And now a word to the foreign cloth dealers. Do not deceive yourselves or the country by thinking that you have done your duty by refraining from selling foreign cloth for a few months. This foreign cloth trade must stop for ever, because it is only by this means that we can promote the well-being of millions of our countrymen. I will respectfully submit to foreign cloth dealers that a complete boycott of foreign cloth is their Dharma. Sacrifices they will have to make, but what are those sacrifices compared to the greater sacrifices that are being made by other sections of public citizens of Delhi?

FINAL APPEAL.

I do not flatter myself that you have gathered here in your thousands to do honour to me. You have come to proclaim to the world that you are all determined to achieve Purna Swaraj. Let not my talks with the Viceroy worry you for a moment. Do not think of them but go on with your work. Only remember that the result is not in my hands, nor in the hands of Dr. Ansari or Pandit Malaviya but in your hands. I am but an instrument and I am acting only as your humble ambassador. Everything will depend upon what you do and what you will fail to do. May God give you strength to keep the pledge of truth and non-violence.

As Mahatma Gandhi delivered his speech in Hindi and it was not wholly audible owing to the noise, he made a special request to newspaper correspondents to publish only an authorised text or summary of the speech and announced that the Associated Press transcription of the speech would be looked through by him and would be supplied to all newspapers through that agency.

BEGUM SHAH NAWAZ ON INDIAN WOMANHOOD.

The "Sunday Dispatch" of London publishes the following statement of Begum Shaw Nawaz, in an interview:—

A beautiful visitor, the Begum Shah Nawaz, deeply impressed Englishwomen. In this frank talk she compares East with West, and pictures the day when the best qualities of each will be combined in the World's Perfect Woman.

The opinion generally held in this country, said the Begum, that Eastern women are ignorant, devoid of ambition or desire to take part in public life, and that their one and only interest centres in their husbands—whom they probably share with a host of other women—shocks and at the same time, amuses me.

VALUE OF LEISURE.

It is true that in certain matters we cannot hold a candle to our Western sisters. We are not in the mass, literate. We have not, as yet, gained political equality with man as have the women of England and America (but, remember, only comparatively recently).

These things are yet to come. Women of the West have blazed the trail and we will follow in our own way.

But in the general principles of living have we of the East everything to learn from Western women, and nothing to teach? Can we of the East offer no lesson, no example, as our Western sisters are in many ways examples to us?

In, this, my first visit to England, I have realised that there is one thing which women of the East can teach the women of the West. We can teach you the value of leisure. We can show you how to think, how to give yourselves time to work out a philosophy of life.

You women of the West know nothing of contemplation. Your lives are organised to bring you the maximum amount of pleasure, excitement, entertainment. Your idea of enjoyment is to fill your lives so full that you will not have time to think.

"DO SOMETHING."

When there is a spare moment in your day you do not employ that time in contemplation of the world around you. You snatch up a book, a paper, magazine. You get someone else to think for you.

How often, since I have been in England, have I heard mothers speaking to their children, men and women saying to one another: "Let's do some thing. We are wasting time." We believe in allowing our minds to wander unshackled by earthly bonds, earthly worries and interests, and we believe that by doing so we are giving the spiritual or mental side of our natures time to develop.

We believe meditation is necessary to our bodily welfare, as the Western girl believes sport is necessary for her physical fitness.

Another fact which comes as a shock to me is the Western girl's pre-occupation with men. You must excuse my saying so.

So many women and girls I have met in Europe seem absorbed completely in their efforts to attract men. I am amazed to see women with apparently everything in the world—youth, beauty, wealth—but with nothing more to do than court the attention of the men around them.

Now, the Indian woman does not look upon men as the be-all and end-all of her existence. She does not court the admiration of men. But; should that admiration come, she treats it as a natural thing which is rightly hers and nothing very out of the ordinary.

I think the Eastern woman's indifference to men is partly due to the fact that there are very many more men in India than women (something like 10,000,000 more) while in this country the reverse is the case.

PURDAH SYSTEM.

Partly, that misunderstood system of purdah [women living in seclusion, veiled from the eyes of men other than their husbands] is responsible for Eastern apathy towards men.

Purdah is not, as it is often supposed—universal in India. It is practised only among the Mussulmans, and, since there is a certain amount of attendant expense in keeping women in purdah, it is restricted only to the richer and higher-class section of the Mahomedan community in India.

I should say that, at the outside, only 5 per cent of the women in India are in purdah.

Nor was the practice of suttee universal in India. I do not think the West, which so fiercely denounces suttee—the practice of self-immolation among Hindu widows—can quite understand the spirit in which it takes place.

I agree that the idea of allowing a woman to commit suicide by throwing herself upon her husband's pyre is barbarous. But cannot the West see a little farther than the mere act. To me the idea of suttee is beautiful when one looks upon it as the symbol of the love of the wife for her husband.

For us of the East suttee is no mere hysterical suicide, but the supreme sacrifice of womanhood. It shows the wife who literally does carry out her belief that man and woman are made one in marriage; if one part of that union dies the other finds no more joy in life and so prefers death.

For in the East woman is not admired primarily for her beauty or intellect but for her qualities of faithfulness, humanity, and love.

"THE QUEEN IN HER OWN HOME."

In fact, the whole Indian woman's creed is to suffer without complaining, and to be ready to make the greatest sacrifice for those she loves.

In the East woman is revered and honoured. She is not looked upon as a mere drudge or slave, is the West supposes her to be. She is, rather, the queen in her own home.

And there are not many things that the West can teach the East about house-keeping or domestic arrangements. I don't think I have ever heard an Eastern husband complain about the cooking. But in England, I have heard many complaints.

When the qualities of the East and West mingle and unite I believe the Perfect Woman will be born. For we of the East can learn so much from you, our Western sisters. We need some of your enthusiasm, some of your carefree worldliness, your good common sense and love of freedom, to leaven our Eastern characters.

And a little of our Eastern restraint, our willingness to sacrifice self, our submissiveness and sense of duty would help to make you of the West the most charming, the most wonderful women in the world.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Fourteenth Sind Arya Sammelan:—A correspondent writes: Fourteenth Sind Arya Sammelan owing to much rain began 15th instead of 14th, though a grand procession paraded the town on 13th afternoon. 14th noon was spent in informally meeting friends from villages that had been recently looted. Evening an enthusiastic crowd gathered in Ram Mandal Hall. Professor Tarachand delivered a lecture on present day problems and suggested that the solution of all was in returning to spiritual ideals. Pundit Ramobandra Vidya Ratna spoke on ancient glory and power of Brahmacharya. 15th morning in a public meeting, Seth Hundraj, contractor, presiding, villagers repeated woeful tales of heartrending sufferings. Dewan Tulsidas described several details concerning the dacoities, while appreciating the help given by some individual officers, showed how tardy and negligent police and officers had been. Sjt. Viramal, dilating on the cruel atrocities inflicted on Sukkur Hindus, made a strong appeal to Hindus to rise up to the occasion and strengthen themselves. Professor Tarachand, Maheshai Mangatram, Maheshai Chotharam were other speakers. Loongies were presented to Tilokchand and Garibdas for their bravery during dacoities. President Hundraj concluded by giving useful suggestions. In the Sammelan Session Sriyut Mangatram, Chairman, welcoming Delegates, highly appreciated relief work done by Pritinidhi Sabha. Praising sacrifices of Arya Samajists in country's service, he opined that the Arya Samaj body, should remain aloof from politics. Pundit Loknath, President, in an extempore speech, referred to Swami Dayanand's influence in India and other religions and exhorted young men to strengthen Sindh Pritinidhi and carry on Samaj mission. Resolutions were passed expressing sorrow at the deaths of Dharma Shiksha, Jagdamba Prasad, Motilal Nehru, Deomal Gajra, Rochiram, Gianchand, Mukhi Jethanand, and at the murder of Mukhi Roohaldas. Conduct of Gurkha military concerning Bahadabad Samaj and publication of Rangila Rishi were condemned. Hundraj was congratulated for decreasing dowry. Gun Karma Swabhao matrimonial alliances disregarding caste restrictions were recommended. Separation of Sind was opposed. Sympathy was expressed with victims of recent riots caused by mischief of zamindars and unguarded words of Commissioner and negligence of Government. Police failed in duty. Independent Inquiry Committee was demanded and Pritinidhi Sabha was requested to continue relief work. Khadi and Swadeshim were supported. Political prisoners were congratulated. Protest was made against O class of Swami Krishnanand, Pundit Udaibhanu, Prof. Hassanand and Lekhraj.

Catholics and Prohibition:—Though the amended resolution recommending to Government the introduction of total prohibition from April 1 next in at least two districts in the Presidency was rejected by the Madras Council, the speeches made reveal a growing volume of opinion in favour of this drastic policy. Dewan Bahadur R. N. Arokiaswamy and a Protestant member of the Council strongly advocated prohibition and the Minister's reply shows that only financial considerations stand in the way of Government accepting the resolution. Some time ago, the Madras Council adopted a resolution declaring prohibition as the goal of the policy of the Government and fixed a period of twenty years within which total prohibition should come into force. When the grant of provincial autonomy becomes an accomplished fact, there is no doubt that more rapid steps will be taken in this direction. The drink problem has certainly not become so grave a menace as to demand such stringent remedies. But as Indian sentiment is opposed to the use of alcoholic beverages, a prohibition law may be introduced as soon as the Indian legislatures are invested with full powers in the management of their own affairs. In case prohibition is introduced, Catholics will be faced with some practical difficulties. The use of wine from the grape is absolutely essential for the sacrifice of the Mass and if Catholics are to enjoy the right of the free exercise of their religion, there must be a provision in the law permitting the use of wine for sacramental purposes. The Catholic Leader.

Sir J. W. Bhole:—Last week saw the formal inauguration of India's new capital city, New Delhi, which has been twenty years in building. It was fitting that its founder, Lord Hardinge, a former Viceroy and one very popular in India, should have been present. To the Indian Christian Church the most interesting aspect of this notable ceremony is that it was presided over by the Indian Christian member of the Government of India, Sir Joseph Bhole, who in his capacity as the Government official in charge of Industries and Labour had the honour of calling upon His Excellency the Viceroy to open the inaugural proceedings. Every poor boy in India may draw encouragement from this fact, as may also the American Marathi Mission which celebrated (on February 12) its 118th birth-day. For it was as the son of a very poor man in the American Marathi Mission that Sir Joseph Bhole started life and he has reached the summit of honour by dint of character and ability. How Sir Joseph "lets his light shine" was seen a few months ago when, presiding at the annual meeting of the Bible Society in India's capital, he gave a splendid speech on the influence of the Bible. We have also reason to believe that when the secret history of the present unheaven in India comes to be written Sir Joseph Bhole will be seen to have been the strongest supporter of the constructiveness and conciliation that have marked Lord Irwin's Indian policy.—Dayanadaya.

A Students' Union Re-union:—The sixth annual re-union dinner of old students of the Indian Y. M. C. A. Union and Hostel at Gower Street, London, was held on Thursday, 19th February at the Y. M. C. A., 25, Chowringhee, Calcutta. The attendance constituted a record, for considerably over a hundred old students and their guests sat down to dinner, and an interesting departure in the programme was a Bengali song sung by Mrs. A. Bose. Among the distinguished guests were the Minister of Agriculture in Bengal, the Director of Public Instruction, and Mr. J. N. Basu, recently returned from the Round Table Conference. Referring to his experiences in London Mr. Basu paid a tribute to the friendly spirit with which the Indian delegates had been received in England, and commended the work done by the Gower Street Hostel as a valuable contribution to the friendship between East and West. In London the Students Union and Hostel celebrated its twelfth anniversary on February 14th, when the speaker of the evening was Professor Alfred Zimmern, lately a Director of the League of Nations' Institute for Intellectual Co-operation. The programme of the Union this season includes an international night, an Indian national night, plays produced by three companies of amateurs, lectures by Sir Horace Plunkett and others, visits to the head-quarters of the B. B. O. to a coal mine and to a motor works, and study groups on a variety of subjects—social, religious, and economic.

Young Muslims Opposed to Separate Electorates:—A debate was held recently in the Anglo-Arabic College when about 300 students of the Aligarh College, Anglo-Arabic College, Delhi and Jamia Millia, Delhi, were present. Prof. Abdul Aziz Pari of Aligarh moved "that in the opinion of this House the retention of separate electorates will be detrimental to the best interests of the Mussalmans." He was followed by half a dozen speakers on his side and three on the opposite side. Prof. Mohamed Habib of the Aligarh University and Mr. Walker of the Arabic College supported the motion. After an interesting debate lasting three hours the motion was carried without a dissentient voice.

ADVERTISEMENTS

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of
OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BULLION EXCHANGE.
(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)
BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed ... .. Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up ... .. " 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund ... .. " 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

PORTLAND CEMENT

Surpasses the latest British Standard
Specification
AND IS A

RAPID HARDENING CEMENT.
Use it & Save Money.

TATA SONS, LTD., Agents. THE INDIAN
BOMBAY HOUSE, FORT, BOMBAY. CEMENT
CO., LTD.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of E. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amroli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadl, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,15 00

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).

Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent Ahmedabad).

Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.

Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)

Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Nalb Dewan, Baroda.

Raj Ratan Shantilal Dajibhai Amin B. A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alombic Chemical Works, Baroda).

Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)

Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Sar Suba, Baroda State, Baroda.

Mr. N. M. Mumukdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

O. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondaicha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Ta. gaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirale ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kalvan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Palghar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akni (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Viramgaum (District Ahmedabad.)

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorized Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo, and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to—

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26,

Bombay.

THE GUARDIAN

—101—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.
TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,
INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMOORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital (Paid up) ... Rs. 71,21,055

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJAN PAIN BALM PRODUCES BEST RESULTS

IN

Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.
AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

—A SAFE—
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).
Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)
Bombay Branch:—
KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs. s. p.
Subscription (including postage).
Inland ...	5 0 0
Foreign ...	5 8 0
Single copy ...	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

A reader of the Reformer writes from Sweden as follows under date January 2, 1931:—"I have had much pleasure in reading your magazine during the last year, and I have thereby been enabled to follow closely the happenings in India."

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 59.

BLACKMAIL

9 Reels, featuring

ANNY ONDRA, JOHN LONGEN AND DONALD CALTHROP

British International All-Talking Picture.

MOONSHINE

2 Reels, featuring.

JAMES BARTON AND HARRY MESTAYER

A Paramount Talking Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

ELSTREE GALLING

7 Reels, featuring,

WILL FYFFE JACK HULBERT & CICELY COURTNEIDGE

British International Talking and Singing Picture.

IF MEN PLAYED CARDS AS WOMEN DO

1 Reel, featuring, ... HUGH CAMERON AND FREDERICK SALLY

Paramount Sound. Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

BEHIND THAT CURTAIN

10 Reels, featuring ... WARNER BAXTER, LOIS MORAN & GILBERT EMERY

Fox Movietone All-Talking Picture.

CROSS COUNTRY RUN

2 Reels, ]

GEORGE LEWIS

[ Universal College Series.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

FIVE AND TEN CENT ANNIE

6 Reels, featuring ... LOUIS FAZANDA & CLYDE COOK

Warner Bros. Picture.

FAMILY PRINCE

2 Reels, featuring ... HALLAM COOLEY & KATHRYAN PERRY ... Fox Comedy.

NAUGHTY FORTIES... .. 2 Reels.

U. F. A. Racing Blood Series.

Time:—4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1931

No. 27

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Gandhi-Irwin Agreement. The Psychological Factor. Congress and the Round Table Conference. Terms of the Agreement. Mahatma Gandhi's Tribute to the Viceroy. Congress Takes Prompt Action. Bombay Government Com- munique.	Truth About British Rule. Women's Rights Under Hindu Law. Practical Implications of Satyagraha. Non-Christian Contributions to Christian Missions, I, II, III. To Sin in Ignorance is not to Sin. News and Views.
--	--

NOTES.

The Gandhi-Irwin Agreement:—The protracted conversations between Mahatma Gandhi and Lord Irwin have resulted in an agreement. The Congress will call off the Civil Disobedience movement and Government will, on their part, withdraw the Ordinances, remit the sentences, and restore the properties confiscated in connection with that movement. The position will be what it was before the Civil Disobedience movement began except for the psychological effect of the conflict during the last twelve months. The concession permitting villagers on the sea-side to pick or make salt for consumption in the village, merely recognises a long-standing practice. Such operations have usually been winked at by the Salt officials before they were indulged in as part of the campaign of Civil Disobedience. There has been no surrender on the part of Government in withdrawing the measures designed to cope with civil disobedience now that civil disobedience is to be suspended. Neither is there any surrender on the side of the Congress in agreeing to participate in framing a swaraj constitution which civil disobedience was designed to secure. The agreement is a simple, sensible one and the wonder is that it should have needed all the painful incidents of the last twelve months to be reached. To Mahatma Gandhi belongs the initial credit of deciding to meet Lord Irwin on a purely human basis and to the Viceroy is due not less credit for falling in with the idea, and to the two men the country owes a debt of gratitude for exerting the whole of their great moral and intellectual resources to reach an agreement. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Messrs. Srinivasa Sastri and Jayakar, have rendered signal service by their judicious and patriotic assistance as intermediaries, first, in the bringing about and, next, in interposing at critical moments to prevent a break in the negotiations between the Viceroy and Mahatmajī.

The Psychological Factor:—We referred to the psychological effect of the struggle as the sole differentiating factor between the situation as it was before the inauguration of civil disobedience and as it is after the negotiation of the Gandhi-Irwin agreement. But it is an immense factor. It is owing to the struggle that the British Government and people have had to admit that they have to deal with a real national movement in the country. It is owing to the struggle that the rulers of Indian States have realised the wisdom of throwing in their lot with British India immediately instead of, as the Simon Commission and even Lord Irwin's Government expected, taking an indefinitely long period of time to decide what their part should be in India's effort to find her own soul as one of the most eminent of them so aptly put it. To the people themselves, the ordeals through which they have passed with unflinching courage and endurance, have been an invaluable discipline, which has immensely strengthened their confidence in their capacity to manage their own affairs. The struggle of the last twelve months has unloosed a mighty force in the energy, zeal and public spirit of Indian women so long confined in the iron cage of ignorant prejudice and rigid custom. Even little children have imbibed the spirit of swadeshi. The non-violent character of Indian nationalism has impressed the nations of the world as opening a new and beneficent chapter in human history, and thoughtful men and women in many lands, and in Great Britain also, are watching with prayerful sympathy the efforts of Indian nationalists to attain swaraj by wholly peaceful means. These are great gains and the thousands of our people, men, women and, in not a few cases, boys and girls who have borne their share of the suffering and humiliation of the last twelve months, have earned the nation's gratitude by their superb sacrifice. The influence of their selfless devotion extended even to the Round Table Conference in London and wrought the dramatic conversion of British politicians who hitherto had viewed with distrust Indian demands for swaraj. It will, we can scarcely doubt, very powerfully strengthen those who will speak on their behalf at the continuation Conference to be held in this country.

Congress And The Round Table Conference:—We take it that the fact that Mahatma Gandhi with the approval of the Working Committee has agreed to call off civil disobedience in view of the further discussions of the Round Table Conference, implies that Congress leaders are satisfied that in a broad, general way the Indian representatives who attended the London sessions have advanced by some steps or, at any rate, removed some of the obstacles to the endeavour to secure Swaraj; and that by now taking a hand in the matter they can achieve their object with more expedition than by persisting in civil disobedience. This is also our opinion, though we fully realise that practically everything has to be settled hereafter and that the entrance of the Princes into the arena has introduced a new complication which, as likely as not, may prove to be a hindrance and not a help to the realisation of their object. But if the worst came to the worst and if the Congress representatives, after every reasonable effort to reach a settlement, have to retire baffled from the scene, they will be in a far stronger position than if they had obstinately held aloof from the Conference. Many people who have held that the Labour Government and the Viceroy should have been given a chance to prove their promise before civil disobedience was launched, and have been obliged to be content with the role of sympathetic onlookers of the struggle, will then have no option but to take their place alongside the Congress, notwithstanding some differences on minor points. The great thing is that the Congress representatives should go into the conference with a perfectly open mind and resolved to do their best to help it to be the means of leading India to the great goal. Even those who now fear that the Mahatma has perhaps conceded too much, will then see that he and the Working Committee have acted with judgment and foresight in acting as they have done.

Terms of the Agreement:—The terms of truce contain the following main terms:—1. The Civil Disobedience movement is to be discontinued. 2. The boycott of British goods as a political weapon is to be abandoned, and the sale and purchase of British goods are allowed. 3. Non-violent Civil Disobedience prisoners are to be released. 4. Residents in salt areas, particularly poor, are permitted to collect and make salt for domestic consumption or for sale within the village. 5. Picketing is permitted if it is not aggressive. 6. Ordinances are withdrawn. 7. As regards confiscated property where immovable property is sold to a third party, the transaction is to be regarded as final, so far as the Government is concerned. 8. As regards constitutional questions, the scope of future discussion is stated to be with the object of considering further the scheme for the constitutional Government of India discussed at the Round Table Conference. Of the scheme there outlined, federation is an essential part, so also are Indian responsibility and reservations or safeguards in the interests of India, for such matters as for instance, Defence, External Affairs, the position of minorities, the financial credit of India and the discharge of obligations.

Mahatma Gandhi's Tribute to the Viceroy:—Mahatma Gandhi spoke to several Indian and foreign Press representatives on the conclusion of the agreement. He paid a warm tribute to Lord Irwin but for whom, he said, it could not have been reached. He said: "I would like to state that this settlement, such as it is, would have been impossible without the Viceroy's inexhaustible patience and equally inexhaustible industry and unflinching courtesy. I am aware that I must have, though quite unconsciously, given him causes for irritation. I must have also tried his patience; but I cannot recall any occasion when he allowed himself to be betrayed into irritation or impatience. I must add that he was frank throughout these very delicate negotiations and I believe he was determined, if it was at all possible, to have a settlement. I must confess that I approached the negotiations in fear and trembling. I was also filled with distrust; but, at the very outset, he disarmed my suspicion and put me at ease. For myself, I can say, without fear of contradiction, that when I wrote my letter accepting the invitation to see him, I was determined not to be outdone in the race for reaching a settlement. I am thankful to the Almighty that a settlement was reached and the country has been spared at least for the time being—and, I hope, for all time—their suffering, which in the event of a breakdown, would have been intensified a hundredfold."

Congress Takes Prompt Action:—Dr. Syed Mahmud, General Secretary of the Congress, has wired to all Provincial Congress Committees as follows:—"In view of the Provisional settlement arrived at between the Working Committee on behalf of the Congress and the Government of India, I request you to take immediate steps to inform all Congress Committees in your Province to act in accordance with it. Civil Disobedience and No-Tax campaign are to be discontinued and there is to be no further defiance of laws or regulations. Boycott of British goods as such is to be discontinued and complete freedom regarding them is given but the boycott of intoxicating drink and drugs and of all foreign cloth and liquor shops is permitted and should be continued wherever necessary. Such picketing should be unaggressive and should not involve coercion, intimidation, restraint, hostile demonstration, obstruction to the public or any offence under the ordinary law. If these conditions are not satisfied in any area picketing is to be suspended there. The insistence on swadeshi goods in preference to all foreign goods is also to be continued. There is to be no organised disobedience of Salt Laws and no raids, but villagers residing in areas where salt is collected or made are permitted to continue to collect or make salt for domestic consumption or sale in the neighbourhood, but not for sale or trading outside. Unauthorised news-sheets should be stopped. Taxpayers should prepare for payment of land revenue and return to villages where they have been vacated. In cases of economic distress or inability for making payment other methods for remission or suspension should be adopted. In view of the pending release of prisoners special direction for the election of delegates to the Karachi Congress are being issued to the Press.

Bombay Government Communique:—The following Government 'communique' was issued by the Director of Information, Bombay, this afternoon: "In connection with the publication of the statement issued by the Government of India yesterday, the Government of Bombay have already taken steps to give immediate effect to the agreement arrived at therein. Following on the withdrawal to day by the Government of India of all ordinances in force in this Presidency, a "Gazette Extra-ordinary" will be issued to-day by the Government of Bombay cancelling all notifications under the Criminal Law Amendment Act declaring certain organisations illegal. All prosecutions under that Act and under the ordinances therefore lapse. District Magistrates have been instructed to withdraw all prohibitory orders under the Criminal Procedure Code and the District Police Act. It is hoped to begin the release of prisoners on Sunday next."

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, MARCH 7, 1931.

TRUTH ABOUT BRITISH RULE.

*So absolutely good is truth, truth never hurts
The teller, whose worst crime gets somehow grace, avowed.*

R. BROWNING.

The central point of Mr. J. C. Kumarappa's statement before the City Magistrate of Ahmedabad, who had called upon him to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond to refrain for one year from writing seditious articles in Young India, is that the Government is not one founded on the free will of the people whom it governs and is, therefore, not entitled to the allegiance of the people of India. This is a position which Mahatma Gandhi did not raise in his famous sedition trial ten years ago. Nor can it be his to-day when he has settled with the Viceroy the conditions on which the Congress party will participate in the continuation of the discussions in London of the Round Table Conference. Mr. Kumarappa's position, nevertheless, is that of several excellent men amongst Mahatmaji's fellow-workers—we do not like the word 'followers'—and one of the best of them told this writer a few days ago that Ranade's theory of British rule as a Providential dispensation was held nowadays only by old men and was not accepted by the younger men. People who do not believe in Providence cannot, of course, believe in Providential dispensations, but this particular friend is an intensely religious man and is known to be such by all who know him. If one believes in God, one cannot believe that He is a sinecurist standing outside human history. Ranade's theory, however, was not a mere deduction from his theistic belief. It had its roots in it, but it was also sustained by the conviction that British rule of which English education—which is not so much the medium of the English language as the meaning of its literature and history—was the most precious gift to India, has, with all its defects, been a valuable and necessary discipline to fit Indians to take their place in and make their contribution to the comity of nations. This was the fundamental idea on which Indian thinkers and reformers from the days of Raja Ram Mohan Roy founded their hopes and aspirations for modern India. Dadabhai Naoroji, Ranade, Telang, Badruddin Tyebji, Pherozeshah Mehta, Chandavarkar and Gokhale—to name only Bombay men—held tenaciously to this view, though they realised more and more that there was another side to British rule as to other good things. "Shadow and shine is life, flower and thorn." Indian Liberalism had its roots in deep spiritual convictions and called for personal sacrifices of no mean order. Mahatma Gandhi, leaving out for the moment his non-co-operation method, is the present day exponent of Indian progress as visualised by Raja Ram Mohan Roy—purification and invigoration of national life at all points, religious and social, political and economic. Even as regards non-co-operation, the Raja preferred to leave the shelter of the family roof rather than give up his religious convictions and Gokhale included non-payment of taxes among his categories of constitutional agitation.

Leaving out the Providential dispensation theory, let us look into the facts of history. The greatest fact of British rule in India is that it was established by Indian men and Indian money, was saved from collapse during the so-called Mutiny by Indian men and money, and is run today by Indian men and money. If Indian support is withdrawn the administration cannot be carried on. This is the view of English publicists and historians. "If the brown men struck work for a week", wrote Meredith Townsend "the Empire would collapse like a house of cards, and every ruling man would be a starving prisoner in his own house. He could not move or feed himself or get water." He developed this idea in detail in one of his essays collected together under the title of "Europe and Asia." The historian, Sir John Seeley, in his "Expansion of England," devotes a good deal of space to the origin and conditions of British rule in this country, and points out that it is entirely incorrect to speak of the English nation as having conquered India. "The nations of India", he writes, "have been conquered by an army of which on the average a fifth part was English. From what race were the other four fifths of the army drawn? From the natives of India themselves. India can hardly be said to have been conquered at all by foreigners, she has rather conquered herself. If we were justified, as we are not, in personifying India as we personify France or England, we could not describe her as overwhelmed by a foreign enemy; we should rather have to say that she elected to put an end to anarchy by submitting to a single government, even though that Government was in the hands of foreigners."

The methods by which British rule was established in India were more cosmic than ethical. "Nature red in tooth and claw" rather than the quality which blesseth him that gives and him that takes, was predominant in them. The strongest criticism of these methods have proceeded from Englishmen themselves. Burke's indictment of Warren Hastings is one of the classics of political eloquence. When British rule was safely established, however, the men who were appointed to build up administration set before themselves a lofty ideal. Sir Pheroze Shah Mehta often quoted General Briggs' reminiscence of Elphinstone as showing of what stout and sturdy material Englishmen of those days were made. Finding in a corner of Elphinstone's tent a heap of printed Marathi books, the General asked him what they were meant for. "To educate the natives," said Elphinstone, "though it may be our high road back to Europe." The General remarked thereon, "I wonder that you, as Governor of Bombay, have set it on foot." Elphinstone replied, "We are bound under all circumstances to do our duty by them." "Our success and moderation," wrote Malcolm, "contrasted with the misrule and violence to which a great part of the population of India have for more than a century been exposed, have at this moment raised the reputation of the British Nation so high that men have forgotten, in the contemplation of the security and prosperity they enjoy under strangers, their feelings of patriotism; but these are feelings which that very knowledge that it is our duty to impart must gradually revive and bring into action." Similar passages can be quoted from the writings of Munro, Macaulay and others of this group of British statesmen who were the real founders of the Indian Empire. This high ideal was, on the whole, maintained even up to the third quarter of the last century when British policy became definitely imperialistic. Lord Curzon's regime was the culmination of British Imperialism in this country. Then came the Morley-Minto reforms. The war totally changed the course of history and gave India the Jallianwala massacre and the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms. The good intentions which inspired these reforms were very little in evidence in the composition of the Simon Commission. But when a crisis seemed inevitable, Mr. Ramsay Macdonald was Prime Minister in London and Lord Irwin was Viceroy at Delhi. The Round Table Conference scrapped the Simon report and gave a new orientation to Indian policy. The Conference itself, however, might have led to nothing but for what we can only regard as the Providential intervention which has led to the Irwin-Gandhi agreement announced this week.

It is impossible to maintain, in the light of this rapid survey of British Indian history, that the Government of India which, it is acknowledged stands in need of complete over-hauling, has no claim to the allegiance of the people. It has been maintained by British Ministers that British policy in this country has steadily and consistently kept in view the attainment of self-government by the Indian people. This, it can be easily shown, has not been the case. On the other hand, British rule has been depicted as having deliberately pursued a policy of perpetuating the subjection of the people. This, too, is inconsistent with facts. There has been, as there is today, two currents of thought at work in England in shaping Indian policy. There has, however, never been a time when British rule was in a position to do without Indian support and co-operation.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER HINDU LAW.

( By Mr. K. M. MUNSHI. )

Recently the States of Mysore and Baroda appointed a committee each to examine and report on the rights enjoyed by women under Hindu Law with a view to their being brought in conformity with the trend of modern opinion. The reports of both the committees are before the public. However welcome may be the efforts of these States in inviting reports on this acute social question from the point of view of awakening and educating public opinion, I cannot but feel that it will be injurious to the interests of the Hindu community that any legislation should be undertaken on the basis of these reports.

In the pre-British period, Hindu Law changed imperceptibly with the growth of public opinion and custom. In the British period, the law was rescued from nebulous usages and received a uniform and well defined shape on account of the emphasis laid by the British courts on the intent and purpose of the original texts. To day, therefore the law, though rigid, is clear and uniform; and social reformers naturally seek the aid of legislatures to introduce flexibility with a view to make it suitable to new and fast changing conditions. Efforts at codifying the Hindu Law has, therefore, been a favourite subject with legislators and lawyers. But I am one of those who believe that a complete codification of the Hindu Law at the present time, when India has no common legislature of its own, will be highly injurious to the progress and solidarity of the nation. Further, it will lead to a multiplicity of vexatious litigation, for principles which have been settled after generations of decisions will have to be reviewed in the light of the new law. In any event such a codification can only be based on the law as it stands and not on the law as it should be and can only be undertaken by a body commanding the confidence of the whole country. The States have an independent political jurisdiction but their subjects are governed by the same personal law as their neighbours in British India, and in my opinion any attempt to tinker with the present law by Indian States will bring into existence new schools of law and lead to chaos.

Within the scope of this short article, I do not propose to examine in detail the view expressed and the proposals submitted by these committees. But even in a general note on the subject I cannot help confessing to a sense of dissatisfaction at reading these reports. The Mysore proposals suffer from over generalisations while the Baroda proposals appear as makeshifts. These defects appear to be the result of an attitude of mind which wants to advance and yet hesitates to do so. The principal disqualifications under which women suffer are as under :—

- (1) The disqualification of a daughter or a sister to inherit absolutely under schools other than the Bombay school,

- (2) The disqualification of a daughter to inherit with a son or widow.
- (3) The disqualification of a widow to share the estate of her husband with the son.
- (4) The disqualification of a sonless widow to inherit absolutely.

Both these reports attempt to furnish remedy for these disqualifications but even to the extent to which they try to furnish one they are far from satisfactory. The immediate steps that require to be taken in order to raise the status of women under Hindu Law in my opinion are :—

- (1) That a widow should be entitled to a specific share in the estate of her husband even when he leaves a son behind him.
- (2) That she should be entitled to inherit her husband's property absolutely where he dies issueless.
- (3) That a daughter and a sister should inherit absolutely as under the Bombay school.
- (4) That a daughter and sister should take an equal share with the son and a brother respectively.

A bill to remove these disqualifications would soon improve the status of women under Hindu Law than any complicated scheme of reform.

The Mysore Committee, under the Chairmanship of K. S. Chandrashekar Aiyer has produced a valuable report. The draft Bill annexed to it does not confine itself to defining the rights of women but claims 'to make a full and careful survey of the entire field, and to submit a comprehensive and practicable scheme of reform.' It defines self-acquisition (Clause 8 (1).); it regulates the right of adoption (Clause 11); it defines 'necessary purpose' (Clause 20). That such Bill, if passed into law, by the Mysore State will lead to unnecessary conflict of law I have not the least doubt, and will add a Mysore School to an already bewildering number of schools of Hindu Law.

The object of the Committee being to recommend changes in the rights of women under existing law, two courses were open to it; either to take into account the equality of status accorded to women in civilized modern life, or to relax the rigour of existing law, so as to bring it in harmony with the advance of public opinion.

The Mysore Committee in Clause 4 appear to put forward the first point of view. 'No woman shall be excluded from inheritance or deemed to be disqualified for the exercise of any right or property or other civil right, by reason of her sex.' If this bold dictum had been carried into effect, we would have had a Bill, logically sound, though revolutionary in every sense. The Committee, however, has given up this effort halfway and contented itself by recommending certain changes, which according to them, 'serve to meet the just and reasonable requirements of the immediate present.' The result has been rather unfortunate for the changes proposed are by no means clear. Under Clause 6 (1) the son succeeds in priority to the widow to the estate of an intestate Hindu. While according to clause 10 (1) the widow, the mother, the unmarried daughter and the unmarried sister if any, of every Hindu male is to be entitled to a share for herself in all property and interest in property of such person, or if he be dead, which belonged to such person at the time of his death. This section is clumsily worded. Under clause 11 (1) and clause 26 of the present position of the widow that she is entitled to maintenance only appears to be accepted. Under clause 18 she is entitled to a full estate. I have not found a way of reconciling these sections in principle.

The Committee appointed for the Baroda State and presided over by R. B. Govindbhai Desai is a more modest and yet a more practical effort to broaden the law relating to Hindu women's property rights. Baroda, as is well known, has been one of the first Indian States to start the codification and improvement of Hindu Law and the result has been that several of the Baroda Acts differ in material particulars from the law as prevailing in adjoining British Indian territory. This report proposes several changes in the existing Hindu Law administered as at present in the State without going into fundamental alterations as to principles.

The report gives to unmarried daughter the right of getting her share, given to her by a Baroda Law, partitioned at her will; it removes the distinction between married, unmarried, rich and poor daughters for the purpose of inheritance. The children of a pre-deceased daughter and sister are given a right to share with surviving daughters and sisters, respectively. A wife's rights of maintenance are declared to be a charge on the property of her husband. She is also given the right to challenge alienations by the husband which are without lawful consideration and which are not for family purposes or legal necessity. In spite of my strong desire to see that a wife's rights in the husband's property should be duly secured, I consider the doctrine that she should be in a position to challenge the alienations made by the husband on the footing of his being an owner and not a mere manager as dangerous. Such a right would handicap the husband's rights over his property and is likely to affect seriously any trade or calling which he may choose to pursue. The wife would normally get the benefit of an enterprise undertaken by the husband; and there is no reason why she should not suffer in the event of such an enterprise going on.

As regards the widow's rights, the Committee takes a curious view. They propose that a widow should inherit the self-acquired property of her husband along with her sons and be entitled to seek partition. The Committee, however, propose that out of the share that she would so get, she should have an absolute right over Rs. 12,000 and a limited ownership over the excess. This appears to us an absurd rule of thumb applied in a matter which should be governed by a principle. Either the old Hindu notion should prevail that a widow is always entitled to limited ownership or that following an advanced principle her absolute ownership should be fully recognised. This is a very clumsy compromise and should not find a place in a sound system of law.

Both reports are laudable efforts to find a solution, but far from satisfactory as solution.

PRACTICAL IMPLICATIONS OF SATYAGRAHA.*

[ BY J. C. KUMARAPPA. ]

( Continued from the last issue. )

As regards the banishing of the liquor trade, I do not think anyone here present will need an argument to be advanced to establish its immoral character. Mr. Brailsford writes: 'This spirit monopoly competes with the official trade in opium for the first place among the Indian Government's iniquities.' Such being the case it was but natural that this item should have been accorded one of the foremost places in a satyagraha, to purify the country and the men engaged in this obnoxious trade. This, like the Salt programme, is an all-round blessing. In addition to the bureaucracy the liquor dealers will also suffer badly financially. This itself will be a corrective to direct them into humane channels of making a living in a respectable way and not out of the failings of our fellow beings. We are obliged to resort to this method as we have no other way of expressing the will of the people. The spontaneous response this item evoked from the various parts of the country is a proof, if one were needed, that the country wished this should be done.

Now, we come to the boycott of foreign cloth. We have neither the time nor the space to trace completely the mischief that foreign cloth trade, especially cotton cloth, has wrought in India. Suffice it to remind you that as our farmers are dependent on the monsoon, work on land does not keep them fully employed the year round. Formerly they used their spare time in cottage industries, chiefly spinning. India is the home of cotton textiles. Thus the farmers were able to supplement their produce from land with cottage industry and India exported large quantities of cloth to Europe and other parts of the world. After the ascendancy of the British in India this industry was wantonly suppressed in the interests of Lancashire, resulting in considerable underemployment and poverty in India among the masses. Foreign cloth has played an important part in bringing India to the wretched condition in which we find her today. If we wish to improve the conditions of the masses we have to provide them with a subsidiary industry which will require little capital and whose products will find a ready market. Such an industry is spinning; hence the Khadi programme is an adjunct to the boycott of foreign cloth. The boycott is not decided on as a vindictive measure but as means of protecting the poor of our country. The morsel of food snatched away from them has to be restored. The fact that we allowed such a thing to happen in the past is due to our slavery. If we had had the mind of freemen we would not have subjected ourselves to such an extent. Therefore, foreign cloth and cloth made out of foreign yarn, cotton or silk, is looked upon as a badge of slavery which the nation has to destroy with humiliation and shame. This brings us to the ethics of burning of foreign cloth.

I should be the last person to advocate the destruction of economic goods. India is a poor country and it cannot afford to destroy wealth. But is foreign cloth wealth? It is true it has been paid for by hard earned money. What is it that we have paid for? It is not a Benares Sari or a silk suit that we have paid for. We have paid for the destruction of India's economic independence. Trade in foreign cloth has poisoned the springs from which our millions have drawn life-restoring water. We regard it as an economic poison that we have bought. If we had purchased opium and then realised that the stuff we have got is a drug of dangerous type, perchance one that had poisoned our brethren, shall we be justified in keeping it or passing it on to another brother of ours? The simplest way out of the situation would be to let it be consumed by the all-purifying fire. We have taken part in an immoral trade and the guilt is upon us as long as we hold these poisonous commodities in stock. No cloth which had taken part in this traffic between India and other countries can be spared. Some of you may have bought clothes while you were abroad for use then. Such stuff naturally cannot come under this ban as it never has been part of India's foreign trade in cloth. I am stating this exception only to show you that we do not advocate burning of foreign cloth in any vindictive spirit. In so far as we have contributed to the fall of India economically we have sinned and we can absolve ourselves in a measure by pouring out this poisonous stuff on the sacrificial flames. I know there will be an economic loss but that loss will be our moral gain. The whole question hangs on our standards of material and moral wealth. If we value moral wealth, at times, we have to let material wealth go. This will form part of the price we pay for freedom. When compared to the untold wealth sent up in smoke and destruction of precious lives in Europe under the pretext of waging war to end war, what is the price we offer; we are only burning away the badge of slavery. Some economic waste is inevitable in such circumstances and let us not grudge that price. Like Mary, who broke an alabaster box of very precious ointment and anointed the feet of Jesus, although even then some protested and said 'why was this waste made?' Jesus said "Let her alone" because of the spirit behind what appeared to be an economic waste, so, let us look beyond the apparent waste and behold the forging of free India in the flames consuming the poison that has worked such havoc in our land.

* Being a speech delivered to the Bombay International Fellowship on 1st February 1931.

This campaign against foreign cloth will no doubt mean a loss of occupation to the traders who were engaged in it; they are on a par with the liquorshop keepers and will have to seek for a field which is beneficial to themselves and to the country at the same time.

We need not dwell long on the charka programme as a complement of the foreign cloth boycott. But it may be well to spend a few moments to see why it is that we do not back up swadeshi mill cloth as against the support we give to kharidar. Industrialisation seems to blind the eyes of those who would follow in the footsteps of the West. No physician can prescribe a remedy without knowing the constitution of the patient. Can India be industrialised to the same extent as America? We have in India all the material wealth needed for building up an industrial nation. But the more important factor, Man, has to be considered. The psychology of our people differs widely from that of the Westerners. Indian labour refuses to be dehumanised for an economic gain. Material profit is not a sufficient inducement to entice him away from his human needs and convert him into a machine. Man has many interests other than making money. Our labour does not wish to mortgage its 24 hours for the one purpose of a higher wage. It is this reason that accounts for the so called "inefficiency" of our labour. Some of our Mills are better equipped than Lancashire Mills and our men are more intelligent than the average British labourer. Yet our mills are not able to compete with foreign mills in the output. If our men give up other interests and concentrate on this one thing of making money, I have no doubt, we shall exceed the efficiency of Western Mills. Do we want to make machines of men? Leaving aside the other evils of a capitalistic system this in itself is enough to deter us from supporting a wholesale industrialisation. Some millowners feel that if they can raise the standard of living they can make the labour efficient. What is the implication underlying this suggestion? If they can increase the material wants of the labourers they will thereby create an economic motive to slave themselves to satisfy such increased wants. This is parallel to doping horses to make them run well. Is this moral? We do not need industrialisation of India on such terms. Man is a complex animal. He has many sides to his being—spiritual, social, intellectual, and economic. If we wish him to be purely economic it necessarily means dwarfing the other sides of his nature which will reduce him to a mere automaton. Let us not be carried away by the dazzle of Western material civilisation which stultifies the human being. Money has not that attraction in India that it has in the West. This, in part, accounts for the amazing small number of thefts and holdup in India considering the utter destitution of some of our people. Compare this with the wealthy city of Chicago. Our culture places a higher value on renunciation and poverty than on acquisition and wealth. Let us not change our standards which will be a condition precedent if we wish to follow the capitalistic civilisation of the West. Certain amount of industrialisation is bound to come, but, let us not go out of our way to court it.

This brings us to the end of the three-fold programme chalked out by Gandhiji before his incarceration. Since then two more have been added—the boycott of census. But before we proceed to examine these we may spend a few moments on the boycott of officials. Even though it may appear innocuous, as a professorship in the I.E.S., it forms part of a machine and helps to degenerate the people. The high salaries of these men are obtained by exactions from the poorest population in the world. This being so, they have no claim on us to support them when they come to us in their official capacity. Satyagrahis wish to win them back by moral persuasion to an honest living. Although we may boycott members of the bureaucracy, we bear no illwill against the persons and have no desire to persecute them. We hope the time is not far off when these Government servants will realise their humiliating position of living on the exactions of the poverty-stricken masses and quit the services and save their souls. This boycott is merely a form of non-cooperating with people engaged in work we consider injurious to the cause of the nation.

Taking up the subject of Boycott of British goods, we find again that it is based on the principle of not having any share in an immoral trade. The trade between England and India is not an exchange of goods between free men, unhampered by artificial barriers. The British trade connection has been a long story of unfair dealings. Manipulation of exchanges, tariffs, Railway rates, freights etc., have all been effected to bring about a favourable market for British manufactures. Public moneys have been spent lavishly in building railways and ventures which favour transport of goods. The rates of these transport facilities are so graded as to favour draining out of raw materials and bringing in of British manufactures. The scales of commerce have been heavily weighted in favour of Great Britain. Such traffic cannot be termed legitimate trade. It is a transfer of goods on unequal terms and there is no real exchange. It is a twice cursed business; it degrades both him who sells and him who buys. It is best to refrain from entering into such transactions. Until these unfair facilities have been righted, it behoves everyone of us to keep away from articles which are the objects of this commerce.

(To be continued.)

NON-CHRISTIAN CONTRIBUTIONS TO CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

I.

The Editor, Indian Social Reformer,
Sir,

I shall be glad if you will kindly publish the following from a communication sent me at my request by Sir William Wanless of Miraj. On the other matter referred to in your issue of February 21, I am in direct correspondence with Mr. Parekh. Sir William states: "All donations received in India for the Miraj Mission Hospital both from Christian and non-Christian donors is used for the medical aid of non-Christian patients. Another fact is that all salaries of Christian medical workers, Indian and foreign, are paid by the Christian Missionary Boards or Christian Churches, and not by Indian non-Christians. In the case of the Wanless Tuberculosis Sanatorium, the Managing Committee and General Committee of the Sanatorium are composed of both Indians and Europeans. We deny that the object of the Hospital and the Sanatorium is to subvert the religions of Indians as will be at once obvious from the basic statement of the Christian Missionary Association of India adopted in 1926 and only last month reaffirmed by the Christian Medical Association at its Annual Conference at Arogyavaram. The basic statement is as follows: 'It is our conviction that the ministry of healing is an essential part of the work of the Christian Church, whose mission it is to represent God as revealed in Jesus Christ? We do not admit that to subvert non-Christian religions in India is the object of the work of the Miraj Mission Hospital or that of the Wanless Tuberculosis Sanatorium, though we have to admit that we expect to exert an uplifting moral influence by the Christian activity which goes hand in hand with the service of the institution, for it is only by such elevating influence that the institution can be really successful either from a physical or moral point of view. No compulsion is ever used in whatever may be called or considered Christian or moral service or suasion. If such Christian services are held in these institutions they are always optional to any who may attend or be invited to attend. It would be as reasonable to contend that Mahatma Gandhi's peaceful picketing against liquor drinking was subverting the religion of the person addicted to alcohol as it would be reasonable to claim that Christian doctors or workers for the physical and moral good of the sick were subverting the religion of India.' The foregoing words from Sir William have an authority all their own. May I venture to point their practical moral, that while this discussion is going on, people are dying from tuberculosis and that the Mission Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Miraj is in need of funds.

Poona,
25th February 1931. }

Yours sincerely,
J. F. EDWARDS.

II.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Rev. J. F. Edwards in his reply to my charge that he represented the Congress as a Bolshevic concern in the United States practically denies the charge and says that the nearest approach to this charge lies in his having spoken of Pundit Jawaharlal Nehru as a Communist and an Atheist. I quote the following from a two column interview given to a Boston paper on January 25, 1930 by Mr. Edwards, an interview which has for its headlines these words:

"Voice of India" is Many Voices.

"Rev. F. Edwards, here from Bombay, sees Communistic Influence in National Congress."

Here are parts of the interview:

"If India were to speak like a united voice she would get what she wants.....The National Congress with its recent dramatic act is far from being "national" in its influence or constituency. It began that way but has deteriorated this past year because it has leaned so much to the communistic element. Jawaharlal Nehru, its leader, is regarded by moderate Indians as a very "Russianized" man. Nehru, President of the National Congress, was elected by a scant minority of three.

"At a meeting of the Trade Union Congress at Nagpur last month, older members of the movement seceded, stating clearly that they came out of the Congress to form a separate body free from Communistic influence. The anxiety of these older leader to keep the diverse elements together was well known, but as an Indian paper stated it: "They could not obviously allow the infant labour movement to be tied to the chariot wheels of Moscow."

"This National Congress is only one party in India, a partition of Hindus mainly. But many, many Hindus are of a thoughtful, constructive type of mind. A group of such calibre was indeed meeting at Madras at the very time the National Congress passed its vote for complete independence. It must not be forgotten, too, that in addition to such groups as these among the Hindus, there are seventy million Moslems, sixty million Untouchables and over 500 Indian Princes with seventy two million subjects opposed to Nehru's program."

There is much more to this effect but this will suffice to show what kind of propaganda Mr. Edwards was carrying on behalf of his own country and the British Empire. It is also sufficient to show that there is not a word here of Jawaharlal being an Atheist. What Mr. Edwards is anxious to prove is that the Congress is Communistic and is almost if not altogether Russianised.

And as if this were not enough Mr. Edwards denies having said this. I very much wish the so-called Theists pay more heed to what they say and what they deny than some of the so-called Atheists.....

Regarding the main point of my last letter viz, that the non-Christian people who contribute so much to Missionary institutions should have a voice in the management thereof, I am glad you agree with me. I am sorry to see, however, that Mr. Edwards only shirks the issue and enters into a long narration of the services rendered by Missionary doctors. Personally I have always thought the medical work of the Missions most fruitful from the point of view of philanthropy though not from that of pure evangelism, and I have always said so. Much of this philanthropy is nullified, however, by the proselytising urge accompanying it. But this is beside the point. My main contention is that if the people pay even according to Mr. Edward's own showing forty per cent of the expenses of such institutions, they must have an effective voice in the management thereof.

Mr. Edwards says that the Hindus have never offered themselves for service in such institutions. How could they when these places have their proselytising programme? But while they need not be on the staff, they could very well be asked to be members of the Managing Committee. If they have not asked for this, it is because they have been too good for that. But it was the duty of the Missions to request them for such a purpose. Has such a thing ever been done? I should be glad to be enlightened on this point and so will also the public be.

In my letter I did not say that all such institutions had seventy five per cent contributed by non-Christians but "some," and I know that there are a few which receive even more than that. It would be very kind of some one if he were to enlighten us as to how much for example has been received by way of such contributions by, say, a hospital like the Miraj hospital.

With this, I remain,

Yours etc,
MANILAL PAREKH.

III.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Your correspondent, Mr. Manilal O. Parekh, in his letter which appeared in your issue of the 21st February 1931, has done well by exposing the tactics of some foreign missionaries in their attempt to camouflage their imperialistic designs. That many Christian missionaries are imperialists there is not a shadow of doubt. Their methods of work, their policies, their very lives in the Eastern countries—all these tend to substantiate that assertion. Like any other Imperial Agency, they usually employ Indians to work against Indians. Mr Parekh does not refer to this method of their propaganda. I entirely agree that when such missionaries go home on furlough or on retirement, they usually spend their time and energy on attempts to paint the Indian people in the blackest colour. Their latest move is to enlist Indians to support them. By this kind of arrangement, their propaganda is advertised more extensively and intensively and it also helps in removing the doubt that may exist in the minds of the unsophisticated natives of England and America, whose knowledge of India and Indian affairs does not go beyond missionary reports and lectures heard at missionary meetings. Some years ago I happened to be present at a Students Conference near London. Thousands of students representing almost all the nations of the world were there as delegates. Among the speakers, at the open session, was an Indian Christian gentleman. He spoke on India. After his speech, many Indian students left the Conference because, as they told me, it was a disgrace to hear one of our own men not only belittling but deliberately misrepresenting our dear old Motherland. An Indian lady actually wept. The gist of his speech was that India was a country of indebtedness, poverty, misery, famine and untouchability. He referred to himself as one of the "Depressed classes" who was saved by the Grace of God shown through the human agencies of white missionaries. He ended up his peroration with, "We need a cinema machine badly for our rural work—for God's sake give us one....." Whether he got one or not, I am not in a position to say. The few Indian students who were left and I talked over the whole situation and it was decided that I should approach the management with a request to allow me to speak on India. Fortunately, I was able to remove to some extent the wrong impression regarding our people which was created by our friend. This is my own experience. I have heard scores of instances of this nature from various sources. We have to be on our guard and take immediate steps to fight the anti-Indian propaganda of our friends and missionaries and I hope that Mr. Parekh's revelations and experiences will set the ball rolling.

It is not possible to cover all the points raised by Mr. Parekh in the course of one letter. But I hope I shall be able to deal with them later on. But I cannot help referring briefly to Mr. Edwards' reply. It is admitted generally that Mission hospitals are doing good work in alleviating human suffering. But why should these hospitals be utilised as agencies for proselytising? As a matter of fact, it is the bounden duty of a Government to run all the necessary hospitals in any country but since the Government of India are busy in defending the Indian frontier, they have naturally left the work to their own Imperialist brethren. The Imperial interests of an alien Government are fully safeguarded by the "Christian" missionary agencies. I may further state that more than 75 per cent of the funds raised in America and England for helping the infidels of India are spent on the white missionaries themselves in India. Those of us who have had the fortune of knowing them intimately know very well the style and standard of their living and the luxuries of their lives in India.

As a matter of fact the Missionary work in the Eastern countries and particularly in India is considered to be a public service like the Civil or the Police Service; it is worse than that; it has become a caste. How many missionaries are there today whose grand-father, and father were also missionaries in India and I have reason to believe that they do not let an outsider step in. More about this at a later stage. Mr. Edwards complains that "public-spirited Indian citizens" are not forthcoming to work on the management of the mission hospitals. It is very easy to understand Mr. Edwards' difficulties; it is of the same nature as of the Commander-in-Chief in India who asserts that it is very difficult to find the right type of Indian young men, to adopt an army career with the King's Commission. Just imagine the strikingly close relationship between the Army Headquarters and the missionary mentality—all Imperialists.

Sir, you are shocked to hear that Mr. Edwards described Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru as an Atheist. You will be stunned to hear what all the missionaries talk about all of us in their private conversations. To be fair, Mr. Edwards is a better type of missionary. But what business has he to call another man an Atheist, knowing as he does that he is not? Imperialistic motives, Sir, in order also to raise more funds for their luxuries in India. Well, I, a Christian, would rather fall at the feet of a Jawaharlal an "atheist" for help and comfort than to embrace a "Christian" brother like some missionaries.

The time has arrived when all of us should take immediate steps to carry on a sustained campaign against the anti-Indian propaganda of missionaries and also to reveal in their own native lands the un-Christian nature of their work in India. I therefore propose that a journal be started towards that end. I have no enmity to any missionary; in fact my best friends are amongst them; but I feel called upon to defend the fair name of my country. The real object of this enterprise will be, to put it in the inimitable language of Mr. Parekh, 'to reform the Christian Mission and Churches in India.' All those who are interested in the scheme, please write to the undersigned and the necessary steps will be taken to translate it into action.

