Discussions with the Burmese Government.

In pursuance of the Orders of the Honourable the House of Commons, dated the 29th March and 27th May 1825.

Ordered, by The House of Commons, to be Printed,
30 May 1825.

RETURN to the Orders of the Honourable the House of Commons, dated 29th March and 27th May 1825, for Papers relative to the BURMESE WAR.

Return to the Order of 29th March 1825, for, "A Return of the number " of Troops in the service of the East India Company, first stationed in
 " Shapooree, and at what time."

FROM the letter from the Governor General in Council, at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors of the East India Company, dated 21st November 1823, printed on page 1 of the Papers relating to the Burmese War, which were presented to the House of Commons by His Majesty's command on the 22d February 1825, it appears, that early in the year 1823, in consequence of the murder of a mug boatman, a guard of provincials, consisting of a jemadar and twelve men, were detached from the adjoining tannah of Tek NAAf, to take post on the Island of Shapooree, " with the view of preventing further outrage, and generally of affording security and protection to
 " the peaceable inhabitants of that quarter of the district of Chittagong."

Return to the Orders of 29th March 1825, N^o 3 & 4 :—

" That there be laid before this House Copy of any Document which " has been received in England, to show that the Island of Shapooree
 " belongs to, or is within the Territory of the Honourable East India " Company;—and from what period, and in what manner it became " theirs."

" That there be laid before this House, a Statement of the extent of the " Island of Shapooree, and of any Revenue which may have been " derived from it by the East India Company, since it came into
 " their possession."

NO documents have been received in England, from which any information can be given upon these points, beyond what is contained in the Papers relating to the Burmese War, which have been already laid before the House of Commons by His Majesty's command.

Steps have been taken for procuring more ample information from India.

DISCUSSIONS

BURMESE GOVERNMENT:

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 23d January 1812.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
23 Jan. 1812.

Honourable Sirs,

THE object of this address is to bring under the notice of your honourable court the circumstances which have rendered it necessary to appoint another mission to the government of Ava.

2. In the early part of the past year a native of Arracan, named Kingberring, whose ancestor as well as himself possessed lands to a considerable extent in that province, near the frontier of Chittagong, and who in consequence of his having incurred the displeasure, and been exposed to the resentment of the king of Ava, took refuge with a number of his followers in the district of Chittagong, about fourteen years ago meditated the design of embodying those followers, as well as the other Mugs, who many years since emigrated from Arracan, and invading the latter province. This project he actually carried into execution in the month of May 1811, having either by persuasion, or by intimidation, induced a large body of the Mugs, settled in Chittagong, to join his standard. Partly owing to the secrecy and caution with which he pursued his design, and the promptitude with which he carried it into effect, and partly to the negligence of the darogahs of the thannahs on the frontier, his proceedings were unknown to the magistrate until he had crossed the river Nauf, which forms the common boundary of the two countries, followed by a considerable number of the emigrant Mugs.

The magistrate, on being apprised of Kingberring's proceedings, employed every practicable endeavour to effect the seizure of his person, but without success. His efforts were likewise directed to prevent the departure of additional parties of the Mugs, whom by means of his emissaries Kingberring continued to entice, or compel by menace, to join his standard.

4. Kingberring however succeeded in collecting a considerable body of these men in a district east of the Nauf, and this body was augmented by inhabitants of the province of Arracan. With a view to increase his force, by compelling the Mugs, who yet remained within the province of Chittagong, to join him, he despatched an armed force into that province.

5. It became necessary therefore for the magistrate to call for the assistance of the British troops, both to protect the Mugs, and to expel the parties despatched by Kingberring, and he accordingly directed the commanding officer of the station to detach to the frontier the whole of the disposable force. Another consideration also rendered this measure advisable, namely, that in the event of Kingberring being foiled in his attempt to effect the conquest of Arracan, he would probably return into the district of Chittagong, followed by his adherents, and pursued by the forces of the Burmese government. To prevent these armed bodies from entering our territory required every practicable measure of precaution. On the same ground we judged it necessary to equip and arm a small vessel adapted to the navigation of the Nauf, placing on board it a detachment of about 40 sepoy's under an European officer.

6. Kingberring having finally collected a force sufficient to enable him to commence his operations, he advanced into the interior of the province, and in the course of a short time subjected the whole to his authority, with the exception of the capital of Arracan, to which he laid seige.

7 It was reasonable to suppose, and the fact was subsequently confirmed, that the Burmese government would be impressed with a belief that this invasion, headed by a person who had resided for so many years under our protection, and who had drawn the principal part of his force from our territory, was instigated and supported by the British government. This belief the magistrate properly endeavoured to obviate, or remove by a letter to the address of the rajah of Arracan, detailing the real circumstances of the case; but the country being occupied by persons acting under the authority of Kingberring, the messenger was unable to reach the rajah's presence. In the mean time Kingberring addressed several letters to the magistrate of Chittagong, explanatory of the motives of his conduct, relating his success, and offering to become tributary to the British government: to these letters no answer was returned.

8. For the detail of what is above succinctly related, we beg leave to refer your honourable court to the extract of our proceedings in the judicial department (recorded as per margin), containing copies of the correspondence of the magistrate of Chittagong from the end of January to the end of July 1811, and of the resolutions adopted and orders issued by this government from time to time on the points of communication submitted to it by the magistrate.

9. In the magistrate's letter of the 28th June, your honourable court will observe the evidence of the firm conviction entertained by the local authorities of Arracan, that the invasion of the province was instigated and supported by the British government.

Cons. Sept. 6,

Your honourable court will also observe, that with a view to obviate this belief on the mind of the king and the rulers of the state of Ava, the vice-president addressed a letter to the viceroy of Pegu; that letter will be found recorded on the proceedings noted in the margin.

10. But government had every reason to doubt the efficacy of a mere narrative of facts conveyed through the medium of a letter, because not only were the circumstances of the case entirely consistent with a belief of our having encouraged the invasion, but (as government was well aware) a predisposition to credit a report of such design, generated partly by ignorance and jealousy, and partly by a suspicion that the British government might meditate an anticipation of efforts on the part of the court of Ava to enforce its avowed claim to the province of Chittagong, (a claim which was brought forward during the mission of Captain Canning to Ava in the year 1809,) might be supposed to exist in the mind of the king.

It appeared to the vice-president in council, therefore, that the more impressive and effectual mode of communication, through the agency of an envoy, was necessary to undeceive the Burmese court, with regard to our supposed participation in the proceedings of Kingberring.

11. Independently, however, of the importance of this object, founded on the solicitude of government to avoid being placed in a state of war with the kingdom of Ava, it appeared to be essential also with reference to the safety of the British subjects and British property at Rangoon.

12. The vice-president in council considered that the first measure of the Burmese government, acting under the conviction of our concern in the invasion of Arracan, might probably be the seizure both of the persons and of the property of the British subjects, whose lives even the vice-president in council conceived might be endangered by the barbarous revenge of the Burmese government.

13. On these grounds, therefore, the vice-president in council adopted the resolution, stated at the commencement of this address, of despatching an envoy to Rangoon, and eventually to the court of Ava; and Captain Canning, who was employed in that capacity in the year 1809, and had twice before visited Rangoon and the capital, and who by his talents as well as by his experience was peculiarly qualified for the duty of envoy, was selected for that situation.

14. A salary

14. A salary of 1,500 rupees per mensem, the same as was allowed on Captain Canning's last mission, was assigned to him on the present occasion, and he was allowed to entertain an establishment somewhat exceeding the scale of the former mission; an escort, consisting of 112 sepoys, was appointed to attend him; and the ship Amboyna, the property of government, having been purchased at the Moluccas, was ordered for his accommodation. Presents also, of the value of 10,000 rupees, were provided according to the custom.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in Council,
23 Jan. 1812.

15. The detail of these arrangements will be found recorded on the consultations noted in the margin.

16. Captain Canning was furnished with copies of all the documents on record relative to the late transactions in Arracan, and with full instructions for the guidance of his conduct, adapted to every occurrence that could be foreseen. For the detail of those instructions, which embrace too many points to admit of their being comprehensively described, we beg leave to refer your honourable court to our chief secretary's letter to Captain Canning's address, recorded as per margin.

Cons. 6 Sept. N° 50.

17. Your honourable court will observe, that the vice-president in council took that opportunity of conveying a representation on the subject, generally, of the unjust and unfriendly conduct of the local government of Pegu with respect to British ships and British subjects trading to Rangoon; and especially the unwarrantable proceedings of that government with respect to a ship called the Elephant, which sailed from this port in the month of August 1810 for the purpose of procuring a cargo of teak timbers, but was prevented from returning until the month of March following, in consequence of the arbitrary measure adopted by the government of Pegu, of seizing the ship, dispossessing her commander, and sending her in charge of another person, with a body of troops, to Tavoy, on which impressed service the ship was detained many weeks, and suffered materially in her cables and stores, and on her return to Rangoon a very inconsiderable sum was offered as a compensation for the injury she had sustained, and for the heavy loss occasioned by her detention.

18. Memorials on this subject were presented to government, in the month of March, by the principal merchants of Calcutta, and by the owners of the Elephant, who earnestly requested that government would adopt such measures as might be judged proper, through the agency of the vakeel of the viceroy of Pegu, then residing at this presidency, to procure indemnification to the owners of the Elephant, as well as general security for the ships, property, and persons of British subjects trading to Rangoon. A letter on this subject was accordingly addressed to the viceroy of Pegu, by his excellency the vice-president, and delivered to the vakeel; but as the viceroy who deputed him was subsequently removed, it was doubtful whether the vakeel, who soon after took his departure, would return to Pegu; and, at all events, whether the mere transmission of a letter would produce any effect. Those memorials, and the letter, will be found recorded on the consultation noted in the margin.

Cons. 14 June,

19. The instructions will also be found to advert to other questions between this government and the government of Pegu; one of which related to the seizure of a Burmese vessel and her cargo, at Coringa, in the month of March 1810; the circumstances of which are not of sufficient moment to require detail in this place, but which are contained in documents recorded on the proceedings noted in the margin. The other questions had reference to the object of the mission of the above-mentioned vakeel, which were to obtain the recovery of certain military stores, stated to have been seized by the commander of a British ship of war from a brig, on her passage from Junk Ceylon to Tavoy, where she had been captured by the arms of the king of Ava from the Siamese; and to procure the release of the crew of another brig, which had been detained at Pullicat, in consequence of their being guilty of piracy and murder. For a knowledge of the details of these points, we beg leave to refer your honourable court to the proceedings noted in the margin; which also contain a letter from the vice-president to the viceroy of Pegu, stating all the explanations of which these points were susceptible.

20. Subsequently to the departure of Captain Canning, which took place in the latter end of September, the ship Admiral Drury arrived from Rangoon, bringing a Burmese envoy, despatched for the express purpose of making a representation to this government on the subject of the transactions in Arracan. The master of the ship brought an address to the vice-president in council, signed by all the British inhabitants of Rangoon, and prepared at the requisition of the viceroy, containing a declaration purporting to be in reply to questions put to them by the viceroy, that they were fully convinced the invaders of Arracan acted entirely without the aid or countenance of the British government; and stating the expectation of the viceroy, that when the invaders and insurgents should be expelled from Arracan, the British government would take the necessary steps to prevent their finding refuge in the company's territories.

Cons. 11 Oct. N° 2.
Cons. 15 Nov.
N°s 30 to 33.

21. It appeared by the report of the master of the Admiral Drury, that in consequence of the suspicions entertained by the viceroy of the participation of the British government in the invasion of Arracan, all the ships in the river of Rangoon, belonging to British subjects, and among them the Admiral Drury, had been seized; but no other measure of rigour had been adopted. The Admiral Drury was allowed to depart, only on the condition of the master consenting to convey the Burmese envoy above mentioned to this presidency free of charge. The documents connected with this subject will be found recorded as per margin.

22. The prohibition against the departure of the ships, however, was of short duration, and by the return of the Elephant (one of the detained ships) to this port, the information was received of their having been liberated at the expiration of about twenty days.

Cons. 11 Oct. N° 3.

23. A continuation of the magistrate's reports respecting the progress of Kingberring's arms will be found in an extract from the proceedings of government in the judicial department, recorded as per margin. The magistraté on that occasion applied for a reinforcement to provide more effectually against the contingency before noticed, of the defeat of Kingberring, and his retreat into the province of Chittagong, followed by the Burmese forces; and measures were adopted to furnish it. The magistrate also adverted to the emigration of men who formerly belonged to the provincial corps of the station, and others, for the purpose of engaging in the service of Kingberring, and reported the measure which he had adopted to prevent the continuance of this practice. He also reported Kingberring's having sent a person with a sum of money to purchase red cloth to clothe his sepoys, his object being supposed to be, to lead the people of Arracan to believe that he was assisted by the British government, a belief which he industriously circulated.

24. The magistrate was directed in reply to instruct the police officers to apprehend all persons proceeding into Arracan to join Kingberring, and to apply to the collector of customs at Chittagong to seize and detain any cloth provided by Kingberring's emissary, and to endeavour to apprehend the latter; and corresponding instructions were issued to the collector of customs and magistrates at the presidency.

Cons. 11 Oct. N° 4.

25. Further instructions were at the same time addressed to Captain Canning transmitting to him a copy of the extract of proceedings above mentioned, directing him to counteract, as much as possible, the artful endeavours of Kingberring to promulgate a belief that his proceedings were encouraged and supported by the British government; pointing out to Captain Canning, at the same time, the representations to be made on that topic to the officers of the Burmese government. Those instructions will be found recorded as per margin.

Cons. 22 Nov. N° 4.

26. Captain Canning's last report of his proceedings, after his arrival at Rangoon on the 18th October, is recorded as per margin. Captain Canning appears to have been received with the proper marks of distinction.

27. The first part of his report your honourable court will observe relates the circumstance of the viceroy of Pegu having summoned all the British subjects, resident at Rangoon, and informed them that he had good grounds to assert, that the Bengal government had furnished the Mug emigrants with arms and ammunition, to enable them to invade Arracan; that a numerous party of those emigrants had actually entered the province, and occasioned a general revolt; and that the families of the emigrants had remained at a village in the British territory, where a strong force was appointed for their protection. In consequence of which the viceroy had required them to address a letter to the vice-president in council, adding the circumstance before mentioned, of the despatch of the ship Admiral Drury with that that letter ; and a vakeel, instructed to remonstrate against these supposed measures of this government. Captain Canning also notices the detention and subsequent release of the British ships at Rangoon.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
23 Jan. 1812.

28. Captain Canning adds, that he had not, at the date of his despatch, seen the viceroy, but that the members of the government, with whom he had conversed on the subject, evidently entertained the belief, that a large force of refugee Mugs could not have been collected in a British province, nor the invasion have taken place, without the knowledge and participation of this government. To obviate this impression, he addressed an official note to the government (a copy of which accompanies his despatch), stating in minute detail all the circumstances of the transaction, and the arguments resulting from them, in proof of our having not only had no concern in the invasion of Arracan, but of the British officers having employed every practicable effort to oppose and frustrate the project when known. This paper was to be sent up, with a copy of the vice-president's letter to the king, to the capital, whither Captain Canning expected that he would be summoned.

29. Captain Canning, in his report, notices also the measures adopted by the Burmese government to oppose the invaders, and requests to be furnished with instructions regarding the answer to be given to a question which would probably be asked, whether in the event of the Burmese forces succeeding in expelling Kingberring and his adherents from the province, and of the latter taking refuge in the British territory, they would be given up.

30. Captain Canning further communicates the wish expressed by the government of Rangoon, that the Burmese vakeel might be permitted to return from Calcutta by the first opportunity, on the ground that the business on which the vakeel was deputed might be better transacted by Captain Canning at Rangoon.

31. In reply to that despatch, Captain Canning was informed that the narrative of facts and circumstances contained in his official note to the government of Rangoon, was considered by us to be accurate and conclusive, in point of argument, with regard to the question of the participation of the British government in the invasion of Arracan ; and that our only objection to that note was, that the extreme solicitude for the exculpation of government, which a detail so elaborate was calculated to exhibit, might have tended to defeat its own object ; and that we were disposed to think that it might have been more advisable, in the first instance, to have met the declared suspicions of the Burmese officers by a statement of the most prominent facts, reserving collateral circumstances and arguments for future eventual necessity, instead of at once exhausting the subject, by adducing every minute point of detail that could be brought to bear upon the general question, which we apprehended might be ascribed by the Burmese to a consciousness of the justice of their suspicions, and to a humiliating anxiety to avert the resentment of their power.

32. In answer to the question expected to be put to Captain Canning by the government of Rangoon, he was desired to signify to the Burmese officers, that Kingberring and his adherents would not be allowed an asylum within the British territories, which, on the contrary, they would not, if possible, be permitted to enter, or having entered, would be compelled to quit ; but that the British government could not consent to seize and deliver up these fugitives to the officers of the Burmese government. Captain Canning was informed in conclusion, that the Burmese vakeel would be permitted to return to Rangoon by the first opportunity, agreeably to the desire of his government. The instructions issued to Captain Canning on this occasion will be found recorded as per margin.

N° 5.

33. The second and latest report hitherto received from Captain Canning is dated the 26th of November, with a postscript of the 28th, and recorded as per margin. In that report Captain Canning describes the substance of what passed at a conference with the viceroy, on the subject of the invasion of Arracan. Captain Canning, it appears, succeeded in shaking the viceroy's belief of our participation in that event ; but his report demonstrates the positive conviction of it entertained at the court of Ummerapoor. He states also, that the detention of British ships was in consequence of orders from the court, founded on that conviction, and ascribes their liberation only to the effect of the personal interests of the viceroy, who, deeply engaged in commercial speculations, was averse to the adoption of measures tending to disturb the relations of amity between the two states. It was satisfactory to us to find, that although government had correctly anticipated the impressions produced on the minds of the king and his officers by the events in Arracan, its apprehension of the consequences of them to the British subjects residing in the Burmese territory was not realized. The further measures pursued by the Burmese government for the purpose of recovering its authority in Arracan are noticed in this report.

Cons. 15 Nov.
N° 35.

34. Captain Canning relates also in that report his proceedings under the instructions of government, as described in a preceding part of this despatch, in endeavouring to obtain compensation for the owners of the ship Elephant; from which it appears, that the viceroy is disposed to grant the compensation that may be deemed by this government to be equitable. This disposition indeed was declared in his reply to the letter addressed to the viceroy on this subject (noticed in the 13th paragraph of this despatch), which reply will be found recorded on the proceedings noted in the margin, and in consequence the whole of the papers on the subject were referred to the marine board, with directions to state what in its opinion would be a fair and equitable rate of freight to be demanded from the government of Rangoon for the period of time that the Elephant was employed in its service.

Cons. 26 Dec.
N° 7.

35. The marine board in its reply to that reference, contained in an extract from the proceedings of government in the public department, recorded as per margin, reported their opinion to be, that instead of the sum of 7,200 sicca rupees, which the government of Rangoon had offered, 15,166 should be demanded.

Cons. 26 Dec.

36. Entertaining some doubt whether this sum did not exceed what, at least, it would be advisable, if not equitable, to demand, we issued the instructions to the marine board, which will be found recorded as per margin, for the final adjustment of the question in communication with the owners of the ship.

37. Your honourable court will observe in Captain Canning's report, notice of an American, named Davy, who arrived at Rangoon about three years ago, and proceeded to the capital of Ava, with a view to make himself acquainted with the several articles of produce in that country, in which an advantageous commerce might be carried on with America; and who, it seems, ascertained that the government of Ava was disposed to furnish supplies of saltpetre in return for arms, which Mr. Davy having returned to America, and again come back to India, has lately intimated by letter to the government of Rangoon might now be furnished, stating at the same time that he had been appointed agent on the part of the American government to that of Ava, and proposed proceeding to Rangoon.

38. We are not aware that this species of traffic, or the residence of an American agent with the government of Ava, is incompatible with the provisions of existing treaties. But both will demand counteraction, if the relations of amity between England and America should be interrupted; at the same time, your honourable court will observe from Captain Canning's report, that this proposed exchange of saltpetre for arms is not likely to have effect.

39. We have not yet replied to this last report of Captain Canning.

40. In continuation of the principal subject of this despatch, it is proper to transmit, enclosed, an extract from our proceedings in the judicial department, under date the 26th ultimo, containing a copy of a further despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, in which he reports the seizure of two Europeans by the people of Kingberring, and the measures which he adopted to effect their liberation.

41. One of those Europeans named Taylor, is the Englishman, who appears by Captain Canning's reports to be a commander of a vessel in the service of the Burmese government, which was despatched to the coast of Arracan for the purpose of gaining intelligence of the real state of affairs in that province, and whether or not the invaders had received assistance from the British government. The circumstances of his being in the service of the Burmese government, was of course suppressed by Taylor in the account, which according to the magistrate's report he gave of himself to Kingberring's people, and his real condition was consequently unknown to the magistrate. We judged it proper to acquaint the magistrate of his real condition, enjoining him at the same time not to relax his endeavours to effect his release, and that of his companion, and to conceal the fact of their being in the service of the Burmese government, lest the knowledge of it should endanger their lives. They have, however, been liberated, as appears by the further reports lately received from the magistrate, which we proceed to submit to the notice of your honourable court.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
23 Jan. 1812.

42. Copies of these reports, dated 11th and 14th instant, are contained in the enclosed extract of our proceedings of the 22d instant, in the judicial department. Your honourable court will observe from the tenor of these last advices, that contrary to expectation and appearances, the government of Ava has found the means of collecting a force of sufficient strength to defeat the troops of Kingberring, who, deserted by most of his followers, has become a fugitive. That numbers of his people whom he drew from Chittagong, and of the inhabitants of Arracan, have fled for refuge to our territories, and more are expected. That the magistrate with a view to prevent the probable incursions of the Burmese troops in pursuit of the fugitives, has instructed the commanding officer of the station to proceed with the whole of the disposable force, and take post on the southern frontier, furnishing him with directions for the guidance of his conduct, until our orders should be received regarding the course of proceeding to be observed with respect to the fugitives; for the surrender of whom, it may be expected, that demands will be made on the part of the government of Ava, even if the forces of the latter should not penetrate into the province of Chittagong, for the purpose of seizing or destroying them.

43. The instructions despatched to the magistrate, in reply to his despatches, are contained in the document last referred to; a mature consideration of these reports has suggested a modification of the resolution, which, as stated in the thirty-second paragraph of this despatch, Captain Canning had been instructed eventually to communicate to the Burmese government, without, however, departing materially from the principle of that resolution.

44. The refugees may be reduced to three classes: 1st. The chiefs (of whom Kingberring is of course the principal) by whom the disturbances in Arracan have been excited.

2d. The natives of Arracan who had been established in Chittagong, and who accompanied Kingberring, whether voluntarily or by compulsion in his late expedition.

3d. The natives and residents of Arracan, who may be induced to retire within the limits of our territories, from the apprehension of acts of violence and oppression from the Burmese forces.

45. With respect to the first class of persons above mentioned, we have directed the magistrate to detain any of them in safe custody who may be apprehended, intending to render the final decision respecting them dependent on the result of communications to be made to the government of Ava, regarding them, through the channel of Captain Canning.

46. With regard to the second class, namely, such of the natives of Arracan who had been established in the district of Chittagong, as accompanied Kingberring, the magistrate has been directed to desire the commanding officer of the British troops to permit them to take refuge within the limits of our territories. This order, which forms the chief modification of our original resolution, was founded entirely on a humane desire, not to exclude them from what may probably be their only means of safety, under circumstances of imminent danger and urgent distress. The refugees in question have clearly forfeited all claim to a permanent residence within our territories, by carrying war from thence into the country of a friendly state; and we accordingly conceive, that agreeably to the principle of our original resolutions, it may be found in the sequel, both just and expedient to require that these persons should retire from our provinces, where after the late occurrences their residence under our protection would probably give umbrage and offence to the government of Ava.

47. We considered the third class of persons above mentioned, that is, the residents of Arracan who may be induced to retire within the limits of our territories, from the apprehension of violence or cruelty from the Burmese forces, entitled for the present to an asylum within those limits.

48. Your honourable court will accordingly observe, from the documents last mentioned, that the above is the substance of our instructions, to the magistrate of Chittagong, on the point which he referred to our consideration; and that we, at the same time, signified our entire approbation of the measures of precaution which he had adopted, and the tenor of his instructions to the commanding officer of the British troops despatched to the southern frontier

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor-General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 4th March 1812.

Honourable Sirs,

1. WE have now the honour to communicate to your honourable court, in continuation of our address of the 23d January, the progress of transactions and events on the eastern frontier of these provinces, and of our measures and proceedings connected with them. Time, however, will not admit of the preparation of copies of all the documents relating to this subject, for transmission by the fleet under despatch, we shall therefore enclose in this address such only as are most material, reporting at the same time the prominent circumstances of the events to which the rest refer.

2. After the defeat of the insurgents under the command of Kingberring in Arracan, the commander of the forces of the king of Ava and the rajah of Arracan, with a body of troops apparently not exceeding one thousand men, advanced to the southern frontier of Chittagong. The magistrate had despatched with letters to the rajah of Arracan, and the commander of the troops, an emissary, who proceeded to the Burmese camp. The object of the mission was, to caution the Burmese chiefs against allowing their troops to enter our territories. Enclosed is a copy of the emissary's report of his reception by and conference with the chiefs; from which it appeared, that they disavowed any intention of entering the province of Chittagong, and merely demanded the surrender of the two principal leaders of the insurrection, stating, however, their expectation of the arrival of large reinforcements. On the receipt of this report, the magistrate despatched instructions to the emissary, desiring him to explain in general terms to the chiefs, that no answer could be given to any propositions on their part, until the orders of government were received; that the magistrate had been directed to apprehend Kingberring and the other leader, whose surrender they had demanded, and that he was endeavouring to effect their apprehension.

3. About this time one of the two chiefs named Nakloo, whose surrender had been demanded, took refuge with a large body of armed followers at a place within our frontier. It appears that this person was not one of those who formerly resided in the district of Chittagong, and left it in consequence of Kingberring's invasion of Arracan, but lived at Ramrèe in the latter province, and joined the insurgents after they had gone over. The magistrate properly judging that the Burmese chiefs would have reason to complain if we permitted an armed force of their enemies to obtain protection within our territory, sent instructions to Lieutenant-colonel Morgan, commanding the British troops on the frontier, desiring him to require Nakloo and his followers to disperse, and to compel them if they refused; the magistrate suggested at the same time, that endeavours should be made to apprehend that chief. In reply to the magistrate's report on this subject, we directed him to be informed that it would be proper to modify his instructions to Colonel Morgan, by desiring him to require the refugees in question to deposit their arms, either under charge of Colonel Morgan, or in the custody of the police officers, to withdraw from the frontier, and to disperse wherever they might judge most advisable, whether in our territories, in their own country, or in any of the adjoining states, employing force to compel them to quit the company's territory if they should refuse to conform to that requisition.

4. In the meantime, the magistrate having received the orders of government, relative to the conduct to be observed towards the several classes of refugees (the substance substance of which is stated in the 44th paragraph of our address to your honourable court of the 23d January), recalled his former instructions to Colonel Morgan, and desired him not to take any measures with respect to the force assembled under Nakloo, until the receipt of further orders from government, unless they should commit any act, as a body of armed men, tending to disturb the tranquility of the frontier; observing, however, that it would of course be requisite that Nakloo should himself be detained, if he could be apprehended; but that no violent measures should be employed for his apprehension.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
4 March 1812.

5. In reply, we pointed out to the magistrate the error of the supposition which he had expressed, that Nakloo came under the description of the refugee chiefs, who, according to our orders of the 21st January, were, if practicable, to be apprehended and detained, as we intended by those orders only those chiefs, natives of Arracan, who had not latterly resided within the British territories, which was not the case with Nakloo. After adverting, therefore, to the orders respecting Nakloo and his followers, mentioned in the third preceding paragraph, we signified to him that Nakloo himself should only be required (and if circumstances rendered necessary, compelled) to quit our territories, leaving him, however, free to return to Arracan, or to seek an asylum in any of the adjacent states, as he might judge proper.

6. In a letter dated the 8th ultimo, Colonel Morgan transmitted to the adjutant-general, at this presidency, a copy of a letter to his address from Captain Sibley, commanding the post at Teak Nauf, a point not far from the mouth of the river Nauf, and opposite the Burmese camp, reporting the arrival at that post of the magistrate's emissary before mentioned, who related what passed during his mission. He stated that the letters which he carried from the magistrate to the Burmese chiefs, were at first by them deemed to be forgeries, and himself was accused of being a spy; but that Mr. Taylor (who is mentioned in the 41st paragraph of our address to your honourable court of the 23d January, as being in the service of the Ava government, as having been seized by Kingberring, and afterwards released, and who, it appears, attended the Burmese camp), and also another European, of the name of Leach, who accompanied Taylor, having certified the letters to be genuine, the Burmese chiefs intimated to the emissary, that if we would deliver up the insurgent chiefs, and all fugitives, they would not molest us; but otherwise they would come down with the whole of the Burmese army, and overrun the country; and that they were awaiting the arrival of some French ships with ten thousand stand of arms, and a number of guns, and Frenchmen, who were to proceed round to the Nauf river. The emissary further stated, that the Burmese chiefs had collected between three and four hundred boats, twenty-five or thirty of them mounted with swivels; that the commander of the Burmese troops also required the surrender of Dr. M'Rae, (a surgeon in the service of the honourable company, long resident at Chittagong), and one of our native subjects, on the ground of their having assisted Kingberring in his invasion of Arracan. The emissary, on this occasion, stated his estimate of the Burmese force to be about seven thousand men.

7. Colonel Morgan, in his letter to the adjutant-general, states, that as he conceived from this intelligence that the designs of the Burmese chiefs were hostile, and as the effective force on the frontier did not exceed four hundred and forty, rank and file, he had called for a reinforcement of two companies from Dacca, together with all the effective force remaining at Chittagong, and some artillery.

8. The intelligence contained in Captain Sibley's letter was, at the same time, communicated to us in a despatch of the 10th ultimo from the magistrate, who noticed the defenceless state in which the town of Chittagong would be left, and stated the facility with which a Burmese force could approach it, and the temptation arising from the money in the collector's treasury, and from the Burmese commanders' probable knowledge of the weakness of the place, suggesting, at the same time, the expediency of having an armed vessel to cruize at the mouth of the Chittagong river, and another off the mouth of the river Nauf.

9. In a subsequent despatch, the magistrate transmitted translations of the letters dated respectively 12th February 1812, with which it appears his emissary on his dismissal from the Burmese chiefs, was charged by the rajah of Arracan, and the commander of the troops. Copies of those documents are enclosed; your honourable court will observe, that in these letters the Burmese chiefs demand the surrender of the insurgent chiefs, and of all the fugitives, and also that Dr. M'Rae be given up, and threaten in case of refusal to invade the company's territories with a force of eighty thousand men, and pursue the fugitives even to Dacca.

10. The magistrate, in his despatch, states, that as Mr. Taylor was well versed in the Burmese language, and as it was of importance that the chiefs should be made fully to understand that he possessed no authority to give them answers on any political points, without a previous reference to government, which together with other points Mr. Taylor would be able to explain more efficiently than was practicable by a letter which must be twice translated, he had addressed a letter to Mr. Taylor, of which, and also of his answer to the rajah of Arracan, he transmitted copies. In the same despatch the magistrate informed us, that Colonel Morgan had taken the family of Kingberring.

Copy of a letter from the magistrate to Mr. Taylor, dated 13 February, enclosed in magistrate's despatch of same date.

Copy of a letter from ditto to the rajah of Arracan, enclosed in ditto.

11. Copies of the magistrate's letters to the rajah of Arracan, and to Mr. Taylor, dated February 13th, 1812, are enclosed for your honourable court's information. The general purport of them is, an intimation that the magistrate possessed no authority to return a decisive answer to the demand for the surrender of the fugitives, and that the question would be referred to the governor-general in council; that however every possible search was making for the insurgent chiefs, who when apprehended would be properly secured, until the orders of government should be received; and that government would, no doubt, act regarding Kingberring consistently with justice; to which the magistrate added the expression of his desire, that the rajah would not order his army to enter the British territory, observing that such circumstance would increase the difficulty of seizing Kingberring, that the violation of our territory would be contrary to the law of nations, and that the British government would never allow any foreign state to invade its dominions with impunity.

12. We shall have occasion to notice some objectionable passages in those letters in a subsequent part of this address. We shall, however, previously report the measures which we judged it necessary to adopt in consequence of the demands preferred by the Burmese chiefs, and the hostile and insulting menaces with which they were accompanied.

13. The first object of consideration was, to convey to Chittagong as large a reinforcement of troops as might be practicable, within a short period of time. We deemed it also highly necessary to place with the least possible delay, at the disposal of Captain Canning, the envoy to the Burmese government, the means of withdrawing from Rangoon; Captain Canning being deprived of those means, by his having sent back the Amboyna to convey despatches and obtain supplies to this port, where she arrived in the early part of the last month.

Extract proceedings of government in the secret department of 18 Feb.

14. For a knowledge of the detail of the arrangements which we adopted for these purposes, we beg leave to refer your honourable court to the enclosed extract from our proceedings in the secret department of the 18th ultimo; from which your honourable court will observe, that by means of cruisers and other vessels in this river, we were enabled to provide for the despatch by sea of a reinforcement to the extent of about five hundred men. The Antelope cruiser having subsequently arrived from China, we were enabled to despatch that vessel also with an additional force of one hundred men; and at the suggestion of his excellency the commander-in-chief, seven companies of sepoys were afterwards directed to proceed to Chittagong by the route of the internal navigation. The whole of those reinforcements have since actually proceeded.

15. By the extracts from our proceeding above referred to, your honorable court will also observe that the Amboyna, accompanied by the Malabar cruiser, was ordered to sail with the utmost expedition to Rangoon for the purpose before described, and notice of these arrangements was immediately transmitted to the magistrate of Chittagong.

16. With a view to add to the means of protection, we also vested the magistrate of Chittagong with authority to call for the services of all or of any of the detachments of the Chittagong provincial battalion wheresoever employed, substituting temporarily an adequate number of barkendauzes, and also to call for the services of the Dacca provincial battalion.

17. We have stated above our intention of noticing some objectionable passages in the magistrate's letters to the rajah of Arracan and Mr. Taylor. Our observations on on those passages were stated in a letter of instructions to the magistrate, founded on the several communications from that officer, to which we have already adverted.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
4 March 1812.

18. It was signified to him on that occasion, that while we entirely approved the principle which he had assumed in his communications to the Burmese chief, of disclaiming any authority to return a definitive reply to his requisition for the surrender of the leaders of the late invasion of Arracan, we apprehended that the general tenor of his letters to the rajah of Arracan and Mr. Taylor, was calculated to encourage on the part of the former a strong expectation that the surrender of the persons in question would be the consequence of their being seized by the officers of the British government; and the particular passages of his letters, on which his apprehension was founded, were pointed out to the magistrate, as well as the embarrassment which such an expectation had a tendency to produce.

19. It was further observed to the magistrate, that in consequence of our former orders for securing the persons of the insurgent chiefs, he had attributed to government perhaps, not unnaturally, a greater degree of solicitude for their apprehension than was in reality entertained. It was therefore judged proper to apprise the magistrate, that although we were aware of the necessity of endeavouring to seize them in the event of their taking refuge within the limits of our territories, we were equally sensible that a considerable degree of embarrassment would attend the possession of their persons, and that we should learn without regret that the necessity of employing means for their apprehension had been precluded by their continuing without the limits of the British jurisdiction. On similar grounds we expressed our wish that circumstances had not led to the seizure of Kingberring's family.

20. With regard to the question of surrendering the fugitives, it was observed to the magistrate, that he would have found by our instructions* of the 21st of January, that it was considered to be a proper subject of negotiation with the British envoy, and he was desired to make a communication to that effect in reply to the demand of the Burmese chiefs for the surrender of the fugitives.

of the general letter to the honourable court of 23 Jan.

21. The magistrate was at the same time apprised, that in consequence of the hostile menaces and proceedings of the Burmese chiefs, instructions were about to be despatched to the envoy, authorizing him to withdraw from Rangoon, if he should consider the liberty of his person to be endangered by the rupture which those proceedings were calculated to provoke; that, in a contrary case, the envoy would be authorized to remain until he should receive orders of recal, which would be despatched to him immediately on the receipt of intelligence of the actual invasion of our territory by the Burmese forces, and which would of course amount to a declaration of war. But that until the envoy was withdrawn, he must be deemed the properest channel of negotiation between the two governments; that at the same time however, if intermediately found convenient, we should communicate to the magistrate our resolution on the subject of the surrender of any of the leaders of the late insurrection, who might fall into our hands, for the purpose of being made known to the Burmese officers on the frontier. A copy of the instructions, of which the above is the substance, is enclosed for your honourable court's more detailed information.

To magistrate of
Chittagong, dated
19 February.

22. Before we resume the summary of the further correspondence of the magistrate of Chittagong, it is proper to advert to the instructions issued on this occasion to the envoy, noticing also the communications above mentioned to have been received from him by the Amboyna.

23. It is proper however in the first place to refer to the enclosed copy of the instructions issued to Captain Canning, agreeably to the intention expressed in the last paragraph of our address to your honourable court of the 23d of January. But as they contain little more than an exposition of the principles of our proposed proceedings relative to the passages which are stated substantially in the preceding paragraphs of that address, we deem it unnecessary to state the several points of those instructions in the body of this letter.

To Capt. Canning,
25 January.

24. The despatches received from the envoy by the Amboyna are dated the 19th and 20th of January. The former being too voluminous to admit of its being transcribed, in addition to the other documents, in time to be forwarded by the present fleet, and the details of it not being of material importance, we shall merely describe the purport of it in general terms. A considerable part of that despatch consists of a narrative of the envoy's communication and correspondence with the government of Rangoon respecting the great delay which had occurred in the arrival of an answer from the king of Ava to the reference on the subject of the envoy's proceeding to the capital, which terminated however in the arrival of an order from the king couched in very gracious terms, directing the viceroy of Pegu to forward the mission to the capital with all honour and distinction. Another principal subject of the envoy's despatch is the successful progress of the king's arms against the rebels in Arracan, the details of which as reported to the government of Rangoon are stated in the envoy's letter, with comments on the degree of credit to be given to that intelligence, and remarks on the conduct of the war and the nature and extent of the means employed by the Burmese government for the suppression of the insurrection.

Despatch from

25. Captain Canning further states some observations on the state of the country, which is represented to be overrun by banditti and to be in great disorder, and on the condition of the British subjects residing at Rangoon. Captain Canning also details the circumstances and the result of his communications with the local government in consequence of the officers of the government having broken open packets to his address from Prince of Wales Island, and states the considerations which induced him to send back the Amboyna to Bengal, urging at the same time the expediency of her early return, for the purpose of conveying to him instructions on the points referred to us, (which however our instructions to the envoy of 22d of November, a copy of which was enclosed in our address to your honourable court of the 23d of January, had partly supplied,) of furnishing the provisions of which he stood in need, and of having the benefit of the presence of an armed vessel at his command, both with reference to an eventual change in the then conciliatory disposition of the court of Ava and the viceroy, and as adding greatly to the weight and importance of the mission in all political arrangements and discussions.

26. Captain Canning also relates, that antecedently to the arrival of the intelligence of the successes of the Burmese arms against the insurgents, the viceroy, in a private conversation with the envoy's interpreter, had remarked of what great utility a battalion of sepoys would be in suppressing the insurrection; intimating, at the same time, that such a force, if furnished by us, would of course be paid for by the Burmese government. The interpreter, in reply, signified to the viceroy, that any such proposition should be made directly to the envoy. Captain Canning adds, that this had not been done; but conceiving it not improbable that some such proposal might be made by the court of Ava, he desired to receive a communication of our sentiments on the subject, stating that without further specific orders from us he should of course decline acceding to such a proposal; but observing at the same time, that should it enter into the views of government to obtain a preponderating influence in the Burmese dominions, the present was certainly the most favourable moment, as the weakness of the government and general discontent of the people would put the whole country at the disposal of a very small British force.

27. It is superfluous to state that we should not, under any circumstances, have been disposed to enter into this project; but the question is of course removed from contemplation by the success of the Burmese arms against the insurgents.

28. It may not be improper to notice in this place the observations of the viceroy in a conference with the envoy, in consequence of the information he had received of the defeat of the insurgents and the recovery of the province of Arracan, as they correspond so nearly with the actual and subsequent course of events, whilst they exhibit at the same time a very just and reasonable train of reflection on the part of the viceroy. The following is a copy of that part of Captain Canning's despatch of the 19th of January which relates to this subject:

“ Should the success of the Burmahs have really been such as is represented, and
 “ the province of Arracan be reconquered, a more fortunate event certainly could “ not have happened for the Burmah empire than the rebellion of that province, as “ the suppression of that rebellion will give a degree of lustre and confidence to the “ Burmah arms, and keep in awe other provinces well inclined to adopt the same “ measure. The viceroy has, however, expressed great anxiety that the recapture
 “ of Arracan may involve his nation in a serious dispute with the British government.
 “ In a long conversation with me on the subject, he said that he did not imagine “ that Kingberring himself would take refuge in the province of Chittagong, “ as

“ as well knowing that his person would probably be seized and delivered up ; but “ that he thought it extremely likely that the subordinate chiefs and common people,
 “ to avoid immediate destruction, would cross the Nauf, and seek an asylum in “ our territory. From the known violent temper of the governor of Arracan, “ enflamed and elated by the late rebellion and his present success and additional “ honours, (a gilt kitsasol has been allowed him by the king,) he thought there “ could be little doubt of his pursuing the fugitives, and seizing and destroying “ wherever he could find them. Such aggression, he said, he well knew would be “ forcibly repelled by us, and what the consequence would be it was not difficult to “ conjecture ; whereas were mild and peaceable measures resorted to, the business “ might in all probability be settled to the mutual satisfaction of both states. He “ said that a son-in-law of Kingberring had escaped by sea, and was pursued by a “ large division of Burmah boats, and to what place could he fly but to Ramoo or “ Chittagong, to which places those boats would certainly pursue him ? That the “ violence and oppression of the governor of Arracan had driven the people to “ rebellion, and now threatened to excite a war between the Burmah and British “ governments. He added that he should, without delay, write to the general at “ Prome, and the Engy Praw *, on the subject, and recommended, in the strongest “ terms, that recourse be had to representations and negotiation on the occasion, and “ stated his wish that the settlement of the business might be altogether left to him.
 “ The viceroy ended by saying, that at one time it was his wish to have immediately “ deputed a person to Bengal, with a letter addressed to the governor-general expressly
 “ on the subject ; but that, at all events, he was most anxious that his sentiments “ should be made known to the British government with the least possible delay, as “ such a communication might tend in some measure to prevent the mischief that “ might otherwise be occasioned by a rash head-strong man.

Despatch from
 Gov. Gen. in council,
 4 March 1812.

*The heir apparent, who, it appears, is admitted by the king to a considerable share in the government.

“ To this I replied, that if in time of profound peace invasion were attempted
 “ by the Burmahs, it was very natural to suppose that it would be forcibly “ repelled by the British, and that what would certainly be granted, if found “ just on mature investigation, would with equal certainty be refused, if claimed by an “ armed force in our territory. I reversed the question, and asked the viceroy what
 “ the Burmah government would think were a British force to enter their dominions,
 “ for the purpose of seizing any obnoxious persons that might have taken refuge
 “ there. I assured him, that in any decision that the British government might “ come to with respect to the transactions in Arracan, strict and impartial justice “ would be adhered to, on peaceable and proper representations being made by the “ Burmah government ; but that, at all events, I doubted not that the right “ honourable the governor-general in council would feel sensible of and pay due “ regard to his laudable endeavours to preserve peace and harmony between the “ two states. I am informed that the king still continues persuaded of the “ co-operation of the British government in the invasion of Arracan.”

29. The envoy further reported the arrival of a sacerdotal mission on the part of the king of Candy, which the envoy deemed worthy of notice, conceiving that we ought to be apprised that an intercourse takes place between the king of Candy and the government of Ava. That intercourse, however, is accounted for by the circumstance of the natives of the two countries professing the same religion, both being worshippers of Budha.

30. Captain Canning expressed his request that a party consisting of a Havildar, a Naick and twelve Musselmen sepoy, with ammunition and provisions, might be ordered to proceed to Rangoon in the Amboyna, which request we have complied with. We have judged it proper, likewise, to place on board the Malabar cruizer a detail of 24 sepoy, to serve as mariners. Captain Canning also desired that provisions for four months for his escort and followers might be sent by the same opportunity, which has accordingly been done. He further communicated the desire of the viceroy to receive a small quantity of salt-petre, and we accordingly ordered 30 or 40 maunds to be sent.

31. The above is the substance of Captain Canning's despatch of the 19th of January ; of his letter of the 20th, stating that he had seen the king's orders for the advance of the mission to the capital, and describing its contents, and reporting that he had received authentic intelligence that his mission was received by the heir apparent with great satisfaction, we have the honour to enclose a copy.

32. We now proceed to advert to the principal points of our instructions to Captain Canning, despatched by the Amboyna. After referring to enclosed copies of all antecedent documents relative to the affairs of Arracan, and to our measures and orders in consequence of the events and transactions in that quarter, the letter to his address proceeded to communicate our sentiments and directions in detail, conformably to the summary of them, described in the letter to the magistrate of Chittagong of the 19th ultimo, to a copy of which the 21st paragraph of this despatch refers.

33. We observed, in the first place, that the principal purpose of immediately despatching to Rangoon the honourable company's ship Amboyna, accompanied by a cruiser of 20 guns, was to provide for the envoy's safety and eventual retreat. That, adverting to the haughty character and barbarous disposition of the government of Ava, we did not feel altogether satisfied of its observance of the sacred rights and privileges of a representative of a foreign state in the actual condition of affairs. That there were two circumstances which we conceived might possibly incline the government of Ava to violate the law of nations, so far as to impose a restraint upon the liberty of the envoy's person; one, the actual execution of the menaces of the rajah of Arracan, which would most probably occasion an open rupture between the two states; the other, a desire on the part of the government of Ava to possess, in the person of the British envoy, a security for a compliance with the demand for the surrender of the fugitive chiefs. That it was the object of government, in expediting the despatch of the Amboyna and Malabar, that if possible Captain Canning should receive an account of the state of affairs on the frontier of Arracan, before intelligence of events and proceedings had reached the government of Ava, of a nature to induce that government to act under the influence of either of the circumstances above described; in which case Captain Canning was to consider himself at liberty, according to his own view of the disposition and intentions of the government of Ava, or of the exigency of circumstances, to withdraw from whatever position the despatch might find him in, and return to Bengal. That in this case, with the reservation hereafter stated, it would be proper to signify the cause of his retreat to be, the menacing and even hostile conduct of the officers of the Burmese government on the frontier of Chittagong, so unprovoked by any act or proceeding of his government, and so utterly unwarrantable on any principle of justice or public law; intimating, however, that notwithstanding what had passed, it was still the resolution of government to maintain the relations of amity and peace with the state of Ava, unless by actual aggression the latter should compel it to pursue a different course. The reservation above alluded to was, that if the envoy's having reason to suppose that by founding the measure of his retreat on the hostile proceedings of the Burmese officers, the government of Ava might be led to apprehend that, notwithstanding his assurance to the contrary, his return would be followed by the prosecution of hostilities on our part. In such an event, Captain Canning was informed he was at liberty to assign any other cause that he might judge expedient and plausible.

34. It was added, that if he should be perfectly satisfied that under any circumstances the sanctity of his public character would be duly respected, he would of course continue in the exercise of his ministerial functions, by the means of which the depending questions might most conveniently and satisfactorily be adjusted between the two governments, unless he should receive authentic intelligence of the actual invasion of the company's territories by the Burmese forces, in which case he was desired not to hesitate to withdraw, since such a violation of our territories must be deemed a dissolution of the relations of peace.

35. Having added some further detail of instruction on this subject, we proceeded to observe that another object of the solicitude of government was to provide for the safety of the persons and property of the British subjects residing at Rangoon, and we furnished Captain Canning with directions for his guidance with reference to that object.

36. It was further stated, that we had provided for the possible, though as we conceived highly improbable, case of the government of Ava imposing any degree of restraint upon the liberty of the envoy's person, and refusing to permit his departure if he should have occasion to announce a resolution to withdraw, by instructions which had been given, directing in such case the immediate return of the Amboyna with the intelligence to Bengal, when such measures would be adopted as the exigency of the occasion might appear to require.

37. The remainder of the instructions to Captain Canning consisted of a reply to the several points of reference contained in his despatch of the 19th of January.

To Capt. Canning,
21 February,

As the contents of those instructions are important, and are not fully detailed in the preceding paragraphs, we deem it proper to put your honourable court in possession of their details by enclosing a copy.

Despatch from

38. We deem it proper also to transmit enclosed copies of instructions which were issued to the commanders of the Malabar cruizer and the Amboyna, for the guidance of their conduct after their arrival at Rangoon, with reference to eventual occurrences in that quarter.

of the Malabar,

39. We now resume the summary of the communications of the magistrate of Chittagong, and of our instructions and orders in consequence.

40. The magistrate having reported Colonel Morgan's seizure of the family of another insurgent chief, besides that of Kingberring, and solicited instructions with regard to the disposal of them, we directed it to be signified to him, that although, as stated in a preceding letter, we could have wished that circumstances had not led to the seizure of the families of the insurgent chiefs, yet as they had actually been apprehended, that sentiment did not suggest the expediency of their immediate liberation; since, on one hand, that measure might lead the Burmese officers to infer on our part a disposition favourable to the insurgent chiefs, and thereby constitute a new ground of complaint; and on the other, it would probably expose the individuals of those families to danger and distress. That therefore, whilst these unfortunate persons were treated with every degree of delicacy and kindness, we desired that care should be taken to prevent their escape; observing, however, that of course government would not under any consideration authorize their being delivered over to the Burmese officers.

41. On this occasion it occurred to us (adverting to the charge preferred by the rajah of Arracan against Dr. M'Rae, of having patronized Kingberring,) to be proper, in justice to Dr. M'Rae, to afford him an opportunity of replying to that charge, although we were far from supposing it to be well founded. The magistrate was accordingly directed to communicate the accusation to Dr. M'Rae, in the terms of the rajah of Arracan's letter, in order that he might have an opportunity of explaining the nature of the intercourse, if any, that he might have maintained with Kingberring.

42. In a despatch dated the 18th ultimo, the magistrate transmitted an extract from the journal of his emissary Synd Achmud Bagdadee, relating in detail his conference with the Burmese chiefs. Although the substance of those conferences has already been stated in a preceding part of this despatch, yet as the detailed report of the emissary represents with apparent accuracy the sentiments, disposition, and demands of the Burmese chiefs, and is, therefore, an important document, we deem it proper to enclose a copy of it.

Synd Achmud
Bagdadee's report, enclosed in despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, dated
18th February.

43. In the same despatch the magistrate reported from information transmitted to him by Lieut.-col. Morgan, that a party of the Burmese forces had entered the district of Chittagong, with an intention of stockading themselves, and that the Burmese troops opposite to our post at Teak Nauf were increasing; and it appeared from subsequent dispatches, that other detached parties of Burmese troops had also entered our territory, professedly in search of the fugitive chiefs.

44. During these transactions the Burmese chiefs suddenly resolved to despatch vakeels for the purpose of negotiating their demands, and having obtained permission, the vakeels actually repaired to Captain Sibley's post, at Teak Nauf, on the 18th ultimo. They positively disavowed the Burmese chiefs' knowledge of any parties of troops having crossed the river into our territory. Captain Sibley explained to the vakeels that the British officers were endeavouring to apprehend Kingberring and his followers; that the entrance of Burmese troops into our territory would be considered as a declaration of war, and signified to them that he would not admit of any further communication with them, until those parties were withdrawn. The vakeels, after declaring their own and their principals ignorance of any such violation of our territory, assured Captain Sibley that it was the wish of the Burmese government to be on the most friendly terms with us, and that they had come for the express purpose of preventing any disagreement between the two states. Captain Sibley having apprised the vakeels that if the Burmese troops should hereafter cross the river and cause alarm to the inhabitants, he should be under the necessity of employing force to repel them, asked them if they proposed to return; to which they replied, that they were instructed to proceed withersoever Captain Sibley might direct them, and even to Calcutta, if necessary. Captain Sibley signified to them that he would not permit them to advance until the parties of Burmese troops, then in the company's territories, should have been withdrawn; but that after that he would give them an escort to Ramoo, the head-quarters of Colonel Morgan. The vakeels preferring to remain, instead of returning to their masters camp, Captain Sibley placed an honorary guard over their tents to prevent alarm, and their people from going about, expressing to him his intention of sending them to Ramoo, together with Mr. Taylor, who accompanied them, as soon as the parties of Burmese troops should have quitted the company's territory. Captain Sibley stated that these vakeels were persons of rank, the one being second in command, and acting on the part of the commander of the Burmese forces; the other, on the part of Arracan, he styled lord of the revenues of that province.

45. The magistrate, in reporting the preceding intelligence, which appeared to him to afford a certain prospect of an amicable termination of the depending questions between the two governments, ascribes the deputation of the vakeels to the effect of his letters to the rajah of Arracan, and to Mr. Taylor, before noticed.

46. Colonel Morgan, on receiving the above report from Captain Sibley, directed him to signify to the vakeels his wish for their proceeding to Ramoo, and transmitted, at the same time, a letter addressed to the Burmese chiefs, requiring the immediate recal of the Burmese parties which had entered our territories, and warning them of the consequences of the continuance of those parties within our limits. Colonel Morgan sent the letter to Captain Sibley to be forwarded, desiring him previously to communicate it to the vakeels, and to urge them to write to their masters in corresponding terms. Colonel Morgan addressed and transmitted a letter at the same time to Mr. Taylor, desiring him to represent to the vakeels the urgent necessity of recalling the Burmese parties from our territory, and to signify to them that so long as those parties remained, they were not to expect that any attention would be paid to their demands; whereas the removal of those parties would tend to prove the sincerity of the professions of the Burmese chiefs, and the wish of the government of Ava, to maintain the relations of amity with the company. Colonel Morgan further desired Mr. Taylor to assure the vakeels, that all due attention would be paid to them during the period they might remain in the British territories, and that an escort would attend them to the colonel's head-quarters, whither he wished them to proceed at their earliest convenience.

47. Captain Sibley, in replying to the instructions of Colonel Morgan above described, informed him that Mr. Taylor had himself gone to the Burmese camp with the colonel's letter to the commander. Captain Sibley also reported, that in consequence of his communication with the vakeels respecting the impropriety of permitting the Burmese troops to enter our territories, orders were immediately despatched for their recal; and captain Sibley added, that he understood some of them had actually returned within the Arracan boundary, and the rest were expected immediately to follow. Captain Sibley further stated, that the Burmese commander had sent a verbal message, purporting that the magistrate's letter to the rajah of Arracan (referred to in the 11th paragraph of this address) was satisfactory, and that he left every thing to be adjusted by the vakeels.

48. The magistrate, through whom the preceding communications were conveyed to us, desired to be informed whether, as the vakeels had authority to proceed to Calcutta if the points at issue should not be adjusted on the spot, they were to be allowed so to proceed. The magistrate further expressed his regret that the tenor of the letter of the Burmese chiefs should have been of a nature to warrant a belief of their having seriously entertained a resolution to invade our territories, observing that if those chiefs had in the first instance adopted the present measure of despatching vakeels instead of menacing letters, it would have saved the inhabitants of Chittagong much alarm, and government some trouble, which latter he hoped there was still time to remedy. This communication is dated the 23d ultimo, previously to his having received information of the measures adopted by us for the purpose of reinforcing the troops in the province of Chittagong.

49. It became necessary, on the receipt of this intelligence, to convey it to Captain Canning, and to furnish both him and the magistrate with further instructions for the guidance of their conduct under this change of circumstances: and as the Amboyna and Malabar had not then departed, we were enabled to avail ourselves of that opportunity for the despatch of the requisite instructions to the envoy.

50. Notwithstanding this change in the conduct of the Burmese officers, from menace and insult to measures of a pacific tendency, we did not judge it proper to countermand countermand any of the arrangements in progress for reinforcing the station of Chittagong; and in the instructions to Captain Canning, the grounds of that resolution were stated, for the express purpose of being communicated to the court of Ava. It was accordingly observed to him, that the prosecution of these arrangements was rendered necessary by the anterior proceedings of the Burmese chiefs, who advanced all the troops that they could immediately command to the frontier of our territories, and conveyed their demands for the surrender of their fugitive enemies in the language of menaces and of insult, without even ascertaining whether or not the latter were in our hands; and after knowing that they were not, that they ostentatiously declared, in their own letters, the expected approach of 80,000 men, for the express purpose of invading our territory, and extending their hostilities to the utmost practicable limit, unless those demands should be complied with; and that they boasted of their having secured, for the same purpose, the aid of our European enemies.

51. It was further observed that the absurdity of these declarations, and their consciousness of the visionary nature of these boasted resources, made no alteration in the character of their proceedings: that their measures had been those of menace and aggression to the extent of the resources immediately at their command, and warranted our ascribing to them the disposition which they declared, to direct against us the whole force of the kingdom, and to call to their aid the forces of a power with which we were in a state of war.

52. That assuming the extent of their declarations, we were to consider them as covering not merely an intended but an actual alliance with our enemies, for purposes exclusively hostile towards us, qualified alone by the condition of our acceding to demands which in their nature were a subject of negotiation between the two states, prior not only to such negotiation, but even to a knowledge of our ability to comply with them, and consequently prior to a rejection of them.

53. That had they actually formed the connection with our enemies which they asserted that they had, by that act alone the Burmese would be placed in a state of war with the British government, and we should be compelled to employ every effort of our power for the subversion of the monarchy. That to the extent of menace, of insult, and an avowal of hostile acts and designs, the Burmese had already placed themselves in that condition; and by abstaining from the prosecution of the measures which this state of facts would unquestionably justify, the British government afforded the most convincing proof of its forbearance, and of its solicitude to preserve the relations of amity with the state of Ava.

54. But that although professing and really entertaining these pacific views, notwithstanding the provocation we had received, it still became the duty of the British government to provide the means of resisting those hostile designs, which having once been menaced might be resumed in the event of our withholding a compliance with demands which we might deem unreasonable, but in which the Burmese government might think proper to persist; and that it was our duty to be prepared to resent a repetition of insults which might eventually be carried beyond the limits of warrantable forbearance.

55. That to rely implicitly on the late sudden pacific change in the measures and language of the Burmese officers (who it was to be observed at the same time had neither atoned for the past, nor withdrawn their forces from their menacing position on the frontier; neither revoked their avowal of the advanced state of their preparations for war, nor relaxed in their demands: some of which at least they must be aware of our resolution to reject,) and on the grounds of that precarious reliance to leave the province of Chittagong without adequate protection, would obviously be inconsistent with the ordinary maxims of prudence and precaution.

56. Captain Canning was at the same time desired to assure the court, that our views and measures were pacific and entirely defensive. That it was not to us an object of interest, nor consequently our desire, to be placed in a state of war with the kingdom of Ava. That such demands as were just and reasonable, we should at all times be prepared to concede on grounds of justice and reason alone. That on the other hand, demands supported by menaces and demonstrations of force and accompanied by insult, however just in themselves, every government was bound to resist; and that consequently the forces of the Burmese government must be removed from their present menacing position, before such demands could be admitted even as a subject of negotiation.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
4 March 1812.

57. It was further signified to Captain Canning with reference also to our former instructions on that point, that as the points in dispute were a subject of negotiation between the two states, and therefore to be conducted through the accredited agents of one or other of those states, he, being in the actual exercise of the functions of envoy at the court of Ava, was the proper agent for the conduct of such negotiation; whereas the vakeels despatched to Ramoo, deriving their powers only from subordinate officers of the Burmese government, could not be considered as proper agents for the adjustment of the depending question. That the magistrate of Chittagong would accordingly be directed to communicate these observations to the vakeels, intimating to them as he (Captain Canning) would also intimate to the court of Ava, that the fugitive chiefs if ultimately apprehended by us, would be detained under safe custody to abide the issue of the negotiation between the two governments relative to their surrender. But that circumstances might lead us to deviate from this course of proceeding; if, for instance, the vakeels or their immediate principals should subsequently be accredited in regular form, by the court of Ava, we might possibly deem it advisable and convenient to authorize the negotiation through the channel of their agency.

58. In the mean time, however, Captain Canning was directed to receive and communicate to this government such demands as might be stated to him by the Burmese government, regulating his proceedings with regard to those demands by the instructions already transmitted to him; and he was informed, that on receipt of such communication our decision would be made known to him with the least practicable delay.

59. These instructions to Captain Canning concluded with an intimation of our desire that the prescribed communications to the court of Ava, should, notwithstanding their importance, be rendered subordinate to a consideration for his personal safety, if he should have reason to apprehend that any part of them were of a nature to endanger it.

60. Although the whole of what is material in the instructions to Captain Canning is above stated, we deem it proper to transmit enclosed a copy of them, together with a copy of our corresponding instructions to the magistrate of Chittagong; in which, after referring to a copy of the former as containing directions for his guidance as well as that of Captain Canning, he was directed, notwithstanding the necessity of signifying to the vakeels that the negotiation of their demands must be referred to the British envoy at the court of Ava, neither to oppose, but on the contrary rather to encourage, their proceeding to Calcutta; nor manifest any desire for their return to the chiefs by whom they were accredited. It was observed to the magistrate at the same time, that as the declarations which he was authorized to convey to the vakeels would have a tendency to terminate their mission, during the continuance of which we might rely on the pacific conduct of their principals, it would be desirable to retard, rather than accelerate the prescribed communications, until the arrival of the reinforcements. While he adverted therefore to the channel through which the negotiation of the depending questions ought properly and regularly to be conducted, he was directed not to refuse to receive and forward their demands to the presidency; but at the same time to intimate to them, that they could not reasonably expect that attention would be paid to those demands so long as the Burmese forces maintained a menacing position on the frontier of our territories, the magistrate being careful also to prevent a supposition on their part that the removal of the forces would necessarily be followed by a compliance with their demands.

61. The magistrate was further instructed to be prepared to counteract the alarm and suspicion which the arrival of the reinforcements, or the rumor of them which would probably precede it, might be expected to excite in the minds of the Burmese chiefs, by endeavouring to convince them of the pacific nature of our views, without however withholding from them a knowledge of the sentiments which we entertained of their conduct; but this communication, the magistrate was informed, should be combined with the most satisfactory assurances of our amicable views, and of our desire and resolution to maintain the relations of peace and amity, unless by aggression on their part they should compel us to adopt a different course.

62. In a despatch received subsequently to the date of the preceding instructions, the magistrate informed us, that in consequence of all the Burmese troops being withdrawn from our territories, the vakeels, accompanied by Mr. Taylor, had proceeded from Teak Nauf towards the head-quarters of Colonel Morgan at Ramoo.

To Captain Canning, dated 29th February.
To magistrate of Chittagong, dated 29th February.

63. In the same despatch, the magistrate who had then received notice of the measures adopted for sending reinforcements, although he considered all cause of alarm to have been removed by the late pacific change in the conduct of the Burmese chiefs, expressed his opinion to be, that it would still be advisable to allow such part of the reinforcements as might actually have been despatched at the time of our receiving the intelligence of the arrival of the vakeels, to continue at Chittagong, a point upon which (as shown in the preceding paragraphs) his wishes had been more than anticipated.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
4 March 1812.

64. That despatch is dated the 24th ultimo; on the following day the magistrate had occasion to report a material alteration in the aspect of affairs, he having received a report from Colonel Morgan, that notwithstanding the presence of the vakeels and the pacific declarations which they conveyed, a body of between 500 or 600 Burmese troops had crossed the Nauf in sight of the Burmese encampment, and on retiring, in consequence of the pursuit of our troops, who took a number of prisoners and arms from small parties detached from the main body, fired upon our sepoy. We deem it proper to enclose for your honourable court's information a copy of the magistrate's despatch, containing the details of this outrage, and of the measures pursued in consequence by Colonel Morgan, who very properly addressed a demand of explanation to the commander of the Burmese forces, and directed Mr. Taylor to convey suitable representations to the vakeels. The letter your honourable court will observe disavowed on the part of their principals their concern in the outrage, and expressed their regret and indignation at its occurrence, in consequence of which Colonel Morgan had consented to receive a visit from them; a measure which the magistrate justly remarks was unadvisable until the commander of the Burmese forces should have afforded a satisfactory explanation, which he observes could not probably be expected, since it appeared impossible to suppose that a force of 5 or 600 men could have entered our territory in the sight of the Burmese camp without the knowledge and the concurrence of the commander-in-chief.

From magistrate of
25th February.

65. The magistrate states, in the same despatch, that subsequently to the occurrence of this event, and not before (for what reason he was unable to discover), the vakeels acknowledged their being charged with letters for him and Colonel Morgan from the Burmese chiefs. The despatch also contains an explanation of the motives which induced him to insert, in his letter to the rajah of Arracan, those passages which we considered objectionable, because tending to impress the minds of the Burmese chiefs with a belief of our intention to surrender the leaders of the late insurrection, if apprehended.

66. It becomes proper also to transmit for your honourable court's information a copy of the magistrate's next despatch of the 26th ultimo. In that despatch the magistrate reports that he had received a letter from Colonel Morgan, informing him that he had had a conference with the vakeels, who had renewed their declarations of pacific intentions on the part of the Burmese, and had assured Colonel Morgan that the most peremptory orders had been despatched for the recal of all the Burmese parties within our limits. The magistrate further reports, that he had seen a letter from one of the officers at Ramoo, stating that Captain Sibley had received a letter from the commander of the Burmese forces, requesting that the prisoners might be returned and their chief sent guarded, as he would be beheaded in consequence of his having conducted an armed force into our territories; an application which the magistrate observes is certainly in terms satisfactory, but is to be received with reserve and doubt, since, as he before remarked, it appears incredible that the outrage could have been committed without the participation of the Burmese chief.

From magistrate of
26th February.

67. The magistrate's despatch contains a copy of a letter which he addressed to Colonel Morgan, desiring him not to permit the vakeels to proceed to Chittagong, if so disposed, as his conduct with regard to them must be regulated by the instructions he might receive from government founded on a knowledge of the late outrage, together with a copy of a letter which the magistrate judged it proper to address to the Burmese chiefs, demanding an explanation of that outrage.

68. Your honourable court will also observe, that the magistrate notices his receipt of the letter to his address from the rajah of Arracan, and of a copy of the letter from the commander of the Burmese forces to the address of Colonel Morgan, with both of which, the vakeels, as above stated, were charged, and reports that their contents are little more than a threat of hostilities if the fugitive chiefs are not surrendered, with a renewal of the charge against the British government of having supported Kingberring, and assisted him with military stores in his late invasion of Arracan.

Gov. Gen. in council,

69. It was of course important, if practicable, to report these occurrences to the envoy, together with such instructions for the guidance of his conduct as the occasion appeared to require. We accordingly, on the receipt of the first of the two despatches above referred to, directed a copy of it to be transmitted to Captain Canning (the Amboyna and Malabar not having yet sailed), with the expression of our desire, that as it was possible that this outrage might be susceptible of explanation and atonement, and as we still maintained our solicitude to preserve the relations of amity with the state of Ava, the envoy would not convey to the court of Ava any representations on the subject of a nature to indicate a resolution on the part of this government to consider itself in a state of war with the former, or to decline even yet an amicable adjustment of all depending questions; but that he should of course remonstrate in proper terms against the deceitful conduct of the Burmese officers on the frontier, and found upon it an additional argument in support both of the necessity of placing the province of Chittagong in a condition of defence, and of our requisition that the Burmese forces be withdrawn from their position on our frontier antecedently to any negotiation on the subject of the demands of the government of Ava; intimating also, that a repetition of such outrages must inevitably produce a rupture between the two states.

To magistrate of
3d March.

70. Of the reply which we directed to be returned to the two despatches from the magistrate of Chittagong, we have the honour to enclose a copy. Your honourable court will observe from it, that while we intimated our concurrence in opinion with the magistrate, that notwithstanding the professions of the commander of the Burmese forces, this outrage could not have been committed without the sanction of the Burmese chiefs, we declared our willingness to accept a formal disavowal of their concern in it, and the expression of their indignation at the perpetrators, as a sufficient atonement; that however, in the event of a repetition of similar acts of hostile aggression, it would be necessary to dismiss the vakeels; observing also, that any parties of the Burmese forces again entering the company's territory, should of course be compelled to retreat by force of arms.

71. It was obvious to remark, that the tenor of the letter to the magistrate's address, brought by the vakeels, was inconsistent with the pacific nature of the measure of deputing those vakeels for the professed purpose of amicable negotiation, as well as with the pacific intentions declared by the Burmese chiefs, inasmuch as the language of menace and of accusation already refuted, was the language of hostility and insult; and it was observed to the magistrate, that the determination before announced to him, of refusing to admit even of negotiation while the Burmese forces continued to maintain a threatening posture on the frontier of our territory, was of course applicable to the case of the Burmese chiefs continuing to urge their demands in the hostile language of menaces and insult.

72. With reference to this point of our instructions, however, it became necessary to apprise the magistrate of our sentiments on the question of forcibly dislodging the Burmese troops from the position which they thus occupied, with a declared design of eventually invading our territories; and accordingly, on the ground of our anxiety to avoid, if possible, an open rupture with the government of Ava, and therefore to observe the utmost practicable degree of forbearance, we directed it to be signified to the magistrate, that although the Burmese chiefs should persist in their hostile declarations, and refuse to withdraw their troops from their menacing position on the frontier, we did not deem it expedient, for the present at least, to authorize the adoption of coercive measures for the purpose of compelling their retreat; that it would be sufficient to act on the defensive, maintaining the requisition for the retreat of their troops, in the qualified form already prescribed, namely, combining with that requisition, a declaration, that so long as their troops should continue to occupy a position professedly directed to the eventual invasion of our territories, their demands would not even be entertained by the British government.

73. We have adverted in a preceding paragraph to the magistrate's explanation (contained in his despatch of the 25th ultimo, whereof a copy is above referred to as an enclosure in this address) of the motives which induced him to introduce into his first letter to the rajah of Arracan, the intimations which we observed were calculated to impress his mind with a belief of our predetermination to surrender the persons of the insurgent chiefs, in the event of their being apprehended. Your honourable court will perceive on a reference to the magistrate's despatch of the

Gov. Gen. in council,

25th ultimo, that under a persuasion that the Burmese chiefs were resolved to carry their menaces of invasion into effect, he deemed it advisable to frame his letter in terms which, while they suggested to the rajah the belief above described, should admit of a different construction.

74. We could not of course approve of this disingenuous system of proceeding, and therefore, in reply to that part of the magistrate's despatch, we directed it to be observed, that it was always inexpedient as well as incompatible with the maxims of equity and propriety, to convey intimations, in the course of political correspondence, purposely calculated to suggest to the other party an erroneous construction of their meaning; and that it would have been sufficient, with reference to the object which the magistrate had in view, to have declared his want of authority to decide regarding the surrender of the fugitives in the event of their being apprehended, and his ignorance of the sentiments and disposition of government on that subject.

75. The foregoing detail of our measures, orders, and instructions will sufficiently explain to your honourable court the course of our deliberations, and the system of proceeding, which it is our intention to pursue with respect to the late occurrences in the quarter of Chittagong, as far as it is practicable in the present stage of these transactions to form our resolutions. Your honourable court will observe, that while guided on the one hand by the unavoidable necessity of resisting menace, insult and aggression, we are on the other, resolved to practise every practicable degree of moderation and forbearance in pursuance of our solicitude to maintain the long established relations of peace and amity with the state of Ava. It may possibly even appear to your honourable court, that we have allowed this disposition to operate to a greater extent than is compatible with the rights and the dignity of the relative power of the company's government; but an additional motive of caution and forbearance is suggested by the situation of our envoy, whose personal liberty, and even safety, might be endangered by the vindictive resentment of a barbarous and haughty court in the event of actual hostility between the two states. It might indeed contribute to the future tranquillity of our eastern territory, which has repeatedly been disturbed by the aggressions of the people of Arracan, and to the permanent relief of our government and our subjects from the effects of that arrogance and insolence to which both have so frequently been exposed; and which may, in a great degree, be ascribed to anterior forbearance and concession on our part, if by example and experience that government were led to form a just estimate of the greatness of our power, and the weakness of its own. We state this observation, however, rather as tending in the present instance to alleviate the regret with which we must ever contemplate the necessity of war, than as constituting on our part a principle of action.

76. With regard to the question of rejecting or acceding to the demands of the Ava government for the surrender of the insurgent chiefs and other fugitives, great multitudes of whom, we understand, have sought refuge in our territories, it may be sufficient at the present moment to state, that the only branch of those demands, which can with us be under any circumstances a subject even of deliberation, is, whether or not Kingberring and other insurgent chiefs shall, if apprehended, be delivered up to their enemies. This is a point which will require much discussion and mature deliberation; but the present inclination of our judgment is, that no principle of public law and justice will require us to do violence to those feelings of humanity which naturally oppose the measure of delivering up any of these unfortunate, though guilty persons, to the cruel and fatal vengeance of their enemies, not even Kingberring and others (if others there be) who like him have deprived themselves of all title to our protection by a treacherous abuse of hospitality, in taking advantage of their protected situation to carry arms into the territory of a government at peace with our own, at the hazard of involving us in a war with the former, and exposing us to all the embarrassment and inconvenience which has actually resulted from the invasion of the province of Arracan.

77. We shall add to the communications contained in this despatch any further intelligence that we may receive of the progress of events and transactions on our eastern frontier before the departure of the present fleet.

We have the honour to be, with the greatest respect,

Honourable Sirs,

Your most faithful humble servants,

Minto,

J. Lumsden,

G. Nugent,

H. Colebrooke.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
9 March 1812.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated the 9th March 1812.

Honourable Sirs,

SINCE the preparation of our despatch of the 4th instant on the subject of transactions on the frontier of Chittagong, we have received additional advices from that province, extending to the 1st instant from the head quarters of the British force at Ramoo, and to the 3d instant from the magistrate. Time will not admit of the preparation of copies of the despatches which contain those advices for transmission to your honourable court, and we are only enabled briefly to state the substance of them.

2. The first of them contains a copy of Lieutenant-colonel Morgan's report of his first interview with the vakeels of the Burmese chiefs, whom, as stated in the 64th paragraph of our address to your honourable court, he had allowed to visit him, in consequence of their professions of regret and indignation at the late violation of our territories, and their assurances that the designs of their principals were entirely pacific, and that all the parties of Burmese troops which had entered our territories should be immediately withdrawn. They had also sent to Colonel Morgan a letter, which they had addressed to the commander of the Burmese forces, expressive of their concern at what had occurred since they left the Burmese camp, and stating the requisition of Colonel Morgan for the retreat of all the parties of Burmese troops which had entered our limits, with a request that Colonel Morgan would forward that letter.

3. The vakeels commenced their representations to Colonel Morgan, with a recital of the circumstances of the invasion of Arracan by means derived from our territory and subjects, and of the defeat of the invaders, the leaders of whom having, as they stated, fled into the province of Chittagong with 40,000 of the inhabitants of Arracan; they demanded that those leaders, and all who had borne arms under them, and should be found in the province, should be delivered up, when the "usual and former friendly intercourse between the two countries would be secured from further disturbances, and the trade and commerce from interruption." They required also, that all the native inhabitants of Arracan, who had fled into the province of Chittagong, might be "encouraged, permitted and ordered to return to their former habitations." The vakeels at the same time solemnly engaging, in the name of the commander of the Burmese forces, that no punishment whatever should be inflicted on those who should return into Arracan, but that, on the contrary, they should meet with every encouragement from the Burmese government. The vakeels added, that the commander of the forces only wanted answers to these his reasonable demands and requests, to return with the forces under his command into the interior of Ava.

4. Colonel Morgan further reported, that as a proof of the anxious desire of the vakeels to prevent hostilities, they had requested a small escort to proceed with four of their followers, and orders written by themselves in the presence of Colonel Morgan, to the commanders of the parties which had entered our limits, to retire instantly into Arracan; an application with which Colonel Morgan complied.

5. Colonel Morgan did not report his reply to the demands of the vakeels, but merely stated his own strongest conviction of the desire of the Burmese government to continue on friendly terms with us, and of the solicitude of the commander of the Burmese forces for the speedy and amicable adjustment of depending questions, that chief (as acknowledged by the vakeels) finding it extremely difficult to subsist his troops in consequence of the depopulated and ravaged state of the province of Arracan.

6. In his despatch transmitting a copy of Colonel Morgan's report, the magistrate, adverting to the desire said to have been originally expressed by the vakeels, to proceed to Chittagong, or if necessary, to Calcutta, states his receipt of a private letter from Colonel Morgan, informing him that the vakeels had no intention of proceeding beyond Ramoo, and were anxious to return to the Burmese camp, but that he (Colonel Morgan) had persuaded them to remain until the answer of government to their demands should be received. On this point the magistrate remarks, that that he cannot help entertaining strong suspicions that the vakeels were spies, who had arrived for the sole purpose of ascertaining the extent of our force at Ramoo, and that having ascertained it, they were anxious to return and communicate their intelligence to their employers. We state this, however, only as the opinion of the magistrate, without hazarding a judgment of our own, on the imperfect grounds hitherto before us.

7. In a subsequent despatch, dated the 29th ultimo, the magistrate transmitted a copy of a letter from Colonel Morgan, enclosing one from the commander of the Burmese forces, in reply to that from Colonel Morgan (noticed in the 45th paragraph of our address to your honourable court of the 4th instant), which required the Burmese chiefs to recal their parties from our territories. The letter of the Burmese commander being short, we subjoin a transcript of the translation :

“ Kingberring, Larungbage, and Nakloo, have destroyed the four districts of the king, have killed 20,000 and more of the inhabitants of Arracan, and have fled into the company's territories. My people have gone after them, and the above traitors have fled to Teaknauf, and remained near it; my people are forbidden to enter the company's territories, several Burmahs who did enter them are put into confinement by the English gentlemen; you will allow them to return. The merchants of the two countries formerly traded; let them now continue to do so. Let there not be any strife between the two countries for Kingberring, Larungbage, Nakloo, or the other delinquents. It is, therefore, better that you deliver them up to us. I understand from my own people that it is your intention to deliver them up through friendship; it is much better that you make haste to do so.”

8. It may be proper to observe, that the letter from Colonel Morgan, to which the above replies, was written before the occurrence of the outrage related in the 64th paragraph of our last despatch.

9. On this letter of the Burmese chief, Colonel Morgan merely observes, in his address to the magistrate, that it appeared his (Colonel Morgan's) letter to the chiefs had had the desired effect, of preventing any more parties of theirs crossing into our territories, and the immediate recal of such as were within them. The magistrate, however, in his despatch, conveying the above communications, remarks perhaps with more justice, that the letter of the Burmese commander, instead of offering any explanations of the outrage above alluded to, or expressing any regret at its occurrence, or declaring that it took place without his knowledge (which might naturally have been expected, if the outrage was not really sanctioned by the Burmese chiefs) merely contained a request (if not dictated in stronger terms than a request usually is), that the prisoners taken might be sent back, and that the leaders of the late insurrection might be given up.

10. It may be proper to state that Colonel Morgan, in reply to the communication transmitted to him respecting the reinforcements ordered to Chittagong, has expressed his hope that his anterior reports would arrive in time to prevent the troops proceeding by sea to Chittagong, with the exception of the detachment of 100 men embarked on one of the cruisers, which under the apparent emergency of affairs we had directed to sail, without waiting until the rest of the vessels carrying troops were ready for sea, as he was confident that the reinforcement of two companies which (as noticed in the 7th paragraph of our last despatch to your honourable court), he had called for from Dacca, the troops on board the above-mentioned cruiser, and an artillery relief which a considerable time ago left the presidency for Chittagong, would, with the remainder of the troops under his command, be fully competent to repel any force the Burmese could bring towards our frontier before the commencement of the rains, which begin on the eastern coast of the bay about the end of next month, when, Colonel Morgan observes, they could not act, but must disperse into the interior of Arracan. Colonel Morgan adds, however, his perfect confidence, that the Burmese chief has received positive orders not to invade our territories, or in any manner act hostilely towards us.

11. In his despatch of the 3d instant, this day received, the magistrate has transmitted a copy of a further letter from Colonel Morgan, in which, adverting to his conference with the vakeels (as described in the 3d and 4th paragraphs of this address), Colonel Morgan expresses his perfect conviction of the sincerity of their assurances, that the Burmese commander neither ordered nor sanctioned the late outrage; but that the body of troops, which thus entered our territory, came over merely in the hope of obtaining some supplies of grain for their subsistence; observing, that when it is considered that the Burmese officers and men of all descriptions receive no pay from the state, and are obliged to furnish themselves with all their equipments and provisions wherever they go, the wants of nature may be supposed to constitute an impulse sufficiently strong to place them beyond control; and as a further corroboration of his belief that the late incursion was unsanctioned by the Burmese commander, Colonel Morgan adds, that he had received from Captain Sibley, commanding at Teaknauf, a letter, informing him that a vakeel was sent to him by the Burmese commander, on the morning succeeding the day of the incursion, to assure him of that chief's entire ignorance of it until after its occurrence, and of his resolution to punish the leaders of the invading party.

12. The magistrate, adverting to the above communication from Colonel Morgan, observes, that notwithstanding the confidence entertained by that officer of the pacific disposition of the Burmese, he sees no reason to alter the different opinion which he himself had formed of their views and proceedings; and as corroborative of that opinion, refers to an enclosed report from the darogah at Teaknauf, from which it appears that one of the parties of Burmese troops, which entered our territory, set fire to the houses and villages of the Mugs, in a place called Neela, on their departure.

