people have, on account of their poverty and ignorance, to live in insanitary houses in squalid surroundings. Their standard of living is low enough already in all conscience. If to all this is added the temptation to drink, it will sink them still lower and reduce industrial efficiency as well as sap the already feeble energies of the people as a whole. We hope this latest attempt to rouse the conscience of the present rulers of the land will meet with a better fate than has fallen to the lot of previous efforts made in the same direction.

THE WORLD'S POPULATION.

The dangers of overpopulation are stressed by many authorities. But Robert R. Kuczynski, of the Institute of Economics, argues (Foreign Affairs, October) that the real danger is that population may die out. There is very little accurate information about the number of births per year in the world or, indeed, about the total population of the world. "The available data are thus not sufficient to allow a judgment upon the vitality of the world's population as a whole. All we can say is that the yearly excess of births over deaths, amounting to 0.62 per cent, does not prove anything either way." But the data for western and northern Europe are adequate and have been carefully analyzed. Although the population of this section of the world has increased, the birth rate has decreased from an average of 30 from 1841-1885 to 18 in 1927. The rate is about the same in the several countries. But the fertility rate is more important than the birth rate since if the percentage of women of child-bearing age is large the birth rate will be high, though fertility may be low. The average number of children born to each woman has dropped from four or five in 1880 to an average of 2.2 in 1927, in the countries of northern and western Europe. In England in 1927 there were 655,000 births compared with 485,000 deaths. Even though improvements in public health may lower the death rate "the population of England is bound to die out if fertility remains as it is."

Since it is a question of births it is only necessary to consider the female population. The pertinent question, as Mr. Kuczynski sees it, "Are fertility and mortality such that 1,000 newly born girls will in the course of their lives give birth to 1,000 daughters?" Up to 1910 the decrease of mortality offset the decrease of fertility. But since then the rate has dropped until in 1927 the net reproduction rate (of girls who become mothers in their turn) in all western and northern Europe was about 0.87.

In 1926, the birth rate of western and northern Europe was about 48 per cent larger than the death rate. But a study of the age composition of the population shows that the proportion of women of child-bearing age is particularly large and that of young children and old persons particularly small. In all age groups except the lowest four there is an excess of females. Since the number of young children and of old persons is small (the groups in which the death rate is highest) the death rate is low. But this low rate cannot continue long since the large groups from 15 to 50 years old will soon increase the age groups in which the rate is highest. There are not enough children to fill the group from 15 to 50 in which death is least frequent. Furthermore the women now of child-bearing age will soon have passed this stage. With the present fertility rate these will have to be fully replaced if the number of births is maintained. But in northern and western Europe there are 23,670,000 females under 15 years of age and 25,850,000 females from 15 to 30 years of age, so that there are not enough girls fully to replace the women of child-bearing age. Therefore, the number of births is bound to decrease unless fertility increases. A reduction in the mortality rate could not make much difference in the birth rate. The average number of years lived in the child-bearing age must be less than 35 (from 15 to 50) and it is now about 29 years for all western and northern Europe. Extending the lives of women beyond the child-bearing age would not, of course, affect the number of births. The population of northern and western Europe would have doubled in three generations if the fertility and mortality rate of 1910 still prevailed.

The inference from these facts is that with the present fertility and mortality rate the population of western and northern Europe will die out slowly. Mr. Kuczynski does not, however, conclude that the world's population no longer reproduces itself, but rather that the questions should be thoroughly studied.

THE AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

AT MADURA.

The Age of Consent Committee proceeded from Madras to Madura where it sat for four days and examined a number of witnesses. Mr. K. Rama Iyengar opposed the legislation on the ground that it was against religion and complained that the legislatures had been captured by the few influential Social Reformers and public workers. Mr. N. Subrahmaniam Aiyar opposed the reform because "legislation is the application of physical force."

Mr. K. P. Gopala Menon, who was examined next gave an instance of a case in which sexual intercourse with a girl aged 13 had resulted in the girl's death as also that of the child. He would suggest the age of 16 for marriage though he knew perfectly well that it would not be acceptable to the orthodox section of the Brahmin community. He was in favour of a Matrimonial court for trying all cases relating to marital and extra-marital offences, and in such courts, non-officials might be co-opted as judges. He would have a special registration department for registering marriages.

Mr. Vannia Nadar Ramaswami, Secretary, Cosmopolitan Club, Virudunagar was for immediate legislative measures for fixing the age of marriage of girls as well as age of consummation. He believed that social reform would be very slow in its progress. He was convinced that physical and mental deterioration were the result of early marriages and early consummation. Nadar conferences had passed resolutions generally favouring the raising of the age of marriage but no definite age had been suggested. Witness however suggested that the age of marriage might be fixed at 14 and the age of consent at 18. He said he was speaking only for the Non-Brahmin community. Witness suggested that there should be registration of puberty and consummation so that the age of consent might be more effective.

Mr. A. V. Seetharam, a Sourashtra, next gave evidence. He said that early marriages and consummations were generally prevalent in his community. He had known of instances where attempts at early consummation resulted in disharmony between husband and wife. Sourashtras had been considering in their conference the question of widow remarriage. Witness was in favour of fixing the age of marriage at 16 and thought that no age need be fixed for consummation.

TALUK BOARD PRESIDENT.

Mr. T. V. Umamaheswaram Pillay, B.A., B.L., President, Taluk Board, Tanjore, deposed that, not only among the Brahmanas, but also among the richer section of the Thondamandalam Mudaliars and Karukatha Vellalars, the system of early marriages was prevalent. It was those educated Brahmanas who held advanced views and married their daughters long after puberty, though they would not say so, that were clamouring against the fixation of the marriageable age and the age for consummation by legislation, and these advanced views were prevalent among the majority of the Brahmana Community. Answering to Mr. A. Ramaswamy Mudaliar, who asked him whether he would not be satisfied with raising the marriageable age and the age for consummation for the Non-Brahmanas only, as the witness had himself admitted that post-puberty marriages were done among the major portion of the Brahmana Community, which was only after all a minority, and as the witness had himself admitted that he wanted legislation only to prevent the steady increase in the number of those Non-Brahmanas who imitated the Brahmanas in the system of early marriages, the witness deposed that he would have no objection and would be even satisfied with the fixing of the marriageable age and the age for consummation for Non-Brahmanas only.

Mrs. Hamsa Doraikannu Mudaliar, Lady Municipal Councillor, Madura, and Member of the Committee of the Indian Red Cross Society, the next witness to be examined, deposed that she had come across some heart-rending instances, when school-mates of her own community and that of Brahmanas suffered very much owing to early consummation, and who had become mothers at the age of 14 and 15. In some of these cases, the children died, and, in others, they were weaklings. She had just now returned from the Tamil Nadu Women's Conference, held at Tinnevely, where she had addressed the gathering on the importance of raising marriageable age and the age of consent. She had ascertained from the ladies present that 150 of them were for the raising of the age, and only about four of them, including the President, one Mrs. Sankara Iyer, were against it. She would have no objection to the raising of the age for consummation to 16, though in her opinion, the ages of 12 and 14 for marriage and consummation would be more readily acceptable to all.

Rao Bahadur M. R. Ramaswami Sivan retired Principal, Agricultural College, Coimbatore, was for immediate legislation, and personally, he was for raising the age even up to 15 for consummation, though he would only suggest 12 and 14 for marriage and consummation for pre-puberty marriages, if considered essential among the Brahmanas. 14 years was a sufficient time for the education of girls, though he did not believe that Brahmanas ever took any opportunity afforded to them for getting their girls educated. He knew perfectly well that though there was a Girls' High School in the Brahmana agharam (Brahmana Street) managed by ladies, only some one or two Brahmana girls ever took the trouble to go to the School, and even then they left it at the lower classes. Therefore, he could not say that the Brahmanas would ever take the trouble of educating their girls, however one may raise the age of their marriage.

LADY DOCTORS' EVIDENCE.

Dr. Mrs. Parker Vaughan and Dr. Miss I. M. Roberts, the former in charge of the Women's Hospital of the American Madura Mission from 1917 to 1924, and the latter who had succeeded her in the place, were then examined, from a purely medical point of view. They had known one or two cases of a serious nature as a result of early motherhood, and generally, they could say that it was not conducive to the health both of the girl-mothers and the offspring. Dr. Roberts was for raising the age to 18 for consummation. In America, and in the Panjab, where she had been working prior to her appointment in this place, girls attained maturity between the ages of 12 and 14. In the course of her experience in this place, she had come across instances where, in cases of late maturity, the mothers ask for medical certificates that the girl had attained puberty so as to send the girls to their husbands' houses. In the course of the cross-examination, she thought it probable that they might want the same to convince the people that the girl had attained puberty, though in reality they knew that she had not. Further cross-examined by Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar, the witness admitted that menstruation at the time of puberty would not be so regular as in later times, and it was probable that the girl, after the onset of puberty, might not get menstruation at all for some 3 months during which period a mother might ask for a certificate.

Mr. K. L. Venkataraman, Bar-at-Law, a member of the Sourashtra Community, who was next examined, supported the legislation raising the marriageable age and the age of consent, and he suggested the age of 15 for the latter. Most of the members of the Bar were for legislation, though they would not openly come forward and say so, and therefore, even if a mahazar over the signatures of the whole of the members of the Bar praying for no intervention in their religious habits in regard to the age of marriage and the age of consent, the witness would not think it reliable, and would even say that, though they openly say so, they were for the raising of the age by legislation.

The last witness to be examined was Mr. Yagnaswami Aiyer, Agent and Representative of H. H. Sri Sankara Acharya of Kumbakonam, Kamakot Pitha, and he strongly objected to the raising of the age by legislation. Though there was Prayaschitha to expiate the post-puberty marriage owing to the neglect of parents or otherwise, it would only expiate the sin of the individual, and the individual thus expiated was not considered fit for taking any social obligation. These, the witness held, were what may be called (Apathkala Prayaschitha) the expiation done in grave danger to save oneself.

The Committee then proceeded to Vizagapatam where the next three sittings took place and is now at Dacca.

AGRA WOMEN'S CONFERENCE.

The Second Agra Province Women's Educational Conference held here under the presidentship of Mrs. Kamaladevi Chatopadhyaya has passed a number of important resolutions. The conference did not approve the principle of communal schools and suggested that efforts be made to start inter-communal schools. The conference deeply deplored the effect of early marriage on education and emphatically condemned the custom allowing immature boys and girls becoming fathers and mothers. The conference demanded the legal age of marriage of girls and boys should be sixteen and twenty one, respectively, while it welcomed the legislation prohibiting early marriage. It strongly protested against Rai Sahib Sarda's proposal for fixing ages at 21 and 15 and required that the bill be amended in conformity with the conference's resolution. Whole hearted support was accorded to Sir Hari Singh's Age of Consent Bill. The conference demanded at least two women should be nominated in the U. P. Council from Agra and Oudh to adequately represent the educational interest of women and urged the women of other provinces to make similar demands. The conference suggested that teachers' training centres be opened in districts where teachers should be trained in the use of apparatus and methods of simplest kind. Another resolution demanded Government to make it a condition that aided schools teaching conformed to that of Government Schools. A resolution suggesting co-education in primary schools met with vehement opposition and was lost. Other resolutions were on the lines of those passed by the All-India Women's Educational Conference. They suggested compulsory physical training in all schools, and colleges and in case of girls, inspection by medical women. A suggestion for organising centres for teaching adult women, domestic science, fine arts, literary, industrial and general subjects were also made.

Lastly the conference deplored the death of Lala Lajpat Rai and placed on record their deep appreciation of his services to the country, particularly to the cause of women's emancipation. The conference was held in Parda and delegates from Agra, Benares, Cawnpore, Allahabad and other towns numbered more than 300. A number of delegates were elected for the next All-India Women's Educational Conference.

RAJPUT WOMEN'S EDUCATION.

At the Conference of Rajput women at Ajmer, the following resolutions among others were passed:—This Conference deploras the very backward condition of women's education in Rajputana and asks the Government of India and the various Durbars to do their duty towards the women of this great and important province by taking early steps to open Girls' Schools in all towns and villages of Ajmer-Merwara and the Indian States. The Conference further requests the local Government of Ajmer-Merwara to open at Ajmer a well-equipped Training School for Women Teachers.

“This Conference deploras the lamentable effects of child-marriage on the education and health of boys and girls and puts on record its considered opinion that the heavy mortality among married girls is entirely due to this pernicious practice. This Conference therefore strongly condemns the evil of early marriage and calls upon the Government of India and the various Durbars of Rajputana immediately to enact legislation to make it a penal offence to celebrate marriages of boys below 18 and girls below 14 years of age.

“This Conference gives its emphatic support to Rai Sahib Har Bilas Sarda's Child Marriage Bill now before the Legislative Assembly and calls upon Government and the members of the Central Legislature to pass it into law without delay”.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A Notable Reform Marriage:—A correspondent writes:—An instance in point to show how, in the Hyderabad State, the old order in social matters is changing, yielding place to the new, is afforded by a remarkable reform marriage that was celebrated on Wednesday last in the premises of Chennakeshavuloo temple in Buruguchettu Bazar, Secunderabad. The parties to it were Adi-Hindus. The bride Sreemathi Soubhagyavathi Ellamma alias Yasoda Bai, who is aged about 16, has had to extricate herself from the trammels of a custom of the caste which had consigned her to the fate of growing up as a Murl from her childhood, with the dismal prospect of leading the life of a prostitute on attaining the age of adolescence. In fulfilment of a vow to the deity of the famous temple at Yemuluwada the parents of poor Ellamma had dedicated her when she was a child of 5, nominally to a life of holiness, to start with, but ultimately and really, to lead a life of shame later on; and she would have done so, if other influences did not intervene as they did, fortunately for her. Her parents having died, she had become an orphan. About 3 years ago, the local Adi-Hindu Jatyunnati Sabha was started, and Ellamma somehow came within the sphere of its influence. She realised her position and made an application in writing to Mr. Arige Ramaswamy the Secretary of the Sabha, to rescue her from the fate that awaited her by getting her married. On this, the members of the Sabha interested themselves in her welfare. Some time ago, a youngman of the caste quite ignorant of what had happened, and seeing nothing wrong in it, as it was in consonance with custom, made a proposal (need I mention it?) to her which she disdainfully refused but, at the same time, made a counter proposal that they should be united in the bond of matrimony. The young man saw his mistake, repented for what he had done and readily agreed to lead her to the altar. He is Mr. Komati Bhagayya, aged about 22. He is employed as a records Attender in one of the Railway offices here. His marriage with Ellamma took place, as stated above, on Wednesday last. A pretty large number of ladies and gentlemen of Adi-Hindu caste and of other castes were present to witness the ceremony and bless the newly wedded couple. Mr. Baji Krishna Rao officiated as purohit.

Rajput Opposition:—The Rajputs of Kathiawar are greatly exercised over the proposed marriage of the Maharaja of Alwar with a Jhala Rajput girl of Dhuva in the Wankaner State. An influential deputation of Jhala and Ohudasama Rajputs waited on the Raja Saheb of Wankaner and requested him to prevent the proposed marriage. The Raja Saheb has directed the bride's father to show cause why the marriage should not be stopped. The bride's father has agreed to make a statement. Meanwhile a deputation from Alwar arrived on the morning of November 20 to present a chundadi (sari) to the bride as an outward symbol of betrothal. In view of the opposition, the bride's father has sought the advice of Jhala Agar Singh of Adwal. We have already published the father's statement and his decision not to entertain the marriage proposals of the Maharaja of Alwar.

Women in Gujerat:—The Third Women's Educational Conference was held in the afternoon of 9th December, in Preambhai Hall. Lady Tanumati Ohinubhai, Chairwoman of the Reception Committee, pleaded for national self-reliance in educational matters and urged the opening of a school in every village and the imparting of education to every child. The President Lady Vidyagauri Ramanbhai said that the prime necessity of India was mass education, but the Government pleaded want of funds. She, therefore, pressed for the amendment of the Primary Education Act empowering those Municipalities that could make independent provision of funds to introduce free and compulsory primary education. At present owing to want of funds Government delayed sanctioning schemes of free and compulsory primary education submitted by those Municipalities that wanted to introduce them. Resolutions were then passed urging the introduction of free and compulsory Primary education, opening co-education in Primary Schools, employing trained teachers, supporting Sarda's Child Marriage Bill and urging age of consent to be 18 for husbands and 21 for outsiders.

Prohibition:—The Bombay Provincial Temperance Association has passed the following two resolutions:—“That this meeting of Ladies and Gentlemen interested in the Temperance Movement thinks it advisable that the Eighth Bombay Temperance Conference be held early in 1929, and requests the Bombay Temperance Council to make all due arrangements for the same.” Proposed by Mr. D. D. Gilder Seconded by Mr. D. C.

Driver. "That this meeting of Temperance Workers in Bombay cordially supports the memorandum drawn up by the Rev. J. F. Edwards on the necessity of the adoption of Prohibition in India, and recommending that the Government of India should make an immediate declaration to that effect." Moved by the Chairman, Mr. K. Natarajan seconded by Mr. S. G. Warty. Both the resolutions were passed unanimously.

Indian National Social Conference.—The 41st Session of the Indian National Social Conference will be presided over by Mr. M. R. Jawakar, M. L. A. It was decided to arrange for an All-India inter-caste dinner under the auspices of the Indian National Social Conference to be held on December 25th, at a general meeting of the Executive Committee of the Conference. Place, Deshbandhu Nagar; Calcutta. Date and time, 25th December, 1928, Open Session, 2 P. M. Subjects Committee, 6 P. M., 26th December, 1928, Open Session, 8 A. M. Delegates to the conferences are requested to inform the Secretary, Reception Committee, 15, College Square, Calcutta regarding their time of arrival at Calcutta and also whether accommodation is required by them. Names of delegates are to be sent to the Office on or before 15th December next.

Women's Conference:—The Maharani of Travancore will preside over the All India Women's Conference to be held in Calcutta on December 27 and 28. The Dowager Queen of Mayurbhanj has been elected Chairman of the Reception Committee and Lady Bose has been elected General Secretary of the Conference.

Scout Trophies:—His Excellency Sir Leslie Wilson has forwarded to Sir Chunilal Mehta, Provincial Commissioner for Bombay, a cheque for Rs. 4,000 from a sum given to His Excellency for distribution among the Scouts. The money is to be utilised for the Boy Scouts and it is proposed to provide with it a shield or cup for each division including Bombay, for competition among the troops. Sir Chunilal Mehta, on behalf of the Scouts in the Presidency, has expressed his thanks to Sir Leslie Wilson and has informed him that it is proposed that the trophies should bear His Excellency's name.

Prohibition Propaganda in Madras:—It is understood that the Government have decided to provide a few lakhs of rupees in the budget for distribution as subsidies next year to non-official agencies and local bodies for prohibition propaganda in different places under their jurisdiction.

King Alfonso a 'Slave of Jesus of Nazareth':—King Alfonso has been received at the church of Jesus, Madrid, into the Brotherhood of the Slaves of Jesus of Nazareth—la Congregacion de la Esclavitud de Jesus Nazareno. Cardinal Segura, Archbishop of Toledo and Primate of Spain, placed the scapular of the brotherhood over the shoulders of the kneeling monarch. The Papal Nuncio, Mgr. Tedeschini, and the Bishop of Madrid, Mgr. Eljo, assisted at the ceremony, together with the director of the brotherhood, the Mayor, and the Capuchin Fathers of the Church. At the conclusion, the Cardinal Primate imparted the Holy Father's blessing, and His Majesty proceeded to the foot of the shrine and spent some time in prayer before the venerated image.

Film Corporation:—The Oriental Picture Corporation, Bombay which produced Rabindra Nath Tagore's play "Sacrifice" and found a market for it in the international cinema world, has been registered as a public limited liability company with twelve lakhs capital under an influential Board of Directors consisting of Sir Joseph Kay, Chairman, Sir Bomanji Dalal, M.L.A. Prince Fateh Singh of Limbdi, Mr. H. M. Mehta, Mr. B. P. Mody and others. The Company will in the beginning engage a number of European technicians and the studio laboratory will be fitted with equipments of the latest type.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. a. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.

THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	,, 1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	,, 1,00,00,000

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches:—(1) Mandvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Rehman Street.

Mofussil Branches:—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharia, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Asansol, Chandausi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jamnagar.

London Agents:—The Midland Bank, Ltd.

New York Agents:—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents:—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts:—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY
DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM,
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)
Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:
ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000
London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nashik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Aktulj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ... Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :--BARODA.

Branches :--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwarka.

	Rs.
JAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS :

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent, Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26

C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs. a. p.
Inland ...	5 0 0
Foreign ...	5 8 0
Single copy ...	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Barma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26.

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati Brand

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

RATES MODERATE

Suitings
Shirtings
Dhoters.

V. P. P. SERVICE

Premier Swadeshi Emporium

IVORY CURIOS
SILVERWARE
BRASSWARE
ENAMELLED
and INDEGENOUS
PRODUCTS.

TRAVELLING
and
HOUSE HOLD
REQUISITES
TABLE LINENS
and
BASEL MISSION
PRODUCTS.

IMPROVED QUALITY

Silks
Sarees
Borders.

PROMPT ATTENTION

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
Cruikshank Road, Fort,

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS (Agencies), Ltd.,
 16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,273
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,
 General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

- | | | |
|-----------------|-----|--|
| EYE DISEASES... | ... | Try "Akhyacura." |
| RING WORM ... | ... | Try "Kurain." |
| ASTHMA ... | ... | Try "Asthma Cure." |
| STRENGTH ... | ... | Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil." |
| TONICS ... | ... | Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills."
"Parrish's Chemical Food."
"Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo-phosphites of Lime." |
| GONORRHOEA ... | ... | Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C.
Copaiba Cum Buchu." |

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :-

Madras Presidency & Mysore :
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions :
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan :
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Tonight at 9-30 P.M.

and

Tomorrow at 5-30 P.M.

BANVARD ENGLISH COMEDY COMPANY'S

Latest London Success

"THE THARK"

From the Aldwych Theatre, London.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

To-day and Tomorrow at 4-30, 6-15, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

The Greatest Thrill the Screen has ever seen

"3 BAD MEN"

A William Fox Production

with

George O'Brien, Olive Borden

J. Farrell MacDonald and Tom Santschi

Also The Latest Pathe Gazette.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

To-day and Tomorrow at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

The Screen's Most Beautiful Star

NORMA SHEARER

with

LEW CODY

in

"HIS SECRETARY"

A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Production

Also The Days of Folly (Second Series)

See The Marvels of Motion Pictures in this gorgeously coloured Film

And The Latest Pathe Super Gazette.

EMPRESS CINEMA

To-day and Tomorrow at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

The Arrival of H. E. The (New) Governor of Bombay (2 Reels).

"TOPSY AND EVA"

featuring THE DUNCAN SISTERS

Its A United Artists Picture

They Move A Foot You Smile

They Smile You Laugh

They Laugh You Roar

Come and See Them

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1928

No. 17

I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Late Raja of Panagal. The Lahore Outrage. The Sarda Marriage Bill. Mrs. Naidu in America. Islam and Prohibition. Prohibition in Twenty Years. Encouraging Our Teachers. Journalists' Conference. The Afghan Rising.	Bombay Corporation and Crematorium. Character Training in Home And School. The 1928 Women's Christian Temperance Union. Mrs. Naidu in America. Bombay Women's Constituent Conference. News of the Week. National Conferences.
--	--

NOTES.

The Late Raja of Panagal:—The sudden and untimely death of the Raja of Panagal which took place on Sunday last is a severe blow to the cause of progress. The Raja Sahib was a man of wide culture and true patriotism and, though his position as leader of the non-Brahmin party somewhat circumscribed the sphere of his later activities, he never lost sight of the larger ends of nationalism. Brought up in conservative traditions and surroundings, he gradually acquired a broader outlook on social and religious questions. This writer had a long conversation with him twelve months ago, when Sir Parasuram Patro was also present, and he well remembers the warmth with which he repudiated the accusation that he was actuated by anti-Brahminical sentiments. The Raja and Sir Parasuram, who, we hope, will be elected as the next leader of the non-Brahmin party, both agreed that the time is come to broaden the basis of the party so as to make principles and not caste the credentials for its membership. If he had been spared for a few years more, we have not the least doubt that the Raja would have given effect to this much-needed alteration of the party constitution. The tributes which have been paid to his memory by Brahmin and non-Brahmin leaders, irrespective of their political differences, speak with one voice of his great ability, political courage and patriotism. We earnestly trust that the unanimity in this respect will pave the way to a lasting understanding between them and that both Brahmins and non-Brahmins will join hands in working for the good of their common country. We offer our sincere condolences to the Raja Sahib's family and his friends.

The Lahore Outrage:—On Monday, Mr. J. P. Saunders, an Assistant Superintendent of Police, was shot dead while returning home on his motor-cycle. A head Constable who was with him was also shot. He pursued the assailant some distance, but could not overtake him, and died soon after removal to the hospital. It is not certain whether one or two men committed the crime. It was committed near the Dayanand Anglo Vedic College. About twenty persons, including several students, have been arrested in connection with the crime and it is likely that within the next few days the public may be given some definite information about the results of Police investigation. At first, it was generally believed that the murders were in the nature of reprisals for the blow inflicted on the late Lala Lajpat Rai by a Police officer, but this view seems to be rather discounted by later developments. It is most regrettable that such an event should occur at this time when India, so to speak, is at the cross-road between ordered progress and general confusion. The spirit of non-violence should not be allowed to disappear with the non-co-operation movement. It is to be hoped that the crime does not represent a recrudescence of anarchism such as we had twenty years ago. Much depends on the way in which Government handle the political situation which has become much agitated owing to the composition and methods of the Simon Commission.

The Sarda Marriage Bill:—The Times of India writing of the Afghan outbreak, has a sting at Indian reformers. King Amanullah, it says, has pressed his reforms a little overmuch, "just as the Indian Legislative Assembly wanted the Government of India to suppress their people in the matter of child marriage until Government took refuge in the appointment of a special committee of enquiry". It is impossible to compress more inaccuracies in a shorter space. Indian reformers did not want the Government of India to suppress the people but to suppress child marriage in accordance with the demand of a large section of the people. The Government of India did not take refuge in the Special Committee which is appointed to enquire into the question of "the age of consent" and only incidentally into its bearing on marriage relations. The social reform movement in India is nearly a century old and for more than half a century Indian reformers have been carrying on a propaganda to raise the marriage age. They have succeeded in creating a strong public opinion in favour of this necessary reform. They want legislative sanction to consolidate the ground thus gained. There has been thus a long preparation for the reform now desired. The Times of India's comparison is, therefore, misleading and we trust that the Government of India will not be influenced by it.

Mrs. Naidu in America:—Mr. R. E. Hume, son of Dr. R. A. Hume of Nagar, writes to Mahatma

Gandhi about Mrs. Naidu's work in America. We are indebted to Young India for the following extract from Mr. Hume's letter:—"You will be pleased, I am sure, to receive this message concerning the successful start of our friend Mrs. Sarojini Naidu in her visit to the United States. I heard her at her first appearance in New York City. And I have been testifying that I have never heard either from man or from woman the equal of her platform performance for the beauty and flow of English diction and for the structure and sequence of English sentences. Several times during her sixty minutes of unmemorised discourse I wondered how she would extricate herself from the involved beginning of an elaborate sentence; but she never once failed to complete correctly the subject and verb with which she had proceeded in the sentence. However, more beautiful and significant than the grammatical structure of English sentences were the beauty and goodness and truth of her utterances. I rejoice that Mother India is being presented to America in the person of this charming and potent woman, who is perceiving the spiritual side of American life, and who is similarly conveying to the people here the spiritual side of the Indian people. My wife and I have been happy to have had Mrs. Naidu to dinner day before yesterday and to lunch today, along with various American friends. But I am especially happy thus to report to you promptly the very successful realisation of your plan for Mrs. Naidu to visit the United States as an ambassador from the women and people of India."

Islam and Prohibition:—Mr. Faiz B. Tyabji writes in support of Mr. Edwards' Prohibition Memorandum:—"I hold very strong views as to the deleterious effects of alcoholic drinks and opium. Though our religion is imperative on the necessity of total abstinence from intoxicants, unfortunately, at least in the City of Bombay, Muslims seem to suffer from them to an alarming extent; I think the labouring classes are also very much in need of protection from all temptation to succumb to the drink habit. I consequently read with the greatest interest the "Appeal" and "memoranda" made by Mr. Edwards. I am convinced that if a policy of rigid prohibition were enforced in India we should benefit immensely. I think there is a great fallacy in the argument that there is no merit in abstaining when you are forced to do so and that consequently prohibition should not be adopted as a state policy. Since abstinence is conducive to general advancement towards a healthier, more moral and more efficient life, it is the duty of Government to assist that advancement, even if it can be truly assumed that by such a policy one means of exercising moral virtues is removed. The Gods in their mercy always provide us with fields where we may exercise ourselves in the attainment of moral virtues, or in the overcoming of moral turpitude, and no government need be afraid of depriving man of such opportunities."

Prohibition in Twenty Years:—Mr. M. R. Jayakar, who presides over the Indian National Social Conference to be held next week in Calcutta writes to us:—"I have glanced through the Rev. Mr. Edwards' Note entitled "India's Excise Demand." It is an excellent production and puts forward the Indian point of view with great force. He has well brought out the important point that both in the case of Hindus and Moslems there is an ancient and powerful sentiment in favour of Prohibition, strongly reprobating indulgence in intoxicating drinks. I entirely agree with his contention that a wise and statesmanlike Government would have made use of this well-established and useful tradition to bring about Prohibition in at least 20 years' time. A resolution to this effect was passed, as you will remember, by the Bombay Legislative Council during the time I was a member. Mr. Edwards suggests ways by which this can be done by the Government issuing "instructions so to frame its financial policies as to eliminate gradually the necessity for excise revenue as an integral part of India's financial system, stretching the process of elimination" over a period of 20 years. I had myself something to do with the resolution of the Bombay Council at the time it was passed, and I remember that many of the considerations Mr. Edwards has urged in his Note actuated the framers and supporters of that resolution. It is very unfortunate that, since that resolution was passed, the Government of Bombay has practically gone back on its terms. I do hope that the arguments employed by Mr. Edwards will have their full weight when his Memorandum comes to be put before the British public, as it is bound to be in the course of time. Please convey to Mr. Edwards my congratulations on the way he has prepared his Note. Its chief merit is that it is thoroughly Indian in sentiment and keeps in view the ancient traditions and sentiments of the Indian people."

Encouraging Our Teachers!—The object of giving scholarships and prizes to the best students is as much to create some interest for those students who would not otherwise devote themselves to their studies, as to reward the industrious. The District Board of Midnapore has discovered that stimulus should be applied at the other end and that "teachers of all girls' schools from which girls get scholarships or stipends in the Upper Primary Examination should get Rs. 5 each and for each female student who would simply pass the examination the teachers should get Rs. 3, 2 or Re. 1 each according as the student passes in the first, second or third division." The suggestion has the merit of being original. We fail to see, however, how parents can be persuaded to send their daughters to school by giving teachers a "reward" for successful students. The spur is required not for the teacher but for the parent and the better idea would be to give the parent the prize. Moreover the Midnapore scheme would only result in producing a batch of primary school teachers who will either neglect the rest of the class and turn to the more brilliant students or overtax the minds of the school children. There can be no substitute for compulsory primary education and we are afraid that Midnapore will only end in proving the truth of this.

Journalists' Conference:—The first session of the All-India Journalists' Conference will be held at Calcutta on January 1st 1929. A Reception Committee with Mr. Ramananda Chatterjee as chairman has been formed. Mr. K. Natarajan has accepted the presidentship of the Conference.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, DECEMBER 22, 1928.

THE AFGHAN RISING.

The news from Afghanistan has suddenly assumed an alarming character during the last few days. At first it was to the effect that a single tribe of no particular importance had become discontented owing to a change in the rate or mode of collecting revenue. The measures of Westernization introduced, or rather enjoined by King Amanullah since his return from his European tour were utilised by the malcontents to give a socio-religious complexion to the revolt against the Government of the King. The abolition of the purdah, the sending of a batch of Afghan girls to Europe for education and the compulsory substitution of the European dress, especially the hat, for the national costume in Kabul, have been stated to be the principal causes of offence against Afghan conservatism. If the regular Afghan army had been staunch, the revolt could have been easily quelled, but there is unfortunately too much reason to think that the King is not able to rely upon it at this juncture. The Afghan troops are in sympathy with the malcontents, and their salaries, it is stated, have not been paid for some time. The Afghan Consulates repudiate most of these allegations, and we believe that there is a good deal of exaggeration in them. But after making a liberal allowance for this, there are still sufficient grounds for the apprehension that there are forces at work which may undermine the stability of the Afghan Government. A British military air-plane sent from India to ascertain the needs of the British Legation at Kabul had been shot down and the routes to that city are subject to frequent interruption. The King is said to be raising levies to put down the revolt, the regular Army having failed him in his hour of need. Afghanistan is now an independent country and no foreign Government can interfere in its internal affairs, unless its help is invoked by the Afghan Government. The invocation of foreign aid, however, will mean that the Government does not enjoy the confidence of its own people, and would strengthen the forces of revolt. The price of foreign intervention, too, will be loss of that independence which Afghanistan has won at heavy cost after a long struggle. The situation is exceedingly serious and we can only hope that a statesman will arise among the Afghans who will restore harmonious relations between the King and the people by a judicious adaptation of his Majesty's progressive ideas to the jealous conservatism of the Afghan masses. Since the above was in type, encouraging news has come from Kabul. A Reuter's cable from Moscow states that the rebel attack on the city has been arrested as the result of joint efforts of the troops, Air force and armed population, and that Governmental reinforcements are streaming in.

BOMBAY CORPORATION AND CREMATORIUM.

The Bombay Municipal Corporation passed some time back a resolution contemplating the establishment of a crematorium of the modern type for Hindus. The present mode of disposing of the dead among Hindus is admittedly primitive, and a considerable section of educated men and women feel the need of a more decorous mode of sepulture. The Corporation's resolution was in conformity with this enlightened view. But the resolution gave rise to an agitation among orthodox Hindus and public meetings were held to condemn it and to demand its rescission by the Corporation. A resolution was accordingly brought forward on Monday and after an animated discussion it was carried by a majority. The justification of open discussion by public bodies lies in the fact that, as a rule, while much of such discussion is irrelevant and even absurd, the net result reached is in conformity with commonsense. This is the case with the last Corporation resolution rescinding its previous resolution. The arguments urged by the opponents of cremation were wholly untenable. The Hindu shastras allow the widest latitude in such matters. The great Shankaracharya, when he was boycotted by the orthodox Brahmins, carried the dead body of his mother piecemeal to his own garden and cremated it there. This tradition is kept up by the Nambudri Brahmins who still burn their dead in their gardens. In his learned chapter appended to Ranade's History of the Marathas, Telang shows that the Maharashtra Brahmins, when they led armies, had adopted a short and summary ceremony for carrying out the funeral obsequies of those who died in the battle-field. Hindu Shastras rationally interpreted are the very reverse of a narrow, rigid code. Those who opposed the proposal on the ground of religion were, therefore, clearly wrong. But we do not think the Municipal Corporation is the proper agency to initiate a reform of this kind affecting a single community. This should be done by voluntary effort by reformers who are prepared to set an example amongst their own families and friends. Half a dozen men could easily find the money to set up and run a model crematorium which would be available to all at a small charge. We hope that this will be done soon, and we are sure the experiment will be a success and pave the way to the general adoption not only by Hindus but persons of other communities also of the simple, sanitary and decorous way of returning the physical constituents of the body to its native sources.

CHARACTER TRAINING IN HOME AND SCHOOL.*

(PRINCIPAL H. R. HAMLEY).

The epoch-making Report of the London Board of Education known as 'the Education of the Adolescent' defines the aim of education as—'the forming and strengthening of character, the training of tastes, to fill and dignify leisure and the awakening and guiding of intelligence.' If we examine these words closely, we shall find that the formation of character is placed first among these aims and, we may well believe, not by accident but by design. I wonder how many of us, teachers and parents, agree with this in our heart of hearts, and, if we do, how many of us allow our belief to be translated into activity. Let us notice, again, that character can be 'formed and strengthened' but that intelligence can only be 'awakened and guided'. The best teachers can but awaken intelligence; he cannot form or bring into being or develop what is not there. But the least of us can mould character, if we have character in us. The limitation of our intellect are obvious enough but who can measure the limitations of character?

Before I proceed further with my subject I must specify, if I cannot define, my terms. The word 'character' is used in many senses, as for example, when we speak of a man of forceful character or a man of strong character or when we politely refer to an eccentric person as a 'character', but I am using the term as you expect me to use it, as I speak of a man of strong moral character, one who knows what is right, admires it and strives to attain it. Henry Van Dyke has given some of the elements of character thus: To be glad of life because it gives you the chance to love and to work and to play and to look up at the stars; to despise nothing in the world except falsehood and meanness, and to fear nothing except cowardice; to be governed by your admirations rather than by your disgusts; to covet nothing that is your neighbour's except his kindness of heart and purity of life; to think seldom of your enemies and often of your friends; to be pure in thought, word and deed. McDougall, whose great book, 'Character and the Conduct of Life' all who are interested in Character Training should read, gives the constituents of character as 'good moral sentiments, self-respect and effort.' By 'self-respect' he means not the pride that causes us to despise others who are beneath us in birth, attainments or wealth, but the respect we have for the truth we live by and the good we try to do. As Van Dyke says: we must despise nothing in the world except falsehood and meanness.

The basis of all character is in our instinctive life. Now instinct is the great driving force of life. We never really act except under its urging. It is a common belief, but a wrong one, that instincts are vestiges of our early ancestry which have to be superseded by educational enlightenment. On the contrary, instincts are fundamental in human life; they are the foundation stones of all learning and character. Without the instinct of curiosity there could be no discovery; without the instinct of aggression there could be no victory; without the instinct of self-assertion there could be no progress. Curiosity, self-assertion, fear, self-regard, the play instinct, the constructive instinct, the hard instinct must find their true expression, if character is to be developed. Now instinct is like fire, a blessing or a curse. The instinct of pugnacity is right when a battle has to be won, but it would be out of its place in a well appointed drawing room; the instinct of fear would be bad, if courage were required but it has its place as a check on foolhardiness. The wise teacher and parent will not deny the reality of the instincts, or try to suppress them, but will give them room for healthy self-expression. Self-expression is one of Nature's safety valves. The man of character, then, is he whose instincts are instruments, instruments of his higher life.

* Being an address delivered at the Session of the Bombay Presidency Teachers' Association last November.

Now character training begins where instinct begins, that is, in boyhood, in the home, and the person responsible is the parent. Self-restraint, self-control, temperance, courage, justice, honesty, and many other moral virtues are born in the cradle. The altogether too common practice of feeding a child to keep him quite not only leads to derangement of digestion but to self-indulgence and lack of self-control; the still commoner practice of slapping a troublesome child without reason is responsible for resentment, injustice, and dishonesty. We may disagree with Freud in many things but in this, at least, he is right that the roots of most adult excesses of conduct can be traced back to childhood, to the first three or four years of life. Most of our prejudices, obsessions, likes and dislikes are acquired before the child is old enough to think for himself, and the trouble is they remain, sheltered in the unconscious. Let us take the fears of children. How often parents make cowards of their children by imparting their own superstitious fears to them. There is no greater begetter of fear in the world than the timid or superstitious parent. Suggest to a child that there is something to be afraid of in the dark and he will fear a dark room, and the unseen—all his life. Parents who can afford the space should keep their children in separate rooms without lights after they are a few days old. One more thing about fear. Never, never in all your life try to keep a child quiet by frightening it with threats of bhuts, ghosts and wild beasts. You are sowing the seed of cowardice in after-life. No nation can afford that. Then there is the fear of the unseen. How can we instil courage into the hearts of our children, if we do not greet the unseen with a smile, if we do not face it with courage, and by 'courage' I do not mean resignation. Remember that the Child is a creature of suggestion, and suggestion is generally unconsciously accepted. If we show fear the child will imbibe fear as surely as he drinks sustenance from his mother's milk. What I have said of fear may be said of all the instincts. The instincts of children are quickened into life by suggestion. But it must not be thought that there is something sinister about suggestion. Suggestion may be as productive of good as well as of evil. How often our children catch our enthusiasms, our love for birds, animals, flowers, our love for our fellow men. Show cruelty and your child will be mercilessly cruel; show kindness and he will be splendidly large-hearted; show injustice and he will be remorselessly unjust; show temperance and self-control and he will be temperate and controlled. Surely there is a responsibility upon us,—in the school—in the home—'to live justly, show mercy and walk humbly with our God.' Never suggest to a child that wrong doing is natural. The child will always follow the natural. 'What do you think he would do now that he finds himself in financial difficulties', said a teacher. 'Accept bribes! of course; that is exactly what he did.' That teacher was implanting corruption more surely than if he had extolled it as a virtue. Before we leave this part of the subject let me state that the child is most susceptible with regard to the things he does not fully understand and about which there seems to be mystery or secrecy, for example, with regard to sex knowledge. Unfortunately in India economic conditions are such that few families can afford more than one living-room and the consequence is that young children are admitted to the conversation of their elders which is more often than not is on topics that the child is not fit to hear discussed. 'They are too young to understand,' you say. Precisely, but they are not too young to remember and to scent mystery. We are now beginning to realise that the child learns far more than we think from the conversation of his elders but he learns it wrongly. So he gets wrong ideas of human relations, wrong ideas of sex, wrong ideas of personal morality. Before the young child, silence is golden. Things that are not fit for the young child's ears, ought not to be discussed before him.

We have seen that suggestion is responsible for most of the moral sentiments of children and that it is the unconscious suggestion, the unspoken suggestion that is strongest. We often repeat 'actions speak louder than words' but it is even more true that 'attitudes speak louder than actions.' Moral sentiment, however, does not make character. Of sentiment we have enough and to spare. As McDougall says: 'It is moral sentiment, accepted as an act of self-respect, and carried into action that constitutes character. True character can only be developed in Action, in Living. Is it by chance or design that the period of childhood and youth is the great time of activity? No. Character formation and activity go together.

To illustrate this part of my subject let me transfer my attention from the young child in the home to the youth in the school, from the bud of promise to the opening flower. There is no time in the life of the child fraught with greater possibilities for good or attended with greater possibilities for evil than this time of adolescence. The pity of it is that so few people in India have made the subject of adolescence one of careful study. Youth is a time of imagination, a time of intense loyalty, a time of aspiration and hope, a time of superabundant energy, a time of creative power. How important it is, then, that the tide of youth should be taken at the flood and should not be allowed to spend itself in the great ocean of inaction! Yet this is happening in India to-day. Is it any wonder that when opportunities are not given for self-expression our young men become the pray of the political extremist? Let us have loyalty by all means, loyalty to the school, loyalty to the country, to ideals, to truth. Let this loyalty begin in action in the playing field, in the school, in the home. I have said that youth is a time of tremendous energy. If the enthusiasm of youth cannot find its natural expression in healthy action, it will find an outlet in delinquency or else fade away in dreams. In either case the youth becomes a burden on society. The only hope for youth is, again, adequate opportunity for the outlet of his energy in safe, healthy, satisfying work and play. But what do we provide for our youth at this time? Meaningless drudgery at books, the study of things that can have no vital interest for him and no bearing on his life.

There are many other aspects of adolescence that I wish I had time to discuss but I must content myself with a few words with regard to youth's creative powers. Youth is a time of creative power. This is true with regard to the body, for it is during adolescence that the body gradually develops its sexual potency. It is also true with regard to the whole personality. We are now learning that these creative powers of man are all intimately associated with one another and that the free expression of one with power can and will sublimate the urging of the other; that sexual indulgence for example can kill artistic and intellectual creation and that creative work and play can break the power of the insistent sex instinct. Few parents and teachers seem to know this, for they set youth the almost impossible task of trying to live down their instincts especially the sex instinct, instead of directing that energy in some other direction for the creation of something new. Boys and girls of adolescent age spend this critical time of their lives poring over books, cramming, memorising, absorbing knowledge that has little significance for them and still less interest. How many adolescent boys and girls are ever given the chance of self-expression, of creation in any material, mental, or aesthetic form. Creative work has practically no place in our schools to-day. No incentive is given to youth to make, produce, manufacture or put together anything that he can really call his own. He spends his time cramming annotated examination guides and the result is that his mind becomes paralysed and incapable of an original idea. Even the 'Essay' that should be the expression of original thought, is memorised from books. This is the tragedy of youth to-day. The great problems of adolescence will never be solved until these things pass away and our schools become Centres of Creative thought and work, until we learn to place creation before reproduction, self-expression before imitation, imagination before memory. Let us return to our schools determined to work for the release of personality, for the release of creative energy that we have hitherto kept in bonds, and let us return in the spirit of John Drinkwater's prayer.

Grant us the will to fashion as we feel
Grant us the strength to labour as we know,
Grant us the purpose, ribb'd and edged with steel,
To strike the blow.
Knowledge we ask not—knowledge Thou hast lent
But Lord, the will—there lies our bitter need,
Give us to build above the deep intent,
The deed, the deed.

THE 1928 WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION CONVENTION.

(BY MISS MABEL E. ARCHIBALD, M.A.).

The emblem of the Women's Christian Temperance Union is the White Ribbon and is wound, around the world. The bringing in of Prohibition in the United States of America was largely due to the temperance propaganda of the women in the home and schools. "For God and Home and Native land" is the watchword. Agitate! organize! are the slogans. Frances Willard was the founder. In the olden days the women of Ohio, U. S. A. visited every saloon and besought the saloonkeepers to close their drink shops as their husbands and sons were being ruined by drink. They knelt in the snow streets and prayed outside the shops. God heard their prayers and the shops were closed and now in that great country it is unlawful to sell the poisonous liquid. The new President is pledged to enforce the Prohibition law. The election of Hoover has caused great thanksgiving to all who are interested in the warfare against King Alcohol.

How happily the forty delegates from nine Provinces of India wended their way to beautiful Delhi the Imperial city to attend the eighteenth biennial Convention of the W. C. T. U. We were very pleased to note that more than half of the delegates were Indian ladies. In the olden days missionaries and Anglo-Indian ladies were the only delegates. But now the ladies of this country are beginning to take an interest. This speaks well for the permanency and success of the work.

Mrs. Sinclair of Delhi gave a very hearty welcome to which Mrs. Corpron of Nadiad responded. Devotional services were led by Miss Ipe B.A. of Khedgaon, Miss Lewiston of Jorhat, Assam; Mrs. Mary Samuel of Rawalpindi. Misses Alice and Helen Day of Calcutta rendered excellent music. We were delighted with the expressive singing of Mrs. Mookerji of Delhi and enjoyed the music address of the temperance enthusiast, Mr. L. Nandlal of Amritsar.

The address of our National President, Miss Mary J. Campbell on "Our Task" was masterly. Bishop Robinson gave an excellent exposition of prayer, showing that prayer was not only asking God for gifts but it was a waiting on God to hear his voice and know His will; and the third element in prayer was the act of Consecration. The twelve departments of work such as medal contests, Scientific Temperance Instruction, Citizenship, Literature were presented. Miss Campbell gave a strong presentation of the Opium question showing how babies are harmed by the mothers giving opium to keep the babies quiet.

The reception at Headquarters, No. 3 Commissioner Lane, was most enjoyable and the public meeting in the Hindu College hall was inspiring. Mir Mohammed Hussain of Delhi gave a most interesting account of the work of Local Social Service League and our three lady Organizers,—Miss Narayandas B.A. of Madras, Mrs. Navalkar of Bombay and Miss H. Maya Das of the Punjab, gave vivid presentations of their work. The latter attended the Worlds W. C. T. U. Convention at Lusanne, Switzerland. Her address on the World-Wide Women's Movement was inspiring and forcible in every way.

A very pleasing function was the presentation of a gift and a bouquet to Mrs. Mott Keislar M.D., who was going on furlough. Several times she, as Vice President, has been acting President, when Miss Campbell was not able to act. She also edited the "Indian Temperance News" during Miss Campbell's absence at the Worlds W. C. T. U. Convention. Miss Davis who has had charge of the Literature Department is also going on furlough. About four thousand rupees worth of charts and Temperance books and Non-alcoholic essences etc. were sold last year and orders were received from all parts of India, and even from Egypt.

Miss Campbell was reappointed National President and Miss Martin, and Mrs. Chitambar of Lucknow, Vice Presidents, Mrs. Moffat of Lucknow Cor. Secretary and Mrs. Manley of Calcutta Treasurer. We are happy in having three fine women as National Organizers (Miss Narayan Das, Miss Navalkar and Miss H. Maya Das.). We believe they will be able to interest the women of India more and more in the urgent battle against drink—this great work for the protection of the home and the welfare of the youth of our land. It was a most enjoyable and profitable Convention.

The following were among the resolutions passed Prohibition:—

Resolved that we place on record our unbounded joy and satisfaction that the recent United States Presidential election, which was really a re-"National Referendum Prohibition" an overwhelming majority stood for the 18th amendment and the enforcement of the same; and we would congratulate the W. C. T. U. of the U. S. A. on the large share they had in bringing in a victory, which signifies the eventual triumph of Prohibition throughout the world.

No. 2. INTERNATIONAL PEACE.

Resolved that the National Women's Christian Temperance Union in India record its gratification at the signing of the Kellogg Peace Pact in Paris by fourteen nations of the world; and we hereby pledge ourselves to do all in our power to help along the cause of peace and international good will.

No. 4. OPIUM AND NARCOTICS.

Realizing the terrible harm that results from the use of opium (especially by giving it to infants) and other narcotic drugs such as Bang-Ganja and tobacco we would urge our members to agitate against the use of the same; and we pledge ourselves as an organization to co-operate with any effort toward the suppression of the opium traffic.

No. 5. AGAINST GAMBLING.

Be it Resolved that we each feel the personal responsibility of discouraging raffling such articles as cakes, dolls, etc., in Church bazars or other entertainments; also all other games of chance, betting on winners in sports, etc., as the beginning of the gambling habit.

Be it further Resolved that we each acquaint ourselves with the laws on gambling, and try to cooperate with officers to suppress it.

No. 7. FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union strongly pledges itself to loyally support and help in enforcing by steady action, strict vigilance, co-operation with other interested bodies and other proper measures, all present and future Government legislation and prevent any injustice being done to policies towards the moral and social welfare of India.

No. 8. AGAINST PROSTITUTION.

Resolved that we as an organization pledge our cooperation with, and our support of, every action against prostitution; and that we urge our members to initiate programmes and to carry on personal and cooperative work to eliminate this evil, and also to procure moral instruction in the schools.

No. 9. PROPAGANDA THROUGHOUT ALL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF INDIA.

We urge the institution of an active Temperance Campaign in every Christian congregation.

No. 10. TO AMERICANS.

We appeal to all Americans residing in India or travelling through the country to refrain from using alcoholic liquors as a beverage. The United States stands before the world an exponent of Prohibition; and when Americans abroad are known to indulge in strong drink, the impression made by the propaganda against prohibition is strengthened. Especially do we urge all American consuls to be loyal to their own Government and laws by their practice and influence.

MRS. NAIDU IN AMERICA.

The Secretary, of the Hindustan Association of America has sent us the following: As the huge liner S. S. Berangaria carrying on board Mrs. Sarojini Naidu cast its anchor in the harbour of New York a delegation of fifty prominent members of the Indian Community of New York headed by Mr. Ramlal Bajpai waited upon the poetess who arrived Friday evening Oct. 26 on a lecture tour throughout the United States and Canada if possible. Mr. Bajpai in garlanding Mrs. Naidu on behalf of his countrymen in America made a short speech of welcome to the illustrious Indian lady visitor. In the conclusion of his speech Mr. Bajpai remarked: "May I also hope in the name of our countrymen that your very presence here will give the western world a proper conception of the divine place that womanhood holds with us in our Hindu scheme of social organization." Plans of a more elaborate reception contemplated by the community had to be abandoned to the disappointment of many as the steamer arrived nearly eight hours late.

Asked by a number of reporters what the poetess thought about Miss Mayo's book the only curt reply was "trash". Regarding the steps in progress for the freedom of India Mrs. Naidu said, "You must not picture the East as always standing like a resigned statue with hands folded. Our epics are about battles. We can shoot a bolt, too, when we want. India wants peace. We want peace with victory."

The following day a luncheon was given by the Reception Committee in honor of Mrs. Naidu in which were participating the members of all Indian organisations in New York, prominent among whom were the Hindustan Association of America, the India Society of America, the Friends of Freedom for India etc. Movietone pictures were taken which will be shown on the screen all over America so that millions of people may have the opportunity of seeing and hearing Mrs. Naidu as a part of the daily news reel item in all the motion picture theatres. Immediately after the luncheon Mrs. Naidu left for Chicago where she is to address the Illinois League of Women Voters. On November 2nd she is scheduled to lecture in New York under the auspices of the India Society of America, on India's Womanhood. It goes to the credit of Mr. Hary Govil, Director of India Society, for securing the first public appearance of Mrs. Naidu in New York, under the auspices of his Society.

The biggest event scheduled, however is a banquet royal organized by the members of Hindustan Association of America in cooperation with other Indian organisations such as the Maha-Bodhi Society, Vedanta Society, Young India Association, to be held on November 10th. A reception committee consisting of noted Americans and representatives of Indian organizations has been formed for the occasion. The several chapters of the H. A. A., spread throughout the country numbering ever fifteen, will be represented in the banquet. Mrs. Naidu will speak on "India and America."

BOMBAY WOMEN'S CONSTITUENT CONFERENCE.

In the third constituent conference of the Bombay Women's Committee on Education Reform, held in the Malabari Memorial Hall, Gamdevi, Lady Tata presided. Opening the proceedings, Mrs. Shaffi Tybeji, Chairman of the Reception Committee said:—"The circumstance that has led to the foundation of the All-India Women's Conference was the long-felt want of a central organisation of women to deliberate on questions of educational importance specially affecting the women of India. The wider outlook of woman on these questions as a result of the spread of western education in this country and the growth apace of feminism all over the civilised countries of the world, have roused the Indian woman to a sense of consciousness of her rights and privileges.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION IN BOMBAY CITY.

"Since the Primary Education Act of 1923 was published, the Bombay Municipality was earnestly preparing to introduce free and compulsory education in Bombay, and thus it was that in 1925 the scheme was actually put into practice in F and G Wards, as this locality consisted of the most backward population of the City. It was most proper that this scheme should have been launched first in these two Wards, which extend to an area of 13½ square miles and have a population of 3½ lakhs, more than two lakhs of which is composed of illiterate mill-hands. The Municipality had to face many difficulties while introducing compulsion in these Wards. Out of the 11,537 children of 'compulsory' age 10—15 per cent were found to be Marathi-speaking and the rest were Gujarati, Urdu and Tamil speaking. In spite of difficulties the work of compulsory education in these Wards was pushed on vigorously, with the result that the number of attending children of 'compulsory' age rose from 5,000 to 12,000 within only five months after the introduction of compulsion.

MUSLIM GIRLS' COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

"One unhappy fact that I must bring to your notice is the entire absence till now of Moslem girls from the scope of the operation of the Primary Education Act. On the 2nd of November 1925, the Compulsory Education Act was made obligatory to all boys and girls between the years of 6 to 11 residing in F and G Wards except the Moslem girls as the Bombay Corporation wanted Government sanction to limit the age of compulsion for Moslem girls to ten years only, out of deference to the sentiments of the Moslem community. The necessary Government sanction was obtained some time afterwards. Neither the Corporation nor the Schools Committee was slow in giving effect to the necessary preliminary measures for extending compulsion to Moslem girls. Several months have elapsed since the regular census of the Moslem girls in the two Wards was taken and all the preliminaries are by now complete. The Corporation have pressing applied to Government to announce the date of compulsion for Moslem girls without which the necessary printing of registers giving all the particulars about every Moslem girl of 'compulsory' age cannot be published. Government sanction is, however, not yet forthcoming. From whatever quarters it may be, the delay, I must say, is getting intolerable to every citizen of Bombay who has the cause of education at heart. So also the question of extending compulsion to B and E Wards which is going to affect mostly the Mohammedan population, has been delayed till now. There is no excuse whatever for any further delay on the part of Government in giving a provisional sanction if necessary, without prejudice to the issues that are 'sub judice' between Government and the Bombay Municipality. May we hope and trust that the Hon. Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmed the present Minister of Education will expedite the matter and send the necessary sanction for both the schemes without any further delay? The miserable and disgraceful illiteracy of the backward community in general and the Mohammedans in particular demands that the matter should no longer be delayed.

TRAINING FACILITIES IN BOMBAY.

"Another point to which I should like to refer is about the training facilities for ladies in Bombay. I may state here for your information that in the Municipal girls' school there are 66 per cent of trained teachers on the Marathi side, 83 per cent. on the Gujarati side, but only 13 per cent. on the Urdu side. A very miserable state of things indeed! The Seva-Sadan and the Vanita Vishram in Bombay have been doing very good work in giving every facility to Marathi and Gujarati young ladies for being trained. Grateful thanks of the public are due to these two institutions for giving us a large supply of trained lady teachers in Marathi and Gujarati. As for the Urdu Girls' Schools, it is a matter of regret that in spite of the miserably low percentage of trained teachers, viz., 13 per cent. nothing substantial was done till about three years back, to provide facilities for training to young Moslem ladies in Bombay. To make up this long-felt deficiency, the Schools Committee have recently opened a training institution for Urdu ladies, but it teaches only up to the 1st year of training. I should strongly recommend to the Municipal Schools Committee to extend the sphere of this training institution to the 2nd year of training, so that it would consist of three classes viz.: (1) V. F. Class (2) First Year Training Class and (3) 2nd Year Training Class. This could be done at a comparatively low cost.

THE PURDAH SYSTEM.

"I will touch on a very controversial point, that has adversely affected the education of the women of the Muslim community. I mean the Purdah system. The belief that Muslim women should keep their faces thickly veiled, is a Quoranic injunction is most erroneous. I admit that the Quoran has enjoined the Purdah on Muslim women but it is not the irrational Purdah of Indian women,—which denies them the blessings of a liberal education and the enjoyment of a sound health,—but something quite different. In Chapter 24 and verses 30 and 31 of the Quoran there are clear injunctions in the following words:—"Say to the believing men that they cast down their looks..." "Say to the believing women that they cast down their looks..."

"The men are enjoined to "cast down their looks" in one verse and the women in the other. This directly proves that in the time of the Prophet Muslim women had every liberty to go about on the public thoroughfares. Otherwise where was the necessity for asking men to "cast down their looks" and women to do the same? Again, if the women had been going about in those days with veils on, there would certainly have been no injunction to "cast down their looks" to either sex. A learned Muslim commentator says "In a society in which women never appeared in public the injunction to men to have their looks cast down would be meaningless, and the similar injunction to women given in the next verse, if they never left the compounds of their houses, would be equally absurd."

"The only order in the Quoran with regard to the Purdah is in the same verse 31 already quoted, which after enjoining the women to cast down their looks asks them "not to display their ornaments except what appears thereof and to wear their head coverings of their bosoms." The words, "what appears thereof" also prove that the face and hands of the Muslim woman of those days were not covered. The injunction to wear the head-covering over the bosoms is the only thing that introduces the notion of Purdah, which really means nothing more than having a robe, or what they call "Chadar," thrown over the body excluding the face and hands.

"I appeal to my Muslim sisters believing in the Purdah system to ponder over the verses of the Quoran I have just quoted and to ask their menfolk why they are interpreting the Quoran in a different way."

"What exactly is meant by Education?" asked Lady Dorab Tata in her speech. "In my opinion, it is not merely the school syllabus and the University curriculum, which means the study of a certain number of books on certain stated subjects so as to enable our students to pass examinations. As far as I know, the general belief is that if one has passed the Matriculation or B.A. Examination, one is considered to be "Educated." But no, the word "education" has a far wider meaning and is much more far-reaching than the passing of school and college examinations. I do not for one moment wish to decry the importance of such studies and examinations as they enable the students to gain knowledge and to understand the value of what they are taught and of all that they may read and study in after life. In my opinion education does not begin with the school-going age, but should begin at home at a very much earlier age.

CHARACTER-BUILDING AND BODY-BUILDING

"The education of a child should really begin from the time it is in its cradle and it then takes the shape of "Character-building" which is, to my mind, the most important thing in the education of our boys and girls. And the most important thing in Character building is Discipline. I have been an advocate of this all my life and it is this that we have to teach our girls—our future mothers—how to bring up and "educate" their children at home. There is another subject of equal importance which should be taught to all our girls—our future mothers—and that is the art of rearing strong healthy children—the art of body-building. In Europe and in America this has been developed into a regular science and all future mothers attend courses of lectures and classes to make a special study of this subject—how to feed and to care for their children from babyhood so as to make them strong, healthy and sturdy men and women both mentally and physically. The feeding of children in their infancy and early childhood with the right kinds of food is a very important factor in their bringing up. The knowledge of how to treat them medically—simple remedies for the usual everyday illness or ailments of little children—is also a very essential part of a girl's education. I feel I cannot stress these two factors too much—viz., the arts of character-building and body-building. Every girl must be taught these.

THREE EVILS

Proceeding, Lady Tata said that child marriage and the purdah system were the two great evils and draw-backs to all progress that existed in their midst. "I may also add," she declared "another evil which hampers all progress and that is the system of caste and caste prejudices. God has made all men and women alike and in His eyes there is no difference between the highest and the lowest amongst us. Why, then, should be accident of birth or of fortune give man the right of looking down upon and ill-treating his fellowmen as is the custom in this country on the excuse of "caste?" These three evils are doing more harm to the cause of women's education and emancipation and general progress than anything else I know of in India and the sooner they are removed the better it is for us women to wage a continuous war against these harmful and unhealthy customs prevailing amongst us and unless we women all combine and with one voice cry out against them and ask for their abolition from every part of the country, nothing will be done. In these matters our menfolk, are as much, if not more, to be educated as our women; so let it be the aim of every thinking woman in the country to fight for the abolition of these pernicious customs and thus lay the foundations for a happier, healthier and greater future for our nation."

WOMEN AND NATIONAL PROGRESS

"I have always maintained that unless the women of any nation are given their rightful place in their homes and in the life of the country and are given the opportunities to take their rightful share of service to their country in those spheres which are essentially the spheres of women's work, no nation can ever rise or be great. The women of a country are at least half, if not more than half, of its population. How can any nation expect to rise and be great if it deliberately shuts down all doors of progress and education and emancipation against one half of its population? How can the men of any race expect to be educated—in the real sense of the term "educated"—when their own mothers are not educated at all or trained in any way and are themselves mere children incapable of educating their children or of raising a strong healthy, virile race? The results of such short-sighted toleration of these evils in our midst for so many generations are unhappily only too evident on all sides. The shortness of life of the average man, the feeble resisting powers on the slightest illness, the high percentage of mortality of our young mothers and children, the ignorance and absence of education, the want of character and back-bone we see all around us in every walk of life, the deterioration of the race and decreasing of its prosperity, the poverty and misery of the masses are all a sad and deplorable evidence of the evils of the existing system. Let us, women, therefore, set our hearts on the removal of all these evils from our midst and let us not rest or relax our efforts for one moment until the ultimate goal is reached. Then indeed shall we have done some service to Indian womanhood, to the Indian nation, and to our mother country. Let us all unite and raise our voice in as loud and long a protest as possible and let us not rest contented until we have succeeded in making every man and woman in the country recognise the necessity for the abolition of all these evils which retard progress in every direction."

RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions were, then, adopted by the Conference :—

"This Conference deeply deploras the effect of early marriage on education. It emphatically condemns the custom of allowing immature boys and girls to become parents. It calls on the Central Government and the Provincial Legislatures to follow the precedent set up by the Indian States of Baroda, Mysore, Rajkot, Kashmir, Gondal, Indore, Limbdi and Mandi which have raised the legal age of marriage. This meeting demands that the legal age of marriage for girls and boys should be made 16 and 21, respectively. While welcoming Rai Saheb Harbilas Sarda's attempt to pass legislation prohibiting early marriage, this Conference strongly protests against his proposed ages of 12 and 15, and calls on him and the Select Committee to amend his Bill in conformity with this resolution. It wholeheartedly supports Sir Hari Singh Gour's Age of Consent Bill as a step towards this end."