359, Hornby Road,
Bombay.
5th March 1930. }

Yours etc.,
S. A. WAIZ.

Social Service Conference:—A Social Service Conference is to be held at the Y. W. O. A. Summer School, "Anandgiri," Ootacamund from April 8th to 21st 1931. There will be lectures and discussions on social work in India with special emphasis on rural work. The courses have been planned with a view to helping beginners as well as more advanced people who have had previous experience of Social Service work. The Conference affords a splendid opportunity to all who would like to study the problem of social welfare which is one of the most crying needs of this country. For information and registration form apply after March 25th to:—The Secretary, Summer School, "Anandgiri," Ootacamund.

TO SIN IN IGNORANCE IS NOT TO SIN.

(BY A WOMAN L. T.)

(The following is a translation of the original article in Tamil which appeared in Stri Dharma of April, 1930.)

In our daily life we often use words without meaning much by them. Many words of endearment and abuse, and many wise proverbs are spoken without corresponding affection, anger or moral fervour. It is only occasionally that a phrase stands revealed in its full significance. "Satyam" means less than nothing in modern slang, but it stood for a life's ideal when Harischandra spoke it.

I have often heard the proverb "To sin in ignorance is not to sin," but it was only during the last week that I understood something of its significance; I shall explain how that happened, merely changing the names of the characters in the story.

It is now two months since I took up my post in the Government Girls' School at Kondiyur. I had lived in Madras till then; and when I failed in the L. T. last year, it was a comfort to me that I could postpone seeking a job in a stuffy mofussil station. But one cannot fail to get the L. T. degree for ever. I passed out in October and was posted to Kondiyur early in the New Year. I remembered that Parvathy, an old school fellow of mine, came from there. I wrote to her father and he and his wife (Parvathi's step-mother) made me welcome and were wonderfully kind to me. The lady, Kamakshiammal, found me a house, and engaged a Brahmin servant woman to cook and keep home for me. Kondiyur was a small town, but it was, by no means, the back-water place I had imagined it to be. There were a Social Reform League and a Bharata Matha Seva Sangam for women in the place. The last was founded and run by its energetic Secretary, Kamakshiammal. The wives of the officials and vakils of the town met at the Samajam twice a week to listen to mutual improvement lectures and play cards in the evening. Nor was social service neglected; every Sunday morning, the poor children of the town, about sixty in all, were admonished to wash their faces and keep clean and were given an ollock of milk each. I learned to like Kamakshiammal very much; she spoke kindly of her step-daughter, and I looked forward to pleasant times when Parvathy too should stay amongst us.

I had arranged to spend a week-end at Madras; as my train steamed out of the station, I saw Parvathy and her husband getting down on the platform from another train. I went to Kamakshiammal's house eagerly on Monday evening, but Parvathi was not there and Kamakshiammal looked annoyed and distressed. Something had gone wrong and I soon learnt what it was. Parvathy had a Pariah girl with her, as a companion servant, and she allowed her full freedom about the house. This was more than Kamakshiammal or the neighbours could stand, and Paravathy had moved into a house in the Sudra street. I met Parvathy at the Samaj the next day and followed her home, hoping to smooth down the misunderstanding between the two, who I felt now, were my dearest friends. I spoke to Parvathy of Kamakshiammal's kindness, unselfishness and zeal for social reform; it was through her influence partly that Parvathy had been able to break down the barriers of caste; and I urged that she should not be extreme in her views and practice, hurting those who loved her best, and losing the social influence she might have otherwise. I pleaded my cause well, but could not succeed against Parvathy's obstinacy. "Oh, I know many people believe in caste; it seems unreasonable, but their belief is not founded on reason; if you think, rightly or wrongly, that a fever is contagious or that the approach of a low caste human being is polluting, you have to act accordingly, I suppose. I have heard that my grandfather once saved a boy from drowning. The Collector of the district was on the bank, and congratulated him and offered to shake hands with him; my grandfather had no mind to take another dip and refused the hand! We are not like that; we have cosmopolitan teas and dinners; and at the same time, we throw water on the vessels and clothes touched by the Sudra servant in the house, to keep up some unmeaning standard of purity and orthodoxy. I have been in cheris, with my step-mother's approval; I like this child personally; and I cannot, in any way, accept the symbolic ritual of caste; being what I am, it will be a sin for me to do so."

I was sorry for this, but could do nothing more. Parvathy too found the situation difficult and persuaded her husband to get himself transferred elsewhere. It was really a conflict between two different kinds of temperaments; Parvathy admitted this and said that away from Kondiyur, she would find a sympathetic friend in her step-mother, as she had done these many years. But before this, there was another family quarrel, at which unfortunately I happened to be present. It arose, from the arrangements made for the wedding of Kamakshiammal's eldest daughter, a girl of twelve. Nothing would have persuaded Kamakshiammal to sacrifice her daughter to an unworthy man; once, when a rich widower of forty offered to marry the child, Kamakshiammal swore she would keep her daughter unmarried all her life rather than consent to such a revolting match. But it so happened that it was possible to get as bridegroom a charming boy of eighteen, of a good family. The only trouble was that the father of the boy asked for a bridegroom price of ten thousand rupees, to have the wedding over before April and the operation of the Sarda Act. The price was unwillingly agreed to, but Parvathy protested against it. She as a daughter of the house, had a right to urge her views, she said. The money was likely to be spent on the necessities and luxuries of the boy's brothers and sisters. They could not afford to give a second dowry when the girl grew up and settled down to married life; and there was no chance that the boy would be able to give her a comfortable house, in the near future. "We really want Ratna to have an independent home sometime, but we are buying for her, at a preposterous rate, an one in twentieth share in a joint family concern. These shares will have no value next year, either the Sarda Act comes into force; and we are not blind believers in Kanya Dharma, and ten thousand is ten thousand, a fair marriage settlement for my sister, when she is grown up and wishes to marry; and we are throwing this money away!" This talk was all the more exasperating because Kamakshiammal felt the force of the argument; and there was an unseemly quarrel, in which both lost their tempers thoroughly, and accused each other of cowardice and jealousy. I intervened and did my best to pacify them.

The wedding took place as arranged and was a gala function. Parvathy astonished me by her songs and high spirits; she thoroughly enjoyed the fun of the four days' festivities; by this time, the transfer order came through and she left Kondiyur. Kamakshiammal was once more her gay, kindly self, once the weariness of the wedding arrangements had worn away; and she kept up a friendly correspondence with Parvathy. She read to me last week an extract from her last letter, describing her troubles in the new place—a humorous account of how her two non-brahmin servants of different castes insisted on keeping each other at a distance and would have nothing to do with the Adi-Dravida child. Kamakshiammal laughed kindly enough. "What self-created difficulties?" she said, "I wish Parvathy's grandmother was alive to see the result of her upbringing. You know, Parvathy as a child was brought up by my mother-in-law—the most orthodox lady I have ever known. She was ill for fifteen days and died without taking a drop of medicine. Once, when she was in a swoon, my husband forced some brandy between her lips, but that was all. "To sin in ignorance is not to sin" she said, "but I shall not knowingly take polluted stuff." Her scientifically educated sons and daughters were powerless against that resolve; it is a pity her favorite grand-child seems to have taken a contrary vow to let no unpolluted stuff pass her lips daily."

"Yes, that is so" I agreed, but on second thoughts, does it not rather seem as if Parvathy was trying to live up to the same standard as her grandmother—the indomitable old lady?

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Naigam Social Service Centre:—The second annual meeting of the Naigam Social Service Centre was held on Monday last. This meeting was held at the Centre itself, in Dadar which gave those present a chance to see something of the actual surroundings in which the work is carried on and of the work itself. The children of the Nursery School entertained the company with some action songs which were much appreciated and their smiling faces testified to the happy and healthful days which they spend in the school. Some of the newly enrolled Bluebird Flock also appeared and gave some demonstration of what they do. The chair was taken by Mrs. Maneklal Premchand who spoke of the necessity of many more taking up such work among the poor of this great city. Mr. Faiz Tyabji gave the address in the course of which he emphasised the real value of work for the uplift of the poor and depressed, especially commenting on the education given at the Centre which aims, not only at literacy, but at education in its fullest sense, including culture and a knowledge of those things that make life healthy and enjoyable. Miss Wingate, who read the annual report drew attention to the adult school for married women and to the health education being done among the children with a view to training them in good habits before they get so fixed in the bad habits which tend to make the chawls uninhabitable, that change is wellnigh impossible. The playground which has been added during the year has added much to the usefulness of the Centre. The workers co-operated in a Government inquiry into Infant Mortality the results of which have thrown much light on this problem. At the close of the meeting the audience inspected the premises and some of the handwork done by the women and children.

ADVERTISEMENTS

THE Central Bank of India Ltd. SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a

HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT

with us and earn  $3\frac{1}{2}\%$  interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

WOMAN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.
PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: BULLION EXCHANGE.
(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)
BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at  $2\frac{1}{2}\%$  per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 8 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

PORTLAND CEMENT

Surpasses the latest British Standard
Specification
AND IS A

RAPID HARDENING
CEMENT.
Use it & Save Money.

TATA SONS, LTD., Agents. THE INDIAN
BOMBAY HOUSE, FORT, BOMBAY. CEMENT
CO., LTD.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gwalior.
(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadl, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,15 00

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
Shankarrao Vitthalidas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
Raj Ratna Bhallal Dajibhai Amin B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda).
Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Sar Suba, Baroda State, Baroda.
Mr. N. M. Mukumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 5½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

83/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulia (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondaicha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nashik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Palghar ( " " ).	Aklaj (District Sholapur).
Aklaj ( " " ).	Virangam (District Ahmedabad).
Virangam (District Ahmedabad).	Kalol ( " " ).
	Parola (District East Khandesh).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution reorganized under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26,

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.
TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
BOMBAY, MADRAS

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital (Paid up) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,
General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJAN PAIN BALM
PRODUCE
BEST RESULTS

IN
Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.
AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY & MADRAS.

— A SAFE —
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch :—
KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies'
Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs. a. p.
Subscription (including postage).
Inland ...	5 0 0
Foreign ...	5 8 0
Single copy ...	0 6 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Began in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

A reader of the Reformer writes from Sweden as follows under date January 2, 1931 :—"I have had much pleasure in reading your magazine during the last year, and I have thereby been enabled to follow closely the happenings in India."

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931 :—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931 :—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931 :—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

For Advertisement rates, please apply to :—

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. R. H. The Nizam's Dominions :
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan :
RASHID KHODADAD & CO
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 60.

PARAMOUNT ON PARADE

10 Parts,

A GALAXY OF PARAMOUNT STARS

A Paramount All-Talking Singing and Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

A Paramount Sound News No. 20 & 21. 1 Reel.

MURDER

10 Parts, featuring,

HERBERT MARSHALL, NORAH BARING, PHYLLIS KONSTAM, MILES
MANDER, DONALD CALTHROP.

A British International All-Talking Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

INNOCENTS OF PARIS

10 Parts, featuring,

MAURICE CHEVALIER

Paramount all Taking Singing and Dancing Picture.

CHRISTMAS CHEER

2 Parts, featuring,

SUNNY JIM

Universal Talking Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

HOODMAN BLIND

6 Parts, featuring,

DAVID BUTLER & GLADYS HUE.

HAIRBREADTH HARRY

2 Parts,

Art Class Picture Comedy.

HAUNTED HOUSE

2 Parts, featuring,

HAROLD LLOYD

Pathe Comedy.

Time:—4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1931

No. 28

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Poorna Swaraj. Mahatma Gandhi. British Tories and the Indian Conference. The Flag Question. Another Atheist Indian Politician. Spurious Khadi. Mr. Chintamani on Sir Malcolm Halley. Treatment of Prisoners. A Swedish View of Hinduism. "The Non-Brahmin Peril."	Hinduism and Christianity. Practical Implications of Satya- graha. Social Reform. Non-Christian Contributions to Christian Missions. 'Poorna Swaraj.' Commercial Crooks. The Bombay Presidency Anti- Untouchability Conference at Ratnagiri. News and Views.
--	---

NOTES.

Poorna Swaraj:—We reprint to day the definition of Poorna Swaraj given by Mahatma Gandhi to certain interviewers in Delhi. The essence of it is not, as popularly understood, driving the British out of India. In fact, this need not even be an incident of Poorna Swaraj. Indian Swaraj would be a poor thing if under it foreigners are not as safe and free to engage in activities not inconsistent with the security and well-being of the country as Indians. This is the age-long national policy and there can be no departure from it. And among foreigners, the British have a claim to special consideration upon us. Poorna Swaraj means nothing more and nothing less than that Indians should have the same right of managing their own affairs and of learning by their own mistakes, as all free peoples. Pandit Jawharlal Nehru, whose opinion carries great weight, made this clear in a speech which he made at Allahabad last week. The Associated Press message says that he affirmed that he had no grievance against retaining connection with Great Britain but the reason why he was against Dominion status was that it implied that the same system and structure as the British should be embodied in the constitution and the same economic structure also be adopted. If and so far as Dominion Status necessarily means this, we too are not for it. We do not think it does, but to remove all doubt we suggested in an article headed "India's Political Status" in the Reformer of the 1st November last, that the designation "Indian Swaraj" might be used for the vague and variable phrase "Dominion Status." Indian Swaraj would mean such an economic and political system as we may adopt in consonance with our needs, and it will also mean the government by the higher self of the lower self of India. In fact, the term has a spiritual and not merely political import which should specially commend it.

Mahatma Gandhi:—Mahatma Gandhi left Delhi on Sunday. He reached Ahmedabad on Monday. His journey was a triumphal progress, large crowds waiting long hours at the railway stations on the route to get a sight of him. In Ahmedabad enormous, enthusiastic crowds made it impossible for him to speak, and at a women's meeting the crush was so great that several women had to be removed to hospital where one of them died of her injuries. Among Congressmen there seems to be a not inconsiderable body of opinion which is not quite pleased with the Gandhi-Irwin agreement. But the masses are overwhelmingly with Mahatma Gandhi, and if the Congress decide at Karachi to drop the agreement, as some Congressmen would like it to do, it will forfeit the support of the masses which is its greatest asset, and which will not be given to the party if it decides to go against Mahatmaji's declared wishes. The people trust him and are prepared to be guided by him far more than by any other leader. Mahatmaji has declared that if the Karachi Congress refuse to abide by the agreement, it will have to do without him. He has also said that if the Congress does not want to take part in the Round Table Conference, he could not participate in the Conference, as it is in his capacity as Congress leader, and not in his personal capacity that he, with the approval of the Working Committee, came to the agreement with Lord Irwin.

British Tories and the Indian Conference:—In deference to the clamour of Mr. Winston Churchill and others of his erstwhile colleagues, Mr. Baldwin, the leader of the Conservative opposition in the British Parliament, has decided not to send representatives of his party to the Conference to be held at Simla. The English and Anglo-Indian papers have called this a bombshell and the European members of the Legislative Assembly have sent a message to Mr. Baldwin expressing regret at his decision and the hope that it may be reconsidered. Several explanations have been attempted, but none of them is of much consequence. The plain fact is that the Conservative Party is seriously divided over the Indian question as the British Liberal Party was over the Irish Home Rule question. In the Irish case, Mr. Gladstone preferred to split his party rather than surrender his convictions which have been completely justified by the course of events. If Irish Home Rule had been agreed to, Ireland would be in all probability still a part of the United Kingdom. A long course of repression on the one hand and consequent suffering and embitterment on the other, would have been avoided. But the Tories opposed the grant of Home Rule and were supported by the Liberal schismatics like Mr. Joseph Chamberlain. The Tories are merely enacting their traditional role in obstructing the course of Indian reform. We, in this country, may leave the British political parties to settle their differences between themselves. We know definitely what we want, and it is immaterial to us whether we get it by agreement among all the parties, or by one party defeating the other, or in any other way, so long as we get it. Since the above was in type, Mr. Baldwin has explained that his decision does not imply any change in the attitude of his Party.

The Flag Question:—Replying to a Sikh demand for the inclusion of another colour to represent their creed on the national flag, Mahatma Gandhi said that the form of the flag has yet to be settled and he invited suggestions from the public. The flag of India must be one to which all classes and communities can look with pride and affection. It should not hurt the susceptibilities of any of them. It should be artistic and not a bizarre combination of colours. The present flag does not satisfy the last condition. A flag on which the likeness of any animal like the tiger or elephant appears, apart from its suitability, will be obnoxious to Moslem sentiment. There is much to be said in favour of introducing the crescent in the national flag. It is at present the distinctive symbol of Islam, but, according to E. B. Havell, Islam borrowed it, among other things, from India. "Finally," he writes, "under Turkish domination, the ensign of Islam became the crescent moon, Siva's bow, which had been the symbol of India—the land of the Moon—or of India's holy land, Aryavarta ages before the Prophet of Mekka was born." Whether this is historical or not, the silver crescent in a blue sky with the planet, Venus, by its side, is a beautiful picture, and one which can be seen often by any one who lifts his eyes to heaven. If any implement is to be included, we should prefer the plough to the charkha, both as being more representative and more artistic as an emblem of Indian industry. These are rough general ideas which may be considered when the flag question is considered.

Another Atheist Indian Politician:—The Dnyanodaya has unearthed another Indian political leader who does not believe in God. This is Dr. R. P. Paranjpye, who, according to our contemporary, once told students that religion should be relegated to the scrap-heap. Dr. Paranjape belongs to the Indian Liberals, so that if Pandit Jawharlal's atheism is held to taint the Congress movement, Dr. Paranjpye's must also be held to taint the Moderates. May we suggest to our contemporary that when men of the type of Pandit Jawharlal Nehru and Dr. Paranjpye, or Lenin, for that matter, denounce religion, fair-minded men should understand that they have in mind the type of religion with which they have most reason to be dissatisfied? Basil Mathews, who is no admirer of Bolshevism or Bolsheviks, says of Lenin: "He himself was an ascetic Puritan in his way of life, always a devoted son to his mother, a good husband to his wife and a passionate lover of little children." There are many professing Theists of whom this cannot be said.

Spurious Khadi:—We reproduce elsewhere Mr. Jerajani's outspoken article in the Khadi Patrika, the organ of the All-India Spinners' Association, condemning the tendency to pass off on confiding customers as genuine hand-spun and hand-woven, cloth which is machine-made or even made of foreign yarn and is in some cases not even made on handlooms. The average purchaser, while he wants to use khadi only, has perforce to accept what is sold to him as such in the open market. Mr. Jerajani mentions five places in Bombay city where genuine khadi can be purchased. Since he wrote the article, several other shops have been opened and at the present time we understand there is a plentiful supply of Khadi, so that no one who wishes to use it, need accept spurious stuff from unscrupulous dealers.

Mr. Chintamani on Sir Malcolm Hailey:—There are a few journalists—not, generally speaking, Indians—who pretending to an inside knowledge of affairs which they do not possess, indulge in indiscriminate attacks on public men and high officers. Sir Malcolm Hailey is one of those who have suffered most from this type of journalist. But Mr. C. Y. Chintamani, speaking in the U. P. Legislative Council last week, paid a glowing tribute to the service rendered by Sir Malcolm at the Round Table Conference. "He was sure," said Mr. Chintamani, "members of the House would hear with the greatest satisfaction that, according to all information available to Indian members of the R. T. C. in London, the whole of Sir M. Hailey's great ability and great influence had been exerted in England on behalf of the political advancement of this country and if the unwritten history of those weeks of December, 1930, could be seen by any one, it would be realised to what extent the people of India were indebted for the advice which Sir M. Hailey gave to his Majesty's Government for which purpose he was sent from here."

Treatment of Prisoners:—There was a discussion in the Bombay Legislative Council on Thursday on the treatment of political prisoners in Bombay jails. The Home Member totally repudiated all the allegations. Incidentally, the classification of prisoners came in for criticism. The Home Member justified the policy followed by his department in this matter also. The most charitable view that can be taken of this attitude of the Home Member is that he knows nothing of the things he was talking about. The Committee appointed by the Social Service League to enquire into this subject has collected a large amount of first-hand evidence from released prisoners and other sources and its report when published will show whether the official or non-official version is the correct one. As for the working of the classification system, it is the general impression that it has been used as an extra-judicial means of adding to the severity of sentences.

A Swedish View of Religion:—Mr. Axel Ideström whose article on "Hinduism and Christianity" we print today is Controller of the State Telegraph at Stockholm and is a Swedish author of repute. We have preferred not to make any change in his language, as it conveys his meaning quite clearly, which, after all, is the purpose of language. Mr. Ideström has been travelling in India during the last few months and he assures us that a great deal of interest is felt in India by his countrymen.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, MARCH 14, 1931.

"THE NON-BRAHMIN PERIL."

The non-Brahmin movement has fulfilled its mission and is seeking a broader basis for itself. The present therefore, does not seem to be an opportune time to launch a philippic against it. We were, therefore, surprised to get a book entitled "the Non-Brahmin Peril and Blasted Brahminism" by Mr. S. Munikulaja (Srinivasa Varadachari & Co., Madras). The author, it is evident, is a devout believer in the religion of the Bhagavad Gita which, however, he mistakenly identifies with the practice of present-day Brahminism. He is equally mistaken in mixing up the Sarda Act, higher education for women, and the advocacy of inter-communal marriages, as part of the "non-Brahmin peril" because they have nothing to do with the non-Brahmin movement. He is probably correct as regards the immediate causes of the origin of this movement, but one must look behind these to see wherein its real strength lay. There is no real non-Brahmin movement outside Madras. The poor imitation in Maharashtra originated in a demand for recognition of Marathas as Kshatriyas by Brahmins whose pre-eminence it thus tacitly conceded. Unlike the South Indian non-Brahmin, the Maratha—the Andhra is more or less in the same case—is much too Aryanised in language and manners to lead a movement against Brahminism. The present Ministers in Madras are all Tamilians and the non-Brahmin party there is virtually a Tamil party. The Tamils have a distinctive culture and individuality independent of Sanskritic influences. Ramanuja, the great Vaishnavite Acharya, adopted Tamil as the second sacred language of his revival. The Saiva Siddhant is the special contribution of Tamil Nadu to Hinduism, and according to all students, it touches the highest range of spirituality. If we look at the non-Brahmin movement in this light, we are struck not by its many crudities but by its intrinsic value as a force stirring up the rather stagnant waters of Brahmanical orthodoxy in the south.

Mr. S. Munikulaja will not accuse us of approving the rather coarse invectives in which non-Brahmin propagandists have sometimes indulged against the Brahmins in the heat of controversy, as he himself quotes passages from our writings condemning such vulgarity. Mr. Bagde from whose address at a Conference held at Wardha five years ago he quotes profusely, is not the most representative non-Brahmin leader, as any one can see from his language and ideas. He wanted the whole race of Brahmins to be burned or buried, and all Shankaracharyas to be dismissed and their properties confiscated by Government. He called Brahmins "selfish dogs" and "plague rats" and accused them of acting as "the cruellest butchers for slaughtering the cows." Curiously enough, Mr. Bagde is a fervent admirer of Mahatma Gandhi whose movement, he accused Brahmins of opposing tooth and nail. "The Brahmins of Poona and everywhere are like bugs eating up the blood of the nation. They don't want charka and the yarn franchise. This they have done with a view to continue the satanic sway of Chitpavan Brahmins in the Indian politics. It is, therefore, the sacred duty of the non-Brahmins to continue their agitation against the Brahmins and thus preserve Mahatmaji's programme intact. The Brahmins are like selfish dogs and would always come in the way of Mahatma Gandhi's programme since Mahatmaji is not a Chitpavan Brahmin." Mr. Bagde forgot that the non-Brahmin party has not accepted Mahatmaji's programme, and if that is a heinous crime on the part of Chitpavan Brahmins, it cannot be less in the case of non-Brahmins. It is not true that all Brahmins, even Chitpavans, are opposed to Mahatma Gandhi's movement, though it is the fact that most of the Liberals are Brahmins, especially in Madras. We are inclined to regard Mr. Bagde as one whose bark is worse than his bite. His similes are more deserving of amused toleration than the serious attention which Mr. Munikulaja has paid to them. The fact is, he is alarmed by the movements in Hinduism to remove abuses and to promote the free flow of life to all parts of the organism. But these movements are necessary if Hindu society is to survive. As for Brahmins, they have forfeited their position of influence in Hindu society because they have abandoned the high role assigned to them and have become competitors in the market-place with all other classes. Sir Walter Lawrence in his "India That We Served," observes: "Whatever the picture of 'India reformed' may have been in the minds of the imaginative men who made the rough sketch, in the finished work the Brahman will be the central and the striking figure." We do not think so, unless by Brahman he meant not the born Brahman but the Indian who most thoroughly lives up to the Brahmanical ideal of sacrifice and service. When huge crowds of men, women and children struggle to get a sight of Mahatma Gandhi, it is because they have instinctively felt that he represents this ancient Brahmanical ideal, though he is not born a Brahmin. If non-violent satyagraha becomes the accepted mode of Indian action in society and the state, it will mean the restoration of this ideal in the national life—a fulfilment of the yearnings of a millenium.

HINDUISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

(By Mr. AXEL IDESTRÖM, STOCKHOLM.)

If you will compare two religions, you must at first make clear, what significance religion has to man. Is it really of some importance, if a person embraces one religion or another? If he is a free thinker, or if he is a materialist and denies all spiritual existence? Is it not a private affair to every one, what he believes or not believes in this way?

The socialists of the Western countries have often written on their schemes for progress this sentence: Religion is every person's private concern. Perhaps it is true to some extent. People are various in education, in experience of life, in taste and customs. It is impossible to pretend that all people should have the same opinions concerning such a difficult question as religion.

People, who are born in different countries and are from childhood educated in different religious communities get by this reason different religions. Is it not, then, all right to let everyone keep his own way in such matters?

In Russia of today atheism has really become the state-confession. Means this a disaster to the country or not?

Well, it is good to be tolerant. It is of no use to try to make all people alike. It is better to respect the differences and permit others to follow their own habits. But yet!

People live here on earth in such an intimate connection with one another, that it is rather difficult to a person to do or even to think something, that does not in any way affect another. Also my dress and every kind of behaviour affects my surroundings. My fellowmen are interested, if I am an honest man or a cheat. But now my behaviour depends just on my opinions, my character, my religion. Thus we cannot quite avoid to discuss religious matters with our neighbours.

There is something we call moral. It means just those laws, that govern my behaviour. My moral is the very ground for my dealings. My moral, then, is not my private concern. If now my moral depends on my religion, the consequence is, that religion is not quite my private concern.

But the moral! Is it not the same thing in all religions? A Muhammedan, a Hindu or a Christian, can they not all be good and honest people? Yes, also a materialist can be an honest man.

We know it is true. In all religions we meet with good and bad persons, with honest and insidious. What means that?

Oh, of course! All Christians are not really Christians. A great deal confess their religion only formally. Another part does not care about religion. And many people, Christians and Indians go to the temple only with the purpose of acquiring good reputation.

Why, then, does a person get good reputation by an appearance of religiosity? This fact proves something. Experience indicates that people who are earnestly religious, commonly are more honest than those who are materialists or don't care about religion.

This experience is the same in all religions. To begin with, then, we must verify a radical difference between, on the one side, the earnestly religious man, who has in some ways a belief in a spiritual world above this material, a life of the soul beyond the body—he may think what he likes in details—and on the other side, the materialist, who denies religion and believes only in the material and the body.

Yet, I said, also a materialist can be a good man. It is true about this friend and about that one. A great many people do never make clear to themselves if they really are materialists, since they don't believe in the confession of their childhood.

Perhaps, in the deepest corner of their hearts, they feel some doubt and think: If I am wrong? If I die and discover the soul is still there? How terrible! Perhaps, at all events, it is better to act honestly. Or they don't think at all, but act simply as they are habited and taught, quite conveniently.

But also if a learned professor and philosopher says he is a materialist and yet an honest man, he will admit himself as a scientific fact, that materialism as a doctrine is devoid of moral. It is amoral. This does not necessarily mean immoral. The materialistic doctrine also tries to create a kind of moral, founded on egotism, on common interest. Everyone has himself an advantage of being good. You will gain in the long run by being honest, life will be much more pleasant if people are kind and help one another. But what an emptiness in such a moral. If you have some advantage of a crime, you may commit it, how abominable it may be—only you are sure to be able to hide it until you die, that you may not be troubled. When you are dead—all right! Your own advantage in this life is the only reason, the only ground of your acts and dealings.

As soon as you realize the existence of a spiritual world above this material, the moral gets quite a new meaning. The goal of life becomes immediately quite another thing than the poor personal advantage during this short life on earth. As soon as you learn you have a soul, a higher ego beside the body, an ego that lives when the body is dead, immediately the horizon grows out over new, infinite regions. Our life here on earth, in the bodies we bear occasionally, gets importance only as a preparation for the life to come. The different religions or the individual persons may conceive the soul or the spiritual existence in different ways. The common mark is yet this wider view over existence, that leads to a real moral. The knowledge, the consciousness of being part of a greater continuity gives a compelling impetus to struggle for that higher evolution, that ripens only in another world than this material one.

Yes, to people, who know the law of karma, it is not necessary to deal more with this clear truth.

We see then: the only reliable ground for a true moral is religion. He who leaves hold of religious support, runs the risk of going astray. It is therefore necessary to pay the most earnest attention to religion, that we may not lose it. We must compare and try the religious questions and see what is the bearing point in them. We must ponder over them and not be tired to take care of them, not by automatic ceremonies, of course much less by violent quarrels about habit, but in order to understand the truth and get a share of the eternal wisdom.

Now we come back to the difficulty to say, what is the truth? I have said the common, central point in all religions is the knowledge about a spiritual existence. But as religions are many, there are several conceptions of the fact. There are so many ideals, so many opinions. But truth itself must be one. That grand Force, who has created the sun and all infinite numbers of universes, that we discover in the sky at night, he is one and the same, whatever we think about him in Europe or America, in China or in India—here on the little dust we call the earth. That grand Force itself we are not able to conceive, but the religions are different ways, on which we are tottering forward to approach that huge goal, the eternal truth.

The religions then must be movable. They must be able to develop, just as science, as we get more knowledge and better understanding. They must not be fettered by stoucharid tenets or ceremonies.

But in practice our religions are so piled up with details and ceremonies, that it is difficult to make out what is the mean line in them. What must I point out as the central point, the advantage or the fault in a particular creed? Learned people take up discussions about tenets and ceremonies, and there is an endless quarrel among them. I think it better now to try a practical test and venture to say: that religion is to prefer, which keeps the moral best. I can turn that point in another way and say: the best religion is that, which saves us most surely from the materialistic darkness. As I have said above, those two points coincide. And by a comparison we must use our reason, that little divine spark in us, that will not be suffocated by tenets and ceremonies. I will confess I will also give preference to that religion, which permits that little spark to live.

By no means, then, I will reject either the Christian religion or Hinduism in their purest forms. Both have the wide prospect beyond the gateway of death over the higher life of the spiritual world. Both have the moral laws deeply rooted in their foundations. Both look up towards the divine guidance, which discriminates clearer than we ourselves, as we are tottering around with the heavy material veils before the eyes. Really we ought not to have any dispute with one another. In their highest and purest aspects both religions reach up to the unifying truth and melt together in the sight of God.

You know well two prominent men in India, two good friends and co-workers: Mahatma Gandhi and Reverend C. F. Andrews, the one a Hindu, and the other a Christian. Yet I think they have little occasion to quarrel about religious differences. They have grown up too huge and come to that point where differences disappear.

No, it is not in those highest aspects I have to compare the two religions. It is only in their customary forms as they present themselves to us in their churches, their communities, in their textbooks, their missions, as we meet with them in daily life. It is in these aspects we are able to criticise and compare them.

How is then religious life commonly going on in Christian countries? You know very well, that materialism is widely spread in the West, specially among educated people, but also growing, more and more among the meaner classes. The church is considered a social institution. One participates in its ceremonies at some special occasions. The children are baptized—in order not to be unlike other children, that they may not be troubled in some way. For the same reason they take the communion. They take part in the holy meal, where they mean to eat the body of Christ and his blood to be acquitted from sin. Their parents don't believe in this tenet perhaps, but yet they take part, because it is an old custom. By marriage the civil form is more and more common, specially among workmen. Yet the confirmation by the church also in this case is kept up as being the more decent custom.

Now I think it is a fact also in India and all over the world, that the great bulk of people think rather little about the deeper content of their religion. One simply follows custom. Yet there are many, who wish to understand and be honest, and those are the best people. It is a bad state of things, if just those people are not able to save their creed, but drive out in the darkness, if just the intellectuals, the leaders do not believe more in the religion of the people, but consider it only as an old custom or perhaps as a good rein to govern the masses. I regret to say this state of things is just common in Christian countries.

Why is it so? It is quite clear, that the reason is the dogmas, the central Christian tenets. There is a fight now-a-days between religion and science. The result is, in the Western countries, that science is driving lots of people out of religion. And as the learned do, so follow the innocent automatically, and in a yet more dangerous way, as they are more rough and helpless.

The priests of course deny, that the fault is the dogmas. They speak about the bad times and lack of real understanding about the meaning of the dogmas. I don't think they are right. I remember myself how the boys already at school discussed the dogmas and laughed at them.

(To be concluded)

PRACTICAL IMPLICATIONS OF SATYAGRAHA.*

[ BY J. C. KUMARAPPA. ]

(Concluded from the last issue.)

Our purpose is not to ruin British merchants nor even to bring political pressure by hitting at one powerful section of the British public, as is often pointed out by journalists of even the type of Mr. Brailsford. We desire trade with all nations on equal and honourable terms without any nefarious practices. We know our boycott has been partially responsible for the increasing unemployment amongst British labour. In a vast readjustment such as we are attempting many innocent parties will necessarily suffer. We cannot on this account abandon our venture. We are not for using boycott as a political weapon. No satyagrahi will think of inflicting pain on others but he will rather suffer. We are undertaking this work as a matter of trust for the nation. We owe it to generations to come that we put this trade connection with Great Britain on a proper basis. We feel it is a religious duty of both Indians and Britishers who can realise the humiliating position of India in that she is unable to buy in a market best suited to her unless it be the British market, to put an end to this exploitation. We are engaged in purifying two nations. All corroding malpractices have to be expunged ruthlessly. We can have no half-way methods nor compromises. We earnestly hope Britain will do her part and help us in this arduous task before us.

The latest item added on to the programme is the boycott of the Census. Taking of the census is one of the most important surveys a government may undertake. It is like a periodical medical examination. It will show parts of the body politic that require attention. Taking of the census itself is no virtue. It is the uses that statistics may be put to that makes such figures important. We are not compiling statistics for the use of antiquarians. Mortality statistics will indicate periods of life at which persons die in large numbers. Literacy groups will show what advance has been made in the direction of education. Classification by occupations will indicate in what direction encouragement could be offered. Unless a government undertakes a census for such purposes it is worse than useless. What good is it to submit ourselves to a quack doctor who has no idea how to remedy any defects that may come to light? It will be a sheer waste of time and effort. In the first place, as we regard the Government of India as an usurper it has no claim on the people's co-operation in filling in the figures. Even then if it can show that it has put to good use the figures obtained on former occasions we may be justified in helping it. But what is its record? In spite of the fact that infant mortality is appalling no effort has been made to reduce it. You will go through village after village without a single trained midwife being available, not even the crude barber woman could be found in many. Women give birth to children like cat to kittens. Can we expect infant mortality to go down under such conditions, not to mention the neglect of sanitation? Even drinkable water is a rare commodity. People have to dig ditches in the dry bed of tanks to get water. Can longevity be expected under such conditions? Malaria is fast lowering the vitality of the people and even quinine powder is not to be had in most villages. America has wiped out this disease from one of the most malarial regions of the world, in a few years. But what solicitude can we expect of bureaucrats who work to qualify for furloughs and pensions. In the matter of literacy we are practically where we were 150 years ago. The erstwhile negro slaves of America have a literacy of over 80 per cent, while we boast of 5 per cent in this ancient land of culture and civilisation. As regards occupations, we have sunk from a comparatively industrial state to a raw material producer. Can we expect prosperity? The only use the government appears to have made of the census figures in the past seems to have been to supply 'facts' to the Simon Commission and other 'drainage inspectors,' to vilify us before the world. Can we, with any self-respect, proceed to give further information to such a body? It will only be used to further strengthen our shackles. A nation without the power to remedy evils degrades itself by giving information about itself to an alien bureaucracy. A census so taken is a stock list of slaves. We shall not put our names on that schedule. We shall assert our self-respect and refuse to take part in it until a national Government needs the information, for the betterment of the people.

* Being a speech delivered to the Bombay International Fellowship on 1st February 1931.

No discussion of the satyagraha movement can be complete without a reference to the non-payment of tax campaign. Although this is not on the all-India programme, certain localities which were ripe for it have taken upon themselves this enormous burden of sacrifice and suffering for others, by leaving their all in the cause of the country. They are not prepared to finance a government which is illegal and which has no root in the goodwill of the people. For their patriotism they have given up hearth and home. These simple peasants have put to shame many of us who bring forward excuses of being married folk, and getting economic return on the capital spent on education, etc. We look upon satyagraha as a religious duty and those who feel the righteousness of the cause have to leave all to attain their ideals. "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me; and he that taketh not his cross and followeth after me is not worthy of me."

It is hardly necessary after all these months to state our attitude towards law courts. I have already explained that Laws in India are only the executive's will under a mask and often the courts are but antechambers of the executive to carry out the executive's orders. In any case, they all form the illegal body, the Government of India and we prefer not to condescend to state our case before persons carrying on the business of the usurpers.

The reaction of the satyagraha as far as we can see, has been very salutary. In the past we had got into selfish ways of looking at public affairs but, thanks to the movement, people are beginning to view matters from a wider base and the well-to-do classes are interesting themselves in the uplift of the masses. The wrongs of the helpless are attracting the attention of their neighbours. The spirit when fostered for a while will assume the form of a permanent habit and will help to build up a nation which will consider it a privilege to sacrifice itself in the cause of humanity.

This, in short, is an explanation of the situation from our view point. Some of us are already satyagrahis by conviction; others are on the borderland and still others are antagonistic not knowing the true significance of it. I would earnestly appeal to the latter two classes whether they be Britishers or Indians—we make no colour distinctions—to closely study the position from all its bearings and if you find us to be right have the moral courage to step out and help our motherland to free herself from the strangle hold of imperialism. The satyagrahi's faith is not in the multitude of the implements of murder but in the ultimate goodness of human nature and in the impregnability of soul force. He can well exclaim: "My strength is as the strength of ten because my heart is pure." And his charter has been set forth by St. Paul in the following beautiful words with which I conclude:

"Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I become as a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. And I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains and have not love, I am nothing.

And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing.

Love suffereth long and is kind, love envieth not, love vaunts not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in truth. Beareth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth."

SOCIAL REFORM.

(BY PROF. HARI CHARAN MUKERJI.)

In a recent speech delivered at Edinburgh, Lord Lloyd is reported to have said that in case responsibility is transferred to the Central Legislature in India all social, sanitary and educational reform will become a thing of the past. It is regrettable that a man of the position and intelligence of Lord Lloyd will betray this colossal ignorance or purposely mislead his audience. From his intimate acquaintance with the Government of India Act of 1919 as well as the practical application of it he should have known that education and sanitation are provincial subjects and the Central Government has nothing to do with them. It is not at all likely that these subjects will be once again retransferred to the Government of India under the reforms going to be inaugurated in the near future. So it does not at all seem fair on his part to purposely mislead the unsophisticated British public. Only social reform affecting the whole of India falls within the competence of the Government of India and if we go through the proceedings of the Central Legislature and note the bills which were introduced there at the instance of the non-official members, we shall at once be convinced how eager these latter are to introduce social reforms and how they have been hampered at every step by either the apathy or hostility of the Government. Going through the list of the Acts passed in 1929 by the Indian legislature we find that all the most important Acts affecting the social well being of the people were passed on the initiative of the non-official members.

It is a thousand pities that the Government of India which have always thrown cold water on the enthusiasm of the legislators and have taken refuge behind the convenient plea that public opinion should not be forced by precipitate action, should be given the credit by Lord Lloyd of being responsible for introducing these reforms. Even taking at random the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly as reported in the daily papers we find that on the 17th instant 6 non-official bills were introduced including the two following—(1) A Bill by Sir Hari Singh Gour creating a new offence of marital misbehaviour when the wife is below fifteen years of age and fixing the age of consent at eighteen and (2) A Bill by Mr. Harbilas Sarda to secure a share for the Hindu widows in their husbands' family property. The names of these two gentlemen have become famous and will be always gratefully remembered by their countrymen for their zeal for social reform and the tenacity with which they have pursued their object in the face of official apathy and orthodox opposition. Under the circumstances it is simply preposterous to maintain that under a 'swaraj' constitution or if responsibility be transferred to the Indian legislature all social and other reforms will be stopped. On the contrary there is every reason to believe that their rate of advance will be much accelerated and all the social evils will be eradicated within a measurable distance of time.

From the time of Raja Ram Mohan Roy downwards Indians have always taken the lead in social reform inspired no doubt by the example of the West. The services rendered by the Brahma Samaj, in this connection have been very important. But even orthodox Brahmins too did not lag behind as is evidenced by the example of the late Pundit Iswar Chandra Vidyasagar of pious memory. Of late years the Servants of India Society, the Seva Sadan, Poona, the Social Service Leagues and various other organisations all over the country have been doing excellent work not only in the sphere of social but of medical and educational reforms as well. But the greatest impetus has been imparted to the movement by the establishment of the numerous "Nari Samitees" or organisations of women which have sprung up with the inauguration of the Civil Disobedience movement. Women seem to have realised their own responsibilities and have taken up in their own hands the work of social reform in all its entirety. The Government has consistently followed the policy of laissez-faire for, unlike a national government like that of Turkey or Afghanistan, the present Government of India has no mind whatsoever to get involved in a controversy about social matters and thus to have ranged against itself an influential body of public opinion.

Introduction of prohibition whether complete or partial forms one of the important planks in the platform of the social workers. But excise happens to be a provincial subject and is one of the important heads of provincial revenue. The legislative councillors in the different provinces have cried themselves hoarse calling upon the Government to introduce prohibition or at least local option but up till now with no effect whatsoever. The Government always pleads its inability to sacrifice so large an income derived from this source. It has also trotted out another lame excuse viz. prohibition will increase illicit manufacture and sale of country liquors. As a matter of fact the Government has made no secret of its policy of deriving the maximum of revenue from the minimum of consumption. But there is no doubt about the fact that the money derived from this source is only tainted money and any government claiming to be civilized will be ashamed to have anything to do with it.

The record of the Indian women as well as that of the non-official members of the provincial councils has been a most glorious one in connection with the efforts made to procure legislative franchise for women. The former waited in deputation on Mr. Montagu during his Indian tour as well as on the Joint Select Committee of both Houses in London and then as soon as the Reforms were inaugurated renewed efforts were made by the non-official members of the council to give votes to women. Mention may be made in this connection of the following gentlemen who promoted these bills in the different councils, viz., Dewan Bahadur Krishnan Nair, Mr. Tripathi, Rao Saheb Harilal Desai, Mr. S. M. Bose, Mr. Devaki Prasad Sinha and others. Mrs. Muthulakshmi Ammal, the Deputy-President of the Madras Council made herself famous by introducing the Devadasi Bill which subsequently became law. The activities of the Women's Indian Association deserve special mention in this connection. But nowhere do we find an official or a European gentleman taking the least interest in these important matters. So the claim advanced by Lord Lloyd on behalf of the officials will not bear a moment's scrutiny.

It has been said that everything is fair in love and in war. But we cannot but rub our eyes in surprise when we see a man of the social position and status of Lord Lloyd turning a propagandist and feeling no hesitation whatsoever in indulging in deliberate misrepresentations to hoodwink the British electorate to prejudice the chances of India getting a further instalment of reforms.

NON-CHRISTIAN CONTRIBUTIONS TO CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have been interested in the correspondence that is being carried on in the Indian Social Reformer, regarding Non-Christian representation in the management of mission institutions receiving funds from extra-Christian sources. I think there can be but one answer to such a question. The mission institution which receives such funds should give non-Christians a voice in the management. I do not say that the actual donors should control the policy, for there is an obvious danger in any philanthropic institution being guided by the desires of interested capitalists. But certainly the institution should have the advantage of receiving the best advice obtainable, whether from Christians or from non-Christians.

The Nagpada Neighbourhood House, with which I am associated, has, during the four years of its existence, been supported largely by Bombay money. It has received no mission aid as such. We do not have however, a formal Board of Control representing both Christian and non-Christian interests. It is our feeling that names of prominent personages, though often helpful in securing funds, are not always of help in obtaining the best advice for the conduct of work, due to the distance of such people from the actual work. We have preferred to regard our enterprise as a neighbourhood experiment, consulting our own neighbours, both Christian and non-Christian in matters of general policy. Perhaps the time is at hand when we should organise a formal Board of Directors, certainly if any large funds accumulate such a policy will be necessary. At the same time we make every effort to keep our donors fully informed regarding our activities and are always glad to receive their suggestions and advice. Though founded by a Mission, the Neighbourhood House has as its sole motive the desire to be of service to its own neighbourhood and to the wider city of Bombay. Its facilities are used by people of every community, who themselves are the best apologetic for the cry that every mission institution has an ulterior motive. If, however, encouraging people to live true to the very best that is in their own religions is insidious propaganda, then to that we must plead guilty.

People are far too ready to make generalizations. Call a man a Missionary, Atheist, or Communist and hang him. The same label cannot be applied to every individual within the general classification. Individual cases must be considered on their individual merits, and attempts to generalize can lead to nothing but trouble.

I have never taken very seriously the argument that a missionary must live in Indian style and adopt Indian dress. That seems to me to be beside the point. The greater question is "Can I identify myself in spirit with my Indian friends? Do I in my daily dealings actually show myself to be a friend and brother?" If I do not, a different standard of living will not make up for the defects of my personal character. On the other hand, if my clothing and style of living prevent me from becoming a friend and brother, it is time that I take serious thought. Again it is a matter for individuals and not for generalization.

While Mr. Parekh and others can undoubtedly point to numerous examples of missionaries who while in England or America have drawn a dark picture of Indian life, they must in fairness recognise the group of missionaries who are the most sympathetic interpreters of Indian life.

The old parable of the mote and the beam is a good parable for both the missionary and his critics to ponder.

Nagpada Neighbourhood }
House, Byculla, } Yours, etc.,
March 3, 1931. } CLIFFORD MANSHARDT.

The Hindelmans.—The Hindelmans is an association of youngmen which aims at waging war against orthodoxy, conservatism, communalism, untouchability, caste and other social evils. The membership of the Hindelmans, we learn from the Tribune, Lahore, is open to all young men and women having sympathy with the following Hindelmannic ideals. 1. Unification of the different communities inhabiting the country; (2) Emancipation of women; (3) Establishment of the supremacy of reason, in matters religious, social and moral; (4) Secularisation of social and civic life, and (5) Replacement of conventional romanticism, and mysticism by healthy realism in Art and Literature. Great importance is attached to the first of these ideals. The very name "Hindelmans," compounded of Hindu and Mussalman stands for peace between these two great communities of India. Those desirous of enlisting themselves as members should communicate their names and full addresses to the Secretary, Hindelmans' House, Lahore.

'PURNA SWARAJ'.

Answering a group of journalists on the morrow of the Agreement Mahatma Gandhi again explained himself on many important matters.

To questions put by an Associated Press representative, Mahatma Gandhi said that by Purna Swaraj was meant complete self-government or disciplined rule from within. Purna Swaraj did not exclude association with any nation, much less with England. 'It can only mean association for mutual benefit and at will. It is quite compatible with India remaining within the Empire, but our partnership with England must be upon terms of absolute equality.'

Question.—Does not complete independence connote separation from England?

Answer.—It does in the popular mind, because popular opinion refuses to believe that England will make any advance towards a bona fide partnership with India on equal terms. Some of my associates also believe that British statesmen will never reconcile themselves to absolute equality for India. I may be a visionary, but I hold differently. I see a day when, instead of Downing Street being the centre of the Indian nation, Delhi will be the centre of our 300 millions, all enjoying equality. I think the British people are a practical people, loving liberty for themselves. It is only a step further to give liberty to others.

Mahatma Gandhi admitted that the state of equality he sought implied the right to secede from Britain if India should see fit.

Q.—Do you prefer British as the governing race?

A.—No. I have no choice between races, because I do not want to be governed except by myself.

Q.—If you achieve independence won't it be under the British flag?

A.—No. It will be under a common flag or each partner will have his own flag.

COMMERCIAL CROOKS.

Mr. V. V. Jerajani of the All-India Spinners' Association writes in the Khadi Patrika of 1st February 1931:

Anhra is a famous Khadi centre noted for its fine, superfine and extrafine Khadi varieties. About two years ago, to further facilitate Khadi production and to extend its operations in rural areas, the All-India Spinners' Association certified some private mercantile houses as bona fide manufacturers and producers of pure handspun and handwoven Khadi, keeping at the same time a vigilant eye on their activities. Before long, however, these private certificated concerns came to be suspected of adulteration in their manufactures, and the A. I. S. A. to keep up the purity of Khadi had to cancel their certificates and declare them as spurious Khadi mongers. Still some how or other, most of these concerns on the strength of their past association with the A. I. S. A. as also through their crooked business tactics seem to be briskly plying on their adulterated trade to the great detriment and loss to honest Khadi business in that province. One of the many devices they resort to is that of inserting a small printed chit into their goods made fine from foreign or indigenous mill yarn, proclaiming them as pure handspun and handwoven products. These so-called impure Khadi goods not only come to Bombay but invade even the foreign markets where also they are passed off as genuine Khadi.

In these circumstances to shield the public against the malpractices of such imposters, we deem it our duty to proclaim in the name of the A. I. S. A. that real genuine i. e., handspun and handwoven Khadi can be had only at the sale-depots and Bhandars certified by the A. I. S. A. and conducted under its auspices as pure Khadi dealing houses. When these houses can always be relied upon to supply the public with the best, choicest, finest and purest patterns from fine Andhra areas why the public allows itself to be fooled by random hawkers and humbugs passes our comprehension. The certified Bhandars import and stock their Khadi wares from centres all over India conducted under the direct surveillance of the A. I. S. A. experts.

APOCRYPHAL KOKATI.

Bihar Kokati is famous for its natural yellow tinge and fine texture. And as this cloth is generally of a fine super quality, ordinary Khadi users find it rather costly and expensive. To ensure its purity the A. I. S. A. branch of Bihar affixes its stamp on every ready web of pure fine kokati that goes out through its agency. However, despite all this strictness and precaution, even this line is not exempt from the inroads of business pests. For some time past, a Mussalman merchant from Bihar deals in apocryphal kokati manufactured from ordinary yarn dyed yellow. Not satisfied with this he even goes to the length of imprinting on his sham imitation wares a fraudulent stamp of the A. I. S. A. thus rendering it easier for him to pass off his spurious goods as genuine.

A BENGAL CROOK.

This and other instances of the type can be multiplied, but I would complete this general indictment with only one more specific mention. A Bengali merchant of Bombay who is a stockist of foreign yarn goods affixes on dhotis, saris and other foreign goods of his depot a similar fraudulent A. I. S. A. rubber stamp and proclaims them as hailing from "A. I. S. A. Bengal Fine Centres, Post Chatal etc.," thus swindling the simple Khadi-mad public in the name of the A. I. S. A. with whom he has no connection whatsoever, and the stamp that he uses is a most glaring piece of fraud.

THE FORUM OF CONSCIENCE.

We are more than once tempted to draw such spoofers and swindlers of Khadi trade into courts of law and make an example of them so as to effectively check any prospective followers in their wake. But our rigid pledge of non-cooperation with the present Government precludes us from resorting to such a course. And it is our painful consciousness engendered by a series of unpleasant experiences that the more we are restrained in this behalf the greater is the success these people have in their nefarious ways. In the circumstances we must leave them to the discretion of the public, who if they want genuine handspun and handwoven raiment must needs avoid them and approach the certificated Khadi Bhandars whose list we give below, and in the alternative to the forum of their individual consciences—if any they have—and the bar of public opinion. It is indeed a very sad reflection that when to-day the whole country is passing through a process of self-purification, these commercial crooks and others of their kidney are indulging in a reckless game of bamboozling the public and stabbing the nation in the back. May God lead them aright!

CAVEAT EMPTOR.

In view of such mushroom growth of crooks in the Khadi field, it is necessary to repeatedly warn the public against falling a prey to them. The following are the certificated Khadi depots of Bombay, where people can always rely upon getting standard quality at a reasonable rate:

1. Khadi Bhandar, 398 Kalkadevi Road.
2. Khadi Dyeing and Printing Works, Girgaon.
3. Shuddha Khadi Bhandar, Morarji Gokuldas Market.
4. Shuddha Khadi Bhandar, Branch No. 1, Kalkadevi.
5. Surji Vallabhdas Khadi Bazaar, Mandvi.
6. Jhaveri Bazaar Shuddha Khadi Bhandar.
7. Khadi Bhandar, Dadar.
8. The A. I. S. A. Khadi Bhandar, Girgaon.

DECEMBER SALES.

	Rs.
1. Khadi Bhandar, 398 Kalkadevi Road ...	46,340
2. Khadi Shop, Girgaon Back Road ...	7,617
3. Shuddha Khadi Bhandar, Kalkadevi Road.	2,500
4. Surji Vallabhdas Khadi Bazaar, Mandvi.	6,043
5. Jhaveri Bazaar Shuddha Khadi Bhandar.	3,407
6. Dadar Khadi Bhandar ...	2,866
Total Sales ...	68,763

Social Service Conference:—In our last week's issue there is a news item on page 430 about a Social Service Conference to be held at the Y. W. O. A. Summer School "Anandgiri" Ootacamund from April 8th to 21st, 1931. The secretary of the Y. W. O. A. now writes to us to say that intending delegates should apply for information to national Y. W. O. A. Harrington Mansions, Harrington at Oalcutta before 25th March or, in the alternative to "Anandgiri" Ootacamund after 25th March.

THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY ANTI-UNTOUCHABILITY CONFERENCE AT RATNAGIRI.