13. The magistrate states, that it does not appear whether or not this additional outrage was committed after the circulation of the orders of the Vakeels, directing the retreat of the parties of Burmese troops which were within our territory, but justly observes that if it was, the offence is aggravated; and remarks generally, that the circumstances of the Burmese commander having limited his denial of the former outrage to a verbal message, omitting all apology for what had occurred, little reliance could be placed on the sincerity of his pacific professions; and that on the contrary, his conduct evinced a spirit of insolence, and a disposition to aggress. The magistrate concludes his letter in the following terms: "I trust, however, that this will be the extent of the injury he can do us, when we are provided with one or two cruisers, and even half the force which government has ordered down here. We are already out of all apprehension of an invasion by water, as two companies of the 12th regiment are arrived from Dacca."

14. With respect to the whole of the foregoing communications, no other instructions in addition to those already despatched appear to be necessary, than merely to direct the magistrate to encourage the return of the emigrants, so far as to make known to them the assurances of favour and protection, which, in the event of their return, the vakeels expressed in their conference with Colonel Morgan.

15. From the general tenor of these later advices, we are disposed to think that there is little probability of our being involved in an open rupture with the state of Ava.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
24 March 1812.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor-General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 24th March 1812.

Honourable Sirs,

WE have the honour to continue our report of the 9th instant, on the subject of transactions on the frontier of Chittagong.

2. The date of our latest advices then received was the 3d instant. In a despatch of the 4th instant the magistrate of Chittagong transmitted a second report from the darogah of Teaknauf, containing further particulars of the conduct of the party of Burmese which burned the houses and plundered the property of the inhabitants of the village of Neela, within our territory, as related in the 12th paragraph of of our despatch of the 9th instant. The same report also gave an account of a fresh outrage on the part of the Burmese, some of whom crossed the river into our territory, wounded one woman and seized another. Of this party seventeen were seized, together with some arms, by our sepoys; the remainder fled, taking with them the woman whom they had seized. The magistrate naturally and justly observed, that this repetition of outrages precluded all confidence in the faith and pacific professions of the Burmese chiefs and their vakeels, regarding which also these acts would probably induce Colonel Morgan to entertain an opinion less favourable than hitherto.

3. On the receipt of the preceding communication, we judged it proper to revise our former orders and instructions, with a view to determine respecting the expediency of pursuing some measures more decisive than at the date of the latest of those instructions appeared to us to be advisable, with reference to the limited extent of our force in the province of Chittagong.

4. We had heard, as mentioned in our last address, of the arrival at Chittagong of the two companies of sepoys, which Colonel Morgan had called for from Dacca. We had heard also of the arrival of the Thetis cruiser, with 100 men, which had preceded the other cruisers and vessels conveying reinforcements. The latter had sailed many days before, and the seven companies of the 12th regiment ordered to Chittagong, as stated in our despatch of the 4th instant, had commenced their voyage. The security of the province having thus been provided for, we came to the resolution of conveying to the Burmese chiefs, in a manner more formal, authentic and impressive than belonged to the character of a communication merely addressed to their vakeels, the sense which we entertained of their insults and aggressions, and in the same form to demand the retreat of their forces from the menacing position which they occupy on the frontier of our possessions; apprising them at the same time that any future incursions of their troops would be repelled by force of arms, and that the requisitions which they had urged must be negotiated through the regular channel of an accredited representative on the part of one or other of the two states.

5. A declaration to this effect was accordingly drawn up, and despatched to the magistrate, with directions to transmit a translation of it to the Burmese chiefs, in a letter purporting that he had been instructed to convey it to them as an authentic declaration of the sentiments and resolutions of this government; requiring them, at the same time, in conformity to the tenor of it, to withdraw their forces from the frontier.

6. The magistrate was further directed to transmit a copy of the declaration to Colonel Morgan, desiring him (if it had not been already done under our former orders of the 3d instant) to be prepared instantly to repel, by force of arms, any parties of the Burmese troops that might again make incursions into the British territories.

7. The magistrate was further informed, that if the vakeels of the Burmese chiefs should still be in the British camp, the immediate retreat of the Burmese forces from the frontier, the restitution of the property plundered by the party at Necla, and of the woman carried off by the other party, must be rendered the conditions of their being permitted to remain. But the magistrate was directed, under any circumstances, to require the restitution of the woman and the plundered property. It was further signified to the magistrate, that the arms and prisoners above stated to have been taken, should not be delivered up until a satisfactory account should be received from Tyndapo of the outrages which occasioned the seizure of them.

8. For your honourable court's more detailed information, we deem it proper to transmit enclosed a copy of the declaration above described.

9. In the 14th paragraph of our address of the 9th instant, we observed that with respect to the whole of the communications from the magistrate of Chittagong, as reported in that address, no other instructions in addition to those already despatched appeared to be necessary, than merely to direct the magistrate to encourage the return of the emigrants, so far as to make known to them the assurances of favour and protection which in the event of their return the vakeels had expressed in their conference with Colonel Morgan. On mature deliberation however we deemed it advisable to modify this intended instruction.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,

10. In replying to the communications above alluded to, therefore, we caused it to be signified to the magistrate, that although it was highly desirable that our territory should be relieved from the burthen of the numerous emigrants which had entered it, provided that their return to Arracan would not expose them to the barbarous effects of the vindictive resentment of the Burmese government, yet the mere verbal and unauthenticated assurance afforded by the vakeels was not in our judgment sufficient to warrant even that degree of encouragement to the return of these fugitives which would be held out by proclaiming to them the offers of the vakeels, because it would imply a degree of confidence which we were by no means inclined to repose in the validity of those assurances, especially when the opposition between the professions of the vakeels and the acts of their employers was considered. But that if some authentic and formal security should be afforded for the safety of the emigrants in the event of their return, by written stipulations under the signature of the rajah of Arracan, we should have no objection to announce to the emigrants by proclamation the receipt of such a document, leaving them however at liberty to act according to their own judgment of the degree of dependence to be placed on the assurances which it might contain; and the magistrate was directed to instruct Colonel Morgan to return to the vakeels a reply to this effect to that article of their demands (the only one to which any specific reply could be given) which related to the general body of the emigrants.

11. It consists with the order of transactions to notice in this place the explanation received from Dr. M'Rae, the surgeon of the station of Chittagong, of the nature and extent of the intercourse which had subsisted between him and Kingberring, which explanation had been called for, as stated in the 41st paragraph of our despatch to your honourable court of the 4th instant, and we accordingly beg leave to refer to the enclosed copies of a despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong on that subject, and of a letter from Dr. M'Rae, containing the explanation required, which, as we anticipated, is in every respect satisfactory.

From magistrate of
Chittagong, dated
6th March.
From Dr. M'Rae,
dated 3d March.

12. We have of course caused copies of the material parts of the communications from the magistrate of Chittagong, of the instructions to that officer, and of the declaration described in the preceding part of this despatch, to be transmitted to Captain Canning, to whom however no additional instructions appeared to be necessary, and the only observation stated to him in transmitting those documents was, that the declaration contained little more than what he had already been authorized to express to the Burmese government, and that as the British government was solicitous to preserve the relations of amity with that of Ava, and as its measures were of a nature strictly and exclusively defensive, a suspension of those relations could alone be occasioned by a perseverance on the part of the Burmese in acts of menace and aggression.

13. A copy of Dr. M'Rae's explanatory letter was at the same time transmitted to Captain Canning, with a view to enable him to demonstrate to the Burmese government that the charge preferred against Dr. M'Rae by its officers, of having countenanced and encouraged Kingberring in his invasion of Arracan, was utterly devoid of foundation.

14. The next despatch received from the magistrate, and dated the 8th instant, relates to his receipt of a communication from the darogah at Teaknauf, purporting that about 100 people, men and women, Burmese and emigrant Mugs, who had a letter of protection from Colonel Morgan, were proceeding across the Nauf to the Burmese camp, and that a vakeel had arrived at Teaknauf with a letter from the commander of the Burmese forces to the address of Captain Sibley commanding at that post, demanding the restitution of the arms taken from the Burmese who entered our territory, to which demand Captain Sibley had declined to return an answer without orders from Colonel Morgan. The magistrate adverts also to his knowledge of Colonel Morgan's having several days before the date of this occurrence, transmitted a letter to the commander of the Burmese forces, and remarks on this occasion the extraordinary circumstance of his not having received any report from Colonel Morgan of any of these proceedings, or even of the outrage committed at Necla.

15. In his next despatch of the 9th, the magistrate acknowledges the receipt of our instructions of the 3d instant, the substance of which is stated in the seventieth

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,

seventieth and following paragraphs of our address to your honourable court of the 4th; and having stated various observations on the conduct of the commander of the Burmese forces, tending to show that no disavowal of the outrage committed by a party of those forces on the 21st ultimo (the circumstances of which are substantially stated in the 64th paragraph of our last-mentioned address), such as could in any degree be considered satisfactory or even authentic, had been received, and that the proceedings of the commander and the occurrence of subsequent outrages indicated a disposition on his part which seemed to preclude the expectation of atonement and apology, the magistrate expresses his intention, under the instructions above mentioned, to abstain from entering into any negotiations with the vakeels, unless a sufficient apology should subsequently be received, in which case he should be prepared to act according to the instructions with which he had been furnished.

16. In his next despatch, of the 10th instant, the magistrate transmitted a copy of a letter, which on a review of the instructions he had lately received, and of the reports from the darogah of Teaknauf, he had judged it necessary to address to Colonel Morgan. The magistrate observed, that Colonel Morgan evidently entertained an opinion of the disposition and proceedings of the Burmese entirely opposite to the light in which they were viewed by him; that this circumstance rendered the part he had to perform somewhat difficult, inasmuch as Colonel Morgan seemed to be carrying on an intercourse with the vakeels and their principals, which must be supposed to be regulated by the opinions he himself had formed of their views; whereas he (the magistrate) conceived that it was adverse to our intentions that an amicable negotiation should be maintained with the Burmese chiefs, until the late outrages were satisfactorily explained or disavowed.

17. The magistrate therefore, in his letter above-mentioned, transmitted to Colonel Morgan a copy of our instructions of the 29th ultimo and 3d instant, showing the light in which we considered the outrage of the 21st ultimo; but desired he would not make any communication of the contents of those instructions to the vakeels until he should hear further from him. The magistrate then related the circumstances of the later outrages committed by the Burmese, and apprised Colonel Morgan that he should suspend the execution of our late instructions until he had received a reply to his despatch reporting those circumstances to government, which might possibly produce orders of a different nature.

18. The magistrate further noticed the intelligence recently received from the darogah of Teaknauf, relative to the intercourse apparently maintained between Colonel Morgan and the Burmese commander, and requested an explanation of that intercourse, observing to him at the same time, that in his opinion no correspondence ought to take place with the Burmese commander until the latter should have afforded a satisfactory explanation of past events, and requesting that in future no communication, either by message or by letter, might take place between Colonel Morgan and the Burmese commander, or any of the Burmese chiefs, unless first sanctioned by him (the magistrate); and also that in future Colonel Morgan would communicate to him every circumstance of consequence that happened.

19. In his despatch last mentioned the magistrate further states, that by the report of an English officer just arrived at Chittagong from the post at Teaknauf, it appeared that three ships loaded with provisions for the Burmese camp had lately arrived; that the Burmese commander in consequence stated his intention to be, to remain in his present position during the ensuing rains, and that in conformity to that intention he had commenced building a house on a large scale. The magistrate adds as follows:—"The officer is one of those who went over to visit the Burmah camp", and he computes their force at about 7,000. In the conversation he had with the chiefs, he describes the rajah of Arracan to have expressed himself in very angry terms respecting our government; but that Tyndapo (the Burmese commander) was more reasonable, and actually reprimanded the rajah before him."

From the above I think I am warranted in entertaining an opinion that the Burmahs have some object in view which is not at present avowed. Their remaining encamped where they are is of no use whatever, unless they intend during the rains, when they may think our force cannot remain down there, to take advantage of its absence, and enter the district. Colonel Morgan, however, still seems to think so much of their friendly intentions, that he mentioned to me in a private letter which I received last night, his determination to desire Captain Ross with the two companies

* N. B. It appears that on the arrival of the vakeels several officers went over to the Burmese camp, and were very favourably received.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council, companies of the 12th native infantry, to return to the presidency viâ Dacca, notwithstanding I imparted to him the resolution of government communicated to me in your (chief secretary's) letter of the 29th ultimo, not to recal any of the reinforcements."

20. We were concerned to observe the contrariety of opinions and proceedings of the magistrate and Colonel Morgan; and we deemed it necessary to notice the erroneous views and conduct of the latter, who appeared to have supposed that government would not only place confidence in the amicable professions of the vakeels, but be induced by those professions to overlook the various acts of insult and aggression by which they had been preceded, accompanied, and followed; that the menacing position of a Burmese force on the frontier, avowedly directed to the eventual invasion of our territory, would be no impediment to negotiation, and even that government was prepared to purchase its retreat by a compliance with the demands of the Burmese chiefs.

21. These observations, together with others, having relation to Colonel Morgan's omitting to communicate to the magistrate regular information of transactions, and to his maintaining a separate intercourse with the Burmese chiefs, were stated in a reply to the three despatches from the magistrate, of which the substance is above stated, and as that reply contains some supplemental points of instruction for the guidance of the magistrate's conduct, we deem it proper to transmit a copy of it enclosed.

To magistrate of
Chittagong, dated
16th March.

22. It is proper to add, that corresponding instructions, as far as the former related to the erroneous opinions and proceedings of Colonel Morgan, have since been issued by his excellency the commander-in-chief to that officer.

23. The whole of the reinforcements despatched by sea to Chittagong arrived on the 7th instant, and a part immediately marched to join the force at Ramoo; and as it is obviously necessary that the whole of the troops should continue in the province of Chittagong during the rains, we have, at the suggestion of the commander-in-chief, authorized the immediate construction of the requisite buildings for the European details and native infantry.

24. In a despatch dated the 11th instant, the magistrate transmitted a copy of a letter from Colonel Morgan, reporting that Nakloo, the fugitive chief, mentioned in the third paragraph of our address of the 4th instant, had surrendered himself. In the same letter, Colonel Morgan stated that the vakeels of the Burmese chiefs had repeatedly applied to him to be furnished with supplies and necessaries for themselves and followers at the public charge on the ground of usage, and referred the question to the consideration of the magistrate, who not considering himself competent to decide it, requested orders on the subject.

25. With reference to the first of these points, the surrender of the fugitive chief Nakloo, we considered that the best mode of disposing of him for the present, was to place him under charge of the magistrate of Dacca, to be kept under the degree of restraint necessary to prevent his escape, but to be allowed every indulgence consistent with that object. We were further of opinion, that it would be proper to dispose in the same manner of the families of the fugitive chiefs, which (as we before reported) had been secured by Colonel Morgan, and the necessary instructions for carrying these arrangements into effect, were accordingly issued to the magistrates of Chittagong and Dacca.

26. With regard to the application of the vakeels to be subsisted at the public charge, we directed the following observations and instructions to be communicated to the magistrate. That it was certainly usual to supply necessaries and accommodation at the public charge for vakeels deputed by the government of Ava to this government, but that the case was different when vakeels were despatched by a subordinate officer of the former to a subordinate officer of the latter. Independently of which consideration, however, the peculiar circumstances attending the deputation of these vakeels afforded the strongest additional grounds for withholding the solicited indulgence. For that the vakeels, although professing amity, were the bearers of demands urged by chiefs at the head of a force, menacing our territory with invasion, in terms of insult and hostility, and that while the vakeels were actually in the British camp on a mission declared by them to be amicable, parties of the Burmese force were permitted to invade our territory, and to commit outrages and plunder.

plunder. That a mission in such a form could not reasonably be considered entitled to courtesies applicable to representatives who come to negotiate on a basis of amity and concord, and under corresponding demonstrations on the part of their principals, and that for these combined reasons the expectations of the vakeels were totally inadmissible.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
24 March 1812.

27. The despatch to which the above described instructions replied, further stated the arrangements adopted by the magistrate with regard to the cruisers and vessels which had conveyed the reinforcements to Chittagong, from which it appears, that out of two cruisers originally intended, if not wanted at Chittagong, to proceed to the Java station, one had been despatched thither; the other had been detained with a second cruiser for local services, and the remainder are to be returned to Bengal.

28. We have received only two further despatches from the magistrate of Chittagong, of the 14th and 15th instant, of which we deem it advisable to transmit copies, as they report a variety of circumstances not unimportant in the actual state of affairs, which it is difficult to comprise in an abstracted form.

From magistrate
Chittagong, dated
14th March.
From d^o, dated
15th March.

29. The first of these despatches contains Colonel Morgan's explanation of his intercourse with the Burmese chiefs, adverted to in a preceding paragraph of this address. The most important communication in the magistrate's despatch of the 14th, is the translation of a letter to his address, from the Burmese commander, in which, your honourable court will observe, that he disavows the outrage committed by a party of the Burmese forces on the 21st ultimo; asserts that the offenders have been punished, promises that none shall again violate our territories, desires that our troops may not cross into Arracan, and repeats his demand for the surrender of the fugitive chiefs.

30. Although, as the magistrate has remarked, this explanation or apology cannot be deemed entirely satisfactory, yet, as the outrage in question has been disavowed, we are disposed to think that this disavowal, and the assertions and promises with which it is accompanied, may be accepted; but it does not of course suggest the expediency of any change in the system of proceedings which we have adopted, especially as we must concur in opinion with the magistrate, that the demonstrations of the Burmese chiefs continue, notwithstanding their professions, to be rather hostile than pacific.

31. In his despatch of the 15th, your honourable court will observe, that the magistrate has transmitted a copy of the letter, which in consequence of the Burmese commander's disavowal of the outrage of the 21st ultimo, he had prepared to the address of the two chiefs, in conformity to our instructions of the 29th ultimo, and 3d instant, but which it was not his intention to despatch until the receipt of a reply to his report of the more recent outrages of the Burmese. The tenor of that proposed letter appears to us to be perfectly proper; but the transmission of it will of course be superseded by our instructions of the 13th, containing the declaration to be transmitted to the Burmese chiefs.

32. We have the honour to inform your honourable court, that by a Portuguese ship which left Rangoon the 4th instant, we yesterday received a despatch from Captain Canning, containing a narrative of his negotiations and transactions from the 10th to the 29th ultimo, as the immediate departure of the ships Lord Eldon and Batavia does not leave sufficient time for transcribing the whole of that despatch, which is voluminous, in addition to other documents which it is necessary to prepare, we enclose only extracts, consisting of such parts as are most material.

33. Your honourable court will observe, that Captain Canning continued upon the most confidential terms with the viceroy of Pegu, and that he expected that the boats preparing for his journey to the capital, would be ready by the 12th instant; we hope, however, and we consider it highly probable, that his departure will be delayed till towards the close of this month, by which time, we trust the Amboyna and Malabar will arrive at Rangoon.

We have the honour to be, with the greatest respect,
Honourable Sirs, your most faithful, humble servants,

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
25 April 1812.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor-General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company, dated the 25th April 1812.

Honourable Sirs,

1. OUR last despatch on the subject of the affairs of Chittagong, was dated the 24th ultimo.

2. The general tenor of our advices since that date, warrant a belief that the transactions in that quarter will terminate amicably. The correspondence of that interval of time exhibits no incident of material importance, and the above inference is deduced from the negative circumstance of the Burmese chiefs having abstained from any acts of aggression, or of insult, beyond those related in our preceding despatches, and from any measures and proceedings, as far as we can learn, of a nature to indicate a disposition on their part to provoke a rupture between the two states ; and from the information which we have reason to believe authentic, of their force on the frontier having been reduced to about 2,000 men, including followers, and of that force also, with the exception of a small party, being about to retire. This reduction of their force has been ascribed to the want of supplies, compelling a part to retire and producing desertion. It may also have been occasioned by orders from the court of Ava, originating in the apprehension inspired by the arrival of our reinforcements, or the prevalence of more amicable sentiments, as well as in the more exigent cause above mentioned, or in all these motives combined. It may also be, that the Burmese never seriously meditated an invasion of the province, but ignorantly supposed that we should be induced by the menacing advance of their troops, and by their arrogant and vapouring language, at a time when our force was inconsiderable, to comply with their demands.

3. This state of affairs, however, has admitted of our authorizing the return to Chittagong of the greatest part of our advanced troops. This measure was suggested by Lieutenant-colonel Morgan, on receiving intelligence of the reduction of the Burmese forces on the frontier, in a despatch to the adjutant general of the 1st instant ; copies of which, and of a further despatch of the 4th, were, by direction of his excellency the commander-in-chief, submitted to us for our consideration ; and we deem it proper to transmit a number in the packet, a copy of the adjutant-general's letter on the subject, together with copies of Lieutenant-colonel Morgan's two despatches above mentioned. That of the 1st instant contains much local information, and describes both the arrangement for cantoning the troops, and the system of military measures recommended by that officer, in the event of government deeming it necessary to prosecute measures of hostility against the Burmese.

4. Your honourable court will observe that the measure of withdrawing the troops from their advanced positions is rendered highly desirable by the unhealthiness of those positions during the rainy season, and that Lieutenant Colonel Morgan proposed, in the event of our resolving not to prosecute hostilities, that the whole should be remanded to Chittagong, excepting five companies ; three of which should be stationed at a place on the sea side, about nine miles south-west of Ramoo ; one company at Teaknauf, the extreme southern point of the province ; and another at Ramoo. Your honourable court will also observe, that the commander in chief represented the expediency of withdrawing, as far as circumstances might prudently admit, the troops from their advanced positions, and proposed his being authorized to issue provisional instructions to Lieutenant Colonel Morgan, founded generally on the plan which that officer had recommended, directing him to carry them into effect, with the concurrence of the magistrate of Chittagong, whenever, in their joint opinion, the reduction of the Burmese force might render the measure advisable with reference to the views and intentions of government.

5. In reply, we signified that we entirely concurred in opinion with the commander in chief, that it was quite consistent with our original views to withdraw the whole of our advanced force as soon as the Burmese chiefs should retire from the menacing position which they had assumed ; but that if any part of the Burmese force should be left on the frontier, it was of course expedient to leave a corresponding detachment of British troops,—which indeed was the case provided for by Lieutenant Colonel Morgan's plan : and further, that if the whole of the Burmese force (with the exception of any part which it might have been the practice to maintain in all ordinary times) should quit the frontier, we were of opinion that the whole of our troops might also, with perfect security, return to their proper stations as soon as his excellency might think it convenient and advisable. For your honourable court's more detailed information, we have the honour to transmit inclosed copies of the reply to the adjutant general's letter, and of the instructions issued in consequence by his excellency the commander in chief to Lieutenant Colonel Morgan; corresponding instructions were also, of course, issued to the magistrate of Chittagong.

From Adjutant General to Lieutenant Colonel Morgan, dated in April.

6. Having noticed in our last despatch the difference of opinion that had unfortunately arisen between the magistrate and Lieutenant Colonel Morgan, and also the latter's having apparently omitted to communicate to the former some occurrences of importance, such as the burning and plundering the village of Neela, reported to the magistrate by the darogah-Teaknauf to have occurred on the 27th or 28th of February, and the wounding one woman and seizure of another (points which, on the authority of the magistrate's information, were included in the manifesto or declaration of this government transmitted with our last address,) together with the circumstances of Lieutenant Colonel Morgan's intercourse and correspondence with the Burmese chief; having also noticed the censure passed upon Lieutenant Colonel Morgan by his excellency the commander in chief: in these respects we deem it proper, in justice to that officer, to transmit inclosed copies of two letters from the adjutant general, and that part of their respective inclosures which consists of transcripts of despatches from Lieutenant Colonel Morgan, containing a full explanation of his conduct, omitting the subsidiary documents referred to in the latter. It is further proper to transmit a copy of the reply written to the adjutant general, under our orders, which contains a detailed discussion of the merits of the case, and our judgment upon it.

a letter from Lieutenant Colonel Morgan, dated 30th March.

From 16th d.

a letter from Col. Morgan,

To Adjutant General,
dated 17 April.

7. With reference to the explanations contained in Lieutenant Colonel Morgan's letter of 30th March, it is proper to remark, that they afford reason to doubt whether the burning and plundering of Neela could be considered as a new outrage committed by the Burmese after they had been driven back from our territory on the occasion of their incursion on the 21st of February. It had been represented in that light by the magistrate, and had consequently influenced our judgment as well as his own, regarding the disposition and intentions of the Burmese, as your honourable court will have observed from the tenor of our two last despatches; but the circumstances of that transaction, and other points stated by Lieutenant Colonel Morgan, have contributed, in addition to the facts and considerations noticed at the commencement of this address, to impress us with a more favourable opinion of the conduct and designs of the Burmese chiefs subsequent to the incursion of the 21st of February, and consequently, to support the expediency of the measures recently adopted for withdrawing our troops.

8. It is not necessary, and indeed the pressure of other public labours has rendered it impracticable, to communicate to your honourable court by the present opportunity the whole of the correspondence that has passed with the magistrate and Lieutenant Colonel Morgan since the date of our last despatch; that correspondence will be accessible to your honourable court when we transmit the broken set of our proceedings, which we propose to do up to the latest practicable date, by the honourable company's ship Baring, to be despatched in the course of the ensuing month.

9. Nothing, in fact, very material, besides what has already been stated, has occurred in this interval. The Burmese vakeels, who were deputed to the British camp, returned to their employers on the 18th ultimo. The magistrate, pursuant to our instructions, transmitted to the Burmese commander a translation of the manifesto or declaration referred to in the eighth paragraph of our last address to your honourable court on the 23d or 24th ultimo, with a letter, of which an English copy is inclosed. At the date of our latest advices no answer to it had been received by the magistrate. We conclude, indeed, that the Burmese chief has judged it necessary to suspend a reply until furnished with instructions regarding it from the court of Ava. No further representations or demands, excepting an application for the restitution of the arms captured from the Burmese who entered our territory in the month of February, has been made by the Burmese chiefs.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor-General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 25th May 1812.

Honourable Sirs,

A FEW days after our last despatch of the 25th ultimo, on the subject of the state of affairs on the frontier of Chittagong, the pilot schooner, Cudbert Thornhill, which had been despatched to Rangoon in the early part of the month of

* Note. The purpose of despatching the schooner was to convey a despatch of the 4th of March to Captain Canning, which had been forwarded to the Amboyna at Sangor, but too late to reach that ship or the Malabar. The purport of that despatch (which will be found recorded on the secret consultation of the 13th March, N° 9) was to convey to him specific authority to retire if the slightest hazard appeared to him to exist, of his being exposed, either by the unsuccessful issue of the prescribed negotiations, or by the course of events which might possibly compel us to adopt coercive measures with regard to the Burmese forces, to personal injury or insult. The despatch of the schooner also afforded an opportunity of conveying to the envoy copies of our instructions to the magistrate of Chittagong, of the 13th March; and of the declaration or manifesto therein referred to; a statement of the substance of the former, and a copy of the latter of which documents are contained in the address to your honourable court of the 24th of March. The substance of the instructions conveyed to the envoy on that occasion is also stated in the 12th paragraph of our address above mentioned, and the chief secretary's letter conveying them, will be found recorded on our secret consultation of the 13th of March, N° 29.

March, with letters for the envoy to the* Burmese government, returned with advices from that officer of a very interesting and important nature, contained in a despatch from the envoy, comprising a detailed narrative of events and transactions at Rangoon, from the arrival at that port of the Amboyna and the cruiser Malabar on the 18th of March, up to the 9th ultimo; a short time before which latter date Captain Canning had found it necessary to remove from the town of Rangoon, and take up his residence on board the cruiser Malabar, in which situation, however, he continued to maintain an amicable intercourse with the local government.

2. We shall advert to the leading points of those transactions, referring your honourable court for details to the enclosed copy of captain Canning's despatch. From Cap
Canning,
dated 5 A

3. The arrival of the Amboyna, accompanied by the Malabar cruiser, it appears, excited an extreme degree of agitation and alarm at Rangoon. The envoy, however, had the address to induce the viceroy of Pegue to permit a pilot being sent to bring the two ships up to town. In the meantime, many meetings had been held by the members of the government, all of whom, with one exception, had expressed the highest dissatisfaction at the conduct of the viceroy in permitting the Malabar to come up the river; declaring their conviction, that in sending the cruiser to Rangoon, the British government had no other object than to endeavour to obtain possession of the town.

4. These declarations ultimately obtained credit with the viceroy, who, the day after the arrival of the ships off the town, proceeded to a retired grove at a short distance, where he mustered his forces, amounting to about 4 or 500 men; and after issuing various orders, directed them to disperse as they had assembled, in small bodies, to prevent discovery and alarm.

5. On the same evening, the envoy attended the viceroy by invitation, on which occasion the latter (who signified to the envoy the general belief that the two nations were actually at war) requested Captain Canning to give him an accurate relation of what had occurred. Captain Canning accordingly apprised him of the principal transactions which had taken place on the frontier of Chittagong, as communicated to him in the despatches forwarded to the envoy by the Amboyna, which despatches, as our address to your honourable court of the 4th of March will have shown, represented a state of affairs calculated to suggest the probability of a rupture. The envoy, however, stated to the viceroy at the same time, that notwithstanding what had occurred, he still entertained hopes of an amicable adjustment of depending differences; differences; but added, that in the present state of affairs it was not in his power to proceed to the capital, (for his departure to which place his boats were then in readiness, in consequence of the invitation he had received from the court of Ava, as stated in our address last mentioned,) and proposing as the most eligible plan, that a war-boat should be despatched to the capital with a letter from him (the envoy) to the heir apparent. To this measure, however, the viceroy strongly objected, and earnestly recommended the envoy's proceeding to the capital, where his presence would effect an amicable adjustment of differences. The envoy persisting in his resolution, the viceroy at length reluctantly consented to equip a war-boat, which, after numerous evasions and delays, with the letter from the envoy to the heir apparent, containing the substance of the representations which in our instructions to Captain Canning of the 21st and 29th February, and 2d of March, (copies of the two former, and the substance of the latter of which are contained in our address to your honourable court of the 4th of March,) we had directed him to convey to the Burmese government, and stating the grounds of his resolution to suspend his intended journey to the capital, adding that he should adhere to that resolution until he received a written assurance from the court that orders had been despatched to the commander of the Burmese forces, and to the viceroy of Arracan, to desist from their menaces and arrogant demands, and to respect the territories of the honourable company; and that the king had determined to negotiate the adjustment of all depending questions in an amicable manner through him (the envoy). Captain Canning addressed a similar communication (with the exception of what related to his proceeding to the capital) to the viceroy, in conformity to his instructions: a copy of the above representation is annexed to Captain Canning's despatch.

Sic in orig.

6. Captain Canning accounted for the viceroy's extreme reluctance to despatch the boat; 1st, by his avarice, which disinclined him to the expense; and 2dly, by his dread of the king receiving information of the arrival of the Malabar, which rendered him anxious to prevent for the present all communication between Rangoon and the capital.

7. At the conference before mentioned, the viceroy next proceeded to urge, in the most earnest manner, the immediate departure of the Malabar, to which the envoy as firmly refused to consent.

8. The following day was fixed for the envoy to introduce Captain Maxfield, the commander of the Malabar, to the viceroy. In the meantime the most alarming reports continued to be circulated respecting the object of the British government in sending the Malabar; and preparatory to the visit of the envoy and Captain Maxfield, the viceroy collected between 3 and 400 men in the vicinity of his residence, and reinforced the guards at his gates, and other military precautions were taken. Further indications of mistrust and apprehension appeared at the visit, but no disturbance ensued.

9. The conference on this occasion turned entirely on the measure of sending away the Malabar, which the viceroy continued to urge with persevering solicitude, but without success. The reasons which properly influenced Captain Canning in resolving to detain the Malabar were, that by sending her away in the then state of things, and previously to his receiving from Bengal a further account of transactions in Chittagong, or previously to the arrival of orders that might be received at Rangoon from the court of Ava in consequence of the late occurrences in that quarter, he should defeat "the wise and successful solicitude of government in despatching her" to Rangoon, and place himself, in a great measure, at the disposal of the Burmah government, inducing them, perhaps, thereby to make the most ridiculous and unreasonable demands against the British government; whereas he was now independent of them, and subject the safety of the party, and of all the British subjects at Rangoon, to the caprice of the most tyrannical and arbitrary of governments.

10. The agitation and alarm continued to prevail, with a report that fire-rafts were constructing for the purpose of attacking the ships, and additional troops to the number of 250 arrived from the country. Some of the most respectable of the inhabitants waited on the envoy, entreating him to dismiss the Malabar, as the only means of preventing disturbance; and a principal officer of the government was deputed by the viceroy to reiterate his urgent request to the same effect.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
25 May 1812.

This emissary finally declared, that the viceroy was resolved that the cruiser should leave Rangoon, and positively insisted on her departure; to which Captain Canning replied, that if the viceroy thought proper to issue positive orders for the departure of the Malabar, although the late events in Chittagong, and the example set by the Burmese might, perhaps, authorize his opposing force to force, yet being very unwilling that any cause of misunderstanding should proceed from him, those orders should be obeyed, but that in that case he (the envoy) must return in her to Bengal.

11. This proposal the envoy knew would not be acceded to, as the situation and property, and even the life of the viceroy would be endangered, if, after having received the king's orders to send the envoy to the capital, he should be the cause of his quitting Rangoon in disgust.

12. The emissary, as Captain Canning expected, declared this proposal to be inadmissible; and after again urging the same topics, and particularly the measure of Captain Canning's proceeding to the capital, all which he resisted on the same grounds as before, the emissary left him. These efforts were repeated by a letter from the viceroy, and by a second deputation of the same emissary, but were finally abandoned.

13. Orders were subsequently issued for every house to furnish a man armed with a lance and sword, to be readiness to appear at his door at three strokes of a gong. The former emissary was again deputed to the envoy to endeavour to induce him to relinquish his design of despatching his letter to the heir apparent, assuring him that the viceroy, by writing to the commander-in-chief of the Burmese army, under whose orders Tyndapo, the commander of the Burmese force on the frontier of Chittagong, was placed, had it in his power to cause all Burmahs that might have crossed into our territory to be recalled, and that it was therefore useless to write to the court on the subject; after a long conference, the envoy finally signified to the emissary, that if he was prevented from communicating with the court of Ava, his stay at Rangoon could no longer be of any use, and that he should therefore, without further delay, return to Bengal; on hearing which the emissary gave up the point.

14. Subsequently to these transactions the alarm occasioned by the arrival of the ships subsided, and confidence appeared to be restored. In this state of affairs the envoy's personal communication with the viceroy continued principally on the subject of the transactions on the frontier of Chittagong; in the course of which the viceroy did not scruple to reprobate, in strong terms, the conduct of the Burmese chiefs, promising at the same time that he would send copies of the offensive letters of the Burmese chiefs to the heir apparent and the commander-in-chief of the Burmese forces, and assuring the envoy that atonement should be made for their having been written. The viceroy also, after again endeavouring to persuade the envoy to dismiss the Malabar, finally signified his consent to her remaining, but requested that the appearance of carrying on repairs on board the ship might be kept up and protracted, to save him (the viceroy) and the other members of government from censure at court. These communications are stated in detail in the envoy's report, together with observations on the then state and disposition of the local government, and on the probability of its being induced under any circumstances to violate the sanctity of his representative character, so far as to detain him against his inclination, a point upon which the envoy was unable to form a conclusive judgment.

15. Such as has been described was the state of affairs at Rangoon, when the arrival of the Pilot schooner renewed in an augmented degree the ferment which had been occasioned by that of the Malabar, and led to those transactions which (as noticed at the commencement of this address) ultimately compelled the envoy to retire on board of that cruiser. The agitation produced by the appearance of the schooner, which it seems proceeded directly up to the town of Rangoon, without previous notice of her arrival being received, is described by the envoy in these words: "The schooner had no sooner come to an anchor opposite the wharf, than it was generally rumoured that the English were now certainly come to take possession of the place; that the Malabar, Amboyna and schooner were already at hand, that more ships of war were on their way up the river, and that during the night the town would assuredly be battered down and destroyed. The utmost degree of alarm prevailed. The bazars, at that hour much thronged, were deserted, “ deserted, many of the inhabitants prepared to rise in favour of the English; many “ to oppose them, and still more for the purpose of general plunder, and many “ actually left the town and sought refuge in the jungles. It was really a subject of “ ridicule to think that so harmless an object as a pilot schooner, with only two “ guns, without a single shot on board, should create such a turmoil and confusion.

 “ This spirit of ferment and agitation was in the meantime kept up by the ragoon, “ or deputy governor (a mischievous old dotard), and the inferior members of “ government, all of whom wished to avail themselves of the present circumstances “ to destroy the authority of the viceroy, and the latter (meaning the deputy “ governor) to set himself up in his place. A renegade Englishman of the name of “ Rogers, who holds the situation of shawbunder (or master attendant) at Rangoon, “ was also most active in sowing the seeds of discord and alarm, and in proposing
 “ the most violent measures.”

Despatch from
 Gov. Gen. in council,
 25 May 1812.

16. The envoy judged that the most likely means of putting a stop to this extraordinary agitation, would be for him to visit the viceroy, and he accordingly sent a message stating his intention. Immediately afterwards, however, a person sent by the viceroy came to entreat, in the most earnest manner, that Captain Canning should repair to the viceroy's house without a moment's delay, as the only mode of preventing a general insurrection of the people, fomented by the inferior members of the government. Gongs and drums were in the meantime sounded through the streets; some sent by the viceroy to order the people to remain quietly in their houses, and others by the opposite party directing them to arm themselves, and to be in readiness each man opposite the door of his house.

17. Captain Canning immediately proceeded towards the viceroy's residence with an escort of thirty sepoys, and in the way received a message from the viceroy requesting that he would leave his escort, or at least that the sepoys should go without their arms; a message to which the envoy paid no attention. Various indications of alarm and suspicion appeared on his arrival at the viceroy's house: the gates were closed, and only opened after a declaration from the envoy that he should otherwise retire. His orderlies were refused admittance into the hall of audience, until the envoy insisted on their obtaining entrance with a similar declaration; and the viceroy, attended by the deputy governor and other inferior members of the government, themselves in a state of the utmost embarrassment and alarm. The envoy represented to them the absurdity of their fears at the arrival of the schooner, and explained the object of her despatch, stating the natural circumstance of a vessel's being sent to convey to him information of what was passing on the frontier of Chittagong, to enable him to conduct his negotiations; and observing, that the two nations were yet at peace, and that he hoped matters might still be settled between them; that at least it depended upon the Burmese government, as the British government was still disposed to listen to their proposals, on their troops being withdrawn from the frontier of the British territory, and the damage they had done made good.

Sic. in orig.

18. The viceroy then desired to see the envoy's despatches, which the latter of course refused, but offered to communicate to him the declaration which this government had ordered to be conveyed to the Burmese chiefs on the frontier (and of which a copy formed an enclosure in our address to your honourable court of the 24th March). This was followed by the exhibition of a fictitious despatch, said to have been received from Arracan, purporting, that the British government had humbly submitted to the demands of the Burmese chiefs. The envoy exposed the fabrication, and repeated his former declarations, that so long as the surrender of the fugitives should be demanded in haughty or menacing terms, such demands would receive no attention: that if the wishes of the Burmese chiefs were stated in proper terms, and our territory completely evacuated by their troops, their claims would be taken into consideration, if negotiated through him (the envoy), or through an accredited agent of the Burmese government.

19. The viceroy then signified to the envoy his wish, and that of the other members of the government to visit the Malabar, to which the envoy assented, and an early day was appointed for the purpose. The object of this desire evidently was to ascertain the strength of the ship: With this, and the renewed discussion of the departure of the Malabar, the conference closed.

20. An act of great indecorum occurred on the arrival of the schooner, which it is proper to notice as indicative of the temper of the local government. It is a rife established established at Rangoon, that the commander or an officer of any vessel arriving at the port shall proceed to the custom-house to report the name and description of the vessel, conveying thither also the despatches that they may have in charge. The observance of this rule however had not been exacted from the master and the navigator of the schooner, who had proceeded directly to Captain Canning's residence and delivered the despatches. But the person who had brought the message to the envoy entreating him to visit the viceroy, had expressed the latter's wish that the two gentlemen belonging to the schooner should repair to the custom-house, and there agreeably to usage give an account of the vessel and also there exhibit the despatches; the latter the envoy declined, but stated that he had no objection to these gentlemen proceeding to the custom-house to render an account of the schooner, on an assurance, which was readily given, that they would be treated with all respect, and permitted to return immediately to the envoy's house, or to proceed on board the schooner. It appeared however that contrary to this assurance, these gentlemen after answering the inquiries which were put to them at the custom-house, were treated with the utmost insolence and placed in confinement during two hours. On this outrage the envoy addressed to the viceroy a remonstrance in strong terms, but received no reply.

21. The envoy subsequently received information that a plan was formed on the occasion of his last visit, by the deputy governor and other members of the government, to seize his person as an hostage for the immediate departure of the Malabar, and as the means of obtaining any terms the court of Ava might choose to demand in any pending negotiation with the British government, respecting the surrender of the refugees, or other points. This plan was communicated to the viceroy and reluctantly adopted, or rather not absolutely opposed by him. It was intended, Captain Canning reports, either to seize him in the street, or to detain him at the viceroy's house, as circumstances might favour either project, and for this reason the message had been sent to him to proceed unattended. It appeared that the viceroy himself mentioned the fact in confidence to an European gentleman who reported it to the envoy. The project however Captain Canning observes was defeated by the attendance of his escort.

22. Various other acts and proceedings of a nature incompatible with the privileges of an envoy subsequently occurred, and in a review of the different transactions which had passed at Rangoon since the arrival of the schooner, and particularly the conviction entertained by Captain Canning, that the government had it in contemplation to place his person under restraint, induced him to resolve upon quitting the town. But considerable difficulties appeared to oppose the execution of this design. He was well aware, the envoy observed, that any declaration to that effect to the government, or the least suspicion of any such intention, would immediately occasion the shutting of the town gates; and force would probably be resorted to in order to prevent his departure with his suite and escort. That to have overpowered any such force would not have been difficult, but that in such an attempt some lives must have been lost, and war most probably have become inevitable between the two states. That the lives of several Europeans and native christians within the town would probably have been sacrificed, and there was also a great likelihood of fire being set to the town in the confusion of a general plunder taking place.

23. Fortunately a favorable opportunity of retreat offered in the intended visit of the members of the government to the Malabar, on which occasion they had requested the envoy to accompany them, and of that opportunity the envoy resolved to avail himself.

24. He immediately commenced his arrangements for his departure with his suite and escort. The sick of the party were sent on board the Amboyna with the surgeon, and a signal was agreed upon with the European inhabitants of Rangoon for their repairing on board the Amboyna, in the event of circumstances rendering such a measure necessary. Before his arrangements were completed a message was brought to him, that the members of government were waiting at the custom-house to accompany the envoy on board the Malabar, but Captain Canning desired the visit might be postponed till the evening. During the remainder of the day on package whatever was allowed to pass the gates, but it appears that the envoy suspecting that such an exigency might sometimes arise, had before used the the precaution of sending by degrees on board the ship a considerable part of the most valuable property.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in Council,
25 May 1812.

25. In the evening Captain Canning sent a message to the members of government that he was prepared to proceed, and apprehending a change in their resolution to visit the Malabar, he set out without awaiting a reply, attended by his escort and followers. On approaching the gate towards the wharf, it was immediately closed, and as there was no time for delay the party immediately proceeded to force it, which was done with little difficulty, and the whole advanced to the wharf where the boats of the Malabar, Amboyna, and the schooner were in readiness to receive them; and with some show of resistance on the part of the Burmese soldiers, embarked and proceeded towards the ships.

26. An incident subsequently occurred, which seemed to threaten the most serious consequences. The launch of the Amboyna full of sepoys, and towed by one of the boats of the Malabar, had been separated from the other boats by the strength of the tide. Two large war-boats manned with about fifty men each, pushed off from the shore and made towards them. The people of one of them seized the tow-rope, and were attempting to tow the two boats on shore, when the midshipman of the Malabar's boat cut the rope, and frustrated the design. Captain Canning observes, that the sepoys were on this occasion entitled to much credit for their forbearance, in obeying the orders they have received, not to commence firing when attempted to be towed on shore by what might certainly have been deemed at that moment enemy's boats. This insult was, however, afterwards amply atoned for, in the manner detailed in Captain Canning's report.

27. After reaching the ships, the signal was made for the British inhabitants to repair on board, which most of them did; but some time after, when the agitation occasioned by the retreat of the envoy had subsided, they returned to the shore.

28. The envoy lost no time in addressing a letter to the viceroy, assuring him that his intentions were pacific, and that if no violence were offered to his party, none would be used on their side. That he should take an early opportunity of informing the viceroy of the motives that had guided his conduct, and that as a proof of his sincerity, if such were the viceroy's wish, the ships should in the meantime drop below the town. This letter, Captain Canning observes, produced the best effect, as the members of government were endeavouring by every means in their power to instil a belief into the minds of the people, that as soon as the envoy and his party should have arrived on board, the ships would commence firing on the town.

29. On the day following that of the envoy's embarkation, the government interpreter waited on him, on the part of the viceroy, accompanied by an Italian missionary, whom on account of the general respect paid to his character, the viceroy had selected as his messenger upon the occasion. They brought a letter from the viceroy, expressive of the most amicable sentiments, and signifying that the persons who had committed some of the acts of insult of which the envoy had complained, had been confined in irons, denying also that any design had been entertained of imposing a restraint on his person, and adding that what had passed ought not to be the cause of a rupture between the two states. That he did not wish the ships to change their position, desiring that all doubt and suspicion might be banished, and signifying that he proposed the following day to send his son to visit the envoy, with other points of a nature entirely conciliatory. To this letter the envoy replied, by stating in general terms the cause of his retiring on board the Malabar, and by demanding an atonement for the outrage committed by the war-boats.

30. The following day the missionary again visited the envoy, with a further letter from the viceroy, expressing his intention to suspend the visit of his son, on account of the existing ferment in the city. The missionary, at the same time, signified to the envoy, on the part of the viceroy, that the atonement for the aggression of the war-boats should be made as required. The envoy returned a verbal answer, declining to receive the visit of the viceroy's son, until the required atonement should have been made.

31. A third letter from the viceroy was subsequently brought to the envoy, couched in the same conciliatory terms as the former, disclaiming, on his part, all doubt and suspicion, soliciting a reconciliation, observing that he had afforded to the envoy every satisfaction for the injuries he had complained of, disavowing his concern in those acts, and expressing his intention of affording the atonement demanded for the aggression of the war-boats, together with some notice of the measures which he had adopted for the security of the property remaining at the envoy's residence. The envoy desired the messenger to repeat to the viceroy, that until the atonement demanded should have been made, no friendly or confidential intercourse could be resumed; and that if it were refused, he should quit Rangoon. Captain Canning subsequently addressed a further letter to the viceroy, stating in detail the reasons of his quitting his residence in the town, and repeating his solicitude to remain on terms of amity and confidence with the government, but, urging the necessity of the required atonement before any friendly intercourse could be established; and after a repetition of messages and delays, that atonement was (as before noticed) finally made in the most formal and public manner; for the details of which we refer to Captain Canning's report.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,

32. The following day the viceroy's son and nephew visited the envoy, who received them with every mark of distinction; and thus, Captain Canning observes, all points were once more amicably settled, and things resumed their usual course, with the sole difference of his residing on board the Malabar, instead of on shore.

33. The envoy proceeds, in his report, to state the considerations which induced him to adopt the measure of taking up his residence on board the Malabar, rather than return to Bengal, as he at one time proposed. His return under such circumstances, would, as he justly observed, have certainly been considered by the Burmese government as tantamount to a declaration of war, and would have at once annihilated all the commercial dealings and establishments of the British residents at Rangoon, if they had accompanied him, or have endangered their lives and property if they had remained. His object, he states, had been to preserve, if possible, peace between the two countries, and, at the same time, to vindicate the respect due to the British government, and to his own representative character.

34. The viceroy, he remarked, had during the late transactions showed himself wavering and irresolute, willing to act an upright and friendly part, but not possessing sufficient resolution to oppose the violent counsels of the other members of the government.

35. The envoy transmitted together with his report an original letter, together with a translation of it from the viceroy to Tyndapo, the commander of the Burmese forces on the frontier of Chittagong, on the subject of his violation of our territory, and dissuading him from a repetition of it, which letter the viceroy desired might be transmitted to this government to be forwarded to Tyndapo, which has accordingly been done.

36. The foregoing is the substance of Captain Canning's report, brought up to the 5th ultimo, when he proposed to despatch it by a trading vessel; but circumstances leading him to think that conveyance unsafe, he resolved to send back the Pilot schooner to Bengal, which determination afforded him an opportunity of subjoining a postscript, dated the 9th ultimo, at which time a change in the aspect of affairs had taken place.

37. The envoy stated that during the past three or four days the ferment and agitation which had appeared to have subsided, had again prevailed, and he thought it doubtful whether he should be able to remain much longer on terms with the government. That he was of opinion, however, that they would desire to avoid a rupture until an answer should be received from court to the communication which had been conveyed to the king. That an answer might be expected by the 8th or 10th instant, and that the reply to the letter which he (the envoy) had addressed to the heir apparent, would probably be couched in ambiguous terms, desiring him to proceed to court, as the most expeditious mode of settling all differences, but that in this event how far, in the actual state of affairs, and without the protection of a larger force than his escort, his proceeding would be advisable, must be left to our consideration, adding, that our instructions might probably reach him about the same time as the reply arrived from court.

38. Captain Canning then proceeded to state some observations regarding the nature and extent of hostile operations on our part, in the event of affairs having taken taken a decidedly hostile turn on the frontier of Chittagong. He stated, however, that if we should not have any intention of carrying on hostilities in the quarter of Rangoon, it would become a matter of consideration to provide for the safety of the persons and property of British subjects residing there. That to the former sufficient security was afforded by the presence of the Malabar and Amboyna, but that to provide for the safety of the latter, consisting partly in vessels, which it might be necessary forcibly to bring away, more armed boats might possibly be required than the Malabar could supply, and that for this reason it might be advisable that another cruiser, with an additional company of sepoy, should be dispatched to Rangoon. The envoy then stated the nature of the instructions which, in the event of our despatching a ship of war, it would be proper to give to her commander.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
25 May 1812.

39. Adverting to that part of his original instructions in which he was directed not to use force for the purpose of effecting the release of any British subjects whom the local government might have confined on account of existing circumstances, the envoy desired to be informed whether or not, in the event of such an occurrence now taking place, that restriction was still to be considered in force; observing, that in the case of any British subject being placed in confinement by the local government, his life would probably be sacrificed immediately after the departure of the mission.

40. The envoy took this occasion of reporting the result of his proceedings in endeavouring to recover the compensation which had been demanded on account of the detention of the ship Elephant, the circumstances of which demand, and our original orders on the subject, as well as the envoy's first measures, and our consequent further proceedings and instructions, we had the honour of stating to your honourable court in our despatch of the 28th January, paragraphs 17, 18, 34, 35 and 36. It appears that the viceroy had finally assented to the compromise, which, by our orders of the 26th of December 1811, (referred to in the 36th paragraph of our address to your honourable court above-mentioned,) the marine board had been directed to propose to the owners of the ship, and which Captain Canning had been authorized by our instructions of the 25th of January, (a copy of which was enclosed in our despatch to your honourable court of the 4th of March,) eventually to propose, namely, to pay half the difference between what he had originally offered, and that which the marine board had suggested to be equitable, in addition to the former; and that the viceroy actually provided the money, but that when the envoy sent his interpreter on shore to receive it, the viceroy signified to him that he might take it, but could not be allowed to carry it on board the Malabar; thus adding, the envoy observes, the grossest insult in the presence of all the government and Europeans in Rangoon, collected for the express purpose of witnessing it, to the injustice of withholding the sum in question. In consequence of this, the envoy suggested to our consideration the propriety of demanding and insisting on the payment of the larger sum recommended by the marine board, and of his being authorized, (whatever turn affairs might have taken in Chittagong,) to return to Bengal if the amount were not paid.

41. Captain Canning notices the return to Rangoon of the European named Taylor, mentioned in our former despatches, with accounts of the adjustment of all differences, and the restoration of tranquillity on the frontier of Chittagong, to which, however, he did not attach entire credit.

42. The envoy concluded his narrative by relating another dispute of a serious nature, which had commenced in consequence of his people being opposed in conveying his tents on board the ships, but which was terminated by an humiliating concession on the part of the local government.

43. On a deliberate consideration of the state of affairs at Rangoon, as exhibited in Captain Canning's report, it was evident to us that no advantage whatever, but, on the contrary, considerable embarrassment would arise from the continuance of the envoy at Rangoon, or his proceeding to the capital of Ava; at the same time as Captain Canning had with so much spirit and firmness supported the dignity and privileges of his representative character, and compelled the local government to make concessions and atonement for those acts and proceedings which the public interests or honour might otherwise have rendered it necessary in some degree degree or other to resent; and as the conduct and measures of the Burmese chiefs on the frontier of Chittagong had exhibited no instances of outrage and insult subsequent to those noticed in our declaration or manifesto of the 13th of March, but, on the contrary, indicated a pacific disposition, accompanied with an apparent intention to withdraw their forces, it appeared to us that no motives of public interest or honour required us to consider or declare the relations of amity between the two states to be dissolved, and that the immediate recal of the envoy was entirely compatible with the preservation of them.

44. We considered that the original purpose of Captain Canning's mission had in fact been accomplished by the ample explanations afforded by him to the Burmese government of those circumstances of the late invasion of Arracan, which, not unnaturally, had suggested a belief of the participation of the British government in that hostile act; that whatever ulterior negotiations might be expected to arise from the envoy's continuance at Rangoon, or his proceeding to the Burmese capital, would have reference not to any demand on our part, unless it were the demand for the retreat of the Burmese forces from the frontier of Chittagong, (a demand already made through another channel,) but to those of the government of Ava; that, according to diplomatic principles and usages, it could not be deemed requisite to continue a mission appointed for a temporary and special object, merely for the purpose of receiving and discussing expected or eventual demands on the part of the government to which the mission was accredited, and that for the prosecution of demands in which that government was exclusively interested, it might reasonably be expected to despatch its own agents.

45. We considered on the other hand (as already observed), that in consequence of the late events at Rangoon much inconvenience and embarrassment must probably arise either from the envoy's continuance at that port or from his advance to the capital; for that it would not perhaps be possible altogether to eradicate the spirit of mutual distrust which those events had inspired, especially during the presence of a British force capable of overawing the local government, or under the circumstance of the envoy's being attended by an escort manifestly adapted to the purposes of personal security; that negotiations pursued under the impression and reaction of these reciprocal feelings could scarcely be productive of any satisfactory result, whilst, as before observed, those negotiations would have reference exclusively to the claims and expectations of the Burmese government. That it would obviously be more than useless to protract the mission for the sole purpose of receiving and answering demands which would probably be found to be arrogant, unreasonable and inadmissible, and which could therefore only tend to produce irritation, and to augment the existing sources of jealousy, distrust and suspicion, and might possibly lead to acts and proceedings on the part of the Burmese government which we should be compelled to resent.

46. On these grounds we resolved immediately to despatch to Captain Canning orders of recal, directing at the same time the honourable company's cruiser Ariel to be held in readiness to convey them. We were aware that some degree of embarrassment attended this measure, arising from the circumstances of his having been originally authorized to proceed to the capital of Ava, if exacted by the king; of that invitation having actually taken place, and of his having in consequence signified his intention of proceeding, although the late occurrences at Rangoon had properly induced him to suspend his departure and await our instructions, we considered however that the alteration of affairs, independently of those occurrences, would furnish solid grounds for such a change of resolution, without affording to the court of Ava any reasonable cause of offence or alarm.

47. Our object now being to withdraw the envoy, and at the same time to obviate a supposition on the part of the Burmese government that a spirit of resentment had dictated his recal, and to convince that government that we were still desirous of maintaining with it the relations of amity, it appeared to us that this object would be essentially promoted by a formal declaration on the part of this government, framed in conformity to the view and principles above described, to be delivered by the envoy to the viceroy, and also transmitted to the court of Ava. A declaration was accordingly prepared; it commenced by adverting to the friendly object of Captain Canning's mission, and to the accomplishment of that object by the ample explanations which he had afforded relative to the invasion of Arracan. Noticing also the cause of our not having recalled the envoy when apprised of the fulfillment fulfilment of the purposes of his mission, namely, that as the Burmese chiefs on the frontier of Chittagong had then proceeded to the acts of outrage and insult described in our former declaration, the Burmese government might have been led to infer from the envoy's recal a resolution on our part to resent them. Whereas we were anxious to avoid extreme measures, and merely demanded the retreat of the Burmese forces from their menacing position, and restitution of property that had been plundered by them; despatching however a reinforcement of troops to Chittagong for defensive purposes, and under the hostile disposition manifested on the part of the Burmese government, which suggested the possibility of its disregarding the sacred privileges of the British envoy, resolving to place at his disposal the means of withdrawing and also of providing for the removal of the persons and property of British subjects residing at Rangoon, by sending to that post the Amboyna and Malabar.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
25 May 1812.

48. We next proceeded to advert to the unnecessary alarm occasioned by the arrival of the Amboyna, the Malabar and schooner at Rangoon, and, in general terms, to the acts and proceedings of the local government, which had compelled the envoy to retire on board the cruiser; adding, however, that whatever reason we had to complain of those acts and proceedings, and of the groundless suspicions entertained by the Burmese government, it was not our intention to render them even a subject of remonstrance; but that, on the contrary, we willingly accepted and cordially reciprocated the viceroy's professions of a desire to preserve unimpaired the long-subsisting friendship and good understanding between the two states.

49. As the envoy's reports represented the disposition of the viceroy to have been generally friendly, and reasonable, and moderate, although on the late occasion misled or overborne by the persuasion and violence of the other members of the government; and as we conceived it possible that he might be exposed to rigorous treatment, in consequence of the envoy's having been compelled to abandon his residence within the town of Rangoon, and of his recal, we deemed it expedient to introduce into the declaration some remarks tending to exonerate the viceroy from the responsibility of those measures.

50. The declaration then went on to observe, that this government happily found itself enabled to pursue this amicable line of conduct by the tenor of the late advices from Chittagong; from which we had the satisfaction to learn that the Burmese commander had disavowed the outrages committed by the Burmese troops, and had punished many of those who had violated our territories; that the number of the Burmese forces on the frontier had been reduced, and that the remainder were preparing to retire: in consequence of which orders had been issued for withdrawing our troops also from their advanced positions, and for placing the whole in cantonments at their ordinary stations, as soon as information should be received of the actual retreat of the Burmese forces; but that, as the object of Captain Canning's mission had been accomplished—as we had no demands to make upon the Burmese government, excepting that which had already been communicated, namely, for the removal of its forces from the menacing position which they occupied on the frontier of the British territories—and as the presence of the envoy with his escort, and the ships Amboyna and Malabar, tended only to excite uneasiness in the minds of the viceroy and the members of the government of Rangoon, while the distrust which they had manifested necessarily created the same sensation in the mind of the envoy, under all which circumstances no purpose remained to be answered, either by Captain Canning's continuance at Rangoon, or by his proceeding to the court of Ava, we deemed it advisable to direct his return to Bengal; adding, however, that Captain Canning was instructed, previously to his departure, to confirm in the fullest and most satisfactory manner the assurances now afforded of our uniform and anxious desire to maintain and improve the relations of amity and concord with the state of Ava, and to encourage and augment the intercourse of friendship and commerce between the subjects of both governments.

51. The declaration concluded with an intimation that if the state of Ava should have any claims or demands upon the British government, they might be conveniently and satisfactorily adjusted by the despatch of a vakeel duly authorized on the part of the Burmese government, who would be received with satisfaction; and with every mark of attention and hospitality consistent with his rank and representative character, and with the friendship existing between the two states.

Declaration to the
ment, 1st May,

52. Letters from the governor general to the king of Ava and to the viceroy of Pegue, referring to the declaration and couched in corresponding terms, were at the same time prepared. Copies of the declaration and of those letters are transmitted, separate numbers in the packet, for your honourable court's more detailed information.

53. In conveying our instructions of recal to Captain Canning, we had no hesitation to express our high and unqualified approbation of his conduct and proceedings; considering him to have displayed a degree of prudence, ability, fortitude and firmness, which derived peculiar merit from the circumstances of extraordinary delicacy, difficulty and embarrassment which demanded the exercise of those qualities, and to have combined with a due support of the honour of the British government and of the rights and dignity of his representative character a degree of discretion, foresight and forbearance, without which consequences the most undesirable, and, probably, events the most calamitous, might have ensued, from the agitation of the public mind and the acts and proceedings of the government of Rangoon. We also specifically signified our acquiescence in the urgency of the considerations which induced the envoy to retire on board the Malabar; and we expressed our satisfaction that even this important measure had been effected in a manner which, unless some untoward event should intermediately have occurred, admitted the amicable course of proceeding which we were anxious to pursue.

54. The instructions then pointed out the system of measures which we had resolved to adopt as already described, and the spirit of the representations which it would be proper for the envoy to make to the Burmese government on the occasion of his delivering the declaration and his departing from Rangoon on his return to Bengal.

55. We judged it necessary to furnish Captain Canning with particular directions relative to the British inhabitants of Rangoon. On that subject it was observed, that if the tenor of our declaration and of the governor general's letter to the viceroy, added to Captain Canning's personal assurances, should satisfy the minds of the viceroy and the members of the government of Rangoon, that his recal was unconnected with any hostile designs on our part, the British inhabitants of Rangoon would have no cause to apprehend that their persons and property would be exposed to danger by his departure: that if however the doubts and apprehensions of the local government should be found immovable, or if Captain Canning should be under the necessity of leaving Rangoon without the concurrence of the government, and if the British inhabitants mistrusting its designs should consider themselves insecure in his absence, and should express a desire to quit Rangoon with their property and proceed to Bengal, we deemed it expedient and just to authorize the employment of such means as might prove necessary to secure their persons, and as far as might be practicable their property also, considering it a measure of obligation to enable British subjects to withdraw their effects from a danger resulting from public events, and the adoption of the means necessary for that purpose, to be entirely warranted by the injustice and hostility of any attempt on the part of the government of Rangoon to detain the property by force. We expressed our hope at the same time that the amicable and conciliatory system of proceeding, connected with Captain Canning's recal, by satisfying the Burmese government of our friendly intentions, would obviate any motive on the part of the British inhabitants to retire from Rangoon, as their removal would certainly impress the Burmese government and people very strongly with the opinion that the British government had determined on war.

56. In reply to Captain Canning's reference of the question, whether the former orders of government directing him not to use force for effecting the release of any British subject whom the local government of Rangoon might have confined, were still to hold good, it was signified to Captain Canning that agreeably to the principle of proceeding already described as being authorized with a view to the security of British subjects residing at Rangoon, it would be proper for him to employ force if absolutely necessary to effect the release of any British subject so confined, and if the means at his command should be sufficient to ensure the success of the attempt.

57. In

57. In answer to Captain Canning's suggestion, that for the purpose of eventually bringing away the property of the British inhabitants, an additional company of sepoys should be despatched to Rangoon, several considerations were stated which appeared to us to oppose the expediency of that measure.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
25 May 1812.

58. In reply to Captain Canning's reference on the subject of the demand on account of the owners of the ship Elephant, we stated our opinion that in consequence of the deceitful and even insulting conduct of the government of Rangoon as described in his report, the whole sum recommended by the marine board should be demanded; but that for reasons before made known to him it was not our wish that he should have recourse to measures of compulsion for the purpose of obtaining payment of that demand, and that in the event of his receiving a suitable atonement, he was authorized at his own discretion to accept compensation on the basis of the original compromise.

59. The instructions concluded by intimating that we were aware that at the period of their receipt circumstances might have occurred of a nature to render them in some respects inapplicable to the existing state of affairs, and that in that event the proceedings of the envoy must be regulated by the dictates of his own discretion and the nature of the occurrences which might have taken place; but his discretion would of course be exercised with a due attention to the principles of our instructions, and to the explained views and wishes of government, which did not admit of his proceeding to the court of Ava, or the longer continuance of his mission. For the detail of these instructions we beg leave to refer your honourable court to the enclosed copy of our chief secretary's letter to Captain Canning's conveying them.

To Captain Canning,
2d May 1812.

60. We have further the honour to transmit copies of the instructions issued to the commander of the Ariel in conformity to the suggestions of Captain Canning, and of a separate letter to the address of the latter, which for the reasons therein stated was prepared for the purpose of being transmitted to him by the former on the arrival of the ship at the entrance of the Rangoon river.

To lieutenant Harrott, commanding the H. C. cruiser Ariel, 2d May, 1812.
To Captain Canning, d^o.

61. Owing to the adverse winds which prevail at this season of the year, the Ariel was unable to sail from Saugor before the 16th instant.

62. The despatches received from Chittagong since our address to your honourable court of the 25th ultimo, with one exception, do not contain any matter of sufficient importance to render it necessary to transmit copies of them as enclosures in this letter. A reply has been received by the magistrate of Chittagong to the letter which he addressed to the Burmese chiefs, enclosing our declaration or manifesto of the 13th of March. A copy of the magistrate's despatch, enclosing a translation of that reply, is transmitted, a separate number in the packet. The substance of the reply is, that the magistrate's letter had been forwarded to the court of Ava, and that the commander of the Burmese forces awaited the orders of the king for his future proceedings, which orders he should obey whatever they might be, whether to retire with his troops, to remain in his actual position, or to pursue the refugees.

From magistrate of Chittagong, dated 1st May 1812.

63. A further despatch has also been received, containing translations of what may be called a double letter, from the commander of the Burmese forces, being written both in the Burmese and Persian languages, but differing materially in substance. The former was considered by the magistrate as conveying what the Burmese commander really intended to express, he being entirely ignorant of the Persian language, and is of a far more amicable tendency than the latter. It announces his intention to retire in conformity to orders received from the court; and the information received by the magistrate corresponds with that intention, as it appears that no more than 400 of the Burmese troops remained in the position on the Nauf river.

64. Lieutenant-colonel Morgan has carried into effect the arrangement described in the 4th paragraph of our address of the 25th ultimo, for withdrawing our troops from their advanced positions; and the magistrate and Lieutenant-colonel Morgan concurring in opinion, that the seven companies which were sent as a reinforcement to Chittagong might be returned to the presidency, that measure has been authorized. The magistrate has also been directed to permit the Vestal cruiser to prosecute her voyage to Java, and to return the cruiser Thetis to the presidency.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen in Council,
25 May 1812.

65. We did not omit to convey to the magistrate a communication of the general nature of the advices from Rangoon, and of the resolution which we adopted in consequence, at the time when the viceroy's letter to Tyndapo was transmitted to the magistrate to be forwarded. Before his receipt of that communication, the magistrate had transmitted a despatch to the presidency, reporting the arrival at Chittagong of an English brig named the Providence, which had left Rangoon the 19th ultimo, and enclosing a narrative drawn up by her commander, of the general outline of the transactions which had taken place at Rangoon, as detailed in Captain Canning's report. The commander of the brig had proceeded from Prince of Wales Island with a cargo for the Rangoon market, and leaving his vessel at the entrance of Rangoon river, went up to Rangoon to procure a pilot: he there received from Captain Canning an account of all that had passed, and was advised by him to return with his ship and cargo; in consequence of which he rejoined the brig, and sailed to Chittagong. It is of course unnecessary to trouble your honourable court with a copy of the narrative, as it is little more than an abstract statement of the events detailed in Captain Canning's report.

Private, from Captain Canning,
dated 19th April.

66. The commander of the brig was charged with a private letter from Captain Canning to the address of our chief secretary, dated the 19th ultimo, which has been placed in our records; and of which we deem it proper to transmit a copy, as containing the latest intelligence we have received of the state of affairs at Rangoon.

67. In that letter Captain Canning states, that were it not for his desire to remain at Rangoon for the receipt of advices from the presidency, he should have taken his departure several days before the date of his letter, as the government had daily evinced a more unfriendly and indeed hostile disposition since the transaction respecting the payment of the money on account of the ship Elephant; in which he observes, "the viceroy and whole government appeared to exult and "glory in the ridicule they cast on the British government." He adds, that daily scenes of petty aggression had occurred, which had nearly put an end to all friendly communication between him and the viceroy, who had of late acted a double and deceitful part; and your honourable court will observe, that Captain Canning recommends the adoption of some very decisive measures respecting this transaction, observing, that it had certainly lowered us much in the opinion of all classes of people at Rangoon.

68. We were concerned to receive this report from Captain Canning, as the state of affairs represented in his letter may render it difficult for him to pursue the line of conduct prescribed by our last instructions; but it augments the expediency of his quitting Rangoon, and we trust that circumstances may yet admit of his returning on amicable terms, or at least on such terms as will not impose upon us the inconvenient necessity of prosecuting hostilities against the Burmese state.

69. We should not be disposed to render the mere circumstance of the refusal of the Burmese government to comply with the demand of compensation for the owners of the ship Elephant a ground of war, as we have already intimated to Captain Canning in our former instructions; nor shall we act on the basis of a dissolution of the relations of amity between the two states, unless positive outrages on the part of the Burmese government, or a vindication of the rights and dignity of our own should, on the receipt of further information, appear to us to render a change of system unavoidable.

70. It has been indispensable to protect the province of Chittagong against the inroads of a barbarous race of men, whose incursions, openly and distinctly menaced, would have subjected the country to the extreme evils of devastation and outrage, and our government to affront and indignity. It was a branch also of general duty, never to be omitted, to repel insult and maintain inviolate the honour and credit of the British name. For the first of these purposes, the advance of a small body of troops, and the employment of an armed vessel or two became necessary; and the second object has required occasional remonstrance against insolence, and a firm but always temperate assertion of national dignity, both in language and measures: but every part of our conduct which could bear the character of controversy or contest with the Burmahs, has been limited to those views; and we trust your honourable court will see with satisfaction, the moderate, moderate, forbearing, and amicable character of the measures which have been pursued, both on the frontier of Chittagong and at Rangoon. They have been perseveringly directed, under many provocations from a very contemptible adversary, to the ends of present conciliation, and the maintenance of a good understanding with the government of Ava. We shall continue to act, as long as circumstances admit, on the same principles; and we entertain a reasonable hope that the late occasion of mistrust and jealousy will pass over without having induced a rupture.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
25 May 1812.

71. We cannot, however, refuse to entertain the sentiment, that it may become absolutely necessary at some future time, if not at an early period, to check the arrogance and presumption of that weak and contemptible state,

We have the honour to be, with the greatest respect,
Honourable Sirs, your most faithful, humble servants,

Minto,
J. Nugent.
J. Lumsden
H. Colebrooke.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company, dated 4th June 1812.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
4 June 1812.

Honourable Sirs,

SINCE closing our address of the 25th ultimo, we have received a further despatch from Captain Canning, dated the 6th of May, which was brought to Chittagong by an English ship, and we have the honour to transmit a copy of it for your honourable court's information.

2. That despatch contains a detailed narrative of those additional causes of complaint on the part of Captain Canning to which his private letter of the 19th of April (a copy of which is enclosed in our last despatch) adverts in general terms, and reports the progress of transactions up to the date of the despatch, when, after the occurrence of various events, of a nature tending to augment the distrust and misunderstanding between the envoy of the government of Rangoon, confidence and harmony had in a great measure been restored.

3. The first occasion of renewed difference was the envoy's directing all the articles of property belonging to the mission, yet remaining on shore, to be conveyed on board of the ships. This arrangement was opposed by the government of Rangoon, on the pretext that as a considerable part of the property consisted of presents destined for the king of Ava, the members of the government could not allow it to go out of their hands. The envoy very properly insisted on its removal; but it was not until after a long protracted negotiation, principally conducted by written correspondence, in the course of which the viceroy, acting under the influence of the inferior members of the government, perverted every previous transaction into a ground of accusation against the envoy, who on his part successfully repelled and refuted those gross misrepresentations, and until the envoy finally declared his resolution to depart, that the government permitted the property of the mission to be removed to the ships.

4. Another subject of altercation originated in the departure of the Pilot schooner, the real object of the despatch of which to Bengal was imagined to be to obtain such an additional force as was calculated to overbear all opposition. This circumstance, it seems, occasioned a great degree of ferment and alarm in the town, fomented by the deputy governor and inferior members of the administration, and the expediency of attacking and destroying the Malabar and Amboyna, by means of war-boats and fire-rafts, became a subject of deliberation. Batteries were constructed at various points, and gates of masonry added to the stockade which surround the town; and for the purpose of obtaining bricks for the execution of these works, the government had recourse to the sacrilegious expedient of dismantling the tombs of every nation in the vicinity of the place; a measure which, Captain Canning observes, struck the whole population with terror and dismay.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in Council,
4 June 1812.

5. So long as the tombs of British subjects remained untouched, the envoy did not consider it incumbent on him to interfere; but when these became alike exposed to violation, justly viewing this act in the light of an insult to the British government, he deemed it his duty to remonstrate, in the strongest terms, to the viceroy, who meanly disavowed his concern in it, and agreed to comply with the envoy's demand, that the tombs and monuments should be rebuilt.

6. Another topic of adverse discussion arose from the circumstance of the envoy having afforded protection, at the time when the European inhabitants of Rangoon repaired on board of the ships, as mentioned in the 27th paragraph of our address of the 25th ultimo, to the family of Mr. Carey, son of the professor of that name in the college of Fort William, who has resided four years at Rangoon in the capacity of a missionary, deputed by the society at Serampore, who married at Rangoon the daughter of an English commander of a ship, by a native Portuguese woman, whose mother and sister resided with Mr. Carey. It seems that a regulation exists in the Burmese dominions, prohibiting females and silver from being taken out of the country,—a regulation which, although by no means rigidly observed, was on this occasion represented by the viceroy to be of imperious obligation, and on the basis of which he required that the family should be delivered up. With this demand the envoy refused to comply, for the reasons which are stated in his despatch, and which appear to us of sufficient force to have justified and required his refusal.

7. The incident mentioned in the 65th paragraph of our address of the 25th ultimo, of the envoy's having advised the commander of the ship Providence to quit the river of Rangoon without discharging his cargo, the details of which transaction are contained in the envoy's despatch now under consideration, formed a further subject of remonstrance on the part of the viceroy, who was irritated at the loss of the profits which he would have derived from the duties on the cargo, and from the purchase of a part of it.

8. The envoy repeats, in his despatch, the observation stated in his private letter, that the disposition and the conduct of the government of Rangoon would have led him to resolve on returning to Bengal, if he had not been anxious previously to receive advices from the capital, and instructions from us; adding, that as the most probable means of restoring, in some degree, mutual confidence, and thereby enabling himself to remain without a compromise of his public character, he determined on paying a visit to the viceroy, who, it appears, informed the envoy's messenger, who conveyed the proposal of a visit, that individually he should be most happy to receive it, but that one objection existed, which, if not removed, he would not wish the envoy to fulfil his intention. This objection he stated to be, that the deputy governor and the inferior members of the administration had long since formed a determination to seize the person of the envoy whenever an opportunity should offer, and that he had reason to suppose they persisted in that determination. The viceroy added, that he had never approved of this measure (a declaration to which the envoy gave credit,) and that he would on no account permit the attempt, if the envoy came on, the faith of a friendly visit; that he should assemble the members of government, and inquire if they still persisted in that determination, and acquaint the envoy with the result; adding, that if the envoy received a message from him requesting his attendance, he might proceed with confidence. This message was accordingly conveyed to the envoy, who in consequence proceeded to visit the viceroy, taking with him, however, a strong escort, and making other precautionary arrangements.

9. The envoy was received in a manner the most satisfactory; and at this visit all the subjects of antecedent dispute and correspondence were discussed. A principal topic of their conference was the demand of the Burmese government for the surrender of the fugitive chiefs from Arrakan, for the details of which, and of the other subjects of discussion and discourse, we must of course refer to the enclosed copy of the envoy's report. It appears that the viceroy himself attributed the disturbances in Arrakan principally to the violence and oppression of the rajah or governor, whom he was anxious to see removed, as, during his continuance in office, no permanent security would exist for the preservation of friendship between the two states. The envoy discouraged the expectation that the British government would be induced to surrender the fugitive chiefs, even supposing them to have been apprehended, stating arguments in support of the justice.

justice of that disinclination; and the viceroy finally intimated that the question of surrendering the inferior chiefs would not probably create much difficulty, but that he thought the king would not rest satisfied with any thing short of the surrender of Kingberring; and he suggested, in the event of the British government resolving not to surrender that person; that the best mode of proceeding would be to deny that he was in our possession; a proceeding, however, which the envoy declared to be incompatible with the dignity of the British government, which would never condescend to have recourse to falsehood.

10. On this subject the envoy observes, that from the general tenor of the viceroy's conversation, and from the desire which the envoy believes him really to entertain, that the relations of amity should be maintained between the two states, he is disposed to think that means may be found to bring this question to an adjustment without the surrender of Kingberring; and the envoy proceeds to state his opinion of the considerations which recommend our resisting the demand, and the grounds on which a refusal to surrender him might be justly and successfully maintained, and to state some observations tending to show that even if a war were the alternative of our non-compliance (which, however, he deems improbable,) the hazard to this government would by no means be such as to suggest the expediency of yielding the point in opposition to our judgment, with a view to avoid that extremity.

11. At this conference the viceroy earnestly requested the envoy to resume his residence on shore; and the envoy replied that he had no objection to do so, provided a house were assigned for his accommodation on the river side, as he was determined not to expose himself a second time to the danger of being seized; but that, at all events, the first and necessary condition of his returning to reside on shore was the surrender of all the property remaining at his former habitation. The property, as already mentioned, was ultimately given up, and the envoy, finding his residence on board of a ship on many accounts inconvenient, determined to comply with the viceroy's wish, and accordingly took possession of a convenient house which was prepared for him, on the bank of the river, in the immediate vicinity of which the Malabar and Amboyna were moored, so that in point of security, he observes, it is not inferior to a residence on board a ship.

12. The envoy adds, that the viceroy accepted of an entertainment at the house, and that confidence and harmony seemed to be for the present, in a great measure, restored; but how long such a state of things might last, the violence, versatility and extreme ignorance of the Rangoon government rendered it impossible to say. The envoy was there also visited by the deputy governor.

13. This last report from Captain Canning is so far satisfactory, as it warrants an expectation that our instructions, despatched by the Ariel, may find him in a situation to admit of his carrying into complete effect the system of proceeding which we have deemed it most expedient to pursue.

14. The envoy's despatch further contains a detailed report of the whole of his discussions with the viceroy on the subject of the demand of compensation for the detention of the ship Elephant; the result of which discussions, anterior to his visit above mentioned, we have already stated in our address of the 25th ultimo. On the occasion of that visit, it appears that the viceroy offered to give him bills on Bengal of the demand, but at the date of the envoy's despatch they had not been received.

15. The envoy has also reported the detail of what passed at his examination in the presence of the viceroy, of the person who was sometime since deputed by the latter to this presidency in the capacity of his vakeel, and who, as stated in Captain Canning's despatch of the 29th of February, (extracts from which accompanied our address to your honourable court of the 24th of March,) had written to the viceroy, that the British government had threatened to imprison, and had actually detained him, on account of a rumour that the ship Elephant had been a second time seized at Rangoon; and who had further conveyed a verbal communication to the viceroy, that three Arab ships had been freighted by this government for the purpose of transporting troops to attack Rangoon, and that those troops were actually embarked, when the arrival of the Elephant at this port caused the expedition to be laid aside. Your honourable court will observe, that this vakeel, on his examination, disavowed every part of the communication which he had made to the viceroy, (who, however, had himself showed to Captain Canning the original letter, and informed him of the verbal communication above mentioned,) and acknowledged that he had been treated at the presidency with every mark of hospitality and attention.

16. Observing, on a reference to our address of the 25th of April on the subject of the affairs of Ava, that we omitted to forward with that address a complete copy of Captain Canning's despatch of the 20th of February, extracts from which only (for want of time to transcribe the whole) were enclosed in our preceding letter of the 24th of March; and also to notice our reply to that despatch; it is proper to take this opportunity of supplying those omissions, by referring to the record of our proceedings in the political department, (the broken set of which, from the 3d of January to the end of April, we now transmit by the Baring,) containing the despatch in question, and the reply to it, as recorded in the secret department: both will accordingly be found on the consultations noted in the margin.

17. The latter contains little more than the expression of our approbation of the envoy's proceedings, as reported in his despatch of the 20th of February; a communication of the latest advices from Chittagong, and our directions on the subject of the demand of compensation on account of the ship Elephant; his report of his negotiations on which subject formed the extracts from his despatch above mentioned, enclosed in our address of the 24th of March.

18. In our address to your honourable court of the 23d of January, paragraph 36, we referred to the record of our instructions to the Marine Board on that subject, suggesting, for reasons therein stated, a compromise of the claim of the owners by their accepting, in addition to what the viceroy offered, the half of the difference between the sum and the amount recommended by the Marine Board (as noticed also in the 40th paragraph of our address of the 25th ultimo); and your honourable court will observe, from Captain Canning's two last despatches, that he has been negotiating on the basis of that suggested compromise.

19. The Marine Board's reply to the above-mentioned instructions was not received till the beginning of March. From that reply it appeared that the owners declined to accede to the proposed compromise, and urged their title to the larger sum. In answer to that report we intimated to the board, that the arguments stated by the owners did not appear to us to effect the grounds on which we had founded our opinion of the equity, as well as the expediency, of reducing the claim; and we urged some additional considerations tending to establish that opinion.

20. We, at the same time, took occasion to state the limitation under which we were disposed to support the claim of the owners to any compensation; and it was with reference to this limitation, that (as noticed in the 58th paragraph of our address to your honourable court of the 25th ultimo) we prohibited the envoy from having recourse to measures of compulsion for the recovery of the demand.

21. In consequence of the sentiments thus conveyed to the owners, they finally signified their willingness to receive whatever sum we might deem proper. The correspondence above referred to will be found recorded as per margin.