"This Conference empowers the President to forward a copy of the Resolution to J. Crerar, Esq., C.S.I., C.I.E., I.C.S., Home Member, to Sir Moropant Joshi, Chairman, the Age of Consent Inquiry Committee to Rai Saheb Harbilas Sarda and to Sir Hari Singh Gour."

"This Conference delegates Mrs. Hansa Mehta, Mrs. Annigiri, Miss Engineer, Miss Bahadurji, Mrs. Salim Ali, Mrs. Nikambe, Miss Yamunabai Bhate and Miss Shantila Desai to represent it at the All-India Conference of Women on Educational Reforms to be held at Patna in the first week of January, 1929."

"This Conference empowers its delegates to invite the All-India Standing Committee to hold the next session of the Conference in Bombay."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A Widow Marriage :—The first widow marriage in the Kayastha community at Benares took place on Monday night. A large number of guests attended the wedding. The bridegroom is Mr. Mahendra Nath and is a bachelor. He is related to Babu Sampurnanand. The bride is the widowed daughter of Munshi Ganesh Prasad. The ceremony was performed by Sanataniat Pandits in accordance with Sanatan Dharma rites. It was remarkable generally that no hesitation was shown by the members of the community in participating in 'bhat.'

Viceroy at Shantiniketan :—Their Excellencies the Viceroy and Lady Irwin travelled to-day by train to Bolpur where they were received by Mr. Cook, Commissioner, Burdwan Division, who presented the local officials and by Dr. Tagore. They drove to Shantiniketan where the poet received them with a short speech of welcome. Their Excellencies then inspected the Research Institute and the library and later drove to Kalabhavana and inspected the museum. Tea with the poet was followed by a musical and dancing entertainment.

Physical culture for School Girls :—The Government of Madras have appointed a Committee of twelve official and non-official ladies to devise ways and means for improving the curricula of physical education among girls in elementary and secondary schools in the Presidency.

NATIONAL CONFERENCES.

22nd December—All Parties' Convention in Convention Pandal.

President—Dr. M. A. Ansari.

23rd December—All Parties' Convention in Convention Pandal.

24th December—All Parties' Convention in Convention Pandal.

25th December—(1) Subjects Committee of Convention in President's Room.

(2) Subjects Committee of Congress in A. J. C. C. Pandal,

- (3) Evening—All-India Social Conference in Extra Pandal.
President—Mr. M. B. Jayakar.
- (4) Youth Congress in Convention Pandal.
President—Mr. K. F. Nariman.
- (5) Khilafat Conference.
President—M. Mahomed Ali.
Place—Khilafat Pandal.
- (6) All-India Jadava Mahasabha.
President—Rao Bal Bir Singh.
Place—Shradhand Park.
- 26th December—(1) Morning—All-India Social Conference in Extra Pandal.
- (2) Subjects Committee of Convention in President's Room.
- (3) Subjects Committee of Congress in A. I. C. C. Pandal.
- (4) Evening—Vaisya Conference in Extra Pandal.
- (5) Morning and Evening Youth Congress in Convention Pandal.
- (6) Khilafat Conference.
- (7) All-India Muslim League.
President—Maharaja of Mahmudabad.
Place—Albert Hall.
- (8) All-India Medical Conference.
President—Dr. G. V. Deshmukh.
Place—Chittaranjan Hospital.
- (9) All-India Library Conference.
President—Dr. Annie Besant.
Place—Senate Hall.
- (10) All-India Jadava Mahasabha.
- (11) All-India Buddhist Conference.
President—R. B. Pandit Sheo Narsin.
- 27th December—(1) Convention in Pandal.
- (2) Morning—Vaisya Conference in Extra Pandal.
- (3) Evening—Ladies' Conference in Extra Pandal.
President—Maharani of Travancore.
- (4) Khilafat Conference.
- (5) All-India Muslim League.
- (6) All-India Jadava Mahasabha.
- (7) Library Conference.
Place—Senate Hall.
- (8) All-India Medical Conference.
Place—Chittaranjan Hospital.
- (9) All-India States Subjects' Conference.
Place—Burrabazar.
- (10) All-India Buddhist Conference.
- 28th December—(1) Convention in Convention Pandal.
- (2) Ladies' Conference in Extra Pandal.
- (3) All-India Muslim League.
Place—Albert Hall.
- (4) All-India Medical Conference.
Place—Chittaranjan Hospital.
- (5) All-India State Subjects' Conference.
Place—Burrabazar.
- 29th December—(1) Morning—Sarvajani in Prayer in Congress Pandal.
- (2) Congress in Congress Pandal.

- (3) Postal Conference.
President—Mr. K. C. Neogi.
- 30th December—(1) Congress in Congress Pandal.
- 31st December—(1) Congress in Congress Pandal.
- (2) Postal Conference.
- 1st January—All-India Press Conference.
President—Mr. K. Natarajan.
- The Conference, of which dates have not yet been finally fixed :—
- (1) Hindusthani Seva Dal Conference.
- (2) Rashtra Bhasa Conference.
- (3) All-India Cow Conference.
- (4) Arya Samaj Conference.
- (5) All-India Music Conference.
- (6) Andhra Provincial Conference.
- (7) All-India Independence League.
- (8) All-India Theists Conference.

Conferences which hold their Sessions not in Calcutta but elsewhere are :—

- (1) The Indian National Liberal Federation at Allahabad on the 30th and 31st December.

President—Sir Chimanlal H. Setalvad.

- (2) The All-India Women's Educational Conference at Patna commencing on the 6th January.

President—The Dowager Rani of Mandi.

[Owing to want of time no Social Conference will be held along with the Liberal Federation at Allahabad this year.]

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. & p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Perch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.

THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

WANTED.

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Masters's Classes. Full particulars and Railway Fare Certificate on 2 annas stamp. Apply to:—Imperial Telegraph College, Delhi.

THE GUARDIAN.

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY
DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dyamenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex." Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM,
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,

MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondaicha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulla (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :--BARODA.

Branches :--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwarka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Karna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd. Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs. a. p.
Inland ...	5 0 0
" " Foreign ...	5 8 0
Single copy ...	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-23.

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

RATES MODERATE

Suttings
Shirtings
Dhoters.

V. P. P. SERVICE

Premier Swadeshi Emporium

IVORY CURIOS
SILVERWARE
BRASSWARE
ENAMELLED
and INDEGENOUS
PRODUCTS.

TRAVELLING
and
HOUSE HOLD
REQUISITES
TABLE LINENS
and
BASEL MISSION
PRODUCTS.

IMPROVED QUALITY

Silks
Sarees
Borders.

PROMPT ATTENTION

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
Cruikshank Road, Fort,

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business :—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches :—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents :—SEDGWICK, COLLINS

(Agencies), Ltd.,

16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to :—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland Rs 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
The Indian Social Reformer,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer).
Price annas 8.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,
The Hindustan Review.
PATNA, E. I. R.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Tonight at 9-30 P.M.

and

Tomorrow at 5-30 P.M.

MADAME PAYLOVA

Supported by

50 STAR ARTISTES. 50

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Tonight and Tomorrow at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

Pathe Gazette No. 1557-58

DAY'S FOLLY SERIES No. 4

A Gorgeous Picture, Fully Coloured

THE FORTUNE HUNTER

7 Reels, featuring the screen comedian

SYD CHAPLIN.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Tonight and Tomorrow at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

Pathe Super Gazette, No. 1557-58

DAY'S FOLLIES, SERIES No. 3,

Fully Coloured Variety Turn by

AMBROSE BARKER

and

PEGGY WYNNE

The world-famous English Comedians.

THE SACRIFICE

6 reels, by Rabindranath Tagore, featuring the well known Indian Stars,

MISS SULOCHANA and MISS ZUBEDA.

N. B.—There will be no variety turn during Matinee and 8-15 Shows.

EMPRESS CINEMA

To-day and Tomorrow at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

DAY'S FOLLY, 2nd SERIES,

Fully Coloured

"THE THREE BAD MEN"

9 reels, featuring

GEORGE O'BRIEN.

Also Special Morning show tomorrow at 10 A. M.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1928

No. 18

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Political Gatherings.
India and Prohibition.
Social Legislation in Mysore.
An American Tribute.
Indian Professor for Oxford.
The Hindu Annual.

Repatriation Tragedy.
The King's Health.
The Social Conferences.
The 41st Indian National Social Conference.
News of the Week.

NOTES.

The Political Gatherings:—The All-Parties Convention met in Calcutta on the 24th and adopted a resolution accepting Dominion status as the Indian political objective as recommended by the Nehru Committee. The All-India Congress Committee next met and has not as yet (Friday morning) come to an agreement on the point. The Independence party is against any compromise, while the Congress leaders who favour Dominion status are only half-hearted in their support, and openly declare that they have no faith in it, but are obliged to advocate it only because the rest of the country is not prepared to go further. In a contest of this kind where one party has conviction and the courage of conviction, while the other party is lacking in both, the issue, even if a formula is found on which they can temporarily agree, admits of no doubt. The Mahomedans, generally speaking, are for Dominion status, but a small faction led by the Ali brothers, declares that nothing but Independence would satisfy it. As this is also the party which is most keen on communal electorates, its opinion, as Sir Ali Imam pointed out in an admirable speech at the Convention, need not be taken seriously.

India and Prohibition:—At the All-parties Conference held at Calcutta during Christmas week, Mr. Rajagopalachariar (Madras) moved for the removal of the drug evil and urged that prohibition legislation should be incorporated in the constitution as a fundamental part of it. He said that it was hardly necessary for him to remind them that prohibition was a fundamental part of the American constitution and that he was placing a similar proposal before them. In their constitution they had provided for an adult suffrage, universal education, public welfare work on behalf of the workers as a fundamental article among the duties of Government. If they wanted the country to be happy and prosperous under adult suffrage they should also have the evil of drink removed. If they handed over the Government to a democracy they must necessarily remove this evil so that an ordinary man might act properly. They should prohibit the use of alcohol or intoxicating drugs except for medicinal and industrial purposes. Mr. Sadiq in seconding the amendment pointed out that America had adopted prohibition not for religious reasons but they had adopted it for scientific ones. The amendment was accepted. The Congress will consider a resolution laying down its programme till 1930 in which the first clause states that "in the legislatures and outside every attempt will be made to bring about total prohibition of intoxicating drugs and drinks. Picketing of liquor and drug shops shall be organised wherever desirable and possible." At the Social Conference held under Mr. Jayakar's presidentship, the Rev. Herbert Anderson moved a resolution in support of Prohibition which was carried without opposition. The effect of these resolutions is to raise the question of Prohibition above party politics. If Government had any doubts about Indian opinion being in favour of a prohibition policy this should convince it of the fact.

Social Legislation in Mysore:—The present session of the Mysore Legislature has many resolutions on social questions to its credit. The first of these is the one which was unanimously passed to raise the age of consent to sixteen. By this Mysore has forestalled British India which is still considering whether the reformers have public opinion at their back. Another resolution removes the sex disqualification to membership to the Council and local bodies which had hitherto existed in Mysore. And lastly according to an Associated Press message we have the resolution fixing the marriage age for boys and girls at twenty-four and fourteen respectively. We do not know why the age for boys should be twenty-four—that is, three years in excess of the demand of even the most radical social reformer—unless it be to make up for the low limit of fourteen years adopted by the legislature in the case of girls. The object of this peculiar piece of Legislation, we believe, is that the fact of the boys' age being fixed at twenty-four will automatically raise the marriageable age of girls far above fourteen and that the limit of fourteen is adopted only as a temporary measure. We hope in that case that the Mysore Assembly will take an early opportunity of fixing the age at sixteen for girls as in these cases it is always preferable to have direct legislation.

An American Tribute:—The Unity, an American Weekly edited by the Rev. J. Haynes Holmes, who is well known to Indians, writes:—"We knew Lajpat Rai when he was in this country, and were honored by his presence as a speaker in our church. We retain most vividly perhaps, the impression of his intellectual power. His mind was a remarkable instrument—at once as sharp as a sword and weighty as a battle-ax. Next we recall the passion of his cry for justice for his country, and the flaming scorn of those who held her in subjection. There was little of the "sweetness and light," so characteristic of Gandhi, in this man. His was another temper, and a different method. Especially useful and effective was his incomparable knowledge of both West and East. More than in any Indian of whom we know, Rai presented the agonized frustrations of a conquered people, and proved the impossibility of peace till the yoke is lifted. His death is the most serious loss that India has suffered since the passing of C. R. Das."

Indian Professor for Oxford:—In offering the chair of Oriental Philosophy to Professor Radhakrishnan, the Oxford University has made a wholesome departure from its conservative traditions. By his books on Indian Philosophy and his lectures in America and England Professor Radhakrishnan has acquired an international reputation. It is stated that he will take up his work at Oxford in October 1929. We are also glad that he has accepted, though provisionally, the invitation to deliver the Hibbert Lectures at two centres in Great Britain in the next autumn.

The Hindu Annual:—It is a welcome sign of the progress of Indian journalism that our dailies have adopted the practice of bringing out annuals at the end of the year. The Hindu Annual published recently establishes a high standard of journalistic enterprise. Its literary contributions cover a wide field of interest ranging from high politics to short stories. They are not only from the pen of well-known Indian writers like Sir Sivaswamy Aiyar, Prof. Sudhindra Bose and others but also from English writers like Col. Wedgewood, Professor Rushbrook Williams, Mr. Thurtle and Miss Ellen Welkinson M.P. The illustrated article describing the daily life of Santineketan from the pen of another lady contributor brings out with rare insight the ideals of that Institution. The Annual likewise abounds in illustrations, the coloured plates forming an additional attraction.

Repatriation Tragedy:—The Honorary Secretary of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association, Bombay, has issued the following information with regard to the Sutlej tragedy:—It will be remembered that, in the month of September last, Reuter reported the death of 37 repatriated Indians on board the S. S. Sutlej returning to India from British Guiana. The Hon. Secretary at once telegraphed to the Government of India to supply him with full information regarding the circumstances under which that unfortunate tragedy occurred, and also suggested that the Government of India should institute a public enquiry on the arrival of the boat in Calcutta. It transpires now that an official enquiry was held by the Government of Bengal at the request of the Government of India. The investigations were conducted by Major W. O. Walker, I.M.S., Protector of Emigrants, Calcutta, and Mr. E. N. Blandy, I.C.S., Collector of the 24 Parganas. The report of this official enquiry says that there were 745 passengers on the S. S. Sutlej, out of which 37 died. Of these deaths, thirty were due to respiratory diseases and seven to other causes such as heart disease, nephritis, enteritis, serility and malaria. The report further observes that the deaths were practically confined to old people, who were not strong, and who, but for their great anxiety to return to their homeland, would probably have been advised not to undertake so long a voyage. It also shows that the incident was no exception to the previous years; as since 1923, deaths among the repatriated Indians on these boats have regularly occurred. Any comment on this most unsatisfactory report appears to be unnecessary. The tragedy of the deaths of these unfortunate laborers on those boats to and fro British Guiana is by no means of recent origin. As early as 1839, Lord Brougham, referring to the mortalities among Indian laborers on the boats bound for British Guiana, said, "mortality and massacre of the voyage far exceeded the African middle passage itself."

The King's Health:—The latest reports about the health of his Majesty are reassuring. The bulletins are free from cautionary expressions which were to be found in the earlier ones, and a more hopeful feeling is noticeable in them. It has been a very tough struggle and has lasted for nearly a month. The New Year, we trust, will find his Majesty well on the road to convalescence.

(Continued from the Leader page).

vitality and elasticity. Mr. Jayakar's address has brought this out very clearly, and it has thus given a great impetus to much needed legislation. His plea for the demolition of the restrictions of caste by promoting intermarriages, will receive wide support. In this connection, a reference is necessary to a slight difference of opinion which declared itself at the Conference. Some speakers wished intermarriages to be restricted to Hindu castes, while others wished them to be free to all communities. The difference is not of practical importance. As a matter of fact, strange as it may seem, intercommunal marriages seem to be more numerous than inter-caste marriages. Many of these are between Indians and Europeans. There have been a few intermarriages between men and women of the communities of India. Inter-caste or sub-caste marriages are comparatively fewer and of later date. The law should make no difference of caste or community, and individuals should be left to exercise their own choice in the matter of their marriages. As compared to the resolutions of the National Social Conference, those of the Women's conference would seem to have been less advanced. It is probable that the radical reformers among women get a more favourable or at least tolerant, hearing from audiences where men predominate, than from those which are wholly composed of their own sex.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, DECEMBER 29, 1928.

THE SOCIAL CONFERENCES.

The 41st Indian National Social Conference met in Calcutta on Tuesday and Wednesday under the presidentship of Mr. M. R. Jayakar. On Thursday the All-India Women's Social Conference held its first session with Her Highness the Junior Maharani of Travancore, the mother of the minor Maharaja, as President. The Women's Social Conference has been newly started, evidently in pursuance of the growing feeling among women that they could better look after their own interests than men. There is much truth in this feeling, and the social reform movement would have undoubtedly been prosecuted more vigorously in the past if women had been more closely associated with men in organisations like the Social Conference. We should therefore have welcomed the leadership of women in the National Social Conference, as a more effective way of advancing their cause than constituting a separate Women's Social Conference. In the first place, there are too many Conferences and it is desirable as far as possible for all those which have common objects, to coalesce. Then, we have by no means a plethora of workers, and the amalgamation of kindred movements will enable the limited number we have to concentrate on their special subjects. Society does not consist of men alone, neither does it consist of women alone, and the reform of society can be therefore, accomplished only by men and women working together. We would, therefore, suggest for the consideration of the leaders of the two Social Conferences that they should arrive at an understanding to join forces in promoting the common cause in which both are engaged. We are sure that the leaders of the Indian National Social Conference will be very glad to hand over its management to the leaders of the Women's Social Conference and to give them all the assistance in their power to make it successful.

Mr. Jayakar's presidential address which we publish in full is a weighty and vigorous contribution to the literature of the social reform movement. In his retrospect of the history of the movement he seems to fall somewhat short of a correct appreciation of the work of the early reformers.

If, as he rightly said, to-day the atmosphere in which social reformers have to work is in many ways more favourable than the one which surrounded their fore-runners thirty years ago, it is largely because of the strenuous and courageous efforts of men like Raja Ram Mohan Roy, Iswar Chandra Vidyasagar, Ranade, Bhandarkar, Chandavarkar, Raghunath Rao and Viresalingam Pantulu in the past. We are now reaping the rich harvest of the seed which these men sowed in faith and hope. We are entering into the noble inheritance which they have bequeathed, and we can never be sufficiently grateful to them for it as well as for the inspiring example of their far-seeing patriotism and dauntless faith in the justice and righteousness of their cause. This, however, is rather a digression, and we are sure that Mr. Jayakar would whole-heartedly acknowledge the debt which we owe to those who have gone before us. The largest part of his own address was of immense value as presenting the case for social legislation, especially on matters relating to women's disabilities, in its true perspective. Many, if not most, of these disabilities are the creation of Anglo-Indian Judicial decisions. This is a point not generally borne in mind by those who oppose social legislation. The Hindu law was not as the laws of the Medes and Persians. It could be and was repeatedly modified both by eminent jurists as well as by the growth of custom in order to bring it in conformity with changing social conditions and public opinion. Mr. Jayakar from his profound study of the Sanskrit classics and Hindu law, was able to show that the Hindu law before it was hardened by Anglo-Indian Judges, was in many respects much more favourable to women's rights than it has since become. Eminent Indian Judges like Ranade, Chandavarkar and Lallubhai Shah did what they could to correct the conservative tendency of their British predecessors and colleagues. And it is only fair to say that among the latter too, there have been men of deep learning and broad sympathies, who have substantially helped to liberalise the interpretation of Hindu law, as Mr. Jayakar acknowledged in his address. But as he said, it would take centuries if we depend on judicial decisions to set right the many anomalies that have arisen in the past. Legislation is the only direct and speedy way of correcting the mistakes of the past. Mr. Jayakar exposed with force and eloquence some of the grosser anomalies of the Hindu law as administered by the Courts. The Bombay High Court has the best tradition for a liberal interpretation of the texts so as not to jar upon the notions of enlightened Hindus at the present day. Some other High Courts, notably Madras and Allahabad, have a reputation for excessive conservatism. All-India legislation alone can bring about uniformity in the administration of the Hindu law. Social legislation, therefore, is in most cases merely the means of restoring to Hindu jurisprudence its ancient

(Continued in the 2nd column of 2nd Notes page).

THE 41st INDIAN NATIONAL SOCIAL CONFERENCE.

MR. JAYAKAR'S PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

The following is the Presidential address delivered by Mr. M. R. Jayakar at the 41st Session of the Indian National Social Conference held on the 25th December at Calcutta :—

Controversies once took possession of the public mind as to the priority of social reform over political movements, and the question was debated whether India was fit to be politically free before liberty of conscience and freedom of social behaviour were attained. A variety of literature can be recalled even up to recently, in which the question was seriously considered, whether India was entitled to self-government as long as the domination of priesthood continued. Some of us can recall the bitterness with which these controversies raged, especially in that part of the country from which I come. The two divergent schools were opposed to each other with great vehemence and bitterness. Fortunately, that stage—perhaps a necessary one in the evolution of the national thought—has now passed, and we now recognize that our struggle towards freedom must be an all-sided one. I am aware that even now there are people, some of whom are in the foremost ranks of political workers, who hold the view that until Swaraj is obtained, social reform agitation should not occupy the public mind so as to detract from the intensity of our political effort. I am likewise aware that there are people in similar positions in public life who think that it is an idle effort to obtain legislation in the Central and Provincial Legislatures calculated to promote the social growth of the community. Notwithstanding all this, however, I feel certain that gradually the public mind has come to recognize that our struggle for progress must go on with equal pace in both directions. The co-operation in the present Conference of so many men in Calcutta who are prominent in public life is a clear sign of the rapid change in the public sentiment. The ease with which the promoters of this Conference have been able to obtain support for it is likewise a very encouraging circumstance, and I have no doubt that with further efforts, we shall be able, before long, to obtain an esteemed place for our cause in the deliberation of the people.

The social reform movement has undergone rapid changes during the last 15 years. Overwhelmed as we are by far-reaching political problems, we scarcely notice the social revolution which is occurring, to which the historian of the future will devote more attention than to dramatic events in the political field. Ideas have been marching by kangaroo jumps. In every important department of our social activity striking changes have taken place. These are specially conspicuous in public sentiments relating to women's regeneration and uplift. There was a time, not long ago, when social reformers were concerned with small and petty questions relating to grievances of individual communities. Female education, dowries, widow-remarriage and other questions of a similar nature, which even in the days of their origin, were of more or less local importance or of communal significance, occupied the public mind. Now this is all changed, and all such tributaries of local or communal thought have joined in one mighty volume which encompasses the entire existence of our society. The social reformer will not now be content with the redressing of small or petty grievances. He would like to examine the very foundations of our social or religious structure from which minor disabilities spring. The body politic is assuming in his eyes more and more the characteristics of the human body, and like a good physician, he refuses to be content with a tinkering effort to cure minor ailments and wants to examine the very core of the causes from which they spring. The Brahman-Non-Brahman movement, the touchable and untouchable controversy are now being examined with a profound comprehensiveness, unknown in former times. And this is as it should be, because the country has learnt by experience, especially acquired in the political field, that the redressing of small and petty grievances leads to no large results. In the political field, our claim now is not for a small concession here and there, but for a complete assumption of control over the affairs of our country. The ease with which the doctrine of Dominion Status was accepted by the leading political parties in the country, is a sure sign of this change in public sentiment. "Deal with fundamentals and leave the non-essentials alone." This is the cry in the country, and it is but natural that the same slogan should be raised in our social or religious efforts.

CASTE.

The most noteworthy direction in which this change is perceptible is the institution of caste. Whatever might have been the origin of castes in India or the economic purpose which they served at one time when India was differently circumstanced, there is no doubt that it is being increasingly felt that the institution of caste is a very severe handicap on our effort towards freedom. Those who are in touch with the Non-Brahman movement or with the agitation in favour of the Depressed Classes, will be able to vouch that the problem has been so rapidly changing its form, under the stress of modern forces, that the agitation is now for a complete readjustment of the old-world arrangements of our social life. For several years, social reform was largely concerned with finding out an equitable basis for the relations subsisting between the weaker and the more developed elements of Hindu society and sought to rest the privileges of the latter on some economic basis, supposed or real. The so-called lower classes advanced their claims apologetically, very often basing them on the utilitarian necessities of the hour. Now their claim is bolder, and with the new values which individuals in India have come to acquire under modern political arrangements, the social movement has acquired an unprecedented boldness. The claim now is not that caste distinctions should be modified but that they should be completely erased, so that caste, like religion, will become a matter of individual regulation, and will have no place in our public demeanour. Under the sway of this feeling, attempts have been made in Maharashtra to storm public temples, and threats of Satyagraha to attain social equality have been held out with a tenacity unknown before. If the weekly output proceeding from journals conducted by the members of the so-called lower classes is carefully examined, it will be found that their claim is now being more and more rested on the essential equality by birth of all human beings. They pathetically appeal to ancient Indian history and point out the changes which took place in ancient Hinduism showing its wonderful adaptability to changing conditions. History, they say, has revealed that, in former times, Hinduism, in spite of its apparent immobility, changed again and again and reconstructed itself so as to assimilate the virtues even of rival religions. A few of these changes are well known and have become landmarks in Hindu history. Buddhism is dead in India, but it still lives in Hinduism. It is seen in the all-embracing catholicity of the Hindu's conceptions of God and religion, and in his tenderness for all forms of animal life. These critics further point out graphic descriptions in the Vedic, Brahman and Epic periods, when hordes of people coming from inferior sources were, as with one mighty wave, swept on to the higher levels of Hindu Society. They persuasively urge that to "Brahmanize" the lower communities is the best test and mission of Brahmanism. They would have Brahmanism furnish a cultural apex which the Sudras would look up to, an ideal towards which they would endeavour gradually to approximate.

These appeals to ancient history have had a very great effect upon the success of the social movement. The lower classes have now met the orthodox on their own ground. The spread of the knowledge of Sanskrit, amongst the inferior classes in schools and colleges, has not been without its effect. The culture of Brahmanism has spread amongst them, and appears with ease in their best types. Their juxtaposition, on equal footing, in our Councils and Assemblies has established an affinity which it is difficult to deny elsewhere. The law of marriage has been gradually modified so as to make inter-communal marriages possible in the descending order. Communities claiming to be intermediate between the four important castes of Hindu society have been reawakened and are playing the part of bridges. They are showing a tendency gradually to be absorbed on their side, more especially in the higher type. Only the other day I came across two marriages between a pure Brahman and a caste intermediate between him and the Kshatriya. The marriages were not sanctioned by orthodox usage, still they took place quite openly. A little stir was created for the moment, but the parties soon settled down into their normal place in the higher community.

In former times, the barriers of caste, when attacked, caused noise. Now they fall without sensation. The demolition of these barriers will, I am sure, be further accelerated by social reformers undertaking or encouraging a scientific study of the origin and growth of castes historically and ethnologically. Such a course of study based on a careful perusal of Census Reports, Gazetteers, accounts of travellers and similar publications, will form a wonderful solvent. It will readily melt caste pride and self-sufficiency, by laying bare the constituents which have historically entered into the formation and development of castes. Far-off elements from the regions of Central Asia, Scythia and Egypt will be detected in the formation of this granite. Dusky traces may be perceived in origins of vaunted purity, and gradually the truth will be borne in upon the humble inquirer that the boasted purity of his birth is only a myth. He will realize that castes are, like the great river Ganges, fed by Himalayan snow-flakes as also by the sewers of squalid towns. He will then find that castes take their colour, like a river, from the soil through which they advance, and their true function is to lose themselves in the swelling current of national life, fertilising individual effort and not to run a solitary course to disappear in the barren sands of conceit and futility.

SHUDDHI AND BANGHATAN.

The Shuddhi movement of the orthodox Hindu, though originally intended for re-conversion from alien faiths, has been a contributory cause of this change. Shuddhi cannot be restricted any more to its original necessities. If a lower caste Hindu, who or whose ancestors had at one time espoused Mahomedanism, can, by the 'spiritual alchemy' of Shuddhi, be re-converted to Hinduism, it is difficult to say why this same spiritual process cannot be made effective for the purpose of raising a Sudra to a higher status. The Shuddhi movement has evoked aspirations and obligations on either side, which are having a great effect on a general levelling up of Hindu Society. Why cannot a Sudra become a Kshatriya with proper Shuddhi, asks the Non-Brahman. The ancient scriptures mention such a process. Many saintly personages have gone through it. Vishwamitra and Vashishta are two noted examples of this social uplift. Once the principle is accepted that ceremonials can, like the philosopher's stone, change the lower into the higher, there are no limitations to the application of the rule for the solution of inter-caste troubles.

Take also the Sanghatan movement. Sanghatan means contact, combination and association. It is impossible to have these unless people meet on equal footing. About two years ago I saw a magnificent spectacle in Bombay of the effect of Sanghatan. On the Dasara day the orthodox Hindus of a locality had their simolanghan ceremony. The men who walked in the front rank contained a couple of inferior caste men who would never have been allowed a place there but for the feeling that, as against the increasing ravages of rival religions, all Hindus, inter se ought to have equal status. It is a most remarkable feature of modern Hindu Society that the Shuddhi and Sanghatan movements, though started by orthodox people from orthodox feelings, are now having an effect which would have been very much dreaded by those who set the movement on its feet. The attacks of rival faiths have been in this way of great benefit. They have taught Hinduism to consolidate itself. They have set free processes of thought and behaviour which acted as solvents in Hindu Society.

GOVERNMENT AND SOCIAL LEGISLATION.

I cannot here refrain from referring to the attitude of the Government in matters of social legislation. Whenever it suits them, they show the courage of putting on the Statute Book measures of great unpopularity, excusing their behaviour with the comment that they know better than the people what is good for them and must lead public opinion and not be led by it. Their attitude however is entirely different when social questions arise in the Legislatures. Their assistance then cannot be had and they are very often content to remain neutral. Even Bills about which there is not much controversy and which reformed Indian opinion favours, have not succeeded in obtaining anything like a whole-hearted support from the Government. It seems to me obvious that it is the duty of social reformers to lessen the temptation of Government to fight shy of social legislation. We do not sufficiently understand the importance and the utility of legislative action in re-moulding the social conditions of the country. In all civilized countries legislation is used as a powerful lever with which social injustice is redressed. Even in a country like England so averse to domestic interference at the hands of the State, social legislation took a definite and extended form before 1872, since which time enactments have been passed dealing with several aspects of social life, for instance, compulsory education. It seems to me that in India, both the Government and the people, underrate the importance of this means of social regeneration, partly owing to the feeling that a Government which is alien in personnel should not interfere in social matters. This, in my opinion, is not only a wrong but a mischievous view, for it enables Government to become more and more shy in such cases, and it also widens the cleavage between the Government and the people in social ideals. A Government that has undertaken the duty of ruling an alien people ought, in my opinion, not to remain alien in sentiment even if it may have, for political reasons, to remain for a time alien in personnel. May I remind them that a Government that keeps for long alien in sentiment, undermines itself? Unless it gets into touch, as soon as it can, with the enlightened sentiment of the people over whose destinies it is called upon to rule, it weakens the very purpose of its existence. I say, therefore, that we ought not to accept so lightly the plea of Government that, being ignorant of the sentiments of the governed classes, it is unwilling either to undertake or support social legislation. I think it is not prudent for a Government to emphasize its alien nature and that it is a part of its duty to ignore its alien origin and to merge itself with the enlightened sentiment of the people.

Their attitude on the Bill introduced by Rai Saheb Sarda in the Indian Legislative Assembly for the raising of the marriageable age of Indian girls to 14 years, is a characteristic instance of the position which I have described.

To many Indians it is a great disappointment that a Government like the British, with all its inherited notions of right, justice and liberty and the prestige which it commands, should yet remain an indifferent spectator in social matters. I would submit that the proper theory in this behalf is that the State in its collective capacity represents or ought to represent the wisdom, the mercy and the purity of its best citizens. What a single man or combination of men can best do on their own account, that the State may not do, but it cannot shirk its duty to remedy evils which no private combination of men can check adequately or which it can deal with more speedily and effectively than any private combination of men can do.

WOMEN IN INDIA.

I now pass on to another great feature of the modern times, viz., the women's movement. I am very glad that, in this very week and in another place in this city, a Conference is being held where women's rights will be discussed in all their bearings. It is not my desire to go into the several aspects of the women's movement here. In the limited time which is accorded to my speech I can only deal with one aspect of it, viz., woman's right to hold and inherit property, as also her general status as a daughter, wife and widow. I am aware that there may be some difference of opinion with regard to such matters, but I can safely say that there is a growing consensus that her position in this connection is not very high, nor in strict accordance with what she enjoyed at one time in ancient India.

THE GOLDEN AGE.

Beginning with the question relating to women's power of acquiring and holding property, which question is connected with the Law of Inheritance,

[may say without any fear of contradiction that it has varied from time to time in Hindu Law. It is clear that the status now accorded to women as daughters, wives or widows, is considerably inferior to that which they occupied in times when the Aryan immigrant in India had developed his best institutions in the free and pure latitudes in which he lived in Vedic times. That period may be regarded as the best in Indian history when the sentiments of the Indian people had not received the adulteration from foreign sources which they acquired in subsequent times. The Vedas have many charms, but the best of them is that they reveal the Aryan mind in the best of its attributes. The student of the Vedic period finds scattered from place to place evidence that women occupied a very elevated place in the society of those days. This is not the place for going into the details of this question, but speaking briefly, it does appear that women then enjoyed very great freedom in matters in which they suffer from many disabilities now. Even marriage does not appear to have been compulsory in those days, and women could remain unmarried, either for the whole of their life or at least up to a very late age, devoting their time to learning and philanthropy. In the Rig-Veda one finds scattered several texts relating to this question. One of them may be mentioned here, where the Rishi speaks of women who have grown old in their father's house claiming a share (of the patrimony). A verse which is repeated even now at every high caste marriage ceremony by the Hindu husband, takes the form of a troth or vow by him in reply to an injunction by the father of the bride in the following terms:—"You should not prevent my daughter.....from acquiring wealth....." The bridegroom replies:—"I will not so prevent her." There are, likewise, instances on record of women who have been authors of Vedic teachings and held open discussions with learned men in the courts of enlightened kings. They joined in debates and held their own against eminent scholars. Women who remained unmarried for their life took their place side by side with men and enjoyed equal respect. The status of the wife, in particular, was very high. The wife was regarded, according to one Vedic poet, as the best gift of the gods "for the purpose of domestic happiness". The bride was "well developed and of attained age." It was regarded as a desirable attribute of married life that the wife should be full of self-assertion. It was a usual form of Vedic benediction pronounced by the father on the bride starting for her husband's house. He said:—"Be the ruler of thy father-in-law, of thy mother-in-law and also of thy sisters-in-law and brothers-in-law". The capacity to manage and govern the house was regarded as a necessary requisite of domestic happiness. The rituals then prescribed and observed even up to the present times point to a very high age of marriage amongst women.

In one of the verses in the Rig-Ved the grown-up wife is referred to as "Unveiling to her lord with conscious pride

 Beauties which as he gazes lovingly
 Seem fresher, fairer, each succeeding morn."

The proprietary rights of the wife apart from the husband were recognized widely, so much indeed that the husband could not make a gift even to the gods without the wife's consent. Women often re-married. One funeral hymn says, addressing a widow who had just lost her husband and was full of grief:—"Rise, woman, thou art lying by the side of one whose life is gone. Come to the world of the living away from him, thy husband that is dead and become again the wife of him who is willing to take thee by the hand and marry thee."

THE DECLINE.

Woman's descent began at a later period, apparently at a time when, owing to the migration of the community to lower plains it was brought into conflict with inferior aboriginal races. Under the militant necessities consequent on such an environment, males acquired an artificial importance. Every male that the family could put forward was an asset in the fight. In place of the benediction cited above requiring women to rule their relatives, came another where the outgoing bride was asked to beget sons (and not daughters). Every son added to the house was a protection in the conflict. The preference of distant male agnatics over near female relatives, which is to-day the distinguishing feature of the Hindu Law in many parts of India, is also to be traced to the same period. The rule that sapindas up to the remotest degree should be exhausted before the nearest asapinda can come in in the order of succession, is a relic of these times. Polygamy and niyoga entered into the Aryan system of life. Different kind of marriages in vogue amongst the inferior races were incorporated into the Aryan civilization. Women ceased to take part in sacrificial sessions. They ceased to receive portions of the Soma juice distributed on such occasions. These, in more ancient times, were annual assemblages for the display and development of learning. Later on a wag took hold of a text in a book on Vedic rituals which says that women should not be given any portion of the Soma juice (daya) distributed at such sacrifices, because they had no capacity for valour, and made it the basis of a total exclusion of women from rights of inheritance. He punned on the word 'daya' (portion). In its proper context it meant a portion of the inheritance. He thus perpetrated a joke which has to this day deprived women of their rights of inheritance. This text has been the chief impediment in the recognition of women's rights, and in more recent times the Privy Council have based some of their retrograde decisions upon the implications of this misquoted text.

THE REFORMERS OF ANCIENT INDIA.

Many reformers came to light at the end of this period of darkness, which covered many centuries. The best of them all, and yet the worst, was Manu, in whose writings one finds a violent conflict between the noble relics of the Vedic period and the popular doctrines of his time. He and another sage called Katyayana once more resuscitated the power and capacity of women to hold and acquire property. They began cautiously in reviving the old doctrine and laid the foundations of women's proprietary rights round acquisitions which owing to the peculiar nature of the occasion when they were made or the person from whom they preceeded, could be safely regarded as women's special peculium. Manu allowed women's property only in six kinds of acquisitions: that which was acquired by her before the bridal fire, or at the time of the bridal procession, or under the influence of affection, or from her brother, father or mother. Even the degenerate times in which he struggled for the assertion of women's rights, could not deny women's proprietary rights over such property.

Manu apparently worked on the lines of least resistance. The process went on increasing from time to time until the law-giver called Yajnavalkya came on the scene. He very ingeniously, after enumerating all the forms of female property which had come into vogue at his time, quietly slipped in, as if it was merely an expletive necessary to complete the metre, the word 'adya,' which means 'other acquisitions of a like character.' He thereby opened the widest door for all kinds of property to come in. The Mitakshara, in the eleventh century, took advantage of this brief expletive 'adya' and interpreted it to the fullest extent so as to include, as women's peculium, all property, howsoever acquired by her, whether by "inheritance, purchase, partition, seizure or finding." Indeed, even modern women would not desire anything more than what the Mitakshara gave them. Every species of property would, under its definition, become stridhan. That word was interpreted by the Mitakshara in a plain natural sense as inclusive of every kind of property held absolutely by women and not as having any technical meaning. If the law had stood where the Mitakshara had moulded it, or even if it had been allowed to develop on the progressive lines of interpretation adopted by the later Maratha author of the Vyavahara Mayukha, there would have been no trouble at all. But in course of time rival schools arose, and especially in the earlier stages of their decisions the Privy Council, sitting at Westminster and naturally struggling under a misconception of the historic and other antecedents of the Indian people, have unconsciously played in the hands of orthodoxy. The Englishman was not accustomed until the eighties to regard women in his own country as independently capable of acquiring or holding property. English women got this right at a very late stage. With this bias in his mind, it is not surprising that the English judge at Westminster, in interpreting ancient Indian texts written in a language which he did not understand and of the context of which too he was personally ignorant, adopted a position inclining more towards limited female rights than towards absolute ones. In a celebrated ruling which laid down for all time that inheritance derived by women from a male in their husband's family can never become their absolute property, the Privy Council, being solely dependent upon confusing rival quotations cited on opposite sides, have actually abrogated the Mitakshara rule in favour of more ancient and doubtful texts vaguely prescribing an ascetic life for Hindu widows. The bias thus acquired by judicial decisions has unconsciously survived to the present day. The English judge in England and in India, owing to his natural caution born of his ignorance of the language and the habits of the people, has fought shy of liberal interpretations except when compelled by the clearest evidence. The whole administration has been, so far as Hindu Law is concerned, as grievously unnatural as if Japanese judges sat at Westminster in 1928 giving rulings on the domestic laws of Englishmen from Japanese translations of Bracton or Coke on Lyttleton, unconcerned with the mighty social changes which had taken place in English society since those times of which they had no conception owing to their isolation.

ANOMALIES OF HINDU LAW.

It is not my intention to blame individuals, but to condemn the system under which they are working. The result is that Hindu Law which has a very large resilience and power of adaptability, has remained unresponsive to the requirements of the times in the British period. The adaptability of the Hindu Law is surprising to those who study it from this point of view. Whenever an Indian judge of learning, insight, sympathy and knowledge has had the chance of interpreting the ancient texts, he has tried his best to bring them into accord with the growing requirements of modern society. Sir Lallubhai Shah's ruling on the validity of anuloma marriages can be cited as one instance. Occasionally a gifted English judge, whose natural vision or imagination has enabled him to see clearly through the darkness of texts and quotations has lighted on a true rule, but in such cases its effect has been nullified by his over-cautious colleagues or successors. The result is that to-day there are a large number of anomalies waiting to be set right. To depend upon judicial interpretation for doing this work would take centuries. It is necessary, therefore, that legislation should take a hand in this work of reform. It is most urgently needed to-day in improving the position of the widow in a Hindu joint family. When the husband dies undivided, we are all aware of her miserable lot. She cannot get her husband's share if she is without male issue. The rules under which maintenance is decreed to her are unjust. They all lean in favour of her husband's coparceners. A vague sort of feeling that a Hindu widow must be an ascetic before her age and inclinations make it possible, has restrained British Indian judges from interpreting the law in a plain, natural and modern sense. Her rights of adoption have been curtailed and the beneficence of an important ruling of the Privy Council in that behalf has been limited in some Provinces on the principle of stare decisis.

There is no reason why the wife of a seaparted Hindu without issue should not be allowed to take the best part of his estate. It is far more natural and human to do so than that she should enjoy a limited or life estate and on her death the whole property should pass to a sapinda in the 14th remove whose existence was not even known when the husband died and in many cases not till after the widow's life terminated. The necessities of the times when this agnatic preference arose have all disappeared. Hindu males are no more the fighting asset which they once were, and there is no need to favour them with preferential rights of succession unnatural on any rational theory of life. Yet the peculiar rule continues and receives daily interpretation and support.

Again, there is no reason why all over India the daughter should not take her father's estate absolutely as she does in Bombay. The artificial distinction is unknown to the Mitakshara, of inheritance from males and inheritance from females, nor of males in her husband's family or in her father's family. All these distinctions have reference to a period which had extraordinary social and military necessities, no longer operative in Hindu Society. The time has come when, in thorough conformity with the true spirit of Hindu Law, which is rationalism, equality and humanity, changes should be made. One such principle for the acceptance of which the Mitakshara struggled hard, was nearness or propinquity according to blood relationship and not according to funeral oblations. The author of that book, one of the noblest treatises known to Hindu Law, raised a storm by reversing the current of feeling and adopting a plain sensible rule of succession, viz., whoever was nearer by blood was entitled to succeed. Blood particles, he said, are the true test and not ancestors in the heavens placated by funeral balls. The time has come when the plain, natural and sensible rules of the Mitakshara, in places supplemented by the virile commonsense of the Mayukha, should find a permanent place on our Statute Book. Likewise, women's grievances arising out of their marital relations constitute some of the most pressing problems of the times. Women claim that the marriageable age of girls should be raised to at least 16. To gain this end, they are demanding that the marriage of girls below that age should be made penal. A compromise has been found in the Sarda Bill, which has passed through many vicissitudes, and 14 years of age has been made the marriageable limit for girls. As regards the proper age for the consummation of marriages, a Committee of the Government of India is sitting for the purpose. Without anticipating its findings in any way, it will not be hazardous to surmise that, for intramarital relations, some age nearing 16 may be fixed, and for ultramarital ones, 18 years may present a more appropriate limit. If the Sarda Bill and another based upon the recommendations of the Age of Consent Committee pass through the Legislature, they will have given to women at least a partial remedy for grievances in this connection.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS.

Coming to the choice of the husband, women demand that they should have a much larger circle to choose from. The present system is many times a great handicap, especially for communities whose numbers are small, as for instance, the Pathare Prabhus of Bombay, where men and women, in equal numbers, amount to a total of 4,000 to 5,000 persons. The necessary result of this limitation is that women have not infrequently to marry their near relations. This has the consequence that the same social type is multiplied and the race deteriorates. The cry is therefore going up which will increase in intensity, that the marriage law should be so reformed as to enable persons to marry outside their communities into others which have an affinity of origin, habits or avocations. It would be advisable to mould the marriage law so as to give this relief. A partial progress in this direction has been made by a decision of the late Mr. Justice Shah of the Bombay High Court which I have already referred to, by which marriages between higher caste men and lower caste women are regarded as legal and valid in the Bombay Presidency. But women are not content with this, and one already hears whispers emanating from them that Pratiloma marriages, that is, marriages between higher caste women and lower caste men, should be made equally legal. In short, their demand is that they should have a right to marry according to choice, irrespective of the narrow limitations of caste. Some may regard it as a very bold demand, but I feel certain, whether bold or otherwise, it is bound to succeed before long. It is increasingly felt by women that the most sacred function of their life is marriage, which will become more and more a complex affair, having regard to the education and freedom which they will increasingly enjoy under changing conditions. They refuse to be bottled up in the choice of the husband, which they regard as the apex of the freedom which they enjoy. Women have been given the vote for the Legislatures. In many places they are now entitled to enter Legislative bodies, and it will not be long before they take their proper place there and frame laws for themselves. Men will have to make way for them. This is only a question of time, and it will be wisdom for men to help this process rather than obstruct it.

Similarly, women demand that the present-day laws relating to divorce, remarriage and maintenance, which in their opinion are foolish, irrational and one-sided, should also be altered in accordance with the requirements of modern society. In many places the cry has gone up for the right to apply for a divorce under certain conditions not inconsistent with Hindu scriptures. They are aware that marriage is a sacrament, but feel that, even under orthodox conceptions of marriage, the right to divorce will have to be conceded under conditions which have a foundation in ancient Hindu Law. If marriage is a religious sacrament, it can only be performed once. Sacraments are not intended to be repeated as often as a well-filled purse can desire. A sacrament is usually bilateral. Women contend that men have broken through their obligations. They urge that, if a man can marry as many times as he likes, why cannot a woman separate herself from such a person. It is difficult to give a rational answer to this question. Many years ago, women secured the right to remarry after the death of the husband. Reliance was then placed on texts which mention death as only one of the circumstances in which remarriage was allowed in ancient India. Women now claim that, if in ancient India, remarriage could take place in such cases (e. g., owing to the husband's impotence, disappearance, incurable disease), there is no reason why at least a divorce should not be permitted now. There is no doubt that the present-day law is deplorable in many ways. For instance, it allows the right to ask for a dissolution of marriage to a husband who has changed his religion. His wife in his old faith, however, cannot do so. This may seem strange, but it is one of the anomalies of present-day legislation. It is, therefore, natural that women should resent this one-sidedness of the marriage law and require a reform.

Similarly, the laws relating to the restitution of conjugal rights are anomalous. The husband has a right, under the present law, of asking a Court to compel his wife to go and live with him. This right is very wide, and women complain that it should be curtailed. In cases where a man has a multiplicity of wives, or is afflicted by an incurable disease or has been guilty of palpable moral obliquity, the Court should not grant him restitution. Likewise, in the case of minor girls, until they attain the age of majority, they should not be compelled, against their wishes, to live with their husbands. Under the present law, restitution can only be prevented if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the husband has an illicit sexual attachment in his own house or that the wife's life is in danger. In all other cases, speaking generally, the girl has compulsorily to go and live with the husband irrespective of her age and other considerations.

These are all important questions relating to women's rights. I have touched only a few of them to indicate the nature of women's grievances. The discontent amongst women is growing, and unless legislation is taken up in proper time a stage may be soon reached when they will openly rebel and perhaps carry the rebellion into the peace and harmony of domestic life. It will be wise, therefore to help this movement rather than let it drift into futile or bitter channels. In women, the social reform movement ought to find a natural ally, and this alliance is sure to grow strong, if we could accord to their grievances a proper place in our scheme of social reform.

RESCUE OF MINOR GIRLS.

The rescue of minor girls is another important question on which public attention has to be concentrated. I am glad to find that, in Bengal, there are a number of Homes, viz., "The Refuge", the Greaves' Home, the Hindu Abala Ashram and the Deshbandhu Home (now under construction). Unfortunately in Bombay we are not so very fortunate. We have to be content with one or two. The Bombay Presidency Hindu Sabha, a much maligned body, has therefore been making an humble effort to collect a little money for the purpose. It started a Rescue Home in Bombay about two years ago, and women have been rescued from the clutches of fanaticism and immorality. The inmates of this home are drawn from all communities. No community need be proud that it is immune from such depredations. We endeavour to give the inmates a little solace and comfort in their unhappy life and also proper education, religious as well as vocational. But somehow this experiment does not yet appeal to the Hindu mind. It does not realize that such Homes are the first necessity of the times. An intensive agitation has therefore to be carried on in this connection. We have adopted in Bombay the familiar expedient of having vigilant agents at every inlet into the city, by railway, road or steamer. The Bombay Legislative Council passed about three years ago a beneficent measure called the Children's Protection Act, which seeks to protect male and female children from evil association. But unfortunately full efficacy cannot be given to this measure, so far as Hindus are concerned, because of the comparative paucity of institutions where the reclaimed children can be housed and educated without detriment to their religion. Other communities like the Mahomedan, Christian and Parsee have made arrangements for their children, but the Hindus unfortunately have not yet fully realized their responsibility in this matter.

The abolition of woman labour in mines and factories is another prolific source of irritation. It has not yet come within the domain of social reform, but it is high time now that this question was also included in the programme of social reform. The evils of this system of labour are well known, and it is not necessary for me to dilate on them. What is wanted is an organisation solely devoted to the removal of this grievance, and constant agitation has to be kept up in order to invite public attention to its excesses.

I would suggest another topic on which propaganda can be usefully carried on, viz., physical culture of women. It was reported in the Press a year ago that girls in England, in the course of a few years, had increased their height by one-fourth to half-inch. This is the result of a slow, patient endeavour at body-building. The need of such an effort is nowhere greater than in India, where early marriages are frequent and birth regulation is unknown.

I have no time to go into other departments of social reform which, during recent years, have become insistent. The expression "social reform" has undergone a great change, and as in other countries, it has now come to acquire a meaning inclusive of every form of social activity calculated to promote the health, comfort and happiness of society. It is a very encouraging sign that we in India are becoming appreciative of the extended scope of social reform. New questions are coming to light. Old grievances disappear either because they are redressed or cease to irritate. What is now wanted in the movement is a spirit of adaptation which will adjust it to new conditions as they arise, and a bold faith in human effort. To-day the atmosphere in which social reformers have to work is in many ways more favourable than the one which surrounded their forbears thirty years ago. A happy approximation is taking place between social and political reform. They are no more two water-tight or isolated compartments. Their affinity is recognized. Their inter-relation makes for a true love of freedom. The human mind wishing to be free recognizes no compartments or barriers of ideas. Its ambitions know no frontiers. The problem of reform, whether one calls it political, social or economic, is at bottom one. It is set for us and has to be faced whether we will or no. Cataclysmic changes going on in the world round us are compressing the work of centuries into a few years and making for a new Heaven and a new Earth. In this expected re-birth of human society what part shall we Indians elect to play? That is the crux of the situation. Let there be no delusions about it.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Widow Remarriage:—On Friday last, writes the Forward, Calcutta, Srimati Ranginibala, widowed daughter of late Haricharan Pal of Babulidaha, P. S. Ullapara was married to Bani Charan Pal of the same village. Babu Sailendra Nath Pal, semindar of O. ithaita (Pabna) attended the ceremony with his family priest. About 60 widow marriages in the Mullo (Malo) and Rajbanshi societies have been performed in a year.

The cause of widow remarriage, writes the Hitaada, Nagpur, is making unusually rapid progress in Sangor. Recently Sangor witnessed a remarriage ceremony of a high caste widow aged 22 of a Parwar Vaisha family. The function was the first of its kind. The ceremony took place on the open Ohakraghat ground and was followed by a meeting under the auspices of Mr. Gokul Chand Singhal, M.L.C. of Damoh. Over 4000 men were present, among whom were some of the leading members of the Local Bar. A few speeches were delivered advocating the urgent need of social reform.

Dry Damoh:—It has been announced that the town of Damoh is declared by the Local Government to be closed to liquor traffic. The rural areas of this district were declared dry this year in the month of January and the last month of the year sees the close of the urban shops also. A deputation of the representatives of the town waited upon the Hon'ble Minister for Excise, O. P. for the purpose when he last visited this place.

Lecture on Temperance:—Master Sant Singh, Honorary Secretary, Punjab Temperance Federation Amritsar, with his party visited Magitha, delivered lectures on temperance and health in the Mission High School, Guru Nanak Public High School and other public places. A good many men took pledges of abstinence.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	„ 1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	„ 1,00,00,000

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches:—(1) Mandvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Rehman Street.

Mofussil Branches:—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharia, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Asansol, Chandausi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jamnagar.

London Agents:—The Midland Bank, Ltd.

New York Agents:—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents:—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts:—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs.	a.	p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes	...	0	5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B.	...	0	5 0
3. Birth Control Methods.	...	0	5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D.	...	0	5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger	...	0	8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman	...	0	8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D.	...	0	10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout	...	0	12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren	...	1	4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout	...	1	14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout	...	2	14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch	...	2	14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukerji	...	3	0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout	...	4	1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabel Hutton, M.D.	...	4	14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout	...	4	14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D.	...	6	0 0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

WANTED.

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Masters' Classes. Full particulars and Railway Fare Certificate on 2 annas stamp. Apply to:—Imperial Telegraph College, Delhi.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. B. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA.—A DIVINE GIFT IN
MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM,
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akinj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulla (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :—BARODA.

Branches :—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Koloi, Kadi and Dwarka.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	Rs.	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP		30,00,000
RESERVE FUND		23,00,000

DIRECTORS :

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs.	a.	p.
Inland	...	5	0 0
"	"	Foreign	...
		5	8 0
Single copy	...	0	8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-23.

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati Brand

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

RATES MODERATE

Saltings
Shirtings
Dhoters.

V. P. P. SERVICE

Premier Swadeshi Emporium

IVORY CURIOS
SILVERWARE
BRASSWARE
ENAMELLED
and INDEGENOUS
PRODUCTS.

TRAVELLING
and
HOUSE HOLD
REQUISITES
TABLE LINENS
and
BASEL MISSION
PRODUCTS.

IMPROVED QUALITY

Silks
Sarces
Borders.

PROMPT ATTENTION

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
Cruikshank Road, Fort,

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents :—SEDGWICK, COLLINS

(Agencies), Ltd.,

16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

- | | |
|-----------------|--|
| EYE DISEASES... | ... Try "Akhyacura." |
| RING WORM ... | ... Try "Kurain." |
| ASTHMA ... | ... Try "Asthma Cure." |
| STRENGTH ... | ... Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil." |
| TONICS ... | ... Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills."
"Parrish's Chemical Food."
"Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo.
phosphites of Lime." |
| GONORRHŒA ... | ... Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C.
Copaiba Cum Buchu." |

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :-

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Tonight at 9-30 P.M. and Tomorrow at 5-30 P.M. MADAME PAYLOVA.

Tomorrow at 10 P.M.

"AN INDIAN DANCE RECITAL"

under

The Distinguished Patronage of

MADAME PAYLOVA

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Tonight and Tomorrow at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

Pathe Super Gazette

and

BEBE DANIELS

in

"STRANDED IN PARIS"

A Paramount Jewel.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Tonight and Tomorrow at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

Pathe Gazette,

Day's Folly, 4th Series

(A Gorgeous Film, Fully Coloured featuring Josephine Baker)

THE NERVOUS WRECK

featuring

HARRISON FORD, PHYLLIS HAYER, CHESTER CONKLIN, MACK SWAIN,

and

HOBART BOSWORTH

An Al Christie's Super Comedy.

EMPRESS CINEMA

To-day and Tomorrow at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

Madan's Weekly Review No. 79

DAY'S FOLLY, SERIES No. 3

(Fully Coloured)

THE FORTUNE HUNTER

with

SYD CHAPLIN

and

HELENE COSTELLO

A Lightfoot Romance of Pluck, Luck, and Love.

A Warner Brothers Production.

Special Morning Show on Sunday at 10 A.M.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1929

No. 19

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

India and British Labour Party. The Aga Khan on Cow-Killing. Medical Profession and Marriage Age. "Purification of Untouchables." All-India Women's Education Conference. Mr. Sastri's Successor. The Year in Japan. Useful Publications.	The Calcutta Congress. That Men May All Be Brothers. The Law Applicable to Christians in India. In Defence of Miss Mayo. The National Social Conference. The All-India Women's Social Conference. Age of Consent Inquiry. News of the Week.
--	--

NOTES.

India and British Labour Party:—Mr. C. F. Andrews who was connected with Labour in England in his earlier days and had become the friend of many of the leading Labour Members of Parliament, expresses his disappointment at the apathetic attitude of the Labour Party towards Indian political aspirations, in his article in the Indian Review. "What we need in India" writes Mr. Andrews, "is the deed rather than the spoken word. We want no weak-hearted support. We need an entire and out-and-out aid, or else no aid at all. Mere talk is useless for us! Here is our main point of dispute now with the Labour Party. We feel that they have made abundant professions of friendship. But we want something more. We want the deed. At the same time, we must clearly recognise that both in Imperial and racial matters, the Labour Party is far ahead of the Conservative Party. Therefore, in the next election, I personally wish with all my heart, that the Labour Parliamentary Party may come into power, instead of the present Conservative Government, with its frank Imperialism everywhere and its racial preferences in Kenya."

The Aga Khan on Cow-Killing:—Enlightened Muslim opinion has always declared itself against the vexed question of cow-killing, which has been the source of much bitterness and strife between the two major communities. It has been repeatedly urged by Muslim leaders that neither the text of the Koran nor Islamic traditions enjoined the slaughter of cows for sacrificial purposes. This opinion has been reinforced by His Highness the Aga Khan in the concluding portion of his address to the All Parties Muslim Conference held at Delhi. "We are all agreed", observed His Highness, "that we celebrate the historical sacrifice by Ibrahim. But it must be remembered that Ibrahim, one of our great Prophets did not sacrifice a cow, nor is the sacrifice of a bovine especially enjoined in our religious books. On the contrary, the camel or the sheep is more frequently mentioned in connection with sacrificial rites. How many of our Hajis have, sacrificed cows in Arabia, the home of Islam, and, if they have not done so, have they disregarded any injunction of their religion? All of you, I am sure, will give an emphatically negative answer to this query. Then why do we view the question from a different angle in India." As further proofs of this, His Highness cited the injunction of the Emperor Baber to his son Humayun to respect the sentiments of the Hindus as regards the sanctity of the cow, and the example of the Amir of Afghanistan who though a good Muslim, discountenanced the sacrifice of cows in his country. The successors of Baber realised the economic value of animal life and took steps for its preservation. His Highness emphasised the humanitarian aspect of Islam and stated that killing is not one of its tenets and exhorted the Ulemas not to countenance the parade of sacrificial rites in public places and added "There are many other communities who eat beef but they do not hurt the susceptibilities of their neighbours by parading the sacred and adored animals for slaughter." We trust that His Highness' words will carry great weight with his coreligionists.

Medical Profession and Marriage Age:—The trend of evidence before the Age of Consent Committee which has been touring the country for the last four months and which has not yet concluded its labours was emphatically in favour of raising not only the age of consent but that of marriage also. Among the witnesses who gave evidence there were many medical men and women who declared that child marriage and premature motherhood undermined the constitution of women and were predisposing causes for high infantile mortality and poor physique of children. The fifth session of the All-India Medical Conference held during Christmas week at Calcutta accorded its unequivocal support to the raising of the age in both cases to sixteen. Dr. Desmukh, the president of the Bombay Corporation, in his presidential address to the Conference condemned the Government's indifference to social legislation and called upon the members of the Medical Profession to cleanse life of superstition and bigotry. He rightly pointed out that our race to be healthy should have healthy children who in their turn depended on healthy mothers who were grown up and strong enough to shoulder the responsibilities of motherhood. Therefore, he concluded that the age of marriage and consent should be raised.

"No girl can be said to be developed", said the Doctor, "till she is sixteen. To say that Nature means her to be a mother when menstruation first appears is as unreasonable as to say that a child who begins to talk at the age of two can argue and give public lectures and can dispose of himself because the faculty of speech has appeared. We have the support of older Medical authorities, Sushruta and Charak that no girl should marry and have children before she is sixteen." We have always felt that the infant welfare and maternity work instituted by Government cannot be of much benefit to the women and children as they do not deal with the root causes which are social and economic. We hold with Dr. Desmukh that so long as these remain untouched, not much good will result from superficial and hollow efforts.

"Purification of Untouchables" :—One of the disabilities of the so-called untouchables is that they are denied the right of worship in temples or in company with caste people. We welcome the efforts of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya who it appears has started a movement for purifying the untouchables and imparting to them the sacred mantras from Hindu Scriptures. In Benares he succeeded in the presence of a large gathering in initiating three hundred of the untouchables. A similar attempt at Calcutta met with much opposition from the orthodox Pandits. Pandit Malaviya gave them a patient hearing, worsted them in their arguments with their own weapons, the shastras, and proceeded with the ceremony. The following account of it will be of interest. "It did one's heart good to see Pandit Malaviyaji radiant, though emaciated, sitting on the ground in true orthodox style, initiating the humblest members of the Hindu society, as well as the Brahmanas, Kshatriyas and Vaisyas. About 250 men received purification, among whom about 150 were Untouchables. Owing to the lateness of the hour the rest had had to stand over for another chance. The faces of those who received the mantras beamed with joy and a feeling of reverent gratitude as they listened to the Upadesha." It is not clear what is the position of those initiated in this manner. If this movement seeks to remove the disabilities of religious worship with regard to the untouchables, it should be welcomed. It will go a long way towards the removal of the social curse, and the fostering of the spirit of brotherhood in the Hindu community.

All-India Women's Education Conference :—The arrangements in connection with the All-India Women's Conference on Educational Reform are complete. Her Highness the Dowager Rani of Mandi, the president-elect, arrived at Patna on January 3. Mrs. Mazhar-ul-Haque, is the chairman of the reception committee. All the provinces are sending their quota of delegates. Accommodation has been provided for delegates in a convent and tents near Mr. Aziz's house on the maidan. The standing committee of the conference will consider the All-India education fund and revise the policy of the conference to include all problems concerning women. Lady Stephenson will formally open the conference.

Mr. Sastri's Successor :—Sir Kurma Venkata Reddy, the new Agent General to the Government of India in South Africa, who sailed for Durban on Wednesday afternoon was given a hearty send off by the Hon. Mr. Jadhav and members of the Servants of India Society. Outlining his plan of work in South Africa, Sir Reddy observed that it would always be his endeavour to carry out the policy and work so well inaugurated by the Right Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri. He further stated that if no obstacles presented themselves he would, in addition to his official duties, interest himself in assisting South African Indians in the co-operative movements, in social uplift and in matters pertaining to agriculture. At a farewell function arranged in his honour Sir K. V. Reddy said that he was no longer a political leader or a non-Brahmin, nor even an Indian but India's representative in South Africa. We wish Sir K. V. Reddy success in the arduous task before him.

The Year in Japan :—We have received from the Japanese Consulate a copy of 'Present-Day Japan', 1928; the English Supplement of the Asahi, one of the leading papers of Japan. The year has been an important one for Japan and the annual appropriately begins with pictures in colours of the Emperor and Empress in their coronation robes and of the Japanese premier taking a leading part in one of the ceremonies performed on the auspicious occasion, and an article describing the coronation. Besides this, the annual which is very well produced, contains numerous illustrations in colours and in black and white and various articles, covering a wide range of subjects, such as Japanese politics, art, the theatre, the women's movement, labour unions and so on. During the year women have pressed for the extension of the franchise to them and have advocated a policy of Prohibition. The introductory article indicates that it will not be long before women get the vote in Japan in which case prohibition will rapidly advance in that country. Though the supplement is an annual it makes a valuable reference work on modern Japan.

