PREFATORY NOTE.

Political 1859-1863.

THE papers in this section are in a very imperfect state. Many entries are simply described as "Secret" without any clue to their contents. These are probably mostly papers connected with Afghanistan. Further, only a few of the regular weekly diaries of the Cabul Vakil are available. In most cases there is merely the covering letter—the original being sent to the Government of India.

A principal feature of the period is the granting of rewards to chiefs and others for good services in the Mutiny. The small states round Delhi, Dadre, Farukabad, etc., are parcelled out among the rulers of Patiala, Jind and Nabha. There are also many grants of jagirs and pensions. In this case also many of the originals are missing, but are, no doubt, to be found in the Financial Commissioner's office. There are also multifarious petitions for rewards for alleged services in the Mutiny most of which received summary treatment.

Then there are a quantity of Kharitas, on all sorts of subjects. Some welcome the assumption of the direct control of the Crown, others condole with the Queen on the death of the Prince Consort. Others contain greetings to the new Viceroy, Lord Elgin, on his assumption of the office he was destined to hold for such a tragically brief period.

The Political Department in the Punjab was then in a very immature state. The various Commissioners acted as Political Agents, as, in some cases they continued to do till quite recent times, and there were no regular Residents. The control of the local Government was very rigid and petty events occurring in the various states are reported in what would seem unnecessary detail to-day.

Kashmir was already becoming a health resort, in the summer months only and only with the permission of the Lieutenant Governor. Each summer a Deputy Commissioner was sent up to act as "Referee" between the visitors and the local authorities and some of his reports make interesting reading. His main duty seems to have been to act as a debt collector and to hunt up various easy going people who left Kashmir laden with shawls, etc., for which they had forgotten to pay.

Several rulers passed away during the period. The Maharaja of Patiala who had done such good service in the Mutiny died in 1862, and a Regency followed. Just at the end of the period, in 1863, the Maharaja of Nabha also expired.

There is one interesting connection with English internal affairs. The period coincides with the American Civil war and the great distress in Lancashire caused by the cutting off of the cotton supply. India, like other parts of the Empire, came to the rescue of the starving operatives and the Phulkian States are recorded as subscribing the large sum of Rs. 20,000. Rupees 10,000 being from Patiala and Rs. 5,000 each coming from Jind and Nabha.
