

THE RISE OF THE
DUTCH REPUBLIC

A HISTORY

BY JOHN LOTHROP MOTLEY

IN THREE VOLUMES
VOL. III.

AUTHOR'S COPYRIGHT EDITION

LONDON
GEORGE ROUTLEDGE AND SONS
BROADWAY, LUDGATE HILL
GLASGOW, MANCHESTER, AND NEW YORK

1889

V5962. M9

B9.3

1233

CONTENTS OF VOL. III.

CHAPTER IV.

	PAGE
Assumption of affairs by the state council at Brussels—Hesitation at Madrid—Joachim Hopper—Mal-administration—Vigilance of Orange—The provinces drawn more closely together—Inequality of the conflict—Physical condition of Holland—New act of Union between Holland and Zealand—Authority of the Prince defined and enlarged—Provincial polity characterized—Generous sentiments of the Prince—His tolerant spirit—Letters from the King—Attitudes of the great powers towards the Netherlands—Correspondence and policy of Elisabeth—Secret negotiations with France and Alençon—Confused and menacing aspect of Germany—Responsible and laborious position of Orange—Attempt to relieve Zierickzee—Death of Admiral Boisot—Capitulation of the city upon honorable terms—Mutiny of the Spanish troops in Schouwen—General causes of discontent—Alarming increase of the mutiny—The rebel regiments enter Brabant—Fruitless attempts to pacify them—They take possession of Alost—Edicts, denouncing them, from the state council—Intense excitement in Brussels and Antwerp—Letters from Philip brought by Marquis Havré—The King's continued procrastination—Ruinous royal confirmation of the authority assumed by the state council—United and general resistance to foreign military oppression—The German troops, and the Antwerp garrison, under Avila, join the revolt—Letter of Verdugo—A crisis approaching—Jerome de Roda in the citadel—The mutiny universal	3

CHAPTER V.

Religious and political sympathies and antipathies in the seventeen provinces—Unanimous hatred for the foreign soldiery—Use made by the Prince of the mutiny—His correspondence—Necessity of union enforced—A congress from nearly all the provinces meets at Ghent—Skirmishes between the foreign troops and partisan bands—Slaughter at Tinsacq—Suspicious entertained of the state council—Arrest of the state council—Siege of Ghent citadel—Assistance sent by Orange—Maastricht lost and regained—Wealthy and perilous condition of Antwerp—Preparations of the mutineers under the secret superintendance of Avila—Stupidity of Oberstein—Duplicity of Don Sancho—Reinforcements of
--	--

	PAGE
Wallons under Havré, Egmont, and others, sent to Antwerp—Governor Champeigny's preparations for the expected assault of the mutineers—Insubordination, incapacity, and negligence of all but him—Concentration of all the mutineers from different points, in the citadel—The attack—the panic—the flight—the massacre—the fire—the sack—and other details of the "Spanish Fury"—Statistics of murder and robbery—Letter of Orange to the states-general—Surrender of Ghent citadel—Conclusion of the "Ghent Pacification"—The treaty characterized—Forms of ratification—Fall of Ziericksee and recovery of Zealand	25

---

PART V.

DON JOHN OF AUSTRIA. 1576--1578.

CHAPTER I.

Birth and parentage of Don John—Barbara Blomberg—Early education, and recognition by Philip—Brilliant military career—Campaign against the Moors—Battle of Lepanto—Extravagant ambition—Secret and rapid journey of the new Governor to the Netherlands—Contrast between Don John and William of Orange—Secret instructions of Philip and private purposes of the Governor—Cautious policy and correspondence of the Prince—Preliminary negotiations with Don John at Luxemburg characterized—Union of Brussels—Resumption of negotiations with the Governor at Huy—The discussions analysed and characterized—Influence of the new Emperor Rudolph II. and of his errors—Treaty of Marche en Famine, or the Perpetual Edict, signed—Remarks upon that transaction—Views and efforts of Orange in opposition to the treaty—His letter, in name of Holland and Zealand, to the states-general—Anxiety of the royal government to gain over the Prince—Secret mission of Leonina—His instructions from Don John—Fruitless attempts to corrupt the Prince—Secret correspondence between Don John and Orange—Don John at Louvain—His efforts to ingratiate himself with the Netherlanders—His incipient popularity—Departure of the Spanish troops—Duke of Aerschot appointed Governor of Antwerp citadel—His insincere character	65
---	----

CHAPTER II.

Triumphal entrance of Don John into Brussels—Reverse of the picture—Analysis of the secret correspondence of Don John and Escovedo with Antonio Perez—Plots against the Governor's liberty—His desponding language and gloomy anticipations—Recommendation of severe measures—Position and principles of Orange and his family—His private views on the question of peace and war—His toleration to Catholics and Anabaptists censured by his friends—Death of Viglius—New mission from the Governor to Orange—Details of the Gertruydenberg confer-
--	--

CONTENTS

v

	PAGE
ences—Nature and results of these negotiations—Papers exchanged between the envoys and Orange—Peter Paris executed for heresy—Three parties in the Netherlands—Dissimulation of Don John—His dread of capture . . . . .	109

CHAPTER III.

The city of Namur—Margaret of Valois—Her intrigues in Hainault in favor of Alençon—Her reception by Don John at Namur—Festivities in her honor—Seizure of Namur citadel by Don John—Plan for seizing that of Antwerp—Letter of the estates to Philip, sent by Escovedo—Fortunes and fate of Escovedo in Madrid—Repairing of dykes—The Prince's visit to Holland—His letter to the estates-general on the subject of Namur citadel—His visit to Utrecht—Correspondence and commissioners between Don John and the estates—Acrimonious and passionate character of these colloquies—Attempt of Trelong upon Antwerp citadel frustrated by De Bours—Fortunate panic of the German mercenaries—Antwerp evacuated by the foreign troops—Renewed correspondence—Audacity of the Governor's demands—Letters of Escovedo and others intercepted—Private scheme of Don John not understood by the estates—His letter to the Empress Dowager—More correspondence with the estates—Painful and false position of the Governor—Demolition, in part, of Antwerp citadel, and of other fortresses by the patriots—Status of Alva—Letter of estates-general to the King . . . . .

144

CHAPTER IV.

Orange invited to visit Brussels—His correspondence upon the subject with the estates-general—Triumphant journey of the Prince to the capital—Stop put by him to the negotiations with Don John—New and stringent demands made upon the Governor—His indignation—Open rupture—Intrigue of Netherland grandees with Archduke Matthias—Policy of Orange—Attitude of Queen Elizabeth—Flight of Matthias from Vienna—Anxiety of Elisabeth—Adroitness of the Prince—The office of Ruward—Election of Orange to that dignity—His complaints against the great nobles—Aerschoot Governor of Flanders—A storm brewing in Ghent—Ryhove and Imbise—Blood-Councillor Hesseels—Arrogance of the aristocratic party in Flanders—Ryhove's secret interview with Orange—Outbreak at Ghent—Arrest of Aerschoot, Hesseels, and others of the reactionary party—The Duke liberated at demand of Orange—The Prince's visit to Ghent—"Rhetorical" demonstrations—The new Brussels Union characterized—Treaty with England—Articles by which Matthias is nominally constituted Governor-General—His inauguration at Brussels—Brilliant and fantastic ceremonies—Letter of Don John to the Emperor—His anger with England—An army collecting—Arrival of Alexander Farnese—Injudicious distribution of offices in the states' army—The states' army fall back upon Gemblours, followed by Don John—Tremendous overthrow of the patriots—Wonderful disparity in the respective losses of the two armies . . . . .

180

CHAPTER V.

Towns taken by Don John—Wrath excited against the aristocratic party by the recent defeat—Attempts upon Amsterdam—"Satisfaction" of Amsterdam and its effects—De Salles sent with royal letters from Spain

	PAGE
—Terms offered by Philip—Proclamation of Don John—Correspondence between De Solles and the states-general—Between the King and the Governor-General—New forces raised by the states—St. Aldegonde at the Diet—Municipal revolution in Amsterdam—The Prince's letter on the subject of the Anabaptists of Middelburg—The two armies inactive—De la Noue—Action at Rijnemants—John Casimir—Perverse politics of Queen Elizabeth—Alençon in the Netherlands—Portrait of the Duke—Orange's position in regard to him—Avowed and supposed policy of the French Court—Anger of Elizabeth—Terms arranged between Alençon and the estates—Renewed negotiations with Don John—Severe terms offered him—Interview of the English envoys with the Governor—Despondency of Don John—Orange's attempts to enforce a religious peace—His isolation in sentiment—The Malcontent party—Count John Governor of Gelderland—Proposed form of religious peace—Proclamation to that effect by Orange, in Antwerp—A petition in favor of the Roman Church presented by Champagny and other Catholic nobles to the states-general—Consequent commotion in Brussels—Champagny and others imprisoned—Indolence and poverty of the two armies—Illness and melancholy of Don John—His letters to Doris, to Mendoza, and to the King—Death of Don John—Suspicious of poison—Foppish burial—Removal of his body to Spain—Concluding remarks upon his character	224

PART VI.

ALEXANDER OF PARMA. 1578—1584.

CHAPTER I.

Birth, education, marriage, and youthful character of Alexander Farnese—His private adventures—Exploits at Lepanto and at Gemblours—He succeeds to the government—Personal appearance and characteristics—Aspect of affairs—Internal dissensions—Anjou at Mons—John Casimir's intrigues at Ghent—Anjou disbands his soldiers—The Netherlands ravaged by various foreign troops—Anarchy and confusion in Ghent—Imbrie and Rybore—Fate of Hesaels and Visch—New pacification drawn up by Orange—Representations of Queen Elizabeth—Remonstrance of Brussels—Riots and image-breaking in Ghent—Displeasure of Orange—His presence implored at Ghent, where he establishes a religious Peace—Painful situation of John Casimir—Sharp rebukes of Elizabeth—He takes his departure—His troops apply to Farnese, who allows them to leave the country—Anjou's departure and manifesto—Elizabeth's letters to the states-general with regard to him—Complimentary addresses by the estates to the Duke—Death of Bossu—Calumnies against Orange—Vexality of the Malcontent grandees—La Motte's treason—Intrigues of the Prior of Reuty—Saint Aldegonde at Arras—The Prior of St. Vaast's exertions—Opposition of the clergy in the Walloon provinces to the taxation of the general government—Triangular contest—Municipal revolution in Arras led by Goussin and others—Counter-revolution—Rapid trials and executions—"Reconciliation" of the Malcontent chieftains—Secret treaty of Mount St. Eloi—Mischief made by the Prior of Renty—His accusations against the reconciled lords—Vengeance taken upon him—Counter movement by the liberal party—Union of Utrecht—The act analyzed and characterized	263

	PAGE

CHAPTER II.

Parma's feint upon Antwerp—He invests Maastricht—Deputation and letters from the states-general, from Brussels, and from Parma, to the Walloon provinces—Active negotiations by Orange and by Farnese—Walloon envoys in Parma's camp before Maastricht—Festivities—The Treaty of Reconciliation—Rejoicings of the royalist party—Comedy enacted at the Paris theatres—Religious tumults in Antwerp, Utrecht, and other cities—Religious peace enforced by Orange—Philip Egmont's unsuccessful attempt upon Brussels—Siege of Maastricht—Failure at the Tongres gate—Mining and countermining—Partial destruction of the Tongres ravelin—Simultaneous attack upon the Tongres and Bois-le-Duc gates—The Spaniards repulsed with great loss—Gradual encroachments of the besiegers—Bloody contests—The town taken—Horrible massacre—Triumphal entrance and solemn thanksgiving—Calumnious attacks upon Orange—Renewed troubles in Ghent—Imbize and Dathenus—The presence of the Prince sollied—Coup d'état of Imbize—Order restored, and Imbize expelled by Orange	303
--	-----

CHAPTER III.

The Cologne conferences—Intentions of the parties—Preliminary attempt by government to purchase the Prince of Orange—Offer and rejection of various articles among the plenipotentiaries—Departure of the imperial commissioners—Ultimatum of the states compared with that of the royal government—Barren negotiations terminated—Treason of De Bours, Governor of Mechlin—Liberal theories concerning the nature of government—Abjuration of Phillip imminent—Self-denial of Orange—Attitude of Germany—of England—Marriage negotiations between Elizabeth and Anjou—Orange favors the election of the Duke as sovereign—Address and speeches of the Prince— parsimony and interprovincial jealousy rebuked—Secret correspondence of Count Renneberg with the royal government—His treason at Gröningen	339
---	-----

CHAPTER IV.

Captivity of La Noue—Cruel propositions of Phillip—Siege of Gröningen—Death of Barthold Entes—His character—Hohenlo commands in the north—His incompetence—He is defeated on Hardenberg Heath—Petty operations—Isolation of Orange—Dissatisfaction and departure of Count John—Remonstrance of Archduke Matthias—Embassy to Anjou—Holland and Zealand offer the sovereignty to Orange—Conquest of Portugal—Granvelle proposes the Ban against the Prince—It is published—The document analyzed—The Apology of Orange analyzed and characterized—Siege of Sionwyk by Renneberg—Forgeries—Siege relieved—Death of Renneberg—Institution of the "Land-Connell"—Duchess of Parma sent to the Netherlands—Anger of Alexander—Prohibition of Catholic worship in Antwerp, Utrecht, and elsewhere—Declaration of Independence by the United Provinces—Negotiations with An-
--	--

Jon—The sovereignty of Holland and Zealand provisionally accepted by Orange—Tripartition of the Netherlands—Power of the Prince described—Act of Abjuration analyzed—Philosophy of Netherland politics—Views of the government compact—Acquiescence by the people in the action of the estates—Departure of Archduke Matthias . . .	PAGE 357
---	-------------

CHAPTER V.

Policy of electing Anjou as sovereign—Commoda et incommoda—Views of Orange—Opinions at the French Court—Anjou relieves Cambrai—Parma besieges Tournay—Brave defence by the Princess of Espinoy—Honorable capitulation—Anjou's courtship in England—The Duke's arrival in the Netherlands—Portrait of Anjou—Festivities in Flushing—Inauguration at Antwerp—The conditions or articles subscribed to by the Duke—Attempt upon the life of Orange—The assassin's papers—Confession of Venero—Gaspar Anastro—His escape—Execution of Venero and Zimmermann—Precarious condition of the Prince—His recovery—Death of the Princess—Premature letters of Parma—Further negotiations with Orange as to the sovereignty of Holland and Zealand—Character of the revised constitution—Comparison of the positions of the Prince before and after his acceptance of the courtship . . .	291
---	-----

CHAPTER VI.

Parma recalls the foreign troops—Siege of Oudenarde—Coolness of Alexander—Capture of the city and of Ninove—Inauguration of Anjou at Ghent—Attempt upon his life and that of Orange—Lamoral Egmont's implication in the plot—Parma's unsuccessful attempt upon Ghent—Secret plans of Anjou—Dunkirk, Ostend, and other towns surprised by his adherents—Failure at Bruges—Suspicion at Antwerp—Duplicity of Anjou—The "French Fury"—Details of that transaction—Discomfiture and disgrace of the Duke—His subsequent effrontery—His letters to the magistracy of Antwerp, to the estates, and to Orange—Extensive correspondence between Anjou and the French Court with Orange and the estates—Difficult position of the Prince—His policy—Remarkable letter to the states-general—Provisional arrangement with Anjou—Marriage of the Archbishop of Cologne—Marriage of Orange with Louisa de Coligny—Movements in Holland, Brabant, Flanders, and other provinces, to induce the Prince to accept sovereignty over the whole country—His steady refusal—Treason of Van den Berg in Gueldres—Intrigues of Prince Chimay and Imbise in Flanders—Counter efforts of Orange and the patriot party—Fate of Imbise—Reconciliation of Bruges—Death of Anjou . . .	421
---	-----

CHAPTER VII.

Various attempts upon the life of Orange—Delft—Mansion of the Prince described—Francis Guion or Balthazar Gérard—His antecedents—His correspondence and interviews with Parma and with D'Assonleville—His employment in France—His return to Delft and interview with Orange—The crime—The confession—The punishment—The consequences—Concluding remarks . . .	459
--	-----

INDEX.

the Roman numerals refer to the volume ; the figures to the pages.

- Accord, signed between Margaret of Parma and confederated Netherland nobles, 1566, l. 484 ; of 29th of October, 1576, between Sancho d'Avila and Count Oberstein, iii. 36.
- Address, royal, issued by Alva after the fall of Harlem, ii. 393.
- Adrian VI., Pope, denounces the crimes of the Church, l. 70.
- Aerschot, Duke of, his birth and character, i. 90 ; quarrels with Egmont, and refuses to join league against Granvello, 328 ; appointed Governor of the citadel of Antwerp, after its evacuation by Spanish troops, iii. 107 ; selfishness of his character and motives, 108 ; is distrusted by all parties, ib. ; oath of allegiance administered to him by Escovedo, ib. ; his falsehoods both to Don John and Prince of Orange, 141 ; informs Don John that Prince of Orange is meditating a forcible seizure of his person, 142 ; gives Orange private information concerning the government, and sends him intercepted letters from his enemies, ib. ; deserts Don John, and makes up to Orange again, after failure of the former's plan against Antwerp citadel, 171 ; head of the cabal to bring Archduke of Austria to Netherlands, 195 ; discontent of people with his appointment as Governor of Flanders, 196 ; his entry into Ghent as Governor of Flanders, ib. ; suspicious entertained of him by Reformed party there, ib. ; capitulates to insurgents of Ghent, 203 ; is taken prisoner by them, ib.
- Alava, Don Francis de, forged letter from, to Margaret of Parma, ii. 28 ; report to Philip on state of Netherlands and conduct of Alva, 296.
- Aldegonda, St. Philip de Marinx, Lord of, said to be the author of the Compromise, l. 412 ; his character and attainments, 415 ; address to congress of Dort in behalf of Prince of Orange, ii. 324 ; despatched to Harlem by Prince of Orange, to make a thorough change in body of magistracy, 365 ; his life saved by capture of Spanish Admiral Bossu, 419 ; is released from prison, and despatched on secret mission to Orange and the estates, ii. 488 ; report of estates in answer to his propositions, ib. ; is sent as chief of a mission to Queen Elizabeth of England, to offer to her the sovereignty of Holland and Zealand, 522 ; leaves England without having effected his purpose, 524 ; lays before estates meagre result of his mission, ib. ; his despatch at religious tolerance of Prince of Orange, iii. 129.
- Alençon, Duke of, and Anjou, intrigues of Catholic Netherland nobles with, iii. 238 ; his character and career, 239 ; relations with Prince of Orange, 241 ; dispatches envoys to states-general of Netherlands and to Orange, to offer assistance after battle of Gemblours, ib. ; engagements entered - into between him and states-general of Netherlands, 244; departure from Netherlands, 281; exchange of courtesy with estates, 282; policy of electing him for sovereign of Netherlands, 381; limitations to be put to his power, 395; arrives in Netherlands in 1561, at the head of five thousand troops, 396; departs for England, &c.; special mission from estates proceeds to England to make arrangements for his former installation as sovereign of Netherlands, 398; returns to Netherlands, accompanied by a number of English gentlemen, 399; is received at Flushing by Orange and deputation from states-general, &c.; his personal appearance, 400; his character and capacities, &c.; ceremony of his inauguration, &c.; procession escorting him to Antwerp, 403; festive reception within the city, 404; prohibitions against Catholic worship raised, 405; constitution signed by him at Bordeaux, &c.; is suspected of complicity in attempted assassination of Orange, 406; is formally accepted as Duke of Gueldres and Lord of Friesland, 424; scheme to poison him and Orange, &c.; ceremonies of his reception at Ghent interrupted by an attack on his troops by Parma, 425; first whisperings of treason against Orange and against the states, 426; plot for seizing the most important cities by surprise, and making himself absolute master, 427; failure of the plot at Bruges, 428; mendacious asseverations used to allay suspicions of his plot against Antwerp, 429; attempt upon the city, 430; total failure, 433; indignation of French noblemen in his suite at his treachery, 434; causes of his defeat at Antwerp, 435; effrontery evinced in subsequent communications with Orange and with magistracy of Antwerp, 436; declares attempt upon Antwerp to have been quite unexpected by him, 430; efforts at reconciliation, 446; intrigues with counts of Parma, 443; provisional accord signed between him and provinces, 25th and 27th March, 448; even Netherlands never to return, &c.; enters into renewed negotiations with states-general, 456; is taken ill and dies, &c.