Useful Publications :—A number of booklets giving valuable information on health and hygiene has been published by Dr. U. Rama Rao of Madras. The object of the little books is to convey to the popular minds the importance of health and how to avoid disease. The books form what is known as "Health Lecture series" of which there are thirteen in all. Evidently the subject-matter of each book was originally delivered as a lecture. The following are the books of the series: Houses in Relation to Health; Health and Disease; Air in Relation to Health; Water in Relation to Health; Food in Relation to Health; Home Nursing; Personal Hygiene; Alcohol and its Dangers; Milk in relation to Health; Disease carrying Insects; Preventable Diseases and School Hygiene. Some of these have been translated into local vernaculars, Tamil and Telugu. Dr. Rama Rao's "First Aid in Accidents" has met with high appreciation from the general public. Dr. Rama Rao deserves the thanks of the public for placing much useful knowledge within their easy reach. If we may make a suggestion, the booklets of the Health Lecture series should be all embodied in one single volume.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, JANUARY 5, 1929.

THE CALCUTTA CONGRESS.

The Indian National Congress which met at Calcutta has concluded a momentous session. It was fortunate in having in Pandit Motilal Nehru an able and experienced president to guide its deliberations. The Pandit had a rousing reception on his arrival in Calcutta and was taken in procession through the principal thoroughfares of the city. The Presidential Address to the Congress falls naturally into three divisions. The first part deals with the present situation and is an admirable summing up of the political and economic events of the year. The next part is the discussion of the question of Dominion Status versus Independence. It is sufficient to point out here that Pandit Motilal from what we gather from his address, has adopted the Liberal demand. He is prepared to accept Dominion Status not as a stepping-stone to the complete severance of the British connection with India but with the intention of remaining within the Empire, provided that India is placed on terms of complete equality with the Dominions and that Dominion Status is granted without avoidable delay. The third part is a consideration of the programme to be adopted. Pandit Motilal rightly insists on the importance of gathering all parties under the Congress flag and the value of setting our house in order. For this he proposes a programme of popularising the communal solution agreed on at the All-Parties Convention and of conducting an intensive propaganda against social evils.

The deliberations of the Congress led it to endorse the President's demand for a predominantly social programme. This was to be expected. The publication of the Nehru Report saw the Congress camp split into two parties, one advocating Dominion status whilst the other favoured complete independence and strict adherence to the decision of the Madras Congress. The Calcutta Congress was faced with a difficult problem. It could either give its support to the constitution framed by the Nehru committee and repudiate the Independence resolution of the last Congress or it could confirm the Madras decision and refuse to accept Dominion Status, the basic principle of the Nehru Report. Both parties were determined to wrest a favourable verdict from the Calcutta Congress and recent political events had tended to strengthen the hands of those who favoured complete independence. It was at this stage that Mahatma Gandhi made his re-entry into active politics. In response to an appeal from the President, Mahatmaji who from the very outset disapproved strongly of the decision of the Madras Congress, went to Calcutta and effected a compromise. It is significant that in spite of Pandit Motilal's threat to resign his presidentship if the Congress voted against Dominion status and Mahatma Gandhi's personal appeal to the Congress, the Independence party secured over a third of the votes. It is unfortunate that in their anxiety to obtain a favourable verdict some of the delegates resorted to objectionable methods. A committee has been formed to look into the allegation that delegates' tickets had been issued indiscriminately. The President had to administer a rebuke to some of the Congressmen who indulged in shouting epithets at those delegates who voted for the compromise.

The compromise resolution which was carried by a majority of nearly four hundred votes, permits that propaganda in the name of the Congress may be carried on for complete independence and states that, while Congress adheres to the Independence resolution of the Madras session, it approves of the Nehru Constitution as the largest measure of agreement attained amongst important parties and will adopt it in its entirety "if it is accepted by the British Parliament on or before December 31, 1929, but in the event of its non-acceptance by that date or its earlier rejection, the Congress will organise the non-violent non-cooperation movement." In other words, the political programme of the Congress is almost entirely suspended till 1930 and it is left to the next Congress to decide whether its goal is equality within the Empire or complete independence. The upshot of the resolution will be that we will have two groups of politicians conducting propaganda in the name of the Congress—the one for Dominion Status and the Nehru Report, the other for Independence. In the meantime the social programme of the Congress will receive more attention than it has done in the past.

The social programme of the Congress is nothing new, it has been before the country for some years. It includes work within the Legislatures and outside to bring about total prohibition of intoxicating drinks and drugs, picketing of liquor and drug shops, removal of the disabilities of women and the encouragement of their participation in national upbuilding, removal of untouchability, urban and village reconstruction. But, as Pandit Motilal has pointed out in his presidential address, the constructive work of the Congress has so far been neglected. No one can deny that it is a comprehensive programme and one that both the Independence and Dominion Status parties may work without the slightest hesitation. Mahatmaji's return to politics strengthens the hands of the social workers in the Congress and, though his promise of Swaraj in a year, is not at all likely to mature much will have been achieved by the advancement of social reform.

THAT MEN MAY ALL BE BROTHERS.

MEDITATIONS FOR THE YEAR.

GOOD CAUSES.

The quest for righteousness is old, yet ever new. All through the ages men have sought to perfect their individual lives and to make them richer. The modern man is still interested in individual perfection, but he has also come to see that righteousness is a social thing—a social order in which men shall dwell together as brothers. And if he desires righteousness to such an extent that he is willing to put his shoulder to the wheel and work for it, the kingdom of righteousness will come. Vice, disease, poverty, ignorance, filth—such hindrances to perfect living—are retreating because men and women are more and more giving of themselves in behalf of those causes which have for their aim the betterment of humanity.

The failure of most good causes is the failure of individual men and women to accept their responsibility for the attainment of these causes. To vaguely desire a better world order is not enough, the desire must find some concrete means of realisation. There are plenty of arm-chair reformers in every land, but not enough of shirt-sleeve reformers. And even the few who are willing to work must continually meet the charge that they are destructive. In a sense this is so. Institutions and customs that have become deep-seated are hard to change. The business ethics of one generation may be good, but a new generation calls for a better morality. Old ways of thinking may be satisfying, but new moulds for thought are essential to social progress. Morals are in constant evolution. That which is wasteful and unsocial must be eliminated, and that which is worthful must be made increasingly worthful. Some destruction is inevitable, but it is only a means to a richer heritage.

The heart of all good causes is found in the golden rule, the desire to do unto others as we would be done by. To put oneself in the other man's place is mighty hard, but at the same time mighty rewarding. The development of a constructive imagination is one of the first duties of every humanitarian. Books, pictures, listening to talks about people and conditions all help, but the real sympathetic heart is the product of first hand knowledge—"sitting where others sit"—and sharing their experience.

The ultimate victory of all good causes is dependent upon faith. A cause advances as men believe it possible for it to advance. The pages of history are a continuous record of the achievements of faith. Many of us, earnestly yearning for a better world order, tend to grow discouraged at the seeming slow progress of the good. We want immediate results instead of being willing to earn them. But to him who has faith, the victory of the right is assured, and he dwells in that serene attitude of mind which enables him to see each day in its right perspective, because he lives in the eternal.

THE LAW APPLICABLE TO CHRISTIANS IN INDIA.*

(BY MR. K. RAMAMURTI, A&KA).

We often hear it said in politics that eternal vigilance is the price of freedom. It seems to be equally true in other departments of life. Freedom from the stealthy inroads of error and superstition, freedom from the insidious grip of prejudice and bigotry, freedom from the undermining disease-germs of inter-communal suspicion, contempt, fear and in ill will,—all these demand as constant vigilance as freedom from the self-interested encroachments of pushful neighbours or the enslaving tactics of ambitious nations.

The Church Militant and the Church Triumphant of Christendom offer valuable lessons of good and ominous import, of example as well as warning, to the self-centred and samolent peoples of the earth whose once thriving churches are listless and disorganised to-day. A lively interest in the life-problems, ideals, methods and activities of one's own Christian fellow-countrymen, as reflected in the laws by which they are governed and served, cannot fail to prove of benefit even to the non-Christian communities of this land. Mr. Paul Aappasami, Judge, City Civil Court, Madras, has done a distinct service to Hindus and Muhammadans as much as to his own co-religionists by bringing out his learned handbook on "The Law applicable to Christians in India," at the request of the National Christian Council.

The law of Conversion, the law of Marriage, and the law of Inheritance are the tripod of Family Law in any community. They declare and regulate the rights of the individual in three important particulars considered vital to organised human society by all people with a claim to civilization. The law which secures to the individual the unmolested enjoyment of life, limb, property and good name is common to all the people inhabiting this land. The law declaring the right to freedom of conscience in choosing one's own religious faith is also a territorial law. But the right to obtain membership in any particular religious community which one may wish to join, the right to contract family relations by marriage with other members of the community into which one is born or affiliated or even with members of a different community, and the right, based directly or indirectly on such relationship, to take and enjoy the property of another who dies without having disclosed his wishes as to who shall enjoy it after him,—these are still shaped and controlled by the special law of each religious community according to its own peculiar genius and in furtherance of its own peculiar interests. The law applicable to Christians in India must therefore, in the nature of things, differ in material features from the ancient and in some respects antiquated, laws governing Hindus and Muhammadans, which also, along with many other relevant matters, are delineated in quick outline in this book. People who are by temperament or by culture unfitted to be partisans of any particular community, and who wish well of all alike, may often find themselves in an unenviable position in expressing opinion. But it is worth while trying to bestow impartial thought on the salient points of comparison that present themselves to the mind on each of these three essential items of wholesome communal life.

* "Law Applicable to Christians in India" by Paul Aappasami, Esq., M.A., LL.B., Judge, Civil Court, Madras; Published by the Christian Literature Society for India, Madras, 1928 pp. 311: Price Rupees Two.

Mr. Paul Appasami has written his book primarily to shed the light of Law, as it were, upon the busy path of the Christian Missionary at his work in remote rural areas in India far away from courts and lawyers. The stay-at-home Christian house holder also will find in it all the law that he may need in minding his own affairs. But to the general student of organised human institutions, whatever his religion, who takes a genuine interest, to say the least, in knowing how his progressive neighbours live and move, the authoritative information this book provides in a handy compass is simply invaluable.

IN DEFENCE OF MISS MAYO.

The Editor,

The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

There are two sides to every question, as every one knows. But persons who condemn India on account of what they have read in Miss Mayo's book, "Mother India," have considered only one side of the question. I advise such persons to read Dhan Gopal Mukerji's able reply to Miss Mayo in his book, "A Son of Mother India answers".

Mr. Mukerji takes Miss Mayo to task for giving to a book filled with condemnations of India the tender title of "Mother India". He denies the truth of Miss Mayo's sweeping generalizations condemnatory of the Indian people, and questions the veracity of the anonymous quotations in "Mother India". He also denies the contention of Miss Mayo that sex is at the bottom of India's troubles. The only parts of her book that he accepts as valid are those parts that give concrete evidence of India's social ills.

There can be no doubt that "Mother India" presents a case of special pleading. Miss Mayo deliberately set out to paint a black picture of India. Granting this, we must ask, what was her motive? In order to answer this question properly, we must consider the different attitude toward love on the part of the oriental Indian and the occidental American. The Indian regards love as benevolence, tenderness, sweetness, kindness, a fundamental principle from which all harshness, bitterness, coldness, reproof, and condemnation are absent. The occidental, on the other hand, finds harshness, reproof, and condemnation necessary ingredients of love. He shows his love, more often than not, by condemning and destroying all that is hurtful to the best interests of humanity. Before building a sanitary, comfortable house for a poor man, he tears down the unsanitary, miserable hovel in which the poor man is housed, so that neither the poor man nor any one else can ever dwell in that poor hovel again. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend," as our Scriptures say. It is my firm belief that Miss Mayo was moved by a genuine spirit of love when she wrote her book, and that she called attention to certain evils in India merely in order that they might be removed. However, there can be little doubt that she did not take into sufficient consideration the tender sensibilities of the Indian people. She ought to have conciliated the Indian people, and shown them plainly and unmistakably that she loved them. She could have shown her love by a due mention of the many fine qualities of the people of India, and by a just appreciation of their virtues.

It is a question in my mind whether Mr. Mukerji, native of India as he is, is altogether right in denying Miss Mayo's contention that sex is at the bottom of India's troubles. Sex may not play the great part in India that Miss Mayo makes it play, but in my opinion it plays a greater part in India than in many other countries. My warrant for thinking so is furnished by the works of Sir Richard Burton who knew India better than most native Indians know it. Has not Strickland, the character in Kipling's tales who knew the soul of India, been identified with Sir Richard Burton? Richard Burton was thoroughly familiar with the languages and customs of India, and his anthropological notes, based upon his first-hand knowledge of India, indicates that the Indian people are, indeed, very much preoccupied with sex; tho perhaps to a less degree than Miss Mayo thinks.

As an Indian, a holy man of Benares, quoted by Mr. Mukerji, says: "India needs love". This is true. But Indians must never forget that there is a love that hates and hate that loves. Misplaced kindness is cruelty, just as well-placed cruelty is kindness. We cannot love good unless we hate evil, nor love evil unless we hate good. An all-embracing, indiscriminate love must necessarily fold its arms about evil also, and thus in the end bring all things to evil. Let us love wisely, and with discrimination. Such a love will embrace the proper object of love whether that object be clothed in linen or in rags. Indian reformers themselves have taken a cue from Miss Mayo's book. They are beginning to discern the real spirit of love behind her caustic words, and they are applying remedies to such undoubted evils as she sets forth in her book.

Idaho, U. S. A., }
Nov. 16, 1929. }

Yours etc.,
CHARLES HOOPER.

[Pulling down a hovel necessarily imposes on the destroyer an obligation to see the new building constructed and to take the leading part in building operations—a fact which is not adequately realised by occidentals, many of whom leave the country after the first stage is reached. Miss Mayo's "love" for subject countries seems to exhaust itself in exaggerating weaknesses. Mr. Hooper's contention that India is over-sexed is absurd and his statement about Burton's knowledge of India only implies that he knew an India which never existed. Perhaps it is no use informing Mr. Hooper that social reform in India was begun before 1927.—Ed., I. S. B.]

THE NATIONAL SOCIAL CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The All-India National Social Conference met on Christmas day in a special pandal under the presidency of Mr. M. R. Jayakar. (The presidential address was published in last week's Reformer). The pandal proved to be much too small for the delegates and visitors among whom there was noticeable a fair sprinkling of ladies. Prominent among those present were Principal Urquhart, Professors Radhakrishnan and Bhandarkar, Mr. and Mrs. P. Chaudhury, Mrs. B. L. Choudhury, Sir Deva Prasad Sarbadhikary, Sjt. Bijoy Roghab Achariar, Sir P. C. Roy, Mrs. Brijlal Nehru, Mrs. Bhandarkar, Mrs. Kamala Devi Chattopadhyay, Mrs. P. K. Roy, Dr. B. N. Banerje, Dr. Naresh Sen Gupta, Sjt. Shyamsunder Chakravorty, Mr. S. C. Mukherjea, I. C. S., Sjt. Bipin Chandra Pal and Sjt. Sarat Chandra Bose.

After paying tribute to the President, Mr. Jayakar and mourning the loss of the great social worker, Lala Lajpat Rai, Mr. Nirmal Chunder Chunder, M.L.A., as the Chairman of the Indian National Social Conference welcomed the delegates and in his short address said :—

“It is for emancipation that Lalaji worked and it is for emancipation that his countrymen must work. The progressive realisation of social emancipation is as much a contradiction in terms as the progressive realisation of political independence for in either case there is an assumption that emancipation or independence is attainable without a violent revolution of ideas and attitudes. Each measure in pursuance of a scheme of progressive realisation is an obstacle for the next measure.

“Leaving aside the remote past let us take some of the present day measures of social reform. Rescue work is now the rage of the day. But I have not yet been able to find the solution of the problem of what these rescued girls would do in after life. If things are allowed to drift on as they are doing, posterity may find these educated or semi-educated girls greater dangers to society than they could have been if left to themselves. It has almost become the fashion now-a-days to start widows' homes. But unless widows are given greater liberties and ideas of sexual morality, radically improved, I fail to understand how it would be possible to provide homes for the millions of destitute or semi-destitute widows. Instead of cuttings and clippings here and there, there must be a root and branch reform. The relation of the sexes must be readjusted. Frankly speaking, I am not in a position to say that the conservatives talk undiluted nonsense when they claim that a sudden change either of the age of marriage or of the age of consent will be fraught with novel dangers; if it is assumed that society will not be reconstituted out and out but will be progressively reformed. There cannot be a moral or any justification for refusing to one whole sex the right to develop their faculties and realise their existence in the ways best suited to them according to their capacities and inclinations. Are we going to concede this right to the other sex? Hitherto our social reform activities have been confined more or less within particular communities or castes. They have not been worked out on a national basis though they might have been prompted by national motives. The result has been that while it has broadened the ideas of communities in their internal dealings it has stiffened their attitudes towards other communities in their external relations. This has made it possible for the none-too-friendly alien Government to set up one community against another and one caste against another without any break in the exploitation of all equally and indifferently.

SOCIETY AND INDEPENDENCE.

“The ideal of complete independence in social matters, that is to say the ideal which tends to the renovation of society is not merely the ideal which is worth living for and dying for but is one which can be easily brought about as it will meet less powerful though sinister opposition. The opposition in fact has no firmer or more solid basis than the traditional love for ancestral faiths and the imaginary fears of hereditary superstitions.

“It was here in Bengal that the flag of social revolt was first unfurled by Raja Ram Mohan Roy. It was here that that flag was kept flying by Pundit Iswar Chandra Vidyasagar who was born just 13 years before Raja Ram Mohan Roy died. It was here again in Bengal that Keshab Chandra Sen and Swami Vivekananda led devastating inroads on orthodox belief and orthodox practices. Let it be in Bengal the social reforms of India in a body determine to carry on their fight from day to day in a systematic and concerted manner until they succeed in reconstituting the Indian society on a completely national foundation.

“Sir, do not misunderstand me to mean that I ignore the value of the services which great Indians born in provinces other than Bengal have rendered to the cause of social reform in the country.”

The following resolutions were then adopted :—

1. This Conference records its sense of irreparable loss to the country caused by the sad and untimely death of Lala Lajpat Rai, the Lion of Punjab, who dedicated his whole life to the social and political uplift of his countrymen, undaunted and undeterred by adverse circumstances, and whose patriotic and self-sacrificing activities in various spheres of life will continue to inspire generations of his countrymen.
2. This Conference records its keenest regret for the sudden and lamentable death of Mr. S. K. Das, who as a distinguished lawyer attained the highest eminence in his profession, and whose unbounded sympathy and devotion to the social welfare of his motherland won for him the love and reverence of his countrymen.

3. This Conference records its deep sense of sorrow at the untimely death of the eminent journalists Mr. Prithwis Chandra Ray, one of the pioneers of the All-India Social Conference, and of Mr. Pijush Kanti Ghosh, both of whom rendered invaluable services to the social cause of the country, and whose deaths have created a void in social workers.

4. This Conference resolves that the President of this Conference be requested to convey to the bereaved families its keen and earnest sympathy with them.

SECOND DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

At to-day's sitting of the Social Conference much heat was generated over the question of removal of untouchability and giving of freedom for intermarriage between the different communities. After two hours' discussion a resolution urging the abolition of caste system and maintenance of intermarriage was carried. Mr. M. R. Jayakar presided and among those present were Sir Morapant Joshi, Rajagopalacharir, Miss Sorabjee, Rev. Harbert Anderson and Hon'ble Ramdas Pantulu.

Sir P. C. Ray said that if they read the Vedas and Upanishads they would find how the old rishis partook of the food cooked by the lower caste people. But yet they were held in great esteem. When such people obtained the highest places in Hindu society he failed to find any trace of caste system in ancient India. He also pointed out that there was intermarriage of Rajas and wealthy Zemindars with the descendants of inferior castes. He urged that the caste system must be abolished in toto. In this connection the speaker referred to the resolution passed by the All-Parties' Convention on Dominion Status as goal which they wanted to extort from their rulers and they should pass 'pari passu' a resolution which should be the first stepping stone in the attainment of Swaraj. This is the greatest of disintegrating elements in Hindu society. He said :

"While we claim Swaraj there is a fratricidal war in progress in India. In the United Provinces and in the other parts of India non-Brahmins are in battle array with Brahmins. In Bengal the Namasudars are up in arms against the higher castes. That showed what great hatred they bear towards the Hindu members of the community. Throughout India it was brother against brother. What are our fraternal brothers the Simon Commission doing? They are posing as friends of the Depressed Classes. In order that our caste should be strengthened we must do our best to abolish the caste system. It could not be attained all at once but its rigidity must be relaxed. The caste system was purely artificial and arbitrary and if they wanted to have a place in the country of nations the sooner the caste system was abolished the better. Let us take a vow from to-day that we shall do our level best to do all that lies in our power to do away with the caste system (Applause)."

Mr. R. L. Biswas on behalf of the Depressed Classes Association, seconded the motion and pointed out the disabilities to which the Depressed Classes were subjected and said that the sooner the caste system was abolished the better.

Swami Ramanand of Delhi, supporting the resolution, said that they were not only politically enslaved, but also morally and intellectually. He referred to communal strife and the suffering to which the community had been subjected and said that if there were no caste system the Moslems would not have dared to take away their women and children. Unless they laid the foundation of their social structure broadly they could not build up an independent and free India.

Pandit Bhumanand from the Punjab declared that as long as the demon of caste system was living no social reform, Shudhi or Achut Udhar (removal of untouchability) was possible. The tyranny of the so-called higher class people over the Depressed Classes was driving the latter to seek the Government help and they were justified in doing so.

The resolution was carried.

Mrs. Kamladevi Chattopadhyay moved the following resolution with a view to promote national unity. "This Conference recommends that inter-caste and inter-communal dinners be encouraged and that freedom can be given for inter-marriage among several communities inhabiting India."

She said that the principle underlying the inter-caste marriage and inter-dining was one and the same. When they recognised absolute equality between all classes, it did not require very much stress of imagination to carry it a little further. Unfortunately to-day in India the word "Community" was being much abused. The community did not really mean any restricted group that was bound up in a particular religion, but it was group that practised certain sectarian duties. She regretted that they had gone to such an extent that unnecessary and bitter hatred was created and much of the national energy was wasted. Religion, she said, was not dogma. Neither was it a conglomeration of some views. Religion was culture and there was cultural unity all over the world. A time must come when there would not be the necessity to organise special occasions when they would all sit together at dinner as comrades, friends and brothers. In conclusion, she said, "If the national life is to be unified by breaking up these artificial tests, it is to be based on marriage and marriage alone because there you lay the foundation of home and from home the whole country's unification is to come about."

Miss Nalamuthu Ammal (Madras), in supporting the resolution, emphasised how much hypocrisy they developed in them because of the existing abominable caste system. She appealed to the audience to put this question before everybody who came up to them. "Are you a human being, if so all the other things caste and creed, etc., vanish away and then you claim him as a person, your sister and brother. Whatever happens let us not be hypocrites." (Applause.)

Mr. B. C. Mondal (Vice-President of the All-India Depressed Classes Association), supported the resolution. Principal Ramdas of the Gurukul moved for the deletion of the clause regarding freedom of inter-communal marriage. He opposed the resolution on the ground of impracticability though it was bad to oppose a lady, but it was worse to be hypocrites. In India religion and culture were indissolubly mixed up. A time might come when India might become one cultural unit and it was then that they should talk of this resolution and not otherwise.

The President explained that at present under the Act III of 1872 which gave facilities for intermarriage between two sections both parties would have to make a declaration that they did not espouse any of the two religions. In answer to a query from Hon. Ramdas Pantulu as to whether there was any freedom under the present law, the President referred to the introduction of the Bill by Dr. Gour in the Assembly for marriage between several communities. That Bill was now confined to Hindu religion. The present position was that any Hindu could marry any other Hindu. He warned the audience that they were embarking upon the responsibility of re-eliciting opinion on the passing of Dr. Gour's Bill.

Miss Sushila Devi of Jullundur in an inspiring speech opposed the amendment on the ground that Indians were slaves and as such had no religion. She concluded: "Do you want that we should resort to civil marriage through the help of Courts and not marry with your permission?"

Mrs. Chattopadhyay, replying, said that it had been argued that there was a danger of Hindu culture being destroyed if her motion was carried. She never felt such contingency and pointed out that they were thinking of internationalism. They had never shut out European thought in this connexion. There could not be conflict in culture. "I shall say I am here to assert my rights, no matter how disastrous the result would be."

The amendment was negatived 42 voting for and 82 against it and the original motion was carried by a majority.

Mrs. Brijlal Nehru moved: "This Conference views with alarm the evil consequences of early marriage and is of opinion that in view of prevailing conservatism in people it is necessary that marriageable age of boys and girls be regulated by legislation and this Conference, therefore, lends its whole-hearted support to provisions of Sarda Bill and requests the central legislature and Government of India to give full support to the same."

Mrs. Brijlal Nehru moving her resolution supporting the Sarda Bill said, from her experience that child marriage was an evil. In India more than 80 per cent. of the people practised child marriage and in some places the babies in arms were married. She based her experience as a member of the Age of Consent Committee and on the result of her tour in various parts of the country. The figures of child mortality in India were higher than any other country of the world. This was due principally to the early marriage. The economic condition of the people of India was growing worse and worse and it was time that the evil should be put a stop to.

Mr. Charuchandra Mitter (Calcutta) opposed the resolution on the ground that this legislation would infringe on their religious liberty. He challenged Mrs. Nehru to prove that there has been appalling mortality on account of early marriage.

Mr. Rasiklal Biswas: It was unchivalrous to challenge.

Mr. Mitter: I am here to challenge the Age of Consent Committee on behalf of the ancient culture of India.

The Hon. Mr. Pantulu assured the audience that child marriage was a curse and the Age of Consent Committee would be able to place before the country a very convincing case in support of child mortality. It was a national evil and it should be arrested. The legislature ought to take steps to avert the evil and promote the national cause. If they really understood political freedom it was ridiculous for them to contend that child marriage should continue. He was confident that such legislation would be welcome to the country. The resolution was carried.

Rev. Herbert Anderson moving a resolution recommending drastic state action against the menace of drink and drug habit and asking the public to unite in voluntary abstinence from all alcoholic beverages and drugs, said the alcohol was third-rate food, a second-rate drug and first-rate poison. He commended the example of the United States of America to Indians. The resolution was carried.

THE ALL-INDIA WOMEN'S SOCIAL CONFERENCE.

The All-India Women's Social Conference opened its session on the 27th December at Calcutta under the presidency of Seth Parvati Bai, Junior Maharani of Travancore. Sucharu Devi, the Maharani of Mayurbhanj, Chairman of the Reception Committee welcomed the delegates. Among those present were Lady J. C. Bose Miss Cornelia Sorabji, Srimati Anurupa Devi, Kamala Kamini Devi, Sashimukhi Devi, Kamudini Basu, Mrs. P. K. Ray, Miss Ganguli, Sarala Devi, Mrs. Kamaladevi Chattopadhyay, Miss M. Tata, Mrs. A. Hussain, Mrs. Amir Hussain and others. About 1,000 ladies from all over India attended the Conference.

The Maharani of Travancore in the course of her Presidential address said: "It is not my object to deal historically with the position of women in recent times or in this country through the ages. It would not, however, be out of place to make just a few observations on these general topics. Until nearly a century ago, notwithstanding great examples of statesmanship, saintliness and eminence in the arts of exceptional women, the legal position of women in western countries was very anomalous and their rights of property and of free self-expression extremely truncated; and it was not without strenuous struggle that women's place in society is being gradually won even in the West. Far different has been the history of the woman's movement in this country. To start with, speaking for the moment, of the Hindu system, it is now recognized that in ancient India when the Vedas and the Upanishads were produced and when this country was passing through one of its periods of real achievement, woman was as active a member of society as man. The researches of scholars have now demonstrated that some of the Vedic Hymns owed their origin to women and amongst us there have been not only singers of sacred scriptures but authors of law books and mathematical experts. In regard to the right of property also, Hindu Law at its inception was very liberal in the vindication of the rights of women to inherit property and it is argued that such rights were restricted only by recent judge-made legislation initiated by men who, unacquainted with the original texts, have failed either to march with the times or to allow for and encourage the evolution of society on natural lines. The rights of the wife and the daughter and other female relations to a share in property were wider in ancient and mediæval India than they are to-day. But on the other hand even now, in many European systems women's rights are not as well safe-guarded and recognized as in our Smritis. Speaking of my own country of Kerala, woman is the pivot of the family and her rights are fundamental and extensive. A large proportion of the property in Malabar stands in the name of and is enjoyed by the woman as the head of the house-hold.

"There are many misconceptions about the position of women in Islam, but the property rights of women stand better, perhaps, in no system of jurisprudence than in the Mahammedan. Moreover, it is well-known that the Prophet of Islam was not, when properly understood, either an advocate of polygamy or of the purdah. As far as one can see and here I am speaking with considerable diffidence, the Prophet Mohammad, in fixing four as the maximum number of wives, was intent on hastening the reform in the direction of curtailing the excessive number of marriages that the nomadic tribes permitted themselves before his time. The system of purdah arose no doubt, from the incidents and accidents of a nomadic or a fighting life and soon after the Muhammadan conquest, in India there was, perhaps, a qualified necessity for the seclusion of women in times of disturbance and turmoil and constant fighting but it soon became a matter of prestige and of honour. The result was that not only the Muhammadans but the more aristocratic Hindus and the Princes adopted the habit less and less out of necessity and more and more out of notions of prestige. At the risk of treading upon dangerous grounds, may I be permitted to suggest that the system has outlived its usefulness and is to-day a great handicap in every way to the woman's cause. At the risk of vanity, let us remind ourselves that it may well be contended that most great men of the world have owed more to their mothers than to their fathers. It is from the point of view of shaping the destiny of the next generation that I feel impelled most strongly to urge upon the women of India the imperative necessity of equipping themselves adequately as instruments of national regeneration. When I say this, I do not lay emphasis so much upon literacy or school or college education but on something beyond and above literacy which can be gained only by a knowledge of the world, by free and equal association with our fellow-beings and an understanding and sympathy with the world's problems as they present themselves to us from time to time."

"Our marriage system is based on the theory of consent and although inroads have been attempted on that system, yet no reflecting student of human affairs can fail to realise that enlightened opinion throughout the world is making an approach to the ideals underlying that system. I may claim with pardonable pride that on account of the matriarchal structure of society in Malabar, not only have we and the communities that follow the system practically abolished illiteracy and the evils of seclusion but can claim in the matter of female education that Travancore and Cochin lead not only amongst the Indian States but perhaps most if not all the British provinces. I come now to the question of early marriage and of child-widowhood. It is a very said feature of Indian society that the proportion of widows in the population for every ten thousand is 41 between the ages of 15 and 20; 71 between 20 and 25, 145 between 25 and 35; and 325 between 35 and 40, the corresponding figures for England being nil, 1.5, 13 and 50. It is also a melancholy circumstance that between the ages of 1 and 5, there are seven widows for every ten thousand. This large number is due partially to the early age of marriage, partially to the difference in the ages of husbands and wives but mainly to the prejudice against the re-marriage of widows. It is remarkable that even amongst the castes which do not forbid remarriage altogether the custom is supposed to be a hall-mark of respectability and a number of communities have adopted that system and even Mahammadans who are in various parts of the country closely brought into touch with their Hindu neighbours are apt to share that prejudice. No scriptures can have sanctioned or encouraged this practice and no terms of reproach could be too strong against a state of things which has led to this result. There is something, perhaps, to be said against the social or anti-social effects of undue delay in marriage but more can be urged against too early marriage in the matter of the enfeeblement of the race and the weakening of its stamina. It is a matter for profound gratification that enlightened opinion especially amongst the Hindus and also gradually amongst Mahommedans is declaring itself forcibly and unmistakably in favour of later marriages.

While on this topic, may I be permitted not only to remind ourselves but our brethren that the great difficulty in the way of India's progress is the divorce between conviction and practice which has been so marked in the past and which has not even now died out. Many an ardent social reformer while eloquent on public platforms is perhaps apt to abate his zeal and to weaken his advocacy when in his own environment and he ascribes his feebleness in action mainly to his wife, mother or grandmother. It is we, therefore, the sisters, wives, mothers and grandmothers, that have to reflect on these problems and their solution and to make it impossible for the men to invoke our names as stumbling blocks to progress. How is this to be done? The answer is simple and unequivocal. It can only be done by a rapid and comprehensive programme of women's education whereby women might become effective social and political factors in the body politic, whereby they can help not only in the renaissance of Indian art and literature and Indian ideals but may be potent factors in social uplift. Let us remember that the total number of women in all the schools and colleges in India from the Primary school up to the Arts and professional colleges was just over a million in the latest year for which figures are available. And of this number, 86 per cent stopped with the Primary school. All the influences which operate against the spread of education amongst the boys are re-inforced in the case of women by the purdah system and the custom of early-marriages. Experience of latter years fortunately shows us that our men-folk have put, and will put no serious obstacles in our path. It is a pleasing feature of recent times that surmounting the difficulties and obstacles that lie ahead of them, Indian women have not only gained great distinction at the Universities and have become admirably qualified doctors and teachers but even the portals of the law courts have been invaded by a few who have taken to the profession of the law. Great tribute is due to the pioneers of such educational and professional enterprises but it is not so much on isolated examples of eminent intellectual activity that the progress of this country depends but upon the early or rather the immediate adoption of a programme of compulsory education for women as well as men which would enable both of them to be equipped for the race of life which is daily growing more and more arduous and exacting. The problem of Indian regeneration is mainly economic and social and the vindication of the economic rights of women and the social position of women are amongst the most important elements of the problem. Such vindication is dependent on the eschewing of obsolete ideas of outworn superstitions, and upon the realization of the value and the beauty of each individual life and the complete elimination firstly of the theory of the inferiority of the women on the part of the men and even more perhaps the elimination of the inferiority complex on the part of the women themselves. It is only as the result of the diffusion of education and the capacity to think independently and steadily that problems like the purdah, like child marriage, like child widowhood, like the dependent economic position of women in the family, can be solved."

At the second sitting of the Indian Women's Social Conference on 28th December, under the presidency of Her Highness the Junior Maharani of Travancore, resolutions relating to women's education, revision of Hindu Laws of Inheritance, abolition of compulsory dowry to bridegroom, revision of factory laws and equal rights for women with men in marital life were adopted.

Mrs. P. K. Roy, in moving her resolution for women's education, said that Bengal had peculiar difficulties regarding girls' education, owing to the purdah, early marriage and other social restrictions. She pointed out that Indian States showed a better record than British India in this connection, and suggested a definite scheme for the establishment of a special Board for Girl's Education.

Mrs. Aparna Devi (daughter of Desabandhu C. R. Das) spoke on the evil effects of child marriage and dowry. "We are a dying race, and unless we are prepared to stem the gathering down rush of Hindu society by something strong and tangible, we should soon sink into oblivion, and only become fit to be preserved in museums like the mummies of Egypt, in air-tight glass cases."

AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

AT CALCUTTA.

The Age of Consent Committee commenced their sittings on the 19th December in the Imperial Secretariat Buildings under the Chairmanship of Sir Moropant Joshi.

Sm. J. Genguly, M.A., of 6, Guru Prasad Chaudhury Lane, Calcutta, and S.J. Charuchandra Mittar, Attorney-at-Law were the witnesses who were examined.

Sm. Ganguly said that there was dissatisfaction amongst the educated and the advanced classes with the state of the law as to the age of consent as was evident from the wide-spread agitation in cities, towns and some big villages. Their race had deteriorated physically to a great extent and this was largely due to very young parentage and so an advance in the present law was entirely justified and it was urgently needed to protect girls from being abducted, seduced and then forced to lead a life of shame at an age when they were but mere children without any idea of what was awaiting them. Questioned by the President she said that she was connected with such institutions as Bani Bhavan and Vidya Mandir and was also engaged in social reform work. She was of opinion that 13 was at present the higher age in this country at which girls were married but she advocated 16 to be the minimum marriageable age and was in favour of penalising those who would violate the marriage laws,

Sj. Mitter said that there was no dis-satisfaction amongst the people except perhaps among a microscopical section of Brahmos and England returned people who wanted to pose as reformers. He did not think there was necessity of changing the existing law and there was not a scrap of evidence to show that the present law affected injuriously any section of the society. The raising of the age of consent among married couples should be a vexations and useless piece of legislation which would be availed of only to gratify malice or enmity. Any advance on the present law would cause widespread discontent amongst the labouring classes who would be primarily affected by this law and create disaffection against the Government who alone would be held responsible for the act.

Giving evidence before the Age of Consent Committee on the 19th December Mrs. Douglas Remfry, Acting Honorary Secretary, Bengal Presidency Council of Women, said that there was no desire of altering the marriage laws among the educated community. Public opinion had been stimulated due to social progress and the age of marriage had been raised. She was of opinion that early maternity was largely responsible for high maternal mortality. Lastly she urged for the employment of women doctors to examine and ascertain the age of girls before marriage.

Mr. Muralidhar Banerjee, Honorary Secretary, Bengal Social Reform League, thought it was imperative to raise the minimum age of marriage and that the fixing of a minimum marriageable age would be more in consonance with public opinion in this part of the country. He suggested 16 to be the minimum age of marriage in case of girls. He was in favour of marital and extra-marital cases being tried by a special tribunal, and opined that legislation might possibly remove the evils of early marriage.

Mr. Ashutosh Sastri, ex-Principal of Sanskrit College, said that public opinion in this country was not in favour of extension of age and he did not consider that any penal legislation fixing a higher or a minimum age of marriage would be in consonance with such opinion.

Giving evidence before the Age of Consent Committee on Dec. 20. Mrs. Rajkumari Das, Principal, Bethune College, urged the enhancement of the age of consent and said she was convinced that the chronic state of poverty in the country would decrease greatly if the age of consent were raised to 18. She could not attribute the practice of early marriage to religious injunction.

Mr. D. P. Khaitan, on behalf of the Marwari community, urged advance of the present law. He favoured the raising of the minimum age to 18.

Mr. M. C. Ghosh, judicial Secretary, said, in order to protect young girls, 14 should be fixed as the minimum marriage age. He preferred transportation for life and 10 years' rigorous imprisonment as the only suitable punishment for those who committed indecent acts.

Pandit Saratchandra Sankha Vedantatirtha, secretary, Bangiya Brahmin Sabha, disapproved of raising of the age of consent and was against legislation, which witness said would cause widespread dissatisfaction. He said all women favoured consummation on attainment of puberty when it did not injure her health or progeny. He opined that early maternity was not responsible for the infantile mortality or for the intellectual or physical progress.

(To be continued).

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The Bank of India Limited :— The profit of the Bank of India Limited, for the year ended 31st December 1928 Including the sum of ... Rs. 3,04,966 7 2 brought forward amounts to ...	„ 22,13,635 8 2
Provision for Income Tax and Super Tax for the current year will absorb. „	2,00,000 0 0
The payment of an ad-interim dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum made on 30th June 1928 absorbed ... „	5,00,000 0 0
The balance now available for distribution is „	15,13,635 8 2
The Directors propose to pay a final dividend for the half year ended 31st December 1928 at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum free of Income Tax „	6,00,000 0 0
To place to Bank's Property Account. „	2,00,000 0 0
To place to the Bank's Reserve Fund. „	4,00,000 0 0
And to carry forward the balance subject to the payment of Bonus to the Staff „	4,13,635 8 2

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. s. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukkerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isable Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
 Royapuram, Madras.

WANTED.

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Masters' Classes. Full particulars and Railway Fare Certificate on 2 annas stamp. Apply to:—Imperial Telegraph College, Delhi.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhoea and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM,
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Mategaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Aklaj (District Solapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ... Rs. 12,64,600 .

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amrell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadl and Dwarka.

JAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	Rs.
CAPITAL PAID-UP	60,00,000
RESERVE FUND	30,00,000
				23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).

Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).

Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).

Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.

Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)

Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathubhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26

C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindignl.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs.	a.	p.
Inland	...	5	0 0
Foreign	...	5	8 0
Single copy	...	0	8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Taticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26.

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

RATES MODERATE

Saltings
Shirtings
Dhoters.

V. P. P. SERVICE

Premier Swadeshi Emporium

IVORY CURIOS
SILVERWARE
BRASSWARE
ENAMELLED
and INDEGENOUS
PRODUCTS.

TRAVELLING
and
HOUSE HOLD
REQUISITES
TABLE LINENS
and
BASEL MISSION
PRODUCTS.

IMPROVED QUALITY

Silks
Sarrees
Borders.

PROMPT ATTENTION

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
Cruikshank Road, Fort,

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 80 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS (Agencies), Ltd.,
 16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,
 General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS;

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
The Indian Social Reformer,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

Mahatma Gaudhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,
The Hindustan Review.
PATNA, E. I. R.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Saturday at 9-30 P.M.

and

Sunday at 5-30 P.M.

BOMBAY AMATEUR DRAMATIC CLUB.

presents

"OUTWARD BOUND"

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Time:—Saturday and Sunday at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

Other days at 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

Pathe Gazette,

MY BEST GIRL

9 Reels, featuring

MARY PICKFORD

(United Artists)

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Time:—Saturday, Sunday and Bank Holidays at 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

Other Days at 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

Pathe Super Gazette

KOKO SONG CAR-TUNE

(By the Light of the Silvery Moon)

THE MATINEE LADIES

7 Reels, featuring

MAY McAVOY

WELCOME McGREGOR

and

HEDDA HOPPER

A Warner Brothers Production.

EMPRESS CINEMA

Time:—Saturday, Sunday and Bank Holidays at 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

DAY'S FOLLY, 4th SERIES

(A Coloured Picture featuring Josephine Baker)

BREWING TROUBLE

1 Reel Comedy

"STRANDED IN PARIS"

7 Reels, featuring

BEBE DANIELS

A Paramount Lasky Jewel Production.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JANUARY 12, 1929

No. 20

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Calcutta Congress Con- troversy.	Mr. Sastri in South Africa. Living India.
Mahatma Gandhi on the Con- gress.	That Men May all be Brothers. The Evil of Dowery.
Mangalore Depressed Classes Mission.	Indian Journalism and its Future All-India Women's Conference.
The All-India Women's Con- ference.	News of the Week.

NOTES.

The Calcutta Congress Controversy:—
An unedifying controversy, or rather more than one, has arisen over the Calcutta Congress proceedings. The National Congress adopted a compromise resolution stating that it stood for Dominion Status but if this was not conceded within one year, it will launch non-co-operation with a view to achieving independence. We are not quoting the exact terms but that, we think, is the purport of the resolution. Another resolution was adopted detailing a programme of work for the current year in which total abstinence, removal of untouchability and other social reforms occupy a prominent place. The two resolutions were largely inspired by Mahatma Gandhi. Dr. Besant who had taken a prominent part in the All-Parties Conference and had been indefatigable in her efforts to secure agreement between the different schools, has thought it necessary to dissent violently from the Calcutta resolutions and in expressing her dissent, she has permitted herself to indulge in a personal onslaught on Mahatmaji. Her main objection to the resolutions is that they virtually mean the suspension of political activities during the year in favour of a pre-eminent social programme. Mahatma Gandhi answers—and we entirely agree with him—that it is by applying ourselves to necessary reforms in the social sphere that we acquire the power and the momentum to carry through great political movements. Indeed, this has been our view all along. A people who will not lift a little finger to fight evils which are largely within their own control, cannot have the strength and energy to offer effective and sustained resistance to pressure from outside. As for the programme, we are glad to find the first place allotted to total abstinence as a means to prohibition. Few of our leaders who generally belong to the non-drinking classes realise how serious is the danger of drink. Against the organised material resources and political power of western Imperialism, India has nothing but the justice of her cause and the un-alcoholised brains and muscles of her people to oppose. If the innate repugnance to drink of the Indian people breaks down, as it has been doing, one of our strongest bulwarks in the struggle for national existence, will have disappeared, and it will not be long before the Hindus and Mahomedans of India go the way of the Maoris, the Red Indians and the Hottentots. The removal of untouchability is equally urgent in order to rally the full forces of Indian nationalism in the cause of freedom. We are, therefore, sorry that Dr. Besant, whose long and distinguished services to India no one values more, should set herself against the social programme as likely to hamper political work. It will do nothing of the kind. On the contrary, it will give life and reality to our politics. The personal reflections of Mahatma Gandhi are, we must say, altogether unworthy of Dr. Besant, and she will, we are sure, regret them when she has got over her disappointment, very natural in the circumstances, that the Nehru report has not been adopted intact. Whether one agrees with him or not, Mahatmaji more than any one else at present stands for the masses of the Indian people and his is a force which cannot be left out of account in any settlement of the Indian problem.

Mahatma Gandhi on the Congress:—
Mahatma Gandhi himself has not been exempt from the temptation to indulge in somewhat carping criticism. He forgets that the Congress today, such as it is, is largely his handiwork, and that for its faults as well as its excellences the credit is largely his. He complains, for instance, that the delegates to the Congress were mostly self-appointed. The criticism was as much applicable to the Congress of 1920 and 1921 when Mahatmaji was in full charge of its affairs as in 1928. He questions the reality of the Calcutta demonstration. Demonstration implies a certain excess of appearance over reality, and the non-co-operation demonstrations, though Mahatmaji fully believed in their reality, had their due measure of hollowness, and collapsed because of it, when the first enthusiasm waned of the crowds which gathered round his banner. Mahatmaji cavils at the European fashion of the uniforms of the volunteers and wants them to be in keeping with the pauperism of the nation. His constant harping on pauperism is apt to foster a morbid pessimism which is not conducive to activity of any kind, just as the constant thought of death may lead nervous men to the verge of suicide. We should ourselves have shrunk from appearing in public in an imitation Field Marshal's uniform ourselves, but we thought it wonderfully plucky of Mr. Subhas Bose and his volunteers, who must have felt the unreality of the appearance as much as Mahatmaji, to have braved the scuffing of unsympathetic observers, in order to make the congress demonstration as realistic as possible of Swaraj. The central idea seemed to be that the President is the head of the nation and that he must be rendered royal honours in order to impress the idea on the people. It was an inspiring idea, and was carried out with admirable verisimilitude. After all, it would not have been less unreal for Mr. Subhas Bose to appear as a rugged farmer than as a G. O. C. If absolute reality is the desideratum Carlyle's "forked radish" should be the sartorial model for every Congressman. We agree with Mahatmaji in his suggestion about reorganisation of the Congress. He says in Young India:—"If I had my way I should separate the deliberative portion from the demonstrative and spectacular. I should exclude visitors from the deliberative section; or if they must be allowed, I should have an open air enclosure divided into sections strongly but elegantly fenced. Meetings in the enclosure will then have to be held during the early morning hours and in the evenings. This will at once simplify the labours of the reception committee and result in great economy. Artistic decorations are surely possible in an open air enclosure which is any day preferable from the standpoint of hygiene to a closed pandal which suffocates, no matter how well ventilated it may be." By way of conclusion, we would appeal to Mahatmaji not to depress an already depressed people with melancholy forebodings. His words carry enormous influence and should always be used to convey a message of hope, strength and courage to his countrymen. Mahatmaji should not aspire to be handed to posterity as the "Gloomy Sage of Sabarmati."

Mangalore Depressed Classes Mission:—

The report of the work of the Depressed classes Mission, Mangalore for the year 1927-1928 begins with a feeling tribute to its founder the late Rao Saheb K. Ranga Rao who made it his life mission to work for the uplift of the depressed classes in that part of the country. His pioneer efforts have borne ample fruit both in extending the activities of the Mission itself and in awakening the social conscience of the people. Some two years before his death Mr. Ranga Rao handed over the management of the Mission to the Servants of India Society which has been running it since. The Mission conducts a Higher Elementary School in which 84 children receive free education. It maintains a boarding house of select students, orphans and destitutes who are fed, clothed and lodged free of charge. Industrial education in the shape of training in carpentry, and weaving is also provided. Besides all this, "the Mission is exerting its utmost to inculcate in the boys habits of cleanliness and to impress on them the importance of character and of service to humanity." If the work of the Mission is to have lasting results, it has to undertake the improvement of the environment in which most of the pupils live and the homes they come from. This it has been doing by educating the parents as well. The Mission is of opinion that scholarships granted on a liberal scale and a relaxation of rules governing them relating to age etc., will benefit greatly grown up students. Not the least important of the work of the Mission is that undertaken with regard to colonies. The Mission allots land to homeless families for residential and agricultural purposes. Housing materials are supplied free. The settled families are under the moral influence of the Mission which spares no pain to improve their moral and economic condition. There are seven such colonies. In one of the colonies a Prayer Hall has been erected and religious meetings are held there. The above details are enough to show the excellent work the Mission has been doing. One great draw back for progress is the want of funds. We would suggest to the Mission that it should raise a memorial fund in the name of its founder which would enable it to be placed in a firm footing.

The All-India Women's Conference:—

The third session of the Women's Educational Conference just terminated at Patna has been a successful sitting. The Searchlight, Patna, in a leading article writes:—"Every one who witnessed the sittings of the Conference must have been struck by the more or less complete absence of the local European ladies and also of ladies belonging to the advanced circles of society. What is more, it was highly gratifying that the Beharees ladies made themselves conspicuous not merely by their active participation in the proceedings of the Conference but in the sphere of quiet and silent work behind the scenes for ministering to the success of the Conference and in arranging for the comfort and convenience of their sisters from other provinces. The success of the Conference can be measured from the fact that there were as many as about 200 delegates present from outside Behar."

Mr. Sastri in South Africa:—The change of atmosphere brought about by Mr. Sastri in South Africa is already making itself apparent. A valued correspondent in Durban gives us two instances of this. He writes:—"Mr. Sastri delivered three lectures on Indian philosophy to appreciative audiences in Durban. Another instance of his great influence is the fact that the local Y. W. C. A. invited me to dinner at their place and to lecture to the girls on the "Servants of India Society." The Secretary is a Dutch lady, but widely travelled and therefore, broad-minded. She told me how she consulted the girls about inviting me; how they unanimously approved of my lecturing, how when she asked their opinion about asking me to dinner, there were just two girls who hesitated a bit, how another girl immediately rated them and told them to dine in another room all by themselves if they objected to my presence; and how the two said girls later assured the Secretary that they had not the least objection to my being asked to dine with them all, and so on. After my first speech, I was asked the next week to come again, and speak to them on Gandhi which I did. Some breaking of new ground. The other-day the Managing Committee of a girls' school in Potchefstroom in the Transvaal met and debated hotly the propriety of the girls attending Mr. Sastri's lecture some months ago. One of the Members was furious about it, but another would stand no such nonsense and vigorously contended that it was an honour and privilege for the girls to hear Mr. Sastri and he was going to fight for the last ditch in defence of it. At this rate, he remarked, they may have to go to fundamentals and repudiate Christ, an Asiatic! That settled the debate."

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, JANUARY 12, 1929.

LIVING INDIA.*

Miss Katherine Mayo's "Mother India" has been the precursor of several books in India and in America. Two of them are written by Americans who visited India and had far better opportunities of observing the conditions of the country than Miss Mayo. One of these is Mrs. Gertrude Williams' "Understanding India" which was noticed in the Reformer of the 1st December. The other is "Living India" by Mr. Savel Zimand who visited India in 1923-24 and was present on the scene when an Akali Jatha was stopped from entering Nabha territory. His description of the incident is both vivid and instructive. We reproduce a few sentences here:

The Jatha moved slowly. The British Administrator advanced to meet the Akalis and, according to official version, explained, that if they did not comply with his order he would be compelled to open fire. The Jatha kept on towards the shrine and fire was ordered. The firing was in regular volley, and without the desultory shots which would have followed had the Sikhs returned the fire. But the Jatha advanced again. They were ordered under arrest and submitted cheerfully. During the firing only three of the Akalis left the ranks of the Jatha and these only after they were wounded. The rest stood their ground. Two days later, I talked at the Amritsar hospital with the three who had left the Jatha, wounded. The bullets had been extracted, and as they lay on sick beds they expressed to me their sorrow at not being in Jail with their Jatha; better they had died, they thought, than to have separated from their fellows.

Mr. Zimand affirms as the result of his own personal observation that none of the Jatha carried any fire-arm, while the official report alleged that the Sikhs were armed. Mr. Zimand at the request of the authorities stated the facts as he knew them, and also mentioned them in an open letter to Mr. Gandhi. "Living India" is not a sensational book, but it is packed with facts carefully sifted, and is a reliable guide to the foreigner who is desirous of understanding present-day India in all its many phases.

The book is enriched by an introduction by "A. E." (Mr. George Russell) who knew Mr. Zimand when he was studying the conditions of Ireland in the dark days preceding the establishment of the Irish Free State. Mr. Russell says his own interest in India began forty years ago when he read the Upanishads, Bhagavadgita, the Buddhist Suttas and other sacred books. He did not, however, expect that the life of India would be as idealistic or mystic as the thought of its greatest sages. On the contrary, he observes:—

I was prepared rather to find that the Nation which had the loftiest spiritual imagination must have states of spiritual degradation balancing its highest vision, and this I think might be inferred from the Brahmanical psychology which opposes the Lokas to the Talas, the spiritual states of our being to the sensual states, and from which I infer that with every ascent to spirit a new abyss opens which is the dark opposite of the heaven into which the soul has climbed.

In plain language this means that the more a people plunge into metaphysics the less are they fitted to deal with the problems of practical life. Hence Buddha studiously eschewed metaphysical speculations. The Gita itself points out that the path of action is the proper corrective to the speculative-minded, and the path of contemplation to the energetic type of men. The foreign domination forces India to partake of the active life, and there is much truth in Mr. Russell's observation that it may prove to be the very cause of an Indian renaissance. "All cultures, however high," he writes, "tend to decay, and I doubt if there could be any resurrection unless one culture was crossed by another. China as well as India seems to be stirred at present by the crossing of their own culture with the thought and science of Europe. Their own culture probably is the Mendelian dominant and they will absorb into themselves the culture of Europe and renew with vigour their own spiritual and cultural life."

Mr. Russell illustrates his view by reference to Ireland. "My own country, Ireland," he writes "has had a renaissance in my own time, and I think it was due to the crossing of the original Gael with the Saxon, the Dane and the Norman. We came to a new intellectual life and at last could declare intellectual as well as political independence." Mr. Russell concludes on a note of hope. "I have no doubt," he writes, "out of the ferment in India will come a new renaissance. It is not natural to expect those fighting for that independence today should be philosophical as I looking at the struggle from a distance. I feel certain that in spite of the fact that India is in the trough of one of its waves of civilisation, there are in it the spiritual elements which will lead to a great resurrection. It may be the labour of a century or more, but I am inspired to believe that a people who had so marvellous a spiritual life in the past must have it quickened again once more under cyclic law." Contact with western civilisation has not killed out the Indian as it has the Red Indian, the African and the Australian. It has, on the other hand, stimulated dormant powers of assimilation and resistance. The biological analogy is only approximately true, but it is our faith too, as it is Mr. Russell's that a new and greater India is rising out of the present conflict of it

* Longmans Green & Co., New York, price 3 dollars.

THAT MEN MAY ALL BE BROTHERS.

MEDITATION FOR THE YEAR.

II. CHILDREN.

(DR. CLIFFORD MANSHARDT, Ph. D.)

The discovery of the child has been widely acclaimed as one of the greatest of modern discoveries. The child has always been with us, but it is only in recent years that men have given careful study to his nature and needs with the end in view of really knowing him. Under the influence of mediaeval theology the child was declared to be bad. The pendulum swung in the other direction and he was said to be naturally good. Today we see child nature as neither good nor bad, but as made up of tendencies capable of direction and development. The child at birth is a bundle of possibilities. What a responsibility is thus placed upon parents, teachers, and all who are interested in the welfare of children. To assist in bringing the innate capacities of a child to expression is a task large enough to call forth the finest abilities of any human.

The influence of the home upon the life of the child cannot be overestimated. It is not alone what parents say that shapes child character, it is also what they do, and the way in which they do it. As a famous educator has said, "The child grows to be that which his view of life tells him to be; and he must form that view on his parents' sayings and doings." The every-day influence of the home can counteract the teachings of a score of teachers. An indifferent attitude towards things that are sacred, a scoffing at law, malicious gossip, a disrespect for people of other castes, creeds, or races,—such an outlook in the home is the real cause for the appearance of such traits among our children. As a general principle the good man is the product of the good home—the home of character, understanding, and idealism. It is the homes of today that are determining the direction of society tomorrow.

The saying that the least shall be greatest and the last first is nowhere evidenced more clearly than in the home. The ruler of the home is not the father or mother, but the little child. It is the baby to whose every want the entire family will willingly respond. In a day when force and violence seem to be in world ascendancy it is well for us to have this corrective—to realise that love is the real conquering force that rules the heart of men. In the words of an eminent sociologist, it is love alone which is "an adequate motive for the mutual service and mutual sacrifice which our human world needs for its redemption." And the school of love is in the home.

To idealists, the child stands forth clearly as the symbol of the new day. Wearied by disappointments, harassed by cares, stung by failures, and bent by defeats, the idealist can still face the world with equanimity because of his faith in the child. Fresh young life means hope, energy, and new enthusiasm. It is through the child that society renews its ideals, and through renewing its ideals makes progress.

THE EVIL OF DOWERY.

PROBLEM BEFORE THE YOUTHS.

(BY MR. SHRIKRISHNA D. CHITALE.)

None can say how dowery first came into existence. However, as since the origin of human race, man has been a superior sex and the woman a weaker sex, it will not be incorrect to surmise that the fathers of the brides made it customary to offer gold or something in marriages to their bride-grooms as a token of appreciation and also with a desire that their daughters should be well treated in their new homes.

Dowery however, in our times has assumed a very ugly feature. The custom of the father of the bride offering something to the bride-groom has been turned into practice and made compulsory. Whether the father of the bride has the capacity and a desire to pay Dowery or not the men on the other side force it on him. In most of the cases the fathers in addition to the penalty of parting their daughters have to pay this extra penalty for having given births to daughters.

Many corrupt practices existing in our society have brought it nearly to a ruin. Among the many evils that exist to-day, Dowery is not less important. It brings financial ruin to a man who unfortunately happens to be the father of a large number of daughters. The men who receive it are bribed and therefore become corrupt. True love, sense of equality and respect for each other have no place in a marriage which is largely influenced by Dowery. The result of such a marriage is that an ugly girl of a rich father enters into wed-lock with a nice looking and well educated young man. The man is not on good terms with his wife and there is unhappiness, misunderstanding and disregard for each other and each in his or her turn tries to find fault with the other. The parents who have brought about this sort of marriage do not care a jot whether the couple is happy and pulling on well. Their business is over the moment they get the amount-Dowery-in hand.

In recent years owing to economic poverty of the people and the costly college education which they have to give to their sons Dowery has completely corrupted the people. We often hear people saying to-day, that if a particular marriage is to come about, the father of the bride must pay the cost of education of the boy, plus a like amount as a future security till the boy begins to earn a decent sum. We often see that a settled marriage in which the boy and the girl prefer each other and the most other important points of family, habits, language, tradition etc. are agreed, is broken only because of the inability of the father of the bride to pay the penalty-Dowery. The whole atmosphere is surcharged with corruption, disrespect for the sacred institution of marriage and a desire to compete in Dowery. We are so much accustomed to it that we do not even think that there is before us a problem like Dowery which is eating into the very vitals of Society and requires a powerful remedy.

Unfortunately our young educated men have not given any consideration to this problem. They are themselves following in the foot-steps of their fathers like meek sheep and none has the courage to revolt against this corrupt practice. On the contrary, it will not be exaggeration to say that the evil of Dowery exists to a great extent in the educated society. As a practical proof in support of my argument I shall give here one or two concrete examples.

A certain gentleman of my community was in search of a well educated boy for his daughter. He met an I. C. S. a member of the heaven-born service and therefore a man of status. The marriage though settled from all important points could not come about till the unfortunate fellow agreed to part with Rs. 25,000 cash as Dowery. The father of the boy openly said that he could not sanction the marriage without the said amount in hand.

Another instance is of a gentleman whose son is a B. A. G. He openly tells people that without Rs. 4,000 in cash as Dowery his son shall never be married.

There are thousands of instances of this kind. Owing however to limited space it is impossible to give any more.

REMEDY, DUTY OF YOUNG MEN.

Just imagine how corrupt this sacred institution has become. Why young men do not revolt against this practice and tell their parents that Dowery shall have no place whatsoever in marriage? If this corrupt practice is to be wiped out of our society the remedy lies with the youths of both sexes, who have received western education. The corrupt forms as are prevailing to-day must be replaced by "Gandharva Vivaha" or love marriage. Men and women who understand the implications of marriage must come forward and tell their parents that it is they who are primarily concerned with their marriages and therefore in selecting their life's future associates their opinions must always prevail. This is nothing extra-ordinary or revolutionary but has a precedent. To attain this, social intercourse amongst men and women must be more free.

Let us all break the barriers of tradition and stamp this evil completely out of our society. Let us all work for it and make it a success.

Resolution on Marriage Age:—At the All-India Medical Conference held at Chittaranjan Hospital in Calcutta on 26th, 27th and 28th of December, under the Presidentship of Dr. G. V. Deshmukh of Bombay, the following resolution was passed:—This Conference resolves that in the interest of the child and the health of the mother the union between men under 20 years of age and women under 16 years of age is undesirable on scientific grounds.

INDIAN JOURNALISM AND ITS FUTURE.

It is a high honour you have done me by calling me to preside at this the First Indian Journalists' Conference and I thank you sincerely for it. It is fitting that this Conference would be inaugurated in Calcutta where Raja Ram Mohan Roy founded the first Indian journal devoted to the task of achieving spiritual, social and political freedom for the Indian nation. Not only that but Calcutta has produced some of our greatest journalists such as Kristo Das Pal, Narendra Nath Sen, Motilal Ghose and Surendranath Banerjee. These men have left behind them a high tradition which it is the duty of all Indian journalists to uphold. It is to me a great privilege to preside over the first Indian journalists' Conference held in Calcutta sanctified by so many great and inspiring associations.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and gentlemen, we have lost during the year that has just ended some distinguished members of our profession—Mr. Katuri Ranga Iyengar who raised the "Hindu" newspaper of Madras to its present high standard and Mr. Piyush Kanti Ghose whose quiet unostentatious work on the "Amrit Bazar Patrika" was of the highest order. Lala Lajpat Rai was lately known not so much as a journalist as a political leader. But he began life as a journalist and was all through his life connected in one way or another with journalism. At the time of his death he was editing the weekly "People". We pay our heart-felt tribute to the memories of these men who adorned our profession and whose deaths are a great loss to Indian journalism.

My connection with journalism is now nearly of 40 years' duration. During this period Indian journalism has developed enormously both in resources and in power. But I feel that our resources can be put to more effective use and our power employed to more purpose if Indian journalism was organised to a much greater extent than it is to day.

NEED OF RECOGNISING IT AS A DISTINCT PROFESSION.

The first thing to do is, in my opinion, for journalism to be recognised as a distinct profession like law and medicine and not a mere adjunct of political or communal propaganda. The education and training required to make a good journalist now-a-days is not less arduous or intense than to make a good lawyer or a doctor. For want of a professional standard many young men drift in and out of newspaper work as much to their own disadvantage as to the detriment of the profession.

QUALIFICATION OF A JOURNALIST.

Generally speaking, in my opinion a fairly good degree at a University is an indispensable qualification for the Indian journalist. He must have good health, regular habits, and must be a total abstainer from alcoholic drinks. This last condition is absolutely essential. I have known several brilliant journalistic careers wrecked by drink. It will be a great advantage if the young journalist till he gets well fixed up in the profession is free from the cares of family life.

Being the Presidential address of Mr. K. Natarajan at the First All-India Journalists' Conference held at Calcutta on New year's day.

These are general qualifications. Any one who has them after a period of apprenticeship may reasonably in course of time expect to rise to the highest positions in the profession. It is absolutely democratic and there is no communal or caste preference in it. The prizes are few, the risks are many, but I know of no profession which offers such opportunities of serving the public as journalism. It calls for the best brains and the brightest talents among our people and not as sometimes seems to be thought, for those who find themselves left out of the other professions.

THE STATUS OF JOURNALISM.

One of the things that this Conference may undertake to raise the status of journalism as a profession is to institute under the auspices of a central council a register of journalists who will be recognised as such throughout the country. The council will frame a few general rules of professional conduct, violation of which will entail removal from the register. On the other hand it will define the rights of the profession and protect individuals who are now left to shift for themselves from arbitrary treatment at the hands of employers. I am sure newspaper proprietors will welcome the institution of such a register.