Under the auspices of the Poona Branch of the Depressed Classes Mission Society of India the 8th session of the Bombay Presidency Anti-Untouchability Conference was held at 4 p. m. at the newly opened Patit Pawan Mandir, under the Presidentship of Mr. V. D. Savarkar, Bar-at-Law, after an inter-caste dinner held at the same premises at 12 noon on the same day in which more than 500 men and women of different castes of Hinduism took part. The audience for the Conference was about 5000. The meeting of the Subjects Committee was held at 2 p. m. on the same day with Mr. K. G. Patade in the Chair who subsequently requested Mr. B. K. Gaikwad, leader of the Nasik Temple Entry Satyagraha to take the Chair in his absence for about an hour for attending another important engagement. The proceedings of the Conference commenced with welcome songs given by Masters Savant and Salve. After the welcome address read out by Mr. K. G. Patade, Mr. V. D. Savarkar Bar-at-Law, the champion of the Untouchability removal movement was duly proposed to the Chair by Mr. T. N. Shinde, seconded and supported by Subhedar R. S. Ghatge and Mr. Rajbhoj. Mr. Savarkar delivered his presidential address extempore which was very impressive and heart touching. The presidential address over, Mr. Rajbhoj read the messages of sympathy for the conference from all over the Presidency and submitted a report of the work done by the Anti-Untouchability Conference during the past years. The following resolutions were then duly passed by the Conference. (1) Condolence on the sad demise of the late Mr. Motilal Nehru. (2) Congratulations to Dr. B. R. Ambedkar and Rao Bahadur Shrinivasan on the work done by them for the Depressed Classes at the Round Table Conference, London. (3) Thanking Sheth Baluji Bhaguji Keer and Mr. Savarkar for their attempts to uplift the Depressed classes in the Konkan Districts, and urging the public at large to assist the Depressed Classes in their Satyagraha for winning the rights of temple entry etc. (4) Recording full support to the Temple Entry Satyagraha to be re-started from 15-3-31, at Nasik under the leadership of Dr. Ambedkar. (5) Protesting against the atrocities of the organisers of the Varnashram Svareja Sangha Parishad (Conference) held at Jalgaon against the Depressed classes and congratulating the workers of the Jalgaon District Depressed Classes conference on their resorting to Satyagraha under the guidance of Mr. V. R. Shinde, the veteran champion of the untouchability removal movement against the said Varnashram-Dharma-Conference. (6) Urging Government to appoint candidates from Depressed Classes in all branches of Civil and Military Departments in proportion to their population. The Conference elected a special committee for this purpose of which Lt. Col. H. O. Steen (Poona) is the Chairman. (7) Urging Government to appoint two Members from the Ohamar Community (Hindu Shoemakers) on the Leather Trade Committee, appointed by the Government of India. (8) Urging Government to appoint only such members as are properly belonging to Depressed Classes on all the Local Bodies, while filling seats reserved for the Depressed Classes on those Local Bodies. (9) Urging the Local Authorities in the Konkan Districts to depute more candidates from the Depressed Classes for being trained as teachers in primary schools and appoint such teachers on non-depressed classes schools and also to see that the children of the Depressed Classes are not made to sit separately from the Non-D. C. children against the Government Resolution in this respect (A) Urging Government to give a grants-in-aid equal to two thirds of the total expenditure of the Hostels for the Depressed Classes conducted by voluntary agencies such as the Depressed Classes Mission Hostel at Poona, The Depressed Classes Boarding at Mahad etc. (10) Supporting the objects of the depressed Classes Social Service League at Poona, for removing the disabilities of depressed classes in village areas. (11) Supporting the Shuddhi-Sanghata-Movement and congratulating the Shuddhi Sanghata-Association at Goa on its third anniversary. (12) The following were elected as office-bearers of the Standing Committee of the Conference till the next session:—(1) President Mr. V. D. Savarkar, Bar-at-Law, Ratnagiri. (2) Chairman, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, Bar-at-Law, M. L. C. Bombay. (3) Vice-Chairman, Dr. P. G. Solanki, L. M. & S., M. L. C. Bombay. Vice-Chairman Mr. K. G. Patade, D. O. M. Society, Poona. (5) Secretaries, Mr. D. V. Gaikwad, (6) Mr. P. N. Rajbhoj, Poona, and (7) Mr. B. K. Gaikwad, Nasik, (8) Treasurer, Subhedar R. S. Ghatge, Poona, (13) Supporting the Cow-Protection-Movement. (14) Supporting the Bill in the Legislative Assembly introduced by Mr. Suanmukham Chetty, M. L. A. Madras, for securing Equal Social Status to all people in India, which in the opinion of the Conference would greatly remove the sin of untouchability. Mr. D. V. Gaikwad proposed a hearty vote of thanks after which the 8th Session of the Conference was closed.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

The 18th Anniversary of D. C. M. Day School:—Last week in the Bourdillon Branch of the Y. M. C. A., the prize giving of the Bangalore D. C. M. Day School was held before a large and distinguished gathering presided over by Lt-Col. T. P. Bassett, R. E. The guests were entertained by the children of the School with Hymn singing and a short drama, which were very much appreciated by the audience. The School Correspondent, Mr. P. S. Lakshminarasu, welcomed the guests and traced the history of the School since 1913 and said that some of the sports events were named after the persons who have been connected with the Institution from time to time and thanked one and all for contributing towards the success of the function. Mrs. Bassett gave away the prizes to about 35 children who had won in all about 60 prizes. In winding up the proceedings, the Chairman said: "I have not come prepared with a speech, but I should like to say how much I have been impressed by what I saw in the Drama and it has given me immense pleasure to come and watch my wife giving away these prizes. I almost feel how much enormous amount of work could be done by this sort of thing and anything that I can do in a small way to encourage or help this institution, I shall always be very glad to do so. Again I should say how much impressed I have been by what I have seen and to offer a hearty vote of thanks to all people who did all the work to-day and above all a hearty vote of thanks to our friend (Mr. Lakshminarasu) in running this very fine show indeed." The function terminated with a vote of thanks and the singing of the National Anthem.

Lokapriya Sambhaji Satooji Waghmare Dead.—A correspondent writes: "The death of Lokapriya Sambhaji Satooji Waghmare, a veteran Social worker amongst the depressed classes occurred at his native place "Ghods", a village in the Poona District on Wednesday the 4th March 1931. Lokapriya Sambhaji Satooji Waghmare was a Wataandar Mahar of the Village of "Ghods" and was connected with many social and other organisations of the Depressed classes both in Bombay and outside since 1906. He was President of the Servants of Somavamsi Society of Bombay, a Vice President of the Depressed India Association and a member of the All India Depressed Classes Association, Nagpore. In the year 1906 he organised a Samaj of the Depressed Classes known as "Nirashrit Somavamsi Samaj Mandal" and through it he made several attempts to uplift the Untouchables specially. In the year 1923 he was conferred the title of "Lokapriya" by the members of the Depressed Classes and he was also decorated with a gold medal in the same public meeting held under the Presidentship of Mr. S. K. Bole, J.P., (now Rao Bahadur S. K. Bole, J.P., M.L.O.), in recognition of his long social service to his own community. He once made a very impressive speech in one of the Depressed Classes Conferences held under the Presidentship of H. H. Shri Sajsji Rao Gaikwad, the present Ruler of Baroda at French Bridge, Bombay and by his speech H. H. Shri Sajsji Rao Gaikwad, late Lokamanya B. G. Tilak and others present were much impressed. In the year 1930, he started a new Society known as the Servants of Somavamsi Society which now conducts a Free Reading Room and a Night School at B. L. T. Osawi, Love Lane, Mazagaon, Bombay."

Vincent Massey Scholarship:—Applications are invited for the Vincent Massey scholarship for 1931. This Scholarship has been made possible by the generosity of Mr. Vincent Massey of Canada as a token of good-will towards India. The Scholarship is of the value of 2,000 dollars (inclusive of all expenses) and is tenable for one year at the University of Toronto for a post-graduate course. The Scholarship is to be awarded by His Excellency the Viceroy at the recommendations of a Committee of Selection. The General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A.'s in India is the Secretary of this Committee. In addition to the value of the Scholarship, the University of Toronto has agreed to remit the regular tuition fees in the case of this Scholarship. This concession will not apply to laboratory fees for Sciences. The applicants should be the holders of an M.A. or an Honour's degree. Opportunities for Post-Graduate studies at Toronto are available in the following subjects:—Greek, Latin, Semitics, English, History, Political Science and Economics, Law, Philosophy, Psychology, Educational Theory, Mathematics, Physics, Astronomy, Biology, Botany, Anatomy, Bio-Chemistry, Zymology, Physiology, Food Chemistry, Pathology and Bacteriology, Pathological Chemistry, Chemistry, Geology and Palaeontology, Mineralogy, Hygiene and Preventive Medicine, Physiological Hygiene, Epidemiology and Biometrics, Anthropology, Pharmacology, Agriculture. The applications for Scholarships should reach the undersigned not later than the 5th April 1931 on prescribed form which can be had along with extracts from the Calendar of School of Graduate Studies, University of Toronto, for four annas, from the undersigned or from the offices of the Christian Colleges in India or the Y. M. C. A.'s.—B. L. Rastia Ram, c/o P. O. Box 133, Lahore, National General Secretary of Y. M. C. Associations in India, Burma and Ceylon.

ADVERTISEMENTS

WOMAN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.
PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of

OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: BULLION EXCHANGE.
(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)
BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 5 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for shorter period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustee business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhoi, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwaraka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,15 00

DIRECTORS:

Mr Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).

Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laska: (Mill Agent, Ahmedabad).

Shankarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.

Mangalji H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)

Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Hatibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.

Raj Ratna Basilal Dajibhai Amia B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda).

Sheth Pransukhbhai Malatji (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)

Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Sar Suba, Baroda State, Baroda.

Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-5-26.

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 ANNAS.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirale ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kalvan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Paighar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akluj (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Viramgaon (District Ahmednagar).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...	Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay via Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTA & MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate,
TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,
INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :-

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,57

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :- Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJAN PAIN BALM PRODUCE BEST RESULTS

IN

Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.
AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

IT IS YOURS

A SAFE

And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch :-

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs.	s.	p.
Subscription (including postage).
Inland ...	5	0	0
Foreign ...	5	8	0
Single copy ...	0	8	0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

A reader of the Reformer writes from Sweden as follows under date January 2, 1931:—"I have had much pleasure in reading your magazine during the last year, and I have thereby been enabled to follow closely the happenings in India."

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 61.

PARAMOUNT ON PARADE

13 Parts,

A GALAXY OF PARAMOUNT STARS.

A Paramount All-Talking, Singing and Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

NEW YORK NIGHTS

9 Parts, featuring,

NORMA TALMADGE AND GILBERT ROLAND.

United Artists Picture.

CASINO DE PARIS

1 Reel.

NEW RHYTHM

1 Reel.

DON AZPIAZO AND HIS HAYANNA CASINO ORCHESTRA

A Paramount Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

IT HAPPENED TO HIM

1 Reel, featuring,

JAMES BARTON

A Paramount Picture.

HIT THE DECK

12 Reels, featuring,

JACK OAKIE & POLLY WALKER

R. K. O. All Talking, Singing & Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

NAPOLIAN'S HOMELAND

1 Reel, U. F. A. Picture.

COME TO MY HOUSE

6 Reels, featuring,

ANTONIO MORENO & OLIVE BORDEN

A Fox Production.

MICKEY'S RIVALS

2 Parts, F. B. O. COMEDY.

Time:—4-30, 6-30, 8-15 and 10 P. M.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1931

No. 29

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator

CONTENTS.

Promotion of Swadeshi, Congress and Capitalists. The Congress and the Agree- ment. Mr. Churchill's Latest. Hinduism and Christianity. Non-Christian Contributions to Christian Institutions.	Teaching Children. An Indian Lady's Impressions of Europe. Commercial Crooks. A Catholic Warrior-Princess of India. News and Views.
---	--

NOTES.

Promotion of Swadeshi:—A very practical step for the promotion of the trade in swadeshi cloth has been taken by the scheme which representatives of the Indian mill industry have adopted at the instance of Mahatma Gandhi. One of the great difficulties experienced during the intensive boycott of foreign cloth in the last ten months, was the plight of the small traders who could not sell their stock for which they had already paid. They were willing to give up trading in foreign cloth and to deal only in swadeshi goods, if they were helped to recover the money which they had invested. The Mill-owners' scheme which was finally settled on Wednesday with Mahatma Gandhi at Vile Parle before he left for Dehli, is intended to meet the requirements of this class of traders. A Joint-stock Company is to be formed with a capital of twenty-five lakhs of rupees whose objects will be (1) to facilitate sales of cloth held here in countries other than India at the risk and on account of the merchants concerned (2) to grant relief by sharing a portion of the loss caused by such sales to small retail merchants who are unable to bear the whole amount of the loss, and who require it (3) to grant certificates to traders who deal only in such cloth as is not barred by the Congress, and (4) to arrange for the certification of handloom cloth made from such Indian mills as may not be under Congress ban. The method to be followed is thus described in the report published by the Times of India: The stocks of the merchant will be valued according to the method to be determined by the Directors. The Company will then undertake to purchase his stocks which in no case should exceed a total of Rs. 5,000, at 20 per cent. below market value if the goods are in entire pieces and 33 per cent. below market value if in cut pieces, provided that no cut piece is below a minimum of three yards. The Company will then pay the merchant on the basis of the value fixed but will retain 10 per cent. of the value as a security for good faith of the merchant for the fulfilment of his agreement not to deal in foreign cloth. The cloth will then be exported to foreign countries and any loss suffered on the sales will be borne by the Company. The valuation will be made entirely by the Company. The agency will confine its work only to existing stocks of foreign yarn and cloth made principally out of cotton. The benefit of the relief will be made available to only such dealers as have not purchased fresh cloth after the Picketing Ordinance." The Board of Directors of the New Company consists of leading mill-owners of Bombay, Ahmedabad and Baroda. Its chairman is Sir Ness Wadia, who is well-known no less as a philanthropist than as a prosperous mill-owner.

Congress and Capitalists:—While most people will regard the Mill-owners' scheme as a belated recognition by them of the benefits of the swadeshi movement, the association of Mahatma Gandhi with it will be regarded by the handful of persons, who interrupted him at the Labour meeting which he addressed on Tuesday, as proof of the complicity of the Congress with capitalists. Mahatmaji was accused by them of betraying labour and advancing the interests of the capitalists, and when he pointed to the sacrifices, monetary and personal, made by the commercial community, they pooh-pooched them by exclaiming that when these men were imprisoned they were put in the "A" class. And when Mahatma Gandhi asked them to use the intelligence which God has given them, some one in the audience shouted "There is no God." The Communist party, as this group likes to be called, consists of some earnest men but it is without influence in the country. The average Indian, however poor he may be in worldly goods, is too firmly rooted in his belief in God and a future life to pay serious attention to propaganda based on the Marxian philosophy which has no relation to Indian conditions. Mahatma Gandhi's concern for the betterment of the condition of the rural population which constitutes the best and largest part of the Indian people, is his ruling passion in life and to accuse him of indifference to the labouring classes is to court ridicule. The terms "capitalist" and "proletariat" on which Communism hinges, are inapplicable to India. The caste system which prevails more or less among all Indian communities, has many defects, but it has one great merit—in that it prevents the stratification of society on the basis of wealth which, if birth is an accident, is a hundred times more an accident. A writer on the conflict between Communism and Capitalism in Europe, has observed that a compromise will have soon to be found and it can only be on the lines of the Indian caste.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, MARCH 21, 1931.

THE CONGRESS AND THE AGREEMENT.

The conclusion of the Gandhi-Irwin agreement has had the effect of creating or rather greatly accentuating and widening the split in the British Conservative party. In India too, it has broken up the solidarity of the Congress party. The leader of the Conservative party has had to bow to the storm so far as to withdraw from the understanding to send a delegation to participate in the continuation in this country of the Round Table Conference. He has explained that this decision was taken before the conclusion of the Gandhi-Irwin agreement, on grounds purely of constitutional propriety, it being, in Mr. Baldwin's opinion, the exclusive right and duty of the Government of the day to do the work of preparation for the adjourned session of the Conference which will meet in London. He is no doubt technically right though there is nothing improper in all parties being represented at a preparatory Conference as they were in the Simon Commission which also was a preparatory body. Moreover, though the conclusions reached in India will have to be formally approved by Parliament, if, as we hope, they represent a substantial consensus of Indian opinion, they can not but be invested with the quality of virtual finality. The abstention of the Conservatives, therefore, is in effect a repudiation of the originally intended character of the Indian session. Mahatma Gandhi has said that the decision of the Conservatives did not come upon him as a surprise. He may, therefore, not consider that it materially affects the agreement, but it is not unlikely that those who are against the agreement will make the most of what they can not unreasonably regard as a repudiation by one of the British parties of an understanding, which deprives the Conference session in this country of its intended importance. Mr. Baldwin's decision has certainly not facilitated Mahatma Gandhi's task at the Karachi Congress.

This is not all. Complaints are pouring in from all sides that several Provincial Governments have placed the narrowest interpretation on the terms of the Gandhi-Irwin agreement and a number of persons who were convicted of offences in connection with the Civil Disobedience movement have not been released from prison. Mahatma Gandhi during his stay in Bombay was, we think, satisfied that these complaints are well-founded. Replying to a question in the Legislative Assembly on Wednesday, the Home Member of the Government of India made a statement which should go a long way to remove the scruples of Provincial Governments. He said that the question of whether an offence involved violence other than technical violence or incitements to violence, was a question to be determined by the actual facts of each case and not with reference to the particular provisions of the law under which a person was convicted or is being tried. The object of including the word "technical," added Sir James Crerar, was to give the benefit of the amnesty in cases where, although violence had been used or incitement to violence had been given, the violence was not of such a character as to preclude a view being taken favourable to the person convicted or under-trial prisoners. People have been convicted and are being tried for offences such as rioting, incitement to breach of the peace, and even waging war against the King, for disobeying a Police order or writing or speaking in support of Independence. If the Home Member's tests are interpreted and applied liberally, as he said they would be, this particular cause of complaint will be soon removed. Mahatma Gandhi's acquiescence in the refusal to grant an enquiry into cases of Police excesses on civil disobedience practitioners, has not been accepted by his party or the public at large without question. In some of the cases, such as the beating of women at Borsad, there have been authenticated reports by thoroughly reliable and independent enquirers. If, however, the principle of letting bygones be bygones is to rule the Congress leaders in such cases, there should be an end too to wholesale and indiscriminate laudation of the conduct of the Police during this period. The Governor of Bombay made a speech in reviewing the Police on Wednesday, in which there is not a word of recognition of the legitimate complaints made against the Force. On the contrary, his Excellency used language of superlative laudation. We have a feeling that whenever one uses superlatives, one is labouring under an uneasy consciousness that his facts have to be buttressed up by a tone of assertion. Sir Frederick Sykes supported himself by remarking that "not one police officer against whom a prosecution has been launched for his actions in connection with civil disobedience movement, has been convicted." If executive and judicial functions were as distinct in the Indian administration as in England, this argument would carry much greater conviction than in the inextricable intermingling of the two in the Indian system.

There are other difficulties which the Congress has to face in connection with the agreement. The idea of a Federation with the States is welcomed, but there is a strong feeling that only such States as are able to form electorates analogous to those of British India—not necessarily identical with them—should be admitted immediately, the others being free to come in when they have reached that stage. There is strong exception taken, and not only in Congress circles, to the exercise of paramountcy by the Viceroy. It is argued that the Central Legislature in which the States will be represented can be relied upon to do justice to the claims and rights of the Princes. Lord Irwin, in his speeches at Jaipur and at the Chamber of Princes, gave wise advice to their Highnesses on the need of modifying their faith in the ancient autocratic methods. On the Hindu-Muslim question, the prevailing opinion is that with joint electorates the concession of weightage will not present difficulties, whereas, if separate electorates are insisted on, even Mahatma Gandhi's great influence will fail to carry the Congress with him in his desire to give the minorities what they ask.

MR. CHURCHILL'S LATEST

(By Prof. Hariharan Mukerji.)

Nothing could have been better calculated or more opportunely timed to destroy effectively the fine impression produced by the conciliatory attitude of the Viceroy and to nullify the determined efforts now being made by him and the Congress leaders to arrive at a compromise honourable to both parties than the most uninvited and unprovoked attack launched by Mr. Churchill against Mahatma Gandhi. His insulting reference to the Mahatma will surely be treated by him with the contempt that it deserves, but the millions of Indians who simply idolise him can not but resent this in the most unequivocal terms. It will also serve to betray the mailed fist which is now effectively hidden under the soft glove which has been extended to India by Britain for, except a few sympathetic and farsighted persons like the present Viceroy and some persons whether members of the present Socialistic Government in England or outside of it who are sincerely desirous of re-establishing friendly relations with India, the rank and file of politically-minded Britishers are opposed to the aspirations of Indians and want that the present order and their domination will be perpetuated. This outburst will also admirably serve the purpose of disillusioning those Indians who still pin their faith to friendly co-operation with Britain. It will reveal to them the cross-currents of British politics and the strong likelihood that in case the Conservatives return to power as the result of the next general election, Mr. Baldwin may be disowned and removed from leadership on account of his strong pro-Indian proclivities and the Cabinet manned by men of the stamp of Mr. Churchill, Lord Lloyd, Lord Burnham and others. Such a contingency is not at all a remote one as has been distinctly hinted at by the former in his address to the East Essex Unionist Association and the unanimous vote of confidence passed in his favour. Then the solemn promises given to India will be surely repudiated and the policy of blood and iron reintroduced and the whole country plunged once more in the throes of intense political discontent before the magnitude of which the present one will pale into insignificance. It is a prospect from which our imagination recoil with horror.

According to Mr. Churchill "it is alarming and nauseating to see Gandhi—an Inner Temple lawyer—now a seditious fakir striding half-naked up the steps of the Viceregal Palace to parley on equal terms with the representative of the King-Emperor." But to us, purblind mortals, it appears to be neither alarming nor nauseating. Alarming it is surely not, rather it seems to be one of the most hopeful signs of the times and a happy augury for the future when India will be an equal partner in the British Commonwealth of Nations, treating with other members on terms of perfect equality. In inviting the Mahatma to parley with him on equal terms the Viceroy has only acknowledged the logic of facts and has bowed to the inevitable. He clearly foresaw that the new constitution which would be established would not have a dog's chance without the co-operation of the Congress which only can presume to speak on behalf of the united Indian nation. As for its being nauseating it is just the reverse of it to Indian eyes. The Europeans fail to understand why it is that Mahatma Gandhi, an Inner Temple lawyer according to the admission of Mr. Churchill himself, should be wearing a loin cloth and take to the life of a fakir. The ideal of that life embodies all that is best in Hindu religion and traditions. It is a life of renunciation and not of enjoyment, of self-immolation as against self-aggrandisement which has been extolled in India—a life of 'tyaga,' self sacrifice and not 'bhoga' self enjoyment. All the great Indian religious teachers have eloquently preached this ideal and the greatest of them all, Gautama Buddha, renounced a life of ease and comfort and the throne of his father to find salvation for suffering humanity. Mahatma Gandhi has taken to the life of a fakir and has begun wearing a loin cloth because that is the sad lot of the overwhelming majority of his countrymen who on account of their abject poverty due to the wise supervision exercised over them by the countrymen of Mr. Churchill for over one hundred and fifty years can not afford to have any other dress and who cannot find a square meal from year's end to year's end. His heart bleeds at the sight of the poor, suffering Indians and he has resolved to go through life bearing the burden of their misery. If there be any truth in the theory of vicarious suffering and atonement he wants to put that to the test. It is this overwhelming love for the masses, his self-effacement and complete identification with them and leading a life of rigorous self-discipline which has captured the imagination of the masses and made them look upon him as nothing short of a saint and saviour. In insulting this great man Mr. Churchill has insulted the Indian nation whose mouthpiece he is and whose spiritual ideals he exemplifies in his life. The Indians are not at all scandalized in seeing a half-naked fakir and least of all the Mahatma in that garb but they recognise in him the highest manifestation of life and the noblest ideals of their religion. He stands transfigured before them and his plain features appeared to be clothed with transcendental beauty.

It is a pity that Mr. Churchill is not ashamed to brand the Mahatma as a seditious fakir when atleast ostensibly he (Mr. Churchill) will perhaps be proud to acknowledge him to be the humble follower of another such fakir who walked the hard and thorny way of life two thousand years ago, who had not a place whereon to lay his head and who like the Mahatma was a man of sorrows sighing and weeping over the deplorable condition of his fellow beings and whose enemies (like Mr. Churchill) did not hesitate to falsely accuse him of being seditious too. Let us hope that the analogy will not go any further and that the Mahatma will be spared, by the return of good sense in Mr. Churchill and men of his type, the final agony and humiliation as well as the glorification of his great exemplar.

HINDUISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

(By MR. AXEL IDESTRÖM, STOCKHOLM.)

(Concluded from the last issue.)

The central point of the Christian religion is, of course, the doctrine about Christ. Already now I must remind, that Christianity, except minor churches, can be divided in two large parts, the Roman Catholic church of the Pope and the Evangelic or Protestant churches, which are opposed to Rome and are mostly national churches in the special states. In those Evangelic churches it is common now-a-days to hear some priests speak about Christ only as the ideal man, the huge, divine spirit, who will save people by his teachings and by his example. Thus we must admit that modern theologians have created a really great and venerable figure, Christ, looked upon in this way, is no doubt a strong force, able perhaps to bear up a purer Christian church to come. But the priests, who dare speak in this way officially are only a few.

In reality the central point both in the Roman and the Evangelic churches is the dogma about salvation by the blood. It is based upon the supposition of an eternal heaven or an eternal hell as the result of a single poor life. Nay, not of the life! It is the result of my creed, of my belonging to the church, of my attitude of mind concerning the dogma about the saving blood just in the moment, when I die.

Such a tenet is of deep moral importance. It admits every sinful man, yes, every criminal to go to an eternal heaven, only he repents and embraces the creed before he dies. Also in the eleventh hour.

There is no need of evolution, no need of struggle and strife. There is only one short life, and the result is an eternal heaven or hell. The creed is the ticket, and you must buy it only before you go. It is to say to heaven. To hell journey is free.

It is just the same thing as when the Hindus think, they will go to heaven, if they take a bath in the Ganges. Of course the priests and teachers don't explain things in this way. They demand a change of heart. They demand acts. They speak about the very high Christian moral, the moral of Christ himself. But they admit that we cannot follow Christ. Their only way is to save us by the creed, and so the dogma declares just as I have said. I will soon come back to this point once more.

It is this strange dogma that pushes away very many people from the religion of the West. It seems to be unreasonnable. Also other Christian tenets are not well in accord with reason. For example: If it is true, that a new soul is created every time a child is born, then the consequence is, that the soul in the same way will die with the body. That is to say, there is only the body and no soul. But the Christian religion denies pre-existence. It seems rather to admit the death also of the soul together with the body, but says:—"Christ shall raise you on the judgement day,"—just as if the question was about the body. We know how Christ ascended to heaven bodily. Through all the Christian tenets there runs a very clear materialistic conception of soul, heaven and hell and all the content of such things.

Most people, who reject those dogmas, are not able to get a conviction of their own, but fall victims to materialism. It is impossible to deny the fact, that it is the antiquated and unreasonable tenets of the Christian religion, which are the main grounds, why materialism is so widely spread in the Western countries. I must set down the conclusion, that the Christian religion, as it is now interpreted by the churches, is a poor protection against materialism and its loose morals.

Let us turn now to Hinduism.

Perhaps you say, materialism is spreading also in India. It makes its way with the modern science also here. It belongs to the new spirit of time. Perhaps there is a deal of truth in this. All over the world there are people, who are indifferent to religion, or who are hostile to every conception beside the material. But if I look upon Hinduism and try to catch its main tenets, I cannot find them offensive to reason or sense of justice in the same way as the Christian dogmas.

I just see how my Western friends will oppose this statement and say pointing at the many Indian images: Look! Such things, don't they mean a superstition worse than any Christian dogmas?

I must admit, I don't like images and the manner in which they are adored in some places in this country. The danger here in India seems to me to be, that some people take exciting ceremonies for the main content of religion. This is a deplorable habit, no doubt. But also the Christians put the image of Christ on the cross over their altars. The Catholic church has images of the saints and of the Holy Mother. The judgement about this habit must depend on the manner in which it is managed. If people put a salgrama or some material thing on their altars as a help to collect the mind, it seems to me to be a matter of taste and not of principal importance.

The images are not the central point in Hinduism. They are not of Hindu origin. The old Aryans had no images, and those are not mentioned in the oldest scriptures.

I think the central point in Hinduism is the doctrine of karma and pre-existence. That doctrine is just the opposite of the Christian doctrine of salvation. What a man sows, he shall also reap. That's right! It forces people to take care of their doings. It teaches responsibility. It is a teaching to strong men. It keeps up moral.

This point is a most important one. I don't mean to say salvation is quite an immoral doctrine, rightly considered. We want the help of God. We are commonly no strong and wise men, able to help ourselves. We want connection with the spiritual world and leading from that side. The good Christians understand their doctrine about salvation by Christ in this way, and then I admit it is all right

But you can ask your Krishna or Rama for that help as well as Christ. That kind of salvation Hinduism knows as well as Christ. That kind of salvation Hinduism knows as well as Christianity. "Om Brahma kripaikevolom!" O, holy Brahma, we don't need but your grace!

But the Christians, who believe the soul is created with the body, and think a single life on earth is resulting in an eternal heaven or hell, to those people of course the conception of salvation means quite another thing. Just because they understand that a short life is insufficient for an evolution, they must become desperate, if they could not get salvation in another way than by their own struggle. To themselves there is no possibility to reach the goal. Their acts are all too trifling to be of any importance, the only way left to them is the help of Christ.

The Indian doctrine is more logical, more scientific. All beings grow by evolution. There is no sudden spring from ant to elephant, and also no sudden spring from poor man to God himself in an eternal heaven. No. To reach the goal one must go the way.

The doctrine of karma satisfies the sense of justice. It does not permit anyone, just in face of death, to throw his sins and crimes on the shoulders of another, and then by a short ritual act get entrance to eternal bliss. The doctrine of karma is common to Hinduism and Buddhism, and it is in good accord with reason. I think, if we are able to try, what is really the fact, the scientific fact, it is pre-existence and evolution, it is the karma.

The sum up: Hinduism has its strength in its central doctrine of evolution by karma, but the Christian religion has its weakness in the doctrine about heaven or hell as the result of our attitude towards the salvation by the blood of Christ, in the sense it is set down in the Christian dogmas. The risk to push away people and turn them into materialists is less to Hinduism, and it provides thus a more secure ground to moral.

Now I would like to observe a practical sequel of this conclusion.

How is it that there are in India a great deal of missionaries, who convert thousands of peoples to the Christian creed? How is this possible, if the Christian creed is not the higher one?

We know those conversions are going on mostly among the more ignorant classes in India, specially among the outcastes. Those ignorant people are not able to understand the content of the doctrines. They go to the temples or to their images and take part in the ceremonies, driven more by the heart's need than by the reason. If missionaries come and build up sickhouses and schools and take care of them with love and kindness, it is often an easy task also to turn them into the religious creed of their benefactors.

We must admit that the missionaries make a great deal of good work. I think most of them are excellent people deserving our highest esteem. Yet what I have said already about Hinduism and Christianity indicates, that a Christian mission in India is out of place, at all events just in the religious point. To help the sick and the poor, to build schools and charitable institutions, it is very well. It would be a grand mission, if people did stop there and let the children of a foreign country keep their own religion, only trying to make it clearer and purer, but not separate children from parents by preaching a new creed. I understand it is too much to ask. As it is, what means really the Christian mission?

To answer this question I must again stress the difference between the two forms of Christianity: the Evangelic churches and the Roman Catholic church of the Pope. The Evangelic churches are national, every one working in its own way. Their purpose is of pure religious and human character. It is true, they have in later times tried to approach one another. In the spring of 1928 they had a meeting at Jerusalem. There they made up a common scheme for the Evangelic mission. It contains also these points.

"We brand every trial, open or secret, from the interests of commerce or the powers of States to use the mission for their purposes."....."We also most firmly keep aloof from every religious imperialism, that tries to impress on others foreign opinions and customs, also if they aim at their benefit."—and then: "The goal of mission is to create Christ-like characters among individuals, communities and peoples."

Well! It is very good. But in practice, I am afraid, little by little the strong dogmas and tenets will creep out. I think the work of education is excellent, but it would be better if the Hindus themselves could do the work, and conversions be avoided. Then the principle of karma would be kept up.

Yet the mission of the Roman Catholic church is of far greater importance. The Church of Rome is the largest and the strongest in the world. It reckons more than three hundred million adherents, just as many as the whole population of India. It has a very solid organisation. It will not permit any other church or religion to exist. It is intolerant by principle. It names itself "the only saving church." It has the key to heaven. It is based upon the most absolute discipline. It permits no questioning. It claims only 'obey, never ask.' It gives no room to reason. The use this church makes of its authority is not in favour of evolution. It claims to be perfect, absolute.

I don't think the tenets or rituals of any church just now existing on earth is perfect or absolute. As people grow up to more knowledge and understanding the tenets must also grow and develop. The one people has to learn of the other, East by West and West by East, but I don't think it necessary to give up one's national or religious character. Everyone loves most his own mother. If she is poor, you can strive to make her better. But if you honestly love her, you must not abandon her to cherish the mother of your neighbour.

What I wish to point out by these lines is just the fact that Hinduism has a treasure in the central point that should be watched carefully. The Hindus have in my opinion a most lovely and exalted mother in their religion. The fault is that they have adorned her so abundantly, that they don't see her always as she really is. The backward parts of the people are in danger of killing her by rituals and ceremonies. But the upper parts have themselves taken up the task of reform and purification. I hope they will be able to compete with the Christian missionaries in the work of uplifting the meaner classes. They have the Brahmo Samaj, the Prarthana Samaj, the Arya samaj, the Hindu Maha Sabha. They have the Vedas and the Upanishads. They have the strong and marvellous Bhagavad Gita. I wish India the highest blessings on her way forward at the hand of her own great mother.

NON-CHRISTIAN CONTRIBUTIONS TO CHRISTIAN INSTITUTIONS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In your issue of the 7th March Mr. J. F. Edwards in his letter puts in a statement made by Sir Wanless in regard to the Miraj Hospital. I am very glad Sir Wanless has seen the necessity of doing this, because the question that I have raised is a matter of principle and as such deserves the closest thought and attention of all concerned. As Mr. Edwards says Sir Wanless "has an authority all his own" and I am glad it has been invoked in this matter. I may say, however, one word in passing which is that the question of the Miraj Hospital is only accidentally raised and I have absolutely nothing against it in particular.

As for the statement, I have one or two things to say about it. In the first place I very much wish we had been told of the actual percentage of the contributions from non-Christians in relation to the total income per annum. There is not a word said about this and all that we are told is that all such contributions are used for the medical aid to the non-Christians. We are told nothing in regard to the property—buildings, etc.—(which as I am told by some must be worth some lacs)—whether this comes from the contributions of non-Christians or from the funds raised in America or jointly from both. We are also told nothing whether the Hospital gets any Government grant or not in any shape whatsoever, and if it does, whether such grant is considered a part of the non-Christian contributions.

Besides the statement tells us that the management is in the hands of Indians and Europeans. This is not answering my question in regard to giving some voice to the non-Christian contributors to such institutions. At any rate no straight answer is yet forthcoming. If I am not mistaken all that the statement means is that there are some Indian Christians in the management. If this be so, I may add that in many of these Hospitals a great deal of dissatisfaction prevails at the way things are managed and this is especially so in regard to making appointments in the staff. I have heard Indian Christian doctors on the staff complaining that their rights have been overlooked and preference has been given even to raw men from the West over them. But apart from this, my point is that the non-Christians who pay to the extent of forty and fifty and even seventy-five per cent of the expenses and who by their contributions add a great deal to the mission property must have an effective voice in the management of such institutions.

Instead, what do we find? I shall quote Sir Wanless' own words as he has written them at the very end of one of his articles in the N. C. C. Review.

"The Miraj Medical School was established in 1897 in connection with the American Presbyterian Hospital at Miraj. In 1917 this school received Government recognition. Up to date this school has been maintained out of the local hospital funds and staffed by the physicians, Indian and American, of the Miraj hospital, aided occasionally by the voluntary aid of medical missionaries from other missionary societies. It is at present the only recognised medical school in India for men under mission auspices. All of these schools have been heartily endorsed by the Medical Missionary Association of India. They have developed not only as the result of India's physical need but from the insistent demand of our hospitals and dispensaries for medical workers, who are not only Christian but whose main object in service is the presentation of the Gospel of love and good-will to the non-Christian communities which they endeavour to serve. Experience has shown that the employment of non-Christians in mission hospitals serves to undo much of the Christianising influence and to dispel the effect of Gospel teaching carried on under missionary authority." (The italics are mine).

This is a most significant statement which deserves careful study in the light of what I have written before. Sir Wanless puts in a powerful plea for Medical Schools attached to Missions because such schools create not only doctors but, what is more important, leaders and evangelists for the preaching of the Gospel. The healing is secondary to the work of helping and expanding the Christian Church, a work which, according to Sir Wanless, can be done very well by these doctors. That is all very good, but what is more remarkable still is that such schools are maintained from hospital funds and substantial Government grants, and yet not only the people have no voice in the management of such Hospitals and schools although they may pay even more than fifty per cent of the expenses but they are not desirable even as members of the staff. All that the non-Christians get out of this is service with the necessary sting of obligations attached to it and in addition to that they have to be all the time on the alert against attempts at conversion made by mission agents under "missionary authority." Even this is not all. Many of those men who learn in such institutions get a large part of their training at the expense of the non-Christians, and they are supposed to use their knowledge in course of time in the conversion of these non-Christians. I was told by the Indian Christian principal of a missionary college that most of the Christian boys in the college were educated at the expense of the non-Christians because of the Government grant, fees, etc., but I did not know until now that the same thing happened in the Medical Missions and their schools.

Sir Wanless states that the Mission Hospitals etc., do not try to subvert the national institutions, faiths, cultures etc. He says, however, that medical service is an "essential part of the Christian Church." In the article mentioned above he goes even a step further and says that "the medical mission may yet play a large and efficient part in the prosecution of missionary initiative and missionary extension." Any way it is an essential part, whether aggressively so or not, of the Christian Church. Now we shall see if it is the avowed object of the Christian Church to subvert other faiths or not and especially Hinduism in India. I can quote from a hundred authoritative sources to show that this is the object, but I shall satisfy myself by quoting only two or three most representative voices.

Dr. Duff is considered one of the greatest missionaries that ever came to India and he is not out of date even now. This is how he defined the task of educational missionaries :

"While you engage in directly separating as many precious atoms as the stubborn resistance ordinary appliances will admit, we shall, with the blessing of Lord, devote our time and strength to the preparing of a mine and the setting of a train which shall one day explode and tear up the whole from its lowest depths."

Dr. N. J. Farquhar who is regarded as an epoch-maker in the history of Missions speaks thus in regard to this matter :

"Christianity proposes to win men away from the other religions by bringing them something better and to take the place of the other religions in the world. It proposes to displace the other religions... Christianity sets out for victory. The intention to conquer is characteristic of the Gospel."

Dr. Stanley Jones who is in many ways the biggest voice among missionaries in India has openly said that Christianity must displace Hinduism.

And the last but not the least are the following words which I presume are from the pen of Dr. N. Macnicol uttered almost as a parting message just before his retirement from India given in the editorial notes of the N. C. C. Review, October 1929 :

"The Vedantic teaching of Hinduism ranges itself with the former interpretation (monistic) and will be discerned more and more as bringing powerful reinforcement to a religious view which is irreconcilable with the Christian faith. For that reason it may well be that India may provide the Kurukshetra in this final battle of belief. It, at any rate, provides a field that is peculiarly suitable for the investigation of this hostile interpretation of the meaning of our life and of the universe." (The italics in all these passages are mine).

From this it is but too evident that the Christian Church and missions are out to destroy, disintegrate, displace and subvert all the non-Christian faiths in general and Hinduism and Islam in particular in India. This is the open and avowed object of the Christian missions and as such they have no place in the new India that is before us. If India has not hitherto treated these missions in the same way as the Moslem countries have done long since and as China is doing to-day, it is because of the close association between the Missions and the British Government and because of the fact that the people of India are simple, tolerant and appreciative. As Raja Ram Mohan Roy said a century back pointing to the new menace of Christian Missions, the people of India are too religious and unworldly to beware of such dangers. Whatever that be, with the rising tide of nationalism, all the forces and especially foreign ones which make for disintegration in the national life and culture can not be allowed to work in their old way, and if they persist in such attempts they must be muzzled as has been done in Turkey and China.

As a corollary to this, inasmuch as Medical Missions are an integral part of the Christian church, they too must be guarded against. I never realized until to-day that the Medical Missions are open to the charge of proselytization to the same extent as other missionary agencies. Long since Mahatma Gandhi has said this and I am now a convert to this view. As such the Medical Missions have no claim to receive any financial help from the non-Christian people, let alone the question of the latter caring to have any voice in the management.

I shall end this by saying that in all that I say in regard to these matters I am not in the least actuated by any personal or even national considerations. Most of these things I used to say even while I was working with the Christians and it was after I found that the only way to end these abuses was to make the matter public that I give them the needed publicity. In this what actuates me most is a genuine love for Hinduism and also for the Christianity, not of the Churches or Missions, but of Jesus Christ Himself.

Harmony House }
Rajkot }
11 March 1931. }

Yours etc.,
MANILAL C. PAREKH.

(We do not propose to publish any more letters on this subject.—Ed. I.S. R.)

TEACHING CHILDREN.

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

The President of an American University was reported some time ago to have said: "The parent rushes into the mind of the child, without so much as the courtesy of a knock on the door, and proceeds to impose his nature and his notions on the proud but powerless child."

This man evidently shares the opinions of a modern school of child "trainers" and "educators" who teach that children should be deferred to, that their desires should be respected, that they should seldom or never be chastised, and that their ideas are as good as the ideas of their elders, and perhaps a shade better.

It is not strange that such ideas concerning children's minds and concerning the methods of child training should be in vogue today, for we live in an age that takes a perverse delight in going counter to all the wisdom and all the good of the past. Common sense and everyday experience ought to teach us that children know nothing, that their minds are blank tablets upon which we have to impress the characters that will tell the stories of their future lives. Children have no well-defined thoughts, and no fixed principles. Instead of thoughts, a succession of images, some pleasurable, some painful, pass over their minds. They have certain impulses, some good, and others bad. The good impulses should be strengthened and directed towards right ends, and the bad impulses, should be restrained, and as far as possible, eradicated.

Of course we should not educate and train children as we train animals, by whip and lash when they do ill, and by placing savory tit-bits under their noses when they do well, though a moderate and judicious administration of such punishments and rewards does good. But let us have no silly notions about knocking on the door of the proud but powerless child. While we should not break a child's spirit, and while we should inculcate in him a proper feeling of self-respect, pride is the one thing above all that we should drive out of him. "Pride is the only sin that never quite is conquered."

Ocoer d'Alene, Idaho,
U. S. A.
3rd February 1931.

Yours etc.,
CHARLES HOOPER.

Sir Joseph Bhore:—In addition to the information we gave in a recent issue regarding the early origins of Sir Joseph Bhore's family, the Dnyanodaya has received the following interesting facts from a correspondent:— 'I have known the Bhore family ever since the year 1889, and Sir Joseph, myself and the late Mr. Bunter were at school together in the Bishop's High School, Poona. It is true that Sir Joseph's father, Rao Saheb Ramji Gangaji Bhore, was originally a convert of the American Marathi Mission but ever since I knew him, as far back as 1889 and many years previous to it, he and his family had joined the Church of England and they were the leading members of the O. M. S. in Poona. You were quite right in mentioning the American Marathi Mission but the O. M. S. should not have been left out.' We are grateful for this additional information concerning the education of the Indian Christian statesman who, we believe, has been so firm a supporter of Lord Irwin's conciliatory policy.

AN INDIAN LADY'S IMPRESSIONS OF EUROPE.

Sir C. V. Raman, the Nobel prize winner, returned to Calcutta after a tour in Europe on 2nd March.

It may be recalled that Prof. Raman left Bombay for Europe on the 14th November, last year and arrived at Bombay on the 19th February making a tour of a little over three months.

During the tour Sir Raman has been the recipient of several lesser honours, prizes and medals. He has lectured extensively throughout the tour, his theme being mainly the place of India in the scientific world. He has sought to dispel the notions in Europe that India was rather too "Spiritual." With all his bias for the spiritual, the Indian scientist is no mean competitor with his co-workers in Europe. Giving his impressions to a press representative, Sir Raman said that he really shed tears of joy while in the act of receiving the Nobel Prize when he thought of the honour that was shown to India by the King of Sweden.

"Oh! for more than three months we passed an awfully busy time in Europe"—said Lady Raman to our Special Representative when he saw her at the Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science, soon after her arrival in Calcutta in company with her distinguished husband, Sir C. V. Raman, the great Indian scientist. Though she looked fresh, it was time for her to take some rest after the long journey from Bombay. She denied herself that rest, too, and was kind enough to spend nearly two hours with our representative in the absence of Prof. Raman, giving a full and interesting account of their travels in Europe. Prof. Raman was not at the Association at that hour, as he had gone to see some friends in Calcutta. It was a pleasant surprise when our representative heard Lady Raman speaking fluent and faultless Bengali in the course of her talks.

"Sailing from Bombay on the 19th November we reached Stockholm on the 9th December" continued Lady Raman, "and the Press reporters and photographers gave us no rest during the whole week of our stay at the Swedish Capital. It was something unusual that all the six Nobel Prize winners were present this time to receive their prizes. Prof. Raman and two others stayed at the Carlton Hotel while three other prize-winners put up at the Grand Hotel. The Nobel Prize Committee was all attention to our needs and comforts. What is interesting to mention is that Leo Tolstoy, a grandson of Count Tolstoy, the great Russian ascetic, who was a student at Stockholm, kept close company with us for three days and personally took all sorts of trouble for us. He is a nice young man and I will never forget the passionate care with which he looked after us. I forgot to tell you that on the very day of our arrival at Stockholm, the Swedish Science Academy gave a dinner in honour of the Nobel Prize winners.

THE GREAT FUNCTION.

"The 10th of December was the day fixed for the ceremony where the King of Sweden gave the prizes to the 6 Nobel Prize winners. The function was held at 4 p. m. in a very big hall, the like of which I don't remember to have seen any where, and it was attended by almost all the distinguished Savants and State officials of Sweden. Before formally giving the prizes, the King made brief appreciative references to the respective achievements of the prize-winners. Music played by a Swedish Orchestra is the one thing that is worthy of special mention. I have never heard anything so sweet and grand before. Professor Raman himself told me that he was most profoundly impressed with it. The majestic and sonorous swell of that exquisite harmony seems to ring in my ears still. It is so nice, so superb, so heart-enthalling. The prize-giving ceremony ended at 7-30 p. m. On the 11th there was a Royal dinner at the King's Palace in honour of the Nobel Prize-winners. This, too, was a great function attended by many great people. There, too, was the same soul-elevating music and it was our good fortune to hear it again. Some of the prize-winners delivered some lectures. To the great surprise of the invited guests, Professor Raman spoke for nearly half an hour on Lord Buddha and his sublime doctrines. I, too, never thought that he would leave aside science and speak on philosophy. Thank God, he delivered a most powerful address and, take it from me, it created a tremendous impression on the Swedish audience who were so eager to hear about India and her past glories. Many came and shook hands with Professor Raman and congratulated him on the illuminating speech he had delivered on the great Prophet and his mission. Two more lectures on science he delivered at Stockholm, one at the Chemical Institute and the other at the Physics Institute. Then followed a number of luncheons and dinners and we were quite fed up with them. The British Ambassador also entertained us."

A POLITE PEOPLE.

"Do the Swedes understand English" was a question put by our inquisitive representative.

"Oh, yes. They not only understand English but speak it quite fluently, too. They are a very polite people. Courtesy is the breath of their nostrils. They are exceptionally hospitable and they know how to deal with gentlemen. They were eager to know a lot about India but it was their regret that very few Indians went to Sweden for study or other purpose. To be frank, Professor Raman and I have felt the deepest pleasure in mixing with them. I shall never forget their gentleness and characteristic bon homie."

"Well, Lady Raman, what dresses did you wear during your travels?"

Why, the very sari that you now find on my person. Many of them saw my sari and lavished high praises on it. They like the Indian sari very much,

THE JOURNEY IN THE CONTINENT.

"Now then, to my narrative. From Stockholm, we went to Upsala and stayed for a day with Professor Sigmund. From Upsala we went to Oslo. At these places, too, the Professor delivered lectures. Then we went right away to Geneva and stayed there for a couple of days. Thence, we went to Chamonix, a very excellent place and stayed there for 6 days. The splendid views of Mont Blanc that we have seen still thrills my imagination. Visitors to Europe should never fail to go to this place. From Chamonix we went to Lausanne. After staying there for two days, we went to Munich where Professor Raman delivered a lecture at the University. We met Professor Benoy Kumar Sarkar there and some twenty Indian students who were there, were all attention to us and did all they could to show their honour for Professor Raman. From Munich, we went to Glasgow via Paris where a Special Convocation was held on the 15th January to confer the degree of LL.D. on my husband. This, too, was a great formal ceremony. From Glasgow we went to London and then came to Sicily after passing Paris, Lausanne, Milan and Florence. I shall now tell you something about Taormino, one of the loveliest places I have ever visited. It is situated at the foot of Mount Etna, the well-known volcano. Language fails to give a graphic description of the wealth of natural scenery of this place. I can't tell you how I felt when I saw the smoke coming out of the crater. I have brought a good many books about these places. If you like, I can gladly show them to you." But our representative requested her not to bother about it as he thought he would be putting her to some trouble for his sake. But how keenly did he relish the enthusiasm with which she spoke of the beauties of these places in Southern Italy!

"Then, you know, we went to Brindisi and took our boat for Alexandria. From there we went to Cairo. We did not forget to pay a visit to Luxor to see the splendours of Tutankhamen. It is indescribably wonderful, so fresh and tidy as if they had been discovered only yesterday. We, Indians, had built wonderful works of art and architecture but they did not care to preserve them as people of other ancient lands did. I have brought some valuable books on the relics of ancient Egypt. From Luxor we went to Cairo again and then at Port Said embarked on S. S. Ganga, reputed to be one of the fastest liners. It took only eight days to come from Port Said to Bombay. This is in short a description of our travels."

INTEREST IN INDIA.

"Well, Lady Raman, I am tempted to ask you one more question. Did you find the European people taking any interest in Indian politics?"—asked our representative.

"Certainly they did and they do take interest in present Indian politics. There was one thing that did not escape our notice. It was this. Trade was dull, business was at a stand-still, several firms had wound up their concerns and unemployment was keen. In a word, economic distress was very much in evidence wherever we went and the people who conferred with us attributed all this to the political trouble in India. People did not look so very merry as they usually do when the times are normal. You know, Lancashire buys cotton from Egypt for sending the finished products to India. But in the course of our journey in Egypt we found countless cotton bales lying idle everywhere because there was no buyer. From this you can well imagine the condition of the mills in Lancashire. On the boat we talked to some American passengers. They also said that in America, trade was awfully dull. By the bye, I forgot to tell you that while in Paris we heard of the release of Mahatma Gandhi and other Congress leaders. I may also tell you that while we were travelling in Europe, the thought of India was never for a moment absent from our mind and we were eager to come home as soon as we could."

"Lady Raman" said our representative, "you were no doubt very busy these days but I may tell you that you will have to be for a week or two more in Calcutta. You left Calcutta on the very day the Nobel Prize announcement was made and people could get no time to show their love and honour to Professor Raman who has practically made Calcutta his home and the centre of all his activities in the domain of science."

With these words our representative took leave of Lady Raman after paying his respects to her. He wished to meet Professor Raman but he had not arrived at the Association till then.—A. B. Patrika.

"COMMERCIAL CROOKS."

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have read with great interest Mr. Jerajani's article on "Commercial Crooks" reproduced in the Reformer of the 14th instant.

In the course of that article Mr. Jerajani writes: "But our rigid pledge of non-cooperation with the present Government precludes us from resorting to such a course" (viz. of drawing the swindlers of Khadi-trade into courts of law.)

In the first place it appears to me that the pledge of non-cooperation with the Government is not necessary in the case of an Association of this type whose chief object is to propagate and spread the cult of khadi with a view to better the economic condition of the starving millions of India, and which is therefore justly regarded as a non-political body.

Secondly, the pledge is not desirable also, because it deprives the Association of lawful means of obtaining redress in cases pointed out by Mr. Jerajani.

My plea in brief is this, that the Association must be more practical than idealistic in determining its course of action in furthering the cause for which it has been brought into existence.

17th March 1931. }

Yours etc.,
M. S.

A CATHOLIC WARRIOR-PRINCESS OF INDIA.

E. R. IN THE Madonna, KARACHI.

Begum Sumroo, was born in 1750, her father being Latif Ali Khauan Arab Noble who had settled in Kotana, thirty miles from Meerut. The father died when she was six years old whereupon the mother took the girl with her to Delhi and it was here that eleven years later Zibalsesa, to give the Begum her Muhammadan name, met and married the famous adventurer and soldier of fortune, Walter Reinhard, who was at the time in the service of the Raja of Bhurtpore and engaged on the siege of Delhi. Reinhard was generally known as Sumroo, the Indian corruption of Le Sombre which was the nickname bestowed on him by his European comrades on account of his swarthy complexion and the sombre cast of his features. A native of Luxembourg (or according to some accounts of the Bavarian Tyrol), he had come out to India as a private soldier in the French East India Company, had subsequently entered the service of Mir Kassim, the Nawab of Bengal, rising to distinction therein, and on the downfall of that prince had organised his own body of troops which he hired out to various rulers from time to time. As stated above he married the Begum in 1767 while he was in the service of the Raja of Bhurtpore, and from that year to the day of his death in 1778 she accompanied him in all his campaigns.

In 1773 the Moghul Emperor, Shah Alam, took Sumroo's battalion into regular employment and for the maintenance of those troops assigned to Samroo a jaghir yielding an annual revenue of six lakhs of rupees and stretching in breadth from the Ganges to the Jumna and in length from Mozuffernagar to Aligarh. Sumroo fixed his residence in the centre of the jaghir at the village of Sardhana, thereby organising what was afterwards known as the Principality of Sardhana. In 1776 Sumroo was made Civil and Military Governour of Agra, but he did not hold this appointment long as death overtook him on 4th May 1778.

On the death of their beloved leader the European officers as well as the Indian rank and file petitioned the Emperor that the Begum should be given the command of the battalion; Shah Alam who had personal knowledge of her singular talents and aptitude for business readily acceded to their request and formally installed her in the charge of the troops and in the succession to the Jaghir of Sardhana.

In 1781, that is three years after the death of her husband, the Begum was converted to the Catholic Faith and baptised at Agra receiving the name of Joanna. As the troops were showing occasional signs of turbulence she was advised to marry again that she might be the better able to control them with a husband's aid,

There were two suitors for her hand, George Thomas, an Irishman, and Le Vaisseau, a Frenchman, both being officers in her service. Her choice fell on the Frenchman and she accordingly married him at Agra in 1793.

The marriage was however very unpopular with the troops: Le Vaisseau himself was arrogant and tactless, and George Thomas, his old rival, took the opportunity to intrigue against him from Delhi. Soon a conspiracy was afoot which was so far successful that the Begum and Le Vaisseau attempted to seek safety in flight. But the mutinous troops soon overtook them and in the ensuing confusion and the darkness the pair were separated. Shots were fired and the Begum thinking that her husband had been killed and dreading the indignities to which she might be subjected, stabbed herself with a dagger. Le Vaisseau was informed that the Begum had killed herself whereupon he shot himself with his pistol. But the Begum's wound was not fatal and she was taken back to Sardhana as a prisoner. She soon found means to communicate with Scindia and the Mahratta Governor of Delhi, George Thomas, also rallied once again to her side, and those of her officers who had taken no part in the mutiny exerted themselves on her behalf. Soon a counter-revolution was effected and the Begum was again installed as the ruler of Sardhana. She never married again but devoted her chief attention to the management of her extensive territories; nor was her supremacy challenged thereafter up to the day of her death.