22. In the letter to Captain Canning last mentioned, copies of those documents were enclosed, and he was directed, in the event of the transaction not having been terminated when he received that letter, to endeavour to bring it to a speedy conclusion, by obtaining the utmost practicable extent of compensation within the amount originally recommended by the Marine Board. These instructions, however, which were dispatched by a country vessel, in the early part of the month of April, do not appear to have reached the envoy at the date of his last despatch.

23. In the 24th and following paragraphs of our address to your honourable court, of the 4th of March, we stated only the substance of a despatch from the envoy, dated the 19th of January, without transmitting a copy of it; the contents of it being too voluminous to admit of its being transcribed in time to be forwarded by the fleet then about to sail.

24. It subsequently escaped our recollection to transmit a copy of that despatch. It will now be sufficient to refer to the record of it as placed on the proceedings noted in the margin.

25. It may be proper, on this occasion, to observe that when affairs on the frontiers of Chittagong began to wear a hostile appearance, we passed a resolution in the judicial department, that the magistrate of Chittagong should therefore be directed to correspond with the chief secretary to government in the secret department. From the 21st of February, therefore, the whole correspondence with the magistrate and the adjutant-general, relative to the transactions on the frontiers of Chittagong, has been recorded in that department; but as the considerations which rendered this arrangement advisable had reference only to local circumstances, and as we had previously addressed our reports on the subject to your honourable court in the political department, we have judged it most convenient to continue the same channel of communication.

26. In our despatches relative to the affairs of Chittagong and Ava, subsequent to that of the 23d of January, we have transmitted copies of all the most material documents connected with it. But to facilitate reference, in the event of your honourable court being desirous of perusing the whole series of the correspondence, or any parts of it, of which copies have not already been transmitted, so far as it is entered on our consultations up to the end of April, which is the extent of the broken set of proceedings now forwarded, we deem it proper to note in the margin the consultations of both departments on which the correspondence in question is recorded.

We have the honour to be, with the greatest respect,

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 1st August 1812.

Despatch from Gov. Gen. in council, 1 August 1812.

Honourable Sirs,

OUR despatch of the 4th of June, transmitted by the honourable company's extra ship Baring, will have apprised your honourable court of the progress of Captain Canning's negotiations at Rangoon, up to the period, when at the earnest entreaty of the viceroy, he had consented to quit the Malabar cruizer, and again to reside on shore. We did not touch, in that despatch, on the affairs of Chittagong, as, during the short interval between the date of that despatch and of our letter to your honourable court of the 25th of May, no occurrence of importance in that quarter had come to our knowledge.

2. We propose in this letter to communicate to your honourable court the latest intelligence in our possession on the above-mentioned subjects, and to state to you the resolutions which late events and transactions at Rangoon, and on our eastern frontier, have induced us to adopt.

3. A few days after the date of our letter of the 4th of June, we received Captain Canning's despatch, N^o 8, dated the 25th of May, which your honourable court will find recorded on our secret consultation, of the date noted in the margin.

Secret Cons.
12 June, N^o 24.

4. It appears, that after Captain Canning had dispatched his last letter to our address of the 6th of May, on the ship Anne, the viceroy had required the commander of that vessel to deliver up the envoy's packets to him, and on his refusal, the vessel had been detained at the Chokey; immediately on learning this intelligence, Captain Canning addressed a letter to the viceroy, who, by a verbal message, disavowed his orders, and at the same time sent directions for the release of the vessel.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
1 August 1812.

5. About this time the brig Virginia, having despatches from this government to the envoy, arrived off the mouth of the river, and the boat which left the brig for the purpose of procuring a pilot was forcibly taken possession of by a Burmese war-boat, and the crew carried up to the town.

6. The envoy, on being apprised of the arrival of the Virginia, deemed it necessary to adopt measures for securing the public packets, as the late attempt of the viceroy to seize the envoy's despatches rendered it probable that he would not scruple to intercept the packets by the Virginia. The envoy accordingly sent a boat properly armed towards the Virginia, which in its attempt to reach that vessel (which was driven out to sea by the violence of the weather) was insulted by the Burmese prows, but suffered no molestation.

7. The brig afterwards anchored near the Malabar, and Captain Canning secured his despatches.

8. Your honourable court will observe from Captain Canning's letter, and from his correspondence on the subject with the viceroy, that he did not deem it proper, under the peculiar circumstances in which the Virginia had arrived, that she should be considered subject to the usual duties and regulations of the port; and after some discussion with the viceroy, in which the latter manifested his habitual falsehood and prevarication, the envoy was compelled to secure the brig by causing her to anchor between the Malabar and Amboyna, and her rudder which on her first arrival had been taken off was afterwards restored.

9. On the 15th of May the Perseverance, country ship, arrived at the mouth of the river, and the envoy deemed it proper to apprise the commander of the state of affairs at Rangoon, and to leave it to his discretion either to avail himself of the protection of the honourable company's cruizer, or to carry on his commercial concerns under the usual conditions of the port. The commander of the Perseverance gladly accepted the offered protection, and anchored at a short distance from the Malabar.

10. The viceroy, as Captain Canning expected, sent to inquire the reason why the vessel lately arrived was prevented from trading with the port in the usual manner? Captain Canning expressed a desire to explain his reasons to the viceroy by personal communication, and the following morning was fixed for the conference.

11. The envoy commenced the conversation by expressing his regret at being the occasion of interrupting the trade of Rangoon, but observed that until the business of the Elephant were adjusted he could never regard British property at Rangoon as secure, and that therefore he should feel it his duty to recommend to the commanders of all vessels which might arrive, to abstain from all commerce with the port. The envoy then remarked, that the suspension of the commercial intercourse between British ships had, probably, already occasioned a loss to the Burmese government of more than double the amount of the money demanded on account of the ship Elephant.

12. The viceroy appeared to have been misinformed with respect to the value of the cargo of the ship Perseverance, and observed that no great injury could be sustained on that account, as the cargo of the Perseverance consisted only of cocoa nuts, but having ascertained from Captain Canning that it was rich, and consisted of all the articles usually brought to the Rangoon market, he suddenly altered his tone, and with profuse expressions of his friendly intentions again offered the Elephant money, provided the envoy would send Mr. Carey's family on shore. Your honourable court will recollect that in our letter of the 4th of June we stated the circumstance of the envoy having received on board the family of Mr. Carey, who had resided for some time at Rangoon in the capacity of a missionary, and who had married there the daughter of an English commander of a ship by a native Portuguese woman, whose mother and sister also resided with Mr. Carey, and that the viceroy's demand that the family should be delivered up in conformity to the regulation which exists, though by no means rigidly observed, prohibiting females from being taken out of the country, had been very properly refused by the envoy.

13. Captain Canning of course decidedly objected to this proposal, and the viceroy at length agreed to pay the Elephant money (being the medium between the sum claimed by the British government and that offered by the Rangoon government government to the commander) and the other sums due, on the condition that the envoy would permit the Perseverance to hold free commercial intercourse with the town.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
1 August 1812.

14. Captain Canning assented to this proposition, provided the reply to the second reference which he had made to Bengal on the subject, should not render it incumbent upon him to demand the full sum originally claimed on account of the Elephant.

15. A few days after this conference the envoy received the sum of 12,293.30 tiscals, and the Perseverance commenced the usual intercourse of traffic with the town.

16. In consequence of the conclusion of this arrangement mutual confidence was in a great measure restored; and Mr. Carey having expressed an anxiety not to quit Rangoon, if it appeared he could remain there with security to himself and family, the envoy accompanied him on a visit to the viceroy, who gave him the most solemn assurances of protection, and furnished him with a paper signed by himself and all the members of government, guaranteeing the safety of himself and family.

17. Your honourable court will observe, that Captain Canning mentions that in the course of this conference the viceroy confessed that the ragoon and other members of the government had formed the plan of seizing the envoy's person, in which project the viceroy partly owned he had himself, though reluctantly, concurred.

18. During the course of these discussions the envoy's sub-interpreter returned from his mission to the court of Ummerapooora. It appeared that he had been received in the most friendly manner by the Engy Praw, or heir apparent, in whom the principal authority of government is rested. The sub-interpreter had been present at a council held in the prince's palace, in which the conduct of the Burmese chiefs in Arracan had been, in the strongest terms, reprobated and disavowed, and had been admitted to two audiences of the Engy Praw, in which the prince had evinced great anxiety for the presence of the envoy at court, and the consequent amicable adjustment of all differences.

19. The prince also addressed a letter to Captain Canning, a translation of which is annexed to the envoy's despatch, marked No. 15 of the enclosures, stating that orders had been issued to recal the Burmese forces which had advanced, and concluding with an invitation to the envoy to proceed to court; a corresponding order was also transmitted to the viceroy.

20. In the fourteenth and following paragraphs of his letter, the envoy stated his sentiments on the question of the expediency of his repairing to Ummerapooora.

21. Captain Canning was of opinion his presence at court might produce an early and final adjustment of all subjects of dispute connected with the affairs of Arracan, and that by obtaining decisive orders from the court of Ava relative to many points now undetermined, the recurrence of disputes with that violent and arbitrary government would be obviated.

22. Captain Canning then considered whether the execution of the measure of proceeding to the capital might be contemplated on reasonable grounds of personal safety to the mission.

23. Although the envoy admitted that on the haughty, ferocious, and un-governable disposition of the king of Ava little reliance would be placed, he observed that the affability and moderation of the heir apparent, who exercised the principal control over the administration of affairs, and who possessed considerable influence over his grandfather, combined with his attachment to the British government, of which Captain Canning adduced an important instance, would counteract any absurd or violent resolutions which the king might be inclined to adopt.

24. Captain Canning also referred to a reply to a letter which he had addressed on this subject to Don Lewis, the Italian bishop of the churches in Ava, the general tenor of which was in favour of the envoy's proceeding to court; and Captain Canning added, that from consulting the best informed natives and others on the subject, subject, and from the certainty of being supported by the protection of the heir apparent, he felt confident that no danger to the personal safety of the members of the mission was to be apprehended.

Gov. Gen. in council,

25. Your honourable court will also observe, that Captain Canning had found means to procure copies of four letters, addressed by the viceroy to the authorities of the capital, from the tenor of which the amicable sentiments so often expressed by the viceroy appear to be sincere.

26. The envoy then adverted to the point which he expected would of course constitute the first subject of discussion after his arrival at the capital; viz. the demand on the part of the court for the surrender of Kingberring and the other fugitive chiefs, and stated his sentiments on the question.

27. We shall communicate to your honourable court, in a subsequent part of this despatch, the observations which we conveyed to Captain Canning on the contents of his despatch; but as the occurrences on the frontier of Chittagong reported to us about the period when we received Captain Canning's letter, materially influenced our instructions to that officer, we deem it necessary, in order to preserve the continuity of the narrative, to introduce in this place a short relation of those transactions, as detailed in the despatches of the magistrate of Chittagong, recorded on the consultation of the date noted in the margin.

Secret department,
Cons. 12 June,
N^o 9 to 13,
17 to 19.

28. Your honourable court will observe, that from the first of this series of despatches we had just reason to anticipate the permanence of that tranquillity which then appeared to exist on our eastern frontier, but the next letter from the magistrate of Chittagong communicated to us the vexatious intelligence of the renewal of disturbances on the frontier of Arracan, in consequence of the insurgent chief Kingberring having emerged from the place of his concealment, and having succeeded, notwithstanding every effort on the part of the civil and military officers in Chittagong to arrest his progress, in making his way into the province of Arracan, where he was joined by a considerable body of Mugs, collected in the southern division of Chittagong by the aid and connivance of the zemindar or manager of that division. Judicious arrangements were adopted by the officer commanding at Chittagong, in concert with the magistrate, for the purpose of providing for the event of the entrance of the Burmese troops into our territory in pursuit of the invaders, and were extended as far as was practicable in the unhealthy condition of the sepoy and the unfavourable season of the year,

29. Under the renewal of disturbances which had occasioned so much trouble and vexation, we felt the expediency of adopting some measures of a decided character, with a view, if possible, to defeat the designs of the insurgents, and to oppose an effectual bar to the repetition of this great evil, as well as to satisfy the minds of the Burmese chiefs both of our entire disconnection with the projects of Kingberring, and of our solicitude to prevent the invasion of their country, by people residing under the protection of the British government; the latter indeed was a positive obligation which we were anxious to fulfil.

30. For these purposes we desired the magistrate immediately to issue and circulate to the utmost practicable extent a proclamation, strictly prohibiting all persons subject to the authority of this government from affording protection to Kingberring, or any of his chiefs or associates, and from aiding or abetting his present proceedings, either by raising men for his service, or by supplying him with arms, stores, boats, or provisions, or in any manner directly or indirectly assisting his views, intimating also that any persons who should be found guilty of those offences, or should be proved to have omitted to give information of circumstances within their knowledge which might lead to the apprehension of Kingberring or any of his chiefs, or which, if communicated, might enable the public authorities to prevent him from obtaining an accession of force, or any other means of prosecuting his designs, would be dealt with according to law.

31. The magistrate was, at the same time, directed to offer a reward of 5,000 rupees to any person who should seize Kingberring, and deliver him over to the custody of the public officers, or who should give information leading to his apprehension. Mr. Peckale was also authorized to offer a reward of 1,000 rupees, under the same circumstances and conditions, for the seizure of any of Kingberring's chiefs and principal associates.

32. We deemed it proper to desire the magistrate to transmit to the Burmese chiefs in Arracan for their information a copy of the prescribed proclamation, apprising them, at the same time, in general terms, that the government had under its consideration the adoption of such further measures, directed to the object of preventing the increase and repetition of the late evils, as were consistent with the principles of British law.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
1 August 1812.

33. The measures to which we alluded were the arrangement for the removal of certain classes of the refugee inhabitants of the province of Chittagong to a distant quarter of the company's territories, and the framing of a regulation calculated to deter and prevent persons residing within the limits of the British territories from invading or assisting the invasion of those of a foreign state.

34. We have the honour to refer your honourable court for further details to the instructions transmitted to the magistrate of Chittagong on this occasion, which will be found recorded as per margin.

Secret Cons.
12 June,
N^o 20.

35. As we deemed it by no means improbable that the Mug Sidar Makloo, who as before reported, had been apprehended and sent to Dacca, might endeavour to make his escape and join the insurgents, the magistrate of that district was desired to exercise a peculiar degree of vigilance with respect to that chief, and to adopt every precaution, in order to guard against his quitting Dacca without the permission of government.

36. Such was the condition of affairs to the eastward, when we deliberated on the instructions which under these circumstances would be proper for the guidance of the envoy.

37. The renewal of Kingberring's invasion of Arracan rendered it expedient in our judgment to revoke the orders of recal, which, as stated in our last report, we had transmitted to the envoy. It revived, in fact, the state of affairs which occasioned his original mission; and revived it under circumstances of additional embarrassment; since the courts of Ava and Rangoon would naturally derive from that event apparent grounds of corroborated belief, that the hostile projects of Kingberring were supported by the British government, and the envoy's immediate return to Bengal would tend still more to confirm that belief; the necessity of removing the British inhabitants from Rangoon would arise; the commercial intercourse between the two countries would consequently cease; we should virtually be placed in a state of war with the Burmese government, and the only efficient channel of explanation and accommodation would be closed.

38. Instructions founded on the basis of these considerations were accordingly prepared on the 12th of June for transmission to Captain Canning, but previously to their despatch intelligence of an alteration in the state of affairs in Arracan was received, which in our judgment rendered the further continuance of the envoy at Rangoon unnecessary.

39. We shall have the honour to detail this intelligence to your honourable court in a subsequent part of this letter.

40. But although these later advices from Chittagong occasioned the change in our resolutions with regard to Captain Canning's continuance at Rangoon, we still deemed it proper to transmit to him our instructions of the 12th of June, which were only partially inapplicable to existing circumstances, as it was our wish that he should know and communicate to the local government the full extent of the measures proposed by us under the former state of affairs.

41. We shall therefore proceed, first to abstract for the information of your honourable court, the substance of our instructions to Captain Canning of the 12th of June, which will be found recorded on the consultation of the date noted in the margin, and then state the events in Arracan, which, combined with the information received in a recent despatch from Captain Canning, induced us to transmit to the envoy modified instructions, which conclusively directed his retreat from Rangoon.

42. We furnished Captain Canning with copies of the magistrate of Chittagong's despatches, describing the renewal of disturbances on the frontier of Arracan, and after stating the substance of the remarks contained in the 37th paragraph of this letter, we observed that the event which thus rendered necessary the the revocation of the orders of recal, added weight to the considerations stated in the chief secretary's despatch of the 2d May, which opposed the expediency of the envoy's proceeding to the court of Ava, notwithstanding the circumstances urged in his despatch of the 23d of May in support of that measure.

Gov. Gen. in council,

43. We repeated the observation formerly made, that we had no demands on the court of Ava. We had only to convey to that government explanations which it was certainly entitled to expect, and communications which events had rendered necessary, and that this purpose might be effectually accomplished by Captain Canning's residence at Rangoon, whereas his proceeding to the capital would only serve to involve us in additional difficulties.

44. We expressed our satisfaction at knowing that the acts and proceedings of the Burmese officers were so entirely disapproved at the court of Ava, and that the heir apparent, possessing the principal control over the affairs of government, seemed disposed to abstain from and prohibit any measures of a nature calculated to dissolve the amicable relations between the two states; but we observed that there was no reason to suppose that the court of Ava would depart from its demand of the surrender of the insurgent chiefs, and the viceroy having, by a gross violation of truth, led the prince to believe that the envoy had pledged himself to their surrender, the disappointment of his expectations would probably produce discussions unfavourable to the establishment of that confidence and cordiality which could alone lead to a satisfactory adjustment of depending differences, mutual distrust might be generated, and the scenes of Rangoon might be re-acted at Ummerapoorah.

45. We were not encouraged securely to oppose to this contingency the amicable disposition of the heir apparent, since the same disposition predominated in the mind of the viceroy, as was shown by the tenor of his letter to the prince, and the Burmese commander-in-chief, and the Italian bishop at Ava, Don Louis, (these being some of the letters to which, as mentioned in a preceding part of this address, the envoy had obtained access,) but did not withhold him from the adoption of measures directly tending to produce a rupture between the two states, and even from concurring in a project to seize the envoy's person.

46. We noticed to Captain Canning that the recent occurrences in Chittagong moreover would furnish new sources of irritation and new grounds for arrogant demands, which, by his presence at the capital, the court would be enabled to urge with all the advantage to be derived from the relinquishment of the independent and commanding position which he had the means of maintaining at Rangoon; and, above all, government and the envoy would be deprived of the benefit of a speedy and regular communication between the mission and the presidency; by his journey to the capital, government would be exposed to the hazard of all this embarrassment and inconvenience for no other purpose than to receive and answer such demands as the pride, the ignorance and insolence of a barbarous court might suggest, on the basis of alleged injuries; it would, in fact, we observed, be placing the British government in the character of an accused party before the tribunal of the king of Ava. The friendly disposition of the heir apparent, and the contingency of his exerting his influence to oppose the intemperate mandates of the king, appeared to us to afford the only security against extravagant and insolent demands, and a violation of the privileges of the envoy's representative character. We expressed our apprehension that perfect dependence could not be placed upon either; experience had shown that the barbarous governments of Ava and Rangoon were capable of meditating the seizure of the person of a British envoy. The heir apparent, in his letter to the viceroy of Pegu (a translation of which forms an enclosure in the envoy's despatch, referred to at the commencement of this address,) written under the supposition of the envoy being actually arrested and confined, was far from reprobating that outrage in the language which was suited to so monstrous a violation of the laws of civilized nations. His disapprobation was expressed, or rather implied, merely by prohibiting that which he believed to have actually occurred; it simply amounted to an order for the envoy's release, and for his being sent up to the capital; and the opinion which the prince must entertain of the humble sufferance and submissive disposition of the British government might be inferred with sufficient certainty from his arrogant supposition that a British envoy, after the gross indignity of being seized and confined by the government of Rangoon, would submissively consent, when released from confinement, confinement, to proceed to the court of Ava, in obedience to its summons, without any atonement for the outrage committed against him and his government.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
1 August 1812.

47. We then proceeded to state our opinion, that at a court where principles and notions so arrogant and erroneous prevailed, where a violation of the person of the representative of a foreign power was so lightly considered, and where demands which it would be necessary to reject would be urged in a haughty, persevering, and peremptory tone, the envoy's representative character would be exposed to insult, and even his personal freedom to hazard.

48. For these reasons, we signified to the envoy, our conviction of the inexpediency of his proceeding under any circumstances to the capital.

49. Some inconvenience might certainly be expected to arise from the necessity of references to the court of Ava, on points of his negotiations; but we observed, that it rested entirely with the court to obviate that inconvenience by vesting the viceroy with sufficient powers to treat with the envoy.

50. The ground which we directed the envoy to assume in his communications with the Burmese government for declining under the above orders to advance to the capital, notwithstanding the revocation of the orders of recal, was the absolute necessity, arising from the renewal of the disturbances in Arracan, of the envoy remaining in the situation which would alone admit of a speedy and regular communication with the presidency.

51. Letters from the governor-general to the address of the king and the viceroy, announcing the revocation of the orders of recal, in consequence of the late events in Chittagong, and intimating at the same time, the necessity of the envoy's continuance at Rangoon, for the reasons above stated, were prepared; but in consequence of the receipt of later advices from Chittagong, and the consequent renewal of the orders of recal, were afterwards cancelled.

52. We next proceeded to furnish Captain Canning with instructions for the guidance of his conduct under the revocation of the orders of recal, particularly with regard to the communications which were to be made to the Burmese government on the subject of the renewed disturbances in Arracan.

53. In consequence of the renewal of these disturbances by means derived from our provinces, we observed to Captain Canning, that we were disposed to think that the Burmese government possessed a title to claim, and that considerations connected with the tranquillity of our own frontier required the adoption of measures of a decided character, which might both tend to extinguish the source of the evil, and afford to the state of Ava the most convincing proof of our solicitude to prevent a repetition of it; we accordingly directed that Captain Canning should be furnished with a copy of the instructions to the magistrate of Chittagong, referred to in the preceding part of this despatch, in which the nature of the measures already adopted, or contemplated by government, was described; and desired him distinctly to explain to the Burmese government the tenor of the proclamation which the magistrate of Chittagong had been instructed to issue, but to abstain from a communication of the specific nature of the further arrangements in agitation, because circumstances might eventually impede their accomplishment, or require a modification of them on that subject, therefore he was enjoined merely to intimate that such measures directed to the object of permanently tranquillizing the frontier, as were practicable consistently with the principles of the British laws, were under consideration.

54. The envoy was authorized to signify, that the British government was willing to afford to the extent that might be practicable, the co-operation of its troops in quelling the insurrection, headed by Kingberring; and to intimate that government had only been withheld from directing the immediate pursuit of the insurgents into Arracan by two considerations, first, that the object of despatching our troops into the province of Arracan without previous concert with the government of Ava, might be misinterpreted; and secondly, that the season of the year was particularly unfavourable to military operations in the country which would be the scene of them; but that if the insurrection should not have been quelled at the expiration of the rainy season, government would be ready to accede as far as might be found practicable to any mode of co-operation the government of Ava might propose, and the envoy was accordingly authorized to receive and discuss any propositions to that effect, communicating the result for our consideration.

55. It was of course, however, to be intimated to the Burmese government, that the adoption of any of these proposed arrangements must depend upon the officers of that government abstaining from all measures and proceedings of the nature of those which had lately formed the subject of our just complaint.

56. It was reasonable to expect, that the communications which Captain Canning was thus authorized to make, would remove all grounds of distrust, and restore perfect confidence and cordiality between him and the Burmese government, and this expectation of course obviated the chief objection stated in our instructions of the 2d of May, to the continuance of the mission.

57. The state of Ava had sustained a deep injury at the hands of men who were under our authority and protection, and derived their means of committing it from our territory. The Burmese government had, therefore, some plausible reason for charging us with a participation in that injury. Under this impression, its officers conceived they had a right to demand the surrender of the immediate perpetrators of the outrage, and their ignorance, pride and barbarism had led them to prefer their demand in a tone of menace and insult, and to proceed to acts of a corresponding character. The British government, on the other hand, naturally and necessarily resented this offensive course of proceeding. The action and re-action of these adverse feelings unavoidably generated a disposition naturally hostile and suspicious, and, as recently witnessed at Rangoon, led one party to anticipate the prosecution of hostile designs on the part of the other, and the latter, with more justice, to impute to the former plans of treachery directed to the object of defeating those designs. Hence arose the various irritating acts and proceedings reported in the envoy's late despatches, and hence the impracticability of an approach to accommodation and confidence; since concession on our side, under such circumstances, was obviously inadmissible, and without such concession, suspicion and alarm could scarcely be eradicated from the minds of the Burmese. Captain Canning's able and discreet conduct, however, had ultimately produced a state of affairs which precluded the necessity of adopting the language and measures of resentment towards the Burmese government, and had prepared the way for that conciliatory and co-operative system which recent occurrences had rendered advisable, and which we have already described. The two governments, instead of acting as hitherto under the influence of adverse sentiments and feelings, might (under the view of circumstances which we then entertained) now apparently pursue a line of conduct consistent with the views and wishes of both. By the renewal of Kingberring's aggression, therefore, a new source of union between the two states seemed to be created, since the measures which government found itself at liberty and was anxious to adopt, in the hope of suppressing the evils of commotion and disorder on the frontier, and within the limits of its eastern territory, were in unison with the just and legitimate objects of the state of Ava, and were of a nature to demonstrate to the latter the sincerity of our uniform assertions; to obviate the suggestions of suspicion and alarm, and to remove every motive on the part of that state to the commission of acts incompatible with the preservation of harmony and peace.

58. We stated the preceding observation to Captain Canning, for the purpose of placing in a distinct point of view the spirit which should regulate his language and proceedings, we added, however, that if, unfortunately, the anticipated result of the late occurrences in Arracan should be disappointed, if irritated by the renewal of the invasion of Arracan, disbelieving the envoy's explanations, and distrusting the communications and offers of this government, the members of the administration of Rangoon, at the suggestion of their own perverted judgment, or under the orders of the court of Ava, should renew their insults and aggressions in a manner to render his continuance at Rangoon unprofitable to the public service, and incompatible with the dignity of the government which he represented, the envoy might consider himself at liberty to retire, without awaiting the result of a reference to the presidency; but even in that event, we desired that his retreat should, if possible, be conducted in the mode prescribed by our instructions of the 2d of May.

59. After authorizing the envoy's retreat, under the circumstances above contemplated, we proceeded to furnish him with some additional directions for the regulation regulation of his conduct on the receipt, at Rangoon, of the intelligence of Kingberring's renewed aggressions, which, as under the subsequent change of affairs they became inapplicable, we do not consider it necessary to detail.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
1 August 1812.

60. We then proceeded to communicate to Captain Canning our sentiments and instructions upon such points of his last despatch, and of that of the 6th of May, (the substance of which we stated to your honourable court in our letter of the 4th of June,) as appeared to require particular notice, and had not been considered in the preceding part of our instructions.

61. In the first place, we signified to the envoy generally that we found just reason to ascribe to him, with reference to the transactions reported in these despatches, the same degree of zeal, judgment and discretion, and the same firmness and decision in maintaining the privileges of his representative character, and in supporting the dignity of the British government, which had so eminently distinguished his anterior proceedings; this general observation precluding the necessity of adverting to each particular transaction related in the despatches now under consideration, and we therefore noticed those only which required some special remark, in addition to the general expression of that unqualified approbation which the envoy's proceedings so justly claimed.

62. For our sentiments on the three first parts of reference in the order of Captain Canning's report of transactions, viz. the disposal of the presents from the court of Ava, in the event of his not proceeding up the country, his conduct in affording protection to the family of Mr. Carey, and his suggestion that some attempt might be made in effecting a final adjustment of affairs between the two states, to obtain the exemption of female children of Europeans from the operation of the rule which prohibits their emigration, we take the liberty of referring your honourable court to the concluding part of the 23d and following paragraphs of our instructions to Captain Canning.

63. The next subject on which we stated our sentiments and resolutions, was the question of the surrender of the insurgent chiefs, in the event of their falling into our hands, which formed a principal topic of Captain Canning's conference with the viceroy at the interview alluded to in his despatch of the 6th of May, on which he had stated some observations and suggestions in both his despatches now under review.

64. We approved the tenor of Captain Canning's replies to the questions and remarks of the viceroy, relative to the surrender of the fugitive chiefs; but we noticed that the viceroy's statement of the case of the three chiefs, Kingberring, Laumboo, and Muckloo, was not altogether correct, at least with regard to the two last, since the viceroy's narrative implied that Laumboo and Muckloo, as well as Kingberring, resided under the protection of the British government at the period of Kingberring's first invasion of Arracan, whereas, in fact, that assertion was applicable only to the latter, who was joined by the two former after he had entered Arracan. Whether or not Laumboo and Muckloo, as alleged by the viceroy, originally obtained with Kingberring an asylum in the British territories, after being expelled from Arracan by the Burmese forces, and a demand for the surrender of all three was made and rejected, were points not within our recollection at the time of replying to Captain Canning's letter; nor was the determination of them of sufficient importance to require the delay of searching the records for the purpose of determining them: all that was necessary to establish, in adverting to the viceroy's narrative, was, that Kingberring was the only one of the insurgents residing under our protection at the period of the first invasion, as the demand upon us was therefore the less strong with respect to the other chiefs, for whose conduct we could not in any degree be rendered responsible.

65. We observed that the expedient suggested by the viceroy, and referred by Captain Canning to our consideration, of consenting to the surrender of Kingberring in the event of his seizure, resolving, at the same time, to deny in that event his being in our custody, was insuperably opposed by the observations which Captain Canning stated in his conference with the viceroy; for, as Captain Canning justly and properly remarked, it would be beneath the dignity and power of the British government, if Kingberring were really in our possession, to screen itself by a falsehood from a line of conduct which it would not pursue unless it were honourable and just; and the denial of the fugitive chiefs, and particularly Kingberring, being in our power, would probably be nugatory and useless, as it was not likely that their capture would be effected without the knowledge of the Burmese officers; neither could we judge it advisable to rest a refusal to surrender Kingberring on the conduct of the Burmese government, as suggested by the envoy in the 13th paragraph of his despatch, No. 7. Their conduct, if assumed as the basis of complaint and accusation, would, we observed, require on our part a course of proceeding different from the mere rejection of a demand for the surrender of a delinquent: it could not, indeed, be consistently assigned as the motive of our refusal, unless we acknowledged, independently of that motive, an obligation to accede to the demand,—an obligation which, we observed, we were not prepared to recognize. Supposing the person of Kingberring to have been secured by our officers, we stated that we conceived that the absolute right of the Burmese government, with regard to that chief, extended no further than to expect that he should be effectually prevented from molesting the Burmese territories in future. That argument was founded principally on the barbarous habits and practices of that nation. The question might admit at least of a different practical result, if not of an opposite solution, if a regular and civilized system of judicial administration prevailed in the state of Ava; but we could not but concur with Captain Canning in the sentiment, that humanity revolts at the notion of surrendering a fellow-creature, whatever may be the magnitude of his offence, to the summary decrees of vindictive cruelty, which would in this instance, we were convinced, be inflicted in its most horrid and sanguinary form: still more so in the case of offences which, like those of Kingberring, fall considerably short of crimes of the deepest dye, and are susceptible of palliation; offences, too, which owe their origin to the violence and injustice of the power which desires to punish them. And we added, that a government could not be required, as a matter of right, to be accessory to an act of cruelty and inhumanity.

66. We observed, however, that even under this view of the subject, we should be justified in resolving to surrender the criminal, if the evils and calamities of a war, not otherwise rendered necessary, were to be the certain consequence of a refusal. We could not be required to incur the hazards and charges of a national contest for the sole purpose of protecting an individual whose death could not be deemed an inequitable expiation of his offences. We may here remark, in further support of this sentiment, that by taking advantage of the asylum which he found within our territories, to levy war upon a neighbouring and friendly state, Kingberring committed an act of the highest ingratitude towards the government which protected him. He returned injury for benefits received, and consequently forfeited all title to consideration and favour. It can scarcely be considered within the limits of public obligation to expose the state to the evils of a war for the sole purpose of preserving the life of a man who had already so grossly abused its anterior protection.

67. The observations stated by Captain Canning in the 13th paragraph of his letter of the 6th of May, regarding the advantages with which the British government would enter upon a contest with the power of Ava, were unquestionably well founded. The coasts and provinces of that country are certainly exposed to our attack without the means of defence, and the only part of our territory accessible to the Burmese forces might with ease be effectually protected. Of our complete and speedy success in the war, therefore, little doubt could be entertained. We observed, that the expediency or in expediency of engaging in a contest with the state of Ava did not altogether depend upon the advantages with which it might be undertaken, and the prospect of success; that great inconvenience and embarrassment would attend it with reference to other interests and exigencies of the public service, the details of which it was unnecessary to explain to the envoy; and we should consider the extension of our dominion to the eastward and southward to be more burthensome than beneficial; and that those considerations outweighed on the whole, at least at that time, the object which we allowed to be desirable, of checking the arrogance and presumption of that weak and contemptible state.

68. The considerations above stated suggested the course to be pursued by the envoy in his negotiations with the Burmese government relative to the surrender of the insurgent chiefs.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
1 August 1812.

69. Captain Canning was apprised that the grounds on which we founded our aversion to the surrender of Kingberring, and consequently in a still greater degree of the other chiefs, might be stated in addition to the arguments which he had already employed. He was authorized to admit, in his discussion of the subject, that after what had passed, the Burmese government had a title to expect, in the event of Kingberring and his principal associates being apprehended by the British officers, that effectual measures should be adopted by our government to place them in a condition which should prevent their again molesting the dominions of Ava, and he was empowered to afford the most positive assurances to that effect; but he was instructed to maintain that the right of the Burmese government, with respect to those persons, extended no farther.

70. We concluded our instructions on this point by expressing our expectations that these assurances, combined also with the measures and arrangements which the envoy was authorized to declare the resolution of this government to adopt, would be sufficient to satisfy the Burmese authorities. If, however, they should still insist on a promise of surrendering Kingberring, and no alternative should appear to be left but a compliance with that demand, or the prosecution of measures of aggression and hostility on their part, the envoy was directed to refer the case to our consideration, without affording to the Burmese government any reason to infer, from that reference, that its demand would be accorded.

71. We now proceed to advert to the intelligence received from Chittagong, which induced us to alter our resolution with respect to Captain Canning's continuance at Rangoon.

72. On the 17th of June the satisfactory intelligence reached us of the total failure of Kingberring's lately renewed expedition into Arracan.

73. It appears, that at the period of his incursion, a part of the Burmese force remained at a short distance from the frontier, and on the advance of Kingberring's force, attacked and defeated it. The fugitive Mugs were driven back into the province of Chittagong, whither Kingberring himself was also supposed to have retreated. Some of the former were seized by our detachments, together with one of Kingberring's chiefs, called Moonapoo, said to be his cousin.

74. The correspondence relating to these events is recorded on the consultation of the dates noted in the margin; and we beg leave to refer your honourable court to that correspondence for a more circumstantial account of this satisfactory result of Kingberring's renewed attempt to disturb the tranquillity of Arracan, and for the details of the measures which we in consequence adopted, through the authority of the magistrate of Chittagong.

Secret Cons.
19 June, 18 & 20.
D^o d^o, 25 June,
37 & 43.

75. Your honourable court will observe, that the Burmese troops did not pursue the fugitives, and that no demand for their surrender, nor any representation on the subject of the late incursion, had been received by the magistrate of Chittagong from the Burmese chiefs in Arracan. We ascribed this forbearance to the effect of the orders issued from the court of Ava, in consequence of the former proceedings of the Burmese chiefs, which the court had disapproved and disavowed, and of the viceroy's letter to the commander of the Burmese troops, Tyndapo; and we concurred in the conjecture of the magistrate, stated by him to the officer commanding at Chittagong, that the letter addressed by the magistrate to the rajah of Arracan, on the subject of the late incursion, had been referred to the court of Ava, and that the Burmese chiefs awaited instructions for their further proceedings.

76. In his letter announcing the discomfiture of the insurgents, the magistrate suggested the issue of a proclamation, offering a reward for the apprehension of Kingberring, a suggestion which had been anticipated by our instructions to him of the 12th June; but he was of course directed to modify the tenor of the prescribed proclamation, as far as was necessary, to adopt it to the state of affairs existing at the period of his receiving the orders above mentioned.

77. In the event stated by the magistrate in his despatch, referred to in the foregoing paragraph, that of his receiving a letter from either of the Burmese chiefs, demanding the surrender of Kingberring, he was desired to signify in reply, that specific instructions had been transmitted to the British envoy at Rangoon in order order to enable him to adjust the question of the surrender of the fugitive chiefs with the government of Ava.

Gov. Gen. in council,

78. We signified to the magistrate our desire that such of the Mugs belonging to the province of Chittagong, who joined the standard of Kingberring in his late invasion of Arracan, as might be apprehended, should be kept in confinement with a view (as alluded to in the 30th paragraph of this letter) to their eventual removal to a distant quarter of the company's territories.

79. Your honourable court will observe, that the magistrate was prepared to adopt some very proper measures and arrangements in the case of Burmese troops crossing into our territory. This event, however, we consider to be improbable.

80. The commanding officer at Chittagong, adverting to the sickly state of the troops which had been for precaution stationed to the southward of the province, suggested the propriety of withdrawing them from that advanced position. We had no hesitation in sanctioning that measure, as there appeared little probability of any design on the part of the Burmese to violate our territory, a design which, if even meditated, we had no doubt would be laid aside when the chiefs should have received the communication directed to be conveyed to them in the instructions to the magistrate of the 12th of June.

81. We directed the emigrant chief, Moonapoo, to be sent to Dacca, where he will be treated and guarded in the same manner as the other chief, Nuckloo.

82. Shortly after the despatch of our first instructions to the magistrate of Chittagong, consequent to our receipt of the intelligence of Kingberring's discomfiture, we received a further despatch from Captain Canning, dated the 5th of June, which will be found recorded as per margin.

83. The receipt of this despatch enabled us to frame our final instructions to that officer, with the advantage of the most recent information both from our eastern frontier and from Rangoon.

84. That despatch was written subsequently to the envoy's receipt of our orders of the 2d of May, transmitted by the honourable company's cruizer, Ariel, directing him to return to Bengal.

85. The envoy commences his despatch by expressing his gratification at receiving the approbation of government, expressed in the chief secretary's letter of the 2d ultimo, and then proceeds to describe the obstacles which opposed his immediate departure in compliance with orders of recal, and his resolution to suspend his retreat until the return of the Amboyna, which he had despatched on the 26th May to Bengal for supplies for the mission, and for the purpose of conveying his despatches.

86. We shall advert to Captain Canning's observations regarding the suspension of his return in a subsequent part of this letter, and proceed in the first place to describe the state of affairs at Rangoon at the period of the arrival of the Ariel, and at the date of Captain Canning's letter.

87. A considerable degree of ferment and alarm was excited by the arrival of an additional vessel of war at Rangoon. Captain Canning, however, concluding that a cruizer would be sent, had anticipated this effect by informing the viceroy of the probable arrival of a vessel of that description, and at the same time assured him that even supposing the late events at Rangoon, and his refusal to pay the money on account of the ship Elephant, might have excited a degree of irritation on the part of the British government under the existing state of affairs, no hostile measures would be resorted to.

88. A note from the commander of the Ariel to the address of the envoy, announcing his arrival, was carried to the council; some of the inferior and ignorant members of which urgently insisted on its being opened. The viceroy however, assuming a tone of unusual energy and decision, firmly rejected the suggestion, and sent the note with the seal unbroken to the envoy. He at the same time intimated his wish that the Ariel should not come up to town, stating however, that the envoy was at liberty to despatch a boat for the packets brought in that vessel.

89. The envoy sent a suitable reply, informing the viceroy that, as perfect harmony subsisted between the government and the mission, there appeared to be no occasion for the Ariel's proceeding at all up to the town.

90. Almost immediately after the arrival of the Ariel the viceroy sent a message to Captain Canning, anxiously inquiring about the nature of the orders he had received from Bengal.

91. Captain Canning, not wishing to give a positive or final answer until the receipt of advices from Bengal by the return of the Amboyna, stated in general terms that the intentions of the British government were entirely amicable, that the governor general in council was disposed to view the late occurrences at Rangoon in the most favourable light, that all matters appeared to have been amicably settled on the frontier of Chittagong by the mutual retreat of the British and Burmese forces, and therefore, as no subject of dispute or contention remained, and as the period of his residence in that country had already been unusually protracted, he saw no occasion for his proceeding to the capital: that the principal object of his mission was to convey an assurance to the Burmese government that the British government was totally unconcerned in the insurrection of Kingberring, and that the fact, he trusted, had been established in the most satisfactory manner: that the question regarding the ship Elephant, which had formed a secondary object of the mission, had also been adjusted, and that therefore nothing appeared to remain that could require his presence at court. The envoy concluded by pointing out the additional proof of the friendly sentiments of the British government manifested by the order which he had received to forward the governor-general's presents for the king and the engy praw, notwithstanding the envoy did not himself proceed to court.

92. The viceroy expressed a desire to know whether the sentiments stated by Captain Canning were merely his own, or whether he had received instructions to return to Bengal.

93. The envoy, not wishing to give a final answer, replied, that such sentiments were entertained by the British government; but that he could not answer the viceroy's question conclusively until the return of the Amboyna; and added some further assurances of the pacific disposition of the British government.

94. The viceroy appeared much surprised and concerned that there was so little prospect of the envoy's advance to Ummeerapoor; he adverted to the envoy's former intention to visit the capital, to the invitations which he had received, and to the compliance of the government of Ava with his requisitions; he observed, that the envoy's refusal to proceed up the country would be attributed by the engy praw to no other motive than distrust and suspicion, and that if Captain Canning returned without visiting the court, no future envoy from the British government would probably receive a similar invitation.

95. The envoy replied, that he should certainly not leave the country without distinctly apprising the engy praw by letter of his motives for so doing, which would entirely exculpate the viceroy from any share of blame on the occasion. He then pointed out the satisfactory change of affairs which had taken place, which would render his journey to the capital merely a visit of ceremony. He observed, however, that if he did return to Bengal without repairing to court, it must be ascribed to the conduct of the Rangoon government, which had delayed to supply him with that information respecting the sentiments of the superior government which would have enabled him to proceed to the capital, and to have already returned to Rangoon. With regard to the observation of the viceroy, that no future British envoy would be invited to proceed to court, the envoy remarked, that it was not likely that the British government would have any request to make to the court of Ava; that, should another mission at any future time be deputed, the object of it would be, as on the present occasion, to prevent misunderstanding between the two governments; and that therefore, if the court should refuse to receive it with proper distinction, the consequences would rest with them; but that if the envoy's departure should take place under such an impression, he did not think that a British mission would hastily be exposed to a similar mortification.

96. During this long conference the viceroy only once mentioned in a cursory manner the subject of the surrender of the refugee chiefs, and even then acknowledged, ledged, that as they had not sought an asylum within our territory no question could arise on the subject of their surrender.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in Council,

97. The viceroy at length appeared satisfied with the reasons assigned by the envoy for his probable return to Bengal; which, he at last said, he trusted might take place without giving offence to the court. To prove that he did not himself entertain the slightest suspicion or mistrust on that account, he accepted the envoy's invitation to assist at an entertainment given the next day in honour of his Britannic Majesty's birth-day.

98. In conclusion of his satisfactory report of the restoration of harmony and confidence, the envoy added, that the presence of the Malabar cruizer no longer excited suspicion or jealousy; and that, at the viceroy's particular request, the gentlemen of the mission had for some time past resumed their usual excursions into the country.

99. The reasons alleged by Captain Canning for suspending his retreat on the arrival of the Ariel were, first, that having despatched the honourable company's cruizer Amboyna to Bengal for supplies, the means of transporting the mission to Calcutta would be so circumscribed as to render its return under those circumstances extremely embarrassing, if not dangerous, at that season of the year; that the receipt by government of his despatch of the 23d May might possibly occasion some alteration in the system which we might deem it expedient to pursue with regard to his negotiations; that if his departure were to take place so immediately after the arrival of the Ariel, it would undoubtedly excite much distrust and alarm on the part of the Rangoon government, which the shortness of the time would not have afforded leisure to dispel, whereas the present delay afforded time for adducing satisfactory reasons, which would, he trusted, remove all jealousy and apprehension; that his abrupt departure would militate against the wish of government with respect to the Europeans settled at Rangoon, who would naturally feel alarmed at so sudden a measure, and be induced to quit the place; but that under his delayed return, he had reason to believe that all, with the exception perhaps of only one person, would continue to carry on their concerns as usual. As a last consideration, the envoy referred to the cordial understanding subsisting between himself and the Rangoon government, which precluded all danger of any offensive or unwarrantable act on their part.

100. We lost no time in furnishing Captain Canning with our final instructions under the improved condition of our relations with the government of Ava.

101. After apprising him of the events which had taken place in Arracan, as reported in the magistrate of Chittagong's despatches, of which we transmitted him copies, we observed that under all those circumstances, affairs might be considered to have reverted to the state which existed at the period of the departure of the Ariel from Bengal, and which suggested the expediency of Captain Canning's recal. This last attempt of Kingberring evidently appeared to have been made with means of preparation and success, far inferior to those which the first accounts afforded reason to suppose that he possessed and as it had proved abortive, we were of opinion that the considerations which had suggested the expediency of Captain Canning's continuance at Rangoon had ceased to operate, and those which rendered advisable his return to the presidency had resumed their ascendancy in our judgment; for we could not but consider the protracted residence of a British envoy at Rangoon, for purposes which might be termed merely defensive against unjust accusations, or inadmissible demands preferred or expected on the part of the state of Ava, as derogatory to the dignity of the British government.

102. We observed, that under the uncertainty which existed at the date of our recent orders with regard to the result of the late invasion, there were ends to be answered by the envoy's continuance which divested it of that objection. It would have afforded an assurance of our desire to maintain the resolutions of amity, notwithstanding the occurrence of circumstances apparently tending to disturb them, whilst his retreat might produce an opposite effect, and his presence would have enabled him to restrain proceedings of a hostile or intemperate character on the part of the Burmese government which might have led to a rupture, and to communicate authentic representations to the local authorities regarding events and transactions as they arose, of a nature to obviate misconception, and compose animosity animosity; that these were offices of friendship due from a powerful state towards a weaker one, and the envoy's continuance at Rangoon for the purpose of rendering those offices would have been compatible with the dignity of the government which he represented, but that the expediency of the envoy's remaining had ceased with the occasion which suggested it. We therefore informed the envoy that we deemed it advisable that he should return forthwith to Bengal.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
1 August 1812.

103. Your honourable court will perceive, as we noticed to Captain Canning, that from the tenor of his last-mentioned despatch, no inconvenience or embarrassment is likely to attend the measure of his recal, as, under the circumstances which prevented his retreat on the arrival of the Ariel, the exigency of which we entirely admit, the envoy with great propriety prepared the minds of the viceroy and the public to expect his recal on the return of the Amboyna, and with considerable address succeeded in reconciling the former to that measure, and the late attempt of Kingberring having terminated without the least probability of its renewal, no obstacles seem likely to arise from that occurrence.

104. We then adverted to the reasons stated in the 40th paragraph of this letter, which rendered it proper to transmit to Captain Canning the instructions of the 12th ultimo, notwithstanding the present change of resolution with regard to his continuance at Rangoon, and the alteration in the state of affairs in Arracan. We were of opinion that the communication to the government of Rangoon of the measures contemplated in that despatch would tend still more to reconcile it to the envoy's return, and that it would not fail to remove all suspicion, if any were entertained, of our having encouraged or assisted the second incursion of Kingberring.

105. We signified our wish that the envoy should take leave of the viceroy and the government of Rangoon as soon as practicable after he had made the requisite and prescribed communications relative to the late events in Arracan, to the measures pursued by this government in consequence, and to his recal. We stated our expectation, that the question regarding the surrender of the fugitive chiefs, would probably be revived before the envoy's departure, but that it did not appear to us to be necessary that he should primarily bring it under discussion.

106. Under the continual vicissitude of events, we were aware that at the period of the envoy's receipt of our present despatches, a state of affairs might exist at Rangoon which might render his immediate return unadvisable with reference to the views and expectations on which his recal was founded, but we enjoined the envoy to understand it to be our earnest desire that his mission should terminate, and that therefore he was not to protract his continuance at Rangoon excepting under circumstances of absolute and urgent necessity; and even if that exigency should arise, we prohibited him from consenting to proceed to the capital, as the objections to that measure, stated in the instructions of the 12th June, were not in our judgment materially weakened by the issue of the late disturbances in Arracan, and indeed any events that could require the prolongation of his mission, would add to the force of those objections.

107. These instructions concluded with some directions regarding the disposal of the money received by the envoy on account of the ship Elephant; for particular information concerning which, and for some observations of inferior importance not noticed in this abstract, we beg leave to refer your honourable court to the consultations of the annexed date, on which those instructions are recorded.

Secret Cons.
25 June,
N° 47.

108. In reply to the orders of the 12th of June, the magistrate of Chittagong stated his reasons for having issued two proclamations, framed according to those instructions; one prohibiting all persons from harbouring or assisting Kingberring, the other offering the prescribed reward for the apprehension of himself or his principal adherents. The magistrate's motive for issuing distinct proclamations was, that he did not judge it necessary to apprise the rajah of Arracan of the reward offered by government for Kingberring's apprehension; but it should be construed by the rajah into a pledge on the part of government for the surrender of the person of Kingberring to the Burmese power, if apprehended.

109. The precaution, however, which suggested to the magistrate the expediency of withholding a communication on the latter subject to the rajah appearing to us to be quite unnecessary, we desired Mr. Pechell to take an early opportunity of transmitting to the rajah a copy of the second proclamation.

Chittagong, 22d of
June; to d^o, 4th of July.

Magistrate of Chit-
tagong, 4th July.

110. As the above-mentioned letter from the magistrate of Chittagong is not included in the record of the broken set of our proceedings, transmitted in the honourable company's freighted ships now under despatch, we have the honour to enclose copies of that document, and the reply written to your chief secretary, separate numbers in the packet.

111. We have also the honour to enclose for the information of your honourable court, copies of a despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, dated the 4th ultimo, transmitting the rajah of Arracan's reply to the letter addressed to him on the 1st of June by Mr. Pechell.

112. The letter commences with an assertion that Kingberring and his chiefs, after their first discomfiture, retreated into the company's territory, where they were protected by the magistrate and the British officers. It then adverts to the letters which had been written on this subject by the magistrate, as containing a positive promise to seize and surrender Kingberring and his accomplices; quotes the demand for the retreat of the Burmese troops from the frontier; and states, that the troops did retire agreeably to that requisition, and because of the approach of the rainy season. It then refers to Kingberring's second invasion, and alleges that the magistrate and the commanding officer of the British troops had written to the rajah declaring their inability to seize Kingberring, because of the number of men he had collected. Charges them, therefore, with inconsistency, and with a breach of faith; and concludes with a declaration that this matter must produce a war between the two nations.

113. We considered the answer of the rajah of Arracan to be not merely unsatisfactory, but insolent; and we therefore deemed it necessary that a reply should be written by the magistrate, in substance to the following effect.

114. In the first place the magistrate was directed to point out to the rajah his perversion of the terms of the magistrate's letter. He was then to observe to the rajah, that the British government having repeatedly declared and demonstrated that the invasion of Arracan was undertaken without even the knowledge of its officers, and that far from encouraging, it was anxious to prevent the occurrence of such outrages, the British Government could not induce the rajah's perseverance in assertions of an opposite tendency. That it had afforded the convincing proofs of its desire to maintain the relations of amity and good understanding between the two states, since it had borne aggression, insult and menace, without retaliation. That when the British officers were apprised of the incursions of Kingberring into Arracan, they employed, on both occasions, every effort in their power to prevent that chieftain from deriving the means of prosecuting his designs from the inhabitants and the resources of the British territory; and that especially on the last occasion, the British government pursued the additional measures for that purpose which the magistrate communicated to the rajah in his last letter; a communication which the rajah, instead of receiving as he ought, with acknowledgements, he had answered in the language of insolence, accusation, and menace. That his letter was considered as affording such provocations as would induce the British government to seek immediate reparation, and adopt, without further remonstrance, measures calculated to assert and maintain its own honour, but at the same time productive of an open rupture between the two states, if it were not convinced, agreeably to recent experience, that the unbecoming and irritating language employed by the rajah of Arracan and Tyndapo in their communications to our government were entirely unauthorized by the king of Ava, and directly contrary to his majesty's sentiments and commands. That for these reasons the British government still maintained its desire for peace and amity, and would still pursue such measures as were practicable, consistently with its laws and principles, with a view to prevent the territory of the king of Ava from being disturbed by the inhabitants of its own. That the efforts employed for the apprehension of Kingberring and his chief associates would still be continued, but that it apprehended the question of their surrender would be determined by negotiation between the two courts, and that the magistrate, therefore, would not enter into any further correspondence on it with the rajah or Tyndapo. Mr. Pechell was moreover directed to state distinctly to the rajah, that however anxious the British government was to preserve the long-established friendship with the state of Ava, yet that any actual attempt to carry the threats so often made by him and Tyndapo into into execution would be repelled by force, and would be considered as a signal given by himself of open and general hostilities between the two governments. The magistrate was instructed to add, that no answer would in future be returned to any letter from either, which, like that now acknowledged, might be couched in offensive terms. The magistrate was further to state, that measures would be taken to communicate copies of the rajah's last letter, and of the magistrate's present reply, to the court of Ava.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
1 August 1812.

115. We also desired the magistrate to intimate to the rajah that he had addressed him in the terms prescribed by the above instructions, by the express directions of his government.

116. As our instructions to the magistrate on this occasion contain little more than what we have detailed in the preceding paragraphs, we deem it unnecessary to transmit a copy of it in this letter.

117. The last document to which we shall have occasion to refer in this despatch is a letter from the magistrate of Chittagong, dated the 7th of July, reporting his proceedings under the instructions of government of the 12th of June, with a view to ascertain the place of Kingberring's concealment antecedently to his late invasion of Arracan. It appears that the magistrate had not been enabled to ascertain with precision the place where Kingberring was concealed during the period above mentioned, nor the persons by whom he was harboured.

Magistrate of Chit-
tagong, 7th July.

118. Kingberring was stated by the last accounts to be still in the Burmese territories, but was expected shortly to cross over the Nauf river into the province of Chittagong.

119. The magistrate's letter concludes with the communication of some additional measures which he proposed to adopt for the purpose of effecting the apprehension of Kingberring. Copies of his last letter, and of our instructions in reply, we have the honour to enclose, for the information of your honourable court.

To magistrate of
24th July.

120. Such is the state of these long-protracted and troublesome transactions between the two states. As it is not at all probable that the Burmese troops will now commit aggressions on our territory, we do not anticipate the probability of our being compelled to prosecute any hostile measures against that nation; and we hope by the return of Captain Canning, which may be expected before the expiration of the present month, to be relieved from the repetition of those vexatious occurrences and altercations which have hitherto occupied so large a portion of our time and attention.

We have the honour to be, with the greatest respect,
Honourable Sirs,
Your most faithful humble servants,

Extract from a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 2d October 1812.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
2 October 1812.

8. REFERRING to our last address of the 1st of August on the affairs of Ava, we have the satisfaction to report to your honourable committee the return of Captain Canning, the envoy to the Burmese government, after having successfully carried into execution our instructions of the 12th and 25th of June; the details of which we communicated in our address above mentioned. Captain Canning's narrative of transactions and events up to the period of his quitting Rangoon is interesting and important; and we shall have the honour of adverting to the details of it, as well as of transmitting a copy of it, in our next despatch on this subject. On the present occasion, we shall briefly state, that although the government of Ava manifested the most anxious solicitude to obtain the presence of the envoy at the court of Ummeerapoor, and even went so far as to transmit repeated orders to the viceroy of Pegu, directing him to send the envoy up to court by compulsory means, with an evident design of placing his person under restraint; yet the firmness, ability and discretion of Captain Canning, enabled him to elude the efforts of persuasion and of art employed for his detention, without compromising the dignity of the British government, or incurring the hazard of a rupture with the state of Ava, and to quit the port of Rangoon on terms of cordiality and friendship with the local government, whilst he conveyed such representations to the superior authorities of Ava as were calculated to obviate, on their part, any apprehension that his departure was connected with intentions inconsistent with the preservation of the relations of amity between the two states, and were otherwise also adapted to the maintenance of those relations. For as the orders above alluded to were secret, and not supposed to be known to the envoy, he was not under the necessity of noticing them in his communications with the two courts; he therefore prudently abstained from any representation on the subject, leaving us entirely at liberty either to resent this gross violation of the laws of international intercourse, or to suffer it to pass unnoticed. It is superfluous to add, that as the dignity and interest of the British government do not of necessity require the manifestation of our resentment, we do not propose to adopt any measure that can lead to the interruption of the amity subsisting between the two states.

9. It may be proper to add, that previously to Captain Canning's departure from Rangoon, the viceroy signified to him his confident expectation that the court of Ava would despatch an envoy to Bengal, principally for the purpose of negotiating for the surrender of such of the insurgent chiefs who had invaded Arracan as should fall into our hands.

10. We learned with concern that the viceroy of Pegu had been removed from his station, principally, it was understood, in consequence of the failure of his endeavours to effect the departure of Captain Canning for the capital. He was, however, to be succeeded by a person who had formerly held that station, and who is considered to be well affected towards the British Government.

11. On the whole we consider this mission to have been productive of material benefit. The presence and communications of Captain Canning have probably prevented the arrogant and ignorant government of Ava from pursuing measures which would have produced the inconvenient necessity of having recourse to arms for the vindication of our honour from insult and injury, or for the security of our possessions from the incursions of the Burmese troops, and the able, judicious, and resolute conduct of the envoy appears to have left impressions of the British character and power, calculated to repress the arrogance, and awake the caution of the weak and contemptible government of Ava in future.

12. The immediate object of the mission has been accomplished, by removing from the minds of the chief authorities of that government the belief of our participation in the invasion of Arracan by Kingberring, and producing the retreat of the Burmese army from the frontier of Chittagong, as well as by inclining that government to depend for the attainment of its primary object, the surrender of the insurgent chiefs, rather upon negotiation than upon the measure or employment of its arms.

13. Since the discomfiture of Kingberring, reported in our last despatch, he has emerged from his concealment, and collecting some followers has committed depredations in the southern parts of the province of Chittagong. The utmost activity has been employed by the magistrate to effect his apprehension, but hitherto without success, we still however entertain the hope of accomplishing that desirable object. Since the retreat of the Burmese army, no Burmese troops have re-appeared on the frontier.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 21st October 1812.

Honourable Sirs,

IN our letter to the honourable the secret committee, dated the 2d instant, transmitted by His Majesty's ship Modeste, we had the honour to report the return of Captain Canning from his mission to the Burmese government, after having successfully cessfully carried into execution our instructions of the 12th and 25th of June, and briefly adverted to the state of our relations with Ava at the period when Captain Canning quitted Rangoon. Our letter of the 1st of August to the address of your honourable court communicated to you the latest intelligence of affairs at Rangoon, and on our eastern frontier, then in our possession, and apprised you of the peremptory instructions which we had transmitted to Captain Canning, directing his immediate retreat from Rangoon. We shall now have the honour to advert to Captain Canning's last letter, recorded on the consultation noted in the margin, reporting the course of events and transactions from the date of his preceding despatch of the 5th of June, to the period when he finally left the Rangoon river.

Secret Cons.
25 Sept. N^o 1

2. A few days after the despatch of his last letter, the envoy received a confidential message from the viceroy, stating, that although he himself acquiesced in the validity of the reasons adduced by Captain Canning in support of the propriety of his recal, he was extremely apprehensive that the question would be received in a very different light by the court; that if after the repeated invitations which he had received, Captain Canning returned to Bengal without visiting the capital, the viceroy would be held responsible for his departure, and most probably be removed from office. We, therefore, solicited the envoy to concert such measures with him as might render the envoy's return compatible with the viceroy's security. The viceroy then proposed that Captain Canning should address a letter to him, stating, that severe illness prevented him from leaving Rangoon at the present moment, but that if his health should improve, he would not fail to proceed to Ummeerapooora: that he should despatch a gentleman belonging to the mission to the capital in charge of the presents for the king and the engy praw; and lastly, that the Rangoon government should address a letter to the envoy, animadverting in rather harsh terms on his not having sooner proceeded up the country, to the style of which letter the envoy was to pay no attention. The viceroy concluded by requesting a personal conference.

3. The envoy in reply, after expressing his desire to afford the viceroy every degree of assistance compatible with his duty and consistent with truth, stated the impracticability of his feigning indisposition, or of despatching a gentleman of the mission to the capital, though he had no objection to the transmission of the presents; and that with regard to the Rangoon government writing a letter couched in harsh and improper terms, he should be constrained to return such a reply as would little promote the viceroy's views.

4. In consequence of this communication, the letter which the viceroy actually addressed to Captain Canning was framed in unobjectionable terms; it merely referred to the frequent invitations which the king had sent to him, and intimated the viceroy's wish to be informed when Captain Canning would be enabled to leave Rangoon and prosecute his journey towards the capital.

5. On the 15th of June, the day appointed for the conference, the envoy waited on the viceroy.

6. The viceroy commenced the conversation by observing, that the king of Ava considered his will as absolute, and disregarding the forms and usages of other nations, expected his commands to be unreservedly obeyed; that the king had sent Captain Canning three invitations (or orders, as the viceroy termed them,) to proceed to court, and would hold the viceroy responsible for their being declined; that he should regret that matters should proceed to extremity, which would involve a war between the two countries; that he must therefore rely upon the envoy's co-operation for the purpose of preserving undisturbed the relations of peace and harmony, and at the same time of securing the viceroy from the danger to which their interruption would subject him; that an opportunity now offered of effecting these objects in the reply which the envoy might return to the viceroy's letter, which would be forwarded to the court; that if the envoy objected to his proposal of counterfeiting sickness, he should permit one of the gentlemen of his suite to proceed to court in charge of the presents, or at least an officer or midshipman of the Malabar, and countenance pretended indisposition on the part of his interpreter and a proportion of his attendants. The viceroy likewise suggested some other excuses for the suspension of Captain Canning's departure.

7. Considerations of humane regard for the viceroy, and an anxiety to obviate every possible ground of misunderstanding between the two states, to prevent agitation at Rangoon, and to insure the safety and welfare of the Europeans residing there after his departure, induced Captain Canning to neglect no means of announcing to the court with caution and circumspection his resolution to return without visiting Ummeerapoorra; after some conciliatory expressions therefore he observed, that he would hardly believe that the king could entertain the supposition that an envoy from a great and powerful state would be influenced rather by the king's orders than by the instructions of his own government, or that his majesty would be offended at orders of recal being sent to the envoy when the motives of them were explained in the most friendly and satisfactory manner, or would impute blame to the viceroy for not carrying into effect commands which he had not the power to enforce. Captain Canning then proceeded to point out the consequences which must result from an attempt on the part of the local government to execute any violent orders, in the possible event of any such being received from the court,—the destruction of the town by the guns of the Malabar, the loss of numerous lives, inevitable war between the two nations, and all these hazards, the envoy added, would be incurred, with a very faint if any prospect of success, in seizing the individuals belonging to the British mission. The envoy concluded as he had begun, with conciliatory assurances, and stated, that as his chief interpreter was in fact seriously indisposed, several of his people ill, and his provisions and medicines nearly exhausted, he would not object to state those circumstances to the local government as reasons for not proceeding immediately up the country, without however affording cause for the supposition that his visit to the capital depended upon the removal of those obstacles. The envoy also consented to send his sub-interpreter to Ummeerapoorra in charge of the presents, the adoption of which measure the envoy conceived would convey most unequivocally and with the greatest delicacy his intention of not proceeding thither himself. The viceroy appeared satisfied with this discourse, and the envoy on the following day addressed a letter in the spirit of it to the viceroy, by whom a copy of it was shortly after despatched to Ummeerapoorra.

8. Copies of the letters above referred to, marked N° 1 & 2, are annexed to Captain Canning's report.

9. The viceroy's conduct continued to be marked by temperance and propriety until the arrival of an Arab ship in the river, the boat of which, according to the practice observed by the envoy's orders since the attempt to seize his despatches by the Anne, had been taken alongside the Malabar cruiser, for the purpose of securing the earliest intelligence of the arrival of vessels in the port. The viceroy on this occasion addressed a very intemperate letter to Captain Canning, asserting that the detention of the boat was a violation of the rules of the port. Captain Canning, anxious to fulfil the pacific views of the British government, directed the commander of the Malabar to abstain in future from carrying boats close to the cruiser, and to be satisfied with the information which he might obtain from them in open stream.

10. A translation of the viceroy's letter to the envoy is annexed to Captain Canning's report, N° 4; and your honourable court will observe, that the prudent and dignified reply returned by Captain Canning, had the effect of inducing the viceroy to express his contrition for the exceptionable style of his letter.

11. On the 26th of July the honourable company's cruiser Amboyna arrived at the entrance of the river, and her commander Captain Syell having embarked in a boat for the purpose of delivering his despatches to the envoy, was detained at the Chokey.

12. On learning this intelligence, the envoy addressed a spirited remonstrance to the viceroy, and despatched an armed boat in order to effect Captain Syell's release; the envoy reflecting however that the detention of Captain Syell might possibly have taken place without the orders of the viceroy, instructed the officer in charge of the boat not to proceed immediately to release Captain Syell by absolute force, but, in the event of the Burmese chokeydars refusing to liberate him, to limit his exertions to the protection of Captain Syell's person, and the securing of his despatches until further orders.

13. On receiving the envoy's message the viceroy manifested a resentment against the conduct of the people of the Chokey, which Captain Canning had every reason to believe sincere, and immediately issued orders for the release of Captain

Captain Syell, and directed that the persons in charge of the Chokey should be sent up to the town for punishment; as however the viceroy had publicly disavowed their proceedings, and offered every atonement, the envoy did not think proper to demand any further satisfaction.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
21 October 1812.

14. When the envoy visited the viceroy for the purpose of communicating to him the positive orders of recal, which our instructions of the 25th of June, transmitted by the Amboyna, conveyed to Captain Canning, and from the letters from the governor-general to the address of the viceroy and the king, which accompanied our instructions of the 2d of May, forwarded by the honourable company's cruiser Ariel, the viceroy manifested great uneasiness on hearing the intelligence, asserted that Captain Canning's departure would be the signal for his own removal from office, or even greater punishment; he again solicited Captain Canning's aid to relieve him from some share of responsibility, by consenting to adopt his former suggestion with respect to pretended indisposition; he stated that he daily expected the arrival of a fifth order from the court, which might possibly be of a violent nature, and convinced that he could not enforce compliance on Captain Canning's part, he requested that Captain Canning would not take offence at a few shots being fired at the departing vessel, by which he should establish his own exculpation, and he and Captain Canning part with mutual satisfaction and advantage.

15. In reply to this ridiculous proposal the envoy observed, that the execution of the viceroy's scheme would produce all the evil effects of which he had before warned him, in the same degree as if real opposition were intended, and having pointed out to him its absurd and pernicious tendency, the viceroy abandoned the project.

16. Captain Canning then proceeded to communicate to the viceroy the intelligence of Kingberring's second invasion of Arracan, and the measures which had been adopted by the British government, in order to defeat his designs; the viceroy appeared wholly ignorant of Kingberring's renewed aggressions, but manifested great reluctance to believe that every practicable exertions had been employed by the British government for his apprehension. The expression of these doubts drew from Captain Canning a full explanation of the circumstances of the case, and the viceroy adverting to the reward offered for the apprehension of Kingberring and his principal associates, inquired whether they would be delivered up if apprehended; to this question the envoy replied by the recapitulation of his former arguments on the subject, and by stating the insuperable objection entertained by the British government to deliver up their fellow-creatures to torments, at the contemplation of which human nature revolted.

17. To the question of the viceroy, why a reward had been offered for the apprehension of Kingberring and his associates, when it was not our intention to deliver them up? the envoy replied, that a regard for the tranquillity of its own dominions, and a desire to secure, as far as practicable, the security of the territory of its ally, the king of Ava, from aggression, were the objects of the British government, in endeavouring to obtain possession of Kingberring's person. The envoy added, however, that he had received no authority to discuss that point, and that if the king of Ava had claims on that or any other subject to make on the British government, it was expected that he would send an ambassador to Bengal for that purpose; but Captain Canning took the opportunity of advising the viceroy, in the event of such a project being contemplated, to depute a person of rank and respectability, as no beneficial end would be obtained by the mission, as in a recent instance, of a person of low and mean degree.

18. The viceroy answered, that it was his intention to depute an envoy on the part of the king, to demand the surrender of the rebel chiefs, and that he would certainly select an officer of proper rank.

19. On the 31st of July two of the principal officers of the heir apparent arrived at Rangoon from the capital, bearing the fifth order expected by the viceroy, they were stated to have been deputed for the purpose of ascertaining the cause which occasioned the delay in the envoy's proceeding to court, and to have brought an order to the viceroy, simply expressing surprise at the mission not having reached the capital, and directing him to send the envoy and suite up without further loss of time.

20. The deputies waited on Captain Canning, and with an appearance of great secrecy and caution, delivered to him a letter to his address from the engy praw, notifying that the king had removed the present viceroy for having refused to pay the amount demanded by the envoy on account of the ship Elephant, and the reappointment of his predecessor Meendy Tekein in his room. The deputies alleged as a reason for their injunctions of secrecy, that it had not been deemed expedient as yet to communicate even to the viceroy himself the information of his supersession, and they added that they were authorized to make a communication to the envoy on the part of the engy praw, which they desired should be considered as equally confidential.

Gov. Gen. in Council,

21. The communication however was merely a repetition of their previous message, and a renewed expression of the high regard and esteem which the heir apparent entertained for Captain Canning.

22. On the envoy's inquiring whether the deputies were apprised of the attempt on the part of the viceroy to seize his person, they replied that they had heard that the envoy being anxious to proceed to the capital before the receipt of orders, expected by the viceroy, the latter had ordered the gates of the town to be closed in order to prevent him from carrying his design into execution. The deputies added that this conduct on the part of the viceroy operated as an additional motive with the engy praw for superseding him.

23. The envoy, although he had no reason to be entirely satisfied with the conduct of the viceroy, yet as he had latterly manifested a friendly and cordial disposition towards the mission, felt reluctant to complain of his behaviour; Captain Canning therefore expressed in general terms his acknowledgments for the kindness of his majesty, and the prince's wish for his presence at the capital, and apprised the deputies that circumstances prevented him from availing himself of their invitation.

24. With respect to the money on account of the ship Elephant, the envoy observed that that affair had long since been satisfactorily adjusted, and with relation to the report stated to have prevailed at court, that the viceroy had prevented him from proceeding to the capital, Captain Canning assured the deputies that it was totally false and unfounded.

25. The deputies listened to the first part of the envoy's reply with indifference, but when he apprised them that the mandate of the king and the heir apparent would occasion no change in his determination to return to Bengal without visiting the capital, they appeared to be equally surprised and confounded.

26. The envoy afterwards discovered the cause of the extraordinary emotion evinced by the deputies to be, that they were charged with secret orders to the viceroy, directing him to send up the envoy by force if persuasive means should fail, as will appear in the sequel of this narrative.

27. From what passed at this conference, and from the intelligence collected from other quarters, the envoy ascertained that the renewed aggression of Kingberring was either not known at the period of the departure of the deputies from the capital, or had excited little or no sensation at the court.

28. On the 3d of August the envoy received a letter from the viceroy and the members of government, (marked N° 8 of the enclosures annexed to Captain Canning's report,) stating that the communications of the governor-general were perfectly satisfactory to the local government, and that they had no doubt that the tenor of them would excite a similar sentiment in the mind of the king.

29. The 4th of August and the following days were occupied in conferences and ceremonies, which it does not appear necessary to describe in this place, we beg leave, therefore, to refer your honourable court to the 19th and following paragraphs of Captain Canning's report for a detail of them.

30. The envoy having for some days suspected that the orders brought by the deputies contained some particulars of which he had not been apprised, either by them or the viceroy, successfully exerted his endeavours to attain an accurate knowledge of the nature and extent of the orders in question, and ascertained that the engy praw, by command of the king, had, through the deputies, conveyed a positive injunction to the viceroy, directing him, if possible, to send up, without delay, the envoy and his chief interpreter by persuasive means, but in the event of their failure to use force. Captain Canning learned, at the same time, that the viceroy had communicated the above orders to the ragoon and two members of the the government only, and after dwelling on the danger with which any attempt to seize the individuals of the mission would be attended, declared his determination to dismiss the envoy with every mark of friendship and regard, taking on himself the whole responsibility of the procedure. The members, whom he consulted signified their concurrence in the measures which he proposed to adopt.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in Council,
21 October 1814, vol. 1

31. On the 11th of August Captain Canning paid his last visit to the viceroy, employing his usual precautions to prevent treachery, and to defeat any open attempt to detain him; no such attempt, however, was made, which may be attributed, in a great degree, to the precautions adopted by the envoy.

32. After some friendly conversation, Captain Canning apprised the viceroy that he was acquainted with the full extent of the orders brought by the deputies, and stated that, as a mark of confidence, he expected an account of them from the viceroy himself. The viceroy appeared surprised at Captain Canning's communication, but acknowledged the accuracy of his intelligence, admitting that the orders even went so far as to authorize the imposition of manacles on Captain Canning and the head interpreter, in the event of resistance. He repeated, however, his conviction of the folly of any such attempt, and his resolution to maintain his promise of abstaining from any act of violence. He added, that he was aware he hazarded the displeasure of his superiors; but that he was convinced that his majesty and the prince would hereafter approve his moderation.

33. To a question addressed to him by the envoy, relative to the probable situation of the British inhabitants at Rangoon after the departure of the mission, the viceroy replied that Captain Canning need be under no apprehension for the security of the British inhabitants, for as long as the viceroy remained at Rangoon the British residents might rely on the most friendly protection.

34. The next day the viceroy transmitted to the envoy a copy of the letter, which he proposed to address to the governor-general, in reply to his lordship's letter to his address received by the Amboyna.

35. That document is marked N^o 9. of the enclosures annexed to Captain Canning's report, and we entirely concur in the opinion expressed by Captain Canning of the sincere and satisfactory tenor of it.

36. On the 14th of August the appointment of Meendy Tekein (the former viceroy) to be viceroy of Rangoon was formally promulgated, and on the 16th, after some delay in procuring pilots, the mission quitted, without opposition, the Rangoon river.

37. Captain Canning's report concludes with some judicious observations on the relative state of affairs between the British government and the kingdom of Ava, and conveys much interesting information respecting some recent occurrences which have taken place in that country, submitting at the same time, for our consideration, the expediency of putting a stop to the trade between the two countries, as a measure calculated to humble the pride of the Ava government, without proceeding to hostilities, if, notwithstanding the provocations we had received, we should be averse to that extreme proceeding.

38. For the details of those communications, we beg leave to refer your honourable court to the document itself.

39. It is sufficient to observe, with respect to Captain Canning's proposition, that we have not judged it necessary to render the proceedings of the court a ground of war, and that the modified hostility suggested by the envoy, does not by any means appear to us to be expedient.

40. In our address to the secret committee of the 2d instant, we have already stated our sentiments on the result of Captain Canning's mission; it only remains, therefore, to notice the reply, which was addressed to Captain Canning, under our orders to the report of his concluding proceedings.

41. We did not consider it necessary to advert specifically to all the various events and proceedings to which the report related, since none of them suggested any observations inconsistent with the renewed expression of that high approbation of his conduct, which we had repeatedly had occasion to record during the continuance of Captain Canning's mission, and as no further measures founded on them were in our contemplation. But we intimated to Captain Canning our opinion, that he had observed the same system of vigilant and successful attention to the honour and interests of the government in the course of the transactions described in his final report which distinguished his anterior proceedings, and that he had carried into execution our last instructions on the subject of his recal from Rangoon with a degree of judgment and ability, rendered highly conspicuous by the obstacles which opposed his departure, on terms compatible with the maintenance of amity between the two states, but which his prudence and address succeeded in surmounting, without compromising the dignity or interests of the British government, or hazarding the occurrence of ulterior evils.

42. We observed, that we considered Captain Canning not only to have accomplished the objects of his mission in the utmost degree practicable under the disadvantages and difficulties arising from the ignorance and arrogance of the barbarous government to which he had been accredited, by establishing at the courts of Ummeerapoor and Rangoon the belief which, independently of his mission, they could not easily have been induced to admit, that the British government had no concern in the invasion of Kingberring, and by obtaining in consequence the recal of the Burmese troops from the frontier of Chittagong; but to have rendered his mission subservient to purposes of a more general and comprehensive nature, by inspiring the Burmese authorities with juster notions of the character, principles, and power of the British government, by exacting the respect which was due to it, by supplying to those authorities motives of conduct calculated to restrain the ebullitions of their accustomed insolence and haughtiness, and to render practicable, a continuance of the intercourses of amity between the two states, and by acquiring that intimate knowledge of the internal condition of the dominion of Ava, the character of its government, and the state of its power and resources, which future events may render essentially important to the interests of the public service.

43. The reply then proceeded to notice with approbation some particular points of Captain Canning's conduct, and acknowledged, with due commendation, the envoy's report of the meritorious behaviour of the gentlemen attached to or connected with the mission, and of the troops composing his escort.

44. The reply above quoted, is recorded on the consultation of the annexed date.

45. On a review of the several reports of Captain Canning's proceedings in the course of his arduous mission, your honourable court will doubtless concur in the opinion which we have the honour to state, that under circumstances of singular difficulty and embarrassment, and even of personal danger, Captain Canning has successfully maintained the honour of the British name, and the dignity of the British government, and has manifested a degree of firmness, resolution, and judgment, equally creditable to his personal and his official character; that he has defeated the efforts of intimidation, and counteracted the arts of treachery; that he has vindicated the rights of the British government, by maintaining the credit of its assertions and its principles, and by exacting atonements for every violation of the privileges of his ministerial office, and amidst the provocations of an ignorant, weak, and uncivilized court, has precluded the inconvenient necessity of chastizing its presumption, and preserved, unimpaired, the relations of peace, without any sacrifice of interest or of honour.

46. In our letter to the honourable the secret committee of the 2d instant, we adverted to the circumstance of Kingberring having emerged from his concealment, and his having, with a few followers, committed depredations in the southern parts of the province of Chittagong; little change has taken place in the state of affairs in that quarter since the date of that despatch. The exertions of the magistrate for the apprehension of Kingberring, have not yet proved successful; but one of the detachments employed against the insurgents, had obtained possession of the person of Masoom Shekdar, the manager of an estate on the southern frontier of Chittagong, who espoused the cause of Kingberring, and was instrumental in collecting from that estate a body of Mugs, which enabled the latter to undertake his last unsuccessful expedition into Arracan.

47. We shall now proceed to advert, in detail, to such parts of the correspondence with the magistrate of Chittagong as appear to require particular notice, in continuation of our despatch dated the 1st of August last.

48. On the consultation noted in the margin, are recorded two despatches from the magistrate of Chittagong, on the subject of the increased audacity of Kingberring's depredations in the southern part of that district, and reporting the additional measures which the magistrate had adopted for the purpose of seizing his person and expelling his followers from the company's territory.

Secret Cons.
21 Aug. 17 to 25.

49. It appears that two of the civil native officers had been obliged to quit their stations in consequence of the approach of numerous bodies of armed Mugs.

50. Mr. Pechell judiciously despatched a detachment of the provincial battalion stationed at Chittagong, to the quarter infested by the marauders, and intimated the eventual necessity of employing a body of regular troops against the Mugs; but adverting to the unhealthy season of the year for military operations, the malignant climate which the troops would encounter in advancing to the southward in pursuit of Kingberring, and the little prospect of success which could be expected from the operations of regular troops in a close and pestilential country against a body of plunderers possessing the advantage of superior local knowledge, we did not deem it advisable to authorize the march of a body of regulars for that purpose.

51. The reinforced party stationed to the southward, fell in with a body of Kingberring's adherents, and after a slight skirmish seized twelve persons; the rest sought their safety in flight. Adverting to past transactions, and the present state of affairs on the frontier of Chittagong, we deemed it proper to reinforce the troops at that station, and arrangements have accordingly been made for that purpose.

Cons. 25 Sept.
N^o 14 & 15.

52. The despatches from the magistrate, copies of which are transmitted separate numbers in this despatch, contain the latest intelligence we have received of the state of affairs in that quarter.

From magistrate of Chittagong,
dated 28 September,
- 1 October,
- 5 d^o.

53. We have already noticed the seizure of Masoom Sheekdar, for whose apprehension a reward of 1,000 rupees had been offered. The circumstances of another skirmish between the force stationed to the southward and a party of Kingberring's people, and the particulars of the burning and plunder, by a body of Mugs, of the village belonging to Mooruntwunga, the proprietor of the estate of which Masoom was manager, are reported in these despatches.

54. The magistrate, in reporting the seizure of Masoom, requested instructions with respect to the assignment and distribution of the reward promised for the apprehension of that person, and the disposal of the prisoners who had lately been taken by the detachment posted to the southward.

55. We directed the magistrate to be informed that we should suspend our decision relative to the appropriation of the reward, until he should have furnished a detailed report, specifying the number and description of persons concerned in the apprehension of Masoom, and the circumstances under which it was effected. We authorized him to exercise his discretion regarding the disposal of the prisoners taken in the first skirmish, alluded to in the preceding paragraphs, but with respect to the three surviving prisoners who were seized after the audacious outrage perpetrated on the village of Mooruntwunga, we desired him to commit them for trial according to the usual process.

56. In the course of these transactions we received a despatch from the magistrate, recorded as per margin, enclosing copies of instructions, which, in consequence of his having learned that a body of Mug chiefs at Con's bazaar meditated the project of joining Kingberring, he had issued through the commanding officer of the Chittagong provincial battalion, to the native officer commanding the party stationed to the southward, directing him to endeavour to seize them by a most unwarrantable stratagem, which in the sudden emergency of the case the magistrate suggested without due reflection.