SCHOOLS OF JOURNALISM.

There has been talk of the establishment of schools of journalism but I am old-fashioned enough to think that the best school of journalism is a newspaper office. The great feature of newspaper work which cannot be reproduced in a school is the stress and strain of getting into the available space within the inexorable limit of time the maximum quantity of reading matter arranged in the most attractive form.

Every well established newspaper can train up one or two young men of promise a year who may be absorbed subsequently in its own staff newspapers. This is already being done by some of our papers but it might be done more systematically.

I have laid stress on the personal standards of the journalist because at the present stage of Indian journalism they are, I think, the chief means whereby we can do most to obtain recognition of the profession. The difference in respect of province, language, interests and resources make any further suggestions difficult without collecting detailed information on all these points. This Conference can undertake a register of newspapers as well as journalists with a view to formulating further plans for consolidating the position of journalism in the national life.

NEEDLESS SEVERITY OF THE LAW IN INDIA.

One of the great difficulties in the way of Indian journalists and journalism is the uncertainty of the law relating to offences. There was a recent instance in Calcutta of a newspaper having to face a protracted ordeal in the Courts. The newspaper in this case came out successful but, entirely apart from the merits of the case, it is by no means certain whether a newspaper in a similar case would have the same good fortune in all courts in all parts of the country. Newspapers ought to have more protection than at present for mistakes made in good faith. Newspapers perform a necessary public duty and they should not be penalised except where deliberate malice or gross carelessness can be established against them.

A conspicuous instance of the needless severity of the law, is the Princes' Protection Act which was passed some years ago against the advice of some of the wisest Princes. The law has been on the statute book but not a single prosecution has been launched under it. Not that there is no objectionable writings which could be proceeded against under the Acts but no Prince has cared to avail himself of its provisions. The law is a dead letter but responsible journalists have to refuse, just because it is in the Statute Book and may be evoked at any time, to decline publication of the legitimate grievances of Indian States subjects. I think nobody would be, any the worse if the Act is repealed and I am inclined to think that even those Princes who supported it will not be sorry to see it repealed.

THE NEW BILL ON THE ANVIL.

There is another bill in contemplation by the Government of India similar to the Princes' Protection Bill which is likely to have a similar destiny. So far as I know there are very few instances of Indian journalists attacking friendly foreign powers. On the contrary the general attitude of the Indian Press is one of goodwill towards foreign nations and if there has been in the past one or two departures from this rule it is too much to enact a law to put down such writings.

There is one other matter to which I shall refer before I conclude. The way in which Sir John Simon has treated the Free Press for publishing what he holds to be confidential information has rightly evoked strong protest from all sections of the press. Sir John has further instituted a sort of censorship of all news relating to the Commission's proceedings as the condition of being allowed to report them. The editor of the Free Press declined to report the proceedings under such a condition and newspapers which depended on the Free Press have had either to make other arrangements or to cease to publish the Commission's proceedings.

This Conference will no doubt enter an emphatic protest against the action of Sir John Simon in this matter.

ALL-INDIA WOMEN'S CONFERENCE.

RANI OF MANDI'S ADDRESS.

Her Highness the Dowager Rani Lalit Kumari Sahiba who presided at the third All-India Women's Conference on Educational Reform, Patna, on the 3rd instant, delivered the following speech on the occasion:—

My first duty is to convey my cordial thanks to the organisers of this Conference for the honour they have done me in inviting me to preside over the deliberations of this session. Conscious of my numerous limitations, it is with considerable hesitation that I enter upon the serious responsibilities of this office, adorned in the past by such distinguished leaders of India's womanhood as her Highness the Maharani Gaekwar of Baroda and her Highness the Begum Saheba of Bhopal. I cannot hope to equal them in their great abilities and splendid record of service for the cause of India's women; I can only claim that my enthusiasm for the advancement of our sisters is perhaps not less keen and it is the desire to have some humble share in this great work that has given me the courage to appear before this large assembly today, Meeting in the city of Patna, it is impossible not to feel inspired by the memories of ancient Pataliputra, associated with the great traditions of Ashoka and Chandragupta who reigned at this capital and under whose benign sway, India saw some of the most glorious days of her history. India's daughters were not "cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd" in those spacious days of the past, but they marched onward hand in hand with men, in the spirit of true comradeship and were known to have distinguished themselves. They were not immured in the zenana; they were not burdened with the cares of family life even when they had not passed childhood; there were no limits set to their intellectual ambitions and they enjoyed a measure of social freedom which is in refreshing contrast to the fate of their descendants today. Meeting at such a sacred site, it would be eminently fitting for us to make a solemn determination to endeavour to revive these conditions and even work up to a greater future by organising our efforts recorded in annual conferences of this kind.

APPALLING ILLITERACY.

It is a feeling of intense depression that comes over any one who has occasion to examine the present extent of the illiteracy of women in India, the wiping off of which is one of the important aims of our organisation. Nothing can be a matter of sadder reflection to us than the fact that, according to the latest official statistics, only about twenty-one out of every thousand women in India are literate, while in the advanced civilised countries of to-day, not only in Western lands, but also in Japan, practically every woman is literate. The figures receive even more poignant interest when we realise that the test of literacy applied by the census is of a very rudimentary kind indeed, being mere capacity to write a letter and read one written by others. The needs of intelligent life in any sphere of national activity cannot, of course, be met by satisfying this elementary test of education, though it seems too early to complain about standards when the bulk of women are immersed in ignorance and darkness, unable even to spell the alphabet,

If the actual achievement regarding literacy is so depressing even the figures relating to the efforts for its further spread are not more encouraging. According to the report on Indian Education for 1925-'26, issued by the Government of India, the percentage of girls under instruction to the total population of women in the country is only 13. Fifteen per cent. of the total population is usually considered to belong to the school-going age, which means that out of every fifteen girls who ought to be at school in India, only about one has been brought within the four walls of an elementary school of some kind or other. The percentage of girls at school has increased very slowly indeed. It was '09 in 1916 and after ten years it has increased only to 1.31. No elaborate mathematical calculation is necessary to find out how many decades it will take at this rate of progress, of 4 per cent. in ten years, to cover the entire school-going population and bring it within the benefits of literacy.

The immensity of the problem before us will be realised even more vividly, when we find that the completion of the programme for bringing the entire population of school-going age within our schools does not solve the problem of the illiteracy of India's women. Another generation will have to pass after all these decades, before every woman in India can read and write, an achievement which must not be considered Utopian at all, in view of what has actually been accomplished in many of the advanced countries, of today. Here is work enough for us, to occupy all our attention and energies for the future, as far as our imagination could stretch, and let us resolve today to apply ourselves to this mighty task, in a spirit of the deepest devotion which we can command.

DRASTIC STEPS NEEDED.

It is time that something drastic was done to remedy this state of affairs and our reports regarding the education of girls come out with figures of striking progress and not with mere explanations for the absence of adequate achievement. The recent report of the Royal Commission on Agriculture in India lays its finger on this great weakness of our national life and pleads powerfully for its eradication, before any progress can be achieved. The members recommend compulsion in elementary education as the only remedy, but what is even of greater interest to us, they urge special attention to the education of women because, as they observe rightly: 'The value to the community of the education of its women lies particularly in its effect upon the spread of lasting literacy among the young.' They make the interesting suggestion that steps should be taken fully to record the educational history and subsequent development of children of typical cultivating families in which the mother is literate, while like particulars of illiterate homes in the same neighbourhood and conditions of life should be tabulated for the purpose of comparison with their more fortunate neighbours. The result of such an enquiry is likely to prove very useful, according to the members of the Commission, for the purposes of propaganda, because it will show a markedly strong tendency on the part of the literate parents both to send the children to the school and to keep them there till literacy, which the mother has come to value, has been fairly achieved. It is therefore recommended that a definite effort should be made to impart literacy to 'a certain number of young mothers selected where conditions are most suitable and where similar experiments have not been tried before.' It is hoped that when action is taken on this monumental report by the Government of India and the provincial Governments, this important aspect of its recommendations will not be forgotten.

The inertia of conservatism and prejudice reinforced by the pardah system and the custom of early marriage, the lack of qualified teachers, the difficulty of making arrangements which will be considered satisfactory by the parents for the transit of girls to and from schools and the difficulty of providing suitable accommodation for women teachers in the smaller villages—such is the comprehensive list of the formidable obstacles in the way of the progress of women's education in the country, according to the members of the Commission. They however continue to observe: 'There are indications that a change in the general attitude towards female education has set in. A valuable stimulus is coming from women themselves. Though it will probably be long before this is powerful enough to make itself felt throughout the country as a whole, it is impossible to read the proceedings of the All-India Women's Conferences on educational reform without realising the greatness of the possibilities in this direction.' Let us justify the hopes which have been raised in the minds of the possibilities in this direction.' Let us justify the hopes which have been raised in the minds of the public by this new organisation and live up to the high expectations entertained of us.

THE RIGHT WAY TO EDUCATE A GIRL.

Valuable suggestions have been made, from time to time, at our Conferences for the improvement of the kind of education imparted to our girls. It may at first sight seem somewhat unnecessary to trouble ourselves with details regarding educational reform, when even the rudiments of literacy have not been achieved. But it is obviously necessary that educational progress should be on sound lines from the very beginning, even as right foundations are necessary for every good and stable structure. It is doubtful, for instance, if there has been as yet any adequate realisation in this country of the right pedagogic principles underlying the education of children, particularly of girls whose delicate susceptibilities require even more careful attention than those of boys.

These principles are beautifully summed up in a passage in the Crime of Sylvestre Bonnard by the famous European novelist, Anatole France: 'It is only by amusing oneself that one can learn', he writes. 'The whole art of teaching is only the art of awakening the natural curiosity of young minds for the purpose of satisfying it afterwards; and curiosity itself can be vivid and wholesome only in proportion as the mind is contented and happy. Those acquirements crammed by force into the minds of children simply clog and stifle intelligence. In order that knowledge be properly digested, it must have been swallowed with a good appetite. I know Jeanne! If that child were entrusted to my care, I should make of her—not a learned woman, for I would look to her future happiness only—but a child full of bright intelligence and full of life, in whom everything beautiful in art or nature would awaken some gentle responsive thrill. I would teach her to live in sympathy with all that is beautiful—comely landscapes, the ideal scenes of poetry and history, the emotional charm of noble music. I would make lovable to her everything I would wish her to love. Even her needlework I would make pleasurable to her, by a proper choice of the fabrics, the style of embroideries, the designs of lace. I would give her a beautiful dog, and a pony to teach her how to manage animals; I would give her birds to take care of, so that she could learn the value of even a drop of water and a crumb of bread. And in order that she would have a still higher pleasure, I would train her to find delight in exercising charity. And inasmuch as none of us may escape pain, I should teach her that Christian wisdom which elevates us above all suffering, and gives a beauty even to grief itself. That is my idea of the right way to educate a young girl.' These words of wisdom, one may observe in passing, are only an echo of what was preached by Rousseau and in more recent years by Ruskin. Without entering into any detailed criticism of our present educational system, let me content myself with the question: 'to what extent are these ideals satisfied in the girls' schools of India to-day?'

It must be a matter of satisfaction to all of us that something has been made within the last two or three years, by a few of the universities and other educational authorities in India in diversifying their syllabuses and courses, so as to make provision for what may be considered to be the special needs of women who usually look forward to the privilege of marriage and motherhood and to the duties of beautifying homes over which they will have the honour of presiding. The recent introduction of domestic science, painting and music into educational courses among the optional subjects which girls may take up at college is a step in the right direction.

But let us not be unmindful of the fact that much diversification is not possible and even desirable in the higher stages of instruction. The highest culture and enlightenment should be the birth-right of women as well as of men and let us not be satisfied with the mid-Victorian ideal enunciated by Tennyson in his In Memoriam.

'She knows but matters of the house,
'And he, he knows a thousand things'

Women benefit by the highest education as much as men and it is a narrow view indeed which seeks to fit woman only for the needs of motherhood and domestic life, though it is not argued on parallel lines that man's education should be ordered so as to make him primarily a good father and a good husband. The Rt. Hon. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, speaking some time back, refuted this narrow conception of women's education, when he said he viewed with increasing satisfaction the desire of young women to obtain university distinction, to learn science or mathematics, or to stand the same test as their brothers and cousins of the other sex stood, or wanted to stand. He for one had no sort of misgiving as to the direction in which women's education was moving in India and he viewed it with complete confidence. He warned his hearers not to think that it would be enough to give their young women a little of education, little of music. On the other hand, man and woman, he said, had to advance together not only in the direction of family life but in all directions in which human endeavour has to be made for the further progress of our race.

SOCIAL REFORM.

As has been recognised on all hands the question of the educational progress of the women of India is bound up intimately with the improvement of our social conditions. The best of our educational programmes must come to naught and all of our resolutions at conferences must be futile, if women cannot come out of the purdah and have the benefits of even God's light and air; if little girls continue to be hustled into marriage even before they have reached their teens and laid the foundations of the most rudimentary education and women are to be handicapped as at present, by disabilities of various kinds preventing them from reaching the full heights of knowledge and experience of which they are capable. It must, therefore, be the endeavour of these conferences to remove these social obstacles also, at least in so far as they stand in the way of the spread of education.

It is time that the justice of the equality of opportunities for both sexes was enunciated in no uncertain language and its recognition enforced in all directions in this country. This great principle was acknowledged in no indefinite terms by our great ancestors and I may refer to an episode in the history of Buddhism which happened in this very neighbourhood, at Vaisali beyond the Ganges, in the very life-time of the great Buddha himself. When the Lord Buddha was sojourning at Vaisali, in the fifth year after his enlightenment, a lady, Mahaprajavati by name, wanted to enter the monastic order, but had been refused admission on the ground of her being a woman, though nobody questioned her fitness on any other ground. She, however, insisted on her being admitted to the privilege and when she arrived at the gates of the Pinnacled Hall (the Kutagerasala) where the Lord was staying, having cut off her hair, put on the yellow robe, with swollen feet and covered with dust and followed by another Sākya woman who had shared the toils of the long journey with her, the disciple Ananda could not bear to see her weeping and pleaded her cause to the Master. Ananda asked if a woman who had gone forth from the house to a houseless life in the doctrine and discipline declared by the teacher, was capable of realising the arhatship. 'A woman is capable, Ananda,' said the Lord and on being informed of Mahaprajavati's appeal, he said that if she was willing to take upon herself the eight Strict Rules of the Order, 'let this be her ordination'. And thus at Vaisali there began the declaration by Buddhadeva of equality between man and woman in their fitness for the highest spiritual life. I am only asking for the application of the same principle to every aspect of our daily life.

A recognition of this fundamental equality, the removal of our numerous social disabilities, and, above all, unremitting attention on our part to the cause of our educational advancement—these should lead to a new era of development in our history without which our beloved Motherland can never hope to take her rightful place among the civilized nations of the world. Let me conclude with the hope that this Conference may mark at least a single milestone along that long road of effort and achievement, and let me also repeat on behalf of all the women of India whose representatives are assembled here this morning, the ancient Indian prayer from the Upanishads.

'Lead me from Error into Truth,
'From Darkness into Light,
'And from Death into Immortality.'

RESOLUTIONS.

The All-India Women's Conference on Educational Reform held its session on January 4 at the Rodhika Sinha Institute, the Dowager Rani of Mandi presiding.

The Conference adopted resolutions put from the chair expressing regret at the death of Lala Lajpat Rai and Mr. S. R. Das and placing on record the services of the former to the country and to the women's cause.

A resolution moved by Mrs. Engler (Hyderabad) for making provision for Kindergarten, Montessori and similar classes in every institution for young children was passed.

Another resolution moved by Miss Engineer (Bombay) for the establishment of industrial homes for women provided an interesting discussion. The mover observed that the unemployment question was becoming very acute and if they started industrial homes where industries suited to local requirements could be taught they would be conferring a great boon on poor women by helping them to become self-supporting without losing their sense of self-respect,

She referred to the useful work which the Bombay Seva Sadan was doing in this direction.

Mrs. Shukla (Oudh), Mrs. Pillai (Hyderabad), Mrs. Faridunji and Mrs. Maya Das (Agra) supporting the resolution, said it would solve the poverty problem and make women economically independent.

GOVERNMENT HELP.

Mrs. Miles Irving (Punjab) moved an amendment that the Provincial Governments be asked to give sufficient grants to run such institutions in an effective manner. The resolution as amended was carried.

The Conference called upon the Government to withdraw its grant from any educational institution which refused to receive pupils of any particular community.

Another resolution condemned the custom of allowing immature girls to become wives and mothers as it robbed them of their right to education and freedom and arrested their mental, moral and physical growth. It demanded that the age of marriage be fixed at 18 years for girls and 21 for boys and supported Mr. Sarda's Bill and asked the Assembly to bring this Bill in line with the demand of the Conference.

The delegates were entertained at a garden party by Mrs. Durga Prasad.

A very animated discussion centred round the resolution for widening the scope of its activities and including social matters also in its programme of work at Patna on January 5th session of the All-India Women's Conference on Educational Reform. Divergent views were expressed and the discussion took an excited turn.

Mrs. Kamaladevi Chattopadhyaya formally moved a resolution that in consideration of the widespread interest in the women of India and all questions affecting their welfare the conference should widen its scope without changing its policy and tackle all such matters. Mrs. Faridunji moved an amendment suggesting a division of social and educational questions between two sectional committees, working under the guidance of a parent standing committee. She made it clear that she was absolutely opposed to any change in the original constitution of the conference. But educational and social questions so much overlapped that there was a great need for tackling properly such all-India questions. For educational work they should not be content with only passing resolutions but practical work was needed. To carry on proper educational work both sections should work side by side for educational and social reforms.

Mrs. Engler, supporting the amendment, said that two sets of problems were exercising their minds, social and educational. Without certain social changes, it was impossible to educate the girls. If they were to forward the cause they had at heart they must concentrate on all problems. If they worked on this basis they would be able to attain a fuller and richer life and the progress would be faster.

Mrs. Brijlal Nehru pointed out that social problems were of paramount importance and both educational and social sections would work together and bring about the emancipation of their sex.

A group of delegates led by Miss Laxmikutti Amma and Mrs. Saraladevi Chaudharani strongly opposed the resolution and moved another amendment suggesting that the conference should restrict its activities only to educational matters. They held the view that the conference by adopting the resolution, would be striking at the root of its ideal of education which could alone remove all social evils.

Mrs. Pillay, (Hyderabad), opposing the resolution, moved another amendment suggesting that all constituent committees be consulted on the matter before a change was effected as widening the scope of the conference meant a change of policy.

Mrs. Maya Das (Cawnpore) made an impressive speech. She pointed out that social reform could not be separated from education. The purpose of education was to make them good citizens and remove all social evils.

There was a great confusion and uproar when the amendments were put to the vote. It took some time to restore order and count votes. Mrs. Faridunji's amendment after being accepted by the mover of the original resolution was carried by a large majority and other amendments were defeated.

The conference adopted two other resolutions for opening centres for special courses to train teachers for rural areas and promoting better understanding and cooperation between parents and teachers.

MESSAGE FROM MRS. SUN-YAT-SEN.

Mrs. Sun-Yat-Sen sent the following message from Berlin to the women of India:—

'I send you greetings from the women, who in spite of the counter-revolution and the falseness of the leaders, are helping in the work of freeing China from the deadweight of the feudal customs and ways and from the grip of British and other alien imperialism. Like the women of China you belong to an ancient society in whose public life, women, who comprise one-half of the entire population, must take their place and work with men for the regeneration of their country on the basis of independence and liberation from the yoke of British imperialism.

The All India Women's Conference on educational reform concluded its session to-day. The Conference discussed the important question of its constitution and declared that its policy would be not to engage in party politics but to unite on all points affecting women and children. Its object was to promote education of both sexes in India and to deal with questions concerning women and children. The Conference accepted the invitation, of Miss Bahadurji to hold the next session of the Conference at Bombay. The future programme of the Conference will now be divided into two sections educational and social reform as chalked out by the Standing Committee. Mrs. Kamala Chattopadhyaya has been re-elected Organising Secretary.

RANI OF MANDI'S GIFT.

Her Highness the Rani of Mandi, the President of the Conference, has donated Rs. 1,000 to the funds of the Conference. The Conference also adopted resolutions regretting that while other provinces enjoyed women's Franchise Bihar had not yet secured it and urged the members of the Legislative Council to remove the sex dis-qualification forthwith.

WOMEN WORKERS.

Realising the extreme necessity of making provision for the mental and moral well-being of the women industrial workers the Conference appealed to Government to appoint a committee, including women, to enquire into the sanitary, hygienic and economic conditions under which women worked and laid strong emphasis on the prohibition of female labour in underground mines.

A DEPUTATION.

A deputation of the All-India Women's Conference on educational reform led by Mrs. Kamaladevi Chattopadhyaya and Mrs. P. K. Sen waited on the Age of Consent Committee. The members of the deputation extended support to Dr. Gour's Age of Consent Committee Bill and pleaded for the raising of the Age of Consent in the case of married and unmarried girls to 16 and 18 respectively. They favoured legislation fixing the minimum age of marriage in the case of girls at 16 and boys at 21. They stated that women felt strongly on the question of child marriage and advocated the penalising of early marriages. In their opinion early marriages were the main cause of infantile mortality. In case of a breach of the marriage law they gave the right of complaint to social reform organisations. They also favoured registration of marriages. They subscribed to the suggestion for prohibiting admission of married boys in high schools and for matriculation examination in the future.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The Perennial Silver Screen:—GROWTH OF THE ART IN JAPAN—Japan is the second largest investor in the film business to the amount of 120,000,000 yen. Moving pictures were first imported here in 1883. Admission fees ranging from one to three yen a person were charged for exhibition at the Kanda, Tokyo, and, despite the extortionate charges for those days, the hall drew a full house. One reel measured only a few hundred feet and the same picture was exhibited again and again. After going through a primitive stage, the movie business has developed into a well supported state. Home-made films have begun to be received enthusiastically and imported films have declined in popularity since a few years ago. The average admission fee is 30 yen (15 cents) a person in most Japanese theaters..... Adults admitted into all movie halls in Japan last year numbered 117,867,346 and children, 46,717,371. Of all movie halls in Japan, numbering 1,172 for 1927, 577 exhibited films of pure Japanese production, 39 imported films and the remaining halls mixed ones. (The Trans-Pacific, Tokyo, October 27, 1928.)

Christmas at Ramkrishna Ashram:—The Christmas festival was observed at the Ramkrishna Ashram, Rajkot, on the 25th of December. The public celebration came off on Sunday the 30th December, when the Portraits of Madonna and Jesus were very tastefully decorated with flowers and festoons, the incense burning and the very atmosphere was surcharged with peace and quietness. Brahmachari Maharaj spoke in Hindi about the life of Christ and Mr. Uddhavji Bhai, the secretary of the Lohana Boarding House dwelt at length on His Teachings, quoting side by side from Hindoo Scriptures, which with his remarks, were very highly appreciated when he concluded saying that in the Life of Jesus nothing Occidental is to be found, on the contrary one will find much of Oriental thoughts and ideals in His life and Teachings. Last of all Mr. Harishankar Pandya, Vakil, spoke feelingly about His Love and Self-Sacrifice, the two great traits of His life that every individual can aspire for. After distribution of Prasadam the meeting dispersed.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. a. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukkerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isable Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
 Royapuram, Madras.

THE
Central Bank of India Ltd.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	" 1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	" 1,00,00,000

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches:—(1) Mandvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Rehman Street.

Mofussil Branches:—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharis, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Asansol, Chandausi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jamnagar.

London Agents:—The Midland Bank, Ltd.

New York Agents:—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents:—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts:—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

WANTED.

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Masters' Classes. Full particulars and Railway Fare Certificate on 2 annas stamp. Apply to:—Imperial Telegraph College, Delhi.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by :

KESARI KUTEERAM,
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondaicha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Targaon (" ").	Maiegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulla (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :--BARODA.

Branches :--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwarka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs.	a.	p.
Subscription (including postage).
Inland ...	5	0	0
Foreign ...	5	8	0
Single copy ...	0	8	0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Barma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26.

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

SPECIAL OFFER

Dharamsi Morarji

Woollen Suitings to be Cleared at Exceptionally Low Factory Prices
54" Wide from Rs. 2/8 per yard.

GRASP THIS OPPORTUNITY.

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.

Cruikshank Road, Fort,

Premier
Swadeshi
Emporium.

The Cheapest
House.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.
Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS (Agencies), Ltd.,
16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,
General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
(A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

- EYE DISEASES... .. Try "Akhyacura."
- RING WORM Try "Kurain."
- ASTHMA Try "Asthma Cure."
- STRENGTH Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil."
- TONICS Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills."
"Parrish's Chemical Food."
"Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo-phosphites of Lime."
- GONORRHŒA Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C.
Copaiba Cum Buchu."

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :-

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Saturday at 9-30 P.M.

and

Sunday at 5-30 P.M.

R. B. SALISBURY

presents

" THE GIRL FRIEND "THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Time :—3, 8-15 and 9-45 P. M.

Pathe Gazette No. 1553-54 (Gazette to be shown in the last show only.)

KING OF KINGS

Reels 18,

Cecil DeMille's Production

By

JAMES McPHERSONTHE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Time :—4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

Pathe Super Gazette No. 1563-4.

THE TEMPTRESS

9 Reels, featuring

ANTONIO MORENO & GRETA GARBO

A Metro Goldwyn Picture

EMPRESS CINEMA

Time :— 3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

MADYN'S WEEKLY REVIEW No. 79.

MY BEST GIRL

9 Reels, featuring

MARY PICKFORD

(United Artistes Picture)

Extra Morning Show every Sunday at Empress and Edward at 10 A.M.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1929

No. 21

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Problem of the States. The Salvation Army. Mahatma Gandhi and Dr. Besant. Ban on Married Students. Prohibition? A Practical Demonstration. The Matunga Rescue Home. King Amanullah's Abdication.	That Men May all be Brothers. Cosmopolitanism—The need of the Hour. The Shraddhanand Anath Mahila Ashram. The Shinwari Demands. Age of Consent Inquiry. News of the Week.
---	--

NOTES.

The Problem of the States:—The address which Sir M. Visvesvaraya delivered as President of the South Indian States' People's Conference held at Trivandrum on Monday, is a lucid, dispassionate and comprehensive review of the problem of Indian federation. The States and the Provinces of British India in order to form units of the Federation, should have approximately identical forms of administration. The States obviously must continue to be under their hereditary rulers, but these should not continue to be autocratic but must become constitutional sovereigns with ministers responsible to representative Legislatures. The Provinces similarly will become responsible and autonomous, and States and Provinces together must be represented in the Central Government. This plan involves the parting with certain powers on the part of the ruling Princes to their Legislatures and certain other powers to the Central Government in the interests of the country as a whole. Sir Visvesvaraya holds that this is inevitable and that even if the Princes do not fall in with the scheme today they will have to do so before many years. Meanwhile, he urges that the British Government should explicitly declare their intention to confer Dominion status on India, and appoint immediately another Commission consisting largely of Indians to visit the Dominions with a view to study their systems and their adoption in India within a period of five years. The extensive administrative experience of Sir Visvesvaraya gained in many spheres and his first-hand knowledge of the working of self-government in Europe and America, combined with a cool head and calm judgment, make his address a very valuable contribution to Indian political discussion. It is important to note that he endorses the Nehru report as a just and fair presentation of Indian requirements.

The Salvation Army:—The Salvation Army is in the throes of a great crisis. Founded fifty years ago, it has developed into a world organisation, with large administrative responsibilities. It was not deliberately established on the plan of the Society of Jesus, but it has a certain general resemblance to it, though the differences are more fundamental. The idea of a General at the head with supreme powers, is common to both organizations. The present crisis has arisen over the position of the head of the Salvation Army. General Bramwell Booth was born in March 1856 and succeeded his father, with whom he was closely associated in the work of the Army, when he died in 1912. The General is thus 72 years old and has been at the head of the Salvation Army for 16 years. His father lived to the age of 83 years and was in supreme control of the affairs of the Army till his death. General Bramwell Booth, therefore, cannot be held to be disqualified by his age to continue to be the chief of the Army. He seems to have been in poor health for some time past and had deputed one of his senior officers to look after his work during his ill-health. Recently, a meeting of what is called the High Council of the Army was convened to consider the question whether General Booth should continue to be the head of the Army or whether he should be requested to retire, in which case a successor would have to be chosen. The General in reply to a resolution of the Council requesting him to relinquish his post, has refused, and the High Council finds itself in a difficult position. The opinions of lawyers have been taken and they seem to be on the General's side, and protracted litigation is expected should the General be sought to be deposed by a vote of the Council. The effect of such litigation on the spiritual influence of the Army cannot be beneficial.

Mahatma Gandhi and Dr. Besant:—New India writes:—

"The Social Reformer scolds Dr. Besant because she has made "a personal onslaught on Mahatmaji". Should Dr. Besant scold Mr. Natarajan because he has made "a personal onslaught" on herself? Dr. Besant has been in antagonism to Mr. Gandhi's policy since he first advocated Civil Disobedience and Non-payment of taxes, and made his followers so bitterly intolerant that they broke up meetings where his policy was opposed. If criticism of a policy is not to be allowed because people call a man a "Mahatma," and are afraid to oppose him, although he has made, as he confesses, a "Himalayan blunder," the fewer "Mahatmas" we have in politics the better. Mr. Gandhi is a first-rate social reformer, as Dr. Besant has often said, but he is not a politician. Naturally, as he dominated the Congress, he has turned it into a Social Reform League and has stopped its political work. He has also had the All-Parties' Conference held up sine die, but we doubt if that body will be as submissive as the Congress. Fortunately, the Liberal Federation played a leading part throughout the year in the Conference, and stands to its political guns, despite Mr. Gandhi."

We have re-read our paragraph referred to in this comment and we are unable to find any word in it which could be construed into an "onslaught" on Dr. Besant for whose work on behalf of India, on the contrary, we expressed our high appreciation. We did not take exception to Dr. Besant's opposition to the non-co-operation movement. We ourselves are no supporters of it. What we had particularly in mind is her invoking Gokhale in confirmation of her own opinion that Mahatma Gandhi's was a destructive influence. Dr. Besant says Mahatmaji is a first-rate social reformer. A social reformer cannot be a destructive influence. It is a contradiction in terms to speak of social reform as destructive. We profoundly disagree with Dr. Besant when she makes a distinction between social reform and politics. Politics divorced from social reform is a shadow without substance. We have always maintained that the method which has succeeded in social reform—the method of patient, persistent and unruffled endeavour to bring light where there is darkness—is the only method which will succeed in politics. If Mahatma Gandhi has changed the Congress into a Social Reform League, it is all to the good and we only hope that the change will be lasting. We have much respect for Dr. Besant and we assure her we had not the least intention of making an "onslaught" on her. All those who work for India have ample room to do so without treading on one another's toes.

Ban on Married Students:—At the conclusion of the Women's Education Conference, a deputation of ladies waited on the Age of Consent Committee and impressed on them the need for raising the marriage age of girls and boys to 16 and 21 respectively. As a penalty, they suggested that boys married before that age should be refused admission to High Schools and prohibited from appearing for the Matriculation examination. We are afraid the deputationists' zeal for marriage reform has outrun their discretion. They must be aware of the fact that marriage in Hindu society is determined by parents and to penalise the boy students for the sins of their parents is to revert to the discarded old dispensation. When equality of the sexes formed the key-note of the Conference, why have the ladies singled out only one party to the marriage for the penalty to the exclusion of the other? In education lies the reformer's hopes. A student married early, if allowed to prosecute his studies, is a probable recruit to the cause of reform, whereas if he is denied education he will be an inveterate opponent. The U. P. Government, we learn, have sanctioned the rule that no male married candidate except those married before 1st July 1929 or who are at the time of marriage not less than 18 years of age shall be admitted to the High School examination after 1930. The result of this rule will be watched with much interest. This was one of the reforms which caused the violent reaction against King Amanullah as will be seen from the list of Shinwari demands published in this issue.

Prohibition?—In the provinces of Bombay and Madras Government have adopted a policy of prohibition in twenty years. It is interesting to see what steps have been taken in both places in pursuance of this policy. The Government of Bombay have recently published a bill to extend to the whole Presidency the mhowra flowers provisions of the Abkari Act. The proposed legislation aims at discouraging the use of mhowra flowers for illicit distillation among the bhils. In the past it has been opposed on the ground that the flowers were used by the poorer classes as food for themselves and fodder for their cattle. Inquiries made by Government have revealed that the flowers are not a staple food but are only used as a relish and they are only given as a tonic to cattle, and these uses will not be affected by the bill. In districts which do not grow the flowers, the Bill will be in force for the whole year but in mhowra-growing districts it will be suspended for five months in the year. There is nothing to prevent illicit distillation during those five months unless—and this will remove the need for suspending the bill—the mhowra does not flower during that period. The position is not improved by the fact that "the Government distilleries are finding the utmost difficulty in securing an adequate supply from local sources and that owing to the activities of illicit distillers its price has become prohibitive." It is ridiculous to claim that the Bill which is intended to regulate the traffic in mhowra flowers is a piece of temperance legislation. It is surprising that nothing is done in the industrial towns when it is notorious that the drink evil is worst in the mill area. In Madras the Excise Minister in addressing a public gathering expressed some original ideas on Prohibition. He said that the fact that the Excise department was to conduct prohibition propaganda might look contradictory, but it was not so. The Government put a ban on drink, but if the people wanted drink they should pay for it. In other words the tax on liquor is a fine which, unlike other fines, has to be paid before committing the offence.

A Practical Demonstration:—We learn from the Mahabodhi, Calcutta, that Sir Ofori Alta had been urging, during his visit to England, that the importation of Dutch gin into the Gold Coast should be stopped in the interests of the natives of Africa. On his departure from England he was presented with a case of gin, the donors apparently believing that his objection was not to gin but to Dutch gin. Sir Ofori who carried the case with him to the Gold Coast, relates in a letter what happened to the present. When his spokesman gave a description of his tour the proceedings were concluded by the pouring out on the ground of the contents of the twelve bottles!

The Matunga Rescue Home:—We publish elsewhere an appeal issued on behalf of the Shradhanand Anath Mahila Ashram by the Managing Committee. The Rescue Home, as is shown in the article, is doing social work in the city, the importance of which cannot be exaggerated, and it has been steadily widening its scope. We are sure that the public will extend their help and sympathy to this deserving institution.

MANAGER'S NOTICE.

Reminder cards are being sent out to those readers whose subscriptions have lapsed into arrears and to those whose subscriptions are due for the current year. Subscribers are requested to remit the amounts due without delay as our financial year is drawing to a close.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, JANUARY 19, 1929.

KING AMANULLAH'S ABDICATION.

On Tuesday the world learnt with deep regret that King Amanullah had been obliged to withdraw the reforms which he had instituted, that he had abdicated in favour of his elder brother, and had departed from Kabul to Kandahar by an aeroplane. The concessions made include the withdrawal of the girls who had been sent to foreign countries for medical education, the re-introduction of strict purdah regulations, prohibition of European dress to women, freedom of school boys to marry, punishment of persons drinking liquor, the restoration of the power of the mullahs, and the conformity of the king and his family to Muslim usages. Shortly before his abdication King Amanullah addressing a gathering explained his objects in introducing the reforms. "I am not," said His Majesty "taking any kind of comfort or luxury. What I have done and what I intend to do is for the benefit, the advancement and progress of the country." Referring to Afghan girls who were recently sent to Turkey for medical education, his Majesty is reported to have said that had these girl students finished their course of studies, the public would have been saved the inconvenience of sending for foreign male or female doctors to attend to the female patients. Concluding his Majesty said, "If the public do not favour such a state of affairs and want to travel in the old path I have no objection and the girls will be called back." A few hours later, says a Free Press message, printed Posters and Hand-bills were distributed which among others contained the announcements that Supervisors will be appointed to report about the people neglecting prayers, that the girls schools will be closed if the public objected, that women are at liberty to observe or discard the Purdah, that people are at liberty to use European and Afghan dress as they like, and that an Assembly of Ullemas will be called to go through the current laws of Afghanistan in the light of the Mohammedan Law, that the restrictions on the Deoband Ullemas to enter Afghanistan are withdrawn, drinking is strictly prohibited and bribery will be discouraged, and Friday will be observed as a holiday, instead of Thursday. The announcement concluded with the declaration: "I (King) am a Muslim and true follower of the Prophet." There is every reason to believe the statement that the only reason for His Majesty's abdication was his desire to avoid further bloodshed.

There is no denying the fact that this means a serious set-back to the reform movement in Afghanistan. Its repercussion will be felt beyond the borders of that country and the reactionaries everywhere will be encouraged to stiffen their opposition to progress. But when analysed, it is easy to see that there is no need for progressivists to take a tragic view of this episode. The march of progress has for the moment been interrupted but it cannot be stopped and will be resumed with irresistible force at no distant date. The ideas which King Amanullah has sown will soon sprout and bear beneficent crop in due time. The King's experience has been that of every great reformer. But

Freedom's battle once begun
Bequeathed from bleeding sire to son
Tho' baffled oft, is ever won.

His Majesty's name will go down to posterity as that of a great ruler who, actuated by motives of the highest patriotism, risked his throne and his very life in order to place his country on the road to advancement. The most cruel demand made by the leaders of the revolt was that the Queen Souriya and her relatives should be banished from the country. The Queen's charm and personality produced a great effect in all the countries which their Majesties visited during their recent European tour. She has been no doubt the King's ardent and devoted councillor in the introduction of the reforms: This is evidently realised by the reactionaries, and hence their demand that she should be sent out of the country. The King has refused to accede to this arrogant condition. If he had submitted to it, he would have become the object of reprobation throughout the civilized world. It is a great pity that laxity in the matter of drink should have been one of the features of the reform programme, and we cannot wholly condemn a reaction which has, among many foolish things, restored the strict observance of the injunction of the Prophet against the vice.

It must be admitted that King Amanullah over-estimated the power of autocracy to introduce reforms of a far-reaching character among a people who were inveterately addicted to their old customs and prejudices. He had not the patience to wait till an educated class of Afghans had been created, which would have stood by him in his progressive measures. Some of the reforms, too, were of a superficial character, though they seem to have done most to set conservative opinion against the King. The compulsory introduction of European dress for men, and more especially the encouragement given to women to don European clothing, was an innovation which even in more advanced countries would have created discontent. If all Englishmen were obliged to wear dhoties, all Englishwomen saris, in India, there will be a "White revolt" notwithstanding the fact that the dhoti and sari have been acknowledged by many Europeans to be the most suitable dress for the country. The modern dress of European women to eyes not familiarised to its omissions seems to be a negation of decency, and its virtual imposition on women who have been accustomed for centuries to move about closely veiled, cannot but have shocked the sentiments of the Afghan masses. The Westernisation in the matter of externals of Afghan Society was not essential to modernise it, and, in any case, it should have been left to the people themselves should they find it desirable to adopt the dress most suitable to their tastes and avocations. Education is the main thing needed, and the adoption of a sound system of national education and the despatch every year of a large batch of Afghan youths to be educated abroad, would have brought about a radical and bloodless revolution in about a generation.

It is not for outsiders, however, to question the wisdom of King Amanullah in seeking to force the reforms on his people. He knows his countrymen best, and it is probable that he felt that something must be done by him at once, to bring home to his people the necessity of radical revolution in their life and outlook. As we remarked above, the ideas which he has sown will not die out in the land. For a few brief days, the men and women of Afghanistan have been privileged to live and enjoy the atmosphere of freedom from cramping customs. They will not forget it. The vision will haunt them and will not let them rest in peace until they have done something, each in his own way, to recapture it permanently for himself and for his nation. The young Afghan students who have been sent abroad, will bring back with them a passionate yearning for renovating their national life. The future is with King Amanullah and, though for the time being, he seems to have suffered a set-back, we are confident that the great emancipating social forces which are at work over the whole world, will rally soon to his side the best and bravest among his people.

THAT MEN MAY ALL BE BROTHERS

MEDITATIONS FOR THE YEAR.

III. PARENTS.

(BY DR. CLIFFORD MANSHARDT, Ph.D.)

The responsibility of parents is at least three-fold—biological, educational, and economic. The family exists for the propagation of the species. A man and woman may have the utmost love for one another, and their married life may be carried out upon the highest plane, but unless they beget children the family circle is incomplete and from the sociological point of view the marriage is in that respect a failure.

The educational opportunity of the family is a unique one. Some parents regard themselves as absolute monarchs. They lay down their rules for the conduct of family life and demand unqualified obedience. Force and coercion are regarded as essential elements in the training of the child. If the child is to take his proper place in society he must learn to subordinate himself, "to purify his soul through discipline."

Other parents, however, regard the family as a cooperative opportunity—a school in which parents and children learn together the lessons of life. Discipline there is, but not the type of discipline that violates personality, that has its basis in compulsion. It is a discipline based on understanding, the product of "talking it over." True it is that parents must direct the life of the infant, but the true direction of infant life is not found in parental caprice; the parents themselves are guided by laws of necessity, the laws of health, which are as demanding upon parents as upon children. The autocratic parent fails to realise that there are degrees of capacity for cooperation, and that every child should participate in the conduct of family life to the degree in which he is able. It is not long until even the small child discovers that the only true sense in which he can "have his own way" is in cooperation, in fitting his own desires into the plans of others. And in learning this lesson in the family he has learned one of the most important lessons of life.

In the family that shares its experience wholesome life attitudes are naturally developed. The father and mother give of their best, and through their example the children are encouraged to do likewise. Confidence, devotion, reverence, idealism, reciprocal service—those qualities which are the heart of both education and religion are quickly assimilated, and build themselves into character. And if we are interested in responsible self-government, what other institution can train in government as can the cooperative home?

Of the economic responsibility of parents little need be said. The parent owes the child the duty of supporting him in his non-productive early years. But the parent oversteps the bounds of goodness when through a mistaken sense of kindness he nourishes the child to be a non-producing parasite. The most of our families have still much to learn about the use of money. In the joint family the father may hold the purse, but in the true joint family there will also be consultation as to the relative values of different expenditures. If all the members of the family fully understand that to acquire this means to do without that, there will be less spending of money for that which is foolish and wasteful.

In a pre-scientific age, men speculating upon the mystery of birth declared it to be "of God." Today our vocabulary has changed, but birth is still a mystery, and it is still "of God." Every child is akin to the Highest, and upon every individual there rests the responsibility of fully realising his kinship. The great religious problem of to day is not the relative worth of theological systems, but the problem of assisting men and women, boys and girls, to feel their kinship with the Universe, and to live in a manner worthy of this knowledge. Grateful to their own parents for that which they have received, parents of today have no choice: they too must be worthy, that life may be the richer.

COSMOPOLITANISM—THE NEED OF THE HOUR.

(By MR. S. D. CHITAL.)

Our problem in India is not purely political but social also. Political freedom will not last long unless it is based on social equality. Our struggle for freedom therefore is a Socio-Political one. The former is to free ourselves from the trammels of orthodoxy and the latter is to free ourselves from the political yoke.

Cosmopolitanism is the best antidote to our social evils. We in India today suffer from many social disabilities. The greatest disability and to a certain extent a direct hindrance to our political freedom is the social intolerance based on social inequality.

India is a vast country inhabited by different races possessing different cultures, traditions, faiths and histories. Each race has a significance of its own and has a culture, history and tradition to be proud of. Our problem to-day is how to assimilate these different races into a homogeneous and compound expression of one nationality viz. "Indians," without the least friction between any of these races. It is only by cultivating cosmopolitanism that we can meet our requirements successfully and effectively. Many attempts in that direction are being made by men and women of culture and enlightenment and must be encouraged by educated people. Political Liberty is merely a dream without the high caste people tolerating the Pariahs and the Untouchables and trying to bring them on their own level.

In India we have not only Hindus, Muslims, Christians, Parsis, Jews and Anglo-Indians but have thousands of sub-castes and communities. Not only that these different races do not intermarry and dine together but even the sub-castes avoid both and each sub-caste has some prejudices against the other. The Hindus are unfortunately divided into thousands of sub-castes, the sub-castes taking the shape of water-tight compartments with the result that the sub-castes are every day losing the affinity between themselves. The artificial barriers created have been so well maintained that the sub-castes have been completely divorced from each other. There was some justification for the four main castes so long as they were changeable. But to day the whole society is so completely and hopelessly deteriorated and degenerated that a pious and virtuous untouchable remains an untouchable in spite of his piety and a vicious Brahmin remains a Brahmin till death though he is completely corrupted. That a glorious civilisation like that of the Hindus could not assimilate more than sixty millions of untouchables in its fold during the last 3,000 years is nothing but a disgrace to the civilisation and the men who uphold it. It is only by completely destroying these artificial barriers of castes and creeds that we can develop into a very healthy race.

It is only by subjecting our race and faith feelings to our national cause that we hope to attain our freedom. Civic life has practically very little connection with religion. The national cause demands the sacrifice of race and faith feelings. The development of nationalism is chiefly dependent upon the elimination of these feelings. Sectarianism in this country has gone mad. In no other country do we find the people so much divided and antagonistic to each other.

In the West prejudices of castes and creeds do not practically exist. There people freely mix, interdine and even intermarry. In countries like Canada, Switzerland and America practically all nationalities of Europe reside in harmony. The people from these countries belong to different races of Europe and yet all of them freely interdine, intermarry and work hand-in-hand for the welfare of the country. They have developed a sense of nationalism which we in India should at least begin to envy. Let India follow in the foot-steps of these countries and attain the unattained.

In order to form ourselves into a powerful nation of Indians we must sacrifice certain traditions and break the castes and creeds. The greater good of the country demands the assimilation of different races into one powerful race of Indians.

THE SHRADDHANAND ANATH MAHILA-SHRAM, MATUNGA.

(Conducted by the Hindu Women's Rescue Home Society, Bombay.)

The whole of India is today mourning the death of Lala Lajpatrai, the hero of many a fight, who gave all his time, energy and money to his country and who lived, suffered and died for the country. He felt keenly the degradation and the shame of distressed and ignorant straying Hindu women falling into the clutches of cruel monsters who trade in the lives of these women. Every true Hindu should look upon it as an act of merit and of duty which he owes to himself and to Hinduism to do whatever he can to save the lives of such women. All other communities in India take care in this manner of the fallen sisters in their community: Will the Hindus lag behind? Shall it be lightly said of Hindus that they care not for the honour and chastity and self-respect of their Hindu sisters?

Already there exists in our midst a Hindu Women's Rescue Home which provides shelter and renders assistance to Hindu women in distress without any distinction of class or caste. It owes its inspiration to Lala Lajpatrai and revered Swami Shradhanandji. Lala Lajpatrai was anxious to come to Bombay and formally open the Home, but it was not to be. But it yet remains for his countrymen to do what Lala Lajpatrai would have fervently appealed to every true Hindu to do had he lived and come to Bombay to open the Home as he wished—viz. to help the Home (1) by bringing to the notice of the secretaries cases of destitute and distressed Hindu women (2) by contributing his mite towards the expenses of running the Institution and (3) by joining the Hindu Women's Rescue Home Society. It does not matter if the donation is large or small. Let every Hindu with the inborn love for his sisters and pity for the fallen or the distressed which is taught in the Shastras give what he can regularly every month, towards the cost of maintaining the Institution.

The Rescue Home called the Shradhanand Anath Mahilashram was started from first of March 1928. It is managed by the Hindu Women's Rescue Home Society registered under Act XXI of 1860. Any Hindu person can become its member on payment of Rs. 3 as annual subscription. Persons paying Rs. 1,000 are called Patrons and Rs. 500, Life members. Non-Hindus can become Associated members on payment of Rs. 10 per year.

The Managing Committee consists of Mr. M. R. Jayakar (President), Shet Govindlal Shivilal, Mr. B. G. Kher and Dr. Kalyandas Desai (vice-Presidents), Sheth Narayanlal Bansilal (Hon. Treasurer), Dr. M. B. Udgaonkar and Mr. S. S. Navare (Hon. Secretaries), Messrs. R. D. Birla, Velji Lakhamsi Nappoo, N. H. Pandya, J. K. Mehta, B. G. Paralkar, Virchand Panachand Shah, Mavji Govindji, K. Vithalrao, Dr. Sawarkar, Dr. M. B. Welkar and Mrs. Yashodabai Bhat (Members). Messrs. Jayakar, Birla, Govindlal Shivilal and Velji Nappoo are the Trustees of the Society.

During the short time that it has existed, the Home has already proved its usefulness. The Courts, the Magistrates, the Police and Vigilance Associations know and appreciate the services which the Home can render and whenever suitable and deserving cases come to their knowledge, they send them to the Home. A few specimen cases are given below. These will give some idea of the terrible misfortunes of some of our fallen sisters and the service which the Home has been able to render to them.

(1) A young Brahmin girl lost her mother whilst she was yet a child. Her father kept a mistress in the house and her elder sister, who was widowed, left the father and began to live with a Mahomedan. She was married at 15 and being very simple-minded, she was ill-treated both by her husband and his parents as also by her father and his mistress. She was often starved and mercilessly beaten and being unable to bear this ill-treatment, ran away to the house of a relative who stayed at a distant place. He promptly turned her out. Alone, hungry and miserable, she asked for food from a Porter at the Railway Station. He was a Mahomedan. He gave her food and shelter and she lived with him for a month. Her brother thereafter found her and took her away to her old life of misery, starvation and beating. But she again ran away to meet the Railway Porter. She met an agent of our Rescue Home. She is now there—contented, receiving education, reforming and grateful.

(2) A young Mahar girl was married at the age of 10. Her husband was a drunkard and gambler and being continuously unemployed owing to his vices was in constant need of money. He sent her to the Mill for work but not content with her meagre earnings there, he insisted on her supplementing them by selling her virtue. After a long struggle, she succumbed. She had a neighbour who belonged to a higher caste and who became friendly with her. He took pity on her and wanted to marry her but as both were Hindus and she could neither get a divorce nor marry during the lifetime of her husband, they both decided to be converted to Islam. The girl could easily do so and she went to live with some Mahomedan but not so the man as his relatives and castemen strongly objected. The girl's brother ultimately obtained custody of her person with the assistance of the Court. After further adventures she ultimately found her way to the Rescue Home with the help of a member. She is now completely transformed, reformed and happy. Her manners, character and life will do credit to any girl born in the highest caste. She is being slowly educated.

(3) A Prabhu woman of 25 was widowed at the age of 25. As remarriage is not permitted among the higher castes and her husband had left her no money, she had to live with relatives one of whom took advantage of her helpless condition. She became pregnant. He had not the courage to own his guilt and she was persecuted. On the 13th day of her delivery, suffering and sick, she was driven away by her relatives, who felt, they were disgraced by her. She was extremely ill and unhappy and full of repentance. If some kindhearted neighbour had not directed her to the Rescue Home, she and her child would have perished like thousands of her more unfortunate sisters. Both are now in the Home. She is grateful, full of repentance—and a willing worker. She is receiving education. As is usually the case, the man escapes without any punishment and is even considered a respectable member of Society.

(4) A Maratha girl of 20 was married very young. As she was dark and ugly, her husband discarded her and married another girl. He and his second wife began to ill-treat her. She therefore ran away and fell into evil ways. She got a child from a Policeman with whom she began to live. He soon got tired of her. She therefore left him. Two Mohamedans met her and suggested her that she should accept Islam but she declined. As she was wandering in the streets of this vast city, she met an agent of the Rescue Home, who took her there. She is now happy, is given religious education which is reforming her ways.

(5) A young Brahmin girl lost her parents in childhood. She was brought up by her aunt. A Christian neighbour decoyed her to Bombay when she was 10 without the knowledge of her aunt. She had to drudge very hard and was not even given sufficient food. A kindly disposed Israel lady took pity on her and removed her from this place and kept her as a servant in another Christian family. Here she misbehaved and became pregnant. Her master wanted to remove her to the Salvation Army. She delivered in Hospital. She was brought to the Rescue Home where she is being carefully looked after. She is only 16 and if left to herself will easily fall into evil ways.

There are at present 20 women, 3 children and five infants as inmates of the Ashram. Books, sewing, knitting and charkas are provided in the Home and religious instruction is being given by the Lady Superintendent, who is also a nurse and midwife. The Home is at present located in a building at Matunga. The demands upon the Home are so great that a larger place is urgently required. The current monthly expense of the Home is Rs. 350. If the home is to continue, money is urgently required not only to meet the monthly expenses but to build up an Endowment Fund, which should at least be of Rs. 50,000. There is no doubt that when Bombay Hindus come to know of the good work that the Home is doing by saving the lives of poor fallen Hindu sisters they will not lack the spirit and the patriotism and the love and honour for their religion, to pay their share towards maintaining the Institution.

All communications should be made to and any further inquiries will be gladly attended to and information supplied by The Hon. Secretaries, The Hindu Women's Rescue Home Society, Hari Building, Custom House Road, Fort, Bombay.

THE SHINWARI DEMANDS.

A Correspondent of the Times of India writes in that paper:—"The full text of the demands of the revolting Shinwari tribes which were presented to His Majesty King Amanullah has now been obtained and is given below. The King has agreed to accept and submit unconditionally to all of the 18 points that formed the subject of the demands. The following are the demands:—

"That the King organize a Senate composed of 50 members, of which the majority shall be priests of the Mullah class and the balance renowned personages, which body is to have supreme authority on all matters, civil, military and religious.

"That the King prove himself a good Mussalman by conforming to all the ancient Mahomedan laws and rules and by observing all the practices and customs of the Mahomedan religion.

"That in all cases, civil and criminal, both the plaintiff and defendant shall be represented by lawyers. (Formerly no witness or representatives were allowed; trial was conducted solely by a judge with no jury, and the two parties concerned).

"That the King recall the girls who have been sent to Turkey for medical education.

"That priests from the Deoband Religious College in India be again allowed to enter Afghanistan, which was prohibited during the present King's reign.

"That Articles 204 to 208 of the Afghan Law, regarding the punishment of Government officials for accepting bribes be strictly enforced on both the giver and the receiver in all government transactions, military payments, contracts, industrial projects, and petty expenditures.

"That all women in public shall be veiled, and that they shall observe strict purdah regulations.

"That the King recall his regulation requiring all priests or Mullahs to possess a diploma or certificate from a recognized institution proving them to be bonafide priests.

"That military service be no longer compulsory.

"That the Government strictly enforce severe punishment on any Afghan subject found drinking any wines or spirits.

"That the King shall again allow priests to walk about the streets with the power to stop any person and examine him on the Muslim law. The failure to satisfy the priest will be punishable.

"That the King revert again the weekly holiday from Thursday to Friday, the old religious holiday.

"That the women again be permitted to wear the boorka and that European dress be strictly forbidden to all women, including the Queen.

"That the King again allow the people, to go to the most reverend holy men of each district and show them marks of respect such as bowing down to them and kissing their feet, etc. as was formerly done, and that the advice and word of these holy men be carried out as law, without interference from any quarter on all subjects, military, civil and religious.

"That schoolboys be again permitted to marry while still attending school.

"That the King again permit the promiscuous lending and borrowing of money with or without notes or security which had formerly been the source of so many disputes among the people.

"That schools for girls be closed at once pending their final abolition by the Senate when it is organized.

"That all men be permitted to wear any type of clothes he chooses, provided he conforms to the requirements of Muslim law.

"Many of these demands or rather regulations have already been enforced. The Senate is organized, the fifty girls who went to Turkey only the other day have been recalled. Women once more go about veiled and strict purdah is observed. Priests have no longer to produce a certificate to prove their bonafides, military service is not compulsory, and Queen Souriya and all the other progressive Afghan ladies have had to doff their western finery and wear once more the boorka and the heavy, shapeless garments that so effectually hide whatever beauty they possess. Schoolboys are allowed to marry and girls have no school to attend and the Afghan can exercise unfettered his age-old profession of moneylender unrestrained by any fear of the law. It will be seen that most of the King's reforms have thus been annulled and that very likely the country will revert to a rule even more severe than in the days of his father. All the factories have been closed, and work on those under construction stopped. The Government will now be wholly under religious control which will undoubtedly suppress all industrial activity.

"In all the eighteen demands of the rebels, there is only one, the third which tends toward modern organization. The rest revert to ancient practices. Even the instruction of lawyers cannot be said to be an improvement where the rest of the legal system is lacking. It is more likely to open channels of corruption and legal extortion even worse than the existing sources.

"The regulations are mostly religious customs which have been abolished by King Amanullah in his zeal to convert his country into a modern European nation by striving to abolish the exterior appearance which would be observed by foreign visitors to his country, and putting on a quick veneer of European civilization rather than getting at the root of his organization and establishing a solid foundation on which to build his reforms and his authority."

AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

AT CALCUTTA.

Sj. Mrinal Kanti Bose of the "Amrita Bazar Patrika" was examined at considerable length by the Committee at its sitting on Friday (21st Dec.). Sj. Bose said that he was in favour of fixing 15 to be the minimum age for marriage, that age to be also the age of consent within the marital state. Beyond the marital state, the age should be 18. He did not agree that early marriage was largely responsible for high maternal or infantile mortality which he said was due to the general decline of health of people owing to the hard economic conditions. He opined that it might be one of the causes. If the girl was married before the age fixed by law her guardians responsible for the marriage should be punished with fine and, on failure to pay fine, imprisonment. He did not agree that in male cases the father or guardians of the groom responsible for the marriage or the priest should be punished.

Boys should not be married before 21. Girls of educated families, Sj. Bose said, are generally married after 13 and a healthy girl or her first-born child does not suffer in health if child-birth takes place at 15 or even 14. It is repeated child-birth that is more responsible for maternal and infantile mortality than early consummation and child-birth. But as Bengalee girls are generally poor in health, they should not be married before 16.

As regards the cases of abduction and kidnapping Mr. Bose said, that Section 368 I. P. C. should be more strictly enforced, i. e. persons in whose houses the kidnapped girl is concealed should be prosecuted as aiders and abettors and the onus should be placed on them to prove that they did not know that the girl was kidnapped or abducted. He paid a tribute to the work of the Women's Protection League through whose efforts kidnapping and abduction cases have diminished within the last one or two years.

Giving evidence before the Age of Consent Committee on Saturday the 22nd, Mr. Annadacharan Ray, Secretary, Bar Association and Vice-Chairman of Noakhali District Board, said that he was in favour of the law of consent and advocated 16 for marriage and 18 for consent.

Sj. Jogindra Chandra Chakravarty, M.L.C., said that he would neither advocate an advance in age nor any legislation. Ages that were suggested for advance were above 14 and 15 and a girl would be giving an encouraging consent after 16. He was of opinion that the law of consent would be defective even if the age of marriage was raised and so far as religious injunctions were concerned there was no objection to marriage at higher age among the higher and lower classes. Witness was against widow re-marriage and opined that it was against Hindu religion and could never be tolerated. As a matter of policy he was opposed to any legislation in social matters being enacted by Government.

Moulvi Mohamed Akram Khan also gave evidence.

AT PATNA.

The Age of Consent Committee, under the Chairmanship of Sir Moropant Joshi, commenced its public sitting here on 2nd Jan. in the Council Chamber. The first witness examined, Pandit Nilkanta Das M.L.A., favoured legislation, fixing a minimum age for marriage rather than strengthening the penal code for the purpose. "He thought that the Hindu religious Shastras had laid down early marriage for girls owing to the Mahomedan rule.

Mr. Jayaswal, Bar-at-Law, told the Committee that cases of child marriage were very few in Bihar. He favoured the passing of a law to prohibit marriages below 14 in the case of girls and 18 for boys. He was not in favour of amending the penal code, but was for penalising early marriages. He thought that public opinion would prefer preventing early marriages to fixing a higher age of consent.

and making the penal code more rigorous and inquisitive in the matter. He was in favour of an age nearer 18 on the ground of the health of mother and the future of the progeny. He suggested registration of marriages.

Giving evidence before the Age of Consent Committee on the 4th Dewan Bahadur Srikrishna Mahapatna, retired Superintendent of Police, stated that among the Karans, who were an influential and intellectual community of Orissa, marriage of girls before puberty was very rare. On the other hand, child marriage was the custom among the Brahmins and other castes. He was of the opinion that merely fixing a higher age of consent would not be so effective as legislation fixing a minimum age of marriage. Public opinion, he said, would rather abide by legislation, fixing a minimum marriage age, than tolerate interference in family affairs.

Mrs. Macpherson, Hon. Secretary of the Bihar and Orissa Council of Women, stated that all educated and enlightened Indian women were in favour of abolishing early marriages. Asked to suggest a remedy against child marriage, she advocated launching an intensive educational campaign and enforcing rigorously the existing provisional penal code. She personally considered it advisable to fix a minimum marriage age by legislation. Two more witnesses were examined before the committee adjourned for the day.

Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha, ex-Finance Member giving evidence before the Age of Consent Committee, on January 5th advocated the increasing of the age of consent to 14 years in martial cases and 15 in case of extra-marital. He was opposed to any legislation fixing the minimum age for marriage, for he believed any legislation of the kind would make matters worse, particularly when the police was made to have any hand in the matter. Already the feeling against the present Government was bitter in the country. He thought any legislation regarding marriage interfering with the freedom of the people in social matters would deepen dissatisfaction and create more discontent. Any legislation in order to be effective must have the force of public opinion behind it. He would, therefore, prefer propaganda in various ways for social reform to compelling people by legislation to do things which they did not believe. He would like the Government to spend some money over such propaganda.

Dr. Miss Stillwell was next examined. From her experience she could say that women, even in orthodox Indian families, were willing to marry their girls at a late age provided they were relieved from social obligations. Some of them realized very well the evil effects of early marriage and maternity. She recommended that 16 should be the age of consummation.

Mrs. S. K. P. Sinha, a Bihari lady who had very recently discarded Purdah, examined advocated the fixing of 18 years as the minimum age for marriage of girls and 24 for that of boys. She strongly urged making a penal offence by legislation all marriages before that age. In her opinion women would gladly agree to any legislation to prevent early marriages. She expressed herself bitterly against men whom she held responsible for not making substantial advance in social reform, for she believed that women, when properly made to understand the evils among them, were ready to go ahead.

AT BENARES.

The Age of Consent Committee examined on 1st January, a number of witnesses including Raja Motichand, Pandit Pramathnath, Pandit Iqbal Narain and Doctor (Miss) Thungamma. All the witnesses favoured the raising of the age of consent. Raja Motichand thought that legislation fixing the age of marriage was necessary and suggested that the age of consent be raised to 16. Pandit Pramathnath explained on the authority of Hindu scriptures that the period of co-habitation should commence after the completion of the age of 16. Pandit Iqbal Narain advocated the necessity of marriage legislation and thought the law about the age of consent could only be made effective when the age of marriage as well as that of consent was raised considerably beyond 14.

ALLAHABAD.

The Age of Consent Committee commenced their sittings here on the 15th and Major Ranjit Singh, Dr. Miss Keiss and Dr. R. N. Banerji were examined.

Dr. Ranjit Singh advocated the fixing of 16 for girls and 20 for boys as the minimum age for marriage.

Replying to Mrs. Nehru witness said that he did not think the people considered the consummation of marriage before puberty sinful. In spite of orthodox opinion, if the age of 16 was fixed as the minimum age of marriage, opposition would not be strong and would die down soon. He advocated a fine only as punishment for offences, and stated the parents of both the parties and the officiating priest should be made the accused. Registration of marriages should be made compulsory and the Magistrate should be assisted by two non-officials sitting as a matrimonial court.

Dr. Miss Keiss of the Dufferin Hospital said that in her experience the average age for maternity was 14. Her ideal age for consummation and marriage was 18 but for India 16 would be a safe age.

At the Age of Consent Inquiry Committee, Mrs. Reddi, M. L. C., Madras, examined on the 6th said the amendment of the law made in 1925 had not produced any tangible results. Girls in India were competent to give intelligent consent only after the age of 18. "Public opinion has very much advanced since the amendment of the law in 1925, and the demand for legislation is general." Mrs. Reddi spoke bitterly of the evils of early marriages and expressed the opinion that legislation fixing the minimum age of marriage was the only effectual and sure remedy, as progress of social reform by means of education and social propaganda was very slow.