Her tenure of the military command was marked by splendid vigour and leadership and the battalion gained fresh laurels on many a hard-fought field. We find her engaged against the Sikhs at Panipat in 1787; quelling a revolt against the Emperor the same year before the gates of Delhi itself, for which she received from the grateful Emperor the title, "Most Beloved Daughter of the Empire": by her presence of mind and vigorous conduct saving the Emperor's life in 1788 at the battle of Gokulgarh in which her troops completely routed the rebel forces of Najaf Koli Khan—it was after this battle that the Emperor publicly thanked her, invested her with magnificent robe of honour and conferred on her the large pergunah of Badshahpore to the south of Delhi.

In the year 1800 Scindia, who was then the acknowledged ruler of Hindustan and had conceived a high opinion of the Begum's capacity, confirmed her right and title to all her possessions and entrusted to her the defence of the western frontier against the irruptions of the Sikhs. In 1802 she took part in the battle of Assaye against the English who were commanded by Wellesley, afterwards Duke of Wellington, and it is remarkable that the Begum's troops were the only part of Scindia's army that went off unbroken from the field of battle though repeatedly charged by the English cavalry.

In 1804 she entered into a treaty with the British Government by which her sovereignty and territories were guaranteed to her for life. In 1825 her troops fought against the Raja of Bhurtpore; she accompanied them in person, was present at the siege and storming of the fortress of Bhurtpore under Lord Lake, and on the conclusion of the campaign received the thanks of the British Government for her prompt and efficient services during a long and arduous struggle. She was held in high esteem by the British authorities and a letter written to her by the great Bentinck on the eve of his departure from India will be read with interest:—

To

HER HIGHNESS THE BEGUM SUMROO.

My Esteemed Friend,

I cannot leave India without expressing the sincere esteem I entertain for Your Highness's character. The benevolence of disposition and extensive charity which have endeared you to thousands have excited in my mind sentiments of the warmest admiration; and I trust that you may yet be preserved for many years, the solace of the orphan and the widow and the sure resource of your numerous dependants. Tomorrow morning I embark for England, and my prayers and best wishes attend you, and all others who like you exert themselves for the benefit of the people of India.

I remain

With much consideration

Your sincere friend

M. W. BENTINCK

(Governor-General).

The letter is dated 17th March 1835. The Begum was now more than 80 years of age; the sands of life were running out and after a brief illness she died at Sardhana on the 27th January 1836 in the 86th year of her life, conscious to the last and prepared by the Sacraments and prayers of the Church. She was buried in her church which had always been her special pride. To uncommon sagacity, high courage and a masculine strength of will she united in a pre-eminent degree that kindness of heart, benevolence and Catholic sympathy which are always associated with our ideal of a good woman.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

The Depressed Classes Society Belgaum:—The Depressed Classes Society which was founded at Belgaum in 1915 by Rao Sahab M. Lingayya Naidu did very useful work for the uplift of the Depressed Classes in Belgaum District. Rao Sahab Naidu owing to ill health and old age retired from 1st January, 1931 from the secretarship who is now succeeded by Rao Sahab Pappanna Jalayya Thade, Hon. Magistrate and Municipal Councillor himself belonging to the Depressed Classes at Belgaum. Rao Sahab Naidu handed over net cash of Rs. 2,600 as the balance cash of the Society's Funds for conducting the present activities of the Society at Belgaum which is running a Free Hostel for the Depressed Classes Students at Belgaum in which there are now 9 Students reading in the Sirdar's High School there. The monthly cost per student amounts to Rs. 8. The now Secretary Rao Saheb Papanna arranged meetings for the Depressed Classes welfare in six prominent villages during the last two months and secured co-operation of Mr. Hirwath, (The Collector of Belgaum) Rao Saheb Patil and Mr. Juvekar, the Mamlatdar of Sampagaon, Mr. Inamdar of Neginhal, and other local leaders. The present Members of the Executive Committee of the Society are Mr. V. A. Desai, B.A., Magistrate (President), Rao Saheb Papanna Jalayya (Hon. Secretary) Mr. H. V. Shirgaonkar, B.A., LL.B., (3) Mr. B. K. Dalvi, B.A., LL.B., (4) Mr. S. M. Basrur, B.A., LL.B., and (5) Mr. Y. K. Dhale from the Depressed Classes. The Committee passed a resolution thanking Rao Saheb Naidu on his very sincere and pioneering services rendered to the Society as its Hon. Secretary for the last 15 years. The public at large is requested to support the laudable object of the Society with their practical help as hitherto extended which would enable the Society to continue its activities with more vigour and enthusiasm. The Depressed Classes Society of Belgaum is an affiliated Centre of the Poona Branch of the D. O. Mission Society of India, which is a duly registered Body.

A Lingyat Address to its Leader:—"An address was presented on Sunday the 8th March at 5 p. m. to Dewan Bahadur S. T. Kambli, Minister for Agriculture on behalf of the Lingyats of the Capital City of Bombay, in the Nageshwar Hall near the Round Temple under the presidentship of Rao Bahadur Bhole, M.L.C., The address was read by Annasaheb Mokashi, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, High Court. The Hall was fully crowded and many distinguished persons like Rao Bahadur S. N. Angadi, M.L.C., Rao Saheb Wandekar, M.L.C., S. B. Desai of Sullad, M.L.C., Sjt. Surve, Advocate, M.L.C., Annasaheb Jirgo, Artist, Sholapur, Wrangler Pawate, Inspector of Education, Sar Desai of Bijapur, Mr. Belvi, LL.B., Advocate, etc., attended the function. Annasaheb Jirgo requested Rao Bahadur Bhole to preside. Rao Bahadur Bhole presented the address in the Silver Casket to the Honourable Minister. He said that he worked with Dewan Bahadur as a colleague in the Bombay Legislative Council for the last ten years. If ever a non-brahmin deserves to hold the high office of a Minister it is undoubtedly Dewan Bahadur Kambli. It is because Dewan Bahadur has in him the qualities of a Minister and an able administrator and indefatigable public worker. In reply to the address Dewan Bahadur stressed on the importance of Education and requested the Bombay Lingyats to educate their sons and daughters in all avenues of life. He expressed his hopes of meeting the Bombay Lingyats in a big Lingayat Town Hall in future."

ADVERTISEMENTS

WOMAN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.
PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
" Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

SAVINGS BANK,

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a

HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT

with us and earn  $3\frac{1}{2}\%$  interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

Branches:

BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed ... .. Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up ... .. " 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund ... .. " 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

WANTED.

For Hospital in rural area (Hindi-speaking) Christian woman Physician or Sub-Assistant Surgeon. Apply with references etc., To, (Miss) M. A. COLTART, Hat Piplia, Via Indore, Central India.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gackwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897)

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amroli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwaraka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laska: (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Nalb Dewar, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhallal Dajibhai Amin B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alambic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Malatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Sar Suba, Baroda State, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.)

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26.

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulia (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindheda ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivasa ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Palghar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Ahni (District Solapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Viramgam (District Ahmedabad).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay (Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticoria, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAHOTTA M MORAJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

THE GUARDIAN

—101—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 ANNAS.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :— Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJAN PAIN BALM
PRODUCES
BEST RESULTS

IN

Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.
AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

**&

MADRAS.

A SAFE
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies'
Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of
India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

” ” Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single copy ... 0 3 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed.)

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to :

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1928 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. R. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 62.

SUNNY SIDE UP

13 Parts, featuring

JANET GAYNOR AND CHARLES FARRELL

A Fox Movietone Musical Comedy.

Time:—3-30, 6-15, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 22 and 23.

CASINO DE PARIS

5th Part, 1 Reel.

BRIDE OF THE REGIMENT

12 Parts, featuring

VIVIENNE SEGAL, WALTER PIDGEON & LOUISE FAZENDA

First National All-colour, All-talking, Singing and Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

OLD BLACK JOE

1 Reel,

A Paramount Sound Novelty.

BROADWAY

11 Parts, featuring

GLEN TRYON, EVELYN BRENT, MARNA KANADY AND OTIS HARLEN

Universal All-Talking, Singing & Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

NO CINEMA SHOWS.

VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL CONCERTS

BY

MASTER MANHAR BARVE.

} Sat. 5 p.m.

} Sun. 5 p.m.

} Wed. 9-30. p.m.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1931

No. 30

“ I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard.”
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

India and British Party Politics. Women's Franchise. An Upright Judge. Proselytising Missions and Swaraj. Karachi Congress. On the Eve of the Karachi Congress. Repatriation from South Africa.	Indian Christians and Nationalism. What is Hinduism? "Practical Implications of Satyagraha." A College for Women. Lady Abdul Quadir on the Indian Women's Movement. News and Views.
--	--

NOTES.

India And British Party Politics:—Despite the oft-repeated assertion that all British parties have been united on Indian policy there have been occasions when an Indian issue has figured among British issues in electoral contests. Lord Lytton's reactionary policy was among the accusations in Gladstone's Midlothian campaign against the Conservative Government, and that Viceroy resigned when the victorious Liberals formed the Cabinet. It is nevertheless the case that for the first time now a great British party has been divided on fundamentals of Indian policy. The virulence of attacks on Baldwin during the St. Georges by-election by Conservative politicians headed by Winston Churchill provoked the Ex-Prime Minister to unwonted vigour of retort. The main difference was Lord Irwin's policy aggravated in the eye of dissentients by his inviting Mahatma Gandhi to personal conferences at Viceroy's House. The return by an overwhelming majority of the official candidate at the by-election is a great personal triumph for Mr. Baldwin. It may not mean much for India, as when it comes to practical politics, differences might prove to be of degree only. Apart from the bearing on our own interests, we rejoice that the attempt to hound a great and good man out of politics has met with ignominious failure.

Women's Franchise:—Several leading women workers have invited the Congress to pass a resolution requiring enfranchisement of women on identical terms as men and for this purpose the necessary amendment of law of women's property. To enable them to hold property qualification the Simon Commission recommended that widows should have the vote whose husbands had it on a property qualification. This is likely to lead to anomalies and does not touch the root of the matter. The suggestion now made is the right one and will have the support of Indian opinion except in narrowly orthodox circles. The requisitionists have made it clear that they ask for no special provision such as reservation of seats and are quite content to take their chance alongside of men at elections.

An Upright Judge:—By the retirement of Justice Madgaonkar the Bombay High Court suffers a loss which it can ill afford at the present time. Speaking from the Bench on which he sat for the last time on the 19th instant Justice Madgaonkar quoted Morley's words regarding the importance of public confidence in courts of justice which he described as the lynchpin of the State. It is not too much to say that Mr. Madgaonkar's share in maintaining public confidence was second to none and his modest claim that he had strived to keep unspotted the Judge's robe which he was wearing for the last time will be admitted by all who, whether as clients, counsel or as disinterested observers of the working of the judicial system, have had opportunities of forming an opinion. There have been greater judges on the High Court Bench, distinguished for exposition of intricate points of law, but a more upright judge there has not been. Outside the Court, Mr. Madgaonkar has maintained the tradition of eminent Indian judges of close association with and leadership of social movements. As president of the Hindu Law Reform Association, he has taken active interest in promoting the much needed social legislation on sound lines. Mr. Madgaonkar is not the man to rest on his oars. There is a wide field of public service in which he can assist the national cause in various ways by his knowledge and experience of judicial administration. Mr. Madgaonkar has the distinction, rare now-a-days, of retiring from the High Court Bench without a Knighthood. He will find this rather an advantage in public life where titles are at a discount at present.

Proselytising Missions and Swaraj:—In the course of an interview with the Delhi correspondent of the Tribune, Lahore, Mahatma Gandhi expressed his view of the position of proselytising Missions under the Swaraj government. "If instead of confining themselves purely to humanitarian work and material service to the poor they limit their activities, as at present, to proselytising by means of medical aid, education, etc., then I would certainly ask them to withdraw. Every nation's religion is as good as any other's. Certainly India's religions are adequate for her people. We need no converting spiritually." This is very much what the Reformer has been saying and we are glad in this as in many other matters to find ourselves in agreement with him.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, MARCH 28, 1931.

KARACHI CONGRESS.

The fortysixth session of the National Congress meets tomorrow at Karachi in circumstances of unprecedented difficulty. Much of it is in connection with the Irwin-Gandhi agreement though but for the agreement the Congress session might not have been possible. A considerable body of Congressmen viewed with suspicion the mere idea of a truce. Even amongst those who were not opposed to an agreement, the terms of Irwin-Gandhi agreement were felt to be incommensurate with the large sacrifices of men and women in the civil disobedience campaign. Enquiry into police excesses is not strictly relevant, but since it was put forward among the demands, acceptance of a refusal was construed as weakness. The form of the official statement of terms was also calculated to magnify Congress obligations and minimise Government share of them. Also while the Congress did its part, and promptly and completely called off civil disobedience, the release of prisoners was hampered by technical considerations and several who ought to have been released are still detained in prison. The announcement on the day after the publication of the truce of Mr. Baldwin's decision not to send Conservative delegates to India as expected, created a fresh cause for opposition to the agreement to Congress participation in the Conference. Mahatma Gandhi was grappling heroically with these difficulties and carrying on side by side negotiations with Moslem representatives and Princes to bring their demands in line with nationalist principles.

The execution on Monday evening of Bhagat Singh, Rajguru and Sukhdev in Lahore jail ignoring the appeal from all parts of the country for commutation of the sentence of death, has shocked the public and threatens to break up the Congress. Angry crowds have indulged in hostile demonstrations against Mahatmaji. Even his great prestige seems for the moment likely to prove unequal to the strain imposed on it by the Lahore executions. The measure and volume of public resentment may be gauged from the impassioned protest of the leaders of the non-official opposition in the Legislative Assembly and their refusal to participate in the consideration of the Finance Bill. When men like Dewan Bahadur Rangachari and Sir Abdur Rahim feel impelled by a sense of duty to act in this fashion, it is easy to estimate the force and strength of public resentment and the cool and callous indifference displayed at the very time when nationalists are invited to co-operate in bringing about a friendly settlement. The official defence that Government have to maintain law and order has no meaning. Law allows commutation of death sentences to transportation.

Refusal to make use of these provisions can only be construed into callous disregard for Indian opinion incompatible with the spirit and the letter of the Prime Minister's speeches at the Round Table Conference.

The case of Bhagat Singh and his fellows has really nothing to do with the Civil Disobedience movement and was in fact a repudiation of non-violence as indispensable in the national struggle. They were accused of complicity in the murder of two Police officers and in conspiracies of a like character. Had their trial and conviction taken place under the ordinary law in the regular courts, there would have been far less public unrest evinced in them, but the constitution by Ordinance of a Special Tribunal to try them and of special procedure in contravention of the normal, disturbed public confidence, and were the main grounds for general demand for commutation. Misguided as was their method their motives, it is felt, deserved consideration at the hands of those who in cases of official excesses have enlarged on the wisdom of letting bygones be bygones.

Mahatmaji in a statement while deploring the execution of the young men has advised Congressmen to abide by the agreement and explore to the utmost the possibilities offered by the Round Table Conference proposals. He points out that the remission or commutation of the sentence of death was not a part of the agreement though it would have much facilitated the acceptance by the Congress of the agreement and given a great impetus to the principle of non-violence even among those who do not profess belief in his deliberate opinion. He declared that the grave blunder committed by the Government has increased the power for winning freedom. It is to be hoped that his wise advice will prevail and that the Congress will, notwithstanding the provocation, endorse the Gandhi-Irwin agreement and test its capacity to yield the results hoped for.

"Theatre."—We have received a copy of the Theatre, an English quarterly devoted to Drama and art, published by Mr. Sreenivasa Iyengar, on behalf of the Amateur Dramatic Association, Bangalore city. By way of introduction, the editor states that the Theatre will be devoted mainly to an authentic interpretation towards a correct understanding of the Renaissance of the Indian Dramatic Art, in all its manifold expression, and grandeur. "Its main task will be to bring the numerous talented art exponents in India together on a common forum and to help to evolve out of such an impact and inter-change of ideas a rich and truly national dramatic ideal worthy of our past." The variety and high standard of the contents of the first issue before us amply bear out the ideals which the promoters of the new journal have set before them and judging by the names of the members of the Committee, the Theatre bids fair to be a welcome addition to Indian periodicals.

ON THE EVE OF THE KARACHI CONGRESS.

( CONTRIBUTED. )

The open session of the Indian National Congress meets at Karachi on Sunday in circumstances of a unique and unprecedented character. Both what has gone before and what is likely to come next invest it with a peculiar significance and with far-reaching possibilities. The tremendous interest which would have attached in any case to the decisions which are about to be taken has been further enhanced by the public feeling which has been aroused as a result of the execution of the death sentences on Bhagat Singh and his comrades. We cannot help feeling that, whatever the rights of the case, however unquestionable the conception of duty, which Sir James Crerar would have us believe inspired the Government's decision, the choice of the particular moment for carrying out the death sentences was most unfortunate and regrettable from every point of view. In Mahatma Gandhi's words, Government have lost a golden opportunity of winning over the revolutionary party. "It was," he said on the eve of his departure to Karachi, "their clear duty, in view of the settlement, at least to suspend indefinitely the execution. By their action they have put a severe strain upon the settlement, and once more proved their capacity for flouting public opinion and for an exhibition of the immense brute power they possess." Although it would be wrong to interpret the Government's action as a breach of the Delhi Agreement—and Mahatma Gandhi has made himself perfectly clear upon this point—it would be just as well to recognise the fact that Government have deliberately and with a full knowledge of the consequences chosen to run the risk of disturbing the spirit of peaceful co-operation which, we should have thought, was the chief aim of the Delhi Agreement to ensure. If it was ever the object of Government to lend the fullest possible assistance to Mahatma Gandhi in his difficult task at the Karachi Congress, they have to be reminded that they are going entirely the wrong way about their business.

From the strictly technical point of view, the Government may be entirely in the right. But there is such a thing in the world as a higher statesmanship, a broader outlook, and a conception of duty which rises above a narrow and limited preoccupation with administrative rights and privileges. If, however, Government are not over-scrupulous about giving Mahatma Gandhi a fair chance, Mahatma Gandhi, on his part, is determined to use all his influence and to do his utmost to lessen the effects of a tragic lack of foresight and imagination on the part of Government. "Congress," he has said, "must not swerve from the path chalked out for it. In my opinion, notwithstanding the gravest provocation the Congress should endorse the settlement and test its capacity to yield the result hoped for. We cannot put ourselves in the wrong by being angry. Let us recognise that commutation of sentences was not part of the truce. We may accuse the Government of goondaism, but we may not accuse them of a breach of the settlement."

Such is the setting against which the Congress discussions are shortly to begin. It is not the sort of setting which would seem to justify any remarkable degree of optimism. On the other hand, it would be equally wrong and unpractical to indulge in an excess of despair. The Congress is now face to face with a tremendous task. During the next few days, it will be called upon to decide many vital issues and to overcome many difficulties. Not the least of these perhaps, will be the ever-present possibility of a breach in the Congress solidarity. This possibility is bound up with the main issue before the Karachi Congress, namely, the Delhi Agreement. After a year of civil disobedience, Congress leaders have consented to take part in discussions for "considering further" the scheme for the constitutional Government of India outlined at the Round Table Conference. This decision was taken by Mahatma Gandhi with the unanimous approval of the Working Committee. It is now for the Indian National Congress, acting as a body, to ratify that decision, and to determine the future course of the nation's activities.

The Gandhi-Irwin Agreement makes it clear that the three essential parts of the Conference Scheme are Federation, "Indian responsibility," and "reservations or safeguards in the interests of India, for such matters, as for instance, defence, external affairs, the position of minorities, the financial credit of India, and the discharge of obligations." On the question of safeguards, Mahatma Gandhi has recently sought the assurance of the Viceroy that the subject was open to further discussion at the resumed Round Table Conference. The difficulty arose out of an implied suggestion, contained in the recent speeches of Lord Sankey and Mr. Benn, that the safeguards contemplated by the decisions of the London Conference were final and represented the policy of the British Government. Mahatma Gandhi's anxiety to have the point cleared is an index to the importance which is bound to be attached to the question at the forthcoming discussions of the Karachi Congress, and it is a distinct relief to know that Lord Irwin has found it possible to remove Mahatma Gandhi's doubts. It is on the question of safeguards that the main constitutional issue must finally rest. Mahatma Gandhi's own attitude on this subject was clearly indicated in the press statement which he issued on the conclusion of the Delhi Agreement. "Safeguards in the interests of India," he said, "may be purely illusory and so many ropes tying the country hand and foot and strangling her by the neck, or they may be like so many fences, protecting a tender plant requiring delicate care and attention. One party may give one meaning and the other may give another. It is open under that clause to either party to work along its own lines, and if Congress has shown readiness to take part in the deliberations of the Conference, it is because it seeks to make the Federation responsible, and the safeguards or reservations—or whatever other name they may be known by—such as would promote the real growth of the country along political, social economic and moral lines."

It will be for the Congress to decide whether this definition of safeguards conflicts with the conception of "Purna Swaraj." If it does not, and if by discussion and negotiation, the Congress feels that it can secure to India a constitution embodying the substance of independence, it will be its duty not only to ratify the present provisional settlement, but explore every possibility it contains for a final solution of the Indian problem.

Besides the main constitutional problem, there are others whose importance it would be impossible to exaggerate. There is the Hindu-Muslim question, with its endless ramifications into every phase of the political problem. The communal rivalries which broke out in London have been rightly ascribed to the absence of an adequate nationalist element in the Muslim delegation to the Round Table Conference. It will be for the Congress now to find the necessary corrective to the narrow prejudices and the sectarian bias which did so much to disgrace the cause of Indian nationalism in London. No solution of the problem seems to us possible except on the basis of joint electorates. It would be just as well for the minorities to realise that by insisting upon separate electorates, they are not only showing a stubborn disregard for the hard facts of the Indian political situation, but are also taking upon themselves the responsibility of putting off indefinitely a final and satisfactory solution of the whole constitutional problem.

Racial Discrimination:—While British commercial interests in India and their friends in England are crying themselves hoarse over supposed racial discriminations against them in the swadeshi movement, the Privy Council has upheld the right of the Crown Colony Government in East Africa to make racial discrimination in the disposal of Crown lands. An appeal was instituted by an Indian subject, Abdulhusein Kaderbhai, against the decision of the East African court sustaining the exclusion of Indians from bidding at town plots in Mombasa.

REPATRIATION FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

(By Mr. C. F. ANDREWS.)

The question of repatriation from South Africa has become somewhat confused to Indian minds owing to the difficulty of understanding the steps which have been taken at different times by the Union Government in South Africa.

In the first instance, the Indian indentured labourers themselves had a free passage offered them as one of the conditions of their indenture if they liked to make use of it. At one time the agreement was also made that a piece of land might be taken instead of the passage home to India. It is strange to note how few of the ex-indentured Indians availed themselves of this alternative. Late in the nineteenth century it was altogether suspended, because the Natal Government policy had changed.

During the early years of the twentieth century, considerable numbers came back to India from South Africa using their right of a free passage. When indentured labour was closed down in 1911, there were still many thousands in Natal who possessed the right to a free passage. These exercised their right in great numbers during the next ten years. The average return each year was roughly 2,000 emigrants, who came back by means of their own free passages.

In 1921 the South African Union Government offered the free passage to anyone who wished to return to India, along with a £ 5 bonus for each member of the family. But in all cases where the bonus was taken a bond was signed that the returned emigrants would not come back to South Africa. Immediately after this bonus was offered, the numbers increased; and I personally received conclusive evidence that recruiting was going on of a professional character in order fraudulently to induce Indians to accept the bonus and leave the country. When the proof of this became conclusive, I sent a public letter to the Indians in South Africa, urging them to refuse the bonus because the voluntary character was being taken away from it owing to these acts of fraudulent professional recruiting which induced people to come away often by deceitful promises.

In 1923 General Smuts referred to this letter of mine at the Imperial Conference in London during a heated controversy with Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru. He did not rightly describe the reason why I objected to Indians being induced to go back to India, and I had publicly to explain that my real objection was to this fraudulent recruiting which made the return of these Indians lose its voluntary character.

Besides this, I had the strongest objection to the returned emigrants signing a bond that really gave away their birthright. There were many minor details connected with it of a very unjust character. For instance, if an Indian father accepted the bonus he was compelled to take all his children back who were minors. For this purpose the age of minority was fixed at twenty-one years. If, on the other hand, a father wished to bring a minor child into South Africa, the age of minority was fixed at sixteen; and if a boy or girl happened to be a day over sixteen years of age they could not be admitted. There was an obvious injustice here in making the age of majority twenty-one in the former case and sixteen in the latter. These anomalies I only found out by very careful inquiry; and long before the Cape Town Agreement was signed I made a public protest both against the signing away of rights of the children by the father, and also about the injustice of this anomaly with regard to the age at which a minor child reached its majority.

In my next article, I shall deal with the events which happened during the Conference itself at Cape Town and the signing of the Agreement. Here it will be sufficient to record the numbers who returned to India up to the time of the Agreement. These were roughly about 22,000, from the year 1914 to the year 1926. The only year which showed a rise in figures was the year which followed the granting of the bonus by the Union Government of South Africa. It should be remembered that by far the greater portion of these came back by their own hard-earned passages and without receiving any bonus.

( To be continued. )

INDIAN CHRISTIANS AND NATIONALISM.

(BY MR. S. A. WAIZ.)

The history of Indian Christians dates back to the first century. According to the tradition prevailing among the Syrian Christians in Malabar, the Apostle St. Thomas landed in Malabar in the year 52 A.D., and established the first church. He converted many Hindus including Brahmins and founded seven churches in the South. The beginning of the sixteenth century saw the advent of Roman Catholicism and two centuries later the first Protestant Mission was established. The Portuguese and British Rules in India made it possible for the Christian Missionaries to propagate Christianity throughout the length and breadth of the country. They held the field of mission and for over a hundred years were able to carry on their missionary work without let or hindrance. They established colleges, schools and hospitals and through them conducted a campaign of converting Hindus and Muslims to Christianity. They attacked the Hindu religion in its weakest points, with all their vigour and resources. Thousands of untouchables, attracted by the promise of a better life, embraced Christianity. It was Swami Dayanand and the Arya Samaj that put a check to the further progress of Christianity in India. He started a campaign of reclaiming the untouchables and succeeded to a remarkable degree. Indeed, had it not been for Swami Dayanand, there would have been six times as many more Christians as there are to-day. Special efforts were made to spread Christianity among Indian Muslims but with insignificant results. There are very few Indian converts from Mahomedanism. The spread of Western education with its high ideals of freedom and national liberty marked the national awakening in India. But the average Britisher and missionary unimagined as he is, failed to read the signs of the time and persisted in his haughty manners and overbearing demeanour towards Indians. The Christian missionaries during these days particularly, identified themselves with the white Government officials and were as inhuman in their treatment of Indians and specially Indian Christians as a police officer. This writer remembers many a missionary who with the whip in hand, would demand "salaams" from Indians. This state of affairs could not continue for long and was mainly responsible for the failure of missionaries so far as the conversion of better class Indians was concerned. These were the days when the late Lala Lajpatrai was deported for sedition in 1908. The average Indian Christian then considered himself next to the Anglo-Indian community; but he was soon disillusioned, even as the Anglo-Indian is disillusioned today.

The grant of land to the missionaries for Indian Christian settlement in the north gave an impetus to what they call 'mass movement' among the untouchables. The missionaries have endeavoured to educate them and improve their standard of living, but have scrupulously kept them aloof from Hindus and Muslims and have thus narrowed down their national outlook. These people are taught to hold the white man in awe.

The middle class Indian Christian, on the other hand, who manages to reach the University standard, takes his B.A. or M.A. degree and almost automatically finds his way to mission schools and colleges as a teacher or to Government offices as a clerk. It is obvious, therefore, that even the educated among Indian Christians are surrounded by influences and placed in circumstances from within which he cannot actively participate in the National movement. Indian Christians are not economically independent. They are a poor community. With the exception of a number of Roman Catholics in Madras and Bombay, they are almost all paid servants of the Government or missions and are, therefore, not in a position to express their views freely. Added to this is the tragic lack of leadership. There is not a single all-India leader among them. A man who not only is able to lead his own community, Protestant or Catholic, but has the capacity to bring these two sections of Indian Christians to a common platform is needed at the moment. A week before Mr. Joseph Baptista's death, this writer was discussing with him the possibilities of uniting Catholics and Protestants for a common national purpose. He had anticipated opposition from a section of European Catholic priests in the event of such a union, but was not without hope. But unfortunately, his tragic and untimely death removed a man, perhaps the only man, who by virtue of his long services to the national cause was singularly fit for such a mission.

All honour to those young men—Messrs. Alva and Bhaskare, a Catholic and a Protestant,—who recently organised a Nationalist Christian Party in Bombay for this very purpose. But the absence of an experienced leader is keenly felt. Among the Protestants there is only one man who is in a position to tackle this knotty problem. It is Dr. S. K. Datta. He is admired, respected and trusted by all Indians. But for reasons which are not quite clear, he lives and works in Geneva. It is nothing short of a tragedy that at this critical stage in the history of India, the Indian Christian community for want of leadership, should fail to contribute its share towards the reconstruction of the country. These are some of the difficulties which are in the way of an average Indian Christian taking more active part in the fight for the freedom of his country. But with all their difficulties, Indian Christians, men and women, are nationalists to the core. In fact, they feel that they ought to be the real followers of Mahatma Gandhi, for he of all the men in the world has succeeded, to a great extent, in interpreting the life of Christ. Almost all Indian Christians in South Africa joined Mahatma Gandhi in his Passive Resistance Campaign of 1914. Even in the Civil Disobedience struggle which has just concluded, many Indian Christians were in the fore front. One of Mahatma Gandhi's chief lieutenants, Mr. Kamarappa, is an Indian Christian and the community is proud of his services. Of late a great change has been brought about in their lives. Anyone who has attended an Indian Christian church where the service is conducted in vernacular cannot but be impressed by its indigenous character. Hymns and chants are sung to the accompaniment of tablas and sarangi and other Indian instruments; the congregation sits on the floor in real Indian devotional mood and the surroundings are free from all artificiality of Western methods of prayer. In many churches which have been liberated from Western Christian domination, regular prayers are offered for the guidance of Mahatma Gandhi and the success of his campaign. During the last Christmas season a number of Indian Christians in Bombay issued the following appeal :

“That in view of the grim struggle in which our country is engaged and the great physical and mental anguish around us, our rejoicings this year should not take the form of feasting and merry-making. Removing all bitterness from our heart, we should quietly wait upon God that He may guide His Church in India and all leaders in the National movement in order that His will may be fulfilled and that this land may find the peace for which Christ came in this earth.” The appeal also urged the purchase of swadeshi Christmas presents and abstinence from liquor. It is true that Indian Christians as a community have not joined the most powerful national organization—the Congress, but in their love for and devotion to their country, they are second to none. The missionaries are the greatest obstacle in their way and once it is removed and they find a fearless and selfless all-India leader, they will come out en bloc. They are Indians and have no desire to be anything else. They have the best interest of their motherland at heart.

WHAT IS HINDUISM ?*

BY SIR LALUBHAI SAMALDAS.

ॐ तत्सत्—

सहनाभवतु सहनोद्युनक्तु सहवीर्यकरवाचहे
तेजस्वीनावधीतमस्तु माविद्विषाचहेमाविद्विषाचहे

ॐ शान्तिः शान्तिः शान्तिः

May Brahman protect us both together, May He nourish us both together. May we both work together with great energy. May our study be vigorous and effective. May we not hate each other.

—Om Peace—Peace—Peace—

Friends,

I feel greatly flattered and highly honoured at your having asked me to give you my views of the Hindu religion. That religion in its wisest sense would include all the protesting branches which though owing their origin to the same source disagreed with certain practices that had grown since its beginning. Having obtained fresh light, the seers of that period began as mere protestants, but later separated themselves from the main body. Although the courses of these branches of the main Hindu Religion differ, the source (Parabrahma) is the same and the goal (Moksha) is the same although it may be termed Nirvana or something else,—all denoting complete and absolute salvation. I propose to speak of Hindu Religion in its present restricted sense, i.e. a religion based on श्रुति; स्मृति; इतिहास and द्वादश. I need hardly add that I can only speak of Hindu Religion as I have experienced it; for religion is not merely a matter of faith to be kept at a distance and to be used on some special occasions, but must be incorporated (जोतयेत) into the daily work of life. As religion in its outline moulds our life, our experiences with Reality mould our religion and even our Faith—which latter is according to Wesley, “not an opinion, nor a number of opinions put together, be they ever so true. It is the vision of the Soul, that power by which spiritual things are apprehended, just as the material things are apprehended by the physical senses.”

The term Hindu as is well-known was originally applied by those whom we now call the Trans-Frontier tribes to the Aryan settlers in the regions watered by the river Sindhu. As the Aryans migrated to the South and the East they carried the name Hindu with them and as they conquered the old races and absorbed their religion, the term Hindu was applied also to the vanquished races. As Prof. Radhakrishnan says, “the term ‘Hindu’ had originally a territorial and not a credal significance. Aboriginal tribes, savage and half-civilized people, the cultured Dravidians and the Vedic Aryans were all Hindus as they were the sons of the same mother.” It is interesting to note that in certain quarters there is a desire to apply the term Hindu, to all residents of India and to remove the credal significance of the term altogether and restore the territorial one. Till that desire is fulfilled, the term Hindu will be used in the religious significance, which it attained in later days. What Hinduism looked to a sympathetic student of religion can be seen from what Mr. Mitchilet says in his Bible of Humanity. "There (in the East) lies my great poem, as vast as the Indian Ocean, blessed, gilded with the Sun, the book of divine harmony wherein is no dissonance. A serene peace reigns there, and in the midst of conflict an infinite sweetness, a boundless fraternity, which spreads over all living things, an ocean (without bottom or bound) of love, of pity, of clemency. I have found the object of my search: the Bible of Kindness." This was written in 1864, and though thereafter a few more protestant branches such as the Brahma Samaj and the Arya Samaj have grown out of the original tree, the description given by Mitchilet about India and Hinduism holds good to-day. May I tax your patience a little by a quotation from a present day writer (Romain Rolland) supplementing what Mitchilet said some 70 years back. "For more than thirty centuries the tree of visions with all its thousands of branches and millions of twigs, has sprung from that torrid land, the burning womb of the Gods. It renews itself tirelessly showing no signs of decay; all kinds of fruit ripen upon its boughs at the same time; side by side are found all kinds of Gods from the most savage to the highest—the formless God, the Unnameable, the Boundless One—Always the same tree."

*Being the Anniversary address of the Bombay Prarthana Samaj held on Saturday the 14th March.

The seed of that tree was sown by the ancient Rishis of the Aryas, when they were settled at the foot of the Himalayas in the delta watered by the Sindhu river. The Rishis under divine inspiration tried to meditate on the mysteries of Creation, of the Universe, and of Life and Death. They were naturally anxious to know the origin of the gorgeous and at times awe inspiring natural phenomena which they were witnessing every day. They must have formed a class by themselves, men who wanted to look beyond all that could be realized and grasped by the physical senses. They had not merely the desire to know the अतीन्द्रियविषय, subjects beyond the grasp of physical senses but they had also the capacity to meditate and find the ultimate cause. As the Vedas are said to have been revealed to them, we do not fully know the methods adopted by them to find God. Some of the Upanishads tell us how pupils desirous of having knowledge of Brahma, were very often turned away by the masters if they were not considered fit enough to receive the highest knowledge attainable by men. The masters also gave instruction about the course of studies to be undertaken by those desirous of attaining salvation (Mumukshu). Shankaracharya the greatest Advaita (non-dualistic) teacher has laid down the four qualifications of an Adhikari for correctly understanding the Teachings of Vedanta. The first Brahmasutra अथातो ब्रह्मजिज्ञासा means: 'Hence this desire to know Brahma.' The word 'Hence' has attracted the attention of the Bhashyakaras. Shankaracharya says that the desire for the knowledge of Brahma is due to the students having acted in accordance with the rules and orders of the Pārva Mimamsā which lays great stress on the performance of the Karmas enjoined by the Vedas. The study of Vedanta—perhaps the highest philosophy cum religion—is not to be undertaken according to Shankara and others until a pupil has prepared himself by discipline enforced by the Karma Kanda of the Vedas. The later day Vedantists did not see the necessity of such a discipline or argued that they had gone through such a discipline in the previous birth and that it was as a result of the Karmas of the preceding birth that the desire for higher knowledge had been engendered in their minds. As a result of this want of discipline they were not able to carry out the Teachings of Vedanta in their every day life and thus missed the real goal of Vedanta as religion, for religion as I have said in the beginning must enter into one soul and come out in our activities in daily life. Those on the other hand who loyally carried out the teachings of the Vedanta before they had undergone the preliminary discipline renounced the world before their time and without understanding the full implications of the Advaita philosophy of the Vedanta. The results of ignoring the wise and sound instructions of the Bhashyakara and attempting to learn the highest philosophy without any preliminary training either in the theory or practice of the earlier stages led to two undesirable results. The first was that the so-called Vedantists became indifferent to the material progress of humanity without being real Sannyasis in spirit. Indifferentism led to indolence and as that disease is infectious, even the majority of persons leading the life of the second Ashrama (Grihastha) became infected with that disease and lost interest in worldly matters not in the spirit of Vairagya (renunciation) but on account of indolence due to sheer want of interest in worldly affairs. I believe it was Paul Deussen who said that "Vedantism had proved a curse to material progress in India." Real Vedantism correctly understood and studied could never have such an effect nor would it create a spirit of indifferentism. The Upanishads have not suggested Tyaga (renunciation) in the sense in which the later day Vedantists have interpreted these teachings. Even Shankaracharya who has often been called a नृपत्यादिन् wanted merely to impress on the minds of his pupils the evanescence of all worldly things that have नृप and नृप. His idea was to draw the people away from the finite to the Infinite and to do this he was obliged to lay very great stress on the fact that things the physical senses cognised had all an end sooner or later and that therefore it was no use for those to be drawn into the meshes of worldly desires who wanted to know the Infinite. To those who were not real मुमुक्षु (persons who desired to get मोक्ष, absolute salvation), there were other वर्णसः. The Shanti Parva of the Mahabharat deals with three of these : राजधर्म, आपधर्म and मोक्षधर्म. Even one of the Upanishads (Isan) says: "In darkness are they who worship only the world, but in greater darkness they who worship the Infinite alone. He who accepts both saves himself from death by the knowledge of the former and attains immortality by the knowledge of the latter" (Radhakrishnan's translation). The latter Bhashyakaras must have felt that Shankara's philosophy was likely to be misunderstood and at times to lead away people not only from worldly affairs, but from devotional practices. They, therefore, put their own interpretation on the प्रस्थानत्रये. The Upanishads, the Brahma Sutras and the Bhagvad Gita, which Prof. Radhakrishnan says "answer roughly to the three stages of Faith, Knowledge and Discipline." As each Bhashyakara had to synthetise all the three, and as the three were the work of different Rishis who interpreted the Infinite as they understood the same, there have arisen different schools of Pure Adwaitism, Qualified Adwaitism and Dwaitism. While the first school lays very great stress on ज्ञान and वेदांग the second tries to combine ज्ञानमार्ग with भक्तिमार्ग while the last considers भक्तिमार्ग as the only road to salvation. Each school has its own ideal of मोक्ष and each gives guidance and support to persons who had attained a mental and spiritual stage that enable them to understand the teachings of that one school only. The dissertations and logical quibbles of the various Bhashyakaras remind one of what Bishop Blouhram is made to say by Browning in another connection. The Bishop says:—

"What have we then gained by our unbelief,
But a life of doubt diversified by faith,
For one of faith diversified by doubt
We called the chess board white—we call it black."

As the Bishop had his moments of faith and doubt, we all have our moods of ज्ञान and भक्ति and even the Acharyas had the same, the only difference being that while one called his chess board ज्ञानमार्ग the other called it भक्तिमार्ग. These two, ज्ञान and भक्ति, are so interdependent that we have to depend upon both as if they are the two wheels of our chariot moving towards मोक्ष. So long as we are in the world and of it, a third wheel of कर्म has to be added to the chariot till we are in the सुहृत्स्थान. We can give it up when we enter the वानप्रस्थान. Whilst the high philosophy of प्रस्थानत्रय satisfied the religious needs of the intellectuals, who had reached a certain state of spiritual development, there were many others to whom the teachings of the Vedanta were unintelligible and yet who were in great need of some teaching to enable them to rise spiritually. In the case of Hinduism the problem was more complex as the gradation was not only intellectual and spiritual but was also racial. The greater the credit to the religious preachers of Hinduism in so far as they were able to cater for the spiritual needs of all. As Prof. Radhakrishnan has beautifully put it, "Hinduism accepts all religious notions as facts, and arranges them in the order of their more or less intrinsic significance. The bewildering polytheism of the masses, and the uncompromising monotheism of the classes are for the Hindu the expressions of one and the same force at different levels. Hinduism insists on our working steadily upwards and improving our knowledge of God." Hinduism does not believe as the Semitic religions do, viz., that acceptance of a particular religious personality or formula is essential for the salvation of a man's soul and that its non-acceptance means the loss of the soul for ever. Not having such a static exclusive basis Hinduism has never become a proselytizing religion. As Shree Krishna says in Bhagvad Gita: "whichever God a man worships or whatever religious rituals he practises all that worship reach me." In Hinduism it can truly be said "All roads lead to Calvary."

(To be concluded)

"PRACTICAL IMPLICATIONS OF SATYAGRAHA."

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.
Sir.

I take exception to the remark in the article "Practical Implications of Satyagraha" by J. C. Kumarappa with reference to the stamping out of malaria. I quote: "America has wiped out this disease from one of the most malarial regions of the world in a few years. But what solicitude can we expect of bureaucrats who work to qualify for furloughs and pensions."

As a Bombay resident I have a vivid recollection of a recent malaria campaign in this city which was opposed tooth and nail by the religious susceptibilities of both Hindus and Parsis. If America had had to meet such opposition in Panama, I am doubtful as to whether that region would be malaria free today. In my opinion, hearty co-operation on the part of the people is sadly needed these days, remembering the toll of human lives lost in this city alone. Mr. Gandhi has said that the key to Swaraj is unselfishness—thought for others. Why could not a fresh start be made with regard to stamping out this disease in Bombay?

I have lived for thirty-two years in India in loving service among lepers, women and children, and have seen much in the way of reforms to rejoice my heart, especially among the women.

I sat thrilled in the opening meeting of the All-India Women's Conference some two years ago, remembering the storm of disapproval with the idea of purdha parties, which I heard of on my first arrival in India.

A purdha lady in Ludhiana many years ago made a curious request—could she be smuggled up to the roof of the Zenana Mission house to watch the Indian Christians come out of church.

As they did so, she drew a deep breath and said in an awe-struck voice: "The women are walking side by side with the men!" She had heard this in her Zenana but refused to believe until she had seen it.

Dear Indian sisters, today is the day of great opportunities for you and many of us are praying for and expecting great things from you. Who knows? Perhaps yours is the task of taking the lead in cleaning up our city, not of malaria only but other things as well, which are eating into the very vitals of your fellow creatures.

INTERESTED.

A COLLEGE FOR WOMEN.

A meeting of the All India Women's Education Fund Association was held on the 17th March at the University Convocation Hall, New Delhi with Lady Irwin in the chair. There was a large gathering including the Ruling Chiefs, members of the Council of State and the Legislative Assembly and distinguished ladies and gentlemen.

Her Excellency as president of the Association in her opening remarks said that they had met to discuss a matter of vital importance to the country—one which was in the thoughts and on the lips of all thinking men and women, the education of women and girls of India. The presence of the Nawab of Bhopal, she said, reminded all of the great part the late Begum Mother took in the cause, and it was from her that inspiration had been drawn.

Referring to the special committee, she said that the committee had evolved a scheme for a college which had been approved by the governing body and the general meeting. She said that it was proposed to establish a central college for All-India at Delhi to do research work in educational methods and to impart training in home science. The training of teachers and a school formed essential parts of the institution. The college would provide suitable and adequate education for girls, which was based on three principles, namely that any new scheme must be founded on a definite and systematic research into the culture conditions and laws of development of children for whom it was intended, that the subjects which were taught must be revised in the light of research, and that home science by which was meant the "science of living" should become the basis of any system of girls' education.

13 LAKHS REQUIRED.

The Nawab of Bhopal next addressed the house in Urdu. He appealed to his colleagues and others present to help the cause. He said Rs. 14 lakhs was required for the scheme which was no big affair to collect before the departure of her Excellency.

Begum Shah Nawaz spoke next. She traced the history of the Association. She said that the sphere of women should not only be their home but civil and civic duties. She said they should not find fault only but sit and devise a system based on the combined modern and old system to evolve a better one. The system thus evolved would bear as good results as the meeting of Mahatma Gandhi and Lord Irwin.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir (junior) said that if only boys were educated and not girls the former's education would be retarded. He mainly laid stress on child psychology and the missionary work to educate villagers.

A PORTIO SPEECH.

Mrs. Naidu summed up the speeches in her poetic style. She said that the two qualities imbibed by the late Begum of Bhopal could be summed up in "the ink of scholars is more precious than the blood of martyrs," and "seeking knowledge from the cradle to the grave."

Referring to her Excellency, Mrs. Naidu said her modesty knew how to open the purse string of the Princes.

She was loudly applauded when she said that home science meant a successful management of one's husband. In a figurative speech she clearly depicted how a tender lady, with a flute in her hand, was a source of inspiration, faith and hope for a strong man with a sword in his hand.

Thereafter Mr. G. Kaula, treasurer of the Association, announced an anonymous subscription from a lady amounting to Rs. 8,000 and a like amount after selling her jewellery.

Other subscriptions promised are the Maharaja of Jaipur, Rs. 8,000; Sir Victor Sassoon, Rs. 50,000; the Nizam of Hyderabad, 2 lakhs; the Chief of Sangli, Rs. 2,500; the Raja Sabib of Kellongode, Rs. 500; Lala Shriram, Rs. 500.

Mr. Kaula also announced that it was hoped that the flag staff house would be allowed to be used for 18 months.

Votes of thanks were proposed by the Rani of Gwalior in suitable terms.

LADY ABDUL QUADIR ON THE INDIAN WOMEN'S MOVEMENT.

Lady Abdul Quadir, as President of the Reception Committee welcomed the delegates to the All-India Women's Conference held in Lahore last January. The full text of her address is published in the March Number of Stri Dharma, from which we make the following excerpts :

This Conference is but one of the forms in which Indian womanhood has commenced asserting itself. Indian women, whose talents and energies had been lying dormant for ages, have shaken off their slumber and have in one jump, as it were, taken up a position in the front line of educational, social and political activities. They claim first of all to have a voice in their own education and in that of their children. They asserted this right at their first gathering in 1927, under the presidency of the Maharani of Baroda. They reiterated the same demand at Delhi in 1928, with the late lamented Begum-Mother of Bhopal in the Chair. This movement has been fortunate in getting the distinguished patronage of the Vicereine of India, Her Excellency Lady Irwin, in whom we have a sincere friend and well-wisher of Indian women. Her Excellency's continuous interest in the work of the Conference is a great asset for us. At Patna in 1929, with the Dowager Rani of Mandi as President, this Conference not only emphasised the necessity of the participation of women in guiding the course of education but introduced social reform as a necessary companion of educational progress. In January last this assembly passed a number of important resolutions on educational and social reform, under the presidency of our distinguished countrywoman, Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, who is known for her learning and eloquence as well as for her selfless devotion to the good of her country. We have this year called to the chair another worker in the cause of education and reform—Dr. Mathulakshmi Reddi, who is an embodiment of the spirit which this Conference stands for. She was one of the members of the Hartog Committee, which toured throughout India to study the educational problem in all its aspects and to suggest the best methods of improving our educational system and making it suitable for the changing requirements of modern times and the impending reforms in the political constitution of our country. She comes to us as an expert adviser on the practical questions which we have to face. By selecting her for the performance of the duties of the President of our Conference, we have shown that we have advanced to a stage where we have to come to actual grips with the realities of our problems. Dr. Reddi has not only filled with distinction the role of an educational expert but has also held a prominent position in politics by working creditably as a Deputy President of the Madras Legislative Council, thus demonstrating the capabilities of Indian women, if they are given adequate opportunities of showing their worth. I am sure our Conference will be benefitted by her able guidance and her presence in our midst will strengthen the hands of fellowship between the North and the South of India. It is interesting to note that the two ladies who are working as Delegates at the Round Table Conference hail from the North and the South. Madras is represented by Mrs. Subbarayan while the Punjab is represented by our friend Begum Shah Nawaz both of whom have eloquently advocated the cause of India at the Round Table Conference and demonstrated the capabilities of showing their worth.

Sisters, I do not propose to appropriate to myself the functions of the President by dwelling on the various important topics which are going to engage our attention during the present session of the Conference. It is for her to give us the lead on those subjects. I would, however, make just a passing reference to two of the topics that are coming up for discussion. One of them is the question of Pardah. The Conference has already passed resolutions against Pardah on the ground that it hampers the spread of education and is detrimental to the health of women. Though I have been observing Pardah all my life I cannot say that the objections mentioned above are without force. I also agree with the view expressed by the late Begum-Mother of Bhopal in her memorable address at the Delhi meeting, that the custom of Pardah, as obtaining among certain classes of Indian Musalmans is far beyond anything enjoined by Islam or sanctioned by the practice of other Islamic countries, and requires modification, according to the needs of the day and the rapidly changing times. I may be permitted, however, to make one practical suggestion to those who are anxious to bring about any reform in the existing system, and that is, that they must not be impatient as to the pace with which the necessary change is coming. Women who are educated and advanced should lend a helping hand to their less advanced sisters with womanly sympathy and understanding and enable them gradually to take a proper share in the performance of their civic duties. I regard it as a hopeful augury for our future that among those who constitute your Reception Committee there are a fairly large number of women who observe Pardah but who are willing to take an intelligent interest in your proceedings and to join their sisters in the good work they are doing.

Another question to which I wish to refer briefly is the prevention of child marriage. There can be no two opinions on the merits of this question. We are all agreed that the custom of marrying boys and girls when they are very young is harmful and should be stopped. Opinion has been divided, however, as to the means to be adopted to achieve this end. One school of thought insisted on securing the required reform by persuasion. Another school advocated legislation and got it when the Sarda Act was passed. This Conference has lent its support to that Act in the past and is likely to do so again. I notice that there has been some misunderstanding in the Muslim Press in Lahore about the tabling of a resolution in this Conference in favour of the Sarda Act. I want to take this opportunity of saying a word on this subject, both to the Conference and to our friends of the Muslim Press. My suggestion to the Conference is that it would do well to use the influence of all its members and helpers in creating a strong public opinion against child marriage itself, instead of laying emphasis on the law that has already been passed. Public opinion can have effect even without the law but the law is not of much use without public opinion. Lady Tata in her Address, at the 4th session of this Conference, talking of a kindred subject, admirably expressed the above view and I can hardly do better than recommend her words to your attention. She said: "Unless there is a strong public opinion behind the law, it is liable to become more or less a dead letter, or, what is worse, become an instrument of persecution, blackmail and other evils."

To my Muslim brethren I would say that, though I can appreciate your point of view, I cannot admire the attitude which insists on forcing one's opinion on others. I know that you recognize the evils of child marriage as much as any other community does, and are in favour of the principle underlying the Act in question, but you have a conscientious objection to the interference of the legislature with anything on which you have pre-existing rules of conduct in your religion. You have urged these objections very forcibly, but you are not justified in criticising the decision of a society which represents many classes and creeds besides your own, if its majority expresses their views in favour of the new law, nor should it be supposed that any such resolution necessarily compromises the position of such Muslim members of the Conference as may share the conscientious objections of their community. This Conference is, after all, an advisory body suggesting what it considers good for the advancement of women and its resolutions are recommendations. It is open to every thinking man and woman to adopt what suits him and to leave alone what does not appeal to him, instead of adversely criticising the movement and discouraging an institution which is full of promise for the future welfare of our Motherland.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Benares Hindu University Temple:—Never before in the annals of Universities, was there such a grand and distinguished assemblage of Sadhus, Brahmins and scholars as was witnessed last week when His Holiness "Taponidhi" Krishnaram Swami laid the foundation stone of the University Temple in the University ground. The ceremony of the foundation stone called "Maharudra Yajna" which, lasting for six days had transformed the University into a veritable place of hermitage terminated to-day after a highly elaborate length of rituals, worship and prayers. The "Yajna" was conducted by Pandit Anantaram Shastri and Shri Gyatro Maharaj with the help of 40 vedic Brahmins. A pandal accommodating 2,000 persons was specially constructed for the occasion and long before the scheduled time (11 a.m.) people began to pour in from all parts of the city so that before 10 o'clock, every inch of the available space was occupied. There was also a large influx of visitors from Calcutta, Bombay and Cawnpore. Excitement ran high among the ladies when His Holiness "Taponidhi" was announced by the heralds and with light, quick steps, entered the naked figure of the Mahatma loaded with heavy garlands led by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Principal Dhruva of the Arts College. After His Holiness was seated on a dais, S. J. Shiv Narayan Pande, Principal of the University Music College, sang a welcome song with a band of choruses which was highly appreciated. Mahamahopadhyay Pramatha Nath Tarkabhusan and Pandit Hari Ram Pandey then stood up and each delivered an address in Sanskrit invoking special felicitations of goddess Saraswati on the auspicious occasion. Calling upon His Holiness to lay the foundation stone of the Temple, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya gave a short account of the origin and progress of the scheme. He said that the idea of building the temple was conceived as far back as 1911 when the foundation stone of the University was first laid. Due to various reasons, the idea could not materialise. The chief reason among them was that he could not find a man who by dint of learning, piety and detachment was eminently fitted to lay the foundation stone. His thought first went to Shri Sankaracharya of the Srinagar Math, Kashmir, but unfortunately he died. Next he thought that the laying of the stone which was fraught with immense consequences in their spiritual life should be done by a great Hindu prince and accordingly he instinctively thought of Fateh Singh, Maharana of Udaipur, who was a direct descendant of Rana Pratap. But he, too, died. For 5 years he had been looking for a great personage worthy of the honour when his esteemed friend Goswami Ganesha Dutt, General Secretary, All-India Sanatan Dharma Mahasabha, suggested the name of "Taponidhi." Panditji did not for a moment, cherish the hope that a great Sanyasi as he was with an unbroken record of silence for 12 years and living in the region of eternal snow without a clothing on his body, would condescend to come but the enthusiasm of his friend had wrought the miracle. The fact that "Taponidhi" had come pointed unmistakably to the conclusion that the function had received the blessing of God. Amid shouts of Mahatma "Taponidhi ki jai," His Holiness then laid the foundation stone and slowly went out of the pandal. It is understood three temples will be constructed and the estimated cost is about Rs. 6 lakhs out of which Rs. 1 lakh had been paid by the present Maharajahdiraja of Darbhanga. The temples will not only be places of orthodox worship but also great seats of Oriental studies and culture like the Nalanda and the Taxila of old times.