- Alkmaar, city of, its situation, li. 395; is invested by Don Frederic de Toledo, &c.; heroic repulse of the assaut, 399; raising of the siege, 402.
- Alva, Ferdinando Alvarez de Toledo, Duke of, his enmity to Ray Gomez, li. 131; at first not beloved by Philip II., 132; eclipsed by Ray Gomez, &c.; believed to be hesitating and timid, &c.; his conduct of Italian campaign, 145; signs treaty of peace with Pope Paul IV., 147; negotiates with King of France a scheme for extirpation of Protestantism, 208; advises Philip to disassemble with Netherland nobles, 209; his advice to Philip about Granvelle's dismissal, 350; accompanies Queen of Spain to Bayonne to meet Catherine de Medici, 388; instructed by Philip to promote in every way plan for simultaneous destruction of heretics in France and in Spanish dominions, &c.; diplomatic talent revealed in the letters from Bayonne, &c.; proposes secret league against Protestants, 399; despatched from Madrid with a Spanish army to crush the remaining liberties of Netherlands, li. 70; his suitability for task assigned to him in Netherlands, 88; his great military attainments, 80; his descent, education, and early career, &c.; cause of his hatred to Egmont, 91; his character and manners, 92; his personal appearance, 94; exquisiteness of the army with which he proceeded to Netherlands, &c.; commanders of this army, &c.; embarks at Cartagena on 10th May, 95; order of march of his army, &c.; armies of observation hovering on his flanks, 96; encamps within Netherland territory without having encountered any opposition, &c.; his contempt for Egmont and people, &c.; begins to receive troubling welcomes from cities and authorities, 97; his first meeting with Egmont, &c.; his reception by Margaret of Parma, 98; circular letters from the King and the Regent command unconditional submission to his orders, 109; distributes his troops through the principal cities, and demands the keys of them, 101; purpose for which he was despatched to Netherlands, ib.; his treacherous proceedings to entrap Horn, 104; informs Philip of success of his plan, 109; establishes Council of Troubles, 117; is assisted in the choice of members by Viglius, 119; his zealous attendance in Council of Troubles or Blood-Council, 122; is appointed Governor-General of Netherlands, 127; propositions made to him by French Court, 129; despatches an auxiliary force to France, 130; his plan for seizing the person of the Count de Buren, son of the Prince of Orange, 135; ferocious reply to magistracy of Antwerp when soliciting mercy for imprisoned citizens, 136; his reply to appeals in favour of Egmont and Horn, 143; first measure taken against patriot army, 160; his wrath at loss of battle of Holy Lion, 170; atrocious measures against nobles taken in consequence, 171; his cruelly ambiguous answer to Countess of Egmont, 173; increased hatred of him in consequence of execution of Egmont and Horn, 183; measures taken to avenge the defeat of Arnhem, 185; routs Nassau near Groningen, 188; defeats him again at Jemmingen, 191; destroys Nassau's army near Selwaert Abbey, 192; returns to Utrecht, and beheads an old woman, 195; repairs to Brussels and recommences his persecutions against citizens, 207; his plans of campaign against William of Orange, 218; incidents of the campaign, 220; returns in triumph to Brussels after discomfiture of William of Orange, 228; causes monument to be erected to himself, 229; quarrel with Queen Elizabeth of England, 239; severe measures against English subjects, 241; continuation of atrocious religious persecutions, ib.; signal marks of the Pope's approbation of his proceedings, 243; new scheme of taxation laid before provincial estates of Brussels, 245; atrocious means used for enforcing new system of taxation, 249; begs to be recalled from Netherlands, 253; proclaims an amnesty, 255; renewed contentions with estates at Netherlands on the subject of taxes, 261; symptoms of declining power, 284; his opinion of scheme against Queen of England, 287; prudential and artful remonstrances against Philip's instructions, 288; sends assassins to England to attempt the life of the Queen, 290; his successor in Netherlands appointed, 291; protestations of love for Netherlands, 292; interview with Alava at Brussels, 294; open revolt against his new tax, 297; his rage at rapid and successful revolt of various provinces and cities, 319; despatches his son to lay siege to Mons, 320; consents to abolish tax of tenth penny on condition of a yearly supply from estates, 321; congratulates Philip on sack of Mechlin, ordered by himself, 350; blasphemous account of atrocious proceedings against Narden, 360; relations with Modena Coll, 392; attempts to win back the allegiance of other cities after the fall of Harlem, 393; letters to Philip on the subject of Alkmaar, 396; suspicious against King of France, 403; his position in Netherlands in 1573, and relations with various individuals there, 419; surreptitious departure from Amsterdam, 421; final departure from Netherlands, 422; number of persons executed in Netherlands during his government, 423; close of his career, ib.; retrospective view of his great military talents, ib.; his ignorance and want of skill as a financier, ib.; his character as an administrator of civil and judicial affairs, ib.; parting advice on leaving Netherlands, 424; his inconceivable cruelty, ib.; vindication of the view given of his character, 425, 426 nota.

Amnesty, proclaimed at Antwerp in 1570, il. 255; exceptions in, 256; dissatisfaction with, 257; published 1554, 463; effect produced by it, 463.

Amsterdam, its critical position during siege of Harlem, il. 375; refuses to acknowledge the authority of Prince of Orange, il. 226; various schemes set on foot by estates of the provinces to gain the city, ib.; treaty of "Satisfaction" at length esta- blished, 227; plot for placing city in the hands of Don John by aid of Swedish ships, 232; municipal revolution in, ib.; incidents of popular movements, 233.

- Anabaptists, their excesses, i. 71; persecution of, ib.
- Anastro, Gaspard d', a Spanish merchant of Antwerp, saved from bankruptcy by Philip II. on condition of assassinating Prince of Orange, iii. 411.
- Antwerp, city of, its commercial greatness, i. 74; origin of its name and escutcheon, ib.; its great commercial houses, ib.; its civic institutions, 75; state of schools, ib.; gorgeous pageantries in honour of Philip II., 122; rejoicings at supposed birth of heir of Philip and Mary, 124; on occasion of truce of Vaucelles, 138; rejoicings at conclusion of peace of Caucan Cambresis, 181; popular outbreak at, on occasion of execution of Christopher Smith, 374; effects of republication of edicts and canons of Trent on prosperity of city, 402; enthusiastic reception of William of Orange in 1566, 455; tumult at, in consequence of defeat of sectarian force at Ostrawell, ib. 54; submits to receive a garrison, 70; building of citadel of, 130; description of citadel, ib.; magistracy of Antwerp solicit mercy for imprisoned citizens, 136; proclamation of amnesty at, in 1570, 255; seized by mutinous Spanish troops, 456; engagements entered into by citizens to rid themselves of mutineers, 453; is again menaced by the Spanish mutineers, ib. 3; its flourishing state in the midst of general desolation, ib.; measures of defence, 37; confused council, 39; zeal of citizens of all ranks in defence of city, 40; first cannonade from the citadel, 41; exertions of Champigny, ib.; the morning before the attack, 42; the attack, 44; incidents of the struggle, 45; destruction of the city, 47; horrible massacre, ib.; atrocious acts committed by Spanish soldiery to extort gold from citizens, 48; dreadful spectacle presented by the city after the massacre and pillage, 50; speculations of victors, 52; statistics of the slain, 54; negotiations with German troops after seizure of citadel by De Boura, 165; flight of mercenaries, 166; abortive attempt made by Duke of Anjou to seize the city, 430; incidents of struggle between burghers and followers of Duke of Anjou, 432; defence of their conduct published by the authorities of the city, 440.
- Antwerp, citadel of, plots and counterplots for obtaining possession of, iii. 163; eventually gained for estates, 165; razed to the ground on side towards city, 177; popular fury against statue of Alva, ib.
- Apology of Prince of Orange in reply to Ban of King of Spain, iii. 358.
- Architecture of Netherlands, i. 464; destruction of architectural monuments by image-breakers, 465; cathedral of Antwerp, 466.
- Arenberg and Meghen despatched with a Spanish force against Louis of Nassau, ib. 162; moor Nassau near the monastery of the Holy Lion, 165; is defeated, 167; his death, 169.
- Aristocracy, character of, at commencement of Regency of Margaret of Parma, i. 221; views entertained by, with regard to the Church, 224.
- Armenteros, Thomas de, despatched by Regent to Spain, i. 333; his character, ib.; his instructions, ib.; his first interview with Philip, 335; his cupidity and venality, 369; his confidential intimacy with Regent, ib.
- Army, rate of payment in Netherlands, ib. 525 note.
- Arras, 367; municipal revolution effected by Gosson, iii. 259; counter-revolution, 260.
- Arens, Pierre, president of Artois, memorializes Alva in favour of Egmont, ib. 156.
- Artois*, estates of, their address to Philip II. on his departure from Netherlands, i. 185.
- Austria, Don John of, his romantic entry into Netherlands, iii. 61; his birth, 65; early education, 67; theatrical disclosure of his imperial descent, 68; amity between him and Don Carlos, 69; his campaigns against the Moors and the Turks, ib.; battle of Lepanto, 71; spread of his fame, 73; disinterestedness

- Philip, 74; his plans upon Mary Stuart and the kingdoms of England and Scotland, 75; is appointed Governor-General of the Netherlands, ib.; stops at Paris on his way to Netherlands, and becomes enamoured of Queen of Navarre, 76; his personal beauty, ib.; comparison between him and William of Orange, 77; instructions furnished to him by Philip, 78; false position in which he was placed in Netherlands, ib.; citizens of Namur forbidden to take oath of allegiance to him until he has complied with preliminary demands of estates, 82; first interview with estates-general at Luxemburg, 83; demands made by deputies, ib.; reply to them, 84; new discussions with deputies from estates at Huy, 88; freedom of tone used by deputies, ib.; his reply to three questions put by deputies, ib.; declares his intention not to maintain the Treaty of Ghent, ib.; altercations with deputies, 90; concessions offered by him, 91; virtually accedes to Pacification of Ghent, ib.; desires and endeavours to conciliate Prince of Orange, 99; his views as to position held by Orange in estimation of Netherland people, ib.; repairs to Louvain, 103; his affability and popularity, ib.; intercedes with Philip in favour of commanders of Spanish troops withdrawn from Netherlands, 107; his triumphal entrance into Brussels, 109; his hatred of Netherlands, 110; his correspondence with and betrayal by Antonio Perez, ib.; letters to Philip on his position in Netherlands, 111; on relations with England, 113; letters to Perez on same subjects, 116; further communications to Philip on the same subjects, 124; makes new advances to Orange, 128; issues edict commanding strict enforcement of Canons of Trent, 139; his intrigues with German troops in Netherlands, 141; constant fears of capture or assassination, ib.; flies from Brussels to Mechlin, 142; is informed by Aerschot that Prince of Orange is planning a violent seizure of his person, ib.; repairs to Namur to greet the Queen of Navarre, 146; chivalrous reception given to Queen of Navarre, 147; treacherous seizure of Castle of Namur, 150; plan for seizure of citadel of Antwerp, 151; reiterated complaints to estates of conspiracies against his life, 161; demands that soldiers and citizens throughout Brabant shall be disarmed, ib.; and that a list of persons qualified to sit in general assembly shall be submitted to him for elimination, 162; requires that estates shall cease to hold communication with Prince of Orange if he does not fulfil Treaty of Ghent, ib.; requests to be provided with a body-guard, ib.; reply of estates to these demands, ib.; his secret practices discovered by interception of his letters, ib.; furious complaints of intrigues of Orange, 163; result of his projects on Antwerp Castle, ib.; rage at failure of his plan on Antwerp citadel, 167; extraordinary demands addressed by him to estates in letter of 7th of August, 1577, ib.; letter to Empress-dowager his sister, characterizing the Netherlands as a bad people, and the Prince of Orange as a perverse and heretic tyrant, 169; his courtiers begin to desert him, 171; letter to estates dated 13th August, 1577, expressive of his extreme desire for peace, ib.; reply of estates to this letter, intimating that his intercepted letters proved him unworthy of their confidence, 172; arrangement with Ayamonte and Idiaquez for return of Spanish troops to Flanders, 174; increasing bluntness of tone assumed by estates in their correspondence with him, ib.; categorical conditions of reconciliation stipulated by estates, 175; attempted justification of his own conduct in reply to estates, 178; requests a formal conference with estates accompanied by an exchange of hostages, 177; new and harder conditions imposed on him by estates after arrival of Prince of Orange in Brussels, 185; his extreme indignation at these proposals, 186; leaves Namur for Luxemburg after having despatched a final communication to estates, 187; intrigues with Duke of Guiso, 191; declared

- by estates-general an enemy of the country, 180; letter to Emperor of Germany urging him to adopt the cause of Spanish government in Netherlands, 213; threat uttered in interview with English envoy, Leyton, 214; collects an army at Luxembourg, 215; change in his appearance, &c.; issues a proclamation French, German, and Flemish, &c.; military advantages possessed by him, 216; privileges conferred on him by the Pope, 217; towns taken by him after battle of Gemblours, and atrocities committed, 224; preparations for new campaign, 230; unsuccessful efforts to rouse the King to a more decisive policy, &c.; issues manifesto dissolving estates, general and provincial, 231; renewed attempts at conciliation with estates, 244; convention submitted to him by states-general, 246; is rejected by him as iniquitous, 247; forced to inactivity in his fortified camp of Bonaig, gives himself up to despondency, 253; melancholy letter to Andrew Doris, &c.; idem to Pedro Mendonza, 254; idem to Philip II., &c.; seeing death approaching, appoints Alexander Farnese to be his successor, 256; his death supposed to be occasioned by poison, &c.; his funeral rites, &c.; mode in which his body was transported through France to Spain, 256; presentation of the corpse to Philip, &c.; retrospective view of his character and capacities, 259.
- Austria, Maximiliana of, marries Mary of Burgundy, i. 47; his crafty policy, 48; Governor of the Netherlands during minority of his children, &c.; is taken prisoner by the citizens of Bruges, &c.; is released by the other estates, 49; swears to the treaty with the Flemings, &c.; succeeds to the imperial throne, 59; intrigues to be elected Pope, 64.
- Austria, House of, accession of, i. 48; obtains absolute dominion over Flanders and other provinces, 49.
- Austria, Matthias, Archduke of, invited to Brussels by Catholic nobles, iii. 198; escapes secretly from Vienna, and repairs to Netherlands, 199; opposition of Queen of Eng-
- land to his nomination, 191; is received at Antwerp by Orange, 192; is accepted as Governor-General of Netherlands, 208; limitation of his power as such, &c.; articles forming basis on which he was accepted, &c.; ceremony of his inauguration, 210; summons meeting of estates at Antwerp to remonstrate against negotiations with Anjou, 265; departs from Netherlands, 269; insignificance of part played by him there, 301.
- Auto-da-fé on return of Philip II. to Spain, i. 193; description of ceremonials observed at, 282, 283.
- Avila, Don Sancho d', successful operations against Louis of Nassau at Maestricht, ii. 446; defeats Louis in battle of Mook, 448; opens communication with mutineers while holding the citadel of Antwerp, iii. 23; recognized as chief of the mutiny, 26; gains over the leaders of the German forces in the city of Antwerp, &c.
- Bakkerwed, confidential secretary of Egmont, his character and influence over his master, i. 202; his influence over Egmont, and excessive cruelty, ii. 11; arrested the same day as his master, 108; is subjected to the torture to extract his secrets, 113; is executed by order of Alva, 207.
- Ban, against the Prince of Orange, issued by the King of Spain, iii. 209.
- Bandes d'ordonnance, standing army of Netherlands, i. 164.
- Barden, William, a warm partizan of Prince of Orange, effects a municipal revolution in Amsterdam, iii. 232.
- Bartholomew, the massacre of, ii. 332; rejoicings chased by, in Spanish camp before Mons, 335.
- Batavia, island of, i. 2.
- Batavians, characteristics of, i. 4; esteem in which they were held by Rome, 5; form an alliance with Rome, 11; help Germanicus to crush the liberties of their German kindred, 12; extinction of name, 17.
- Batenburg, is despatched at the head of a considerable but irregular force, to relieve Harlem, ii. 292; his plans discovered by Spaniards, &c.; is