Dr. Ganganath Jha, Vice-Chancellor, Allahabad University, voicing the orthodox view stated that there was a certain amount of manufactured dissatisfaction among the so-called advanced people. Confining himself to cases of married couples, he felt it was not only wrong, but also futile, to interfere in social or religious customs. Not one in a thousand knew anything about the present law of the subject; "but yet it cannot be denied that there is growing a slow and steady opinion against the practice of early consummation." The proposed legislation could not bring about the desired effect; it would only stir up litigious instincts of the people and enmity would result in false complaints. There was nothing to justify the proposed enactment. "It will be futile; it might be mischievous." He did not think early consummation would lead to premature or infantile mortality. There was no public opinion in the matter among the people in general, but opinion was steadily growing towards postponement of consummation. He believed in propaganda as the only means of combating the evils complained of.

Several other witnesses were also examined.

ENEMIES OF SOCIAL REFORM.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru was very emphatic and uncompromising in his answers before the Age of Consent Inquiry Committee on the 17th. He would not have anything lower than 21 for boys and 18 for girls as the minimum age for marriage. He would do away with mullahs and priests and shastras and orthodoxy, as they were the greatest enemies of social reform. In Sir Tej Bahadur's opinion, age of consent legislation would be futile. He would wage undisguised warfare against orthodox people. "You cannot reconcile common sense with the Shastras and orthodox opinion," said Sir Tej Bahadur, and added that the only way to bring about social reform was by drastic legislation. In reply to Mrs. Beadon's questions, Sir Tej Bahadur gave instances of the evils of early marriage from the large number of law cases he had handled. Mrs. Brijlal Nehru: "Do you think it would be advisable for a democratic government to bring about reform by terror in the face of orthodox opinion?"

Sir Tej Bahadur: "The Government must take courage in their hands and enforce the law. You cannot have democratic government as long as the majority of the people are orthodox." Asked about the measures of social reform introduced in Turkey, the witness said that their success was due to one strong man, who made short work of mullahs and priests and he (Sir Tej Bahadur) would advise a similar course.

Mr. Yakub Ali interjected: "Same as happened in Afghanistan."

Sir Tej Bahadur: "King Amanullah will live in history, whereas we will be forgotten. The seed he has sown will grow and his work will remain." The witness blamed the Government, charging it with dereliction of duty in the matter of social reform, and was of the opinion that persuasive measures would never do. The bulk of educated people fought shy of their actual convictions.

INTER-RACIAL POLITICS.

HAWAII EXPERIMENTING IN THIS FIELD.

Among other things for which Hawaii is to be congratulated in its features of Government is the entrance of American citizens of Oriental blood into the arena for political preferment. In the election just closed two Chinese Americans were re-elected to offices they had filled with credit. Yew Char won his fight for re-election to the lower house. Dr. Dai Yen Chang was returned to the board of supervisors. James G. Moriyama made a good race on the Republican ticket for representation, though he lost, writes the Honolulu Advertiser, November 9, 1928.

There is wisdom and justice in giving these nationalities a voice in Government. They represent a great body of citizens. They have been educated in Hawaii and are deeply interested in the problems that confront the territory. Their ambitions should be encouraged not only for their own right and benefit, but for the larger benefit to the community.

Hawaii is destined to be a state of mixed races speaking the English language. There is no reason why the Oriental Hawaiian born should not make as good a record in public office as his contemporaries of the Western world. So far as they have had an opportunity to show their mettle they have proved active, intelligent, liberal and as wise in action as fellows in the legislative bodies.

Hawaii has always had an open mind on the question of equality. Racial prejudice, where it existed, has been kept in the background. At present it is hardly discernible in the quarter.

There is every reason for encouraging the citizens of Oriental blood to enter the field of politics. If an aspirant fails at one election, campaigning will bring him to notice and make him more confident for another trial. As time goes on more and more of such men as Chang, Char and Moriyama will appear asking for recognition at the polls. The success of these young men in office should encourage others like them to seek a place in the Government of the people by the people.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

World's Youth League:—The President of the World's Youth League, Germany, sends the following for publication:—"The meeting of the "World's Youth League" section Germany, sends its hearty greetings to the youths and to all the youth organisations that will be represented at the forthcoming All-India Youth Congress to be held at Calcutta. This meeting of the "World's Youth League", section Germany sends its hearty greetings to the youths of the Bombay Presidency and to all the youth organisations that will be represented at the forthcoming Bombay Presidency Youth Conference to be held at Poona. The young generation in all the countries of the world is closely united by the common struggle to realize their ideal of the brotherhood of mankind. Youth will unite to abolish all the hindrances, particularly those founded on the existing political and economical situation. In this sense, we wish your conference the best success and assure you of our fullest sympathies with your struggle for justice and liberty. This meeting of the "World's Youth League", section Germany wishes to express to the Indian youth in general, and the youth of Bombay in particular, their fullest sympathies in the struggle for the independence of India. The "World's Youth League" is of opinion that, in order to realize the universal brotherhood of mankind, it is necessary that all the nations of the world first should obtain their national and economical independence. It is the duty of youth all over the world to do their share towards the abolishment of imperialism and capitalism in their many forms, and establishment of a new order of the world which will be founded on justice and liberty. The "World's Youth League" wishes that you, the youth of India, may succeed in your just struggle and would hastily welcome any opportunity of co-operating with you. This meeting of the "World's Youth League", section Germany expresses its sorrow at the sad demise of Lala Lajpatrai—one of the worthiest sons of India and a great leader of the Indian people and offers its heartfelt condolence to the members of his family, the youths and the people of India in general in their bereavement."

In Support of Prohibition:—The following resolution is being voted upon at the various provincial temperance and prohibition associations in the country:—Resolved that the have read and desire to give hearty support to the "Appeal to the British Parliament and People through the Indian Statutory Commission" set forth in the Memorial to the Commission entitled India's Excise Demand dated November 6 1928, forwarded to the Commission by the Rev. J. F. Edwards of Bombay. They earnestly request the Indian Statutory Commission to recommend that India's future Constitution shall include provisions for ensuring that India's desire as expressed in that APPEAL shall be granted.—The following associations have passed the resolution and forwarded copies of it to the Indian Statutory Commission.—The Ahmedabad Total Abstinence Association, the International Order of Good Templars (Grand Lodge of India, Ambala) and the North Calcutta Temperance Union.

Mr. Sastri's Bust:—Kottler, the well-known South African sculptor is now at work on the impressive bust of Mr. Sastri. A suggestion was recently made that the bust should be utilised to signify in some suitable way the general admiration felt in Capetown for Mr. Sastri's personality and appreciation of his work in this country. This idea quickly assumed a concrete shape and it has been decided to raise by public funds necessary for the purchase of the bust with a view to its presentation by Mr. Sastri's friends and admirers in Capetown to the Sastri College for Indian Teachers in Durban in appreciation of its founders' services to South Africa.

Lucknow's First Woman Councillor:—The result of the Lucknow Municipal election was announced recently. There was a keen contest in the Ganesganj ward, a record number of votes being polled. Mrs. Sunitidevi Mitra, Lucknow's first woman to aspire to a Municipal Commissionership, was returned from this ward at the head of the poll, securing over 70 per cent. of the total votes cast.

Lajpat Rai Fund:—"After consultation with several friends interested in the Lajpat Rai Memorial we have decided to devote the collections received as the result of our appeal to the following objects," writes Madan Mohan Malaviya, Doctor Ansari and Mr. D. G. Birla in a statement to the Associated Press:—"Rs. 4,25,000 for the maintenance of the Servants of the People Society; Rs. 25,000 for the completion of the Lajpat Rai Hall which is already half finished; and Rs. 50,000 for the consolidation of the work done through the Society for the uplift of the suppressed classes. We propose to utilise the first proceeds for the first object and rest for the second and third respectively, but it is open to any donor to earmark his or her donation and it will be utilised accordingly."

To Promote Foreign Studies:—The gift of three and a half percent Government promissory notes of the face value of Rs. 1,50,000 made by Sailasuta Devi, widow of the late Radhikamohan Roy, in favour of the Calcutta University was accepted by the Senate recently. The scholarship will be available to Bengali Brahmin students with technical experience in this country and desirous to go abroad for acquiring further knowledge in such subjects.

Miss Royden's Tribute:—The English woman preacher, Miss Maud Royden, who has arrived in London on the conclusion of a year's world tour, in an interview expressed the opinion that though Mr. Gandhi's political force had somewhat lessened, probably owing to his ill health, "he is the greatest man in the world, absolutely incorruptible and courageous." She mentioned that Mr. Gandhi was thinking of coming to England in 1930. He would not speak in public since his voice was very weak, but he would meet and talk with various individuals.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. s. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukkerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isabelle Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
 Royapuram, Madras.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Write: Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDIOLNAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM,
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up " 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund " 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,

MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akiuj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulla (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ... Rs. 12,64,600.

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:--BARODA.

Branches:--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwarka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samsidas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shembhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavals, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda).
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

'FIXED' DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26 C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs. s. p.
Inland	5 0 0
Foreign	5 8 0
Single copy	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

Premier
Swadeshi
Emporium.

SPECIAL OFFER
 Dharamsi Morarji
 Woollen Suitings to be Cleared at Exceptionally
 Low Factory Prices
 54" Wide from Rs. 2/8 per yard.
GRASP THIS OPPORTUNITY.
BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.
 Cruikshank Road, Fort,

The Cheapest
House.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tatisorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati Brand

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS

(Agencies), Ltd.,

16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH A HAPPY FAMILY

(A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
 PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
 THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
 PUBLICATION.
 STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland Rs 7-8 (Post Free).
 Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
 The Indian Social Reformer,
 Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
 Fort, BOMBAY.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer).
 Price annas 8.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
 Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,
The Hindustan Review.
 PATNA, E. I. R.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO, LTD.,
 MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
 SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.,
 81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
 "BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Every Evening at 9-30 P.M. and Sunday Matinee at 5-30 P.M.

R. B. SALISBURY'S COMPANY

"THE QUANTS"THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Time:—4, 6-15, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

Pathe Super Gazette No. 1565-66 (Ten O'clock show only.)

"SORROELL & SON"

Reels 10

No. 9831-C. B. (United Artistes Production)

Featuring

ALICE JOYCE & H. B. WARNERTHE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Time:—4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

Pathe Super Gazette No. 1565-66.

So long Oolong Popular Song I reel

MANNEQUIN

Reels 7

ALICE JOYCE & DOLORES COSTELLO

(A Paramount Picture)

EMPRESS CINEMA

Time:—3-30, 6-30, and 9-30 P.M.

KING OF KINGS

Reels 18,

Extra Morning Show every Sunday at Empress and Edward at 10 A.M.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1929

No. 22

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Indians in Africa. Tribute to Mr. Sastri's Work. The Gujarat College Strike. A Vacillating Government. Wages and Efficiency. A Pioneer in Social Reform. Flood Relief. Progressive Baroda. That Men May all be Brothers.	Women in Japan. Basis of Hindu Moslem Unity. Interest and Usury in Islam. Age of Consent Inquiry. Facing Facts—India's Un- employment Problem. A Hindu on Muslim Social Life. News of the Week.
---	--

NOTES.

Indians in Africa:—Mr. Srinivasa Sastry hands over charge of the office of Indian Agent in South Africa to Sir Kurma Venkata Reddi who landed at Durban on Wednesday and sails for India on Monday next. Mr. Sastry had originally intended on his return voyage to visit Kenya and make a fortnight's stay there. We wish he had found it possible to carry out this plan as he would have been able to give valuable advice to Indians regarding the attitude which they should adopt in respect of the recommendations of the Hilton Young Commission's report on the future constitution of the British Colonies in East Africa. Mr. Sastry arrives in Bombay on the 16th February by the B. I. S. N. Co's S. S. Karoa. It is expected that he will address a public meeting and attend social functions that are being arranged to accord him a hearty welcome on his return from his brilliantly successful mission in South Africa. Sir Kurma was given a cordial reception on landing and in an interview with a Reuter's representative declared that he would build brick by brick on the foundation already laid by Mr. Sastri and that if he could do anything towards strengthening the understanding between the peoples in South Africa, he would have done his duty and served his people. The best wishes of the whole of India are with Sir Kurma for the prosperous and successful prosecution of the great work which lies before him.

Tribute to Mr. Sastri's Work:—An Associated Press message runs:—"Discussing the work done by Mr. Srinivasa Sastri during his stay in South Africa, at a tea party to-day at Sir Abdul Quadir's residence, Mr. Max Yergan, Joint Secretary of the Students' Christian Association, South Africa, who is now touring Upper India, said that Mr. Sastri had done as much, if not more, in the course of his short stay in South Africa, towards the improvement of inter-racial relations, as any other man in South Africa had done. He had made the people believe in the possibility of Indians and Europeans understanding each other. Places which no Indian had ever entered before had been entered by Mr. Sastri. He was also able to understand the prejudices of Europeans. Asked whether Mr. Sastri had the whole-hearted backing of the Indian community in South Africa, Mr. Yergan replied that there was an Indian party which considered Mr. Sastri's policy too moderate. The party was not large but was sufficiently vocal."

The Gujarat College Strike:—The strike of students of the Gujarat College, a Government-managed institution in Ahmedabad, it was announced early in the week, had been settled but later information shows that this is not the case. The Principal, Mr. Findlay Shirras, has agreed to practically all the terms, but it seems he fights shy of himself taking the initiative in asking the University to condone the absence of the students during the days on which they were on strike. This is a small matter, and if Mr. Findlay Shirras feels any qualms about it, the University need not wait to be moved in order to assure the students of their terms. The incident should never have been allowed to attain the dimensions which it has done. In Bombay, Principals of the Colleges realised that the situation was an exceptional one to be dealt with not on abstract theory but on commonsense lines. As a general principle, it is undesirable that College students should become active politicians, but the rule must be applied with discrimination when nationalism plays as large a part as it does in countries situated like India in politics. The boycott of the Simon Commission in Bombay was led by some of the most conservative of Indian politicians, prominent among whom was the Vice-Chancellor of the University, and though they did not intend it to go so far as it did in some places, still, as Sir Chimanlal Setalvad said in his address to the Liberal Federation at Allahabad, different people have different ideas of giving effect to an idea. Principal Findlay Shirras is a capable and conscientious officer, but he should have remembered that he was first a teacher of youth and that his official character was quite an incidental and subordinate matter. It is high time that this unfortunate episode was brought to an end.

A Vacillating Government:—The Government of Bombay has squandered crores of rupees on development schemes conceived with scant regard to the requirements of the people. It has had to cut down its Back Bay Reclamation scheme after incurring heavy capital expenditure the interest on which will continue to be a mill-stone round the necks of the tax-payer for about a generation. Their housing schemes have been successful only to a very limited extent. The same government, however, fights shy of reforms of whose effects on the well-being of the population there is no uncertainty if they involve expenditure or loss of revenue. The Bombay Government's vacillating methods in regard to Primary Education and Prohibition illustrate this tendency to be extravagant in speculative matters and parsimonious in respect of measures of assured beneficence. The Indian Ministers who are dependent on official support have either no convictions and no policy or are not very keen about utilising their opportunity to advance popular interests in the best and surest manner possible. The Government's policy in regard to Primary Education is rather much discouraging. As in the matter of Prohibition, the policy of government is said to be to proceed by progressive stages to the goal which like "the circle bounding earth and sky," is ever receding into the dim distance. The most extraordinary thing is that the Government construes its statutory duty to aid compulsory education schemes as a reason for withholding support from voluntary schemes. And yet it is only by working along voluntary lines that compulsion can be brought within easy reach of the Presidency.

Wages and Efficiency:—Miss I. Wingate, Industrial Secretary of the Y. W. C. A., gave interesting evidence before the Strike Inquiry Committee on the 10th January. Both in her written statement and oral evidence she maintained that a cut in the wages never increased efficiency. "It has been repeatedly stated by the foremost employers", observed Miss Wingate, "that a cut in the wages should be the last and not the first step in reducing the cost of production". There is profound truth underlying this statement and if it had been acted upon the prolonged industrial unrest would have been averted. As regards women's wages, Miss Wingate expressed her opinion that the rates proposed in the standardisation scheme for women workers were very low. She was strongly of opinion that no differentiation should be made in the matter of wages between a man and a woman. She pleaded for a living wage for women workers in India as they had many dependents. Another point worthy of note in Miss Wingate's evidence is that better regulation of rest period will make the ten hours' work under the present conditions more endurable to the workers. In short, Miss Wingate has ably shown in her evidence which is the result of personal investigation that the much maligned workman is more sinned against than sinning.

A Pioneer in Social Reform:—On January 16, the Deccan Sabha of Poona held a public meeting to celebrate Ranade Day. Mr. V. G. Kale was in the Chair and Mr. G. K. Gadgil was the principal speaker. Mr. Gadgil referred to Ranade's work as a social and religious reformer and made prominent mention of his activities connected with the National Social Conference and the Prarthana Samaj. Both owed much to Ranade and may indeed be said to have been founded by him. His yearly reviews of social reform activities in the country which were such an admirable feature of the proceedings of national social conferences of his time had, in Mr. Gadgil's opinion, secured for themselves a permanent place in social reform literature. He was a religious man and the success he achieved and the public interest he aroused in the question of social reform, Mr. Gadgil attributed to the piety of Ranade's soul and the religious fervour of his mind. In a way educational work was but a by-product of Ranade's limitless energy; but even his achievements in that field were such as would do credit to any educationist. The versatility of his intelligence Mr. Gadgil thought, was evident from the fact that there was not a public movement or public body started during his life-time in Maharashtra with which he was not actively associated. Many of the social reforms which have come to be regarded as matters of human rights were not so regarded in his time and Ranade had to wage a great fight for them. Nobody now questions the need of female education; but for Mr. Ranade to start a high school for girls was a matter beset with difficulties which few of the present generation can imagine.

Flood Relief:—The floods which devastated the districts of Sind and Gujarat found both Government and the people completely unprepared. It is all the more remarkable, therefore, that a central organisation was set up at Bombay within two weeks of the catastrophe. Mr. Vallabhbhai Patel and his Congress volunteers had started relief operations in Gujarat even before the floods had subsided. The organisation set up in Bombay received every assistance from the Government and the public response was all that it should have been. Two of the non-official workers who were untiring in their work have passed away—Mr. C. S. Deole of the Servants of India Society who rendered valuable help to Mr. G. K. Deodhar, died during the early days of the relief operations, and Mr. Maganlal Gandhi who controlled the flood relief organisation in Gujarat, died more recently. Special mention has been made in the Report of the Executive Committee issued recently of the work of the women of Bombay in the collection of clothes and funds. A separate organisation was started by them with Mrs. Naidu as president but there was close cooperation between that body and the Central Fund. The Indian Merchants Chamber gave whole-hearted support to the Central Committee and the Report states that but for its help the Fund would not have started so early or been so well organised. It placed its rooms at the disposal of the Fund and lent the services of Mr. J. K. Mehta who is mainly responsible for the executive work of the Fund.

(Continued from the Leader page).

system was broken down". The first concern of the State was to take prompt steps to restore sanitation and thus save the city from epidemics. The other relief measures took the form of distribution of food and clothing, measures for the resowing of the affected areas, schemes for repair and reconstruction of houses and organisation of medical relief. The splendid way in which the State coped with a task of such a magnitude testifies to the efficiency of its administration.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, JANUARY 26, 1929.

PROGRESSIVE BARODA.

Despite the grave situation caused by the unprecedented floods last year in Baroda, which severely strained the resources of the State, the Administration Report for the year 1927-1928 shows on the whole satisfactory progress. Social legislation, spread of education and reconstruction work form the striking features of the year under report. As regards social legislation, while we in British India are still engaged in ascertaining public opinion on the raising of the age of consent, Baroda State has gone already ahead by passing a law raising the age of consent to 14 within, and 18 outside, the marital relationship. Several interesting facts emerge from the enforcement of the Infant Marriage Prevention Act. The percentage of the breaches of the Act shows a slight increase over the previous years' figures and this is explained as being due to the stricter vigilance exercised. It is interesting to note that the number of offences was greater among the lower than the higher castes; the former because of their backwardness are slow to realise the beneficial object of the measure. The custom of wholesale marriages once every thirteenth year obtaining in a caste known as Golas accounts for the large number of exemptions from the operation of the Act granted last year. Old age and failing health of parents or guardians are common grounds for application for permission for marriages within the prescribed age. The work of exercising general supervision over the operation of the Act was transferred from the Legal Remembrancer to the Varishta Court. On the recommendations of the Committee which was appointed to examine the working of the Infant Marriage Prevention Act, a bill has been drafted fixing the higher age limit of 14 and 18 years for girls and boys, stiffening the penalties and making it applicable to all the communities without exception. We hope the time is not far distant when the women in the State will be admitted to political franchise and the law of inheritance will be so amended as to include them also. Indian States are admirably fitted for setting the pace for social reform as Baroda has done; the rulers being of the people are as much affected by customs that are detrimental to progress as their subjects. Therefore it is in their own interests as well as those of their subjects to remove them.

Compulsory primary education was first introduced throughout the State in 1906 and since then there has been a steady increase in the number of pupils brought under instruction. An appreciable increase in the number of girls reading in the primary schools in the year under report may be put down to the indirect efforts of the Women's Education Conference to bring home to the Indian women the benefits of education. The education of the Antyajias has always been considered as a special charge on the Baroda Government which not only furnishes to the pupils of this community books and other school requisites free but also runs boarding houses at its own expense. Coming to secondary and higher education the progress made last year is rather disappointing. The number of students attending the only Arts College in the State fell by 58. The cost of collegiate education had risen in the State in that the net expense incurred for each student increased from Rs. 129 to Rs. 158. It redounds to the credit of the famous Kala Bhavan, the institution in which technical education is imparted, that it has attracted a large number of students from far off places like Kashmir and Travancore. The excellent method of bringing education, as it were, to the doors of the people by means of travelling libraries was greatly extended. These libraries are very popular and serve to supplement the scheme of compulsory education. They promote adult education and successfully combat the lapsing into illiteracy of the village population. A perusal of the table of income and expenditure included in the report reveals the disconcerting fact that next to Land Revenue, Abkari forms the principal source of income with receipts amounting to 36.41 lakhs. This is 7.56 lakhs in excess of last year and the explanation offered is that the increase was due to recovery of past arrears. It is apparent that nothing is practically done to lessen the drink evil in the State. A policy of progressive realisation of prohibition should be adopted by the State.

The chapter on floods makes thrilling reading. The flood disaster which took the people of the State unawares last July caused considerable hardships and acute suffering. For nearly three full days the city was under water, many hamlets and villages were wiped off and women and children were clinging to trees for their very lives. Thanks to the prompt rescue work rendered by both officials and non-officials the actual loss of life was small. The following passage from the Report will give some idea of the situation which confronted the Government after the floods had subsided. "The city was in a frightful state—dead bodies of human beings and animals lying in fields and lanes and streets and in the bed of the river and whole streets and lanes gutted with the debris of fallen buildings and rotten grains thrown out of shops and houses. The water supply had failed, the mains having collapsed and the electric

(Continued in the 2nd column of and Notes page).

THAT MEN MAY ALL BE BROTHERS.

MEDITATIONS FOR THE YEAR.

IV. AGRICULTURISTS.

(BY DR. CLIFFORD MANSCHARDT, PH. D.)

If any man above all others is brought face to face with the majesty of nature it is the agriculturist. The rising sun calls him to his task, and the setting sun is a fitting crown to a day well spent. The hills invite him to look up, the plains call upon him to look out, while the birds, the trees and the flowers are a constant reminder of the beauty that should characterise the life within. Isolated the cultivator is, and yet this same isolation can be a real source of strength for the opportunity it affords for meditation. To muse in quiet upon the wonder of life, upon man and his relation to the Universe, upon man and his relation to other men is a rare privilege. The dependence of the agriculturist upon the rain, the sun, and the elemental forces of nature brings him close to the Source of all good gifts. The cultivator may not be trained in the wisdom of the schools, and yet he may acquire a homely philosophy of life that leads him to feel at home in his world, and gives him that quiet confidence which is the true mark of the man who is really educated. It is no accident that a great portion of the world's leadership has come from among those who spent their early lives in the fields.

There is no finer chapter in human history than that which is being written by the cultivator. To take a barren plain, till it, plant it, and cultivate it until it brings forth food for hungry children; to make thousands of blades of grain grow where none had grown before; to cast out rocks and cactus and to produce the cotton that clothes the masses is a romance in very deed. The agriculturist, working alone, often fails to see his kinship to the race, and yet there is no more important member of the human family. To raise the foodstuff that nourishes the nation, to supply the raw materials of much of its industry, to serve as the great supporting background without which no city can exist—such is the privilege that is given to the cultivator. A realisation of this importance is the most effective offset to that sense of drudgery that he so often feels.

But just as the agriculturist often fails to see his importance as a cooperating member of the human family, so also he fails to realise that he has obligations to the wider whole. The day is past when any individuals or classes can so narrow their interests as to think only in terms of self. To refuse to cooperate in measures for village improvement on the ground that they are no concern of his; to give no attention to the moral, social, and political problems that confront the whole people is a type of suicide—the cultivator is cutting off a part of his very self. As an able thinker pointed out centuries ago, it is impossible for the foot or the hand, or any other member of the body to refuse to recognise its kinship with the whole. Whether we will it or no, we are members of society and must fulfil our social obligations. Being many we are still one—"members one of another."

WOMEN IN JAPAN.

Miss Kiku Ide who is one of the leaders of the feminist movement in Japan, contributes an interesting article on "Japan's New Women" in Pacific Affairs, a Honolulu journal. The Japanese women's movement dates from the commencement of this century and aims at the removal of the disabilities—economic, social and political—which have been imposed on them. As an estimate of the position of women today in that country is essential for a proper understanding of the movement, Miss Ide deals at some length with the present situation. In education women have been encouraged for some time in the past and there are various schools for them in the country. But the ideal of equality of opportunity in education, "so vital to the solution of all the women's problems" has not been generally accepted and the "middle-school" which like the intermediate college is really a stepping-stone to colleges, universities and the higher Government appointments, is not open to girls who on the completion of their primary education are expected to enter the "higher" girls' schools which in reality have a far lower standard than the boys' "middle" schools have. In the economic sphere a third of the female population in Japan are in some kind of occupation out of which ninety per cent. are labourers only a tenth being independent workers. The women labourers are more than a half of the total number of labourers in Japan. Every public office which carries a salary with it is closed to women, and the women in Government service are mostly hired officials without rank. Even public posts of honour are closed to them. As they have not got the vote, women are not eligible to be members of the national assembly or of the local legislatures.

The most galling disabilities, however, are those which exist under the legal system. Miss Ide objects to the fact that the head of the family is the male and "the parental prerogatives lie in principle only with the father and not with both parents." That the Japanese Civil Law, although it has adopted monogamy, does not require a strict adherence to the principle is evident from the provisions with regard to illegitimate children. In the law of Succession two great discriminations are made against women. The widow of a man who dies without making a will in her favour does not inherit his property. If he leaves a child the property goes to the child, otherwise it goes to the brothers and sisters of the deceased. And secondly an illegitimate male child precedes in succession a legitimate female child. Miss Ide points out that this will shortly be revised. Miss Ide regards the Civil Law as a great advance on the ideas prevailing in Japan before its enactment and says that then woman was told of the seven reasons for being obliged to leave her husband's house—"if she is jealous, if she is disobedient, if she is without a child, if she is diseased, if she is immoral, if she wants to steal, or if she is talkative." But progress has rendered even these laws, framed half a century ago, obsolete and unjust to the women of today. The argument that the family system is in danger cannot be accepted against the women's movement as the demand for suffrage is only a demand for public rights and the legal family need not be recognised as the unit of political society. Miss Ide points to the glorious past of the women of Japan and states that the founder of Japan was not a man but a woman. "Women monarchs and empresses of valour and renown appeared one after another" and court ladies of great influence played an important role in national history. The Constitution itself makes no distinction between the men and the women subjects of Japan and fundamentally, says Miss Ide, the women have equal rights and duties.

The attention of the leaders of the women's movement was first drawn towards modifying the legal system in Japan in the year 1902 when the Public Safety Police Regulations were promulgated. These prohibited women from taking part in politics and twenty years later an amending bill was passed allowing women to convene or attend political meetings. The New Woman's Association in 1912 set up a section for "government and law." Campaigns have been conducted from 1902 to secure the suffrage and citizenship rights from the Gikai or National Assembly. The last Imperial Gikai which was convoked on April 20, 1928, was the first in which members were elected under manhood suffrage. A committee of representatives of the eight Women's Suffrage organisations was formed and a vigorous campaign was conducted. The petitions and bills advocated by the committee found general support but before the bills could be proposed the Gikai adjourned. All the parties have appointed committees to look into the question and Woman's Suffrage has now become a live issue. "Women of Japan", concludes Miss Ide, "need above all further education, discipline, conviction,—nay faith. Cultivating the true womanhood in themselves, they must become enlightened enough to sink personal or organizational differences before the challenge of common interests; be disciplined and educated enough; steadfast in upholding true and noble principles of life, even in the world of politics; refuse to be the slaves of the movement or the system, but by their spirit create out of it a true spiritual value for the nation. Slowly but steadily has the theory of human rights dawned upon the self-awakening mind of the modern womanhood of Japan. More intense, more convincing, however, has been the power of experience rising out of the furnace of human affliction of womanhood and motherhood. Experiences have given women the conviction that after all the first step of their development in the future lies in the legal and political emancipation. It is only when woman is fully recognized before law as a human being, woman, wife, and mother as well as citizen that she is able to start on the true development and emancipation of womanhood in education, industry and other professions, health, social welfare, and in government of still a higher and nobler level. Women in government can be of real value when the significance of this is virtually realized. It is indispensable indeed, therefore, to have a sound knowledge of law and government and politics. The true value of women's suffrage lies not in the system itself, but in how women make use of it."

BASIS OF HINDU MOSLEM UNITY.

(By MR. S. D. CHITALE).

Facts which are arrived at for the sake of pacts and without fully realising their implications are pacts worth being kept in the lumber rooms to be eaten by worms. Unity that is bought never lasts but unity that is based on justice and logic has a sure and permanent foundation. Hindu Moslem Unity is sorely needed to-day without which the political progress of this country is practically stagnated. The constant religious war between the major communities is a great distraction from applying all our resources to further our political cause and attain the liberation of this land. The magnitude of this problem can easily be understood by the immediate suspension of all aggressive political measures during the non-co-operation days.

In this article I shall try to deal with this question as an Indian first and Indian last. It shall be my endeavour to try to find out logical basis for Hindu Moslem Unity. I have decided not to make any reference to the political side of this question and shall therefore confine myself only to the religious aspect.

Main causes of the tension are, (1) Cow killing, (2) Music before mosque and (3) conversions on both sides.

COW KILLING.

No Hindu leader of a following and standing objects to cow-killing so long as thousands of cows are every day slaughtered in the slaughter-houses at Bandra, Kurla and other places. What the Hindus object to is the parading of sacrificial cows. The susceptibilities of the Hindus are greatly hurt by parading an animal which they worship and adore, for sacrificial purpose. The Aga Khan the other day at the All-India Moslem Conference at Delhi gave a very good piece of advice to the Moslems by requesting them to reconsider their decision on this important question in the light of events which have taken place in this country. He challenged the Ulemas and Moulanas to show if the sacrifice of cows is enjoined by the Shariats. If, however, even in spite of this, Moslems want to continue this practice they should at least kill cows in closed doors.

On economic and agricultural grounds however, its is absolutely necessary to preserve cows and buffalos.

MUSIC BEFORE MOSQUES.

The prohibition of Music before Mosques has no logical backing and besides the custom is not prevalent all over India. In some towns music parties pass undisturbed in front of mosques all the twenty four hours. In some towns it is prohibited at certain hours and in some it is totally prohibited. There is no general rule. Places where music is totally prohibited are those where Moslems once possessed political powers. The argument that Moslems are disturbed while offering prayers by music is not logical. The Moslems have no objection to and are not disturbed by the noise of Motor horns, tram cars, railway whistles and death processions. The military and scout parades can pass in front of mosques playing bands. Moslems are not disturbed. It is only fair just and logical that Moslems should cease to object too music in front of mosques. The practice of stopping music in front of mosques does not prevail in other Moslem countries. On the contrary in some Moslem countries, Music is allowed to play inside the Mosques.

CONVERSIONS.

Moslems need not be perturbed by Shudhi and Sangathan Movements. If Moslems have a right to convert Hindus to their faith it is only just and fair that Hindus should possess the same right to convert Moslems to their faith. How can Moslems say. "We shall convert Hindus to Islam but Hindus ought not to convert Moslems to Hinduism"? Both the communities have a right to carry on missionary work. The Hindus have every right to organise themselves and bring the different castes together. The Moslems need not be afraid of it.

These alone are sure and logical basis for Hindu Moslem Unity. A pact signed on any other basis than these is bound to be a failure and must remain a dead letter.

INTEREST AND USURY IN ISLAM.

(BY A MUSLIM).

Islam interdicts both lending and borrowing money on usurious interest. But unfortunately Indian Muslims, specially merchants freely borrow money on interest, but abhor lending money, keeping money in Banks on interest. There are hundreds of accounts in the Government Savings Banks not bearing interest and also heavy fixed deposits in the Banks. I attended, while I was in Calcutta, a meeting of the members of an important charitable Muslim institution of that City which has deposited a very large amount in the Bank without interest. The question of recovering interest was discussed in the meeting and the few bigoted members opposed the proposal that the interest should be taken and utilised in the construction of a new building for that institution. One of the leading merchants, who had already contributed large sums of money from time to time and latterly replenished the funds of the institution, questioned the opposer whether he was aware that the amount of Rupees Five Thousands which he paid as his donation to the institution and which was accepted by him along with others was out of the interest he drew from the Bank on his fixed deposit. The poor man became speechless when this revelation was made.

IS BANK INTEREST AND USURY?

In the early times of Islam when the popular ideas were against usury, wealthy people, being afraid of insecurity of property, deposited their money with goldsmiths and merchants dealing in precious stones, paying them a fee for taking money into their custody. These merchants kept this money along with their precious stones in specially constructed rooms and also employed watchmen to guard those rooms. When the deposits accumulated, these merchants instead of allowing the money lying dead with them, began to lend this to merchants and traders and obtained profits. This system of lending money developed to such an extent that with a view to induce others to deposit money they allowed a small profit to the depositors out of their profits. Then the question arose whether profit of this kind was permissible although usury was strictly prohibited in Islam. To lend money on abnormal interest was considered sinful by the Muslim Divines. But purchasing anything such as property etc. and getting a profit out of it was not considered irreligious. To illustrate this principle by a concrete example would simplify the problem. If a man lends another a thousand rupees on the condition that it should be repaid with rupees sixty as interest the lender nodoubt commits a sin, but if the same person buys a house the rent of which is Rupees five a month, he does not commit a sin in taking the rent which is a profit on this investment. Investment of money in property received a further development, when the investment of money in agriculture and trade with a view to the enhancement of profits was declared permissible. This is exactly the present day banking system, which is grossly misunderstood by a majority of Indian Muslims. The profits given by the Banks can on no account be considered as "interdicted interest" or placed in the category of usury prohibited in Islam. It is to be regretted that the modern banking system was not known in the beginning of the progress of Islam, otherwise the Muslim Divines would not have stigmatized it with the name of "interest" and placed insurmountable obstacles in the way of the financial prosperity of Muslims as a whole. The Banks will be well-advised if they would unite and come forward for the solution of this difficulty staggering the Muslims in these hard days of economic troubles to root out the word "interest" from their books and substitute the word "profits" for it, as an encouragement to thousands of Muslims to deposit their money in their Banks.

AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY.

AT LUCKNOW.

The Age of Consent Committee arrived at Lucknow on 18th January and examined eight witnesses.

Dr. Miss Douglas, who is in charge of Lady Kinnaird Memorial Hospital, Lucknow, in a written statement, maintained that there was a gradual strengthening of public opinion against early marriage. Witness considered 14 years as too young for the Age of Consent, and advocated the raising of both the age of marriage and the age of consent to 16.

Mrs. Ahmad Shah and Mrs. Shriniti Mitter, who appeared on behalf of the Lucknow Women's Association preferred raising the age of marriage and the age of consent to 18, but for the time being would be content to have the age fixed at 16. They said that if a marriage law was passed a consent law was necessary. Witnesses insisted on deterrent sentences for infringement of the marriage law. Mrs. Mitter urged that the maximum penalty should be five years' imprisonment, while Mrs. Ahmad Shah favoured two years. They added that the parents of both sides, as also the bridegroom, should be punished.

Pandit Saligrama Shastri was for fixing the age of marriage at 12, but suggested the postponement of consummation by three years. This, he said, was a compromise between the advanced and the orthodox schools.

Dr. Murphy, Medical Officer in charge of Dufferin Hospital, Lucknow, stated that girls should be at least 16 years old before consummation of marriage.

Raja Suraj Baksh Singh of Kashanda was of the opinion that the age for marital connection should not be less than 14. Witness did not favour a consent law.

The Hon. Raja Sir Rampal Singh shared the view of the previous witness, but he strongly advocated the raising of the age of consent in non-marital cases to at least 16 and even 18.

Dr. Dube, Health Officer, Lucknow, produced figures showing that mortality among women between the ages of 10 and 15 and 15 and 20 was three times higher than that among men of the same age.

OUDH CHIEF JUDGE EXAMINED.

Six witnesses were examined by the Age of Consent Committee on 19th January.

Dr. Lakshmi Sahai preferred a marriage law to a consent law, fixing fourteen years as the minimum age for the marriage of girls.

Mr. Justice Wazir Hussain, Chief Judge of the Oudh Chief Court, said there was no imperative injunction in the Koran against marriage or consent law. There was nothing suggestive even in the Shariat against such a law. Legislation was more or less unnecessary among the Muslims. Girls of the higher classes among them were married at about 17 or 18 years of age and among the lower classes at 14 or 15. Broadly speaking the witness was against marriage legislation as it was likely to be resented by the people. The desired reform could be had by social evolution through mass education. Among nearly 60 per cent. of the population early marriages and early consummation were common. If there was to be any legislation 22 should be the minimum age for boys and 18 for girls.

Syed Hussain, Vakil of Fyzabad held the view that legislation should be passed forbidding marriages below 16. There was no religious injunction among Muslims either for or against marriage law. Early marriages were disastrous to the Indian nation and it was the sacred duty of every Indian to put a stop to them.

Dr. C. B. Adderley the next witness adduced instances of the evil effects of early marriages.

Mr. Justice Gokranath Misra would have both penal legislation fixing a higher age of consent for marital cases and legislation for a minimum age for marriages. Public opinion, witness added, was in favour of both kinds of legislation. As far as witness knew, there was no religious injunction in Hindu books of law sanctioning the consummation of marriages before puberty. The witness would put the age of consent at 16 years.

Dr. S. S. Nehru, I. C. S., District Magistrate, favoured legislation fixing both marriage and consent at 14. He was against early marriages but he was not enamoured of late marriages. His experience in America was that due to co-education girls and boys came into close contact and between the ages of 15 and 18 formed companionate alliances with the definite understanding not to have issue. In Russia he found, among the higher classes, that girls and boys contracted unions in the same manner, while in Germany unmarried girls after 21 were often left to themselves to earn their living and took recourse to secret prostitution. The witness considered 14 as a safe age limit.

In the course of a joint statement before the Age of Consent Committee on the 21st, Mr. V. N. Mehta and Mrs. Mehta advocated legislation fixing the age of marriage and the age of the consent at 15 in marital cases and 18 in extra-marital cases.

Mr. Mukundilal, Deputy President, United Provinces Legislative Council, said that the fixing of a higher age of consent would not help unless the marriageable age was altered. Public opinion he declared would welcome both.

Mrs. Phulavati Shukla, Secretary, Oudh Women's Conference, urged that the age of consent should be raised to 16 in marital cases and 18 in extramarital cases.

Khan Bahadur, Sheikh Nasarullah, retired Deputy Collector, favoured retaining the age of consent as it existed now. He would not even fix by legislation the minimum age for marriage.

Rai Bahadur Thakur Mashal Singh of Hardoi declared that early consummation of marriage was not due to any religious injunction but it was due to a vicious social convention. In his opinion unless a minimum age for marriage was prescribed by Statute, mere raising of the age of consent would be ineffective.

Nawab Sajjadali Khan, M. L. C., preferred penal legislation fixing a higher age of consent.

The Age of Consent Committee held their last sitting in Lucknow on January 22. Two witnesses were examined. Mr. Shafaulmulk Hakim Abdul Hamid, on his evidence, stated that a change in the present law was unnecessary.

FAACING FACTS.—INDIA'S UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM.

In 1923 a scheme for prevention of unemployment was submitted to the Government of India as a constructive proposal sincerely to provide work for the unemployed. The scheme aimed at the well-being of every boy and girl that enters upon the battle of life, and a living wage for every workless man and woman without any distinction of caste or creed, so as to give a feeling of security to all communities by granting them financial help for economic advancement without involving any cost to the State, by raising funds through the sporting spirit of the public for the prevention of unemployment.

It is no crank idea, but a very carefully considered and well-balanced scheme to create new wealth, and it strikes at the root of the unemployment difficulty, but Government suppressed the scheme, as it did not fit in with schemes of British Imperialism, vide their D.—1770, P. 1923, dated Simla the 13th of June 1923, and since then India has been inundated with workless men and women, aided by those vested interests and the other profiteers under their so-called retrenchment schemes in Railways, Mills, Factories and Firms, and by victimisation in strike areas regardless of the starvation and suffering of the workless, with a view to stabilise the poverty of the Indian masses on a permanent basis, because a socially strong India would also be a much stronger political India demanding Dominion Status and Independence.

It will be remembered that in August 1927 His Excellency the Viceroy in his speech before the Joint Legislatures stated: "I should welcome it as evidence of a firm resolve to leave no way unsearched that might disclose the means of rescuing India from her unhappy state". But in order to shift responsibility, the Government of India in their letter No. D.—2157/27-P., dated Simla 5th August 1927 on the subject—unemployment in India—stated that the question is one for the consideration of the Local Governments.

The Government of Madras was accordingly approached on the subject for sanction for raising money, controlled by a responsible Committee, for the prevention of unemployment through the sporting spirit of the public. The Government in their reply No. 2992-A-1, dated the 15th November 1927 stated that for puritanical reasons, lotteries raising money in aid of the unemployed are illegal, although to the ruin of the people there are all over the country innumerable bucket-shops and gambling sports clubs which are permitted, so as not to affect to their detriment those older and more swell clubs by drafting any law which shall operate against the "bucket-shops".

Every reasonable person will admit that it is neither pernicious nor an offence against society to raise money in aid of the unemployed through the sporting spirit of the public, and millions of rupees will be forthcoming for the purpose. But Government considers that it is not good politics for those in power to permit any kind of a Republican Congress to control so big a thing as the "money trust" involved in the scheme, especially as the Revolving Fund embodied in it would in a few years run into several crores of rupees, which would very naturally consolidate the classes and the masses to the Congress, and make far more difficult the paths of all British Imperialists who seek to keep India in bondage. In effect it would force the Government to kennel the organisers of the scheme.

It will also be admitted that the miserable state of the unemployed millions in India who are willing to work, but have no money to undertake any work, is a condemnation of our rulers which every faithful historian will be called upon to pronounce. Our rulers are wilfully blind to the fact that prevention of unemployment will transform the conditions in India from disastrous dissensions to unity, goodwill, peace and prosperity among all classes and creeds. Any other remedy will be merely temporary political patchwork. In these circumstances, can anyone be surprised that India is now demanding independence and severance of British connection.

J. E. ROSAIB.

A HINDU ON MUSLIM SOCIAL LIFE.

Professor S. V. Puntambekar, M. A. (Oxon) Barrister-at-Law, writes in the Banares Hindu University Magazine:—

The principles and forms of Muslim social life differ from those of the Hindus. Though their society is based on and imbued with the tenets of their religion like that of the Hindus, the principles underlying their social organisation and social beliefs are absolutely different from those of the Hindus. The ideal Islamic social system is based on the principle of the equality of man. Every Muslim is equal to every other not only in the eye of his religion but also in that of his society, polity, and law. There is no Varna or Jati system to create differences of high or low, touchables or untouchables, whites and blacks amongst the Muslims. There is a social equality of men of all races, along with the spiritual equality of all true Muslims. But this theoretical social equality was not actually followed by Arabs in their relations to and treatment of non-Arab Muslims whom they called clients or Mawalis and gave less of social and political privileges. Intermarriages, or giving of higher political posts were not appreciated, but condemned. Arabs were proud of their noble blood and were not in favour of the equalitarian ideas and movements (Shubiyya) of non-Arab Muslims. The same tendency was observable in other races when they were converted to Islam and acquired political power and prestige in a community or a country. The tribal or racial conception did not fully yield to the religious conception of equality. Hence we find today a number of restrictions on and prejudices against the ideas of social equality amongst Muslim peoples. The system of slavery did continue amongst Muslims, though their lot and position was much improved as soon as they became Muslims. The children born of a slave-girl had the same rights as those born of a lawful wedlock. There is hardly any recognition of illegitimacy of birth in Islam. There is no sin attached at the birth. A man does not inherit the sins of his parents or caste or colour. He can become equal to another in this very life by his own exertions. There is no caste stigma or honour. In the Islamic fold there is the doctrine of the brotherhood and equality of man. In spite of all these theories and injunctions of the Muslim Faith, Muslim society in India as elsewhere is faced with a number of social evils born out of human nature and the past and present human associations of the converted. There are a number of injurious customs, superstitions and beliefs which require eradication before Muslim society can become strong and efficient to take a proper part in the modern life.

The religious basis of every approved custom, belief or institution has given the Muslim Society a hidebound character. It will be extremely difficult to change this and to create in it a progressive character. It can throw away accretions but it cannot give up sanctioned or traditionally accepted codes and customs of life. This mediaeval mentality based on religion is detrimental to the ideas and needs of modern life and progress. It is the greatest problem facing the Muslims in their economic, social, and political regeneration in modern times. Islam is a peculiar blend of the ideas of human equality and brotherhood and of theological absolutism. There is no right conceded to the Muslims to go against the revealed injunctions and interpretations of Koran, against the sayings of the Prophet, the traditions of the Khalifs or the Imams, and the Futwas of Ulemas. The temporary time-value, place-value and human value of social systems are not recognised. Hence it suffers and stagnates like other religio-social systems. It is admitted by thoughtful Muslims that there are social evils amongst them and they require reform. Whether the reform is to lead back to the correct teachings of an ideal Islam or to run forward on the lines of the necessities of modern humanitarian and international social life is also a great problem with them. But that reform must come is fully recognised. Whether the past ideals are to dominate or the future or modern needs are to inspire will depend on the temperament of the reformers. The social evils which have arisen in Muslim society in India are due to the fact that it is not composed of one race or one culture. A number of tribes or castes at different levels of culture, custom and outlook have entered its fold. And when they did this against their will or conviction or out of necessity they retained many traits and customs of their old civilisation, society and mentality. In such cases Islam was merely a superficial super-imposition. Most of the old ideas, prejudices and superstitions have remained amongst them. This was bound to be the result when conversion was not based on persuasion and conviction, but force or necessity. Conversion in such cases was a nominal one without any real root in the minds of the converted. Therefore there is a constant and a permanent need of social reform amongst the Muslims of India.

To-day they suffer from caste ideas in spite of their ideas of equality and brotherhood. There are no intermarriages and there are discriminations amongst Saiyads, Shaikhs, Mughals, Pathans and others. Intermarriages are very often avoided and are less common. There is the pride of noble birth and there is the difference of culture as well as colour. But one good thing there is. There is no injunction against intermarriages and therefore this reform can come about easily by education and levelling of cultural ideas and customs. One of the great evils admitted by Muslims is the system of close marriage. There is a sort of clan endogamy resulting often in close marriages of first cousins. These lead to physical deterioration and perpetuation of hereditary diseases. Intellectual and moral power is consequently stunted. Unless a system of exogamy is worked out this evil is likely to remain in such cases. There is again the evil of early marriages prevalent in the society. There are a number of pre-puberty marriages. They have to be stopped, and only those marriages have to be encouraged which take place when the full development of the boy and the girl occurs at the ages 20-25, and 18-20 respectively. Early marriages lead to early physical deterioration or death. Early widowhood also results from it. Polygamy is another evil but it is not now largely prevalent. Equal treatment of all wives is not possible. It creates domestic discord and misery. Hence it must be given up. No religion enjoins polygamy. It may in certain cases permit it. There is a steady rise of public opinion against it. Ill-assorted marriages have also to be prevented between the very old and the very young. They lead to immorality, discontent, and ideas of sale and purchase of brides as cattle. The problem of widow remarriage is also facing the Muslim society, though there is nothing in the religion against it. Perpetuation of a life-long widowhood is tyranny on an unwilling woman. This custom is prevalent in the middle and higher classes. The force of custom or prejudice against it has to be minimised, and the social taboo on widow remarriage has to be removed. Divorce has been allowed by Islam, and marriage is not considered indissoluble. But it was not necessarily favoured. Man has however the power of putting an end easily to the marriage relationship which has proved unhappy, but woman has no power to do it except through a very complicated legal procedure.

The last but not the least is the great evil of Purdah which perpetuates the seclusion of women and their confinement to home where all contact with the world of life and progress is tabooed. It seems to have partly a religious sanction, and has partly the force of custom behind it. To the extent to which it prevails in northern India it is inhuman. It is utterly condemnable, whether religion, custom, need, man's jealousy or the idea of woman as property or slave has sanctioned, maintained or perpetuated it. Text and tradition must be set aside and the woman freed from her life-long prison. Want of fresh air, of social intercourse, of free movement and of joy in life are some of its evils which deteriorate her mind and body and consequently the growth of a healthy and good progeny are impossible. Stunted growth, physical deterioration, and a life of idleness are the result. The evils of joint family system are also visible amongst Muslims. A number of relations remain idle and feed at the cost of one or two earning members. The problem of excessive expenditure on marriages is also facing the Muslim and causing a lot of economic misery. The position of the women, excluding the evil influence of Purdah system and consequent want of education and prevalence of idleness and stunted growth, is better as regards the right of inheritance in the family property of the father and the husband, the right of divorce, remarriage, and endowments. But still the outlook of man on woman is similar to that on property or a slave. It is a mediaeval or feudal outlook. It must give place to the idea and love of companionship, a sort of equal partnership in all virtues and undertakings of domestic and social life, and thus invigorate man, woman, and child to a new conception and joy in the life of the world.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Civil Aviation in India:—A new stage in the development of civil aviation in India was reached to-day when the Bombay Olive Flying Club held an inaugural meeting of its members. Sir Victor Sassoon is the Chairman. The club has ordered out two de Havilland Moth machines of the type of that which recently established an endurance record in England. Sir Victor told the Associated Press representative that the Olive Flying Club wanted to try and win the prize of an aeroplane offered by Sir Charles Wakefield to the first aeroplane club in India to obtain "A" pilot certificates for its pupils. It was among the objects of the Club to have a country club at Juhu, a suburb of Bombay, where members could have all the amenities open to other clubs. The Club has so far enrolled 100 members. There were 30 pupils on the waiting list of instruction in flying which would start from tomorrow. Sir Victor added that a man of average ability would be able to obtain the pilot certificate "A" with 12 flying hours of training.

The Daniel Hamilton Prizes:—Four prizes are offered to the best essays on the undermentioned subject.—How the co-operative movement, combined with the issue of a sound paper currency based not on gold and silver but on organised reliable labour and the assets which that labour will create, will provide plenty and employment for all, and unify India? The four prizes mentioned above are as follows:—1st prize Rs. 500; 2nd prize Rs. 300; 3rd and 4th prizes 100 each. These prizes are due to the generosity of Sir D. M. Hamilton, whose interest in India, especially in the poor of India, has been so admirable through a long life of much useful service to our country. The competition is limited to 'South India' which includes the Madras Presidency, Mysore, Travancore and Cochin. The Prizes will be awarded on the judgment of. 1. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramadoss Pantulugaru B.A., B.L.; Santhome, Madras. 2. T. K. Doraisamy Iyer Esq., M.A., Professor of Economics, Presidency College, Madras. 3. K. T. Paul Esq., B.A. O. B. E. National General Secretary, Y. M. C. A., 5 Russell Street, Calcutta. Candidates should submit their essays by registered post to Mr. K. T. Paul before the 1st of March 1929.

England Karachi Air Mail:—The Imperial Airways have completed arrangements for opening in April the 5000 mile Empire air mail route from England to Karachi. It is proposed to extend the route to Calcutta and from there to Australia via Singapore, while a branch line from Capetown will connect with the main line at Cairo. The journey will be made in daily stages. Passengers and mails, leaving London on the morning of the first day will fly to Basle. They will take train under the Alps to Genoa, where on the second day they will embark on an all-metal flying boat and cross the Mediterranean to Cairo. That flight will take two days. The flight across the desert from Cairo to Basra via Baghdad will be made on the fourth day, while the journey down the Persian Gulf to Karachi will take the remaining two days.

Unemployment Among Intellectual Workers:—Dr. P. P. Pillai, the Director of the International Labour Office writes:—The International Labour Office, Geneva is at present conducting an enquiry into unemployment among intellectual workers. The enquiry is planned on a comprehensive scale and all important Governments, including the Government of India and the Provincial Governments, are being approached for information on the subject of the enquiry. The object aimed at is not merely the collection of statistics, but also the discovery of the causes and effects of unemployment and the examination of possible remedies. The report is being expedited so that it might be ready for submission to the second session of the Advisory Committee on Intellectual Workers which is to be held towards the middle of 1929.

Women Police for Calcutta:—"Trained women to search women, girls and children and take the sole custody of women prisoners in the lock-ups, be attached to the Calcutta police force as in other advanced countries," was the suggestion made by Mrs. Stanley, late Superintendent, Women Metropolitan Police, London. There was an ample field for trained women police at the railway stations to protect the stranded women passengers from the hands of women traffickers, she said.

Uttering Holy Mantras:—The following eminent Brahman-Pandits have deliberately given their opinion in favour of Pandit Madanmohan Malaviya's attempt at initiating every Hindu irrespective of his caste or creed. Many there who purposely, for some interest or other, so long raised a hue and cry against this movement of great importance will now feel the intensity of the fact that they are not the only trusted custodians of the Shastras and they will find that without their aid it is also possible for the nation to get a sanction from the renowned Pandits of India who have really felt an urgent need for propagating the movement and to carry on constructive works in the shape of Sangathan. They have accordingly issued a manifesto (Vyavastha-patra) to the effect that every Hindu, be she a woman or a Shundra has the equal right to utter the holy mantra with Pronava, i.e. 'Om Namas Shivaya' and 'Om Namas Narayanaya'. The most important amongst those who have signed the manifesto are: Mahamahopadhyaya Ohandicharan Smritibhushan, M. M. Kamakhyanath Tarkavagis, M. M. Promatha Nath Tarkabhushan, Pandit Parvati Charan Tarkatirtha, Ramrup Vidyavagis, Ramnath Nyayabhushan, Kalkamal Smritiratna, Dakshinanarayan Smrititirtha, Ramgopal Tarkatirtha, Surendranath Tarkaratna, Taranath Smritiratna, Abibhushan Smritiratna, Ramranjan Smrititirtha, Kunjabehari Nyayabhushan.

Parliament of Religions:—For the first time, a Parliament of Religions will be held at Calcutta on January 27th. Dr. Rabindranath Tagore will preside. The aim of Parliament is to combat the prevailing apathy towards religion in modern Society and promotion of world peace and human brotherhood. Distinguished speakers will participate.

Live Bomb Practice:—A Free Press message states:—The Peshawar correspondent of the "Statesman" reports a terrible tragedy which occurred at Peshawar yesterday morning when two Indian Officers and twelve men of the Poona Horse were killed and one Officer and 14 men were injured by bombs dropped from an aeroplane in error. It is feared that the one injured Officer and one injured man will die. A number of R. A. F. aeroplanes detailed for live bomb practice apparently misread the ground signal signifying "Do not drop bombs" the presence of a white stone on the ground near the signal seemingly translating it into "All clear."

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. s. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukkerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isable Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.

THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

THE Central Bank of India Ld.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	„ 1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	„ 1,00,00,000

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches:—(1) Mandvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Behman Street.

Mofussil Branches:—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharra, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Asansol, Chandausi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jamnagar.

London Agents:—The Midland Bank, Ld.

New York Agents:—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents:—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts:—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

JANMABHUMI.

An English weekly

Edited by

DR. B. PATTABHI SITARAMYIA, Machilipatnam, (Andhra)

and

Known for its Impartial and just studies

in

Indian Politics

and for its advocacy of Truth and Principle irrespective of party proclivities.

Rs. 5 a year.

For a free specimen copy please send your address:—

To the Manager

'JANMABHUMI'

Machilipatnam,

(ANDHRA).

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhoea and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Write: Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN
MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.

MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,

49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE

WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up ,, 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund ,, 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFFS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,

MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondaicha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000.

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ... Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :--BARODA.

Branches :--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhevnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwaraka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS :

- Sir Lalubhai Samaldas Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
- Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
- Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent, Ahmedabad).
- Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
- Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
- Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26 C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs. a. p.
Inland ...	5 0 0
" " Foreign ...	5 8 0
Single copy ...	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

SPECIAL OFFER

Dharamsi Morarji

Woollen Suitings to be Cleared at Exceptionally Low Factory Prices 54" Wide from Rs. 2/8 per yard.

GRASP THIS OPPORTUNITY.

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.

Cruikshank Road, Fort,

Premier Swadeshi Emporium.

The Cheapest House.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business :—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches :—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents :—SEDGWICK, COLLINS (Agencies), Ltd.,
 16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL :

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,
 General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to :—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

- EYE DISEASES... ... Try "Akhyacura."
- RING WORM Try "Kurain."
- ASTHMA Try "Asthma Cure."
- STRENGTH Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil."
- TONICS Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills."
"Parrish's Chemical Food."
"Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo-
phosphites of Lime."
- GONORRHŒA Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C.
Copaiba Cum Buchu."

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :-

Madras Presidency & Mysore :
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan :
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Saturday and Sunday at 9-30 P.M. and Sunday at 5-30 P.M.

R. B. SALISBURY'S "QUAINTS"

will present

"THE GIRL FRIEND"

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Time:—4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

Pathe Gazette No. 1565-66.

Advertisement film of the Studebaker Car from the Swiss Engineering Company.

"TORRENT"

(A Metro-Goldwyn Picture)

Reels 7

Featuring

GRETA GARBO.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Time:—4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

Pathe Super Gazette No. 1565-66.

ANNIE LAURIE

I reel

(Weiss Bros. Song)

"WIFE WHO WAS NOT WANTED"

(Warner Bros.)

Reels 7

EMPRESS CINEMA

Time:—3-30, 6-30, and 9-30 P.M.

KING OF KINGS

Reels 18,

Extra Morning Show every Sunday at Empress and Edward at 10 A.M.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1929

No. 23

“I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard.”
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

General Booth and the Salvation Army. English Teaching in Japan. Prison Widows. Racial Problem in South Africa. C. P. for Higher Marriage Age. Bombay Municipal Election. Evidence on Age of Consent.	The Sarda Bill and the Government Attitude. That Men May all be Brothers. Some Points of Fact and Law. Independence. Age of Consent Inquiry. The Sarda Bill. News of the Week.
--	---

NOTES.

General Booth and the Salvation Army:—
The High Council of the Salvation Army requested General Booth to resign but he refused to do so. The Council thereupon wished to depose him and appoint a successor, but the General meanwhile obtained an injunction from the High Court restraining it from proceeding with the matter. At a subsequent hearing, the Judge suggested that this was not a suitable subject for being fought out in a Law Court and that the parties should come to a friendly understanding outside the Court. This was not accepted and the injunction has been renewed. The General, it is stated, will have an opportunity of addressing the High Council when it meets next. By resorting to a Court of Law, the General has estranged some of his strongest supporters, and there can be no doubt that ultimately he is bound to lose. The arrangement about the appointment of a successor, as Mr. Gladstone told the founder of the Army many years ago, is without a parallel in modern times. The conversation is recorded in General Booth's life by Mr. Harold Begbie from the General's own notes. “Gladstone asked, with a serious and somewhat apologetic air what the arrangements for the successorship were. William Booth explained how each General was to nominate his successor, giving the sealed envelope containing his name to the Army Solicitors: there was a deed to legalize this. Gladstone was deeply interested. ‘It was a peculiar position, he said, that we had taken up. Even the Pope, he suggested, was elected by a Conclave of Cardinals, and he thought we must go back to the sixteenth century to find an example of a system of personal nomination by the person occupying the post of authority similar to the one I have chosen’. The General mentioned a scheme for providing against the danger that would be caused by a General passing away who had neglected the appointment of his successor, or who, for some calamitous reason, had become incapable for, or unworthy of, his position, and for selecting a new General in an assembly of all the Commissioners, throughout the world. The General named one or two of the possibilities that might occur, and Gladstone added, ‘yes and the possibility of heresy would come under that category.’ It is under this scheme that the Council is seeking to take action in the case of the present General.

English Teaching in Japan:—Nippon is the name of a new Japanese monthly in the English language. It describes itself as independent and liberal and states that in it all phases of contemporary Japan will be accurately surveyed and analysed. The first number fully justifies these claims, and is an interesting and valuable record of important movements in Japan. In the following paragraph on the place of English in Japanese education, our contemporary deals with a question which is of current interest in India as well, and its observations will be widely endorsed by Indian educationists. Nippon writes: “English teaching in our secondary and higher schools has come to be critically considered lately, in the press, among educators and officials, and even on the street. Many, including the Education Department's own investigation committee, recommends the curtailment of the hours devoted to English in all our middle schools, some even suggesting making this subject an elective course. Others, however, including the teachers of English naturally, are opposed to such curtailment. But to us, it seems, the most essential point has been left untouched. It is not the amount of hours given to this subject that matters, but how it is taught. We have actually known scores of cases where students specializing in English literature and English in colleges and universities meeting great difficulty in making themselves understood, verbally or on paper, in the simplest form. Young men who boast of having read Shakespeare and Carlyle find themselves unable to write a simple sentence or understand a brief newspaper item. Once we heard of a teacher of English in a middle school making this very confession. Something must be wrong with our English teaching. Too much emphasis on grammar; insufficient ground work in the simple, practical, everyday English; mistaken idea that reading of long, complicated sentences from classical writers indicates progress—these may be some of the faults. There might be many others. Here is real work for educators.”

Prison Widows:—We have had for some time in Bombay a Legal Aid Society. The idea underlying the society is to render the Courts accessible to all classes and to enable the poor to obtain justice. We see from the Social Welfare, Toronto, that people in Canada are contemplating a further step—to form organisations to render help to the families of those who are sentenced to undergo imprisonment. The Welfare writes:—

“Every day in our newspapers, there are recorded paragraph tragedies hidden away in some inconspicuous cuous corner of the inner pages because of their seeming unimportance. "Mike Johnson, 362 Blank Street, father of four children, was to-day sentenced to serve two years for theft." Routine. Common. Inconsequential. But what of Mrs. Johnson and her four children during these two years? It is apparent to all who give any thought to the imprisonment of criminals that the heavier punishment falls on the convicted person. Federal authorities have long recognized the inherent injustice of this system, and the Honourable Ernest Lapointe has personally expressed his intention of taking action. Further Dr. Jamieson, Chairman of the Mothers' Allowance Board of Ontario, has recently drawn attention to the large number of pathetic appeals for assistance, which come to him from prisoners' wives, and has stated that he considers it imperative that something be done for them."

This is an aspect of the question which is very often lost sight of. A Society which undertakes this work is sure to obtain considerable public support and will be rendering useful work to the community.

