SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION
Philadelphia

SECURITIES ACT OF 1933

Release No. 2956

SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT OF 1934

Release No. 3506

The Securities and Exchange Commission today made public an opinion of James A. Treanor, Jr., Director of the Trading and Exchange Division, discussing the effect of the anti-manipulative provisions of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and the Securities Act of 1933 on the activities of a manager of an underwriting syndicate.

Mr. Treanor's opinion deals primarily with the case of a manager of an underwriting syndicate who effects purchases of a security to reduce the short position of the "syndicate account" in that security while the members of the syndicate or members of the selling group are engaged in the retail distribution of such security. In this situation, Mr. Treanor points out, a manager's transactions which raise the price of the security or create excessive trading therein, will violate the anti-manipulative and fraud provisions of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and the Securities Act of 1933.

The opinion also discusses the factors which indicate the presence or absence of manipulative intent.

The opinion applies to securities which are traded on national securities exchanges as well as to those which are traded in the over-the-counter market.

The text of the opinion follows:

"You have inquired whether transactions effected by the manager of an underwriting syndicate to cover an overallotment short position of the syndicate are subject to the anti-manipulative provisions of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and the Securities Act of 1933.

"As I understand it, you are the manager of a syndicate which is underwriting an issue of shares of stock of 'X Y Z' Corporation. The issue is being publicly offered at a fixed price, having recently become effectively registered under the Securities Act of 1933. I also understand that the syndicate account is 'short' shares in the amount of approximately 8% of the amount originally offered, resulting from overallotment. It also appears that the individual members of the underwriting group are 'long', in the aggregate, approximately 17% of the amount originally offered, representing the unsold portion of the original offering. Moreover, the members of the selling group who are not underwriters have an aggregate long position amounting to approximately 12% of the original offering.

"In considering the question which you have raised, we may start with the premise that a syndicate overallotment is customarily made for the purpose of facilitating the orderly distribution of the offered securities by creating buying power which can be used for the purpose of supporting the market price. Thus, it would appear, in the absence of circumstances indicating the contrary, that purchases made for the purpose of covering the 'short position' of the syndicate are effected for the purpose of facilitating the distribution. Moreover, if such purchases are effected to facilitate the offering, it is obvious that there exists the intention or purpose of inducing the purchase of the offered security by others.

"Under these circumstances, all purchases which raise the market price of the offered security or create excessive trading activity would appear to contravene the anti-manipulative provisions of law. In this connection, you may be interested in examining Securities Exchange Act Release No. 3505 issued by the Commission under date of November 16, 1943.

"However, not all purchases for the purpose of covering a short position impel the conclusion that the underwriters still have the purpose of facilitating a distribution. There are a number of factors which must be considered in determining whether that purpose is still present. Some of the external factors indicating that the manager no longer has the intention of facilitating an offering, but has only the purpose of covering the syndicate short position, are as follows:

"1. Neither the underwriters nor the selling-group members have remaining unsold any shares of the offered security, and hence are no longer engaged in soliciting purchases thereof;

"2. reasonable efforts have been made by the manager to acquire securities away from the market, i.e., in privately negotiated transactions, for the purpose of covering the syndicate short position;

"3. the independently established market price of the offered security is above the fixed offering price;

"4. the manager has not, while covering the syndicate short position, made additional short sales of the offered security;

"5. a reasonable period of time has elapsed between the termination of distributive efforts on the part of participants in the distribution and commencement of covering of the syndicate short position;

"6. the underwriting group holds no options on securities of the same class as those being offered; and

"7. all agreements with the syndicate manager or underwriters restricting the right of any person to sell the securities of the same class as the offered security have been terminated.

"It should be noted that the factors mentioned above do not necessarily include all of the factors to be taken into consideration, nor is it necessary for all of the factors to be present before the conclusion can be reached that in a given setting the purpose of facilitating an offering no longer exists.

"Applying these principles to the facts which have been presented by you, it is obvious that the position of the underwriting group is only technically short, the underwriters as a group actually having a net long position amounting in the aggregate to 9% of the amount of the securities originally offered. Moreover, the selling group members have securities remaining unsold in the additional amount of 12%. It is obvious that participants in the distribution are still engaged in inducing the purchase of the offered security by others. Under these circumstances, purchases of the stock effected by the syndicate manager as agent for the underwriting group which raise the price of the stock or which create excessive trading activity, would clearly be unlawful, even though one of the purposes of the manager in effecting such purchases is that of extinguishing the technical short position of the syndicate account.