- slain, and his troops utterly routed, 353.
- Bavaria, Duke William of, established, as Lord of Hainault, i. 36; is succeeded by his brother Albert, 42.
- Beauvoir, Philip de Lanoy, Seigneur de, attacks and disperses Tholouse's force at Ostrawell, ii. 53.
- Bede, or Request made to the estates in 1556, i. 140.
- Beggars, the Wild, origin of the brotherhood, ii. 138; cruelties perpetrated by them, 42; of the Sea, laws given to them by Prince of Orange, 278; assembled by Boisot, for the relief of Leyden, 469.
- Bergh, Count Van den, brother-in-law of Orange, abandons his trust and flies the country, ii. 356; serious consequences to patriot cause, 42; delivers up the important town of Zutphen to Parma, iii. 451; is arrested and imprisoned, 452; he and all his sons take service under Philip, 42.
- Berghen, Marquis of, his detestation of system of persecution, i. 298; refuses to sign letter of nobles to Philip, complaining of Granvelle, 329; his sickness and death at Madrid, ii. 114; confiscation of his property, 116.
- Berlaymont, Baron, his character, i. 91; member of State-Council appointed by Philip, 202; various opinions of his character, 42; attempts to conciliate both parties, and discredits himself with both, 328; accepts the office of member of the Blood Council, ii. 121.
- Berty, Secretary, sent by Regent on a special mission to Antwerp, to gain William of Orange, ii. 73; prevails upon the Prince to hold an interview with other seigniors at Willebroek, 74.
- Billy, Seigneur de, despatched to Spain by Margaret of Parma, to represent the inexpediency of sending Alva to Netherlands, ii. 71; warns Egmont of the coming danger, 103; and lulls Horn into false security, 104.
- Bishops, number of increased, i. 232; Bull of Paul IV. authorising erection of new bishoprics, 233; dissatisfaction created by this measure, 237.
- Blaise Bouset, a cobbler of Mons, hanged for eating meat soup on a Friday, ii. 345.
- Blas, Bertrand le, a velvet manufacturer of Tournay, takes the consecrated wafer from the hands of a priest in cathedral, and tramples it under foot, i. 291; frightful punishment invented for him, 292.
- Blomberg, Barbara, mother of Don John, of Austria, iii. 65; her shrewish character the torment of Alva's life, 42.
- Boards of Council, their constitution, i. 183; number of, 42.
- Bodavero, testimony to Ruy Gomez, devotion to Philip II., i. 133.
- Boisot, Admiral, assembles a fleet for the relief of Leyden, ii. 469; gradual advance with force towards Leyden, 471; captures Zoeterwoude, 478; despairs of passing fortrees of Lammen, 42; is relieved by flight of Spaniards, 479; enters Leyden, 480; abortive attempt to relieve Ziericksee, iii. 12; death of, 13.
- Boisot, Charles van, slain by his own soldiers at Duiveland, ii. 516.
- Bosch, Count, appointed commander-in-chief of patriot army, iii. 236; worsts the royalists near Rinemans, 42; avoids a general engagement with enemy, 42; suspicions against him, 42; his death calumniously attributed to poison administered by Prince of Orange, 283.
- Bourbon, Charlotte of, her early history, ii. 502; marries William of Orange, 506.
- Bours, De, carries Antwerp citadel for the estates, iii. 164; is induced by Peter Lupus to become a traitor to Orange and the patriot cause, 340; surrenders the city, 341.
- Borleaux, treaty of, signed by Duke of Anjou, on accepting sovereignty of Netherlands, iii. 397.
- Brabant, ancient constitution of, called the "Joyeuse Entrée," i. 236; compromise in, between abbeyes and bishops, 279; four principal cities of, enter solemn protestation against edicts, as violations of the Joyeuse Entrée, 404; declared free of the Inquisition, 405.
- Bray, Guido de, a reformed preacher of Valenciennes, ii. 68; his answer to the Countess of Rieux, 42; his firmness under the gibbet, 69.
- Breda, negotiations for peace opened at, ii. 494; closing of conferences, 499.

- Brederode, his personal appearance and character, i. 92; his effort to make Granvelle ridiculous, 307; his devotion to Egmont, and insulting conduct to Archbishop of Cambray, 3-3; one of the first to sign Compromise, 414; selected to present Request to Regent, 429; his genealogical claims to sovereignty of Netherlands, &c.; his habits and character, &c.; his famous banquet to confederates, 436; accused of eating a capon on Good Friday, 441; his eccentricities during the autumn and winter of 1566, ii. 44; presents new Petition or Request to Regent, 49; enrolls troops against government, and contemplates an attempt against Walcheren, 50; proposes to march to the relief of Valenciennes, 52; his ridiculous conduct at Amsterdam, 79; arrests La Torre, sent thither by Regent to obtain from magistracy his forcible ejection from the city, 80; makes his submission to Margaret of Parma, &c.; dies in Germany, 81; fate of his followers, &c.
- Brill, attack and capture of fortress of, by Beggars of the Sea, ii. 302; vain attempt at recapture by Spaniards, 304; population takes oath of allegiance to Prince of Orange as stadtholder, 305.
- Brueil, commandant of St. Quentin, applies for reinforcements to resist attack of Spanish army, i. 165.
- Bruges, inhabitants of, present remonstrances to Regent, against proceedings of Peter Titelmans, the inquisitor, i. 376; unsuccessful resistance of citizens of, to scheme of Anjou to seize the city, iii. 423; city of surrendered by Prince of Chimsey to Spanish government, 456; Accord signed at, allowing Protestants to leave the country, &c.
- Bruyn, John of, disciple of Hubert van Eyck, i. 41.
- Brunswick, character of the city, i. 87; meeting of states-general of Brunswick at, on occasion of abdication of Charles V., 89; preparations for execution of Egmont and Horn, ii. 176; forced rejoicings on occasion of Alva's triumphant return after first campaign against Orange, 2-3; revolt against Spaniards, iii. 21; new Act of Union signed 10th Dec. 1577, guaranteeing rights of Catholics and Protestants, 206; third and last confederation of all the Netherlands, &c.; ceremony of the inauguration of Archduke Matthias, as Governor-General of Netherlands, 210; rage of people against nobles after battle of Gemblours, 225; complete defence of, &c.
- Buren, Count de, son of William of Orange, kidnapped by Alva, and sent to Spain, ii. 134; change in his character under Spanish influence, 135.
- Burger class, power of, in Netherlands, i. 29.
- Burgundy, Margaret of, marries William of Hainault, i. 36.
- Burgundy, Mary of, succeeds her father, Charles the Bold, i. 44; people of Netherlands rise against her to recover their liberties, 45; Louis XI. seizes her Burgundian inheritance, &c.; grants the "Groot Privilegie" and other charters, &c.; intrigues with Louis XI., 47; marries Maximilian of Austria, &c.; is succeeded by her son Philip, 48.
- Burgundy, Philip of, surnamed The Good, succeeds to the lordships of Holland, Zealand, and Hainault, i. 37; has other possessions, &c.; marries Isabella, of Portugal, &c.; curtails the liberties of the Netherlands, 39; his death, 41; his numerous grants of charters of monopoly, &c.; his character and administration—his encouragement of art and literature, 41, 42.
- Burgundian Library, founded at Brussels by Philip the Good, i. 42.
- Cabrera, biographer of Philip, II., his eulogium of Carlos-da-Id, i. 254; maintains that Don Carlos died a natural death, ii. 201.
- Cadix taken by the Duke de Guise, i. 168.
- Calberg, Thomas, tapestry weaver of Tournay, burnt alive for having copied some hymns, i. 2-8.
- Cambray, Archbishop of, insulted by nobles at banquet given in honour of Egmont, i. 263; his character, 264.

- Camelists, or mock assault on Rome in 1557, i. 145, 147.
- Carada, Cardinal, endeavours to excite France against Spain, i. 142; goes to Paris as legate of the Pope, 143; his duplicity, 144.
- Carlos, Don, son of Philip II., absurdity of his pretended love for his step-mother, ii. 196; Philip's secret letters to the Pope concerning him, &c.; suppositions and accounts relating to his death, 197; his character, 202; instances of his excessive ferocity and malignity, 203; his hatred of his father, and indignation at Alva's nomination to government of Netherlands, 205.
- Casimir, Prince-palatine of Pfalz, joins Netherland patriots with twelve thousand men, iii. 237; his character and motives, &c.; is held in contempt by Orange, &c.; motives of Queen Elizabeth for entrusting him with command of her levies, 238; foments insurrection at Ghent, 270; his mercenaries pillage the southern provinces, &c.; difficulties of his position, 277; repeated rebukes of Queen of England, 278; is relieved by Prince of Orange, and rewards him with ingratitude, 279; leaves Netherlands, &c.; repairs to England, &c.; is invested with the Order of the Garter, 280; his German troops expelled from Netherlands by Duke of Parma, &c.
- Cateau Cambresis, treaty of, i. 178.
- Celtic and German races, characteristic distinctions of, i. 5, 6; difference of politics, 7; of social arts, &c.; of religion 8; of social characteristics, 9.
- Cerbelloni, Gabriel de, one of the architects of the famous citadel of Antwerp, ii. 130.
- Ceramp, congress of, i. 177.
- Champagny, his conduct as governor of city of Antwerp, during struggle against Spanish mutineers, iii. 33; makes his escape from Antwerp, 46; as leader of Catholic party, presents a petition to magistracy of Brussels against the draft of a religious peace, drawn up by Prince of Orange, 250; consequent riots and arrest of nobles, 251; is carried to Ghent, &c.
- Charles V., his birth, i. 50; issues the document called the Kalf Vel, or calf skin, 55; resolves to quell insurrection in Flanders, 57; entrance into Ghent, &c.; pronounces sentence on the city, 58; promulgates new form of municipal government, &c.; his cruel treatment of the citizens, 59; his hypocritical benignity, &c.; his proceedings against the Reformation, 69; his sanguinary persecution of heretics in the Netherlands, 72; ceremonies on occasion of his abdication, 87; his personal appearance, 93; his address to the states on abdication, 97; his oppression of Netherlands, 102; introduces Inquisition into Netherlands, 103; his mock piety, 105; his accomplishments, 106; his popularity in Netherlands, &c.; his personal qualities, 107; and personal habits, 111; difficulties relative to his abdication, 112; his reverses, 114; causes which led to his abdication, 116; his retirement at Juste, 118; his endeavours to secure the succession in Netherlands to his sisters, in case of default of direct male issue, 122; his obsequies at Brussels, 180.
- Charles of Burgundy, surnamed The Bold, his character and career, i. 42; exertions practised by him in Netherlands, 43; he removes the supreme court of Holland from the Hague to Mechlin, &c.; invests it with supreme jurisdiction over the charters of the provinces, 44; proclaims all its authority derived from his will, &c.; centralises government of Netherlands, &c.; establishes a standing army, &c.; dies, 1477, &c.
- Charles, Archduke of Austria, despatched to Madrid by Maximilian II. on a special mission concerning state of Netherlands and proceedings of William of Orange, ii. 232; public and private letter of King of Spain, 235; is authorised by Maximilian to offer to Philip the hand of the Archduchess Anne, 236.
- Charles IX., of France, alarm at the crossing of the French frontier by Prince of Orange and his army, ii. 224; letter to Louis of Nassau expressive of his determination to assist Netherlands, 330; gives the signal for the St. Bartholomew massacre, 332; duplicity of his dealings with Alva and Orange, 335; change

- of tone on perceiving the effects of the St. Bartholomew on the various courts of Europe, 406; distress at desertion of his cause by King of Spain, 407; design upon the crown of Poland, 409.
- Charters, earliest, in Netherlands, i. 31; ancient, of Netherland provinces, 236.
- Chimay, Prince of, eldest son of Duke of Aerschot, is elected Governor of Flanders, iii. 452; immediately opens negotiations with Parma for delivering up the province to Philip, 453.
- Church, depravity of Roman Catholic, i. 67.
- Cities, growth of, i. 28; earliest charters, 30; acquire right to send deputies to estates of the provinces, 23; allowed to choose their chief magistrates, 34; number of, 82.
- Claudius Civilis, a Batavian noble, effects a general confederation of the Netherland tribes, i. 12; is unsuccessful, and is deserted by his countrymen, 13; enters into negotiations with the Romans, 14; meets Certius on the bridge across the Nabalus, &c.
- Clergy, power of, i. 62; decline of power, 63; their opposition to canons of Trent, 294.
- Cocqueville, de, commanding a division under Louis of Nassau, is defeated at St. Valéry, ii. 159.
- Coligny, Admiral, appointed Governor of Picardy, receives orders to make a foray on frontiers of Flanders, i. 148; shrinks from breaking traces signed by himself, 149; is foiled in attack on Douay, 150; attacks and sacks Lens, &c.; throws himself into St. Quentin, 156; is taken prisoner at Calvinas during Flemish captivity, 167; makes peace with the French court, ii. 277; memoir on invasion of Netherlands, drawn up by design of Charles IX., &c.
- Coloigne, conferences at, for settlement of disputes between King of Spain and Netherland provinces, iii. 333; failure of conference after seven months of useless negotiation, 326; ultimatum of patriot party, &c.; expenses incurred by convoys to conferences, 320.
- Commerce carried on with England and the Baltic, i. 33; with Mediterranean, &c.
- Commission of Troubles established at Mons after capitulation, ii. 345; cruel and unjust proceedings of, &c.; infamous sentiments of commissioners, 347.
- Compromise, foundation of league thus called, i. 414; contents of the document signed, 419; character of nobles who joined in league, 420; growing audacity and turbulence of confederates, 421; they propose to present a Request to Regent, 425; entrance of confederates into Brussels, 430; procession of confederates to deliver Request, &c.; confederates present a second address promising to maintain the ancient religion, 435; assembly of members at St. Troisd, 459.
- Conjuring books consulted by Augustus of Saxony, ii. 451, note.
- Constitution, new, of Holland and Zealand, iii. 418.
- Consulta, its constitution, i. 183; its members, &c.
- Convention between England and Spain with regard to the Netherland difficulty, published 1573, ii. 494.
- Cornaille, Pierre, locksmith and Calvinist preacher, places himself at the head of 3000 combatants to march to the aid of Valenciennes, ii. 40; is defeated at Lannoy, 41.
- Cosné, Governor of Picardy, beats army of Netherland patriots at St. Valéry, ii. 159.
- Coster, Lorenz, introduces the use of moveable types, i. 40.
- Council of Philip II., how constituted, i. 121.
- Council, royal, of Spain, how constituted, ii. 2.
- Council of State, assumes the reins of government at death of Egmont, iii. 2; names of members, &c.; confirmed in government by King, 11; members held captive in Brussels, 17; falls into contempt on account of inability to put down unity, 18; is formally arrested, 20; members again liberated, 22.
- Council of Troubles, or Blood-Council, established by Alva, ii. 117; its constitution and functions, &c.; its first session, 122; mode of procedure, 124; number of victims sacrificed,

- de ; sometimes protests for provisions, 125 ; abolition of the institution, ib. 487.
- General, general executive, for United Provinces, established 1581, ib. 375 ; constitution of general, *ib.
- de Graet, organization of Spanish, during reign of Philip II., ib. 131.
- de Graet, is elected before the Blood-Council, ib. 133.
- de Graet, (City of) betrayed by an old granter, saved by an old woman, ib. 159.
- de Graet, Robert, a converted monk and reformed preacher, ib. 448 ; his character, *ib.
- de Graet, first assembled at, unanimously resolves to throw off allegiance to King of Spain, and makes three propositions, ib. 720 ; the estates of Holland and Zealand assembled at, conclude a new act of union, ib. 5 ; articles of Union of ib. ; character of league concluded at, 7 ; assembly of united provinces at, in 1581, establish a general executive council, 375 ; description of city and the House of Brno of Orange, 456.
- de Graet, meeting of nobles at, ib. 37.
- de Graet, Francisco, a Spanish soldier, captures Admiral Coligny at entrance of St. Quentin, ib. 164.
- de Graet, Wronswan, a woman of eighty years, punished for having given a man's lodging to a heretic preacher, ib. 145.
- de Graet, Armit, and three other executioners put to death for having, ib. 343.
- de Graet, congress of, resolves to support Orange with blood and money, ib. 356 ; invests the Prince vicinally with absolute power, 361.
- de Graet, and de Graet, expedition to, ib. 714 ; removal of Spaniards, 516 ; conquest of the island of St. 517 ; important results of expedition, 523.
- de Graet, taken by assault, ib. 171.
- de Graet, the leading provisions, ib. 328 ; of 14th of May, 1567, against Protestants, causes the wrath of Philip on account of the edicts, ib. 461 ; against Spanish ministers, ib. 47 ; discussions caused by it, 47 ; forgotten, signed at Mexico on Parma and on Brussels, 95 ; provisions of the document, ib. ; is confirmed by Philip, ib. ; displeases Orange, 95 ; termination of treaty, 98 ; published in Holland, suspends exercise of Spanish worship, ib. 177 ; cause of these measures, *ib.
- de Graet, discussing coalition of, ib. 77.
- de Graet, Nicholas of, a Cardinal monk, appointed consultant of Inquisition-general, ib. 394.
- de Graet, Anne of the greatest heiress in Netherlands, married to William of Orange, ib. 214.
- de Graet, Countess of, her dissolute state after her husband's access, ib. 144 ; endeavours to save her husband, ib. ; her courage and power after her husband's death, 154.
- de Graet, Leonard, Count of, his personal appearance, ib. 98 ; his brilliant victories in Flanders determine the issue of the Italian campaign, 146 ; his character, descent, and early history, 152 ; persuades Duke of Savoy to deliver battle to Montmorency before St. Quentin, 159 ; omits and battle of St. Quentin, 165 ; assumes the field against De Thunay, 171 ; conducts at Battle of Guesvalles, 174 ; becomes the idol of the people, ib. ; gains the amity of Duke of Alen, ib. ; one of hostages for execution of treaty of Cateau Cambresis, 174 ; his amity to Cardinal de Guise, 181 ; he and Orange complain to the King of Cardinal de Guise, 181 ; joins Orange and Horn in a letter to Philip, showing danger of leaving unlimited power in hands of Guise, 185 ; quarrel with Archduke, 186 ; and Archduke, 187 ; his weakness and misdirection, ib. ; declines Philip's invitation to come to Spain, 191 ; adoption of foreign troops in order to humiliate Guise, 193 ; growing favour at Regent's court, 196 ; criticizes the great games of lower classes, ib. ; accepts a mission to Spain, 199 ; outrageous conduct of nobles to Archduke of Cambray on occasion of Regent's passing through that city on his way to Spain, 193 ; discontent with which he is treated in Spain, 196 ; returns from Spain to