Racial Problem in South Africa:—Mr. Max Yergen, the African leader who is on a visit to India as a delegate to the World's Students' Federation held recently in Mysore, addressed a gathering of students of Bombay in the Students' Brotherhood Hall on Tuesday evening on the "Constructive Racial Factors at present operating in South Africa". Mr. K. Natarajan presided. At the outset Mr. Yergen said he was carrying away with him pleasant memories of his visit to India. He acknowledged the cordial reception he had received in various parts of the country and the sympathetic hearing given to him in the numerous discussions he had with representative people regarding the colour situation in Africa. Mr. Max Yergen eulogised the contribution of the Indian community towards creating factors favourable to a lasting solution of the racial problem, and paid a warm compliment to the personality of the Rt. Hon. V. S. Sastri in this desideratum. He declared "no man has made a greater contribution in that direction than Mr. Sastri". His contribution to that country was generally something profound. The significance of Mr. Sastri's contribution was evidenced from the fact that a large number of Europeans were beginning to recede from a policy of antagonism which they were following until quite recently. This changed outlook, largely due to Mr. Sastri's personality, was really going to solve the hitherto unsolvable racial problem in Africa. As one of the great constructive factors that were working in that country was the coming together of men of various communities in a spirit of friendliness and mutual understanding, and that constituted the beginning of the bridging of the great gulf which existed to-day. The speaker concluded by paying a warm tribute to the Christian churches and the students' organisations which were contributing largely towards the solution of the problem in South Africa. The Chairman complimented the lecturer upon the illuminating address. Indians, he said, could justify their position in Africa only to the extent that their presence there helped the Africans, and if they were there as the exploiters of Africans they would forfeit their claims to the moral support of India for their activities in Africa. He asked Mr. Yergen to take with him the message that "we in India wish the greatest prosperity to our African brethren in their attempts to raise themselves to the full heights of spiritual and moral stature, and we expect the Indians to do what they can to help their African neighbours." He agreed with the lecturer that the truest method of bringing about the elimination of racial prejudices and the promotion of racial understanding was to multiply opportunities of spiritual contact among young men of different races.

C. P. for Higher Marriage Age:—The Central Provinces Legislative Council adopted unanimously at its current session a resolution recommending to its Government to convey to the Government of India its considered opinion that the legal age of marriage for girls and boys should be raised to 14 and 18 and that it accorded its support to Sarda's Child Marriage Bill. This resolution was moved by Mrs. A. Kale the only lady member of the Council who in her speech pointed out forcibly the evil effects of child marriage. "We are told", said Mrs. Kale, "that this is not only a social system but it has a religious aspect. We must first ask ourselves whether it is right to sacrifice thousands of children at the altar of religion." Mrs. Kale further observed that personally she considered the ages of 14 and 18 as too low but in deference to public opinion she did not press for a higher age limit. Even this moderate piece of marriage legislation which has been on the anvil of the Legislative Assembly for the last three years was shelved at the instance of the Government of India.

Bombay Municipal Elections:—One of the hopeful signs in the country is the growth of civic consciousness as opposed to politics. An instance of this is afforded by the City Municipal elections held on Tuesday. Out of the total 76 who have been elected 48 are Independents, 16 Progressives and 12 Nationalists. It is to be regretted, however, that ardent social workers like Mr. L. R. Tairsee and Mrs. Avantikabai Gokhale who is moreover the only woman standing for election, have not been able to retain their seats. We trust they will be coopted.

Evidence on Age of Consent:—We publish elsewhere the evidence collected from Moslems in Delhi by the Age of Consent Committee which had decided to hold two extra sittings there to elicit Mussalman opinion. We publish below the last of the evidence tendered to the Age of Consent Committee which shows that enlightened Moslem opinion is in favour of the reform:— "The Age of Consent Committee examined Moulana Hazrat Nizami who favoured legislation fixing the age of marriage but if it was not possible he favoured fixing the age of consent at fourteen or fifteen. He expressed the opinion that the fixing of the age of marriage did not go against the religious injunctions of Islam. In any case of a breach of marriage law powers should be given to Kazis to try those cases and fix punishment up to six months' imprisonment and a fine. In extra-marital cases the age of consent should be raised to eighteen. Moulvi Ahmed Sayani, Secretary, Jaliatulam-hind, said that the age of consent should be fixed at fifteen. He did not favour any law fixing the age of marriage.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1929.

THE SARDA BILL AND THE GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE.

The Bill introduced by Mr. Harbilas Sharda in the Legislative Assembly penalising marriages under certain age-limits of young men and women, has been postponed by a majority consisting of reactionary Hindus and Mahomedans and the official members en bloc voting under instructions from the Government of India. The history of the Bill may be briefly told. It was introduced in February 1927 and was referred to a Select Committee in the September session of the same year. It came before the Assembly as revised by the Select Committee in September 1928, and was postponed to the present session. In the interval resolutions supporting the revised Bill were passed at numerous Social and Women's Conferences and by many associations and other public bodies. It was confidently expected that the Bill, with the strong support it has received from the public, will be passed by the Assembly this time. The motion for postponement was moved by Mr. M. K. Acharya and was carried by 53 votes to 34. This is not the full strength of the Assembly, as many non-official members have not evidently yet gone down to Delhi for the session which opened only on the previous day. But the officials were in full strength and it is plain that the motion could not have been carried but for them. They number in all 29; leaving them out of the 53 who voted for the postponement, the non-official members who supported the postponement motion were 24 against 34 against it.

Mr. Acharya who is totally opposed to the Bill, urged the postponement of the Bill on the ground that they should await the report of the Age of Consent Committee. The Government of India in a communique which they have felt called upon to issue immediately after the division, explain that they adhere to and support the principle of the Bill, but in view of the intimate connection between the subject matter of the Bill and one of the main points, namely, the intra-marital age of consent, that has been the subject of enquiry by the Committee, they are of opinion that the report of the Committee should be awaited. In view of this belated apology, it may be recalled that in the circular letter accompanying the questionnaire issued by the Age of Consent Committee, it was expressly stated that the Committee's enquiry had nothing to do with the Sarada Bill and that whether the Bill was passed or not would make no difference to its enquiry. Why then this sudden change of front? In the first place, it is to be accounted for by the instinctive fear of the British Government of India of any substantial measure of social progress as likely to have a reaction weakening to its own position. It likes to deal with a static system as it is without the means of adapting itself to a progressive one. We have repeatedly pointed out that social reform is obstructed by the present political system, and the attitude of Government in the present instance is a crucial illustration. Apart from this general cause, there are other reasons which have no doubt inspired the delaying tactics of Government. It is frightened by the overthrow of the Amanullah regime in Afghanistan in spite of the fact that there is no analogy between the ex-king's reforms and the social reform movement in this country. They have also no doubt been unconsciously influenced by the consideration that the goodwill of the reactionary section of the Indian communities might stand in good stead in its opposition to the progressive nationalist forces in the impending constitutional struggle. Anyhow, the attitude of Government on this occasion must impel social reformers who are sometimes inclined to under-rate the importance of constitutional reform, to throw their full weight on the side of a substantial advance towards self-Government as early as possible. Without it the country must continue to stagnate socially and economically, as well as politically.

The Times of India which is not prone to disapprove of Government's action, commenting on their attitude to the Sarada Bill wrote: "Government had apparently not made up their minds when Mr. Harbilas Sarada moved consideration of his Bill; their attitude was not clear until the last minute when Government members decided to support Mr. Acharya's motion for postponement in the division lobbies. Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas's charge that "Government wants child marriages" is manifestly unjust, as the subsequent communique showed, but Government's strange silence in debate might well have given that impression. The whole world, since the publication of a certain widely discussed book, is watching India's efforts to reform her social life. It is deplorable that Government should have waited until after the debate to explain an action liable to be badly misconstrued both at home and abroad." It is worthy of note that the same paper not so long ago observed in another connection that the Government of India had escaped from the necessity of supporting the marriage bill by appointing the Age of Consent Committee. In the light of Tuesday's division that observation of our contemporary acquires a deep significance. The only conclusion possible is that the Government of India never seriously intended to support the reform and that they have adroitly made use of Sarada's Bill as a means of securing the support of Hindu and Mussalman reactionaries in the Assembly.

THAT MEN MAY ALL BE BROTHERS.

MEDITATIONS FOR THE YEAR.

V. VILLAGERS.

(By DR. CLIFORD MANSCHARDT, PH. D.)

The lives of the agriculturist and the villager are so closely related that in many respects they are one, and yet there are certain aspects of village life that can be treated best alone. An ancient student of human nature once observed that while man had been successful in taming beasts, birds, fish and serpents, he had never acquired the art of taming the tongue—the tongue is “an unruly evil, full of deadly poison”. Those who are acquainted with the village are inclined to agree with this opinion. The poison tongue, in the shape of gossip, is a genuine village nuisance and evil. In every village there are tale-bearers and trouble-makers, ever ready to pass on malicious hearsay. No reputation is safe, and nothing is too sacred to be discussed. Wherever a few are gathered together the tongue becomes unruly.

The reason is not far to seek. Men gossip because they have nothing worthwhile to do. More movements for village betterment; more study groups, libraries, music, dramatics, play; more village school teachers with social vision—these are the things that will result in improvement. The commonplace must be refined, and the nobler things exalted.

But if the village has an unenviable reputation for gossip, it also has a heart that beats with sympathy. In no other cross section of life is the same tenderness displayed in time of trouble. True it is that caste barriers divide, but true it is also that friendliness has found and is finding its way through these barriers. In certain circles it is customary to measure a man's greatness in terms of his wealth, but more and more men are coming to see that greatness does not consist in possessions. Many humble villagers, unknown outside their limited boundaries, are veritable princes in the realm of the truly great. The readiness to lend a helping hand, to speak a word of cheer or of comfort, to spend oneself for the sake of others, is a spirit that is alive in every village. Multitudes of simple folk are really “salt of the earth”—the preserving influence that is preventing social and moral decay.

One of the strengths and one of the weaknesses of the village is its conservatism. In every village the progress of worthwhile movements is hindered because of the weight of public opinion. The traditions of the fathers are regarded as of more importance than the dreams of the grandsons, and all save the strongest succumb. To overcome the inertia of a settled and stagnating public opinion is a task of the greatest magnitude. In a day when so many young men are turning their eyes to the city, is there not also the call to consider the claims of the village? If a man is in a position to serve his country without regard for financial remuneration, what better opportunity can be asked for than to become a village teacher, or to become a village doctor? And much more than recruits for the ever-growing army of unemployed office clerks in the city, we need intelligent agriculturists—young men of brains who are willing to devote themselves to the improvement of the villages. We need young men of faith—men who recognize the conservatism of the village, but who see in the impossible a challenge to action. In every village there are mountains to be removed, and it is the confident who must remove them. If there is any one prayer that men of all creeds should learn to pray together it is simply this, “O God, increase our faith!” And as faith increases, in direct proportion the village will grow strong through the increase of practical idealism in the lives of its members.

SOME POINTS OF FACT AND LAW.

II. CONVERSION.

(By MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI).

Of all things human acclaimed by all parties everywhere as right lawful and legitimate, there is no more fruitful source of grievous heart burning between man and man, community and community, and nation and nation, than the innocent happening which is commonly known as conversion.

Those who are competent to speak in such matters say that ‘conversion’ is a spiritual process and means nothing less desirable and nothing less praiseworthy than a ‘turning about and going along with the Divine Will’. It is the turning round from a worldly life. We are told, and learning to appreciate the higher life. The ‘convert’ is therefore he who has passed the turning point and actually ‘turned round’, having learned to set his affections on the ‘higher things’ and not on things of earth.

Thus far, we may take it, all people in the world are more or less agreed. But what is exactly the ‘Divine Will’? What are the ‘higher things’ on which one should set his affections? And above all, practically speaking, what are the verbal formulas and rituals and outward forms in which those affections should be declared and manifested in one's earthly life, when one is not prepared to cut oneself off altogether from the claims and entanglements of the world and become a social recluse? These are the questions on which each religious community is convinced that it and it alone has found the most complete and absolutely true answers. And it is not prepared to hear or examine with a detached mind the solutions favoured by the other communities because it is certain that no other answers but its own can be true or godly.

Every community therefore which finds the religious creed of its own special patent or patronage accepted and adopted by a new recruit from the ranks of another community hails the transfer of allegiance to itself as a true ‘Conversion’, and loves to point to it as the latest proof of its own unquestionable excellence. But the other community, whether it be Hindu, Moslem or Christian, instead of rejoicing that a human soul has learnt to 'turn away from things of earth' and 'set its affections on a higher life', feels mortally hurt. It is unable to get over the feeling that its own wisdom has been mocked, its authority set at naught, its affections trifled with, its internal economy and harmony cruelly disturbed and its honour wantonly outraged. And all this is done by whom? By a befogged and besotted nonentity who understood neither earth nor heaven nor his own true interests, and whose strength was only the strength of its own generous love for him as a child of its bosom. It has therefore no hesitation to denounce the change that has come over him as sheer 'perversion' or 'corruption', and hold it up for general opprobrium as sinful folly. And, if only it could feel sure that the aid of the secular legal weapon of the State was at its back, it would be very happy any day to rub the truth of its own favourite spiritual brand into the backs of all doubters and backsliders and their impudent instigators and abettors with a firm and spirited hand.

The world has happily survived the gruesome days when Catholics could lawfully persecute Protestants, and Protestants in their turn, when they happened to come to power, could lawfully persecute the Catholics, with the most inhuman cruelties in the infallible name of religion. Honest innocent men and women can no longer be thrown into the dungeon for presuming to hold religious or scientific views not approved by the men in political power, or tortured with the rack, the thumb-screw, the iron boot, red-test pincers and other lawful instruments of brotherly persuasion to have their eyes and hearts opened to the beauties and sweetness of true religion. Nor can the hardened sinner who is impervious to such tender blandishments, and manages to survive them all, have his mangled remains burnt alive at the stake that his soul may be mercifully saved from eternal damnation. The horrible days of the Inquisition are happily ended. Crucifixion as a corrective for religious heterodoxy has gone entirely out of date, at least in its literal sense, and in the countries to the east of the Mediterranean, except in rare cases, stoning to death has also ceased to be a favoured legal method of impressing upon a heretic the truth of the teaching that 'there is no compulsion in religion'. To the east of the Indus and its south, expulsion from caste is no longer the terrible heart-breaking personal disaster that it invariably was at one time, resulting as it did in hopeless degradation and cruel isolation from all amenities of tolerable human existence. At any rate, it no longer involves forfeiture of property and disinheritance by operation of law as if physical death had removed from the world the unfortunate offender against the trivial and inequitable rules of caste-discipline, which alone have survived in their vicious strength the ravages of time on the health and political fortunes of Hinduism.

All that old order is happily changed now. We may still hear sometimes of a schoolmaster in republican America being prosecuted as a heretic for teaching the Darwinian theory of Evolution which does not tally exactly with the Biblical story of Creation; or of a Cape Town Professor in the semi-republic of South Africa being criminally run in for doubting that every word in the Bible is divinely inspired and true. We may even hear sometimes of religious persecutions in modern India through the Criminal Courts under cover of section 68 of the Indian Christian Marriage Act, with the approval of good Christian men like the learned author of "the Law applicable to Christians", as explained by "Fairplay" in the Indian Social Reformer of 17th November 1928 (vide I. L. R. 17, 20 and 40 Madras, and 40 Allahabad.) But, generally speaking, within the wide limits of the British Empire all citizens, subjects and officers of the State, with the only exception of the King and Queen of Great Britain and those who aspire to succeed them on the British throne, are now entirely free under the law to profess what religion they please and hold what opinions they like. In India Act XXI of 1850 has removed all Caste Disabilities affecting rights to Property and Inheritance by reason of one's "renouncing or having been excluded from the communion of any religion or being deprived of caste." This Act was followed in 1858 by the Royal Proclamation which declared the equality of all people in the eye of the law and the equal right of all subjects of the crown to hold any office which they may be otherwise qualified to fill irrespective of their race, creed or caste. These two together have liberated human conscience and made progress possible in this country to an extent undreamt of in those dark days when Ram Mohan Roy stood alone at the threshold of the 19th century as Martyr and Prophet to herald the dawn of a New India.

The new law at once facilitated 'conversions' from one religion to another. But within the Hindu fold itself it could bring about no brotherhood, nor any brotherhood between the religions. It only gave additional zest to the war of creeds. The first to reap the fullest benefit from it were the Christian Churches of the West which held numerous standing armies in the Mission field in India in incessant action, to extend on earth the sovereignty of their particular creed. And the freedom which they gave at one stroke to the lowliest of this land from the depressing disabilities imposed by the Hindu caste system has given them their greatest title to glory and to the sincere gratitude of all Indians irrespective of caste. No one would, of course, like to belittle or wish anything but success to such humanitarian and patriotic endeavours as are being made in various parts of the country by Hindus of all castes to liberate their humbler co-religionists from the soul-cramping iron-mantle of 'untouchability.' Yet the view expressed over quarter of a century ago by Dewan Bahadur Srinivasa Raghava Aiyangar in his Report on "Forty Years' Progress in the Madras Presidency," has not entirely lost its force or validity even now. It was the honest and sincere opinion of that orthodox Brahman Statesman that the shortest and perhaps the only feasible way of freeing the Panchama from perpetual thralldom and making a man of him was to persuade him to repudiate his faith in the Hindu religion and become a Christian. That the Panchama has not taken to this course on a far larger scale than the statistics indicate and that he still clings with pathetic earnestness to the faith and the lot of his forefathers, does honour to the innate nobility of his soul and proves the tenacious grip of tradition on the human mind. But, surely, it bears no witness to the claims of Brahmanism or Non-Brahman Hinduism on his affections today. From every point of view, the Panchama may with reason cry out any day: "Off with the Hindu faith, comrades; we have nothing to gain from it but contempt and degradation, and, if we throw it away, we have nothing to lose with it but our chains!"

INDEPENDENCE.

(MR. S. G. MANDRE.)

The idea of independence is a product of civilisation. Independence seems to get greater prominence in Society and we get a clearer and clearer conception of independence as the level of civilisation rises higher and higher. But then, the clearer our idea of civilisation and independence the more we break through the complex web that surrounds independence the more do we realise that there is nothing like independence in this world. It is all inter-dependence; there is nothing like independence—at any rate we the beings of this Material World have not moved in a world where there is complete independence. Man has not been born by himself, he has not grown up by himself, and most probably he has not thought by himself; in a word he is hopelessly dependent. How is it then that as we get more and more civilised we hanker more and more after independence? How is it that our civilisation drives us to seek something which we cannot attain, something which is beyond the reach of us poor human beings? Well, this is a digression; let me go back to my original theme.

Yes, there is nothing like independence in this world; it is all mutual dependence. The theory of Relativity is the greatest achievement of our scientific brains. It is the greatest achievement not only in the Scientific world, but also in the Philosophical world, in the Social world, in the Political world, nay whatever world we may consider, the supreme theory—that of Relativity—applies with equal force. Search the Universe through and through, nowhere will you find isolation, nowhere will you find an individual, an animal, or even a plant, working by itself and for itself.

Just see. Here is this book. It is lying on the table. Remove the table and it will fall. Where will it descend? You will say, to the earth. But you know that if there had been a cavity instead of the solid earth, it would have descended still lower, until it would have come to the centre of the earth. But coming to the centre of the globe is an impossibility. However that may be, the book is not independent. It is dependent. Nay, it is not only a case of dependence only, but one of inter-dependence. The book is dependent upon something else, and most probably, that something else is dependent on the book. Independence is impossible for the book. It cannot say 'I am here now and I will be there alone.' Because with the earth it is turning in an ellipse round the sun; and it is also turning on the earth's axis. Sometimes it will be in the place where a book in America was, and sometimes it will find itself in the place occupied by a book in Africa. It is and will be in the place of everything else and everything else will be in its place. This is independence indeed! The poor book is moving every hour, every minute, nay even every second, yet it thinks it is independent. Yet it thinks it is completely isolated. How queer!

Take another part of the Society. There is the Editor, his journal, and his subscribers. To get the money with which to start his magazine the Editor has to get the help of the shareholders. And the shareholders to raise the money are dependent on their own business. But leaving that aside, in the present day world, we require the help of so many to start the journal. Let one of the shareholders or one of the directors think he is independent and act accordingly, trouble will arise. If one director thinks he is independent and shows his independence, I am sure the other director or directors will also show their independence. And in trying to realise their supreme independence, there will be a tussel, that will result in the journal being stopped if every one continues to exert his independence. But let everyone think that he is inter-dependent; let one director think that the other is quite essential and let the other think that the first is also essential; in a word let them realise their inter-dependence and work harmoniously, by means of a nice give and take, yes, let them do this, and the journal will be a success. Again the magazine is dependent on the public and the public in a way are dependent on the journal. The journal gets the money and the public get their information. Not even that, but the public mould the journal through their appreciation or depreciation of the matter published by it, the encouragement they give it; and the journal moulds the character of a nation and makes it what it is. England owes its peculiar characteristics to its journals and papers—partly at least. The same thing holds good with America. It is also true that the English and American papers and journals owe their influence and their intellectuality etc. to the tremendous encouragement given by the public. There is inter-dependence here also. If to-day the journal thinks it is independent and the Editor cares not to give the public what they want—if he overlooks them as being outside his world—to-morrow his journal will be no more. He can rarely, in fact never, act according to his whims and fancies. The Editor therefore, caters for the public and the public pay for him and his journal. This is the rule. Inter-dependence is the law. Efface the rule and the consequences will be deadly.

Let us now see if the English and American political worlds are independent. There are the Prime Minister and the President. They come into the Parliament and the Congress because the people put them there. None of them is not there merely because of his brains. His brains help him no doubt. But his people help him to get his seat and he gives them the benefit of his brains to achieve their wants and desires. If to-day he acts independently of them, if he cares a jot for their wishes, to-morrow he will have to go back. So he is now in the Parliament or the Congress. His extra-ordinary brains make him the leader of his party. He gives his party the benefit of his extra-ordinary brains which none of them have got, and they give him the benefit of making him the leader. Thus and thus, he rises until he becomes the Prime Minister or the President. At every step there is inter-dependence. As Prime Minister or President he has to guard the interests of his nation. He must realise that he is in the Prime Minister's or President's chair on account of his nation; and work for the welfare of the citizens every minute almost. Here again the nation makes use of his statesmanly qualities and pays for the use by making him the Prime Minister or President. The Prime Minister or the President is a citizen, a supreme citizen, and he must act in that spirit, if he wants to succeed. If on the other hand he exerts his independence and acts independently of his Cabinet, his Parliament or Congress, in a word his nation—there will be no place for him at the head of his nation.

So runs the chain of inter-dependence. Inter-dependence is supreme. Our civilisation is striving after ideal inter-dependence. Ideal inter-dependence is the goal and when we reach the goal—of perfect, sweet, harmonious Inter-dependence—we will have reached the goal of perfect, ideal civilisation, and not till then. It seems to me, that we the beings of this Universe are so many beautiful pearls, and inter-dependence sweet; harmonious, perfect inter-dependence—is the golden thread that runs through them all. As thoughtful Coleridge says, we the human beings of this Universe are harps—say beads—diversely framed we are diverse creatures—no one is like the other—yes, we are diversely framed beads, through which runs the thread of Inter-dependence arising out of Love—not the love of the flesh, but the 'Supreme Love' yes, it is this that binds us together into a harmonious whole. It is this ideal inter-dependence that exalts our Civilisation.

THE AGE OF CONSENT INQUIRY

AT NAGPUR.

The Age of Consent Committee arrived at Nagpur on 24th January and commenced its sittings in the afternoon with Sir M. V. Joshi presiding. Out of seven witnesses only two were examined that day. Rai Bahadur P. C. Bose, President, Jabulpore Municipality, was of opinion that girls should not be allowed to be mothers before 16 years of age even if they appear healthy. The attainment of puberty was not a sufficient indication of physical maturity. He believed that 16 was the proper age when a girl in India would be competent to give intelligent consent. Early marriages, he added, were unknown among the educated classes of the Province. It was among the illiterate classes that social reform was necessary. He preferred to rely on strengthening of the penal law to secure the object in view.

Dr. Lalitmoan Sen, Health Officer, Nagpur, said that minimum age of marriage both for girls and boys should by legislation be 16. Examined by Mr. Mohammad Yacub witness said that 15 or 16 was the age when Indian girls could bear the burden of maternity. Answering to a question of Mr. S. C. Mitra, witness said that from his experience he found that the girls in Bengal attained puberty earlier than in the Central Provinces and this he believed was due to the climatic conditions. He was not in favour of any penal law.

The next day the Committee again met at 11 a. m. with the addition of one more member, Mr. A. Ramswami Moodliar. Six more witnesses who appeared before it were examined. Mrs. Tarr who was examined stated that she was interested in Child Welfare work. Asked by Mrs. O'Brien if she had seen cases of early motherhood she said she had seen many. She declared that these girl mothers were not sufficiently mature and in many cases they were not able to supply mother's milk to the infants that were born to them. Frequent pregnancy also was a cause contributory to the high mortality among infants as also among women. Mrs. Tarr said that the best age for consummation of marriage would be 17.

Mr. Laxmi Narayan, Retired District Judge, who was next examined said that early marriage was an evil but that as raising the age of marriage would meet with opposition the marriageable age should be fixed at 12 and consummation should take place at 16. In the Marwari community the marriages did not take place at 8 or 10 as before but at 12. Personally he thought that 16 was a proper age to be fixed. Extra-marital age he thought, could be fixed at 18. Within marital stage the girl had no voice and she had to yield to outside pressure. To a question of the Chairman, the witness stated that a law was necessary for age of consent. He was not prepared to wait until social customs changed with time as that would be very slow. He said that the offence should be cognizable and punished with fines and not imprisonment. Pandit Thakurdas Bhargava inquired if the fines in such cases would be calculated as a sort of marriage expense by the Marwaris; and the breach of law would be common to which the witness stated that they abhorred fine and would not do such a thing. Maulvi Muhamud Yakub wanted to know if the foreign Government should interfere in their domestic affairs; the witness stated that if it was for their good he saw no harm.

Mr. G. T. Meshram, Vice-President of the Civil Station Sub Committee, Nagpur, stated that he was a Mahar by caste and that he was speaking for them. The law of consent as it then existed was not known to the people. There were early marriages in his community and the consummation took place even before puberty. Early marriages were of recent growth. He thought 14 would be a better age for marriage as well as for consummation. Asked by Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz if fixing the age at 14 would lead the girls astray, the witness stated there was no such danger. Maulvi Mohamad Yakub wanted to know if woman police would bring to light more cases of the infringement of the law, the witness stated that it was not likely but the force would be a good protection to the girls from seduction. He was of opinion that women Magistrates were not necessary but that separate matrimonial Courts would inspire confidence.

Miss N. R. Mukkadam, Lady Superintendent, Daga Memorial Hospital, was then examined. She also stated that there were many cases of early motherhood among the lower classes. The girl mothers could not take proper care of their children; were not able to feed the babes on the mothers' milk. She was of opinion that 17 or 18 would be a suitable age for marriage. Pandit Thakurdas Bhargava elicited that the attainment of puberty was different in different parts of the country. So the marriage age shall have to be fixed at different parts, taking into consideration that a certain period must necessarily elapse before proper consummation could take place. The witness replied that it was not necessary. The marriage age could very well be fixed at 17 or 18 despite the irregularity in the attainment of puberty.

Giving evidence before the Age of Consent Committee, Mr. R. M. Deshmukh, Ex-Minister said that the age of marriage should be fixed at 14. In his opinion minimum age of marriage was the only way of checking early maternity. He suggested that there should be state-regulated prostitution as he believed this will lessen cases of infringement in extra-marital relations. He advocated the system of registration of marriages by sub-registrars. He favoured state interferences even if these went against the injunctions of Hindu shastras. He approved of fixing the age of consent at 16 or even higher.

Mr. B. G. Khaparde, M.L.C., was against putting down any minimum age of marriage by law. This should be left to the good sense of society. He did not like any legislation as this would disturb peace and interfere with the judgment of the public generally. He was against any legislation on social matters. He would roughly put down 16 as the age of consent. He depended on education and social propaganda for progress of social reform. To secure object in view he did not believe in strengthening of penal law.

Mrs. Anusuya Kale, M.L.C., put down 16 for the marriage of girls and 18 for boys. Early marriages should be penalised and the penalty should be imposed upon parents' guardians and priests. She was against fixing the age of consent in marital cases. She thought that legislation was necessary to mitigate the evils of early maternity and consummation. She added that the age of consent if at all necessary must be raised to 16 or 3 years after puberty.

Rai Bahadur Ganeshdas Kundanmal, was totally against any legislation on the matter of age of consent and marriage and felt there was no necessity to amend the penal law.

Mr. S. K. Ogle, Depressed Class representative, wanted 14 as the age of marriage and the age of consent to be 15.

Mahamahapadhaya Rao Bahadur Sadashiv Jairam representing the Hindu orthodox school opposed any legislation that would infringe on the old customs and practices of Hindus. He preferred punishments for extra-marital cases only.

Examined by Pandit Kanhaiya Lal, witness agreed as a middle course to fix both the age of consent and marriage at 14 to avoid friction and dissatisfaction.

Mr. Abdul Kadir, pleader, Amraoti, felt that the present law needed no revision. Further it was not necessary to have any age of marriage. Muhamadan girls attained discretion not till they were 18 or 19. He recommended strict maintenance of birth and death registers for finding out the real offenders. He wanted social reforms instead of any penal law.

AT DELHI.

The age of Consent Committee reassembled at New Delhi on the 28th Jan. the members present being Maulvi Muhammad Yakub, the Deputy President of the Assembly, and Messrs S. C. Mitra, Shah Niwaz and Bhargava. It is understood that so far the consensus of Hindu opinion has been in favour of fixing the age of marriage at 14 the while the evidence given by women and women's organisations is generally in favour of that age being fixed at sixteen Moslem opinion, on the other hand, regards such legislation as an act of interference with their religion, and it was to elicit further Moslem opinion on the subject that the Committee decided to hold two more sittings at Delhi. They to-day examined Maulana Mazharuddin, editor of Allaman, and expect to hear the views of Mufti Kifayatullah and Khawaja Hassan Nizami tomorrow. Maulana Mazharuddin did not favour legislation for fixing the age of marriage, as he held that it would be against the tenets of Islam, but he was equally against early marriages and early consummation of marriages. The witness thought that propaganda for social reform was the only way of putting a stop to the evil. The Maulana thought that fifteen or sixteen was the proper age at which Indian girls could give intelligent consent, but legislation fixing the age of consent could never be effective and would always remain a dead letter. In conclusion the witness agreed with Mian Shah Niwaz that if the trial of age of consent cases was before Panchayats and Kazis, unassisted by the police, he would withdraw his objections to fixing the age of consent by legislation.

THE SARDA BILL.

Amidst unofficial applause, Rai Saheb Harbilas Sarada moved that the Bill to regulate the marriages of children amongst Hindus as reported by the Select Committee be taken into consideration. He began by saying that he was confident that the Government had given its full support to the Bill and it was also backed up by the public opinion, expressed in the various conferences and meetings including those of Indian ladies who emphatically demanded an immediate enactment of the Bill. There was a remarkable unanimity of opinion among women. Hundreds of meetings had been held to support the bill and even Marwari women had joined in supporting the bill. Continuing he said that the Bill had been sent for eliciting public opinion and the opinions so far, received support from the majority of officials and non-officials. The majority of the Brahmins of Madras Presidency even had supported the legislation of such a measure. Eighty-seven opinions had been received from the Madras province alone, mostly from the Brahmins of that province. Non-Brahmins, however, supported the Bill. The Brahmins formed only three per cent. The Madras High Court was the only High Court where the majority of judges opposed the bill on the ground that it interfered with religion. Mr. Sarada said that High Courts of Bombay and the Punjab had expressed themselves in favour of the Bill while the other High Courts had expressed no opinion. Where large communities are concerned social legislation was the only remedy by which evils could be rooted out.

Leaving out Madras the total number of opinions received amounted to 167, and out of this 128 were in favour of Legislation as proposed by the Bill and only 18 were against it. The Madras Legislative Council passed without any dissentient vote in favour of this Bill and this serves as a crushing reply to those who held that Madras is opposed to the Bill. Among Local Governments, that support the Bill are, Bombay, Burma, the U. P. Punjab and the C. P. The Chief Commissioner of Ajmer-Merwara also has declared himself in favour of such legislation.

Considering the wide support received one would be led to think that India had advanced socially and over and above all this support the proceedings of the Age of Consent Committee would serve as an indication as to how the general public viewed this Bill. The witnesses before the Committee had unanimously demanded legislation on the lines of the present Bill. Proceeding he quoted certain Sanskrit verses from Shastras and said in the name of religion many a crime is being committed. This Bill was not a mere measure of social reform. He regarded child marriage as a crime and he appealed to the House not to degrade the name of religion.

In summing up the appeal for the adoption of the Bill, Mr. Sarada spoke in moving terms. He said: "I deny that child marriage is a religious obligation. Even if it were, no man has a right, in order to save himself from going to hell, to condemn another being for a life of suffering. A great responsibility rests on this House. The people in England and America are watching how you will deal with this Bill. Writers like Miss Mayo and politicians like Mr. Winston Churchill have declared in plain terms that India cannot be granted self-government so long as she tolerates such acts of oppression. (Voices from the European and Central Muslim benches: "Hear hear".)

People in America want to know if after 150 years' rule the Government still tolerate these tortures. If women were members of this House, the Bill would get through. I have received telegrams from women members of the Central Provinces Council intimating that the Council too passed a resolution supporting this Bill and finally let me repeat the language of a great man that no nation can be half slave and half free. Those who will support the Bill will render true service to the country. (Applause from all sections of the House).

Concluding, Mr. Sarada, said a great responsibility rested on this House and the people were watching with interest this piece of Legislation. Then, in all humility, he appealed to the members of the House, who had come into the House to serve the country to pass this Bill.

Mr. Acharya then moved the postponement of consideration of the Bill until the Age of Consent Committee report had been published. He said the Madras Council resolution on the Bill was passed in two minutes without any discussion. They should not therefore attach importance to it. "It is one of the anomalies of modern life that truth is so far from what appears on paper. (Laughter). That such a resolution was not even discussed for ten minutes in the Madras Council makes the prospect of Government by Councils in this country not very bright. (Renewed laughter). But my reason is different. This Assembly having agreed to the appointment of the Age of Consent Committee—some people call it 'the Committee of Propagand'—however, having appointed it, we must await its report."

THE VOTING.

When his motion was put to the vote Government members practically en bloc and so also Central Muslim and European groups (latter with exception of two) decided to vote for the postponement. There was also a spirit in the ranks of Independents. Nationalists and Congressmen and some like Pandit Malaviya remained neutral. Pandit Motilal and Mr. Jayakar, were, however, foremost to record their votes against the postponement but Mr. Sarda found the battle lost and his only chance now lay in narrowing down the majority of the other side. Pandit Motilal came to his rescue at the last minute and persuaded some of the neutrals on his side to vote against the amendment. Two European members too went with Mr. Sarda. They found that the lobby teller had already passed the list on to the Secretary but as there was time yet to record the vote, the list was taken back to the lobby and about a dozen others registered their votes on the side of Mr. Sarda. But even then the chances could not improve. Mr. Sarda was aware of this and as Mr. Crerar came up to him to explain the latest decision taken by Government, Mr. Sarda was seen angrily protesting against the Government backing out of what he thought was its promise to support the Bill. Indeed, a small crowd gathered round them and Sir Purshottandas too used the opportunity to ejaculate: "Government wants child marriages".

The scene ended with the President announcing that Mr. Acharya's amendment had been carried by 53 votes to 34 and there followed shouts of "Shame, shame" from reformist benches.

Mr. Chetty rushed out to the lobby and characterised the Government conduct as disgraceful.

The following communique has been issued by the Government of India:—

"In view of the amendment that was carried in the Legislative Assembly to postpone the discussion of the Child Marriage Bill till the report of the Age of Consent Committee was published, the Government desire to make clear their attitude in the matter. They adhere to and support the principle of the Bill, but in view of the intimate connection between the subject matter of the Bill, and one of the main points, namely, intra-Marital Age of Consent, that has been the subject of examination by the Committee, the Government are of the opinion that the report of the Committee together with the evidence taken by it, should be awaited. The main object on fixing the age of child marriage is to fix the minimum age at which marriage may be consummated, but the minimum age of consummation is and should be the same as the intra-marital Age of Consent. In view of the very large amount of evidence, which, as Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda himself pointed out, has been laid before the Committee on the question of Child Marriage, the Government consider that much would be gained by fixing the age in the Child Marriage Bill after the report of the Committee has been received. Government's intention is that the Bill should again be taken into consideration after the publication of the report, and for this purpose, they will arrange that adequate days be made available for the discussion of the Bill at the next Simla Session".

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Child Marriages in the United States:—The general thought prevails that child marriages occur in the United States in rare instances only—that the problem is a negligible one. But the New York League of Women Voters calls attention to facts that indicate otherwise, writes Life and Labour Bulletin. The United States census shows that there are now living in this country 350,000 women who were child brides—that is married before they were sixteen. The majority were not foreign born, as is the general impression, but native-born, and with native-born parents. In New York State the present law permits the marriage of girls of fourteen, and up to 1926 girls of twelve were permitted to marry. Pennsylvania has recently raised her minimum age for girls from twelve to sixteen; Kentucky has raised the age from twelve to fourteen, and Minnesota which has had a minimum legal age of fifteen raised it to sixteen last year.

The Employment of Married Women:—Industrial and Labour Information, Geneva, writes:—The Bordeaux Trades Chamber, in the belief that the proper place for married women is the home, but that circumstances often make the earnings of such women essential if the family budget is to balance, has recently endeavoured to solve the problem of the married woman worker by means of what is called a Bureau de Mi-temps (Half-Time Office). The object is to encourage the creation of part-time employment in industry and commerce which will enable married women, and especially those with children, to work drily for a few hours and still have time to attend to their household duties and children. The experiment would seem to be the first of its kind in Europe, and the result will doubtless be watched with interest.

Refuge for Homeless Boys:—In Rangoon an experiment is about to be made by the Y. M. C. A. in establishing Street Boys' Refuge for homeless boys who spend the night on the streets and are in danger of learning criminal ways. Under the new plan sleeping accommodation for about fifty boys will be provided in a building after the style of the war time huts of the Y. M. C. A., to be erected in the old hospital compound facing Fraser Street. There will be ample space in the centre of the hall for evening games and entertainments, such as boxing, physical culture, gymnastic games, lecture and concerts in various languages. There will be a workshop where boys will be able to earn a few annas by chopping wood or picking cocconut fibre, with which to purchase a cheap wholesome meal on the premises. There will also be a classroom where a night school for the boys will be held. Good bath-rooms and sanitation, as well as a warden's quarters, will complete the plan. Government has promised to provide half the cost of the building and half the recurring cost, while the National Council of Women has also promised to give its support to the scheme, both by raising funds and by helping in the management of the hut when it is established.

Indian Students in Edinburgh:—A recent communication from the University of Edinburgh to the Secretary, University Information Bureau, Bombay, points out that some students still go to Scotland from India without having the necessary qualification for entrance on a course of study at the University. The evil consequences which have frequently been noted in such cases are much to be deplored, and the Edinburgh University Court recommends strongly that no Indian student should come to Scotland without having passed at the least the Intermediate Examination (First Class) of an Indian University or some other examination which will confer exemption from the Preliminary Examination of the Scottish Universities.

Rifle Shooting Training:—It is learnt that Dr. Moonje has added one more to the many plans which he has recently suggested for making the Indian youth more martial. He has completed preliminary arrangements for the formation of a provincial rifle association for the C. P. and Berar which is regarded as the first association of its kind in India with the object of making rifle shooting a national game for the Indian youth. Dr. Moonje is very sanguine about securing a licence for the association, as he says that there is already a provision for granting licence to such associations under article 82 of the rules made under the Arms Act. He has also taken care to enlist the co-operation of most of the leading men of all communities in the province, either as honorary, life or ordinary members of the association. Raja Bahadur Baghoji Rao Bhonsle and Raja Laxman Rao Bhonsle have been elected patrons; Sir G. M. Chitnavis, Sir Shankerrao Chitnavis are amongst vice-patrons. It is stated that the association by means of encouraging rifle shooting will try to remove some of the defects inherent in the educational system of India which are held largely responsible for lack of the power of leadership, the spirit of initiative, a sportsman-like character, love of discipline, by evoking a spirit of self-confidence which rifle shooting is said to beget. The objects of the association have been defined as the revival and development of a healthy desire for big or small game shooting, organisation of a propaganda for popularising shikar, promotion and popularising of rifle shooting, provision of rifle ranges in different parts of the province, promotion of miniature rifle clubs, particularly in connection with high schools and colleges, and organisation of shooting competitions and allied sports.

Eighth Bombay Temperance Conference:—The Hon. Secretary the Bombay Temperance Council has issued the following:—The Bombay Temperance Council purpose holding the Eighth Bombay Temperance Conference in Bombay about the end of February, 1929. Invitations have accordingly been sent out to the various Temperance and other Associations throughout the Presidency to elect delegates to take part in the deliberations of the Conference. If any Society has not been officially approached through inadvertence, the Secretary thereof is requested kindly to communicate with Mr. D. D. Gilder, Princess Street, Bombay, 2. The subjects to be discussed are Rationing and Statutory Reduction, Auctioning of liquor licences, Advisory Committees, Propaganda etc.

More Support:—The Panjab Temperance Federation of Amritsar has written to us that they also have passed the resolution in support of the Rev. T. F. Edward's memorandum. The resolution was published in our issue of January 19.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. a. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukkerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isable Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.
THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
 Royapuram, Madras.

JANMABHUMI.

An English weekly

Edited by

DR. B. PATTABHI (SITARAMYYA, Machilipatnam, (Andhra)

and

Known for its Impartial and just studies

in

Indian Politics

and for its advocacy of Truth and Principle irrespective of party proclivities.

Rs. 5 a year.

For a free specimen copy please send your address:—

To the Manager

'JANMABHUMI'

Machilipatnam,

(ANDHRA).

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly: Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Write: Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up " 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund " 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,

MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nashik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :—BARODA.

Branches :—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabholi, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadl and Dwarka.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	Rs.	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS :

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Nalb Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26 C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs.	a.	p.
Inland ...	5	0	0
" " Foreign ...	5	8	0
Single copy ...	0	8	0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26.

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

SPECIAL OFFER

Dharamsi Morarji

Woollen Suitings to be Cleared at Exceptionally

Low Factory Prices

54" Wide from Rs. 2/8 per yard.

GRASP THIS OPPORTUNITY.

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.

Cruikshank Road, Fort,

Premier
Swadeshi
Emporium.

The Cheapest
House.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches :—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents :—SEDGWICK, COLLINS (Agencies), Ltd.,
 16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates:

Inland Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
The Indian Social Reformer,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

Mahatma Gaudhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY.

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,
The Hindustan Review.
PATNA, E. I. R.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

COMING SHORTLY

The Wonder Show of the Age.

VITAPHONE AND MOVIE TONE

Pictures that talk and Sing.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Time:—4-30, 6-15, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

Pathe Gazette

“SPEEDY”

A Comedy de Luxe.

Featuring

HAROLD LLOYD

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Time:—4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

Pathe Super Gazette

KOKO SONG CARTUNE NO. 24.

“JINGLE BELLS”.

“FASCINATING YOUTH.”

EMPRESS CINEMA

Time:—3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

“TORRENT”

(A Metro-Goldwyn Picture)

Featuring

GRETA GARBO.

Morning Show on Sunday at 10 P.M. at the Edward and Empress Cinemas.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

10 Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1929

No. 24

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Bombay under a Cloud.
The Public Safety Bill.
Government Tactics and Social Reform.
Government and Social Reform.
Individual Action and Legislation.
An Amicable Settlement.
Travancore and Cochin.

That Men May all be Brothers.
Some Points of Fact and Law.
Hinduism and Christianity in India.
Marriages and Economic Pressure.
Eradicating the Social Evil.
Government's Breach of Faith.
The Weeks' Reviews.

NOTES.

Bombay under a Cloud:—On Monday morning the citizens of Bombay learnt from their newspapers that on Sunday evening a number of mill-hands had set upon a group of Pathans and that some of the latter had been killed in the encounter. The official communique issued on Thursday narrates as follows the sequence of events:—"Since the beginning of the month rumours were current in Bombay that children were being kidnapped by Pathans in a red motor-car and being taken to Baroda to be sacrificed in the construction of a bridge there. After full enquiry Government announced on February 5th that there was absolutely no ground for such rumours, and that no cases of kidnapping had been reported to the police. But unfortunately, these rumours led to a number of assaults on innocent persons. Two Sindhi gentlemen and their Pathan motor-driver were assaulted on the 2nd, and on the 3rd a Greek, a Muhammadan, five Pathans and a Hindu carpenter were set upon by crowds and injured, and the last died in hospital. On the 4th, on an alarm of alleged kidnapping, the workers in the mills and railway workshops came out and assaults were made on Pathans in various parts of the city throughout the day. On the 5th there were still further attacks on Pathans in various places, and about noon a large number of Pathans, who upto that point had shown great forbearance, came to the Commissioner of Police to ask for protection. While the Commissioner of Police was interviewing the leaders, a number of the remaining Pathans started a disturbance near Sheik Memon Street and assaulted the police, but this disturbance was soon stopped. To assist the police in maintaining order, 100 British troops were then called out. During the afternoon there were other assaults, murders and disturbances, and Deputy Inspector Priestley of the Bombay City Police was killed in endeavouring to prevent a clash between a mob and some Pathans on the Parel Road. Fifteen Pathans, three other Mahomedans and four Hindus were killed or died in hospital on the 6th. On the 6th, however, crowds of hooligans began to gather especially in the Bhendy Bazaar area and refused to disperse when called upon and committed unprovoked assaults on passers-by. One such crowd, after stoning a military lorry refused to disperse and the military had to fire eight rounds. Later another crowd similarly refused to disperse and the military had again to fire—eleven rounds—and six of the crowd were in consequence taken to hospital injured. The total number of killed and injured during the last few days reported up to mid-day to-day (7th) is 33 killed and about 200 injured." The number killed on Thursday is stated to be 32 and that injured, 120. To-day (Friday) is regarded with anxiety, as it is the day of prayer when Mussulmans congregate in mosques, but more troops have been brought into Bombay, and the Government communique ends with the assurance that there are ample forces in Bombay to deal with any serious disorder and with the earnest advice to the citizens to go about their business and to avoid assembling in crowds in the streets. The authorities throughout have acted with the most praiseworthy restraint and this has had the effect of rallying public opinion to their support as was demonstrated by the number and representative character of those who attended the meeting called by the President of the Bombay Municipal Corporation at very short notice. The speeches made were practical and to the point, and the following resolution was adopted for immediate action:—"That a Central Executive Committee with the President of the Corporation as Chairman be appointed immediately to organise methods for the restoration of peace in the city, to appoint immediately Peace Committees in the different wards of the city and to draw up a programme of work and propaganda for these Committees. That the Peace Committees to be in communication with the various heads of Jamats and localities and seek their co-operation and help in removing the misunderstanding and restore peace. Further that leaders of all communities should tour together in the affected areas and distribute hand-bills and issue placards and posters to allay public apprehensions."

The Public Safety Bill:—This Bill, intended to suppress foreign Communist propaganda in this country by deporting foreign propagandists was introduced in the Legislative Assembly at the last Simla session. It was thrown out by a majority of one, owing to the remissness of two members in not being in their places at the time of the division. The Bill, with a new clause empowering the Executive to confiscate remittances from abroad for Communistic purposes, was re-introduced on Monday in the Assembly, and after a debate extending to four days, was sent to a Select Committee by a majority of 61 for to 50 against. The speeches showed that the main ground of opposition is the general terms of the Bill which does not specify Communism and may, therefore, be applied to any persons or remittances disliked by the Executive. This danger is a very real one in this country where the Executive is not in the Central Government even partially responsible to the Legislature, and the Bill should be so revised in the Select Committee as to confine it strictly to the specific object in view. There is a widespread feeling that Communism, apart from its economic implications, has been the means of promoting the cult of violence as against that of non-violence, and that it should, therefore, be controlled. If the Bill is recast so as to do no more than this, it will be a useful measure, but if it goes beyond this and interferes with the freedom of exchange of political and intellectual ideas and sympathy between India and other countries, it will be a distinctly retrograde measure. The British Government in India is a foreign Government, and everything which accentuates the feeling against foreigners as such necessarily undermines its own position. The officials who supported the Bill have exploited to some extent the anti-foreign sentiment latent in the country with scant regard to the consequences.

Government Tactics and Social Reform :— Earl Winterton, Under-Secretary of State for India, replying to a question in the House of Commons this week about the action of the Government of India in supporting the motion for postponing the Sarda Marriage Bill, is reported by Reuter to have said that the Government of India cordially approved the Bill and assured the House that the Government of India "in this and other bills have regard for the feelings of the House." He pointed out that there were circumstances difficult to explain in reply to a question where the Government in the interests of a certain Bill must adopt certain tactics. The "tactics" was, evidently, to obtain the support of reactionary Hindu and Mussulman members to the Public Safety Bill. In this Government met only with scant success as Mr. M. K. Acharya, the mover of the postponement motion, remained neutral in the division on the Public Safety Bill.

Government and Social Reform :—We publish elsewhere extracts from newspapers all over the country on Government's attitude towards the Sarda Bill. Further indication is given of the general loss of faith in the Government of India's professions of sympathy for reform in the current issue of Young India. A lawyer refers to the advice, given by Mahatma Gandhi to a young married man who had sought his help, to repudiate the marriage and follow the "light of reason and conscience," and asks Mahatmaji to modify his advice in view of the fact that though the boy is free to obtain a divorce the girl would not be able to remarry as under the Indian Penal Code she would be guilty of bigamy. Mahatmaji replies :—"I do not need to correct my advice. The only code that guides a reformer is his own conscience in the last resort. The marriage I had in mind was in reality no marriage at all. But should it be held otherwise in a court of law, the law would be corrected through the righteous suffering of a few if public opinion had not already secured either correction or disuse. If Hindu society were to wait for statutory help in order to get rid itself of its innumerable abuses, it would have to wait for years."

Individual Action and Legislation :—"The history of reforms", continues Mahatmaji, "shows that legal recognition has come after the fact, not before. We know too from experience that where law is imposed upon an unwilling people, it has failed in its purpose. Where the so-called husband who has never even seen the so-called child wife releases her from a supposed obligation, the sword of the Penal Code need not be hung over the devoted head of the poor girl, who probably does not even know that she was ever married. Moreover let people like the lawyer correspondent read the signs of the times. Society bids fair to be disrupted if much needed and overdue reform has to be indefinitely delayed by legal peditries and subtleties." Whilst understanding Mahatma Gandhi's impatience at those who show hesitancy in accepting so drastic a remedy, we must confess that the contention of the lawyer friend seems to us to be perfectly valid and one to which Mahatmaji might have paid more serious attention. The solution suggested by the Mahatma would, we are afraid, leave the girl-wife in a far worse plight than she is even now. The instances of widow marriage legislation in India and the act in England permitting marriage with deceased wife's sister show that often legislation precedes the fact. Individual action cannot be regarded as a substitute for legislation. Mahatmaji should know that the reformer does not write on a clean slate and that society is not a machine but an organism and violent handling of any part might dangerously affect the vitality of the whole. Marriage in its civil consequences affects not only the husband and wife but, a fact which Mahatmaji seems to forget for the moment, their children and their children's children for many generations. And a consequence of the repudiation of the marriage law may be to bastardise many generations. The late Mr. Frederick Harrison who was certainly a very advanced thinker, writing of the relations of George Elliot whom he held almost in reverence and who was his personal friend, with Mr. George Lewes, said that, while the motives of both were of the purest, their relations cannot be approved. "It is meet sometimes", he writes in his Choice of Books, "that some suffer for the people. The moral law is infinitely more precious than the personal happiness of any; and the sufferings of exceptional cases must be borne with resignation, lest harm befall the sanctity of every home, and 'the moral currency be debased'".

An Amicable Settlement :—We congratulate Government on their sympathetic note on the Gujarat College strike which concludes as follows :—Government realise that a number of innocent students have thus been led into a course of action fraught with danger to their own careers. Government can now see no way of saving them and their parents from such consequences except by a concession which can leave no doubt of their goodwill to the students. They have therefore decided, on the recommendation of the Director of Public Instruction and the Principal of the College, to cancel the notice issued on the 22nd December and to relieve the students from any penalty which it is in their power to remit. As a result of these orders, the postponed terminal examination will not be held. This practically removes most of the difficulties in the way of the students and it now remains only for the University to condone their absence during the days the dispute has been allowed unnecessarily to drag.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1929.

TRAVANCORE AND COCHIN.

The two adjacent States of Travancore and Cochin whose present rulers trace their descent from a common ancestor and whose territories a thousand years ago formed part of the independent kingdom of Kerala, have both in physical features and in point of view of population much in common. Both territories obtain the benefit of the south-west as well as the north-east monsoon and both abound in vast forests of teak, blackwood, ebony and sandalwood trees. In both States the population is composed of the various communities in almost identical proportions—Hindus 66 per cent, Christians—mostly of the Syrian Church—27 and Mussalmans 7. And lastly in both States women enjoy a degree of freedom which is almost unheard of in other parts of India. A comparison of the administration reports recently published by the two States is of great interest. It should be pointed out, however, at the outset that Travancore is more than four times as populous as, and has an area over five times that of Cochin.

In education Travancore has an enviable position. Out of a total expenditure of two crores, the State devotes nearly forty lakhs to education and this is a sixth of the total revenue. Throughout the State there obtains free primary education. Moreover, girls are required to pay only half the fees charged for the boys in schools and colleges. Co-education after the primary school exists in those places where separate institutions for women do not exist. But there is a much larger number of girls studying in the co-educational institutions than in the separate girls' schools and the Report has it that "the practice whereby it became possible for the education of boys and girls in the one and the same institution has been instrumental in the rapid expansion of female education in the state." The proportion of pupils in school to the population of school-going age was eighty-four per cent, thus indicating an increase of one per cent during the year. The percentage of boys in school to the total male population was sixteen and of girls to the total female population was nearly nine. During the year under report while the number of pupils in the vernacular, English and special schools showed an appreciable increase there was a fall in the number of college students. The total number at the various recognised institutions rose from four hundred, eighty thousand and odd to four hundred and eighty-eight thousand, and, from what we gather from the Report, out of this rise of seven and half thousand almost six thousand appears under female education. There has also been a steady progress in education among the backward classes of the State. In Cochin also education figures as the largest single item of expenditure, claiming twelve and three-fourths out of the total sixty-seven lakhs. This works out to a seventh of the revenue collected by the State. About fourteen per cent of the total population are in educational institutions and this amounts roughly to ninety-two per cent of the population of school going age. The Report does not give enough figures to calculate the proportion of boys and girls in schools and colleges but the impression created is that girls' education has approximately the same standard as that of Travancore. Cochin has taken the education of its backward classes seriously and there was an increase of ten thousand pupils during the year. This includes an increase of three thousand boys and a thousand girls of the 'depressed' classes. The States of Travancore and Cochin according to the Cochin Administration Report maintain close cooperation in matters educational. But Travancore will benefit considerably by imitating Cochin's care for the backward classes. The figures for education further show that of the student population eighty per cent. in Travancore and eighty-five in Cochin are in primary schools and only one per cent. in both states are undergoing college education and the figures for college education for the year do not compare favourably with the figures for last year.

The period covered by the review (with 1926-27 for Travancore and 1927-28 for Cochin), has been from the financial point of view a favourable one for the two states. Travancore has a surplus of thirty-nine lakhs and Cochin too has nineteen lakhs to its credit. But neither State has the least reason to congratulate itself on this, for if education is the largest item of expenditure it is under "Excise" that a large portion of the revenue is collected. This gives point to the complaint frequently made that the education of Indian children has to be financed by the intemperance of their elders. In Travancore finances it heads the list with fifty-two lakhs, land revenue, the next biggest item, bringing in only forty-two lakhs. Cochin's figures for liquor taxes are not given separately in the Report as the head "excise" includes salt tax as well as customs but it seems to amount to over fourteen and a half lakhs. Both the States have a predominantly Hindu population and both have at their head a Hindu ruler with the finest traditions to maintain. It is all the more strange, therefore, that they should be blind to the evils brought about by the toleration of the free use of alcohol. There is ample evidence in the Reports before us to show that both Cochin and Travancore regard raising the duty on liquor as the best means of achieving temperance and they seem to look to state regulation as a more practical method than prohibition legislation. It is evident that the prohibition movement has not made much headway in Cochin but it has made itself felt in Travancore to such an extent that the Government has sought to justify its attitude in its Report. "Every care is taken", says the Report, "to minimise temptation for those who do not drink and to discourage excess among those who do. When it is recognised that sources of illicit supply are easily accessible in the State and that liquor can be had from almost any palm tree, it will be conceded that Government intervention only operates to regulate both the quantity and quality of the liquor consumed, the former by the levy of fees which the consumer automatically pays and the latter by the prescription of certain standards of strength." This is an attitude which no state would even dream of adopting towards any other offence. That we have an enlightened State like Travancore which prides itself on its "liberal and progressive policy in education", advancing, it is due solely to the fact that the drink evil has not been adequately appreciated in Indian States and the half-hearted policy pursued by the Government in British India in the face of public opinion is largely responsible for this. We hope however that in the near future Travancore and Cochin will adopt a prohibition policy even if it means the loss of the huge profit which they derive from this obnoxious traffic, and we have every reason to believe that when other Indian States like Palitana, Jasdhan, Bhavnagar and Gondal have not failed they too will succeed in establishing prohibition.

THAT MEN MAY ALL BE BROTHERS.

MEDITATION FOR THE YEAR.

IV. CITY DWELLERS.

(By Dr. Clifford Manshardt, Ph.D.).

Every city worthy of its name is set upon a hill. Through its daily press, its factories, its shops, its schools and other organizations, the city is visible for miles around. Knowing this fact, how important it is that men and women of goodwill shall determine how the city is to be seen. Shall the newspapers spread abroad a distorted sensationalism? Shall unscrupulous business men send forth a message of trickery? Shall unenlightened factory owners make widespread display of oppression? By no means! Let the forces of goodwill say, "An end to this." Let them blazon forth from every rampart that the city desires to be friendly, that justice lives, and that the forces of right are steadily marching on. And though it would sometimes seem that the good in the city is impotent, the fact is far otherwise. Long ago men discovered that God is not always found in the fire or in the earthquake, but in the still, small voice. The quiet influences of the good are daily pushing back the blatant forces of evil. The leaven of goodwill is stirring, and we have every reason to believe that it will penetrate the lump.

One of the weaknesses of city life is that it is so impersonal. In the village men live in close touch with their neighbours, and the conduct of the individual is in large measure determined by the sanctions of the group. But as the villager comes to the city and is swallowed up in the chawls, the old sanctions are lost. He scarcely knows who is his neighbour, and receives little constructive help that will enable him to lead a better life. The city is really an open door. Over its threshold pass young and old, following lure of opportunity. Before the doors that paths extend in every direction, and the way followed is a matter of individual choice. Some, feeling themselves freed from restraint, rejoice in a new-found liberty that in reality is the basest servitude. Others, realizing the city's dangers, endeavour to build up new sanctions and to fortify themselves. The city needs so much men who are willing to go more than half-way in the effort to be friendly. It needs institutions to bring people together in a social way, but more than institutions it needs kindly-hearted men and women. It needs radiant personalities—boughs that extend over the wall and give fruit to the weary wayfarers.

If the life of the city is really to be refined, its citizens must interest themselves in municipal affairs. It is the tragedy of the great city that its so-called good citizens are too often content to leave government in the hands of second-rate politicians. But if our city life is to remain healthy, we need capable men who will interest themselves in clean politics; who deal intelligently with measures for social and economic reform; and who are not afraid to sacrifice private comfort in the interest of the public welfare. We need more men of affairs who are ready to turn their eyes from making money, and will centre their attention upon enriching the common life. We need a greatly extended group of "Servants of India."

SOME POINTS OF FACT AND LAW.

II. RELIGION AND BROTHERHOOD.

(By Mr. Kopergam Ramamurti).

"I am no communalist," declared Moulana Muhammad Ali with impressive earnestness as this year's President of the Khilafat Conference held few days ago at Calcutta. "On the other hand, I am dying to establish unity in the whole world," he is reported to have explained: "In fact God made Islam to unify all mankind and make it of one brotherhood. I call upon all men to come and be my brothers, and I offer myself to fight their battles and claim their rights for them even if I shall have to lose my life in doing so. If you call that communalism, you are welcome to do so. But he it noted, brothers, that I disclaim the least idea of Communalism."

The quaint logic of this utterance in a political context may amaze and dismay his political comrades professing religious faiths other than Islam. But there cannot be the least doubt about its sincerity and whole-heartedness from a religious and social point of view. And in giving utterance to this noble call to Universal Brotherhood the redoubtable Moulana is not voicing merely a pious, empty sentiment of his own individual self but has the whole Muhammadan Community in and outside India thinking and feeling like him and ready to give effect to all the religious and social implications of such a call in practical life, as proved through centuries of Islamic history?

The same is true of Christianity. It too claims the sanction of God, to the exclusion of all other religions, to unify mankind. Hence any ordained Christian Minister and every ordinary Christian layman can confidently make a similar call to Universal Brotherhoods in the name of Jesus Christ, with the assurance that the conscience and religious fervour of the whole Christian world is at his back, irrespective of denominational differences.

Hinduism too is a Universal Religion. Did not Swami Vivekananda present to the astonished nations of the west the Ideal of a Universal Religion through Hinduism? As pointed out by the Honourable Mr. Justice Venkato Subbarao recently in his remarkable Judgment in Ratansi D. Morarji versus the Administrator-General of Madras (55 M. L. J. 578), Hinduism has in the long course of its history absorbed and assimilated many races and tribes of foreign into its body politic. But Hindu society somehow and somehow came to be heavily handicapped by a rigid caste system which turned it into an incoherent bundle of mutually exclusive communities with unhappy notions of superiority and inferiority, of unapproachable sanctity and untouchable impurity by birth which nothing in life could alter, and which has therefore led to much loss of brotherly feeling, amounting almost to utter negation of it, in spite of the common religious bond.

Hinduism thus as a Universal Religion lacked the services of a suitable social instrument which could make its call to Universal Brotherhood effective in practical life. Even if all the peoples of the world agreed to bow their heads to it and voluntarily sought shelter under its roof asking to be taken into its bosom and united there in one brotherhood, Hinduism would have found itself as embarrassed as the British Government was in the halcyon days of the Non-co-operation movement. It was impossible and out of question to accommodate them in the pucca-built caste-Jails because these were crowded with long-standing old-offenders who hated unaccustomed company however respectable, and bolted the doors from inside, refused to open them on any terms and threatened to go on hunger-strike if coerced. All that Hinduism could possibly do, therefore, was to hang some suitable caste-name round the necks of the new-comers and run up a barbed-wire fence of Customary Hindu Law closely round their groups just where they stood in the open maidan beyond contaminating distance from the old caste-barracks. They could then be left there free to build huts or mansions for themselves within the enclosures and thrive as best they might, according to their own unaided strength, in the name and for the glory of Hinduism; or perish in the cold with no protection to their heads and no comfort to their hearts, unwept, unhonoured and uncared-for, if they had no stamina to stand the chill of human neglect, orthodox antipathy and social contempt. The Chief-Priests of Hinduism were honoured and adored as Jagad-Gurus or World-Teachers but no attempt was ever made by them to approach any with their gospel or to invite the world to come and listen to their teaching, and no hope was held out to any that they would be accepted as disciples and admitted into the Hindu fold.

Of late, however, Hinduism too has learnt to assert its catholicity. It is slowly preparing itself to justify the sacred title of Jagad-Guru which its Chief-Priests have proudly borne so long in vain. Fifty years ago Swami Dayananda Saraswati took a firm stand upon the incorruptible Veda, outlawed caste and banished it from within the sphere of his influence and invited all the world to become one under the ages of the Arya Dharma. His voice has now begun to tell beyond the Punjab where it was first heard and to penetrate even below the Vindhya Range. Hindu Social reformers all over India have for forty years or more been decreeing the doom of caste regularly at the annual sessions of their Provincial and National Conferences. Theirs has not been altogether to cry in the wilderness. Hindu Missionaries like that noble intrepid soul fever beloved memory, Gajanan Bhaskar Vaidya, chanted the Mantra, "come", which they made the new Mantra of the age to down the old favourite Mantra of the Hindus which was "go". Orthodox and influential Hindu Sabhas have awakened to the political dangers of their old bigotted attitude and been bestirring themselves to make Hinduism again a living force for good, and are busy with their Shuddhi and Sanghattan. And, at last, we had also the proud spectacle of a Jagad-Guru, Swami Sri Sankaracharya of Karvir Peetha, staking the power and prestige of his Pontifical Throne to welcome with his blessing a Christian born of American nationality. From his sanctified seat on the sacred banks of the Godavari close on the holy field of Nasika-Kshetra, speaking with all the authority which he could claim as one of the anointed High Priests of Hinduism, that benignant and far-sighted ascetic who had been preparing himself for year for his great mission proclaimed again the glad tidings of great joy that Hinduism is a Universal Religion and declared to a world weary of religious strife and bickerings, not only that all are welcome to enter the Hindu fold, but that they can also exercise perfect freedom of conscience under the auspices of Hinduism. "To admit Christians and Muhammadans to Hinduism," he said, is not to ask those who seek it to give up their faiths, but rather to enable them to enlarge their outlook and widen their horizon and live a broader and more tolerant life, doing what lies in one's power to promote the happiness and content of the world.