Sri Ramakrishna Birthday Anniversary:—We are asked to announce that the ninety-sixth Birthday Anniversary of Bhagwan Sri Ramakrishna will be celebrated at the Ramakrishna Ashram, Khar, on Sunday the 29th March 1931.

Poultry Exhibition at Ramanathapuram:—The Publicity Secretary Y. M. O. A. Calcutta, writes: A Poultry Exhibition, held in the public gardens of Hyderabad, was organized by the Y. M. O. A. Rural Reconstruction Centre at Ramanathapuram at the request of H. E. H. the Nizam's Government. Among the distinguished visitors were H. E. H. the Nizam and his Prime Minister, the Crown Prince and other members of the royal family, and the daily attendance of the general public men, women and children numbered five or six thousand. The Exhibition was open daily for a week, February 24 to March 2, one afternoon and evening being reserved for ladies, and sometimes the secretary was kept on duty as late as 9 or 9-30 answering the questions of visitors who wanted information in English, Telugu, Tamil and Urdu. Sections of the Exhibition were devoted to model poultry appliances, to feeds and medicines for poultry, to English eggs weighed in the balance with country eggs, to methods of preserving, etc. A curious exhibit was a collection of deformed chickens, one for example with four legs and another with two tails shown to illustrate the danger of mating fowls from the same brood; while in contrast with these another section displayed some of the finest fowls Black Minorcas, White Leghorns and Rhode Islands. Demonstrations were given in the afternoons, when members of the audience were trained in such operations as castrating country cockerels and treating fowls suffering from various diseases; and in the evenings lantern lectures on scientific poultry keeping were given by the secretary from slides prepared by the Y. M. O. A. for H. E. H. the Nizam's Government. The Exhibition aroused great interest, and as a result a number of local poultry-keepers are going to take a course of several months practical training at the Y. M. O. A. Rural Reconstruction centre at Ramanathapuram.

Retrenchment Committee:—The Director of Information, Bombay writes:—In pursuance of an announcement recently made in the Bombay Legislative Council the Government of Bombay have appointed a Retrenchment Committee consisting of the following gentlemen to enquire into the possibility of reducing provincial expenditure. Official Members:—Honourable Sardar Sir Rustom Vakil, Kt. (Chairman) and Mr. G. Wiles, O.S.I., O.I.E., I.O.S. Non-official Members:—Mr. J. Humphrey, O.B.E., Khan Bahadur Allahabaksh Haji Mahomed Umar, M. Hoosenally Mr. Bahimtools, Rao Bahadur D. R. Patil, Mr. P. R. Chikodi, and Mr. B. S. Kamat. Mr. G. B. Phanse, Assistant Secretary, Finance Department, is appointed to act as Secretary to the Committee.

Farmers' Fair:—A correspondent writes: A three days farmers' Fair will be held at the Allahabad Agricultural Institute, beginning on April 15. There will be daily demonstrations in different phases of agriculture. For those interested in power farming, there will be demonstrations of tractor drawn implements, as well as of hand and power pumps. Bullock drawn implements and methods suitable to the small farm will also be shown daily. The Institute dairy will be open to inspection, with special exhibitions. A milking machine will be demonstrated night and morning. In addition there will be lectures on agricultural subjects during the day, and each evening an address will be given by some prominent speaker. The programme will be presented in both English and Hindustani, to provide for all classes of visitors. The general public is cordially invited to attend any or all of the sessions.

ADVERTISEMENTS

WOMAN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription.	Inland	...	Rs. 2-3-0	V.P.P.
"	Foreign	...	" 2-8-0	Post free.
	Single Copy	...	0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

For Hospital in rural area (Hindi-speaking) Christian woman Physician or Sub-Assistant Surgeon. Apply with references etc., to (Miss) M. A. COLTART, Hat Piplia, Via Indore, Central India.

WANTED.

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Master's Classes. Apply with 2 annas stamp to:— Imperial Telegraph College,
Delhi.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of
OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BULLION EXCHANGE.
(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)
BANDEA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts" opened on favourable terms. Rules on application. The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustee business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.
(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadl, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
Sheeth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent, Ahmedabad).
Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq., M.A., LL.B.
Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
Raj Ratna Bhalal Dajibhai Amin B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alombic Chemical Works, Baroda).
Sheeth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Sar Suba, Baroda State, Baroda.
Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

O. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY
DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 8/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulia (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondaticha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nashik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Palghar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akshi (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Virangam (District Ahmedabad).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorized Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay
Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate,
TRIVANDRUM,

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :—

MESSRS. RATTAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJAN PAIN BALM PRODUCES BEST RESULTS

IN
Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra—
AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

IT IS YOURS

A SAFE And Satisfying A Perfect & Pleasing TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch :—
KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. a. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

" " Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed.)

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1928 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,

MADRAS.

H. K. H., The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS,

SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO.

332, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 62.

NO NO NANETTE

10 Parts, featuring

ALEXANDER GRAY, BERNICE CLAIRE, LOUISE FAZENDA & LUCIAN LITTLEFIELD.

A First National Vitaphone All Talking Singing and Dancing Picture with Technicolour scenes.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 24 and 25. 1 Reel.

ARRIVAL OF DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN CALCUTTA

1 Reel,

Madan Sound News.

MICKEY'S STRATEGY

2 Parts, featuring

MICKEY MCGUIRE

R. K. O. All Talking Comedy.

ONE ROMANTIC NIGHT

8 Parts, featuring

LILLIAN GISH, ROD LA ROCQUE, CONARD NAGEL, MARIE DRESSLER & O. P. HAGIE

United Artists All Talking, Singing & Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

SUNNY SIDE UP

13 Parts, featuring

CHARLES FARRELL AND JANET GAYNOR

A Fox Movietone Musical Comedy.

Time:—3-30, 6-15, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

NO CINEMA SHOWS.

Sat. 5 p. m.—Concert in aid of "Parsi Hoonershala".

9-30 p. m.—Indian Vocal and Instrumental concert by MASTER MANHAR BARVE.

Sun. 5 p. m.—Indian Vocal and Instrumental concert by MASTER MANHAR BARVE.

Mon. 5-30 p. m.—Concert in aid of "Arya Mahila Samaj".

Fri. 5 p. m.—Indian Vocal Concert by MISS SUNDRABAI.

Matinee at all the Theatres on 3rd April (Easter Holidays).

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1931

No. 31.

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Indian and British Interests.	The Congress and After.
The Lahore Execution.	What is Hinduism?
Childish Petulance.	The 45th Indian National Congress.
Cawnpore Riots.	The Ten Greatest Living Men.
An Ill-digested Declaration.	Women's Rights under the Hindu Law.
A Well-merited Rebuff.	"Hinduism and Christianity." News and Views.
N. M. Wadia Charities.
The Karachi Congress.
Mr. S. G. Vaze on the Federal Scheme.

NOTES.

Indian and British Interests:—Lord Irwin's speech at the Chelmsford Club on the 26th March in so far as it is a justification of the agreement with Mahatma Gandhi, was a criticism and condemnation of the policy of the Ordinances which preceded it. "Great Britain," said his Excellency "will delude herself if she does not recognise that beneath all the distinctions of community, class and social circumstances, there is growing an intellectual consciousness, or more truly a consciousness which is very closely akin to what we generally term nationalism." There can be no stronger proof of the mechanical character of the present system than that it should have needed nearly twelve months of incessant conflict between the police and the people—the latter being mostly non-violent—for this truth to penetrate the massive environments of the Viceroy's House. Lord Irwin pointed out that he had himself been an advocate of swadeshi and protection in England and that he could not well oppose the demand for them in India. We agree with his Excellency that there is and can be no conflict between the interests of Great Britain and India or for that matter between those of any two countries, if we do not take a purely pounds and rupees view of "interests." It is no part of Indian nationalism to inflict hardships on the British or any other people. On the contrary, it will be quite agreeable, subject to the paramount claims of the Indian masses steeped in illiteracy and abject poverty being fully satisfied, to do whatever is in its power to help other nations, and the British not the least, to prosper. If British representatives meet Indians with a view to an arrangement which will bring the maximum benefit to both sides, there will be no difficulty in reaching a friendly solution of what appears to be one of the main obstacles in the way of India obtaining full self-government which is the literal meaning of poorna swaraj. Self-government does not mean isolation from the rest of the world but more freedom and opportunities of service to the whole of humanity. Great Britain has been India's political guru and if, as Lord Irwin's speech bids us hope, she acts in the spirit of the true teacher who rejoices to see the pupil making his way in the world, she will earn for herself the respect and gratitude which has always been shown to self-less teachers in this country.

The Lahore Executions:—Lord Irwin explained the reasons which led him to ignore the numerous appeals made to him to commute the sentences of death on Bhagat Singh and his two associates. We entirely agree with his Excellency that it would not have been honest for him to delay the announcement until after the Congress session since he had made up his mind that he could not conscientiously exercise his power of commutation. It is the Viceroy's reasons for not commuting the sentences, that seem to us to be lacking in substance. Lord Irwin argued that there was not a single special feature in these cases which distinguished them from other similar cases, and if he commuted the sentence in them, he would have had, in strict logic, to commute all death sentences. There was one circumstance at least which differentiated the Bhagat Singh trial from others. It was bluntly stated by Dewan Bahadur Rangacharya in the Legislative Assembly as a trial behind the backs of the accused. It was not an ordinary trial in an ordinary Court of Law. Lord Irwin need not be told that special tribunals are repugnant to constitutionalism, and historians have condemned the resort to them as a deviation from the broad path of justice. His Excellency urged that all the appeals which reached him asked not for remission but for commutation, which showed that the public were convinced of the guilt of the condemned men. It might have also meant that appeals for remission would have had less chance of being heeded than those for commutation. But assuming that the men were rightly found guilty of the crime charged against them, it is clear that they acted in a state of mind which may be described as political insanity. In any case, hanging them has made them martyrs and Lord Irwin knows that the blood of martyrs is often the seed of churches. When a whole population asks for mercy to a condemned man, that, to our mind, is itself a sufficient reason to show mercy. Lord Irwin's action is the more curious as in his own country the futility of death sentences has been so far recognised that Parliament recently recommended that for the next five years all death sentences should be commuted as an experimental measure. His Excellency seemed to suggest that Mahatma Gandhi's intercession on behalf of the condemned men was not consistent with his creed of non-violence. On the contrary, it seems to us to be quite consistent with it. Violence does not mean only unofficial violence. It includes also violence by officials under the law. The history of penal legislation has conclusively proved that cruel sentences promote crime and that humane punishments are an essential factor in diminishing crime.

Childish Petulance:—While we consider that Lord Irwin could have without loss of principle commuted the sentences and, thereby, secured a measure of gratitude from the public, we cannot help regarding the hostile demonstrations against Mahatma Gandhi in Karachi and elsewhere as an exhibition of childish petulance. In an organization, if anybody chooses to detach himself from the main body and take a line of his own in opposition to the accepted policy, however excellent his motives may be, the main body is not to be blamed for any consequences that may befall the seceder. Bhagat Singh and his friends did not expect any support from the Congress or Mahatma Gandhi and would not have blamed it or him for not interceding on their behalf with Government. The artificial character of the demonstrations against Mahatma Gandhi was exposed by the fact that the All-India Congress Committee without dissent accepted the Gandhi-Irwin agreement, and nominated Mahatmaji as the head of the deputation to the Round Table Conference with full powers to negotiate a settlement. The Congress in its plenary session on Tuesday ratified this decision.

Cawnpore Riots:—We are inclined to suspect that the recent outbreaks of communal conflicts in some of the cities in the United Provinces are attempts of rank communalists to prevent the bridging of the gulf which they would keep open lest their occupation be gone. The Cawnpore riots have been amongst the worst and most sanguinary of recent years. They were not caused by any religious dispute but owing to the attempt of some admirers of Bhagat Singh and others who were executed at Lahore to compel traders to close their shops as a protest. The facts that the Congress leader Vidyarthi was killed while engaged in the humane work of rescuing Muslims from being murdered and that the number of Mahomedans killed is double of Hindus would suggest, in the absence of their explanation, that the aggressors on this occasion were chiefly Hindus. The Congress has appointed a committee of enquiry which we are sure will report on the facts in an absolutely frank and fearless spirit.

An Ill-digested Declaration:—The Congress would have done well to listen to the pleadings of those who were for postponing consideration of a miscellaneous jumble of ill-digested items which towards its sag end was put forward for acceptance by Pandit Jawharlal Nehru. There are twenty items in all of very unequal importance. Most of them are appropriate subjects of social legislation after adequate enquiry and some of them are much too vague to convey any definite idea of swaraj to the masses which it is their aim to do. One of the items is religious neutrality on the part of the State. We suppose it means that the State should not support any particular religion. This may be the socialistic view but is not the traditional Indian policy which is that the State is the protector of all religions and which is observed in several Indian States at least in name. Religion occupies the central place in Indian thought and for the State to profess to be indifferent to it, is to deprive itself of national character. In this long list, there is no mention of medical relief in villages which is one of the most urgent needs of the time.

A Well-merited Rebuff:—The Subjects Committee of the National Congress did well to reject the draft report of the year's activities drawn up by the General Secretary, Mr. Sri Prakasha, which contained some irresponsible observations regarding the part played by the several provinces and the Indian Press. Mr. Sri Prakasha withdrew the remarks relating to provinces, but refused to withdraw the aspersion against the Press, which seems to have been particularly offensive. Pandit Jawharlal Nehru backed him, declaring that the rejection of the draft would mean a censure of the Working Committee. This familiar device of the Minister in a tight corner, did not satisfy the Committee which threw out the Report by a large majority. What was the offence of the Press which called forth Mr. Sri Prakasha's censure? When the Press Ordinance was promulgated last year, a conference of journalists held in Bombay, after careful consideration, decided that it will not do to close down newspapers merely because of the Ordinance and a deputation waited on the Viceroy consisting of Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar and Mr. C. Y. Chintamani and succeeded in moderating the overzeal shown by some Provincial Administrations in applying the provisions of the Ordinance. Shortly after the conference, the Working Committee of the Congress, in complete disregard of its resolution, issued a ukase that all papers should close down. Apart from the impractical nature of the order—it may be mentioned that "Young India", Mahatma Gandhi's paper, ignored it—it was an ill-considered one and was really an intolerable pretension to dictate to the Press. Government wanted to kill the Press, the Working Committee wanted it to commit suicide. The Congress as a political organisation is entitled to recognition, but interference with the liberty of the Press is no less objectionable from it than from Government. The Press cannot function to the best advantage of the country, if it is to take its orders from the persons—very estimable in their own way—who constitute the Working Committee of the Congress for the time being. The Subjects Committee showed a true appreciation of the freedom of the Press by disallowing the Report.

N. M. Wadia Charities:—The statement of income and expenditure of the N. M. Wadia Charities for 1929-30 received last week, shows that the total income of the Fund was Rs. 6,64,434 and the expenditure Rs. 3,89,709 during the year. More than half of the income was from rents of properties, and the rest except for a small item, from dividends on shares and interest on Government and Municipal bonds. On the expenditure side, Relief of Poor and Destressed accounted for Rs. 90,671, Education Rs. 89,041, Ambolee development Rs. 33,811, Hospitals Rs. 62,736 and Natural Calamities Rs. 41,010. Maintenance of Orphans took Rs. 12,243, and about Rs. 8,000 was spent on marriage of poor maids and Navjote of Parsi boys and girls. Miscellaneous and unspecified Charities were disbursed to the amount of Rs. 51,194. The Wadia Charities are a great and beneficent institution serving the interests of humanity without regard for caste, race or creed.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, APRIL 4, 1931.

THE KARACHI CONGRESS.

The Karachi Congress marks in more ways than one the opening of a new chapter in Indian politics. This change of the time of meeting from Christmas week to March, is a sign of its growing confidence in its power to control events. The end of December was a most inconvenient season to hold the Congress. Intense cold in Northern India and heavy rains in Madras, obliged the proceedings to be conducted amidst much physical discomfort. But for full forty-five years, the leaders went on helplessly holding the Congress sessions in December. The reason was that they felt that at no other time of the year would politically-minded Indians find it convenient to attend the Congress. Many Congressmen were lawyers and the Christmas holidays were the only time they could spare for political work. The capture of the Congress by non-co-operators changed fundamentally the position of politics in national life. The leaders of the Congress thenceforth were men whose sole pre-occupation was politics. Most of the lawyers among them had given up practice or only practised in the Courts when their political engagements permitted their doing so. Another development which totally changed the character of Indian politics, is the advent of commercial men to leadership. The trading community did not take much interest in politics and prior to non-co-operation days, commercial men did little more for it than to submit themselves to the levy of a contribution towards the expenses of holding the Congress when it happened to be held in their town or province. The creation of an independent class of political leaders and workers, during the last ten years, has made it possible for Congress to fix its own time for its sessions, instead of waiting for vacations of the law courts and educational institutions. The method of work of the Congress has also changed. In the old days, very little work was done during the year after the annual sessions. The annual sessions nowadays have only a demonstrative value. Even the All-India Congress Committee has within the last two years ceased to have the importance it once possessed. The Working Committee of the Congress has become a sort of cabinet which has full control of policy as it has the sole right of interpreting the resolutions of the Congress. The evolution of the Congress constitution within recent years is of considerable interest as foreshadowing the kind of constitution which the country may evolve for itself when free to do so.

In keeping with these changes in its constitution and mode of working, the length and character of addresses and speeches at the Congress have undergone transformation. Nobody attends Congress nowadays to admire the eloquence of a Surendranath Banerji or Pherozeshah Mehta. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya is the only representative living of the old school of political orators. Congress speeches nowadays are brief, which in itself is no small gain. Both the Chairman of the Reception Committee, Dr. Choithram P. Gidwani, and the President, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, set an excellent example in this respect. Dr. Choithram's address may, indeed, be said to be a harmonious combination of the old and new schools of Congress speaking. It was excellent as a literary effort and was marked by sound judgment and sober statement. Perhaps, the most striking feature of Dr. Choithram's address was the omission of a reference to the burning local topic, the separation of Sind. The Congress was a guest in Sind, and hospitality required that the host should not distress his guest with a recital of his own grievances. It was proof of the fine feeling which runs like a golden thread throughout Dr. Choithram's address. The presidential address was a simple, direct utterance such as the public expect from Sardar Vallabhbhai. We have seen some disappointment expressed in upcountry papers on the ground that the address but echoed Mahatma Gandhi's opinions. Mahatma's opinions themselves are to a large extent founded on the Sardar's experience and estimate of the strength and resources of the national movement. There is nothing strange in his expressing opinions which he has had a large hand in forming. And there is an advantage. Sardar Vallabhbhai is one of the few men among present-day Congress leaders who has given practical proof of possessing administrative capacity. His work as President of the Ahmedabad Municipality, extorted high praise from the Bombay Government and the signal success which attended his Bardoli campaign against over-assessment was entirely due to his mastery of facts and firmness in refusing to be moved an inch from the grounds on which he based his protest. It is due to these qualities that he enjoys and exercises his great influence with peasantry of Gujarat. His emphatic endorsement of the Delhi Pact is, in our opinion, almost as important as the conclusion of the Pact. His clear exposition of the several clauses of the Pact, what they mean and what they do not mean, will be welcomed by many who have been rather confused by the different interpretations of other commentators with a position in the Congress organization.

MR. S. G. VAZE ON THE FEDERAL SCHEME.

The address which Mr. S. G. Vaze delivered as president of the Decan States' People's Conference at Poona on March 24 is remarkable both for its illuminating analysis of the Federal Scheme adumbrated in London and his statement of the circumstances in which it had to be accepted by the British Indian Delegation. It was the Simon Commission and not, as Mr. Vaze said, the Princes that put about the theory that no advance in constitution was possible except on a federal basis, and the Commission did this in the belief that the Princes would not agree to a Federation with the surrender of their powers which it involved. The Prime Minister said in his speech that he was prepared to give responsibility in the Central Government even without a federation, but other British delegates were opposed unless the Princes were somehow persuaded to join and prevent, as Mr. Vaze bluntly put it, the Congress party in dominating the Central Government and Legislature. To genuine federalism which is an organic union of functions, the Princes would not agree. Mr. Vaze had no difficulty in showing that the Federation devised in London was only nominal and that in reality the Princes surrendered nothing which they had not already parted with to the Government of India, while they got the right of nominating representatives in the Central Government and Legislature. Mr. Vaze quoted with telling effect Sir Mahomed Shafi's statement in the Federal Structure Sub-Committee that from knowledge gained as a member of the Government of India, he could say that over subjects of common interest, the Princes in practice exercised no manner of control and that they would be making no sacrifice in handing them over to the Federal Government. Mr. Vaze was very critical about the attitude of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru who was prepared to humour the Princes to the extent of allowing any of them who were not prepared to grant the elementary rights of citizenship to their subjects, to take themselves out of the operation of the provision of fundamental rights in the Federal Statute! No doubt Sir Tej Bahadur shrewdly thought that no Prince with a regard for his reputation for enlightenment would publicly ask to be exempted from treating his subjects as citizens and not as chattel.

Mr. Vaze said that the British Indian Delegation in London, painfully conscious of their political weakness, were obliged to accept the only kind of Federation the Princes would consent to, namely, a very loose and limited federation in which they must be given an over-weighted representation by their own nominees in the Federal Legislature and virtually also in the Federal Government. He eagerly welcomed by anticipation the decision of the Congress to participate in the further proceeding of the Round Table Conference and trusted that the Congress delegates, conscious of their strength, would not consent to what in effect was the substitution of an Indian autocracy for the British bureaucracy but will press for the institution of genuine democracy. Mr. Vaze is a member of the Servants of India Society and editor of its organ. He was in London during the Round Table Conference and acted as Secretary to the Indian Liberal Deputation. But he is also a subject of an Indian State and is naturally anxious that the subjects of the latter should obtain a federal status which would entitle them to work alongside of British Indians in all national activities. The Federation accepted in London in relation to a genuine Federation, is like Judge Lindsay's companionate marriage to the Hindu sacrament, indissoluble in life and not even by death. In reply to a deputation of States' subjects in Delhi, Mahatma Gandhi declared that the National Congress was for the whole of India and if it did not so far deal with questions internal to States, it was purely from courtesy to the Rulers and he trusted that the Princes would reciprocate by recognising the legitimate claims of their subjects to rights of citizenship same as in British India. In pursuance of this declaration it is announced that a special session of the All-India States' People's Conference will be shortly held under the auspices of the National Congress to formulate their demands. This means that, while a formal Federation of States is being discussed, the peoples of British India and the States have already achieved their Federation. It will be impossible henceforth to maintain artificial political barriers between parts of India. Racial and cultural bonds are stronger than political and administrative divergences. It is a mistake to think that all Princes are blind to the signs of the times and that there are not several among them who realise as clearly as their subjects the urgent need for the introduction of constitutionalism in the States.

The actual terms of the resolution accepting the Gandhi-Irwin agreement passed by the Karachi Congress are such as to reassure that body that it was not giving a free hand to Mahatma Gandhi and his associate delegates and that it will have the right and the power to reject any settlement which they may agree to unless it complied with those terms. Pandit Jawharlal Nehru who moved the resolution made the most of this aspect of it, while some other speakers relied on the need of a united form for overcoming their difficulties and doubts about the pact. The plain truth was stated by the unsophisticated Frontier leader, Khan Abdul Gaffur Khan who said that Frontier men had full confidence in Mahatma Gandhi and his movement and would stand by him till Swaraj was won. This is true of the masses of India and we may be sure that whatever arrangements and adjustments he accepts will be endorsed by the Utkal Congress next year. The presidential address makes it clear that the Congress delegation will have regard for the susceptibilities of all parties while working for the attainment by agreement of poorna swaraj which is correctly interpreted as full self-government and not complete independence. The real significance of the Karachi Congress is the supremacy of Mahatmaji which those opposed to the truce had reluctantly to accept. He will go to London as the accredited spokesman of the whole country, if meanwhile an agreement is reached on Hindu-Moslem differences. There is good reason to hope that too is in sight.

THE CONGRESS AND AFTER.

(CONTRIBUTED).

Mahatma Gandhi has triumphed at Karachi. He has emerged from Congress virtually a dictator with official sanction to speak for the whole nation. To Mr. Gandhi himself the personal aspect of his achievement would be the least important. But in any careful estimate of the events of the last few days, it would be impossible to ignore the part played by the Mahatma's unique personality. His great influence and his wise and tactful leadership have proved the most decisive factors in a difficult situation full of the most unforeseen possibilities. When Mr. Subash Bose made his statement in the Subjects Committee on behalf of the left wing of the Congress, declaring that "the Indian National Congress stands united under the leadership of Mahatma Gandhi," it became clear that whatever opposition might still be forthcoming in the open session, would be only of a nominal character.

The principal business before the Conference was, of course, the endorsement of the Delhi Agreement and the authorisation of Congress participation in the further discussions of the Round Table Conference. The resolution on this question was adopted both in the Subjects Committee and in the open session without any serious opposition. The resolution affirms the main lines of the Congress programme and makes it clear that the Congress goal of "Purna Swaraj" remains intact. It goes on to state that, "in the event of the way being otherwise open to the Congress to be represented at any Conference with representatives of the British Government, the Congress delegates will work for this goal," the delegates being free to accept "such adjustments as may be demonstrably necessary in the interests of India." The goal of independence has been explained at some length by Mr. Vallabhbhai Patel in his Presidential address. Referring to the Lahore resolution, the Congress President pointed out that "independence" did not mean a churlish refusal to associate with Britain. "Independence," he said, "does not exclude the possibility of equal partnership for mutual benefit. If India is to reach her independence through consultation and agreement, it is reasonable to suppose that there will be British association."

This definition of Swaraj would at first sight seem to demand a good deal of explanation, and it was hardly surprising that Mr. Jamnadas Mehta should have found in it matter for cynical comment. But the main point about the resolution is that it gives Mr. Gandhi and other delegates, whom the Working Committee may appoint, what practically amounts to a free hand at the Round Table Conference. Whether the Karachi resolution does in effect amount to a repudiation of past declarations, or not, it certainly launches the Congress on a new line of constructive work based upon the principle of co-operation. As a result of that resolution, the Congress has put itself definitely in the right and has achieved a triumph of common sense and practical statesmanship. In his presidential address, Mr. Patel explained the circumstances in which the Delhi settlement was arrived at. "Had we not accepted the settlement," he said, "we should have put ourselves in the wrong and thereby undone the effect of the sufferings of the past year. Indeed, we had always claimed, as Satyagrahis must claim, to be ready and eager for peace. When, therefore, the way seemed to be open for peace, we took it. In view of the clear demand of the British Indian delegation at the Round Table Conference for full responsibility and in view of the British parties having accepted the position and in view of the appeal made to the Congress by the Premier, the Viceroy, and many of our distinguished countrymen, the Working Committee thought, that if an honourable truce could be arranged, and if it was open to the Congress to press, without any reservation, for what it considered to be the best for the country, the Congress should, if invited, take part in the Conference and attempt to reach an agreed solution of the constitutional issue. This position has now been accepted by the whole body of the Congress, and the Delhi Agreement has been officially endorsed.

It would be futile to pretend that the decisions taken by the Congress at Karachi do not imply a definite modification of its previous attitude. On the other hand, it would be a deliberate misrepresentation of facts to describe the Karachi decisions as amounting to a "surrender." The simple fact is that the Congress has recognised the change in the political situation brought about by decisions of the London Conference. It has also recognised the moral and practical necessity of adopting new methods to deal with a new set of circumstances. In this, there is no departure from the fundamental purpose of Indian nationalism. There is no abandonment of principles, and there is no surrender of position. If anything, the Congress has added vastly to its prestige and strengthened the national position. The Congress delegation will explore to the utmost the possibilities offered by the Round Table Conference and will be free to accept such adjustments or safeguards as will not deviate from the conception of "Purna Swaraj" and as will be in the best interests of India. Far from evading or shirking the question of safeguards, the Congress has faced it in a bold and practical manner. "When power passes from one to the other by agreement," said Mr. Vallabhbhai "there are always safeguards in the interests of the party in need of reparation or help.....But we must have full power to make mistakes. We may gratefully receive British advice and assistance, never dictation."

The keynote to the whole discussions and to the future programme to which Congress now stands committed as a result of the Karachi decisions, was supplied in an inspiring passage in Mr. Patel's speech. "Whilst I would respect", said Mr. Patel "the rights of the landlords, rajas, maharajas and others to the extent that they do not hurt the sweating millions, my interest lies in helping the downtrodden to rise from their state and be on a level with the tallest in the land. Thank God, the gospel of Truth and Non-violence has given these an inkling of their dignity and the power they possess! Much still remains to be done. But let us make up our minds that we exist for them, not they for us. Let us shed our petty rivalries and jealousies, and religious feuds, and let everyone realise that the Congress represents and exists for the toiling millions, and it will become an irresistible power working not for greed or power, but for the sake of common humanity."

Governor's Hospital Fund:—In the course of a speech which he delivered at the annual meeting of the Governor's Hospital Fund on the 24th March, His Excellency Sir Frederick Sykes said: "We all know how heavy already is the burden which the Bombay City Hospitals place on Government finances and how difficult it is to meet the legitimate demands of the mofussil, and I am afraid that so far as I can see, there is very little hope that Government will be able, in the near future, to open any more of the new beds which are now standing empty." Contrast the Government's helplessness with the cheerful spontaneity with which the Congress and other emergency Hospitals were started and maintained during the recent troublous times! The obvious moral is that a movement broadbased upon the people's will can never lack funds or willing workers. While Government is very accessible to receive funds, it becomes inaccessible when the people have representations to make or grievances to be redressed.

WHAT IS HINDUISM?*

BY SIR LALUBHAI SAMALDAS.

(Concluded from the last issue.)

In their desire to satisfy the spiritual cravings of persons who had not reached sufficient intellectual and spiritual height to grasp the Teachings of the Upanishads and Brahma Sutras, the seers created the Smritis and the Puranas. Even the Itihasa—under which term are placed the two great epics, Ramayana and Mahabharata—were originally the creation of two great Rishis—Valmiki and Vyas—supplemented later on by other writers. While the Smritis lay down rules for the guidance of the Hindus in worldly matters, the great epics while narrating two great historical events—the march of the Aryans to the South, and the consolidation of the various races under a righteous Aryan rule—lay down high moral and ethical laws for the observance of the peoples of that age. One of these, the Bhagvad Gita, has become a Divine Book for all ages and for all who seek Truth and Light. It is said:—

सर्वानिषदो गावो दोग्धा गोपाल नन्दनः ।

पाथोवत्सः सुचिभोक्ता दृग्धगीतासुतर् मइत् ॥

Shree Krishna the cowherd, milked the Upanishad cow of sweet nectar like Gita, for the use of calf Arjuna and all wise men. The Puranas treated of cosmogony and cosmography; incarnation of Vishnu, and the description of particular Gods and Goddesses to whose names some of the Puranas are dedicated. Both the cosmogony and cosmography are beyond my understanding. Many others are perhaps in the same category. Attempts have been made to treat both these as symbolical; others have said that the physical structure of our earth has undergone so many alterations since the Puranas were written that we are not at present able to follow and understand the same. Cosmogony however forms a minor part of the Puranas. The major portion consists of the description of work done by the Avatars of Vishnu and other Gods to protect Dharma (Righteousness). Once we grant that there is a Divine Spark in each one of us, it is easy to infer that such a Spark will be brilliant and more powerful in some individuals and at times perhaps some nations than in others, and the Spark is brightest and most effective in some towering personality. It is common to talk of such a person as an Ansha Avatar—a partial Incarnation. Even today Mahatma Gandhi—"the mad Fakir" of Churchill—is looked upon and almost worshipped as an Ansha Avatar by many, and one feels that the masses in India being born and bred in the belief that each extraordinary phenomenon is a manifestation of Divine Power, are carrying that belief to its logical conclusion in taking Mahatma Gandhi as some such manifestation. Saints and Bhaktas of recent times like Chaitanya and Ramkrishna have also been looked upon as Avatars. Such being the mentality of the majority of the Hindus even now viz. dependence on Divine guidance for their daily work, the writers of Puranas must have deemed it necessary to speak to the peoples of their times of the various acts of the Avatars, and thus lead them to walk on the path of righteousness and of service to their brethren. It has been said that people who have faith in such repeated incarnations and different forms of the Supreme Power, can never attain sufficient spiritual height to understand the Teachings of the Upanishads. Though theoretically this criticism appears sound, in actual practice, it will be found that an intelligent villager knows that his village deities are but manifestations of the Highest Brahma, and that when he worships the idol of Krishna or Rama in his village chowra he is not rendering worship to the stone image, but that he uses that image to enable him to concentrate his mind on his Ishta Devta. It will also be found that he understands the Law of Karma which may be called as one of the foundations on which Hinduism is built. An independent, sympathetic inquirer will be satisfied that even the rustic is not a stone-image worshipper nor does he believe in the existence of many Gods as independent creators and rulers of this Universe, but that he believes in them as different manifestations of the Brahma. As Prof. Radhakrishnan puts it, "Hindu thought believes in the evolution of our knowledge of God. Hinduism does not distinguish ideas of God as true or false, adopting one particular idea as the standard for the whole human race. It accepts the fact that mankind seeks its goal of God at various levels and in various directions, and feels sympathy with every stage of the search." Theoretically this is the correct attitude to be adopted by Seers and Thinkers towards the different grades of spiritual and intellectual outlook of men. In practice such an attitude results in tolerance of religious practices and superstitions which have checked the spiritual evolution of the masses. It is the duty of all those who have faith in the Teachings of the Upanishads and the Bhagvad Gita and who are anxious to help their less advanced brethren to march on towards the goal of Moksha to see that religious education of the higher kind is being given to them. The old Acharyas moved about in the country carrying the torch of religious light. The stories of their Digvijayas are given in well-known books. Very few religious preachers are now doing this kind of educational work. The promoters of the Arya Samaj and the Brahmo Samaj did propagandist work with the idea of introducing reforms in Hindu religion. But while Swami Dayanand Saraswati laid stress on the Vedas and Parva Mimansa and did not give importance to the Vedanta of the Upanishads, the Brahmo Samaj leaders laid stress on only one aspect of the teachings of the Upanishads viz., devotion to a Personal God. As the members of the Samaj socially cut themselves from the Hindu field, the work of reform undertaken by the leaders did not appeal to the masses. Swami Vivekananda tried to restore Hinduism to its old pristine purity, but his followers are giving more importance to the social service side of the Swamiji's Teachings. Very little work, it will be seen, has been done to mark off clearly the gradation of the various stages of Hinduism, to remove superstitions and objectionable religious practices that have grown up in certain areas and certain sects and to put the highest ideal of Hinduistic Teachings in plain and bold terms before the masses so that persons of different grades may work up their way to that ideal.

* Being the Anniversary address delivered at the Bombay Prarthana Samaj on Saturday the 14th March.

The method adopted by Hinduism, that of recognizing gradation in spiritual evolution amongst various sections of humanity and of catering for the spiritual needs of each section, is bound to be accepted by all religions that believe in the spiritual evolution of human beings. Religion only then becomes a living and growing force and does not become static or law-bound as in religions which promise salvation only to those who believe in a particular revelation. One has to acknowledge with regret that later day Hindus have forgotten the old ideals and have not made strenuous efforts to lead their spiritually less advanced brethren on the path to salvation. If we Hindus are anxious to keep the banner of Vedantism aloft and make it easy for others to come under that banner, hard work will have to be done to revivify the masses in the old pure Beliefs. Browning has somewhere said,

....."Belief's fire once in us
Makes of all else mere stuff to show itself,
We penetrate our life with such a glow.
As fire lends wood and iron. This turns Steel,
That burns to Ash—all's one, fire proves its power,
For good or ill,.....
But paint a fire, it will not therefore burn."

Let us all, to whatever religions we may belong, ask our inner selves whether it is the real Fire of Belief that is burning within us, or is it merely painted fire and if it is the latter, let us wash off the painted fire and light the genuine one. Let us also make our souls of iron and not allow them to degenerate into wool so that when the fire is lighted they are transformed into pure and glittering steel and not become mere useless ash. May the Para-Brahma by whatever name we may call him help us in our attempts and lead us to Moksha is my sincere and earnest prayer in which I am sure you all will join.

Malabar Special Police Officer Resigned:—
Jamadar T. P. Kumaran Nayar of the Malababar Special Police who was on special duty at Madras in connection with the Civil Disobedience Movement has tendered his resignation as a protest against the execution of Bagat Singh and his two comrades. He left Madras and went to his native place at Puthiyara, Calicut. He belongs to Thekkum palath Pathanyestil house. He is a young man of about 25 and was an officer in the Malabar Special Police for the last 5 years.—The West Coast Reformer.

THE 45th INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL'S ADDRESS.

The Indian National Congress commenced its open Session at Karachi on Sunday the 29th March, with Sirdar Vallabhbhai Patel in the Chair.

After alluding to the great loss the country had sustained by the death of Pandit Motilal Nehru and Maulana Mahomed Ali, and to the execution of young Bhagat Singh, Sukhdev and Rajguru, the Chairman said :

You have called a simple farmer to the highest office to which any one can aspire. I am conscious that your choice of me as the first servant is not so much for what little I might have done, but it is the recognition of the amazing sacrifice made by Gujarat. Out of your generosity you have singled out Gujarat for the honour; but in truth, every province did its utmost during the year of greatest national awakening that we have known in the modern times and, thanks be to God, that awakening was a call to self-purification.

Though there have been aberrations, it is a fact beyond challenge that India has given a singular proof to the world that mass non-violence is no longer an idle dream of a visionary or a mere human longing. It is a solid fact capable of infinite possibilities for a humanity which is groaning for want of faith beneath the weight of violence of which it has almost made a fetish. The greatest proof that our movement was non-violent lies in the fact that the peasants falsified the fears of our worst sceptics. They were described as very difficult to organise for the non-violent action and it is they who stood the test with a bravery and an endurance that was beyond all expectation. The women and the children, too, contributed their great share in the fight. They responded to the call by instinct and played a part which we are too near the event adequately to measure and, I think, it would not be at all wrong to give them the bulk of the credit for the preservation of non-violence and the consequent success of the movement looked at in the light of non-violence. Our struggle is a world-struggle and it is a matter of great satisfaction that the nations of the earth, especially the United States of America have heartened us by their sympathy.

The recent settlement, however, renders it unnecessary to dwell at greater length upon this heroic period in the national life. Your Working Committee has entered into a settlement in anticipation of your approval. You are now invited formally to endorse it. The Committee having accepted it as your accredited representatives, it is not, I take it, open to you to repudiate it but it is open to you to pass a vote of no-confidence in the present Executive and appoint better agents. But whilst it is but meet that I should draw your attention to the constitutional position, I have no doubt whatsoever that you will endorse the settlement which I hold to be perfectly honourable for both the parties. Had we not accepted the settlement we should have put ourselves in the wrong and thereby undone the effect of the sufferings of the past year. Indeed we had always claimed, as the Satyagrahis must claim, to be ready and eager for peace. When, therefore, the way seemed to be open for peace we took it in view of the clear demand on the part of the British Indian delegation at the Round Table Conference for full responsibility and in view of the British parties having accepted the position and in view of the appeal made to the Congress by the Premier, the Viceroy and many of our distinguished countrymen the Working Committee thought that if an honourable truce could be arranged and if it was open to the Congress to press without any reservation for what it considered to be the best for the country the Congress should, if invited, take part in the Conference and attempt to reach an agreed solution of the constitutional issue. If we failed in the attempt and there was no way open but that of suffering, then it was a privilege of which no power on earth could deprive us under the constitution clause of the settlement.

It is open to us to press for "Purna Swaraj," to ask for complete control over defence forces, foreign affairs, finance and fiscal policy and the like. There would be safeguards or reservations or, as late Pandit Motilalji called them, adjustments conceived in our own interest. When the power passes from one to another by agreement there are always safeguards in the interest of the party in need of reparation or help. The continued exploitation of India for close on two centuries renders it necessary for us to seek assistance in several respects from external sources. This we would gladly take from Britain if she is willing to give. Thus we would need military skill and there is no reason why we may not receive English assistance in this direction.

I have taken only one telling illustration out of others that may be suggested. The defence safeguard may, therefore, be the retention of British officers or, as some would say, even privates; but we could never let our defence be controlled by the British. We must have full power to make mistakes. We most gratefully receive British advice, but never dictation. The fact is that the British army in India is an army of occupation. Defence is a misnomer. Frankly the army is for defending the British interests and the British men and women against any internal uprising. I cannot recall a single instance in which the Indian army was required for protection of India to fight a foreign power.

In my opinion, if we need an army, we certainly do not need the octopus we are daily bleeding to support. If the Congress has its way the army will suffer immediate reduction to its desirable proportion. Nor can we divide the financial control with the British Government. The nation cannot grow to its full height if it has not exclusive control over its finance.

We have claimed that many of the charges laid upon India are wholly unjust. We have never suggested the repudiation of a single obligation, but we have asked and must continue to ask for an impartial investigation into the demerits against us wherever we cannot agree. There is no receding from the Lahore resolution of Complete Independence. This Independence does not mean and was not intended to mean a churlish refusal to be associated with Britain or any other power. Independence, therefore, does not exclude the possibility of equal partnership for mutual benefit and dissolvable at the will of either party. If India is to reach her independence through consultation and agreement, it is reasonable to suppose that there will be British association. I am aware that there is a strong body of opinion in the country to the effect that before a partnership could possibly be conceived there must be a period of complete dissociation. I do not belong to that school. It is, as I think, a sign of weakness and of disbelief in human nature.

The Federation is a fascinating idea; but it introduces new embarrassments. The Princes will not listen to the severance, but if they will come in true spirit it will be a great gain. Their association must not be to impede the progress of democracy. I hope, therefore, that they will not take up an uncompromising attitude that may be wholly inconsistent with the spirit of freedom. I wish they would, without any pressure, give us an earnest of their desire to march abreast of the time spirit. Surely the fundamental rights of their subjects should be guaranteed as of the rest of the inhabitants of India. All inhabitants of Federated India should enjoy some common elementary rights and if there are rights there must be a common court to give relief from any encroachment upon them. Nor can it be too much to expect that the subjects of the States should be to an extent directly represented on the Federal Legislature.

As regards Burma, Press censorship has rendered it impossible for us to know the true situation there. Whether Burma should be separate from India or should be the part of a Free India is for the Burmese alone to decide. But it is our concern, indeed it is the world's concern, to see that all sides are heard. It is well known that there is a Unionist Party in Burma. It is as much entitled to freedom of opinion as the Separatists.

But before all else comes the question of Hindu-Muslim or rather communal unity. The position of the Congress was defined at Lahore. The Congress can be no party to any constitution which does not contain a solution of the communal question that is not designed to satisfy the respective parties. As a Hindu I would adopt my predecessor's formula and present the minorities with a Swadeshi fountain pen and paper and let them write out their demands and I should endorse them I know that it is the quickest method, but it requires courage on the part of the Hindus.

What we want is a heart unity not patched up paper unity that will break under the slightest strain. That unity can only come when the majority takes courage in both hands and is prepared to change places with the minority. This would be the highest wisdom whether unity is reached that way or any other. It is becoming plainer day after day that it is useless to attend any conference unless that unity is achieved. The conference may give us an agreement between the British and us. It can perhaps help us to come nearer to the Princes. But it can never enable us to achieve unity that must be hammered into shape by ourselves. The Congress must leave no stone unturned to realise this much-desired end.

It must be clear to all of us that the Congress can be useful for attaining "Purna Swaraj" only to the extent that it has gained power. The past twelve months have undoubtedly given it a power which he who runs may see; but it is not enough and can be easily frittered away by a hasty action or by pride. He is a spendthrift who lives on his capital. We must therefore add to our power. One way to do it is on our part to fulfil to the letter conditions of the settlement; the other is to consolidate our gain. I therefore propose to devote a few lines to this part of our activity.

We have made much headway in the matter of the boycott of foreign cloth. It is a right as well as a duty. Without it impoverished millions of India must continue to starve, for, if cheap foreign cloth continues to be dumped down in villages of India, Charkha cannot flourish. Foreign cloth must, therefore, be banished from the land. It is dear even if it could be obtained free. Millions who starve do so not because there is not enough in the land, but because they have no work during the off season. It is, therefore, the want of easy employment in their own villages that leads to starvation. Incessant propaganda is necessary to rid the country of chronic unemployment which has become second nature with our peasantry. The best propaganda is to do the sacrificial spinning ourselves and wear khadi. The All-India Spinners Association has done much valuable work. But it is for the Congress to create the spinning and 'Khaddar' atmosphere. This to my mind is the best and the most effective propaganda of the boycott.

It has been suggested that the argument against foreign cloth applies to indigenous mill cloth. This is true to an extent, but our mills do not produce all the cloth we need. For years to come they may continue to supply the balance that may be required over and above the hand spun cloth; but even our mills may prove a hindrance if they compete with 'Khaddar' or resort to the questionable devices to push their wares.

( To be concluded )

The Ten Greatest Living Men:—Unity*, Chicago, writes: "Our readers must have long since learned that we have a weakness for "great men" lists. Some of our friends insist upon emphasizing the word "weakness," for they insist that great impersonal forces of political and economic life are far more important than personalities, even the greatest. We have no doubt that this is correct; yet do we shamelessly confess that our interest in great men still remains. Hence our attraction to the attempt of of Rabbi Louis I. Newman of New York, to name "the ten greatest living men"! His list includes Thomas A. Edison, Albert Einstein, Mahatma Gandhi, Rabindranath Tagore, Joseph Stalin, Leon Trotsky, Benito Mussolini, Henry Bergson, Ernest Bloch, and Bernard Shaw. This is a good list. Seven of the ten names—Edison, Einstein, Gandhi, Tagore, Stalin, Trotsky, Shaw—we would endorse without a moment's hesitation. The other three we would at least ponder for a time. Why Bloch, for example? He is a "representative composer," as Rabbi Newman declares, but is there the genius in him that there is in Jan Sibellius, for example, or Richard Strauss? Surely, these two have stood the test of time and international acceptance as Bloch has not. Bergson was undoubtedly the greatest of contemporary philosophers until he burnt out during the war. Has not John Dewey since moved into his place? As for Mussolini, we dissent altogether, and as we must have a place for Roman Rolland in our list of ten, we nominate the great French pacifist as a substitute for the Italian jingo. And what about Sigmund Freud, a man named in Wells' new book as sure of immortality as Darwin? Names absent from Dr. Newman's list are conspicuous. Calvin Coolidge, Herbert Hoover, Ramsay MacDonald, Raymond Poincare—how are the mighty fallen!"

Worshipping by Wireless:—The Publicity Secretary, Y. M. O. A., writes: At the instance of the Swedish Y. M. O. A., the Broadcasting Corporation of Sweden has been making interesting experiments in conducting daily morning worship by wireless. Since the 1st of September morning worship has been broadcast daily consisting of hymn-singing and a brief address of five to seven minutes, conducted in rotation by representatives of the different Churches of Sweden. The service lasts from 7.45 to 8 O'clock, and is designed on Tuesdays, specially for young people and those interested in sport, on Thursdays specially for invalids and the infirm, and on Saturdays for school-children. The first idea was to make only an experiment, but the Broadcasting Corporation received so many letters of appreciation that it decided to continue the experiment, which has now become a regular feature of the wireless programme. Several listeners have spontaneously expressed the desire to contribute towards the expenses of conducting these wireless services, while others have reported that they have bought wireless sets especially with a view to listening to the Services. Wireless listeners in Norway, Denmark, Lithuania and Finland have also expressed their appreciation, and it is proposed to make a similar experiment in Denmark.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW.

( BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI. )

The position assigned to women under the Hindu Law as at present administered by the courts in British India, which is practically the law of the Indian States as well, has long been felt as invidious, harsh, unjust and detrimental to the best interests of the country. The Government of His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore has laid the whole of Hindu India under a deep debt of obligation by wisely responding to this popular feeling as reflects through the Representative Assembly, and undertaking to improve the position of Hindu women directly under its care by a comprehensive scheme of legislation dealing with their rights. There is nothing strange in this. The enlightened State of Mysore has always been a pioneer and exemplar to the rest of the country in its benevolent efforts to ameliorate the condition of its women subjects.

The special Committee appointed to consider this question had the good fortune to have for its Chairman the retired Chief Judge of Mysore Rajadharma-pravina Dewan Bahadur K. S. Chandrasekhara Aiyer, B.A., B.L., who combines with his profound learning and wide culture, not only a genuine love and veneration for India's past but a broad humanity and keen sense of present needs and a burning zeal for social service of which he and his noble lady, the late lamented Srimati Parvati Ammal, have given unstinting proofs to their countrymen in the south. It was also but befitting that there should have been a Hindu lady appointed on the Committee in the person of Mrs. K. D. Rukmini Amma, B.A., the talented Superintendent of the Maharani's College, Mysore, one of the earliest and finest fruit of the enlightened educational policy of the State.

The result of the Committee's labours is before the public now in a printed Report of 284 pages, which explains clearly the present legal position of Hindu women and indicates in what respects that position stands in need of improvement. It embodies also the Committee's recommendations in the form of a Draft Bill of 28 clauses to amend the Hindu Law with this object. Every Hindu in this country who wishes well of his people, whether he is a Mysorean or not, will no doubt gratefully welcome the wealth of reliable information and wise constructive thought which the Report generously brings to his door, and ponder over it with an eager and open mind that he may, in his own sphere and according to his own opportunities, be of some practical service in promoting the progress and happiness of his countrywomen, with whom after all, is bound up inextricably the future welfare and progress of the whole country.

Was woman created to be the slave and chattel of man or to be his equal and comrade? This is the fundamental question which each of us must frankly and clearly answer to himself before he can hope to approach the question of women's rights in the proper spirit. But, unfortunately for humanity, the moral and spiritual aspects of this question, which alone might properly be deemed relevant in any human problem, seem to have been over-powered and obscured from the beginnings of time by the gross physical fact that Man is the stronger animal of the two and that Woman is an Abala (अबला) or strengthless being.

There is scriptural authority for the belief that Man is the consummation of Creation. First, the inanimate elements were produced, vegetable life was created next, and then animal life. And Man, "for whom all things were made," was himself made the last of all. Man is therefore, according to ancient Biblical authority, not only the masterpiece of creation but also its master. "The house being built, the inhabitant appeared; the feast being set forth, the guest was introduced;" says Bishop Horne. It would thus seem that Man's overlordship became inevitable and self-evident from the very fact that he was the last to be created. But according to the Bible story itself there was yet another creation later than the last, and that was Woman. Strictly speaking, therefore, it was Woman who was the consummation and masterpiece of Creation. It was also she who could authoritatively claim, by virtue of what may be called the sacred right of ultimo-geniture, to be the owner and ruler of all previous creation, and entitled as such to hold dominion over Man as well as over the fish of the sea and the beast of the field and the fowl of the air. But Adam, the first man himself, promptly took quite a different view of her position. Although it suited his purpose, in a distressing moment of grave personal crisis, to represent himself as a henpecked husband entirely led by the nose by his wife, he made it quite clear in the same breath that he regarded her as his property, given to him for his convenience. "The woman whom Thou gavest to be with me," was his description of her, even while he pleaded with Lord God in extenuation of his disobedience in eating the forbidden fruit that it was she who gave him of it and he ate it. And the Lord God too cursed her, saying that her husband shall rule over her and that her sorrow shall be greatly multiplied. Human law-givers, all of the male sex, who multiplied in later years when woman was not merely a wife but began to function also as mother, daughter, sister etc, extended her subjection correspondingly and gave authority to Man to rule over her in every capacity.

We in India, however, are not bound to believe in the story of the primeval curse, especially when we find that the so-called virile nations who hold fast to the Bible for their strength have one and all been obliged to surrender to Woman the overlordship which Adam in his simple primitiveness had stontly and successfully asserted in himself. What we, as Hindus, justly proud of our ancient civilisation and our glorious past, may happily recall without shame is the fact that from the immortal aphorisms of the Mimamsa which the sage Jaimini wrote several hundred years before the Christian era, it is clearly deducible that Women were persons in the eye of the law and not regarded as Chattels; that the position of women cannot be likened to that of slaves according to the Vedas, and, if there was anything contrary to it in the Smritis that must be disregarded; that women were held capable of owning or holding property, and in this respect no distinction was drawn between acquired and inherited property; that the wife had co-ownership in the husband's wealth and the husband had co-proprietary right in the wife's wealth, and both had to perform sacrifices jointly; that neither the wife nor the husband could part with property belonging to either without the other's consent, and that a gift made by the husband without the wife's consent was invalid;—that, in short, in the earliest times of which we have any record, the status of women was on a par with that of men, without overlordship or special disabilities on either side by reason of sex. (Vide Report, Pages 37-38).

"HINDUISM AND CHRISTIANITY."

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have read the article, "Hinduism and Christianity" by Mr. Axel Ideström, Stockholm, just concluded in the last Indian Social Reformer. Also your note on page 438 of the 14th March.

As it appears from the writing, Mr. Ideström is not a religious personality, in the meaning it is understood in Sweden, and I imagine, not at all known in religious circles at home. And whatever he may be, he is not a Christian, in the light of a living Christian faith, i.e., (a Christian is a person, who believes in Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world, and the divine authority of the Bible, and who by faith in Christ has accepted His salvation, and in the same faith and in the spirit of Christ, endeavours to follow Him in a life of self-sacrifice and love).

I do not know Mr. Ideström's motive for writing on religions, but I imagine that it is a desire to be popular amongst the people whose guest he is for the present and through whom he can receive some personal benefits. The motive is certainly not religious.

And with regard to the interest for travelling in India, felt by his countrymen, as he has given you to understand, must only be amongst his personal friends or amongst persons of his way of thinking. To others I think, that his article on religions with its errors or merits and without an inward spark of spirituality, as well as his travel, is of very little interest.

This view on religions can therefore not be a Swedish one as representing the country!

Yours, etc.,

A. W. BRANDT.

Cooch-Bihar.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Gandhiji's Visit to N. W. Frontier:—An A. P. message dated Karachi 28th March says that Mahatma Gandhi has received intimation from His Excellency the Viceroy, refusing the request to be allowed to visit the North Western Frontier after the Congress Session.

Gandhiji Compared to G. Washington:—Mr. Douglas Fairbanks who is now in Calcutta in the course of a conversation with the staff and students of the Victoria College and Jenkin's School at Cooch Behar referred to the great work done by George Washington in America as providing comparison with that of Mr. Gandhi in India.