- Netherlands expressing himself perfectly content, 389; gives an account to council of his interview with the King, and a statement of the royal intentions, 390; his high commendations of Philip and warm expressions of loyalty, 391; his indignation at Philip's duplicity, 392; influence of Bakerzeel over him, 393; returns to his government of Flanders, and acts as an unscrupulous partizan of government, li. 11; views expressed at meeting at Dendermonde, 29; offers to throw himself into Walcheren to oppose rebels, 51; proceeds with Aerschoot to Valenciennes, on mission from Regent, 64; suggests point of assault on Valenciennes, 65; his zeal in carrying out the wishes of Philip and Margaret, 66; declares, in interview with Orange at Willebroek, his intention on no account whatsoever to take up arms against King of Spain, 75; proceeds to Tirlenmont to receive and complement Alva, 97; his infatuation as regards the danger that threatened himself, 103; his intimacy with Alva's son, 104; his arrest, 107; commencement of mock process against him, 139; judgment pronounced against him, 140; endeavours made to save him, 141; charges against him, 151; his reply to these, 152; is sentenced to death by Alva, 172; is informed of his doom by Bishop of Ypres, 173; his last night, 175; his letter to the King, &c.; his execution 177; sympathy of the people, 190; his head sent to Madrid, &c.; retrospective view of his character, 191.
- Emmont, Lamoral, the younger, implicated in Salceda's scheme to poison Orange and Anjou, iii. 424; escapes punishment on account of his relationship to Queen of France, &c.
- Emmont, Philip, Count of, accompanies Marquis of Havré to Antwerp, iii. 37; is taken prisoner by the Spaniards, 55; attempts to seize Brussels to deliver it over to the Spaniards, 313; his complete discovery, 314; is allowed to depart unscathed, &c.; mendacious attempts to clear himself of blame, &c.; base endeavours to obtain favour of Spanish government, 315.
- Electors of Germany—their appeal to Emperor in favour of Netherlands, li. 331.
- Elizabeth of England, her quarrel with Duke of Alva, li. 240; plot against her entered into by Philip, 295; accused of having hired an assassin to attempt the life of Prince John of Nassau, 462, note; coquetting policy with regard to Netherlands, 521; sovereignty over Zealand and Holland offered to, 522; first answer to commissioners from those states, 523; empty promises and paltry concessions, 524; attitude assumed towards Netherlands after death of Roquesena, iii. 8; makes advances to Prince of Orange, 199; indignation at intrigues of nobles with Archduke of Austria, &c.; her minister informs Netherland envoy that she will withdraw all support from provinces, if Orange be deprived of his leadership, 191; reply of Maetkerke, 192; consents to a treaty of alliance and subsidy with Netherlands, 207; conditions of treaty, &c.; threatens to withdraw herself from the cause of Netherland patriots, and even to take up arms against them on account of their friendly relations with Alençon, 242.
- "Encamisada," of nocturnal attack made by Don Frederick of Toledo and Julian Romero on Prince of Orange's army at Hermigny, ii. 340.
- Entes, Barthold, one of the Beggars of the Sea, his character and career, iii. 359; his death before Groningen, &c.
- Erasmus of Rotterdam, his testimony to the power and importance of Ghent, i. 53; his moderation, 65; upholds Luther, 67; is attacked by the clergy, 68.
- Escorial, palace of, erected in commemoration of battle of St. Quentin, i. 163.
- Escovedo, secretary to Don John of Austria, entrusted with arrangements for departure of Spanish troops from Netherlands, iii. 104; difficulties of his task, 105; communications to Philip on subject of departure of the troops, 106; letters to Antonio Perez on state of affairs in Netherlands, 114; suggests the recall of Don John and the appoint- ment of a woman as governor, 115; expresses to Peres his willingness to enter into scheme for assassination of Prince of Orange, 122; suggests to Philip the benefit to be derived from pitting the Reformed and Catholic parties against each other, 124; departs for Madrid, and takes charge of a remonstrance from estates of Brabant to the King, as to the evil consequences of the course pursued by his Majesty's governor in Netherlands, 152; plots against him at Madrid, 153; his death determined on, 154; various attempts at and ultimate success of murder, 155; rewards given to assassins, 156.

- Salcesnes, François de Clerges, Seigneur d', an innocent Catholic gentleman, condemned to death by Blood-Council at Mons, and his property confiscated to enrich Noircarmes, ii. 348.
- Espinoy, Mary de Montmorency, Princess of, undertakes defence of Tournay, in absence of her husband, iii. 396.
- Estates of Holland, assembled at Dort to take formal measures for renouncing the authority of Alva, ii. 325; they and Zealand offer sovereignty over provinces to a French prince, iii. 10.
- Estates-General, their power, i. 76, 77; their constituent elements, 80; remonstrance against foreign troops, 189; clamour of people and nobles for convocation of, iii. 131; address letters to Philip of 24th August and 8th September, 1577, on state of Netherlands, 178; formally declare Don John of Austria to have forfeited his offices, and to be an enemy of the country, 205; declare themselves willing to accept Archduke Matthias as Governor-General, 208; in their own name, and that of Archduke Matthias, demand of Philip, the recall of Don John, and the maintenance of the Pacification of Ghent, 229; summoned in return to obey the King's commands, &c.; affirm their resolution never more to submit to Spanish tyranny, or return to the principles of Charles V. and of Alva, &c.; efforts to avert the approaching dismemberment of country, 235; deputations sent to Walloon provinces to endeavour to reconcile contending parties, 305.
- Estates of United Provinces formally offer the general government to Prince of Orange, iii. 448.
- Estonteville, succeeds to Thermes, i. 171.
- Eyck, Van John and Hubert, attracted to Bruges by generosity of Philip the Good, i. 41.
- Faveau and Mallart, Protestant ministers, condemned to death for reading Bible, i. 299; attempt of the people to rescue them, 300; their escape, &c.; recaptured and burnt, &c.
- Flanders refuses to recognise Maximilian as governor, i. 48; is subdued, and obliged to make humble submission, 49; the four estates of, present solemn address to King against monstrous proceedings of Peter Titelmann, 396; nominally pacified by cruel exertions of Egmont, ii. 12; outbreak of anti-Catholic revolution in, iii. 201.
- Fleese, order of Golden, instituted by Philip of Burgundy, i. 37; assembly of knights of the, convoked by the Regent in 1562, 311; subsequent meeting at Prince of Orange's, 312; meeting dissolved, 315; chevaliers of the, declare to the Regent that it is below the dignity of any of their order to take a long and troublesome journey in order to accuse Granvelle, 332; golden statutes of, appealed to with a view to saving Counts Egmont and Horn, ii. 143; set aside by Philip, 144; legal mode of proceeding against knights of, 145 notes.
- Fleet, Portuguese, captured by insurgent patriots, ii. 321.
- Flushing, the town of, rises in rebellion after capture of Brill, and ejects Spanish government, ii. 307.
- Frisians, territory inhabited by, i. 5; eventually subdued by the Franks, 16; accept Christianity, 19; their ancient laws, 24.
- Friesland, East, its political constitution, i. 34; separation of West and East, &c.; political constitution of East Friesland, &c.; the people of, elect the Duke of Saxony

- podesta, 50; is sold by him to the house of Austria, 50.
- Fuente, Ponce de la, his bones burnt at Seville, l. 195.
- Gembours, battle of, iii. 218; defeat of patriots, 220; cruelty of victors towards captives, 222; names of commanders in victorious Spanish army, 50.
- Genlis, is despatched to France for reinforcements after capture of Mons, ii. 327; returns with a Huguenot force, which is routed by the Spaniards, 50; is taken captive, and subsequently put to death, 228.
- Gérard, Balthazar, murderer of Prince of Orange, receives the protection of Orange under the name of Guion, iii. 459 et note; personal appearance, parentage, and education, 460; long-nourished determination to murder Prince of Orange, 50; lays his project before Parma, 462; is considered unfit for the task, 463; draws up a written statement of his plan, by desire of Amouville, 464; his motives for the murder, 465; is at length approved fit by Parma, 50; proceeds to put his plan into execution, 466; the deed done, 468; is seized and put to the torture, 469; horrible sentence passed upon him, 471; the reward of his crime paid by Philip to his heirs, 472.
- Germany, state of religious parties in 1576, ii. 10.
- Ghent, convention of, l. 45; its wealth and power, 63; its constitution, 64; insurrection of, under Charles V., 55; its privileges and immunities annulled, 58; humiliation of citizens, of, 50; convocation of provinces, [185; congress of, in 1576, iii. 28; citadel of, held by Spanish mineers and besieged by patriots, 32; treaty of union with William of Orange and estates of Holland and Zealand, 59; razed to the ground, 178; stormy meetings of estates at, after arrival of Duke of Aerschot in capacity of Governor of Flanders, 197; party dissensions at, 198; commencement of revolution, 201; nobles and commons of, public vindication of revolution, 202; effect of revolution throughout Netherlands, 203; pagantries on occasion of visit of Prince of Orange after the insurrection, 204; dissensions between malcontents and burghers, 272; act of accord between contending parties mediated by Prince of Orange, 274; remonstrances addressed to magistracy by Queen of England, 50; by envoys from states general at Brussels, 275; fresh riots, 50; continued anarchical state of, 328; government of, opens negotiations with Parma, 453; efforts of other states to dissuade them from proposed step, 50; negotiations brought to a sudden close, 455.
- Goard, St., French ambassador at Madrid, urges Philip II. to command the immediate execution of Genlis and other Huguenot prisoners in Netherlands, ii. 334; statement of reasons of Maximilian II. for mediating between Netherlands and King of Spain, 494.
- Godelaeus, testimony to emotion of Flemish people on abdication of Charles V., l. 100.
- Gomez, Rey, his hatred to Alva, l. 121; his early history, 132; influence over Philip, 50; character and acquirements, 50; endeavours to prevent the mission of Alva to Netherlands, ii. 83; continued jealousy and hatred between him and Alva, 50; perfidious conduct to Marquis Berghem in his last moments, 115.
- Gonzaga, Ferdinand, advises Philip II. to march on Paris after battle of St. Quentin, l. 163.
- Gomon, leader of the burgesse faction in Arras, iii. 289; effects a municipal revolution in city, 50; counter revolution and retaliation, 290; condemned to death and executed, 292.
- Grandfort, Dr., called "the Light of the World," l. 65; denounces ecclesiastical errors, 50; disputes the infallibility of the Pope and various popish doctrines, 50.
- Grange, Peregrine de la, Protestant preacher at Valenciennes, urges citizens to refuse to admit a mercenary garrison, ii. 28; happens after surrender of city, 56; his last words, 59.
- Granvelle, the elder, his influence with Charles V., l. 169.

- Grazvella, Anthony Perrenot, Bishop of Arras, afterwards Cardinal, provounces address to Flemish people by Philip II., on abdication of Charles V., l. 99; advises the re-tractment of edict of 1550, 138; disapproves of war with France, and the Pope, 145; negotiations with Cardinal of Lorraine, at Peronne, 169; appointed chief of the Consults, 216; his parentage and education, &c.; acquires the favor and confidence of Charles V., 217; his mental and moral characteristics, &c.; his political principles, 218;
his contempt for the people, 219;
his extraordinary industry, &c.; his riches and covetousness, 220; is appointed Archbishop of Mechlin, 237; his growing unpopularity, &c.; indemnifies himself for pecuniary loss accruing to him by acceptance of Archbishopric of Mechlin, 238; his growing assumption, and unfriendly relations with Egmont, 246; his early intimacy with Orange, 248; breach with Orange, 250; his zeal in ferreting out heretics, 251;
Margaret of Parma obtains for him the Cardinal's hat, &c.; prejudices Philip against Count Horn, 252; suggests to the King his answers to remonstrances of Netherland nobles, 254; his intrigues relative to the marriage of Prince of Orange with Princess of Lorraine, 258; his entry into city of Mechlin as archbishop, 278; his baneful influence on Philip, 297; his zeal in carrying out Philip's views regarding Inquisition, 298; increasing hatred of the people to him, 301;
lancoons directed against him, 303;
hostility of nobles towards him,
305; unfounded accusations of cowardice, 308; his country house of La Fontaine, &c.; shunned by great nobles, surrounds himself with their inferiors, 318; his reports to Philip on proceedings in Netherlands, regarding introduction of Inquisition, and accusations and innuendoes against nobles, 319; suggests to Philip how to proceed towards Netherland nobles, and in interviews with Montigny, 320; lays a scheme with King and Regent to sow dissensations among nobles, 321; acquires knowledge of joint letter of Orange, Egmont, and Horn, and instructs Philip how to reply, 326;
his acknowledgment of his own unpopularity, 330; continued reports regarding, and artful insinuations against nobles, 336; recommends Philip to come to Netherlands to allay the rising storm, 345; contemptuous expressions against the people, 346; approaching crisis in his fate, &c.; determination of nobles to insult and humiliate him, 347; is recalled by Philip, 353; departure from Brussels, 354; carries out the deception regarding his retirement, as planned by Philip, 356; his adherents deceived by him and the King's duplicity, &c.; his life in retirement, 358; turned into ridicule by nobles at masquerade in Count Mansfeld's house, 363; aban-dons all idea of returning to Netherlands, and repairs to Rome, 365;
is employed by Philip to negotiate treaty between Spain, Rome, and Venice, &c.; is made Viceroy of Naples, and returns to Madrid in 1575, &c.; dies there, 1586, &c.; policy devised by him and Spinosa, for entire subjugation of Netherlands, il.
71; his duplicity as regards capture of Netherland nobles, 111; regret at escape of William of Orange, 112;
cruel insinuations against Egmont, 113; exultation at discomfiture of Prince of Orange in first campaign against Alva, 227.
- Gravelines, battle of, l. 172.
- Graham, Sir Thomas, his anticipation of coming storm in Netherlands,
il. 14; testimony to excessive fury of citizens of Antwerp during tumult subsequent to defeat of Ostra-well, 61.
- Griet-mann, chief ruler of an East
Friesland district, l. 34.
- Grüningen, city of, delivered up to Prince of Parma by Count Rounne-berg, iii. 355; beleaguered by patriot forces, &c.; siege of, 359; death of Entes, &c.; siege raised by defeat of Hoheulo on Hardenberg Heath, 361.
- "Groot Privilegie," the Magna Charta of Holland, granted by Mary of Burgundy, l. 45.
- "Guoux," origin of the appellation as a party name, l. 433; vindication o

- this origin in opposition to Gachard, 434 note; adoption of the name and of the symbols, 437; adoption of costume, 440; ultimate fate of the confederates, ii. 81.
- Guilts, institution of, i. 75; military, 78; literary, ib.
- Guinea, reduction of, i. 168.
- Guion (see Gward).
- Guise, Duke of, is defeated by Alva in Italian campaign, i. 146; is recalled from Italy to take command on Flemish frontiers, imperilled by Egmont, ib.; is reproved by Pope, ib.; assembles a new army, 167; takes Calais by assault, 168; renews hostilities by attack on Türowville, 170; neglects to follow up his successes in Flanders, 171; assembles a new army at Pierrepont, 178.
- Hammer, Nicholas de, his seal in promotion of the Compromis league, i. 417; his imprudent impetuosity, ib.
- Harangoe, the, document issued by William of Orange, and addressed to princes of Germany, ii. 293.
- Haring, John, heroic conduct in battle of the Diemerdyk, ii. 376; loses his life in naval engagement in the Zuyder Zee, 418.
- Harlem, Lake of, situation of, ii. 365; battles on, 379.
- Harlem, city of, is threatened by Spanish army, ii. 363; skirmish upon the ice, 364; a portion of the magistracy enter into secret negotiation with Alva, ib.; situation of the city and natural features of environs, 365; character of fortifications, 366; investment of the city, 367; character of the struggle, and incidents of the siege, 368; first assault, 369; continuation of siege and horrors attending it, 370; second assault, 372; the Spanish general determines to reduce the city by famine, 373; remaining force under Borey defeated, 376; cruelty and heroism of citizens, 377; miseries of famine, 380; desperate projects of the besieged, 384; the city surrenders at discretion, 385; subsequent plunder and butchery, 387.
- Hasecluer, Kema, a lady of Harlem, who distinguished herself during the siege as the leader of a female corps, ii. 368.
- Havré, Marquis of, despatched by Philip to Netherlands, to try and conciliate the people, iii. 19; is despatched to Antwerp with reinforcements, 37; incompetency of himself and young nobles who accompany him, ib.
- Henry II. of France enters into secret treaty with Pope Paul IV. to drive the Spaniards out of Italy, i. 126; resolves upon war with Spain, 142; joins the army of Pierrepont, 178; his death, 179; arrangement with King of Spain for destruction of Huguenots, 180; revelation to William of Orange of plot for extirpation of Protestantism, 208.
- Heretics, persecution of, i. 72; increasing persecution of, 300; police regulations, excluding them from all share in usual conveniences of society, 378.
- Hartin, Michael, a citizen of Valenciennes, beheaded, together with his son, by Noirearmes, after surrender of city, ii. 68.
- Herp, the Seigneur de, a partisan of Orange, excites the citizens of Flushing to revolt, ii. 306.
- Hessels, member of the Blood-Council, his cruelty, ii. 122; letter from, to Count de Reux, which precipitates revolution in Flanders, ii. 199; and Vlach put to death by Rybove, 273.
- Houtarus, Pontus, testimony to emotion of Flemish people on abdication of Charles V., i. 100.
- Hobbeo, Count Philip of, leader of patriot army at siege of Groningen, iii. 360; his discreditable character and manners, 361; marches to Coerwerden to meet royalist troops, and is defeated by them at Hardenberg Heath, ib.
- Holland, its geographical separation from Friesland, i. 34; Counts of, ib.; joined to the province of Hainault, 36.
- Holland, Jacqueline, Countess of, her romantic history, i. 36; importance of its fisheries, 39.
- Holland, union with Zealand, ii. 561; articles of union, ib.; ratification of these, 592.
- Holland and Zealand relinquish the "Great Privilege," i. 50; moral and physical conditions of provinces at