That wonderful message deserves to be broadcasted to the ends of the earth!

But what, after all, is the spirit underlying and animating all these various calls to Universal Brotherhood? It is, if one may respectfully venture to say so, the spirit of Separatism pure and simple: a sense of mutual antagonism in vital interests between community and community unless and until all are brought under one nominal religious flag, coupled with a determination on the part of each community that that flag shall be its own and not that of any other community.

This kind of Universalism only emphasizes the fact that human society is still in a state of war within itself in the name of Religion. The true inwardness of the Universal Brotherhood affected by all these separatist creeds can be best studied and judged by their attitude towards Conversion which is a Samskara or sacrament recognised by all religions as the first essential step in spiritual life.

"HINDUISM AND CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA."

(BY MR. S. N. KARNATKI).

There has been an interesting controversy going on for some time past on the above subject in the pages of the Hibbert Journal. In an early issue of that excellent quarterly last year Drs. Stanley Jones and J. N. Farquhar had advanced the opinion that India would after all accept Christ. Mr. H. G. D. Turnbull, formerly Professor, Deccan College, Poona, challenged that opinion and said that a people, meaning the Hindus, who had for centuries before developed a civilization of their own without any outside influences would never accept a faith alien to their traditions and culture. This challenge evoked a reply in the October number of the above journal, from Dr. Farquhar, who speaks for himself and also for Dr. Jones, in which he maintains his own opinion.

Mr. Farquhar, at the outset, frankly admits that the Hindus in general never intend to accept Christianity, and further that 95 per cent of the educated Hindus are hostile in attitude to the conversion to Christianity. He has absolutely no illusion on that point. Nevertheless, he maintains paradoxical as it may seem, that Indians will accept Jesus Christ at some indefinite future date, and that for following reasons:

I. Dr. Farquhar has lived in India for 20 years and has travelled in all provinces of the country. Consequently, the conclusions at which he has arrived are the result of personal investigation. He says that during his long stay in India he came in personal and in some cases most intimate contact with numerous Hindu gentlemen, all educated, and found that many of them admire and love Jesus Christ; others read the gospels daily and appreciate their meaning and all of them feel that Jesus is the only savior in whom they can put their trust and who alone can satisfy the yearnings of their breasts. But they do not want to be baptized for fear of the loss of their home and relatives and of the dice ban of their society. This is the gist of this part of Dr. Farquhar's argument.

II. Dr. Farquhar has then entered on a long disquisition as to how at the beginning of the Christian era and during some centuries afterwards out of this whole world's population Christians, Mahomedans and Parsis were only monothaistic people and all the rest polytheistic, and how with the advance of civilization the world was proceeding in the direction of monatheism. It would be unnecessary here to enter into that large question. Suffice it to say that, according to Dr. Farquhar, Hindus are polytheistic. But he further says, the educated men cannot acknowledge themselves as polytheists, but must represent themselves as monotheists. "Thus, the educated mind of India has already moved a long lap away from Hinduism in the direction of Christianity." Accordingly not only were some of the modern movements started under the influence of Christianity, but in these movements Christianity is omni present: "This is the gist of this part of Dr. Farquhar's argument. It is, in short, for these reasons that he hopes that India will ultimately accept Jesus Christ, relying for his support further on the ground that even an unlikely prophesy is sometimes fulfilled.

As regards Dr. Farquhar's reasons under I, it may be permitted to remark that they are not very convincing. It is hard to believe that people, who according to him love and admire Christ and his character, who regularly read the gospels and who consider him as the only true saviour, should hesitate openly to accept Christianity for fear of loss of relatives or of ban of society. The true explanation, as to why the many efforts in respect of their evangelistic work in India are not now as successful as before, is mainly in the fact that the conscience of India has in present years been roused and Hindus in general are turning attention to the study of their own religious literature. Principal V. A. Modak, one of the founders of the Prarthana Samaj in Bombay complained in one of his addresses fifty years ago that Hindus were not studying the Bhagwatgita as much as they might. But what one finds now? Thanks to the several religious movements started in recent times (and thanks also to the missionary propaganda to a certain extent) people have been roused from their sloth and are now studying the Gita and the Upanishads on a scale almost unknown before. Whatever other drawbacks there may be in Hindus, they are not a people to neglect their religion altogether. Christian missionaries misunderstood their character in this respect. As the late Mr. Justice Ranade, in one of his thoughtful writings, remarked: "The Hindus are not like the savages of the Sandwich and Society Islands, without a religion of their own and so easily liable to be converted to a nominal Christianity. On the contrary, they have their own national faiths, numerous schools of philosophy, and an extensive and profound controversial literature on all the most abstruse and insoluble metaphysical problems which have ever occupied the human mind, and which they have debated with an earnestness and a logical acumen, quite unsurpassed in any other country of the world. They have had among them religious teachers and reformers like Sakyamuni, Shankaracharya, Madhvacharya, Ramanujacharya, Kabir, Tukaram, Ramdas, Tulsidas etc, whose teachings have exercised a powerful and living influence in forming the natural mind and whose austerity of life, nobility of thought and sentiment and devotion to truth, stand in the very foremost rank of the religious teachers and moral preceptors of the human race. A nation with such a strong religious leaven of its own and under the guidance of such noble teachers as those named above, is not likely to neglect the cultivation of its religious and moral habits."

(To be continued.)

MARRIAGES AND ECONOMIC PRESSURE.

The Nippon, a new monthly journal of Tokyo, has the following article on late marriages in Japan:—

The cruel hands of economic pressure are crushing the fond hopes of married happiness out of the hearts of many a young maiden and youth in this country, which already has gone through eight years of hard times. In fact marriage is now coming to be considered one of the four great "difficulties" of life here, the three others being difficulty of entering higher schools because of the rigid entrance examinations, the difficulty of securing positions, and the difficulty of making a living. All four seem to be equally acute and equally troublesome.

Late marriages, and simpler wedding dresses and parties have naturally come to be the general practice, even among those who can afford to pay a little more than the average person for wedding garments, banquets, and honeymoon trips. Educators and social workers are advising young girls and mothers, through the press and from the platform, to be plain and economical. "Don't waste your money by making special wedding garments which can be worn only once in a lifetime," these elders are constantly urging. "One hundred yen for just a wedding kimono is extravagant". "A man should not spend more than 30 per cent. of his annual income for his wedding expenses," thinks Mr. Yoshima Ozuma, Principal of the Ozuma Girls' High School, one of the leading private girls' schools in Tokyo. In the past, a man often spent from 200 to 250 per cent. of his annual income on his wedding, including clothes, banquets, trips, etc., whereas Mr. Ozuma's study shows, the average British, French, or American youth rarely spends more than 20 per cent. Mr. Ozuma even says that for people belonging to the middle classes or below wedding banquets are superfluous and unnecessary.

Wedding ceremonies, too, are becoming simpler than they used to be 10 or 15 years ago. Christians, of course, get married before their pastors at the churches. Following the marriage ceremony, which probably lasts about half an hour, the new couple are introduced by the parents or the go-between to the friends assembled. Tea and cakes may be served. Shinto shrines and even Buddhist temples have come to conduct marriage services patterned after those of the Christian churches. The priest who officiates gets a certain fee for the service, ranging from 25 to 50 or 75 yen in Tokyo. As the services become more elaborate and more prayers are said, the fees rise accordingly. In former days, weddings were mostly—and it is still done so to-day—held at the home of the bridegroom, preceded by a solemn procession from the bride's house, the bride taking her trousseau with her to her new home. Cup of "sake" of three different size were exchanged between the bride and the bridegroom, between the bride and the father of her would-be husband, between the groom, the bride's father, and the go-betweens. These cups are passed back and forth so that the bridegroom have sipped nine times. The ceremony is called "san-san-ku-do" (3-3-9). Then some auspicious songs are sung by an elderly gentleman invited to the function. The bride then goes into a separate chamber to change her dress. A rich bride would often change her dress three or four times. Often the eating and the drinking, in celebration of the happy event, lasted until way past midnight.

These customs, solemn and picturesque though they may be, are gradually going out of fashion. People are busy, times are hard, and the simple, economical wedding is preferred.

The average school girl to-day never thinks of getting married right after graduation. She wants at least a few years for "finishing course" which include flower arrangement, tea ceremony, music, and probably French or English, although she may have had some training in each of these already. Some who are more of the practical turn of mind take up typewriting and shorthand or dressmaking, so that they may be able to become independent economically, if they do not marry at all, or even if they do marry, in case they become widows.

That makes the girl about 23 or 24 when she is finally married. Before, girls were married in their teens. Now, people do not consider it strange or improper if a girl gets married at 23 or 28. Because of the business depression and the consequent difficulty for youths to secure jobs after college or university, the girl in turn are forced to wait until their lovers or fiancés are financially able to support their wives. The income of the young candidate who seeks the hand of a maiden is given an important consideration by the girl's mother. In days past the family's social position, rank, title, or family records counted more.

Men, too, are seeking for girls who are not only pretty, intelligent, and learned in the graceful arts, but who also can, and are willing, to help to earn the living for the new home. They want girls who are willing and are able to get up and feed and educate the children in case their husbands fall ill or pass away suddenly.

All of which tend to force the young men and women to marry late, if they marry at all.

ERADICATING THE SOCIAL EVIL.

"The social evil in Bombay and how to eradicate it" was the subject of speeches delivered on Monday evening at a public meeting held at the Blavatsky Lodge, Bombay, under the presidentship of Mr. K. Natarajan. Mr. R. P. Masani said the main problem was to suppress the spots of vice which made traffic among girls and women possible. The difficulties which presented themselves were not insurmountable. In the City of Bombay, 70 to 80 per cent. of the inmates of the houses of ill-fame, he understood, came from different parts of the country. They could easily be sent back to their homes. There were also rescue homes and other agencies which would look after some of them and the rest could be absorbed in domestic service. They could be all taught to be self-supporting.

Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas following Mr. Masani said that so long as the conditions of the working men and women remained as they were, so long as the millowners, the Municipality and the Government would not give them decent homes to live in and a living wage, so long as the vital problems of the country were neglected by a foreign Government, it would not be possible to do away with the horrible evil. All the same he could not allow the present conditions to go and put an end to them. He wanted brothel-keeping to be made illegal.

Mr. K. Natarajan explained the circumstances under which women brothel-keepers were excluded from the operation of the Prostitution Act. When the prostitution Enquiry Committee was investigating the question it found a volume of public opinion in favour of whipping persons guilty of brothel-keeping. At the same time many were against the whipping of women. So women were excluded from the Act. That was a mistake, for now many brothels were run really by men but merely in the name of women. He proposed that the Act should now be amended so as to include both men and women and at the same time the provision of whipping should be dropped.

Continuing, Mr. Natarajan said that among the many ideals that were being challenged was the question of the proper relation between man and woman. He thought that a great reform was necessary in the ideal of marriage and much of the social vice and immorality was due to the fact that the marriage system, as it existed to-day, was not suitable to the conditions of life. It should be made possible for educated men and women to live together and share the joys and sufferings of life as equal partners with no question of superiority or inferiority. Unless such a reform was effected there would continue to be troubles and dislocations in the proper relation between man and woman.

Coming to the more practical consideration of the problem, he said that he was becoming a socialist and beginning to think that prostitution was a part of the capitalist system. It might have existed before, but the regular commercialised prostitution, in its most brutalising form, was undoubtedly a product of capitalist system of society. Unless it was struck at the very root it could not be abolished. One very important factor in dealing with the evil was the creation of strong public opinion. Landlords who let their houses for running brothels should be decried and even socially boycotted. And it should be made impossible for them, if necessary by legislation even, to earn high incomes by renting houses for running brothels. It should be made illegal, not only to run brothels, but also to rent houses for such purposes.

Concluding Mr. Natarajan said: "What has been done in Rangoon and Calcutta in this matter can be done here also. If Government does not take action it is not because there is no public opinion but because it wants to keep itself in the good books of the narrow, bigotted orthodox elements in the country in disregard of the opinion of the intellectual classes. My faith is entirely gone in the possibility of having a social reform worth the name being accepted by or achieved through Government carried on under the present system. I am not a politician: my whole sympathies are with social reforms. After years of experience I have come to the conclusion that social reform to-day is obstructed by Government allying itself with the orthodox, narrow-minded and reactionary people. Therefore with the greatest reluctance I have been forced to take part in politics, and to-day I declare that until a full measure of self-Government is given to India no reform, economic or social, can be achieved."

At the end of the meeting several people signed the manifesto issued by the Vigilance Association.

GOVERNMENT'S BREACH OF FAITH.

I

The attitude of the Government towards the Sarada Bill would have been thoroughly unintelligible, for the communique that has been subsequently issued explaining the reasons that led the Government members to vote in favour of Mr. Acharya's motion. According to the communique government while committed to the principle embodied in Mr. Sarda's Bill wanted it to be considered after the publication of the Age of Consent Committee's report. If Government is committed to the principle embodied in the Bill, we certainly see no reason why it should consider it necessary to wait for the publication of the Age of Consent Committee's report. It is time a large amount of useful evidence has been collected by the committee bearing on Mr. Sarda's Bill. But the public generally and the members of the Assembly in particular are fully aware of the nature of that evidence, and could have been depended upon to keep that evidence in view in considering Mr. Sarda's Bill. This certainly was not a sufficient reason for Government supporting what was on the face of it a dilatory motion, brought forward by a notoriously reactionary member of the House. The Hindustan Times, Delhi.

II

The Government were evidently responsible for the muddle which arose in the Assembly on Tuesday when Mr. Harbilas Sarda brought forward his Child Marriage Bill, as amended by Select Committee, for the consideration of the House. Mr. Sarda was acting on the understanding that he would be supported by the Government; if he had not had that understanding he would not have ventured to bring his measure forward on Tuesday. But the whole of the official bloc in the Assembly voted against Mr. Sarda and in favour of an amendment proposing the postponement of the Bill until the Age of Consent Committee's Report has been published. This amendment was passed by 53 votes against 44. The division revealed curious splits in different political parties. Congressmen, Nationalists and independents were divided in two groups representing orthodoxy and reform. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya remained neutral while Pandit Motilal Nehru not only voted himself for Mr. Sarda but rallied a number of neutrals to his support at the last minute. These proved to be insufficient to defeat the amendment. Mr. Sarda, in his disappointment and his justifiable resentment against the Government, had the consolation of securing a majority of non-official for his side. This augurs well for the future of the principles for which Mr. Sarda was fighting, and suggests that there will not be much difficulty in securing their adoption by the Assembly when the Age of Consent Committee's Report comes before the House. The Pioneer, Allahabad.

III

The Government has been guilty of a clear breach of faith in regard to Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda's Bill on Child Marriage in voting for Mr. M. K. Acharya's proposal to postpone consideration until after the publication of the Report of the Age of Consent Committee. Mr. Sarda gave an instructive analysis of the measure of support and opposition that his Bill has received in the country. Mr. M. K. Acharya, the Congress representative of Chinglepet and South Arcot districts in the Legislative Assembly, treated the resolution of the Madras Legislative Council on the question with supreme contempt, and urged postponement of the consideration of the measure solely on the ground that the Report of the Age of Consent Committee must be awaited. It is strange that despite a definite promise made some months ago, that the Government would accord its whole-hearted support to the Bill, practically the entire official bloc went into the lobby for Mr. Acharya's amendment, which was carried by 53 votes against 34. As Mr. Shanmukham Chetty rightly points out, the prospects of any legislation being undertaken on the question in the life-time of the present Assembly are extremely uncertain. The Government of India will no doubt, continue to play with the reform, as it has done in the past, by referring the Report of the Age of Consent Committee to Provincial Governments for their views. In plain terms, the action of the official spokesmen convicts them not only of breach of faith, but also of strengthening the forces of social reaction in the country. It is strange that on the eve of the debate, the Delhi Correspondent of The Statesman telegraphed that the non-official European group and the official bloc were likely to support the measure, and the chances of its success were bright. What could have happened within the short interval to induce the Government to change its mind can only be a matter of speculation. We can only think of Mr. Dunnett's statement, in his evidence before the Simon Commission at Delhi, that it is generally possible to manipulate votes in the Legislative Assembly on the side of the Government by some means or other. Mr. Crerar's communiqué, in explanation of the Government's attitude, will carry little conviction, and does not absolve the officials from the responsibility they have incurred in practically throwing out the measure. The promise of official support was given after the appointment of the Age of Consent Committee was decided upon. The only valid explanation of this utter disregard for its own pledged word appears to be that, with the Public Safety Bill on the agenda of the Assembly for Monday, the Government, in its anxiety not to jeopardise its chances of success, has preferred to take the side of the opponents of social reform. It may be a heavy price to pay, but a foreign bureaucracy cannot consider any but its own interests as of supreme value. New India, Madras.

IV

The latest decision of the Indian Legislative Assembly, regarding Mr. Harbilas Sarda's Child Marriage Bill, will be received with deep regret and extreme disappointment by all progressive sections of the Indian community. The obstacle race, which Mr. Sarda has had to run in promoting this legislation, is illustrative of the difficulties which social reformers have to face in ensuring that remedial measures are adopted to remove some of the blots of the social system in this country. Mr. Sarda has had again to submit to dilatory tactics on the part of a reactionary clique, ably assisted by the Government of the day. We understand that the Home Member pleaded for an adjournment of the consideration of the question, till the report of the Age of Consent Committee had been published. It is more than probable that that Committee will have some observations to make regarding Mr. Sarda's Bill, but it must be remembered that the main issue referred to it is not the issue whether legislation ought to provide for a minimum age of marriage, but whether any advance is needed, with reference to the criminal law, in regard to consummation of marriage. It is not clear why the Home Member, who was careful enough not to refer the question of legislation for fixing an age of marriage to the Committee, should have urged that the House should await the findings of the Committee on an issue which is not directly before it. The result has been that once more Government have, however unwittingly, rallied the ranks of the reactionaries and obscurantists, and heartened them in their obstreperous opposition. The attitude of the Government is in fact indefensible, and the cries with which the Opposition greeted the Government Benches were for once thoroughly justified. The Hon. Mr. Crerar will be very hard put to it to explain why he adopted this attitude on the present occasion, when in the September session he did not indicate any anxiety to await the findings of the Age of Consent Committee on this question. A plain statement, even at this late stage, that the Government are awaiting the recommendations of the Age of Consent Committee, coupled with a declaration that, so far as they are concerned, they are willing to accept and give effect to the recommendations of the Committee, would have better satisfied the House of the bonafides of the Government. It is unfortunate that so far from making their position clear, they should have allied themselves with obscurantists. Justice, Madras.

V

The attitude of the Government of India on Mr. Sarda's Bill affords a damning revelation of official psychology in regard to social legislation. It is the fashion of the Government to pretend to a policy of neutrality in social and religious matters. But a little careful analysis will reveal that they have always thrown in their weight on the side of reaction. Their attitude to Mr. Sarda's Bill on the present occasion is an illustration of this well-established tendency. There is no question that the Bill involves any offence to public sentiment. Of course it raises controversial issues, but through all controversy, it has been well established that it commands the strong support of an overwhelming majority of thinking men and women in the country. This has been in effect recognised by the promise tendered by the Government themselves that they would support the Bill. The sudden and abrupt decision of the Government to side with orthodox reactionaries, and under cover of postponement, defeat the intentions of the mover, cannot but be regarded as pregnant with sinister significance. It is evident that the Government want child marriages. Perhaps they dread the impetus to sturdier national life which the raising of the marriageable age of girls is sure to bring in its train.—Swarajya, Madras.

VI

It was a mean and inglorious victory which the Government and their allies won by shelving Mr. Harbilas Sarda's Bill directed against child marriage. If these men had the courage of their convictions, they should have challenged it openly. But no. They followed the Bill like so many friends and stabbed it from behind. For this catastrophe the members of the Government are primarily responsible, and they know it. Having no doubt in their minds that their masterly inactivity in the House followed by their entry into the lobby of reaction has covered them with discredit they have issued a communique explaining their position and ultimate intentions. Was ever a communique so prostituted as it has been on the present occasion? Have the spokesmen of any Government with any sense of dignity about them ever been seen to remain speechless during the debate on the question at issue and then rush to the nearest post office with the indecent haste of a young and inexperienced collector of news. If not anything substantial, a better show, at any rate, was expected from a Government which has got "the dumb millions of India" on its lips; certainly more grit, more moral courage was looked for in a body of men who have the resources of a whole empire at their disposal. As for the communique itself, it will not go down even with a school-boy. What has Mr. Sarda's Bill got to do with the expected report of the Age of Consent Committee except this that the men and women who are behind the one or the other are all out to end or mend a system which condemns to disease and early death the fairest of God's creation in this country?

—Forward, Calcutta.

VII.

Public opinion all over the country will strongly condemn the alliance of Government benches with the forces of unreasoning orthodoxy and social obscurantism by which Mr. Sarda's motion for the consideration of his Bill, as amended by the select committee, was defeated at Tuesday's meeting of the Assembly. The reason given by the Home Member for the strange conduct of the official members, strange because of the Government's oft-repeated expression of sympathy with the object of the Bill, namely, that there was an "intimate connection between the subject matter of the Bill and the intra-marital age of consent" which is under enquiry by a Committee, would have had some plausibility if the Government had intimated its decision to Mr. Sarda before he made his motion, though even then the action of Government would have been condemned by most right-thinking persons. As it is, not only did the official members lay themselves open to the charge of breach of faith, but the vote they recorded in favour of an amendment, the obvious object of which was to shelve the Bill at least for the present, was really a vote for child marriage. Mr. Sarda's Bill itself was an extremely modest proposal for social reform, and by helping to defeat that measure the official members showed that the sympathy which they so often profess for social reform in the abstract is the merest camouflage and that in reality they want India to remain socially backward, so that an ignorant world might continue to be fed on the delusion that she did not deserve to be politically free.—Tribune, Lahore.

THE WEEKS' REVIEWS.

Mysterious Tunnel:—We learn from the Tribune that Workmen opening up a hill outside Nanking city to make way for the new road connecting Hsiakwan with the Sun Yat-sen Mausoleum, have discovered a mysterious tunnel. It is built of huge blocks of solid stone and is about seven feet high and a little more than a yard wide. Because of its situation between the famous Ming Tomb and the old Ming Palaces, it is thought that through this tunnel the body of the first Ming Emperor might have been taken to its real burying ground. At the time of this Emperor's death Nanking, then the Chinese capital, had thirteen gates, and when his body was to be buried thirteen coffins were carried out of the city, each one going through a different gate. The idea was to make it impossible for his enemies to find his remains when his dynasty ended. There are those who believe that the Emperor was not buried in any of these tombs, but elsewhere. Even if the tunnel may not lead to the actual burying place, it seems almost certain that it is the passage way to the tomb of some member of the Ming dynasty. The authorities have not yet decided whether to excavate the tunnel.

Women's Work in Bombay:—The Bombay Presidency Women's Committee has rendered a distinct service to the public by bringing out a new and revised edition of the "Hand Book of Women's Work". This excellent volume gives information about the various organisations engaged in women's work and is divided into three sections; social, educational and medical with a preface showing the progress made in recent years, to each of them. The Handbook does not claim to be a complete directory of social work and if institutions are not included in it, it is due to lack of information about them. If this Hand book is revised every year and brought upto date, it will prove a valuable directory of women's activities. It should be in the hands of every social worker and fill an important place in every library. The Hand book is priced at 8 as., a copy can be had from the Bombay Presidency Women's Council, Town Hall, Bombay.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. s. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Perch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukkerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isable Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.

THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

THE
Central Bank of India Ltd.

(Established 21st December 1911.)

Capital Subscribed	Rs. 3,36,00,000
Capital Paid Up (30-6-23)	„ 1,68,00,000
Reserve Fund	„ 1,00,00,000

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Local Branches:—(1) Mandvi, (2) Zaveri Bazar, (3) Share Bazar, (4) Abdul Rehman Street.

Mofussil Branches:—Calcutta, Karachi, Madras, Rangoon, Jharis, Amritsar, Lahore, Cawnpore, Delhi, Lucknow, Kasur, Hyderabad (Deccan), Asansol, Chandausi, Hapur, Ahmedabad, Secunderabad and Jaunagar.

London Agents :—The Midland Bank, Ltd.

New York Agents:—The Guarantee Trust Co., New York.

Berlin Agents :—The Deutsche Bank, Berlin.

Current Accounts:—3% allowed on daily Balances from January to June 2% from July to December.

Fixed Deposits received for one year and shorter periods at rates to be ascertained on Application.

Every kind of Banking and Exchange Business transacted at favourable rates.

For further particulars please apply to the Manager.

JANMABHUMI.

An English weekly

Edited by

DR. B. PATTABHI SITARAMYYA, Machilipatnam, (Andhra)

and

Known for its Impartial and just studies

in

Indian Politics

and for its advocacy of Truth and Principle irrespective of party proclivities.

Rs. 5 a year.

For a free specimen copy please send your address :—

To the Manager

'JANMABHUMI'

Machilipatnam,
(ANDHRA).

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhœa and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Write: Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN
MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up " 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund " 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Saramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Mategaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akinj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,
Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE :--BARODA.

Branches :--Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patal, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kojal, Kadi and Dwaraka.

	Rs.
CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	23,00,000

DIRECTORS :

Sir Lalubhai Samsidas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1928, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1928. Rules on application.

8-8-28

C. E. BUNDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs.	a.	p.
Inland ...	5	0	0
Foreign ...	5	8	0
Single copy ...	0	8	0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Taticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati Brand

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY.

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

SPECIAL OFFER

Dharamsi Morarji

Woollen Suitings to be Cleared at Exceptionally Low Factory Prices
 54" Wide from Rs. 2/8 per yard.

GRASP THIS OPPORTUNITY.

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.

Cruikshank Road, Fort.

Premier
 Swadeshi
 Emporium.

The Cheapest
 House.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS (Agencies), Ltd.,
 16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	„ 3,56,05,275
Paid up	„ 71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,
 General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

“Wisdom in nothing is as much needed as in starting a family enterprise.”

GO THROUGH
A HAPPY FAMILY
 (A SMALL BOOKLET)

and you will get instruction full of wisdom, that will go to make your home a HAPPY HOME. It is sent gratis and post-free on writing to:—

ATANK NICRAH PHARMACY.

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

Why Not Try

The following Wonderful Specific for

- | | | |
|-----------------|--|---|
| EYE DISEASES... | ... Try "Akhyacura." | |
| RING WORM ... | ... Try "Kurain." | I |
| ASTHMA ... | ... Try "Asthma Cure." | |
| STRENGTH ... | ... Try "Squires Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil." | |
| TONICS ... | ... Try { "Nervine Tonic Pills."
"Parrish's Chemical Food."
"Easton's Syrup," "Syrup Hypo-phosphites of Lime." | |
| GONORRHOEA .. | ... Try { "Geno" "Liquor Santal Flava C."
Copaiba Cum Buchu." | |

All the preparations are scientifically prepared in our up-to-date laboratory and they are always fresh. Catalogue sent on request.

N. POWELL & Co.

CHEMISTS.

BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :-

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

EDGAR WARWICK

and his

"PEEP SHOW"

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Time:—4-30, 6-15, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

Pathe Gazette No. 1571-72

"SPEEDY"

8 Reels

(A Paramount Picture)

A Comedy de Luxe.

Featuring

HAROLD LLOYD

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Engagements:—

Saturday 9th February	...	4-30 and 6-30 P.M. Cinema and at 9-30 P.M. Mumtaz Begam's Concert.
Sunday 10th	..	4-30 P.M. Mumtaz Begam's Concert, 10 P.M. Cinema.
Monday 11th	..	Cinema at 10 P.M. only.
Tuesday 12th	..	Cinema at 6-30 P.M. only. Boxing Tournament at 9-30 P.M.
Wed. to Fri.	..	Cinema at 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

CINEMA PROGRAMME.

Pathe Super Gazette No. 1571-72

REAL CHARLESTON. 1st Series.

CUPID EXPRESS

6 Reels

(LILLIAN HAL DEVIS)

(U. F. A. Production)

EMPRESS CINEMA

Time:—3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

"HUNCHBACK'S REVENGE"

9 Reels

(A Haik Production)

Featuring

A. JACQUES

Morning Show on Sunday at 10 P.M. at the Edward and Empress Cinemas.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1929

No. 25

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Return of Mr. Sastri. Reconstructing China. Dr. Muthulakshmi's Achievement. The Devadasi Bill. Bihar Women Enfranchised. Slavery Abolished in Kalat. "The Sind Herald". Hindu Women's Property Rights.	That Men May all be Brothers. Some Points of Fact and Law. The Reconstruction of China. Hinduism and Christianity in India. Government's Breach of Faith. Bombay under a Cloud.
---	--

NOTES.

The Return of Mr. Sastri:—The Right Honourable V. S. Srinivasa Sastri who went to South Africa as the first Agent of the Government of India in the middle of 1927, returned this morning by the S. S. Karoa and was received on landing by a large circle of friends. A public meeting convened by the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association and other bodies is to be held this evening at the Cowasjee Jehangir Hall to welcome Mr. Sastri, at which Sir Chimanlal Setalvad will take the chair. The appointment of an Agent of the Government of India in South Africa was a part of the settlement arrived at between the South African Union and Indian Governments at a Round Table Conference held in Cape Town. Under this settlement, the Union Government recognised Indians in South Africa as an integral part of the population, with rights and duties the same as all other sections of it. In return, the Government of India accepted the standards of Western Civilization as the national standard in South Africa to which Indians should conform, and in order to facilitate this, agreed to the voluntary repatriation, under more liberal terms than had been offered up till then, of such of the Indians in South Africa who could not or would not conform to them. Mr. Sastri's duty was to see that the terms of the settlement were adhered to on both sides. It was a difficult and delicate duty, because both among the European and Indian communities, there were sections which were opposed to the settlement, the Europeans protesting that Indians can never be equal subjects with them, the Indians protesting that their right to live in their own traditional way in South Africa had been surrendered. That Mr. Sastri has acquitted himself in the face of great difficulties in a manner which has won high appreciation from Europeans and Indians alike, was acknowledged at numerous farewell functions held on the eve of his departure from South Africa. His most important work as Agent has been to make provision for the education of Indian children up to a higher standard than has been available to them hitherto. It is through education that Indians can rise in the scale of citizenship and in concentrating the largest part of his attention on this subject, Mr. Sastri has placed on sure foundations the future of our people in South Africa. He comes back to us with his reputation for wise statesmanship immensely enhanced. His personality and culture has produced a strong impression on the Europeans in that country, who no longer think of Indians as coolies, and have, we hope, ceased to talk of them as such. The friendly feeling towards India and Indians which Mr. Sastri has left behind in South Africa, is illustrated by the suggestion of the Johannesburg Leader that the Union Government should invite Sir Jagadish Bose to attend the session of the British Association which is to meet this year in Cape Town. "His presence," it writes, "would not fail to add additional distinction to what is already certain to be a brilliant assembly, and as a mark of courtesy to the Indian people it would have a double value".

Reconstructing China:—After undergoing much suffering China has now gained international recognition as an independent sovereign State. Her difficulties, however, are far from ended. On the contrary, her most difficult tasks are yet to be solved. In the address which we publish today, Mr. Sun Fo, one of the leaders of the Republic, sets forth clearly and in detail the many things that remain to be done before China can take her place alongside the advanced nations as a world-influence. Though China is a Republic, Mr. Sun points out that the government of to-day is as yet responsible only to the National Party, and not to the Chinese people. The reason for this is that the latter are not fit to become the source of all authority, and have to undergo a period of Tutelage before they can do so. The immediate duty of the National Party is to educate the people and to induce the conditions, moral and material, which will enable them to exercise to the benefit of the whole country the powers of a democracy. "The present," Mr. Sun frankly says "is not the proper time when the Party can hand over the governing power to the people, for the simple reason that they are not ready for it. The sooner the Tutelage period is completed the better so far as the Party is concerned; for then the Party will be released of its responsibility, handing over to the people of the whole country all its political powers, and bringing the Revolution to an early and triumphant completion. Nevertheless, it must be pointed out that the constitutional period cannot possibly begin until the Tutelage Period is well completed." Mr. Sun has honestly stated the actual situation with which he and his Party are faced. The politically educated class has to keep power in its own hands and to train the people to self-government. Our difficulty in this country, is that the British maintain that a democracy can hand over power only to another democracy, and as the masses are not prepared for the tasks of self-government, they will not hand it over to the educated classes who are more or less prepared to do so. The masses in this country cannot be trained by a foreign bureaucracy to self-government. This can be done only by Indians, and from this point of view an Indian oligarchy is an indispensable step to an Indian democracy. This will have to be recognised sooner or later. A full-fledged democracy cannot be created in a day and to argue that unless this is done, India should continue under British domination is to argue in a vicious circle. If power is transferred to the Indian masses without adequate preparation under their own leaders, the worst features of medievalism will be perpetuated, and a century's good work will be thrown away.

Dr. Muthulakshmi's Achievement:—Dr. Muthulakshmi Reddy, the lady Deputy-president of the Madras Legislative Council and an ardent and indefatigable social worker, successfully piloted the Devadasi Bill through the provincial Council at its recent session. This piece of social legislation is Dr. Muthulakshmi's most notable achievement so far in her work for the social uplift of her sisters. It cannot be said that the Bill had a smooth passage. Conservative elements and vested interests did their best to wreck it but thanks to the determined efforts of Dr. Muthulakshmi, it had been placed on the statute book and will be the means of saving a number of girls from a life of shame. We extend our hearty congratulations to Dr. Muthulakshmi on her achievement and we hope that the Devadasi Bill is the precursor of more social legislation in the presidency.

Devadasi Bill:—The Servant of India gives the following details of the Bill: "In accordance with this Act, all the lands assigned to the dedicated girls as a reward stipulated in return for service performed by them, shall be freed from the conditions of the service, the Local Government imposing a quit rent in lieu thereof. Similarly all assignments of land revenue shall be freed from the conditions of service and a quit rent imposed in case the Devadasi is herself the owner of the lands in respect of which the assignment has been made. The Local Government is empowered to make rules in accordance with which the enfranchisement shall be effected. Another clause of the Act specifically lays down that no enforcement of an obligation to render any service to any temple to which a girl is dedicated by reason of the grant of land shall be allowed. Practically therefore all the dedicated girls will be free and independent citizens who will have complete liberty to follow any calling according to the bent of their mind or to educate themselves and be useful to society in other ways than the one marked out by their status. The Act will be an additional illustration of the triumph of contract over status in the apportionment of persons to the different professions and occupations. The institution was a lingering vestige of mediaeval serfdom, and it ill-accorded with modern notions of freedom and voluntary regulation of life. On the ethical side the institution laid itself open to all the abuses of compulsory asceticism and was one of the weakest spots of unregenerate Hinduism. It will be remembered that in 1924 an Act was passed to penalise the disposal of persons under 18 with the intent of employing such persons for immoral purposes. But the wording of the law is not satisfactory and judges have not always held that the dedication ceremony was necessarily disposal for immoral purposes as required by the Act. Consequently there was an absolute necessity for legislation which would have a clear application to the case of dedicated girls. By way of contrast it may be noted that the Mysore Government have already in 1910 amended their Hindu Religious Endowment Act by making the practice of ceremonies like dedication tantamount to misconduct on the part of the trustees of a temple. The Mysore Government have also handed over the inama attached to the service of dancing girls to the holders as permanent property and imposed a quit rent in exchange for the service."

Bihar Women Enfranchised:—In recognition of the advance made by the women of the province, the Bihar Legislative Council has extended the franchise to them at its current session. The resolution was moved by Mr. Godavaris Misra and was carried by the large majority of 47 to 14. Moslem members of the council were opposed to granting even this elementary right to women and voted against it.

Slavery Abolished In Kalat:—It is gratifying that enlightened ideas are penetrating the backward Baluchistan States. The Administration report of the Baluchistan Agency for 1927-1928 gives as the most important event of the year the carrying into effect in the State of His Highness the Khan of Kalat's decree abolishing slavery throughout his dominion. The report further states that the turning of agricultural slaves into tenants and the liberation of their wives and families proceeded without difficulty but the freeing of domestic slaves could not be brought about so easily. On the whole, we learn, that the liberation of slaves of every description was both successful and complete in Kalat. In promoting this reform His Highness has earned the everlasting gratitude of not only his subjects but also of the whole of the civilised world. It is also interesting to note that the noble example of his Highness was followed by the other tribes who agreed to the abolition of slavery within their tribal territories. This welcome reform, however, unpalatable to vested interests was no doubt hailed with joy by the slaves themselves the majority of whom were descendants of captives taken in warfare and had sunk very low socially. This barbaric practice is a relic of feudalism and has no place in modern civilisation whose watchword is liberty, fraternity and equality.

"The Sind Herald":—We have received the first four numbers of this Sunday weekly and we find that all matters of topical interest find a place in it. There is a cultural section devoted to the interpretation of the message of Sindhi poetry, art and idealism. We are told that special attention will be given to the art supplement which will be a regular feature appearing every week. This is the only illustrated weekly publication of its kind in Sind and we wish it a long and prosperous career.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1929.

HINDU WOMEN'S PROPERTY RIGHTS.

A SMALL BEGINNING.

After eight years of discussion and deliberation a small piece of social legislation to rectify a glaring anomaly in the Hindu law of succession has passed the two Houses of the Central Legislature and is now awaiting the assent of the Governor-General. A short history of the Bill was given in the leading article in the Indian Social Reformer of October 13, 1928. The purpose of the Bill is to alter the order of succession so as to make it accord somewhat more than at present with the natural sentiments of ordinary men. According to Hindu Law as at present administered, women are almost totally excluded from succession. The only exception is a very qualified right in the case of daughters. "It is not a case of males being preferred to females", said Sir Sankaran Nair in the Council of State in introducing the Bill last September "but of the total exclusion of females. It even comes to this, that if there are no heirs in the male or female lines as stated by me, the Government take the property by escheat to the exclusion of females. What we seek to do by this Bill is to get rid of that principle and to introduce into the line of succession a few selected females whose selection is likely to find favour with the country generally, and whose selection will be a test." As Mr. Jayakar said in the Legislative Assembly last week "by this Bill we are providing that in preference to remote and unknown male relations the very kith and kin of a dying person should receive a share, the kith and kin who would be by the side of his death-bed comforting and nourishing him."

The Bill was introduced in 1921 and after many vicissitudes was passed by the Legislative Assembly in 1925, and was sent to the Council of State. It was three years before that body and was passed in September last year. In the course of its passage through that Council, it was found that certain verbal changes, adopted by the Select Committee of that body to make clear the meaning of a clause, had been inadvertently omitted, and an amendment was formally moved and accepted to make good the omission. Owing to this, the Bill had to be sent back to the Legislative Assembly, and some members of the Assembly attempted to introduce a limitation into it at this late stage. Mr. Sidheswar Prasad Singh moved that the provisions of the Bill should apply only to the property of persons not held in co-parcenary and disposed of by will. As the joint family system is co-extensive with Hindu society, this amendment would practically defeat the very object of the Bill, and it was properly thrown out by the large majority of 48 against 14. The division list is not available at the time of writing, but the message says that Government remained neutral while Muslims and Europeans partly voted and partly remained neutral. The Bill, as we said, is a small beginning in the direction of securing equal economic status to women, and we are sure it will be quickly followed by further thorough-going legislation.

The question whether official and non-Hindu members should take part in the voting on the Bill, was discussed in the Council of State last September. On the third reading of the Bill, Nawab Sir Umar Hayat Khan suggested that the Hindu members should be left to decide its fate among themselves and non-Hindu and Government members should remain neutral, that is, take no part in the matter. Mr. Narayan Prasad Asthana, who supported the Bill, pointed out that this would not be in accord with reason or constitutional practice. "I think," he said, "that where the justice of the case is so obvious, where the matter is one which should be decided by the whole community in India, I do not see why the Muhammadans should be neutral in this matter. As to the officials, we have already been taught the value of the official votes the other day, and I do not think that the officials should be neutral in this matter, because we find that where the question of legislation comes in, it is on the entire body as a whole that the responsibility should rest and not on any one community or another. My opinion, therefore, is that the Muhammadans as well as the official benches, should cast their votes in whichever direction they choose.' This was the sound view to take, so much so that the Nawab himself was convinced as shown by the fact that he voted in the division which followed. The Government position was indicated by the late Mr. S. R. Das who was then the Law Member. The Government, he said, proposed to take up a neutral attitude, which he further explained to be that the members of the Government would not vote but the official members would be free to vote in any manner which they thought best. Notwithstanding this authoritative precedent, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Sir Abdul Qayum raised the same point in the Assembly last week. The Pandit appealed to non-Hindus not to take part in the voting, and Sir Abdul argued that as he would not like Hindus to discuss the law laid down by the Koran, he would refrain from voting on the Bill which concerned Hindus only. Mr. Jinnah declined to accept this position and some others, Musalmans and Europeans, took part in the decision.

THAT MEN MAY ALL BE BROTHERS

MEDITATIONS FOR THE YEAR

VII. THOSE IN POSITION OF AUTHORITY

(By DR. CLIFFORD MANSCHARDT, Ph.D.).

The use or abuse of authority is the measure of the man. For some the end of power is more power, and the way to power is followed relentlessly. Others conceive of power as a means and use it as a tool of helpfulness. The one class are the oppressors of humanity. The other class are humanity's benefactors. A group will follow wise leading, but it will not long be driven. The real leader of men is not the man who chastizes with whips and with scorpions, it is the man of good-will, of friendliness, and of kindly intelligence. The highest authority is not an authority of force, but an authority of the spirit.

To practically every leader occupying a position of authority there comes the temptation to move alone. The stupidity of one's associates, or the slowness with which the general public moves, tends to drive the leader within himself to formulate plans to give to others, rather than to make plans with them. Though a course of action devised by an individual and foisted upon a group may succeed for a time, it is not the way to permanent success. The real leader consults with his group, moves as rapidly as they are able to move, and thus goes on to slow but certain progress. The way of education is laborious, but its results are sure.

There is no greater misuse of authority than the misuse that comes through ignorance. The leader who bases his judgments upon half-facts, upon opinions and hearsay, cannot long maintain the confidence of those whom he would lead. The only sure authority is the authority of knowledge, the authority that comes from personal experience, and from a patient study of the facts. The leader with truth on his side must prevail, despite temporary setbacks. Every leader will meet with opposition. Decisions have to be made, positive stands taken, powerful interests antagonized. The complicated life of today demands leadership of strength and of courage, a leadership that is unafraid. To be able to stand as the champion of unpopular causes, to remain serene when all about is tumult, to maintain mental balance in the midst of unsound thinking, calls for strong inner reserves of character. It is character alone that gives the leader strength to stand in time of testing.

A common failure upon the part of those in positions of authority is the failure to recognize from whence their power has come. No man is self-made. Every man has received help from others. The man elevated to public office is not free. He stands in the place of the people, and must act in the interest of the people. There is a real need to exalt and to dignify the business of politics, that our officials may look upon office as a public trust, and upon themselves as public trustees in politics as in any other walk of life, the man who would be greatest must be the man who serves.

SOME POINTS OF FACT AND LAW.

III. THE CHURCH MILITANT.

(By MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI).

The idea of sanctity is bound up with Religion all the world over, because Religion itself is bound up with the idea of God. Religion is exalted by Divine sanction. It derives its title to universal veneration and obedience from God himself who is the one common source and bond of Humanity. But although Religion is one and comes from Heaven to unite and save mankind, it has unfortunately got entangled on earth with the Ahamkara or Egoism of man. It has therefore taken different colours and assumed different shapes and proportions in its looking through different groups of men, each fighting for mastery over all. Far from serving the divine purpose of unifying mankind it has got mixed up with conflicting earthly ambitions and arrogances and clothed them all with the same invincible armour of self-righteousness. It has thus accentuated instead of allaying differences, and divided mankind into implacable warring camps, each claiming for itself the exclusive approbation and sanction of God and asserting its exclusive right to unify all under its own banner.

It is not easy to say whether Hinduism ever waged a war of aggression for the conquest of the world. It is equally difficult to say if it ever adopted any bloody methods of repression or reprisal in self-defence. The caste system provided an astute and blood-less method of repressing disloyalty and ensuring permanence to be established in the social and religious order of the Hindus. It therefore claims to have been the peaceful saviour of the Hindu race. It may have been so in the remote past, when it was a living and human system, before it became a soul-less, dead and deadly mechanism. But there is no doubt that it stands to-day as the evil genius of the Hindu race. Its compartmental co-ordination has proved a ghastly failure. It is now but another name for fratricidal war within the Hindu camp. But that wonderful system has done a greater disservice and a more permanent harm to the Hindu race than the setting up of brother against brother. It has scientifically and without conscious pain destroyed the natural link between human thought and action. Not only that, but it has also taught the Hindu mind to admire this disconnection as the most brilliant operation which a wise man could ever desire for himself. It gave to the people intellectually all the joy of freedom which it took care to deny in practice. It did more. It killed the very desire for practical freedom. It left every Hindu absolutely free to speculate about Religion and sociology to the top of his bent, even to the extent of denying God or decrying the caste-system itself with its inequitable treatment of women and the Panchama. What more could any reasonable man want? But woe be to him if he allowed his philosophy to outrun his prudence and ventures to break, however slightly, any of the rules, regulations and ordinance laid down by caste, however trivial or absurd or ungodly, they may seem to his philosophic eyes. Then it would be merciless and unphilosophic indeed in applying its Social Arms Act, Defence of Society Act and Public Safety Act and section 124-A of the Indian Social Code, and punish every impertinent breach of its "law and order" with social externment or deportation for life.

But it did not rest there. As it grew stronger with the declining political strength of the Hindu race, it developed an amazing quality of suicidal tyranny within the fold. It was no longer satisfied with punishing only wilful delinquents.

It is said of some wild animals which live in herds or packs that the moment any of them was wounded, however slightly, by an enemy beast or man, all the rest would forthwith pounce upon their unfortunate comrade and drive it out of the herd or tear it to death,—to the immense delight of the hunter and the trapper. Hindu society seems to have unhappily caught some such trait somewhere in the course of its chequered political career. Stories are still told, which may or may not be literally true, how at one time it was quite easy for a Muhammadan, if he was so inclined, to secure a convert for his religion by the simple process of spitting on the face of a Hindu and dragging him before his castemen. Those worthy guardians of communal honour could be confidently relied on to expel the unfortunate victim of the outrage from their fold and drive him by their cruelties to seek human protection in the Moslem fold itself. Whole families forfeited their religion, it seems, by inhaling, quite involuntarily, the odours of pilan cooked by a Muhammadan. If only the Christian Fathers took the trouble to drop a few crumbs of baked bread into a well which supplied drinking-water to the neighbourhood, all the Hindus who innocently drank of the 'polluted' water could, it is said, be easily bagged for the glory of the Church with the active help of their sensitive and fastidious castemen. If a Hindu child was held under instruction in a Christian home, its troublesome parents and relations had only to be told that it had already partaken of forbidden food along with its first lessons, and they would at once cease pestering for its return to their lawful guardianship, because it was hopeless thereafter to take it back into caste. These stories may be parodies of the truth but they serve to indicate to what lengths of suicidal folly the soulless puritanism of the caste system may go in oppressing the unfortunate people held in its iron grip.

But the times have changed. "Unfortunately in these modern days," complains the learned author of "the Law applicable to Christians in India," "strong feeling that exists in these matters is nearly always fanned into a flame by those who make it their profession to create bad blood on such occasions and go about circulating all kinds of clever falsehoods for the purpose of making the action of Christian Missionary or teacher look even more reprehensible than it actually is. Militant sects, like the Arya Samaj, deem it to be part of their duty to interfere at such times and join issues with the Missionaries.

That is again a pity. It only shows that we are still in the age of strife and ill-will. The sum of Religious Brotherhood has apparently not yet dawned upon us. We are obviously yet a long way off from the millennium when Christian and Muhammadan parents might be expected to joyfully celebrate with feast and pomp the conversion of their sons and daughters to Hinduism. But we are equally far, it seems, from that happy time when Hindu parents might placidly go about inviting their friends and relations to join them in holding jubilee over the conversion of their children to christianity or Islam. Strictly speaking, such things should not be improper and would not be impossible if only conversion in its spiritual sense had come into its own and acquired a universal value of currency. But unfortunately it has not yet attained intercommunal recognition and acceptance even like a University Degree. A London graduate or a Madras graduate can readily obtain recognition as a Graduate in Calcutta, Allahabad or Punjab and enjoy the freedom of their University circles without having to disown his original alma mater or renouncing its Degree as dishonourable. The other Universities also may honour him with their own Degrees, but that would be in addition to the original honours, not in suppression of them. But not so with a Conversion-Degree yet. It has no value and bestows no privilege outside the religious community which conferred the Degree, however much he may have "turned round" from a worldly life and however staunchly he may have "set his affections on a higher life." It operates on the other hand as a disqualification, a badge of error shame and sinfulness, which must be wiped out with proper purifying ceremony before the man can find acceptance in the religious and family circles of another community as a Brother.

A Hindu may be admitted a Mahatma or great-souled man, and loved as a very dear friend. But no Moulana worthy of his title and no orthodox Christian padre worth his salt can hide or keep to himself the perturbing fact that that man with all his saving qualities is not really among the 'saved' and is in fact nowhere in God's estimation compared with the meanest sinner among the True Believers. Similarly a Christian man may be acknowledged to possess saintly virtues and may be acclaimed as a Dinabandhu or friend of the Wretched and Lowly, and he may be admired and loved for running indefatigably round the globe to befriend the down-trodden Indian everywhere. But if that great good man aspires to be an intimate home companion of the Hindus outside political pandals and public Ashrams, or if he aspires to have a Hindu home of his own with the spoken sympathy of a few Hindu friends, he must, it seems, disown and be foul the warm Christian nest where he had hatched and nurtured all his acknowledged virtues, and stand shivering under the Hindu flag so that an Arya Samaj may "purify" him or a Jagad-Guru Swami may enable him to 'enlarge his outlook' and 'widen his horizon' and live a broader and more tolerant life' and 'do what lies in his power to promote the happiness and content of the world'!

The delicious humour and solemn absurdity of this inter-religious generosity and gratuitous patronage in such cases can be matched only by the exquisite pathos of a famous advertisement: "You are a splendid beast, I love you very much," says a dainty sweet looking girl to a magnificent royal bull which faces her with bright, intelligent, loving eyes; "I love you very much indeed, but I shall love you better as Bovril!"

THE RECONSTRUCTION OF CHINA.*

The Revolution has entered into a new period at the present juncture, as contrasted with the past thirty years in which we were mainly engaged in the task of removing obstacles--work of destruction. As a result of over thirty years' hard struggle, with all the obstacles removed, we have come to the stage of Political Tutelage, in accordance with the revolutionary programme of our late Leader. This means that the Nationalist Party-Kuomintang will undertake the reconstruction work of the Republic of China by directing and supervising the National Government in the work of Political Tutelage. Such reconstruction work at this period may be classified into two kinds: namely (1) Political and Social Reconstruction, (2) Material or Economic Reconstruction.

POLITICAL AND SOCIAL RECONSTRUCTION.

With reference to political reconstruction, it is imperative to follow the direction of our late Leader. Train the people of the whole country in political matters up to the point where they will be able to execute their fourfold political rights (election, initiative, referendum, and recall). For the time being as the people are not yet ready, it devolves upon our comrades, the Party, and the Government to prepare them to that end, thereby rendering it possible for the Party to hand over the power of government to the people as a whole at a time when the people are thoroughly prepared and the Political Tutelage period will be completed. In so doing, the Party may be said to have well performed the responsibility of the Revolution.

Recently, the Central Executive Committee was engaged in the reorganization of the National Government which will be composed of five "Yuan", namely Executive, Legislative, Judicial Examination, Supervisory, in accordance with Dr. Sun's Five-Power plan of government. Such reorganization is intended to pave the way for the Constitutional Period. Some have entertained the doubt as to why the Five Yuan system of government should be instituted at the period of Political Tutelage rather than at the Constitutional Period as laid down in Dr. Sun's Fundamentals of National Reconstruction. Therefore, it is necessary to distinguish between the said Five Yuan and those of the Constitutional Period with respect to their functions and responsibility. The authority of the government for the time being is vested in the Party. This has been attributable to reasons of a historic nature during the last several decades. The National Government is created and directed by the Party, so it is also responsible directly to the Party, rather than to the people. However, the Party is directly responsible to the people and the popular Revolution. The reason why the Five Yuan should be instituted at this juncture is that they will meet the needs of the present with reference to domestic reconstruction affairs on the one hand and foreign relations on the other.

* Being the full text of a speech delivered by Mr. Sun Fo at the Kuomintang Headquarters after the memorial Service to the late Dr. Sun on October 8, 1928. Mr. Sun has just returned to China after an extensive tour of investigation in Europe and America.

Our Government as instituted two years ago at Canton was only provisional. Under the circumstances of that time, the Government was not capable of making any headway either internally, or externally, for we were confined in a small area with our enemies on all sides. It did not aim at reconstruction, but destruction. So it was only too natural that its organization was simple, and incomplete. Nevertheless, it was sufficient to meet the needs of the time.

During the last two years, the Revolution made such remarkable progress that it extended from the province of Kwangtung to the Yangtze valley, and then all over the country. Following the completion of the military phase of the Revolution, the country is well-unified, the primary duty of the National Government consists in political, social, and material reconstruction. In order to be able to discharge such a duty properly, the Government must be reorganized, with its division of labour, and fixing of responsibility. The Government must be made to ensure confidence abroad and prestige within the country. In view of this, the Central Executive Committee has decided upon its reorganization. It is to be patterned on the model of the Five-Power Plan of Government of our late Leader for the purpose of preparing the people in the practice of the said form at the introduction of the Constitutional Period.

It is frequently suggested by non-party men that, since the present National Government is responsible to the Party, it has nothing to do with the people as a whole. Criticism of this sort must have grown out of ignorance of the historical mission of the Party and is not of any value. The present is not the proper time when the Party can hand over the governing power to the people, for the simple reason that they are not ready for it. We have also the question often asked as to when the Tutelage period will expire. The "district" constituted the local unit of self-government as incorporated in the Fundamentals of National Reconstruction. When a majority of the districts in a province shall have adopted self-government, that province is through with the Tutelage Period; and when a majority of provinces have thus completed the Tutelage Period, the Constitutional Period commences. No body is in a position for the time being to forecast as to how long the Tutelage Period will last. The sooner the Tutelage Period is completed, the better, so far as the Party is concerned; for then the Party will be released of its great responsibility, handing over to the people of the whole country all its political powers, and bringing the Revolution to an early and triumphant completion. Nevertheless, it must be pointed out that the Constitutional Period cannot possibly begin until the Tutelage Period is well completed. How soon it may be completed depends entirely upon the ability of our comrades in the work of reconstruction.

MATERIAL OR ECONOMIC RECONSTRUCTION.

Material or economic reconstruction, no less important than political and social reconstruction, is greatly needed in the wake of the Revolution. To such reconstruction, the strength of the entire nation must be called upon to contribute. China is economically backward, being more than a century behind England and the United States or half a century behind Japan. Let us study for a moment the production power of the American workman. He produces one hundred times as much as one Chinese workman by means of his scientific organization and machinery. This means to say that the productive power of an American workman is one hundredfold as great as that of our own workman. The Americans produce more things than we do, although we have a population of 400,000,000 against the American population of 100,000,000.

In the matter of communication, we are also at a disadvantage. A distance capable of being covered in a day or two in Europe and America will take half a month in China. We must spend two weeks to go from Shanghai to Szechuan—a distance of hardly over two thousands li which takes only a day or two to travel in Europe or America. Our life becomes considerably shortened as a result of the difficult communications. That is to say that what an European or American can accomplish in a day takes us half a month to do. One year's time in the life of an European or American corresponds to fifteen years' time in the life of a Chinese. We will inevitably lag far behind in the battle of life unless we reconstruct the means of our communications.

In accordance with the stipulations of the Fundamentals of National Reconstruction, there will be 10,000 miles of rail-roads, 1,000,000 miles of motor roads to be constructed. A total sum of 30,000,000,000 will be needed for such construction. With the total sum of annual national revenue of 500,000,000 against the aforesaid sum of 30,000,000,000, the project will take 60 years to materialise. It is noteworthy that our projected scheme is hardly over one-third of what the United States has already possessed. The comparison reveals to us unmistakably how exceedingly backward we are from the standpoint of national wealth.

But we must not be discouraged, for what the United States has possessed is all created by human efforts. The only difference lies in the fact that the Americans obtain their efficiency through scientific organization and mechanic devices. The United States is at the present time in possession of 24,000,000 motor cars, about one car per every 5 persons (the total population is 115,000,000), although thirty years ago, the total number of motor cars throughout the whole country did not exceed 3,002. This shows that material reconstruction is not so difficult as it seems to be.

Japan was agricultural fifty years ago when she shut her doors to the outside world. Now, she is regarded as a modern industrial nation. Germany was also industrially backward as recent as 1860. In a period of a little over half a century, she has made such great strides that now she compares favourably with any industrial nation of the world. So it is quite certainly that in fifty years China may become an industrial nation.

People have doubted why the country must become industrialized before we are able to solve our national problems, thinking that China has been agricultural for several thousands of years and why not hereafter. Such a line of thought indicates complete ignorance of economic principles. Our condition of economic backwardness and general poverty is attributable to the fact that we have been agricultural for several thousand years. No agricultural country can hope to establish itself in the face of world competition, for the increase in agricultural production is very much limited. Increase in production can only be obtained through the use of machinery and application of scientific methods. That is the only road towards the rehabilitation of the country and the solution of the livelihood problem of our people. Indeed, the economic problem constitutes the fundamental problem of the country. There must needs be development of the means of communication and the basic industries which will ultimately lead to the increase of production power and national wealth.

THE QUESTION OF DISTRIBUTION.

The communists will talk only about distribution instead of production, the problem with us is not so much of distribution as of production. We have produced so little that there is not much for us to distribute. The problem of distribution is important only in those countries which have already passed through the Industrial Revolution. It is of the least importance so far as we are concerned. In China, we have only "poverty". If the question of distribution is pushed as far as the communist would go, then there will be "equality of poverty", but not "equality of property". The communists are under the delusion that China's ills will get healed overnight by a redistribution of the land on communistic basis. But what is the total number of acres of cultivable land in China against the aggregate number of peasants? According to the report submitted by the communists at the time of the Wuchang—Hankow regime on Human province, it was found out that each peasant could receive two Mow of Land which would annually yield five Piculs of grain. This amount of grain would be barely enough for his food and leave his clothing, housing and means of communication unprovided for. Nothing is still clearer than the fact a redistribution of the farming land throughout the country can not solve the livelihood problem of our people. The more talk of distribution will lead only to infinite complications. I do not mean to say that the question of distribution should be ruled out altogether; we will take it up only when we shall have produced something. Until the Industrial Revolution is gone through, it would be futile to talk much about distribution. So communistic principles do not at all fit in with the present condition of China.

HINDUISM AND CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA.

(By MR. S. N. KARNATAKI).

(Continued from last issue).

It is true that we have not done anything for centuries to elevate the depressed classes. Naturally interested parties pick up this weak spot and magnify it to serve their own ends. We must be thankful, however, for the valuable services several missionary societies have rendered in this connection. But now elevation of the depressed classes forms one of the foremost planks in the Congress programme, and vigorous efforts are being made, under the guidance of Mahatma Gandhi, for the removal of untouchability of those classes. This reawakening of the public mind is mainly the reason, why Hindus are not found coming forward at all now as before to be converted to Christianity.

I have said that Hindus are now studying their religious literature more earnestly. Naturally most of them find that there is enough in their own religion and literature to satisfy their wants and that there is no need to go out anywhere for their spiritual benefit. It is there, if educated Hindus are coming after a short period of study to appreciate the value of their own religious literature and to feel that it is all-comprehensive, all-sufficient. This being so, no body would be inclined, except perhaps for some immediate temporal benefit, to accept an alien faith.

As to Dr. Farguhar's reasons under II one may say that the Doctor has made several wrong statements about the Hindus and their religion. He clearly says that they have been polytheists and that the educated mind of India has now already moved a long way from Hinduism in the direction of Christianity. But the Hindus in truth have been monotheists for thousands of years and it is a mistake to think that India began to learn monotheistic principles since she came in contact with Christian people. Here is what Sir M. Williams says in his book already referred to. Some of the oldest hymns of the Rigveda are monotheistic and all the most pronounced forms of Indian pantheism rest on the fundamental doctrine of God's unity. "It is true that a long time after the vedic period, people began to worship images of God after the manner of Buddhists and Jains who worshipped their saints, and in the course of time certain corrupt practices crept in. It must be admitted, however, that there have been reformers in the country from time to time who had tried to stop those practices and to establish purer forms of religion. But even those who worship their idols have never denied the doctrine of enmity of God and always regard their images as so many symbols of the one God. To refer therefore, to the image-worship or even to the corrupt practices and also to the attempts made from time to time to stop them, is one thing and to make the unhistorical statement that the Hindus have always been polytheists and that they are only now learning what monotheism is, is another. Even in modern times there have been movements started with a view to recognise more and more fully purer form of Hindu religion and to popularise the same and it would be pure exaggeration or misrepresentation of facts or both to give all the credit for these movements to Christianity. Speaking about the Brahmo Samaj and the Prarthana Samaj, Dr. Farguhar distinctly says that Christianity is omnipresent in all the proceedings of those Samajas. For they preach monotheism, they call God as the father of all, and their Sunday services include reading from sacred book, praise of God, prayer and so on.

But as regards the Prarthana Samaj the above statement seems to me to be pure exaggeration if nothing worse. It is true that the Prarthana Samaj regards Jesus Christ as one of the Saviours of the world and as such pays its need of praise to him. But the teachers of the Prarthana Samaj—Dr. Bhandarkar and Mr. Justice Ranade—have in their preaching always rallied on Upanishads, Gita and Bhagwat Puran, and also on the abhangs of Tukaram Namdeo and other saints. If the Samajists call God as the father of all, they also call Him the mother of all. Do Christians ever say so? In the Prarthana Samaj again, before the regular service begins on Sunday, there is bhajan in which songs in praise of God are sung; and at the end there is arti—waving of lights—a spiritual operation in the Samaj. On anniversary days moreover kirtan forms an important item in the programme. I have thus mentioned certain specific items only the underlying ideas of which are entirely Hindu in character, and have no place, so far as I know in services in Christian churches. This being so, to say that in the proceedings of the Prarthana Samaj Christianity is omnipresent is, to say the least, pure exaggeration.

When Mr. Turnbull gives a sketch of the higher elements of Hinduism and says that a people who possess such a rich legacy can never be expected to accept a faith which is altogether akin to their spirit, Dr. Farguhar points to the achievements of Greece and says that "so far as my studies have gone, I have found no really first-rate orientalist who speaks of the achievements of India as being equal to the triumphs of Greece." For the information of the Doctor, I could give here short extracts from only two of the well-known oriental scholars, who have devoted years of study to their subject.

Professor A. A. Macdonnell of Oxford says in his "History of Sanskrit Literature" that "In various branches of scientific literature in phonetics, grammar, [mathematics, astronomy, medicine and law, the Indians also achieved notable results. In some of these subjects, their attainments are, indeed, far in advance of what was accomplished by the Greeks." The italics are mine.

Sir Monier Williams speaks in his "Religion, thought and Life in India," of the natives of India as "the men who compiled the Laws of Manu, one of the most remarkable literary productions of the world, who thought out systems of ethics worthy of Christianity; who composed the Ramayana and Mahabharata poems in some respects on trialling the Iliad and the Odyssey; who invented for themselves the science of grammar, arithmetic, astronomy, logic, and who elaborated independently six most subtle systems of philosophy." The italics are mine.

Readers of the "Reformer" could easily decide for themselves whether Mr. Turnbull is right in his conclusions or Dr. J. N. Farguhar is justified in entertaining his hopes.

