PREFACE

I HAVE been keenly conscious while preparing this volume that only a lifetime of experience in conservation work would give one an entirely satisfactory background with which to solve some of the questions that have been raised. This book is consequently little more than an introduction to the numerous problems that are faced by government agencies in the field of wild-life conservation. I can only hope that it may be of some value to administrators and others who are interested in the preservation of the nation's wild life resources.

I should like to express my appreciation for the encouragement, aid and advice that had been given me in the preparation of this study by a host of persons both inside and outside of the government service. I am especially indebted to Professor Arthur Macmahon of Columbia University, who has unhesitatingly given of his time and effort during the past three years, for innumerable corrections in organization and interpretation.

Professors Luther Gulick, Schuyler Wallace, Philip Jessup, Joseph Chamberlain, Howard Lee McBain, and Arthur Burns, all of Columbia, have read the manuscript and offered invaluable suggestions. Professors Oliver Field of the University of Minnesota, Markley Frankham of the Brooklyn Law School, Patterson French of Union College, and Judge Irvine Lenroot of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, have also read portions of the manuscript and made helpful comments.

Dr. Fred Powell of the Brookings staff has from time to time made invaluable suggestions both as to the method of approach and technique of procedure. I owe him a debt which no mere line in the preface can repay. To Dr. Leverett Lyon, who in his official capacity as Director of Fellows at the Institution, made it possible for me to obtain access to important materials in Washington, and to other members of the staff, I am under similarly deep obligation.

Much of the material found in the first chapter was gathered during the summer of 1934 as a result of a study made while serving as Associate Consultant for the National Resources Board, under the direction of Mr. Charles Eliot, 2nd, the executive secretary.

I should also like to express my appreciation for the assistance of my colleagues, Mr. Charles Trinkaus and Mr. William Shaughnessy, in reading proof.

Limitations of space make it impossible to express my appreciation individually to the men and officers of the United States Biological Survey, Bureau of Fisheries, Forest Service, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Bureau of Reclamation, and the Minnesota Game and Fish Department for their generous co-operation; I take this opportunity therefore to do so collectively.