N^o 23.

57. It appeared that the magistrate had devised and sanctioned the project of inviting those chiefs to an amicable conference with the soubadar of the detachment of the provincial battalion, Mooruntwunga, and the chief native civil officer, for the ostensible purpose of hearing read a proclamation which had lately been issued under the orders of government, but with the real design of seizing their persons.

Despatch from
Gov. Genl. in council,
21 August 1849.

58. The formation of this project excited in our minds the utmost degree of concern, as we could not but consider it to be in its nature highly disgraceful to the character of the British government, and we deemed it indispensably necessary to manifest our disapprobation in the most unqualified manner.

59. In reply to the notification of this indiscreet and highly exceptionable project, therefore, we desired our chief secretary to state, that we could not express in terms too forcible our utter disapprobation of a system of proceeding so adverse to the principles of a British administration, so injurious to the British character, and so inconsistent with the maxims of public faith and honour, that to entice persons under the mask of amity, and consequently under an implied pledge of security, to meet the officers of government with the deliberate intention of seizing them, was a proceeding that no degree of guilt on their part, no considerations of expediency, advantage or security, on the part of government, could justify—that it was a proceeding which could alone be classed among the insidious practices of rude and barbarous states, which by every civilized nation were contemplated with sentiments of detestation.

60. It was observed to Mr. Pechell, that we were the more surprised at his adopting a measure of this description, because he had been already apprised, by instructions transmitted to him in the month of March last, of the solicitude of government to abstain from the slightest deviation from the straight path of candour and fair dealing in all its transactions; on that occasion we had signified our disapprobation of his having adopted even the language of ambiguity in a letter to the rajah of Arracan, for the avowed purpose of deception, although the object of it was to prevent the irruption of the Burmese army into the province of Chittagong, at a time when the province was destitute of adequate defence.

61. Having adverted to those instructions we observed, that if unfortunately the stratagem described by the magistrate should have been carried into successful execution, the evil would not be confined to the degradation of the British character; that the persons so seized must be immediately released, and their release would not only afford them the opportunity of joining the insurgents, but would add to the belief which the officers of the Burmese government already entertained, and which we had so diligently laboured to counteract, that we indirectly supported and encouraged the hostile projects of Kingberring.

62. It was then added, that in the event contemplated, the necessity of disavowing in a manner the most public a proceeding so injurious to the character of the British government, would impose upon us the painful obligation of removing the magistrate from his situation. In a contrary case, we observed, that we should be guided in our determination of this point by the circumstances which might be found to have attended the progress and result of that imprudent transaction.

63. We were happy to learn from a subsequent despatch written by Mr. Pechell previously to the receipt of our instructions above noticed, that an accidental delay in the soubadar's receipt of his orders, directing the soubadar to endeavour to secure by that unwarrantable stratagem the persons of the Mug chiefs at Con's bazaar, having taken place, circumstances had induced him to revoke those orders. Shortly afterwards we received the letter from Mr. Pechell, recorded as per margin, expressing his extreme concern at having incurred our displeasure in ordering the seizure of the Mug chiefs by stratagem, and affording some explanations of the motives which had influenced him to adopt a measure so highly repugnant to our wishes, and earnestly soliciting that our sentence of removal might be revoked.

64. It was intimated to the magistrate in reply, that our resolution eventually to remove him from his office was not adopted as a measure of punishment, but for the purpose of vindicating the character of the government, which, by the actual execution of the project devised by him for the apprehension of the persons in question, would have sustained an injury that the most public disavowal and the most marked disapprobation of the act could alone have repaired; we therefore stated, that it was highly satisfactory to us to find that the circumstances which fortunately prevented the execution of that project had precluded the necessity of carrying into effect our provisional resolution of removing him from office.

65. In extenuation of his conduct, Mr. Pechell had endeavoured to establish a distinction between the admissibility of measures of deception pursued with respect to to a foreign state, and of stratagems adopted in matters of police. We could not however admit the solidity of this distinction. We observed, that the obligations of faith and probity were equally binding in the foreign and domestic transactions of a government; and that the orders which we had conveyed to him in the month of March last were considered by us to have furnished a rule of conduct applicable to the cases of the Mug chiefs, because those orders referred to general principles of probity which could not vary with their object.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
21 August 1812.

66. We gave Mr. Pechell full credit for motives of public zeal, and for purity of intention, in the adoption of the measure which we had condemned, and expressed our willingness to admit, that with a mind intent on the importance of the object in view, the emergency of the occasion excluded from his contemplation those fundamental principles of conduct which under other circumstances would doubtless have occurred to his recollection.

67. It is superfluous to add, that as the project devised by the magistrate had not been carried into effect, we did not find it necessary to remove him from his office.

68. According to the latest accounts from Chittagong, Kingberring was reported to be in the vicinity of Con's bazaar with a force of about 120 men.

Extract from a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 18th November 1812.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
18 November 1812.

69. WE have no particular information to state with regard to the frontier of Chittagong; Kingberring and his followers continue to commit depredations, and their numbers are said to be increasing. It seems to be the continued object of his policy to compel the Mugs residing in Chittagong to join him, and he has actually succeeded in forcing many of the Mugs of Con's bazaar to do so. The season of the year will shortly admit of the adoption of more vigorous measures than have been practicable for some months past, for the repression of these petty disturbances.

70. The post of Ramoo has been reinforced to the utmost extent practicable in the present limited strength of the military force in Chittagong, and will be commanded by an European officer. We have every reason to be satisfied with the attention and activity of the magistrate. No other subject occurs to us as requiring the particular attention of your honourable committee at the present moment.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 5th February 1813.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
5 February 1813.

Honourable Sirs,

IN our letter to your honourable court under date the 21st October last, we transmitted the latest intelligence which we had received from the magistrate of Chittagong, of the state of affairs in that quarter. At that period the insurgent chief, Kingberring, who had shortly before emerged from his concealment, was again employed in collecting a force for the purpose of making another descent on Arracan. Parties of the insurgents were actively engaged in carrying off the Mug inhabitants of the villages in the southern parts of Chittagong, whom they compelled to join Kingberring's standard, and had possessed themselves of most of the hills and jungles below Con's bazaar. On one occasion a party which had proceeded ceeded in their boats up to Hurrung, headed by a son-in-law of Kingberring, named Charipo, was surprised by a naick and eight sepoy, who succeeded in securing the person of the leader.

2. In a letter received from the magistrate, recorded as per margin, Mr. Pechell expressed his suspicions of the proceedings of the Mugs residing at Con's bazaar, who, it appeared from the reports transmitted to the magistrate by the darogah stationed at Jeiknauf, were secretly supplying Kingberring with the means of prosecuting his designs against Arracan.

3. The increasing force of Kingberring, and the new system which he adopted, of committing depredations within our own territories, having suggested to the magistrate the necessity of adopting active measures against him, he recommended that a cruizer of a small size should be stationed at the mouth of the nauf, in order to prevent his entering the province of Arracan with any considerable body, and that the party at Ramoo should be reinforced. The magistrate, at the same time, stated his intention of eventually applying to the officer commanding the station to depute an European officer to command at that post.

4. Adverting to the obvious necessity of reinforcing the detachments to the southward without any delay, we authorized the magistrate, on the 13th of November, to engage berkandazes to perform the duty of the stationary guard, by which means the details of the provincial battalions employed on that duty would become available, until the arrival of the right wing of the second battalion ninth regiment, which was then in progress towards Chittagong. We also approved of the magistrate's intention to apply to the commanding officer to depute an European officer to the post at Ramoo.

Secret Cons.
25 Nov. 71 to 79.

5. On the consultation noted in the margin are recorded four despatches from the magistrate of Chittagong, containing details of the proceedings of the insurgents at Ramoo, and other places to the southward of the district, together with the several measures adopted by him in concert with the commanding officer of the troops, for the suppression of those disturbances. A European officer having been detached to that quarter with reinforcements, according to the intention stated by the magistrate as above reported, Lieutenant Young, the officer commanding the party, proceeded against the insurgents, and having come up with them at Con's bazaar, attacked them with great spirit, and compelled them to take to flight, leaving behind them a number of boats and stores, which they had collected for the purpose of renewing their attempts on Arracan. The circumstances of this affair are stated in a letter from the magistrate, recorded as per margin. Kingberring, who commanded the insurgents in person, made his escape with about 1,000 followers, in the jungles to the south of Con's bazaar, from whence he proceeded along the sea coast to the Raizoo river, where he had some boats, in which he crossed to the opposite side, when he destroyed his boats to prevent a pursuit. In a letter also recorded on the same consultation, the magistrate reported that the Mugs were deserting Kingberring in great numbers, and stated his opinion that he would soon be left by all but his own actual partizans.

Secret Cons.
4 Dec. N° 30 to 32.

Secret Cons.
4 Dec. N° 33.

6. By subsequent despatches received from the magistrate under date the 28th and 30th December last, it appears that after his overthrow by Lieutenant Young's party, Kingberring had attempted to penetrate with the followers who remained attached to him into Arracan, and that he had been attacked and defeated by the Burmahs, who had destroyed his stockade at Mangallagonee, which he considered as his only place of safety, and compelled him to seek refuge in the hills and jungles to the northward and eastward. It being supposed that he might proceed in the direction of the Tipperah hills, and obtain protection from the rajah of Tipperah. Mr. Pechell stated his intention of addressing the magistrate of that district on the subject.

7. Our last accounts received from Mr. Pechell since that period afford no information of the place of Kingberring's concealment, but measures continue to be employed for his discovery and apprehension.

8. In the beginning of the month of January the magistrate of Chittagong received information from the officer commanding to the southward, that a party of the Burmahs who had driven back Kingberring, and destroyed his stockade at Mangallagonee, had entered the British territory in pursuit of the fugitives, and were were committing acts of depredation and violence in the villages in that quarter. The magistrate further reported, that the rajah of Arracan was proceeding with a force under his command to the stockade at Mengdoo, on the frontier.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
5 February 1813.

9. On the receipt of this information, the principal object of our attention was to reinforce the troops in Chittagong to the utmost practicable extent. For this purpose we issued orders to the officer commanding the left wing of the second battalion, ninth regiment, which had marched from Birhampore, to push on to Chittagong, either by land or water, as might be best suited to the object of the expedition.

10. As a further measure of reinforcement under the actual difficulty of sending regular troops to Chittagong, orders were issued for as large a proportion of the Dacca provincial battalion as could be considered available, by substituting burkendazes and armed peons for the guards, to proceed immediately to Chittagong, where it was to be at the disposal of Lieutenant-colonel Dick, commanding the station. With the increased means of defence which these reinforcements would place in the hands of Lieutenant-colonel Dick, that officer would have it in his power to detach such a force to the southern parts of the district as would effectually prevent the further incursions of the Burmese, and be able to repel any force which might be expected to be brought against it. We, at the same time, apprised the magistrate in the most distinct manner, that it was our intention that the operations of our force should be confined to attacking and driving beyond the frontier any parties of Burmese who might enter the company's territory, and that no attempt should be made on our part to enter Arracan without further orders from us. We observed, that although we had repeated experience of the inutility of correspondence with the Burmese chiefs, yet the violation of our territory in the present instance could not be suffered to pass unnoticed, and that therefore it was proper again to warn the rajah of Arracan of the inevitable and immediate consequences of a repetition of acts of outrage similar to that which had recently occurred, previously to undertaking offensive operations against him.

11. We directed the magistrate to address a letter to the rajah, remonstrating in strong terms against the unjustifiable violation of the British territory by the advance of a party of Burmese troops into the district of Chittagong, apprising him of the orders which had been already issued for repelling them by force, expressing to the rajah our surprise and displeasure at his advancing to the frontier and taking up a threatening position, apparently with no other object than to support and encourage the troops which had entered the province of Chittagong, calling upon him not only to issue immediate orders to the advanced parties to withdraw, but to retire himself with the force under his command, and finally signifying to him in the most decided terms that his continuing to menace and to execute similar acts of aggression, would be considered as an indication on his part that the two countries are no longer at peace, for the consequences of which he alone would be responsible.

12. We stated to the magistrate that we conceived that a remonstrance of the nature above described might produce some impression upon the rajah. If, however, the rajah should persist in the hostile and insulting line of conduct which he had lately pursued, we signified our determination to adopt active and decided measures for bringing him to a sense of the duty which he owed equally to his own sovereign and to a state on terms of friendship with him, and for preventing the repetition of those vexatious, [insulting aggressions, on the part of the Burmese.

13. Subsequently to the despatch of the above instructions to the magistrate, we had the satisfaction to receive further reports from that officer, stating that the parties of the Burmese who had entered our territory had retired, and that vakeels had been deputed from the rajah with letters to his address and that of the officer commanding at the advanced station to the southward; communicating also intelligence which warranted a belief that the act of the party of Burmese troops who entered our territory was disavowed by the rajah, and had been punished by him in the persons of their leaders. The rajah's letter to the magistrate was couched in more civil and friendly terms than he had ever before employed in his correspondence, and related principally to a request that we should co-operate with him and his people for the seizure of the insurgent chiefs.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
5 February 1813.

14. The tenor of the information contained in the magistrate's despatches above alluded to, and especially the comparatively moderate and conciliatory tone of the letter addressed to him by the rajah, leading to the hope of an amicable and satisfactory termination of the affair in question, we concluded that the magistrate, on his receipt of the rajah's letter to his address, would have thought it proper to suspend the transmission of the remonstrance which we had directed him to address to the rajah, as being conceived in a more peremptory style than it would be necessary, under the actual circumstances of the case, to employ, the rajah appearing to manifest a disposition to forbear from future aggression, and to disavow and atone for the acts of violence recently committed by the Burmese troops within our territory.

15. We informed the magistrate, however, that it would still be necessary to renew, but in conciliatory language, the protest of the government against the late incursion of the Burmese, stating our belief that it was done without the authority or knowledge of the rajah, and that he would readily disavow it, and employ such means as he might judge effectual to prevent the occurrence of outrage similar to what had taken place. We further directed the magistrate to apprise the rajah distinctly that we viewed Kingberring as a rebel and an outlaw, and to explain to him generally the measures which had been adopted for the dispersion of Kingberring's followers, and the seizure of his person and of his principal adherents. We also desired the magistrate to signify to the rajah our willing consent to his proposition, that the forces of both governments should co-operate in measures for the apprehension of Kingberring; observing, however, that that co-operation must be limited to the operations of the troops of each state within its own territories, and that the Burmese troops must not on any account cross the frontier, without a specific invitation to that effect; and declaring that the British government would continue, as hitherto, scrupulously to observe that forbearance with respect to the Burmese territory. We at the same time cautioned the magistrate to be careful, in his communications with the rajah, to avoid any expression which might be construed into an intention to deliver Kingberring or his adherents, in the event of their apprehension, into the hands of the Burmese government; and to disclaim explicitly the engagement to that purport which the rajah had again, it appeared, attempted to fasten on the British government; stating to him that the disposal of those persons, when apprehended, was a point which could alone be determined by negotiation between the two states.

16. On the 29th ultimo, a despatch was received from the magistrate, reporting that the Burmahs had continued to remain quiet, and appeared to have relinquished all intention of committing further aggression on our territory, but that the rajah still maintained his position at Mungdoo stockade, on the frontier; and that notwithstanding the civil terms in which the rajah's letter to his address had been couched, he had not deemed it proper to suspend the transmission of the remonstrance which he had been instructed by our former orders to make to the rajah.

17. In the reply which we directed to be written to the despatch above alluded, we informed the magistrate that it would have been satisfactory to us if it had occurred to him to suspend the transmission of the remonstrance which he had been instructed to make to the rajah, until he had been apprised of the impression which the rajah's letter had produced on our minds, it being obvious that the instructions alluded to had been prepared under a very different view of the conduct and disposition of the rajah from that which his last letter was calculated to suggest. We expressed our expectation, however, that the rajah would be brought to understand that the orders of government under which the magistrate's letter to his address was framed, had been issued previously to the receipt by us of the rajah's letter to the magistrate.

18. A further consideration of the tenor of the recent communications from Arracan, led us to be of opinion that the tone of the representation to the rajah might be still further moderated, by omitting the requisition for his retirement from the frontier, and simply requiring an assurance that he would restrain his followers from any attempt to violate our territory, under the colour of pursuing the insurgents, or on any pretence whatever. We observed to the magistrate that a requisition to the rajah to withdraw his troops would not be altogether consistent with our acquiescence on the rajah's proposition, for the co-operation of the troops of both governments governments in measures for the seizure of Kingberring and his associates, neither did the amount we remarked of the rajah's force, which appeared on credible authority not to exceed 3,000 men, and probably was considerably short even of that number, possess that imposing strength which would render a requisition for its retirement a measure necessary for the security of the frontier, or for the vindication of the dignity of our government.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
5 February 1813.

19. Adverting to the considerations stated in the preceding paragraph, we desired the magistrate in answering the rajah's letter to state to him, that in consequence of the friendly tenor of his letter, and the confidence of the British government in his sincerity, as well as with a view of enabling him more effectually to afford the co-operation of the Burmese forces in the pursuit of Kingberring, if he should return to that quarter, he (the magistrate) had been instructed to waive the requisition for the retirement of the troops from their advanced position.

20. In the 33d paragraph of our despatch of the 1st of August, we apprised your honourable court, that we had contemplated an arrangement for the removal of certain classes of the Mug refugees from Chittagong, to some other quarter of the honourable company's territories.

21. The report which we have received from the magistrate of Chittagong, on the several points regarding the different occupations, conditions, and modes of life of the Mugs residing in the district, and of which a copy is enclosed for the information of your honourable court, having enabled us to form a judgment on the practicability and expediency of the measure in question, we were satisfied that it could not be carried into execution in a manner to answer the end proposed, and we therefore resolved to suspend all further proceedings with reference to the prosecution of our views in that respect. The obstacles which chiefly opposed the execution of this design were, as your honourable court will observe from the magistrate's report, the prejudices of the Mugs themselves in favour of that part of the district of Chittagong in which they reside, from its vicinity to their native country, with which they continue at times to keep up an intercourse, and from its similiarity in climate, soil and appearance to Arracan, abounding in hills and jungles, which are adapted to their habits and modes of life; a vicinity to the sea is also stated to be considered by them to be essential to the preservation of their health, and they are said to entertain a great dislike to quitting it for any length of time. If these prejudices continue to maintain a powerful influence over the minds of the Mugs, the magistrate stated his opinion, that when the meditated arrangement should be made public, numbers of them would return into Arracan, and would probably make a more desperate attempt than ever to recover their country.

List of Pacquet,
N° 2.

22. With reference to the magistrate's remarks on what he terms the feudal system existing among the Mugs, we observed that we doubted the practicability of any sudden or violent change of that system, even if it were altogether certain that such a change were desirable. At all events we did not deem it necessary to authorize any active measures for the purpose of weakening or destroying the influence which the sudars may at present possess over the rest of the Mug community, and which may be expected generally to decline of itself, as the inferior classes acquire more settled habits of life, addict themselves to the pursuits of agriculture and trade, and obtain a knowledge of their rights, under the laws and regulations of the British government. A severe example of such of their leaders as were principally connected with Kingberring, and most active in seducing those under their influence to join the standard of that insurgent, appeared to be the only measure which could be adopted with the best hopes of success, in deterring the Mug emigrants from again assisting in similar attempts, tending to disturb the peace and amity subsisting between the two states; and we entertain a confident persuasion that when those leaders shall have been apprehended and punished, no further measures of severity or coercion will be required to maintain the future tranquillity of the province, and that that object will be fully attained by means of the ordinary military and police arrangements. A copy of our instructions to the magistrate on this subject is enclosed for the information of your honourable court.

23. In the 53d and two following paragraphs of our letter to your honourable court of the 21st of October last, we adverted to the seizure of a Mug sudar, named Masoom Sheckdar, for whose apprehension a reward of 1,000 rupees had been offered, and stated that we had informed the magistrate that we should suspend our decision relative to the appropriation of the reward until he should have furnished a report specifying the number and description of persons concerned in the seizure of that person, and the circumstances under which it was effected.

24. On the proceedings noted in the margin is recorded a despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, in reply to our instructions, requiring the report alluded to in the preceding paragraph. The seizure having been effected by a party of sepoys, we informed the magistrate that it did not appear to government (an opinion sanctioned by the recorded sentiments of the late commander-in-chief on a similar occasion) that any objection existed to permitting the native officers and soldiers, who effected the apprehension of Masoom Sheckdar, to participate in the reward. It was considered, also, to be obviously just and proper that a fair proportion of the amount of the reward should be paid to the person or persons who gave the information which led to the seizure of the offender. We directed the magistrate to exercise his judgment on the proportion to be appropriated in that manner; and in concert with the commanding officer of the provincial battalion, to which corps we understood the party belonged, to proceed to a division of the remainder among the soubadar, havaldar and twelve sepoys, who actually apprehended Masoom Sheckdar, in the established proportion and scale of prize money to the different ranks. At the same time we stated to the magistrate that we had not overlooked the suggestion contained in Captain George's letter of the 28th October to the magistrate's address, a copy of which is included in the magistrate's despatch above referred to, that the whole of the party on duty at Ramoo should participate in the reward; but that it did not appear to us, that in such a case as the present, in which none of the party, except those actually employed, contributed, either by direct exertion, or by any species of co-operation to the accomplishment of the service, any should share, except the individuals on whom the duty fell, either by rotation or selection.

25. In the 5th paragraph of this despatch, we informed your honourable court of the successful result of the attack on the collected force of Kingberring, under the personal command of that chief, which was made by the party under Lieutenant Young at Coxe's bazaar, on which occasion almost the whole of the boats and stores of Kingberring were taken possession of by Lieutenant Young's party. An application having afterwards been submitted by that officer, through the magistrate, soliciting that the captured property should be disposed of for the benefit of the captors, we instructed the magistrate to inform Lieutenant Young, in reply, that as a mark of the sense which we entertained of the zealous and active exertions of his detachment, in the service on which it had been employed, we had resolved that the grain found in the boats should be presented as a bounty to the captors, and we accordingly authorized the magistrate to direct it to be sold for their benefit, and the amount to be distributed according to the established proportion and scale of shares. We did not, however, judge it proper to authorize the grant of the boats and military stores, and we directed them to be reserved for the disposal of government. We have since determined that such of the boats as may not be useful in the service of the commissariat, or in any other department of the public service, and the disposal of which, by sale, may not be attended with the hazard of their falling into the hands of persons who will make an improper use of them, shall be sold, and the amount of the proceeds paid to the captors.

We have the honour to be, with the greatest respect,
Honourable Sirs,

Your most faithful humble servants,

Minto,
N. B. Edmonstone,
Arch. Seton.

P. S. We have received information that an envoy from the viceroy of Pegu to this government was preparing to embark at Rangoon, and may shortly be expected to arrive. The object of his mission is to demand the surrender of Kingberring and his principal adherents, whom the Burmese government persists in believing, or at least asserting, to be in our possession. It would be premature to offer to your honourable court any remarks on the nature or probable result of this mission.

Extract from a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 29th March 1813.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
29 March 1813.

53. WE submitted to the honourable the court of directors, in a despatch under date the 5th of February, a narrative of transactions in Chittagong and on the frontier of Arracan, and up to the date of our latest advices we are happy to state that every thing in that quarter continues tranquil, and that the conduct and proceedings of the rajah of Arracan have assumed a friendly and pacific appearance. Two more of the principal insurgents, named Larungbaze and Meeza, have been apprehended, and the magistrate expresses his hope that the seizure of Kingberring will shortly be effected.

54. The march of reinforcements to the southward has been suspended, and the advanced period of the season will probably render it expedient shortly to recal all the regular troops to Chittagong; the same causes will, however, necessarily suspend any hostile operations on the part of the Burmese. We have not thought it necessary to address the honourable committee on this subject by the present despatch.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 24th June 1813.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
24 June 1813.

Honourable Sirs,

IN our despatch to the honourable the secret committee, dated the 29th of March last, we had the honour to report the tranquil state of affairs on the frontier of Chittagong, and the friendly and pacific appearance which the conduct of the rajah of Arracan had assumed.

2. We propose, in the present address, to resume the narrative of events and transactions in that quarter from the 5th of February last, the date of our last letter in this department on the subject of Chittagong affairs up to the present time, premising, for the satisfaction of your honourable court, that nothing, since the date of our despatch to the honourable the secret committee above adverted to, has occurred to disturb the tranquillity which we had then the honour to report, although some circumstances tend to discourage an absolute confidence in the amicable and satisfactory adjustment of the questions existing between the two states.

3. On the consultation of the 11th February last is recorded a despatch from the magistrate, communicating the answer of the rajah of Arracan to the letter of remonstrance which the magistrate had addressed to him, under our orders, as stated in the 16th paragraph of our address to your honourable court of the 5th of that month.

4. The rajah's reply, although written in a style of civility, contains little more than a request for the surrender of the rebel chiefs. It was, however, so far satisfactory, in comparison with the rajah's former addresses, that he no longer accused the British government of countenancing the designs of the insurgents; but, on the contrary, he appeared to give us credit for using our endeavours to apprehend them. The magistrate stated, in the same despatch, that the Burmese continued quiet, and that the trade from Arracan to Lackpore and Dacca was reviving.

5. Although the tenor of the rajah's communications was satisfactory, and no parties of Burmese had attempted to cross the frontier since the month of January last, the magistrate nevertheless thought it proper, in communication with Colonel Dick, the officer commanding in the district of Chittagong, to proceed in reinforcing the troops stationed to the southward, so as to be ready to repel any further incursions which the Burmese might again attempt to make into our territory. Mr. Pechell reported, in the despatch in which the above intention is announced, the apprehension of Larangbhye, the chief surdar attached to Kingberring's party,—an event which he considered to be fatal to the success of any attempts which that insurgent might again make against Arracan. Larangbhye was one of the sirdars for whose apprehension we had offered a reward of 1,000 rupees. Mr. Pechell recommended that a similar reward should be offered for the seizure of Meizah, another of the insurgent sirdars; an object, in his opinion, of importance only inferior to that of Kingberring himself. We approved of Mr. Pechell's proposition, and authorized him to offer a reward to that amount in the same terms as for the other sirdars.

6. On the proceedings of the annexed date is recorded a despatch from the magistrate, enclosing a translation of the letter which he had addressed to the rajah of Arracan, under the instructions conveyed to him in our secretary's letter of the 27th and 29th January last, the substance of which has already been reported to your honourable court in the 17th and following paragraphs of an address of the 5th February. Mr. Pechell transmitted, at the same time, a copy of his letter to Lieutenant-colonel Dick, suggesting the suspension of the advance of a reinforcement of troops to Ramoo, with reference to the pacific appearance which the proceedings of the Burmese had assumed, and from a wish not to excite suspicion or distrust in the minds of their chiefs.

Cons. 29 January,
N^{os} 30 & 34.

7. Notwithstanding the tenor of the rajah of Arracan's recent conduct and language, we thought it advisable to maintain a respectable force to the southward as long as the Burmese troops should continue on the frontier. We accordingly signified to the magistrate, that we did not consider it to be expedient to suspend the measures which were in progress for strengthening the post of Ramoo, and assembling an efficient force in that quarter of the district; observing to Mr. Pechell, that it did not appear to us to be probable that the advance of the remainder of the force to Ramoo would excite suspicion or apprehension in the mind of the rajah, since the measure must appear the natural consequence of the recent events, and Ramoo was at a sufficient distance from the frontier to preclude any just ground of alarm from the presence of a force at that station. We therefore directed that the arrangements for collecting the force at Ramoo should proceed as formerly concerted between Mr. Pechell and Lieutenant-colonel Dick.

Cons. 26 February,
N^{os} 12 & 13.

8. The despatch from Mr. Pechell, recorded on the consultation of the annexed date, contains a translation of the letter from the rajah of Arracan, in reply to Mr. Pechell's letter to his address, adverted to in the 6th paragraph of this despatch. In that letter the rajah denies that the Burmese troops had committed the outrages in the British territory with which they were charged in Mr. Pechell's letter to the rajah, and ascribes them to the Mugs; the fact, however, was too notorious to admit of a doubt, and the magistrate justly remarked, that it would have been much more satisfactory if the rajah had disclaimed its having been committed by his sanction, and expressed his regret at its continuance.

Secret Cons.
26 Feb. N^o 16.

9. On the proceedings noted in the margin is recorded a letter from Captain Canning, reporting intelligence received by two boats arrived from Arracan, of preparations which were said to be making by the Burmese, for sending a large force to the frontier, for the purpose of seizing Kingberring. Although the credibility of the intelligence was discountenanced by the tenor of the more recent information transmitted to us by the magistrate of Chittagong, we deemed it proper to communicate it to Mr. Pechell, that he might be apprised of the reports in circulation in the territory of Ava, and might direct his attention to the means of ascertaining their correctness or probability.

Secret Cons.
12 March, N^o 32.

10. Your honourable court will observe, by the magistrate's reply recorded as per margin, that similar reports to those received by Captain Canning had been propagated at Chittagong. Mr. Pechell expressed his disbelief of the truth of those rumours, and stated, that he had been informed that they were circulated by the government of Ava with a view to facilitate the surrender of the insurgent Mugs, by exciting the fears of the British government; a measure which, he observed, might be resorted to by such a government as that of Ava as one likely to be attended with success, from its ignorance of our principles and power.

Cons. 19 March,
N^o 60.

11. On the proceedings of the consultation of the annexed date your honourable court will observe a despatch from the magistrate, in which he adverts to the pacific and conciliatory conduct of the rajah of Arracan; and observes, with respect to the return of the Burmese troops into the interior, which had frequently been reported to the magistrate as about to take place, that he was disposed to hope that the rajah's protracted stay on the frontier was occasioned by his having
to

to wait for the orders of his government; but that, at all events, with reference to the advanced state of the season, were the Burmahs inclined for hostilities, the time would not admit of it. Their general conduct and the tenor of their recent communications, however, did not warrant, in the magistrate's judgment, any apprehensions of that nature.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
24 June 1813.

12. The despatches from Mr. Pechell, of the 13th and 18th March last, contain further reports of the peaceable disposition of the Burmese, and of the return of the principal chiefs from Mungoo's stockade into the interior, in consequence of the King of Ava's orders.

23 & 26.

13. On the proceedings of the annexed date is recorded a despatch from Mr. Pechell, enclosing a translation of a letter from the rajah of Arracan to Lieut.-colonel Dick, renewing the demand for the surrender of the Mug sirdars; and in a subsequent despatch Mr. Pechell transmitted a letter to the same effect, which the rajah had addressed to himself, and in reply to which he had signified to the rajah, in conformity to our former instructions, that the surrender of the insurgents was a question to be discussed between the two governments, and that he had no authority to give them up. In the same despatch Mr. Pechell reported the arrival of a new chief in the Burmese camp, apparently a man of consequence, and said to be in the confidence of the king of Ava.

Secret Cons.

Cons. 9 April,
N° 43.

14. In reply to the several despatches from Mr. Pechell, above adverted to, we observed that the real views and intentions of the Burmese government could not be collected from their late proceedings in Arracan. It did not appear to us, however, that any serious ground of belief existed that they meditated an attack on the company's territory during the present season; and we stated our opinion, that any such design would probably be suspended until the result of the mission which was expected from Ava (to which we shall advert in the sequel) should be known to the Burmese government. We signified, at the same time, to Mr. Pechell, the propriety of his continuing carefully to observe the proceedings of the Burmese force on the Nauf, and to be prepared, as far as possible in the present season, to repel any aggression which they might venture to make.

15. The despatch from the magistrate, recorded on the consultation noted in the margin, contains a translation of a deposition by a person employed by Mr. Pechell to obtain intelligence in the Burmah camp, across the Nauf, stating, that a letter had been received there from the rajah of Arracan, with the information of the king of Ava's intention to make a pilgrimage to Gya and Benares, attended by an army of 40,000 men. The probability of some extravagant scheme being in the contemplation of the Burmese government was in some measure supported by the narrative of a merchant of Chittagong, who had lately returned to that station from Arracan, accompanied by the shakbunder of Arracan. The sum of the information collected from the merchant, for the particulars of which we refer your honourable court to the proceedings noted in the margin, was, that a plan had been formed by the Burmese government for uniting the principal states of India in a confederacy against the British government, with a view to expel the British force from India, and that the shakbunder was proceeding on a mission to the several courts to negotiate and arrange the confederacy.

16. Visionary and absurd as are the schemes ascribed to the king of Ava, we were not disposed to discredit the report of their being actually entertained by the ignorant, arrogant, and barbarous government of that country. It appeared to us, however, most probable, that the plan alluded to, of expelling the English from India, had been proposed to the king of Ava, or encouraged, by the shakbunder of Arracan, or other interested persons, for the purpose of forwarding their personal corrupt views. The merchant above mentioned having stated that the shakbunder had actually received, by order of his Burmese majesty, the sum of 20,000 rupees from the rajah of Arracan for his personal expenses, and that the money was on board his ship, and that he believed the shakbunder was also furnished with letters for the governor-general and the king of Delhi, we intimated to the magistrate that it would be proper to take such steps as were in his power to ascertain the fact of the money being actually on board the ship; or of the shakbunder having in his possession letters to any of the chiefs and princes of India. We also directed the magistrate to intimate to the shakbunder, that, as the public officer of a foreign state, it would be necessary for him to obtain the previous permission of the British government for proceeding from Chittagong to the presidency, or elsewhere.

17. The despatch from the magistrate of the 2d instant contains the latest intelligence we have received of the proceedings and supposed views of the Burmese government. A fakeer, deputed by Mr. Pechell to the capital of Arracan, for the purpose of obtaining information, having returned to Chittagong, Mr. Pechell transmitted to us his deposition, which your honourable court will find recorded with the magistrate's despatch above referred to, and of which the substance is, that he had conversed at the capital of Arracan with two musselmans, who had made their escape from Ummeerapoor, and who informed him that two sirdars had set out from the capital, one with an army of 30,000, and the other with an army of 50,000 men; that after having marched five days journey from Ummeerapoor, a letter had been received from the rajah of Arracan, in consequence of which the sirdars, with the armies under their command, had halted, and that their orders were, that if Kingberring was not delivered up during the present rains, they were to proceed, for war had been determined on. A private letter from Mr. Pechell, dated the 31st ultimo, contains some further communications respecting the designs ascribed to the Burmese government, in corroboration of the magistrate's report of the information received by him from the merchant before alluded to, but which does not require particular notice; your honourable court will find Mr. Pechell's letter recorded on the proceedings of the consultation last referred to.

18. Your honourable court will observe, that notwithstanding the vague and uncertain nature of the information which has been collected on this subject, and the extravagance and improbability of the designs ascribed to the Burmese government, it all concurs to establish the belief that that government has not abandoned the design of insisting on, and perhaps attempting to enforce by its supposed power, the surrender of the insurgents. Without meaning to express any decided expectation of such an event, we shall think it prudent to be prepared at the close of the rains to resist any attempt which may be made by the Burmese government to molest our territory, and we shall consider the best means of effectually putting an end to this unsettled and vexatious condition of affairs, and to the repetition of these insults and aggressions to which, during so long a period of time, we have been exposed.

19. We do not conceive it to be probable that any attempt will be made until the Burmese government shall be apprised of the result of the mission to this government, to which we have above referred.

20. That mission was preceded by the arrival at the presidency of an agent attended by thirty followers, sent by the viceroy of Pegu, by order of the king of Ava, for the ostensible purpose of proceeding to Benares to obtain copies of certain religious writings, and to carry back with him to Rangoon a certain Burmah, now in Bengal, stated to have rendered himself an adept in sacred and other learning. For further particulars on this subject, we beg leave to refer your honourable court to the despatch from Captain Canning, late envoy at Ava, recorded as per margin, reporting the arrival of the agent at the presidency, and to the letter from the Persian secretary in reply, communicating to Captain Canning our free permission for the agent to proceed to Benares, and our resolution to provide him with a house and furniture during his stay at the presidency. The agent has subsequently left the presidency, and proceeded on his destination.

21. Another private mission of a similar nature has accompanied the public mission from Rangoon.

Secret Cons.
7 May, N° 22.

22. The political mission arrived at the presidency in the month of April last. Your honourable court will observe from the translation of the letter from the viceroy of Pegu, recorded as per margin, that the mission is not immediately from the king of Ava, as we had reason to expect it would be, but from the viceroy above-mentioned, and consists of three members, one of whom is Anthony George, the government interpreter at Rangoon, an Indian Portuguese of low condition. Your honourable court will also observe from the report of the Persian secretary, recorded as per margin, that the business of the mission is confined to delivering the viceroy's letter to the governor-general, and receiving and carrying back his lordship's answer. The only point of business contained in the viceroy's letter is the renewal of the demand for the surrender of the insurgents, Kingberring, Larungbaze, Balaguin, and Naleklon. The deputies have stated that the object of the king of Ava in demanding the surrender of the fugitives in question, is not to inflict any punishment on them, but merely to keep them in the power of the Burmese government, so as to prevent them from engaging in further attempts to subvert his Burmese majesty's authority in the province of Arracan.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
24 June 1813.

23. We propose, at an early period, to deliver to the deputies the answer to the viceroy's letter, on which subject we shall have the honour to report to your honourable court hereafter. No opportunity has yet occurred for the return of the mission to Rangoon.

24. We now return to the correspondence with the magistrate of Chittagong.

25. In the despatch recorded as per margin, Mr. Pechell reports the death of Larungbaze, one of the chief insurgent sirdars, of whose apprehension we had the honour to apprise your honourable court in the fifth paragraph of this address. Mr. Pechell also states that he has received information of Kingberring being in the hills, on the uninhabited part of the Chittagong district, and that he had renewed his correspondence with the Mugs at Coxe's bazaar. Accounts have also been received by Mr. Pechell of a battle having taken place between Kingberring and one of his chieftains who had lately separated from him, an event which the magistrate observes, if confirmed, will warrant a hope that the adherents of that insurgent chief are beginning to grow weary of a mode of life, which produces nothing but present hardship and personal deprivation, and will entail on them future punishment and ruin.

Secret Cons.
28 May, N° 75.

26. Your honourable court will find in Mr. Pechell's despatches, reports of the attempts which had been made at different times to seize Kingberring without success. It is satisfactory to observe, however, that in his present state of weakness and distress he cannot renew his schemes for disturbing the tranquillity of the frontier. Mr. Pechell has not abandoned the hope of effecting his apprehension.

27. The magistrate in his despatch, recorded as per margin, has suggested the expediency of holding out to Kingberring a promise that he would not be delivered up to the Burmese, in the belief that, under such an assurance, he would surrender himself to the British government. Mr. Pechell has also suggested that the Burmese might be permitted to send parties into our territory in search of Kingberring, observing that their fitness for service in the sort of country in which he is concealed would give them a fairer prospect of success than our own troops. The first of these propositions appeared to us to be nugatory, as we felt assured that Kingberring would not surrender himself; and to the latter we expressed a decided objection, grounded on the inexpediency of inviting or permitting the Burmese to enter our territory on any consideration whatever.

Cons. 15 May,
N° 86.

28. In one of his despatches above referred to, the magistrate reported the apprehension of an adherent of Kingberring, named Jannoo, who had been concerned in disturbing the public peace at Harrung, in the months of September and October last, and solicited our instructions whether he should be dealt with according to regulation 4th, of 1799, for the trial of persons charged with offences against the state.

Secret Cons.
9 April, N° 44.

29. Under all the circumstances of this person's case, we were of opinion that he should not be brought to trial in the manner prescribed by the regulation above mentioned, since, although there could be no doubt of his criminality, or of his being a fit object of punishment, it was very uncertain that the Mohammedan law of treason, by which he must be tried under that regulation, would reach his case. The consequence would be his acquittal; and the right which we now possessed of treating him as a state prisoner, and imposing such a degree of restraint on his person as might be judged expedient for the public interests, would be greatly embarrassed if not superseded. Such a result of his trial would also be inconsistent with the repeated declarations of this government, that the surrender of Kingberring and his associates might be made a subject of negotiation between the British government and the state of Ava, and might form a ground of just complaint on the part of the Burmese; our resolution was communicated to the magistrate in a despatch from our secretary, recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date.

Secret Cons.
15 April, N° 65.

N^o 66.

30. In another letter recorded on the same consultation, we signified to the magistrate our resolution to carry into effect a plan which we had for some time had in contemplation; viz. to remove the Mug sirdars, their families and followers, who were in the predicament of state prisoners, from Dacca and Chittagong, where they are at present confined, to a distant station, where the chance of their escape and the means of maintaining an intercourse with their countrymen, detrimental to the peace of the country, would be diminished, and the fortress of Chunar appeared to us to be the most proper place for their confinement. On this subject we directed the commandant of the garrison to correspond with Mr. Pechell and the magistrate of Dacca, with respect to their accommodation and removal.

Cons. 15 May,

31. On the proceedings of the consultation of the 15th ultimo is recorded a despatch from the magistrate, in reply to the instructions regarding the proposed measure of removing the Mug sirdars and their families under the magistrate's charge to Chunar, enclosing a complete list of all the sirdars and their adherents, amounting to 102 persons, with a statement of the grounds of their apprehension, in order to enable us to determine whether it was expedient that the whole should be despatched to Chunar, or whether some of them from defect of proof, or circumstances of extenuation, should be exempted from the operation of that measure.

32. In reply to the magistrate's despatch, we signified to Mr. Pechell that we did not contemplate the removal to Chunar of the numerous class of persons comprehended in the list transmitted by him; that arrangement was not intended to be extended beyond the sirdars and others, whose residence near the frontier of Arracan might tend to revive disturbances in that quarter, including, eventually, their families. Being desirous of being more distinctly apprised of the nature and degree of guilt of each individual, as far as it could be ascertained, we directed Mr. Pechell to institute an inquiry, in each particular case, into the grounds of suspicion against the party, and to report the result, with his opinion, for our consideration and decision; commencing with the sirdars and others principally implicated. We intimated to the magistrate that a similar course of proceeding would be necessary with respect to the Mugs, who were under restraint at Dacca, and we directed the magistrate to report whether the investigation of the case of those persons would not be carried on more conveniently by him than at Dacca, without however removing them from thence. We directed the magistrates, both of Chittagong and Dacca, to delay the removal of the Mugs till further orders. We are sorry to add that our counter-orders did not reach the magistrate of Dacca till after the Mugs had been embarked and sent away, but we have despatched orders to the intermediate stations directing their return to Dacca, where they will await our further orders. The correspondence on this subject is recorded on the proceedings noted in the margin.

34. A memorial having been received from Captain Luck, commander of the ship Admiral Drury, praying the interference of the British government to obtain compensation from the government of Ava for the detention of his ship at Rangoon, and for bringing a Burmese mission to Bengal, we directed the Persian secretary to transmit copies of the memorial in question and the papers connected with it to Captain Canning, then proceeding on his mission to Rangoon, and to desire that under the authority with which he was invested, to inquire into and redress, as far as circumstances might render practicable, grievances complained of by British subjects against those of the king of Ava, he would direct his attention to the injuries complained of by Captain Luck and endeavour to procure redress.

35. On the proceedings of the consultation of the annexed date is recorded Captain Canning's report of his proceedings under those orders, stating his regret that the avarice, duplicity and falsehood of the viceroy had proved an invincible obstacle against his obtaining any compensation for the act of injustice which Captain Luck had suffered at the hands of the Rangoon government. For the details of Captain Canning's conferences with the viceroy on that subject, we beg to refer your honourable court to the despatch itself, as exhibiting a most remarkable instance instance of gross falsehood and palpable and absurd contradiction, which the viceroy did not hesitate to employ on that occasion.

36. On the consultation of the annexed date is recorded a letter from the late envoy, transmitting a memorial from Mr. Rowland, the Burmese interpreter to government, soliciting the grant of the extra allowance, which he received during his attendance on Captain Canning on his late mission to Rangoon, as a permanent addition to the fixed salary of his office as Burmese interpreter to government; we directed the Persian secretary to intimate to Captain Canning that we could not discern in the memorial any grounds on which Mr. Rowland could justly found a pretension to the solicited augmentation of salary; at the same time we signified our satisfaction at the favourable testimony borne by Captain Canning to Mr. Rowland's merits and services, and observed that the continuance of the same laudable conduct on his part would give him a claim to our consideration whenever he might be compelled, by age or infirmity, to retire from the duties of his situation.

Under all these circumstances of the case, we considered it to be equitable that Dr. Cuize, and the servants who were with him, should be reimbursed in the value of the property of which they had been plundered during the deputation of the former on the public service to Ummeerapoor, amounting to sicca rupees 244. We also authorized the payment of the amount of the arrears on account of wages, and the charge incurred by Dr. Cuize in presents, amounting to sicca rupees 514.

39. Captain Canning having referred to a journal kept by Dr. Cuize of his proceedings on his journey to Ummeerapoor, which may contain useful or interesting information, we desired Captain Canning to furnish us with a copy of it.

40. We have also authorized the payment of sicca rupees 2,189 to Captain M^cCarthy, commander of the brig Virginia, on account of nineteen days demurrage of the brig, and the loss of a cable in the service of the government of Rangoon. Captain M^cCarthy's application for reimbursement to that amount, and the reply which we directed to be addressed to him, are recorded on the proceedings of the date noted in the margin.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company, dated 1st October 1813.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in Council,
1 October 1813.

Honourable Sirs,

IN our despatch of the 24th of June last, on the subject of Chittagong affairs, and our recent transactions with the Burmese, we had the honour to apprise your honourable court of the arrival of a political mission at the presidency from Rangoon, with a letter from the viceroy of Pegu, renewing the demand for the surrender of the principal Mug insurgents, and we stated that the business of the mission was understood to be limited to the delivery of the viceroy's letter to the governor-general, and to receiving and carrying back his lordship's answer.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
1 October 1813.

2. The viceroy's letter being confined to a requisition on the part of his Burmese majesty for the surrender of the persons of the insurgents, Kingberring, Larungbaze, and certain of their associates, and his excellency having stated, as the grounds of his demand, that "if they be left to their own liberty they will ruin our (his Burmese majesty's) poor subjects, and be the cause of the bloodshed of millions;" the governor-general, in the answer which his lordship returned to the viceroy's letter, stated, that the British government was no less impressed with the inexpediency of leaving the insurgent chiefs at large than the government of Ava, and that the viceroy must be well aware of the exertions which it had made to apprehend them. Our efforts, however, his lordship observed, had unfortunately not yet been attended with complete success; for although some had been apprehended, others continued to elude the vigilance and activity of the British officers and troops. Among the latter was Kingberring, but he was reduced to the condition of an outlaw and a fugitive, and it might be hoped that he would not be able to renew his evil practices, and might either be taken prisoner or compelled, by his necessities, to give himself up. Larungbaze, his lordship stated, had been apprehended by the officers of the British government; but he was in a state of extreme misery, and had since died in confinement. Nukeloo was in custody, with other inferior chiefs.

3. His lordship proceeded to state, that it must be obvious to the viceroy's mind, that with every desire to gratify his excellency's wishes, the measures of the British government must be regulated by those maxims and principles on which its institutions, laws, and usages are founded. It would be contrary to those principles, his lordship observed, to surrender to a foreign state persons who, being settled in the territories of the British government, had become its subjects, and whose offences against that government, amongst which was comprised the disturbance of the peace of other states, were properly cognizable only by its own institutions. His lordship expressed his persuasion, therefore, that the viceroy would perceive and acknowledge the justice of the grounds on which this government felt it to be its duty to decline surrendering the persons of those of the rebel Mug chiefs who were in the custody of the British government, assuring the viceroy at the same time of the determination, dictated no less by the interests of the British government than by its friendship for the Burmese state, to keep them in the most strict confinement, as well as to exert every effort to seize the persons of those who were still at large, and to prevent the renewal of those practices which had disturbed the tranquillity of the frontier, and hazarded the interruption of the friendship between the two states.

4. In reply to the declaration contained in the viceroy's letter, that the object of his Burmese majesty in demanding the surrender of the fugitives was not to inflict punishment on them, but to keep them in the power of the Burmese government, so as to prevent their engaging in further attempts to subvert his Burmese majesty's authority in Arracan, his lordship stated, that as that object could be equally attained by their being kept in custody by the British government, he felt confident that the assurances which he had now given would afford the fullest satisfaction to the mind of his Burmese majesty.

5. His lordship's letter to the viceroy is recorded on the consultation of the annexed date.

Secret Cons.

6. By the official note of the Persian secretary, recorded as per margin, your honourable court will observe, that on the 16th August that officer offered to deliver the governor-general's letter to his excellency the viceroy into the hands of the Burmese deputies; but that they hesitated to receive it, observing that it would become public; that they had received their final despatches, and that they had no immediate prospect of being able to return to Rangoon; and that if the viceroy should hear that they had delayed their departure after their receipt of those despatches, they might incur his excellency's displeasure. The Persian secretary stated to them, in reply, that he had no objection to suspend the delivery of it, provided it was distinctly understood that their return to Rangoon was not retarded in consequence of the letter not having been committed to their hands. With this understanding on the part of the deputies the delivery of the governor-general's letter continues to be suspended.

7. On the proceedings of the date noted in the margin, your honourable court will observe a memorial addressed by the Burmese deputies at the presidency to the governor-general, stating their request, that as they had been informed that of the three insurgent chiefs, Kingberring, Larungbaze and Nukeloo, the latter only was in custody of the British government at Dacca, he might be delivered up to them, that they might carry him back with them to their master.

Secret Cons.
20 August, N° 20.

8. In transmitting the memorial above referred to, Captain Canning, in his letter, which is recorded as per margin, observed, that the chief object of the deputies appeared to be to consult their own safety, and to screen themselves in some degree from persecution on their return to their own country. They had uniformly expressed the utmost dread of returning without having effected the object of their mission. Captain Canning further stated, that by entering into a correspondence with government, the deputies wished to make it appear that no effort had been wanting on their part to obtain the surrender of the rebel chiefs; and suggested, that as such a measure might prove a benefit to them, it might be deserving of our humane consideration to make a reply to their memorial, previously to the delivery of the letter to the viceroy's address.

Secret Cons.
20 August, N° 19.

9. Captain Canning further stated, that he had been requested by the deputies to submit to the consideration of government the deficiency of their funds, which they stated to have been exhausted by a longer residence at Calcutta than they had calculated on, and to solicit some pecuniary assistance from the government. On this point Captain Canning observed, that although the deputies could have no positive claim on the liberality of government, yet, when the peculiar situation in which they were placed, and by which they would be exposed to great probable difficulty and embarrassment on their return to their own country, should be taken into consideration, it might be consistent with the munificence of the British government to grant a moderate donation to each of the members of the Burmah mission of 1,000 rupees.

10. Concurring in the propriety of returning an answer to the memorial from the Burmese deputies, as recommended by Captain Canning, we directed the secretary to address a note to them, corresponding in substance with the letter addressed to the king by the governor-general, to be delivered to them by Captain Canning.

11. Your honourable court will find the note, which was accordingly delivered to the deputies, recorded on the proceedings of the consultation above referred to.

Cons. 20 August,
N° 22.

12. We also resolved to adopt Captain Canning's suggestion, for the reasons stated by him, with respect to granting the deputies a donation of 1,000 rupees each, and he was accordingly authorized to receive the amount from the treasury for that purpose.

13. We have also directed the Persian secretary to prepare presents to the amount of 2,000 rupees, to accompany the governor-general's letter to the viceroy, in return for some presents of inconsiderable value which accompanied the viceroy's letter to his lordship's address. The deputies have not yet left the presidency, but they propose to return by an early opportunity to Rangoon.

14. With respect to the Burmese agent, who was deputed by the viceroy of Pegu for the ostensible purpose of purchasing religious writings at Benares, as reported to your honourable court in the 20th paragraph of our letter from this department of the 24th June last, we have received notice from Captain Canning of his return to the presidency, and have directed that officer to intimate to him that it is time for him to return to Ava, since the professed object of his journey is accomplished. It appears that the agent, while at that city, made no attempt to obtain any sacred writings, but was engaged in secret conferences with some Bramins at that place, who carry on an intercourse with Ava; as we were of opinion that that intercourse could not be attended with any mischief, and as we had no means of convicting them of any traitorous correspondence, there being nothing against them but suspicions of a nature not sufficient to form the ground of a proceeding, we did not deem it necessary to institute any inquiry into the contemptible intrigues which the Burmese and their Bramin confederates might be carrying on.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
1 October 1813.

15. Having learned by a private communication from Captain Canning that the agent proposed to carry with him to Ava, as a present to the king, some young Hindoostanee females; we have, in the same form, directed Captain Canning to inquire into this matter, with a view to interpose our authority to prevent the agent from carrying those persons away against their will.

16. In the 15th and 16th paragraphs of our letter of the 24th June last, we apprised your honourable court of the arrival at Chittagong of the shahbunder of Arracan, charged, as was alleged, with a mission to the several courts of India, to negotiate and arrange a confederacy among the native powers to expel the English nation from the country; and we stated that the magistrate had been directed to intimate to the shahbunder, that, as the public officer of a foreign state, he must obtain the permission of the British government before he should leave Chittagong to proceed to the presidency or elsewhere.

16 July, N° 17.

17. On the proceedings of the date inserted in the margin are recorded two despatches from the magistrate, communicating some further particulars respecting the supposed designs of the shahbunder, which had been collected from a merchant, in whose vessel the shahbunder had come to Chittagong, and from a person employed to navigate that ship. Mr. Pechell having reported that the shahbunder had in his possession a letter for the governor-general from the rajah of Arracan, we directed that he should be required to deliver it up to Mr. Pechell, for the purpose of its being forwarded to the presidency.

Secret Cons.
23 July, N° 4.

18. The object of that letter, which is recorded as per margin, is to request permission for the shahbunder to proceed to Delhi, in quest of sacred writings and a few articles of curiosity, as suitable presents for his Burmese majesty; however contemptible these plans of the Burmese must be considered to be, your honourable court will, we doubt not, concur with us in opinion, that the emissaries of that government ought not to be permitted to travel through our provinces for such purposes.

Secret Cons.
17 Sept. N° 16.

19. Having, as already reported to your honourable court, permitted an agent from the Burmese government to proceed to Benares, for the ostensible purpose of purchasing religious writings, whose return to the presidency is adverted to in a preceding paragraph, we did not feel disposed to repeat this indulgence, especially when the king had already the agent, above alluded to, in Bengal, who might be employed on this service, even if the mission of an agent to Delhi to purchase Hindoo writings were not itself altogether absurd, and a manifest pretence intended to cover some other object; and we resolved therefore to refuse permission to the shahbunder to proceed thither.

20. The governor-general accordingly addressed a letter to the rajah of Arracan in reply, stating that it was not consistent with the practice of this government to permit the agents of foreign states to travel through the provinces subject to its dominion, for purposes such as described in the rajah's letter; and observing, that the relaxation of that rule in the instance of the agent lately deputed from Rangoon by command of the king of Ava, and permitted to proceed to Benares, was a special mark of respect and consideration for his Burmese majesty, and that similar permission could not be granted in other cases without suspending altogether a general observance, to which it formed a remarkable exception. His lordship, at the same time, stated, that no inconvenience would result in consequence of the return of the agent without accomplishing his proposed journey, as on the rajah's furnishing a statement of the writings and other articles required, they could be procured through the agency of proper persons employed by the British government.

21. The governor-general's letter to the rajah will be found recorded on the proceedings of the date noted in the margin.

22. We now resume the narrative of events and transactions connected with the proceedings of Kingberring and his followers since the close of our despatch to your honourable court of the 24th June.

23. In the 26th paragraph of that address, we reported to your honourable court that Kingberring was reduced to such a state of distress as to be unable to renew his schemes for disturbing the tranquillity of the frontier; and that the magistrate had not abandoned the hope of effecting his apprehension. That hope, however, has hitherto been disappointed: Kingberring has continued to lurk in the hills and jungles in the south-eastern part of Chittagong, and the unhealthiness which prevails in that quarter during the season of the rains, has rendered it impossible to detach parties of sepoy in pursuit of him.

has

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in Council,
1 October 1843.

24. By a letter which we have lately received from Mr. Pechell, recorded as per margin, it appears that as the fair season is approaching, Kingberring is again meditating a renewal of his attempts against Arracan. The darogah stationed at Ramoo has reported, that a letter has been sent by Kingberring to the Mug inhabitants of Coxe's bazaar apprising them of his intention, and desiring them to hold themselves in readiness to join him in his expedition; Mr. Pechell observing in that despatch, that the people of Coxe's bazaar are favorable to Kingberring's cause, and provided they can escape detection, are but too ready to assist him in the designs which he may form against Arracan.

Secret Cons.
10 Sept. N° 16.

25. In the same despatch Mr. Pechell stated, that the emigrants who came over from Arracan last year, and who have resided principally in the hills and jungles, have commenced a system of plundering the inhabitants of the plains, in the manner of dakoits, attacking the houses of the inhabitants in armed bodies of 40 or 50, and again retreating with their booty into their fastnesses in the hills and jungles, where all trace of them is lost.

26. A further despatch from the magistrate of the 31st August last, recorded on the proceedings noted in the margin, contains a copy of a letter from the officer commanding a party at the advanced post of Ramoo, enclosing a translation of a letter addressed to him by Kingberring; your honourable court will observe that, in that letter, Kingberring openly avows his intention of invading Arracan, and desires that the British government may not interpose to prevent the prosecution of his designs, as they are not directed against its interests. The magistrate stated his opinion, that it was probable that Kingberring would make the attempt, and that it appeared that he had gained over to his cause some of the hill savages called Hoipeas, but who would be able to render him little effectual service.

27. Adverting to the persevering obstinacy with which Kingberring has continued to pursue his views on Arracan, and to prolong by that means the disturbances which have so long agitated that country, and the contiguous district of Chittagong, and have exposed to interruption the friendly relations subsisting between the British government and the state of Ava, we were decidedly of opinion that this pertinacious conduct on the part of Kingberring, justified and required a departure from that lenient and considerate course of conduct towards him which the British government had hitherto pursued. The great benefit which Kingberring and his family had enjoyed for a course of years, previous to the late disturbances, from the protection of the British government, and the extraordinary forbearance which had been manifested towards him by that government under circumstances of the highest provocation, ought to have produced on his part a confidence in its justice, and a disposition to make some sacrifice in order to conciliate its goodwill.

28. Your honourable court is fully aware that the uneasiness which has for some years subsisted between the state of Ava and the British government, was created and has been inflamed by the enterprize of Kingberring alone; and the unwillingness of the British government to acquiesce in the repeated requisitions of the king of Ava for the surrender of his person, with his principal adherents, in the event of their apprehension, has mainly contributed to keep alive the jealousy entertained of our designs by the king, and induced him, notwithstanding the most solemn assurance to the contrary, and the evident absurdity of the supposition, to suspect us of encouraging Kingberring's proceedings.

29. We are confident that your honourable court will concur with us in the inexpediency of our submitting to be exposed to the hazard of incurring those inconveniences any longer, from consideration for a person whose general conduct and systematic infringement of the laws of the British government, and aggressions against a friendly state, show him to be so little entitled to regard; and that you will approve the resolution which we have taken, to declare to Kingberring in express terms our determination, if he shall renew his attempts against Arracan, and hereafter come into the hands of the British government, to surrender him to the Burmese. A declaration of a similar resolution regarding those who may engage in his

Gov. Gen. in council,
1 October 1813.

his designs will be communicated to his followers, and a proclamation to the same effect circulated among the Mugs, settled at Coxe's bazaar, and in other parts of Chittagong.

30. We are disposed to hope, that a menace to this effect may induce Kingberring to reflect on the consequences in which he may involve himself by a prosecution of his designs, and that it will deter the Mugs from joining in his enterprizes. There can be little doubt, that he and his followers are encouraged to persevere in their schemes, by a conviction that the British government will not, under any circumstances, deliver them to their enemies; and are tempted to abuse the known lenity of the English character, under a persuasion that the utmost punishment that they will suffer, will not extend beyond personal restraint, the dread of which cannot be supposed to be any counterpoise to the delusive hope of regaining their native country, and retrieving their fortunes.

31. The resolution which we have now announced to your honourable court has been adopted with great reluctance, and only under a firm belief that such a measure is become absolutely necessary; and that the conduct of Kingberring and his followers has been of that criminal nature which amply warrants the resort to a measure adverse to the usual practice of the British government, and not to be employed in ordinary cases. We felt, however, that we were required by the most powerful motives of duty and public principle to relieve the subjects of the honourable company from the evils to which they continued to be exposed by the repeated enterprizes of Kingberring, and to endeavour to avert the extremity of a war with the Burmese government, which would be a probable consequence of the renewal of the designs of that person, and of the erroneous view which the king of Ava would unquestionably continue to take of the conduct and principles of the British government, with relation to the Mug emigrants.

32. Under all the circumstances of the case, the surrender of Kingberring and his principal associates cannot but be considered to be amply justified in the event of his renewing his designs after the warning which he will receive, if such a measure shall be found necessary to secure the peace of the country.

33. While, however, we have determined to declare this resolution to the parties, in the most public and impressive manner, we have taken care not to put it out of our power to recede from it if circumstances should render such a proceeding expedient; and we have accordingly resolved to abstain from conveying any communication of that resolution to the Burmese authorities, which might have the effect of tying up our hands, and giving to the government of Ava a pretext for demanding, on the ground of our own official declaration, the surrender of Kingberring and his followers, should they come into our power.

34. We have instructed the magistrate, to whom this resolution has been communicated, to be careful to regulate his correspondence or communication with the Burmese upon the principle above adverted to; and although we are aware that the Burmese officers may obtain information of the intention of the British government, on the subject of delivering up the insurgents, by means of the proclamation to which we have alluded in a preceding paragraph, yet there is a wide difference in effect between a knowledge of our intentions so obtained, and a formal declaration of them: our measures will not be embarrassed by the former.

35. On the proceedings of the annexed date, your honourable court will find recorded a draft of the proclamation, which we have deemed it expedient to furnish to the magistrate for the purpose of being circulated among the Mugs, settled in different parts of the districts of Chittagong. We have instructed the magistrate to take measures for sending copies of it to Kingberring's present station, or adopting such other means as may appear to him best adapted to ensure Kingberring's early knowledge of the intentions of the British government.

36. Mr. Pechell having stated in his despatch last referred to, his intention of addressing the rajah of Arracan on the subject of Kingberring's meditated invasion, we directed the secretary to signify our approbation of that intention, and to transmit to him the draft of a letter, according to the terms of which we were desirous that he should address the rajah. Your honourable court will find the draft of the letter recorded on the date noted in the margin.

37. By the despatch, however, subsequently received from Mr. Pechell, and recorded as per margin, your honourable court will observe that Mr. Pechell had fulfilled his intention of addressing the rajah of Arracan previously to his receipt of the draft of the letter adverted to in the preceding paragraph. As the tenor of Mr. Pechell's letter to the rajah corresponded to a certain extent with that draft, and was otherwise unexceptionable, we signified to Mr. Pechell that it would not be necessary to address a second letter to the rajah for conveying to him what had been omitted.

38. Mr. Pechell having recommended that the intercourse, which it appears subsists between some of the Mugs, in the district of Chittagong, and Kingberring's post in the hills, should be restrained, we approved of the measure, and directed him to communicate on the subject with Lieutenant-colonel Dick, and in concert with that officer to establish posts at such places as might be considered best adapted for the purpose.

39. Mr. Pechell having called our attention to the probability, under the supposition of Kingberring's invading Arracan, of his being beaten back and followed into Chittagong by the Burmese troops, and the eventual expediency of augmenting the military force in that district, we signified to Mr. Pechell that we were aware that in the event of Kingberring's renewing his attempts on Arracan, the Burmese might have the temerity to enter the British territory in pursuit of him; but that we considered the force at present in Chittagong, including the augmentation of the provincial battalion, which it has recently been found indispensably necessary to order, to be sufficient to protect that province from any desultory incursions of the Burmese. If their conduct hereafter shall compel the British government to adopt a more comprehensive system of measures, we shall be prepared to provide for the defence of Chittagong, which, in such a contingency, will of course be a primary object of attention.

40. We also approved of the intention of the magistrate to select an intelligent person to convey the letter which he had addressed to the rajah, with a view of obtaining accurate information of the state of affairs in Arracan, and the proceedings and probable designs of the Burmese in that quarter.

41. With a view to check the outrages committed by the late emigrants from Arracan, adverted to in a preceding paragraph of this despatch, the magistrate suggested an arrangement which he conceived might be attended with beneficial effects, namely, the establishment of a tannah at Coxe's bazaar, the darogah of which should be a Mug of respectability, and denominated sirdar of the place, to be vested with the power of exercising the usual duties of a police darogah: on this point we have informed Mr. Pechell that we are rather disposed to try the effect of the measure of the proclamation to the purpose above described, as the most likely to tranquillize the country, and which will probably supersede the necessity of an arrangement of the nature suggested by Mr. Pechell, and afford the means of settling the Mugs, and encouraging them to follow peaceful and industrious pursuits. The letter to the magistrate, containing an exposition of our sentiments, and conveying our instructions to the effect above described, will be found recorded on the proceedings of the date noted in the margin.

42. We shall now advert to the progress of the arrangement which we had the honour to report to your honourable court in our despatch of the 24th June, with respect to removing the Mug sirdars, with their families and followers, who were in the predicament of state prisoners, to a distance from the frontier. In that despatch we stated to your honourable court, that the fort of Chunar appeared to us to be the most proper place for their confinement; we have since determined to select Bunar, it having been ascertained that they could be more conveniently accommodated there than at the former place, and without incurring further expense in repairing buildings for their reception.

43. In the 32d paragraph of our address to your honourable court, last adverted to, we informed your honourable court that we had instructed the magistrate of Chittagong to institute an inquiry into the grounds of suspicion against each individual in confinement; and we apprised your honourable court that we had sent orders to the intermediate stations, directing the return to Dacca of the Mug sirdars who had previously been ordered to be despatched to Chunar, until such investigations should be made.

44. Those counter-orders were received at Moorshedabad in time to prevent the further progress of the Mug sirdars above alluded to, and the magistrate of that city, in his despatch recorded as per margin, reported their return to Dacca.

45. On the proceedings of the annexed dates is recorded a series of despatches from the magistrate of Chittagong, reporting on the cases of the Mug prisoners; for the details of which, and for our decision on each case, with the grounds of those decisions, we must refer your honourable court to the despatches themselves, and our resolutions communicated to Mr. Pechell in reply.

46. Your honourable court will be pleased to observe, that we have determined to remove to Bunar such of the Mug prisoners only as come within the description of sirdars, whose delinquency has been established to our conviction, and whose release or residence in Chittagong, or the vicinity, would be attended with inconvenience and hazard to the public tranquillity. Some persons of inferior rank we have directed to be retained in confinement at Chittagong till the troubles in that quarter shall have subsided, provided the magistrate shall be aware of no objection to the arrangement; and others, against whom no criminating facts were established, and whose liberation was not likely to be attended with any inconvenience, have been released on security for their peaceable behaviour, or under written engagements not to join or afford assistance to the insurgents.

47. We have applied the same principles to the case of the sirdar Nukeloo and other prisoners at Dacca.

Secret Cons.
20 August, N° 28.

48. On the proceedings noted in the margin is recorded a petition, which was presented to us by an emissary from the sirdar Nukeloo, sent by him from Dacca. Although we attached no credit to the petitioner's statement of the manner in which Lieutenant-colonel Morgan obtained possession of his person, yet, as it was desirable that the actual circumstances attending his arrest should be distinctly placed on record, we directed the magistrate of Chittagong to report for our information whatever might be known to him on the subject.

Secret Cons.

49. On the proceedings of the annexed date, your honourable court will find recorded the magistrate's report on the circumstances stated in Nukeloo's petition. The result of Mr. Pechell's inquiries satisfied us of what indeed we entertained no doubt, that the assertion in the petition relative to the manner in which he was made prisoner by Lieutenant-colonel Morgan was incorrect, and that the charge against that officer of having invited him to his camp by promises which were not fulfilled, was altogether unfounded. We accordingly directed the magistrate of Dacca to communicate to the petitioner the opinion which the result of that reference had produced on our minds.

The whole of the cases, with one exception, having been investigated, the persons destined to be removed to Bunar, will be sent to that station in pursuance of our orders to the magistrates of Dacca and Chittagong. We have taken this occasion to issue instructions to the officer commanding that fortress, for the regulation of his conduct in the custody of the Mug prisoners; for which, and for the subsidiary instructions issued at the same time to the magistrates of Shahabad, Dacca and Chittagong, we beg leave to refer your honourable court to the proceedings of the annexed date.

51. Your honourable court will observe, that we have signified in our instructions to the officer commanding at Bunar above referred to, that it is not our wish that any further restraint should be imposed on the Mug sirdars than is necessary for the security of their persons, and that there will be no objection to his permitting them to enjoy a certain degree of freedom, accompanied by proper precautions to prevent their escape.

not thought advisable to make any permanent augmentation to the salary of the judge and magistrate of Chittagong; but that, in the adjustment of our differences with the government of Ava, we should be ready to consider any claims which he might have to remuneration for his services in the political department, and the mode in which such remuneration could most properly be made.

54. Although that period his lordship, in his minute above adverted to, observed, had not yet arrived, yet he stated that it appeared to him, on further reflection, that the extraordinary increase of business of a nature entirely foreign to the ordinary duties of his office, which had been imposed upon the judge and magistrate of Chittagong since the commencement of the troubles excited by Kingberring, rendered it an act of fairness and equity to the officer filling that situation, whose vigilance, zeal and application had been conspicuous throughout a long and laborious course of highly meritorious exertions in a very delicate and arduous service, to take into consideration at the present time his claims to some remuneration for his political duties.

55. His lordship observed, that while the pressure of business not of a judicial nature, nor relating to the internal police of the district, might be supposed to be only of temporary or occasional occurrence, he should not have thought it incumbent on government to confer on the magistrate an additional remuneration for such services. They might, his lordship stated, be justly considered to be a part of the duties of the chief civil officer of the district; and in every frontier situation, occasions more or less frequent must and do occur for employing the services of the magistrate in political and other transactions not coming exactly within the limits of his functions, as described by the terms used to designate his office, for which no extraordinary remuneration is ever expected or bestowed.

56. But since the commencement of the troubles on the borders of Chittagong and Arracan, his lordship remarked, the magistrate of Chittagong had been incessantly and laboriously occupied in delicate and arduous political transactions, which demand the appropriation of a large portion of his time and of his thoughts, and augmented his regular labours to a very considerable extent; nor did the present state of our information warrant a hope that they would be diminished at an early period.

57. The salary of the magistrate of Chittagong (sicca rupees 2,000 per mensem,) his lordship observed, was on the lowest scale of allowance received by officers of that class, and was certainly not more than a remuneration for the performance of the ordinary duties of the office, and very inadequate to the additional labour and responsibility imposed on it by recent events. Mr. Pechell's rank and length of service entitled him to expect, in the ordinary course of promotion, to be advanced to a judicial office of larger emolument; and his laborious, able and meritorious services in Chittagong, formed a powerful additional claim to early consideration. The Board, his lordship stated, he was persuaded, would feel sensible of the detriment which would be occasioned to the public service by the removal of Mr. Pechell from Chittagong, while there was a chance of the renewal of the troubles which have disturbed that district. A mere reference to the voluminous correspondence on record on this subject would be sufficient to show the importance of retaining the services of an officer of local knowledge and experience, independently of the other qualifications possessed by Mr. Pechell, to conduct the measures of government, with relation to the Burmese and Mug emigrants, and generally to watch over the public interests in Chittagong. On these several grounds, his lordship observed, he felt himself warranted in proposing that an extra allowance of 500 rupees per mensem be granted to Mr. Pechell, as a remuneration for his political duties; to continue until the occasion of the grant shall cease to exist, by the restoration of tranquillity on the frontier of Chittagong, and by the consequent practicability of removing Mr. Pechell to an office of higher emolument, without hazarding the public interests in that district. If this proposition should be adopted by the Board, his lordship proposed that the additional allowance should commence from the date of Mr. Pechell's letter above adverted to; namely, the 14th of May.

58. We entirely concurred in the sentiments expressed in the governor-general's minute, and authorized the magistrate to draw the extra allowance of 500 rupees, as proposed by his lordship; subject, of course, to the revision of your honourable court; and we trust, that as the grant is in its nature merely temporary, and strongly supported by considerations of justice and expediency, it will receive the sanction of your honourable court.

59. The expense of the additional allowance will be carried to account as a political charge.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
5 February 1814.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 5th February 1814.

Honourable Sirs,

OUR last address to your honourable court on the subject of affairs in the district of Chittagong, and of our transactions with the government of Ava respecting Kingberring and the other insurgent Mugs, was dated the 1st of October 1813.

2. In that despatch we had the honour to state to your honourable court, that as the season favourable to Kingberring's operations was approaching, it appeared that he was again meditating an expedition into Arracan, but that his force was much reduced, in consequence of the measures which had been adopted by the British government for cutting off his communication with the Mug sirdars in the Chittagong district, who might be disposed to assist him with supplies; and that he was compelled to lurk in the hills and jungles in the south-eastern parts of the Chittagong frontier.

3. We were not without hopes that the exertions of the magistrate of Chittagong for the apprehension of Kingberring would have been attended with success; but although we have as yet been disappointed in that respect, we are happy to apprise your honourable court, that Kingberring continues to be unable to collect a force sufficient to execute his designs against the Burmese government, and that the tranquillity of our frontier has suffered comparatively little disturbance.

4. The magistrate of Chittagong having transmitted to us translations of letters from Kingberring, in which he avowed his intention of invading Arracan, and complained of the interruption to his views on that country which he experienced from the repeated attacks made on his parties by the British troops, it occurred to us that it would be expedient, with a view to demonstrate to the Burmese authorities the sincerity of our declarations with respect to Kingberring and his associates, to transmit the original letters above mentioned to the persons administering the affairs of Arracan. We accordingly instructed the magistrate to convey those documents to Arracan, with a letter from himself, stating, that they were communicated with the view of putting the Burmese government more fully in possession of Kingberring's designs to renew his enterprizes against Arracan, and observing that the perusal of them would satisfy that government of the little encouragement which that person expects, or has received from the British power. The despatch from Mr. Pechell and our instructions in reply to the purport above stated, will be found recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date.

5. By the despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, recorded as per margin, your honourable court will observe the success with which the measure of detaching small parties of troops to the southward of Chittagong had been attended, the officer commanding the advanced posts in that quarter having reported that it was generally understood that Kingberring had been compelled, at that time, to abandon his designs against Arracan, in consequence of his not having been joined, as he expected, by the Mugs in the honourable company's territory, who were either kept in check by the sepoys, or protected by them from being compelled by the insurgents to follow Kingberring's standard. Mr. Pechell reported, in the despatch above referred to, the arrival at his capital of the new rajah of Arracan, the former rajah having died some time previous to that event, as stated in Mr. Pechell's letter of the 6th October. Mr. Pechell also reported, in his letter of the 1st of December, that serious excesses were committed by a body of Mugs, amounting, it was stated, to the number of 5,000, who had fled from their habitations in the hills and jungles through fear of Kingberring and his party, and were, in many instances, driven by necessity to seek the means of supporting themselves by plunder; and he proposed for our consideration a plan for enabling those unfortunate people to obtain a livelihood by settling on the estate of a hill chief, named Durun Buksh Khan, whither it appeared that a number of refugee Mugs from Arracan had lately been encouraged to proceed. In the reply which we directed the secretary to return to Mr. Pechell, we signified our approbation of the plan which he had submitted to us, and which appeared not only to be unexceptionable but highly expedient, cautioning him, at the same time, to be careful in the measures which he might concert with the guardian of Durun Buksh Khan (who is a minor) for carrying it into effect, to avoid affording to the Burmese government any colour or pretext of complaint that the British government was holding out encouragement to the emigration of the Mugs from the province of Arracan.

6. The despatches from the magistrate of Chittagong, recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date, contain further details of the state of affairs in that district, the views and intentions of Kingberring, and the measures, which Mr. Pechell was carrying on for the settlement of the Mug insurgents, as above adverted to. Mr. Pechell at the same time transmitted a translation of a letter which he had received from the newly appointed governor of Arracan, which your honourable court will be happy to observe evinces a friendly disposition towards the British government, and stated that the rajah had despatched an agent for the purpose of endeavouring to prevail on the Mugs who had lately emigrated from Arracan to return to that country. We instructed Mr. Pechell to return a suitable reply to the rajah, congratulating him on his appointment to the government of Arracan, and containing corresponding professions of friendship and goodwill, with assurances that the British government would continue to afford every facility to the commercial intercourse which he was desirous should be carried on between the two countries. We signified also to the magistrate, our satisfaction at the ready disposition manifested by the guardian of the hill chief, Durun Buksh, to facilitate the execution of Mr. Pechell's plan for the settlement of the Mugs who had been driven from their former places of abode by Kingberring; but with respect to those who had emigrated in the course of the preceding year, we expressed our opinion that it would be expedient to suspend any arrangement regarding them until the effect of the rajah's proposed invitation to them to return to Arracan had been tried. The success of that plan, we observed, would supersede the necessity of any measures on the part of this government; and an attempt to carry the plan proposed by Mr. Pechell into effect at that moment, would naturally give umbrage to the rajah as interfering with the accomplishment of his own scheme. Mr. Pechell was accordingly desired to signify to the rajah's agent his readiness to assist him in any way which might conduce to the success of his mission.

7. The despatches from the magistrate of Chittagong, recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date, contain reports of the successful attacks on parties of the insurgent Mugs in their stockades to the eastward of Ramoo, and of the destruction of their stores of grain by small detachments of sepoy. On a reference to those documents your honourable court will observe that Mr. Pechell has expressed an opinion, that the Burmese troops might be led to enter the British territories in search of the insurgents; and with a view to put an end to the outrages which parties of those insurgents continued to commit, he recommended that such of them as were actually taken in arms should be tried on the spot by a military commission, and exemplary punishment inflicted upon them.

8. We signified to Mr. Pechell, in reply to his despatches above referred to, that the spirited and decisive attacks on considerable bodies of the insurgents by small parties of the British troops, and the destruction of their stockades and magazines of grain, demanded the expression of our approbation; and we directed him to cause it to be signified through Lieutenant-colonel Dick, the commanding officer of the district, to the officers and non-commissioned officers and sepoy engaged in those affairs.

9. With respect to the magistrate's suggestion, that a summary mode of trial by a military commission should be adopted, with respect to such of the insurgents as might be taken in arms, or in other words, that martial law should be substituted for the operation of the established law of the country, we were of opinion, that, under all the circumstances of the case, it would be inexpedient to adopt the measure recommended by Mr. Pechell. In forming this decision, we adverted to the difficulty of assigning to the offences of which the insurgents had been guilty any exact definition, marking the nature and degree of their criminality, to the uncertainty which exists regarding their allegiance to the British government, and to the hope also, that the repeated checks which they had lately met with and might be expected still to receive, would speedily repress their depredations.

10. Under this impression, we signified to Mr. Pechell our desire that the prisoners who had been taken, or who might fall into our hands, should be committed to trial in the ordinary manner before the court of circuit, except in cases where he might entertain doubts of their being amenable to the laws and regulations of the government, or of there being evidence sufficient to convict them, in either of which cases we directed him to apply for the special orders of government, retaining the prisoners in custody.

11. In deliberating on the means of putting it out of the power of Kingberring to renew his enterprizes against Arracan, we adverted to a proposition submitted to us in a despatch from the magistrate of the 16th January 1813, for offering a free pardon to the insurgent Mugs, with the exception of the sirdars. The situation of affairs at that time, and the apprehension that such a measure might excite the suspicions and jealousies of the Burmese, our relations with whom were then on a very delicate footing, had induced us to decide against the adoption of that suggestion at the moment, although we stated at the same time that it might be a question for consideration at a future period.

12. It occurred to us that the measure now alluded to might be resorted to at the present time with advantage, and without the fear of incurring the inconvenience above stated. We determined at the same time to authorize the magistrate to make an offer to the rajah of Arracan to admit small parties of the Burmese troops to cross the frontier in search of the insurgents; on which subject we shall state our sentiments more at large in the sequel of this despatch. And we observed to Mr. Pechell, that the inconvenience above alluded to would be rendered still less likely to arise by the coincidence of the proposed promise of pardon to the insurgents in point of time with the offer above alluded to by the rajah.

14 January, N° 19.

13. We accordingly transmitted to the magistrate a draft of a proclamation, recorded as per margin, with instructions, that if he should continue to be of opinion that the measure was advisable, he would publish it in the usual manner, taking measures for having copies of it conveyed to Kingberring's present station. We stated to Mr. Pechell at the same time, that he was at liberty to suspend the publication of it, if he should have any reason to apprehend that it was likely to be productive of inconvenience or embarrassment; in which case, we have desired him to refer the question for our further consideration.

Secret Cons.

14. The advance of the Burmese to the stockade of Mungdoo with the trifling force stated in Mr. Pechell's despatch of the 6th ultimo, did not induce us to apprehend that they entertained any design beyond that of eventually availing themselves of any opportunity of seizing the insurgent leaders by unobserved incursions into our territory. Experience having shown that no exertions of our own troops could effect the capture of Kingberring, whilst he confined himself to the remote and insalubrious part of the country which he has lately occupied, it became necessary to consider whether some more efficient plan might not be adopted. We accordingly recurred to a suggestion contained in a despatch from the magistrate of the 30th April 1813, for inviting the Burmese troops, under certain restrictions, to enter our territories in pursuit of the insurgents; a measure which we were unwilling to adopt while there was a hope that the object could be attained by the unaided operations of our troops. It appeared to us, therefore, to be advisable, under the actual circumstances of the case, to permit small bodies of the Burmese troops to enter the hills and jungles where Kingberring resides, in search of that person and his associates, under a solemn promise that they shall, on no account, enter the plains and cultivated parts of the country; and that they shall, in all cases, make a previous application to the magistrate for permission to cross the frontier.