GOVERNMENT'S BREACH OF FAITH.

VIII.

Dr. Besant writes in New India:—The Government of India is supposed to be a Christian one ruling over heathens. Missionary Societies in Britain travel up and down the country lauding the "blessings of Christianity," and telling how their God has placed a Christian Nation to rule over India, so that that benighted country may enjoy Christian civilisation. One of the things which they denounce—and rightly denounce—is the crime of child-marriage, and they explain how infant girls are married in their cradles, and horrify the ignorant Westerners by describing the fate of widows in India, and then telling them how such little girls become widows by thousands, and are doomed to a joyless life. A novelist like Miss Mayo, armed with Government introductions, weaves in the air the liking of Brahmanas for little girl-children of five.

It is very curious that our good Christians over here are so remarkably indifferent to the protection of little children, whose sad fate draws so many pennies into missionary-boxes at "Home". They apparently drop their Christianity when they enter the Suez Canal and breathe the eastern air, or at any rate keep it for "the Lord's Day," and regard the other days of the week as not belonging to God at all—presumably to the opposite pole of the theological compass. For, was not the solemn warning uttered by the compassionate lips of Christ, who once took little children into His loving arms and blessed them:

It is impossible but that offences will come; but woe unto him through whom they come. It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones. (S. Luke, xviii, 1, 2.)

Quite a large stock of millstones seems to be needed in Delhi.

But let us descend from these high regions to the more ordinary world, and consider how facts down here condemn the crime of leaving our little girl-children undefended against the lusts of men.

Of course, we all know that the "first marriage" among Hindus is what in the West would be called a betrothal, with only one exception; the "child-wife" remains with her parents, and only goes to her husband's home after the "second marriage". But in the West, a betrothal does not make the betrothed girl a widow. But here in India, we have huge numbers of "virgin widows," children whose "husbands" have died before the "second marriage" takes place. The result is that all these girl-children who have been through the first ceremony are shut out from woman's highest function, Motherhood. Never can they hold their own child in their arms; never can know the love of husband, son, and daughter. They are dedicated to the life of the sannyasini—a noble vocation when self-chosen, but a cruel life of long penance when imposed by others. Since the women, the mothers, have awakened to a realization of their power, the sense of their duty with regard to their daughters has also awakened. They know what enforced widowhood means for these little ones, and are resolute to save them. Innumerable Conferences have been held all over India, and they have, with one voice, demanded that the marriage age shall be raised by law.

Quite apart from the withering of so many lives by child-marriage, it is accompanied by other evils. The death-rate of these child-wives leaps up by a shocking bound—the inevitable result of child-motherhood. The child's body is not matured enough for the bearing of a child, and it dies under the outrage. She has not known the careless happiness of childhood; she cannot bear the shock of child-wifery and motherhood. The ghastly sufferings of an unnaturally-forced function mean early death to many a helpless victim.

Nor do women suffer alone; school-boys who are also fathers are drained of vitality and of nervous energy; they cannot bear the double strain of hard study and over-early parenthood together, they easily fall victims of diabetes and other diseases due largely to nervous troubles, and they talk of being

'old' at fifty-five! Old when they should be, enjoying the plenitude of brain, strength and self-controlled emotions. The old Hinduism imposed celibacy till the student-life was over, for, as in all the ancient religions, health was guarded by invoking the sanction of religion for hygienic laws. Boy-fatherhood means early old age.

Happily, the boys, the young men, are rebelling against premature marriage, and as they are also demanding educated wives—and early marriage cuts off girl-education at the age when she should be a student—they constantly, in their meetings, make 21 the age for young men, from 16 to 18 the age for girls.

Mr. Sarada's Bill was a modest one, too modest, most of us think. He says the Government promised to vote for it. Well, if so, he has learnt the value of promises. The foreign Government has always been against social reform; it realizes that it will put an end to foreign rule over India. Another powerful reason for Dominion Status is that we cannot make real social reforms without the power of legislation. Will men be content to abolish laws against murder, to leave it to be dealt with by social opinion? And is not the death-rate of married child-mothers a form of murder, since it is caused by a disregard of natural law and can be brought down by man-made legislation? Is not preventible homicide a form of murder?

Only two Europeans voted for the Sarada Bill. Are the rest of the Europeans willing to uphold the introduction of child-marriage, into their own families? If not, why have they kept it legal for Hindus?

I may add, lest I be thought speaking of a reform which I had not enforced when I had the power, that in the Central Hindu School, we did not admit married boys, and took a promise from the parents that they would not marry their sons while at school. Later, we increased the fees of college students who married, and had in view their exclusion. When we started, at the end of the last century, this policy was not found in any school, as far as I know.

BOMBAY UNDER A CLOUD.

The Director of Information has issued the following report:—"During yesterday, Thursday the 7th, the situation in Bombay continued very serious. During the afternoon large mobs gathered at various places in the centre of the city and started rioting and assaulting passers by. In Kamatipura the mob after attacking several persons refused to stop though warned several times by a Magistrate and the military had to fire six rounds. Two rioters were killed and several wounded. The military had also to fire five rounds on a violent mob at 2nd Pathan Street killing one person and another five rounds near Northbrook Gardens on a crowd that was pelting the police and troops with stones and bottles. Two persons were wounded by this firing. Later in the afternoon the police had to fire on a riotous mob at Dongri Maidan and one rioter was injured. During the evening a mob attacked passers by at Argyle Road and Dana Bunder and three passers by were killed. There were various isolated assaults during the day. This morning (8th) at 2 A.M., a large mob was dispersed by the police in Byculla and about 9 A.M., another mob was dispersed after it had assaulted three persons. During Thursday and up till noon on Friday, 16 persons were reported killed and 116 injured. The Hon'ble Member in charge of the Home Department, the General Officer Commanding, Bombay, and the Commissioner of Police have been round the disturbed area this morning and since 9 A.M., all is reported quiet. Leaders of the Hindu and Mohammedan communities have been moving in the city advising the public to avoid violence.

The comparative quiet which reigned during the morning of yesterday was succeeded in the late afternoon by further serious outbreaks in a part of the City hitherto not affected. The situation was under control by mid-night.

The troops were compelled to open fire on the mob in the Abdul Rehman Street area near Narayan Dhuru Street, causing several casualties and late at night the rioting spread to Ripon Road and Madanpura where six people were killed and a number injured. At the junction of Kalachowki and Chinchpokli Road the police arrested a number of men who were stoning the mosque there. Another mob was dispersed by the Police at Parel Road near Rangari Chawl, Masjid.

This morning 50 mills and the Railway Workshops were working but the tram service is disorganised. No victoria drivers are plying for hire and very few taxis are to be seen in the disturbed part of the City, while most of the shops are closed. The situation continues to be very serious, and it is feared that further trouble may be expected.

So far as can be ascertained the casualties between 12 noon on Friday and 12 noon to-day (Saturday) have been 33 killed and 193 injured and removed to hospital.

The night of 9th was quieter than the previous one and the orders relating to collection of more than five persons in the streets and the prohibition of people loitering about after dark had a good effect. Persistent efforts were made to attack the mosques at Kalachowki Road and Fergusson Road, but the police were successful in preventing damage being done.

During Saturday a number of cases of looting were reported and shops were broken open at Kalbadevi Road, Bhuleshwar and Shaikh Memon Street and forty persons were arrested. At Sukhlaji Street the police fired on a mob of Hindus and Muhammadans who were looting an aerated water cart.

There were serious disturbances at Sydenham Road, where three people were killed, and Foras

Road. The police fired three revolver shots and dispersed the mob. At Nakhoda Street, Pydhonie the troops twice fired on a mob causing 14 casualties and firing was also necessary at Mirza Street and Kalbadevi Road. There were two cases of incendiarism one at Barbhai Mohulla and the other at Kalbadevi. A number of bad characters were arrested and detained. On Saturday night dead bodies were found at Dharavi and near Arthur Road stables. Stray assaults were reported from Dadar Road, Suparibagh Road, Nagpada and Kamatipura up to 10 P.M.

The situation to-day (Sunday) morning is quieter.

The casualties reported between 12 noon on Saturday to 12 noon Sunday were 28 dead (including 15 died in hospital) and injured 92."

To-day (Tuesday) shows a considerable improvement in the situation. Shops are open even in those areas where there has been the greatest disturbance, people are moving about more freely and so are the railway workshops.

Yesterday (Monday) there were a number of sporadic cases of assault and murder.

Several mills which were working in the morning did not resume in the afternoon and the Matunga Railway workshop was closed in the afternoon at the request of the workers.

The rounding up of bad characters was continued and 48 persons were arrested. The number of bad characters rounded up and confined at Worli is now 493.

The Curfew order was very strictly observed last night and by 8 p. m. scarcely anyone was moving in the streets. The order against loitering in the streets in the day time is also observed, but it is enforced with discretion; small parties of respectable individuals are not interfered with, while larger crowds that loiter about or appear threatening are moved on by the Police.

The Ramzan month began from Monday night and orders have been issued that Muhammadans going to say their prayers in mosques and home again are not to be interfered with if they proceed peacefully and are unarmed.

Between noon on Monday and noon on Tuesday three people were killed and 24 injured. The total casualties since February 4th are 137 killed and 783 injured and removed to hospital.

Almost normal conditions prevail in Bombay City today (Wednesday). The markets and shops are open and traffic is going on as usual. The night passed without incident. The police have made a number of arrests in connexion with the outrages committed during the riots. The total number of persons now confined at Worli comes to 622. Seventy mills are working this morning and so are the railway workshops. Only one death was reported yesterday, that of a man assaulted on Monday, who died in hospital. The total casualties as a result of the riots are 138 killed and 789 injured and removed to hospital.

In view of the improved conditions now prevailing in the City, the Curfew order which was issued last Saturday has been modified in respect of time since Thursday, 14th February.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Ra. a. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout. ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	2 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukkerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isable Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.

THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

JANMABHUMI.

An English weekly

Edited by

DR. B. PATTABHI SITARAMYIA, Machilipatnam, (Andhra)

and

Known for its Impartial and just studies

in

Indian Politics

n

for its advocacy of Truth and Principle irrespective of party proclivities.

Rs. 5 a year.

For a free specimen copy please send your address :—

To the Manager

'JANMABHUMI'

Machilipatnam,

(ANDHRA).

MATRIMONIAL.

A young Mysorean, Brahmin, in business, wishes to correspond, with a view to matrimony, with a young Brahmin lady of Karnataka or Andhra, who has studied medicine. Please write to "R", C/o This paper.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS.

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications
should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

A Male Child.

"I have great pleasure in communicating to you that as a result of my administering only one bottle of Kesari's LODHRA, which I purchased from your Bombay Agent, one of the Ladies in my house got completely cured of her Dysmenorrhoea and has delivered a male child three months back. I have no doubt that Kesari's Lodhra is proving to be an invaluable Saviour of the Fair Sex". Writes Mr. M. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, B.A., Government Observatory, Alibag (Bombay) on 1st July 1928.

KESARI'S LODHRA—A DIVINE GIFT IN MEDICINAL FORM.

Manufactured by:

KESARI KUTEERAM.
MADRAS.

Local Agents:

N. MAGANLAL & Co.,
49, ESPLANADE ROAD, ABOVE
WEST END WATCH CO.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.

Capital Subscribed Rs. 2,00,00,000

Capital Called up " 1,00,00,000

Reserve Fund " 82,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,

MANAGER.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Saramati (District Poona).	Dondalcha (District West Khandesh)
Nira (" ").	Shirpur (" ").
Islampur (District Satara).	Shahabad (" ").
Karad (" ").	Nandurbar (" ").
Tasgaon (" ").	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Koregaon (" ").	Satana (" ").
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Belapur (" ").	Kalol (" ").
Akluj (District Sholapur)	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Dhulia (District West Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital Rs. 15,00,000

Issued Capital Rs. 13,00,000

Subscribed & Paid-up Capital ... Rs. 12,64,600

1. The Bank finances institutions registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 4 per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances exceeding Rs. 25,000.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

14-6-28.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Patlad, Patan, Amrell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kolol, Kadi and Dwaraka.

JAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	Rs.
CAPITAL PAID-UP	60,00,000
RESERVE FUND	30,00,000
				23,00,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Raj Ratna Sheth Maganbhai P. Haribhakti (Nagar Sheth, Baroda).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Naib Dewan, Baroda.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1928, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1928. Rules on application.

8-3-26

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).	Rs.	a.	p.
	Inland	...	5 0 0
	Foreign	...	5 8 0
	Single copy	...	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Taticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

0-11-26.

Bombay.

Portland Cement.

Ganapati

Brand.

Complies with the Revised (1925) British Standard Specification.

USE IT AND SAVE MONEY:

TATA SONS Ltd.,

Agents, The Indian Cement Co., Ltd.,

"Bombay House" Fort, Bombay.

SPECIAL OFFER

Dharamsi Morarji

Woolen Suitings to be Cleared at Exceptionally

Low Factory Prices

54" Wide from Rs. 2/8 per yard.

GRASP THIS OPPORTUNITY.

BOMBAY SWADESHI CO-OPERATIVE STORES Co., Ltd.

Cruikshank Road, Fort,

Premier
Swadeshi
Emporium.

The Cheapest
House.

FIRE INSURANCE.

MILLOWNERS & MERCHANTS OF INDIA.

Do you know that 30 of the leading countries of the world have, during the last 20 years, taken effective steps to establishing their own Insurance Companies for conserving the insurance premiums in their own countries? Governments have helped Insurance Companies by passing favourable legislations in favour of Companies even at a disadvantage to foreign companies. The patriotism of the business community of these countries has enabled Insurance Companies to become a real power, and a large financial institution.

It is in your hands to make the Indian Insurance Companies as powerful financially in this country as Insurance Companies have become in other countries. We appeal to you for patronage to your own institutions and we hope that you will stand by these Indian Insurance Companies.

The New India Assurance Co., Ltd.
 The Jupiter General Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The Vulcan Insurance Co., Ltd.
 The British India Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Universal Fire & Gen. Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Indian Mercantile Insee. Co., Ltd.
 The Crescent Insurance Co., Ltd.

The New India Assurance Company, Ltd.

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

Chairman.—SIR DORAB TATA, Kt.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company, transacting the following classes of business:—

FIRE, MARINE, TRANSIT, MOTOR CAR, ACCIDENT, CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS (LOSS OF PROFITS), BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our connections are world-wide and we have Representatives in almost every part of the Globe.

Branches:—CALCUTTA, MADRAS, RANGOON, AND NEW YORK.

London Agents:—SEDGWICK, COLLINS (Agencies), Ltd.,
 16, Gracechurch Street.

CAPITAL:

Authorized	Rs. 6,00,00,000
Subscribed	3,56,03,275
Paid up	71,21,055
TOTAL FUNDS	Rs. 1,27,80,246

R. J. DUFF,
 General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN

CURES ALL ACHES & PAINS.

Price 10 Annas a Pot.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

MADRAS

&

BOMBAY.

BETTER HEALTH

AND

SPEEDIER RECONCRY

To the patients suffering from constipation, Brain Fag, nervous debility &c., by using the world famous

ATANK NIGRAH PILLS

Rupee one only for a tin (32 Pills).

Particulars from:—

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY,

Jamnagar (Kathiawar).

Bombay Office,
 Kalbadevi Road.

A. K. JOSHI & Co.

Kalbadevi Road, BOMBAY.

We undertake every kind of Lithographic Art Printing in Colours, Publish Fine Art Pictures, &c.

Wholesale & Retail Dealers in Calcium Carbide.

Large Importers of Finest Printing Inks and Colours.

HIGH CLASS FRAME MAKERS.

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[Begun in 1890.]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
 PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
 THIRTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF
 PUBLICATION.
 STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
 Foreign Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current year, if available, can be had at 2 annas each, exclusive of postage.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
ADVERTISEMENT DEPARTMENT,
 The Indian Social Reformer,
 Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
 Fort, BOMBAY.

Mahatma Gandhi.—A brief sketch of his life and public activities with special reference to Non-Co-operation by Mr. K. Natarajan (reprint of articles that appeared in the Reformer). Price annas 8.

Apply to :

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER OFFICE
 Navsari Chambers, Fort, BOMBAY

THE HINDUSTAN REVIEW.

A High Class Quarterly of long standing devoted to
POLITICS, LITERATURE, ARTS, Etc,

Founded by Mr. S. Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

Contains articles on topics of the day or matters of interest, written by most competent men and distinguished contributors; exhaustive reviews of important Foreign and Indian publications, written by specialists in the line.

The Hindustan Review is an excellent medium for advertisements.

THE MANAGER,
The Hindustan Review.
 PATNA, E. I. R.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore:
BEST & CO., LTD.,
 MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
 SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
 81, Main Street, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
 FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

Coming shortly

VITAPHONE AND MOVIE-TONE

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Time:—4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

Pathe Gazette No. 1573-74

“ IT ”

7 Reels (featuring)

CLARA BOW

(A Paramount Picture)

WEDDING BELLS

(Comic). 1 Reel

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Engagements:—

Saturday 16th February	...	4-30 and 6-30 P.M. Cinema and at 9-30 P.M. Benno-Moiseiwitsch.
Sunday 17th	„	... 5-30 P.M. Benno-Moiseiwitsch and 10 P.M. Cinema.
Monday 18th	„	... 6-30 P.M. Cinema and 10 P.M. Cinema.
Tues. & Wed.	„	... 5-30 P.M. Benno-Moiseiwitsch and 10 P.M. Cinema.
Thursday	„	... 10 P.M. Cinema.
Friday	„	... 5-30 P.M. Benno-Moiseiwitsch and 10 P.M. Cinema.

CINEMA PROGRAMME.

Pathe Super Gazette No. 1573-74

REAL CHARLESTON. 2nd Series.

MISSING LINKS

8 Reels

(SYD CHAPLIN)

(Warner Bros.)

EMPRESS CINEMA

Time:—3, 4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P.M.

SWISS ENGINEERING Co.	1 reel
LOVER OF CAMILLE	7 reels
(MONTE BLUE AND MARIE PROVOST)
JERRY THE GIANT	2 reels
(JERRY MADDEN)

Morning Show on Sunday at 10 P.M. at the Edward and Empress Cinemas.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XXXIX.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1929

No. 26

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Catholics and Civil Marriages.	Mr. Sastry in Bombay.
Personal Law of Marriages.	A Blue Lie.
Bombay Excise Policy.	That Men May all be Brothers.
Bombay's Educational Expendi- ture.	Some Points of Fact and Law.
The Sarda Bill.	The Devadasi Problem.
Dog Shows.	Mr. Sastri's Work.
Marriage Age in England.	Government's Breach of Faith.
Marx's Capital.	News of the Week.

NOTES.

Catholics and Civil Marriage :—Mr Justice Kemp decided last week at the Bombay High Court that the marriage of a Roman Catholic with a member of the same community before a Registrar under the Indian Christian Marriage Act of 1872 was not invalidated owing to the religious ceremony as laid down by the Canonical Law of their Church not having been performed. The facts were that Peter Philip Saldanha on June 14 went through the form of marriage prescribed in the Act with Anne Grace Saldanha before the Marriage Registrar in Bombay, but did not live with her thereafter. On June 17, he was married according to Catholic rites in the Church at Igatpuri to Olive Basta de Souza, and thereafter lived with her. In a prosecution for bigamy brought against Philip Saldanha by Olive de Souza, he, presumably to test the validity of the first marriage, was acquitted by the Sessions Judge of Nasik on the ground that as a Catholic he could not contract a valid marriage except according to the Canonical law. Thereupon, Anne Grace Saldanha sued in the High Court for a declaration that she was the lawfully married wife of Philip and that the second canonical rite did not affect her status. Mr. Justice Kemp has upheld her claim. His lordship in his judgment pointed out that both the parties were natives of Goa where a Civil Marriage was compulsory, and, therefore, it cannot be said that Roman Catholics could not contract a non-canonical marriage.

Personal Law of Marriage :—The important passage in Mr. Justice Kemp's judgment is that in which he expounded the law under the Indian Christian Marriage Act. "Section 88 of the Act of 1872," his lordship observed, "laid down that nothing under the Act was to be deemed to validate any marriage which the personal law applicable to either of the parties forbade him or her to enter into. In his lordship's opinion the words "personal law" referred to the capacity to marry.

They did not apply to the forms and ceremonies of the marriage. His lordship remarked there was evidence to show that civil marriage was essential in Goa. Religious sanction was one which operated on the conscience of the parties and could not as a rule nullify the provisions of the civil law. His Lordship considered that the form prescribed by part 5 of the Act was not a part of the personal law of the parties. The ceremony was performed according to the provisions of the Act before the Registrar which had the effect of binding the parties to the marriage." His lordship's interpretation of Section 88 of the Act, leaves open the question of the validity of a marriage of a Christian with a non-Christian, particularly a Hindu whose personal law forbids inter-communal marriages, under it. In Goa, however, Hindus too, we think, are subject to the law of civil marriage and it will be interesting to know what would happen if a Hindu marries a Christian in that territory.

Bombay Excise Policy —The Bombay Government, when it had to deal with a Legislative Council which was more representative of public opinion, declared that Prohibition was the goal of its excise policy, and adopted a few measures as steps towards it. It was publicly rebuked by the late Finance Member of the Government of India for its temerity, and soon after, under the pressure of its own financial difficulties, it began to wobble, and now it has definitely retraced its steps on the pretext that they have not promoted temperance but only increased illicit consumption. Mr. Pradhan in his Financial Statement presented to the Legislative Council on Monday, said: "I am advised that in spite of these changes the drinking habit of the people has not much improved. There is considerable illicit distillation and smuggling going on." He foreshadowed a reversal of policy as a consequence. Mr. Pradhan's business is not to follow the advice of his Department but to exercise his judgment in the light of his knowledge of Indian conditions. Surely, he does not expect the habits of a generation to be changed by a few half-hearted measures in the course of a few years. We would commend to his attention the lecture which Bishop A. W. Leonard delivered on Tuesday at the American Mission Church. Prohibition at its worst, said the Bishop, was better than the liquor system at its best. The workmen of America now earned higher wages, possessed better homes and larger bank deposits simply because their money was no longer used up in drink. It took 75 years to enforce completely the amendment abolishing slavery. If it should take another 100 years to complete the prohibition reform it would be none too much. The United States would never go back to the saloon and would never annul the law of the land. The evangelical churches of the United States, as well as many other religious bodies, were wholly committed to prohibition. That was also true of the Council of Churches of Christ in America. He urged the people of India not to become discouraged nor to think that the prohibition law in America was a failure. He was closely identified with the movement and did not hesitate to pronounce it in many ways the greatest success of its kind ever known to Christian civilization.

Bombay's Educational Expenditure:—The Finance Minister, it seems, intended in the last session of the Bombay Legislative Council to raise the fees for Secondary and College education in order to enable him to extend primary education. The proposal met with vehement opposition in the Presidency and had to be dropped. The financial situation in Bombay has not improved since July, rather has it gone from bad to worse. It is surprising, therefore, that his Excellency Sir Frederick Sykes in inaugurating the present session of the Council should have revived the question. The alternative to this, we are told, is the reduction of Government expenditure on Primary education and Mr. Pradhan, the Finance Member, also in his financial statement says that further advance in Primary education must be stopped. In comparison with some of the other Provinces and with many of the Indian States Bombay spends proportionately less on education and the frequency with which proposals for raising the fees or cutting down the expenditure are brought forward does not speak well for the Government. His Excellency says that the fees at many of the institutions for higher education are "unreasonably low." The students who go in for higher education are generally speaking from the middle classes. The steady increase in the fees during the past few years has affected them considerably and any further rise would mean a heavy and unjust tax on their resources. We trust that the Government will finally drop the idea and look to other sources for their revenue.

The Sarada Bill:—We publish elsewhere two further press opinions on Government's attitude towards the Sarada Bill—one of them from a Protestant weekly. The Liberator of Delhi which was suspended on the death of its founder Swami Shradhanand and which is being re-issued by Prof. Indra has the following comment on the incident:—"What passes our understanding is how the Government who surely appreciate the viewpoint of Mr. Sarada and the obvious utility of the measure should have lent their support to a reactionary of the type of Mr. Acharya. Did they by that means expect to marshal reactionary support on future occasions in their attempts in inflicting unwanted legislation on the country or were they afraid that Mr. Sarada's Bill was of such a revolutionary character that their very Raj would be endangered, much as Amanullah's endeavours in adjacent Afghanistan? Government's subsequent communique explaining their attitude only makes the situation worse. In it they state that they would await the findings of the Age of Consent Committee in view of the close connection between the two. But the country can have by no means forgotten that the Government had stated clearly on an earlier occasion that the Committee's enquiry had nothing to do with Mr. Sarada's Bill. The truth is Government can never be expected to support even the smallest measure of social reform though they are never tired of repeating that political reform must be preceded by and flow from social reform. And until we attain Swaraj we will never be able to effect any such social reform by legislation."

Dog Shows:—A correspondent writes:—"It has been a matter of curiosity to me why men and women take up with dogs and for that matter other brute creation to the extent of over-feeding, pampering and exhibiting them in shows and do not expend their love and money on one of their own species. Is it because dogs are more tractable than human beings? Or is it because the owners acquire a certain notoriety when the dogs exhibited win prizes in the show? In such cases it is usually mentioned Mrs. or Miss so and so's "Bobbie" or "Jackie" as prize-winners. Dog show pictures appearing in local dailies have been a matter of considerable puzzle to me. Belonging to the unsophisticated class, I often mistook the elegantly dressed figures standing by the brute prize winners as the central objects of the pictures and often used to wonder why in some pictures the central objects were missing. It required some enlightenment for the right appreciation of the relative position of the objects in the pictures as also of the delicacy of taste exhibited by some owners in not figuring in them and thus allowing the dogs to have their day. Furnishing dogs for the show seems to be a hobby exclusively cultivated by the fair sex. The reason seems to be that women have more leisure and love to lavish on the lucky dogs.

Marriage Age in England:—We hope it augurs well for marriage legislation in India that the House of Lords on the motion of Lord Buckmaster passed the second reading of the Age of Marriages Bill, the object of which is to make void marriages in which either of the contracting parties is under sixteen. The law as it stands at present permits marriages of girls and boys at 12 and 14. Lord Buckmaster made the shrewd remark that they were complaining about the condition of affairs in India but that they had an identical situation there which in one condition was worse, meaning by that, that the Indian marriage was only a betrothal.

Marx's Capital:—Eden and Cedar Paul, the well-known translators of German books, are to be congratulated on their admirable translation of Karl Marx's 'Capital' (Allen and Unwin, Ltd., London, Price—12s. 6d.). Hitherto the standard translation was the one by Moore and Aveling published in 1886 with an introduction by Engels. It was based on the third German edition and the subsequent publication of the fourth and definitive German edition after the author's death by Engels diminished its value as a work of reference. The

(Continued in the Leader page).

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1929.

MR. SASTRY IN BOMBAY.

The Right Hon. V. S. Srinivasa Sastry arrived in Bombay from South Africa by the S. E. Karoa last Saturday morning. He was received on landing by a large gathering of friends and representatives of several students' organisations. In the evening, he addressed a public meeting convened by the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association and several other local Associations in the Cowasji Jehangir Hall. Sir Chimanlal Setalvad presided and the hall was full to overflowing. In the course of his address, which we print today, Mr. Sastry suggested that India should send at frequent intervals lecturers who can convey to the people in South Africa a correct and adequate idea of India, her culture and civilization. This, he thought, would do more than anything else to promote good understanding between the Indian and the European Communities in that country. The suggestion, we hope, will be taken up by the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association. It is not easy to find the right type of lecturer who will be able to spare the time to go to South Africa on such a mission. In view of the great importance which Mr. Sastry attaches to such deputations, no effort should be spared to act on his suggestion.

In a press interview, Mr. Sastry explained his view as to co-operation between Indians and the native Africans in South Africa. He said that the suggestion has been made, but he was not in favour of it at present. Mr. Sastri said: "The condition of the coloured people and that of the natives is a very complicated matter. I have not made a careful study of that subject, because it does not form part of the duties of the Agent to the Government of India. Occasionally, a desire is expressed by these classes of people that the Indian community should co-operate with them in their struggles and a few Indians occasionally have a similar inclination. I have set my face firmly against any such move. Apart from other reasons there is the one consideration which is conclusive on the matter. Once Indians identified themselves or even closely associated with other people the Government of India cannot help them and without the backing of the Government of India our people would be lost."

We are not sure that this fully represents Mr. Sastry's view on this important question. Perhaps, he will take an early opportunity of amplifying the above statement. There is no feature of the Hilton-Young Commission's Report more striking than its insistence on the principle of estimating the value of immigrant communities in Africa by the contribution which they make or can make to the development of the native Africans. The Indian Community in South Africa, is not yet in a position to make any vital contribution in this matter owing to its own status being in constant jeopardy from the colour prejudice of the White population. When this danger is obviated, Mr. Sastry, we are sure, does not intend that Indians should be content to lead self-centered lives amidst the people of the land where they have made their homes.

A BLUE LIE.

The expression 'white lie' is a familiar one in the English language. It means a lie which bears on its face the stamp of its unreliability. In South India there used to be a legend about a "blue lie." In the days when indigo production was a prosperous industry, it was believed that at some stage of the cultivation or manufacture of the dye, a thundering lie should be promulgated in order to help it to set properly. It will be interesting to know whether a similar belief was prevalent in any other part of the country. We now know that even myths and superstitions had an origin in some fact, and the "blue lie" legend probably owes its origin to the extravagant statements of labour recruiters who wished to get a large amount of labour for the indigo plantations at certain seasons. The scare about Pathans kidnapping children to be sacrificed at the building of a bridge in Baroda, seems to be a 'blue lie' of this type. It was responsible for the recent outbreak in Bombay, and it is reported to have spread to Nagpur and Bangalore. There is no bridge being built in Baroda at present, and human sacrifices to propitiate the devatas of architecture, are no longer in vogue. There is no lack of children in Baroda and there is no conceivable reason why Pathans, of all people, should be connected in this criminal way with the Public Works Department of Baroda. The whole thing is a palpable fib, and the way in which it has caught on, is an illustration and warning to administrators like the Bombay Finance Member, who would economise at the sacrifice of primary education.

(Continued from the 2nd column of 2nd Notes Page).

present translation which, though complete in itself "comprises 'book one' of a more extensive scheme", is made from the fourth edition and the translators have made use of the standard French and Russian translations as well as the previous English ones. We need hardly emphasise the importance of such a work especially when as at no other time Marx's theories are agitating the world,

THAT MEN MAY ALL BE BROTHERS.

MEDITATIONS FOR THE YEAR.

VIII. FACTORY WORKERS.

(By Dr. Clifford Manshardt, Ph.D.).

An ancient literary production asks the question, "Shall horses run upon the rock? Will one plow there with oxen?" And though the answer expected is an emphatic, "No!", much of our industrial life does seem to be as devoid of meaning as plowing of rock. Before the introduction of the factory regime the worker was a skilled craftsman, a master of his materials and a creator. But with the widespread mechanisation of industry, the skill that was once the man's has passed in large measure into the machine, and the craftsman has given place to the tender, carrying out a daily round of monotonous duties. It is no secret that the ordinary workman hates his work, and yet the situation is not quite as hopeless as it seems.

Looking into the future we see the advent of the day when man has really learned to control the machine, when equitable human relationships are established in industry, when skill and quality are regarded as of more importance than mass production, when labour is regarded as a privilege instead of an unwelcome duty. This day is still ahead, but every worker has the privilege of preparing his own mind for the time that is to come. The way out of the sordid is not so much physical escape as a refinement of the inner self. The way to overcome the monotony of life is to try to see its meaning, to recognise faithful toil as eternal, and perfection as a part of the divine perfection. The bondage of labour is so often emphasised that men fail to see labour as a privilege. We live in a universe that is evolving. The world is in the making, and to every individual it is given to play a part. The spirit that causes some men to risk their all for a cause is the spirit that is needed in modern industry. Society needs men who are devoted to their work. The man who is simply a time-server and who spends his energies in seeing how much work he can avoid is the man who tends to bring labour into disrepute. The true representative of labour is the man who continually does his best, whether he be a sweeper of floors or the most skilled mechanic. Even the most menial task is a highway towards the better world that is to be. In the freedom of willing service there can be no bondage. The well-done of the worker's own conscience is his highest reward, his own inner satisfaction his deepest joy.

And since the factory worker is toiling for us, have we not also a responsibility towards him? Have not we as citizens the right to say something about the conditions under which he labours, and to insist upon their improvement? We have the right, and we have the duty to keep alive within us that feeling of brotherhood that will never let us forget how dependent we are upon the services of others. No man among us dare dismiss his social responsibilities, for each of us is benefitting from the common toil. Will it or no we are humanity's slaves, each the servant of all.

SOME POINTS OF FACT AND LAW.

IV. THE DOCTRINE OF SPIRITUAL TRUSTEESHIP.

(By Mr. Kopargam Ramamurti).

"Am I my brother's keeper?" retorted Cain, who had killed his brother Abel, in answer to God's query about him.

"You are your brother's keeper," declares each warring Creed to every one of its faithful followers, and ordains him most solemnly to go forth and take no rest till he kills all its brothers religious and crowns it with sole sovereignty over mankind.

Each religion sees with unerring vision the oneness of humanity or brotherhood of man. It is made restless by a goading sense of its own divine origin and God-ordained function of gathering all mankind to His feet. But at the same time it allows itself to be deluded by the Maya of Prakriti which creates a sense of separateness between itself and other religions because they function through different Upadhis, and sees only an enemy of God instead of its own self or a brother creed in every other religion. Hence the War of Creeds and the doom of brotherliness in the name of God and Brotherhood. Hence the overzeal for Shuddhi and Sanghattan and for Tanzim and Tabligh. Hence also the misuse of what may be called the doctrine of spiritual trusteeship which has proved itself a tremendous driving force in the history of the world, quite as much at least as its twin doctrine of political trusteeship. It is the doctrine by which every man may claim to be the keeper of his brother's soul by divine appointment, more especially of the soul of his 'uncivilised' brother to the south and east of the Mediterranean as far as the Pacific, and engage incessantly in contriving means to make him turn with loathing from the ways of his parents, pronouncing them as ungodly.

There is however a benign and sublime aspect to this doctrine which no religious man can afford to ignore. It is beautifully portrayed in poetic language in an old Christian hymn:—

I know thou hast believed in Me
And light through Me is thine,
But where are all those glorious stars
Which in thy Crown should shine?
Thou seest yonder joyous throng
With gems on every brow,
For every soul they led to Me
They wear a jewel now.

It is no wonder that every good Christian therefore feels that he must be prepared to render a good account of himself when he is so questioned at the solemn hour of judgment. Godly men and women who have wealth of their own do not hesitate to spend it all in what they believe to be the service of the Lord. Even if they are poor, they make it their life-business or Mission to do every thing in their power to convert mankind to the Gospel in whose saving power and unutterable value to the world they have absolute Faith,

"It is not the millionaires of Christendom that are the backbone of the Church," wrote Mrs. K. R. once to the Hindu Missionary (1920). "It is the widow's mite that fills the Missionary's purse and overflows to the uttermost ends of the earth. If the Christian Missions are rich and resourceful to-day it is because the poor man or woman in North America, Great Britain, Denmark or Norway piously stints oneself and goes without tea or sugar, bread or butter, meat or vegetables each month, that with the savings so made the light of the Gospel may be carried to every dark corner of the earth to save the orphan the outcaste and sufferer, the savage and the uncivilised everywhere, whether in the wilds of Central Africa or in India or in China. India is not wanting in charity, self-sacrifice or religious zeal. But the piety which stops at no sacrifice to secure one's own individual salvation by digging tanks, feeding the hungry and building resthouses and temples, has not yet learnt to appreciate or Co-operate enthusiastically with any work of Charity which has for its object the soul-salvation of other people,—even one's own people."

This conflict of ideals and objects may perhaps account for the unpleasant conflicts of feeling which burst out occasionally between the Communities. Judge Paul Appasami M.A., LL.B., in his illuminating book on "the Law Applicable to Christians in India" tries to tackle this vexed question and presents with fairness and sympathy all the considerations that might be urged from either side on some of its practical aspects. His exposition is somewhat long but deserves a full hearing:—

"It is an undoubted fact," he says, "that Hindu parents of the higher castes fiercely resent all attempts on the part of the Christian Missionaries to take a child away from its ancestral home and subject it to steady influence on the part of Christian teachers. They regard them as a breach or abuse of the confidence that they have reposed in Christian Missionaries. They moreover believe that it is impossible for a boy or girl of tender years to make up his or her mind about the fundamental truths of religion when he could neither have sufficient maturity of mind nor adequate information about the faith of his forefathers or the faith to which he proposes to transfer himself. They consider it an aggravated wrong if, in particular, any secrecy or concealment is practised either in the taking away of a boy or girl from his or her parental home or in disposing of him or her afterwards."

"Missionaries on the other hand," continues Mr. Appasami, "are constantly comparing in their minds the actual surroundings in which the Hindu child is being brought up with the very different atmosphere which he can breathe in a Christian home, and they argue that it cannot be morally wrong but (must be) entirely right to remove a child from an environment in which crude superstitions and rites are practised to another place in which he has greater chances of seeking after truth and discussing it with a free and open mind. They are particularly impressed by the circumstance that it is only during the stage of adolescence that a boy has the idealism and the sense of truth necessary for inquiry into the fundamentals of religion. When he grows up and is settled in life, he is so overborne by the responsibilities of domestic or official life that he has neither the time nor the inclination to pursue religious inquiry. According to leading authors who have written on the psychology of religion, the years between fourteen and twenty are especially the years in which a child begins to think for itself and develop a religious sense of its own, begins to find fault with whatever is false in the beliefs in which it has been brought up and to condemn whatever is morally wrong in the practices to which it has been accustomed...The period of adolescence is specially the period during which even born Christians undergo the great change which is usually described as conversion. It is therefore also the period during which a child not brought up as a Christian is most apt to change his faith. For these reasons, the Christian teacher or missionary is anxious to force the pace and to separate the child from what he considers noxious influences, so as to enable him to continue his religious enquiries in peace of mind and the best environments available. But this procedure might expose him both to civil and criminal liability...Usually in such cases, there is strenuous contest between the parties as to the age of the child; doctors are brought in who are prepared to give it as their opinion that a boy or girl usually considered to be nineteen or twenty is really only fifteen or sixteen. It is safe, in such a case, for the person who assumes control over a boy or girl to obtain a certificate from a Medical practitioner of repute so that his bona fides may not afterwards be called in question." (Page 36-39 and 43).

Who can say that the learned Judge has given an unfair judgment in this complicated matter where deep-rooted feelings are involved? And yet who can deny that it is poor consolation to the fond Hindu parents whose bowels yearn for the beloved thoughtless child beguiled and torn from their bosom and held under control by utter strangers whose touch and influence is damnation according to their belief, to be told, however justly, that their home surroundings are dark and superstitious, that their parental influence is noxious to their child, and that the Missionaries have excellent psychological and spiritual reasons for hurrying up with its 'conversion' without waiting till it grows up and is settled in life and have obtained an excellent certificate of age which any court of law would feel bound to believe on account of the repute commanded by the Doctor concerned in preference to any that they may be able to produce?

'Conversion' is admittedly a spiritual process. It is almost always found to be also a voluntary process in the end. There is however no reason why it should not be a spontaneous process as well from the beginning, uninfluenced and unhurried by any self-invited and self-authorized third party. But the case-law on the subject shows clearly that from the beginnings of time there has been no 'Conversion' without a Missionary behind it.

Unfortunately for the world, the very first recorded case of Conversion was also one which involved the wounding of parental feelings and disregard of parental authority. It will be found reported in Genesis 3 of the Old Hebrew Testament. The result of it however was disastrous to mankind. No missionary of God would ever glory in that conversion, far less imitate it, because it was brought about against the express command of the Heavenly Father to his innocent children. It was the act of a Tempter who was the enemy of the Creator. It is therefore denounced by all right-minded people as a "Temptation" and nowhere glorified as "Conversion." But if it be true that even the Devil must be given his due, one must cordially admit, judging the matter from a purely scientific view, that the temptation or conversion of Eve, and through her of Adam, against the well-known wishes of their Father, was a most consummate and momentous Missionary coup in the history of the human race,—one too which laid down the general broad lines of a successful missionary campaign for all ages. It is in fact the leading case on the point.

MADRAS PHYSICAL EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

(By MR. A. S. VENKATRAMAN, B. A., L. T.)

The Physical Education Committee has just finished its labours, and its recommendations are now before the public. Almost the first impression one gains from a study of the report, is that it is comprehensive in its scope, practical in its proposals, and emphatic, so far as it goes.

On the sheer need for physical training there can be no two opinions. If Physical training for fifteen minutes daily is compulsory, it can also be easily managed, for that involves little expense or outlay and slight, if welcome dislocation in the school time-table. Indeed some educational reformers advocate physical jerks daily just at the commencement of the school session, in order to smarten up the limbs. If that can be done for ten minutes to begin with, every day, it will only be an appropriate beginning and the session can not close better than with physical exercise for 15 minutes after 4 p. m. As it is, the tendency is, to lengthen out the drill period, to 45 minutes making the physical training more lifeless, and more un-interpreting and the result is, that the class becomes so noisy as to require the services of a class teacher to maintain discipline.

With regard to games training, the committee in no unequivocal language and in no uncertain mood, emphasises the position and establishes the clear need. It is not unalive to the difficulties and recommends the acquisition of play-grounds for each school and a grant-in-aid for each school, either three-fourths of the cost or the entire cost. For purposes of advice and assistance, in the acquisition of suitable site spaces within a distance of half-a-mile from the school, local play-ground commissions one for each town, as well as another for the city of Madras, are proposed to be constituted. A suitable play-space 5 acres for each High School of 250 students is to be made obligatory on each existing High School, and will be one of the conditions of recognition of each school in the future. Any existing school that fails to secure a play-space within five years from now, shall be dis-affiliated. For purposes of recurring charges every year, the sources to be tapped are games fee collections from the pupils and the staff and contributions from the management, and an equal amount or as much that is needed to equal the expenditure.

On the vexed question of the recruitment of physical training instructors, the committee's views are laudable; while they require better material, they also propose a better remuneration. A secondary grade trained teacher, with Physical Training qualifications will be entertained in the scale of Rs. 45 to 70 or Rs. 55 to 70, if Intermediate Trained. One Instructor for every 300 pupils is necessary while for a school of 1000 pupils, a Physical Director who will also be a L. T., is also preferred in addition to Physical Instructors. For purposes of training teachers, the existing school of Y. M. C. A. school of Physical Education, is to be better equipped, in order to prepare 70 instructors per year. It is hoped that in 10 years, the bulk of trained teachers will be made available.

Two among the important proposals, are noteworthy. Health-instruction for boys by the Physical Training instructor is deemed inevitable and is to be included in the A-group subjects of the curriculum, in view of the postures of boys and in the interests of discipline, and ordered life of the school. It is the duty of the medical inspector, to examine the sanitary and Hygiene needs of the school, as well as to prescribe remedial exercises for correcting wrong postures among school-children. Two useful riders are a closer co-operation between the medical officer and the Physical Training Instructor and clinics for school-children at Government Hospitals. These proposals are calculated to render more effective and more successful not only medical inspection, but also physical progress of pupils. Probably one disappointing feature of the report, is its failure to recommend any gymnastic apparatus, on the ground of their costliness and their slight use.

THE DEVADASI PROBLEM.

(By MR. C. F. ANDREWS.)

In a message sent to Mr. N. Lakshmanan, Social Worker, Perundurai (South India) Mr. C. F. Andrews writes:—

Since I have come to England and taken part in the work of Social and Moral Hygiene which has been carried on in the name of the saintly Mrs. Josephine Butler, I have learnt many things.

(1) The first is that the direct attack upon an evil which is deep-seated in human nature is often by no means the best form of remedy. The direct attack is necessary: but if unaccompanied by indirect and constructive measures of a positive kind it is likely to fail. Even if for a brief moment it seems to win success, nevertheless the evil comes back again if no healthier forms of activity are superinduced.

(2) The organising of good and wholesome forms of human activity, which will occupy the mind and body and keep the vicious diseased side inactive, is the noblest of all cures of social and moral evil. To take one very simple example, the municipal organising of spacious playing fields round and about London has made young peoples' lives immensely healthier and better. The appeal has been made for these in a very moving way and nearly one crore of rupees has been collected by voluntary effort.

(3) The value of the law is this. It should be a strong protection of the weak and innocent; and above all of every single child. The most vital laws of the state are those protecting children. It is well for social and moral reformers ever to bring uptodate the law of the land. There is also a vital place for voluntary help with 'first offenders' under the law. If the good will of the magistrates' courts is gained many lives, which have lost their first bloom of innocence but are by no means tainted at the root, can be recovered.

If we apply these principles to the age-long 'Devadasi' problem, we can see at once the need of practising (1) in relation to the Temples themselves. Cannot the festivals in India be made more healthy in their whole outlook? In the North, we used to take our part in what we called 'Pavitra Holi', trying to make the Holi Festival-goers interested in all kinds of athletic sports, etc, which should take the mind away from unclean things. This applies also to what I have written under (2). For instance, is it not possible to restore the folk dancing of ancient India, which has no immoral tendency at all? There is a play, (Natir-Pooja) recently written by the Poet, Rabindranath Tagore, in which the solemn dance at divine worship is one of the most beautiful and reverence inspiring ceremonies I have ever seen.

We should also get the law of British India revised concerning the temple Inam lands belonging to the temple women. The Mysore State has had the courage to change this immoral use of the law. But I am not certain whether this has yet been done in British India.

Lastly, I would urge that nothing less than burning sympathy for the victims, the Devadasis, and their offspring will win the victory in such a cause. It was this passionate sympathy which told in Josephine Butler's life and carried her through. We need this chivalry of soul in men and women if we are to win in this struggle in India. May God give us grace in our hearts thus to love and suffer for the pure and the true!

MR. SASIRI'S WORK.

Mr. Sastri, on his return from South Africa last Saturday, was accorded a cordial reception. While in Bombay he addressed three gatherings. We give below a report of the first meeting on Saturday the 15th at the Sir Cowasji Jehangir Hall, when the citizens of Bombay accorded an enthusiastic reception to the Rt. Hon. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri under the auspices of the various political associations of the city. The Associations represented were: The Imperial Indian Citizenship, Association, the Indian Merchants' Chamber, the European Association, the Western India National Liberal Association, the Bombay Progressive Association, the National Home Rule League and the Bombay Presidency Association.

The hall was packed to overflowing just as was witnessed on the occasion of the city's send-off to Mr. Sastri in 1927. The audience was composed of a large number of ladies. Sir Chimanlal Setalvad presided and among those present on the platform were: Sir Lallubhai Samaldas, Sir Pheroze Sethna, Sir Jagmohandas Virjeewandas, the Hon. Dewan Bahadur Harilal Desai, Rao Bahadur Kale, Rao Saheb Vandekar, Khan Bahadur N. H. Choksy, Dr. Annie Besant, Messrs. K. Natarajan, H. P. Mody, Jeevanjee (of East Africa), D. G. Dalvi, B. S. Kamat, V. N. Chandavarkar, S. D. Saklatwalla, B. S. Turkhud, Jamnadas Dwarkadas, Kanji Dwarkadas and R. D. Morarji.

MR. SASTRI'S ADDRESS.

Mr. Sastri, who on rising was given a rousing reception, said that it was with great pain that he read of what took place in the city of Bombay—a city eminently of peace, good-sense and good fellowship—not long ago. He remembered when he had left this country for South Africa they gave him a send-off in that very place, and upon that occasion they had a meeting quite as crowded as the present one and the meeting was then full of hope not unmixed with some misgiving. He assured them that that great send-off stood him in good stead in South Africa. It was recognised by all parties that he had behind him the authority of the Government of India and besides something not less important, the goodwill and sympathy of the people of India. At the same time he felt it his duty to remind them of the misgivings he had on that occasion.

SUPERSTITIONS OF INDIANS.

They all had at that time received the information that some of the superstitious practices to which our people in South Africa were given were rousing the animosity of the European people among whom they lived. The speaker had said at that time that he with their goodwill might perhaps feel tempted to attack that problem. But upon going to South Africa he did not take long to discover that he who interfered with the religious practices was a rash person. He did therefore nothing of the kind. Apart from other difficulties, it was borne in upon him in many ways that he after all represented the Government of India and was connected intimately with the South African Government and therefore how unwise it was for a person connected with Government to interfere or even seem to interfere with any religious practice, howsoever it might appear to be degrading to him. He therefore left that question severely alone.

UNITY OF INDIAN VOICE IN S. A.

The other matter which gave rise to some misgiving in his mind when he went to South Africa, was the cession of the Transvaal from the South African Indian Congress which was the organ of public opinion of the Indian community. This was the organ to which both Governments were accustomed to look for guidance. Unfortunately, however, owing to some division of opinion which was carried to an undesirable extreme the province of Transvaal had taken itself out of the field of the Congress; but at the time he went to that country he felt it of the utmost consequence that this breach should be healed and the Congress should re-acquire the moral authority to speak for the community throughout the whole Union. The scheme of condonation had a condition that he should if possible enable them to deal only with one accredited organisation. It was a task of exceeding difficulty and delicacy. He did not wish to narrate to them the difficulties and obstacles he had in his task there, but suffice it to say that he had the very cordial and loyal assistance from a great many of our patriotic friends there, especially from the two gentlemen who had travelled with him to South Africa—Messrs. P. K. Desai and S. P. Medh—gentlemen who had worked along with Mahatma Gandhi many years and know therefore those methods which contributed to the popularity and esteem of the Mahatma in the minds of the public of South Africa. These two gentlemen, at great personal risk, went to the Transvaal and although they were unable to get that organisation into the field, they still worked out an alternative scheme which in the end proved to be nearly as good, if not wholly as good, as the old organisation. The result was that Congress has its jurisdiction extended over the Transvaal and it was able to speak to the Government with authority throughout the Union.

PUTTING S. A. INDIANS TO THE FRONT

Proceeding, Mr. Sastri stated that in all his endeavours with the South African Government, and they were many, he took care that he should not in any way seem either to overshadow or supersede those gentlemen who represented the Congress. It was his anxiety to push them forward as far as possible and get the Government and them to confront each other in all the confabulations of importance and as far as he could be kept in the background with the result that he was able to overcome a good deal of the hesitation that our countrymen not only in South Africa but throughout Africa practically felt whenever they contemplated the appointment of Agents to act as intermediaries between them and the Government,

NO LOWERING OF THE FLAG.

The speaker said he wished to remove another misgiving in the mind of a large section of the public, namely, that an Agent accredited to a Government would not be able wholly to represent them, but would be obliged for special reason, for diplomatic considerations, for considerations of expediency and maintenance of certain assured position, to give them away and in the end lower the flag of Indian nationality. The speaker assured them that there was no ground for this misgiving. Being conscious of these state of things he took special care that whatever he did he should never lie under this imputation; so that in his opinion, it is possible for him to say that such improvement as they know was noticeable in the situation in South Africa was not wholly due to his instrumentality, but a good deal of it was really based on the better understanding that happily now marked the relations between the South African Government and the political representatives of our people. Upon that feature of the situation he looked back with satisfaction. He mentioned that for two reasons when he came to East Africa, to Mombassa, our countrymen there told him that they would hesitate a good deal before they accepted to work along with an Agent of the Government of India. The speaker said it all depended upon the type of the Agent that went there.

“It seems to me from my experience,” said the speaker, “that it is perfectly possible for a man to be loyal to the Government he serves and at the same time be faithful to the nation who trusts him”. (Cheers).

UNIQUE GOOD FORTUNE.

Dealing with another feature of his work in South Africa, Mr. Sastri said that he realised the truth of the statement that his appointment was forced upon the Government by the will of the nation, when he went to South Africa where he had received with a unique degree of co-operation from all possible quarters for which he felt very thankful, and the Cape Town Agreement which was still in some way a unique political instrument, as well as the hearty co-operation he had received there and here would live long in his memory. (Cheers). But the most remarkable feature of his mission was the circumstance that he received while in South Africa the unstinted confidence upon the one hand of the Government of India and upon the other of Mahatma Gandhi. (Cheers). What a lucky man I was to be the medium for the most complete co-operation and exchange of mutual confidence between these two agencies, the Government of India and Mahatma Gandhi. (Cheers). For without the continued moral support it would not have been possible for him to maintain throughout his work that real and intimate confidence which was his good fortune to preserve. For more than once the community passed through a time of great anxiety and negotiations between them and the Union Government often reached acute stages and it was really the blessing of Providence that pulled them through. He was gratified to see an atmosphere of goodwill between the European and Indian communities in South Africa. In his opinion the situation of Indians in South Africa was the key to the situation in other parts of the Empire.

THE CONDITIONS OF INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Continuing Mr. Sastri said that he felt sure that the situation in South Africa would in time improve out of all recognition; but one thing was necessary, namely, that the people of India must not lose sight of South Africa and its troubles in their thoughts and in the midst of troubles of their own. Whatever our own domestic troubles, we must not allow our countrymen in South Africa to drop out of our mind. They must remember that their countrymen in South Africa were less advanced than themselves, were far from the fountainhead of culture and therefore required continually to be replenished out of this fountain head of culture. It should be their duty to send out representatives whom they might expect to bring to them some of the light from the original torch. That was a thing which was a crying want, for it was an unfortunate circumstance that wherever our people had gone and made a home they had not a sufficient number of well educated people who could be called the authentic representatives of our ancient culture and civilization. He found from experience that South African audiences, though most proud and liable to racial bias, were still willing to take to their bosom and receive with respect people in whom might be said to live the real culture of India. The speaker said he felt exceedingly anxious that from India every now and then they should send some men of note who could bring to the people in South Africa something of our ancient culture and civilization. The work he himself had done in this connection in South Africa by lecturing to learned bodies like the universities had borne some good fruit as was testified to from several quarters. The speaker had no doubt that the city of Bombay would take a lead in this matter as it always took the lead in all patriotic directions, by providing the necessary monetary assistance for sending out qualified lecturers from time to time to South Africa.

LECTURERS TO SOUTH AFRICA

Proceeding Mr. Sastri remarked: "If you, ladies and gentlemen, take interest in our countrymen thrown abroad in somewhat unfavourable and inhospitable circumstances, believe me, you will enable them to raise their self-respect and make it possible for them to hold up their heads. Teach the proud races there that we also have philosophy, that we have a culture, we have a civilisation of which we need not be ashamed. It seems to me that I should use my time to good purpose if I felt upon my mind this impression that what our countrymen need most is some stimulus, so that other nations may regard them not as useless people, not waifs and strays, but as the representatives of a race which is entitled to hold its head high among all the great nations of the world. (Cheers). If, ladies and gentlemen, we send out one good lecturer once every year or once in every two years, then we shall have done our duty to our countrymen who want our aid so much."

In conclusion Mr. Sastri said: "One other word I will allow myself to say before I resume my seat. I am under a debt of heavy obligation to every community in South Africa. The Government of the Union treated me not as an ordinary Agent although they have several agents, but as one coming from a great country, one to whom they ought to give primary consideration and courtesy. The Prime Minister and other ministers listened to my representations always with the weight due to the Government of India and the people of India. That, perhaps, is not so much the object of wonder. The way in which in all big towns and small towns, they listened to me, was to me a lesson in hospitality due to the strangers. I was also fairly treated by the people—I mean the European people in South Africa. As I said before, it was from them that I learnt, for the first time, how ambassadors should be treated. I do not pretend for a moment I converted them to our way of thinking. I do not flatter myself, but I must say that they gave preference to everything I said; and many of them have now changed their way and have begun to think carefully of the Indian situation. They have begun to think that their best interests lie in the maintenance of the Cape Town Agreement. These people, therefore, I ought not forget on this occasion." (Hear, hear).

THE NEW AGENT.

Referring to the present Agent-General to Government of India in South Africa, Mr. Sastri pointed out that their good friend Sir K. V. Reddy was already making a good impression in South Africa. He (Mr. Sastri) had many opportunities of conversation with him when he (the speaker) had communicated to him his impressions of what he saw and he might adopt as his policy. He was happy to say that on the first day of his stay in Durban, the headquarters of Indians, Sir K. V. Reddy was in a position to see a good many of their leaders and grasp the many problems of that sub-Continent. He believed, therefore, that everything pointed to the continuance of the cordial relationship between the two countries. He had no doubt that that relationship for some time was likely to be maintained. Finally, he hoped that the feeling of cordiality manifested so well in South Africa, would soon spread throughout the Commonwealth of Great Britain, and whenever Indians were thrown in any part of the Commonwealth the same relationship would not be long to establish. (Applause).

The Chairman thanked Mr. Sastri for his lucid lecture. On behalf of the various organizations Mr. Natarajan proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

GOVERNMENT'S BREACH OF FAITH.

IX.

The way the Government benches behaved at the time of voting on the Sarda bill fixing marriageable age is nothing short of disgraceful. The Bill has been discussed now for three years. Enlightened Indians of all schools of thought have supported it cordially. Legislation against child marriage is an urgent necessity. A few orthodox people are opposing it, but what reform was ever carried out without any measure of opposition? If a reform measure is universally acceptable it becomes unnecessary to enforce it by legislation. There is not much point, therefore, in saying that Mr. Acharya is opposed to the Sarda Bill, and it must therefore be dropped.

It is the educated Indian who is seen carrying on a crusade against social evils, while the Government, its hypocritical professions to the contrary notwithstanding, is ranged on the opposite side. In the present session the excuse was furnished by Mr. Acharya's amendment which urged postponement because the Age of Consent Committee has not yet submitted its report. Rai Sahab Har Bilas Sarda was counting all the time on the promised support of the Government. But much to his discomfiture when the time for voting came the official and Europeans (with two exceptions) voted with Mr. Acharya who is known to be a bitter enemy of the Sarda Bill. (He is absurd enough to suppose that Havelock Ellis and other European writers support child marriage). It is evident that he wanted postponement from perfectly hostile motives. If the Bill is put off to the brief Simla session it may perhaps later on be possible to have it put off for the next Assembly.

The Bill was being considered before the Age of Consent Committee was appointed. Nobody thought of trotting out the flimsy plea at the last session, though the Committee had started work then. The official members did not give any inkling to Mr. Sarda that they wanted to wait for the Committee's report till the actual time of voting. It is evident, therefore, that they merely thought the excuse had come handy and they should avail themselves of it.

On its own merits, Mr. Acharya's amendment was not at all a reasonable one. For the Sarda Bill would be needed whatever the recommendations of the Age of Consent Committee might be. The marriageable age problem will not be solved merely by raising the Age of Consent.—The People, Lahore.

X.

The Government of India, as at present constituted, seems to be satisfied to govern in accordance with the principle of 'Safety first'. It does not appear willing to support any social reform, however desirable in itself, if it involves any risk of unpopularity. These remarks are suggested by the decision of the Government at the last moment to instruct its official members to vote in favour of postponing the Bill of Mr. Harbilas Sarda to raise the legal age of marriage for girls from 12 to 14 until the Committee on the Age of Consent had reported.

The Government of India have tried to explain their attitude in a communique which says 'that they consider that much would be gained by fixing the age in the Child Marriage Bill after the report of the Committee on the Age of Consent has been received.' At the time of the appointment of the Age of Consent Committee there was no indication that the Government intended to delay the passing of the Child Marriage Bill for the report of this Committee, and there is no reason why the decision concerning the age of marriage should be in any way dependent upon the age of consent. On the other hand, it will be readily agreed that the age of consent must be decided having in mind the effect upon this matter of the age of marriage. At the present time the age of consent is fixed by law at 14 and the proposal of Mr. Harbilas Sarda is to raise the age of marriage to this figure. It is a strange phenomenon for Englishmen, who have so severely criticised the defects of the Indian social system, to unite with Indian reactionary groups in order to delay the passing of a measure of social reform so necessary in itself and which is supported by the large mass of intelligent opinion in this country. This action of the Government of India will only serve to make clearer to men of moderate opinions that there is no hope of any worthwhile social progress in India until a real system of self-government is established in the Central as well as in the Provincial governments.—The Guardian, Calcutta.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Child Marriages in England :—A Reuter's Message, dated February 19, runs :—The House of Lords on the motion of Lord Buckmaster passed the second reading of the Age of Marriages Bill which seeks to make void marriages in which either of the contracting parties is under sixteen. The present law enables a girl to marry at 12 and a boy at 14. Lord Buckmaster urged that a common standard should be fixed by the League of Nations. Not long ago, said Lord Buckmaster, the public conscience was profoundly stirred by the publication of a book regarding child marriages in India and a large number of people thought that it was time we took steps in this regard. At the time we were complaining about the condition of affairs in India we had an identical situation here which in one condition was worse. Lord Salisbury said that in twelve years in England and Wales there had been 318 marriages at fourteen and three at thirteen.

Mr. D. G. Dalvi elected :—We understand that Mr. D. G. Dalvi, the Joint Secretary of the Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association as the only candidate nominated for election as a Municipal Councillor by Fellows resident in the City of Bombay, is declared duly elected the representative of the University on the Bombay Municipal Corporation for the triennial period commencing on the 1st April 1929.

The Barh Sutte Case:—The Privy Council has refused leave to appeal from two judgments of the High Court of Patna. The first which is dated June 13, 1928, sentenced the ten petitioners to various terms of rigorous imprisonment for abetting the suicide of a Hindu widow, named Sampatniker, at Barh on May 2, 1927.

Relief Work by Bombay Women:—Bombay Citizens have been organising and taking their share in restoring peace in the city and devising measures to give relief to the victims of the recent riots. The women of the city have formed a committee consisting of Lady Tata and others to do their bit for the suffering men and women. They propose to visit hospitals and look to the comforts of the injured and give as much help as possible to their families who might be stranded in the city. Other suggestions accepted by the Committee are to distribute newspapers and magazines to the wounded in hospital and to furnish materials for medical relief.

Milan Fair:—The Director of Information sends us the following:—The detailed regulations of the forthcoming Milan Fair commencing on the 12th of April are now available at the Italian Consulate, Bombay. The Fair accepts as exhibitors exclusively the manufacturing producers of nationality. Entries will also be accepted from (1) representatives of foreign and national firms which do not sell their products direct to the public, but only to wholesale dealers and merchants, (2) the Corporations, Consortiums, Syndicates, and Associations which help in production and in trade, and (3) importers and exporters who sell their own products directly to wholesalers and merchants. The last date for entries is February 28. After that date entries may be accepted at the discretion of the Management.

Buddhist Institute in Russia:—The first institute in Soviet Russia for the study of Buddhist culture was opened on Monday at the Academy of Sciences in the presence of a number of prominent students of the East. Scherbatsky has been appointed Director of the Institute.

ADVERTISEMENTS

SANE SEX BOOKS.

	Rs. s. p.
1. A Letter to Working Mothers by Marie Stopes ...	0 5 0
2. Hygienic Methods of Family Limitation by Binnie Dunlop, M.B., Ch. B. ...	0 5 0
3. Birth Control Methods. ...	0 5 0
4. Venereal Diseases and their effects by Otto May, M.A., M.D. ...	0 5 0
5. Family Limitation by Margaret Sanger ...	0 8 0
6. Prevention of Venereal Diseases by an English Woman ...	0 8 0
7. The Wife's Handbook by Dr. H. Arthur Allbutt, D.C.L., L.L.D. ...	0 10 0
8. Sexual Health and Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	0 12 0
9. The Wife's Guide and Friend by Stewart Warren ...	1 4 0
10. Two years in Paris by Ettie A. Rout ...	1 14 0
11. Practical Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	2 14 0
12. Birth Control by Johann Ferch ...	3 14 0
13. Limitation of Family by N. N. Mukkerji ...	3 0 0
14. The Morality of Birth Control by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 1 0
15. The Hygiene of Marriage by Isable Hutton, M.D. ...	4 14 0
16. Sex and Exercise by Ettie A. Rout ...	4 14 0
17. Birth Control by William J. Robinson, M.D. ...	6 0 0

Postage extra in each case.

THE PIONEER BOOK DEPOT,
Royapuram, Madras.

MATRIMONIAL.

A young Mysorean, Brahmin, in business, wishes to correspond, with a view to matrimony, with a young Brahmin lady of Karnataka or Andhra, who has studied medicine. Please write to "R", C/o This paper.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

SAVINGS BANK.