Quarantine Restriction in Transjordia:—The Director of Information, Bombay, writes: The Government of Transjordia have re-enforced quarantine restrictions with regard to passengers arriving from Bombay by air (including pilots personal equipment and freight) from the 22nd January 1931, and the above mentioned passengers are subject to the following measures:—They should be furnished with a certificate of double anti-cholera inoculation with a minimum interval of five days between the two inoculations. These certificates should be dated not less than five days or more than three months from the date of arrival in Transjordia. Passengers provided with a recent certificate of double anti-cholera inoculation will be subject to "surveillance" of five days to count from the time of their departure from Bombay, and their movements during the period should be notified to the competent Sanitary Authorities. Passengers not provided with a certificate of double inoculation will be inoculated and may not leave the aerodrome before the expiration of five days to count from their departure from Bombay.

ADVERTISEMENT

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.
PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription.	Inland	...	Rs. 2-3-0	V.P.P.
"	Foreign	...	" 2-8-0	Post free.
	Single Copy	...	0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Master's Classes. Apply with 2 annas stamp to:—
Imperial Telegraph College,
Delhi.

THE
Central Bank of India Ltd.
SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a

HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT

with us and earn 3½% interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

Branches:

BANDBA.

CALCUTTA.

AHMEDABAD.

POONA.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustee business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsara Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amrell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskar (Mill Agent, Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq., M.A., LL.B.
 Manojlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharastra Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
 Mr. Ratna Bhalal Dajibhai Amin B. A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alombic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Sar Suba, Baroda State, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Musumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26.

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

—101—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondajcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirale ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Paighar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akni (District Solapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Virangam (District Ahmedabad).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 3 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate,
TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

ombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

*Head Office :—*Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJANI PAIN BALM PRODUCE
BEST RESULTS

IN
Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 As. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.
AMRUTANJANI DEPOT.

BOMBAY & MADRAS.

— A SAFE —
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR).

Bombay Branch:—
KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies'
Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs. 2. 5
Subscription (including postage).
Inland ...	5 0 0
" " Foreign ...	5 8 0
Single copy ...	0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you..

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol 2 No. 63.

HAROLD BAUAR

1 Reel,

Playing Polonaise in "A" Flat.

SKELETON DANCE

1 Reel, featuring

SILLY SYMPHONY, A WALT DISNEY COMIC CARTOON.

LET'S GO NATIVE

(JACK OAKIE & JEANETTE MacDONALD).

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 12 and 13. 1 Reel.

JUNO AND THE PAYCOCK

9 Parts, featuring

SARAH OLLGOOD, BARRY FITZGERALD, MARIE O'NEIL, EDWARD
CHAPMAN, CATHELINE O'RAGAN

A British International All Talking Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

DON'T BE JEALOUS

1 Reel, featuring

JOE E. BROWN

A Warner Bros. Vitaphone Talking Play.

STEEPLECHASE

2 Parts, featuring

ANN CHRISTY & ALICE DOLL

Universal Talking Comedy.

CO-OPTIMISTS

8 Parts, featuring an All Star Cast

A New Era British All Talking, Singing and Dancing Musical Revue.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

Sat. Concert by MISS SUNDRABAI at 5 p. m.

Concert by MASTER BARVE at 9-30 p. m.

Sun. Charity Concert by Pearson's Helping Society 9 to 12 noon.

Concert by MASTER BARVE at 5 p. m.

Mon. Concert by MASTER BARVE at 5 p. m.

TUESDAY TO FRIDAY.

DARKNESS TO LIGHT ... .. 8 Parts
(Mrs. BAPSEY SABAWALLA).

MICKEY'S NORTHWEST MOUNTED ... .. 8 Parts.
(MICKEY McGUIRE). R. K. C. Comedy.

CAN-O-BULL CHIEF ... .. 1 Reel.
Art Class Picture Cracker Jack Comedy.

Friday:—6-30 Cinema Show and 9-30 Boxing Tournament.

Matinee at all the Theatres on Monday the 6th Inst. (Bank Holiday).

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—RAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1931

No. 32

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Congress Representation at the Round Table Conference. Language of Desperation. Burma and India. Burmese Opinion. Baseless Insinuation. Hindu Social Adjustment. Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. II.	"A Deplorable Lapse." Capital Punishment. A Missionary's Apologia. Jesus Christ and Mahatma Gandhi. Jesus Christ and the Present Situation in India. The 45th Indian National Congress.
---	--

NOTES.

Congress Representation at the Round Table Conference:—At the end of the Karachi Congress Session Mahatma Gandhi hinted that he was already receiving offers to join the deputation to the Round Table Conference but that the selection would be made later by the Working Committee. The President foreshadowed that the deputation will be largely outside the Working Committee. A still later message stated that selections will not be made until after Mahatma Gandhi met the new Viceroy. The Congress resolution distinctly contemplated that others should be associated with Mahatma Gandhi as members. In view of these announcements the intimation that Mahatma Gandhi will be sole representative of the Congress in the Conference and others will be associated with him only as advisors comes as a surprise. The decision no doubt obviates difficulties incidental to selection which came out sharply in the composition of the new Working Committee. But it is questionable whether representation by a solitary individual, apart from the great strain on Mahatma Gandhi, is consonant with the spirit of the Conference. If all the other parties also followed the example, the Conference will consist of five or six individuals, each with his mandate to press for and accept nothing less than certain specified demands. Mahatma Gandhi even with expert advisers on all subjects cannot possibly do full justice to each at the Conference. It was stated some days back that Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya had received an invitation from the Viceroy and was considering whether to attend the Conference in his personal capacity or as one of the Congress deputation. Now that it has been decided to have only Mahatma Gandhi to represent the Congress the Pandit whose opinions on Indian States, Moslem representation and the British connection are not identical with those of the Congress majority will no doubt accept the invitation personally extended to him. The predilection for dictatorship which has grown up in the Congress during the last twelve months is incompatible with responsible government which the country is striving after.

Language of Desperation:—When ordinarily sensible men resort to violent and abusive language towards those whom they regard rightly or wrongly as their opponents, it may be taken for granted that they find themselves without any logical defence for their own position. The virulent invectives against Hindu Congressmen and Mahatma Gandhi at the Muslim Conference held at Delhi will predispose every impartial observer against the cause sought to be supported by those who indulged in them. Even the President, Moulana Shaukat Ali, no mealy-mouthed critic of those who differ from him, felt obliged to deprecate the spirit of acrimony which pervaded several speeches at the conference. The fact seems to be that the growing strength of anti-communalism among nationalist Mussalmans in all parts of the country, the open adherence of Frontier Muslims to Mahatma Gandhi and the repudiation by the younger generation of the sectarian spirit in politics has driven communal leaders to the verge of despair. Instead of meeting these developments in a reasonable spirit, the speakers at the conference gave free rein to their anger, and everybody knows that an angry man for the time being loses his faculty of reason. We have often pointed out that communal movements have a good as well as an evil side and that it is a mistake to depict communalism as an unmitigated curse. Much constructive social work is due to communal inspiration, though it is true that when communalism takes a political direction it becomes nearly always a destructive force. We must say, while on this subject, that there should be perfect frankness on both sides and complete freedom from mental reservations. To tell Mussalmans in one breath that they have only to formulate their demands for these to be accepted and later explain that this is subject to their agreeing to joint electorates gives reasonable ground of accusation of want of candour. Everybody of course knew that the Congress offer was conditional on joint electorates and that to agree to separate electorates will be to doom Muslim Congressmen, some of whom are men of the highest integrity and capacity, to remain for ever without the political system. All that we contend is that this should have been made plain at the outset and not kept behind to be introduced as a sort of theatrical aside after hopes had been created by the first offer of an apparent clean sheet.

Burma and India:—Indian opinion has been throughout consistent that it is for the Burmese people to decide whether they wished the connection between Burma and India should continue or whether it should be severed. The annexation of Burma was an act of wanton imperialistic aggression. The reasons now advanced by the official advocates of the separation of Burma, are themselves the best proofs of it. It is one of the most discreditable episodes in Anglo-Indian history. The people of India were against the Burmese wars, and they would gladly make restitution to their neighbours for the part which they were forced to play in the destruction of Burmese independence. But there is another way of looking at the question. Evil as were the means by which Burma and India became associated, now that they have lived together for several years, might it not be better for both to hold together and help each other to grow and prosper? Burma and India are not total strangers to each other. Certainly, there are more affinities between them than between Britain and either of them. It appears that the Burmese people are not for separation, not at least so unitedly as the official advocates of that measure have made it appear. Sir Charles Innes, the Governor of Burma, has been the most determined advocate of separation and he went to the Round Table Conference with two of his nominees as representatives of Burma, and was able to get the Conference to accept his views. Unfortunately for him, the so-called rebellion in Burma occurring at the psychological moment has pricked the bubble of his claim to represent the Burmese, and elected members from Burma in the Legislative Assembly had no difficulty in getting passed a resolution moved by U. Kyow Myint asking for a referendum to be taken of Burmese opinion on the question of separation. In a powerful speech, to which Government could give only a perfunctory reply, Mr. Myint exposed the real character of the agitation for separation. Dewan Bahadur Kamaswami Mudaliyar, a delegate to the Round Table Conference, showed that it was wrong to regard the separation issue as accepted, and that it was quite open to be reconsidered if the Burmese people wished it to be done. The scheme of a Federated India was, he urged, newly raised at the Conference and Burmese people should have the opportunity of considering whether they stood to gain more by separation than by forming a unit of the Federation.

Burmese Opinion:—Mr. Maung Maung Ji, a delegate from Burma to the Karachi Congress, has issued the following statement: "I am thankful to all leaders of the Congress specially Mahatma Gandhi for all advice and help they have given to the Burman delegation regarding the question of separation. We are convinced that Burma will enjoy greater freedom and higher international status as an autonomous part of federated India. I desire to correct the wrong notion now existing that the principle of separation is taken as an accepted fact. It is entirely wrong. The principle of separation was only raised at the last Round Table Conference and as the second Round Table Conference is yet to be convened, the principle of separation is still unsettled and is open for general discussion in the plenary session of the Round Table Conference. It is absolutely unfair to the Burmese political associations not to get an opportunity for free expression of their aspirations and to force separation on Burma against the strong public opinion is hardly just. I hope all those who desire to help the two countries to remain together as friends will do their utmost in this direction, for the greatest need of the time is close association of these two countries."

Baseless Insinuation:—The insinuation in Mr. A. W. Brandt's letter published last week that Mr. Idestrom was actuated by a desire to court popularity with the Indian public in writing his article on Hinduism and Christianity, is without a particle of justification. The first part of the article was published on the day that he sailed on his return voyage, and Mr. Idestrom, so far as we know, has no intention of revisiting this country. He has, therefore, nothing to gain by popularity in India. Mr. Brandt is no doubt right in saying that Mr. Idestrom is not a true representative of Swedish Christianity. He did not pretend that he was. His article is all the more valuable as conveying the reasoned conclusions of a thoughtful European who approached his subject without any preconceived bias. We may add that we did not know Mr. Idestrom and had not requested him to write the article. It was, as he wrote to us when sending the manuscript, "written without the thought of publication" and it was at the suggestion of a friend whom he met at Darjeeling that he kindly gave us the privilege of using it in the Reformer.

(Continued from Page 503).

influence was practically negligible, shows that they were not primarily due to the fear of being absorbed by Islam. Mr. Jayaswal's picture of Muslim rule is one-sided. After a short time, Muslim rulers realised that religious toleration was the first condition of their existence. This became an integral part of State policy and when it was departed from, it brought down the Moghul Empire.

Mr. Jayaswal's ideal of future Hindu society is of intense interest. He pictures it as freed from caste and other retarding influences, and as assimilating the other communities including the Mussalman. There should be one code of civil law for all inhabitants of India, based on the principle of equality. "To build up one nation, one society, to be just to every member of society, every citizen of the State, we must have one and the same law for everybody. Religion is a matter of personal faith. Rights should be the affair of society and the State. Religion should cease to dictate laws." The term, Hindu, he pleads, should include every man and woman permanently residing in Hindu land or India. Hinduism effected the great synthesis of Aryan and Dravidian civilizations. The next step is to achieve an even greater synthesis of Hindu, Islamic and Christian civilizations. He holds up to Hindu India a lofty ideal.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER

BOMBAY, APRIL 11, 1931.

HINDU SOCIAL ADJUSTMENT.

Mr. K. P. Jaysawal, the distinguished Hindu scholar and jurist of Patna, delivered a remarkable address on the problem of "Adjustment of our Social Institutions to Modern conditions" before His Highness the Maharaja Gaekwar at Baroda on 3rd March. The address was arranged as a part of the celebrations on the occasion of the Jubilee of the Maharaja's accession and opened fittingly with a heartfelt tribute to the striking lead which Baroda under Sayaji Rao has given in the past in adapting society and the State to modern conditions. Mr. Jaysawal referred to the legislation against child marriage, compulsory education, the regulations regarding the exercise of the priestly function among Hindus and other measures of uplift which the Maharaja introduced in his State. Mr. Jaysawal accorded to the Maharaja the credit of having been the first to associate his subjects in administration. Baroda, however, has allowed other States, notably those of South India, to outstrip her in constitutional progress.

Sir Henry Maine showed that the belief in the unchanging East had no foundation in fact. The East has changed and was changing. But he held, that while changes in the East and, in fact, over the greater part of the world were the outcome of circumstances, only in the north-west corner of Europe were they due to a conscious desire for progress. Maine's knowledge of Indian history was not profound and, indeed, few Indians at that time were better informed in respect of Indian Social Evolution. Thanks chiefly to the pioneer work of Western scholars, the history of India's past became an object of study by Indian scholars of whom Mr. Jaysawal himself is a conspicuous example. As the result of his fuller knowledge, he is able to say that we have a nearly complete record for the last three thousand years of wilful, conscious changes in Hindu society. Mr. Jaysawal cited instances reaching back to the Vedic period of such conscious adjustment to new conditions. The Indian Aryans, he pointed out, at a very early time took into their social and political system non-Aryan races like Andhras. "The other Aryan communities did not let the foreigner into their social system: there he remained a slave or a barbarian, that is, outside the precincts of Aryan society." The great reformer who brought about this reform was, according to Mr. Jaysawal, Visvamitra whose achievement is recorded in the myth which credits him with having created a new heaven. When the caste system grew and threatened to become a danger to society, a succession of thinkers, culminating in Gautama Buddha, sounded the alarm. Gautama, said Mr. Jaysawal, threw open the fourth or sanyas asbham which had been confined to Brahmans till then, to all castes including Sudras. We may now think that this was not a great gain to the Sudras. But we must judge each age by its own ideas, and in Buddha's time there could have been no more striking assertion of the spiritual equality of all men than the admission, not merely in theory but in practice, of the lowest castes to the highest religious status, till then a monopoly of the priestly caste. As a fact, this reform had a tremendous effect on the social system. Intermarriages between the castes became common. Mr. Jaysawal thinks that this reform was first obstructed and then obliterated by the lawyers who would not give the same rights to the children of intermarriages as to those of inter-caste marriages. With great respect to his scholarship, we doubt if there has ever been a case of a social custom being abrogated by the fiat of legal commentators. The jurist is a member of society and draws his inspiration from the ideas prevalent in contemporary society. He is really its mouthpiece for formulating rules which accord with the social intelligence of his contemporaries.

Mr. Jaysawal holds that many of the restrictive customs and conventions of caste were thrown up as a means of self-preservation during the Mahomedan period. The object of these, according to him, was to show to the Mussalman ruler that his political power did not imply social ascendancy. "That", says Mr. Jaysawal, "was the then reply to the programme of intermarriages between Hindus and Mussalmans. Social intercourse with Muslims was penalised by perpetual outcasting. Hindu society in self-preservation adopted this rigid rule, which was not only unknown to its Sastras but was opposed to its previous history and its previous practice. If the Hindu of Muslim India did not do it, if he did not make these new tacit laws for himself, he would have been totally lost, lost like the Buddhists of Java, lost like the Parsi of Persia, and the Buddhist of Central Asia." The Hindu law-giver, then, was acting with a single eye to the preservation of society when he prompted these restrictions. Why should we suppose that he was less mindful of its interests and was actuated by selfish motives before the advent of the Muslim power? To our thinking, the decline of Hindu society began and was in process before the advent of the Mahomedans, which, indeed, was made possible by the disintegration of the State and society. The fact that caste restrictions are more rigid in the South where the Muslim

(Continued in the 2nd column of page 502).

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. II.

(By MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI.)

It is now about twenty-three hundred years since Plato propounded the doctrine of the social and political equality of the sexes. The Rig-Veda of the Hindus had declared many centuries earlier still that "the wife and husband being the equal halves of one substance are equal in every respect." (Book, Hymn 61, Verse 8.) The Vedanta never made a difference between the man-soul and the woman-soul but proclaimed the essential oneness of both with the Supreme. Jaimini, the great expositor of ancient law and scripture, bears witness to the fact that the legal status enjoyed by women in the earliest times was on a par with that of man. It is no wonder that we are proud of our ancient civilization.

But what about the present? We are now advanced well on into the 20th Century, which in common parlance is tantamount to saying that we are living in very civilised times indeed. Talk of the rights of the weaker people to self-determination and to perfect equality with the stronger ones of the earth has become a commonplace of the market. Our national aspirations have risen high and our political ambitions had never been more keen than now. And the timid, retiring, modest, virtuous Hindu woman has proved herself more than man's compeer by her bold initiative and self-less courageous suffering in the great national upheaval of the past twelve months. But do we find her present position in Hindu social economy quite in keeping with the early promise, dignity and sublime beauty of our ancient civilisation? Shocking as it may be to those who have managed to combine an unbending pride in our ancient past with a simple comforting faith in the naturalness, the inevitability and perfect reasonableness of man's selfish domination and claims to preferential treatment over woman, the unpleasant truth must be faced that the way she is treated under the Hindu law as administered at present by the British Courts in India, exhibits an unenviable state of inequity. It may or may not be right to call it barbarism. But it is none the less cruel because it is unconsciously inflicted or unintelligently acquiesced in by our own social polity on the one hand, and, on the other, conscientiously perpetuated in the name of our ancient Religion, Law and Custom, by a self-appointed care-taker who is a thorough stranger to all of them and who is determined to allow nothing to change for the better since what is neither equity nor even commonsense may yet be "good" Hindu law in his opinion.

The Hindu Law Reform Committee of Mysore have taken pains to explain how the ancient law relating to women's rights in India has come to be what it is now. It is unnecessary to repeat what has been ably and convincingly recorded in their valuable Report. It is enough to note that throughout its varying fortunes in the course of its long history as it passed through the hands of great sages and scholarly commentators, the law of the Hindus was but a reflex of "the general practice and the prevailing opinion of their times," quite in harmony with the current requirements of society. But this natural development and responsiveness of the law to the changing needs of a living human community became impossible when the cold hand of a foreign administration took hold of its life-springs, vowing, like Mrs. Micawber, never to desert them. As observed by Mr. Justice Gurudas Bannerji in his "Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhana" quoted in the Report, "the law which was originally administered for the most part by private tribunals was highly elastic, and had gradually grown by the assimilation of new usages and the modification of ancient text law under the guise of interpretation; but its spontaneous growth was suddenly arrested after the administration of the country passed into the hands of the British, and a degree of rigidity was given to it which it never before possessed."

Of all the benevolent trusteeships which British Imperialism was obliged to assume for the effective governance of the Indian people, the one which "secured" to the latter the irrevocable and unavoidable "enjoyment" of pre-British family law and immemorial ancient usage was certainly the most disinterested. But in practice it is also an adroit stroke of statesmanship which ensures perpetual childhood to proud philosophers and keeps them stewing happily in their own juices. By a curious and interesting natural process, the Government have in the very fulfilment of their promise of non-interference, gathered into their own hands all the threads of our social life. The policy of "protecting" our religious and social usages has been carried out with such thoroughness that no room has been left to us for wholesome growth or life within the Hindu community. Hindu law has become "set and crystallised" under existing conditions instead of remaining "fluid and adaptable" as in previous centuries. The list of permissible customs is now practically closed. We can no more make a new custom lawfully hereafter than revive an ancient one which had fallen into disuse by the time the British took possession of our law. The legal hedge is now complete; the courts will not allow us to stray an inch beyond its present bounds.

What has happened is practically this. We had prayed that alien religions and alien laws may not be forced upon us. Our ruler very kindly granted our prayer, and as a sort of corollary took away from us quietly the power of making or changing our own laws. We had humbly represented that we were a weak and helpless people afraid of being devoured by the foreign tiger. The British Government generously undertook to protect us, took very accurate measurements of our size, put us into a strong and close fitting pen, locked the door outside and buried the key deep in their own legislative bureau, vowing never to open the door if they could help.

But new generations have sprung up within the fold and are clamouring for purer air and freer movement. Stagnant life is choking them. A burning desire for growth and expansion, for new adjustments and vigorous self-expression and adventure has seized hold of them. But it is in vain that they beat themselves against the implacable stolid walls of established usage and legal precedent which are cramping and smothering their young lives. In despair therefore they cry out for relief to the only power that holds the key to the situation. And that power sits tight like the Sphinx or the Old man of the Sea.

A "uniform, simple, codified law" is the only cure for the present state of things, as Sir Henry Maine pointed out more than fifty years ago. But there are Hindus in our land professing great love and adoration for India's glorious past, whom the declared British policy of religious non-interference seems to have hypnotised into the belief that the degenerate and misshapen Hindu law of our courts to-day is the embalmed true body of the Sanatana-Dharma of the Rishis which must be preserved intact at any cost for all time. They are accordingly ever on the qui vive to cry out that their religion is undermined if any attempt is made to amend the law so as to remove "the disabilities attached to the female sex in the sphere of family and property rights," because it hits the privileged legal position, amounting at times to unconscionable license, barefaced cruelty and spoliation, enjoyed at present by the stronger sex. And it has of late become simply a question of political tactics and expediency whether the British Government, which knows its own weakness and its own peculiar needs as a foreign government, chooses to cast its decisive voting strength in favour of any proposed reform or against it. The latest performances of the Honourable the Law Member of the India Government indicate unmistakably that our rulers have repented of their shortlived enthusiasm of a year ago for social reform and made common cause again with the reactionary forces in the Indian Legislature which are permanently opposed to change of any kind in the existing family law.

But happily the Government of His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore is for obvious reasons under no such disability or temptation. The Representative Assembly and the people of the State have entire confidence in its motives and its character. Mysore has done much in the past to eradicate social evils like infant marriage and the employment of devadasis and Muearas institutions. It has also "gone far" on the way towards enfranchising women for citizenship. Thoughtful Hindus all over India will gladly echo and confidently endorse the hope expressed by the learned Law Reform Committee that Mysore will have the privilege now of setting an example to other parts of India by achieving "the final emancipation of women from unjust traditional restrictions and civil disabilities."

"A DEPLORABLE LAPSE."

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I always enjoy the Social Reformer and as a lover of India and one who desires her very best good, most always agree with your sentiments; though of course being a former missionary, there are times when we do not see eye to eye, but I wish to endorse every word of your Editorial in the issue of your paper of February 7th just to hand yesterday, entitled "A Deplorable Lapse," in which you deplore the serving of liquor at a banquet given to the British members by the Indian members of the Round Table Conference.

As one who has devoted many years to the cause of prohibition in India and who is now working here to interest people in that phase of the reform movement "over there," I feel that it was a very "deplorable lapse" when such an opportunity for showing the Prohibition sentiment of India was allowed, not only to pass unnoticed but actually scouted by those who certainly should, if they do not, know the strong sentiment among the better people of India in favour of the Prohibition movement in that land.

It is certainly a deplorable thing when leaders of the political life of the country pay little or no attention to the social reform movements which are taking place there, and does not speak any too well for the hopefulness of the future of those movements in the country. It is to be hoped that they will be so stirred by the Reformers of India that such a thing cannot happen again.

Your paper is a very welcome visitor in our home and we are keenly interested in all of the items which appear week by week. May you long continue to publish such an advocate of advancement in our loved India.

Chicago, } Yours, etc.,
March 8th, 1931. } (Miss) ADA REED FERGUSON.

The Bombay Lingayat Samaj:—The Honorary Secretary of the above Samaj sends us the following for publication: "A meeting of all the Bombay Lingayats was held under the Presidentship of Annasaheb G. V. Mokashi, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, High Court, on Saturday 28th March 1931, to form an association. Many resolutions were passed notable among which was to form an association which is to be named as "The Bombay Lingayat Samaj." A Managing Committee consisting of 11 members was formed. The following gentlemen are the office bearers of the above Samaj.—President—Annasaheb G. V. Mokashi, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, High Court, Bombay. Vice-Presidents—Mallikarjunappa Bhatakar and Dharmappa Ullegaddi. Honorary Secretary—Shivashankarappa Virasangappa Jirge. Secretaries—Devagharkar and S. S. Dhokana.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

(By Mr. N. N. MENON).

In this advanced era of human intellect, civilization and culture, no human being, while perceiving and abhorring evil, should approve of the infliction of death sentence upon a fellow human being whatever may be the monstrosity of the crime the victim is guilty of. A mind, which is capable of receiving an accurate intimation of the nature of the pains and sufferings of others cannot be a party to the perpetuation of such a barbarous system and the very fact that a clause is still allowed to remain in the Penal Code of a country is undoubtedly the blackest spot on the beauty of virtue and the sublimity of genius.

Moreover, the reasonableness of taking away one's life for a crime, especially when the commitment of which takes place during a temporary mental derangement, or in a fit of uncontrollable rage, anger or indignation or in the face of extreme provocation, is beyond the realm of human comprehension, because all these are inherent defects of human character capable of being rectified sooner or later after a realisation of the far-reaching effects of such shortcomings in human character. Therefore, what the perpetrator of such a crime requires is a dose of that tonic which will cure him of this mental perversity.

Furthermore, punishment of a crime has certain objects to fulfill and it has no meaning or value if it does not prove to be retributive, deterrent, preventive and reformatory. But capital punishment does not satisfy any of these objects. In fact taking away the life of a criminal is no punishment at all but is only pure vindictiveness. It does not at all serve as a preventive because prevention of crime is best sought to be done by removing the cause and not dealing with effects. Capital punishment in the case of political crimes serves more as an incentive than a preventive. Those who are bent upon committing heinous crimes can never be deterred by such ghastly scenes and others will not dare to do anything of that sort except under the influence of certain passions beyond the control of ordinary human beings, especially of those who are lacking in Divine knowledge hardly obtainable in these days of secular education. In both these classes of people the news or the sight of execution cannot produce the desired effect whereas it is just possible that these men can be rehabilitated and made useful to themselves and to society by abolishing the root cause which breeds crime as a mosquito-pool breeds malaria. Then what is the good of taking away one's life simply because there is a provision for it in the Penal Code empowering the Administrator of Law to inflict such a punishment? Unreasoning obedience to the provisions of Law is no excuse for vindictive sentences.

Mr. G. Bernard Shaw says :

"To punish people satisfies our vindictive instincts. We hurt them for the satisfaction of hurting them, not that two blacks make a white, but that we think that one good black deserves another. The punishment costs money, and harms both us and its victims; but we think it worthwhile because we are built that way. We have the grace to be ashamed of this and invent excuses or nice names for it. We use the retributive instead of vindictive; and we pretend that our ferocity deters people from crime." "Criminologists have long since had to admit that as deterrence is a function not of the severity of a punishment, but of its certainty, and that as certainty cannot be secured, deterrence, though useful as an excuse for vindictiveness, is, as a preventive of crime, a dud."...

Lena Madeson Phillips of New York once said :

"Hanging men, 'burning' them to death in electric chairs, putting them in prisons to rot their lives away, is what I mean by being sentimental in dealing with the crime problem. Proponents of such barbarism accuse advocates of common sense in handling the crime problem with being 'sentimental'. Sentimentality is emotion without the benefit of reason, and hanging men and putting them in prison as a form of punishment is certainly acting without intelligence, dealing with effects rather than with causes. It is sentimentality in a disgusting form."

Mr. Henry Ford says :

"It is wrong to kill a man—everybody agrees to that. It does no good to the man and it does no good to society. Capital punishment is as fundamentally wrong as a cure for crime as charity is wrong as a cure for poverty."

"I am sure capital punishment is not a deterrent to crime. Any man who has reached the point of being willing to kill another does not care whether he himself gets killed. It was only ten years ago we were teaching millions of people to kill."

In pursuance of the decision of the Select Committee of Parliament on Capital Punishment, a bill is shortly to be introduced in the House of Commons abolishing Capital punishment as an experiment for five years and it can be safely predicted that this will be extended indefinitely after the expiry of this provisional period. This decision of the Committee is quite in conformity with the growing strength of enlightened opinion on the subject, but there is no reason for Indians to be jubilant over this; for there is no likelihood of such a measure finding its way into the Indian Legislature under the British regime, because India is a "Dependency" which is itself sufficient justification for the retention of this clause in the Indian Penal Code. The deletion of this clause will imperil the safety of the British Empire and the crime of "Waging War against the King", if not anything else, is sure to increase in its numerical intensity, a crime for which no other punishment will satisfy British Imperialists.

It was while the Select Committee of Parliament was seriously discussing the advisability and desirability of cleaning the British Penal Code of this barbarous penalty, Indian Judiciary was found busy inflicting capital punishment upon blooming Indian youths not for murder, arson, dacoity or any crimes but offences actuated by political convictions. Four respectable persons of Sholapur were hanged. They were not hardened criminals or habitual murderers. They were persons of recognised position and status. They might have been found to be technically guilty in the eyes of Law. Those who knew the circumstances surrounding the whole case were convinced that this was an instance of miscarriage of justice. The King Emperor, the Secretary of State for India, the Viceroy and the Governor of Bombay were all flooded with telegrams from responsible and prominent public institutions and eminent individuals, who could never be accused of having ever betrayed or gone against the wishes of the Bureaucracy in their life time, praying for mercy, but the Government, as usual, turned a deaf ear to such an overwhelming public opinion and executed them without remorse or compunction.

Before the wound upon India by the execution of Sholapur prisoners had hardly healed, a "sincere Viceroy" has preferred to execute Bhagat Singh, Raja Gura and Sukhdev. The "sincere Viceroy" had full knowledge of the feeling prevailing in India against this execution. He knew fully well the nature of the reaction the execution will bring about in the country which is gradually being restored to peace. In spite of all these, he did not hesitate to execute these young men at a time when all were busily engaged in establishing cordial relationship between India and Great Britain.

India is today a sad spectacle for all lovers of humanity. There is no trace of religion, culture or civilisation. Medieval barbarism is in full swing with a vengeance. Such a state of affairs followed by periodical executions as long as British Imperialism is allowed to dominate in India and therefore it is the bounden duty of all social reformers, lovers of humanity, friends of India and England, and all those who desire to bring peace on earth and prosperity among the human race to unite together and fight against Imperialism and Capitalism which are responsible for the woe and misery among the masses.

Children's Aid Society:—The Director of Information, Bombay, writes:—The Managing Committee of the Children's Aid Society wish to make public acknowledgment of the generous gifts and donations received during the present year. Their grateful thanks are, in particular, due to the following:—Her Excellency Lady Irwin (from money received per H. H. the Maharaja of Jeypore), Rs. 4,000, His Excellency Sir Frederick Sykes, Rs. 250, Her Excellency Lady Sykes, Rs. 250, Anonymous (from Poona), Rs. 500, The Hon'ble Sardar Suleiman Cassam Mitha, Rs. 500, Messrs. Parbhodas Jeevandas, Rs. 500, The Chief of Ionalkaranji, Rs. 250, Mr. R. H. Patuk, Rs. 250, Mr. S. Overton, Rs. 150, Mr. Morarji Khatun, Rs. 101, The Pashu Rakshak Mandal, half maund of milk daily, Anonymous—for boys' outings, Rs. 60.

A MISSIONARY'S APOLOGIA.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.
Sir,

As one who has a high regard for your paper and a great respect for its Editor, may I be allowed to offer a criticism on the position you have taken up in regard to Christian Missionary propaganda. At a time of strong national feeling like the present, I can readily understand how difficult it is to take a dispassionate view of things. When all things foreign are suspect, it is not surprising that the "foreign" missionary should become a special target of criticism. I am not concerned with the defence of missionaries. They, like other mortal men, have made mistakes; there have been mistakes of method and sometimes deplorable mistakes of feeling and temper. One cannot defend these things; one can only sorrowfully and humbly acknowledge them.

But the columns of the Reformer have recently contained strictures on what it calls "Proselytising Missions" which tend to bring discredit on Missionary effort per se. In your editorial notes of March 28th, there is a typical instance. In the paragraph in question, Mahatma Gandhi is reported to have said that if missionaries seek to proselytise they should be asked to withdraw; the reason given for this is that "Every nation's religion is as good as any other's." Just now the Mahatma must be nearly harassed to death by persistent interviews, and I doubt whether it is quite fair to accept what is only a reported account of what he said, as his mature and considered judgement on the subject. In any case, Sir, you do endorse this view. If religion is to be nationalised in this way, then of course all missionary work is an impertinence.

On this assumption, not only is Christian missionary work a mistake, but the work of Moslem and Hindu missionaries is also wrong. If "every nation's religion is as good as any other's", how can the work of men like Swami Vivekananda be justified? He thought he had something true to say to the people of the West and enrolled his adherents there into Societies; and of course he had a perfect right to do so. But equally the missionary in India has the right to declare what he believes to be the truth and to secure men's allegiance to it. If the establishment of a Mohammedan Mosque in London is right, the building of a Christian Church in Calcutta is right. But "No" says our Editor "there must be no proselytising." That blessed word 'Proselytise!' What does it mean? Etymologically the word is innocent enough meaning simply "coming to." But the word has acquired a sinister meaning which we suspect is in the minds of those who most often use it. It suggests that if a man changes his religious creed and his spiritual allegiance, he is doing something which is somehow dishonouring and discreditable. He is regarded (in some quarters) as unpatriotic and disloyal to his old faith.

There may be, of course, cases where the overt acceptance of a new Faith is wrong. If a man "comes to" the Christian religion with unworthy motives, if the change is only a change of "label" and not a real change of allegiance, that is wrong. But if he "comes to" the New Way because he honestly finds in it a greater spiritual freedom than in the Old Way, dare anyone say that his "coming" is not a right thing?

I am not for the moment asserting the superiority of the Christian Way over others, I am only pleading for individual liberty which allows a man to accept and follow what he believes to be true, even though that means a break with the past. Isn't there something strangely illogical in the attitude which some critics of Missions take up, when they say "Let the missionary bring his medical skill to heal men's bodies; let him share his knowledge with men of other races; but let him not attempt to offer to them any spiritual truth he may possess." As though, forsooth, while medical and educational needs overleap national barriers, spiritual truth which in its very nature is universal should be bounded by traditional and national limitations!

It isn't as though the missionary were bringing a "national" religion. Christianity came to our British forefathers long ago, who probably in their turn were denounced for forsaking the old paths—came, be it remembered, to the West from the East. We have found in it vital truth; found in it something unspeakably precious, and therefore we bring it back again as a grateful offering to the East which gave it to us.

We do not deny the truth in Hinduism—he must be purblind who would do that, but it were pity indeed if the truth we possess should blind our eyes to truth elsewhere. This applies to the missionary as well as to those to whom he brings his message. He too must keep a humble and an open mind. It is Truth we are after—and amid all the clash of loyalties, confusing enough in these days, our loyalty to Truth must ever be paramount.

Secunderabad, }
3rd April 1931. }

Yours, etc.,
L. SIMPSON.

Mr. K. T. Paul:—Our readers will be very sorry to hear that Mr. K. T. Paul has been laid low by a serious illness. The attack began during the sessions of the Round Table Conference in London and necessitated his premature departure from the Conference. Ever since he returned to India he has been under medical treatment and his present condition causes great anxiety to his friends. This illness is due to overstrain as a result of strenuous work during the past few years on behalf of the various organisations and causes with which he was connected. We appeal to all our readers to remember Mr. Paul in their prayers that he may be restored to full health and strength and be able to continue his work on the Round Table Conference.—The Guardian, Calcutta.

JESUS CHRIST AND MAHATMA GANDHI.

( BY MR. H. A. SUVARNA, B.A., LL.B. )

One of the most outstanding facts in the history of modern times is, undoubtedly, the personality of Mahatma Gandhi. He has been recognised by Romain Rolland as a force to be rarely met with on the face of this earth. Dr. Sunderland says about him: "If Gandhi is the friend of India and England, he is no less a friend of Europe, Asia, and the whole world, than whom none truer or greater is living or is likely to arise." No man, perhaps, has been more often the subject of comparison; he has been likened to Buddha, to Francis of Assisi, and last but not least, to Jesus Christ. It is the object of this article to examine how he is like the prophet of Galilee, and how he differs from him.

At the very outset of our inquiry, we have to dissociate from our minds whatever divinity is attached to the person of Jesus, and look upon him only as a man. We are not concerned with the question of the relation in which he stands to God. Christians of all denominations admit that Jesus lived on the earth the life of a human being; and it is as such that we shall view him in the course of the comparison.

The most striking resemblance to Christ that we find in the Mahatma lies perhaps in his unflinching spirit of self-sacrifice. If Jesus had turned his attention towards an earthly kingdom, his path would have been strewn with flowers instead of thorns as it was: the Jews, one and all, would have followed him to victory; he would have ruled over them for many a happy year; and their dream about a "Messiah" who would rescue them from the clutches of the Romans would have been fulfilled. But Jesus, with his indomitable will, brushed the temptation aside, asserted his spiritual mission, and stuck to the role of a spiritual redeemer. A firm "No" was his reply to the crafty Satan who tried to tempt him. But what was the result of that determination? Oh, it is a heart-rending tale of persecution and death which has no parallel in history. Gandhi was designed by his relations to be a Diwan of an Indian State, and with this object in view, he was sent to England to qualify himself for the Bar. But God willed otherwise. When he went to Africa, and saw the state of his countrymen there, he threw up his dazzling ideas of a legal career, and turned his attention to the noble work of alleviating their suffering and ameliorating their condition. And he has since been devoting his life to the service of his country and the world. And what has been his portion? Insults, and blows and prison.

In their infinite capacity for suffering pain, physical and mental, is to be found another remarkable similarity between the two souls. Jesus bore his tortures and crucifixion with wonderful patience, composure and equanimity; he did not, like other criminals on the Cross, cry, curse, or beg his persecutors; but his last thought and prayer even in that moment of intense agony were for the sinning humanity which was killing him. Gandhi suffered without retaliation many an insult, and many a blow in South Africa, which were the manifestations of the insidious doctrine of racial discrimination between the white and coloured people of the earth. That a man of his weak and slender frame, weighing about 75 pounds survived a fast of 21 days is a marvel of human history, and the greatest challenge man has thrown out to human nature. To him the prison has become a home; he went coolly into it in the past; he will coolly get into it in future.

The two men again are strikingly alike in their methods. It is his childlike meekness, more than anything else, that singles out Christ, from the world's great ones: he did not raise a finger against his persecutors; his constant advice to his followers was to be meek as a lamb; he told them to show their right cheeks if one slapped them on the left; he exhibited this quality in a remarkable degree before Pontius Pilate in the face of the greatest provocation, when his accusers were hurling false charges in his face; he manifested it again to a wonderful extent when his traitorous disciple, Judas, approached him to imprint upon his face that fatal kiss which sealed his doom; he revealed it again immeasurably on the Cross when his murderers derided him saying: "Come down from the Cross, if you are the real Messiah." It is Gandhi's faithful and continued adherence to the doctrine of non-violence which has brought a revolution in the methods of human warfare and has held him up to the admiration of the world. In the Court when he was asked to remove his turban; on the Railway platform when he was dragged out of the compartment by the Railway servant, on the foot-path when he was knocked down by the Police, in the street when he was assaulted by the boys, Gandhi has been an embodiment of man's conquest over the propensities of the flesh and so he will continue and die.

Their attitude towards the civil authorities of the State, too, admits of a significant comparison. Christ never contemplated a revolt against the Roman domination of Israel: when his disciples asked him about their attitude towards Caesar, he called for a coin, showed them the two sides of it, and told them to give God and Caesar their respective dues. But he would not budge an inch in his claim to be the Messiah or redeemer of mankind; it was only when he was asked to disclaim this high role of Saviour that he challenges and defies the civil authorities of the State; it was only then that he turns out to be a rebel, though a spiritual rebel. Mahatma Gandhi did not start life with a campaign against the British Government; he served them faithfully during the Zulu rebellion, the Boer War, and the Great War; he expressed in the Press and on the platform whatever he found good, noble, and inspiring in the British people, and in the British civilisation; it was only when, to his painful disappointment and disillusionment, he lost trust in the British Government, that he stood up against them and began his wonderful fight.

But it is in his over-flowing love for humanity, which knows no bounds, and in his idea of a human fellowship, irrespective of caste or creed, nationality or colour, that we clearly see the prophet of Galilee in the sage of the East. Jesus washed the feet of his disciples. To him the Pharisees, the Publicans, the Samaritans, and the Tax-gatherers were all the same. It was the fact that he moved freely with them without making any distinction between them that largely contributed to his final fate on the Cross. Gandhi fought for the improvement of the lot of the farmers and labourers of South Africa, and has been fighting for the amelioration of the condition of the millions of untouchables in India. He worked as a nurse during the Boer War and the Zulu rebellion; he bound up the wounds of a leper with his own hands; and he washed the plates of an untouchable.

Nor is this all; in his complete renunciation of the pleasures of the flesh, one finds in the Mahatma another Messiah. Jesus never married; he preached to his disciples not to look back, once they had set their hands to the plough. He told them that in Heaven there was neither marrying nor giving away in marriage. But there is no definite and clear pronouncement by him on this subject. One thing, however, is clear: If Jesus had thought that the institution of marriage was indispensable to man's pilgrimage on this earth, he would have taken a wife himself; for he lived the life of a human being in all other respects. Gandhi thinks that 'Brahmacharya' is essential for self realisation, that a man cannot live at the same time both after the spirit and the flesh, and that service of humanity with one's whole soul is inconsistent with a sexual life. His philosophy on this subject is therefore in harmony with that of Jesus.

But in reviewing the close resemblance between the lives and teachings of these two great personalities, one should not lose sight of the vital difference between them. Christ's was primarily and wholly a spiritual mission: he cast aside all thought of establishing and ruling over an earthly kingdom, though a golden opportunity for doing so opened out before him; he came to heal the wounds of the soul, not of the body; he was born into a world dominated and tyrannised by Satan; he fought him with all the spiritual force at his command; and by bringing him down to his knees, saved humanity from a spiritual death. Gandhi has found himself in an entirely different position: he is faced by problems spiritual, social, economic, and political, all closely connected and intertwined with one another; he feels that he cannot ignore any one of them; and he is confronted by the double task of solving these problems, and reconciling them to one another. But it should not be forgotten that in all his actions he is animated by a spiritual motive, and his activities in the political, social, and economic fields are only a means to a spiritual end.

There is another point of the highest importance in the life of Jesus which marks him out from Gandhi. Jesus, from first to last, was conscious of and imbued with his lofty mission. He publicly declared that he was the "Messiah" and that he came to redeem mankind. Gandhi received the education that would fit him for a career at the bar. In his early life he betrayed many of the defects and shortcomings of an ordinary man. The turning-point came with his advent to Africa: when he saw the lot of his countrymen there, he first heard the call to duty. It was at the age of 45 that he found his mission. But even afterwards he has not declared his mission; and we have no authority of Gandhi about his mission, as we have of Jesus.

We also find a sharp contrast in the opportunities and environments of the two. Christ was born in a manger, the son of a poor carpenter; he does not seem to have attended a school; nor did he move with and learn from the so-called learned and wise men of his age. Gandhi belongs to a family whose members held high offices in a Native State; he received the best education that one could get in his times; he had occasion to move with and learn from the brightest and the most learned men of his age; and he found a field for work in Africa and in India. Education and opportunities seem to have had as large a share in shaping the career of Mahatma Gandhi as his innate qualities of head and heart. He is as much a creature of circumstances, as the prophet of Galilee was the author of his own destinies.

Oudh Women's Conference:—The half-yearly Oudh Constituent Women's Conference on Educational and Social Reforms was held at Saturday evening 28th March at Rani Sahiba of Tikra's Koti under the presidency of the Dowager Rani of Mandi. The president in the course of her speech emphasised the necessity of enforcing the Sarda Act and said that women must try their best to create Hindu-Muslim unity, thus giving no occasion for unfortunate communal riots. She said that education alone would prove to be the proper solvent for communal differences. Then she gave an account of the social side of the activities of All-India Women's Conference held recently at Lahore. Several resolutions were passed: One resolution urged the necessity of having a Sarda Committee in every constituency to prevent early marriages and to report to proper authorities in case there were any violations. Another resolution dwelt upon the necessity of opening social centres in every constituency to train boys and girls for the social service. A third urged the need of having more women in the Central and Provincial Legislatures and district and municipal boards. One resolution called upon the ladies to inspect various Mohallas with regard to sanitation arrangements and asked them to report to public health officers if they found anything which was likely to be injurious to the health of the residents. Another condemned the system of polygamy and urged the Government to amend the Hindu Law of inheritance to give equitable rights to women.—The Leader, Allahabad.

JESUS CHRIST AND THE PRESENT SITUATION IN INDIA.

Dr. S. Jesudason, F.R.C.S., of the Kristukula Ashram concludes an interesting article in the April issue of the South India United Church Herald with the following remarks:

"Jesus came indeed to establish a kingdom which he called "the Kingdom of God," not in a distant far off time in another sphere of life well past our life in the flesh, but here on earth and now. The Kingdom was to be established in this world even though it was not to be of this world. He taught His disciples to pray for this coming. His "Sermon on the Mount" was to be for the setting right of man's relation to men here on earth and not in some future life. Else it would be an impracticable idealism. He taught that the Kingdom of God was within man. He taught that in his kingdom humble, selfless service and suffering for others inspired by love even for one's enemies, should be the test of membership. But the Jewish nation did not understand. The masses misunderstood and wanted to make Him a king according to their purely selfish ideas of a kingdom. Even His own chosen disciples could not thoroughly grasp all His persevering day to day personal teaching of the ideals of His kingdom. But He went on preaching His ideals even though His premier apostle even at the last hour acted contrary to His example and teaching in cutting off the ear of one of the enemies. The Jewish nation was not ready to accept the methods and ideals of the kingdom as Jesus wished to see established on earth, and they rejected and crucified Him. Jesus did have a "political" programme of His own. In a speech that Gandhiji made at Bhopal about a year and a half ago, he said, "What I long to see in India is Rama Raj. Do not be astonished that I should say this in a Muhammedan state. To me Rama Raj is the same as Deva Raj—the Kingdom of God." And in this attempt to establish that Kingdom prophets and seers have (as history can abundantly prove) come into conflict with "principalities and powers, against spiritual wickedness in high places." Apostle Paul saw in the Roman Emperor Nero "the mouth of the lion." The exiled apostle at Patmos saw in the Roman Emperor "a beast," and in imperial Rome "the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth."

Sanskrit College Principal:—Dr. Sorenranath Das Gupta, Professor of Philosophy, Presidency College, Calcutta, has been appointed to act as Principal of the Sanskrit College, with effect from 1st April, vice Dr. Adityanath Mukherjee, retired. The appointment has aroused great interest in view of the fact of Mr. Das Gupta being a non-Brahmin. Several deputations waited upon the Governor against the appointment, which has been favoured by three well-known Pandits. Mr. Das Gupta is the third non-Brahmin who has been appointed Principal of the Sanskrit College, which is held properly to be a preserve for Brahmins. Mr. Das Gupta, obtained a Doctorate in London and lectured in America and Italy on invitation.

THE 43th INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL'S ADDRESS.

(Concluded from the last issue.)

Foreign cloth merchants will do well to bear the Congress attitude in mind. In this regard foreign cloth boycott is a permanent thing, not conceived as a political weapon but as an economic and social measure of permanent value for the welfare of the masses. These merchants, therefore, if they will look into the future and think of their country, will do well to give up their foreign cloth trade. Everything possible is being done to help them but some very big sacrifice on their part is essential. The English, Japanese and other foreign merchants will, I hope, not misunderstand the Congress attitude. If they will help India they will deny themselves Indian trade in foreign cloth. They have other markets and other enterprises.

This brings me to picketing. This has not been and cannot be given up. Picketing is a common law right but you will observe that within the limits prescribed, it is not only inoffensive but highly educative. Its function is the gentle persuasion, never coercion, or violent restraint on liberty. I use the adjective "violent" advisedly; restraining the force of public opinion there always will be. It is healthy, elevating and conducive to the growth of liberty as distinguished from licence. Non-violent picketing is designed to create public opinion, an atmosphere which should become irresistible. This can best be carried on by women. I hope, therefore, that they will continue the marvellous work begun by them and earn eternal gratitude of the nation and, what is more, blessings of the starving millions.

In this connection let me say a few words regarding the boycott of British goods. This idea is almost as old as the Congress. We know that after the advent of Gandhiji on the political platform boycott of British goods was replaced by that of foreign, not only British, cloth. He interpreted it in terms of economics and social uplift whereas boycott of British goods, as such, is a political and punitive measure. This was effectively employed during the recent hurricane campaign. Now that there is at least temporary peace and we seek to reach our goal through consultation and conference we must withdraw the political weapon. We cannot be sitting at a friendly conference table and outside making designs to hurt the British interests. Whilst, therefore, we must for the time being withdraw boycott of British goods, we must intensify 'Swadeshi' which is the birthright of every nation.

Thus we must encourage and carry on intensive propaganda on behalf of indigenous Insurance companies, Banking, Shipping and the like. We may not belittle or neglect them on the ground of their inferiority or dearth.

There is much loose talk about the equality of treatment. What is the equality of treatment between the strong and the weak, between the giant and the dwarf, between an elephant and an ant? If Lord Inchcape with his fabulous wealth and resources claimed equal rights with Seth Narotam Morarji of lamented memory it would be a travesty of equality.

It will be time enough to talk of equality of treatment after Seth Narotamdas's successors have made some little approach to Lord Inchcape's resources—equality of treatment in case of the hopeless unequals means only raising the favoured upto the level of the most favoured.

Protection of Indian industries and enterprise to the exclusion of British or foreign is a condition of our national existence even under a state of partnership. Protection within even the British commonwealth is no new fangled notion. It is in vogue in the dominions to the extent necessary for their growth. Just as the boycott of foreign cloth is an economic necessity for the sake of the starving millions, the boycott of intoxicating drinks and drugs is a necessity for the moral welfare of the nation.

The ideal of total prohibitions was born before its political effect was thought of. The Congress conceived it as a measure of self-purification. Even if Government earmarked the revenue from this traffic for purely prohibition purposes our picketing of these shops would continue, no doubt subject to the same severe restrictions as in the case of foreign cloth.

I invite the Government during the transition stage to anticipate the verdict of the national legislature and not merely tolerate the picketing of two things, foreign cloth and drink and drugs but make, if they will, common cause with the nation. But whether they will or no we cannot rest still so long as there is a yard of foreign cloth entering our country or a single liquorshop corrupting our misguided countrymen.

One word regarding salt. The salt raids must stop. Defiance of Salt laws for the sake of Civil Disobedience must stop. But the poor living in the neighbourhood of the salt areas are free to make and sell salt within their neighbourhood. The salt tax is not gone, it is true. In view of the likelihood of the Congress participating in the Conference we may not press for the immediate repeal of the tax which is bound to come very soon. If the poorest on whose behalf the campaign was undertaken are now virtually free from the tax I hope that no traders will seek to take an undue advantage of the relaxation.

The foregoing perhaps shows you how uninterested I am in many things that interest the intelligentsia. I am not interested in "loaves and fishes" or legislative honours. Peasantry do not understand them. They are little affected by them. I believe that Gandhiji's eleven points mean the substance of Swaraj.

Thank God the Gospel of truth and non-violence has given the poor an inkling of their dignity and power they possess. Much still remains to be done.

But let us make up our minds that we exist for them, not they for us. Let us shed our petty rivalries and jealousies, religious feuds and let everyone realise that the Congress represents and exists for the toiling millions and it will become an irresistible power working not for the greed of power but for the sake of the common humanity.

There is one part of the constructive programme which I have not dealt with already. That is the all important work of removing untouchability. It is no use tinkering with the problem. The recent heroic struggle on the part of the nation would have been more glorious if the Hindus had purged Hinduism of this evil. But heroism or glory apart no Swaraj would be worth having without this supreme act of self-purification and even if Swaraj is won whilst this stain continues to blacken Hinduism it would be as insecure as a Swaraj without a complete boycott of foreign cloth.

In conclusion I may not forget our brethren overseas. Their lot in South Africa, in East Africa and other parts of the world is still hanging in the balance. Deenabandhu Andrews is happily in South Africa helping our countrymen. Pandit Hridaya Nath Kunzru has specialised in the Indian question in East Africa. The only consolation the Congress can give is to assure them of its sympathy. They know that their lot must automatically improve to the extent that we approach our goal. In your name I would appeal to the Governments concerned to treat with consideration the members of a nation which is bound at a very early date to enter upon her heritage and which means ill to no nation on the earth. We ask them to extend to our nationals the same treatment they would have us, when we are free, to extend to theirs. This is surely not asking too much.

ADVERTISEMENTS

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.
PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Master's Classes. Apply with 2 annas stamp to:— Imperial Telegraph College,
Delhi.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of
OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:
ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BULLION EXCHANGE.
(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.,
BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 200 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms" Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application

A. G. GRAY,
MANAGER.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhoi, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadl, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

JAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	80,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).

Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).

Bhaskarrao Vitthaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.

Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Mahars Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)

Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.

Raj Retna Bhalilal Dajibhai Amin B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alombic Chemical Works, Baroda).

Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)

Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Sar Suba, Baroda State, Baroda.

Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.)

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

—101—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Ann. 6d.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhalla (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Lalampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirale ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Palghar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akshi (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Viramgaon (District Ahmedabad).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution reorganized under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticoria, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NABOTTA M MOBARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Mesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EDMURE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,

A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,

Dadar, Bombay, 14.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :-

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital (Paid up) ... Rs. 71,21,051

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :- Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJAN PAIN BALM PRODUCES
BEST RESULTS

IN
Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 As. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

**&

MADRAS.

— A SAFE —
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch :-

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies'
Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. s. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Began in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8	(Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10	(Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1921 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,

MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS,

SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO

1311, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"COMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 64.

KING OF JAZZ

13 Parts, featuring

PAUL WHITEMAN AND HIS BAND JOHN BOLES, LAURA LA PLANTE, GLEN TRYON AND A GALAXY OF STARS.

Universal's All Colour, All Talking, Singing, & Dancing-Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 14 and 15.

THE COCOANUTS

10 Parts,

THE 4 MARKS BROTHERS AND MARY EATON
Paramount All Talking, Singing & Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

COHENS AND KELLYS IN SCOTLAND

8 Parts, featuring

GEORGE SIDNEY AND CHARLES MURRAY
Universal's All Talking Comedy.

MARKING TIME

2 Parts,

PAT ROONEY'S FAMILY

HIS BACHELOR DADIES

2 Parts, featuring

SUNNY JIM

Universal's Talking Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

DARKNESS TO LIGHT

8 Parts, featuring—Mrs. BAPSEY SABAWALLA

BIG HEARTED TOOTS

2 Parts, ]

TOOTS AND CASPER

[ F. B. O. Comedy.

TIME:—Sat. and Sun. 4, 6-30 and 10 p. m.

Mon. 6-30 and 10 p. m.