15. On these conditions, we signified to Mr. Pechell that we would not object to the Burmese troops passing into our territory; but as objections of a local nature, which did not present themselves to our mind, might have occurred to the magistrate since the period of his original proposition, we have desired him, in that event, to refer the requisition for our consideration. If, however, he continued to think the measure expedient, we have authorized him to convey to the rajah an intimation, that in conformity to the desire entertained by the British government to effect the early apprehension of Kingberring and his associates, he had been authorized by us to assure the rajah, that in the event of his being desirous to employ his troops in endeavouring to seize the insurgents in their lurking places in the hills, any application which he should make to him for permission to pass the frontier would be complied with. Mr. Pechell was instructed to add, that the rajah must, in such case, give assurance that the bodies of troops so to be employed should not exceed in number what might be necessary for the purpose of the expedition; and that they should, on no account, enter the plains, but confine their operations to the hills and jungles, where Kingberring was known to be posted: should Kingberring venture to appear in the open country, the British troops, Mr. Pechell was instructed to state, would use every effort to seize him; and the co-operation of the Burmese troops, in that case, would not be required.

16. The rajah of Arracan having addressed a letter to the governor-general, a translation of which is recorded in the annexed date, announcing his assumption of the government, and stating his intention to invite the refugees to return to Arracan, and, in the event of their refusal, to pursue and punish them, his lordship took occasion to write a letter to the rajah in reply, recorded as per margin, applauding the gracious and indulgent consideration manifested by him for those persons; and stating the satisfaction which it would afford the British government to learn that they accepted the invitation which the rajah proposed to convey to them, to throw themselves on the clemency of the king of Ava. His lordship further promised the rajah, that every facility would be afforded by the British government to the communication of his wishes to the Mugs; and observed, that it would be unnecessary to repeat his assurances that no countenance had ever been, or would be given, by the British government, to the designs of the insurgents against Arracan,—designs no less offensive to this government than to his Burmese majesty himself. On the contrary, his lordship stated it would always be our anxious desire to co-operate with the government of Arracan in the most effectual manner, in the desirable object of apprehending the insurgent chiefs.

17. We have instructed Mr. Pechell to send an intelligent person to Arracan, to deliver the letter from the governor-general, the substance of which has been stated above, as well as the letter which Mr. Pechell may himself address to the rajah under the instructions detailed in the preceding paragraph of this despatch, with orders to the person whom he may select for that purpose, to explain the proposition contained in the letter, and to see that the rajah fully understands it, and to obtain a proper answer from him, explicitly stating his compliance with the prescribed conditions and limitations to the Burmese troops passing the frontier.

18. We have further signified to Mr. Pechell, that if he should deem it proper to make a reference to us on the subject of the passage of the Burmese troops into our territories, it will nevertheless be necessary to despatch the letter addressed by the governor-general to the rajah, as soon as he receives it, without awaiting a reply to his reference on the point adverted to.

19. Observing by the magistrate's despatches, that the Burmese officer, in command of the detachment of their troops embarked on the Nauf river, is stated to be the same who headed the party which plundered the village of Gurguneeah in January 1813; we have directed Mr. Pechell to report whether the inhabitants of that village are stated to have been restored, in order that in the opposite case we may take into consideration the measures proper to be pursued. Your honourable court will find the instructions to Mr. Pechell, on the several points detailed in the preceding paragraphs, recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date.

which we have received of the proceedings of the Mug insurgents in Chittagong, and the views and disposition of the Burmese government.

21. In reply to Mr. Pechell's letter of the 11th of January, in which your honourable court will observe, that the letter from the rajah of Arracan was enclosed, we have directed our secretary to state that an answer to the rajah's letter will be hereafter transmitted with such instructions as the tenor of it may suggest. It will be satisfactory to your honourable court to observe, by the translation of the rajah's letter to Mr. Pechell, enclosed in the magistrate's despatch last referred to, that the letter from the governor-general of the 14th January, and the instructions issued to Mr. Pechell under the same date, if, under the discretion allowed to the magistrate, they be ultimately carried into effect, will have anticipated the rajah's application to the utmost practicable extent. The assurance conveyed to Mr. Pechell by the rajah's vakeel, that the Burmese troops have been prohibited from crossing the boundary, must be considered to be very satisfactory, as indicating an improved temper and disposition on the part of that government, which is indeed also manifested, as your honourable court will observe, by the tenor of the rajah's letter to Mr. Pechell. A copy of the secretary's letter to Mr. Pechell is also transmitted a number in the packet.

To the magistrate,
21 January.

22. In the despatch from Mr. Pechell of the 27th January, your honourable court will however observe, that notwithstanding the prohibition stated to have been issued to the Burmese troops by the rajah, regarding the violation of the British territory, a party of Burmahs, consisting of 300 men, had made its appearance at the village of Gurguneeah, and carried off four of the inhabitants of that place, one of whom had since made his escape: the magistrate, at the same time, expresses his opinion that this outrage is rather to be ascribed to an indifference on the part of the Burmese to the pleasure of the British government, than to any hostile intentions; and is disposed to believe, that the absence of the rajah at his capital, has been taken advantage of by the inferior officers at Mungdoo's stockade, as a favourable opportunity to commit the act of aggression alluded to. Mr. Pechell states, that he has addressed a letter to the rajah on the subject, and is not without hopes that it will produce an apology from the rajah for the misconduct of the Burmese officers, and the restoration of the persons who have been carried away.

23. Your honourable court will also observe, by the magistrate's despatch of the 23d ultimo, that some of the principal Mug sirdars, residing at Coxe's bazaar, have been seized by the officer commanding in that quarter, on suspicion of aiding and abetting Kingberring. We are disposed to concur with the magistrate on the doubts which he has expressed of the criminality of those sirdars, and however happy we are to acknowledge our sense of the zeal which actuated Captain Fogo in the proceedings described in his correspondence on that subject, we are compelled to remark, that the seizure of those persons, without previous communication with the magistrate, appears to have been precipitate and irregular. We reserve our further sentiments, however, for the report which we expect to receive from the magistrate of the result of the investigation, which he proposes to institute into the justice of the complaints which have been preferred against those sirdars, and which led to their apprehension.

24. In the 16th and following paragraphs of our address to your honourable court of the 1st October last, we adverted to the arrival at Chittagong of the shahbunder of Arracan, and to the objects of the clandestine mission with which it was said that he was charged. The magistrate having subsequently reported, in his despatch recorded as per margin, his doubts with regard to the professed intention of that person to return to Arracan, and his suspicion that he meant to proceed to some part of the coast of Coromandel, with a view to dispose of a cargo of rice, as well as to endeavour to prosecute the object of his mission, solicited our instructions with regard to the delivery of the letter with which he had furnished him to the address of the rajah, as specified in the 20th paragraph of our address to your honourable court above adverted to. Being disposed to attach little importance to the proceedings of the shahbunder on the coast of Coromandel, we did not think it necessary to prohibit his prosecuting his voyage; but approved of the intention signified by Mr. Pechell, to ascertain and report such further information as he might be able to collect with regard to the name of the vessel and the description of her crew. We, at the same time, instructed Mr. Pechell to deliver to the shahbunder the letter from the governor-general to the rajah of Arracan, observing, that as the subject of it related to the shahbunder himself, its receipt by the present rajah previously to the return of the shahbunder, supposing it to be his real design not to proceed forthwith to Arracan, was a matter of no consequence, and that it was better, therefore, that the shahbunder should himself be the bearer of it as originally proposed.

25. On the proceedings of the date inserted in the margin your honourable court will find recorded a letter from Captain Canning, late envoy at Ava, submitting an extract from the Italian missionary at Rangoon, Don Ignacio, containing an account of the state of affairs at that city and its vicinity in the month of August last, and relating a change that had taken place in the commercial system of the country, by the abolition of all the duties which had been established since the year 1788; the king of Ava having issued an order, to be circulated throughout the whole Burmah empire, stating, that all new duties and chokeys have been abolished in the present reign, and that merchants will enjoy, as heretofore, entire liberty to carry on their concerns agreeably to their own will and pleasure.

26. This intelligence, your honourable court will observe, is confirmed by a letter from the viceroy of Pegu to the governor-general, recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date. The letter in question was brought to the presidency by a vakeel from the Burmah government, whose arrival, and the circumstances attending his mission, are reported in a letter from Captain Canning, recorded as per margin; to which we beg leave to refer your honourable court for a knowledge of the causes which, in Captain Canning's opinion, led to the adoption of the measure announced in the viceroy's letter.

27. Captain Canning on that occasion observed, that the refusal of the supreme government to deliver up the refugee Mugs appeared to have rendered prevalent a supposition among the merchants of Calcutta, that when, on the faith of the king of Ava's proclamation respecting the abolition of duties at Rangoon, a certain number of vessels should have proceeded hitherto, the Burmese government might probably seize both ships and commanders as hostages for the surrender of the Mug insurgents; Captain Canning accordingly suggested, that if we should deem it expedient to ground any public notice to the merchants on the intelligence conveyed in the viceroy's letter, it might be advisable not to pledge, in any manner, the interposition of the British government, but to allow the matter merely to rest on the authority of the letter in question. We accordingly directed an extract from the translation of the viceroy's letter, relative to the new commercial regulations of the Burmese government, to be published for general information, leaving it to the merchants and traders who might be disposed to engage in commercial speculations in that country to act as they thought proper. The letter from the viceroy contained also a renewal of the demand for the surrender of Kingberring and the other Mug refugees; on this point we considered it to be sufficient to refer the viceroy, for a knowledge of our sentiments, to the letter from the Earl of Minto in reply to the former demand on that subject.

28. Previously to the receipt of the letter from the viceroy above adverted to, we had received, through Captain Canning, an application on the part of the Burmese vakeels, whose mission was reported in our address to your honourable court from this department of the 24th June last, representing that, adverting to the practice of their own country, in which every change of governor usually produces a change of measures and the reversal of his predecessor's proceedings, they had been led to entertain a hope that the arrival of his excellency the Earl of Moira, might possibly effect a change in the determination of government with respect to the refusal to surrender the refugee Mugs. In conveying their application for a further communication of the sentiments of government on this subject, Captain Canning observed, that as their own security and future exculpation with their government might depend on their receipt of a communication of the sentiments of the present governor-general, a humane regard to the precarious situation in which they might be placed by the unsuccessful result of their deputation, on their return to their own country, might render it proper to comply with their wishes.

29. The vakeels having subsequently presented a memorial to the effect above stated, under their own signature, we directed the secretary to address an official note to them in reply, stating, that the letter from the Earl of Minto to the viceroy, and the note which the secretary had formerly addressed to them by his lordship's command, being entirely conformable to the sentiments and resolutions of the present government, he was instructed to refer them to those documents, as containing the deliberate and final resolutions of the British government on the question of the surrender of Kingberring and his associates; your honourable court will find the official note from the secretary recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date.

30. The vakeels were accommodated with a passage to Rangoon at the public expense, and have proceeded on their return in the month of November last.

Captain Canning,
27 January 1814.

31. We have since received accounts of their safe arrival at Rangoon, and for the satisfaction of your honourable court we enclose as a number in the packet, the letter from Captain Canning, in which those accounts are contained, by which your honourable court will observe, that the refusal of this government to surrender Kingberring, was not received by the local authorities in Pegu with any apparent degree of irritation. It is further stated in the same despatch, that the Burmah envoys in question were to proceed without delay to the capital, in company with the viceroy of Pegu who had been directed to repair to court. Captain Canning observes on this occasion, that it is pleasing to observe, that the conduct of the envoys in giving a candid statement to their own government of the friendly and hospitable treatment which they had experienced while in the company's dominions, was very different from that of their countrymen, on more than one occasion, when placed in a similar situation.

32. Your honourable court will also observe in Captain Canning's letter above quoted, that the ackoonroon, who had lately visited Benares for the ostensible purpose of collecting religious writings, had returned to Arracan, and would appear to have succeeded in the design to which we alluded in the 15th paragraph of our letter to your honourable court of the 1st October last, of carrying away some Hindoostanee females, one of whom is probably the person represented by him to the king as a daughter of the rajah of Arracan, sent by the rajah as a token of respect for his Burmese majesty.

33. We beg leave to call the attention of your honourable court, to another letter also received from Captain Canning, recorded on the annexed date, as containing some account of the state of affairs at Pegu. With reference to the effect of the king's orders noticed in the paragraph of this despatch for the abolition of the new duties, it appears by the intelligence which Captain Canning has received, that upwards of twenty vessels from the different presidencies in India had resorted to Rangoon, and were carrying on their commercial concerns on the faith of the abolition of monopolies, and the promised restoration of trade to its former footing; Captain Canning remarks, that it did not appear that the amended system of trade was likely to be rigidly adhered to, as on finding their vessels began to frequent the port, the government of Pegu had made known its intention of adding a duty of two per cent on those formerly collected, declaring, at the same time, the ships even which had left the place to be liable to that duty, and taking security from those persons who had transacted their concerns for the payment of it.

34. Captain Canning having been detained at the presidency, since the 18th September 1812, to await the arrival of the expected mission from Ava, whose subsequent departure has been announced in a preceding paragraph of this despatch, it being judged that his presence would be materially conducive to the public interests with respect to the conduct of the communications which would take place on the questions depending between this government and the state of Ava, we deem it equitable that a reasonable remuneration should be allowed to him for any loss incident to his absence from his corps, and to the necessary increase of expense attending his residence in Calcutta.

Pol. Department,
1 Oct. 1813, N° 95.

35. The late governor-general accordingly recorded a minute on this subject, proposing that an allowance of sicca rupees, 250 per mensem for house rent, and an equal sum to cover the difference of allowance, occasioned by his absence from his corps, and by any extra expense incident to his residence at the presidency, should be granted to him. His lordship further proposed to permit Captain Canning to charge during the same period the sum of 100 rupees for a writer, whom he had found necessary to maintain. Concurring entirely in the justice of his lordship's proposition, we have authorized the payment of the allowance in question to Captain Canning, as a remuneration for the duty performed by him, and he has accordingly accordingly received it up to the date of the departure of the Burmese vakeels in the month of November last.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated the 29th April 1814.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
29 April 1814.

Honourable Sirs,

WE propose in the present address, to communicate to your honourable court a further report on the affairs of Chittagong, in continuation of the narrative of events and transactions in that quarter, submitted to your honourable court in our address from this department under date the 5th of February last.

Secret Cons.
25 Feb. No 49.

2. On the proceedings of the annexed date is recorded a despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, in reply to our instructions of the 14th January last, submitting some observations on the proclamation, which, as reported to your honourable court in the 13th paragraph of our address of the 5th of February, we had transmitted to Mr. Pechell, containing an offer of pardon to the insurgent Mugs, with the exception of the sirdars, leaving Mr. Pechell at liberty to suspend the publication of it, if he should think that it was likely to be productive of inconvenience or embarrassment, in which case he was desired to refer the question for our further consideration. Mr. Pechell had accordingly availed himself of the discretion above stated to suspend the publication of the proclamation, and the grounds on which he had deemed it expedient to do so were as follow: When he first submitted for our consideration the plan of offering a free pardon to the insurgent Mugs in January 1813, he observed that he had proposed it under the idea that the total defeat of the insurgents, headed by Kingberring, and the capture of nearly all their boats and stores by Lieutenant Young at Coxe's bazaar, as also the subsequent attack, defeat, and dispersion of the shattered remains of their force by the Burmese troops at their stockade at Mungallageenee, had necessarily extinguished every hope of success with regard to their scheme of reconquering Arracan. For some time after those occurrences, Mr. Pechell stated, nothing was heard of the insurgent Mugs, excepting the apprehension of parties of them in the attempt to skulk back to their homes, nearly in a state of starvation. This latter circumstance had deterred, according to Mr. Pechell's conjecture, many other of the insurgents from returning home, and not having any means of honest subsistence in their places of concealment in the hills and jungles, they were driven to the necessity of plundering as the only alternative of perishing with hunger. Mr. Pechell had hoped that the miseries which those people had thus entailed on themselves by joining Kingberring's standard, combined with the experience which they must have acquired of the utter inadequacy of their means to the object in view, would induce those parties who still adhered to Kingberring, and those who were subsisting by plunder, to return to their homes and follow honest and peaceable occupations, provided they received an assurance that their past offences would, in that event, be forgiven, and that thus an end would be put to their wild schemes against Arracan. Since that period, however, it was stated by Mr. Pechell, so far from being discouraged by their late disasters, Kingberring had become more daring than before, and the proclamation which was published on the 10th of September last (threatening to deliver them up to the Burmese government) appeared to have had little or no effect but that of provoking insolent letters from Kingberring. Mr. Pechell further observed, that it had been suggested to him at different times, and from a consideration of all the events of the last two years, he was himself strongly inclined to believe it, that the Mugs despaired of regaining Arracan by their own means, but that their object was, by working upon the unreasonable jealousies and arrogance of the Ava government by a continuance of their periodical incursions into Arracan, ultimately to embroil the British government in a war with the state of Ava, the consequence of which might possibly be the expulsion of the Burmese by the British power, and the re-establishment of themselves in Arracan under a government of their own. Mr. Pechell stated that he believed that the hope of regaining Arracan by this course was prevalent among the Mugs; and he observed, that the quantities of grain found in the different stockades of Kingberring, which had been attacked by our sepoys, amounted, in his opinion, to a proof, that Kingberring was more strongly supported than had hitherto been known. From this circumstance, and other observations which he had made, Mr. Pechell stated that he was afraid that the whole of the Mugs were secretly assisting Kingberring, and urging him to persist in his schemes, notwithstanding their professions to the contrary.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,

3. For the above and further considerations, tending to show that lenient measures with the Mugs would not avail, Mr. Pechell stated in his despatch last referred to, that he had suspended the publication of the proposed offer of free pardon; understanding that Kingberring was then meditating another attempt against Arracan, where it was to be expected that he would meet with his usual defeat, Mr. Pechell observed, that such of his followers as might escape would probably take advantage of the pardon, if it were to be published, and return to their homes, to await a more favourable opportunity of promoting Kingberring's views. Instead, therefore, of adopting the lenient course proposed, of the success of which Mr. Pechell stated that his experience of the character and conduct of the Mugs would not admit of his entertaining any sanguine hopes, he suggested to us a plan, the adoption of which might lead, he believed, to the apprehension of Kingberring, or to the entire expulsion of the insurgent Mugs from the British territories. This was, to issue a proclamation to all the Mugs, stating that if Kingberring and his sirdars were not apprehended by a certain day, the Mugs were to be considered to have forfeited the protection of the British government, and would be expelled from its dominions. Mr. Pechell at the same time stated some objections which might be made to the above plan, to which it is unnecessary specifically to advert; they related principally to the difficulty which the Mugs, though willing to deliver up Kingberring, might experience in attempting to obtain possession of his person, by his retiring to a great distance to the north-east of Chittagong; as also the difficulty which might attend the execution of the menace to expel the Mugs from our territories, if that measure should be resolved on. Mr. Pechell also stated his intention of suspending the transmission of the letter from the governor-general to the rajah of Arracan, on the subject of our readiness to co-operate with the rajah in the most effectual manner in the object of apprehending the insurgent Mugs, alluded to in the 16th paragraph of our address to your honourable court of the 5th February.

4. We signified to Mr. Pechell in reply, our entire approbation of his having suspended, for the reasons stated in his despatch, the issue of the proclamation, containing the offer of free pardon above adverted to, and also of his intention to defer the transmission of the governor-general's letter to the rajah of Arracan. We intimated to him, that under the considerations submitted by him, we had determined to withhold the proclamation altogether; at the same time, we stated that we discerned objections to the measure which he had proposed to substitute, namely, to hold out to the Mugs a menace of expulsion from the British territory, if Kingberring should not be seized and delivered up to government: it appeared to us, that such a proceeding would not be just towards the Mugs, who, supposing them to have the inclination to deliver up that chief, would probably not have it in their power to effect the purpose, and that the penalty annexed to the failure would necessarily involve in the same punishment the innocent and the guilty, those who were well-affected to government, and willing, yet unable, to gain possession of Kingberring's person, and of those who were desirous of screening him. We adverted also to a suggestion which was submitted by Mr. Pechell, that a proclamation should be issued, declaring the proposed amnesty in favour of those who might wish to avail themselves of it by the performance of the prescribed condition, and threatening the guilty with expulsion; on this suggestion, we observed to Mr. Pechell, that even a measure of this nature would be of dubious efficacy; and as the expulsion or punishment of the guilty was a power which we already possessed, and would doubtless exercise, we were disposed to think it better that the measure in question should not be adopted.

5. We intimated to Mr. Pechell, that the reasons assigned by him for suspending the transmission of the governor-general's letter to the rajah of Arracan were satisfactory: satisfactory; but that under the resolution which we had now adopted, and which we shall proceed to state in the following paragraph of this address, we considered it to be desirable that the letter should be forwarded without delay, unless the answer which Mr. Pechell might receive from the rajah to a remonstrance, against a late incursion of the Burmese to Gurguneeah within the British territory, should unexpectedly be of a nature to render a different course of proceeding necessary. In the latter case Mr. Pechell was desired to continue to suspend the transmission of the governor-general's letter until he should receive our further instructions.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,

6. The resolution above adverted to was, that Mr. Pechell should accompany the governor-general's letter to the rajah with one from himself, stating his desire under the instructions of his government to depute a confidential person to confer with the rajah, and proposing to the rajah to receive Mr. Pechell's agent either at Arracan, or at any other station most convenient to the rajah. Mr. Pechell was further instructed to state, in the letter which he should send to the rajah, that the object of the mission was to concert with the rajah some combined measures for effecting the seizure of Kingberring and his principal adherents by the joint operations of the troops of both countries.

7. We stated to Mr. Pechell that if the rajah should agree to receive his agent, it would be proper to select a proper person for the service, and to despatch him to the rajah with instructions to the following purport: that he should state to the rajah the concern with which the British government had seen all its efforts to seize Kingberring, disappointed by the impracticability of attacking him on the hills and jungles; that while the severe checks which all the parties of the insurgents who had ventured to descend into the plains had received from the British troops, must have considerably impaired their means of offence, especially against the British territory, yet that the British government was equally anxious as before to unite its efforts with those of the officers of the king of Ava for the purpose of seizing Kingberring; and that, for the purpose of concerting with the rajah the most effectual means of accomplishing this desirable object, the magistrate of Chittagong had deputed his agent, under our instructions, to confer with the rajah on those points.

8. We further desired Mr. Pechell to instruct his agent to inform the rajah, that it had occurred to us that the employment of a Burmese force, to act in the hills on both sides of the boundary between the territories of the two states, while the British troops should act in the low and open country of Chittagong, would afford the most likely means of seizing Kingberring and his principal sirdars. Mr. Pechell has been further instructed to desire his agent to state, that if this plan meets the approbation of the rajah, the magistrate of Chittagong will be prepared to admit the Burmese troops into the British territory, under the restrictions and limitations communicated to Mr. Pechell in our instructions of the 14th January last, to which Mr. Pechell is to direct his agent to obtain the rajah's consent in writing.

9. We have intimated to Mr. Pechell, that the agent must be instructed to receive any proposition which the rajah may make with a view to the same object, but not to commit either Mr. Pechell, or the British government to its adoption, by any declaration of assent; any proposition which may be made is to be communicated to us in the first instance for our consideration. For a more detailed knowledge of the instructions which we issued on this occasion to the magistrate at Chittagong, we beg leave to refer your honourable court to the letter addressed to that officer, recorded on the annexed date.

10. On the proceedings of the date noted in the margin is recorded a despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, reporting his receipt of an answer to the letter which he had addressed to the rajah, respecting the incursion of the Burmese to Gurguneeah; although the letter from the rajah was far from being satisfactory on some points, we did not consider it to be of a tenor to require any deviation from the proceeding pointed out to Mr. Pechell in our instructions of the 25th of February last, above adverted to, with respect to the transmission of the governor general's letter, and the eventual deputation of an agent on the magistrate's part to the rajah, and we accordingly directed Mr. Pechell to proceed to carry those instructions into execution. We also desired Mr. Pechell, in the event of the rajah agreeing to the proposition which was to be made to him to receive an agent, to add to the instructions with which we had already desired him to furnish his agent, directions to revive the subject of the attack on Gurguneeah in the past year, and endeavour to obtain the liberation of the inhabitants who had been carried away on that occasion by the Burmese. The agent was further to demand the release of some Mugs, who had been made prisoners, and carried away by the Burmese on their recent incursion to the same village; we stated to the magistrate on this point, that the violent and unjustifiable seizure of the company's subjects, could not be allowed to pass without every effort to effect their release, and if application and remonstrance to the rajah should fail, we should consider what further measures it might be advisable to pursue; our instructions to the magistrate above stated are recorded as per margin.

11. The despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong recorded on the annexed date, contains intelligence of a report which had reached Mr. Pechell, that the insurgent Mugs had actually carried into execution their meditated design of again invading Arracan. We observed to the magistrate in reply, that the renewal of those enterprizes on the part of the Mugs against Arracan must always be received by us with concern, as under any result they must tend to expose to interruption the tranquillity of the district of Chittagong, and perhaps lead to a revival of unpleasant discussions between the British government and the state of Ava.

Secret Cons.
7 April, N° 35.

12. The course of measures which it might be proper to pursue under the state of circumstances which the invasion of Arracan might produce could not be decided on until we should receive further reports from the magistrate of the course of events; but it occurred to us, that the absence of the principal body of the insurgents might afford the opportunity of attacking and destroying their great stockade in the eastern hills, and thus depriving them of an immediate and secure retreat, and materially crippling their means of action. We were aware, at the same time, that physical and local difficulties of a nature to obstruct the execution of this plan might exist, and accordingly, in suggesting it to the magistrate of Chittagong, we directed him to consult with Colonel Dick, the officer commanding at that station, and left it to their judgment to take measures for carrying it into effect, if it should appear to be practicable. We signified to Mr. Pechell, at the same time, that the formation of a plan of co-operation with the rajah of Arracan against the insurgents had become more than ever desirable by the occurrence above adverted to, of their incursion into that country, and we desired him to avail himself of the first opportunity of carrying our instructions on that subject into effect.

Secret Cons.
15 April, N° 36.

13. A subsequent despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong of the 13th instant, contains the information that the party which Kingberring had detached into Arracan had been met by a Burmese force and put to the route, and that Kingberring himself, with his main force, on hearing that the Burmese troops were advancing to attack him at his grand stockade, called Tyn, had abandoned his position, and that his adherents had dispersed. This intelligence, the magistrate stated, had been confirmed from many quarters. Mr. Pechell has observed, in the same despatch, that he did not suppose that the Burmese would enter the plains in pursuit of the insurgents, even if the latter were to come into the British territory, but would content themselves with destroying the Tyn stockade, which was the grand rendezvous of Kingberring, and where they might expect to find some plunder. In the event, however, of the Burmese entering the plains, Captain Fogo, the officer commanding to the southward of Chittagong, was already furnished with instructions for his guidance. This last defeat of Kingberring by the Burmese, in Mr. Pechell's opinion, is likely to lead to the apprehension of that chief by the Mugs, who rather than incur the hazard of being exposed to the resentment of the Burmahs under the proposed plan of their admission within the British frontier, will concert among themselves the means of securing the person of Kingberring, and delivering him up. For a more detailed account of the grounds on which the magistrate is disposed to believe that the Mugs will be induced to obtain possession of Kingberring's person for the purpose of surrendering him to the British authorities, we beg leave to refer your honourable court to the magistrate's letter last mentioned.

Secret Cons.
22 April, 34 & 38.

14. We have since received two despatches from the magistrate, recorded on our proceedings of the 22d instant, in reply to our instructions of the 25th February, submitting the drafts of a letter which he proposes to address to the rajah of Arracan, relative to the contemplated arrangement for admitting the Burmese troops into the hills within the British territories, and of the instructions which he has prepared for the agent whom he proposes to depute with it to the rajah. The tenor of the drafts has appeared to us to be very proper; but adverting to the little advantage to be obtained by correspondence with the rajah, we have recommended

Mr.

Mr. Pechell to confine his letter to the rajah to a concise and general statement of the object in view, referring the rajah for the details as they are now contained in Mr. Pechell's draft to the verbal representations which are to be made by the agent. We have left, however, to Mr. Pechell's discretion, to adopt the mode suggested by us, or to make a direct communication at length to the rajah, in the terms of the draft as it now stands. Mr. Pechell having also in his letter of the 13th instant, one of those last referred to, submitted his sentiments on the practicability of destroying the Tyn stockade of the insurgents, during their absence, alluded to in the 13th paragraph of this despatch, we have signified to him in reply, that under the circumstances stated by him, we are satisfied of the inexpediency of employing British troops to destroy that stockade; and that we concur with him in opinion, that that object will be best effected by the Burmese, if it have not been already accomplished by them, in the event of their proceeding in pursuit of the insurgents into the hills in that quarter under the permission which they may receive to enter our territories. Our instructions to Mr. Pechell, in reply to his letter last referred to, are recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date.

15. We have this day received despatches from Mr. Pechell, reporting the particulars of an incursion to Gurguneeah by a party of Burmese troops. The Burmese began to erect a stockade; but on the advance of Captain Fogo, they retreated towards the frontier. We do not think it necessary to trouble your honourable court with the details, which are of no importance; and we propose to instruct Mr. Pechell not to suspend his negotiations with the rajah of Arracan, but to remonstrate with the rajah on this renewed aggression of his troops, which, we have reason to think, has been committed without his sanction.

16. In the 23d paragraph of our address of the 5th February we reported the circumstance of some Mug sirdars, residing at Coxe's bazaar, having been seized on a charge of aiding and abetting Kingberring. We have since received a despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, recorded in the annexed date, reporting the result of his investigation of those charges, which has entirely satisfied us of their being totally without foundation.

Secret Cons.

17. Under this conviction, we have directed the magistrate to release the parties immediately from all restraint, and to permit them to depart for their respective places of residence.

18. On the proceedings of the annexed dates are recorded three despatches on the subject of charges which had been preferred by a person named Nusseeraolla, against two hill chiefs, for supplying the insurgents with fire-arms, and reporting the result of his investigation; by which it appeared that the charges had been falsely and maliciously brought forward. We therefore directed Mr. Pechell to release those chiefs, and to proceed against the informant, Nusseeraolla, in the mode prescribed by the regulations.

19. The magistrate also reported, in the last of the three despatches above referred to, that he had released thirty-eight hill people, who had been seized at the same time with one of the hill chiefs alluded to in the preceding paragraph, no evidence having been brought against them of having offered resistance to the troops who were employed to secure the hill chief in question. We have approved of the magistrate's proceedings on this occasion, and of his resolution to dismiss from his employment Shahhamut Ally, the person who had transmitted exaggerated reports respecting the hill chiefs and their dependents, including the thirty-eight persons above mentioned; intimating, that that person's conduct appeared to be such as would perhaps warrant Mr. Pechell in proceeding against him according to law, as an accomplice of Nusseeraolla.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
23 June 1814.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor-General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated the 23d June 1814.

Honourable Sirs,

OUR last address to your honourable court relative to the affairs of Chittagong and the Mugs was dated the 29th April last. We now propose to resume the narrative of events and transactions in that quarter, from the date of our despatch above referred to, to the latest period to which our advices from the magistrate of Chittagong extend.

2. In the 15th and subsequent paragraphs of our address of the 29th April 1814, we adverted to an incursion which had been made by a party of Burmese troops at Gurguneeah, within the honourable company's dominions, and to the instructions which we had issued on that occasion to the magistrate of Chittagong. Mr. Pechell's despatch on that subject, and the letter which was addressed to him in reply, will be found recorded on our proceedings of the date noted in the margin. Some further particulars respecting this outrage by the Burmese troops, when it appears that two inoffensive Mugs, who were engaged in the peaceable occupation of husbandry, were barbarously murdered, are detailed in a subsequent despatch from Mr. Pechell, recorded on the annexed date, to which we do not consider it necessary more particularly to advert. We intimated to Mr. Pechell, in reply, that it would be proper, in the communication which he was about to make to the rajah of Arracan, to notice the barbarous and wanton attack on the two Mugs; treating it, however, as an act which could not fail to excite the indignation and displeasure of the rajah against the perpetrators of the murder.

3. On the proceedings of the annexed date is recorded the despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, in reply to our instructions of the 29th April and 6th May, submitting for our approval the draft of a letter which he proposed under those instructions to address to the rajah of Arracan. We approved the draft as being entirely conformable to the sentiments which we had expressed to Mr. Pechell on the subject to which it related.

4. With reference to the resolution stated in the 6th paragraph of our address of the 29th of April last, to permit the Burmese troops under certain restrictions and limitations to enter the British territory in search of Kingberring, we have now the honour to solicit the attention of your honourable court to the despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong recorded on the annexed date, reporting the return of the messenger whom he had sent to the rajah of Arracan, and enclosing a translation of the rajah's letter in reply to Mr. Pechell's proposal, for deputing an agent to Arracan for the purpose of arranging the plan for the co-operation of the Burmese troops within our frontier. On a reference to that document, your honourable court will observe, that the rajah has avoided giving a written answer to the proposal in question, a circumstance which Mr. Pechell states has excited his surprise, particularly as he had learnt from the messenger that the rajah had verbally expressed to him his willingness to receive any person whom Mr. Pechell might desire to send. A narrative of the transactions which passed at the rajah's court during the messenger's stay, is also enclosed in the despatch from Mr. Pechell, last referred to; and with reference to that statement, Mr. Pechell observes, that the cause of the rajah's not noticing the point in question, may be ascribed to his desire to postpone the settlement of the proposed plan until the expiration of the periodical rains. Mr. Pechell at the same time suggested the propriety of his being authorized to address another letter to the rajah, requesting in distinct terms that the rajah would give a written answer to the proposal for deputing an agent to him, and informing him that no parties of Burmese troops would be permitted to cross the frontier until the agent had been received, and the rajah's assent obtained to the limitations and conditions under which the eventual admission of the Burmese troops was to take place. The magistrate requested to be furnished with our instructions on the point above stated, of again addressing the rajah, and also with regard to an expectation expressed by the rajah, that on the Burmese troops entering the British territory they should be provided by this government with arms, ammunition and provisions. We signified to Mr. Pechell in reply, that we entirely approved his suggestion of addressing another letter to the rajah to the effect above stated, and that it would be expedient to notice at the same time that part of the rajah's letter which adverted to the the Burmese troops being furnished with arms, &c. by the British government, by observing to the rajah that, in the event of the proposed plan being finally settled, it would of course be the duty of the Burmese government to render its troops efficient by furnishing them with the necessary equipments, as otherwise their co-operation with the British troops in the pursuit of Kingberring could be of no avail, and that no military stores, &c. could be provided for their use by the British government.

5. The despatch from the magistrate above referred to, contains the satisfactory information of Kingberring's cause having been greatly weakened by the death of two of the principal sirdars attached to his party. It would also appear that a rival chief had started up in opposition to Kingberring, and it is not improbable that the magistrate of Chittagong may, in the dissensions which may be expected to take place between the rival parties, find the means of obtaining possession of Kingberring's person, an object, the failure of which hitherto is in a great measure to be attributed to the secret attachment which the whole body of Muga is believed to bear to the cause of the insurgents. The letter to the magistrate, of which the substance has been stated above, is recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date.

6. The latest accounts received from the magistrate of Chittagong, respecting the views and proceedings of the government of Ava, are contained in a private letter from Mr. Pechell to our secretary, recorded on the proceedings of this day's date, by which your honourable court will observe, that that barbarous and ignorant court is apparently meditating a renewal of the wild and extravagant scheme, of forming a confederation of all the native princes of this country for the purpose of expelling the English from India, to which subject we had the honour to call the attention of your honourable court, in our addresses of the 24th June and 1st October 1813, in reporting the circumstances of the clandestine mission of the shahbunder of Arracan. In the reply which we have directed our secretary to transmit to Mr. Pechell, we have repeated the sentiments which we formerly expressed to him with respect to the little importance which we attached to those paltry intrigues. We have not, therefore, deemed it necessary to betray any jealousy or suspicion of the designs of the Burmese, by interdicting their commercial intercourse with the city of Dacca, with which place a considerable traffic is carried on, and to which, in the first instance, the clandestine mission alluded to by Mr. Pechell in his letter above noticed, proposed to proceed in the character of merchants, with the supposed ulterior design of penetrating through the honourable company's territories, collecting information by the way, to the dominions of the Sikh chief Runjeet Sing; we have, however, instructed Mr. Pechell to apprise the magistrate of Dacca of the supposed views of the party of Burmahs in question, with a view to their motions being watched, and in the event of their attempting to prosecute their journey in land, to arrest their progress, and send them back to Arracan. The letter to Mr. Pechell, of which the substance has been here given, is recorded on the proceedings last referred to.

Political Cons.

7. On the proceedings of the date noted in the margin, is recorded a correspondence with the acting magistrate of Dacca, and the officer commanding at Bunar, respecting the arrangements required for the safe custody, dieting, and medical treatment of the Mug prisoners, despatched from Dacca, to be confined in that garrison, agreeably to the plan already reported to your honourable court in our address from this department of the 1st October 1813. We do not consider it to be necessary to trouble your honourable court with the details of that arrangement, and it will be sufficient to refer your honourable court to the letter to the commanding officer at Bunar, recorded on the proceedings last mentioned, by which it will appear that the expense of feeding and guarding the prisoners, to the number of forty-six persons, will amount to about 390 rupees per mensem.

We have been induced to transfer the correspondence in question to this department, from which, indeed, our addresses on the subject to your honourable court have hitherto been transmitted, not conceiving that any further necessity existed for recording it in the secret department.

We have the honour to refer your honourable court to a despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, recorded as per margin, enclosing a letter from Captain Fogo, commanding at Ramoö, submitting a plan for forming a local corps of Mugs, and describing the advantages which may be expected to be derived from its adoption. Mr. Pechell having transmitted that document without any comment, we have signified to him, that it would have been satisfactory to have received his observations and remarks on Captain Fogo's proposition, founded on the local knowledge and experience which Mr. Pechell has acquired of the character and habits of the Mugs, and we have accordingly called on him to submit a report on the subject. We have also referred a copy of Captain Fogo's letter for the consideration of his excellency the commander-in-chief, with a request that his excellency will be pleased to communicate his sentiments regarding the plan in question in a military point of view, and we shall have the honour to report our determination on the subject in our next report to your honourable court on Chittagong affairs.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
20 Dec. 1817.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Governor-General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 20th December 1817.

Honourable Sirs,

THE object of this address is to submit to your honourable court a report on the affairs of Chittagong, in conformity to the intention intimated in a despatch of the late vice-president in council, under date the 29th of October.

2. The governor-general in council, in his letter of the 23d of June 1814, adverted to the resolution adopted by the British government, of permitting the rajah of Arracan to send troops under certain restrictions and limitations into the company's territories in search of Kingberring and the insurgent Mugs, his associates; and the invitation which the magistrate of Chittagong was directed to address to the rajah, to concert a system of combined measures with the officers of the British government for effecting the seizure of Kingberring and his adherents. The rajah of Arracan postponed giving a written reply at the time to Mr. Pechell's agent, but he subsequently addressed an evasive letter to the magistrate in reply to his communication, notifying his intention in consequence of the commands of the king of Ava to send an ambassador to Calcutta.

3. The magistrate's agent was forcibly detained at Arracan for twenty days under a guard; in consequence therefore of this insult to the British government, the magistrate was instructed to cease to correspond with the rajah of Arracan.

N^o 128.

4. A few months posterior to the return of the magistrate's agent, two envoys specially deputed by the rajah of Arracan, brought to Calcutta a letter from the rajah to the address of the governor-general. The rajah did not advert to the proposition which had been made to him on the part of the magistrate of Chittagong, but confined his communication to complaints against the officers of the British government for protecting the insurgents from interested motives, and to a demand that the rebellious Mugs might be surrendered to his authority.

N^o 129.

5. The vice-president, in the absence of the governor-general, returned a suitable reply to the rajah's letter, vindicating the company's officers from the charge of corrupt conduct which had been imputed to them, and assuring the rajah that no means should be neglected in order to apprehend such of the Mugs as should continue their lawless course of life.

6. In the concluding part of the governor-general's letter of the 28th of June 1814, his lordship in council stated his intention to report in a future despatch, his determination relative to Captain Fogo's proposition for raising a corps of Mugs for the preservation of tranquillity in that quarter of the district of Chittagong, bordering on Arracan. The communication of the sentiments of the government on the question was suspended until the opinion of the commander-in-chief should be known, and his excellency having expressed a decided opinion of the inexpediency of the plan, the local government declined to carry it into execution.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,

8. Your honourable court will not desire at this distance of time to receive a detailed narrative of the operations of the various detachments who were employed against the insurgent Mug chief Kingberring, whose mischievous proceedings so long disturbed the tranquillity of the frontier of Chittagong, and who was the principal occasion of so much unpleasant discussion with the government of Ava. The death of Kingberring however, which took place at the commencement of the year 1815, produced a highly favourable change in the state of affairs in that quarter; the event of Kingberring's decease was followed by the dispersion of his adherents, and having been deprived of their leader, they manifested a disposition to return peaceably to their homes.

9. Under these circumstances the magistrate was informed, that it would not be advisable to prosecute any search after these misguided men, which, as the magistrate justly observed, might deter them from their purpose of returning home and resuming habits of industry, and lead them to unite their fortunes to Rynjzing (a Mug chief who had not submitted), or form themselves into plundering parties, for which they would find a secure retreat in the hills and jungles of Chittagong.

Cons. 21 March,

10. As the death of Kingberring was an occurrence of considerable interest to the Burmese government, the vice-president in council was of opinion that a communication of the intelligence to the governor of Arracan from the British government would not fail to be regarded as an acceptable act of friendship, as well as a proof of the sincerity of the disposition which the British government had uniformly professed to discountenance the proceedings of the insurgents: the magistrate of Chittagong was therefore desired to prepare a suitable address to the governor of Arracan on the subject.

11. The tranquil state in which affairs in the district of Chittagong had continued since the decease of Kingberring, led the local government to contemplate the expediency of adopting some arrangement for liberating the Mug prisoners confined at Buscar (as reported to your honourable court in the governor-general in council's letter of the 1st of October 1813). Without hazard of inconvenience on this point, however, the magistrate of Chittagong was desired to communicate his sentiments.

12. The magistrate's reply is recorded on the consultation noted in the margin.

N° 159 (A.)

13. From Mr. Pechell's letter the vice-president in council learned, with great satisfaction, that the adherents of Kingberring had in general returned to their habitations, and resumed their peaceable occupations and pursuits; and Mr. Pechell, not apprehending any inconvenience from the liberation of the prisoners at Buscar, immediate orders were issued for their release from confinement, and for sending them to their respective homes. Four persons, however, who had rendered themselves conspicuous by their activity in the late disturbances, were, for the purpose of greater security, retained in confinement for a few months after the liberation of the rest of the prisoners.

14. The vice-president in council had indulged the hope that the tranquillity of Chittagong was perfectly re-established; but before the orders for liberating the Mugs in confinement at Buscar could take effect, intelligence reached the presidency of the renewal of disturbances on the frontier of Chittagong, and of a Mug village having been plundered by a large party of the adherents of Rynjunzing, an insurgent chief, who had actively resumed his lawless practice.

15. The necessary measures were of course adopted with the view of suppressing this new insurrection, and the magistrate from time to time reported the proceedings of the detachments employed in the pursuit of Rynjunzing and his associates.

16. The despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, recorded as per margin, describes the occurrence which took place during a tour which he made to the southern part of his district, and his exertions for the restoration of tranquillity.

17. We beg leave also to refer your honourable court to the despatches from the magistrate recorded on the annexed date, describing the voluntary surrender and subsequent flight of Choopoo, one of the principal insurgent chiefs of Rynjunzing's party. The measures pursued by Mr. Pechell, although they were not attended with final success, were considered by the government to be proper and judicious.

18. In the meantime the pursuit of Rynjunzing was urged without relaxation; but it was not until the month of May 1816 that the insurgent in question was compelled, by distress and want, to surrender himself to the magistrate.

19. The particulars of the case of Rynjunzing, the circumstances which led to his surrender, and the examination of the delinquent by the magistrate, are described in the despatches from Mr. Pechell, which are recorded as per margin.

20. With respect to the disposal of Rynjunzing, the magistrate was desired to treat him as a state prisoner, in common with those Mug chiefs whose release it had been determined to postpone until their adherents should have returned to their peaceful occupations, and the tranquillity of the district should have assumed that settled state which would afford sufficient security against its being liable to be interrupted by any disturbances on the part of the Mug population; but the governor-general in council desired the magistrate to be apprised that Rynjunzing had manifested a strong confidence in the character of the British government for clemency and mercy, in consenting to deliver himself up to the civil authority of the district: he was entitled, in his lordship in council's opinion, to some degree of indulgence; and that therefore, while every precaution was observed against his effecting his escape, it was not his lordship in council's wish that he should be confined with too much rigour.

Cons. 27 July,
1816, N^{os} 19 & 20.

21. On the consultation of the date inserted in the margin is recorded a letter from the magistrate of Chittagong, reporting his proceedings regarding the disposal of Rynjunzing, and the other prisoners connected with that insurgent.

22. The magistrate proposed that a distinction should be made, for the sake of example, between the generality of Rynjunzing's adherents and a few of the most notorious of his chiefs, by confining the latter for a certain period. The governor-general in council approved Mr. Pechell's suggestion, and accordingly authorized him to detain the six chiefs selected by him, including Rynjunzing himself, as prisoners of state; and it was left to the magistrate's discretion to propose the release of all, or such as he might consider to be the least dangerous or guilty, at such period as he should deem advisable.

22 a. In the month of May last a despatch was received from the magistrate of Chittagong, reporting the arrival at that station of the son of the rajah of Rumré, as the bearer of a letter from the rajah purporting to be written under the immediate orders of the king of Ava, and containing a demand for the surrender of the Mug insurgents.

23. The magistrate very properly replied on his own part, at a conference which took place between the young rajah and himself, that the demand for the surrender of the Mug refugees had been repeatedly made by the governor of Arracan, and a compliance with it declined, on the grounds of its being inconsistent with the principles of the British government to deliver up a race of people who had sought protection in its territory, and had resided in it upwards of thirty years; but that he had no authority to discuss the question, which must be referred to the governor-general in council.

24. Mr. Pechell was desired to address an answer to the rajah of Rumré, to the effect of his own reply to the rajah's son; observing a conciliatory and firm tone, and stating his answer to be written under the orders of the governor-general in council.

25. The governor-general at the same time addressed a letter to the viceroy of Pegu, referring to the mission of the rajah of Rumré's son to Chittagong, and explaining to the viceroy, for the information of the king of Ava, the impracticability of our delivering up the emigrants, and the inutility of renewing the subject.

26. The

26. The draft of the governor-general's letter to the viceroy is recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date.

27. The magistrate had been directed to use his endeavours to discover the motives and objects of the court of Ava in reviving the question of the surrender of the Mugs; and, if possible, to ascertain from the agent whether any preparations or arrangements were in progress in Arracan indicative of a design to attempt the seizure of the Mugs by violence, or of any other hostile purpose; and his subsequent communications with the rajah of Ramree's son satisfied his mind that projects of this nature were in contemplation.

28. The intelligence obtained by the magistrate was of a description which appeared to require secrecy, and the despatches which contained it were accordingly recorded in the secret department, and will be found on the consultation noted in the margin.

Secret Department

29. The general tenor of that intelligence, combined with the knowledge possessed by government of the arrogant spirit of the court of Ava, and the extreme jealousy which it has always entertained of our protection of the emigrant Mugs, induced the governor-general in council to deem it by no means improbable that, on receiving intimation of the refusal of the British government to comply with the demand conveyed in the rajah of Ramree's letter, an attempt might be made on the district of Chittagong, or the neighbouring British possessions, by the Burmese. The governor-general in council, therefore, judged it expedient to adopt precautionary measures for the security of the honourable company's territory against a sudden irruption; and orders were accordingly issued for reinforcing the post of Chittagong without delay. A cruiser and two gun-boats were accordingly ordered to be stationed on the coast, so as to provide against a sudden descent by sea.

30. The magistrate was also furnished with suitable instructions on the occasion, and in consequence, however, of subsequent despatches from the magistrate of Chittagong, intimating his opinion that the probability of a hostile attack on our territories by the Burmese government, was considerably diminished, the vice-president in council was led to believe that the reports of projected invasion of the eastern provinces arose more from the presumption and ambition of interested individuals, than from any real manifestation on the part of the higher authorities of Ava, of intentions inimical to the existing tranquillity of the company's territories.

31. Impressed with these sentiments, the vice-president in council resolved to suspend the departure of the naval force which had been prepared for the protection of the coast of Chittagong, retaining however at disposal the means of having recourse to the projected system of defensive arrangements, if events should subsequently require the resumption of it; it was not however considered by the local government to be advisable to make any alteration in the military arrangements which had been resolved upon for the better security of the eastern provinces.

32. By a reference to the despatch from the magistrate of Chittagong, recorded as per margin, your honourable court will observe that the intelligence contained in it was such as to warrant the conclusion, that the information which had suggested extraordinary measures of defensive arrangement was devoid of any solid foundation, and that there was not the least reason to suspect the existence or the future contemplation of any hostile designs on the part of the Burmese government; under those circumstances the vice-president in council submitted to the governor-general, whether it might not be expedient immediately to countermand some of those augmentations and dispositions of military force which were founded on a contrary supposition.

33. In suggesting this course of proceeding the vice-president in council was guided not merely by a solicitude to avoid unnecessary expense, and to obviate inconvenience to the public service, but also by the alarm on the part of the Burmese government, which the measures of defence already in progress appeared, from the last despatch of the magistrate of Chittagong, to have excited respecting the designs of the British government.

34. The governor-general having signified his entire acquiescence in the suggestion of the vice-president in council, that the extraordinary preparations of defence against the Burmese should be abandoned, the necessary orders were immediately issued for carrying it into execution.

35. We are happy to state to your honourable court that at the period of our latest advices from Chittagong, there was no manifestation on the part of the Mug population, of a disposition to disturb the existing tranquillity; the merchants of Arracan and Ava continued to resort to Chittagong and the neighbouring districts for the purposes of trade, and the reports of meditated aggression by the Burmese against our possessions in those quarters had entirely subsided.

Cons. 15 August,
N^o 34 & 35.

36. The magistrate of Chittagong having at length succeeded in again securing the insurgent chief Chauripo, and in apprehending about eighty of the Mugs who had been his associates, submitted to government a report containing his suggestions relative to the disposal of those prisoners, with reference to his classification of their delinquency. The report of the magistrate is recorded on the consultation on the date noted in the margin.

Cons. 17 Oct.
N^o 56 to 58.

37. Mr. Pechell stated his conviction of the expediency of delivering up to the Burmese government such of the prisoners as should be proved to have been most active in committing hostility in the province of Arracan, as being the only means of deterring the Mugs from attempting in future such lawless and atrocious enterprizes.

38. The vice-president in council was satisfied that the measure proposed by the magistrate was the only one calculated to make a salutary and permanent impression upon the Mug settlers, while they continue in a position presenting so many facilities for the indulgence of their predatory habits, and their rooted hostility against the Burmese. But although the surrender of the offenders to the Burmese seemed to be the most efficient course of proceeding, yet when the vice-president in council contemplated the barbarous punishment which the Burmese might be expected to inflict on the wretches who might be delivered up to their vengeance, the vice-president in council felt that it would be repugnant to the merciful character of the British nation to expose so many persons to the vindictive resentment of their enemies, exasperated as they justly were by repeated aggressions; the local government was anxious therefore to devise some other means by which the ends of retributive justice might be answered, and the repetition of similar outrages effectually prevented, without resorting to that extreme measure, to which nothing but the failure of every other expedient would induce the government to have recourse.

39. In the resolution to abstain from the surrender of any of the prisoners, the vice-president in council was influenced also by the consideration, that it would probably constitute an encouragement to a repetition of demands, on the part of the Burmese authorities, for the surrender of fugitives, and a precedent which on such occasion might create a considerable degree of embarrassment.

40. With reference to the great number of prisoners, and to the additional labour which a necessary separate examination of each, and a detailed statement of the part which each of the accused persons took in Chauripo's criminality would involve, the vice-president in council determined to associate another gentleman with him to form a special committee for the performance of the above-mentioned duties, and to report for the consideration of government, on the proper mode of disposing of the prisoners in question. The 4th judge of the Dacca court of circuit was accordingly appointed to officiate as chief member of the committee, when the regular course of his judicial duty should lead him to Chittagong. As the offenders however could only be regarded as state prisoners, the 4th judge was desired to understand that his duties as a member of the committee were considered to be entirely distinct from his functions as a circuit judge.

Extract from a DESPATCH from the Governor General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 4th June 1818.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in Council,
4 June 1818.

23. OUR last communication to your honourable court relative to the affairs of Chittagong, was conveyed in our separate letter to your address under date the 20th of December; but as neither the bulk nor the importance of the late correspondence with the magistrate of Chittagong on that subject requires a separate address on the present occasion, we shall notice the few points connected with it under the appropriate head.

24. In the month of October last a despatch was received from the magistrate, containing his examinations of a person named Devy Dutt, who, with two others, by name Shaik Daoud and Namerozia, appeared to the magistrate to have been engaged in an intrigue at the court of Ava, and who were shortly expected at Calcutta. The acting Persian secretary was in consequence desired separately to interrogate those persons on their arrival here, regarding their late proceedings at Ava, and to endeavour to ascertain the real object and intention of the mission on which, according to Devy Dutt's statement, they were deputed to Lahore.

N^o. 100 & 101.

25. On the arrival, however, of Shaik Daoud and Namerozia in Calcutta, the necessity of acting upon the preceding instructions was superseded, as it appeared that they were accredited as envoys from the court of Ava to this government.

26. The two last-mentioned persons presented two letters from the minister of the king of Ava, one requiring the delivery up of the Mug insurgents; the other notifying the mission of the bearers, together with Devy Dutt to the Tangab, of procuring religious books. Devy Dutt did not report his arrival in Calcutta, nor did either of the envoys make any allusion to him; but it was discovered that he had arrived at the presidency, and that he was studious to conceal himself from the notice of government.

27. The suspicious conduct of this person, and the circumstances stated in the letter from the magistrate of Chittagong, determined us not to permit the Burmese envoys to proceed to the upper provinces without the sanction of the governor-general; independently, however, of the particular circumstances of suspicion which attached to those persons, the number of missions which had been previously sent from Ava for this ostensible purpose, could not but induce a strong belief that it had been in every instance a mere pretext; and however unimportant and extravagant the projects of the Burmese government might be, we conceived that it would not be advisable to allow of their being further prosecuted without interruption. We accordingly stated these sentiments for the consideration of his excellency.

28. The governor-general entirely approved our resolution not to permit the envoys to proceed to the upper provinces in prosecution of their mission; and his lordship not having been apprised, through inadvertence, that Shaik Daoud and Namerozia had already been recognized in the character of political envoys, in consequence of the production of their credentials, expressed his opinion that they should not only not be received as envoys, or be acknowledged as agents of the Burmese government, either in a public or private capacity, but should be detained in custody as impostors until they could be sent as prisoners to the government of Rangoon.

29. Under the circumstance, however, of their having been already recognized as envoys, we conceived that the precise course pointed out by the governor-general, of sending those persons back to Ava under restraint, would be objectionable. At the same time it occurred to us that the object which his lordship had in view would be fully attained by simply dismissing the envoys with a letter to the court of Ava, stating, that the government had thought it proper, and an act of friendship towards that court, to prevent their prosecuting their journey to Lahore, as it had been discovered that their mission to that country originated in a false representation which had been made to the king of Ava regarding the character of Devy Dutt. We accordingly determined to pursue this course. With regard to the repetition of the demand for the surrender of the Mugs, we deemed it proper to refer the minister to former communications on that subject made to the viceroy of Pegu.

30. It

31. The correspondence with the governor-general on this occasion, and the reply returned to the ministers of the king of Ava, are recorded on the consultations of which the dates are noted in the margin.

32. The government having received information that a boat laden with arms and other stores was lying at the Baliagaut destined for Arracan, the magistrate of the suburbs of Calcutta was directed to seize and detain the boat, and to furnish without loss of time an account of her cargo. The magistrate was also desired to proceed in person in the discharge of the above-mentioned duty, accompanied by such a force as might obviate all attempt at resistance on the part of the boat people.

33. The magistrate's report of his proceedings is recorded on the consultation of the annexed date.

34. The stores being inconsiderable both in quantity and value, we did not consider it advisable to direct the confiscation of the articles seized; conceiving that the seizure of them, accompanied by a declaration that any attempt hereafter to pass articles of such a description without the permission of government would subject them to confiscation, would be sufficient to prevent the surreptitious exportation of military stores to the Burmese dominions. We accordingly ordered the articles in question to be restored.

N^o 69 to 73.

35. Several despatches from the magistrate of Chittagong are recorded in the secret department, in which he reported the intelligence which had reached here regarding the appearance of a large Burmese force on the frontier of the district of Sylhet; the rumoured hostile projects of the king of Ava to be directed against the eastern borders of our territories, and the measures of precaution which he had adopted under the uncertain and doubtful information which had been communicated to him.

36. The intelligence contained in the magistrate's despatches was generally too inconclusive to render necessary the immediate adoption of measures suggested by him in his letter marked N^o 69, of the consultation last quoted, of sending a naval force for the protection of the coast of Chittagong, with reference to the possible irruption of the Burmese into that district. We approved, however, the precautionary measures adopted under the magistrate's own authority.

37. In conformity to Mr. Pechell's suggestion, we authorized him occasionally to disburse small sums of money, not exceeding fifty rupees, for the purpose of obtaining such intelligence as might be depended on relative to the state of affairs at Arracan, and the projects of the Burmese government, which might be contemplated against the tranquillity of the honourable company's eastern provinces.

134. ON the proceedings noted in the margin is recorded a translation of an extraordinary letter from the rajah of Ramree to the address of the governor-general, making a demand on the part of the king of Ava, for the cession of Ramoo, Chittagong, Moorshedabad and Dacca, on the alleged ground of their being dependencies of the Burmese government, and filled with extravagant and absurd menaces in the event of a refusal to comply with the requisition. The governor-general on this occasion addressed a letter to the viceroy of Pegu to the following effect: That if the letter had really been written by order of the king of Ava, his excellency lamented that persons so incompetent to form a just notion of the state of power of the British nation in India should have been able to practise on the king's judgment; that any hopes which the king might have been induced to entertain that the British government would be embarrassed by contests in other quarters, were entirely delusive; that we were indifferent to attack from the king of Ava, further than as we should regard with concern the waste of lives in an unmeaning quarrel; that that his excellency trusted, however, that the king would perceive the folly of the counsellors who would plunge him into a calamitous war, by which the commerce of his empire would be wholly destroyed; and that if, as the governor-general could not but believe, the rajah of Ramrè had for some unworthy purpose of his own assumed the tone of insolence and menace exhibited in his letter, without the authority of the king of Ava, he hoped that a procedure so calculated to breed dissensions between two friendly states, would be visited by the king with the severe displeasure which it deserved.

Despatch from
Gov.Gen. in council,
17 March 1820.

135. There is no way of accounting for this extravagant step on the part of the court of Ava, but by supposing it to have originated in a secret agreement with the Mahrattas. The governor of Merghège, a Burman chief of great eminence, had been permitted to visit the upper provinces for professed purposes connected with religion. There is reason to surmise that his real object was to ascertain the real strength and determination of the Mahrattas, in consequence of previous overtures from them; and it is probable that he had adopted delusive notions of both. The king of Ava, immediately after the transmission of the message, which was really a declaration of war, would learn that the views of his expected allies had been anticipated, and that the Mahrattas were crushed. Thence his hostile intentions subsided without further explanation.

136. Referring your honourable court to the twenty-third and eight succeeding paragraphs of the letter addressed to you on the 4th of June 1818, by the late vice-president in council, we have the honour of reporting that a letter was received from the rajah of Arracan, demanding on the part of the king of Ava the delivery of Debee Dutt, together with Shackh Daoud and Namerozia, into the hands of military officers deputed by the rajah to receive them. We immediately directed the surrender of Shackh Daoud and Namerozia to those appointed to receive them; but at the same time a communication was made of the confident hope of the British government, that as it had in this instance, purely as an act of friendship towards the king of Ava, departed from its established practice, the punishment inflicted on them would not be of a capital nature; and that on this expectation alone had it consented to deliver them up. It was also intimated to the rajah of Arracan, that we expected him to use his influence with his court to the same end, and a similar application was made to the ministers of the king of Ava. With regard to Debee Dutt, the rajah was informed, that he, being a British subject, could not be given up to be punished for his offence by a foreign state, but he was assured that when Debee Dutt was apprehended, the British government would take upon itself the care of his punishment.

100. ON the proceedings of the annexed date is recorded a report from the magistrate of Chittagong respecting the state prisoners confined in the gaol of that station; the magistrate recommended the release of these persons, but stated it to be advisable, that the principal inhabitants of Coxè's bazaar should be called upon to give their opinions, as to how far the tranquillity of that part of the country might be affected by their enlargement; and in the event of their entertaining any fears, he suggested that the prisoners should be obliged to reside at the station of the magistrate, and present themselves to him from time to time, until such apprehensions should have subsided. We desired the magistrate to make these and other inquiries suggested by him, and again to submit his opinion upon the cases of the several prisoners for our further consideration. In his reply to these orders, the magistrate submitted a statement of the circumstances of each individual prisoner, and of his opinion with regard to the course to be pursued towards him. We complied generally with his suggestions and recommendations; for the details of which, we have the honour to refer to the correspondence cited in the margin.

THE correspondence with the joint magistrate of Rungpore, recorded on our consultations of the dates noted in the margin, relates to questions arising out of the expulsion of the former rajah of Assam, who, with the bura gohoeen, or principal minister, sought an asylum in the British territories; and of the elevation of rajah Chunder Kaunt, by the aid of a Burmese army, to the musnud of that country. Any special advertence on our parts to the subject must be unnecessary at this distant period from the date of the occurrences.

5. WE are gratified to find that the tenor of our replies to the applications from the rajah of Assam for assistance to settle the affairs of his dominions, was approved by your honourable court; at the same time we think it proper to remark, that our continued refusal to interfere in the affairs of Assam, has by no means prevented the troubled and distracted state of that country from proving a source of embarrassment to the British government: your honourable court will be apprised by our regular reports, that the government of Ava has taken advantage of the dissensions prevailing in the Assamese territory, to obtain military occupation of the country, and to set aside its native princes; thus the Burmese nation has come in contact with our territories, at another and most inconvenient point, and by the possession of Assam they have acquired the command of the upper part of the Burrampooter.

JUDGES AND MAGISTRATES.

99. THE most important part of the correspondence under this head relates to the occupation of Assam by the Burmese, and the discussions which arose between the local authorities of the two states, in consequence of the partial violation of our boundary boundary by the troops of the latter. To place the subject in a distinct point of view before your honourable court, it will be necessary to advert briefly to the state of parties and the course of events in Assam prior to 1822, as indicated by correspondence which has not yet been regularly brought to your notice.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
12 Sept 1823.

91. On the 26th June 1819, Mr. Scott, commissioner in Cooch Behar, reported to the government, that the party in Assam acting under the influence of the principal hereditary officer of state, called the bouda or bura goheyn, and the nominal authority of rajah Poorunder Singh, had been driven from Gohatee or Gowahatee, by the opposite faction headed by Chunder Kaunt, a competitor for the raj, who was supported by the Burmese power, and an army composed of the subjects of the Man Rija, with other rude tribes bordering on Assam.

In September following the ex-rajah Poorunder Singh, addressed a letter to the governor-general, stating that he had been driven from his territories by a hill tribe called Man, and had taken refuge at Chilmaree in the district of Rungpore; he solicited the protection and assistance of the honourable company, and offered to become tributary, and to pay the expense of the detachment that would be necessary to effect his restoration to the musnud of his ancestors; this application was repeated in the following month.

93. About the same period the bura goheyn, or prime minister of the Assam rej, came to Calcutta and presented several successive memorials, soliciting the interference of the British government for the restoration of himself and Poorunder Singh, the rightful rajah (or surgdeo) to authority, and stating that the king of Ava had been induced to support Chunder Kaunt, through false representations made to him of his title to the musnud: we should remark that there is some confusion and obscurity in the petitions presented by the bura goheyn; he sometimes represented himself as the adherent and supporter of Poorunder Singh, and at other times seemed to state the supreme authority as vesting in his own person, owing to the default of legal heirs to the rej.

94. In reply to these several applications, we informed the ex-rajah and the bura goheyn, that the British government does not interfere in the internal affairs of foreign states, nor pronounce on disputed titles to the musnud; but maintains with the reigning prince the relations of friendship and concord. Under these circumstances we declined taking cognizance of the disputes between themselves and rajah Chunder Kaunt, who had obtained the musnud of Assam; but assured them, that whilst they should conduct themselves in a quiet and peaceable manner, and conform to the orders of government, they would find an asylum within the honourable company's territories.

95. In the meantime repeated applications were made to us by Chunder Kaunt, the successful competitor, for the seizure of the ex-rajah, and the bura goheyn and his followers, with their property and effects, which he claimed as the property of the state: we replied to the rajah's letter by stating, that as it is contrary to the principles of the British government to interfere in the affairs of foreign states, we did not pretend to a right of pronouncing on the disputed title to the musnud of Assam, but should be ever disposed to maintain the most friendly intercourse with the reigning prince of the country, and under this exposition of our sentiments should be happy to cultivate with him the relations of amity, and to pay every attention to his wishes, so long as a compliance with them was not at variance with our established usage and policy. We met his request for the surrender of the heads of the defeated party, by informing him that as it is not the practice of this government to deny an asylum to political refugees, so long as they conduct themselves in a quiet and peaceable manner, the governor-general felt precluded from complying with his wishes for their apprehension and punishment.

His lordship's reply was couched in generally amicable and complimentary terms, and professed every disposition to promote the friendship and harmony so happily subsisting between the two governments. In the despatch recorded on our consultations as per margin, Mr. Scott reported, that the ex-swerg deo, or rajah Poorunder Singh, was employed in collecting troops in the Bhooban territory, for the purpose of invading Assam; and that it was reported his force was to be headed by Mr. Bruce, a native of India, who had long resided at Ingigopa. He added, that Chunder Kaunt, the reigning rajah, was supposed to be very desirous of getting rid of his allies, the Burmahs, and was understood to be treating with the bura gohayn and other refugees of consequence for their return, with a view to a combination of the whole means and strength of the country against the Burmese.

On the 30th of April Mr. Scott made known to us that the bar barwah, or Assamese minister, who was an adherent of the interests of the Burmese party, had been murdered, as was supposed, with the connivance of rajah Chunder Kaunt; that the latter had in consequence retired from Jorahawt to Gowahati; and that it was generally believed an army from Ava would soon invade the country to avenge the death of the bar barwah, and to depose the reigning prince. The above communication was followed almost immediately by information that the Burmahs had set up another rajah in Assam, and that it was supposed Chunder Kaunt would shortly be compelled to fly the country.

99. Applications having been received by us from the bura gohayn and the ex-rajah Poorunder Singh for the restoration of certain arms left by them in deposit at Chilmaree in 1819, and also for permission to purchase arms at the arsenal at Fort William, we declined compliance with the latter request; and to enable us to decide on the former, we called upon the joint magistrate at Rungpore for more particular information regarding the existing state of affairs in Assam. In replying to the above call, Mr. Scott took occasion to remark, that with reference to the arrogant character of the Burmah government, and the spirit of conquest by which it is actuated, it seemed to him probable that, in the event of its authority being established in Assam, it would become necessary to station a considerable force on that unhealthy frontier; and he submitted, therefore, whether the interests of the British government would not be best consulted by permitting the Assam refugees to obtain the necessary means for the expulsion of the invaders. He added, that the cruelties practised by the Burmese, and the devastation of property that had taken place since they first entered Assam, had rendered all classes of people desirous of being relieved from them; and that all that seemed necessary to enable either Poorunder Singh or the bara guhayn to establish their authority, was a supply of fire-arms. Though there might be objections to furnishing them with muskets from the arsenal of Fort William, there could be none, he conceived, to permitting them to transport such arms as they might be able to obtain by private purchase into the Boolan territories, with the consent of the local authorities. We stated, in reply, that we were aware of no objection to the several parties struggling for ascendancy in Assam procuring muskets and stores by private means, in order to carry them across the frontier and arm their adherents. For other less important points comprised in the above correspondence, we must beg leave to refer your honourable court to the record of our proceedings as per margin.

101. On the 30th of September the joint magistrate of Rungpore reported, that Chunder Kaunt had been expelled from Assam by the Burmese party, and had fled to the chokey opposite to Gowlaparch. The above communication was succeeded by reports of various outrages committed on the British frontier villages by parties of the Maun or Burmese troops, and by suggestions from the joint magistrate that a small force should be detached from Pitalaga to protect our territory from further insult.

102. With reference to the measures which Mr. Scott stated himself to have adopted for obtaining reparation on account of the above aggressions, we, in reply, informed him, that we entirely approved his having called on the commander of the Burmese troops, and the Assam minister who accompanied them, to deliver up the perpetrators perpetrators of the outrages alluded to, whose acts appeared to have been disavowed by their chiefs. In the event of the requisition not being complied with, the governor-general in council authorized him to accept the offer which there was reason to believe the Burmese commander might make to punish the offenders himself. We expressed ourselves satisfied of the necessity for strengthening the military force in the north-east quarter of Rungpore, and apprised Mr. Scott that the officer commanding at Titalza would be directed to detach a party of sufficient strength to repel by force any further violation of our boundary, but not to follow the aggressors into the Assamese territory. We instructed the joint magistrate likewise to warn the principal authorities in Assam of the necessity of restraining their followers from the commission of any similar outrages in future.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
12 Sept 1823.

103. In the meantime a letter had been received by the joint magistrate from the commander of the Burmese troops, stating that his soldiers had by mistake plundered the villages of Habbraghat within the British boundary, thinking that they belonged to Assam; that he had no intention of molesting the inhabitants of Bengal, and that he would afford satisfaction for whatever had occurred, on the receipt of orders to that effect from the swerg deo or rajah at Gowahati.

Cons. 8 Dec. 1821,
N° 71.

104. In a letter, recorded on our consultations of the annexed date, the joint magistrate of Rungpore reported that he had signified his compliance with a request preferred by rajah Chunder Kaunt, through Mr. Bruce, for permission to transport gunpowder and military stores into Assam, and suggested that orders should be issued to the proper authority at the presidency for the grant of passes.

Cons. 8 Dec. 1821,
N° 81 & 82.

105. We informed Mr. Scott, in reply, that we had directed the sanction of government to be conveyed to Mr. Bruce for the transport of three hundred muskets and ninety maunds of gunpowder, intended as a supply to rajah Chunder Kaunt.

106. We pointed out to him, that the government licence only protected the arms as far as Rungpore, beyond which place they were not to be carried without his permission. This condition the governor-general in council thought it necessary to introduce under existing circumstances; and Mr. Scott was directed to use his discretion in allowing supplies of arms to be furnished under passes from the officers of government to any of the parties who contested the sovereignty of Assam.

107. The necessary orders, we informed him, would be issued through the territorial department to give effect to any pass that he might himself hereafter grant; and in case of application being made at the presidency, the sanction of government would be given, as in the present instance, subject to the condition of his deeming the transport across the frontier unobjectionable at the time and in the manner proposed. It is perhaps unfortunate, we added, that arms should, under the existing regulations, require a government pass for their protection during transport through the country, as such a document is open to be misconstrued into a support or countenance of the particular party to whom the arms may be supplied; whereas while government itself is a neutral party, and no way involved in the contests and disturbances which make a supply of arms desirable to the inhabitants of a country, there is no reason, as far as it is concerned, for any difference between these and other articles of traffic which any party having the means may purchase without obstruction.

108. At the end of 1821 the cause of Chunder Kaunt became again temporarily triumphant: he defeated the Burmese in several skirmishes, and advanced into the interior nearly as far as Gowahati. These successes, and the continued attempts of Poorunder Singh and the bura goheyn from the side of Boolan and Bignee, to recover their lost dominion, drew forth a letter from the Burmese general Menjee Maha Silwa (who had arrived some months before to take the command of the troops in Assam) to the address of the governor-general, which your honourable court will find recorded as N° 23 of our consultations referred to in the margin. The document may be consulted as a curious specimen of the Burmese style of official correspondence, and of the arrogance and lofty pretensions of the court of Ava. Its object was apparently to request that assistance might not be afforded to rajah Chunder Kaunt (or Shundraganda) by any persons residing within the British dominions; and to suggest the expediency of his being surrendered, with all other refugees, who might seek refuge or had already taken shelter there. A letter was also addressed to Mr. Scott on the same occasion, to which he very properly returned for answer, that it is not the custom of the British government to deliver up persons who may take refuge in its territories on account of political disturbances.

109. We do not think it necessary to enter here into any particular account of the bura goheyn's misconduct, who, whilst hanging on the frontier, had contrived to intercept and for a time to detain the above letters from the Burmese party. The relation of that circumstance, and of the orders which we issued in consequence to detain him for some time in confinement, will be found in the papers already cited.

110. A letter having been addressed to the governor-general by the pretender to the sovereignty of Assam, last set up by the Burmese, named Phunzader, we referred him to the joint magistrate at Rungpore for a knowledge of our sentiments, and directed Mr. Scott to keep us apprised of the countenance which the new claimant of the musnud might receive from the people of the country.

111. Mr. Scott informed us in reply, that Phunzader had no better title to be considered ruler of Assam, than his adversary Chunder Kaunt, and that the interests of the latter for the moment predominated, as he was in possession of nearly all the country between Gowahati and the company's frontier. Such being the case, Mr. Scott suggested the expediency of the refugees being prohibited from returning to Assam with any body of armed followers, whether natives of the country or others, except under the sanction of the latter. We concurred in the propriety of the measure, and desired him to instruct the officer on the frontier to carry it into effect accordingly, but not to molest individuals proceeding in the direction of Assam, whether armed or otherwise.

1822, N^o 93 & 94.

112. We instructed the joint magistrate likewise to call on rajah Chunder Kaunt to indemnify the inhabitants of the British pergunah Hubragat for the plunder of their villages and property between 1819 and 1821, by the Burmese troops attached to his party; and authorized him, in the meantime, to disburse on that account from his own treasury a sum not exceeding sicca rupees 5,800.

Cons. 31 May,
1822, N^o 44 & 45.

113. In a despatch recorded on our consultations of the annexed date, the joint magistrate of Rungpore brought to our notice the distressed situation of many of the Assam emigrants, who to the number of several thousands took refuge in the British territory in 1819, and had been deterred from returning to their own country by the continuance of disturbances there, and the dread excited by the excesses committed by the Burmese. He suggested that permission should be granted him to farm the small estate of Singeemaree, which lies rather remote from the frontier, and to settle the emigrants upon it, under the protection of government. We approved the scheme, and authorized him to obtain a lease of the estate, at a rent of about rupees 523 per annum.

114. The Burmese party in Assam received a considerable reinforcement in the month of April or May, commanded by an officer of high rank from the court of Ummeerapoora, named Mengee Maha Bandoola. Chunder Kaunt soon gave way before the new force, and in June was reported to have sustained a decisive defeat, and to have disappeared altogether from the field. This event was followed by a representation of rather a threatening character on the part of the Burmese officers to Lieutenant Davidson, the officer commanding the small post of Goalparch, stating, that their army consisted of 18,000 fighting men, commanded by forty rajahs; that they had every wish to remain in friendship with the company, and to respect cautiously the British territories; but that should protection be given to rajah Chunder Kaunt, they had received positive orders to follow him wherever he might go, and to take him by force out of the company's dominions. A letter was, at the same time, written by Mengee Maha Silwa to the chief British local authorities, setting forth that Chunder Kaunt had rebelled against the sovereign of Ava; that it behoved them not to permit him to enter their territories, and that if he did so, it was the wish of the Burmese authorities to follow and apprehend him. The despatches detailing the above particulars, and describing the insecure and disturbed state of the British frontier, in consequence of the anarchy and civil war which raged in Assam, and the augmentation of the Burmese force in that quarter, will be found on our proceedings of the annexed date.

N^o 97 to 106.

115. On a consideration of the above circumstances, we signified to the joint magistrate, that should Chunder Kaunt or any of his party appear within our territories after their late defeat, they must be disarmed and sent to a distance from the frontier.

frontier. We stated that we did not consider it probable that the Burmese would attempt to follow up the ex-rajah into the British dominions; but that should the attempt be made, it must instantly be repelled by force. Instructions were accordingly issued to the officer commanding at Dacca to detach such reinforcement as Mr. Scott might require to the extent of his means. Rajah Poonadur, or Phunzadar, being now the nominal ruler of Assam, we directed the joint magistrate to acquaint him with our demand upon his government, for restitution of the property plundered at Hubraghat by his allies the Burmese, and to renew the hitherto unsuccessful application for the punishment of the individuals by whom certain murders and outrages had been committed at the time of the plunder of the villages.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in Council
12 Sept. 1823.

116. In July, Mr. Scott reported that a vakeel, said to be a person of rank, had been deputed by the Burmese authority in Assam to the presidency, with a letter addressed to the governor-general. He recommended strongly that he should be allowed to proceed on, to which we signified our assent. This person stated to Mr. Scott that nearly two months before, the wuzer Mengee Maha Bandoola was sent with an army of 20,000 men, for the purpose of supporting Mengee Maha Helorah (or Silwa), the commander previously employed in Assam, and who had been contending unsuccessfully against Chunder Kaunt for more than a year, and that his orders were to seize the refugees wherever they were to be found. The above accounts of the Burmese force we believe to have been greatly exaggerated.

Cons. 26 July 1822,
N^o 48 & 49.

117. The Burmese vakeel Yazoung Zabo Noratha reached the presidency at the end of the same month, and was received with civility and attention. He delivered letters from the two chiefs, requesting the surrender of Chunder Kaunt and other Assamese refugees, and complaining of the conduct of the British authorities on the frontier in sheltering them; but containing nothing offensive or objectionable, either in style or matter. They will be found recorded as per margin, with a note by the acting Persian secretary on the subject of the vakeel's reception and behaviour.

Cons. 6 Sept. 1822,
N^o 18 & 21.

118. In a despatch referred to in the margin, the joint magistrate of Rungpore laid before us extracts of private letters from Lieutenant Davidson, describing the equipment of the Burmese force in Assam, and reported that several robberies had been committed by large parties of depredators on the border villages of Rungpore; to check which, he suggested, that guard boats should be stationed for the protection of the navigation of the Burrampooter river. Mr. Scott's letter, as above, contains some remarks on the subject of the occupation of Assam by the Burmese, which will, doubtless, attract the attention of your honourable court.

Cons. 26 July 1822,
N^o 50.

119. He observes, that the Burmese having obtained complete possession of Assam, and a person of that nation (Mengee Maha Silwa) having been appointed to the supreme authority, the country may now be considered as a province of the Burmah empire; and although it appeared from Lieutenant Davidson's last letter, that he was satisfied in regard to the amicable disposition of their commander, and that he did not consider any immediate reinforcement to his detachment necessary, yet the substitution of a warlike, and comparatively speaking, powerful government, in the place of the feeble administration that formerly ruled Assam, in a situation so commanding, and with such extensive means of offence, would, no doubt, render it necessary that some permanent measures should be adopted for the future security of the Rungpore frontier, and of the country on the lower parts of the Burrampooter, Mogna and Ganges.

120. From the account of the equipment of the Burmese forces furnished by Lieutenant Davidson, he conceived it obvious, that if inclined at any time to assert their claim to the Dacca province, or to plunder that rich country, it will in future be impossible for the British power, either effectually to oppose them, or to overtake them on their retreat, without some other description of force than troops unwilling, or unaccustomed to act both as boatmen and soldiers. Adverting to this consideration, he submitted whether, in addition to the usual equipment of any body of troops stationed in the Rungpore quarter, it might not be expedient to fit out a certain number of gun-boats, adapted to the navigation of the Burrampooter.

121. With reference to the unhealthy climate of the frontier, and to the trifling value of the country above Dhobree, he stated his opinion that the most advantageous situation for a permanent cantonment on the north-east frontier would be somewhere between that place and Chalmaree, on the right bank of the Burrampooter, or on some of the navigable rivers connected with it on that side; as such a position would cover all the valuable part of our possessions in Rungpore, and in the Dacca province, without exposing the troops to the noxious influence of the climate on the borders.

Gov. Gen. in council,

122. We have recorded also, as N° 51 of the consultations of the above date, a private letter from Mr. Scott on the same subject, the remarks and information contained in which, your honourable court may consider not unworthy of notice.

Cons. 26 July 1822,
N° 52.

123. Being entirely of opinion that the permanent maintenance of a respectable force on the eastern frontier, to keep in check any attempt on the part of the Burmese to enter the British territory in pursuit of the Assamese fugitives, or otherwise to commit aggressions, had become indispensably necessary, we communicated on the subject with his excellency the commander-in-chief. Your honourable court will find an account of the measures which it was determined to adopt for strengthening the line of defence on the Assam frontier, in the extract of our proceedings in the military department, recorded as N° 56 of our political consultation of the 9th of August.

Cons. 9 Aug. 1822,
N° 56.

124. With respect to the fugitives, we desired that they should be disarmed and removed from the frontier, with a distinct intimation that if they assembled again in force, for the purpose of exciting fresh disturbances, they would not be permitted to find an asylum within our territories.

Cons. 6 Sept. 1822,
N° 14 & 17.

125. On the date noted in the margin, the joint magistrate of Rungpore reported, that the Burmese army, under Mungee Maha Bandoola, was supposed to be on its return to Ava, with the exception of 2,000 men, under the command of Maha Silwa, and that the chiefs had invited several of the principal refugees to a conference, under the pretence that they wished to select some native of Assam for the government of the country, which would in future be held as a dependency of the Burman empire. From subsequent accounts, it appeared that the retirement of Bandoola with his troops was occasioned, in a great measure, by sickness and scarcity of provisions.

