FOREWORD

THE Legal Research Committee of the Commonwealth Fund has continued the work, begun more than sixteen years ago, of an examination of the field of administrative law. It was intended to secure a general survey of administrative powers revealing, so far as the face of legislation can reveal it, the extent to which administrative control has, by modern legislation, been in fact conferred. It was intended to follow this with a series of special studies disclosing the actual workings of carefully selected administrative organs, it being deemed that such intensive studies in administrative law and practice are the prerequisite to an appraisal of what administrative law really does and a guide to what ought yet to be done. The general survey above referred to resulted in the publication of the study by Professor Ernst Freund, Administrative Powers Over Persons and Property. The first of the intensive studies was that of The Federal Trade Commission, by Gerard C. Henderson, and others have followed. The present study of The Interstate Commerce Commission, by Professor I. L. Sharfman, is the result of research continued for twelve years past. Parts I and II were published in 1931; the first volume of Part III in 1935; and the second volume of Part III in 1936. The present volume, Part IV, completes the study. While the study has been conducted under the auspices of the Legal Research Committee and is published by the Commonwealth Fund, the author has been allowed entire freedom and the responsibility for the statements of fact and for the opinions expressed is fully and solely his own.