Tues. 4 to 8-30 CHARITY ENTERTAINMENT in aid of Women's Free Training Classes & Cinema at 10 p. m.

Wed. to Fri. 6-30 and 10 p. m. Cinema.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XLL

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, APRIL 18, 1931

No. 33

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Kanakarayan Paul,
the Spanish Revolution.
Change of Viceroys.
Frederick Sykes.
"Later India."
Cause of Cawnpore Riots.
Women's Rights under the Hindu
Law. III.
Cawnpore Riots.

Indian Emigration from South Africa.
Capital Punishment.
Indo-British Settlement of Accounts.
India's Status.
The Depressed Classes Mission
Society of India.
The Late Mr. K. T. Paul.
News and Views.

NOTES.

Kanakarayan Paul:—Indian nationalism has suffered a great loss by the untimely death of Mr. K. T. Paul. He resigned the General Secretaryship of the Young Men's Christian Association in India about the middle of last year in order to devote himself to politics as an Indian Christian Nationalist. Since then he was working in his endeavour to bring about a friendly understanding between Lord Irwin and the national Congress leaders, particularly, Mahatma Gandhi, which we are sure had no small part in smoothing the path to the agreement which took place recently. Mr. K. T. Paul was mainly instrumental in getting a number of representative British Missionaries to sign a statement which he personally took to Lord Irwin conveying their anxious desire that sympathetic and conciliatory methods should be adopted to bring about a friendly settlement between the British Government and Indian Nationalists. He personally headed with the Viceroy to put an end to the policy of repression, pointing out that the genuineness of the national movement had been amply demonstrated by the patient endurance with which the people in their thousands had borne the "Police charges, arrests and imprisonments under the several ordinances. In accepting a nomination to the Round Table Conference, Mr. Paul was actuated by a sincere desire to prevent the Indian Christian community from succumbing to the temptation to adopt a separatist attitude. His book on the British connection with India was a just and thoughtful estimate of its influence on Indian history. His active habits conveyed the impression of robust health which he did not possess. A devout Christian, Mr. Paul was deeply attached to the culture and traditions of his ancestral faith and worked in terms of close co-operation with his countrymen of all creeds and classes. He had for years been an ardent worker in the Co-operative movement which he regarded as the key to rural reconstruction. He was a man of deep family affections and a warm friend. He would have played a leading part in the nation-building activities of self-governing India, had his life been spared for some years more. We feel his death as a personal loss and offer our deepest sympathies to his family.

The Spanish Revolution:—The oldest monarchy in Europe has ceased to exist. King Alfonso abdicated and left the country on Tuesday and the Spanish Republic came into being on Wednesday amidst universal rejoicing. There is certain pathos about the sudden disappearance of any long-standing object or institution whether it be a tree or a tower or a monarchy. This, in the case of monarchies, has been often heightened by the indignities and even violence to which deposed sovereigns and their kith and kin were subjected. There is no more moving passage in Edmund Burke's classic denunciation of the French Revolution than that in which he laments the execution of Marie Antoinette. Many who had no word of appreciation for the Tsarist regime in Russia were moved to sympathy by the stories of the massacre in cold blood of the Tsar and his family by the Bolsheviks. Kemal Pasha cleverly managed to make the exit of the Sultan-Caliph provocative more of ridicule than sympathy. The circumstances in which the ex-Kaiser fled to Holland are still matter of controversy but the German Republic has left him in possession of his vast properties and a considerable section regards him as the victim of an Anglo-French conspiracy. The Spanish Revolutionaries have drawn to themselves much inter-national goodwill by the restraint and courtesy with which they have facilitated the departure of the ex-king and his family from Spain. This is all the more creditable to them as under the Dictatorship by means of which King Alfonso maintained his dynastic interests for several years past, the elementary civil rights of the Spanish people were totally ignored. It is significant, however, that the very army which the Dictator used to keep Spain in a state of subjection, was largely instrumental in effecting the overthrow of the monarchy. The proclamation of the provisional Government states that it has taken over power without formality and without resistance. It goes on to say: "It assumes the headship of the State with the express assent of the triumphant political forces registered by popular votes at the elections. Interpreting the unhesitating desire of the nation, the Committee of the Republican Forces whose coalition has been established to inaugurate the new regime, designates Sgr. Alcala Zamora to the Presidency of the provisional Government of the Republic." It is worthy of note that the first President is an ex-Minister of the Crown who joined the Republicans only recently, and is said to be the only ex-Minister who has done so. Successful leaders of revolutions are seldom successful in establishing and carrying on the Government under the new conditions, the qualities which make for success in revolution being, indeed, the exact opposite of those such as patience and foresight which make for statesmanship. The harvest of the Italian revolution which Garibaldi led had to be garnered in by Cavour, the cautious, calculating statesman who brought about the unification of Italy. The Spanish Republic starts under happy auspices and with the goodwill of nations.

The Change of Viceroys:—Today Lord Irwin hands over charge of the Indian Viceroyalty to Lord Willingdon and sails for England. A Governor-General, it has been said, remains during the first half of his term a more or less passive spectator of what his Executive Council does or leaves undone. It takes him nearly three years to acquire a working knowledge of the men and machinery of the administration and he is also able meanwhile, owing to retirements from his Council, to bring into it, if he cares to do so, men who are likely to support him in any important measure or policy he may have in mind. In Lord Irwin's case, there were two serious handicaps, one imposed from without and the other self-imposed. The first was Lord Birkenhead at the India Office. The two men were the extreme antithesis of each other, a fact to which Lord Birkenhead's attacks on Lord Irwin after leaving the India Office gave almost scandalous prominence. Lord Irwin's second handicap was that he seems to have deliberately refrained from selecting men to his Executive Council who would have supported him if, indeed, he did not of set purpose select men who might be expected to offer the strongest opposition to his views. There was in this a sort of chivalry, though, having regard to the consequences on the administration and popular feeling, it was almost quixotic. But for this second failing, the resignation of Lord Birkenhead would have left Lord Irwin free to develop his own policy instead of waiting till he had barely three months left of his Viceroyalty. The country too would have been spared the sufferings of the last twelve months and Lord Irwin would have spared himself the ignominy of rule by Ordinances. In order to spare the feelings of the Civil Service and Sir John Simon, Lord Irwin actively associated himself with a policy of repressing by violence the movement of non-violence which, for many months, he persisted in representing as not essentially distinguishable from one of violence. With the advent of the Labour Government to power in Great Britain, the Viceroy was free to give play to his own generous instincts but even then he delayed making use of his opportunity until the Round Table Conference had left him practically without an excuse for further hesitation. There might have been a policy in all this, since it cannot be denied that British public opinion which was at first hostile and then hesitant, has now declared itself largely in favour of Lord Irwin's policy. However that may be, there can be nothing but admiration and high praise for the courage and conviction with which he initiated the conversations with Mahatma Gandhi which led to the conclusion of the now famous agreement. His successor starts not only with a clean slate, so far as the policy of the Ordinances is concerned. In addition, he has the inestimable advantage of the good feeling created in the country as the result of the Gandhi-Irwin Agreement. We have not been able to join in the optimistic eulogies so lavishly expressed in England and India on Lord Willingdon's appointment to succeed Lord Irwin. While in Canada last year he had all but expressed himself as having definite ideas regarding the Gandhi movement and unless he has been able to revise those ideas, he will find himself in a fix in the task that awaits him.

Sir Frederick Sykes:—A Press Note dated the 10th instant states that most unexpectedly and for urgent reasons of health, his Excellency Sir Frederick Sykes is obliged shortly to proceed to England for a period of 3 or 4 months for the purpose of medical treatment. "His Excellency," it is further stated, "is naturally most reluctant to leave the Presidency even for a short time, and only the strongest pressure from his medical advisers could have induced him to do so." We are sorry that Sir Frederick Sykes' health has broken down but not surprised in view of the great strain which the unprecedentedly difficult situation of the last twelve months has placed on the Governor of this Presidency. There is nothing of the prancing pro-consul about Sir Frederick who impresses one as a conscientious and hardworking Governor anxious to understand and to do his best for the people of the Presidency. In normal times and without the incubus of the financial commitments which he inherited, Sir Frederick would have built up a record of solid, constructive work. The Government of Bombay is a single entity and outsiders have no means of knowing how far any particular member of it is responsible for any particular measure of policy. It is the general belief, however, that the Governor was by nature averse from the use of excessive violence in maintaining law and order but that a masterful Home Member, more solicitous of official prestige than of the public weal, was able to over-ride his Excellency's scruples and to make Bombay administration a byword during the last twelve months. How far this impression is justified it is difficult for any one not in the inner councils of Government to say. It is announced that Sir Ernest Hotson, the Home Member, whose term of office expired last Saturday, will act as Governor during the absence of Sir Frederick Sykes. The Press Note is dated the 10th and is, therefore, able to refer to Sir Ernest as "at present the Senior Member of Council." Twenty-four hours later, he would have vacated that office in favour of Sir Gulamhussein Hidayatulla, and as the Governor does not sail until the 25th, the only apparent reason for issuing the Note on the 10th is to conceal the fact that an Indian is being passed over for the acting appointment. This arrangement, however, was foretold by an Anglo-Indian journal several months ago, and had called forth a strong protest.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, APRIL 18, 1931.

"SISTER INDIA."*

In sending us a copy of this book, the Principal of the Women's Christian Medical College in Ludhiana, says that it was written to "describe the work of educating the Christian women and girls of India, so that they may help to overcome the difficulties under which the women of India suffer as described in the well-known Mother India." The College was started as a school in 1894 and Miss Mayo's book, was published three years ago. To suggest that the institution was intended to ameliorate the sufferings of Indian women described in that book, is a piece of anachronism. It is nevertheless interesting as showing that there is a purpose behind the avowed purpose of writing this book, and that it is to give some belated support to the now discredited and nearly forgotten masterpiece of Miss Mayo. An American journalist now in this country told us that he has been enquiring at railway book-stalls for "Mother India" but could not get a copy. He found, however, a reprint of the articles published in the Reformer, issued by Mr. Natesan, at many of them. More, however, than any of the books published in reply to "Mother India," Miss Mayo's half truths—"the lie which is half a truth is ever the blackest of lies"—have found a concrete answer in the splendid uprising of Indian womanhood in support of the demand for self-government during the past twelve months. Many of the women who braved lathi charges and jails, were wives and mothers who, according to Miss Mayo, were downtrodden and sunk in the lowest depths of physical and moral degradation. "Sister India" speaks of Indian women looking to "the healthy, happy sisters in Britain and America," "the emancipated Christian womanhood all the world over" to save them. Has Miss Edith Craske, the self-complacent author, seen a book "Mother England" by Dr. Marie Stopes? It is almost wholly a collection of letters from Englishwomen of the working classes printed much as they were written. These letters are not to be dismissed, says Dr. Stopes, as exceptionally bad cases selected over a number of years, as Miss Mayo's cases were. "They are not," she writes, "they are all from one file in the year (1926) and the letters have not been specially selected, they are simply from women whose surnames begin with any of the letters A to H." In three months, Dr. Stopes avers, she has had as many as twenty thousand requests for criminal abortion. Miss Craske writes: "A lady doctor, who has worked many years in India, was asked: "Is Mother India true?"

*The Religious Tract Society, London, Toronto, Madrid, Lisbon and Buda Pesth.

Sadly she confirmed, medically, the statements made therein, saying "That is why we are here and not at home." "It is obvious that there is plenty of work to do "at home" too, but there is no excitement there to equal that of saving the heathen in India.

Now, we do not under-estimate the valuable work extending over several years which is represented by the Ludhiana Women's Medical College. All honour to Dr. Edith Brown for her devoted labours. But we put it to Miss Craske that, if her object was to commemorate a great work, she could have done so without vilifying Indian religion and society of which it is clear her knowledge is even more perfunctory than that of her great exemplar, Miss Mayo. Poor Jesus Christ, Himself the child of a Jewish child wife, has been dragged by neck and heels into a book which is the product of a mind steeped in the pharisaism which He loathed and condemned. Miss Craske speaks of the Code of Manu and the Holy Koran having affixed a permanent brand of inferiority on all women. This can be shown to be utterly false. Passages from both Hindu and Islamic scriptures can be cited to show that their ideas relating to women were far in advance of those of other contemporary civilizations. Christ's attitude to women was not St. Paul's and it was St. Paul and not Christ who is the founder of organized Christianity. Students of the historical evolution of women's status have shown that Christianity lowered rather than raised it. The modern women's movement is inspired by the doctrine of equality and not of Christianity. The first protests against the subjection of women came from men and women who frankly disavowed Christianity. Miss Edith Craske is evidently merely repeating the hackneyed commonplaces of the old type Christian Missionary and has not devoted much study to the subjects of which she writes so glibly. Thank God, we are no longer so ignorant of actual facts relating to life in Europe and America as our fathers and grandfathers were, though God forbid that we should judge Western civilisation by its failures as Miss Mayo and Miss Craske judge Indian civilization.

Miss Craske gives an account of why the Ludhiana medical school came to be started. Prior to its starting, men and women had to attend the same medical college in the Punjab as they still do in Bombay and Madras. The idea of an Indian Christian girl attending a college where she had to study with Hindu and Mahomedan men students, horrified some lady missionaries and "they said they dare not let any more of their girls enter the Government College." Dr. Edith Brown, therefore, conceived the idea of a Medical School for Christian girls which was opened in 1894. "Dr. Brown reported the scheme to Government," we read, "and immediate sympathy was forthcoming for the Government was conscious alike of the need of India's women, and also of the disastrous failure in training, men and women together." The Punjab Government in 1906 not only sanctioned generous grants-in-aid without religious restrictions, but in 1904 they "requested that non-Christian students should be admitted that they might be under the refining influence of Christian women during their years of training." They did more. In 1915, the Punjab Government closed their women's department at the Lahore Medical College, and the girls, both Christian and non-Christian, were transferred to the Lubhiana college. How good of Government! Here is a passage from the book of the working of the Mission Hospital attached to the College. It has a bearing on the discussion which lately took place in these columns on the aim of medical missions. "The outpatients' waiting-room is always packed with women and children waiting for their turn to see the doctor. Here the Evangelist or the Bible-woman talks and sings with them all the time, for everyone who comes for medicine hears of the Great Physician." When Jesus cured the leper, He bade the man go and offer the customary sacrifices in the Jewish Temple. He never made his miraculous cures a means of religious conversion. But this is what is being openly done in India and a Government professing religious neutrality does not see anything wrong in it. From Miss Craske's book one should not run away with the idea that the only women doctors in India are those belonging to missions. There are scores of others, doing quite as arduous work in lonely and out of the way places under highly depressing conditions, but the patients who seek their aid are not sought to be disturbed in their religious beliefs, and the Indian woman doctor does not profess to be one of a superior people. She does her day's work and does not expect nor does she desire any praise for it.

The Cause of Cawnpore Riots:—We print to-day an account by the Rev. J. H. Wilkie of what he saw in Cawnpore during and after the recent riots when he worked with the Seva Samiti volunteers to bring relief to the victims. It is truly a horrible picture and we join fervently in the hope expressed by him that there will be no repetition of it anywhere. He asks a question which has been in our mind also, and that is, what was the cause of all this. He absolves Government from blame, though responsible men, Hindus and Mussalmans, who visited the scene, have asserted that the authorities did not intervene to protect life and property until matters had gone too far. For his own part he puts the whole blame on the civil disobedience movement which, he says, by undermining submission to authority let loose the hooliganism which is held in check by it. This is a large question with which we shall deal next week.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. III.

(By MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI.)

It would be a travesty of truth and a gross calumny to suggest that Hindu men are habitually unkind or tyrannical or supercilious in the treatment of their womenfolk. Whatever sins may be laid at the door of the politically down-fallen Hindu, it must be admitted by his worst traducers that he yields to no other people in the world in his high estimate of the delicate regard and kindly care due to womankind. "Where woman is honoured, there the gods rejoice." That is his belief. And "prosperity cannot dwell long in the house where the women are unhappy." That is also his ingrained conviction. Even the man who is too prosaic and unimaginative to see an angel in every woman, is yet enough of a philosopher to know the importance of having a wife from early youth to advanced old age, being firmly persuaded that although it may not be always possible to live happily with her it is of a certainty impossible to live at all without her. Disinterested observers who may, un-Mayolike, care to study honestly the good points of the Hindu, without itching for pretexts to picture him for imperialistic ends as a moral pervert or a monster of inhumanity or an incurable imbecile, will find little difficulty to discover many uncommon virtues in him, not the least of them being that he stands unrivalled among the nations of the world for the depth and purity of his family affections and the extent of his self-sacrificing devotion to parents, wife and children and even distant kindred.

But at the same time it is easy to see that under the personal law which at present governs the relations between the sexes, the Hindu woman is placed entirely at the mercy of man's good sense and good feeling. It is a deplorable fact that apart from a general right to so-called "maintenance," her fundamental rights as an indispensable and original member of human society stands ignored or circumvented or miserably circumscribed in the interests of man. This obvious disparity between the honourable status of equal partnership with man which she once enjoyed in India, in the ancient days of which we are justly proud, and her present legal position of subordinate alliance and absolute dependence and subserviency, worse than that of a tenant-at-will, must cause serious searchings of the heart to all fair-minded men who want the equal happiness of all.

The exigencies of domestic life no doubt require that there shall be unity of direction in family affairs and some provision for the quick solution of any conflict of interests, tastes and opinions among the male and female members. This may naturally give a show of moral sanction in primitive societies for man's encroaching selfishness and ruthless domination camouflaged as benevolent guardianship on lines similar to those with which the eastern world is familiar in the story of the White Man's Burden. As Bentham quaintly argues: "The man would have the meat roasted; the woman boiled: Shall they both fast till the judge comes in to dress it for them? The woman would have the child dressed in green, the man in blue: Shall the child be naked till the judge comes in to clothe it?" So it would seem that the manly legislators of primitive times found it convenient to give preference to the interests and authority of the male and strengthen his naturally powerful hands with a legal sanction as well, because, being physically the stronger, he was more likely to enforce his will successfully on the female than submit meekly to any law which may be sought to be enforced on him through his weaker partner. Might certainly was right in many parts of the world in those days and the weaker had necessarily to go to the wall in every department of life. But Hindus are not a savage people to glorify muscular strength and ignore human rights. They have long been civilised enough to put other nations to shame by love of justice, fairness and equity as between the weak and the strong, for "the tears of the weak undermine the thrones of kings." The golden rule of family life, "Bear and forbear," without the observance of which the relations between the sexes can never be mutually happy or elevating, is well-known to Hindu civilisation and did not always have a one-sided and invidious application. But it cannot be denied that, judged from the women's point of view, the family law dispensed at present by our courts to Hindu women is the Achilles heel of modern Hindu civilisation, (vide "Some Points of Fact and Law" in the Reformer of 20th, 27th April and 15th June 1929).

Habit has no doubt dulled the keenness of our perceptions in this respect. To the many affectionate Hindu husbands, sons and brothers who have never harboured an unkind thought towards their female relations but simply enjoyed as natural the preferential rights and advantages which the law lavishly provided for them, these words will probably come with a shock of pained surprise. But a little reflection should be sufficient to convince any one that our family law as it stands today is humiliating, defrauding and dangerous to our women. By its very existence as Hindu law, apart from its application in any particular case, it lowers the human worth of a Hindu woman in comparison with the male, imprints the badge of helotry markedly and indelibly upon her brow, and makes her life's happiness unstable and precarious in the extreme, even when she may be practically ruling over man's household as his unquestioned queen by force of her womanly charm and winning ways and devoted services.

The Hindu law of marriage takes absolutely no count of a woman's feelings and personality and makes her disposal even in infancy quite irrevocable whether she likes or not the person to whom she is given away as wife. But that self-same law gives the completest freedom to the husband to desert her without cause or explanation and marry another to supersede her, or take any number of other women to share his affections with her, and in neither case is the injured wife herself freed from her bondage to him.

We have also a law of Inheritance which metes out unequal treatment to woman, imposing disabilities on her barefacedly by reason of her sex. Of course pious explanations have also been appended by learned Hindu jurists, supported by fraudulent or mistaken interpretations of irrelevant ancient texts, to justify the change of front. But to the woman who is robbed of her natural rights, a pious explanation is just as comforting as an impious one and no better. It is enough for her to know exactly where she stands in relation to man. She is debarred by reason of her sex from inheriting to her male relations, however near, if they happen to die while being members of a joint family with other males. She is excluded from inheritance in favour of male heirs, near or distant, according to a prescribed order of precedence even when the deceased held separate property which he could have lawfully willed away and would surely have bequeathed to her owing to natural affection, in preference to any existing male relations, had he been sufficiently forewarned of his approaching end and sufficiently instructed in legal matters to know the evidence of testamentary disposition. And even in the few instances in which she is allowed to inherit to her deceased male kindred, she is given no more than a life-interest in the property, so that she may enjoy only the produce and profits thereof till her death, without the freedom which a male heir enjoys of dealing with the body of the estate as a full owner. She can therefore neither sell it nor give it away during her life, nor bequeath it for the benefit of those whom she loves nor pass it on to her own heirs according to law after her death.

Added to these we have also an unwritten social law in operation in certain castes which, since the criminal law of the British has made Sati impossible, expects a widowed woman, however young, to at least disfigure herself and starve on one meal a day and eschew all human comforts, of course with a religious motive, and which tries to impress upon her in a thousand practical ways that her life is no longer of any value to herself or to society and that she has no place in this world except as a domestic drudge until merciful death removes her from this vale of tears.

It is no wonder that with such a social system and such family law, Hindu parents feel more inclined to weep than rejoice when a female child is born to them. No wonder if the entrapped, disinherited and repressed or suppressed women of our race, instead of being the inspirers and apostles of social progress, have till now hung like a millstone round our neck, dragging us, who had neither the generosity nor the nerve to emancipate them, down in the scale of civilised nations. But, God be praised, the hypnotic spell of ages is at last broken. Hindu women are getting wide awake to a sense of their own individuality. They have surged forward to take their proper place in Indian national life and covered themselves with glory in a brief political campaign. The day of their social freedom cannot now be far off, whether man in his wisdom responds to the call of the times quickly enough or not.

THE CAWNPORE RIOTS.

(BY THE REV. J. H. WILKIE).

For a few days last week I had the privilege of helping in "relief" work in Cawnpore with the Seva Samiti. It is perfectly evident that some awful things went on during the recent riots here and I have been so moved that I want to write something concerning them.

As we went around through the streets and galis of the city we saw many, many houses and shops which had been looted and burned. Most of them were the small and humble homes of the poor, but there were also many palatial residences of bankers, which were not only looted and burned, but ruined so that what is left standing of the houses is a menace to any who venture near, and these are being knocked down by the Municipality.

We saw lying around on the roadways the brick-bats which had been hurled at each other by the combatants and heaps of others piled together in convenient places for further use.

We saw crowds of refugees huddled together in places of safety, afraid to venture forth even several days after the rioting had stopped. They had lost everything, except what they had been able to carry away with them. In one place a man had just brought back from his home a cage of lals. Four of them were lying dead on the bottom of the cage. They had died because of lack of water. The people had fled from their homes in such haste that the lals had been left behind and the water had dried up in their cages before the owners could summon up enough courage to venture back and get them. They said many birds had died in cages that way.

We saw many, many wounded people, some only slightly wounded with gun-shot, or with cuts from swords or bruises from lathis, but many of them had most severe injuries which required the best medical attention. But the worst of this was to see the number of old people who had been attacked. We brought to the St. Catherine's Hospital one frail, little, old woman whose right arm had been broken by lathi blows some days before. It had been roughly bound up with splints, but it was harrowing to see her pain with every bump of the motor car. In the Prince of Wales' Hospital I saw a little girl of five or six who had been found lying unconscious in a nali two days after the attack.

And then there were the tales of the many bodies found by those who had been appointed to find these and burn them. I was not engaged in that work and so did not see such sights. But I was shown a place where a woman, evidently living by herself, had been attacked and cruelly put to death and her body thrown into a well, and another place where twenty bodies were found together.

But why go on telling of all that I saw and heard? To me the saddest and most tragic part of it all were the evidences of the bitter hatred which had been created. Of course we know that there had already been a considerable amount of feeling there already, but it will be many a day—probably many a year—before the bitter resentment will be removed as the people remember the cruel and unnecessary suffering inflicted on themselves and their friends. In one place where we were surrounded by a crowd of Moslems, they absolutely refused our help in the way of medical attention for the wounded, and the reason was that the Seva Samiti is a Hindu organization. But they were willing that I should come the next day in my own car to take to the hospital one of their number who had a gun-shot in his eye. And one day as we were going through the Prince of Wales' Hospital it pained me very much to see in the Moslem ward the looks of bitter, bitter hatred towards my Hindu companions of the Seva Samiti. I could generally get a smile for myself, but towards the others there were looks of determination to have revenge some day—at least, so it seemed to me. And why should it have been so?

One day as we were going around, I felt very much moved by all these things and asked my companion, the question which had been working in my mind, what was the cause of all this? Who was to blame for it all? He did not have a chance to answer me for we were interrupted just then, but that is the question which comes insistently to my mind in connection with all these terrible things that were enacted in the riots in Cawnpore. And it seems to me that it is a question that requires an answer. You cannot lightly pass over the awful loss of life and property and the bitter feelings which have been created. The cause of it all compels an answer—and the right answer—by all of us.

Of course the easiest way to answer that question is to lay the blame on the Government. Among some people it is popular to blame the Government for everything that goes wrong. But I hope that none of us will be satisfied with what is evidently so utterly absurd and so egregiously unfair. If we want to be fair and honest we must find some other cause for these troubles.

It is perfectly evident that communal feeling was behind a lot of what went on in Cawnpore, but it is also just as evident that there was let loose here at that time a whole lot of the worst kind of hooliganism, which had no particular connection with communal feelings. Under the cover of the other the lowest and most brutal passions of men had a chance to vent themselves and they took full advantage of it. And the question comes, how was it that all this brutality had a chance to get loose?

The answer seems to be very clear. At ordinary times order is maintained largely by the sheer sense of respect for authority on the part of the people. They conduct themselves properly, not because there is a large force of police posted at every corner and others patrolling all the streets, but because they respect the authority of those who have been entrusted with it. But if this respect for authority breaks down for any reason there is sure to be trouble, unless the forces that are entrusted with the maintenance of order are increased. And if trouble does occur surely the ones to blame—if blame is due—are the ones who have been responsible for the breaking down of respect for authority. That certainly seems evident.

And the ones who are really to blame for the trouble in Cawnpore must surely be those who have for months been breaking down this respect for authority in India, those who have been teaching civil disobedience, or in other words, just plain, simple lawlessness. When such a thing goes on for a long time there will be one sure and inevitable result. We have seen it in Cawnpore.

I have a very great deal of sympathy for the aspirations of the people of this land to control their own affairs and I have a very great deal of respect and admiration for many of the things which Mr. Gandhi has been advocating, but I believe that in connection with the awful things which have been going on here and elsewhere the blame should be put where it belongs. For many months Mr. Gandhi and his followers have been teaching disrespect for the authority of the Government, and this is the result. And I believe that the time has come when all of us who have the best interests of India at heart should speak out and protest as vigorously and as strongly as we can against any further carrying on of this civil disobedience campaign. Of course, if we believe that in the interests of what is to be gained by this campaign it is worth while to have a riot like what we have had in Cawnpore, with its loss of property worth probably lakhs of rupees, with its loss of hundreds of lives—to say nothing of the thousands, probably, who have been wounded—and with its greatly increased bitterness of communal feeling—if we think this is worth while let us stand by Mr. Gandhi and his civil disobedience campaign. But if not, this is the time for those who have the courage of their convictions to speak out. I for one do not want to see again or hear again of, in Cawnpore or anywhere else, anything like what we have had here during the recent riots. Even if swaraj could be gained by civil disobedience, if it is to be at the cost of rapine, murder and bitter hatred such as we have seen here, it would not be worth while.

14th April 1931.

The Viceroy and the National Christian Council:—The Secretary of the National Christian Council sends us the following resolution passed by the Executive Committee of the National Christian Council on 9th April for publication: 'At the close of Lord Irwin's term of office as Viceroy the Executive Committee of the National Christian Council desires, on behalf of all whom it represents, to place on record its deep sense of thankfulness to God for the notable Christian example which he has given in all his high responsibilities, and for the successful efforts which he has made to secure peace and goodwill in India.'

INDIAN EMIGRATION FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

(By MR. C. F. ANDREWS.)

II.

The list of figures of Indians who have returned since the Gandhi-Smuts agreement in 1914 are as follows:—

1914 ( $\frac{1}{2}$ year)	...	290	} War Year.
1915-1916	...	992
1916-1917	...	1,865
1917-1918	...	1,364
1918-1919	...	1,582
1919-1920	...	1,819	} First Bonus of £5 and free passage.
1920-1921	...	1,816
1921-1922	...	2,927
1922-1923	...	2,324
1923-1924	...	2,716
1924-1925	...	1,063	} Second Bonus raised to £20.
1925-1926	...	1,400
1926-1927	...	2,061
1927-1928	...	2,996
1928-1929	...	3,477
1929-1930	...	1,328
1930-1931	...	1,042

It will be noticed that the bonus of £5 which was granted along with the free passage in 1921-22 immediately brought up the numbers, and they remained high for three years. The same happened in the years 1927 and 1928 when the bonus was increased to £20. In both cases there was a drop in the numbers very soon after the bonus was given or increased. Before 1921 no free passages were given except to those who had earned them as indentured labourers.

There is one other fact which has to be taken into account, namely, the increasing rate at which the whole Indian population in South Africa is becoming "South African born" instead of born in India itself. It is probable that in Natal the number of people born in India is now under thirty thousand. Many have reckoned that to-day in Natal the percentage of South African born Indians is as high as 80 per cent. In the Transvaal the percentage is somewhat lower, possibly only 50 per cent., but the number of Indians in the Transvaal is comparatively small. It is therefore almost certain that the question of returned emigrants is now settling itself. There are very few who wish to go back to India, and those who take the bonus know perfectly well what they are doing. They have had the strongest advice from their own fellow-countrymen concerning the conditions which they are likely to find in India on their arrival. It is highly probable that at the next Conference, at the conclusion of the five years' Agreement, this question of repatriation will fall into the background and will be regarded as practically settled by the course of events, and no further bonus is likely to be offered by the Union Government.

But this does not in any way exonerate the Government of India from the responsibility for looking after those who have already come back. It is a part of the bargain with the South African Union Government that those who have returned shall be well treated in India on their arrival, and work shall be found for them wherever possible. It is of the utmost importance that those who do return shall receive a welcome and not feel utterly miserable. A Commission, on which the Hon. G. A. Natesan sat as Chairman, has made its inquiry into this matter, and it is important that everything which that Commission recommended should be carried out generously and speedily. I have personally made three recommendations to the Government of India :

1. That any money placed on deposit by repatriates on their arrival should immediately begin to bear interest however small the amount.

2. That a friendly Committee should be formed in Madras itself to help the returned emigrants in every way possible.

3. That the staff of Government workers engaged in looking after the returned emigrants should be enlarged.

I believe that if these three things were done there would be every hope that the small number who are still returning to India would be well looked after on their arrival.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

After reading Mr. Menon's article on Capital Punishment I am inspired to write a few words. I too believe that capital punishment should be abolished. I came from Kansas, U. S. A. where capital punishment has been taboo from almost the beginning of the state. In fighting against this inhuman practice however we should try to be constructive and more or less consistent. Both capital punishment and imprisonment are imperfect methods of dealing with crime but government will give them up only when they are shown something else that is better.

Though it is most desirable to do away with the evils in capitalism and imperialism, this will not necessarily abolish capital punishment. Russia, the country that has made the most determined fight against imperialism, puts on a very large number of executions. Of course capital punishment is there largely reserved for imperialists, capitalists and others who show opposition to the Soviet form of government.

We must remember too that there are still a great many good and well informed people who believe in capital punishment. While England is contemplating a five year close season several States in my own country that do not allow capital punishment are thinking of trying it again. So it would not quite do to execute all persons who still believe in capital punishment. Nor do I think we shall do much good by trying to make national heroes of such persons as may claim for themselves the personal authority to pass and execute sentence of capital punishment on whatever victims they may see fit to choose.

Not having had much opportunity to study criminology I should like to see some worthwhile articles on scientific and common sense methods of dealing with crime.

Damoh, C. P.
April 14-1931.

F. E. LIVINGOOD.

INDO-BRITISH SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

(BY MR. J. C. KUMARAPPA.)

Mr. J. C. Kumarappa, a member of the Committee appointed by the National Congress to make an inquiry into the question of financial liability of India under British rule has issued from the Vidyapith, Ahmedabad, the following announcement to the press :

Sir,

To materialise the financial clause contained in the fifth resolution of the Karachi Congress (ratifying the Gandhi-Irwin Pact) The Working Committee of the Congress has passed the following resolution :

"The Working Committee appoints a Committee consisting of Mr. D. N. Bahadurji, Professor K. T. Shah, Mr. Bhulabhai J. Desai and Mr. J. C. Kumarappa (Convener) to carry out a scrutiny into the financial transactions of the East India Company and the British Government in India and the so-called Public Debt of India and to report on the obligations which should, in future, be borne by India or England. The Committee be requested to present its report by the end of May 1931."

I am writing to invite you on behalf of my Committee to put forward your views on relevant transactions relating to which you may have in your possession materials or information which will be of value in our work. If you have already expressed your views on these matters, I shall be glad to have an indication of the source from which I may be able to secure such material.

It will greatly facilitate our work, if you can send on to me any statement, you are pleased to submit, before the 25th instant to enable us to complete our work in time.

It is needless for me to mention that any co-operation you may extend to us in this Public work will be much appreciated by my Committee.

It will be noticed that the resolution of the Karachi Congress is not limited to the so-called Public Debts or to the transactions of the British Government of India, but brings within its scope even dealings of the East India Company entered into at the instigation of the British Government. The aim is to ascertain the damage caused to India by a deliberate policy of exploitation.

The past transactions to be examined can be divided into three main groups :—

1. Where errors of principle have been committed i. e. Items which should not have been borne by India; e. g. Foreign Military Expeditions etc.
2. Deliberate undue preferences, e. g. £ 100 millions War Gift. Discriminating Railway Rates and Tariffs, Exchange Policy.
3. Damage caused by Administrative mismanagement e. g. building of New Delhi, Bombay Back Bay scheme, etc.

Past transactions include many items which a National Government cannot ratify. An instance of this is the tribute, 400,000 pounds per year, paid out of Indian revenues, by the East India Company to the British Treasury. Robert Knight, a former Editor of "The Times of India" writes under the heading "Our Financial relations with the Indian Empire," page 28 in 1866, in regard to this: "I have looked somewhat carefully into this subject and I avow my conviction that if we calculate the annual increase at 5 per cent. only on that capital, England is today richer by 1000 millions Sterling and India, poorer by the same amount than either would have been but for that abstraction." We have to add to this the claim since 1866 to 1931 allowing for variation in the general level of prices.

As an example of the computation suggested, the claim in respect of 70 million pounds, which was credited to the East India Company by the Crown as purchase price, and which included the cost of wars in China, Burma, Afghanistan, Persia, Cape of Good Hope, Manilla, the Mauritius and the Moluccas, is worked out below roughly in round figures.

Capital amount of wrong debit	...	70
Interest paid at 3 million pounds per year for seventy three years	...	219
Consequential loss of interest, Simple interest at 4 % on these payments	... say	9
Total		298
Million pounds.

The original debt of seventy millions in 1857 results in a claim of 298 millions to-day, out of which there can be no question in respect of the first two items, 289 millions which represent actual out-of-pocket payments made by India and which must be claimed even as a mere restitution, without any talk of interest, while the last item might well be contested by the Britishers at the Independent Tribunal of course. These will have to be accurately computed, by an Actuary and similar calculations with adjustments due to variations in price levels also made in respect of other items placed in our first two groups i. e., involving errors of principle and those due to undue preference.

Apart from actual cost of wars, etc. debited, a claim has to be made in respect of higher expenses incurred for maintenance of forces for Imperial purposes. The standard of equipment etc. of the Indian Army has been necessarily maintained for this reason at a higher standard than what would have been needed merely for defence and internal order in India. It is estimated that one third of the annual Military Expenditure could well be charged to the Empire Account. We cannot overlook this claim while we may even ignore the charges to India in respect of upkeep of the India Office and High Commissioners Establishment in London. It may be noted here that expenses of Colonial Offices in London are borne by Great Britain, while India the milch cow, has to find her own fodder. However, these may be passed as administrative blunders though these are deliberate ones.

It is suggested that your statement may include.

1. The transaction to which exception is taken, giving reasons ;
2. The amount of such transaction, stating source and authority and indicating portion to be charged to Great Britain.
3. Interest actually paid on these.
4. Consequential loss, which in your opinion, should be included in the claim.

It will be much appreciated if all statements are sent in time to reach the Committee before 25th April 1931.

INDIA'S STATUS.

Peace may be brought much nearer as a result of the conference between Gandhi and Lord Irwin. The outcome will doubtless be known to our readers before this editorial appears. Our prediction, however, is that no satisfactory agreement will be reached. It should not be forgotten that the Mahatma and the Viceroy have met before. High hopes were raised prior to the Lahore Congress when the announcement was made that Gandhi had accepted an invitation from New Delhi to talk over the situation. But discussion only revealed more clearly the nature of the deadlock.

Status is the heart of the problem. Most Indians do not desire to have the British leave India ; they want them to stay, but to remain as equals and guests, not as rulers and snobs. The Nationalists insist that they will be satisfied with nothing less than mastery in their own house. Unless Gandhi and Jawaharlal Nehru have completely reversed their former attitude, they and their colleagues will not accept the most liberal offer the Viceroy can make for the simple reason that Great Britain is not yet willing to relinquish control of India.

The fact should be made clear that the Round Table Conference did not propose any fundamental change in the position or rank of India. Her status under the proposed constitution is to remain indefinitely that of an inferior to England and the Dominions. A considerable increase in the degree of India's autonomy is contemplated, but ultimate power, including the veto, is reserved for British officials. Under this proposal India is not to be given Dominion Status now or within any specified period. Britain is to have the last word with regard to the army, finance, foreign affairs, and relations with the Indian States.

That Mahatma Gandhi and his fellow Congressmen will accept this proposal seems wholly improbable. It should be recalled that Gandhi sent word to Ramsay MacDonald in December, 1929, that he would gladly attend the Round Table Conference provided it was being called for the purpose of drafting a constitution of Dominion Status for India, but that he would not consent to go if it was the Labour Government's intention to regard Dominion Status merely as a goal or an objective. Indian Nationalists are convinced that the debasing and demoralizing effects of being ruled by foreigners and frequently being subjected to contemptuous discrimination and exploitation are intolerable and should no longer be endured. They are as determined to secure freedom as were the American colonists, and as willing to run any risk in acquiring it. A change in status is what they are insisting upon, and this change in position is not contemplated in the Round Table proposal. After the American Revolution began, George Washington and Patrick Henry would not have accepted an offer which provided for the removal of grievances and the granting of increased autonomy but which left final power in Britain's hands.

Indian Nationalists are unmoved by arguments that their country is not yet ready for self-Government. And the outcome of the present struggle will not be determined by the fitness of India but by the intensity of the Nationalists' passion for liberty and by their powers of endurance.

Not only does the Round Table agreement fall far short of Dominion Status, but it loads the dice in favor of the conservative and reactionary elements in India and, if accepted by Gandhi, it would make immeasurably more difficult pacific social reconstruction. A drastic reorganization of the economic system is imperatively needed. Potentates, industrialists, and land owners dwell in ostentatious luxury while the masses exist in agonizing misery. Jawaharlal Nehru and the left-wing Nationalists are more passionately concerned with the redemption of the poor from economic exploitation than they are for political freedom from Great Britain. The provisions of the Round Table Conference would plant the princes, capitalists, and rich landowners firmly in the saddle and would thereby enormously increase the probability of violent class war in India.

In our opinion the Nationalists' struggle will continue until Great Britain grants a new status—that of equality. If Britain is wise in time, India may be saved as a Dominion; if not, India will insist upon separation and will go her perilous way alone.—The World Tomorrow of New York.

THE DEPRESSED CLASSES MISSION SOCIETY OF INDIA.

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

The Silver Jubilee of the Depressed Classes Mission Society of India founded by Mr. V. R. Shinde on the 18th of October, 1906, on the Deepavali Day, under the Presidentship of the late Justice Sir Narayan Chandavarkar Kt., is proposed to be celebrated, at the Ahalyashram Head Quarters of the Poona Branch of the Society during the first fortnight of November, 1931.

The chief object of the Society is to remove from Hinduism the crime of untouchability under which one fifth of India's population is obliged to live a life of social degradation and shame. For this it seems to me, the members of the so called higher castes have inherited a debt they can never possibly repay, which debt too, they are, with very few exceptions, adding to every day of their lives. This appeal should therefore come home to those members with such irresistible force that they will feel constrained to make a response to it such as their respective circumstances will allow.

Fortunately it is universally admitted that the Depressed Classes have in the past been very badly and cruelly treated by the superior castes, and that, moreover, it is equally generally admitted, without any real justification whatsoever. Their consequent present deplorable condition is therefore a standing disgrace and reproach to those castes. It is also not disputed that the severe disabilities of the Depressed Classes should be completely removed, and I therefore feel that I can appeal to the already convinced.

The broad activities of the Society during the past 24 years have been two-fold. Firstly, to awaken the Depressed Classes by educating them, for which the Society established educational institutions in prominent towns of Southern and Western India, Central Provinces and Berar, and, secondly, to agitate against the vile practice of untouchability by the higher classes of Hindu society. For the later purpose ten All-India sessions and six Provincial sessions of the Anti-untouchability Conference were organized in various towns between 1907 and 1931 by the Society.

With regard to our newer, daily activities and plans, during the past year this Branch has been undergoing a general over-haul. Past differences and troubles have been satisfactorily solved, and the great drawback of the site of the Central School, due to the customs of the neighbouring population, it has now at last been possible to overcome by building a wall round the compound. Hitherto the buildings could not be kept in a proper state of repair owing to the constant depredations of the numerous intruders on the site, while what should have been a playground was impossible to approach, let alone to play on. Now the buildings are being made trim and sightly, and it is hoped that the compound will be a means of recreation and enjoyment for the scholars, to which end free games kit will be provided, and thus, by making the school more attractive, it is hoped that the standing and almost insuperable difficulty of regular attendance may, to some slight extent atleast, be lessened. The quality of the teaching and teachers is also undergoing improvement. But all these activities mean money, the lack of which is the one obstacle to the efforts this Branch is making.

A reserve fund has so far been quite out of the question, nevertheless, in view of the approaching Silver Jubilee of the Society, it is proposed to make a supreme effort to form one, and I would therefore beg to approach you with an earnest request that you will most kindly be pleased to make some contribution however small towards the building up of the fund.

All remittances should please be addressed to the undersigned at the address given below.

Ahalyashram,
896, Nana Peth,
Irwin Road,
Poona City, 2.

H. C. STEEN,
President, Poona Branch
Depressed Classes Mission Society of India.

THE LATE MR. K. T. PAUL.

A DEVOTED PUBLIC WORKER.

The Hindu published the following from its correspondent :

It is with deep regret that I have to report the death of Mr. K. T. Paul, O. B. E. at his residence, "The Thottam," at about 11 p.m. last night (11th instant). Mr. Paul was ailing ever since he returned from England on 13th January last after attending the Round Table Conference in London, from inflammation of the chest and heart trouble and was confined to bed during these two months. The District Medical Officer, who was attending on him, ordered complete rest. Mr. Paul was fairly recovering but grew worse owing to a relapse on Friday last and succumbed last night. "I gave my life for India in London" were the words of the late lamented Mr. Paul a few hours before his death, uttered to some of his relations and friends by his bedside. In his death India has lost a staunch nationalist and the Indian Christian community a steady and popular leader, while Salem has lost a devoted citizen and an enthusiastic Municipal Councillor.

Mr. Kanakarayan Tiruchelvam Paul was born in 1876 and graduated from the Christian College, Madras. He started life as a teacher and was the Headmaster and Lecturer in the local college. He was a Municipal Councillor, General Secretary of the National Missionary Society of India, Member of the Fraser Commission on village education in India, President of the All India Christian Conference 1923, Moderator of the General Assembly of the South Indian United Church, 1923 to 1927, Vice-President of the World Students' Christian Federation, 1926 to 1928, and General National Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., India, Burma and Ceylon for several years. He was connected with the Committee of Management of the local London Mission High School, which owes its present prominent position mainly to Mr. Paul's endeavours. He was also author of several publications, namely "Citizenship in Modern India," "Adult Education," "An Urgent Need of Modern India," "The British Connection with India" and the Editor of "Young Men of India." His work as a delegate to the Round Table Conference remains still fresh in the nation's memory. He was interested in all public affairs and travelled widely in America and Europe several times. His genial personality was able to enthuse all those who came into contact with him with a fervour for work and public service.

He leaves behind him an aged mother, his wife, four sons and four daughters besides a huge circle of friends and relations to bemoan his loss.

His funeral took place this evening at 4-30 when a large number of persons, officials and non-officials, Europeans and Indians, attended the function. The Service was conducted by the Rev. T. D. Moses, according to the rituals of the South Indian United Church, London Mission, and the body was buried in the "Thottam," in front of his own bungalow in the family cemetery.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Poona D. C. Mission Society's Schools: 24th Annual Social Gathering and Prize Distribution:—The 24th Annual Gathering and Prize Distribution of the schools of the D. C. Mission Society of India, Poona Branch, were held at the Ahalyashram premises of the Society at Poona City on Last Saturday evening (11th April). The premises were tastefully decorated. Among those present were Lt.-Col. H. O. Steen, Mr. K. G. Bagde, Mr. M. D. Peer Mahomad, Mr. L. M. Chaudhari, Mr. G. S. Wable, Mr. Mirza, Mr. Deo, Mr. Nimbalkar, Mr. Pardesbi, Mr. Sakat, Mr. S. R. Thorat, Subedar R. S. Ghatge, Mr. D. V. Gaikwad, Mr. and Mrs. Patade, and Mr. N. K. Kadam. After a short prayer offered by Subedar R. S. Ghatge and welcome songs sung by the school children, fine display of Boxing and other sports was given by the present and past students of the D. C. Mission Society's schools. On the proposal made by Col. Steen, the president of the D. C. Mission, Poona, and duly seconded by Mr. K. B. Bagde, the Chairman of the Managing Committee of the Society, Mr. M. D. Peer Mahomad, Chairman, Poona City Municipal School Board, occupied the Chair. Mr. K. G. Patade, Secretary of the Mission Schools read out the messages of sympathy for the function from Mr. V. R. Shinde and Mr. G. G. Thakar, and a statement about last year's progress of the Mission schools at Poona and requested Mr. Peer Mahomad to give away the prizes to the successful students in the last Annual Examination and the sports held in the morning. The Chairman's remarks.—In distributing the prizes which included medals, books and clothes, Mr. Peer Mahomad said:—"Col. Steen, Ladies and gentlemen, I feel indeed thankful to you all for the honour which you have done me in asking me to preside over this function. My office as chairman of our Municipal School Board will terminate within six months and I am very glad to associate myself with the very good work your Mission is doing for the last 24 years for uplifting the Depressed Classes. Please permit me to say that the Primary Education is the chief foundation of the progress that is expected to be achieved from our younger generation and let me tell you that the School Board of which I am the Chairman has done its utmost to serve the children of the Depressed Classes in this respect. Yours is indeed a very uphill task and your efforts to remove the bar of untouchability imposed upon your people, under religious pretext, is highly praiseworthy. None except the Hindus who are still under the influences of the Varna-Shrama Dharma, observe untouchability and as an humble follower of Islam, I say that we Mahomedans shall do everything in our power to assist you in your attempts to get rid of the curse of untouchability. Every day your cause is gaining ground under the very able leadership of your supporters like Col. Steen and others. In conclusion he offered suitable advice to the school children. Mr. Lalmahamed Malik Saheb Chaudhari, Member of the School Board of the Poona City Municipality also addressed the Gathering in the course of which he said:—"The Depressed Classes Mission activities in Poona is a living example of what can be done by individual efforts of Social workers like the late Mahatma Jotirao Phule and Mr. V. R. Shinde and others who took the question of Depressed Classes long before the Government and the local bodies knew their duties towards these Classes, who for a very long time have spent, most of their resources in educating those communities, who were already more advanced in education. It is, therefore, high time that Government and Local Bodies should now divert their full attention to firstly educate the Backward Classes so that the gulf which is still existing between the Backward and Advanced Classes will soon disappear. Col. Steen proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the Chair, and Mr. K. G. Bagde to all the guests present on the occasion. Subedar R. S. Ghatge and Mr. D. V. Gaikwad thanked all those who contributed their mite to make the function a grand success. After the distribution of flowers and group-photo being taken by Mr. K. K. Kadam the function was over.

Colour Bar in Britain:—According to the "Daily Express" the London hotels have refused to receive Mr. Roland Hayes, the distinguished Negro who sang before the King and Queen at Buckingham Palace a decade ago and will arrive in London early in May to give a series of concerts. Having failed to secure rooms in a hotel for him, his friends have arranged private accommodation instead.

New Vice-Chancellor:—It is announced that His Excellency the Chancellor has appointed the Rev. John McKenzie, M.A. to be Vice-Chancellor of the University of Bombay, vice Mr. Justice Mirza Ali Akbar Khan, B.A., Barrister-at-Law, resigned with effect from April 18. The Rev. J. McKenzie is the popular Principal of the Wilson College Bombay.

The East African Question:—It is understood that the Rt. Hon. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, P. C., O. H., will sail from Bombay by "The Viceroy of India" on Saturday, the 18th instant in order that he may be in time in London to meet the Kenya Indian delegation to discuss the East African question and give evidence before the Joint Select Committee of Parliament on behalf of the Government of India in the second week of May.

ADVERTISEMENTS

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
" Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Master's Classes. Apply with 2 annas stamp to:— Imperial Telegraph College,
Delhi.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening
HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT

with us and earn  $3\frac{1}{2}\%$  interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BULLION EXCHANGE.
(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)
BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed ... .. Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up ... .. " 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund ... .. " 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for shorter period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhoi, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Shri Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent, Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vitthaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Nalb Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhalal Dajibhai Amia B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Sar Suba, Baroda State, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Musumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

O. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirale ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nashik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Paunch Mahals).
Palghar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akni (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Viramgaum (District Ahmedabad).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorized Capital	—	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay

Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

83/1, Amherst Street,

CALCUTTA.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
ransacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJANI PAIN BALM PRODUCES BEST RESULTS

IN

Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.
AMRUTANJANI DEPOT.

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

IT IS YOURS

A SAFE

And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—
KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs.	a.	p.
Subscription (including postage).
Inland ...	5	0	0
Foreign ...	5	8	0
Single copy ...	0	8	0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1928 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 65.

KING OF JAZZ

featuring

PAUL WHITEMAN AND HIS BAND

Universal's All Colour, All Talking, Singing & Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 16 and 17.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS

9 Parts, featuring

JOAN BENNETT, CLAUDE ALLISTER AND ROBERT MONTGOMERY

United Artists All Talking Picture.

MY GAL SAL

1 Reel, Paramount Sound Novelty.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

MICKEY'S SURPRISE

2 Parts, featuring —MICKEY McGUIRE— R. K. O. Talking Comedy.

FOUR FEATHERS

8 Parts, featuring

RICHARD ARLEN, FAY WRAY, CLIVE BROOK, WILLIAM

POWEL AND NOAH BEERY

Paramount Sound Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

BROWN GOLD

1 Reel, U. F. A. Picture.

HUSBANDS FOR RENT

6 Parts featuring —OWEN MOOR & HELEN COSTELLO—Warner Bros. Picture.

JUST A STALL

2 Parts, featuring —BARNEY GOOGLE & SPARK PLUG— R. K. O. Comedy.

ON WINNIE BEHAVE

2 Parts, featuring —WINNIE WINKLE— Atlas Picture Comedy.

Time—4-30, 6-30 and 10 p. m.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1931

No. 34

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Basava. Mahomedan Nationalist Conference. A Realistic View of the Round Table Conference. The Bhavnagar Investiture. Future of Sind. The Cause of Cawnpore Riots.	Religious Imperialism. Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. IV. The Depressed Classes Mission Society. Mr. K. T. Paul. Poona Dattar. News and Views.
--	---

NOTES.

Basava—The small community of Lingayats in Bombay celebrated on Wednesday the anniversary of the birth-day of the founder of their sect. Basava, according to accepted tradition, was born in the first quarter of the twelfth century. He came of a Brahmin family and rose to be Prime Minister of his native state of Kalyan, now a decayed town in the Nizam's Dominions. It is remarkable that over eight hundred years ago when Europe was plunged in darkness and superstition, a reformer should have arisen in India who advocated the equality of all men and of the sexes, the abolition of caste, child marriages, and the prohibition of the remarriage of widows and other reforms of a radical character in Hindu society. In religion Basava proclaimed a strictly monotheistic worship of Shiva as the Supreme Being. He did away with ideas of ceremonial pollution. Abstinence from meat and liquor was insisted upon. The Lingayats alone among Hindu sects bury the dead. How this innovation, which cannot be regarded as progressive, came to be adopted, is an interesting point for sociologists. It lends colour to the suggestion that Basava was influenced by the Syrian bishopric which existed in the neighbouring territory. Another feature of Lingayat tradition which also supports this theory is the sudden appearance in its body of the doctrine of immaculate conception. According to Hindu ideas there is nothing sordid or sinful in the normal processes of child-birth to necessitate a departure from them in the case of God seeking to incarnate among men. Whether, however, Basava borrowed these ideas from Christianity or not, there can be no doubt that he was a leader far ahead of his time, and if his injunctions had continued to be followed, the Lingayats should be today the most progressive and enlightened among Indian communities. After about five hundred years of vigorous growth, however, the great movement inaugurated by Basava would seem to have degenerated into a close sect with doors and windows tightly closed to the free flow of ideas. Basava's example is a great inspiration to all Indian reformers and particularly to Lingayats, and we are glad that educated Lingayat young men are awakening to the value of their precious heritage. The Lingayat community has given a Minister to the Governor of Bombay in the person of Mr. Kamli and it is to him more than to any other leader of the community that the younger men look to play a part in contemporary life worthy of Basava who will always have a high place among the Fathers of Indian nationalism.