Cons. 27 Sept. 1822,
N° 67.

126. On the date cited in the margin, Mr. Scott submitted to us a copy of a letter from Lieutenant Davidson, with his own remarks, respecting a certain island near Goalparch, upon which, as it was considered to appertain to the British territory, a flag had been erected at the time of the arrival of the Burmese at the chokey, in order to distinguish it from the Assam dominions. The Burmese threatened to take forcible possession of the island, as belonging to them; and were represented to have assumed a haughtiness of tone and demeanor on the occasion, which Mr. Scott considered to furnish a very unpromising prognostic of what was to be expected in future from such neighbours. It also suggested to his mind the expediency of some regular agreement being entered into for the settlement of all existing boundary disputes, as well as for the disposal of all chars or islands that may hereafter be thrown up in that part of the Burrampooter which forms the boundary between the two states. Questions of the kind, he observed, had frequently occurred in past times; but under the late peaceable government they generally admitted of adjustment, when of minor importance, without even the necessity of the matter being referred for the orders of the governor-general in council. As the object of dispute in the above case was a mere worthless sand-bank, and we saw reason to believe that the Burmese were disposed to settle the question of right amicably, from their having requested, in a letter to Lieutenant Davidson, that a person acquainted with the boundary might be deputed to discuss matters with them, we did not consider it expedient to commit ourselves by taking any serious notice of the affair; nor indeed was the information before us of a sufficiently positive and distinct character to admit of our issuing specific instructions in reply.

127. Your honourable court will find recorded on the consultations, as per margin, the reply, returned by the governor-general to the letters with which the Burmese vakeel was charged, and our instructions to Mr. Scott on the occasion of dismissing that individual from the presidency.

128. After adverting to the friendly relations which had so long subsisted between the honourable company and the state of Ava, the governor general expressed expressed his anxiety for preserving the peace and tranquillity of the British frontier adjoining Assam, and disclaimed explicitly all right or intention of interfering with the proceedings of his Burmese majesty in the latter country. His lordship then, in general terms, declined violating the rights of hospitality, by delivering up the exiled princes and chiefs of Assam who had sought refuge within the company's dominions, but assured the maha silwa that they would not be permitted to abuse the kindness and hospitality of the British government, by making the asylum they had found within its territories a means of recruiting their strength to disturb the tranquillity of any country which might have been annexed by conquest to the dominions of his majesty the king of Ava. Any attempt of that nature would be instantly repressed, and if persevered in, would be attended with the certain forfeiture to Chunder Kaunt and others, of the British protection. On the other hand, the governor-general stated his persuasion that Mongee Maha Silwa would feel the necessity of exerting his utmost endeavours to restrain the Burmese troops from the further commission of excesses within the British boundary, and warned him that the repetition of such aggressions must be instantly met as an act of positive hostility, for the consequences of which the Burmese authorities in Assam would be held responsible to their sovereign. In conclusion, his lordship took occasion to advert to the recent misconduct of the Burmese authorities in Arracan, in seizing and detaining in custody subjects of the honourable company, employed in catching elephants within the proper limits of the Chittagong district, and to express his persuasion that the fact need only be known to his Burmese majesty to be immediately remedied. In explanation of this part of the governor general's letter, we beg leave to refer your honourable court to the documents recorded on our consultations as per margin.

129. A copy of the above letter was forwarded to the joint magistrate of Rungpore, whom we apprised that in pursuance of the assurances therein conveyed to the Burmese authorities, it would be necessary to issue public notice to the Assamese refugees that they must refrain in future from all attempts to disturb the peace of the frontier, under pain of forfeiting the protection of government. Your honourable court will observe, that all this time it was quite uncertain what had become of the late rajah of Assam, Chunder Kaunt, and whether he had really sought shelter within our territories or not, but our instructions provided that in the event of his appearing in Rungpore, he should be compelled to abstain from collecting any body of armed followers, and to withdraw to a distance from the frontier.

130. The despatch recorded as per margin, relates to a vague rumour of an intention on the part of the Burmese commander to invade Bootan for the purpose of obtaining possession of certain gold mines supposed to exist in that country, and of the occurrence of disturbances on the side of Cochar. It was reported also, that an engagement had actually taken place between the Burmese and the Booteas, respecting a boundary, in which the former were defeated. Mengee Maha Bandoola was said to be proceeding against the Booteas, in consequence, with an army of 4,000 men and 2 or 300 boats, whilst another detachment had been sent off in the direction of Cochar.

131. A negotiation between the Burmese and Poorunder Singh, which was said to have for its object the restoration of the latter to the government of Assam, under certain terms and conditions, having failed, the ex-rajah submitted to us a further application for assistance, offering to pay a yearly tribute of three lacks, and to defray all expenses in the event of his restoration to the throne of his ancestors. We of course declined compliance with this request, conformably with the policy which we have always adhered to, of avoiding interference with the affairs of Assam.

Extract from a DESPATCH from the Governor-General in Council at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company; dated 10th September 1824.

Despatch from
Gov.Gen. in council,
10 Sept. 1824.

27. ON our consultations of the annexed date, your honourable court will find recorded a despatch from the commissioner in Rungpore, reporting on the actual strength of the Burmese force in Assam, which was then reduced very low; and they were supposed to be placed in a situation of some difficulty from a rising of the Mohammeries and other native tribes, who, unable any longer to endure their tyranny, had united together, and successfully attacked their oppressors on several occasions.

28. The commissioner considered it proper, however, to state for our information, that such is the nature of the country, and the facility of bringing down the largest army by means of the river with the utmost celerity, that should the Burmese at any time determine upon invading the British territory by way of the Barhampooter, previous intelligence of their designs, supposing them to act with common prudence, could not be obtained in his quarter in sufficient time to be of any avail, for, on the supposition of an army being sent into Assam for the above purpose, they might reach Dacca in fifteen days from the time of their arrival on the banks of the upper part of the river, and in five from that of their appearance on our frontier at Gowalpara.

29. No previous extraordinary collection of boats, Mr. Scott stated, would be required, nor any extensive preparations near our frontier that might excite suspicion, as the Burmese soldiers carry nothing with them but their arms, subsisting upon what they can find in the country they pass through, and proceeding, after they reach the streams flowing into the Barhampooter, upon rafts made of bamboos, until they may be able to seize a sufficient number of boats for their accommodation; which is very easily effected in a county where, for four months in the year, the communication from house to house is by water, and where a canoe is as necessary a part of the husbandman's establishment as a plough or a pair of oxen.

30. Mr. Scott further took the opportunity of bringing to the notice of government, that no redress had yet been afforded for the plunder of the villages in the pergunnah of Hulbraghat, reported in his former letters. We had again addressed Menjee Maha Thelooa on the subject, but had no expectation of his reimbursing the ryots for the loss sustained, unless government should be prepared to compel him thereto, either by a show of taking possession of the chokey, or by laying an embargo on the trade; which latter measure might be adopted after giving due notice to our merchants, without any permanent loss to them, and might indeed be rendered highly advantageous to their future interests, by binding the Burmese authorities, amongst other conditions for the re-establishment of the trade, to reduce the duties on imports to the rates fixed by the treaty of 1793, or at least to what was usually paid under the late government, double and treble the amount having lately been levied, to the great detriment in particular of those concerned in the commerce in salt.

N° 59.

31. On the same date, Mr. Scott submitted an application from Mungee Maha Thalooa, the Burmese governor of Assam, requesting permission to return to his own country, vid Chittagong, with 300 armed followers, 2,150 muskets, and a number of Assamese slaves, both men and women. The letter containing the application simply stated, that it being customary with the Burmans to pay homage triennially to their sovereign, the writer, after an absence of three years, was desirous of placing his head under the golden feet, and that the route from Ava to Assam being obstructed by numerous mountains and rivers, and the rains having set in, he wished to proceed through the British provinces to Arracan, and proposed to return in about twelve months.

N° 61.

32. In reply to the above, we informed Mr. Scott that we had long been sensible of the evil resulting from the conquest of Assam by the Burmese, and should view, with much satisfaction, any successful attempt on the part of its oppressed inhabitants to expel that people; but in the present state of our relations with Ava, no countenance could be given by us, directly or indirectly to the efforts of the Assamese to recover their independence.

33. We stated, that we had not before been apprised of the serious depredations committed by the Burmese troops within the British frontier at Doopgoory, and elsewhere, when property was destroyed to the value of 21,998 rupees, and called for a more detailed and circumstantial report on the subject.

34. With regard to the request preferred by the governor of Assam, to be permitted to return to Ava, vid Chittagong, with a number of armed followers and captive Assamese reduced, to a state of slavery, we observed, that we did not feel ourselves bound to entertain any such application, at all events, until our just demand for compensation, on account of the British villages plundered by the governor's troops, should have been attended to. We directed that a reply to this effect should be returned to the Maha Thelwa's letter, and that it should, at the same time, be intimated to him, that, even were liberty of passage granted, the number of his followers must necessarily be restricted (conformably to our local police regulations) to a small guard of armed men, sufficient for purposes of state, say twenty or thirty; and further, that it would be totally repugnant to the laws and customs of the British nation to allow of his bringing slaves into the honourable company's territories.

Despatch from
Gov. Gen. in council,
10 Sept. 1824.

35. In the letters noted in the margin Mr. Scott brought to our notice the conduct of the Assamese emigrants, who were stated to be engaged in collecting troops from all quarters, with the view to the recovery of their native country from the Burmese, and suggested the expediency of removing them altogether from the frontier, experience having shown that so long as they remained there, no precautions on his part could prevent them from plotting and preparing for fresh invasions of Assam. The great wealth possessed by many of the emigrants, enabled them, Mr. Scott observed, to purchase with ease the connivance of the police officers and zemindary umlah, and were it not for the exertions of the European officers commanding on the frontier, there would be little security against their assembling men in the jungles round Gowalpara, in defiance of the orders of government. On a recent occasion they were believed to have paid to the soobadar, then commanding the post of Gowalpara, and the police officers, money and valuables to the amount of 4,000 or 5,000 rupees, and one of them had offered even to Lieutenant Davidson, a bribe of rupees, 21,000, to permit them to continue unmolested in recruiting men and sending them off to Bhootan.

36. Under all these circumstances the commissioner submitted to us the expediency of notifying to the Assam emigrants, publicly and generally, that they were at liberty to quit the honourable company's territories, but that such of them as might remain therein after the expiration of three months, would be subject to be removed to some place as far down the Borhampootar as Singiemaree, and required to enter into engagements, under a suitable penalty, not again to proceed further up the river without the magistrate's permission.

37. In conclusion Mr. Scott reported, that he had made arrangements for farming the small estate of Singemaree for seven years, and such of the chief persons among the emigrants as might prefer remaining at that place to settling at Chilmaree, could be accommodated with land for their houses.

38. We approved the whole of Mr. Scott's proceedings and suggestions as above detailed, and authorized him to issue a notification of the nature proposed.

121. The papers noted in the margin relate to the violence and aggression of the Burmah chiefs of Arracan, in carrying off and imprisoning the honourable company's elephant hunters, whilst pursuing their occupations actually within the British boundary, and likewise to the discussions between the Burmese and British authorities touching the island of Shakpuree. HOSTILITIES WITH BURMAH.

No. 1.

The President of the Council of India in Council to the Secret Committee of the East India Company.

Fort William, November 22, 1851. (No. 8.)

WE have the honor to transmit a copy of correspondence arising out of complaints of ill-treatment, preferred by certain British subjects trading to, or resident at, the Port of Rangoon, and alleged by them to have been experienced at the hands of the Burmese Governor of that place, and to report the measures adopted by us, in communication with the Governor-General, for obtaining redress.

Under the treaties* which exist between the Governments of India and Ava, the subjects of each are entitled, in ports belonging to the other, to "the utmost protection and security." In the cases now brought to notice, it was evident, that not only had these been withheld, but that gross injustice and oppression had been practised. We have deemed it incumbent upon us, therefore, to accede to the appeal made by the sufferers, and to demand reparation, in the first instance, from the Governor of Rangoon; and, in the event of that officer refusing to make a proper submission for the injury he has done, and the insult he has offered, to demand redress from the Government of Ava.

The absence of any accredited Agent of the British Government, at the Court, or in the territories, of Ava, has made it somewhat difficult to deal with such cases; but the opportune arrival, at Calcutta, of Her Majesty's ship "Fox," under the command of Commodore Lambert, in some measure diminished this difficulty, and will, we hope, enable us to bring this affair to an early and satisfactory issue. We have availed ourselves of the Commodore's visit, to request of him to proceed to Rangoon with the ship under his command, and have placed under his orders the steamers "Tenasserim" and "Proserpine," properly armed and equipped, in order to endeavour to obtain from the Governor the reparation which is due, for the unjustifiable treatment which our subjects have recently met with at his hands. The instructions communicated to Commodore Lambert will be found in the letter addressed to him on the 11th instant, with which was forwarded a copy of the letter from the Secretary with the Governor-General, dated the 31st October, for his further guidance. The Commodore has been desired, in the event of his demands upon the Governor of Rangoon not being complied with, to forward to the King of Ava a letter, which we have addressed to His Majesty, and made over to him for that purpose. A copy, in English, of this letter forms one of the inclosures of this dispatch.

We have appointed Captain Latter, of the 67th Native Infantry, to assist Commodore Lambert, as interpreter, in his communications with the Burmese authorities. Captain Latter's military allowances, while so employed, will be made up to Rs. 1000 per mensem ; and we have placed under him Mr. Edwards, an assistant in our Foreign Secretary's Office, as his clerk. Mr. Edwards was selected for this duty on account of his knowledge of the Burmese language, and of the manners and customs of the Burmese people, acquired during his employment under the former Residents at the Court of Ava.

F. Halliday, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India.*

Moulmein, July 15, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to transmit herewith, for submission to the Government of India, a copy of a letter addressed to me on the 27th June, 1851, by Mr. Robert Sheppard, master of the barque "Monarch," of Madras, which vessel is a permanent trader between this place and various ports.

Mr. Sheppard is well known here as a quiet, steady, and highly respectable person.

Inclosure 2 in No. 1.

Mr. Robert Sheppard to Colonel Bogle.

THE respectful petition of Robert Sheppard, master and owner of the barque "Monarch," of the Port of Madras, humbly sheweth, That on the 24th of May, 1851, was chartered by Moolah Hassen, a native merchant, residing in Moulmein, to proceed to Rangoon, and take in a cargo of grain, catch, &c. for Penang and Singapore: the said charterer, Moolah Hassen, sent a man on board to pilot the ship up the coast, and into the Rangoon River, my being unacquainted with the coast [on the 2nd day of June, the Moulmein pilot left the ship]. At 8 A.M., 3rd of June, arrived on the Rangoon coast and gave charge to the pilot, having heard in Moulmein that he was fully competent to perform such duty; at 1:30 P.M. he got into shoal water, and did not know which way to extricate the ship; your petitioner then brought up in two fathoms low water, the wind was strong from the S.W., with a heavy sea on the bank, the ship struck aft four or five times with the lift of the sea, and unshipped the rudder out of the upper gudgeon; the crew were furling sails and getting the longboat ready in event she might be wanted; the pilot, through fear or shame, jumped overboard, first throwing a boom into the water; your petitioner was then on the poop, with three or four hands, lifting the rudder to ship it into the upper gudgeon; as soon as your petitioner heard that a man was overboard, ordered the boat to be lowered; that occupied some time, and as near as your petitioner could judge, the man must have been half-a-mile astern, as the flood-tide had made strong; the sea breaking on the bar, threw the boat against the ship's side and broke her stern and stove one of her planks; a heavy squall coming on at the time, obliged me to order the men out of the boat, or she would have swamped alongside.

Three days after the accident, your petitioner took the ship up to Rangoon, and reported the circumstance, on landing, to Moolah Ibrahim, the agent and brother of the charterer, Moolah Hassen.

Your petitioner has been obliged to enumerate the details of the case, that you may be enabled to judge of the injustice to which he was subjected, since his arrival in this port. On the second day your petitioner was ordered to wait on the Governor, and was taken by the peons to a writer of the police, and examined; he then desired your petitioner to send for the second mate, boy, William Anthony, and ten lascars; they were separately examined, and all stated that your petitioner had not thrown the man overboard; the report was then taken in to the Governor, who ordered we should be kept in confinement; the only person the Governor examined was the boy William Anthony (who speaks the language), whom he ill-used by making his hands and feet fast; one of his people struck him on the thigh with an iron bolt, to make him say that your petitioner had thrown the man overboard; he told the Governor he had spoken the truth. He was then liberated and again questioned by the Governor, and gave the same answer; he ordered him to be put into the blocks, where he remained all night and part of the next day. Your petitioner was kept in confinement till 8 P.M., when Captain Crisp and three or four native merchants came out to the Governor; on Captain Crisp becoming my security, your petitioner was then liberated; the second mate and crew were kept in confinement; the next day your petitioner had to attend, and again taken before the police writer. Your petitioner requested that the crew might be discharged; after paying 40 Rs. for jail-fees; they complied, and ordered them to go on board. Your petitioner was desired to attend the next day, and, as on the former occasion, was taken to the police writer; your petitioner requested through an interpreter that he might be taken before the Governor; he would not consent, stating it was contrary to the Burmese law; your petitioner then attempted to go, but was prevented by the peons.

Captain Crisp, Moolah Ibrahim, and two other native merchants, went to the Governor; he insisted upon my having thrown the man overboard, and gave them one day to arrange the case; it was finally settled by the agent paying 325 Rs.; the case was then dismissed. This act of injustice was done, notwithstanding the evidence of the second mate, boy, and ten lascars. The accident occurred outside of the Elephant Point. Had your petitioner been guilty of the crime alleged, he would be amenable to the laws of his country and not to the Burmese, particularly as the pilot was a British subject, a native of Chittagong, and lately resident in Moulmein.

Your petitioner humbly prayeth that this report may be laid before the Supreme Government of India, as it is not only a flagrant act of injustice, but also an infringement of the Treaty; your petitioner deferred writing in consequence of a report that the man had been seen at a village near the Elephant Point, and was desirous to ascertain the fact, but without success; in all probability he may have returned to Moulmein by one of the many vessels that have left this port.

Your petitioner humbly prayeth that you will take such steps as you may deem expedient, to prevent a repetition of the many acts of injustice, oppression, and tyranny, that so frequently occur to British subjects in this port. Your petitioner trusts you may be pleased to take this in due consideration, as it would not only confer on him, but all that trade to this port, a sincere and lasting obligation. Your petitioner will, as in duty bound, ever pray.

Inclosure 3 in No. 1.

Colonel Bogle to Mr. Halliday.

Moulmein, August 8, 1851.

IN continuation of my letter to your address of the 15th July, 1851, transmitting a letter from Mr. R. Sheppard, master of the barque "Monarch," dated Rangoon, the 27th June, 1851, complaining of the treatment he had then experienced from the Burmese Governor at that place, I have the honour to submit herewith communications detailing all the particulars of the treatment experienced, not only on his arrival at Rangoon, but just before his departure therefrom.

It appears that, besides the detention of his vessel, and the heavy loss thereby entailed upon him, a sum of 1005 Company's rupees was extorted from Mr. Sheppard, and that he was altogether very ill-treated.

Of the merits of the case I know nothing more than is stated in Mr. Sheppard's protest; but I am disposed to credit what he states, because he bears such a high character at this place, and is well known to be a most quiet, inoffensive, and well-behaved man, correct and honorable in his dealings with all, and not likely to have committed any impropriety.

The lascar named Dewan Ali has been dismissed the service of Government.

Inclosure 4 in No. 1.

Messrs. Creaton & Co. to Colonel Bogle.Moulmein, August 4, 1851.

WE have the honor to forward inclosed, the declaration and protest of Robert Sheppard, master of the barque "Monarch," recording the sufferings of himself and crew by the unjust and arbitrary acts of the Burmese authorities at Rangoon.

We are induced to take the liberty of respectfully calling your attention to this case, by the hope that the Government of India will, on consideration of the matter, be pleased to grant that reparation which the circumstances of the case demand; and by the belief that, to the absence of protection, which has, on the part of the Government, since the withdrawal of the Resident at the Court of Ava, attended British interests in that quarter, is mainly owing the audacity that has prompted the commission of this and other instances of oppression and wrong.

We feel confident that it cannot be contemplated by the Government of India to allow this very unsatisfactory state of our commerce with Rangoon always to exist, in contempt of international rights, or to leave unredressed and uncared for those who, in prosecution of their lawful business, and trusting in the protecting power of the Government under which they live, have been exposed in person and property to the injustice and rapacity of any native or foreign Power.

It will be observed that a prime mover in these transactions is a servant in the employ of Government, and that it was through his instrumentality so large a sum of money was extorted.

We have to solicit the favor of your submitting our claim to the Supreme Government, that compensation may be obtained for the injury, loss, and expenses sustained by reason of the said acts of the Burmese authorities at Rangoon, as set forth in the declaration and protest of the master of the "Monarch," and computed at the sum of 5000 Company's rupees.

We regret to be under the unfortunate necessity of making this complaint, but our duty, as agents of the ship and master, requires us to use every means to obtain redress.

Inclosure 5 in No. 1.

Declaration of Mr. Sheppard.

ON the 29th day of July, 1851, personally appeared and presented himself before me, Henry Hopkinson, Esq., Principal Assistant Commissioner, Tenasserim Provinces, of Province Amherst, Robert Sheppard, master of the ship or vessel the "Monarch," which sailed on the 2nd of July last, on a voyage from Moulmein to Rangoon, there to load cargo to Penang and Singapore, who did solemnly declare and state as follows:—That he proceeded on his voyage without accident till the 3rd day of June last, when, at noon, off Chiner Bucker, on the Rangoon coast, in five fathoms water, the pilot running for the entrance of the river, suddenly shoaled two fathoms; hauled out to the eastward, shoaled one quarter less two fathoms; anchored and furled sails. Elephant Point N.W. $\frac{1}{2}$ W.; False Elephant, S.W. $\frac{1}{2}$ W. It being low water when the ship brought up, with a heavy swell breaking on the spit, caused her to strike very heavily abaft, and lifted the rudder, but apparently sustained no damage; the shock was only felt as far forward as the mizen-mast, (the ship was 18 inches by the stern when she left the last port); sounded the well, found ten inches. At 1:30 P.M., the native pilot took the boom used for washing decks, and threw it into the water, and immediately jumped overboard; before the boat could be lowered, he must have been half-a-mile astern; the boat was nearly swamped alongside, in consequence of the heavy sea and flood-tide on the sand; a heavy squall coming on at the time, obliged him, this appearer, to order the people out of the boat, or in all probability their lives would have been sacrificed; and the vessel was in danger, and required the aid of all hands to work the ship into deep water. At 4:30 P.M. weighed, it blowing fresh, and beat to the southward. At 9:30 P.M., anchored in four and a half fathoms.

On the 7th, arrived off Rangoon without further accident, and on landing, reported the above circumstances to Moolah Ibrahim, the agent for the ship; and noted protest of the ship having grounded outside the river.

On the 9th, at breakfast-time, the Governor sent on board the ship, and he, this appearer, was taken before the police, and examined on a charge of having thrown overboard the pilot Esoph, preferred by a man named Hajim, a native of Chittagong, who stated that he was brother to the said pilot. He was then ordered to send for the second mate, apprentice, and part of the crew, for examination. The second mate and lascars were examined by a police writer, and the boy William Anthony by the Governor, by whose orders he was tied hand and foot, struck on the thigh with an iron bolt, and otherwise ill-used, by being put into the blocks, where he remained all night, and part of the next day. After being examined, the Governor imposed a fine of 600 rupees, and ordered them into confinement, under the guard of armed police peons, where he, this appearer, was kept till 8 P.M., when Captain Crisp, Moolah Ibrahim, his agent, and three other native merchants, becoming his security, he was liberated; the second mate and lascars being detained until the next day, when they were allowed to go on board, upon this appearer paying the jail-fees, amounting to 40 rupees. Afterwards, and through the intercession of Captain Crisp, Moolah Ibrahim, and the other native merchants, who had become security for him, the fine was reduced to 325 rupees, which were paid, and the case dismissed, on the payment of court-fees, 70 rupees, and interpreter, 20 rupees. Continued taking in cargo; and, on the 6th of July, being ready for sea, unmoored ship, landed the missing pilot's things, and applied for a pass, which was granted. The pass was withdrawn in the evening, and the ship detained.

Next day, the Governor refused the pass, owing to a charge brought by a man, named Dewan Ali (employed in one of the Moulmein gun-boats), calling himself a brother of the pilot, bringing forward a claim for a sum of 500 rupees, which he stated his brother had taken with him. On the 8th, he, this appearer, was ordered to attend before the Governor, with his second mate, and others of the crew, to answer the charge; and afterwards, at the custom-house, before eight native merchants appointed by the Governor to arbitrate the case, by whom he was, on the 9th, fully acquitted of the charges preferred against him, viz., of throwing the man overboard, and of stealing the money.

On the 11th, the Governor declared the verdict to be unjust, and ordered the arbitrators to attend, and again to investigate the charges in his presence, insisting that the man had the money on board, and that the sum must be repaid. The arbitrators being kept at the Governor's house, and afraid of his threatenings, ultimately gave the decision required. The following day, he, this appearer, attended the court, and the Governor ordered him to pay 500 rupees: viz., 200 rupees for himself, 150 rupees blood-money for the missing man, and 150 rupees for court expenses, which was done, there being no help for it. The order for the pass was then given, and, after he left the court, again countermanded. The next day, Sunday, the 13th, the Deputy Governor, or some one of inferior authority to the Governor, demanded 50 rupees, which he, this appearer, had to comply with, and pay, the ship having already lost eight days by these various detentions. At 6 P.M., the pilot came on board, and the ship proceeded on her voyage. Thus, having been defrauded of the sum of 997 rupees, the ship forcibly prevented from performing her voyage, to the loss and injury of the freighters, &c., and himself and crew imprisoned and ill-used by the Governor of Rangoon and his people, as detailed in the foregoing.

Thus done and protested in Moulmein aforesaid, the day, month, and year hereinbefore written.

Inclosure 6 in No. 1.

Declaration by Edward Antram, Second Mate of the "Monarch."

I, EDWARD ANTRAM, second mate of the barque "Monarch," and on board the vessel on the said voyage, do solemnly and sincerely declare, that the contents of the foregoing instrument of protest are, to the best of my knowledge, information, and belief, in all things true, and make this declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true.

Inclosure 7 in No. 1.

Colonel Bogle to Mr. Halliday.

Moulmein, September 22, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to transmit herewith, for submission to the Government of India, a copy of a letter, addressed to me, under date the 16th instant, and its accompaniments, by a Mr. Harold Lewis, master of the British barque "Champion," at the Port of Rangoon.

Inclosure 8 in No. 1.

Mr. Lewis, Master of the "Champion," to Colonel Bogle.

Rangoon, September 16, 1851.

I TAKE the liberty of addressing you, as the nearest British authority, and have to request the favour of your forwarding my case to the Supreme Government of Bengal, as early as possible.

As it is my intention, on my arrival in Calcutta, to lay the whole case before the Government, I shall now condense the matter as much as possible.

I arrived here, from the Mauritius, 11th August. A few days after, a complaint, of a trivial nature, was brought against me, before the Governor, by two Bengal coolies, who had secreted themselves on board my vessel, at the Mauritius, without my knowledge; and after five days' attendance on the Governor, to the neglect of my duty to the ship, I was persuaded by the merchants, to give the Governor 100 rupees, to save myself from further annoyance.

Shortly after this matter was arranged, seven of my crew deserted, and endeavoured, by the Governor's assistance, to oblige me to give to them their discharge, and all their wages. I was again obliged to make him a present of 50 rupees, to come to a decision; and by which he obliged me to pay to them half their demand. This case also occupied me five days.

He has now got up a case of murder against me, one of my crew having died the day I anchored off the mouth of the river; three of the deserters, and the two coolies, being evidence against me. I have taken my chief officer, doctor, and serang; these he would not examine. And I have offered to bring my whole crew; but this neither will he allow; but threatens, unless I give him 200 rupees, to detain my vessel, and write to Ava for instructions. I am ready for sea, but he has refused four applications for my port-clearance.

I have decided upon resisting this attempt at extortion, though he has threatened me with imprisonment and the blocks, and has subjected me to every insult and indignity. Having broken no laws, and committed no crime, I trust to meet with protection from the British Government.

Inclosure 9 in No. 1.

Mr. Lewis to the Governor of Rangoon.Rangoon, September 15, 1851.

BEFORE your court, I have been charged with murdering one of my crew at sea.

This charge is brought against me after my vessel has been at anchor off Rangoon thirty days, by a deserter from the vessel, who tried other means first of getting clear of the ship, and when ordered on board by your Excellency, brings this charge without the slightest foundation, but with the hope of forcing me to let him go.

I am an Englishman, commanding a British vessel; and on board of that vessel, one of the crew, a British subject, dies at sea. I am reported to have killed him. I can, therefore, only be tried by a British court of law. But, to leave no suspicion on my character at your court, I submitted to undergo an examination myself, and brought up the chief officer, doctor, and serang, of the vessel; these, your officers did not choose to question, but said they would call one or two of the men out of the vessel, and examine them privately. And I was threatened with immediate imprisonment and the blocks.

I now consider I have done all that, as a British subject, I have a right to do. I have broken none of the laws of Burmah; and I have conformed to all the regulations of the port.

I shall, therefore, now remain on board of my ship, and keep my crew, also, on board, until I obtain my port-clearance; and I claim your Excellency's protection from any further annoyance, under Article IX of the Treaty of Yandaboo. And I respectfully request your Excellency will, now that my vessel is ready for sea, have the three lascars, that are on shore, sent on board, as also the two coolies belonging to the Bengal Government, according to your former order.

Inclosure 10 in No. 1.

Mr. Halliday to Sir H. M. Elliot, K.C.B., Secretary to the Government of India with the Governor-General.

(Extract.)

Fort William, October 10, 1851.

I AM directed to request that you will submit for the consideration of the Governor-General, papers regarding the ill-treatment suffered by Mr. Sheppard, master of the barque "Monarch," and his crew, at the hands of the Burmese officer at Rangoon.

The "Monarch" is a regular trader to that port, and on this occasion it seems that while the vessel was running for the entrance of the river at Rangoon, the pilot, a native of Chittagong, who had brought the vessel into a position of great danger, jumped overboard, through fear, it is believed; an attempt was made to rescue him, but from causes, over which there was no control, it was found impossible to save him. Upon the arrival of the vessel at Rangoon, Mr. Sheppard was ordered to attend at the Governor's to answer to a charge which had been preferred against him of having thrown the pilot overboard; and although, by the evidence of his crew, the accusation was disproved, he was fined and placed in confinement with his men, one of whom, a Christian lad, was most cruelly beaten and kept in the blocks for a whole night and day. Through the instrumentality of Mr. Crisp and the principal native merchants, Mr. Sheppard was himself liberated, after a short detention, but the rest remained in confinement until the following day, when they were set at liberty upon payment of 455 rs., of which 325 rs. was a fine imposed upon Mr. Sheppard. Scarcely had this matter been settled, when Mr. Sheppard was called to account for a sum of money alleged to have been left by the pilot on board. By this means a further sum of 550 rs. was extorted from him.

It appears to the President in Council, that there has been no disruption of the Treaty of 1826, or abandonment of its provisions, as affecting commercial and shipping interests, but that those provisions remain in full force, and are binding on the parties.

While this subject was still under the consideration of the President in Council, the letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Bogle, of the 22nd of September, was received, of which a copy is also transmitted. With this letter was forwarded a statement from Mr. Lewis, of the "Champion," detailing the vexatious treatment experienced by him at the port of Rangoon, and his ultimate detention upon the serious, and evidently false, charge of murder, alleged to have been committed at sea, got up with the view of extorting money.

It appears to the President in Council that it is incumbent on the British Government to take notice of these obvious infractions of the Treaty by the Burmese authorities, and to protect, from oppression and injury, British subjects engaged in the lawful prosecution of trade in a Burmese port. His Honor accordingly has directed that these papers should be submitted for the consideration of the Governor-General.

Inclosure 11 in No. 1.

Messrs. Mackey & Co. to J. P. Grant, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

Calcutta, October 21, 1851.

WE have the honor to transmit a copy of a communication* made by our Moulmein firm to the Commissioner of the Tenasserim Provinces, regarding the outrage committed by the Rangoon authorities on Captain Sheppard, of the barque "Monarch," who may be expected here by the early part of next month, when we shall again have the honor to address you, praying some measures may be taken to recover from the Burmans the loss and damage sustained by Captain Sheppard.

Inclosure 12 in No. 1.

Commodore George Lambert, R.N., to the Governor-General of India.

H.M.S. "Fox," Diamond Harbour, October 25, 1851.

A STATEMENT having been made to me by Mr. Lewis, master of the British barque "Champion," relating to injuries he has sustained by the conduct of the Governor of Rangoon, the particulars of which, he informs me, are now before the Bengal Government, I have informed that gentleman, that, however desirous I might feel of investigating his complaint, I do not feel myself justified in interfering while the subject is under the consideration of your Excellency, who, I felt assured, would fully inquire into the particulars of his case, as well as the insult stated to have been offered to the British flag.

Inclosure 13 in No. 1.

Colonel Bogle to Mr. Halliday.

Moulmein, October 4, 1851.

IN continuation of my letter of the 22nd ultimo, I have the honor to transmit herewith, for submission to the Government of India, a copy of a further letter, addressed to me, under date the 23rd ultimo, and its accompaniment, by Mr. Harold Lewis, master of the barque "Champion."

Inclosure 14 in No. 1.

Mr. Lewis to Colonel Bogle.

Rangoon, September 25, 1851.

I TAKE the liberty of again troubling you in regard to the further oppression and extortion I have been, and am, suffering from the Governor of Rangoon, since last I had the honor of addressing you.

Inclosure 15 in No. 1.

Statement by Mr. Lewis.

AFTER producing the irons in open court, and a man with a rattan to flog me, and threatened to send me in irons to Ava, or behead me here at Rangoon, in fact, having done all in his power to intimidate me into admitting his right to try the case, he declared that, "coûte qui coûte," he would try me, and on the evidence of the accusers alone; that should I prove guilty, he would take my life; however, by the intercession of the residents here, he at last reluctantly consented to have the whole crew examined. By the testimony of twenty-three men and officers, it was fully proved I never struck nor allowed to be struck any man on board the vessel. The Governor then acquitted me, and promised to give my pass on the following day. Two days after he re-tried me, throwing aside the evidence of the whole crew, and condemned me to pay 280 rs., detaining me a prisoner, until by the advice of the other gentlemen, I paid the amount. The next day he seized my serang, and re-tried him.

Mauritius coolies (which had been settled twenty-three days before and 100 rs. paid to the court), has thrown him into prison, and now refuses my pass till I release him by paying 200 rs. Thus at present stands the case. Sic in orig.

Inclosure 16 in No. 1.

Colonel Bogle to Mr. Halliday.

Moulmein, October 21, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to transmit herewith, to be laid before the President in Council, in original, a letter, dated Rangoon, September 27, 1851, from a merchant, to my address, with a memorial from the inhabitants of Rangoon, to the address of the Governor-General of India in Council.

Inclosure 17 in No. 1.

A Merchant to Colonel Bogle.

Rangoon, September 27, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to forward the accompanying memorial from the European residents of this place, addressed to the Governor-General in Council; in doing which, I am directed to ask the favour of your forwarding the same by the first opportunity, accompanied by any remarks which you may deem important in bringing this subject fully before the Governor-General in Council.

I beg, further, to state, that a copy of the memorial has been forwarded to Calcutta, by the barque "Champion," which vessel left yesterday.

Inclosure 18 in No. 1.

Merchants of Rangoon to the Governor-General.

The respectful Memorial of the undersigned merchants, commanders of British vessels, and others, resident in Rangoon, in the Burman Empire,

Humbly showeth,

THAT your memorialists have, for a long time, suffered from the tyranny and gross injustice of the Burmese authorities ;

That trade is seriously obstructed, and almost suppressed, in consequence ;

That, contrary to the Treaty of Yandaboo, and good faith, a much larger sum is, on all occasions, exacted from vessels, in shape of harbour-dues, &c., and that many vessels are, in consequence, deterred from coming ;

That neither life nor property is safe, as the Governor has publicly stated to his dependants, that he has no money to pay them for their services, and has granted to them his permission to rob the inhabitants, and to get money as they best can ;

That, in consequence, robberies and false charges are of almost daily occurrence ;

That the Governor has frequently demanded money, without any pretext, and has tortured the parties till his demands were complied with ;

That now, affairs have arrived at such a crisis that, unless protected, your memorialists will be obliged to leave the country, and, in doing so, must sacrifice their property ;

That your memorialists are here under the provisions of the Treaty of Yandaboo, and beg to state, with all due deference and respect, that they claim the right to seek your protection ;

That they are striving, under every difficulty, to carry on a trade beneficial to Great Britain and the whole of British India ; and that, in support of the correctness of their statement, out of many instances of arbitrary injustice and oppression, a few of recent date may be mentioned :

The British barque "Champion," Harold Lewis, commander, arrived from the Mauritius, to load for Calcutta, on the 11th of August, 1851. It appears that two runaway coolies secreted themselves on board the vessel at the Mauritius (this fact did not come to the knowledge of the captain till the vessel had been three days at sea), and, soon after their arrival here, they were induced by the officers of the Government to prefer a charge against Captain Lewis, for the recovery of the sum of 90 rupees, paid to him by them as passage-money ; and they demanded, also, their discharge from the ship.

This case came before the Deputy Governor ; and Captain Lewis's ignorance of their having been on board was fully proved, also that he never received any money from them. The case was then dismissed by the Deputy Governor, on Captain Lewis paying 100 rupees for court expenses ; and, notwithstanding his remonstrance to the contrary, the Governor refused to give up the men, although informed that they were runaway coolies belonging to the Bengal Government.

On the 8th of September, seven lascars from the ship complained to the Governor of ill-treatment when on board, and demanded that he would order their discharge from the vessel, and the payment of all their wages. This charge was also proved unfounded ; but, after a vexatious trial of six days, during which the Governor repeatedly stated he must have money, Captain Lewis was ordered to pay the sum of 207 rupees, and the lascars were then ordered on board.

The men were, however, detained, and induced by the Governor to bring a charge against Captain Lewis, for the wilful murder of a lascar who died at sea while under the care of the native doctor of the ship.

When the captain appeared to answer this charge, the Governor, in the first place, said to him, "Give me 200 rupees, and I will dismiss the case ;" and, on Captain Lewis's refusal to do so, he was tried for murder, but the evidence of the deserters only was allowed to be taken.

Captain Lewis then remonstrated by letter to the Governor, stating that as an Englishman, in charge of a British vessel, he did not consider himself amenable to a Burmese court, but as he was forced to stand a trial, he demanded that the whole ship's company should be allowed to give evidence. To this the Governor objected, threatened to put him in irons, and send him to Ava; and to intimidate him, the irons were brought into court.

After repeated remonstrances from the residents in Rangoon, the Governor consented to hear the evidence of the crew (23 in number), who unanimously proved the captain's innocence, and, also, that he never himself struck or flogged a lascar, or suffered his officers to strike or flog them.

The Governor then declared the case dismissed, and the captain at liberty to proceed on his voyage, saying he would forward his port-clearance in the morning. He did not do so, however, and two days after the captain was again ordered before the Governor, and the case for murder was re-tried, and the Governor ordered the captain to pay 280 rupees for what he called "death-money" and court expenses.

He then allowed four of the lascars to be sent on board, keeping the remainder. On the following day the three men detained by the Governor preferred a charge against the serang, of having some of their money, and breaking a Braminical thread. The serang was put into prison, and the sum of 200 rupees demanded from Captain Lewis for his release, the port-clearance being withheld to compel payment. Thirteen days since the captain asked for his port-clearance. For twenty-three days he has been obliged to attend court much of the time, from 10 A.M. till 5 P.M., and has suffered every form of rudeness and indignity from the Governor and his officials, and his life has repeatedly been threatened.

Your memorialists beg to mention that a similar case of injustice and oppression occurred to Captain Sheppard, of the barque "Monarch," about two months ago.

As this case was a similar tissue of false charges and extortions, and people were induced to swear falsely, and, in some instances, tortured till they did so, your memorialists merely advert to it as one out of the many.

Three days ago, the Mogul merchants here were ordered before the Governor, to answer a charge for refusing to sell goods to retailers on credit. They pleaded their inability to do so till the debts due were paid in. There were about thirty in number put in the blocks and in prison, and their lives threatened unless they paid the Governor the sum of 1500 rupees, which they did, and were ordered to sell on credit.

Within a short time, an Englishman, the master of a vessel, was seized by the officials on the public wharf, and his pockets rifled of some 35 rupees. Two other officers going to their vessels were seized in the same manner, and by the same officials, dragged to a distant part of the city, stript of their clothes, money, and watches, and their arms bound with cords for several hours. No redress was sought, as from long experience foreigners have found that application for redress has resulted only in heavy court expenses.

Your memorialists would remark upon the small number of signatures affixed to this document, and beg to observe, that the merchants, although most anxious to sign it, are afraid to do so, dreading the possibility of its coming to the knowledge of the Governor; and indeed, should it be discovered that your memorialists have forwarded a document of this kind, the consequence to themselves it would be impossible to foretell.

We, your memorialists, humbly and respectfully pray that your Lordship in Council will take our case into your earliest consideration, and will adopt such measures for our relief, as may seem to you most expedient.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Inclosure 19 in No. 1.

Sir Henry Elliot to Mr. Halliday.

(Extract.)

Camp, Pinjore, October 31, 1851.

YOUR letter, dated the 10th instant, with its inclosures, reached this office as the establishments were in the act of moving from the hills into camp. A short delay has thus been unavoidably caused in the transmission of my reply.

The Governor-General has considered the papers which have been laid before him, with a care and attention commensurate with the importance of the case, and with the consequences which may possibly result from it. He has cautiously examined the Treaty of Yandaboo, and the subsequent Treaty of Commerce formed between the British Government and the King of Ava. The conclusion to which his Lordship has been led entirely corresponds with that which has been formed by the President in Council.

Whether the doubts of the validity of the Treaty of Yandaboo, which were once expressed by Tharawaddy, were the results of ignorance, or a mere outbreak of passion, or of pride, is a matter of no moment. No attempt was made to insist upon those doubts; and the binding nature of the Treaty was fully admitted in all subsequent communications between the States. No doubt of any kind has ever been raised respecting the Commercial Treaty negotiated in the same year as that of Yandaboo.

The First Article of the Commercial Treaty distinctly provides, that "The Governments of both countries also shall permit ships with cargoes, to enter ports, and to carry on trade, giving them the utmost security and protection."

If the facts to which Captain Sheppard, of the barque "Monarch," has deposed, are strictly accurate, these provisions of the first clause of the Treaty have been infringed by the officers of the Government at Rangoon.

Not only have the utmost "security and protection," which are promised by the Treaty, been withheld, but very gross injustice and oppression have been practised.

A British subject, the master of a British ship, has been carried by the police before the Governor of Rangoon, kept in confinement, for a crime which he had not committed, and not liberated until security was given for him by others. He was then fined by the Governor. He was a second time arrested by the Governor, on a charge of embezzlement; and, though acquitted by a Court of Arbitration assembled by the Governor himself, he was a second time arraigned for the same crimes before the court, thus subjected to manifest intimidation, and was a second time fined.

The crew of the ship were subjected to imprisonment; and one of them, the boy, was beaten and ill-used. From all, money was extorted, as fines, fees, or dues.

Finally, the pass for the ship was refused until a further sum of money had been extorted.

Thus, Article I of the Treaty has, in his Lordship's opinion, been violated at every point; and a British subject and his crew have been subjected to extortion, imprisonment, and personal violence, in disregard of the obligations of treaty, and in violation of the Law of Nations.

If Captain Sheppard had offended against the laws of the Kingdom of Ava, he would, of course, have been amenable to its courts, however widely they might differ from those of the offender's own country. But if these depositions, formally made by Captain Sheppard, whose respectability is vouched for by the authorities of the Tenasserim Provinces, be true, Captain Sheppard has committed no offence; and the proceedings of the Governor of Rangoon constitute a grievous and palpable act of injustice and oppression towards a British subject.

The infrequency, or even the total cessation of late years, of all official intercourse between the Government of India and the Court of Ava or its officers, does not in any respect weaken the force of existing treaties, by which both countries are bound. In dealing with a barbarous Court, such as that of Ava, it may be expedient to pass over trifling irregularities or annoyances, though not warranted by the recorded relations between the two countries, as insignificant in their character. But British subjects and traders have, undoubtedly, a just right to expect that they shall be protected by their own Government from injustice, oppression, and extortion, such as are alleged to have been inflicted in the case now before his Lordship.

Wherefore, his Lordship feels that it is incumbent upon the Government of India to accede to the appeal which has been made to them, and to demand reparation from the Government of Ava, if its officer should refuse to make a proper submission for the injury he has done, and the insult he has offered.

The absence of any accredited Agent of the British Government at the Court, or in the territories of Ava, increases the difficulty of dealing with such cases as these. Experience of the course pursued by the Burmese authorities towards former Envoys, seems, at the same time, to dissuade the Government of India from having recourse to the employment of another Mission, if the object of the Government can be accomplished in any other way.

The presence of Her Majesty's ships "Fox" and "Serpent," under the command of Commodore Lambert, in the Hooghly at this moment, is opportune; and may, his Lordship hopes, enable the Government of India to bring this affair to an early and satisfactory issue.

His Lordship begs leave to suggest to the President in Council, that he should communicate to Commodore Lambert the documents connected with the cases which have now been submitted to his Lordship, and should request him to proceed to Rangoon with the ships under his command, and any other available vessels of war which he may desire (such as the "Tenasserim" and "Enterprise" steamers, and the "Proserpine," which his Lordship thinks is still at Moulmein), in order to endeavour to obtain from the Governor of Rangoon the reparation which is due to the British Government, for the unjustifiable treatment which its subjects have recently met with at his hands.

Although there seems no reason to doubt the accuracy of the depositions, or the veracity of the deponents, it would be right, his Lordship thinks, that the Commodore should, in the first instance, be satisfied on this head.

If the facts now in evidence should be established to his satisfaction, the Commodore should be requested to address a note to the Governor of Rangoon, briefly setting forth the facts of each case. He will point out that they constitute a very grave infraction of an existing Treaty. He will inform the Governor of Rangoon, that the British Government will not permit the obligations of treaty to be disregarded, the liberty of its subjects to be violated, or their interests injured by arbitrary acts of oppression and extortion; and he will demand from the Governor of Rangoon pecuniary compensation in favor of the injured parties, to such extent as the President in Council may think fit to name, on such better information as may probably be now before him.

It may be expected that the presence of British men-of-war in front of Rangoon, the obvious justice of the demand, and the indefensible character of the Governor's proceedings, may lead him at once to acquiesce in the Commodore's demand. If the Governor should unfortunately refuse to comply, the case will become more complicated.

The refusal of the Governor of Rangoon to accede to a demand of reparation for a distinct breach of the Treaty with Ava, if it should be upheld by his Government, would doubtless entitle the Government of India to proceed to exact reparation by force of arms, or to inflict such punishment on the Burmese State as circumstances might seem to require. But the Government of India could not, with justice, proceed to such extremities, until it had communicated with the Court of Ava, respecting the conduct of its servant, the Governor of Rangoon, and had thereby afforded it an opportunity of disavowing his acts, and of making the reparation which he had refused to concede.

It appears to his Lordship, therefore, that a letter should be addressed by the President in Council to the King of Ava, detailing the facts which have occurred, and pointing out the violation of Treaty which they involve.

The Government of India, desirous of acting with the justice and moderation by which all its acts are guided, has brought these facts under His Majesty's notice, in the full conviction that he will at once condemn the conduct of his officers, by whom this offence has been perpetrated, and will make to the parties who have been injured, that compensation which is most justly due to them for the injuries they have received.

And as the maintenance of friendly relations, and the mutual observance of good faith, is equally the desire of the British Government and of the Court of Ava, His Majesty will, doubtless, recognise the wisdom of removing the Governor of Rangoon from the office he has unworthily filled, in which his misconduct has tended to sow dissension between the States, and to break down the provisions of the Treaty, which it is, doubtless, His Majesty's wish most fully to uphold.

The Government of India, confident in the belief that the Court of Ava will take a just view of the circumstances which are now placed before it, and will manifest a just sense of its own duty and interests, abstains from every expression which would seem to be at variance with a spirit of friendliness.

The Government of India looks for prompt proof of a reciprocal feeling on the part of the Government of Ava, to be manifested in its ready compliance with the requirements of the Government of India.

If these just expectations should be disappointed, the Government of India will feel itself called upon to take such immediate measures as shall enforce the rights it possesses by virtue of existing treaties; shall effectually protect the interests of British subjects; and shall fully vindicate its own honor and power.

In the event of the Governor of Rangoon refusing, or evading, compliance with the demands conveyed to him by the Commodore, the letter addressed by the President in Council to the King should be delivered by the Commodore to the Governor of Rangoon, for transmission to Ava, accompanied by an intimation that an early reply from the Court of Ava will be expected; and that, if it should not in due time be received, the Government of India will proceed to take such measures as they may think necessary and right.

The delay thus interposed is unavoidable in the present anomalous relations of the two Governments. It will, moreover, admit of the Commodore proceeding to the Persian Gulf, whither, his Lordship understands, he is under orders to proceed.

If his Lordship's anticipation of the sufficiency of the present demonstration for bringing this question to a satisfactory settlement should be disappointed, considerable preparation will be necessary for those ulterior measures to which the Government of India will then be compelled to resort. The interval will thus be profitably employed.

If his Honor in Council should think fit, or if the Commodore should desire it, an officer, competent to the duty, may be employed to accompany Commodore Lambert, for the purpose of assisting in carrying on the necessary communications with the native functionaries of the Burmese State at Rangoon.

It is to be distinctly understood, that no act of hostility is to be committed at present, though the reply of the Governor should be unfavourable, nor until definite instructions regarding such hostilities shall be given by the Government of India.

Inclosure 20 in No. 1.

Mr. Halliday to Colonel Bogle.

Fort William, November 11, 1851.

ADVERTING to your letters and their inclosures, I am directed to inform you, that the treatment of Captains Sheppard and Lewis, by the Burmese authorities at Rangoon, as represented by them, appeared to the President in Council to have been such as urgently to demand the notice and interference of the Government of India; but so many possible and grave consequences seemed involved in any steps which might be taken, that he was desirous, before moving in the matter, to consult the Governor-General on the subject.

The result of the communications which have taken place is, that it has been determined, in maintenance of the Treaty of Yandaboo, and the Commercial Treaty of 1826, to demand full reparation for the injuries and oppression to which the above-named British subjects have been exposed. In furtherance of this object, Her Majesty's ship "Fox," accompanied by the steamer "Tenasserim," will, as soon as the requisite preparations can be made, sail for Rangoon. It is proposed that the steamer "Proserpine," now at Moulmein, should also form part of this expedition, and instructions to this effect will be communicated to you through the Government of Bengal.

Commodore Lambert, under whose orders the expedition has been placed, is in full possession of the views and intentions of Government, and will be accompanied by Captain Latter, as Burmese interpreter. The object, in the first instance, will be to endeavour to obtain, by negotiation, the reparation which is due to the British Government for the unjustifiable treatment which its subjects have recently experienced. Should these negotiations fail in producing the satisfactory results which are expected from them, further and more serious proceedings will have to be resorted to. The President in Council thinks it necessary that you should be informed of the present position of affairs, and of what is in contemplation," in order that, without making any open or hostile demonstration, you may take what precautionary measures you may deem necessary to guard against any sudden attack or surprise on the part of the Burmese, as, although nothing of the kind is at present anticipated, it is impossible to foresee with certainty what may be result of the present remonstrance to the Burmese authorities.

Inclosure 21 in No. 1.

Mr. Halliday to Mr. Grant.

Fort William, November 11, 1851.

I AM directed to inform you, that the President in Council desires to have the steamers "Tenasserim" and "Proserpine" placed at his disposal, for a special service; and to request that you will, with the permission of the Deputy Governor, give directions to the Superintendent of Marine, and to the Commissioner of the Tenasserim Provinces, to have these vessels properly armed and equipped, and manned by European crews, with as little delay as possible. It is intended that they shall be employed, for the present, under the orders of Commodore Lambert, of Her Majesty's ship "Fox."

Inclosure 22 in No. 1.

Mr. Halliday to Commodore Lambert.

Fort William, November 11, 1851.

I HAVE the honor, by direction of the President in Council, to forward to you the accompanying copy of a dispatch from the Secretary to Government with the Governor-General, dated the 31st ultimo, together with the documents referred to; and to communicate to you the request of his Lordship, that you will have the goodness to carry out the instructions contained therein.

Orders will be at once given for placing under your command the Company's steamers "Tenasserim" and "Proserpine," properly armed and equipped, and manned by European crews, for the service on which you are about to proceed. The former of these vessels is now in this port, and the latter at Moulmein. The President in Council has also been pleased to direct that Captain Latter, an officer in every respect well qualified for the duty, shall be instructed to accompany you to Rangoon, for the purpose of assisting you, as interpreter, in your communications with the Burmese authorities.

You will observe that the Governor-General has requested that the President in Council will name the amount of damages, and other reparation, to be demanded, in the first instance, from the Governor of Rangoon. But his Honor has not before him, and has no means of obtaining, the requisite information, to enable him to decide on this point. In the case of Captain Sheppard, a distinct claim is put forward by his agents, of 5000 rupees, as compensation for injury, loss, and expenses; but how far this is an equitable claim can only be ascertained by an investigation into the extent of injury, of loss, and of expenses, which his Honor presumes will form part of the preliminary inquiry the Governor-General has requested you to make. In the case of Captain Lewis, no specific sum has been mentioned; but the reparation to which he is fairly entitled, will also, in the course of your inquiry, be made apparent; and his Honor requests that you will use your discretion in deciding what pecuniary compensation should be demanded on account of each of these parties.

The letter which, in the event of your demands upon the Governor of Rangoon not being complied with, the Governor-General has requested you to transmit to the King of Ava, will be placed in your hands before your departure from Calcutta, and a translation will be prepared by Captain Latter.

Inclosure 23 in No. 1.

Commodore Lambert to Lieutenant-General Sir John Littler, G.C.B., President of the Council of India.

H.M.S. "Fox," Calcutta, November 11, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Halliday's letter of this date, with its inclosures, calling on me for the aid of Her Majesty's ships under my command, to co-operate with, and assist the Government of India in demanding redress for alleged insults and cruelties committed on British subjects by the authorities of the Government at Rangoon.

In reply to which, I beg to assure you it will be my most earnest desire to carry out such arrangements as may be deemed necessary to accomplish this object.

The "Fox" will be ready for sea on Tuesday next, the 18th instant, when I shall immediately proceed to Rangoon.

I shall endeavour to obtain from the Governor the redress demanded, and, failing to do so, I shall use all possible means to forward the letter referred to, to the King of Ava, allowing him a full and reasonable time for an answer, during which period I shall remain off Rangoon, for the protection of British subjects.

Should it be necessary to dispatch the letter to the King of Ava, I will immediately inform the Indian Government thereof, in order that any further wishes of the Governor-General may be forwarded to me.

Inclosure 24 in No. 1.

Commodore Lambert to Sir John Littler.

H.M.S. "Fox," Calcutta, November 12, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to inclose to you two statements of the claims made by Messrs. Lewis and Sheppard, of the British merchant-vessels "Champion" and "Monarch," for money extorted from them by the Governor of Rangoon, and also for loss by detention of their ships.

In alluding to that part of Mr. Halliday's letter touching on this subject, I beg leave to observe, that I do not consider myself a judge to decide matters relating to mercantile transactions, and would, therefore, beg to decline giving an opinion on that subject.

As regards the money extorted from Captain Lewis, I am satisfied he is entitled to the full demand he has made; but not having seen Mr. Sheppard, or anybody that was present at the moment of his complaint alluded to, I am unable at present to form an opinion. but should no further evidence be able to be gained in Calcutta, it will be a subject of consideration when I reach Rangoon; and supposing his case to be correct, the same parties that decided the claim for remuneration on Mr. Lewis's case for demurrage, could give an opinion on the "Monarch's."

The third Inclosure is a demand made by Messrs. Mackey and Co., of Calcutta, of which I am unable to form any opinion.

D. C. MACKEY & Co.

Inclosure 29 in No. 1.

Declaration by Mr. Mackey.

Sic in orig.: ON this 10th day of November, in the Christian year 1851, before me, Robert Mosely Thomas, Notary Public, residing and practising in Calcutta, in the East Indies, personally came and appeared, Donald Campbell Mackey, of Calcutta, aforesaid, carrying on business there as a merchant, under the firm of D. C. Mackey and Company, and did solemnly declare and affirm, that he did advance certain sums of money to one Syed Abdoollah, an accredited agent at Calcutta for the Burmese Government, at his request, for the loading and disbursement of the ship or vessel called the "Shooyhaua," commanded by one Shurghie, which said ship or vessel then belonged to the Burmese Government; and that the said moneys so advanced by him, as aforesaid, will fully appear from the account hereunto annexed, and also from a copy of a letter to the Shebendar of Rangoon, also hereunto annexed; and the said appearer did further state and declare, that after repeated applications by letter addressed to the Shebendar of Rangoon, he received from one T. C. Arratoon, the sum of 1000 Company's rupees, as a remittance on account of his said claim, with a promise of further remittance at a future period; and the said appearer did further state and declare, that he has not received any further or other remittance or sum of money whatever, on account of his said claim, and that after deducting the said remittance of 1000 rupees, and adding interest on the said sum due and owing up to the 31st of October last past, there is due and owing to him, the said appearer, the sum of 8,066 Company's rupees 15 annas and 9 pice, being the balance as appears mentioned in the said annexed account.

Inclosure 30 in No. 1.

Mr. Halliday to Commodore Lambert.Fort William, November 14, 1851.

WITH reference to your letter dated the 12th instant, I am directed to inform you that the pecuniary compensation to be demanded from the Rangoon Governor, for the loss and injuries sustained by Messrs. Sheppard and Lewis, respectively, may, in the opinion of the President in Council, be fairly estimated as follows:

The money extorted from each of these gentlemen, on various pretexts, should be recovered in full, together with interest, at 12 per cent. per annum, up to the date of payment. In addition to this, there is an equitable claim for demurrage, loss of freight and market, and compensation for personal injuries and annoyances.

In the case of Captain Sheppard, the vessel he commanded, the "Monarch," is a barque of 250 tons, and he was detained at Rangoon eight days. For a vessel of this size, his Honor is informed that 40 rupees per diem would cover all expenses, including interest on the value of the vessel. The ship's demurrage, at this rate, would be 320 rupees. The loss to the shippers, in interest on the value of their cargo, and from arriving late in the market, and to the owners, for possible loss on freight, cannot be accurately ascertained, but may, his Honor thinks, be set down at 50 rupees, per 100 tons, per diem, and would amount, therefore, in this case, to 1000 rupees. For the ill-usage inflicted on the captain, officers, and men, 1000 rupees would, in his Honor's opinion, be a fair and adequate compensation. In this case, therefore, the remuneration to be exacted will probably amount to about 3,400 or 3,500 rupees.

The "Champion," which Captain Lewis commanded, is a vessel of 410 tons. In regard to the money extorted from Captain Lewis, you express yourself satisfied that he is entitled to the full amount he demands, namely, 700 rupees. He appears to have been detained at Rangoon by the Governor, 15 days, and for a vessel of 410 tons, his Honor is advised that 45 rupees a-day is the proper and fair demurrage. On this account, then, he should receive 675 rupees; and the other ship's charges, calculated as in Captain Sheppard's case, amount to 3,075 rupees. As compensation for the ill-treatment he received, his Honor thinks that 1000 rupees would be a suitable and sufficient award to Captain Lewis. In the case of the "Champion," therefore, the total pecuniary reparation to be demanded from the Governor of Rangoon will be 5,500 or 5,600 rupees.

His Honor has decided that the claim preferred by Messrs. Mackey and Co., of Calcutta, is not one which can be properly enforced by the Government of India.

Should you consider it necessary to take Captain Lewis with you to Rangoon, he might be provided with a free passage, and receive, while absent on this duty, at the rate of 300 rupees a-month, as compensation for loss of employment. The amount of this compensation, as well as his table expenses, should form an additional item in the demand to be made on the Governor of Rangoon.

Inclosure 31 in No. 1.

Mr. H. Potter, of the ship "Shilomith," to the Governor-General.Calcutta, November 13, 1851.

UNDERSTANDING that the Government are about dispatching a naval force to Burmah, to demand reparation for injuries and insults offered to British subjects from time to time, I deem it a duty to bring to your Lordship's notice the following circumstances connected with my residence in Rangoon during a period of twenty months, from December 1849, to August 1851.

I proceeded to Rangoon, via Moulmein, per East India Company's steamer

“Enterprise,” in September 1849, for the purpose of ascertaining if I could build a ship there, and on what terms. On my arrival there I called upon the head authority, the former Governor of Rangoon, and informed him of the object I had in view; the present Governor being then the Shebandar, that is to say the Collector of Customs, and second in power. My first inquiry was, in the event of my building a ship there, what protection and security I, as a British-born subject, would receive from the Burmese Government. In reply, I was assured by both the above functionaries, that every facility and assistance in their power would be afforded to me and to my property by way of encouraging foreigners to embark on similar enterprises; and that as I was the first to set an example of ship-building in Rangoon, after a lapse of many years, they would, agreeably to an old custom, allow me a remission of duties upon all my import stores, anchorage, and port-dues. Upon this promise and assurance, I returned to Calcutta, and after completing the necessary arrangements, I sailed again for Rangoon, in the “John Hepburn,” and arrived there with a portion of my building materials in January 1850. According to his promise, the former Governor permitted the same to be landed free of duty; and thus encouraged, I immediately laid down the keel of my ship, and commenced building operations. For about three months I was allowed to progress in my work without any molestation. At this time the Governor was recalled, and the present one, who was then the Collector of Customs, promoted to the supreme authority. Upon this change, I lost no time in waiting upon him, and offering him the usual formal civilities customary in the place, on which I was assured by him of the continuance of the same protection as I had hitherto enjoyed. He further voluntarily pledged himself to observe the Treaty of Yandaboo as his guide, and requested me to bring to his notice any deviation from the same on the part of the Government officers. To my utter astonishment and regret, many days had not elapsed since his assurance was given, when he commenced to interrupt my operations by all manner of petty annoyances, and under various false pretences, such as stopping my carpenters from working on the ship, &c., with the avowed intention of extorting money from me, to which, from necessity, I was obliged to submit, in order to prevent interruption to the building of my ship. Not satisfied with this breach of his engagement, he moreover levied heavy duties upon the stores I subsequently imported, in the very face of the King’s order, exempting me from the payment of all duties, which I had obtained from the Court of Ava, and which was read before him in open court. A copy of the document I submit for your Lordship’s information.

I respectfully, but firmly, remonstrated with him on the subject, but to no purpose; all the benefit and satisfaction that I received in return was nothing more than vile abuse, coupled with threats of castigation and imprisonment. His illegal proceedings and maltreatment lasted to the time of my departure from the place, and in the interval I was forced to submit to numberless unjust extortions. After a great deal of annoyance, delay, and loss to me, and when my ship was completed, and ready to be launched, he prevented the carpenters and all the workmen from rendering their assistance, by which alone the vessel could be launched, threatening them with the loss of their heads if they attempted it without an order or written document from him; and at the same time demanded of me the sum of 16,000 Company’s rupees, before he would allow me to launch my ship. For a considerable time matters remained in statu quo, owing to my determination not to submit to such unheard-of imposition, in which I would have continued, but for fear of the total destruction of my ship by fire, which was of frequent occurrence in the town; an alarming instance of it I witnessed during the interval, which destroyed nearly the whole town, and from the destructive effects of which my vessel narrowly escaped. Thus situated, and having no means of protection, I was reluctantly constrained to comply with the Governor’s unjust demands, and tyrannical extortions, which I could ill afford at the time.

Owing to the impositions I have detailed above, and the oppressive measures pursued against me by the Governor of Rangoon, without any cause or provocation on my part, I was detained there several months beyond the period necessary for the building of the ship, by which I suffered not only a serious loss on the spot, irrespective of the extortions enumerated in the statement I take the liberty to inclose herein; but I have been further a sufferer of several thousands of rupees, in consequence of my late arrival in Calcutta, and being deprived from performing a particular voyage, and benefiting by a remunerating freight, which was in readiness for my ship.

In proof of the correctness of all that I have stated above, and of many more grievances, the circumstances connected with which I cannot at present exactly recollect, the principal European and other merchants in Rangoon can bear testimony, as well as my correspondence with my agents in Calcutta.

Inclosure 33 in No. 1.

A. Young, Esq., Under Secretary to the Government of India, to Mr. Potter.

Fort William, November 14, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 13th instant, submitting a letter for the Governor-General, bringing to notice certain circumstances connected with your residence in Rangoon, from December 1849, to August 1851, and forwarding a memorandum of claims against the Burmese Government.

In reply, I am directed by the President in Council to state, that the circumstances now stated by you were brought to the notice of Government by the Commissioner of the Tenasserim Provinces, in February last, and, after consideration, his Honor in Council declined to interfere. There is nothing contained in your letter under reply, which induces the President in Council to depart from that determination.

Inclosure 34 in No. 1.

Messrs. Mackey & Co. to Mr. Grant.

Calcutta, November 10, 1851.

WE beg reference to the letter we had the honor to address you on the 21st ultimo, on the subject of Captain Sheppard and the barque "Monarch," and we now hand you herewith a statement* of claim against the Burmese authorities, for 5,005 Company's rupees, exclusive of any compensation to captain, officers, or men, for ill-usage.

We have also the honor to hand you a statement† of claim, which we prefer on our own behalf, against the authorities of Rangoon, for the sum of Co.'s Rs. 8,066 15 9.

We hand you these statements as formal claims against the Burmese Government, and we humbly petition for the protection and intervention of the East India Company to recover our rights.

Inclosure 35 in No. 1.

Mr. Young to Messrs. Mackey & Co.Fort William, November 14, 1851.

IN reply to your letter of the 10th instant, I am directed to inform you, that both the claims preferred by you have been carefully considered by the President in Council; and in regard to that on behalf of Captain Sheppard and the barque "Monarch," the opinion of the President in Council has been communicated to Commodore Lambert, of Her Majesty's ship "Fox," by whom it will be further considered and disposed of.

The claim advanced by yourselves for the recovery of a mercantile debt contracted by one Syed Abdoolah, said to be an agent of the Burmese Government, the President in Council considers to be one which could not properly be urged or enforced by the Government of India.

The President of the Council of India in Council to the King of Ava.November 17, 1851.

FROM time to time, complaints have been preferred to the Government of India by British subjects resident at, or frequenting the Port of Rangoon, of extortion and oppression exercised towards them by the Governor of that place. But the Government of India has been unwilling to believe that the provisions of the treaties of friendship and commerce which subsist between the two Governments had been disregarded by an officer of the Ava Government.

Recently, however, two cases have occurred, in which British subjects, commanding British vessels trading with Rangoon, have brought to notice ill usage which they alleged they had received at the hands of the Governor of that place. In these cases the ill-treatment represented seemed so gross and unjustifiable, that the Government of India considered it necessary to inquire carefully into the truth of the statements, and, finding the facts to be well established, deputed Commodore Lambert to demand from the Governor of Rangoon reparation for the injuries and insults he had inflicted. This demand has not been complied with.

The Government of India, desirous of acting with the justice and moderation by which all its acts are guided, has brought these facts under His Majesty's notice, in the full conviction that he will at once condemn the conduct of his officers by whom this offence has been perpetrated, and will make to the parties who have been injured, that compensation which is most justly due to them for the injuries they have received.

And as the maintenance of friendly relations, and as the mutual observance of good faith, is equally the desire of the British Government and of the Court of Ava, His Majesty will doubtless recognise the wisdom of removing the Governor of Rangoon from the office he has unworthily filled, in which his misconduct has tended to sow dissension between the States, and to break down the provisions of the Treaty, which it is doubtless His Majesty's wish most fully to uphold.

The Government of India, confident in the belief that the Court of Ava will take a just view of the circumstances which are now placed before it, and will manifest a just sense of its own duty and interests, abstains from every expression which could seem to be at variance with a spirit of friendliness.

The Government of India looks for prompt proof of a reciprocal feeling on the part of the Government of Ava, to be manifested in its ready compliance with the requirements of the Government of India.

If these just expectations should be disappointed, the Government of India will feel itself called upon to take such immediate measures as shall enforce the rights it possesses by virtue of existing treaties, shall effectually protect the interests of British subjects, and shall fully vindicate its own honor and power.

Mr. Young to Commodore Lambert.

Fort William, November 17, 1851.

HEREWITH I have the honor to forward the letter from the President in Council to the King of Ava referred to in Mr. Halliday's dispatch dated the 11th instant, together with a copy of the English draft from which it has been translated.

No. 2.

The President of the Council of India in Council to the Secret Committee of the East India Company.

Fort William, January 7, 1852. (No. 1.)

IN continuation of our dispatch No. 8, dated the 22nd of November last, on Rangoon affairs, we have the honor to transmit for your information, a copy of the correspondence detailed in the accompanying abstract.

Inclosure 1 in No. 2.

Camp, Kimkut, November 27, 1851.

I AM directed by the Governor-General of India to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Young's letter, dated the 18th instant, inclosing transcripts of a letter addressed by the President in Council to the King of Ava, and of the further correspondence that has taken place, connected with the recent transactions at Rangoon.

In reply I am desired to state that his Lordship concurs in the views expressed by his Honor in Council, respecting the reparation to be demanded from the Governor of Rangoon, and in the instructions which have been issued to Commodore Lambert.

His Lordship hopes that the appearance of the squadron in the river will procure at once the reparation now demanded.

If affairs should take an unfavorable turn, and more extended measures appear to be necessary, his Lordship will quit the camp, and proceed by dâk to Calcutta, in order to confer with his Honor in Council on the course to be adopted by the Government of India.

Inclosure 2 in No. 2.

Commodore Lambert to Sir John Littler.

Off Rangoon, November 28, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to inform you I have dispatched Captain Latta, in the "Proserpine," to Calcutta, to acquaint you with my reasons for deviating from part of your instructions in demanding redress from the Governor of Rangoon.

I have forwarded the letter intrusted to my care, through the Governor, to the King of Ava, together with a letter from myself to His Majesty's Chief Minister, stating my reason for doing so, a copy of which I inclose.

Captain Latta will inform you of the difficulties I have had to contend with, in communicating with a person whose conduct renders him totally unworthy of any respect.

I beg to forward a copy of a memorial, signed by many residents in Rangoon, praying for protection.

Inclosure 3 in No. 2.

Commodore Lambert to the Prime Minister of His Majesty the King of Ava.

*On board Her Britannic Majesty's ship of war "Fox," at anchor off the town of Rangoon,
November 28, 1851.*

I HAVE the honor to forward, through the Governor of Rangoon, a letter intrusted to my care by the Most Noble the Marquis of Dalhousie, the Governor-General of British India, for the King of Ava, demanding the removal of the Governor of Rangoon.

My object in visiting His Majesty's dominions was to demand redress for the insults and injuries he has offered to Her Britannic Majesty's subjects.

Having obtained the recompense that was considered due, I should have felt satisfied; but, on my arrival here, I find such an addition of cruelties to the wrongs already named, that I have no alternative but to appeal direct to the Court of Ava, and feel sure that His Majesty will punish his subject, who has not only broken the Treaty of Peace that exists between the British Empire and the Kingdom of Ava, but has likewise insulted the British Nation, by the ill-treatment of its subjects.

Inclosure 4 in No. 2.

Commodore Lambert to the Governor of Rangoon.

*On board Her Britannic Majesty's ship of war "Fox,"
at anchor off Rangoon, November 27, 1851.*

THE object of my visit to Rangoon was, at the request of the Most Noble the Marquis of Dalhousie, the Governor-General of British India, to demand redress for insults and injuries you have committed on subjects belonging to Her Britannic Majesty Queen Victoria.

Since my arrival, so many more complaints have been made by persons residing at Rangoon, who have a right to claim British protection, that I have deemed it my duty to withhold my original demand, until I have again made known their complaints to his Lordship.

Inclosure 5 in No. 2.

Commodore Lambert to the Governor of Rangoon.

November 28, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to transmit you a letter for His Majesty the King of Ava, together with one for the Prime Minister of the King.

I shall expect that every dispatch will be used for forwarding the same, and I hold you responsible for an answer being delivered in these waters, within five weeks from this day.

Inclosure 6 in No. 2.

Merchants resident at Rangoon to Commodore Lambert.

Rangoon, November 28, 1851.

WE, the Undersigned, merchants and others, resident in Rangoon, beg most respectfully to address you on your arrival here in command of an expedition having for its object the redress of our grievances.

After suffering for many years (dating from the withdrawal of the British Resident) the grossest injustice and oppression from the Burmese authorities, you may imagine the feelings of joy and gratitude your arrival has caused.

The European residents in Rangoon, a short time ago, forwarded to the Governor-General in Council, a memorial, praying for the redress of their grievances, and protection from further injustice.

The memorialists alluded to two cases of recent occurrence, viz., those of Captain Sheppard and Captain Lewis. They alluded to them, not because they were singular, or marked by any peculiar acts of atrocity, above others of almost daily occurrence, but because they had, through them, a good opportunity of bringing the matter at once to the notice of the Bengal Government, by having the testimony of Captain Sheppard and Captain Lewis, both of whom were proceeding direct to Calcutta.

We will now, with your permission, bring forward numerous instances where greater injustice and oppression than that above alluded to, have been wantonly inflicted on British subjects resident here.

Your appearance has emboldened us to come forward on this occasion; and the reason why no other cases appeared in detail in our memorial above alluded to, can best be obvious to those who know Rangoon, where the slightest whisper of dissatisfaction would be visited with still greater acts of outrage, and, as in a number of instances, with cruel torturing and death.

We beg to refer you to the annexed list, which contains a few of the almost innumerable acts of atrocity, injustice, and cruelty.

We feel every confidence that the determination you may come to on our case will be one becoming your rank and position; but we earnestly pray that you will bear in mind, that the privilege you now concede to us, as British subjects, of making our complaints known to you, will, on your departure, if continued protection is not afforded us, be visited on us with ten-fold cruelty and outrage.

Inclosure 7 in No. 2.

List of Grievances.

1. A short time ago a charge was brought against Aga Sadduck, merchant in this town, by his wife, who had been separated from him fifteen years. No less a sum than 5,500 rupees was extorted from him by the present Governor.

2. In the case of Goolam Hussain, a merchant of Rangoon, against whom a charge was brought of alleged faithlessness of his wife, the sum of 1500 rupees was extorted from him.

3. In the case of Goolam Hussain (deceased), who was the owner of some mineral said to have had the virtue of completing the art of alchemy, the Governor wanted to get the mineral, which was refused him. In consequence of this a charge of theft was trumped up against him. The unfortunate man was seized, flogged in the most cruel manner, from the effects of which he died soon after.

4. Against Nicholas Johannes, an Armenian merchant, a story was got up, that in a piece of ground which he had lately purchased, there was buried a jar of silver. The Government people were ordered to dig for the jar in question, when Mr. Johannes detected them in the act of slipping money into the jar. The Governor decreed that he should pay 1000 rupees for these proceedings of his own men.

5. That in the case of Ally Iskar, he had taken from him 700 rupees, for no other reason than that he had been agent to a merchant residing in Ava, who died, and whose property was in Calcutta.

6. In the case of Mr. Cowasjee, who, on his father dying, had to pay no less than 1500 rupees, besides 400 or 500 rupees more to prevent the Governor trying him on the false charge of the murder of his own father.

7. A schooner bound from this port to Moulmein, foundered while at sea. A man by the name of Ally Nucky was falsely charged with having shipped silver on board of her, for which 350 rupees were taken from him. On another occasion the same man had his house forcibly entered and plundered by order of the Governor, to the amount of 1500 rupees in cash, on suspicion of a similar offence. His wife was flogged to make her confess where they kept their money. Subsequently, 2 ticals of gold were missed from his house, for which he had to pay 200 rupees, besides losing the gold.

8. In the case of the principal native merchants, who, from previous heavy losses, found it necessary to agree among themselves not to sell goods on credit, a charge was trumped up, for which they had to pay the Governor 3000 rupees, and the Surrattee or retail merchants, 1000 rupees. At this present time a demand is still pending against them individually, from the Governor, for the sum of 200 rupees, which is only put off on account of the presence of Her Majesty's ships. On the above charge being first instituted, Moolah Ibrahim, Aga Juat, Aga See, were imprisoned, and Cassim placed in double irons.

9. In the case of Mr. J. M. Morris, part-owner and master of the schooner "Flora Macdonald," who was accidentally drowned in this river; after the death of her husband, the wife was required to pay the sum of 4000 rupees, as half the share of the vessel, which was subsequently proved to have been paid by her deceased husband. The King ordered the money to be returned to her, but to this day it has never been paid. The widow prays that it may yet be refunded to her.

10. In December last, when the great fire broke out in this town, the Governor himself prevented the people from putting it out; "let it burn," he heartlessly remarked. This fire occasioned a loss to the British subjects residing here, of over a lac of rupees, and from which many of them are still suffering.

11. The case of a young Armenian, Zachariah Caripet, whose father's house was robbed during his absence at the capital, of an iron chest containing about 10,000 rupees or upwards, his slaves were compelled to say that the son was the robber. On complaining of the robbery, he was imprisoned, bound with cords, and had to pay 300 rupees to escape a flogging. Besides this, by threats of still further violence, he was compelled to admit that he was guilty.

12. Frequently the servants and lascars in the employ of the merchants, are bribed by the Burmese officers, to speak falsely and get up complaints, on which charges are founded, in order to inflict fines, court-expenses, &c., to the amount of many thousand rupees.

13. In the case of debts being due to British merchants, they have no chance of getting their rights. On complaining to the Governor, with a view of recovering them, the defendant, who is generally a Burman, is encouraged to pay a bribe of a few hundred rupees, or a smaller sum, as the parties may feel inclined, when the suit is immediately dismissed.

14. On passing imported goods through the custom-house, frequent robberies take place, which we have no means of preventing; to complain is only to involve the merchant in greater trouble and expense, without obtaining justice.

15. In their purchases of goods, particularly catch (a product of Burmah), on which a high duty is levied, the merchants are frequently robbed to such an extent, that out of 100 viss, they seldom get more than 80 viss. It is done with the countenance and approval of the authorities, and if you complain, you are subjected to a greater loss under various pretences.

16. Aga Juat, a native merchant, lost a small box belonging to himself, for which he was fined rupees 2063 8.

17. On one occasion, the Governor of Rangoon desired the merchants to send for muskets, promising them not to charge duty. On their arrival, however, he enforced payment of the duty; purchased the muskets himself; but to this day the whole of the money is not paid. The purchase was made two years ago.

18. Some time since, a Mussulman belonging to Moulmein, who was in the habit of trading between here and that port, was flogged to death by Iseet

Hay Morugchee, because he would not, or could not, pay him one hundred rupees.

19. In the case of the merchants forwarding rubies from Ava, for which, according to custom, they have to pay 28 rupees for a pass, to insure exportation. No other charge is sanctioned at the capital; but before the rubies can be exported from this place, the merchants have extorted from them, on every occasion, from 100 to 200 rupees.

20. On one occasion, two rubies were seized on board the British schooner "Tharrawaddy Merchant," valued at 40 rupees (rubies are not contraband articles), and from the owners of the rubies, and serang of the vessel, 600 rupees were extorted.

21. In respect to pilotage charged at this port, the Governor now pockets the whole of what the pilots earn, giving, however, these hard-working individuals, such small sum, occasionally, as his caprice may dictate. This act of gross injustice dispirits and discourages the pilots, rendering them less efficient, and less careful of the interests of vessels visiting this port.

22. The barque "Cecilia," bound from Calcutta to the Nicobar Islands, put into Rangoon, from stress of weather, and having two casks of rum on board; they were duly entered in the custom-house. After having been three months in dock, Mr. Crisp, Mr. Porter, the chief mate, and an apprentice lad, named Wales, were seized, thrown into prison, and kept there four days, and tortured. They were required to pay 1200 rupees, but, finally, were released by paying 500 rupees, demanded on account of the rum which had remained on board, at the particular request of the head custom-house officer.

23. Mr. M. P. Crisp, senior, a highly respectable and very long resident of this place, has been twice expelled from the country, contrary to the provisions of the Treaty of Yandaboo, since the withdrawal of the British Resident from Ava.

24. In the case of Messrs. Trill and Crisp, whose timber-yard, appliances for sawing timber, and other property, were seized, without any show of justice, by His Majesty, the late King Tharrawaddy, by which they were made sufferers to a very large amount.

25. Captain H. M. Potter, of Calcutta, came round here, and built a ship of 800 or 900 tons burden. The present Governor oppressively extorted from him, at different times, to the amount of several thousand rupees.

26. The Rev. Charles Pachiotti, Catholic priest, was accused about two years ago, of having caused a fire to take place in his cook-house. It was proved that the story was false, yet he had to pay about fifty rupees; was put into the blocks, tortured, and his feet hoisted up several times. On another occasion, about two months ago, some incendiaries set fire to the Catholic school-house at a late hour at night, by which the building was burnt to the ground. M. Pachiotti was charged with the deed, and fined 45 rupees.

27. In the case of Mr. Lewis, ship-builder, during Mr. Lewis' absence from Rangoon, his wife was fined 400 rupees, because part of a cask of salt beef was found in the house. This beef was imported by Mr. Lewis, passed through the custom-house, and paid duty.

28. Since the withdrawal of the British Resident from the Court of Ava, the port-charges have been continually increased, and are now so exorbitant as to amount to an almost entire prohibition to vessels visiting this port.