- the period of Requesens' death, iii. 4; change in political constitution, 5; supreme authority in, conferred on Prince of Orange, 6; character of league concluded, 7; estates of, offer sovereignty to Orange, 366; new constitution drawn up on occasion of conferring sovereign rule on Prince of Orange, 417; estates of, make a formal remonstrance against arrangements with the Duke of Anjou, 449.
- Hoogstraeten, his disgraceful conduct to Archbishop of Cambrai, i. 383; conduct at Antwerp during winter of 1566, ii. 49; is cited before the Blood-Council, 132; charges against him, 133; publishes a reply to act of condemnation, 157; death of, 222.
- "Hooks," first rise of party of this name, i. 36.
- Hopper, Joachim, takes Viglius's place in council, i. 361; his previous career and mental characteristics, ib.; his incompetency, iii. 3.
- Horn, Count of, his personal appearance and character, i. 91; joins Orange and Egmont in remonstrances against power of Granvelle, 325; private letter to Philip concerning Granvelle's conduct of affairs in Netherlands, 333; his proceedings at Tournay subsequent to image-breaking excesses, ii. 15; is recalled from Tournay by Regent, 19; grants permission to Reformed congregations to presb. in Clothiers' Hall, at Tournay, ib.; goes to Brussels, 20; his state of mind and position after recall from Tournay, 31; comes to Brussels by persuasion of Alva, 105; is arrested, 108; his papers are seized, 109; commencement of mock process against, 139; sentence pronounced against him, 140; endeavors made to save him, 141; charges against him, 145; answer to charges, 153; is condemned to death by Alva, 171; preparations for his and Egmont's execution, 178; his death, 180; his head sent to Madrid, 181; retrospective view of his character, 182.
- Hugonet enters into treasonable negotiation with Louis XI., and is beheaded, i. 47.
- Huguenots: new outbreak of dissensions between this party and the Guise faction in France, ii. 128.
- Hulst, Francis Van der, appointed inquisitor-general for the Netherlands, i. 286; his character, 287; degraded from position, ib.
- Hungary, Mary, Queen of, regent of Netherlands, resigns her office, i. 99; her character, 134; her detestation of Netherlands, ib.
- Huy, deliberations at, between Don John of Austria and deputies from estates, iii. 88; three questions put by deputies, ib.; alterations between deputies and governor, 90.
- Image-breaking: commencement of riots at Antwerp, i. 469; excesses committed, 475; simultaneous outbreak of riots throughout all provinces, 476; incidents of riots at Tournay, ib.; at Anchin, 478; at Valenciennes, 479; deprecated by all ministers of Reformed religion, 480; remarkable abstinence of rioters from robbery and personal violence, ib.; pretext furnished by riots for subsequent oppression, 481.
- Imbize, leader of a party in Ghent, iii. 197; gives first impulse to outbreak of revolution in Ghent, 201; imprisons the magistrates, and establishes new form of government, 329; his scheme defeated by Orange, 331; seeks refuge with John Casimir, ib.; intrigues at Ghent, with a view to enabling Chimay to surrender Flanders to Philip, 453; his ultimate fate, 455.
- Imbrocourt betrays his country, and is beheaded, i. 47.
- Independence, declaration of, signed at the Hague, 26th July, 1581, iii. 378; events immediately preceding this act, 379, 380.
- Indulgences, sale of, in Netherlands, i. 64.
- Inquisition: its introduction into Netherlands by Charles V., i. 193; number of victims to, in Holland and Friesland, ib.; the real cause of the revolt of the Netherlands, 280; the three varieties of the institution, 281; Spanish Inquisition described, ib.; introduction of Inquisition into the Netherland provinces, 285; distinction between

- Spanish and Netherland, 295; council of doctors and theologians to settle matters concerning, 393; growing wrath of people against, 396; new mode of punishment adopted for heretics, 397; frenzy of people at renewed proclamation of, 403; abolition of, insisted upon by Netherlanders, ii. 2; preposterous death-warrant issued against inhabitants of Netherlands by, 137.
- Inquisitors, papal, in Netherlands, i. 287; their powers and functions, &c.; complain to King and Regent of indisposition of civil functionaries to assist them in their duties, and of other difficulties encountered in prosecution of their office, 396, 397.
- Institutions in Netherlands, their last form, i. 72.
- Inundation in Netherlands in 1576, ii. 270.
- Isabella of France married to Philip II., i. 195.
- Italy, campaign in, 1556, i. 144.
- Jarregui, Juan, attempts the life of Prince of Orange at Antwerp, iii. 407; is killed on the spot, &c.; suspicion of complicity against Anjou and the French, 408; resolute conduct of Maurice of Nassau, 409; examination of papers found on assassin, 410; curious indications of fanaticism and superstition in murderer, &c.; result of examination laid before Anjou by St. Aldegonde, 411; the crime proved to be a commercial speculation, &c.
- Jemmingen, defeat of, ii. 190.
- Jonghe, Junius de, representative of Prince of Orange, reply to proposals of Governor Requesens, ii. 522.
- Junius, Francis, a French Huguenot, invited to Brussels to preach a sermon in house of Count Culemburg, i. 413; his previous career, &c.
- "Kabbelijawa," first rise of party of the name, i. 38.
- Kalf Ved issued by Charles V., i. 55; destruction of the document, 56.
- Kapell, Walter, burned for heresy, i. 290; singular devotion of an idiot to him, 291.
- Knuttel, William, used by Prince of Orange to gain access of Landgrave of Hesse to his marriage with the Princess Anna, i. 267.
- Koop, van Fandern, tradition of the, i. 55.
- Koppelslok, Peter, ferryman on the Meuse, assists the Beggars of the Sea in the capture of Brill, ii. 301.
- Koppersoon, Manning, subjected to atrocious tortures by Governor Bemoey, ii. 510.
- Lalain, Count, Governor of Hainault, won over by Queen of Navarre, promises to hold his government at service of Duke of Alençon, iii. 146.
- La Loo, Horn's secretary, is executed by order of Alva, ii. 307.
- La Torre despatched by Regent to Amsterdam to obtain forcible ejection of Beederode, ii. 89.
- Laurens, President of the Grand Council of Mechlin, his character, i. 287.
- Leem, town of, sacked by Coligny, i. 150.
- Leoninus, Dr. Elbertus, and Hugo Route, commissioned by Requesens to treat with Prince of Orange, ii. 489; his early career, 491 note; despatched on mission from Don John of Austria to Prince of Orange, iii. 99; instructions given to him, &c.; reply of Orange to his proposals, 100.
- Letters of Prince of Orange to principal cities of Netherlands, requesting funds for the support of his army, ii. 222; effects of these letters, &c.
- Leyden, preparations for raising the siege of, ii. 443; commencement of second siege, 460; description of city, 461; preliminaries of siege, &c.; endeavors of the "Gijppers" to persuade their countrymen to submit, 464; reply of citizens of Leyden, &c.; Orange's plan for rescuing the city, &c.; called upon to surrender by Valdez, 465; joy of citizens on receipt of intelligence that the sluices had been opened, 466; desponding appeal to estates, 467; patriots take possession of the Landhoeding, 470; gradual advance of the relieving flotilla through the dykes, 471; pest and famine within the city, 474; heroic conduct of Adriaan van der Werf, 475; the providential tempest, 477; progress

- of the flotilla, 478; the last night, 479; the city saved, ib.; flight of the Spaniards, ib.; thanksgiving after the danger, 481; rewards for suffering, 483; charter of university, 484; solemnities of inauguration, ib.
- Leon, battle of the Holy, or Heiligor-Lee, ii. 185.
- Morente: his testimony as to mode of death of Don Carlos, ii. 201.
- Lodroño, Sancho de, and Sancho de Avila, defeat patriot army at Dalem, ii. 160.
- Longehave, one of the members of the Commission of Troubles at Mons, intercedes for people, ii. 347.
- Joraine, Christina of, seeks to become Regent of Netherlands, i. 181.
- Louvain, university of, i. 77; character of its teaching, ib.; merry-making at, on occasion of presence of Don John of Austria, iii. 103.
- Lopus, Peter, a Carmelite friar of Mechlin, forms the design of restoring the city to the Prince of Parma, iii. 340.
- Luxemburg, negotiations between Don John of Austria and deputies from estates at, iii. 83.
- Maas, Engelbert, Chancellor of Brabant, openly charged by William of Orange with knavery and corruption, i. 380.
- Maestricht, citizens of, wrest the town from the hands of Spanish troops, iii. 34; shameful expedient used by Spanish soldiery in attempt to regain the place, ib.; city recovered by Spaniards, ib.; importance of the city as key to the German gate of Netherlands, 304; is invested by Prince of Parma, ib.; narrative of siege, 316; the assault repulsed, 319; the successful storm and the massacre, 325.
- Mansfeld, Charles de, signs the Compromise, i. 414; sent out of the country by his father before the arrival of Alva, ii. 111.
- Mansfeld, Peter Ernest de, betrays and is sneered at by Netherland nobles, ii. 23; entrusted with supreme military command after death of Roquosens, iii. 47; interview with mutineers at Herenthals, 62; arrives in Netherlands with an army of well-trained troops, 215.
- Manufactures, influence on rise of small republics, i. 33.
- Marck, Robert de la, his animosity to Granvelle, and efforts to make him ridiculous, i. 307.
- Marck, William de la, chief of the Beggars of the Sea, ii. 299; is driven out of the English ports with his followers by order of the Queen, 300; sails for Holland, ib.; summons the fortress of Brill to surrender, 302; attacks and takes the town, 303; requires citizens to take oath of allegiance to Prince of Orange, 305; is despatched by Orange from Leyden with a force for the relief of Harlem, but is defeated on the road, 308; is deprived of his commission, 370; enormities practised by him, laid at the door of Prince of Orange, 404, 405; murder of Cornelius Musius, ib.; dies of the bite of a mad-dog, 405.
- Mary Tudor, her devotion to Philip II., i. 123; personal appearance, ib.; character and accomplishments, 123, 124; her death, 178.
- Mason, Sir John, testimony to emotion of the people at the ceremony of the abdication of Charles V., i. 100.
- Mau-brulé, journée des, i. 300.
- Maurice, Duke of Saxony, intercedes with Philip for release of Landgrave of Hesse, i. 121.
- Maximilian II., Emperor of Germany, intercessions in favour of Netherland nobles, ii. 230; despatches the Archduke Charles to Madrid on a special mission concerning state of Netherlands and proceedings of William of Orange, 232; public and private answers of King of Spain, 233; change in his views caused by widowhood of Philip II., 236; again issues his injunctions against military operations of Orange, 329; reply of Orange to these, 330; new attempts at mediation between Netherlands and King of Spain, 493.
- Mechlin, city of, abandoned by Alva to the licence of the Spanish soldiers, ii. 348; delivered up to Parma by treason of De Bourc, iii. 341; recaptured for estates by Van der Tynpel, 342.
- Modici, Cosmo de, reaps the benefits of war between France and Spain, i. 148.

- Medici, Catharine de, interview with Queen of Spain at Bayonne, l. 397; proposals made by her, 399; refuses to enter into secret league against Protestants, &. ; letter to Prince of Orange after attempt of Anjou to make himself absolute master in United Provinces, iii. 441; letter to Anjou recommending him to re-establish Catholic religion in Netherlands, &.
- Medina Ceeli, Duke of, appointed Governor-General of Netherlands, ii. 291; arrives in Netherlands, 320; bickerings with Alva, 392; departure from Netherlands, &.
- Meghen denounces conspiracy of heretics and secretaries to Regent, l. 427; convenes grand assembly of notables, 428.
- Mey, Peter van der, a carpenter of Alkmaar, undertakes a dangerous mission for the besieged, ii. 399.
- Middelburg, siege of, ii. 437; capitulation of, 442; restoration of ancient constitution by Prince of Orange, 443.
- Mirambeau, ambassador from France to Netherlands, endeavors to effect a reconciliation between the provinces and Duke of Anjou, iii. 443, 444.
- Moudragon, a Spanish colonel, heads a most adventurous expedition for the relief of the town of Tergoes, ii. 253; is besieged by patriots in Middelburg, 437; is forced to abandon Zierickzee, iii. 61.
- Mondoncet, French envoy in the Netherlands, by order of his King urges Alva to put to death all French prisoners taken before Mons, ii. 338.
- Mouine, his opinion of treaty of Cauteau Cambresis, l. 179.
- Mons, capture of, by Louis of Nassau, ii. 315; is besieged by Don Frederic of Toledo, 326; capitulation of, 342; brutal violation of articles of capitulation, 344; establishment of a commission of Trophies, 345.
- Montigny, despatched as envoy to Spain, l. 314; his imprudent revelation to Philip of his opinion of Granvelle, 323; returns to Netherlands, &. ; reports to state-council result of his mission, &. ; violent scene in council occasioned by this report, 324; refuses to sign letter to Philip concerning undue power of Granvelle, 328; Berghen and Mansfeld refuse to enforce edicts within their governments, 404; his negotiations with the Princess d'Espinois, 416; represents to Philip state of Netherlands and determination of people not to be trampled on, ii. 2; three great points of his instructions, &. ; is cited before Blood-Council, 133; is imprisoned at Segovia, 260; stratagem by means of which he learns the fate of his brother and Egmont, &. ; unsuccessful plan for his escape from prison, &. ; his case brought before the Blood-Council in Netherlands, 261; intercession of his wife in his behalf, 262; sentence of death pronounced against him by Alva, 263; his secret execution determined upon, &. ; elaborate and extraordinary preparations for this, 264; his last hours, 267; witnesses of his death forbidden to reveal the secret on pain of death, 268; elaborate measures taken to conceal his having died a violent death, 268, 269.
- Montmorency, Constable of France, takes command of French army at Pierrepont, l. 154; forms a project for relieving St. Quentin, 157; is wounded at battle of St. Quentin and taken prisoner, 160; dispute about his capture after battle of St. Quentin, 161; declines of his influence after battle, 162; empowered to open secret negotiations for peace, 176; death of, ii. 129.
- Mook, battle of, ii. 448; defeat and death of Louis of Nassau, 450.
- Morillon, a favorite of Granvelle, called double A B C, l. 205; his rage at Schwendi's letter to Regent, 245.
- Motte, Siegneur de la, Governor of Gravelines, sells himself and his troops to Spaniards, iii. 284.
- Muler, Geleyn de, schoolmaster of Oudmarck, executed for crime of reading the Bible, l. 209.
- Musca, Cornelius, pastor of Saint Agatha, put to death by De la Marek, under circumstances of great atrocity, ii. 465.

- Mutiny of Spanish troops after surrender of Zierickzee, iii. 14; mutineers proceed from Zealand to Brabant, devouring as they go, 15; demonstration upon Mechlin, 16; alarm created at Brussels, 17; mutineers declared outlaws by Spanish government, &c.; joined by German regiments, 21; by Sancho d'Avila, 23; mutineers in possession of all the principal fortresses, &c.; embraces whole Spanish army, and is headed by Sancho d'Avila, 30.
- Maarden, a small town of Holland, refuses to abandon the cause of the Prince of Orange, ii. 357; is invested by Don Frederic de Toledo, 358; surrenders, &c.; the citizens massacred and town set on fire, 359; atrocities committed by Spanish soldiery, 360.
- Namur, city of, description of, iii. 144; festivities on occasion of presence of Queen of Navarre, 148.
- Namur, citadel of, taken by stratagem by Don John of Austria, iii. 149.
- Nassau, history of family of, i. 204.
- Nassau, Henry of, governor and confidential friend of Charles V., by his influence places the imperial crown on Charles's head, i. 205.
- Nassau, William of, surnamed The Rich, father of the great Prince of Orange, i. 206.
- Nassau, Charlons René de, leaves his titles and estates to his cousin-german, William of Nassau, who thus succeeds to the title of Prince of Orange, i. 206.
- Nassau, Louis of, one of the first to sign the Compromise, i. 414; his character and personal appearance, 416; and his twelve apostles despatched to Brussels to lay proposals of confederates before Regent, 461; appealed to for intercession in favour of Reformers persecuted by Ezmont, ii. 12; is cited before the Blood-Council, 132; looked to as chief of Huguenots of France, in case of Coligny's fall, 158; commences to levy troops and money, 159; makes an unsuccessful attempt to capture Alva and Brussels, &c.; his plan of campaign, &c.; enters Friesland, 161; summons Gröningen to join him, &c.; takes up a position near Monastery of Holy Lion, 164; defeats Arnhem, 168; entrenches himself before Gröningen, 170; his position after battle of Holy Lion, 186; his army is routed near Gröningen, 188; is defeated again at Jemmingen, 191; total destruction of his army near Selwaert Abbey, 192; takes refuge in Germany, 194; joins army of Huguenots in France, 276; his conduct at battle of Montcontour, &c.; his endeavors to gain friends for Netherlands, 277; captures Mons, the capital of Hainault, 316; his address to citizens of Mons, 317; condition of, within the walls of Mons, 342; pays his respects to victorious generals after capitulation, 343; incidents attending departure from the city, &c.; agreement between him and representative of France with reference to Netherlands, 412; promises to use his influence to procure crown of Poland for Duke of Anjou, &c.; frank and fearless letter to King of France, &c.; promises of support received from France, 444; assembles a small army in Germany, 445; crosses the Rhine in February, 1574, and encamps within four miles of Maestricht, &c.; disasters encountered there, 446; is obliged to abandon his position, &c.; mutiny in the army, 447; battle of Mook, 448; death of Louis and his brother Henry, 450.
- Nassau, Adolphus of, brother of William of Orange, is killed by Arnhem in battle of the Holy Lion, ii. 168.
- Nassau, Count John of, is appointed governor of Guelderland, iii. 248; wearied out by petty annoyances, determines to leave Netherlands, 346; exceeding poverty of his household, 363; excuses for his retirement, &c.; his second marriage, 364.
- Nassau, Maurice of, son of Prince of Orange, his resolute conduct after attempted assassination of his father, iii. 409.
- Nassau, William of (see Orange, Prince of).
- Nervit, heroic resistance offered by this people to Cesar, i. 11.

