The writer was born on December 11, 1898. He received his elementary and secondary schooling in the New York city public schools. In 1916 he entered Columbia College, receiving his A.B. degree in 1920. Since February, 1922 he has been employed by the Board of Education of New York City as teacher of history in high school. While teaching he continued his graduate work in history at Columbia University, and received his A.M. degree in 1925. During the academic year 1926-1927, he attended Professor Lynn Thorndike's seminar in intellectual history. As a result of his research in that course, he wrote an essay which was published in the magazine, Reflex, September, 1927, under the title "The Philosopher of Love". The academic year 1928-1929 he devoted entirely to study and reading in the fields of intellectual and medieval history, attending Professor David S. Muzzey's and Professor Austin P. Evans's lectures. The following year he served as assistant in medieval history in the University of Wisconsin, and attended at the same time Professor Carl Stephenson's seminar in medieval town origins. Since February, 1931 he has been instructor of history in Brooklyn Evening College.
