PREFACE

IN 1901, the Compiler had Commenced to write a Dictionary of Law Terms and Phrases, with special reference to the law in force in British India. The work was at first designed to include Latin as well as English words, phrases, maxims, &c.; but when a portion of the work was prepared, it was found that the proposed work would swell into a very bulky volume. It was therefore thought advisable to split up the work in two separate and handy volumes; the one containing only Latin maxims, words, phrases, &c., and the other embodying English terms and phrases. The first of these was published in January, 1902, under the title "A Manual of Legal Maxims, Words, Phrases, &c.," and the Compiler now lays the other before his readers, under the title "A Dictionary of Law Terms and Phrases."

The present work collocates the terms and phrases under English Law of past and present use, the terms of the Roman and Scotch Laws, and also a varied mass of commercial terms, Indian Judicial and Revenue terms, and technical terms of the Hindu and Mohamedan Laws.

In giving the meanings of words the Compiler has consulted Standard English Law Dictionaries, such as Wharton, Tomlins, Stroud, Brown, Mozley, &c., and in case of important terms and phrases, he has, wherever possible, added an exposition of the law bearing upon the subject matter, by reference to standard works upon the subject; thus, no effort has been spared to render the definition of a term or word as full and informing as possible, and, where necessary, the distinction between the English and Indian Law on the subject is duly brought out. This plan, it is hoped, will serve as an aid to memory to the student, who will find the work particularly useful as a compact and a classified hand-book for revising his studies in various branches of Law. To the practitioner it will be an indispensable vade mecum showing at a moment's glance the authoritative interpretation of a particular word, term or phrase; while the lay reader will feel interested to find in it apt quotations made in extenso from various Indian Acts and Case Law on subjects specially useful to him.

At the end of the work are given (a) a list of Abbreviations used in Law Reports and Text Books, with their explanations; (b) an Alphabetical List of English, Irish and Scotch Law Reports, with the abbreviations generally used to denote them, their periods, and the names of the Courts; and (c) a similar list of Indian Reports. These, the Compiler trusts, will add to the general usefulness of the compilation as a work of reference.

Finally, the Compiler takes this opportunity of expressing his best thanks to Mr. Ratanlal Ranchhoddas, Editor of the Bombay Law Reporter, for the suggestions received from him from time to time, and particularly for the aid given by him in making the lists of English and Indian Reports as complete as possible.