- Netherlands, the earliest history of, l. 1; natural geography of, 2; primitive natural features, original inhabitants, 4; state of population subsequent to the migrations of the nations, 17; becomes a province of the empire of Charlemagne, 20; pass into the German empire, &c.; aspect of country at commencement of regency of Margaret of Parma, 221; causes preparatory of revolt, 224; receive the ideas of the Reformation from France, 226; ancient charters, 236; their industry taxed to enable France to attack the Huguenots, 311; anarchy and confusion after departure of Gravelle, 337; public corruption, &c.; spread of Reformed religion, and growing enthusiasm of its followers, 447; state of country after departure of William of Orange for Germany, li. 82; dismay at arrival of Alva, 101; consternation created by arrest of Egmont and Horn, 109; state of discouragement caused by proceedings of Blood-Council, 128; depopulation of country in consequence of cruel proceedings of Alva, 127; all the inhabitants of, condemned to death by Inquisitions, 137; wholesale executions and frightful crucifixions, 138; severe blow inflicted on their commerce by quarrels between Alva and Queen of England, 240; continuation of religious persecutions, 241; new scheme of taxation introduced, in violation of provincial charters, 245; state of manufacturing industry in the year 1570, 247 note; opposition to the new system of taxation, 248; terrible destruction by inundation in 1578, 289; open revolt against the new taxes, 297; successive insurrections in various cities and provinces, 311; state of country at death of Requesens, III. 4; state of religious parties in the various provinces, 25; state of country at period of death of Don John of Austria, 269; division of country into three portions, 379.
- Nevers, Duke de, Governor of Champagne, disposes his forces to meet an attack of Spanish army, l. 155; makes his escape after battle of St. Quentin, 160; his escape deemed impossible, 161.
- Ninove, the starvation of, III. 423.
- Nobles, disaffected state of, holding command in patriot army, III. 216; malcontent party bought over by Duke of Parma, 290; jealousies, bickerings, and mutual recriminations among them, 294.
- Noircarmes, proceeds to Tournay to disarm the citizens, li. 20; his cruel character, 21; his calumnious reports to Regent relative to intended massacre of Catholics, 23; invests Valenciennes, 39; conduct after surrender of Valenciennes, 67; persuades Egmont to disregard the repeated warnings to him to fly, 106; accepts the office of member of the Blood-Council, 121; his testimony to desperate state of Netherland citizens in consequence of Alva's cruel persecutions, 294; cruel proceedings at Mons, 244; his base envidia, 346.
- None, De la, is made prisoner in an action near Ingelmunster, III. 357; vain endeavors of patriot party to obtain his release, 358; is kept in prison five years, and then offered his release on condition of sacrificing his eyes, &c.; works composed by him in prison, &c.
- Ogier, Robert, of Rynsel, and his family, executed for not attending mass, l. 293.
- Oliver, Antouy, a native of Mons, lays a plan for the capture of the city, with Louis of Nassau and other Huguenot chiefs, li. 315; killed at battle of the Diemerdyk, 376.
- Orange, William of Nassau, Prince of, his personal appearance, l. 97; empowered to open secret negotiations of peace after battle of Gravelle, 176; one of the hostages for execution of treaty of Cateau Cambresis, 179; learns from King of France designs against Protestantism, 150; supports endeavors of Duchess of Lorraine to become Regent of Netherlands, 182; appointed, together with Egmont, to command of foreign troops, 199; snubbed by Philip II. when leaving Netherlands, 191; succeeds, at the age of eleven, to principality of Orange, 206; is sent to Brussels for education, 207; becomes the friend and favorite of Charles V., ib.; appointed general-in-chief of army on French frontier, ib.; secret negotiator of peace of 1559, with France, 298; one of the hostages selected by King of France for execution of treaty, ib.; discovers scheme of Henry II. and Philip II., for extirpating Protestantism, 208, 209; earns the surname of "The Silent," 209; though still a Catholic, determines to save Protestants if he can, ib.; increases his possessions by marriage with Anne of Egmont, ib.; becomes a widower, 1558, 210; is accused of having murdered his wife, 211; his character and conduct in early part of his career, ib.; his splendor and hospitality, 212; his gentleness and winning address, 213; expensive habits and consequent debts, ib.; his various sources of revenue, 214; is falsely accused of cowardice, 215; his talents and accomplishments, 216; his opposition to institution of new bishops, 240; resigns command of Spanish legion, 242; his early intimacy with Granvelle, 248; his quarrel with the Cardinal, 250; and Egmont address joint letter to the King, complaining of the undue power arrogated by Cardinal Granvelle, 251; his marriage with Anna of Saxony, and difficulties attending it, with vindication of his conduct with regard to these, 257; proceedings and festivities on occasion of his wedding, 271; meeting of Knights of the Fleece at his house, to discuss public matters, 312; supported by people in his opposition to Granvelle and the Regent, 314; frankness and legality of this opposition vindicated, 315; determines that he will withdraw from government if Granvelle be not recalled, 324; writes joint letter with Egmont and Horn to Philip, on necessity of withdrawing power of Granvelle, 325; quarrels with Aremberg because he refuses to join the league against Granvelle, 327; Egmont and Horn write second joint letter to Philip, tendering their resignation as members of council of state, 332; hand in remonstrances to Regent, 334; abstain from session of state-council, 335; attempts to stem tide of corruption, after departure of Granvelle, 367; his noble ambition and purity of character, 368; declines in favor at Regent's court, ib.; his speech on occasion of Egmont's mission to Spain, and Viglius's instructions, 379; effect of this speech on members of council, 380; his indignation at Philip's persistence in religious persecution, 390; upbraids Egmont with having forgotten interests of his country during mission to Spain, 393; declares that the King's orders relative to Inquisition are too peremptory not to be obeyed, but washes his hands of consequences, 401; is supported by Egmont and Horn, ib.; is not consulted in formation of Compromise league, 419; his opinions on enforcement of edicts and Inquisition, ib.; disapproves of the Compromise league, 421; commences system of espionage upon Philip, ib.; invites leading nobles to meet at Brda, for a conference on public affairs, 426; effects change in tone and purport of Request, 427; his moderation, ib.; inclines to Lutheranism, 452; repairs to Antwerp at solicitation of citizens to restore public tranquillity, 454; regarded by all parties as the only man able to stem the rising tide of revolution, 456; remonstrates at Duffel with deputation from members of Compromise assembled at St. Trond, 460; is not deceived by false promises of Philip, ib.; his moderate proceedings at Antwerp relative to image-breakers, 12; draws up sixteen articles of agreement between heads of Reformed religion and government, 13; establishes religious peace at Utrecht and Amsterdam on same basis as at Antwerp, 14; his personal conduct at Antwerp when endeavoring to restore order after the iconoclast riots, 25; first thoughts of resistance to the plans of the Spanish government, and proposals to Egmont and Horn on the subject, 26; interviews at Den-dermonde between Orange, Horn, Egmont, Hoogstraeten, and Count Louis of Nassau, 27; his isolated position, 30; his increasing watchfaulces, 34; publishes a pamphlet on necessity of allowing some degree of religious liberty, 36; encourages citizens to resist introduction of mercenary garrisons, 39; his endeavors in favor of Protestants of Amsterdam, 45; refuses to take the new oath of allegiance imposed by government, 47; tenders his resignation, 48; is consulted by Brederode and other seigniors as to new petition to be presented to Regent, 48; partially connives at proceedings of Brederode, 50; his dauntless conduct at Antwerp during tumult caused by defeat of Ostrawell, 56; proposes terms of arrangement, 58; avails himself of antagonism between Lutherans and Calvinists to save the city, 59; meets the insurrectionists in the Mere, and proposes articles of accommodation, 61; succeeds in re-establishing order, 62; his efforts unappreciated by Regent, 63; his resolute resistance to all efforts to gain him over to the Spanish party, 72; interview with Mansfeld and Egmont, at Willebroeck, 74; endeavors to save Egmont, 76; letter to Philip, announcing his intention to withdraw from Netherlands, 77; letters to Horn and Egmont on same subject, 78; is informed by Vandermere that Alva has orders to arrest and condemn him at once, 78; and other seigniors are cited before the Blood-Council, 123; charges against them, 78; his reply to the summons, 78; his son seized as a hostage, 124; publishes a reply to act of condemnation, 156; his cautious to raise troops and gain allies in Germany, England, and France, 158; grants commission to Count Louis, to levy troops and wage war on Philip, 78; is recommended by his friends among the German princes, to pause in his attempts to save the Netherland provinces, 209; enrolls himself for life as a soldier of the Reformation, 210; change supervened in his religious character, 78; sincerity of his piety, 211; is required by the Emperor to lay down arms under penalty of forfeiting his rights and privileges, 212; his reply to Emperor's requisition, 78; his formal declaration of war against Alva, 214; proclamation to the people of the Netherlands, 215; crosses the Meuse with his army, 216; enters Brabant and takes up a position within a short distance of Alva's encampment, 217; baffling plan of his adversary, 218; incidents of the campaign, 220; effects a junction with Genlis, at Waveren, 223; disappointment at supineness of people, 78; mutinous state of his army, 78; crosses the frontier of France, 224; is summoned by the King of France to declare his intentions, 78; his reply, 225; is forced to lead back and disband his army, 226; sets forth with his two brothers to join the banner of Condé, 227; proceedings in France after disbanding his army at Strasburg, 275, 276; returns to Germany, 278; extensive correspondence with leading personages in every part of Netherlands, 78; issues commissions to privateers, 78; gives laws to the Beggars of the Sea, 78; his forlorn condition but unbroken spirit after return from France, 279; persevering efforts to obtain money and allies, 292; instructions to Dietrich Sonoy, 292; document called the Harangue addressed to princes of Germany, 78; oath of allegiance taken by revolted provinces to him as stadholder of King of Spain, 314; resumes stadholderate over Holland and Zealand, 78; religious toleration exhibited in his instructions to functionaries appointed by him, and in new oath of allegiance imposed, 78; assembles a new army in Germany, 322; addresses letters to principal cities of Netherlands, adjuring them to be true to his and their cause, 78; power conferred on him by Congress of Dort, 325; ordinance issued by him as a provisional form of government and voluntarily imposing limits on himself, 326; crosses the Rhine at Duisberg with a considerable army, 328; takes Roermond, 78; difference between his character as military commander and that of Alva, 329; his further advance, 330; learns the news of the massacre of the Huguenots in Paris, 331; advances with his army towards Mons, in the hope of provoking the enemy into a pitched battle, 338; night attack on his army by Don Frederic de Toledo, 340; retreats to Péronne and Nivèdes, &c.; is followed by an assassin hired by Alva, &c.; his soldiers refuse to remain longer in the field, 341; is obliged to advise his brother to capitulate, &c.; crosses the Rhine, disbands his army, and repairs to Holland, &c.; his reception in province of Holland after breaking up his army, 362; unfolds his plan of future proceedings in secret session of states of provinces at Harlem, 363; despatches a force under De la Marck to the relief of Harlem, 367; makes a fresh effort to succor the town, 370; further endeavors to succor Harlem, 375; keeps firm in faith and hope in spite of repeated disasters, 390; for want of funds is obliged to decline offer of Spanish soldiers to deliver Harlem into his hands, 394; his lofty enthusiasm, 397; difficulties experienced by him in raising funds for his enterprise, 404; his lofty and generous purpose, &c.; accusations against him by bigoted adherents of both religions, 405; his reliance upon secret negotiations reopened with the court of France, &c.; reasons for conquering his repugnance to King of France, 409; outline of new treaty with France drawn up by him, 410; solitary and anxious position during the misfortunes of Harlem and Alkmaar, 414; appeal to the general assembly of the Netherlands, exhorting the country to union against the oppressor, 415; epistle to the King of Spain, 416; confidence in God the mainspring of his energy, 417; liberty of conscience for the people his main object, &c.; publicly joins the Calvinist Church at Dort, &c.; his fears relative to impression likely to be produced by the King's promise of pardon, 438; position taken up by him during siege of Leyden, 464; desperate plan for the rescue of Leyden, 465; his illness at Rotterdam, 466; resumes preparations for relief of Leyden, 469; proceeds on board the fleet before Leyden, 473; receives news of the rescue of Leyden, 491; enters the city, &c.; grants privileges to the city as a reward for its sufferings, 483; reply to proposals of Requesens, made through St. Aldagonde, 488; answer to other negotiators, 489; power lodged in his hands, 491; complains in assembly of states of Holland of conduct of cities, and offers to resign, 492; powers vested in him by estates, &c.; refuses to accept government on these terms unless furnished with a monthly allowance, 493; suspicions of Spanish government and fear of a disastrous peace, 494; accepts the government of Holland and Zealand, 501; results of his marriage with Anne of Saxony, 503; marriage Princess Charlotte of Bourbon, 506; omittes caused by this marriage, &c.; evil consequences, 508; resolution to throw off allegiance to King of Spain, 519; difficulties as to choice of new sovereign for the states, 521; financial embarrassments of himself and brother John, 525; desperate scheme for rescuing inhabitants of Holland and Zealand, 526; prompt and decided conduct after death of Requesens, III. 3; changes introduced by him into political constitution of Holland and Zealand, 6; supreme authority in Holland and Zealand conferred on him, &c.; especial powers vested in him, &c.; absence of personal views and ambition, 7; honorable title bestowed on him by people, &c.; his unwavering religious toleration, &c.; reinstated in his principality of Orange by King of France, 10; prepares to take advantage of mutiny of Spanish troops to bring about a general union and organization, 26; letter to Count Lalaie, 27; to estates of Gueldres, &c.; to estates of Brabant, &c.; explores the various provinces to send deputies to a general congress, to effect a close union between Holland and Zealand and the other provinces, 28; sends troops to the assistance of Flanders against mutineers, 33; letters addressed by him to the states-general, assembled at Ghent, urging them to hasten to conclude treaty of union, 56; difficulties suggested by the arrival of Don John of Austria, 79; counsels to states-

- general relative to arrival of new governor-general, 80; outlines of negotiation to be entered into with Don John, 82; basis of his policy, 8; his combination disarranged by amplitude of concessions made by Don John of Austria, 94; his distrust of Don John and reasons for this, 95; is irritated at haste with which estates concluded treaty with Don John, 8; displeasure at provisions of Perpetual Edict, 96; refuses to publish or recognize the treaty in Holland and Zealand, 97; his written opinion of treaty, given to states-general at their request, 99; perfect accord between him and estates of Holland and Zealand, 8; his reply to proposals made by Dr. Leoninus in name of Don John of Austria, 101; his unbounded influence in Holland and Zealand, 102; respect in which he was held in other provinces, 8; his reply to letters of Don John, 103; tokens of sympathy received from his mother, 127; and from his son, 8; financial embarrassments of his family caused by their sacrifices to the cause of the Netherlands, 8; new advances made to him by Don John of Austria, 128; his struggles to establish a system of toleration, 129; interview and discussions with envoys sent by Don John of Austria and by estates-general of Catholic provinces, 131; envoys make a formal statement to him and the states of Holland and Zealand on the part of Don John, 137; protest against Perpetual Edict embodied in his reply to the document, 138; encourages and superintends the re-erection of dykes in Holland and Zealand, 157; touching love and gratitude of people towards him, 8; letter, never hitherto published, to estates-general on seizure of citadel of Namur and general conduct of Don John, 8; vindication of himself against charges made by Don John and others, 159; repairs to Utrecht, on invitation from magistrates, 160; hearty welcome given to him, 8; treaty of "Satisfactions" drawn up, 161; strategem for overcoming German troops sent up in Brack, 168; his determination to restore the administration to a states-council appointed by estates-general, 175; is invited by estates-general to come to Brussels to aid them with his counsel, 180; increase of his power and influence, 8; memorial presented to him at Gertruydenberg by commissioners sent to invite him to Brussels, 181; permission for his journey obtained from estates of Holland and Zealand, 8; reply to memorial of commissioners, 182; enthusiastic reception at Antwerp, 8; entry into Brussels, 184; future measures contemplated by him, 8; puts a stop to negotiations with Don John, 185; exceeding devotion of burghers of Brussels for him, 190; his wise conduct with regard to Archduke Matthias, 192; is elected Burward of Brabant, 192; significance of this office, 8; his new dignity confirmed by estates-general, 194; the crown within his grasp, 8; indignation at treacherous conduct of nobles, 196; interview with Eythove previous to outbreak of revolution in Ghent, 200; proceedings relative to outbreak, 203; repairs to Ghent on invitation of four estates of Flanders, 8; brings about a new act of union, securing the religious rights of Catholics and Protestants, 206; succeeds in negotiating treaty of alliance and embassy with England, 207; establishes fundamental terms on which Archduke Matthias is to be received as Governor-General of Netherlands, 208; is appointed lieutenant-general for the Archduke Matthias, 210; jealousy of him entertained by nobles, 216; loyal conduct with regard to Amsterdam, 225; preparations for campaign of 1578, 229; negotiations with England, 8; again confers chief posts of command on Catholic nobles, 8; rebukes his own church for its intolerance, 234; his reasons for maintaining relations with Duke of Alençon, 240; prescribes the term on which Alençon's assistance may be accepted, 243; causes a system of provisional toleration to be signed by Matthias, 246; incapacity of his contemporaries to understand his tolerance, 8; provisional arrangement for religious toleration in Antwerp, 240; discontent caused among Catholic leaders and Walloon population by his attempt to establish religious toleration, 250; endeavours to conciliate the contending parties in Ghent, 273; indignation at image-breaking riots at Ghent, 275; is induced to go to Ghent to appease uproar, 276; obtains consent of all parties to a religious peace, published 27th December, 1578, 277; import of this document, &c.; malcontents, summoned to lay down their arms, refuse, &c.; growing conviction of his enemies that his death alone would enable them to put down Netherland rebellion, 287, 288; effects the Union of Utrecht, the foundation of the Netherland republic, 297; false accusations against, relative to Union of Utrecht, 300; unceasing efforts to counteract the dismembering policy of Parma, 305; is blamed for the fall of Maestricht, and accused of plotting to deliver the country into the hands of Franco, 326; libellous letter against him laid before the assembly of the estates, 327; efforts to allay new disorders in Ghent, 329; repairs a second time to Ghent, and again his presence restores order, 330, 331; accepts the government of Flanders and returns to Antwerp, 332; attempts to bribe him made by members of Cologne conferences, 335; their utter failure, 336; offers to cede his powers to any successor appointed by estates-general, &c.; new schemes of government contemplated by him, 343; his arguments in favor of choice of Duke of Anjou as future ruler of the Netherlands, 346; rebukes and warnings and self-vindication addressed to various corporations and assemblies in 1579, 347; speech in estates-general at Antwerp, in 1579, upbraiding the people with the want of a broad patriotism, 350; address upon the state of the country in January, 1580, urging the necessity of raising a numerous and efficient army, &c.; is offered the sovereignty by estates of Holland and Zealand, 366; by advice of Cardinal Granvelle a price is set upon his head, 367; contents of

Ban, 366; replies by his famous Apology, 369; reluctantly accepts provisional sovereignty over Holland and Zealand, 380; substance of act conferring this sovereignty, &c.; limitation of sovereignty as to time subsequently cancelled by the states without his knowledge, 381; absence of personal ambition in him injurious to his country, 389; his reasons for wishing Anjou to be elected sovereign of Netherlands, 392; again summons country to provide for the general defence and to take measures for inauguration of Anjou, 397; attempt to assassinate him at Antwerp, 407; his generous forgiveness of assassin, &c.; his solicitude for Duke of Anjou and his country when thinking himself mortally wounded, &c.; agitation of the people, 408; investigations relative to attempted crime, 409; discovery of instigator, 411; letter to estates-general, imploring them, in case of his death, to remain faithful to Anjou, 413; solemn fast in Antwerp, 414; his care that the proceedings against his assassins should be conducted with strict justice, &c.; Leonardo Botalli, body physician to Anjou, saves his life by an ingenious expedient, &c.; his convalescence and relapse, 414, 415; joy of people at his recovery, 415; death of his wife, Charlotte of Bourbon, &c.; happiness enjoyed in marriage with her, &c.; is forced by the excitement, in consequence of his recovery, to accept permanently the Countship of Holland and Zealand, 416; position assigned to him by the new constitution, 418; other provisions of new constitution, 419; appeal to Anjou in reference to invasion of Antwerp, 441; efforts to effect an honorable reconciliation, if possible, between Duke of Anjou and the provinces, 448; his unceasing desire to see all the Netherland provinces united into one independent commonwealth, &c.; discovers intrigues of Anjou with Parma and Philip, 443; reply to Mirambaut, despatched to Netherlands by King of France to endeavor to effect a reconciliation between Anjou and