"The statement has frequently been made by managers of syndicates that they are not in a position to know whether the individual underwriters or selling-group members have securities remaining unsold, and that managers have no means of requiring members of underwriting or selling groups to supply them with the offered securities to permit the extinguishment or reduction of the short position.

"Considering these contentions first with respect to the individual underwriters, it should be noted that the manager of a syndicate is an agent for the members of the underwriting group and that the individual members of the group are principals in any transaction effected by the manager as such. The failure of an agent of an underwriting group to inform himself with respect to the status of the distribution cannot, in my opinion, grant immunity to any such agent or to his principals from the anti-manipulative provisions of law. On the contrary, no such agent should permit his principal's act or refusal to act, to force him, the agent, to violate the law in attempting to protect such principal's interests.

"In view of the foregoing, it would seem incumbent upon the manager to insure his ability to obtain all necessary information concerning the status of the distribution. In this connection, it would seem appropriate for the agreement between underwriters to contain provisions stating, in effect, that the manager, upon request, shall be informed of the amount of the offered securities which the individual underwriters have remaining unsold. Moreover, it would also seem appropriate for the agreement between underwriters to contain provisions requiring the individual underwriters, upon request of the manager, to deliver to him unsold securities, at or below the offering price, for the purpose of reducing the syndicate short position.

"While an agency relationship may not exist between the manager of the syndicate and members of the selling group, there is a community of interest between them and the manager's purchases redound to the benefit of the members of the selling group. And since the relationship between the selling group and the syndicate is customarily determined by contract between the two, and since, in effect, the members of the selling group are selling securities for the manager and the syndicate which he represents, it would likewise seem appropriate for the contract between the underwriting syndicate and the selling group to contain provisions analogous to those mentioned above."

SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT OF 1934

Release No. 3512

ACCOUNTING SERIES

Release No. 46

The Securities and Exchange Commission today announced the adoption of amendments to Rules 5-04 and 12-06 of Regulation S-X. On December 22, 1942 the Commission adopted comprehensive amendments to Regulation S-X designed to simplify and shorten reports required to be filed by registrants by permitting under designated conditions the omission or partial omission of certain schedules. The Commission's experience with these amendments has not been entirely satisfactory. The present revisions are designed to secure with a minimum burden and expense certain information deemed essential relating to property, plant, and equipment under designated conditions. While the rules as amended call for the filing under certain circumstances of information with respect to property, plant, and equipment not now required, the present requirements relating thereto are less than those existing prior to December 22, 1942.

As amended, Rule 5-04 permits the omission of Schedule V. Property, plant and equipment, if the total of such assets at both the beginning and end of the period does not exceed 5% of total assets (exclusive of intangibles) and if neither the additions nor deductions during the period exceeded 5% of total assets (exclusive of intangible assets). The amendment to Rule 12-06 provides that, in case the additions and deductions columns are omitted from Schedule V, as permitted by Note 3 of Rule 12-06, the total of additions and the total retirements and sales shall be given in a footnote to the schedule.

The text of the Commission's action follows:

The Securities and Exchange Commission, acting pursuant to authority conferred upon it by the Securities Act of 1933, particularly Sections 7 and 19 (a) thereof, and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, particularly Sections 12, 13, 15 (d), and 23 (a) thereof, and deeming such action necessary and appropriate in the public interest and for the protection of investors and necessary for the execution of the functions vested in it by the said Acts, hereby amends Regulation S-X as follows:

1. The text of Rule 5-04 following the caption, Schedule V. Property, plant, and equipment, is amended to read as follows:

"The schedule prescribed by Rule 12-06 shall be filed in support of caption 13 of cash balance sheet, provided that this schedule may be omitted if the total shown by caption 13 does not exceed 5% of total assets (exclusive of intangible assets) as shown by the related balance sheet at both the beginning and end of the period and if neither the additions nor deductions during the period exceeded 5% of total assets (exclusive of intangible assets) as shown by the related balance sheet."

11. Rule 12-06. Property, Plant, and Equipment, is amended by changing Note 3 to read as follows:

"The balance at the beginning of the period of report may be as per the accounts. If neither the total additions nor the total deductions during the period amount to more than 10% of the closing balance and a statement to that effect is made, the information required by Columns B, C, D, and E may be omitted provided that the totals of Columns C and D are given in a footnote and provided further that any information required by Notes 4, 5, and 6 shall be given and may be in summary form."

Effective Dec. 9, 1943.