29. By Burman law and custom, the amount of duty to be levied on export produce (Cutch in particular) is $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. ad valorem. The present Governor puts any value he thinks proper on the goods (sometimes double the market price), and levies the $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the value thus arbitrarily imposed.

30. In the case of Mahomed Hoosain, serang of a small schooner belonging to Moulmein; upon suspicion of his having smuggled silver on board his schooner, he was seized, tortured by having his mouth burnt, fined very heavily, and his wife, although eight months in the family-way, was most cruelly beaten, and died soon afterwards.

31. In the case of Aga, the post-office Dubash, he was fined 200 rupees for having built his house on ground a little higher than the houses around, and was compelled to pull his house down again.

32. The Nakodah of a British barque was ordered to pay 150 rupees, because he dipped his ensign to salute Her Britannic Majesty's ship "Fox," as she passed his vessel off Rangoon town.

33. The Governor gave orders on the main wharf, as also in his court, that any persons, foreigners or natives, who should go down to any of the wharfs to witness the arrival of Her Majesty's ships of war and steamers, should be beheaded forthwith. This order was proclaimed through the town by beat of gong and a public crier.

34. In the case of Fakeer Sahib Korosawny, his house being robbed of property to a considerable amount, he was fined by the Governor, 350 rupees.

35. In the case of Gregory Johannes and seven other Armenian gentlemen, who went to the gardens on a party of pleasure. Whilst there they were all seized, and conveyed to prison, on the charge of having gone to the gardens to concoct a petition to the Governor of Bengal, and to give him intelligence concerning the state of affairs in Burmah. Gregory Johannes and his friends were detained three days in the custom-house jail, and afterwards fined 2,600 rupees. The same person was fined 300 rupees on account of a false accusation brought against him concerning some landed property.

36. In the case of a young girl, who, by permission of the King, went to Moulmein, and was married, the present Governor has often demanded her return, and as often fined her father heavily on her account; insomuch that Mr. Johannes Sarkies, her father, was compelled to go to Ava to escape further persecution.

37. In March last, the Reverend Mr. Kincaid, and Dr. J. Dawson, American missionaries, remained in Rangoon eight days, and put up in the house of a Hindoo, Monny Rhine, who had been educated by the missionaries. Five days after they left, the Hindoo was seized, put in irons, tortured, fined 200 rupees, his life threatened, and a threat held out that his wife and three children should be sent to Ava in irons, and sold for slaves. The poor man soon sunk to the grave, under the effects of torture and fear. His only crime was giving to these gentlemen a room in his house for eight days.

38. Three days after the arrival of the Reverend E. Kincaid and Dr. J. Dawson, they were called before the Governor, and were threatened to be put in irons, and the life of Mr. Kincaid was threatened.

Inclosure 8 in No. 2.

Captain Latter to Mr. Halliday.

Calcutta, December 6, 1851.

WITH reference to your request that I should draw up a statement, for the information of the President in Council, of the matters which I have been charged by Commodore Lambert to communicate to the Government of India, I will commence by giving a simple account of what occurred from the time the expedition anchored off Rangoon, until I left.

As Her Majesty's ship "Fox" was proceeding up the river, with the steamers "Tenasserim" and "Proserpine," and on the day before we arrived off Rangoon, and at a spot some considerable distance from the town, a boat came off to the frigate, containing a Mr. Crisp, an English resident at Rangoon, with a message from the Governor, asking for what purpose the expedition had made its appearance in the river? Commodore Lambert replied, that he came for the purpose of making a communication to the Governor of Rangoon, on certain matters which he would not then allude to. He also requested Mr. Crisp to ask the Governor to appoint a day and hour to receive the said communication.

The next day, we arrived off Rangoon, when, after some time, Mr. Crisp wrote off, to say that the Governor had appointed the next day but one, Thursday, at 11 o'clock, to receive the communications, and fixed the custom-house, which was close to the wharf, as the place of meeting, his own house being some two and a-half miles inland. The whole of the remainder of Tuesday passed, and a portion of Wednesday morning, without any of the British subjects or Europeans coming off to the frigate, and information was conveyed to the Commodore, that the Governor had threatened to cut off the heads and break the legs of all the foreigners, British or others, who went down the wharf to welcome the frigate. I consequently obtained the Commodore's permission to land, entirely alone, and unarmed, so as to give no cause or excuse for misinterpreting my mission, to call upon some of the English residents, and others, and to procure information of what was going on, as, from their total non-appearance, and no communications having been made from the shore to the frigate, there was no knowing but any mishap might have occurred. I landed, accordingly, and sent the frigate's boat back. No obstruction was made to my landing, further than a slight attempt to make me enter the custom-house, which I knew they would have interpreted into my having entered the frigate in the custom-house books, just as if it was a common merchant-ship. This I easily avoided. I consequently proceeded to visit several of the English residents, and they said that no boats would go off from the shore, they having been prohibited, and they likewise mentioned the threat given out publicly by the Governor.

On my way up, however, from the wharf, I met Mr. Crisp coming down the road, who stated that he was going off with a message from the Governor to Commodore Lambert, requesting the Commodore to unmoor his frigate, and to move a few yards lower down; in fact, among the mercantile shipping, the frigate having been moored a little above them, and in the middle of the stream. As I was on shore at the time, the Commodore sent for Mr. Edwards, my clerk, (who, as you are aware, was for many years the confidential clerk with the former Residencies, who was intimately acquainted with all the usages and etiquette of the Burmese Court), and asked him whether there was anything in the spot his frigate occupied, that its occupation should militate against the religious feelings or etiquette of the Court, or people of Burmah. Mr. Edwards replied, that nothing of the kind was the case, and that it was only their usual way in trying to commence a quantity of petty annoyances, such as were employed in cases of the former Residents and Agents. The Commodore consequently declined moving his frigate.

Several of the British inhabitants came off with me, and then stated their case to the Commodore.

During that day information, which appeared quite satisfactory to the Commodore, was brought off, that the Governor of Rangoon had sent for the Nakodah, or native captain, of a native Madras ship, a British subject, and had fined him 150 rupees, for having lowered the flag of his vessel, as the frigate passed up, in compliment to the Commodore's broad pendant. This appeared a second instance of what may be styled something like impertinence.

On that day (Wednesday), the British subjects who had come off, having made their complaints known, viâ voce, to the Commodore, were told to put them in writing, which they did in apparently a somewhat hurried manner.

Early next morning two or three of the English residents came off with information, that during the night, information had been sent to them by one of the Governor's Council, to warn the party who were about to land, to be on their guard, as the Governor had mooted the subject of seizing the officers who landed as hostages, and if the whole expedition did not leave immediately, to threaten to cut off their heads; and what looked strange was, that the Governor of Rangoon had, that night, changed the place of meeting from the custom-house, near the wharf, within a few yards of the frigate, to his own house, some two and-a-half miles inland, and he never sent any notice of this change. Of course, as the threat of seizing the deputation which was to land, came in a very vague manner, not the slightest notice was taken of it. But, in the meanwhile, the Commodore, having weighed everything that had occurred, thought it advisable to suspend the discussion of his original demand, viz., an apology and compensation for the ill-treatment of Messrs. Lewis and Sheppard, captains of British merchant-ships, and to have a written letter delivered to the Governor by Captain Tarleton, commander of the frigate, and myself, stating that he, the Commodore, had intended to have communicated with the Governor of Rangoon on certain specific complaints made against him of maltreatment of British subjects, but that since his, the Commodore's, arrival in the Rangoon waters, many fresh instances of his, the Governor's, misconduct towards British subjects had been brought to his notice, and that he, the Commodore, thought it his duty to take other measures than those he had at first intended to pursue.

This letter was translated by me into Burmese. We landed, went to the Governor's house, escorted by some of the English residents and traders. I read aloud to the Governor, first in English, and then in Burmese, the letter, and Captain Tarleton delivered it. The Governor made his appearance in a somewhat informal dress; being dressed in nothing but common white clothes, and smoking a cheroot; whilst all the under Governors were in their court dresses. This was the more to be remarked, because the Governor has several gold crowns, which he wears on State occasions. The European officers were of course in full uniform. The Governor wished us to stop and sit down, but Captain Tarleton thought it more prudent to say that we had only been charged to read and deliver the letter to him, and that we had received no instructions about holding any other communication. We then bowed, withdrew, and returned to the frigate. We received no opposition either going or coming.

The Commodore thought it advisable to send up to the Court of Ava, the letter, of which he was the bearer, from the Government of India to the King of Ava, together with an explanatory one from himself to the Prime Minister. These letters, viz., to the King and the Prime Minister, were made over to a deputation sent by the Governor of Rangoon on the next day (Friday), on board the frigate, with his answer to the Commodore's previous communication. The Governor of Rangoon's answer contained merely a simple denial of ever doing any injury to British subjects. The person to whom the said letters were entrusted was represented by the deputation to be the Governor's confidential representative, and that any communication made to him was equivalent to being made to the Governor himself.

I will now proceed to state the reasons that Commodore Lambert expressed for deviating from his first intentions of demanding an apology from the Governor, and pecuniary reparation to Messrs. Lewis and Sheppard. They were, that the fresh complaints he had received of the Governor of Rangoon's misconduct to British subjects, some of which appeared to him well founded and deserving of notice, proved, in his opinion, that the Governor of Rangoon was unfit to be entrusted with the lives and property of British subjects; and he, the Commodore, appeared to think that when the Governor-General came to know of these fresh instances, he, the Governor-General, might not consider that the taking satisfaction for merely Messrs. Lewis and Sheppard's cases sufficient, but might wish to take further steps.

The Commodore likewise considered the two or three dubious and improper instances of the conduct of the Rangoon Governor towards his frigate and flag showed an inclination to give annoyance and irritation, and that there was much more chance of any discussion coming to a happy and peaceful termination, and no collision taking place, if held with a new Governor, than with the present incumbent. Thus he made his removal a preliminary to entering into any discussion.

Inclosure 9 in No. 2.

Mr. Halliday to Sir H. M. Elliot.

Fort William, December 6, 1851.

I AM instructed by the President in Council to transmit to you, to be laid before the Governor-General, the accompanying copy of a dispatch from Commodore Lambert, dated the 28th ultimo, together with a transcript of the inclosures therein referred to.

This dispatch, his Lordship will observe, has been brought from Rangoon by Captain Latter, the Interpreter to the expedition, who was charged by the Commodore to acquaint Government with his reasons for deviating from the instructions he had received, and to inform them of the difficulties he had had to contend with in communicating with the Governor. Captain Latter was requested to reduce what he had to say to writing; and a copy of the statement he has made in reply to this request is annexed for his Lordship's information.

Inclosure 10 in No. 2.

Mr. Halliday to Commodore Lambert.

Fort William, December 27, 1851.

YOUR dispatch of the 28th ultimo, with its inclosures, was duly delivered to the President in Council by Captain Latter. Before replying to it, his Honor in Council considered it necessary to consult the Governor-General in reference to the altered circumstances of the negotiation with the Burmese authorities, consequent upon the change in your mode of conducting it. In order that his Lordship might be fully informed of the exact position of affairs, and of the reasons which had induced you to deviate from the instructions you had formerly received, his Honor in Council requested Captain Latter to draw up in writing a statement of the matters he had been charged by you to communicate to Government. This statement, which contained also a brief account of all that occurred from the time the expedition anchored off Rangoon till Captain Latter's departure, was forwarded, with the other papers, to the Governor-General.

I am directed now to communicate to you the views of his Lordship in regard both to what has been done, and what ought to be done hereafter.

Having regard to the additional long list which was delivered to you, of unwarrantable and oppressive acts committed upon British subjects by order of the Governor of Rangoon, as well as to the personal bearing of that functionary towards the Commodore of the squadron, and to his obvious intention of resorting to the usual policy of the Burmese Court by interposing endless delays, and disregard of official communications addressed to him; his Lordship is of opinion that you exercised a sound discretion in cutting short all discussion with the local Governor, and in transmitting at once to the King of Ava the letter addressed to His Majesty by the Government of India.

Thirty-five days have been allowed for the receipt of a reply from the King, and it is desirable that you should, in the meanwhile, be furnished with instructions for your guidance in every contingency that can be foreseen.

Either the King will send a reply, complying with the demand of the Government, by a removal of the Governor, and a payment of compensation to the parties whose cases have been taken up by us; or the King will give no answer, either from the known arrogance of that Court, or from his being kept in ignorance by his servants, of the letter addressed to him; or, lastly, His Majesty will refuse to concede to the demands of the Government of India.

If the King should recognise the justice of our representations, and should comply with them, all difficulty will be, happily, removed for the present. It will remain only to guard, if possible, against the recurrence of similar causes of complaint for the future.

The statements contained in the memorial presented by the British subjects at Rangoon must be received with caution; not having been made the subject of complaint at the time, these additional cases cannot now be made the groundwork of an increased demand for compensation. But it may reasonably be concluded from them, that the cases of Captain Lewis and Captain Sheppard are not isolated instances of oppression on the part of the Governor; but that there has long been a systematic course of oppression pursued by him, and habitual violation of rights and treaties.

The removal of the present Governor, therefore, will hardly be a sufficient guarantee against the renewal of such conduct by his successors. His Lordship conceives that a British Agent must be placed at Rangoon, in pursuance of the Treaty, with the guard of fifty men allowed by the VIIth Article. His influence should further be sustained, for some time to come, by stationing a war-steamer, well armed, in the river of Rangoon, which will probably insure his being treated with respect, and will, at all events, provide for the personal safety of himself and British subjects in the town, in the event of the Governor proceeding to extremities.

If, on the other hand, the King of Ava should refuse to concede the just demands we have made, or should fail, with the ample time allowed, to give any answer to the letter of the Government of India, whether through arrogance, indifference, or the intrigues of his servants in keeping the letter from him, this Government cannot tamely submit to the injury and the insult it has received in the persons of its subjects.

At the same time, while it is the imperative duty of this Government to maintain the rights of its people, secured by solemn treaties to them, it is a duty not less imperative, that the Government should endeavour to obtain redress by the least violent means, and that it should not have recourse to the terrible extremity of war, except in the last resort, and after every other method has been tried without success.

If the King's reply should be unfavorable, the only course we can pursue, which would not, on the one hand, involve a dangerous submission to injury, or, on the other hand, precipitate us prematurely into a war which moderate counsels may still enable us with honor to avert, will be to establish a blockade of the two rivers at Rangoon and Moulmein, by which the great mass of the traffic of the Burmese Empire is understood to pass.

To bombard Rangoon would be easy, but it would, in his Lordship's judgment, be unjustifiable and cruel in the extreme, since the punishment would fall chiefly on the harmless population, who already suffer from the oppression of their rulers, even more than our own subjects.

To occupy Rangoon or Martaban with an armed force would be easy also, but it would probably render inevitable the war which we desire in the first instance by less stringent measures to avert.

An armed ship of war should remain off Rangoon, or near enough to receive British subjects, should they be threatened. If, however, the aspect of affairs on the receipt of the King's reply, should be menacing; his Lordship thinks that British subjects should, for security's sake, be brought away at once when the blockade is established.

The President in Council apprehends that you have already ample means at your disposal for carrying into effect the instructions of the Governor-General; but should this be otherwise, his Honor in Council will be ready, on your application, to afford you any further assistance in his power. I am to remind you, that, in the event of your blockading the Salween River, on which Martaban is situated, it will be necessary for you to give notice to the Commissioner of the Tenasserim Provinces at Moulmein, of your intention to do so.

A Merchant to Mr. Young.

Rangoon, November 8, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to inform you, for the information of Government, that the Governors of the principal towns, and the heads of villages will assemble at the capital in January next, to be present at a great charity which His Majesty intends giving to his subjects in that month. The Governor of this town is summoned to the capital, and will leave this in the course of fifteen days.

It would seem that the number of men capable of carrying arms, belonging to this town, is 3000; they were paraded round the town a few days ago.

Letters from the capital, of late date, mention that the American missionaries were expected to arrive. They will leave this place in all this month on their way to the capital.

Inclosure 12 in No. 2.

A Merchant to Mr. Young.

Rangoon, December 23, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to inform you, for the information of Government, that it is generally believed the letter to His Majesty would be presented to him on the 15th instant, and that an answer thereto might arrive here about the 25th instant. I hear from several quarters that His Majesty is subject to fits of insanity, and I also understand that His Majesty's brother, the Meing Daur Meing, heir apparent, has written a friendly letter to this Governor, after receiving intelligence of the arrival of Her Majesty's ship "Fox," in this river.

Troops are daily arriving from the surrounding districts: yesterday, about 1000 came from below Prome; 10,000 armed men are said to be located at the big Pagoda. The number, however, bears no proportion to the number assembled during the period of Colonel Benson's mission.

I have done myself the honor to forward to Commodore Lambert the current reports, as they prevail, bearing on the object of his mission.

Inclosure 13 in No. 2.

Commodore Lambert to Sir John Littler,

H.M.S. "Fox," off Rangoon, December 18, 1851.

I HAVE the honor to inclose the copy of a letter I have received from Commander Luard, requesting Her Majesty's sloop "Serpent" may be supplied with four 12-pounder brass guns, with a proportion of shell, spherical, and common case-shot for them, in the event of hostilities taking place with the Burmese Nation.

I have not the power to authorize their supply from Her Majesty's stores, as they are not included in the established armament ordered by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty for sloops of war, but I have no doubt that in river-service they would add considerably to the efficiency of the "Serpent."

I beg permission, therefore, to submit Commander Luard's application for your Honor's consideration, and suggest that the four guns required may be ordered to be lent from the arsenal at Fort William, to Her Majesty's sloop "Serpent," while she is employed in these waters.

Inclosure 14 in No. 2.

Commander Luard to Commodore Lambert.

H.M.S. "Serpent," off Rangoon, December 15, 1851.

WITH the possibility of hostilities breaking out in this river, I would suggest that Her Majesty's sloop under my command would be very much more efficient with a medium 12-pounder, 18 cwt. brass gun, six feet six inches long, in each bow and stern port.

Our ports being only eight inches above the deck, the lowest possible carriage would be required.

A supply of shell, spherical, and common case-shot, would also be necessary.

Mr. Young to E. Thomas, Esq., Under Secretary to the Government of India with the Governor-General.

Fort William, January 2, 1852.

I AM directed by the President in Council to forward to you, for the information of the Governor-General, the accompanying copy of the papers noted in the margin* on Rangoon affairs.

The necessary instructions will be issued from the Military department, for supplying Her Majesty's sloop "Serpent" with the guns and shells applied for by the Commodore.

Commodore Lambert to Sir John Littler.H.M.S. "Fox," off Rangoon, January 1, 1852.

I HAVE the honor to acquaint you, that an officer from the Court of Ava arrived on board of Her Majesty's ship under my command this morning, and delivered a letter from the King to the Government of India, in reply to the letter which I forwarded on the 28th of November.

I also had the honour of a reply from His Majesty's Minister to my communication of that date; a copy is inclosed; from the purport of which it appears the Burmese Government have dismissed the Governor of Rangoon, and promise to settle the demands made on them by the Government of India.

I am of opinion that the King is sincere, and that his Government will fully act up to what he has promised.

The future Governor of Rangoon, vested with full-powers to settle the demands, is daily expected from Prome.

In order that the Governor-General of India may be informed, as early as possible, of the state of affairs, I have dispatched the "Tenasserim" steam-vessel to Calcutta with the letter from the King of Ava, which has been translated by Mr. Edwards, in compliance with the directions he states he received.

Inclosure 17 in No. 2.

The Burmese Ministers to the President of the Council of India.

THEIR Excellencies the Great Ministers of State*, who transact all the affairs of the kingdom, bearing continually on their heads the two golden feet, resembling the germs of the Lotus, of His Most Glorious and Excellent Majesty, inform the President of the Council of India (war-chiefs), that they have received the letter said to have been forwarded by the President of the Council of India (war-chiefs), and which was inclosed in a tin-case and velvet-bag, with the seal of the Honorable the East India Company, from Commodore Lambert, of Her Majesty's ship "Fox;" also another letter from him (Commodore Lambert) to the Ministers of Ava. These letters having been delivered to the Governor of Rangoon, have reached the Golden Foot (City of Ava).

The purport and style of the aforesaid letter is not in accordance with friendship, or to those usually addressed [to the Burmese Government] viz., "that the British Government shall enforce the right it possesses." However, taking into consideration the great friendship existing between the two countries, a suitable reply, so as to meet your wishes and to establish peace and friendship, has been forwarded.

We consider it proper that, in the event of any future communication between the two great countries, the usual form and style, according to custom and agreement, should be carefully attended to.

The Burmese Ministers to the President of the Council of India.

THEIR Excellencies the Great Ministers, who transact all the affairs of the Kingdom, bearing continually on their heads the two golden feet, resembling the germs of the Lotus, of His Most Glorious and Excellent Majesty, inform the President in Council of the Government of India† that, in the letter forwarded by the President of the Council of India, it is stated, That merchants and others who visit the Royal Port of Rangoon for the purpose of trade, are being unjustifiably insulted and ill-treated by the Governor of Rangoon; that reparation should be made to those who have been ill-treated by him; and also desiring his removal from office. Orders have been issued that, in accordance to the existing Treaty of Friendship between the two countries, foreign merchants and others who frequent the principal Royal Port of Rangoon for the purpose of trade, should be treated justly and according to law, by the officer appointed to administer the affairs of Rangoon. A Mussulman, called Dey Mahomed, was the bearer of a memorial, said to have been forwarded by the merchants (great and small) of Rangoon, complaining of the Governor's cruel treatment of them; but while we were endeavouring to ascertain the truth of the charges against him, Dey Mahomed, a Mussulman, merchant of Moulmein, forged and forwarded another memorial, said to have been signed and delivered by upwards of forty of the principal Mussulman merchants of Rangoon, viz., Moolla Ibrahim, Mahomed Usoff, Mahomed Sayer, Mahomed Kausim, Saib Jaim, Aga Sahduk, Ally Ashkill, Mashidy Hassein, Aga Jee, Meer Jan Nenar Allolea, Aga Namessa, and others. This memorial was delivered by the Mussulmans Hasserru and Joor Ally Saib. It is therein falsely stated, that the Governor of Rangoon assists and protects the merchants, and that they are allowed to remain in peace and quietness under his administration. We have, in consequence of such representation, desisted from making further inquiries; but from the letter forwarded by the President of the Council of India, we have become acquainted [with the above-mentioned circumstance]. In accordance to the great friendship which now exists, and taking into consideration the subject of the letter from the President of the Council of India, we have to inform you, that we have recalled the Governor of Rangoon to the Golden Foot (Ava). A suitable Governor shall be appointed to administer the affairs of Rangoon; and with regard to the merchants who have been unjustifiably insulted and ill-treated, proper and strict inquiries shall be instituted, and in accordance to custom it shall be decided.

The Burmese Ministers to Commodore Lambert.

THEIR Excellencies the great Ministers of State inform Commodore Lambert, of Her Majesty's ship "Fox," that the letter which was delivered to the Governor of Rangoon, has been forwarded by him to the Golden Foot.* We have understood the contents of the letter transmitted by the President of the Council;† it is therein stated, that merchants and others who frequent the Royal Port of Rangoon, for the purpose of trade, are insulted and cruelly treated by the Governor of Rangoon; and, also desiring his removal from office. Orders have been issued in accordance to the existing Treaty of Friendship between the two countries, that foreign merchants, and others who frequent the principal Royal Port of Rangoon, should be treated justly and according to law, by the officer appointed to administer the affairs of Rangoon. A Mussulman called Dey Mahomed, was the bearer of a memorial, said to have been forwarded by the merchants (great and small) of Rangoon, complaining of the Governor's cruel treatment of them. While we were endeavouring to ascertain the truth of the charges against him, Dey Mahomed, a Mussulman merchant of Moulmein, forged and forwarded another memorial, said to have been signed and delivered by upwards of forty of the principal Mussulman merchants of Rangoon, viz., Moolla Ibrahim, Mahomed Usoff, Mahomed Sayer, Mahomed Kausim, Saib Jaim, Aga Sahduk, Ally Ashkill, Mashidy Hassein, Aga Jee, Meer Nan Jassur Ally, Aga Namassy, and others. This memorial was delivered by Hassein, and Joon Ally Saib, Mussulmans; it is therein falsely stated, that the Governor of Rangoon assists and protects the merchants, and that they are allowed to remain in peace and quietness under his administration. We have, in consequence of such representation, desisted from making any further inquiries. But from the letter forwarded by the President of the Council of India, it having been again represented that the Governor of Rangoon has been insulting and ill-treating the merchants and others, we have therefore recalled him to the Golden Foot, and shall appoint a suitable officer as Governor of Rangoon. With respect to the merchants who have been unjustifiably insulted and ill-treated, we have informed the President of the Council of India, that proper and strict inquiries shall be made, and in accordance to custom it shall be decided.

Inclosure 20 in No. 2.

Commodore Lambert to Mr. Halliday.

H.M.S. "Fox," off Rangoon, January 2, 1852.

I HAVE the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th ultimo, by the "Proserpine," which has this moment arrived, and I hasten to dispatch the "Tenasserim," that the Government of India may receive as early as possible the King of Ava's reply to their demands, which I am in great hopes will all be acceded to, and amicable arrangements be made with the Burmese Government.

There is one subject in the letter, suggested by the Governor-General, in which I entirely concur, that is, the necessity of establishing a Resident at Rangoon, without which neither person nor property will be secure; and I think it would be very desirable to communicate the Governor-General's views on the subject to the Court of Ava, as early as possible.

No. 3.

The President of the Council of India in Council to the Secret Committee.

Fort William, January 24, 1852. (No. 2.)

IN continuation of our dispatch No. 1, dated the 7th instant, on Rangoon affairs, we have the honor to transmit, for your information, a copy of the correspondence detailed in the accompanying abstract.

Inclosure 1 in No. 3.

Commodore Lambert to Mr. Halliday.

*H.M.S. "Fox," in the Rangoon River,
January 9, 1852.*

(Extract.)

IN reference to my dispatch to the President in Council, dated January 1, I have the honor to acquaint you, for the information of the Governor-General and the Government of India, that on the 4th, the newly appointed Governor, or special Commissioner from the Court of Ava, arrived at Rangoon with a numerous suite.

On the 5th, I sent Mr. Edwards, the assistant interpreter, to ascertain when it would be convenient for him to receive an officer with a letter from me, stating the nature of the claims which the Government of British India had made on that of Burmah, and that, when all had been adjusted, I should do myself the honor of personally paying my respects to him. The reply to which was, that he was ready at any time to receive communications from me; and the following day was fixed.

On the 6th, I ordered Commander E. G. Fishbourne, of Her Majesty's steam-sloop "Hermes," attended by some of his officers in their proper uniforms, and Captain Latter, of the Bengal army, to deliver my letter.

After an interval of two or three hours, Commander Fishbourne returned on board and reported to me that my letter had been rejected, and himself treated with great indignity. I immediately directed him to make his report officially to me in writing, and I beg to inclose a copy thereof.

In consequence of the deep insult thus offered by the representative of the Burmese Government to an officer of rank in the British Navy, I considered it my duty to suspend all further communications with that functionary, until I received instructions on the subject from the Governor-General of India.

My anxiety now, was for the safety of the British subjects resident in Rangoon. I accordingly sent Mr. Edwards on shore for a few of the leading merchants. On their arrival I explained the state of affairs, and offered every person claiming British protection an asylum on board the ships in port, and informed them that the boats of the squadron would be at the Jetty at 5 P.M., to embark their persons and property.

Before dark every one had embarked, under the superintendence of Commander Luard, of Her Majesty's sloop "Serpent," without molestation.

I had stationed the "Proserpine" off the Jetty, to cover the boats, in the event of any aggression being made on the part of the Burmese.

After careful re-perusal of your despatch dated the 27th ultimo, I decided that I should best carry out the Governor-General's instructions and wishes, by stopping the Burmese trade. I therefore declared the rivers of Rangoon, the Bassein, and Salween above Moulmein, to be in a state of blockade; these being the rivers specified in your despatch.

The notification is contained in Inclosure No. 4, and I have requested the Commissioner at Moulmein to promulgate the same through the public newspapers, and otherwise.

I then moved the squadron under my orders, and all British shipping, lower down the river, and placed such merchant-vessels as desired to avail themselves of it, under the protection of our arms.

Having failed in carrying out the instructions of the Government of India, by the conduct of the Governor of Rangoon, whom I considered as speaking the voice of the Court of Ava, I could regard it as nothing but a national insult that had been offered to the British flag, and accordingly gave directions to Commander Fishbourne, of the "Hermes," to take possession of a ship belonging to the King of Ava, by way of reprisal.

My next step was to forward a letter through the Governor of Dallah, to the King's Ministers at the Court of Ava, a copy of which will be found in Inclosure No. 5.

I cannot but deeply regret that the amicable arrangements which I anticipated when I last addressed you, should have been so peremptorily broken off.

Inclosure 2 in No. 3.

Commodore Lambert to the Special Commissioner appointed by the Court of Ava.

On board Her Britannia Majesty's ship of war "Fox," anchored off Rangoon, January 6, 1852.

THE object of my visit to Rangoon has been hitherto so satisfactorily met by the prompt course the Government of Ava has adopted, in the permanent removal of the late Governor of Rangoon, for the cruelties and insults he had offered to British subjects, as to leave every assurance on my own mind, that an amicable settlement will be easily effected between myself and the officer now deputed by the Government of Ava, of the further matter to be discussed.

It would be endless to recapitulate the numerous charges made against the late Governor of Rangoon, of monies extorted from British subjects, and of insults offered to them, and could only lead to unpleasant discussions and unfriendly disputes between the two nations, which I am most anxious to avoid. I therefore shall confine myself to two specific cases, which have come under my own personal cognizance, which I have myself investigated, and of which I feel thoroughly satisfied the claims are just.

I allude to the cases of Messrs. Lewis and Sheppard, commanders of British merchant-ships, whose claims for compensation were decided, after the fullest investigation by the Government of India, to amount to 9,948 rupees.

This small sum I demand to be made good forthwith.

To avoid a recurrence of differences between the two Governments of Ava and Great Britain, I have pointed out to the Most Noble the Marquis of Dalhousie, Governor-General of British India, the necessity of a Resident Agent being established at Rangoon, in order to settle any differences, as they may arise, relative to commerce. This appointment will be left to the decision of the Governor-General of India, who will select a person capable of cultivating that friendly feeling which ought to exist between the two allied Powers, and conversant with the laws of general commerce.

Should these demands, which I have now added to the one already so promptly and amicably met by the Court of Ava, be acceded to in the same spirit, I shall consider my mission terminated, and trust that it may be the means of insuring a permanent and cordial feeling of friendship between the Governments of Great Britain and Ava.

Inclosure 3 in No. 3.

Commander Fishbourne to Commodore Lambert.

*H.M.'s steam-sloop "Hermes," off Rangoon,
January 6, 1852.*

Sic in orig. I HAVE the honor to represent to you that, in pursuance of your orders of the 6th instant, to me, to wait on the Governor of Rangoon, with a letter from you, and also to inquire why it was that Mr. Edwards, while bearing a friendly message, had a sword placed at his breast, and threatened within the precincts of the Governor's house?

I beg to state that I proceeded accordingly, accompanied by Captain Latter, and Mr. Edwards, as interpreter, and Lieutenant Lawrence, and Dr. McLeod, surgeon of Her Majesty's steam-sloop "Hermes."

When we arrived within a very short distance of the Governor's house, two sub-officials endeavoured to stop us. Captain Latter assuring me that this was intended rather as a slight, I did not deem it proper to stop. Mr. Edwards, however, communicated with them, on which they said that we could not see the Governor, but must go and wait on the Deputy Governor.

On arriving at the gate of the Governor's compound, there appeared to be a reluctance on the part of two or three, that we should enter.

On arriving at the foot of the stairs leading to the Governor's ante-chamber, there appeared at the top, MOUNG POGAN, a man who had accompanied each deputation to the "Fox," in the professed character of interpreter, and another, I presume, one of the Governor's retinue, the latter of whom stated that we could not see the Governor, as he was asleep, and asked if we could not wait till he awoke. This he was informed by Captain Latter that we could not do, and that the Governor, if asleep, must be waked up, and informed that the Commander of one of the ships of war, bearing a letter from Commodore Lambert, waited to see him; on this, he, together with MOUNG POGAN, went into the Governor's house, apparently to convey the message.

They soon after returned, the one stating that the Governor was a great man, and was asleep and could not be awaked, but MOUNG POGAN called Mr. Edwards on one side, and asked him to go up, and speak with the Governor; understanding this by his grimace, without waiting to be confirmed in the correctness of my conclusion, I said he could not go, whereupon Captain Latter asked me for your letter (which I gave him), that he might point to it while explaining that it was one of a most peaceful kind, and insisted upon the necessity of our being received; whereupon the attendant and MOUNG POGAN went again, as it were, to see the Governor, saying that we had better go and stand under the shed, a place where the common people usually assembled.

Meanwhile, expressing the great inconvenience of staying in the sun, I was going up stairs, with a view to sit in the Governor's waiting-room, but Captain Latter interposed, and said it was not according to etiquette; I was informed also that my going under the shed alluded to, for protection from the sun, would be considered by them as degrading; I refrained from going, or rather returned to my original position, at the foot of the stairs, for I had gone under the shed.

The attendant and MOUNG POGAN returned, the former again repeating that the Governor was asleep, and MOUNG POGAN again expressed a wish that Mr. Edwards should go up, and, on this being again refused, proposed that your letter should be sent to the Governor by them, which I considered it my duty to refuse; Captain Latter, at the same time, explaining that if it were proper to send the letter by them, it were unnecessary to have sent the captain of an English man-of-war, and the next in command to the Commodore, with it.

About this time, an officer came up, whom I recognised as one who had been on a deputation from the Governor to the Commodore; and, being anxious to have matters settled amicably, I requested Captain Latter to explain to him how improper the treatment we had received had been; that he must be well aware that every deputation from the Governor and Deputy Governor had been received by the Commodore at all times, and with courtesy; and, if it had been that the Commodore had been asleep, his principal officer would have had him awakened, and made acquainted with the fact of a deputation being in waiting for an audience with him, that he might receive it; and to impress upon him the propriety and necessity for me, bearing a friendly letter from the Commodore, being received immediately; for if I was not, I must consider it a premeditated insult, and go away and report the circumstance.

I was quite satisfied of the insincerity of the statement relating to the Governor being asleep, from the manner of the attendant, and from the fact of Mounng Pogan asking Mr. Edwards to go up to the Governor, and indeed from his appearing at the Governor's when we arrived—for, when we were getting our horses, to ride up, this Mounng Pogan appeared, and was asked by Captain Latter if the Governor knew we were coming, and he said he did not know; then Captain Latter said, "You had better go up, and say that we are coming;" to which he answered, "I am a subject of Burmah, and cannot take a message to my Lord the Governor, unless I had permission from him."

Finding, after some little time, that the officer alluded to above did not return, I conceived it to be my duty to return, and report the circumstance; in doing so, I returned most leisurely, to give them time to send after me with an apology; and not finding my boat at the landing-place, I waited her arrival (for the same purpose), rather than come off earlier in a merchant-ship's boat, which was offered me.

Inclosure 4 in No. 3.

Notification.

IN virtue of authority from the Governor-General of British India, I do hereby declare the rivers of Rangoon, the Bassein, and the Salween above Moulmein, to be in a state of blockade; and, with the view to the strict enforcement thereof, a competent force will be stationed in, or near, the entrance of the said rivers immediately.

Neutral vessels, lying in either of the blockaded rivers, will be permitted to retire within twenty days from the commencement of the blockade.

Given under my hand, on board Her Britannic Majesty's frigate "Fox," off the town of Rangoon, the 6th of January, 1852.

GEORGE R. LAMBERT,
Commodore in Her Britannic Majesty's Navy.

By command of the Commodore,
J. L. SOUTHEY, Secretary.

Inclosure 5 in No. 3.

Commodore Lambert to the Great Ministers of State of His Majesty the King of Ava.

*On board Her Britannic Majesty's ship of war "Fox,"
anchored off Rangoon, January 7, 1852.*

IT is with deep regret I have to inform you that, in consequence of the insults offered by the Governor of Rangoon, I have been obliged to suspend all further communication with the Burmese Empire, until I have received further instructions from the Governor-General of British India, and to declare its coasts under a state of blockade.

I have further to acquaint you, I have detained a vessel belonging to the Government, until the claims that were demanded for money extorted by the late Governor are paid.

I was in hopes, from the tone of the letter addressed to me by your Excellencies, that all differences that had previously existed would have been speedily and amicably arranged; but you may imagine my surprise and indignation, on sending a deputation to wait on the Governor with a letter, a copy of which I inclose, to learn that the officers I had sent for that purpose had been treated in a most degrading manner, and my letter rejected.

I have further to add, that the Governor actually issued orders to the British merchants, that they were not to go on board the ship I command.

Any explanation the Court of Ava may wish to make on the subject, I shall be ready to forward to the Governor-General of India.

I HAVE the honor to inclose a letter I have received from the Governor of Rangoon, addressed to the Governor-General of India, with a translation thereof by Captain Latter.

Inclosure 7 in No. 3.

Letter delivered to Commodore Lambert by a Deputation from the Governor of Rangoon.

I, MAHAMENGLA MENG KHANNYGYAN, appointed by the King of Ava (here follow the Royal titles) and by the great Ministers of State, after due consultation, to rule all the Southern Districts (i. e., from Prome to Martaban, including Rangoon), and to have my residence at Rangoon, inform the English rulers and war-chiefs:

That in conformity with the demand made by the English rulers, that the former Governor of Rangoon should be removed from his situation, on account of having oppressed and maltreated British merchants trading with the Port of Rangoon, and in order that a proper person might be appointed as Governor of Rangoon, who would be capable of protecting the merchants and poor people, the former Governor was recalled to the Royal presence. A letter was sent to the English rulers, informing them that a proper investigation into all complaints should be made, and I arrived at Rangoon.

Being actuated by the highest feelings of friendship to Commodore Lambert, whilst I was intending to send for him, the interpreter, Edwards, came and told me that he had come to acquaint me that Commodore Lambert wished to have an interview with me; and, as I was fearful that any of the others might behave discourteously, and not according to the rules of etiquette, I decreed that the interpreter, Edwards, might come with the letter or communication. But after some time, four inferior officers, an American clergyman, called Kincaid, and the interpreter Edwards, came in a state of intoxication, and, contrary to custom, entered the compound on horseback; and whilst I was asleep, and the Deputy Governor was waking me, used violent and abusive language. They then went away, and conveyed an irritating message to the Commodore; and that officer, listening to their improper and unbecoming representations, and with a manifest inclination to implicate the two nations in war, on the 6th of January, 1852, at night, with secrecy, took away the ship belonging to His Majesty the King of Ava.

I, however, in consequence of there being a treaty of peace between the two nations, did not re-seize the vessel; and though they were the bearers of a Royal message, on account of their unjustifiable conduct. The frigate stuck on the shore near Dallah. I did not, however, molest them, or destroy them, but acted worthily to these unworthy men; and I now represent this conduct of Commodore Lambert to the English rulers, who came from one country to another, and behaved in a manner unbecoming an Ambassador. Sic in orig.

Commodore Lambert to Mr. Halliday.

*H.M.S. "Fox," in the Rangoon River,
January 10, 1852.*

I HAVE to request you will inform the Governor-General, in continuation of my despatch of yesterday's date, that, subsequent to the interviews I had with the Governor of Dallah, and the other Burmese officials, of which Captain Latter will have acquainted you, I received a message from the Governor of Rangoon, to the effect that if I attempted to take the King of Ava's ship out of the river, he would fire on me. In reply to which, I recommended that, as the Governor of Rangoon had complained to the Government of India, of what had taken place, it would be advisable that matters should remain as they were, until further instructions were sent from our respective Governments. But I plainly told him, that if a shot was fired by the Burmese, at either of Her Britannic Majesty's ships, I would return it.

During yesterday afternoon a number of large war-boats went down the river, the crews of which, on passing the squadron, behaved in a very menacing manner; and being informed a considerable force of men and ordnance had been sent to the lower stockades, and as it was my intention to move to the entrance of the river, for the purpose of better carrying on the blockade, I judged it advisable, in conveying the merchant-vessels out, to place Her Majesty's ship "Fox" abreast of these stockades, for their protection.

Shortly after daylight this morning I weighed, and caused the merchant-vessels to follow me. They were assisted and guarded by the East India Company's steam-vessel "Phlegethon," and the boats of this ship. On my arrival off the great stockade, I anchored, and found it occupied by a considerable force. An immense number of large war-boats, with guns mounted in them, were also lying close to the shore, and at the entrance of a small creek, under the walls of the stockade, and were fully manned. Their behaviour was exceedingly threatening, but I refrained from interfering with them, as I had promised yesterday that I would not fire on the Burmese first.

Her Majesty's steam-sloop "Hermes," with the King of Ava's ship in tow, passed us at half-past 9, when the stockade opened a sharp cannonade on Her Majesty's ship "Fox," which was instantly returned with shot and shell, and the Burmese battery was in a short time silenced. On the smoke clearing away, not a person was to be seen on the shore or in the boats.

Our fire, I have no doubt, must have done great execution, for I have reason to believe at least 3000 men were opposed against us. One or two of the enemy's shot struck the "Fox," but did very trifling damage. Their shot in general fell short, a few only passing over us, and their small arms did no execution.

I then sent the "Phlegethon" and the boats of the "Fox" close in shore, to destroy the war-boats, which was easily accomplished, and their guns spiked, or thrown into the river. Their crews, being unable to stand our fire, had fled on the first broadside.

The "Hermes," in the meantime, engaged a stockade on the opposite side of the river, which had opened a fire on her; her heavy guns and a few rockets soon silenced this battery, and compelled the Burmese to retire.

I am now following the shipping down the river, and, when I have seen all the merchant-vessels to sea, I shall anchor in a convenient situation for blockading this port. The "Serpent" will carry out the blockade of the Bassein River.

It is with deep regret I have had to commence hostilities with the Burmese Nation, but I am confident the Marquis of Dalhousie and the Government of India will see it was unavoidable, and necessary to vindicate the honor of the British flag.

I have the satisfaction of stating that the squadron under my orders have not sustained any loss.

I HAVE the honor to inclose the translation of a document I have just received from Rangoon by a flag of truce, to which no reply was given.

Inclosure 10 in No. 3.

Petition from the Armenian, Mogul, Soorattee, Nurrapoor, Parsee, Chuliah, and Mussulman Inhabitants and Merchants of Rangoon, to Commodore Lambert.

January 11, 1852.

THE two great countries being in peace, your petitioners have continued with their wives and children, for many years to reside and trade in this country.

The late Governor (of Rangoon) having been dismissed for unjustifiable and improper conduct, was taken to the Golden Feet (capital of Ava), in obedience to the Royal order, for punishment.

Subsequently, the Aye Bain* (present Governor) having arrived, was prepared to meet and discuss with the Commodore whatever remained to be adjusted. Not having been enabled to do so, he has sent for, and desired your petitioners to make the following representation, respecting the communication made to the Governor of Dallah, viz. :

That he is willing to abide by the provisions of the Yandaboo Treaty.

To agree to a Resident being appointed.

To pay the sum of upwards of 9000 rupees.

And to have a Residency House† erected.

In accordance with the Royal order, the above subjects were to have been discussed by the two great men, in an amicable and friendly manner ; but Commodore Lambert has not given him an opportunity of doing so.

Your petitioners and the merchants, both great and small, at Rangoon and at the capital of Ava, amount to upwards of 600 souls, "who are in a condition of being stranded in shallow water."

Your petitioners, therefore, most humbly entreat you, in the name of Almighty God, to have pity upon them, and to save and protect them from ruin and destruction.

Narrative by Captain Latter.

(Extract.)

ON Friday, the 2nd of January, 1852, I arrived at Rangoon, in the Company's steamer "Proserpine," and immediately delivered the dispatches from the Government of India to Commodore Lambert. I there learned that the new Governor appointed by the Court of Ava, with plenary powers to settle all questions in dispute between the two Governments, was hourly expected; and that the former Governor, who had been removed by the Court of Ava, was suspended from his functions, and was awaiting the arrival of his successor; also, that, during the period that had elapsed from the time of my taking up the Commodore's dispatches to the Government of India, until my return with their reply, the conduct of the late Governor had been most insolent and irritating. Among other acts, he had appeared in the town, inflamed with wine, and had threatened to murder all the European inhabitants on shore. He had also endeavoured to burn down the town; and the subordinate Governors, collecting more men than he had, prevented his doing so. The European inhabitants had, consequently, determined, at the first alarm, to take refuge in the house of a Mr. Birrell, one of their number, which being capable of defence, Mr. Birrell had placed a small 2-pounder gun on the landing inside, and had erected a large bamboo on the roof, so as to hoist a signal of distress, if necessary, for the information of Commodore Lambert. This pole on the top of Mr. Birrell's house was still a matter of discussion when the "Proserpine" arrived.

But whilst the conduct of the Rangoon authorities was so unsatisfactory, a marked exception existed in the person of the Governor of Dallah, a town on the other side of the river. Commodore Lambert, from information he had received of the favourable disposition of the Governor, had paid him an unofficial visit, in order, personally, to impress upon an officer of his rank and respectable character, his (the Commodore's) peaceful views and wishes. The Commodore was received by the Dallah Governor with the greatest courtesy and respect; and throughout the whole of the subsequent annoying transactions, the conduct of the Dallah Governor was all that could be expected from a good man and a gentleman.

As soon as information had been received from the capital, that the Court of Ava had determined to remove the Governor of Rangoon, and to appoint another, the Under-Governor of Rangoon promised to inform the Commodore as soon as the new Governor arrived.

On Saturday, the 3rd, a fleet of boats, with above 3000 men, made its appearance, coming down the river, which, of course, we concluded to be the new Governor. Information was brought by some of the English, from shore, to that effect; but neither on that day, nor the next, was any information given by the Burmese authorities, of the new Governor's arrival. This alone was a discourteous, or even contemptuous, act. From shore, information was brought that the new Governor had adopted the same line of policy as his predecessor, who was allowed to take his departure in a manner unlike a disgraced Burmese official.

The new Governor at once issued orders to prevent any communication of British subjects on shore with any vessels in the river; and it was only by means of the boats of the squadron, which he did not dare molest, that any information could be received. The subject of the gun and pole at Mr. Birrell's house he took up at once, threatening to punish him if they were not instantly removed. Mr. Birrell said that he must receive the Commodore's orders on the subject. Commodore Lambert ordered him to say that the pole had been merely erected to hoist a signal of distress, if necessary, and the gun to defend himself till he could be relieved from the squadron, as the former Governor had, in the most public manner, threatened to seize the European inhabitants, and, if the squadron did not leave, to massacre them. But that, as the new Governor had arrived, charged, from all that could be learnt, with friendly and peaceful intentions, the Commodore had directed him to remove them, and he felt every confidence that the new Governor would give every protection to the British inhabitants.

The gun and pole were removed accordingly; but in spite of this courteous act on the part of the Commodore, the new Governor proclaimed, by beat of drum, and also served a written notice to the principal Moguls and other British subjects, that they were not, on pain of death, to hold any communication with the vessels in the river.

Monday, the 5th, arrived without any, the slightest, information or official communication being made to Commodore Lambert, of the new Governor's arrival; and as he was anxious that the affair should be speedily settled, and was above allowing any foolish point of etiquette unnecessarily to interfere with even a chance of its being so, at my suggestion he allowed Mr. Edwards to go first to the Governor of Dallah, and inquire whether the new Governor had arrived, and whether any information of the fact was going to be sent in an official manner, and afterwards to go in an unofficial manner to the Governor of Rangoon's house, and see whether he could learn anything of his future intentions. On this occasion, I charged Mr. Edwards on his departure, should he see the new Governor, to impress upon him, that independent of the cordial feelings of friendship which actuated the Commodore personally, as was evinced by the way in which he had always received the Burmese deputations on board the frigate, composed though they were of the humblest rank of officials, he was charged with a communication from the Government of India, of which the demands were trifling in the extreme, and couched in the most considerate and amicable language.

Furthermore, to beg of him, for the sake of peace between the two countries, not to allow himself to be influenced by any false rumours that were circulated by evil-designing persons, who were like firebrands (English as well as native), and not to consider anything as authentic, unless he received it from some Government official in the squadron. Mr. Edwards faithfully delivered these sentiments.

The Dallah Governor, on seeing Mr. Edwards, stated that the new Governor had arrived, and that he appeared to think the fact of the appearance of his flotilla of boats sufficient notice of his arrival. Mr. Edwards replied, that it was true that the show had made a very pretty appearance, but that, after all, there were only 25 or 30 boats, and at the most barely 3000 men, but that there was no knowing, until positive notice was given, whether it might be only part of his retinue, and that the new Governor, with the remainder, might be behind. The Dallah Governor acknowledged the justice of the remark, but said he had received no orders on the subject. Mr. Edwards then crossed the river to Rangoon, went to the Governor's house, stated that he had come merely to inquire whether the new Governor had arrived. At the foot of the outer steps, one of the Governor's suite drew his dagger on him, and threateningly asked him how he dared thus to approach the Governor's house. Mr. Edwards replied that he had no intention of entering without the Governor's permission. On being called into the Governor's presence, he stated that his life had been threatened, and mentioned what had occurred. The Governor sent for the offender, and punished him in the presence of Mr. Edwards, in the usual Burmese manner, namely, by having him taken by the hair of the head, swung round three times, his face dashed to the ground, himself dragged out by the hair, and pitched down stairs*.

Mr. Edwards then mentioned that the Commodore was most anxious to have the present business speedily settled, and, in fact, delivered the sentiments he was charged with. The Governor replied that he would be most happy at any time to receive any communication from the Commodore, and he moreover directed the embargo on the boats and inhabitants to be removed.

The next day, Tuesday the 6th, the Commodore directed Captain Fishbourne, commanding Her Majesty's steamer "Hermes," myself, and two officers of the "Hermes," with Mr. Edwards, to proceed and deliver to the Governor the letter containing the demands he was charged to make. I was at the time on board the "Proserpine," finishing the Burmese translation of the letter which was to be given to the Governor, and to give him due warning of our approach; and, on my own responsibility, as there was no time to spare, sent Mr. Edwards on shore to him, to give notice of our coming, and charged him to say, that as he had already shown his friendly feelings, by his amicable expressions of the day before, with a reference to any time to receive any communication from Commodore Lambert, there would be no necessity to make any display in receiving us, so that there was no necessity for any delay. The more I have reconsidered all that happened, the more do I feel glad that I was induced to take the step of sending Mr. Edwards on shore to announce our approach, as it removed the only excuse the Governor could have had for not receiving us, namely, his not being aware of our approach.

* Captain Latter has requested that a correction should be made in his statement in regard to the meeting at which the circumstance described of Mr. Edwards having been threatened with a dagger occurred. This was not at his first interview with the Governor on the 5th, but when he went on the 6th to give notice that the deputation was coming, and, consequently, on the same day that the deputation went.

Mr. Edwards accordingly told the Governor what he was directed to say. Then commenced a specimen of those slippery tactics so characteristic of Burmese Government officials. He immediately said, "he wished to receive the communication through Mr. Edwards, and no one else." Mr. Edwards replied, "that that would not be for two reasons: first, that a communication of such importance could not be made through a person holding his subordinate position, being only a clerk under my orders; and secondly, that, even if it could be so made, it was too late now, as the officers entrusted with it, one of whom was in rank next to the Commodore himself, were now preparing to come." Mr. Edwards took his leave and joined us.

We accordingly landed at about noon, and proceeded to Mr. Birrell's house to procure horses to take us up, as the distance (about two miles) was too much to walk in the sun. Whilst we were making the necessary arrangements, Mounng Pogan, the recognised Burmese and English interpreter of the Governor, who had accompanied every deputation on board the frigate in that capacity, came on the pretext of seeing whether the pole and gun had been removed from Mr. Birrell's house. After having been shown that they were so, I said to him in English, "Go to the Governor's house, and give him our compliments, and say we will soon be with him, bringing letters from Commodore Lambert," &c. He replied, "I am a Burmese subject, and cannot deliver any message without the orders of my superiors."

We proceeded to the Governor's house, and on arrival near it, two under-officials made their appearance and tried to stop us, telling us we must make our communication to the Under-Governor. Captain Fishbourne, at my request, took no notice of this, and they were told that our orders were to present a letter to the Governor. On this occasion they said nothing about the Governor being asleep. I was too well acquainted with the trickery of Burmese officials not to know that the only chance of our carrying out our mission successfully, was, not to deviate from our instructions, but to go up in a firm and decided manner to the steps of the Governor's house, and there inform him of our arrival.

When arrived there at the doorway, we found Mounng Pogan, the very person whom a few minutes previously we had met at our outset, and who had then declined going up to the Governor's house to give him notice of our arrival, and yet he had contrived to precede us; there were also some other subordinate attendants. I told them all in Burmese, showing them the letter which Captain Fishbourne held, that we had come to deliver it to the new Governor, and begged them to inform him of our arrival. They replied that he was asleep. I then continued, in Burmese, to say that, taking into consideration the distance we had come in the sun, and the importance of the communication we were entrusted to deliver, and the fact of our having already but a very short time previously given him notice of our intention of coming, if he really were asleep, he would be angry with them for not awaking him. Mounng Pogan on this went in, and after a short time came out and beckoning to Mr. Edwards, told him that the Governor wished to see him. I said that this was out of the question, and I warned him and the rest against the gross insult they would be offering us, if they kept us waiting any longer, at the foot of the outer stairs and in the sun, and not, if we were waiting, asking us inside. To this they replied, pointing to an open shed, that we might get shade there. To this I indignantly replied, that they were well aware that none but the lowest rabble ever collected there, and that it was a shelter thrown up for the reception of persons waiting to have their cases tried, and that certainly none of us would go there.

At this moment a person of somewhat higher, though still inferior rank, passed by me to go up the steps. I stopped him, and holding his hand in mine, I spoke to him in the most earnest but kindly manner, of the madness of what they were doing; that the officer who had charge of the letter, pointing to Captain Fishbourne, was next in rank to the Commodore; that we were all officers, who held the commission of our Queen; and that the way they were behaving towards us was worse than madness; that, if persisted in, it would be visited with the most condign punishment, either by their own King, for the salvation of his throne, the safety of which they were fearfully perilling, or if not, by our own Government, who would conspicuously display their power to protect us, their officers, and to resent any insult that might be offered to us.

After a few minutes, followed another officer of similar rank, whom Captain Fishbourne recognised as having met in some of the deputations which had been received on board the frigate. Captain Fishbourne begged me to remind him of the way he and all others had been received; how that, however the Commodore may have been occupied, he was instantly informed of their arrival, and they were never kept in the humiliating position in which we were now. I did so; he likewise passed on. No notice was taken of our presence, and as any longer delay would have shown us deficient in the common sensitiveness of gentlemen, we were fain to turn our backs and depart.

I can conscientiously say, that whilst addressing them aloud in Burmese, so that all might hear, I exhausted every argument in the most earnest manner, to recall them to a sense of propriety.

That the Governor was not asleep there can be no moral doubt in the mind of any person of sense, 1st. Because Mounng Pogan, his recognised interpreter, had preceded us. I had told him that we were going to the Governor's: 2nd. During the time we were kept waiting, Mounng Pogan came out, and asked Mr. Edwards to step into the Governor's presence; but even had he been asleep, we ought to have been asked into the hall of audience, and not kept waiting outside.

Taking all these things into consideration, no person of any acquaintance with Burmese customs, will hesitate to say that what occurred was as gross and studied insult as could be devised. Nothing, in my opinion, but our knowledge of Commodore Lambert's anxious wish that everything reasonable and honorable should be done, to abstain from any misunderstanding, added to the dignity of our position, as representing an important public cause, enabling us to be less sensitive in seeing offence, could have warranted our remaining even so long as we did.

On our return to the frigate, Captain Fishbourne reported to Commodore Lambert the treatment we had received. The Commodore forthwith directed a boat to be sent to summon some of the English residents from the shore. On their arrival, he warned them to be prepared to leave the town during the afternoon, and requested them to give notice to all other British subjects. He ordered all the boats of the squadron to assist in bringing them off, and a steamer to be off the wharf to cover their embarkation. Whilst these orders were being carried into effect, three Burmese, of whom Mounng Pogan was one, for I cannot call them a deputation, the highest among them being merely a Tseetkay, a rank which in Moulmein never sits in the presence of an European superior, came on board the frigate, apparently more for the purpose of seeing how the matter had been taken, for they were not charged with any explanation or expression of regret, further than that they tried to make us believe that the Governor was really asleep at the time, and they wanted to know whether Commodore Lambert would himself go on shore and see the Governor. Commodore Lambert replied, that after the insolence with which the Governor had treated his officers, he would have nothing more to say to him, that he would receive no apology whatsoever, but that now the affair must rest in the hands of the Government of India; that as to himself, he would be trifled with no longer.

The British subjects—men, women, and children, to the amount of several hundred, took refuge during the afternoon, on board the shipping in the river, and, before evening had set in, the vessels had commenced dropping down the river. There can be no doubt that it was nothing but the panic caused among the Burmese authorities, by the report that must have reached them through the three emissaries last mentioned, of the high indignation evinced by Commodore Lambert, and their consequent fear of provoking him to extremities, that induced them not to interfere with the embarkation of the British subjects and their families. This was a most difficult undertaking, carried out without let or accident.

As the evening had set in before all the British subjects had made their escape from Rangoon, it was dark before the Commodore issued orders to seize what was usually styled the "Yellow Ship." This vessel had been built for the purposes of trade, and was the property of the King of Ava; she was anchored a little above the squadron; the seizure of this ship appeared to convince the Burmese that the time for trifling had passed, and that Commodore Lambert was in earnest; they even seemed alarmed for the safety of their own heads.

On Wednesday the 7th, at daybreak, Her Majesty's steamer "Hermes" took the King's ship in tow, and the whole squadron proceeded down the river a short distance, the frigate remaining a little below Dallah. Up to this date, from the time of the squadron first entering the Rangoon waters, consisting of a period of nearly a month and a half, the Burmese appeared systematically to have adopted one line of policy, namely, never to send anybody on board the frigate to hold personal communication with the Commodore, but the lowest class of officers, thus, in their silly arrogance, making it appear as if they held him in a corresponding rank. But now their tactics changed, yet not in a manly, straightforward manner, but little by little.

During the morning of this day, the Dallah Governor came off, being sent by the Governor of Rangoon to see what he could do in the business. The Commodore informed him, that, in consideration of his (the Commodore's) personal regard for him, and as a mark of the appreciation in which he held his admirable conduct during the whole time the expedition had been lying off Rangoon, he would, in a measure, deviate from his first intentions, and that he would again open communications with the present Governor, if that officer would come himself on board his frigate, and express his regret for the insult that he had offered to the British Flag, in the persons of the deputation sent to him the previous day. The Dallah Governor took his leave, and after some hours, the Under-Governor of Rangoon, with the interpreter, Moug Pogan, made his appearance. He was the bearer of a letter from the Governor, declaring that he really was asleep when the deputation reached him; that he did not wish to see a deputation of inferior officers; that he would see the Commodore, and wished the Commodore to go to him. He did not in the slightest degree express any regret or sorrow for what had occurred. The Commodore informed the Under-Governor, that he would not swerve from the ultimatum he had already given through the Governor of Dallah, and he gave him till noon of the next day to make up his mind. A good deal more conversation took place, owing to the Under-Governor, endeavouring to shake the Commodore's determination. Both he and the others contradicted themselves every few minutes; now asserting that the Governor was asleep at the time the deputation came to his door; next asking why Mr. Edwards did not come to him when he sent to call him. At one time the Under-Governor denied being at the interview in which Mr. Edwards complained of having been threatened with a dagger; then, when pressed, acknowledging that he was at the interview, but that he had neither seen or heard anything about it. It would be as tedious, as it would be unnecessary, to enter into a detail of all the lies and subterfuges they were guilty of, till at last they left the frigate, when they complained of the seizure of the King's ship. The Commodore informed them that he had seized it because it was the King's ship; that had it been a common Burmese merchant-ship, he would not have taken possession of it; and that he seized it, as much for the purpose of showing them that the acts of subordinates, if not promptly disowned and punished by those whom they represented, would be inevitably visited on the principals; that he had no doubt, that when the King of Ava became acquainted with the insolent conduct of his subordinates to those who came to make a friendly communication, refusing to receive such communication, and thus jeopardizing his Throne, he would visit them with condign punishment; that if the Governor of Rangoon wished to avoid such a fate, he had only to accede to his, the Commodore's, demands in everything; that then, when all his demands had been fully complied with, he would give back the King's ship, and salute the flag of Burmah with a royal salute. He furthermore impressively added, that until further instructions came from the Governor-General of India, of which they would be duly informed, nothing should induce him to act aggressively, unless they commenced hostilities themselves; and he concluded by saying, that should any detriment occur to the King of Ava, from what had occurred, it would wholly rest upon the head of the Governor of Rangoon.

During the day I was engaged translating into Burmese the letter sent by the Commodore to the Prime Minister, the English copy of which has doubtless been forwarded to Government, informing the Court of Ava of the blockade of its ports, &c. This I finished towards evening, and, accompanied by Lieutenant Spratt, Her Majesty's ship "Fox," took it the Governor of Dallah to send up to his Court.

During the next day, Thursday the 8th, the Dallah Governor came on board the frigate to state that he had forwarded the Commodore's letter to the Prime Minister, given to him by me the previous evening. He added, that he was very anxious that the Commodore should give up the King's ship, as that any punishment the King might inflict upon his servants for its loss might be partially visited upon him, as the ship was taken away in the waters between his Government, and that of the Governor of Rangoon. The Commodore said that he could not give it up except on the conditions he had made known to the Under-Governor of Rangoon the day before; that he had given them up to noon of the present day to consider of it; but that in consideration of the Dallah Governor's uniform conduct, and as a mark of the personal esteem he held him in, he would prolong the time for the Rangoon Governor to accede to his terms, from noon till sunset. The Dallah Governor took his leave.

In the evening we saw from the frigate's decks several large war-canoes, containing about 100 men each, proceeding apparently to man the stockades down the river. They all carried the red flag, which, among the Burmese, is a sign of hostilities; but shortly afterwards, Mounng Pogan, the interpreter, with two Burmese under-officials, came on board, bringing a letter from the Governor of Rangoon, addressed to the Government of India. This letter I translated, and it, with its translation, is, I believe, included in the despatches I have the honor to convey; it will speak for itself.

Mr. Halliday to Sir H. Elliot.

(Extract.)

Fort William, January 18, 1852.

I AM directed to forward, to be laid before the Governor-General, the papers noted in the margin.

The first portion of the Rangoon dispatches, and that from the Commissioner of the Tenasserim Provinces, arrived yesterday in the "Proserpine," and, in the evening, Her Majesty's steamer "Hermes" was announced, bringing further dispatches, and having on board Commodore Lambert himself.

The Commodore has communicated in person with the President in Council, and proposes returning to Rangoon on Wednesday morning to await there the instructions of the Governor-General. Pending the receipt of these instructions, his intention is not to act on any overtures for apology or reconciliation, should such be made to him, but to refer any communication of the kind that he may receive, for the orders of the Government of India.

The President in Council will cause a wing of Her Majesty's 18th Foot, and a company of European Artillery, to be sent down to Moulmein by the steamers "Tenasserim" and "Fire Queen," which are both in harbour.

The "Proserpine" will be detained here to convey to the Commodore the Governor-General's orders, as soon as they reach Calcutta.

Inclosure 13 in No. 3.

Mr. Young to Captain Rogers, Superintendent of Marine.Fort William, January 18, 1852.

I AM directed to request that you will, with as little delay as possible, place at the disposal of Commodore Lambert, of Her Majesty's ship "Fox," a properly equipped gun-boat, for employment in the blockade of the rivers of Burmah.

The President in Council also desires that the steamers "Tenasserim" and "Fire Queen" may be got ready for sea, to convey troops to Moulmein, as soon as intimation shall be conveyed to you from the Military Department, of their being ready to embark.

Mr. Young to Colonel Bogle.Fort William, January 20, 1852.

IN reply to your letter of the 11th instant, I am directed to inform you, that, in accordance with your requisition, a wing of Her Majesty's 18th Regiment (Royal Irish), and a company of European Artillery, with such stores, &c., as were thought necessary, have been dispatched to Moulmein in the steamers "Tenasserim" and "Proserpine."

Inclosure 15 in No. 3.

Notification.Fort William, January 20, 1852.

THE following notification of blockade, issued by Commodore G. R. Lambert, under authority from the Government of India, is published for general information.

(Here enter Notification, dated January 6, 1852.)

By order of the Honorable the President of the Council of India in Council.

F. J. HALLIDAY,
Officiating Secretary to the Government of India.

Inclosure 16 in No. 3.

Captain Rogers to Mr. Young.Fort William, January 19, 1852.

I HAVE the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, requesting that I will, with as little delay as possible, place at the disposal of Commodore Lambert, of Her Majesty's ship "Fox," a properly-equipped gun-boat, for employment in the blockade of the rivers of Burmah; and further conveying the orders of the President in Council, that the steamers "Tenasserim" and "Fire Queen" may be got ready for sea, to convey troops to Moulmein, as soon as intimation shall be conveyed to me from the Military Department, of their being ready to embark.

In reference to the above, I beg to inform you, that having received intimation from Commodore Lambert, that the steamer "Proserpine," which vessel is armed, and has an European crew, would be of great service to him in the Gulf of Martaban, either as a relief to the "Phlegethon," or for keeping up communication with different vessels, I have taken upon me to substitute the "Proserpine" for the "Fire Queen," the latter vessel being in dock, having a fresh coat of paint put on her bottom; and although, had the emergency required it, she could at once have been hauled out, I was anxious to have the paint well dry before she is floated.

The "Tenasserim" and "Proserpine" will embark the troops this afternoon, and take their departure this evening, or early in the morning.

With regard to a gun-boat, I have already given orders to have one of the best of our row-boats placed in the builder's hands, to be fitted for the service, and will have her properly equipped as soon as possible.

Inclosure 17 in No. 3.

Mr. Young to Captain Rogers.

Fort William, January 23, 1852.

ADVERTING to late occurrences at Rangoon, and the possibility of the Arracan frontier being threatened by the Burmese, or further reinforcements being required in the Tenasserim Provinces, the President in Council is desirous that you should take into consideration, and report on the means of conveying to those provinces, at a short notice, one or two Native regiments, according as circumstances may require.

No. 4.

The Governor-General of India to the Secret Committee.

(Extract.)

Camp, Benares, January 25, 1852. (No. 5.)

IN continuation of my letter, dated the 9th instant, No. 2,* I have the honor to transmit, for your information, the accompanying copy of further dispatches received from the President in Council, and of their inclosures, regarding the present state of affairs at Rangoon.

It is probable that these papers may have been dispatched from Calcutta, but, to prevent any mistake, I beg also to forward them.

The reply of the King of Ava was friendly, and promised to prove in all respects satisfactory. The former Governor of Rangoon was recalled immediately, and his successor arrived; so that the Government had every reason to hope that the differences between the States would be finally adjusted.

You will be concerned, however, to know that these anticipations have not yet been fulfilled.

The acts of the new Governor were not only discourteous, but disrespectful and unfriendly to the British Government; and, latterly, his treatment of the officers deputed to him by the Commodore was so grossly insulting, that the Commodore broke off all further intercourse with the Governor, prepared to withdraw his squadron, and declared the establishment of a blockade, in accordance with his instructions.

Before quitting Rangoon, the Commodore thought proper to seize a vessel of the King of Ava, by way of reprisal. His ship was fired upon by the Burmese batteries, in consequence of this act. The Commodore immediately returned the fire, killing, as is stated, great numbers of the Burmese troops, driving them out of the stockades, and destroying their war-boats and guns.

In this state matters now stand.

You, I trust, will be of opinion that throughout these transactions the Government of India have shown no undue sensitiveness; that they have properly protected the rights of British subjects; and have properly insisted on that respect, which is necessary to insure protection for the rights and security for the persons of British traders in Ava; while, at the same time, they have evinced a sincere desire to avoid having recourse to war, if the security and respect which are guaranteed by treaty to our traders and subjects, can be obtained by any less violent means.

* This letter only transmitted a duplicate of papers sent to the Secret Committee by the President in Council.

I still entertain a hope that a peaceable adjustment will be obtained. In the meantime, all due precautions for the defence of our eastern frontier are being taken by the Government of India.

No. 5.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Secret Committee.

Fort William, February 7, 1852. (No. 3.)

IN continuation of the dispatch No. 2, dated the 24th ultimo, from the President of the Council of India in Council, on Rangoon affairs, we have the honor to transmit, for your information, a copy of the correspondence detailed in the accompanying abstract.

Inclosure 1 in No. 5.

Mr. Halliday to Commodore Lambert.

(Extract.)

Fort William, January 26, 1852.

YOUR dispatches of the 9th and 10th instant, with their inclosures, having been submitted for the consideration of the Governor-General, his Lordship has recorded upon them the following remarks, in the tenor of which the President in Council entirely concurs, and which I am directed to communicate to you :

“The letter addressed by the Ministers of the King of Ava to the Government of India, was friendly in its tone, and entirely satisfactory in its tenor. The Court of Ava promised at once to remove the Governor of Rangoon, and to inquire into, in order to redress, the injuries complained of.

“If there had been any good reason to doubt the sincerity of these assurances, their prompt fulfilment must have cleared away those doubts. The offending Governor was at once removed, and his successor took his place at Rangoon.

“Although the first acts of the new Governor, as detailed in the report of Captain Latter, were undoubtedly unfriendly in appearance, and open to just objection, his communications with the Commodore bore no such aspect. He expressed his readiness to receive him, and showed a more conciliatory disposition.

“The expectations of a speedy adjustment of differences were, however, disappointed, by his conduct towards the officers who, on the 6th of January, were deputed to convey to him a letter from the Commodore. Those officers were, undoubtedly, subjected to insults and indignities, by which the Government they serve must necessarily feel itself aggrieved, for which it has a right to demand fitting apology, and which justified the Commodore in refusing to hold any further communication with the Burmese authorities at Rangoon.

“Having regard to the long-continued course of offensive demeanour and insulting acts of the Burmese officers and their people, I conceive that Commodore Lambert was justified in refusing to hold any further communication with them, after the gross public insult which was put upon his officers, on the occasion to which I have referred.

“I conceive that no blame could attach to the Government of India, if it abstained from any further efforts to bring about reconciliation between the States, pursuing such measures as it deemed necessary to enforce the reparation it required. But I apprehend that the President in Council is as desirous as myself that the breach which has been made should still be repaired, if possible, without recourse to war.

“The insults offered to our officers cannot be permitted to pass without notice; the compensation demanded must be paid; and the precautions contemplated for the future must be taken.

“Those points being conceded, the Government of India ought to be prepared to renew relations of amity with the Court of Ava.”

In accordance, therefore, with the views of the Governor-General, I am directed by the President in Council, to request that you will forward the accompanying reply to the letter addressed to the Government of India by the Governor of Rangoon, and that you will transmit to the Government of India any letter which you may receive in return. It is not necessary that you should enter into any further communication with the authorities in Ava, but maintain the blockade for the present, and engage in no other hostile operations. Upon any future arrangements that may become necessary, you will be addressed by the Government of India hereafter.

My letter to the Governor of Rangoon, and the memorandum which accompanies it, are transmitted to you in an open envelope, in order that translations of them may be made, with which they will of course be accompanied, when they are delivered to the Governor of Rangoon.

Inclosure 2 in No. 5.

Mr. Halliday to the Governor of Rangoon.

Fort William, January 26, 1852.

THE letter addressed by you to the Government of India, relative to the transactions between yourself and Commodore Lambert, has been received, and at the same time letters have also been received from the Commodore and other officers, reporting the course of those transactions, to which your letter refers.

In reply to your letter, I am directed to forward the accompanying official memorandum by the President in Council.

Inclosure 3 in No. 5.

Memorandum from the President of the Council of India in Council to the Governor of Rangoon.

THE Government of India perceives with extreme surprise, that the Governor of Rangoon has listened to the falsehoods which his servants have attempted to impose upon him, relative to the conduct of the British officers who were deputed to wait upon him on the 6th of January. British officers in the discharge of their duty, are incapable of the disgraceful acts which have been basely alleged against them. The statement of his officers is a falsehood and a calumny.

The Government of India, upon its part, has just cause to complain of the treatment which these officers have received at the hands of the present Governor of Rangoon.

The letter from the King of Ava at once recognised the justice of the complaints which were transmitted to it by the Government of India. The former Governor of Rangoon was removed, and redress was promised to those who had been injured.

The Governor, Mahamenghla Meng Khanny Gyan, on his arrival, made no communication whatever to Commodore Lambert, the Representative of the British Government. He issued orders utterly at variance with friendship to that Government, and disrespectful to it. Finally, when the Commodore deputed his principal officers in order to deliver to him a letter, which he had already expressed his willingness to receive, those officers were refused admittance, and were subjected to public insult and indignity at the gates of the Governor's palace.

If those officers were inferior in rank, as the Governor now declares, and if the customs of his country were thereby violated, or any apparent disrespect were shown to the Governor, or his Sovereign, the departure from custom ought to have been properly represented by the Governor, when the error would, doubtless, have been corrected.

This was not done, but the officers were exposed by the Governor to public insult at his door. The British Government in India will not permit any officer in the performance of his duty, to suffer insult or injury without requiring reparation therefrom. It will exact the fullest reparation for every such insult, which, inflicted upon its officer, is offered to itself.

If, therefore, the Governor of Rangoon is in truth actuated by feelings of friendship, as he declares, and if he desires to avert from the Kingdom of Ava, the evils which the recent conduct of its officers will unquestionably bring upon it, unless timely reparation be made, he will not delay in intimating his readiness to agree to those demands which the British Government is entitled to make, and some of which are mentioned in the petition of the inhabitants of Rangoon, dated the 11th of January, which the petitioners declare they were desired by the Governor to prepare.

1. The Governor will express, in writing, to the Government of India, his deep regret that Commander Fishbourne, and the officers deputed by Commodore Lambert to the Governor, should have been treated with disrespect, and exposed to public insult at his own residence, on the 6th of January.

2. He will consent to pay immediately the compensation already demanded of 9,948 rupees, for injuries done to Captain Sheppard and Captain Lewis.

3. He will consent to receive with the honor due to the Representative of the British Government, the accredited Agent whom, in accordance with the 7th clause of the Treaty of Yandaboo, the Government is prepared to appoint.

If these concessions shall be made, the British Government will agree as follows :

1. The Government of India will depute an officer of rank to proceed to Rangoon, in order to adjust the final settlement of the questions above mentioned, and to arrange the details for the reception of the Agent. The preliminaries having been settled by the subordinates of the chiefs, a meeting shall take place, and all differences shall be composed.

2. On this settlement being completed, the ship belonging to the King of Ava, which has been seized by the squadron, shall be released.

3. The blockade shall be removed, and entire concord shall be restored.

If these demands shall be refused, the British Government will thereafter exact for itself the reparation which is due for the wrong it has suffered.

Inclosure 4 in No. 5.

Mr. Young to Captain A. Phayre, Commissioner of Arracan.

Fort William, January 27, 1852.

I AM directed to inform you, that, in consequence of the unsettled state of our present relations with Ava, the President in Council has considered it advisable, as a precautionary measure, to send a regiment of Native infantry and some artillery, as a reinforcement to the Arracan Province.

Arrangements have been made for embarking these troops on board the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer "Precursor," and instructions have been given for landing them at Kyouk Phyoo, where they will be available for any duty on which it may become necessary to employ them.

A copy of this letter will be delivered to your principal Assistant on the arrival of the steamer at Kyouk Phyoo, that he may be informed of the object of the Government in sending these troops.

Inclosure 5 in No. 5.

A Merchant to Mr. Young.

Rangoon River, January 13, 1852.

I HAVE the honor to inform you that the first act of the new Governor, after his arrival, was to issue an order in the most public manner, that no foreigners were to visit the squadron.

The large force of 3000 men which the Governor came down with, indicated the Court of Ava's intentions to have been unfriendly to the Mission, which was further shown by the treatment of the deputation.

The Commodore's dispatches will have fully informed Government of the occurrences which took place on the 10th instant, when the Burmese fired on the frigate from the upper stockade.

Inclosure 6 in No. 5.

A Merchant to Mr. Young.Rangoon River, January 23, 1852.

I HAVE the honor to inform you that a few days ago, on the boat of the frigate attempting to land at a village, the headman of the village informed the officer in charge of the boat, that he had positive orders to fire on any one who should land.

On the 17th, the nakodah of a Burmah boat from Rangoon informed me that the Governor had ordered the town to be entirely destroyed; the merchants' houses had been plundered, and that the inhabitants had been removed to the new town, the defences of which were being repaired.

The Governor-General in Council to the Secret Committee.February 23, 1852. (No. 4.)

IN continuation of our despatch of the 7th instant, No. 3, on Rangoon affairs, we have the honor to transmit, for your information, a copy of the correspondence detailed in the accompanying abstract.

Inclosure 1 in No. 6.

Commodore Lambert to Mr. Halliday.H.M.S. "Fox," in the Rangoon River, January 31, 1852.

ON receipt of your dispatch of the 26th instant, I proceeded with Her Majesty's ship "Fox," in tow of the "Fire Queen" steamer, to the anchorage off the Hastings Shoal, for the purpose of sending a boat with the letter addressed by the Government of India to the Governor of Rangoon, the distance the ships were anchored from the town being far too great for me to detach a boat, independent of the risk of its being fired at from the stockades.

However, much to my surprise, on my passing the lower stockade, at 3.40 A.M., a cannonade was opened on Her Majesty's ship "Fox," which was instantly returned; in three minutes the Burmese battery was silenced, and I ceased firing, and proceeded up the river.

I regret to state a seaman* of the "Fox" lost his leg by a round-shot from the enemy.

Shortly afterwards I passed the stockade, which the "Fox" had engaged on the 10th instant, without molestation.

I beg to remark, for the information of the Government of India, that so far from anticipating that the Burmese would fire on Her Majesty's ship, the guns were not loaded; the tompions were in, nor was the slightest preparation made for such an event.

By the officer who conveys your letter to the Governor of Rangoon I shall send one from myself, of which the inclosed is a copy.

* He died from the effects of the wound on the following day.

Inclosure 2 in No. 6.

Commodore Lambert to the Governor of Rangoon.H.M.S. "Fox," at anchor in the Rangoon River, January 31, 1852.

I HAVE to express my surprise that on Her Britannic Majesty's ship under my command passing the lower stockade, on my way up the river to-day, bearing a peaceable letter from the Government of India, in reply to one forwarded by you, she was fired at by the Burmese, after I had pledged my word as a British officer, that I would not act in any hostile manner until I received instructions from the Governor-General of India.

In conclusion, I beg to inform you, that if any further aggression is made on Her Britannic Majesty's ships, I shall not only silence the fire, but destroy the stockades from which it proceeds.

Inclosure 3 in No. 6.

Commodore Lambert to Mr. Halliday.February 2, 1852.

IN reference to my letter of the 31st ultimo, I have the honor to request you will lay before the President in Council, the inclosed copy of a reply I have received from the Governor of Rangoon, to my letter on the subject of Her Majesty's ship "Fox" having been fired at by the Burmese.

The statement of the Governor of Rangoon, that I agreed to obtain the permission of the officers of the stockades, before I would attempt to pass them, is utterly false; nor had I any communication with these officers.

All communications made by me have been through the two interpreters appointed by the Indian Government; and to these my orders were, to inform the Burmese authorities, that I should not molest them unless they fired at me; and on the answer from the Governor-General arriving, it would be immediately taken up to Rangoon. During my absence from the "Fox," a message was sent from the Governor of Rangoon, to know if the answer had arrived to his letter. Commander Tarleton informed the bearer that it had not, but that, when it did, it should immediately be delivered.

Inclosure 4 in No. 6.

The Governor of Rangoon to Commodore Lambert.February 2, 1852.

THA Doh Mengyee Maha Ming Tha Meng Khoung Gyan, the Governor of Prome and Thivedoung, and who is invested with power to administer the affairs of all the Southern Provinces, informs Commodore Lambert, with reference to his letter apprising him of having been fired at by the Burmese while passing the lower stockades of Dunout and Thilawa, that, on a former occasion, when the Royal vessel* was seized and taken away, the officers and soldiers in charge of the said stockades fired at the frigate. The officers of the frigate also returned the fire. Subsequently the Governor of Dallah and other officers were deputed to Commodore Lambert, to inform him that ships or boats proceeding up or down the river, should first obtain the permission of the officers in charge of the stockades. This was not attended to; and on your proceeding up the river, contrary to the orders issued, the officers at the stockades fired at the frigate, which was likewise returned by the officers of the frigate, as reported to him by the officers in charge of the stockades. In future, if you desire to proceed up, or down the river, you should obtain permission from the officers in charge of the stockades. I have to request that the reply to the letter from the Government of India be forwarded, and their acknowledgment of the same sent to me without delay.

* Written in the year 1213, on the 13th day of the waxing moon, Tahodire (2nd February, 1852.)

Commodore Lambert expresses surprise at having been fired at by the officers in charge of the stockades of Dunout and Thilawa, but it is a matter of greater surprise, that the Royal ship of His Majesty should have been seized at midnight, contrary to the custom of great nations and the rules of justice. And Commodore Lambert, after having agreed to obtain the permission of the officers at the stockades, in accordance to established usage, proceeded up the river without communicating with them. These are subjects not only of extreme surprise, but also for traditional record.

Inclosure 5 in No. 6.

Commodore Lambert to Mr. Halliday.

February 2, 1852.

I HAVE the honor to inclose, for the information of the Government of India, the copy of a letter I have received from the Commander of the Company's steam-vessel "Tenasserim," reporting his having been fired into by the Burmese in the Rangoon River.

Inclosure 6 in No. 6.

Mr. W. Dicey, of the East India Company's steam-vessel "Tenasserim," to Commodore Lambert.