- the provinces, 444; statement of opinions as to necessity of not breaking with Anjou, drawn up at request of estates, 445; accord signed in consequence, 447; married, for the fourth time, to Louisa, widow of Teigny and daughter of Coligny, 448; refuses the sovereignty of United Provinces offered to him by the estates, 450; patriotic and self-denying tone of his answer on the occasion, &c.; sovereign dukedom of Brabant forfeited by Anjou, offered to him, &c.; refuses this also, and continues his efforts in favor of Anjou, &c.; indefatigable endeavors to counteract the machinations of Spanish party in Ghent, 455; various new attempts against his life, 457; last and successful attempt, 467; his last words, 468; children by his four marriages, 473; deep sorrow of the people at his death, &c.; effect of his death on country, &c.; his physical appearance and moral qualities, 474; the great aim of his life and policy, 475; disinterestedness of his services, &c.; his intellectual faculties, &c.; his never-failing consistency, 476; his political genius, &c.; his power of dealing with his fellow-men, 477; his eloquence, oral and written, 477, 478; his industry, 478; false view of his character given by his enemies, 478 note; his calm courage and cheerful disposition, 490; unvarying love and esteem of the people for him, 481.
- Ostrawell, defeat of Marix de Tholouse and Protestant troops at, ii. 53.
- Oudewater, besieged and taken by assault by Spaniards, ii. 512.
- Outreman, pensionary of Valenciennes, excites the fury of his fellow-citizens, by being the bearer of propositions from Noircarmes, ii. 46.
- Pacheco, or Paciotti, an Italian engineer attached to the army of Duke of Alva, ii. 94; employed in the erection of the famous citadel of Antwerp, 139; is put to death by the populace of Flushing, 369.
- Pacificatio of Ghent, opinion of juriconsults and divines upon, iii. 55.
- Passe, Fosse, a tailor of Mechlin, condemned to death on the charge of having preached the Reformed faith in that city, iii. 141.
- Farma, Ottavio Farnese, afterwards Duke of, married to Margaret, daughter of Charles V., i. 200; accompanies the Emperor to Barbary, &c.
- Farma, Alexander of, his bearing and character, i. 407; his nuptials with Maria of Portugal, 408; joins Don John of Austria at Luxemburg with several choice regiments from Spain and Italy, iii. 216; distinguished conduct in battle of Gemblours, 219; his birth and early characteristics, 264; education and youthful tastes, &c.; mode of life at Parma, &c.; heroic conduct at battle of Lepanto, 266; his personal appearance, &c.; his military abilities, and mental characteristics, 267; his religious sentiments, 268; favorable auspices under which he assumed power in the Netherlands, 269; his subtle and unscrupulous policy, 283; commences campaign of 1579 with a feint against Antwerp, and then moves upon Maestricht, 304; continued negotiations and intrigues with Walloon provinces, 305; signs Treaty of Accord with Walloon provinces, 310; pantomime at Paris illustrative of his success, 311; his entry into Maestricht after capture of the city, 326; indignation at arrival of his mother in Netherlands to assume civil administration of provinces, 376; declares his determination not to submit to divided authority, and conquers, 377; measures taken in consequence of proposed assassination of Prince of Orange, 416; draws foreign troops into the country in spite of treaty to the contrary with united Walloon provinces, 421; lays siege to Oudenarde, &c.; traits of courage and coolness evinced by him during siege, 422; reduces Kinova, 423; unsuccessful attack on Lochum, &c.; expenses of his army, 424; position at close of autumn, 1582—is accused of having instigated attempt to poison Anjou and Orange at Bruges, &c.; increases with Prince of Chimay, by which Bruges is restored to Philip, &c.; his share in

- murder of Prince of Orange, 463 ; intercedes with Philip to secure to the heirs of the murderer the reward for the assassination of Prince of Orange, 472.
- Parma, Margaret of, nominated Regent of Netherlands, 1. 182 ; her descent and early education, 189 ; is given in marriage to Alexander de Medici, 200 ; married a second time to Ottavio Farnese, &c. ; her aversion to her husband, &c. ; remorse at his reported death, &c. ; her hatred for him changes to passionate fondness, 201 ; reasons for her being appointed Regent of Netherlands, &c. ; her bigotry, &c. ; her personal appearance and mental characteristics, 202 ; stratagem used by her to induce the council to comply with Philip's request to send troops to France, 311 ; forbidden by Philip to convoke the estates-general, summons a meeting of Knights of the Fleece, &c. ; exerts herself to reconcile contending factions, 313 ; informs Philip that the Prince of Orange is reported to be reviving some great design, 321 ; reports to Philip dissensions among seigniors, 328 ; despatches Armenteros to Spain, 333 ; her instructions to him, &c. ; her alarm at increasing discontent of nobles, 334 ; urges Philip to give satisfaction to Netherland nobles, 349 ; her delight at having escaped from servitude to Granvelle, 361 ; contumelious treatment of his friends, 362 ; her denunciations of Granvelle and his party to King, and secret protestations of friendship to Granvelle himself, &c. ; her intimacy with Armenteros, and disgraceful participation in his peculations, 369 ; her contemptuous treatment of former adherents of Granvelle, 370 ; her insinuations against Viglius, 372 ; difficulties of her position, 397 ; urges Philip to change instructions to inquisitors, &c. ; expenses and distress caused by her son's nuptials, 408 ; driven to despair by disturbed state of country and discontent of the nobles, 422 ; informs Philip that he must take up arms or make concessions, 428 ; her agitation on the presentation of Request, 432 ; her answer to Request, 434 ; reply to second address of confederates, 436 ; issues the "Moderation," 443 ; purport of Moderation, &c. ; issues proclamations to put down religious assemblies, 449 ; false accusations against Orange, 461 ; her rage at bold language of members of Compromise assembled at St. Trond, 462 ; indignation and terror at image-breaking, 482 ; determines to seek refuge in Mons, &c. ; is advised by seigniors to remain at her post, 483 ; is forced to concede liberty of worship where already established, 484 ; signs articles of agreement called the "Accord," 485 ; announces to Philip that if the three points demanded by Berghen and Montigny be not granted she can no longer restrain rebellion, ii. 3 ; letter to Philip on subject of concessions made to confederates, 8 ; calumnies against Orange, Egmont, Horn, and Hoogstraeten, 9 ; compact agreed to with confederates for pacification of provinces, 10 ; begins to assume a tone of open defiance toward Malcontents, 19 ; recalls Horn from Tournay, &c. ; despatches Noir-carneau to Tournay to disarm citizens and suppress the Accord, 20 ; continued treacherous conduct to Orange, Horn, and Egmont, 22 ; informs the King that a scheme is arranged for dividing the country and for massacring the people, 23 ; declares Valenciennes in a state of siege and all citizens rebels, 39 ; appeals to Orange for assistance against proceedings of Brederode, 45 ; grants permission to Protestants of Amsterdam to preach in the Lastage, and immediately afterward withdraws the same, 46 ; refuses to accept resignation of Orange, 47 ; haughty reply to Brederode's second request, 49 ; visits Antwerp after the pacification of Calvinist tumults, 70 ; her expressions on the occasion, &c. ; her indignation at being superseded by Alva, 71 ; her efforts to gain over Orange, 75 ; her indignation on arrival of Alva, 98 ; conduct subsequent to arrest of Egmont and Horn, 110 ; her resignation is finally accepted, 127 ; she departs from Netherlands, &c.

- Parties, three political, in Netherlands during government of Don John of Austria, iii. 140.
- Pasana, Treaty of, affirmed by Oranville to have been secretly revoked by Charles V., ii. 237.
- "Paternoster Jacks," name given to malcontent Walloon party by Calvinists, iii. 248.
- Patriots, position of, after departure of Alva, ii. 437.
- Paul IV., indignation of, at the truce of Vaucelles, i. 140; his ambitious character, &c.; his hatred of Spaniards, 141; absolves King of France from keeping faith with Spain, 143; makes peace with Spain, 147.
- Peace, universal desire for, in Netherlands, after departure of Alva, ii. 431.
- People, degraded condition of, i. 29; state of, at commencement of reignty of Margaret of Parma, 225; refuse to repair dykes if Spanish troops are not removed, 241; their growing terror of and wrath at Inquisition, 396; call upon Orange, Egmont, and Horn, to come forward as their champions, 401; despair at republication of edicts and renewed proclamation of Inquisition, 403; sufferings of, and commencement of emigration to England, 423.
- Peres, Gonzalo, secretary of Philip II., draws up letter by which the King recalls Granville, i. 258.
- Peres, Antonio, confidential secretary of state of Philip II., his betrayal of Don John of Austria, iii. 117; plottings with Philip against Don John of Austria, and professions of friendship to the latter, 118; conducts toward Escovedo, 119; suggests to Don John the necessity of procuring assassination of Prince of Orange, 121.
- Perrone, interview of Cardinal de Lorraine and Bishop of Arras at, i. 120.
- Philip the Fair, receives the homage of the states of Netherlands, i. 59; curtails the privileges of the states, &c.; marries Joanna, daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella of Castile and Arragon, &c.; dies at Burgos, 51.
- Philip II., King of Spain and of the Netherlands, his personal appearance, i. 94; his ingratitude to his father, 116; accession to the sovereignty of the Netherlands, 121; his first appearance in Netherlands as crown prince, &c.; his marriage with Maria of Portugal, &c.; swears without reservation to support all the constitutions and privileges of the provinces, &c.; his marriage with Mary of England, 123; his repulsive manners, 125; his temperament and characteristics, &c.; his accomplishments and personal habits, 130; determines to re-enact the edict of 1550, 138; desires to annihilate provincial independence of Netherlands, &c.; qualms of conscience occasioned by hostile position toward the Church, 145; his concessions to Pope Paul IV., 147; induces England to declare war against France, 1557, 159; refuses to encamp before St. Quentin, 161; neglects to follow up victory of St. Quentin by marching on Paris, 163; causes body of Saint Quentin to be brought to his tent, 166; disbands his army after victory of St. Quentin, 167; proposes to marry daughter of King of France, 178; recommends the councils of the provinces to extirpate all heretics, 185; takes leave of the estates, 185; makes a "Request" for new supplies, 196; nominates Duchess of Parma Regent of France, &c.; his rage at remonstrance relative to foreign troops presented by the states-general, 190; his subsequent dissimulation, &c.; issues further instructions for persecution of heretics, &c.; rebukes William of Orange, 192; lands in Spain after quitting Netherlands, 193; celebrates his return by an auto-da-fé, 195; swears to uphold the Inquisition, &c.; his reasons for appointing Margaret of Parma Regent of Netherlands, 201, 202; carries out measures relative to creation of new bishoprics, without consulting Anthony Perrenot, 238; directs from Spain criminal investigations against individuals in Netherlands, 243; his rage at complaints against Oranville and opposition to institution of new bishoprics, 252; enthusiasm to inspirations of Granville 254; state of his exchequer, &c.; confirms instructions of Charles V. to inquisitors in Netherlands, 288; his characterization of inquisition in Netherlands, 297; urged by Granvella denies the intention to introduce Spanish Inquisition in Netherlands, 307; protests to Montigny that he has no intention to introduce Spanish Inquisition into Netherlands, and that Granvella was not consulted previously to introduction of new bishoprics, 321; requests opinion of Alva on letters and remonstrances of Netherlands nobles, 335; orders Margaret of Parma to proclaim and enforce decrees of Council of Trent in Netherlands, 377; endeavours to win Egmont when in Spain, 386; dissimulation with all parties, 392; suggestions as to new mode of punishing heretics, 397; instructions to Alva for his guidance in interview with Catherine de Medici at Bayonne, 398; letters to inquisitors in Netherlands, 400; expresses his dissatisfaction at opposition of Netherlands to Inquisition and enjoins Regent strictly to carry out religious decrees, &c.; applauds decision of theological assembly, 401; open and secret proceedings after arrival of Berghen and Montigny in Madrid, li. 1; communications to the Pope regarding pretended concessions made to Netherlands, 5; false promises to visit Netherlands, 6; declares to Regent his determination never to allow states-general to be convened, but desires the people to be deceived on the subject, 7; letter to Egmont expressive of approbation of his having taken the new oath, and his whole course of conduct, 78; letter to Margaret of Parma expressive of disapprobation of edict of 24th May, 1567, on account of its leniency, 84; the veil of hypocritical clemency towards Netherlands is thrown off, 88; is counselled by Ruy Gomez to proceed in person to Netherlands, &c.; intentions with which he despatched Alva to Netherlands, 101; his joy at Alva's success in capturing Netherland nobles, 111; perfidious instructions to Ebohl regarding his conduct to Berghen and Montigny, 115; issues proclamation concerning the decrees of the Holy Office condemning to death all the inhabitants of the Netherlands, 127; expression of determination to sacrifice his own flesh, if required by the Lord, 202; public answer to Emperor of Germany's intercession in favor of Netherlands and William of Orange, 233; private answer to same, 234; elaborate preparations for secret and extraordinary execution of Montigny, 263; instructs Alva to make known that Montigny has died a natural death, 269; consummate hypocrisy evinced on this occasion, &c.; plot against Queen of England, 285; orders Alva to supply troops to carry out plot against Duke of England, 287; appoints Duke of Medina Ceñi Governor-General of Netherlands, in lieu of Alva, 291; reprimands deputies from Netherland provinces, sent to Spain to remonstrate against imposition of the new taxes, 296; his exultation at massacre of Huguenots in France, 333; letters to Alva on the subject, 334; secret endeavours to obtain the imperial crown of Germany, 407; pledges himself to withdraw Spanish troops from Netherlands, and to allow the free exercise of the reformed religion there, 408; his ministers and governors mere puppets in his hands, 430; dissimulation as regards his intended policy towards Netherlands, 431; expenses of Netherland rebellion, 433; anger at death of Requesens, iii. 2; undecided policy subsequent to this event, &c.; despatches Havré to endeavour to pacify the country, 19; letters to estates of Brabant, and to state-council, 20; plottings with Antonio Perez to ensnare Don John of Austria, 117; suggests to Don John, through the means of Perez, the necessity of the assassination of Prince of Orange, 120; letter to estates-general of Netherlands in reply to their communications of 24th August and 8th September, 1577, 227; insists upon necessity of maintaining the royal supremacy and the Catholic religion on the basis adopted by his father, 228; issues ban against Prince of Orange, 367; despatches Duchess Margaret of Parma to Ne- therlands, 376; offers to restore to eldest son of Prince of Orange the estates bestowed on the relatives of his father's murderer, on condition of his paying a pension to them, 472.

- Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, his opposition to marriage of his grand-daughter, Anna of Saxony, with William of Orange, i. 262; his protest against said marriage, 271.
- Philibert de Bruxelles, his speech on the Emperor's abdication, l. 95.
- Pierrepont, French army assembled at, in 1557, l. 150; army assembled at, 177.
- Pleiss les Tours, convention of, between estates-general of Netherlands and Duke of Anjou, iii. 365.
- Podesta, chief magistrate of East Frisland, elected by provinces, l. 34.
- Pontus Payen, author of a history of the times, i. 153 note.
- Portugal, Maria of, first wife of Philip II., l. 121.
- Portugal, Maria of, wife of Alexander of Parma, her beauty and accomplishments, l. 408.
- Protestants, purity of their lives, l. 405.
- Ramminghem, defenda secretaries at Watelote, ii. 41.
- Ratcliffe and Gray, two Englishmen, executed on charge of having assassinated Don John of Austria, iii. 256.
- Reformation, progress of, in Netherlands, l. 64; attempts to suppress, in Netherlands, 69.
- Reformed religion, triumphant in Holland and Zealand, iii. 234; rapid spread through the provinces, 6.
- Reformers, their increasing boldness and religious meetings in the fields, l. 448; they principally belonged, to which they principally belonged, 452; commence building their first temple outside Tournay, ii. 17; demand permission to preach inside the city, 18; their conduct at Valenciennes, 39; their conduct at Antwerp after defeat of Tholomeus, 54.
- Remonstrance of estates of Brabant on destruction of Antwerp, iii. 56.
- Renard, Simon, suspected of writing a stinging lampoon against Cardinal Granvelle, l. 202.
- Reuzberg, Count, brother of Count Hoogstraten, and stadholder of Friesland and Drenthe, betrays patriot cause, iii. 351; price paid for his treachery, 352; evil influence of his sister, Cornelia Lalain, Baroness Monceau, 353; his character, 6.; intercepted letters reveal his treason to Orange, 353; incidents attending his seizure of the city of Gröningen for Prince of Parma, 354; lays siege to Steenwyk, 371; is obliged to abandon the siege, 374; his subsequent career and death, 374, 375.
- Requesens, Don Luis de, appointed successor of Alva, arrives in Brussels, ii. 421; his previous career, 429; instructions received from Philip on assuming governorship of Netherlands, 430; his views of Netherlands affairs on first assuming office, 434; opposite opinions held by him and Alva, 435; sends two fleets, under Bomero and Arvis, to attempt to rescue Middelburg, 439; parleys with mutinous Spanish troops, 456; vain negotiations with assembly of deputies at Brussels, 467; various negotiations with Orange, 468; his ignorance as to Philip's real wishes and intentions regarding peace, 500; preparations for taking possession of isles of Zealand, 512; his financial difficulties, 525; unexpected death, 527; retrospective views of his character and career, 528.
- Request, proposed to be presented to Margaret of Parma by confederates of the Compromise league, l. 425; Orange's steps with regard to it, 6.; subject of, discussed in assembly of notables, 429; presentation of, 430; purport of this document, 431; answer to, 434.
- Reuz, Count, Governor of Flanders, solicits aid from Prince of Orange against mutineers, iii. 32.
- Rhetoric chambers, their liberal tendencies and influence on people, l. 301.
- Richardot, Jean, nephew of the Bishop of Arras, his testimony to the incredible horrors of the sack of Mechlin, ii. 357.
- Riots of Reformers against Catholics, in Antwerp, iii. 312; in Utrecht, 6.
- Riperda, commander of the garrison of Harlem, warns the citizens of the absolute necessity of making a last effort for freedom, ii. 265.