H.C.S. "Tenasserim," February 2, 1852.

IN compliance with your orders received by the "Fire-Queen," I beg to inform you, that after making over charge of the Burman ship to the Company's steamer "Phlegethon" yesterday morning, I proceeded up the river to join you; and when passing the De Silva and Chokey Stockades, the Burmese opened fire on us, the shot passing close under our stern. We returned the fire; but as you directed me not to stop on the way, even should we be fired on, I accordingly made the best of my way up, and anchored near Her Majesty's ship "Fox," at 1 P.M. yesterday.

Inclosure 7 in No. 6.

Burmese Paper forwarded to Commander Luard, of Her Majesty's brig "Serpent," by the Burmese, from one of the Chokeys at the mouth of the Bassein River.

THE reply is, that, heretofore, frigates did not enter or quit the river as you* have done, and that you infringe the rules of the Preventive Establishment of a great country, in anchoring your vessel, and remaining here.

The Writer of the Governor of the thirty-two districts of Bassein having informed his chief of the above circumstance, was ordered to convey a letter to the English officers, and to go down with quick dispatch with an interpreter. But after waiting for two months he was unable to communicate with you, as you enter and quit the river just as you please to do so. This is not in accordance to custom.

The boundaries of the territories of our King of the Rising Sun, and of that of the foreigners, have been established and defined; you should not, therefore, transgress, by entering our boundary.

If you have any communication to make, you should anchor your vessel at seat, at the usual place appointed by those in authority, and in accordance to the custom formerly established, to state what you may wish to communicate.

* The inferior personal pronoun is used throughout this paper.

† Outside of the mouth of the river.

Colonel Bogle to Mr. Halliday.Moulmein, January 27, 1852.

I HAVE the honor to transmit herewith in original the inclosed Burmese letters, and have to state that just as the mail-steamer "Enterprise" was leaving this place on Thursday the 22nd instant, two messengers, bearing these documents, arrived alongside of the Company's steamer "Phlegethon," at the time lying off Martaban, and requested to be allowed to proceed to Moulmein.

Captain Neblett, Commander of the "Phlegethon," thinking that these communications might be of great consequence, and seeing that the "Enterprise" was just starting, immediately got into his gig with the messengers, and pulled for this shore, but before he could reach, the "Enterprise" had started; he, however, proceeded to the main wharf with the utmost expedition, and caused guns to be fired, and signals of recall to be hoisted, but all in vain, the steamer was off, and nothing could be done to stop her.

The letters were then brought to me, and I now transmit them to Commodore Lambert, who will forward them by the first steamer leaving the Rangoon River for Calcutta. I adopt this course, as I have no other that promises to be equally expeditious, and I have no steamer at my disposal to send to Bengal.

Being apprehensive that some difficulty might be experienced in having the letters for the Governor-General translated at the Presidency, I considered it proper to open them, and to have them, as also those addressed to myself, carefully translated by Lieutenant Hopkinson. His translation is accordingly annexed to each document, and I trust my proceeding will meet with approval.

I have further to state that I did not think it necessary immediately to return any answer to the letters addressed to myself; but the Burmese at Martaban having seen two steamers arrive here on Sunday the 25th instant, and, probably suspecting that they brought troops, sent messengers over on Monday morning, ostensibly to remind me that I had not yet answered their previous letter; but no doubt the real object was to learn what was going on here. They became aware that a large reinforcement of European troops had arrived, which has produced a sensible alteration in their tone.

Inclosure 9 in No. 6.

The Governor of Rangoon to the English Government.January 16, 1852.

THE declaration of Tha do Mengyee Maha Mengtha Meng Khoung-yan Menggyee of Shewedoung, commanding the forces at Rangoon, and appointed to go and rule a large territory and brave army, having after due prostration at the Royal Feet, together with the Egah Maha Thanapatee, and the great officers and Ministers of the State, taken counsel of the Meng Tarahgyee Phooyah, who is all-powerful Lord of the Universe, Master of the T'shat-tang Elephant, and all White Elephants, and Lord of Life, he who is like unto the Lotus Flower.

As the letter transmitted by the English authorities sets forth the unjust oppression to which the merchants trading at Rangoon had been subjected by the Governor of Rangoon; that those who had been thus oppressed should receive redress; and that it would be proper to remove the Governor of Rangoon (or that a good understanding required the removal of the Governor of Rangoon). In accordance with the Treaty of Friendship, a person disposed to cherish and protect the people and merchants, was placed at Rangoon, and dispatches for the English Government, purporting that the Myowoon of Rangoon would be recalled to the Royal presence, and that a decision would be passed after due investigation, were delivered to the officer commanding the man-of-war which had come to Rangoon, and, in pursuance with these letters, the Rangoon Myowoon was sent off to the Throne, that his case might be inquired into and decided.

After this, when I was considering how I should invite Commodore Lambert, desiring to conciliate him to the utmost, and thus establish a warm friendship, the interpreter, Mr. Edwards, came to me, and stated that the Commodore desired an interview with me very much, and begged that he might be permitted to come. As this was a proper and friendly overture, after having settled with Mr. Edwards that he should join me beforehand, that I might perfectly observe the etiquette which the visit required, there came riding into my court-yard four subordinate officers, with the American missionary Kincaid, and Edwards, the interpreter. They had been drinking, and it happened that I was asleep, just at that time; whereupon, telling the Yaywoon and the other officers present, to awake me, they returned and made a false representation to the Commodore, who gave ear to what they said, without duly considering the circumstances of the case, and unlike a man of the world (son of a great country), and actuated only by the wish to create a quarrel, he, on the first Lah-pyeegyan of Pyatho 1213 (6th January, 1852), at 2 P.M., covertly unmoored and carried off the great ship "Ye-thenah-ye-moon," belonging to His Majesty Meng Tarahgyee Phooyah, the all-powerful Lord of the Universe, Master of Tshat-tang Elephant and all White Elephants, and Lord of Life.

In consequence, however, of the Treaty of Peace which subsisted between the countries, we did not attempt her recapture, lest it should lead to hostilities, but allowed her to be carried off; furthermore, when, in retribution of the wrongful and unjust conduct of one who had been charged with dispatches from the English Government, the ship in which he had come got aground, in shallow water, near Dallah, we did not annoy or molest her, but let her remain. I desire that there should be justice, where there is misrepresentation and injustice. This is not in accordance with the purport of the letters which were forwarded in the first instance. These mediators between two countries, Commodore Lambert and his officers, have violated the functions of a great embassy; therefore have I written, desiring that the facts may be known.

Inclosure 10 in No. 6.

The Governor of Rangoon to the British Commissioner at Moulmein.

January 16, 1852.

THE Commander-in-chief of forces in Hauthawadee, and the Controller of the Southern Provinces of His Majesty's dominions, Min Thada Mengyee Maha Minlah Min Goung Gyo, informs the Moulmein Mengyee, that two letters for the chief authorities (or Company-Mingdo) of India in Bengal, are dispatched for delivery through the Martaban Mingyee (or Governor), which, on arrival, it is requested may be forwarded to the said chief authorities of India in Bengal, so as to reach them with all expedition.

Inclosure 11 in No. 6.

The humble petition of the Mahomedan, Mogul, Nagore, Suratee, and Armenian merchants of Rangoon,

Showeth,

THE Naval Commander, Commodore Lambert, was dispatched with steamers and men-of-war, to consolidate the alliance and friendship subsisting between the two countries, and on his arrival at Rangoon, he transmitted a letter by a deputation of subordinate officers, to the Mywoon of Rangoon, setting forth how that he, the Mywoon of Rangoon, had been extorting money and oppressing the merchants; further also, Commodore Lambert forwarded a letter from the chief commanders of the English Nation, for transmission to the chief commanders of His Majesty of the Rising Sun. Thirty-five days was fixed upon as the time for the dispatch and receipt of the answer to this communication, and at the expiration of the stipulated period, His Majesty's mandate was delivered to Commodore Lambert; the Mywoon of Rangoon was recalled to Ava, in compliance with the representations of the Bengal Government, there to have the charges of extortion preferred against him, investigated and disposed of; and on the 14th of waxing Pyatho, 1213, there arrived from the Court of Ava, the Narthawady Ayabine Pyee Shuay Down Mywoon Thado Mengree Mahia Meng tha Meng Khoung Kyan, with orders to proceed to Rangoon as Plenipotentiary; Commodore Lambert then sent the interpreter Edwards to him to request an interview, and the Ayabine told the interpreter that he must return to him, and tell him on what day the Commodore proposed coming. This communication took place in the morning, and at about 10 A.M., the interpreter Edwards, accompanied by some subordinate officers, who had all been drinking to excess, came riding into the Ayabine's court-yard, and overbearing all the attempts made to stop them; they were, however, desired to wait, as the Ayabine was then asleep, but they would not, and went off, and the man-of-war afterwards weighing anchor and dropping down, the Ayabine sent off the Dallah woon, the Yewoon, and Tseetkay, to her, to say that the provisions of the Yandaboo Treaty would be henceforth respected; that the money taken from the two English captains would be immediately returned; and that temporary accommodation should be provided for the Commodore, befitting a great Ambassador, and where the two authorities could meet and discuss matters. The Dallah woon, the Yewoon, and the Tseetkay, however, returned with a reply as contrary to established etiquette as it was calculated to disturb existing relations between the two countries, that the affair could only be settled by the Ayabine repairing on board the frigate. Some time after, 4 P.M. of the same day, we merchants having become alarmed, some of our wives got on board of ships, leaving their husbands behind, and husbands went, and left their wives behind, and our property altogether suffered considerable damage on the occasion. Besides all this, at 12 P.M. that night, the King's ship "Ratuna Yeng no woon" had her chain-cable cut, and was forcibly carried off by two steamers. Eight Chullia vessels were forced to quit the port without their papers, and under pain of being fired into. The crews who had been thus threatened, came ashore to communicate with their owners, but, in the meantime, their ships were forcibly carried away by the steamers, and the shipowners and masters, Wustan, Mahomed Akhbar, Marec ooddeen, and Mahomed, were left behind with some of their lascars; these vessels had neither taken in their provisions, nor had they completed their cargo, which was a great loss. In consequence, also, of the officer commanding, Commodore Lambert, carrying the King's ship off at night, with his steamers, all the merchants, great and small, both at Rangoon and at Ava, have been put to great trouble and vexation, and their occupation as merchants is gone. We, therefore, pray that your Lordship will, in equity, issue such instructions as may relieve us from our troubles, place our trade on its former footing, and restore peace.

Inclosure 12 in No. 6.

The Governor of Martaban to the British Commissioner at Moulmein.

January 21, 1852.

Tikla Myo tsa Motama Myo Mingyee (Martaban Governor), Mingyee Maha thinkha yab, informs the Moulmein Mingyee and Ayabine Ming (Commissioner and Principal Assistant Commissioner), that, forasmuch as peace and tranquillity is the sole object in view between the two great kingdoms, a friendly intercourse being established, traffic has hitherto been carried on between the merchants of the two countries without interruption. In consequence, however, of complaints having been preferred against the former Rangoon Mywoon, that he oppressed foreign merchants, certain English officers were dispatched on a mission to represent them. These officers arrived, and thirty-five days being fixed as the period within which their dispatches were to be transmitted, and the Royal answer received, while yet the mandate issued from the Shuay Shoot Tah (the Golden Royal Court) was on its way to India, there came the intelligence that the English officers had attacked and carried off the King's ship out of the port of Rangoon. Now the Governor-General of India simply appointed the Mission to treat; they had no instructions to fight; and, should this capture of His Majesty's ship prove the occasion of a fierce war, the trade between the two countries will be sacrificed for an unprofitable quarrel. It is not right that there should be a war. The character of those in authority depends upon peace, and a free and uninterrupted trade; hence, therefore, the dispatch of these letters; and it is requested that the English Government will return a full and explicit answer to them.

Inclosure 13 in No. 6.

Colonel Bogle to Mr. Halliday.

Moulmein, January 30, 1852.

ON Wednesday, the 28th instant, two messengers came over from Martaban, bringing a letter to the Principal Assistant Commissioner, to say that a party of our police up the Salween had attacked the Burmese village of Pagat; that the people there had driven back the police; but, being apprehensive that a more serious collision might take place, the Burmese authorities earnestly requested that measures might be taken to repress any aggressive disposition on the part of our people, and to preserve peace.

It appearing to me, from the tone of the Burmese authorities, that the intelligence they had sent was true, and that they were actuated by a very friendly feeling, and not having received any report of the matter from any other source, I thought that the best way of settling the affair was to get into a steamer, and proceed to the spot at once.

I accordingly embarked in the "Phlegethon" at 4 P.M. of the 28th, taking with me the Principal Assistant Commissioner of Province Amherst, Lieutenant Hopkinson, and proceeded up the Salween.

In passing Martaban, in the evening, we saw the Burmese messengers, who had been sent back a few hours before; with the answer which I had directed to be written to the Governor, assuring him of my unwillingness that any acts of hostility should at present be perpetrated, and of my resolution to have the matter, which he had brought to notice, immediately inquired into, just about to land; and in a very short time after this the steamer took the ground close to the Martaban fortification, and remained fast for twenty minutes, within short musket-range of the walls. The place was well filled with men, and I observed a couple of guns mounted on the ramparts; but no advantage was taken of the steamer being aground; and we remained unmolested until the tide rose, and the "Phlegethon" proceeded on her voyage.

Nor did the Burmese appear to entertain any fears that we would annoy them; the wharf near their large pagoda, and their walls on which, when passing a fortnight before, I did not see a single soul, were now crowded with men sitting quietly looking at us; the red flag—emblem of war—was flying arrogantly enough at many points all along the line; but women were also to be seen seated along the bank, which indicated perfect confidence that the steamer had not suddenly appeared within pistol-shot of the place with the intention of harassing any one.

As I passed the two gun-boats employed in blockading Martaban, I learnt from the Commanders of each, that a kind of war-boat, containing fifty or sixty men, all dressed in red jackets, had proceeded up the Salween, about two hours before. These men were, no doubt, dispatched as a reinforcement to the village of Pagat.

In the course of the night, Lieutenant Hopkinson received a dispatch from Mr. Dray, superintendent of river police, stating that, having been directed to proceed to Pagat, to reconnoitre it, in consequence of its having some days before been reported that an assemblage of armed men had taken place there, and that they were engaged in stockading their position, and threatened an attack on our villages, he had accordingly proceeded to reconnoitre the place on Tuesday, the 27th instant, but that on approaching it (it is situated on the right bank of the Salween), his party had been fired into, on which he returned the fire, and seeing one large boat of a kind commonly used for offensive purposes, though not absolutely deserving to be classed as a war-boat, he had seized it and carried it off, as also some six or eight other boats of a smaller description.

Next morning I arrived at the place where Mr. Dray was with these boats, but it appearing to me that they were not such as need be taken, I ordered them to be towed to Pagat, which place I reached about noon. On approaching it, a number of armed men moving about in the jungle, and hurrying towards the landing-place, with muskets on shoulder, were distinctly visible from the deck of the steamer, and among them were a good many in red jackets, some of whom, I have reason to believe, were the men who had been sent up from Martaban the day before, and they seemed prepared to dispute any attempt at landing. On getting close into the shore, it was, however, observed that some men were at the water's edge, as if awaiting a communication from the steamer; they were accordingly hailed, and told to come on board, bringing with them any headman who might be there; on which a boat immediately pushed off, without the least hesitation, and without a single armed man, and in it I was surprised to find the Martaban official, who had the day before brought the letter respecting the collision which had occurred, over to Moulmein, and whom, at sunset, I had seen landing at Martaban.

From him I learnt, that during the night he had been dispatched by the Governor of Martaban, to summon the chief of Pagat to his presence, and to take every possible measure to prevent hostilities; and he assured me, that, having pulled all night, he had arrived that morning, and had, in conformity with his instructions, dispatched the chief to Martaban, and caused it to be intimated to all the inhabitants of Pagat and the neighbourhood, that they were to conduct themselves in the most peaceful manner possible, and to do nothing that could be offensive to the English authorities; and he begged that the people on the British side might receive similar orders.

He was immediately assured that I had no other desire than that all should remain quiet and peaceful, and, as a proof of my reluctance to avail myself of the power at my command, I directed all the boats which had been taken from Pagat, to be cast adrift from the stern of the "Phlegethon," and restored to the Burmese, at the same time administering a stern warning to the recipients, that if the people of Pagat, who are notorious robbers, put a foot on the British side of the river, under the present state of affairs, they might chance to receive a less agreeable visit from the steamer, at whose crew and armament they gazed with considerable interest.

Having settled this matter to the entire satisfaction of the Burmese functionary, and received his earnest protestations of a desire to remain at peace, I visited several of our police ports and villages, where Lieutenant Hopkinson issued such orders as seemed proper; we then returned towards Moulmein, but again got aground under the walls of Martaban, and remained six hours hard and fast, within pistol-range of the shore; during the time (it was night) we could distinctly see crowds of Burmese around their watch-fires, but except just when the steam was blowing off with the remarkable noise which it always makes, they took no notice of us.

Now, coupling all the circumstances of this trip with the recent communications from the Governors of Rangoon and Martaban, noticed in my letter of the 27th instant, it appears to me probable that the pacific tone assumed by the Burmese is in consequence of orders from the Governor of Rangoon, to whom Martaban is now subordinate, or it may be dictated by weakness, and a backward state of preparation.

It is very true that a number of armed men, several thousands, have been collected in Martaban, and that smaller bodies have been collected at Pagat, and various other places along the frontier, and that these men conduct themselves with much arrogance; as an instance of which I may mention that about a week ago a message was sent, first in the morning, and repeated in the evening, to the gun-boat "Trusty," four 12-pounders, anchored on blockading duty right in front of Martaban, to say that if she did not move out of shot she would be fired into, but the threat was not attended to; and none of our posts or boats have yet been attacked; on the contrary, an apparent desire has been shown to avert hostilities, and to await in peace the fiat of the two Governments, or, perhaps, I should say, of the Governor-General alone; whether this proceeds from a pacific intention, or merely a desire to gain time, is a matter which will soon develop itself; in the meantime the force now here, with the aid of a steamer and gun-boats, may be considered sufficient for all probable exigencies.

A river steamer would certainly be a valuable acquisition, and if it is intended that a defensive course should be long maintained, I would recommend that one should be sent down.

Mr. Halliday to Colonel Bogle.

Fort William, February 13, 1852.

I AM directed by the Governor-General in Council to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch by the "Fire Queen," received on the 9th instant, inclosing certain letters with translations, forwarded to you from Martaban, for transmission to the Government of India.

It is not, I am directed to state, necessary that you should make any reply to the letters which the Governors of Rangoon and Martaban have sent.

The Burmese authorities having thought proper to reject the demands which the Government of India has made, that Government will proceed to exact the reparation which has been unjustifiably withheld from it.

Should any further communications be received from the Burmese authorities, you are requested to transmit them to me, with translations, to be laid before the Governor-General in Council.

You will be informed by a future dispatch, of the precise nature of the measures to be adopted by the Government of India, in order to compel the Burmese Government to accede to its demands.

Commodore Lambert to Mr. Halliday.

*H.M.S. "Fox," in the Rangoon River,
February 2, 1852.*

I HAVE the honor to transmit a letter, with a translation by Captain Latta, which I received to-day from the Governor of Rangoon, in reply to your communication to him dated the 26th ultimo.

Inclosure 16 in No. 6.

The Governor of Rangoon to Mr. Halliday.

Rangoon, February 2, 1852.

MAHAMENGLA MENGKHOMYGYAN (with titles), Governor of Rangoon, informs Mr. Frederick James Halliday, Secretary to the Government of India (with titles).

With reference to the demand of an expression of deep regret for the circumstance of the deputation of officers sent by Commodore Lambert on the 6th of January last, being said to have been publicly treated with disrespect;

With reference to the being willing immediately to make good the sum of 9,948 rupees, said to have been extorted from Captains Lewis and Sheppard, by the former Governor of Rangoon;

With reference to being willing to receive a Resident with all honor due to his rank and station, in conformity to the VIIth Article of the Treaty of Yandaboo;

That with reference to the above three points, if they are acceded to by the Governor of Rangoon, first, the ship belonging to the King of Ava, which has been seized, will be given back; secondly, the blockade now existing will be raised, and perfect concord restored.

With reference to the above points contained in your letter, I, the Governor of Rangoon, taking them into my careful consideration, give the following reply:—

On the 6th of January, 1852, Commodore Lambert, at midnight, took away the ship belonging to His Majesty the King of Ava. On the following day, I sent the Deputy Governor of Rangoon to represent to Commodore Lambert, that the act of taking His Majesty's ship by stealth, and unjustly, was in no wise in accordance with the acts proper to two great nations.

Commodore Lambert stated in reply, that his reason for seizing the King's ship was, because a deputation of subordinate officers sent by him had not been received.

Commodore Lambert then wrote a letter to the Prime Ministers of Ava, as also a transmitting one to myself, which were delivered to one of my subordinate officers. These letters were to the effect, that he, Commodore Lambert, had seized the King's ship, because the pecuniary claims under discussion had not been satisfied.

What Commodore Lambert expressed, as above stated, both verbally and in writing, was not in conformity with the custom of great nations. This the Government of India are aware of; moreover, being aware of it, they have written a friendly letter, evincing their wish that the long-existing good understanding between the two nations should be renewed, and commerce and communication restored as they were before.

Therefore, as soon as the officer which the Government of India is prepared to appoint in conformity with existing treaties, shall arrive, a satisfactory and amicable arrangement can be made of the payment of the 9,948 rupees extorted from Captains Lewis and Sheppard; also with reference to the re-delivery of the King of Ava's ship, seized by Commodore Lambert.

With reference to the question of the disrespect said to have been shown to the deputation sent with a letter by Commodore Lambert, it should be borne in mind, that the English officers have been stating their own version of the case, and consequently, whilst shielding themselves, they have thrown all the blame on the other side.

Inclosure 17 in No. 6.

Minute by the Governor-General.

(Extract.)

February 12, 1852.

THE dispatch of Commodore Lambert dated the 2nd instant, contains the reply of the Governor of Rangoon, to the letter from the Government of India, dated the 26th ultimo.

That letter contained the ultimatum of the British Government. It required—

1st. That the Government should transmit a written apology for the insult to which the British officers had been subjected at Rangoon on the 6th of January last.

2nd. That he should pay, immediately, the sum of 9,900 rupees, demanded as compensation to Captain Sheppard and Captain Lewis.

3rd. That he should consent to receive in due and fitting manner, the Agent who should be appointed under the Treaty of Yandaboo.

If the Governor of Rangoon should at once make these concessions, the Government of India agreed to send an Envoy for the adjustment of every difference, and the King's ship was to be restored.

The reply of the Governor of Rangoon, far from making the required concessions, has evaded them all.

The demand for an apology on account of the insult offered to British officers at Rangoon is practically rejected, with a remark most offensive in the inference it implies.

The reparation to the persons plundered has not been paid.

There is no consent given to an Agent being received.

The reply of the Governor, after reiterating complaints of the proceedings of our officers, simply states that the Envoy of rank, to whom reference was made, should be sent, and that conference would then be held regarding payment of reparation, and the restoration of the King's ship.

This letter leaves to the Government of India, in my deliberate judgment, no alternative but to exact reparation by force of arms.

If, allured by the specious appearance of a desire for reconciliation, contained in the Governor's suggestion that an Envoy should now be sent, the Government of India shall acquiesce in that request, it will suffer itself to be decoyed into a feeble and false position.

It will, in so doing, openly abandon every demand for reparation it has so peremptorily and justly advanced. It will tamely submit itself to national insult. It will give reasonable ground, for all who desire it, to assert, that the offensive accusation of its officers, by the Governor of Rangoon, must needs be true, since his treatment of those officers, and his subsequent accusation of them, are alike unresented; and not only so, but they are themselves superseded by another negotiation. In one word, the position of the two Governments will be suddenly and wholly reversed.

These acts on the part of the Government of India will, undoubtedly, be misconstrued; its motives in so acting will be misunderstood; and, in the eyes of the Burmese Nation, and of every Eastern people that is looking on, the British Government, having relinquished the demands it had peremptorily advanced, and having abandoned the officers it was bound to uphold, will, unquestionably, be regarded as having submitted to humiliation and avowed defeat.

I have sincerely desired, and have earnestly laboured, for the preservation of peace; but I cannot, consistently with the duty which I owe to the State, consent to purchase a present peace at so costly a price.

The commencement of war is an act of such solemn importance, and involves so deep a responsibility, that I consider it right to pass in review the events which have led, so rapidly and so unexpectedly, to the present hostilities with Burmah, in order to absolve the Government of India from the reproach of having lightly sought a quarrel, or insufficiently striven to avert it.

For many years past complaints, from time to time, have been made of acts of oppression and of violation of Treaty by the Burmese Governors. None, however, had been brought forward of sufficient extent or signficancy, to call for the formal notice of this Government.

But a few months ago, representations were addressed to the Government of India by the captains of two English merchantmen, setting forth very gross acts of violence and outrageous violation of the rights of British subjects by the Governor of Rangoon. The facts appeared unquestioned,—the right of those persons to claim the protection of their Government, and through it to obtain redress and reparation, was undoubted.

The Government of India accordingly requested Commodore Lambert, in command of certain of Her Majesty's ships, to proceed to Rangoon, for the purpose of representing the wrong that had been done, and of seeking redress.

The rank of that officer, and his standing, not merely pointed him out as the proper officer to be entrusted with this demand, but seemed to render it inexpedient that any officer of less rank should be employed while he was present. Commodore Lambert was supplied with precise instructions for his guidance; and it was specially enjoined upon him, that no act of hostility should be committed, though the reply of the Governor should be unfavourable; nor until definite instructions,* regarding such hostilities, should be given by the Government of India.

Upon his arrival at Rangoon, Commodore Lambert found it, in his judgment, impracticable to treat in any way with the then Governor of that province; and, as the most probable mode of conducting the matter to a peaceable conclusion, he transmitted, at once, the letter from the Government of India to the King of Ava, requiring the removal of the Governor, and the reparation claimed for the injury done to the captains of the ships.

In due time, an answer was received at Rangoon from the King. It was touched in friendly terms, and promised that the Governor should be removed, and that redress should be afforded.

The Governor was accordingly removed, and his successor arrived at Rangoon.

In reply to a message which was conveyed to him on the 5th of January,

* Letter of Secretary to Government, October 31, 1851.

the Governor stated that "he would be most happy; at any time, to receive any communication from the Commodore."*

On the following day, the 6th of January, a deputation, headed by Captain Fishbourne, the next officer in rank to Commodore Lambert, proceeded to the Governor's residence, for the purpose of delivering to him a letter from the Commodore, on behalf of the British Government.

The officers were refused admittance.

Assuming that there was, in the deputation of these officers, a neglect of strict form, although (be it observed) no such forms had been attended to on his own part, by the Governor of Rangoon, whose letter had been conveyed to the Commodore by officers of the humblest rank, and admittance had been freely granted to them; admitting, I say, that ceremonial had not been duly observed, the omission affords no justification whatever, for the insult and contumely which were publicly heaped upon these officers, the known agents, for the time, of the Government they served.

They were not merely denied admittance to the presence of the Governor, upon pleas whose falsehood was proved by his own messages at the time; but they were not permitted to enter within the door. No officer was deputed to them for explanation; one official after another passed them without notice, while standing in the public court, under the heat of the sun, and when they sought shelter from its rays, they were bidden to go under a shed provided for the lowest classes of the people when attending the courts.

No further notice was taken of their presence, and the officers, after long delay, at length were compelled to retire from the door.

The persons of the officers were known, their mission was known, their approach had been announced; and although the omission of ceremonial form to which I have alluded, might have given to the Governor a plausible pretext for declining to receive the officers in person, his own conduct in the transmission of his communications had greatly weakened that pretext; while nothing could justify the gross, deliberate, and studied affront which was put upon the British Government, in the person of its officers, conveying a communication on its behalf to the Representative of the King of Ava.

No apology whatever was made by the Governor of Rangoon; that which the Commodore required was rejected, and none was offered in any other form.

On the contrary, the Governor of Rangoon addressed to the Government of India a letter, accusing the officers, on the occasion to which I have referred, of having presented themselves in a state of intoxication; thus aggravating the insult he was bound to repair.

Since this imputation has been placed upon record, I think it right to express my conviction, that if such conduct were not altogether incredible in any British officer engaged in a formal mission to a foreign Governor, at noon-day, the unimpeachable character of Captain Fishbourne is in itself a sufficient guarantee that no one permitted to accompany him could be in any degree open to so scandalous a charge. The statement is truly that which I have designated it—an insult at once to the officers employed, and to their Government, to which it has been addressed.

The act of the Governor of Rangoon, in refusing admittance to the deputation, under the circumstances of insolence and contumely which I have described, and in withholding all amends for his conduct, was rightly viewed by the Commodore as a rejection of the demand he had been sent to make. He at once established the blockade which had been enjoined as the consequence of such rejection.

No blame could have attached to the Government of India, if it had sought no further for the reconciliation of these differences, but had proceeded to exert its power for the enforcement of its rights. But the desire of the Government of India for an amicable adjustment of existing differences was genuine; it sought no conquest, or pretext for war.

The terms of the letter from the Governor of Rangoon, in respect of the conduct of the officers, would have justified the Government in treating it with contemptuous silence. The rejection of our demand for reparation would have justified an enhancement of the demand. But, in its desire for the maintenance of peace, the Government of India did not reject the letter of the Governor; or enhance its demands for reparation. It raised no new difficulties, and once again renewed its exertions for reconciliation.

It demanded only an expression of the Governor's regret for the treatment to which the officers had been exposed, the payment of the original compensation, and an honourable reception for the Agent whom the Treaty of 1826 entitled us to depute.

These most just and moderate terms have been, one and all, evaded; and thus the Government of India is thrown back upon the alternative, which it formally announced to the Governor, would be the result of his failing to acquiesce in our demands, namely, the exaction of reparation by our own power.

If it be objected, that the main cause of the present rupture appears to be but a question of form; that a great Government may well afford to treat such petty slights with indifference; and that it would be wise for the Government of India to pass by unnoticed as well the offence itself, as the present refusal of apology for it, rather than to be drawn by it into all the evils of a war with Burmah, I desire to record my fixed conviction, that the Government of India will commit an error, perilous to its own security, and at variance with real humanity, if, acting on this view, it shall yield to the pretensions of the Burmese, and shall now patch up a hollow and unsubstantial peace.

Among all the nations of the East, none is more arrogant in its pretensions of superiority, and none more pertinacious in its assertion of them, than the people of Burmah. With them, forms are essential substance, and the method of communication and the style of address are not words, but acts.

The conduct of the Governor of Rangoon towards the British officers, on the 6th of January, would have been felt as ignominious by the lowest subordinate at his Durbar, if he had himself been subjected to it. The ignominy inflicted on these officers, if it be not resented, will be, and must be, regarded, as the humiliation of the Power they serve. The insult has been persisted in to the last. The form of address in the letters of the Burmese officers has been that employed towards other inferiors; and in the conveyance of their official communications, a studied disrespect, the most elaborate insolence, have been exhibited.

Were all this to be passed over, and friendly relations renewed, the ground thus gained by the Burmese would be fully taken advantage of. The oppressions and exactions to which British subjects at Rangoon have been exposed would be redoubled; the impracticable discourtesies which have been the steady policy of the Government of Ava since the conclusion of the Treaty of 1826, and which have driven away one British Envoy after another from Ava, and subsequently from Rangoon (till for many years past there has been no Representative of this Government in Burmah at all), would be habitually practised towards the Agent who may be placed at Rangoon; and, within a very brief period of time, the Government of India would be reduced to the same alternative which it has now before it, of either abandoning its subjects, and acknowledging its inability to protect them, or of engaging in a war; on which it would enter with the disadvantage of having, by its previous concessions, given spirit to the exertions of the enemy, and strengthened their already overweening confidence in their means of successful resistance.

The British power in India cannot safely afford to exhibit even a temporary appearance of inferiority. Whilst I should be reluctant to believe that our empire in India has no stay but the sword alone, it is vain to doubt that our hold must mainly rest upon the might of the conqueror, and must be maintained by that power. The Government of India cannot, consistently with its own safety, appear for one day in an attitude of inferiority; or hope to maintain peace and submission among the numberless princes and people embraced within the vast circuit of the empire, if, for one day, it give countenance to a doubt of the absolute superiority of its arms, and of its continued resolution to assert it.

The recital I have given in the preceding paragraphs of the course of recent events, will show that the original demand of the Government of India for redress was just and necessary; and that it was sought in a manner respectful to an independent nation. It will show, that a gross insult having been put upon this Government in the persons of its officers, the Government has not been eager to take offence, or perverse in refusing amends. It has shown itself sincerely desirous to open a way to reconciliation; it has practised the utmost moderation and forbearance. Notwithstanding intervening events, it has not enhanced its original demand, and it has offered the restoration of friendly relations on mild and most reasonable terms. If the rejection of those terms shall now lead to war between the States, the Government of India must be absolved in the sight of those for whom it rules, from the responsibility of hostilities, which it cannot decline without submitting to a discredit of its power, that would place in jeopardy the stability of its authority throughout the East.

The necessity for exacting reparation from Burmah by force of arms having been established, it has been necessary to consider the mode of operation.

I do not by any means intend to intimate that hostilities should be entered upon even though the demands we have made should be previously conceded by the King or his officers.

If, on the arrival of the force off Rangoon, the required apology shall be actually made, it may be accepted; but the former reparation demanded is not now sufficient. The expenses of the war, and the probable claims for compensation, must be provided for.

If, therefore, overtures of peace should be made before the war shall actually commence, it is my opinion that we must now require:

1. The apology previously demanded.
2. The payment of 9,900 rupees, formerly demanded for Captain Sheppard and Captain Lewis.
3. The honorable reception of the Agent at Rangoon.
4. In consideration of the expenses of the expedition, and of compensation for property, ten lacs of rupees.

If these demands are complied with, and paid at once, the force should be at once withdrawn. If they are agreed to, but the larger sum is not producible, the possession of Rangoon and Martaban, until the payment of the specified sum, should be insisted upon.

If these demands shall be rejected, or if the possession of Rangoon and Martaban, until they are fulfilled, shall be refused, operations of war should commence.

The course to be pursued by the Government of India, in the event of the Burmese policy rendering it necessary to attack and occupy Rangoon and Martaban, will be considered, and determined upon before the expedition shall be dispatched.

Mr. Halliday to Commodore Lambert.

(Extract.)

Fort William, February 13, 1852.

THE Burmese authorities having now finally rejected the demands that were last transmitted through you, the Government of India has determined to proceed at once to exact by force of arms the reparation which it has failed to obtain by other means.

In the hope that a severe blow struck at once may possibly have the effect of bringing the King of Ava, or his officers, to reason, and of thus averting a protracted war hereafter, the Governor-General in Council has directed the assembly of such a force as the present distribution of troops in Bengal and Madras, and the present season of the year, will permit.

It is expected that a considerable force from Bengal and Madras may be dispatched soon after the 20th of March. The troops from Madras will be conveyed, it is expected, by the steamers from Bombay. As many steam-ships as can be made available will be in like manner required for the conveyance of troops from Calcutta; and I am directed to request that you will dispatch any such vessels as you can dispense with, so as to be here by the 15th of March.

I am further desired to request that you will be so good as to specify the points at which the ships from Madras and Calcutta may most conveniently rendezvous.

Inclosure 19 in No. 6.

Colonel Bogle to Mr. Halliday.

(Extract.)

Moulmein, February 8, 1852.

ON the 6th instant, a letter was sent over to me, stating that a special messenger had just arrived, in eleven days, direct from the capital, with a letter from the King, to the address of the Governor-General, which the Governor of Martaban was, in accordance with the orders he had received, most anxious to deliver to me, for transmission to Calcutta; and that if I would receive it, he would depute the two Tseetkays to wait upon me with it, at any hour I pleased.

It was arranged that it should be delivered to me at 11 A.M., yesterday, at my court-house. The officials mentioned accordingly arrived, with three gold umbrellas, and were duly conducted to the place of meeting, when, after delivering the letter with all proper ceremony, they entered into some discussion on the present state of affairs, and expressed the great anxiety of their Government that the existing differences should be amicably arranged, and the Treaty of Yandaboo maintained.

They were most particularly desirous that further negotiations should not be conducted through Rangoon; and that I would do all in my power to procure a reply from the Governor-General, and transmit it through Martaban; in reply to which I told them, that I could do nothing more than send on the King's letter; that if an answer came to me I would, of course, forward it to Martaban with all dispatch; but that I thought it more probable it would be sent through Commodore Lambert and the shorter route of Rangoon; and that I had no control whatever in a matter of the kind. They did not seem at all pleased at this, but at once suggested that I might at least enable them to communicate direct with the Indian Government, by sending the Principal Assistant Commissioner (Lieutenant Hopkinson) with them to Calcutta, in which case they were prepared to do without negotiators, and go and deliver the letter themselves. Of course I declined to depute my Assistant with them, but offered them a passage in the steamer.

They expressed great regret that affairs had not been settled peaceably at Rangoon, and that the King's ship had been taken; but I clearly pointed out to them, that I had no power to enter upon the discussion of matters connected with that place; and explained to them, that, if there was any sincerity in their professions of a desire for peace, they should shape their conduct more in accordance with them; and that if their Government really desired a settlement of differences, it should lose no time in forwarding proper persons with sufficient powers to Commodore Lambert, with whom alone negotiations could be carried on.

To this the Tseetkays expressed some dislike, and strongly dwelt upon the circumstance, that everything having taken an unsatisfactory turn at Rangoon, it would be much better to forget all that had occurred there, and to begin the negotiations at the beginning again. I took some pains to have it clearly explained to them, that I had no power to do more than simply forward the King's letter; but that, as regarded all negotiations, the duty of conducting them had been assigned to Commodore Lambert, and it was to him that their Government must address itself; but the more I dwelt upon the propriety of following this course of proceeding, the more they urged the expediency of setting aside all that had already occurred, and beginning anew.

The circumstance of the King of Burmah having sent a letter to the Governor-General at all, and with such haste, is remarkable; and that he should have chosen this route, probably under the supposition that, with a blockade established, there might be difficulties on the Rangoon side, would indicate much anxiety to obtain an early reply; and from what the Tseetkays said, there is no doubt that the answer will be looked for with great impatience. I may as well mention, that on my alluding to the stoppage of trade and intercourse as one of the evils that had already overtaken them, consequent on the acts of their rulers, the Tseetkays expressed the most perfect indifference to that, and treated it as a matter of no moment whatever.

For the same reasons which induced me to open, and have translated, the last letters for the Governor-General, I have opened this letter also, and beg to transmit with it a translation prepared by Lieutenant Hopkinson, Principal Assistant Commissioner; and as I have no other means of communication, I have forwarded the packet to Commodore Lambert, that he may transmit it to Calcutta by a steamer, or otherwise dispose of it as he may think proper.

Inclosure 20 in No. 6.

The Burmese Ministers to the English Government.

THE Egga Maha Thanadee Patee, and the great officers and Ministers of the State, who are ever prostrate at the royal feet of the Meng Tarahgyee Phooya, who is all-powerful, Lord of the Universe, Master of the Tsat-tang Elephant, and all White Elephants in the Burman Dominion, Lord of Life, who is like unto the Lotus Flower, declare that—

Commodore Lambert, the officer in command of the war-vessels of the Queen of England, came to Rangoon, in the Burmese dominions, with a letter requesting that certain merchants who had been unjustly oppressed by the Governor of Rangoon, should have reparation made them, and suggesting the propriety of the dismissal of the Governor.

In accordance, therefore, with the great friendship existing between the two countries, the Atwengdaw-mre (perpetual Privy Councillor), Mahameng Gyam, and the Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Menggyee Mengteng Raza, were deputed with letters to the officer in command of the war-vessels, Commodore Lambert, and with a dispatch to be transmitted by him to the English Government, to the effect that the Governor of Rangoon would be recalled, and a fit person appointed in his room.

On the 12th waxing Pyatho, 1213 (2nd January, 1852), the officer in command, Commodore Lambert, wrote and delivered a letter to the Deputy Governor of Rangoon, urging that equal promptitude should be shown in the final settlement, as had attended the dismissal of those officers, who had been the cause of the misunderstanding between the two countries.

While thus the original business was in a fair way of adjustment, there came from the Commodore Lambert, the interpreter Edwards, and some superior officers, with a letter, but in consequence of their not immediately finding the Ayaboing of Hanthawadee Pyee Shewedoung Mywoon Thado Mengyee Maha Mengtha Meng Goung Gyo (the present Governor of Rangoon), the Yewoon (Deputy Governor) and other officers requested them as they were about to return, to leave the letter with them; this they refused to do, and after they had gone back, they made a report so calculated to breed discord, that the Commodore, saying that he felt angered and insulted, took possession of the King's ship. The Governor of Dallah was then sent to wait upon the Commodore, who informed him that he desired that the sum of 9,948 rupees which Captains Lewis and Sheppard had been required to disburse to the former Governor of Rangoon, should be repaid, when the ship might be returned.

To this a reply was made, that to prevent any misunderstanding arising between the two countries, the sum of 9,948 rupees should be repaid, but that His Majesty's ship must be brought back to the place whence she was removed.

Intimation was then given that the negotiation would be proceeded with, upon the Ayaboin Pyee Shewe Doung Mywoon repairing in person on board the [Commodore's] vessel, which was met by a proposition to provide temporary accommodation at some place half-way (between the Viceroy's house and the Commodore's vessel), where the two Plenipotentiaries might confer together; but the officer in command of the war-vessels, Commodore Lambert, making no reply whatever, and persisting in silence, a subsequent message was sent to him on the 5th Pyatho waning (10th January, 1852), begging him not to take away the vessel; to which he replied, that he would not carry her off, and that she might be sent for and taken back; but before the persons sent to take her could arrive, the Commodore went off with her in tow, and, being opposed by the military posts on the way, a conflict ensued.

This communication is now made with the view of eliciting, in reply, the intentions of the English Government; and it cannot be determined whether it has deputed Commodore Lambert simply to dispose of the question relating to the merchants, or whether he has been sent to begin by an attack, which should have the effect of bringing on hostilities between the two countries.

Commodore Lambert to Mr. Halliday.

*H.M.S. "Fox," off the Island of Negrais,
February 9, 1852.*

I HAVE the honor to forward, for the information of the Government of India, a copy of a report I received yesterday from Commander Luard, acquainting me that Her Majesty's sloop "Serpent," under his command, had been fired at by the Burmese in the Bassein River, and of a letter addressed to him by the Governor of Bassein, with the reply I sent to that functionary.

Inclosure 22 in No. 6.

Commander Luard to Commodore Lambert.

*H.M.S. "Serpent," in the Bassein River,
February 8, 1852.*

I HAVE the honor to inform you, that, on the 4th instant, I left Diamond Island, in order to return to the anchorage inside Negrais; and whilst entering the Western Channel, the stockades on the mainland opened fire upon the ship, which I returned with one broadside of shot and one of shell, and afterwards sent the armed boats under charge of Lieutenant L. W. Hammet, to destroy the stockades, which he effectually accomplished. The two upon the hill, mentioned in my last letter, were supported by four others lower down, almost entirely concealed by the jungle, and might have been defended against a much superior force.

Three small guns, a large quantity of rice, and shelter for about 500 men, were destroyed with the stockades; four war-boats, and one large cargo boat loaded with rice and stockading tools, were also brought off, and have since been destroyed.

On the following morning, after having examined the south end of Negrais, and the opposite shore, without finding either of the stockades marked down in the old chart, I proceeded up the river, and, on opening the village of Negrais, perceived that a stockade had been built up during our absence. I immediately anchored, and sent an officer to inquire if this stockade also had orders to fire upon us. He returned, bringing off an interpreter, who stated they were quite ready to fight. The stockade, however, was so completely under our guns, and so full of men, that being unwilling to cause such a great loss of life as must have ensued, had we commenced firing, I sent the interpreter back to his chief to tell him I would give him till sunrise the next morning, by which time, if the stockade was not pulled down, I should most certainly destroy it. About 9-30 that evening, the stockade opened fire upon us, and was evidently immediately deserted. In the morning, I again sent the armed boats, in charge of Lieutenant Hammet, to pull down and burn this stockade, which was done without opposition. No single article of private property has been touched, and the priest's house, together with a building covering some images, although inside the stockade, were scrupulously protected from injury.

The village, although at present deserted, will, I have no doubt, be soon re-occupied by its inhabitants.

The accompanying is a translation of a Burmese document received this morning, the bearers of which are now on board, awaiting an answer.

Inclosure 23 in No. 6.

The Governor of Bassein to the English Officers.

January 26, 1852.

I, MAHA THA-MIMDAN RAJAH, Governor of Bassein and its thirty-two dependent districts, an inner Minister of State of His Majesty the King of Ava [here Royal titles], give this order.

English Chiefs—Ye came to our country for the purpose, apparently, of giving a letter (from your Governor) to our Monarch; but not daring (in other words afraid) to hold any communication on matters with the Governor of Rangoon, who has been appointed to the charge of all the lower districts, in a manner unbecoming the sons of a great nation, you secretly stole, and took away the ship belonging to the King of Ava. Therefore, lest you should make your appearance at the mouth of the Bassein River and the Island of Negrais, I, who have charge of Bassein and its thirty-two dependencies, in conformity to my orders from my Royal Master, have assembled upwards of 10,000 fighting men, capable of expelling you and destroying you. They have cannon, and blunderbusses, and bombs, and muskets, swords and spears, gunpowder, bullets, flints, and, in fact, all the munitions and appurtenances of war, and all placed on guard around. Moreover, in all those parts of the river below Bassein, in which there is any difficulty for ships to come and go, there are at different points upwards of thirty armed positions, each under a different chief, and on the alert.

The man-of-war has no right to remain anchored within the Island of Negrais. If, relying on the strength of your right arm, you are anxious to fight, you should bear in mind that your vessel is a very small one. If you do not wish to fight, you must not remain at anchor inside of our outpost. Even if you remain where you are without fighting, or doing harm, the interests of my King require that I should attack you; and drive you out, and this is to give you notice of the same.

Commodore Lambert to the Rajah Governor of Bassein.

H.M.S. "Fox," off Negrais, February 8, 1852.

I HAVE to inform you, that in compliance with instructions I have received from the Governor-General of India, I have placed the whole coast of the Burmese territories, from Cape Negrais to the Salween River, under a state of blockade.

But, pending the negotiations that are now going on between the Government of India and the Governor of Rangoon, I have given directions to the different officers serving under my orders, not to assume any hostile measures against the Burmese, unless they commence firing on Her Britannic Majesty's ships, which they have done on two occasions, by firing on Her Britannic Majesty's ship "Serpent," and for which her commander has my full approval for having destroyed their stockades.

Commodore Lambert to Mr. Halliday.

*Off Diamond Island, Bassein River,
February 10, 1852.*

I HAVE the honor to inclose the copy of a letter I have just received from the Commissioner of the Tenasserim Provinces, forwarding a letter he had received from the King of Ava, addressed to the Governor-General of India.

I have, in consequence, dispatched the "Phlegethon" steam-vessel to Calcutta, and desired Commander Neblett to deliver it to you, with this dispatch.

I also transmit an explanatory letter from Captain Latter, as to certain false statements made in the said letter from the King of Ava.

Inclosure 26 in No. 6.

Colonel Bogle to Commodore Lambert.

Moulmein, February 8, 1852.

IN charge of Captain Neblett, of the Company's steamer "Phlegethon," I have the honor to transmit herewith, a letter from the King of Burmah, translation of which is inclosed, for your information, to the address of the Governor-General, together with a mail-packet; and I take the liberty of suggesting that, should the exigencies of the service admit of it, a steamer may be dispatched with them to Calcutta.

The letter from the King is inclosed in an ivory case and a red velvet cover: it reached Martaban in eleven days, and was brought over, by permission, and delivered to me yesterday, with all proper ceremony, by the two officers next in rank to the Governor of Martaban, and who are entitled to use golden umbrellas.

For what passed on the occasion, I beg to refer you to Captain Neblett, of the "Phlegethon," Lieutenant Lawrence, of Her Majesty's ship "Hermes," with Dr. Macleod, who did me the favor to be present at the interview.

The circumstance of the Burmese Government having sent a letter to the Governor-General at all, and the speed with which it has come, would certainly indicate a desire that hostilities may be averted, at least for the present; and the very convenient opportunity which this letter will afford the Indian Government of categorically detailing its demands and intentions, induces me to attach more importance to it than it would otherwise, perhaps, deserve.

Inclosure 27 in No. 6.

Captain Latter to Commodore Lambert.

Bassein River, February 10, 1852.

IN conformity to your suggestions, I beg to submit to you the following remarks on the letter from the Burmese Government, the English translation of which has been forwarded to you by Colonel Bogle, Commissioner of the Tenasserim Provinces.

With reference to the remarks in its 5th paragraph, that the Deputy Governor of Rangoon begged us, on the occasion of the deputation of which I was a member having been kept waiting for a full quarter of an hour in the sun, to leave the letter with him; it is a statement entirely against the fact. The Deputy Governor never was seen by any one in the squadron until next day, when, for fear of his master, he came on board the frigate, to try and get back the King's ship. No officer of any rank came to us, or spoke to us. One of inferior rank passed up the steps, and I urged him to the necessity of giving us some sort of a reception.

The statement in the 6th paragraph is likewise without a particle of truth. I was present at every communication, verbal or written, made to you by the Burmese authorities, and no statement of the kind was made.

The same may be said of the 7th paragraph; there was no proposition of the kind made, and there is not a particle of truth in the whole of it.

The communication is what any one, with a knowledge of the Burmese, might have expected; truth not being considered a desirable quality among them, and falsehood looked upon as the highest art of diplomacy.

P.S.—The observations I have made in this letter, with reference to the incorrectness of the statements contained in the letter from the Burmese Government under consideration, of course apply to the representation which the present Governor of Rangoon must have made to his superiors.

Inclosure 28 in No. 6.

Mr. Halliday to Colonel Bogle.

February 18, 1852.

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch, dated the 8th instant, accompanying the letter from the King of Ava.

The Governor-General in Council approves of the course you pursued in receiving and forwarding the letter from the King, while, at the same time, you informed the messengers from Martaban, that you were not empowered to enter into any negotiations, or to engage in any discussions with them.

His Lordship desires me to request that you will continue to observe this course, unless specially instructed to the contrary.

You will be so good as to cause a translation to be made of the reply addressed by the Governor-General to the King, and will forward the English letter, with the translation, in the accompanying case to Ava, through the parties who delivered the King's letter from Martaban.

While, however, you continue to hold the same language to these functionaries as before, and refuse all negotiation with them, you are at liberty to inform them, that it consists with your knowledge, that the Government of India is preparing for the immediate exaction of the reparation which has been refused, and that if they desire to avert from the Kingdom of Ava, and from themselves, the blow which is impending over them, they will exert themselves to obtain from Ava, with every practicable speed, full compliance with, and performance of those conditions on which alone a war can be avoided.

If in due time a reply should be received, through the same channel, complying with the demands of the Government of India, you will be pleased to receive the letter, distinctly intimating that you are not empowered to declare the difference between the States adjusted, but that you will transmit the letter to the Governor-General in Council, whose final reply will be communicated to them as soon as received. You will inform the Burmese authorities, at the same time, that you are not authorized to receive the money, which must be paid at Rangoon to the British officer who may be appointed to receive it there.

Under all circumstances any letter from the Court of Ava should be transmitted, and always with a translation.

Inclosure 29 in No. 6.

Mr. Halliday to Commodore Lambert.

Fort William, February 18, 1852.

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatches by the "Phlegethon," dated the 9th and 10th instant, with their respective inclosures.

To the letter from the King of Ava forwarded by you, a reply has been transmitted, in which are set forth the enhanced conditions on which alone war can now be averted.

In the meantime, the Governor-General in Council has neither relaxed the preparations in which he was engaged, nor will he delay the dispatch of the expedition, nor will he enter into any further negotiation, or abstain from action, unless the conditions he has put forward shall be not only acceded to, but fulfilled.

You are, therefore, requested to abstain, for the present, from all correspondence, if such should again be commenced with you.

The conduct of Captain Luard in the respect shown for private property, after Her Majesty's ship "Serpent" had been fired upon by the Burmese, is, his Lordship desires me to observe, very honorable to that officer, and to his crew.

Inclosure 30 in No. 6.

The Governor-General to the King of Ava.

Fort William, February 18, 1852.

I HAVE received the letter which your Majesty caused to be addressed to me, relative to the events which have recently taken place at Rangoon, and which was transmitted through the hands of the Governor of Martaban.

Your Majesty desires to elicit a declaration of the intentions of the British Government, and inquires whether Commodore Lambert was deputed simply to dispose of the question relating to the merchants, or whether he has been sent to begin an attack which should have the effect of bringing on hostilities between the two countries.

If your Majesty's servants at Rangoon had been faithful to your Majesty's interests, and had conveyed to you a truthful report of all that passed between them and the British officers on the occasion to which reference is made, your Majesty would have seen no cause to inquire what were the intentions of the Government of India, or to doubt the pacific character of its mission. Your Majesty's officers have not correctly represented to you the events which occurred, but have concealed from your knowledge their own misconduct, which has compelled the British Government to change its language, and to prepare for compelling, by force of arms, the reparation it sought by a friendly representation.

The reply which your Majesty addressed to the letter from the Government of India was, in all respects, worthy of a just and sagacious Ruler. It admitted the justice of the claims which had been advanced, directed the removal of the Governor of Rangoon, and promised redress by the hands of a new Governor, fully armed with powers to afford it.

That redress has not been granted by your Majesty's servant at Rangoon; on the contrary, gross and repeated insults have since been offered by him to the British Government, in the person of its officers, and every amende has been evaded or refused.

When Commodore Lambert, on the arrival of the new Governor, proposed to renew negotiations relative to the merchants who had been oppressed, the Governor intimated his readiness to receive, at any time, a communication from Commodore Lambert upon the subject. On the following day, a letter written on behalf of the British Government, was addressed by the Commodore to the Governor of Rangoon. Although the present Governor and his predecessor had not observed the respect which was due, nor the custom of their own country, and had sent their letters by the hands of men of no rank or consideration whatever, yet these persons were not rejected by the Commodore. And when he dispatched his letter to the Governor of Rangoon, it was sent, not by the hands of any such inconsiderable persons, but by the officer next in rank to himself, accompanied by officers of the army and of the fleet.

Yet the Governor of Rangoon presumed to refuse all admittance to these officers, bearing a letter to him on the part of the British Government.

He not only presumed to refuse to them admittance, but he offered to them insult and indignity. The Deputy Governor did not approach them, as your servants have falsely reported to your Majesty. No officer was deputed to them. They were approached only by the lowest; they were compelled to remain beyond the door; and were publicly subjected to disrespect and insolence, such as would have been regarded as ignominious by the meanest subordinate in your servant's Durbar. The Governor of Rangoon aggravated the injury he thus offered to the British Government, by the audacious and offensive assertion, that British officers, thus deputed on an important duty to a high officer, at noon-day, presented themselves at his residence in a state of intoxication.

A deliberate insult can never be offered with impunity to the British Government, or to its servants.

The Governor of Rangoon having persisted in refusing to express his regret for the conduct of which he had been guilty, Commodore Lambert rightly considered that the negotiations were at an end, that the demands of the British Government had been refused, and he proceeded (as your Majesty had been informed he would do, if the demands of this Government should not be complied with) to take such measures as should enforce the rights conferred by treaties, should effectually protect the interests of the subjects of the British Government, and should fully vindicate its honor and power.

This Government would thereafter have been justified in rejecting all communication with the Governor of Rangoon; but having no secret intentions, and seeking no pretext for war or conquest, it once more endeavoured to effect an adjustment of the differences that had arisen.

The Government of India added nothing to its demands. It required only the reparation it originally specified, together with the indispensable condition that the Governor of Rangoon should express his deep regret for the insult he had put upon the officers of this Government.

These most moderate and just demands have been rejected by your Majesty's servant, whom you deputed with power to settle the differences between the States.

Its demand having thus been rejected by your Majesty's servant on your behalf, the Government of India resolved at once to enforce its rights, and to vindicate its power. For that purpose, large preparations were at once commenced, and are now in progress. The receipt of your Majesty's letter has not interfered with, and will not delay, or diminish, these preparations.

It is still within your Majesty's power to avert from your kingdom the disasters of war; but this can only now be done by a prompt disavowal of the acts of your Majesty's servant at Rangoon, and by a full compliance with the several demands which are hereinafter enumerated:

1. Your Majesty, disavowing the acts of the present Governor of Rangoon, shall, by the hands of your Ministers, express regret that Captain Fishbourne and the British officers who accompanied him were exposed to insult at the hand of your servants at Rangoon, on the 6th of January last.

2. In satisfaction of the claims of the two captains who suffered exactions from the late Governor of Rangoon; in compensation for the loss of property which British merchants may have suffered in the burning of that city by the acts of the present Governor; and in consideration of the expenses of preparation for war, your Majesty will agree to pay, and will pay at once, ten lacs of rupees to the Government of India.

3. Your Majesty will direct that an accredited Agent, to be appointed in conformity with the VIIth Article of the Treaty of Yandaboo, and to reside at Rangoon, shall be received by your Majesty's servants there; and shall, at all times, be treated with the respect due to the Representative of the British Government.

4. Your Majesty will direct the removal of the present Governor of Rangoon, whose conduct renders it impossible that the Government of India should consent to any official intercourse with him.

If, without further delay, negotiation, or correspondence, these conditions shall be consented to, and shall fulfilled on, or before, the 1st day of April next, hostile operations shall be stayed, peace between the States shall be renewed, and the King's ship shall be restored.

But if—untaught by former experience; forgetful of the irresistible power of the British arms in India; and heedless of the many additional proofs that have been given of its might, in the successful fall of the powerful Sovereigns of Bhurtpore, of Scinde, of the Sikhs, and of many other Princes, since last the Burman Rulers vainly attempted to resist the British troops in war—the King of Ava shall unwisely refuse the just and lenient conditions which are now set before him, the British Government will have no alternative but immediate war.

The guilt and the consequences of war will rest upon the head of the Ruler of Ava.

Messrs. Thomas A. Apcar and Stephen Gabriel to Sir H. Elliot.

WE have the honor to wait upon you with the accompanying memorial from the Armenian inhabitants of this city; and as the prayer of it is of the greatest importance to us, we beg to solicit the favor of your laying the same before the Governor-General in Council, with as little delay as practicable.

Inclosure 3 in No. 7.

Petition of the Armenian Inhabitants of Calcutta to the Governor-General of India in Council.

THAT intelligence of the most distressing and alarming nature has reached your petitioners from Rangoon, concerning their unfortunate countrymen in that place. That all their houses, including the church, have been burnt down to the ground, or otherwise destroyed by the Burmese. That the property of the wretched sufferers has been plundered, or taken possession of by the local authorities, without the least regard to law or reason. That all the Armenians, thus unmercifully reduced to a state of utter destitution, have been made prisoners, and subjected to every manner of hardship and surveillance. That the number of the Armenians residing at Ava is nearly 40, and that of their fellow-countrymen now at Rangoon, is upwards of 60. That the aggregate amount of their property is very considerable, and is supposed to be about ten lacs of rupees, which they have been dispossessed and deprived of. That your petitioners are not unaware that Commodore Lambert had warned the Armenians of Rangoon to quit that place, and to go to Moulmein; but the notice of this warning was so sudden and so short, that, with but a few solitary exceptions, they could not in time come out of the Burmese territories, and place themselves under British protection. That several of the Armenians, now at Rangoon and Ava, are relatives and friends of your petitioners, to whom it is natural keenly to feel for the most critical and dangerous situation in which they are placed, and deeply to sympathize with them for the hardships to which they are subjected.

That having thus briefly stated above the subject of their humble petition, your petitioners most respectfully but earnestly beg your Lordship to take into consideration the lamentable condition of their unfortunate countrymen in Burmah, and, by an exercise of the native benevolence for which your Lordship is so eminently and so deservedly distinguished far and wide, to adopt immediate and prompt measures for the liberation of the Armenian Christians in Rangoon and Ava from their imprisonment, and for the restitution of the property, of which they have been thus spoliated. Convinced of the innate goodness with which your Lordship is so solicitous to insure the welfare of the millions placed under your Lordship's mild rule and fostering care, your petitioners entertain hopes that their prayer will be humanely responded to, and that their humble request will be complied with, in such a manner as may appear most expedient and politic to your Lordship.

That, in conclusion, your Lordship's petitioners take the liberty to inclose, in the shape of a memorandum, and for the information and guidance of your Lordship, a paper containing the names of the Armenians now at Rangoon and Ava, and a statement of the respective property, both real and personal, which each of them is, by a pretty near guess, supposed to have been possessed of. And your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray for your Lordship's health, prosperity, and happiness.

Mr. Thomas to Messrs. Apar & Gabriel.

Fort William, February 20, 1852.

I HAVE the honor to inform you that I have received and laid before the Governor-General in Council your letter, without date, forwarding a memorial from the Armenian inhabitants of Calcutta.

In reply, I am desired to request that you will inform the memorialists that his Lordship in Council sympathizes with their anxiety regarding the condition of their relations and connexions in Ava; but he trusts that the measures about to be adopted for asserting the power and authority of the British Government for the redress of the grievance of its subjects trading to Rangoon, will ultimately lead to a satisfactory settlement of affairs between the two nations, without compromise of the security of any of those in whom the memorialists are interested.

Inclosure 6 in No. 7.

Commodore Lambert to Mr. Halliday.

*H.M.S. "Fox," off Diamond Island, Bassein River,
February 12, 1852.*

I HAVE the honor to inclose, for the information of the Governor-General of India, a copy of a letter I received this morning from the Governor of Bassein, and of my reply thereto.

Inclosure 7 in No. 7.

The Governor of Bassein to Commodore Lambert.

I, MAHA THAMIENDAN RAJAH, appointed by the King of Ava [here follow the Royal titles], Governor of Bassein and its thirty-two dependencies, a nobleman, and inner Minister of State, send this communication:—

On your Government making a charge against the late Governor of Rangoon, for oppressing and maltreating British subjects trading to Rangoon, my Sovereign, the King of Ava, sent down the Prince Mahamengthla-meng-khoung-gyan, Governor of Prome, as a Plenipotentiary, to inquire into the truth of these charges; and he removed the former Governor from his post, and recalled him to the Royal presence, where he now is. And you, though sons of a great country, without having entered into any of the business for which you came, took away secretly the King's ship; and having come without giving information, and anchored within the outposts of Negrais, in the district of Bassein, which is guarded by upwards of thirty military posts, I sent a messenger with a letter to inform you that it was improper for you to remain there as long as the Rangoon business was unsettled; but he did not find you. But on your again coming without giving information within the posts of Pagoda Point and Thay, the messenger was again sent to you, but before he reached you I am informed the outposts of Pagoda Point, Thay, and Negrais, attacked you without giving notice. If these outposts should act on the aggressive, you must let me know, and not attack them, and burn them down. I have reported to the King the actions with the Stockades, and shall be able to receive his orders in forty days.

Moreover, if you really are the legitimate forces of Her Majesty the Queen of England, you ought to act in conformity to Article III of the Commercial Treaty of Yandaboo, and not prevent traders and merchants coming and going in their boats and ships; for this reason you ought to anchor beyond Pagoda Point, where there is seven fathoms of water.

Inclosure 8 in No. 7.

Commodore Lambert to the Governor of Bassein.

COMMODORE LAMBERT has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the Governor of Bassein's letter. He is glad to find the Governor of Bassein has given directions to his officers not to fire on Her Britannic Majesty's ships, which will prevent any further hostilities, as Commodore Lambert has already given directions not to fire on the Burmese, unless they first fire at the English flag.

The blockade has been established by order of the Governor-General of India; and until Commodore Lambert receives further instructions, it is not in his power to permit any vessels to enter any of the ports or rivers belonging to the Burmese.

Inclosure 9 in No. 7.

Mr. Thomas to Commodore Lambert.

(Extract.)

Fort William, March 3, 1852.

I HAVE received and laid before the Governor-General in Council your dispatches of the 9th and 12th ultimo.

In reply, I am directed to inform you, that the letters from the Governor of Bassein deserve no notice from the Government of India; and that as the Governor-General in Council has finally addressed the King of Ava, it is essential for the prevention of all misapprehension or misrepresentation, that no communication whatever should, at present, be held with any of the officers of the Burmese Government.

I am directed to request that you will, therefore, give no reply to, and take no notice of, any letters any of them may address to you, but merely transmit to the Government any communication which may appear to be of sufficient importance, an occurrence which is extremely improbable.

I am instructed to acquaint you that the ships and transports will be ordered to rendezvous at the mouth of the Rangoon River.

I am further directed to acquaint you that Lieutenant-General Godwin, C.B., has been appointed to the command of troops selected for the expedition; and that as soon as any decision can be formed as to the details of military operations, you will be fully informed of the same.

No. 8.

The Governor General in Council to the Secret Committee.

Fort William, April 6, 1852. (No. 14.)

IN continuation of our dispatch No. 8, of the 8th ultimo, we have the honor to forward herewith, copies of the further correspondence relative to Rangoon affairs.

We beg to draw especial attention to the minute recorded by the Governor-General, containing an exposition of his views as to the course of policy to be pursued towards the Burmese Government, and the measures to be adopted for the speedy termination of hostilities.

The letter of instructions to Lieutenant-General Godwin, who has been nominated to the command of the land force, provides for every contingency which may arise in connexion with the present expedition.

A further communication on the same subject will be addressed to you by the ensuing mail.

Inclosure 1 in No. 8.

Colonel Bogle to C. Allen, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India.

Moulmein, March 26, 1852.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt, on the afternoon of the 27th ultimo, of your letter of the 18th ultimo, inclosing a letter from the Governor-General to the King of Burmah.

As soon as a translation could be prepared, I caused it to be intimated to the Burmese authorities, that an answer to the King's letter had arrived, and that I would be ready to receive a deputation at 2 P.M., of the 1st, and to deliver it to them for transmission to the capital.

I would have named an earlier date and hour, but the translation occupied much time, and Sunday intervened.

The two Tsetkays of Martaban, who brought over the letter to the Governor-General, were accordingly deputed to wait upon me, but instead of arriving about the hour of meeting, they came over before 11 A.M.

On their reaching my court-house I received them as on the former occasion, and very fully and distinctly explained to them the circumstances attending the present misunderstanding between the two Governments, and the evils which would inevitably result from a non-compliance with the demands contained in his Lordship's letter. I also pointed out to the Tsetkays, the expediency of the Burmese Government avoiding a course which must compel the British Government to adopt coercive measures; and in delivering the letter to them, I strongly impressed on them the importance of their forwarding it to the capital with the least possible delay.

It was very distinctly explained to them, that the sum of money mentioned in the letter of the Governor-General, was to be paid at Rangoon, and that full and complete compliance with all the terms mentioned must be signified by the 1st of April.

The Tsetkays appeared to be much grieved that further negotiation was not to be permitted, and that their case was closed. They immediately left Moulmein, and I am informed that the Governor-General's letter was that evening sent off towards the capital. I however regret to say, that no answer has as yet been received, and it is reported that preparations for resistance are being made at Martaban, as well as Rangoon.

There is no doubt that at the latter place extensive works of defence have been constructed; but at the former nothing seems as yet to have been done of material consequence. On the 19th instant I proceeded up the Salween in the steamer "Phlegethon," a little beyond Martaban, in company with Commodore Lambert, Colonel Reignolds, C.B., commanding the troops, and Major Reid, commanding the artillery. We passed close along the front of the place, and reconnoitered it with tolerable certainty; but although it was evident that a good many men had arrived since I last passed it, and that some works were in progress, we were unable to discern anything of importance.

Inclosure 3 in No. 8.

Minute by the Governor-General of India, concurred in by the Members of the Board.

(Extract.)

March 23, 1852.

THE preparations for the expedition which it was resolved to dispatch to the Coast of Burmah, have been carried on in every quarter with great alacrity, and with such success, that we are in a condition to commence operations even earlier than I had anticipated.

The troops from this Presidency have either been dispatched, or are ready to embark. The wing of the 18th has sailed to rejoin the head-quarters at Moulmein.

A wing of Her Majesty's 80th has also sailed. The other wing will garrison Fort William.

The company of Artillery has also arrived. The 40th Regiment of Native Infantry is here. The Ordnance and Commissariat stores are embarked, and the whole will be ready to sail on the 25th instant.

Lieutenant-General Godwin has been nominated to the command, and the Staff appointments have been filled up.

The troops from Madras, if they have not already sailed, will sail in accordance with instructions from this Government, about the same date.

They will be conveyed by a squadron of steamers, powerfully armed, which has been provided by the Bombay Government with the utmost promptitude, and in the highest efficiency.

The 67th Regiment, which was intended to form part of the expedition, must of necessity be kept in Arracan for the present, in consequence of the 38th Regiment having declined either to volunteer for Burmah, or to proceed to Arracan by sea. The 67th will be relieved, however, or its place taken at Rangoon by another Madras regiment, which that Government has been requested to send.

With this exception, the whole force will be at the rendezvous in the Rangoon River, by the 1st of April.

It is necessary to furnish Lieutenant-General Godwin with general instructions for his guidance.

Having regard to the advantage of uniting all authority upon such occasions in one person, and having confidence in the ability, judgment, and experience which General Godwin will bring to the duties with which he is to be entrusted, I would propose that the whole political authority connected with the expedition should be vested in him, as the officer commanding the troops in the field.

The instructions of the Governor-General in Council, while they leave General Godwin unfettered in all details of military operations, should clearly indicate the general objects of the Government, and should, as far as possible, provide for every contingency which may arise in connexion with the present expedition.

The Government has declared that it directed the assembling of this force, in the hope that a powerful blow, struck promptly now, might reduce the Burmese to reason, obtain compliance with our demands, and avert war upon a more extended scale at the end of the coming monsoon. To this end, the speedy termination of hostilities, all the efforts of the force should now be directed; while in any negotiations that may be opened, no demands of unnecessary severity or extent should be advanced by us, which would tend to avert a settlement, and thus to defeat the object of our present movement.

General Godwin, having been put in possession of this leading principle in the views of the Government of India, should be informed that the ultimatum of the Government, some time since transmitted to the King of Ava, was to the following effect:

“1st. Your Majesty, disavowing the acts of the present Governor of Rangoon, shall, by the hands of your Ministers, express regret that Captain Fishbourne and the British officers who accompanied him, were exposed to insult at the hand of your servant at Rangoon, on the 6th of January last.

“2nd. In satisfaction of the claims of the two captains who suffered exactions from the late Governor of Rangoon, in compensation for the loss of property which British merchants may have suffered in the burning of that city by the acts of the present Governor, and in consideration of the expenses of preparation for war, your Majesty will agree to pay, and will pay at once, ten lacs of rupees to the Government of India.

“3rd. Your Majesty will direct that an accredited Agent, to be appointed in conformity with the VIIth Article of Yandaboo, and to reside at Rangoon, shall be received by your Majesty’s servants there, and shall, at all times, be treated with the respect due to the Representative of the British Government.

“4th. Your Majesty will direct the removal of the present Governor of Rangoon, whose conduct renders it impossible that the Government of India should consent to any official intercourse with him.”

Upon arriving at the rendezvous, and before moving to Rangoon, General Godwin should ascertain, by an ordinary flag of truce, whether any letter from the Court of Ava to the Government of India is forthcoming.

If there should be such a letter, General Godwin should be authorized to examine its contents.

If the letter should accede to the demands of the British Government, and if effect should at once be given to it by the King’s officers, hostilities will be stayed. In that case, General Godwin will intimate to the Burmese officers, that it is his intention to proceed to Rangoon for the purpose of receiving the fulfilment of the terms.

If this shall be duly accomplished, General Godwin will finally arrange a meeting with the chief officer of the King of Ava at Rangoon, for the purpose of formally placing in charge of his functions, the officer who shall be appointed to act at Rangoon as the Agent of this Government. The forms of such meetings should be arranged previously, and a record made of them; it being understood that they are to be the recognised forms of reception of the British Agent for the future.

When all this has been done, and not before, the King's ship should be restored to its place, and former friendly relations will be renewed.

If the letter from the Court of Ava should not, distinctly and at once, concede all the demands, but should express an intention of doing so, General Godwin should construe it in a fair and liberal spirit. If he shall consider that it is the real intention of the Court of Ava to meet our demands as soon as it is practicable for them to do so, he is authorized to suspend hostilities. But if General Godwin should see good cause to believe that the Court of Ava is attempting to practise the same evasive policy of which General Godwin has himself had experience, and is seeking merely to gain time against us, General Godwin should proceed to act in concert with the officer commanding the Naval Forces.

If again there should be no letter from the Court of Ava, or if it should directly refuse, or manifestly evade our demands, General Godwin in like manner will proceed to act.

It has been the earnest desire of the Government of India, from the commencement of these differences with the Court of Ava, to avert, if possible, another war. I have already said that the object of dispatching promptly the present force is to seize the last chance of preventing the necessity for sending a large army hereafter. It is in my judgment equally the policy and the duty of the Government of India to adhere to that principle, in every one of its acts, in this untoward affair.

Our demands have been based on a resolution to obtain full compensation for the injuries inflicted on British subjects, and reimbursement of the expenses to which the State has been put by the proceedings of the Burmese Government. The sum of 10 lacs was not set down arbitrarily, but was the result of calculation, so far as it could be made.

More time will have elapsed before a reconciliation can be effected, and the heavy current expenses must be provided for. Moreover, if hostilities be commenced, if actions be fought, the charges of the Government will be greatly increased.

I therefore beg leave to suggest, that as the conditions of peace offered immediately after the capture of these places, we should demand:

1st. The payment of 15 lacs of rupees. Such a payment would not be beyond the means of the Burmese Government, and it will most certainly not do more than afford the compensation and reimbursement to which we are entitled.

2nd. To obviate any attempt at evasion, by delay, and to meet the strict justice of the case, an additional payment should be demanded of 3 lacs for every month which may elapse after the 1st of May, until satisfaction of our demands is afforded.

3rd. Until these payments are made, the British troops shall remain in undisturbed possession of such captured places as they may choose to retain.

4th. If these conditions are not complied with, the Government of India will take such measures as it may think necessary and right.

I conceive that these conditions afford the best and safest solution of the difficulties of our present position.

With regard to the 1st and 2nd I have already said that the demand is just, and within the means of the Burmese Government.

The 3rd condition enables us either to retain possession of the whole we may have captured, or, without disadvantage or discredit, to retire from Rangoon, if it should appear desirable to do so.

The general terms of the 4th condition leave it open to the Government to adopt whatever course it may prefer, after the monsoon shall have passed, or the season for operations shall again approach.

Inclosure 4 in No. 8.

Mr. Allen to Lieutenant-General Godwin.

(Extract.)

Fort William, March 24, 1852.

THE force which has been placed under your command for service upon the coast of Burmah being now complete in all respects, you will be enabled to proceed to the rendezvous selected by Commodore Lambert, at the mouth of the Rangoon River, upon the 25th instant.

The Governor-General in Council has the honor to address to you the following instructions for your guidance.

Having regard to the advantage of uniting all authority in one person upon such occasions as the present, and having confidence in the ability, the judgment, and experience which you will bring to the duty with which you are to be entrusted, the Governor-General in Council has resolved that the whole political authority connected with the expedition should be vested in you, as the officer commanding the troops in the field.

The Governor-General in Council has directed the assembling of this force, in the hope that a powerful blow, struck promptly now, may reduce the Burmese to reason, may obtain compliance with our demands, and so may avert the necessity for war upon a more extended scale, after the close of the coming monsoon.

The ultimatum of the British Government, transmitted to the Court of Ava some time ago, was to the following effect :

“1st. Your Majesty, disavowing the acts of the present Governor of Rangoon, shall, by the hands of your Ministers, express regret that Captain Fishbourne and the British officers who accompanied him were exposed to insult at the hand of your servants at Rangoon, on the 6th of January last.

“2nd. In satisfaction of the claims of the two captains who suffered exactions from the late Governor of Rangoon, in compensation for the loss of property which British merchants may have suffered in the burning of that city by the acts of the present Governor, and in consideration of the expenses of preparation for war, your Majesty will agree to pay, and will pay at once, ten lacs of rupees to the Government of India.

“3rd. Your Majesty will direct that an accredited Agent, to be appointed in conformity with the VIIth Article of Yandaboo, and to reside at Rangoon, shall be received by your Majesty’s servants there, and shall, at all times, be treated with the respect due to the Representative of the British Government.

“4th. Your Majesty will direct the removal of the present Governor of Rangoon, whose conduct renders it impossible that the Government of India should consent to any official intercourse with him.”

Upon arriving at the rendezvous, you are requested to communicate with Commodore Lambert, in command of the naval squadron there. The accompanying letter to Commodore Lambert contains a copy of the instructions now conveyed to you, and a request that he will cooperate with you in every way for securing the successful performance of the service with which you have been entrusted.

The Governor-General in Council entertains the fullest confidence that Commodore Lambert and yourself will act together in entire harmony and concert upon a service, where you have as your common object the protection of British subjects, and the maintenance of the honor and power of our name.

— Before moving up to Rangoon you are requested to ascertain, by such means as may seem best, through a flag of truce, whether any letter from the Court of Ava to the Government of India has been received. If there should be such a letter, you are authorized to examine its contents.

If the letter should accede to the demands of the British Government, and if effect should at once be given to it by the King’s officers, hostilities will be stayed.

In that case you are requested to intimate to the Burmese officers, that it is your intention to proceed to Rangoon for the purpose of receiving the fulfilment of the terms.

If this shall be duly accomplished, you will finally arrange a meeting with the chief officer of the King of Ava, for the purpose of formally placing in charge of his functions the officer who shall be appointed to act at Rangoon as the Agent of this Government.

The forms of such meetings should be arranged previously, and a record made of them; it being understood that they are to be the recognised forms of reception of the British Agent for the future.

When all this has been done, and not before, the King's ship should be restored to its place, and former friendly relations will be renewed.

If the letter from the Court of Ava should not distinctly and at once concede all our demands, but should express an intention of doing so, you are requested to construe it in a fair and liberal spirit.

If you shall consider that it is the real intention of the Court of Ava to meet our demands as soon as it is practicable for it to do so, you are authorized to suspend hostilities. But if you should see good cause to believe that the Court of Ava is attempting to practise the same evasive policy of which you have yourself had experience, and is seeking merely to gain time against us, you should proceed to act, in concert with the officer commanding the naval forces.

If, again, there should be no letter from the Court of Ava, or if it should directly refuse, or manifestly evade, our demands, you, in like manner, will proceed to act.

It is assumed by the Government, that operations would be most effectually directed against Martaban and Rangoon.

If the result of that operation should be in accordance with the hopes of the Government, and if the Burmese should either make overtures for peace, or should be supposed likely to accept them, you are authorized to agree to, or to offer the following terms of accommodation:—

1st. The payment of 15 lacs of rupees.

2nd. The payment of 3 lacs of rupees, in addition to the above sum, for every month which may elapse after the 1st May, until full payment is made.

3rd. Until these conditions shall be fulfilled, the British troops shall remain in undisturbed possession of such captured places as they may choose to retain.

4th. If the conditions shall not be fulfilled on or before the 1st October, the Government of India will take such measures as it may think right.

Upon the acceptance of such overtures being reported, the Government of India would transmit to you such further instructions as might be required.

Inclosure 5 in No. 8.

Mr. Allen to Commodore Lambert.

Fort William, March 24, 1852.

I AM directed by the Governor-General in Council to acquaint you, that the land force, which has been prepared with a view to active operations in Burmah, being about to sail, Lieutenant-General Godwin, C.B., has been appointed to the command.

As there appears to be little probability of the demands of the British Government being acceded to by the Government of Ava, except as the consequence of successful operations by the military force which has been dispatched, the Governor-General in Council, having regard to the expediency of uniting every power in the hands of one person on such occasions, has resolved to invest Lieutenant-General Godwin, the officer in command of the troops, with the whole political authority connected with the expedition.

A copy of the instructions addressed to that officer is transmitted for your information.

In addition to the steam-vessels which have already been under your orders, those named in the margin* will join you at the rendezvous.

* Feroze, Mozuffer, Sesostris, Zenobia, Medusa, Berenice, and, probably, Hugh Lindsay.

In soliciting your cooperation for accomplishing fully the objects of this Government, the Governor-General in Council has only to repeat the expression of his perfect confidence that the officers commanding the naval and military forces respectively, will act together in entire harmony and concert upon a service in which they have for their common object, the protection of British subjects, and the maintenance of the honor and power of our name.

ARTICLE VIII.

In like manner, the property of Burmese subjects, dying under the same circumstances in any part of the British Dominions, shall be made over to the Minister or other authority delegated by His Burmese Majesty to the Supreme Government of India.

ARTICLE IX.

The King of Ava will abolish all exactions upon British ships or vessels in Burman ports, that are not required from Burman ships or vessels in British ports; nor shall ships or vessels, the property of British subjects, whether European or Indian, entering the Rangoon River or other Burman ports, be required to land their guns or unship their rudders, or to do any other act not required of Burmese ships or vessels in British ports.

ADDITIONAL ARTICLE.

The British Commissioners being most anxiously desirous to manifest the sincerity of their wish for peace, and to make the immediate execution of the Fifth Article of this Treaty as little irksome, or inconvenient as possible to His Majesty the King of Ava, consent to the following arrangements, with respect to the division of the sum total, as specified in the Article before referred to, into instalments, viz. : upon the payment of twenty-five lacs of rupees, or one-fourth of the sum total (the other Articles of the Treaty being executed), the army will retire to Rangoon; upon the further payment of a similar sum at that place, within one hundred days from this date, with the proviso as above, the army will evacuate the dominions of His Majesty the King of Ava, with the least possible delay; leaving the remaining moiety of the sum total to be paid by equal annual instalments in two years, from this 24th day of February, 1826, A.