- Roda, Jerome de, claims to be sole Governor of Netherlands, iii. 22; his unworthy treatment of Netherland nobles after capture of Antwerp, 54; writes letter of congratulation to Philip, after capture of the city, 55.
- Rodolph II., accession to the imperial throne, iii. 92; his sentiments towards Netherlands, ib.
- Romero, Julian, supposed to have been the officer who urged Egmont to escape, ii. 105; disgraceful conduct at Naarden, 358.
- Rotterdam, onslaught of Spanish troops on, after vain attempts to recapture Brill, ii. 306.
- Ruyter, Herimande de, a cattle drover, and partizan of Orange, murders the Governor of Loustein, and takes possession of the castle, ii. 273; blows up the castle, 274.
- Ryhove, a nobleman of Ghent, passionately attached to the Prince of Orange, and desirous of forming a free confederation of Netherlands iii. 196; seeks an interview with Prince of Orange, at Antwerp, to propose a revolution in Ghent, 199; incidents and result of interview, ib.; returns to Ghent, and urges on the people to throw off the Spanish yoke, 201; is placed at the head of provisional government, 202; atrocious proceedings against Visch and Hoesele, 272; struggles for power with Imbizo, at Ghent, 329.
- Rythovius, Peter, Doctor of Divinity, raises popular commotion by entering into disputation with reformed preacher, i. 458.
- Saint Quentin, city of, strategical importance of its position, i. 156; is threatened by the Duke of Savoy, ib.; battle of, 159—162; assault and sack of the city, 163—169.
- Saint Winocsherg, taken by De Thermes, i. 171.
- Salseda, a Spaniard, and Basa, an Italian, detected in a scheme to poison Anjou and Orange, at instigation of Duke of Parma, iii. 424; fearful mode of execution at Paris, ib.
- Sarrasin, John, prior of Saint Vaast, his zeal in buying over adherents to royal cause, and services in re-estab- lishing the royal authority over the Walloon provinces, ii. 287; purchases effected by him among Catholic nobles, 293.
- Savoy, Emanuel Philibert, Duke of, Regent of Netherlands; his character and early career, i. 135; takes command of army, 151; invests St. Quentin, 155; recovers his sovereignty, 178; promises to marry Margaret, sister of King of France, ib.; rebukes estates for indignity offered to Philip, ii. 189.
- Saxony, Augustus, Elector of, his eagerness for marriage of his niece Anna with William of Orange, i. 262.
- Saxony, Anna of, married to William of Orange, i. 257; her eccentricity, ii. 502; her conduct towards Orange, ib.; her intemperance, 504; her letters to Alva, ib.; her infidelity, 505; her solitary confinement, ib.; death, ib.
- Scheidt, victory of the patriot fleet over the Spanish fleet, in the year 1574, ii. 439; victory of patriot Admiral Haemsted, off Antwerp, 459.
- Schetz, Caspar, Baron of Grobbendonck, his position, i. 346; his venality, ib.; humiliation of Granvelle fixed upon by nobles at banquet at his house, 347.
- Schoonoven, surrender to Hierges, ii. 512.
- Schout and Schepens, chief magistrates and aldermen of Flemish cities, how appointed, i. 31.
- Schouwen conquered by the Spaniards, ii. 517.
- Schwarzburg, Count Gunther de, despatched to Germany, to sue for the hand of the Princess Anna of Saxony for William of Orange, i. 263.
- Secta, religious, in Netherlands, i. 61; dreadful persecution of, ib.
- Segovia, consultations of Spanish council at, on the subject of discontaining in Netherlands, ii. 2.
- Selwaert Abbey, total destruction of Nassau's army near, ii. 192.
- Sessa, Carlos da, burnt as a heretic, i. 194.
- Sienna ceded to Cosmo de Medici, i. 148.
- Slaves and serfs in Netherlands, i. 29.

- Smith, Christopher, a Carmelite monk converted to Protestantism, put to death at Antwerp, i. 374.
- Soldiers, Spanish, become mutinous, ii. 53; offer to deliver Harlem into the hands of Orange, 394; are appeased by Alva, 395; their peculiar situation and constitution in Netherlands, 452; mutiny immediately after battle of Mook, or Mooker-beyde, 454; seize Antwerp, 456; mutiny settled by treaty with governor-general, 458; departure of, from Netherlands, iii. 106.
- Sonninus, Dr. Francis, sent on a mission to Rome to represent necessity of increase of bishoprics in Netherlands, i. 232.
- Soney, Diedrich, appointed by Orange lieutenant-governor of North Holland, ii. 314; written instructions given to him by the Prince, &c.; floods the country to save Alkmaar, 401; discovers conspiracy among certain inhabitants of Holland to favor a Spanish invasion, 508; establishes a kind of blood-council, and commits horrible cruelty on some of the conspirators, 509.
- Sorrento, Archbishop of, his mission in Netherlands, i. 445.
- Spa, meeting of nobles at, to lay the foundations of the Compromis, i. 414.
- Statholders of provinces, their functions and powers, i. 153.
- Statistics of life and money expended in Netherlands during the struggle for liberty, iii. 54.
- Steenwyk, the key to the province of Drenthe, is besieged by Renneberg, iii. 371; is assailed with red-hot balls and with stinging sarcasms, &c.; pretended intercepted letter of Orange, &c.; bombics of Captain Corupet, 374; siege abandoned by Renneberg, &c.
- Stolberg, Juliana of, mother of William of Orange, i. 206; her piety and beneficial influence on her sons, &c.
- Stralen, Antony van, burgomester of Antwerp, arrested the same day as Egmont and Horn, ii. 166; is executed by order of Alva, 207.
- Strada, his doubts as to letter of Francis de Alva to Margaret of Parma, ii. 72.
- Strozzi, Marsha, commences campaign in Italy in 1556, i. 143; his death, 170.
- Strycher, Herman, a converted monk, addresses an assembly of eight thousand persons in neighborhood of Ghent, i. 448.
- Swarte, John de, and other persons burnt for reading the Bible, i. 293.
- Taffin, Nicholas, demands that the community of Tournay shall defray expenses of building Protestant temples, ii. 2.
- Tanchelyn, his character and career, i. 60.
- Teligny, son-in-law of Colligny, shut up in St. Quentin, makes an imprudent sortie, and further increases dangers of the fortress, i. 156; fails in the encounter, &c.
- Tergoes, besieged by Jerome de 't Zwaerter, ii. 352; position of town, &c.; expedition to relieve the place, 353; defeat of besieging army, 454.
- Thermes, Paul de, Governor of Calais, i. 168; attacks and takes Dunkirk, 171; taken prisoner after battle of Gravelines, 174.
- Thionville, siege of, i. 170.
- Thoulouze, Maruz de, commands expedition against Walcheren, projected by Brederode, ii. 51.
- Tiakaen, Hans, his execution for heresy by order of Regent, i. 442.
- Tisnacq, engagement at, between mutinous Spanish troops and a mass of students, burghers, and peasantry, iii. 29.
- Titelmann, Peter, inquisitor in Flanders, Donay, and Tournay, his character, and cruelty, i. 289; remonstrances made by citizens and estates against his monstrous proceedings, 376; prognosticates evil from the escape of Orange, ii. 112.
- Toledo, don Ferdinand de, grand prior, natural son of the Duke of Alva, his friendship for Egmont, ii. 104; urges Egmont to escape, 109.
- Torquemada first grand inquisitor, i. 281; number of individuals burnt alive during his administration, &c.
- Tournay, its liberties destroyed by Charles V., i. 102; citizens of, disarmed, ii. 21; is besieged by Alexander of Parma, iii. 306; defended

- by Princess of Espinoy, 396; capitulation of, 397.
- Treaty of Union signed between Prince of Orange and estates of Holland and Zealand on the one side, and other provinces of Netherlands on the other, iii. 58; great credit and benefits accruing from the treaty, 60; popularity of the treaty, ib.
- Trent, decrees of council of, ordered to be enforced in Netherlands, i. 376; their provisions, ib.; contrary to the privileges of provinces, ib.; opposition to their promulgation, 379; opposition of clergy to council of, 393; orders to publish Council of Trent Edicts and Inquisition throughout Netherlands, 403.
- Treulong, William de Biols, Seigneur de, one of the leaders of the Beggars of the Sea, his part in capture of Brill, ii. 301.
- Tribunet, Jester at the court of Charles V., i. 113.
- Troud, St., assembly of members of Compromise league at, i. 459; dissolution of assembly, 463.
- Truchses, Gerard, Archbishop of Cologne, seeks refuge with Prince of Orange at Delft, iii. 448.
- Uitenhove, a Flemish noble, roasted to death by slow fire for having been engaged in the capture of Brill, ii. 420.
- Union of Brussels, iii. 86; tenor, motive, and effect of agreement, 86; germ of destruction contained in it, 87.
- Utrecht, foundation of bishopric of, i. 19; city and province of, declared to have forfeited all rights and property by opposition to new system of taxation, ii. 249; appeal to Philip against Alva, 259; Union of, effected by William of Orange, iii. 297; object and provisions of Union, ib.; characterization of Union, 300.
- Valenciennes, city of, its origin and situation, ii. 37; refuses to admit a garrison of Spanish mercenaries, 38; is invested by Nercarnes, 39; appeals to the Knights of the Fleece for assistance, 43; terms proposed by Regent and counter propositions to those, 64; assault and surrender of, 67; sufferings of citizens, 69.
- Valladolid, first auto-da-fé at, i. 195.
- Valois, Margaret of, Queen of Navarre, her exceeding beauty and great talents, iii. 146; her intrigues in Hainault in favour of the Duke of Alençon, 147; her reception at Namur by Don John of Austria, 148.
- Vandenesse, private secretary to Philip II. and secret agent of Orange, informs the latter that Alva has received orders to arrest him, ii. 79.
- Vargas, Francis de, opinion as to infallibility of Council of Trent, i. 376.
- Vargas, Juan de, member of the Blood-Council, his vicious and cruel character, ii. 121.
- Vauelles, truce of, concluded 5th February, 1556; rejoicings caused by, i. 138.
- Veldade, a German prophetess, promises success to Claudius Civilis, and gains confederates for him, i. 13; is bought over by the Romans, 14.
- Venero, and Zimmerman, execution of, the accomplices of assassin of Prince of Orange, iii. 414.
- Verdugo, report of state of affairs in Brussels and Antwerp in consequence of mutiny of Spanish soldiers, iii. 22.
- Vervins, town of, burned and pillaged by Spanish army under Duke of Savoy, i. 154.
- Viglius, van Aytta, president of the Council, his personal appearance, i. 91; his origin, talents, and learning, 202; his early career, ib.; nominated member of council of state and of consulta, 203; odious on account of supposed participation in composition of edict of 1550, ib.; his bigotry and intolerance, ib.; his pusillanimity, 305; his desire to retire, and Philip's bribes to retain him in office, ib.; his speech to the assembly of Knights of the Fleece, evoked in 1563, 311; rendered uneasy by uprooting of a mulberry-tree, 313; his uneasiness after recall of Granvelle, and contempt with which he was treated by the Regent, 370; his love of lucre, 372; accusations of Regent against him, ib.; being attacked by apoplexy is superseded by Hopper, 381; attempts to

- smooth the troubled waters, 402; represents necessity for the King's presence in Netherlands, ii. 7; his obsequiousness to Alva, 119; assists in the choice of members of the Blood-Council, 121; his eulogy on the prudence and gentleness of Alva, 127; opposes Alva's new scheme of arbitrary taxation in Netherlands, 247; his endeavours to procure an amnesty, 251; adopts the cause of the people in opposition to Alva, 281; dissenting statements as to his presence in state council on occasion of its arrest by the Seigneur de Hésé, iii. 31 note; his death, 130.
- Villages, number of, i. 81.
- Villars, de, commanding a division of patriot army under Louis of Nassau, is defeated first at Roermonde, ii. 160; subsequently at Erkelens and Dalem, &c.; betrays Orange's designs, 161.
- Vitelli, Chiappin, his character and extraordinary obesity, ii. 517; his death, &c.
- Vroedschappen, or councillors elected by the cities in Netherlands, i. 23.
- Walcheren, horrid internecine warfare in the island of, ii. 312; detestable cruelty of natives towards Spaniards, 312.
- Walloon, provinces of, Artois, Hainault, Lille, Douay, and Orchies, unite in a separate league, 1579, iii. 295; conferences with deputations from states-general, 305; deputation sent to Prince of Parma before Maastricht, 309; flattering reception given to deputation, &c.; fascination exercised by Prince on deputation, &c.; preliminary Accord signed with King's government, 310; provisions of Accord, &c.; effect produced by Accord throughout Netherlands on Prince of Orange and in France, 311.
- Walsingham, Sir Francis, and Lord Cobham despatched to Netherlands by Queen of England to endeavour to effect pacification between the estates and the Governor, Don John of Austria, iii. 244; conference with Don John, 245; leave Netherlands, having failed in their mission, &c.
- Willebrock, interview between Orange, Egmont, and Mansfeld at, ii. 74.
- Willemsoon Dirk, an anabaptist, put to death under dreadful tortures after an admirable act of Christian self-devotion, ii. 242.
- Women, condition of, in Netherlands, i. 81.
- Ypres forced to yield to Spanish government, and dead heretics hanged, and living ones killed, iii. 456.
- Zeland, islands of, recovered by patriots, iii. 61.
- Zeraerts, Jerome van 't, appointed by Orange Governor of the island of Walcheren, ii. 310.
- Zierickzee, besieged by Mondragon, ii. 517; attempts to relieve city, iii. 12; surrenders on advice of Prince of Orange, 12; conditions of surrender, &c.; mutiny of Spanish troops after surrender, &c.
- Zutphen, enormous cruelties committed at, by order of Alva, ii. 255.
- Zwyder Zee formed by submersion of lands along the Vlie, i. 24; naval engagement in, between Count Boscawen and Admiral Dirksoon, ii. 417; victory of patriots and capture of Spanish Admiral, 421.

THE END

MESSRS. GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS'
NEW BOOKS.

---

MISS EDWARDS ON THE DOLOMITES.

- 7 6 UNTRIDDEN PEAKS AND UNFREQUENTED VALLEYS.
 A Midsummer Ramble in the Dolomites. By A. B. EDWARDS.
 New Revised and Cheaper Edition, with Illustrations and a Map. Uniform with "A Thousand Miles Up the Nile."
- 7 6 COOPER'S LEATHER-STOCKING TALES. A New Edition.
 Arranged for Youth by G. WASHINGTON MOON. With Illustrations in the Text and Five Page Coloured Plates. A handsome volume of nearly 1,000 pages. Uniform with Routledge's Seven-and-Sixpenny Edition of Grimm and Andersen.
- 7 6 MORE MAGIC. A New Book on Conjuring. By Professor HOFFMAN. With many Illustrations. Uniform with "Modern Magic."
- 6 0 ABOUT ROBINS. Songs, Facts, Legends. Collected and Illustrated by LADY LINDSAY, R.I. Printed in Colours by EDMUND EVANS.
- 6 0 CALDECOTT'S GRAPHIC PICTURES. A New and Cheaper Edition of the Famous First Series.
- 5 0 THE WIDE WIDE WORLD.
each. QUEECHY.
- UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.
BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.
LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF ROBIN HOOD. By JOHN B.
 MARSH.
 New Editions of these STANDARD JUVENILE BOOKS, with Coloured Plates and Additional Illustrations.
- 5 0 EARTHQUAKES. By ARNOLD BOSCOWITZ. With Many Illustrations. Translated by C. B. PITMAN. Large Crown 8vo, Cloth.
- 5 0 CAPTAIN: The Adventures of a Dog. By MADAME P. DE NANTEUIL. With 72 Illustrations by MYRBACH.

---

London, Glasgow, Manchester and New York.

Messrs. GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS' NEW BOOKS.

- <sup>4</sup> <sup>d.</sup>
5 0 A New and Cheaper Edition of GRACE AGUILAR'S JUVENILE BOOKS, in a New and Elegant Binding, 7 Volumes.
- 5 0 LITTLE WIDEAWAKE FOR 1890. 16th Year of Publication. Edited by MRS. SALE BARKER. With many Illustrations and Coloured Frontispiece. (And in Boards, 3s. 6d.)
- 5 0 LITTLE TINY'S BOOK. Large Type Stories. With nearly 1,000 Illustrations. Cloth Cilt. (And in Boards, 3s. 6d.)
- 3 6 THE JOHN GILPIN PICTURE BOOK. Four New Toy Books. Printed in Colours by VAN LEER. Cloth. (And in Boards, 2s. 6d.)
- 3 6 ROUTLEDGE'S BOOK OF ALPHABETS. Printed in Colours by EDMUND EVANS. (And in Boards, 2s. 6d.)
- 3 6 ROUTLEDGE'S THREE AND-SIXPENNY JUVENILE BOOKS.—NEW VOLUMES.
each.
1. Marryat's Children of the New Forest
  2. Marryat's Little Savage.
  3. Kaloolah. By W. S. MAYO.
  4. Marooner's Island. By F. R. GOULDING.
  5. The Young Marooners. By F. R. GOULDING.
  6. The Modern Seven Wonders of the World. By CHARLES KENT.
  7. The Cruise of the "Wasp." By HENRY FRITH.
  8. The Life of Robin Hood. By JOHN B. MARSH.
- KATE GREENAWAY'S NEW BOOK.*
- 3 6 THE BOOK OF GAMES. By KATE GREENAWAY. With Illustrations printed in Colours by EDMUND EVANS. Fancy Cloth. (And in Boards, 2s. 6d.)
- CHEAP EDITION OF VICTOR HUGO'S LAST WORK.*
- 3 6 THINGS SEEN (Choses Vues). By VICTOR HUGO. Crown 8vo, Cloth.
- 3 6 BAILEY'S FESTUS. The Great Poem by PHILIP JAMES BAILEY. Jubilee Edition—it having been first published in 1839. Demy 8vo, Cloth.
- MR. W. S. GILBERT'S CHRISTMAS BOOK.*
- 3 6 FOGGERTY'S FAIRY. A Collection of all the Christmas Tales, on many of which his famous Comic Operas are founded, contributed by MR. GILBERT to the leading London Periodicals.
- 12 6 THE INGOLDSBY LEGENDS. With Reproductions of the Original Illustrations. 3 Vols. Pocket Library Edition. Half-Calf, Antique.

---

London, Glasgow, Manchester and New York.