Mahomedan Nationalist Conference—By far the most important event of the last few days in the Indian political world, is the very successful Conference held in Lucknow by Mahomedan nationalists. It has been evident for some time past that the nationalist as distinguished from the communally minded Mussalmans, were becoming uneasy at the prospect of the perpetuation of separate electorates. Some of them sent cables to the Prime Minister during the Round Table Conference expressing their strong opposition to separate electorates which, they were convinced, were proving detrimental to the true interests of Indian Mahomedans. This school of thought has been rapidly growing and found striking expression in the Nationalist Muslim Conference which met at Lucknow last week under the presidency of Syed Sir Ali Imam. Sir Ali Imam's presidential address at the session of the Muslim League in 1905, marked a turning point in Indian politics. He was, as he told the Lucknow Conference, one of the deputation which waited on Lord Minto with the demand for separate electorates for Indian Mahomedans. The fact that he presided at the Lucknow Conference, which was called primarily to oppose separate electorates, and to demand joint electorates, has therefore, a special significance. Sir Ali Imam explained that in the interval between 1905 and 1909 he had time to study the question carefully and he definitely came to the conclusion that separate electorates were not only a negation of Indian nationalism but was also positively harmful to Muslims themselves. "As early as 1909," he went on to say, "he had raised his voice of protest against separate electorates but at that time his views were condemned both in the press and on platforms by Mussalmans almost to a man. To-day after 22 years he found himself in the presence of a gathering of Muslims, representative not only of all provinces of India, but also of several powerful organisations and virtually the entire Muslim intelligentsia." The Chairman of the Reception Committee, Maulana Kutbuddin Abdul Vali, spoke in equally uncompromising terms in favour of joint electorates and Dr. Ansari in moving the principal resolution of the Conference made a powerful speech in support of them. A section of the Anglo-Indian press affects to treat the Lucknow Conference as of no importance, but Sir Mahomed Shaffi, the President of the Moslem League, who pressed for the retention of separate electorates at the Round Table Conference, evidently does not think so. He has issued a statement in which he suggests the convening of a Round Table Conference of Muslims including representatives from the Lucknow Conference to formulate a scheme unanimously for presentation to Mahatma Gandhi. A comparative analysis, he says, of resolutions passed by the Lucknow Conference and the Muslim League make it absolutely clear that Muslims of all parties are agreed on all points except the form of the electorates and this matter could be best settled at the proposed Conference.

A Realistic View of the Round Table Conference:—Many of the delegates who attended the Round Table Conference in London have, on their return, given out their impressions of it. Nearly every one of them, however, has been influenced by the natural desire to magnify the achievements of a body of which they were more or less active members and in the credit for which they can claim a share. M. C. Y. Chintamani, however, presented on Wednesday what may be justly termed a realistic view of the Conference in a spirit of complete detachment, at the Servants of India Society's Hall in Bombay. Mr. Chintamani acknowledged that the object for which they attended the Conference was not the one which they were called upon to discuss there. They went to ask for Dominion Status but found themselves discussing Federation instead. How they came to do this, and why they acquiesced in this sudden change, Mr. Chintamani did not explain. But the reason was perhaps implied in his avowal that the delegates went, not as representing any organisation or school of politics, but merely as nominees of the Viceroy. They were there as invited guests and it was not for them to order what dishes should be placed before them. With due regard to the conventions of guesthood, we cannot think that it would be a gross violation of them if a vegetarian politely waved aside a meat dish or a total abstainer courteously declined a proffered glass of whisky. Mr. Chintamani would, perhaps, justify even the provision of liquor at the delegates' banquet to their British hosts on this ground, namely, that they were nominees of the Viceroy and did not represent any body or anything. Mr. Chintamani frankly stated that what made most impression in Great Britain was not so much the speeches at the Conference but the boycott of Lancashire cloth in India and the thought of Mahatma Gandhi who, though not present at the Conference, was all the more present to the minds of the British people and their representatives at the Round Table. Incidentally, Mr. Chintamani mentioned that Indians were nowadays spoken of in continental countries more often as Gandhi's countrymen than as Indians. So much can one great character do to raise a whole nation in the estimation of the world. In Mr. Chintamani's opinion the Conference was neither a success nor yet a failure. It ended without coming to any definite conclusions, but it paved the way to the Gandhi-Irwin agreement which is a great thing. Mr. Chintamani said that Mahatma Gandhi and his colleagues would not have consented to accept the work of the conference as a basis for further negotiations if they had not felt that it was sufficiently satisfactory. It may also be that they feared that if they continued to hold aloof, the Conference may take decisions which will acquire the status of settled facts and it will be difficult if not impossible, to revise them. The latter seems to be the more probable reason as the Congress party, so far as we understand its position, claims the right to re-open every point discussed in London.

The Bhavnagar Investiture:—In handing over the State seal at the investiture ceremony on the 18th instant to the young Maharaja of Bhavnagar, Sir Prabhaskar Pattani, President of the Council of Regency, addressing His Highness said: "I hand over an organised State, a full treasury, a contented and attached people and the happy and friendly relationship of your House with your brother Princes, not only unabated but, I trust, more closely cemented." The principal achievements of the minority administration which the Agent to the Governor-General recounted in presenting the Viceroy's Kharita investing the Maharaja with full powers, show that the two first claims were well justified. For the third, the Maharaja himself at the State banquet hoped to take out the Agent to the Governor-General among his people and show him how affectionate is the relationship between him and his subjects. The cordiality of the relations of the State with its neighbours was attested by the presence of several of their rulers at the investiture ceremony. The marriage of the Maharaja to the Princess of Gondal—his own choice, the Agent to the Governor-General said—is to follow closely on the investiture. Judged by human standards the Maharaja starts life with everything calculated to ensure unruffled happiness and to enable him to give his entire devotion to the high task to which he has been called. If the position, however, is one of great opportunities it is also one of great temptations. The greatest safeguard against the latter as it is the greatest strength in regard to the former, is the closer association of the subjects with the Sovereign not merely by bonds of affection and loyalty but in the discharge of the functions of Government. The Maharaja's acknowledgment of Sir Prabhaskar Pattani's devoted services to the State and His Highness' House, was not a whit excessive. Sir Prabhaskar has fought like a tigress for her cubs to protect their interests and there must be some scars which will take long to heal. Youth is impatient of experience and history has recorded instances of young rulers whose first concern on coming to the throne was to drop the pilot. We trust Sir Prabhaskar's association with the State will continue and that when the time comes for him to retire he will have the supreme satisfaction of having helped to make Bhavnagar an example to all other States by her rapid evolution into a fully constitutional monarchy.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER
BOMBAY, APRIL 25, 1931.

FUTURE OF SIND.

Fourteen points were formulated at a Conference of Mussalmans held at Delhi two years ago over which Mr. M. A. Jinnah presided. These are commonly spoken of as Mr. Jinnah's fourteen points. One of these is that Sind should be separated from Bombay and constituted into a separate province. The relevancy of this proposal in a scheme for safeguarding the interests of Moslems as a minority community, was supposed to arise from the fact that Muslims predominate in Sind, constituting as they do two-thirds of the population and that the addition of one more province to the three—the North-West Frontier Province, the Punjab and Bengal—in which Mahomedans are a majority, would increase their representation in the Central Government and their influence in the country generally. It was even suggested that communal provinces were intended to hold as hostages minorities who may be a majority in other provinces. If Hindus of Malabar did not appreciate the attentions of their Mopla neighbours, they are to be brought round by the Mahomedans of Sind bringing pressure to bear upon the Hindus of their province! Frankly, Sind was to be separated for communal reasons from the Bombay Presidency with which it has remained united ever since it became a part of British India. The proposal was condemned as soon as it was made by all except those who started it but the Nehru Committee, while deprecating the cutting up of provinces to favour particular communities, recommended the separation of Sind if it should be found financially feasible. The Sub-Committee which it appointed to report on the financial aspect of the proposal, never made its report. Owing to the dead-set made against the Nehru Report by communalists, the Lahore Congress summarily discarded it. We may remark in passing that we were from the first convinced that Lord Birkenhead's challenge, which the Nehru Report was intended to answer, was a trap, that it was intended to create dissension among Indians and that it should have been ignored. Though, however, the Nehru Report has been formally thrown on the scrap-heap the broad principles on which it was framed remain, and the suggestion that Sind should be separated if it can support itself without extraneous aid, has been accepted by the National Congress. The opposition of Sindhi Hindus to the idea is practically unanimous. Mr. Jamshed N. R. Mehta, the distinguished President of the Karachi Municipality, suggests as a way out of the deadlock that the matter should be left to Mahatma Gandhi whose decision which, he implies, may be in favour of separation, should be accepted as final.

During a flying visit to Sind last month we formed some impressions which may be set down here. The Hindus are dead against separation almost to a man. We were told by a few of them that they would nevertheless acquiesce in the separation in the larger interests of the country, if the principle of joint electorates was accepted but on no account would they withdraw their opposition to separation if separate electorates are to continue. They admit that Sind does not get fair treatment as a part of the Bombay Presidency but they value the cultural and social connection with Bombay, which is the most important incident of the present arrangement; and they apprehend that separation would mean isolation from the most progressive current of Indian life and thought. As an administrative division, Sind is even now practically a separate province. It has its own judicial and revenue systems and the cadres of all but the few top posts are separate from those of the Presidency. It is the University of Bombay which has forged the most cherished link between Sind and the Presidency proper. A striking result of this influence is found in the fact that the principle of co-education in colleges, which Bombay, alone among Indian provinces, has consistently upheld, is firmly rooted in Sind. The neighbouring province of the Punjab with which Sind is bound by economic and religious ties, has been all along opposed to co-education of boys and girls. It may be possible even if Sind becomes a separate province to maintain the present connection with Bombay University. Nor should it be forgotten that Sind has been aspiring to have its own university before separation was thought of. Our own view is that the present position of Sind is anomalous. It is in the Bombay Presidency but not of it. This is very unsatisfactory from the point of view both of Sind and the Presidency proper. Either Sind should be brought into closer and organic relations with the Presidency or it should be allowed to separate. It is, however, impossible to decide this question at present. When Bombay including Sind becomes an autonomous province, it is for the representatives of the people of the whole Presidency to decide upon the future course. The greatest hindrance to a closer union so far has been the absence of speedy means of communication. The railway route is tedious and round-about, the sea-route is inadequately provided with ships both as regards accommodation, number and speed. Civil aviation, however, has brought a new factor to the solution of the problem. The projected Bombay-Karachi air service, continued right up to Quetta with one or more stoppages between, will reduce this problem to manageable dimensions.

THE CAUSE OF CAWNPORE RIOTS.

Speculating regarding the cause of the Cawnpore riots, the Rev. J. H. Wilkie in his article which we published last week, observed: "At ordinary times order is maintained largely by the sheer sense of respect for authority on the part of the people. They conduct themselves properly, not because there is a large force of police posted at every corner and others patrolling all the streets, but because they respect the authority of those who have been entrusted with it. But if this respect for authority breaks down for any reason there is sure to be trouble, unless the forces that are entrusted with the maintenance of order are increased. And if trouble does occur surely the ones to blame if blame is due—are the ones who have been responsible for the breaking down of respect for authority. That certainly seems evident." In his opinion, therefore, responsibility for Cawnpore riots rests with Mahatma Gandhi who started the civil disobedience movement.

This argument has been repeated several times by Lord Irwin and other high officials, but this is the first time that we have seen it so asserted definitely by a Christian missionary of a Protestant denomination. In the mouths of officials, the argument may be regarded as applying only to civil authority, though the principle of obedience to authority is the same whether the authority is temporal or spiritual. Mr. Wilkie knows that the chief argument of the Catholic Church against Protestants is that the latter have undermined respect for the authority of His Holiness the Pope and thus let loose the forces of secularism which have come to dominate European civilization. Papal infallibility is the foundation of papal authority and Protestants who deny the first necessarily uproot the second. If Mr. Wilkie's argument extends to the religious sphere, he has no answer to the Catholic indictment against Protestantism.

Further, the Christian missionary in this country, whether Catholic or Protestant, is daily engaged in undermining the authority of the non-Christian faiths among their hereditary adherents, heedless of the Abbe Dubois' warning that the effect of the propaganda of himself and other missionaries of his day was to make Hindus atheists rather than Christians. If authority as such is sacrosanct and obedience to it is the sole condition of orderly social life, how would Mr. Wilkie defend the propagandism of Christian missions of which he is himself a distinguished agent in this country?

Confining ourselves to civil authority, Mr. Wilkie's theory that "order is maintained largely by the sheer sense of respect for authority on the part of the people" is demonstrably wrong except when a country is under martial law which is euphemism for brute force. A little personal experience quite recently brought home to me the small part which penal laws play in regulating human conduct. On the 2nd instant I found myself watching the lunar eclipse in a rather isolated place over a thousand miles from Bombay. I was alone, every one else in the house was asleep. When the eclipse was at its fullest, complete darkness filled the air, and a strange hush fell upon the earth. Even the pariah dog ceased to yelp at its imaginary interlocutor. Opposite to me stood a tree with a hole in it in which parrots had made their home. As my eye fell upon the tree, now still in every leaf, I somehow suddenly felt a desire to cut down or set fire to it. The birds would think, I argued, that the disaster was due to the eclipse, and this belief would be handed down to generations of parrots until a genius rose among them to demonstrate that it is a human, moved by a diabolical impulse, and not the eclipse that was the agent of destruction. And then I asked myself, why don't I yield to the desire and destroy the tree and the birds in it? No authority would punish me for it—the Penal Code and the Police cannot call me to account for my wickedness. Why do I refrain from doing so many cruel things which I can do with equal impunity to the injury of others, I went on to ask myself. Mr. Wilkie's theory that it is respect for authority—an external one—which keeps men from violating the rights of others, never occurred to me. Mr. Wilkie will, perhaps, say that it is all right for men of some education but that he was speaking of the people—such as those who desecrate temples and mosques, outrage and cut the breasts of women, dash out the brains of little children and stab innocent wayfarers in the back and thrust their quivering bodies into wells and gutters. Here also he is wrong. The common people do not do these things except at the instance of others whose authority for the moment looms more largely in their eyes than that of salaried officials. The masses are normally kind, humane and helpful to their neighbours, far more than those whose intellects are developed at the expense of their souls. If Mr. Wilkie's theory is sound, autocracy or bureaucracy would be the best form of Government. Of the two, the former is to be preferred as, if a bad autocrat dies, there is a chance of his successor turning out to be a good autocrat. But a bureaucracy never dies a natural death. And the authority of a bureaucracy, therefore, is more calculated to drive people to desperation than that of an autocrat. Mr. Wilkie dismisses the charge that Government is responsible for incidents like the Cawnpore riots as "utterly absurd and egregiously unfair." British rule in India justifies its continued existence nowadays almost wholly on the single ground that it is needed to keep the peace between Hindus and Mussalmans. When incidents like the Cawnpore riots occur, therefore, the blame primarily rests obviously on those whose boast it is that they are here to keep Hindus and Mussalmans from cutting each other's throats. What is their C. I. D. for if not for keeping them informed of popular feelings and what is the Police for but to prevent these from leading to strife and bloodshed? It is a maxim of jurisprudence that "whatever the sovereign permits, he commands." If communal riots are "permitted" as they are nowadays, they are as good as "commanded" in the language of the legal maxim.

K. N.

RELIGIOUS IMPERIALISM.

(BY MR. T. J. CORNELIUS.)

At one of the discussions in a Study Circle on International Relations, the leader remarked: "Look at Africa! With the rapid development of her communications, her industry and her agriculture, the people are getting civilised. Don't you think all this is progress?" A member replied: "No, it is not progress. It is not only exploitation of Africa in the name of Christianity and civilization but it is the tragic enslavement of the soul of the African and the permanent distortion of his personality." This is imperialism, but just as there is imperialism in politics, there is imperialism in religion. How many times have we not wondered whether we had any right to hold that Christianity is the only true religion and it has the monopoly of truth? Are we justified in imposing our religion on another and arrogating to ourselves a position of superiority? This spirit of ignorant narrowness and foolish conceit is the very negation of Christianity. In March 1928 Gandhiji challenged this religious imperialism in his famous conversation with Dr. Mott. Mott asked him whether he believed in conversion. Gandhiji replied, "No, my effort should never be to undermine another's faith but to make him a better follower of his own faith." Then Mott agreed with Gandhiji and said, "Even among Christians there is a school of thought,—and it is growing—which holds that the authoritarian method should not be employed, but each man should be left to discover the deepest truths of life for himself." These words have a great significance at the present time. What is the attitude of the average Indian Christian to-day in his relationship to non-Christians? He has a self-satisfaction and takes a false pride in thinking within himself: "I am a Christian. My religion is superior to his. Who are these Hindus and Mahomedans but pagans and idolators. We need not have anything to do with them. We cannot learn much from them. We have to teach them and they have to learn." What is this attitude but the attitude of the Pharisees and Saducees which our Lord condemned in no uncertain language. His indictment is as true to-day as it was during the time of the Pharisees. He said: "You compass sea and land to make one proselyte and when he is made you make him two fold more the child of hell than yourselves." So our Indian Christian brethren are leading a highly self-satisfied and self-centred life. Do they know anything of the great changes that are taking place in Hindu Society to-day, changes that are like the surging tides of the sea upsetting all kinds of tradition and customs of ages, changes that are going to affect Indian Christians because they are going to materially reform our national life as a whole. They sit smugly in their arm-chairs and lead a self-satisfied existence. They don't wish to identify themselves with Indian ideals and aspirations and to them the ancient civilization of India is only a relic of barbarism.

(1) But who are these Hindus and Moslems? Are they not our kith and kin? Are we not indebted to them for our Literature, our Philosophy, our Art and all what we call culture? We are Indian Christians only for two or three generations, and as Indian Christians, we have no art, philosophy or literature to call as our own. Our culture is Hindu culture and our forefathers were Hindus and Hindu blood runs in our veins. We should be proud of our Hindu heritage and the religion that has produced it. How dare we slight these non-Christian religions like Hinduism, Islam and Buddhism that are shaping and moulding the life and character of nearly half the world's population? Lord Meston is no friend of India, and yet he says:

"It has always been a puzzle to me, how Hinduism has endured the fiery tests and trials to which it has been subjected these thousands of years, how it has succeeded in absorbing the great reforming faiths of Buddhism and Jainism and held its own against the fierce proselytising power of Islam. It is impossible to conceive of a religion in the History of the World which has stood these 3000 years and still commands the hearts of 300 millions of people."

This is not the mere outburst of a mere sentimentalist but a sober historical fact. But for very great, vital, enduring and amazing elements, Hinduism could never have survived all these centuries.

(2) We, Indian Christians, should not forget that, if we can boast of any status or position in the world, it is only because of our Hindu heritage. Indians, including Indian Christians, are respected and admired in Europe and America because India is the mother of religions and has produced men of the type of Buddha, Mahavira, Tagore and Gandhi. Unfortunately we Indian Christians know more about Shakespeare and Milton, Shelley and Burke than about these great spiritual leaders who were the founders of religions and who have been an inspiration and comfort to millions of souls all along the ages. The fact that we are Christians does not necessarily mean that we should treat with contempt these great souls and their religion. It should, on the other hand, help us to discover, admire and appropriate in our own lives spiritual truths found in these religions. Have we not frequently come across devout Hindu and Mahomedan leaders whose transparent sincerity, utter humility, great meekness and readiness to sacrifice everything that we Indian Christians consider precious for the sake of religious truth put the religion we practise to shame?

(3) There have been very few missionaries like, C. F. Andrews, J. S. Hoyland and William Holland who have tried sympathetically and with a deep spiritual insight to interpret India to the world. But, mark you, among these investigators and interpreters we don't find a single Indian Christian. Because of our exclusive and arrogant attitude we are much the poorer, for by studying these great non-Christian religious systems and the lives of men like Tagore, Gandhi, Vivekananda and Paramahansa, we shall learn of our rich heritage and will adopt a more tolerant attitude toward our non-Christian brethren. Our spiritual and mental outlook will become widened and our lives will become richer, sweeter and nobler.

"One of the strange freaks of Japanese gardening is the cultivation of dwarf trees. The Japanese grow forest giants in flower pots. Some of these strange miniature trees are a century old, and are only 3 feet high. The gardener instead of trying to get them grow to their best, takes infinite pains to keep them little. His purpose is to grow dwarfs, not giant trees. From the time of their planting they are repressed, starved, crippled and stunted. When buds appear they are cut off. So the tree remains only a dwarf all its life." Our Indian Christians seem to do the same thing with their lives. They don't allow themselves to grow. They rob themselves of spiritual nourishment, restrain the noble impulses of their nature, shut out of their hearts the inspiring and ennobling companionship of men like Gandhi, Tagore, and the result is they live the narrow, selfish and limited life of a dwarf.

We have great respect and admiration for missionaries and are not blind to the great contribution they have made to India. But in interpreting the East—whether it is China, Japan or India—with very few exceptions, they have failed and have done untold damage to these countries. But you will turn round and ask, "what has the interpretation of India abroad got to do with religious Imperialism?" Bishop Fisher, sending in his resignation said :

"It proved impossible to identify myself completely with Indian aspirations because I represented foreign powers which threatened economic and other reprisals unless certain policies determined by some supporting foreign society were carried out to the letter on Indian soil.....If missions need anything in this new day it is complete spiritual emancipation from an ubiquitous imperialism that is racial, political and economic."

This false interpretation of India is the necessary consequence of religious Imperialism. Is this a serious matter, one may ask? What is the price? The price is the denationalisation of one of the biggest, most potential and most influential of the Indian communities—the Indian Christian community—making up the Indian nation of the future. Is it nothing to vilify, slander and disgrace a whole country and her people? To-day India has become synonymous in Europe and America with idolatry, pestilence, famine and disease. The mention of India brings to the minds of Western people pictures of starving millions, illiterate and ignorant, sunk in idolatry and animal worship. Prof. Radhakrishnan says, "We are actually broken down in politics, and if we also lose our national pride and self-respect there is no hope for us.....India is not a subject to be administered but a nation seeking its soul." The soul of a nation is something sacred. The soul of India is as precious and sublime as the soul of England, America, Australia or Canada. Would it not be better to kill and destroy the soul of India rather than vilify her culture? For, as Oswald Spengler has pointed out, a nation's culture is the soul of her people, and, therefore, any one who slanders India's culture is seeking to destroy her very soul.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. IV.

(BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI.)

The Indian National Congress has declared that all men and women shall have equal rights and obligations as citizens in India. To the Hindu nationalist of British India who is sincerely anxious to be true to the spirit of that declaration in social matters as well, the law is even now ready to hand whereby he can at one stroke accord matrimonial equality and economic equality to all the members of his family, male and female. If he is an unmarried man, he has only to marry under the Special Marriage Amendment Act of 1923, positively affirming his faith in the Hindu religion, and the desired equality of the sexes will automatically flow to him and his wife and all their progeny thereafter in every respect. But if he is already married without the help of that Act, the usual Hindu Law disqualifications and inequalities will attach to the female members of his family. To remedy that, however and give him a chance of proving his faith in sex equality in regard at least to the succession to his own property, a simple enactment of the Indian legislature conceding to every Hindu the option of electing to be governed by the Indian Succession Act of 1925, instead of the ordinary rules of succession and inheritance prescribed by his ancient personal law, would be quite sufficient without any amendment of the Hindu law itself.

The task however which the Hindu Law Reform Committee of Mysore had to accomplish was not so simple as that. They had not a fair and equitable territorial Law of Succession already on the statute book which they might recommend as an alternative to the present Hindu law on the subject for voluntary acceptance by the Hindu people of Mysore. Nor were they given a clean slate to write upon and produce an ideal piece of legislation for the future. What they had to do was to reform the existing body of Hindu Law so as to improve the position allotted to women thereunder. They had necessarily to keep close to its past tradition and progress, avoiding violent departures therefrom, so that their recommendations may be acceptable as binding law to all Hindus of the State. Their aim was to produce a "practicable scheme" of reform, to meet "the just and reasonable requirements of the immediate present." With this object in view they have almost wholly confined their attention to rectifying the economic disabilities to which females are subjected under the current Hindu law of the courts, without practically touching the question of their matrimonial status. In doing so, however, they claim, with perfect justice, that they were not engaged "so much in trying to provide helpless females with the means of subsistence, or in assigning higher places in the order of succession to some heirs as compared with others, as in helping to put on a sound basis the important question of the Hindu Law rights of women."

The first thing therefore the Committee have done to clear the ground for their beneficent constructive labours, is to make a declaration, which may be called the Magna Charta of women's rights in Mysore, that "no woman shall be excluded from inheritance or deemed to be disqualified for the exercise of any civil right by reason of her sex." By a separate clause they have also emphasized that no incompetency to inherit shall attach to a female "merely because of the absence of an enabling text of law in this behalf." Under the term "Civil Rights," thus thrown open to women without hindrance on the ground of sex, are comprised all rights of property, of inheritance, of partition, of maintenance etc.,—all rights in fact which bring in a pecuniary benefit to the owner and make her life comfortable, happy and honourable, so far at least as an unhungry stomach and spare cash can help to make it so; which is indeed no small matter, for bread is the staff of life, and a little cash goes far to make life endurable and free from abject dependence and disrespect.

It would seem that sex disqualification for inheritance had ceased to be law in Mysore many years ago. The Committee also are of opinion that Bandhayana's doctrine as to the general incapacity of women for inheritance is wrong in principle, and harsh and inequitable in its operation. They further hold that "whatever its origin or its advantages from the standpoint of a particular period of experience, it is now an obstacle to progress, not only for women but for Hindu society as a whole." Lest, however, their liberal policy might afford a pretext to the bigot for raising the cry of religion being in danger, it has been thoughtfully provided that this declaration shall not affect "any rule of law or established custom which debars women from performing the duties of any religious office." Hinduism has thus been spared the humiliation, at least for the time being, of having its deities worshipped for the public by persons of the inferior sex, and the emoluments and perquisites attaching to such office may still be conscientiously pocketed by her nobler male relations, though they may be no more intelligent or religious-minded or otherwise better qualified than she. Only one thing more can be said in favour of this proviso. In the arrogant prejudice and selfish discrimination which its religiosity perpetuates against woman, Hinduism is no worse than the Christianity of the Church of England or of the Church of Rome which refuses to allow a woman to preach from the pulpit, or the Christianity of some other Churches which, though they allow a woman to preach, refuse her the right to pronounce the benediction at the end, and the Christianity of all churches which withhold from women the right to baptize or to bury or to solemnize marriages, or to administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

But even in matters relating exclusively to inheritance, the removal of sex-disqualification does not by itself ensure equal benefit to female heirs in competition with men. It merely removes one formidable obstruction hitherto placed in the path of women's inheritance. There are other tests besides that must be applied to determine which of several contending claimants, male and female, shall succeed to the property left by a deceased owner. Under the Mitakshara system of Hindu law which governs Mysore and most other provinces of India except Bengal, the tests employed are consanguinity or blood-relationship and propinquity or nearness of kinship. While blood-relationship brings the claimant within the class of possible heirs, it is the degree of one's nearness in blood-connection to the late owner which will make a person the preferential heir entitled to take the whole estate to the exclusion of others. Where there are more persons than one who are equally near to the deceased, it follows that all of them together should take the estate and share it equally and they are so doing among male heirs. It is in this contingency, one would expect, that the new rule abrogating all sex-disqualification for inheritance would shine at its best. But in the present scheme, it just manages to fall short of it.

The Mysore Committee have employed the same time-honoured rule of consanguinous propinquity which is the corner-stone of the Mitakshara system. But they have applied it with "commonsense and discrimination," without allowing themselves to be swayed by considerations of so-called "religious efficacy" which had stealthily made some unwarranted inroads into it to curtail women's rights, and have thereby succeeded most admirably in evolving a more advantageous position for women in the order of succession than they had enjoyed for many a century. And they have done this in a manner best calculated to command popular favour, because it works closely in consonance with the dictates of natural affection without impinging too rashly against deep ingrained prejudices, and generally leaves a soothing sense of unbroken loyalty to ancient tradition so dear to the melancholy type of Hindu mind whose hopes and joys are all buried irretrievably in the past. But while acknowledging with gratitude the gallant stand the Committee have made in vindication of woman's rights by refusing to postpone her claims to those of a male heir of inferior degree, "where all considerations apart from sex are distinctly in favour of the female heir," we cannot but note with regret that their method has not yielded a full measure of equality of status between the sexes when they stand in equal competition. The same old twin tests of consanguinity and propinquity applied logically by legislators who were untrammelled by any haunting sense of bondage to communal antiquities have produced far different results in the Indian Succession Act, which must strike the lay mind as far more advantageous and fair and honourable to female relations because they establish in practice their claim for equal treatment with male heirs of the same class and degree.

The Committee themselves are aware of this difference. They admit that with one exception, namely, that of the mother's claim as against the father's (and that of the grandmother's as against the grandfather's), the Mitakshara rule which they have adopted prefers the male to the female heir whenever the two are of equal degree. This ground of preference, however, does not seem to the Committee to be open to "serious objection," although it is a direct negation of the fundamental clause abolishing sex disqualification. "At any rate," they argue, "under the present conditions of Hindu society, wherein females on marriage enter the families of their husbands and acquire civil rights there, it seems impracticable to treat male and female heirs as of completely equal status for purposes of inheritance." It is no doubt true that the traditional Hindu mind looks wistfully on anything given away to a female descendant as so much good property thrown away and lost to the rightful owners, namely, the males of the parent family. But the reason given in its justification "under present conditions" is rather puzzling. Do the Committee anticipate any future condition of Hindu society wherein the females on marriage will not enter the families of their husbands or acquire civil rights there? For the matter of that, is there any non-Hindu society today, governed by the Indian Succession Act or any other equitable succession law, wherein the females on marriage refuse to enter the families of their husbands or are refused civil rights there because they have acquired certain property rights in their parental home?

THE DEPRESSED CLASSES MISSION SOCIETY.

(By MR. K. G. PATADK.)

The Depressed Classes Mission Society of India was founded by that wellknown hero of action Mr. V. R. Shinde, B.A., in 1906 in Bombay. The first school of the Poona Branch of the Society was opened on 22nd June, 1908 in a very small rented house in Poona Cantonment. This Central School and about five more feeder schools that were subsequently started by the Poona Branch were very ably served by Messrs. A. M. Sayyad, A. K. Mudliar, D. N. Patwardhan, D. S. Barve, G. G. Pathak, and sister Janabai Shinde, all very good workers of the Society, respectively from 1908 to 1922. They were all very liberally supported by philanthropists like Dr. H. H. Mann, Lt. Col. H. C. Steen—whose untiring zeal and sympathy towards the Depressed Classes knows no limits—, the Late Dr. S. H. Mody and many others.

In the fitness of things I must state here that long before the D. C. M. Society of India's schools were opened here, the late Mahatma Jotirao Phule had established his schools for the Depressed Classes in 1852 which were probably the first of their kind in India. The Depressed Classes and the reforming elements in India will ever cherish the name of that greatest man of Maharashtra along with Mr. Annasaheb Shinde.

My own connection with the Poona Schools came from the middle of 1916 though I was posted for doing mission work at Bangalore, Bombay and Hubli for about 3 years. One thing struck me most. I therefore, urged Mr. Shinde to have as many Depressed Classes representatives as possible on the Committees of the Depressed Classes Mission and he did so in good time from 1923 giving two third representation to the Depressed Classes on the Committee and the board of workers. This has secured co-operation of workers like Subhedar R. S. Ghatge and Mr. D. V. Gaikwad on the working Board and very keen supporters of the Depressed Classes cause, able men like Mr. S. J. Kamble, Mr. S. R. Thorat, Subhedar H. R. Dhotre, Jamedar Jadhav, Mr. R. M. Kate from the Mahar community and Mr. T. N. Shinde from the Chambhar Community and Mr. Nathamaharaj of the Lalbag Samaj.

The Mission secured the present site of 7 acres of land from the Poona City Municipality on 99 years' lease and commenced its building activity, the corner stone of which was laid by H. H. the Yuvaraj of Mysore and opening ceremony was performed by H. E. Sir Leslie Wilson, Governor of Bombay. The school had the singular honour of the visit of His Excellency Lord Irwin our Viceroy when his Lordship visited Poona last time. The Viceroy referred to our work in the following manner:—

"I am very glad to have had an opportunity of visiting the Poona D. C. Mission settlement and of seeing something of the admirable work which is being done there under difficult circumstances. I wish it all success and earnestly hope that it may be fruitful for the betterment of the conditions of those classes for whom it labours."

The following is the strength of our schools and Hostel to-day.

	Boys.	Girls.	Staff.	I. Remarks.
1. Central Boys School ...	132	0	6	Fair.
2. Ahalyashram Girls' ...	0	59	2	"
3. " Night " ...	21	...	1	"
4. " Students' Hostel ...	10	...	1	Not inspected.
5. Tailoring Class ...	31	...	2	Fair.
6. Bhangi Hatti Feeder School ...	31	...	1	"
7. Club of Western India School ...	18	20	1	Not inspected.
Total ...	243	79	14
Grand Total ...	322

The following is the classification of pupils according to castes:—

Mahars 151, Bhangis 35, Mangs 93, Chambhars 3, Marathas 15, Mali 2, Pardeshi 3, Christians 6, Mohamedans 1, Ramoshi 2, Dhanagers 1, Marawadi 1, Kolhati 2, Parit 1, Kamathi 7, total 322.

Out of the staff of the teachers 6 are trained teachers, 6 qualified, and 2 unqualified ones. One teacher is sent for training this year at the Male Training College, Poona.

Out of the 6 Primary schools 4 were inspected by Mr. G. B. Wable, the Administrative Officer of the School Board of the Poona City Municipality and the Tailoring class by Mr. Pundlik, the Senior Assistant Deputy Educational Inspector, Poona, for grant-in-aid. Miss Payne, Inspectress of the Girls Schools C. D. and B. D. and also Dr. P. G. Shonki, M.L.C., Bombay visited our schools this year.

Our Mission Schools secure an annual grant of Rs. 2500 approximately from the School Board of the Poona City Municipality in addition to which about Rs. 3000 are to be annually raised by the Mission Committee from subscriptions and occasional donations from the liberal-minded persons. Thus with very great difficulty we manage to meet both ends of our annual expenditure. During this year His Highness the Maharaja of Indore was pleased to donate Rs. 3000 towards our Mission which is now being used for erecting the much needed compound wall round our school premises.

I am glad to mention here that one of our Hostel students Mr. M. K. Jadhav, B.A., (Honours) is now holding the post of a District Deputy Collector and it is hoped that three out of the ten students in our Hostel who are now reading for their College course would prove themselves to be very useful to the community and the country to which they have the honour to belong.

The Mission cannot do more work unless funds are available. In conclusion I earnestly appeal to the Local Government, Local authorities and the generous public to help this Mission on a more liberal scale. This will enable the Mission to remove the stigma of untouchability from the soil of India which is the chief object of all the Mission activities of this Mission. It is an open secret that the curse of untouchability is the root cause of India's downfall. I pray the Almighty God to grant us the necessary strength to remove it as quickly as possible, Lord Budha, Lord Christ and Lord Mohamed Paigambar being our ideals in this respect for achieving the goal of social equality. I take this opportunity of publicly extending our heartiest thanks to Colonel Steen, the guiding spirit of our Mission, through whose efforts the long standing differences with the head-quarters of the Society at Bombay have come to an end. This happy union will be very useful in celebrating the Jubilee celebrations of the Mission Society which will come off in November next, on the Dipavali Day. I must, in conclusion express our hearty thanks to Mr. Peermohamad, the very worthy Chairman of the School Board of our City Municipality who very kindly responded to our humble invitation to preside over this function and distribute the prizes to our School Children.

No more "Coolies":—The Conference Permanente Internationale des Organisations Privées pour la Protection de Migrants, Geneva, an organisation in connection with World's Alliance of Y. M. C. A., has, on the suggestion of Mr. S. A. Wain, Secretary, Imperial Indian Citizenship Association, expressed its willingness to consider the advisability of expunging the word "coolie" from its reports and using "unskilled labour" instead.

MR. K. T. PAUL.

By the death of Mr. K. T. Paul the Christian movement in India has lost a trusted leader, and the international missionary movement, one whose counsel was valued as highly by the churches of the West as of the East. His death has occurred at a moment when, as a member of the Round Table Conference, he had entered upon what promised to be a public career of great usefulness to the national life of India as a whole.

Mr. K. T. Paul was born in Salem in 1876, the only child of parents who were Christians of the second generation. He was educated in the Madras Christian College, first, as a pupil in the school, and later, after passing his intermediate examination at Salem, as a student of the graduate course, taking his degree in Arts and Teaching. Dr. William Miller, the famous principal of the college, was one of the formative influences of Mr. Paul's life, and among his classmates were V. S. Azariah, now Bishop of Dornakal, Sir Venkata Reddi Naidu, now Agent of the Government of India in South Africa, and Sir A. P. Patro, late Minister of Education in Madras, who was one of his colleagues at the Round Table Conference. After taking a course at the Law College, Mr. Paul returned to Salem, where he engaged for a while in farming, and then accepted a teaching position, first in the London Mission High School in Coimbatore, and later as a tutor in the Madras Christian College, under his old Principal.

In 1905 Mr. Paul was one of those who met at Serampore to found the National Missionary Society, an indigenous movement within the Indian Church, becoming its first honorary treasurer, and two years later resigning his college position to devote all his time to the new society as its organizing secretary. In this capacity he travelled all over India, in third class carriages, acquiring in the course of his work an intimate knowledge of the Indian Christian community. The growing recognition of Mr. Paul's powers led to his being chosen in 1912 to accompany Dr. John R. Mott in his all-India tour for the purpose of organizing in the provinces what are now known as the Representative Christian Councils of the churches and missions. Next year he was appointed as Assistant National Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., and on the outbreak of the War, his American colleague having gone to France, he became the first Indian National Secretary of the Y. M. C. A.

For eighteen years Mr. Paul's career was identified with the work of the Y. M. C. A. in India, and that organization owes to his inspiring leadership much of the progress it has made in the period, and a great enhancement of its influence as a national movement among young people. The pioneer work of the Association in its rural reconstruction centres was largely of his creation, and he took a deep interest in the work of the literature department in producing books on cultural history of India. In 1927 he published a book on the British Connection with India, setting forth a view of the relationship of the two peoples which received the commendation of Lord Ronaldshay, now Marquis of Zetland, for its "broad and dispassionate perspective." In 1919 he visited England for the first time, and after that paid many visits to Europe and America, especially in connection with the International Missionary Council. In India he was at one time President of the South India United Church and he was closely identified with the movement for a larger union of the churches in South India.

While devoting his powers to the service of the Christian movement in India, Mr. Paul was a strong and enlightened Indian nationalist. In 1930 he resigned his position as National Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., anticipating by a year the retirement age, in order to serve the country in the political sphere. He has always opposed communal representation, holding that the Christian community should throw in its lot with the main body of the citizens, and when he stood for election to the Madras Legislative Council he therefore chose to contest a university seat rather than to stand for election by the Christian community. Mr. Paul served his apprenticeship at Salem on the municipal council and on the district board. He was closely identified with the co-operative movement and in 1927 served on the Committee on Co-operation appointed by the Government of Madras, as also in 1920 on the Fraser Commission on Village Education. He was therefore peculiarly fitted, both by his intimate knowledge of Indian problems and by his international contacts, to accept the invitation of the Viceroy to be one of the two Christian representatives at the Round Table Conference. In London he made a valuable contribution to the deliberations of that council, but hardly less valuable was his work as a public speaker, his many contacts with the Christian Churches giving him a unique opportunity of explaining the Indian point of view to English audiences.

Mr. Paul was an indefatigable worker, and spent himself without stint in serving the causes he had at heart. He had an unusual power of doing a dozen different things at once, and was fertile in ideas and suggestions which made his presence invaluable in counsel. It is to be feared that in London the double claims of the Conference and of his speaking engagements, together with the severity of the winter, overtaxed even his powers of endurance. He was forced by illness to leave England before the end of the Conference, though not before its success was assured. His friends, who were without number both in India and in the West, hoped that he was only on the threshold of a new phase of his career, when he would give to the political development of India a service for which his wide experience and varied knowledge made him uniquely qualified. But he returned to India with shattered health, and though up to the end it was hoped he would recover, he died at his home in Salem on April 11th. He is survived by a widow and a family of eight.

POONA DAFTAR.

The Director of Information, Bombay, writes :

In a press note issued in December last the attention of the public was drawn to the historical research work being carried out by Mr. G. S. Sardesai, the well-known authority on Maratha history, in connection with the old records in the Poona Daftar, and to the publication of a fresh series of selections from them. Rapid progress has since been made in the work and eight more volumes have been published, which, like the previous volumes, are on sale at the Government Book Depot and leading booksellers.

These volumes will be found to be indispensable to the serious student of Maratha history, who will have to revise many of his conclusions in the light of the hitherto unpublished material here for the first time presented to him. The value of these contemporary documents is greatly enhanced by the fact that they are from the pens of some of the greatest figures in Maratha history, often in their actual handwriting.

The sixth volume, "Ramraja's Struggle for Power", 1750-53, (price Rs. 2-2-0) sheds new light on the tragic story of Ramraja, who was brought up secretly in exile by his grandmother Tarabai and succeeded his uncle Shahu under a will signed on the latter's death-bed. Ramraja is commonly supposed to have been totally unfit to rule, but these papers show for the first time that the unfortunate young prince was never actually given a chance of learning the administrative duties or showing his capacity. The Peshwa had long before Shahu's death made up his mind to assume all powers into his own hands, and after Ramraja's coronation in June 1750 he gradually removed all Government offices from Satara to Poona and compelled both Ramraja and Tarabai to submit to his wishes in regard both to their personal needs and the detail of administration. These papers are mostly news letters sent from Satara to the Peshwa at Poona by his Agent Purandare.

The seventh volume, "Early Activities of Shahu and Balaji Vishvanath", 1707-1720 (price 8 annas), consists of unpublished original letters which affords an insight into the administrative activities of Chatrapati Shahu in his early years and the career of Balaji Vishwanath before he rose to the position of Peshwa in 1773. One of these letters disposes of the myth of the drowning of Janoji, the brother of Balaji Vishwanath, by the Sidi of Janjira.

The eighth volume, "Shahu in his Private life" (price 9 annas) gives an interesting account in about 50 original letters of the everyday private life of King Shahu and reveals that monarch in the light in which he appeared to his contemporaries. He was a keen Shikari, devoted to all kinds of sport, and delighting in dogs, horses and birds.

The ninth volume, "Bajirao and his Family", 1720-40, (price 10 annas) supplies important particulars about the private life of Bajirao and his brother Chimaji Appa. They apparently owed much of their success in life to the personality of their mother Radhabai. The correspondence reveals the scandal caused in the family by Bajirao's infatuation in later life for his beautiful Muhammadan mistress, the famous Mastani. This volume and the last will particularly interest the student of the neglected subject of Maratha social life and customs in the 18th century, particularly as regards the Courts of Poona and Satara.

The tenth volume, "Early strife between Bajirao and the Nizam", 1720-1740 (price Re. 1-0-0), describes the early manoeuvres of Bajirao and the Nizam-ul-mulk and their gradual drift from friendship to open hostility. Bajirao's two visits to the Nizam caused a stir in the Deccan, but his incursion into Malwa led the latter to attack the Maratha forces. The result was an encounter at Palkhed where the Peshwa dictated his own terms to his enemy. The letters here published for the first time bring to light innumerable incidents and details hitherto unknown to history and their bearing on the early rivalry between Bajirao and Nizam-ul-mulk. They also show the important part which Sawai Jaising played in Deccan politics.

The eleventh volume, "Shahu's relations with Sambhaji of Kolhapur" (price 10 annas) throws a flood of fresh light on the relations between the two cousins, the causes which fostered friction between them, and the exploitation of their differences by rival guerilla leaders.

The twelfth volume, "The Dabhades and the Conquest of Gujarat" (price Rs. 1-3-0) develops Shahu's fatal blunder of allowing all officers to become hereditary, and illustrates for the first time, the disaffection of the Dabhades who for 40 years gave endless trouble until they were finally wiped out by the Peshwas who elevated the present Gaikwads of Baroda in their place.

The thirteenth volume, "Bajirao's entry into Malwa and Bundelkhand," 1721-30, (price 10 annas) will be found helpful to students of history in determining definitely the extent of Bajirao's and Chimaji's operations in Malwa and Bundelkhand. The papers clear up much of the haziness that had hitherto hung about the relations of the Marathas with the Empire in the first quarter of the eighteenth century. The movements and policy of Daya Bahadur, Girdhar Bahadur, Mahmudkhan Bangash, and Raja Chatrasal Bundela, the leading characters of the period, may now for the first time be determined with some degree of historical accuracy, thanks to the light thrown upon them by these important documents.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Infant Marriages in Mysore:—The Mysore correspondent of the Hindu writes: Two cases of infringement of the provisions of Infant Marriage Prevention Regulation of Mysore have been disposed of by Mr. Abdul Majid, District Magistrate, Mysore district. In one case, an infant girl of about five years of age named Pattananji, daughter of Marigowda, was married to one Noruja, son of Kusagowda, residents of Doddapura, T. Narsalpur taluk, on 21-3-1930 at Doddapura. Marigowda and Kusagowda, parents of the bride and bridegroom and also Pattarama Jois, Purohit of Kaliyur, who officiated at the marriage ceremony were tried and convicted, each being sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100 or in default to undergo simple imprisonment for six weeks. In the second case an infant girl of less than eight years of age by name Lingamma, daughter of Kampalinga Gowda of Mudki Ohikkanna Hundi, Mysore taluk, was married on 21-3-30 to one Kampiah, son of Mari Nanjunda Gowda of Bommanahalli, T. Narsipur taluk, at the latter place. Charge sheet was filed by the police against Kampalinga Gowda and Mari Nanjunda Gowda, fathers of the bride and bridegroom respectively, under section 8 of Infant Marriage Prevention Regulation 1894 before District Magistrate, Mysore district and Mr. Abdul Wajid, District Magistrate has convicted both the accused and sentenced each of them to pay a fine of Rs. 100 or in default to suffer simple imprisonment for six weeks.

Sind Separation:—Mr. Jamshed N. R. Mehta writes: Friends desire that I ought to express my opinion on this subject, as a signatory to and as one who had some share in bringing about the Lucknow Pact. I stand by it. But in view of subsequent incidents, as the question has become an important part of All-India settlement, on the one side between the Government and the Congress, and on the other between the two major communities, viz, the Hindus and the Muslims, I desire that the matter be entirely left to Mahatma Gandhi to settle with the Government and the communities. I am willing to abide by his decision as to the settlement of the Sind question as a part of the All India settlement. I feel all parties will do well to put the respective cases for and against, to Mahatmaji and leave the matter there. It is desirable not to hamper more important negotiations and settlements undertaken by Gandhiji. I am sure the province which is prepared to surrender and sacrifice in the interest of all, will be happier as is the law of Nature.

Sri Basava Jayanti:—The Basavashwar Jayanti was celebrated on Tuesday 21st April, 1931 on behalf of the Bombay Lingayat Samaj. Shri. S. V. Jirge the Secretary introduced the distinguished lecturer, Shri. K. Natarajan, who remarked as under in the course of his lecture on Basava and his reforms. Basava was one of the greatest sons of India. He was a modern Social Reformer eight hundred years ago. Other leaders in Basavashwar's times were only religious minded people. Basava only had the courage to take up to social reform. He abolished caste system and preached equality for men and women. He brought in practice all the social reforms which we are in the 20th century trying our level best to bring in practice. He was the greatest democrat in 12th century. The religion that Basava preached was a Monotheistic form of religion. Annasahab G. V. Mokashi, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, High Court thanked the lecturer by saying that the best social reformer of the 12th century has been intelligently appreciated by the best social reformer of the 20th century just as a poet alone can best appreciate the qualities of a poet.

Widow Remarriages in Bombay:—The Secretary of the Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association writes: Mr. Jethabhai Harjivandas Dalal was married to Bachubai alias widow of Padamsi Purshottam. Rs. 1,000 dowry was given. A meeting was held at Wellington Cinema to congratulate both on Saturday, the 28th March 1931 at 5-30 p.m., when Rao Bahadur Sunderdas, Solicitor, presided. The marriage was performed according to Hindu system. Another remarriage took place on 29th March 1931, according to Civil Rights of Prabhavati Bai, sister of Mr. Ohhel Shankar Vyas, Editor of Hindustan paper with Mr. Amritlal Joshi, M.A. Tea party was arranged by Mr. Kanji Udeshi Mehesri, at Goumukh Bhuvan opposite Masjid Station. The Hon'ble Mr. Justice S. S. Patkar presided on the occasion.

ADVERTISEMENTS

IN THE COURT OF SMALL CAUSES, KARACHI.

SUIT No. 3144 of 1930.

Messrs. NARAINIDAS TILOKOHAND,

Merchants at Karachi

... Plaintiffs.

Verus.

Messrs. Lukmanji Ebrahimji, a firm now dissolved which carried on business at Bombay through their following partners:—

- |                                  |   |
|----------------------------------|---|
| 1. Abdul Hussein Lukmanji,       | } All Mahomedansadults BohrasMerchants, Bom-bay ... Defendants. |
| 2. Mahomedbhoy AbdulHussain, |   |
| 3. Yahyabhai AbdulHussain.   |   |

To,

The defendants above named.

Take notice that the above suit for Rs. 1,998-4-0 and costs is fixed for final disposal on the 30th day of April 1931 when you are requested to be present with all your evidence. In default of your appearance on the day before mentioned the suit will be heard and determined in your absence.

Given under my hand and the Seal of the Court this 14th day of April 1931.

By the Court,
IGNATIUS CASTELLINO,
Registrar.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription.	Inland	... Rs. 2-3-0	V.P.P.
"	Foreign	... " 2-8-0	Post free.
	Single Copy	... " 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for Telegraph and Station Master's Classes. Apply with 2 annas stamp to:— Imperial Telegraph College,
Delhi.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of

OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BULLION EXCHANGE.
(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)
BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amroli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kelol, Kadi, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	Rs. 60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Shri Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).

Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).

Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.

Mazani M. Kuntavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)

Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Hathi bhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.

Raj Ratan Bhalal Dajibhai Amla B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alombic Chemical Works, Baroda).

Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatali (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)

Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Sar Suba, Baroda State, Baroda.

Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-5-26.

O. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

—101—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 AD. ms.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

23/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Arumatti (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Bira ( " " ).	Dondaicha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Taagaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Maigaon (District Nashik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Paighar ( " " ).	Kalot ( " " ).
Akioj (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Viramgaon (District Ahmednagar).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital	Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars, apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJANI PAIN BALM PRODUCE BEST RESULTS

IN

Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.

AMRUTANJANI DEPOT.

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

IT IS YOURS

A SAFE

And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. s. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

" " Foreign ... 5 8

Single copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Began in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. R. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 66.

FEET FIRST

featuring

HAROLD LLOYD AND BARBARA KENT

A. Paramount All Talking, All Laughing Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 26 and 27.

ON APPROVAL

11 Parts, featuring

YVONNE ARNAUD AND TOM WALLS

Gamout British Picture Corporation.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

IRON MASK

11 Parts, featuring

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS

United Artists Talking and Sound Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

RAMONA

8 Parts, featuring

DOLORES DEL RIO AND WARNER BAXTER

United Artists Picture.

FORSE FEATHERS

2 Parts, featuring

BARNEY GOOGLE AND SPARK PLUG

R. K. O. Comedy.

TIME:—Sat. to Sun. 4-30, 6-30 and 10 p. m.

Tues. & Wed. "THE CINGALEE" by the students of St. Teresa's School and 10 p. m. Cinema.

Thurs. & Fri. 6-30 and 10 p. m. Cinema.

MATINEE AT ALL THE THEATRES ON WEDNESDAY
29th APRIL (BANK HOLIDAY).

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1931

No. 35

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Federation or Confederation ? The Question of Residual Powers. Should Mahatmaji go ? Dr. Ansari's Suggestion. Proselyting Missions. Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. V. Let's Mr. K. T. Paul, O.B.E.,	The Church Missionary Society Lahore (Punjab). Missions and the Missionary Spirit. Foreign Missionaries. Christian Missions and the Conversion of the "Heathen." Nationalist Muslim Scheme.
---	--

NOTES.

Federation or Confederation ?—Sir Manubhai Mehta, Prime Minister of Bikaner, speaking at the Legislative Council of the State, sought to remove what he called some misconceptions regarding the attitude of the Princes who attended the Round Table Conference in London. He said that what they wanted was Confederation and not Federation, the difference between the two being that, while the former emphasises the independence of the component units, the latter stresses their subservience to a central Federal authority. The Maharaja of Patiala realistically described Confederation long before the London Conference as "Federation at the top." What the Princes really want and have long wanted is to get rid of the annoying attentions of the Political Department of the Government of India. They want uncontrolled independence and since this can not be had unless the bureaucratic constitution of the Government of India is practically overthrown, they are willing to help British Indians to overthrow it. This was quite plain to every onlooker from the outset and it is a wonder that the eminent Indian public men who attended the Round Table Conference, even though only as the Viceroy's nominees, should have indulged in high-flown panegyrics of the sacrifices involved in the Princes' offer to join the Federation. Sir Manubhai himself was a member of the Princes' delegation, and he might have told the Conference that it was Confederation and not Federation that the Princes would agree to. After having complacently appropriated the lavish encomiums on their patriotism, self-abnegation and what not in London, to announce in Bikaner that the Princes sacrifice nothing by their commitments, is somewhat disconcerting. This, however, is a small matter. But when the Prime Minister of Bikaner proceeded to declare that for the subjects of States to require a Declaration of Rights was to ignore altogether "the natural laws of allegiance," a student of English history can not help being reminded of the claims of the Stuarts and their Ministers. Perhaps, Sir Manubhai spoke in Hindi and in that idiom the proposition about "natural laws of allegiance" would not perhaps jar on one's nerves as it certainly does in English. If however, Sir Manubhai spoke in English, he has almost achieved what Sir Sankaran Nair declared an impossibility. "You cannot," said Sir Sankaran whose illness, we are relieved to know, is not as serious as it was first said to be, "argue a man into slavery in the English language." Sir Manubhai has not done that, but he has done what is almost equally impossible. He has tried to argue the people of the States into acceptance of the deprivation of the elementary rights of men in civilised society—a better phrase than fundamental rights—freedom of speech and writing, freedom in his own home, freedom from fine, imprisonment, banishment, confiscation and other punishment, except for an offence against laws duly promulgated and after due trial by judicial tribunals. The "natural laws of allegiance" of which Sir Manubhai spoke are known neither to European nor even to ancient Hindu polity.

The Question of Residual Powers:—We laid stress last week on the great importance of the Lucknow Nationalist Muslim Conference as a turning point in Indian politics. The main resolution adopted without opposition by the Conference is reprinted in another column. The recognition by a representative body of Mahomedans, several of them men of distinction in their respective spheres, of the evils of separate electorates, is valuable as the first step in retrieving the grave mistake into which the country was led twenty-five years ago. Sir Mahomed Shaffi, the leader of the communal school of Moslem opinion, has promptly realised the significance of the Lucknow Conference and suggested a joint consultation among his co-religionists in order to reach a unanimous conclusion. He rightly points out that, except as regards the form of the electorates, Nationalist as well as Communalist Mussalmans are substantially agreed on all other points, and that it should not be beyond the resources of statesmanship to come to an agreement on that also. It is extremely desirable from the national point of view that the two schools of Moslem opinion should come to an agreement on the main points. But before Dr. Ansari and his friends meet Sir Mahomed Shaffi and his friends, the former would do well to ascertain what support all their points will receive from students of political science. The demand that residual powers should vest in the provinces, is objectionable from the historical as well as constitutional points of view. We are yet to meet a single person who has studied the question from a non-communal point of view, who does not hold that the residual powers must be with the Central Government, though some take the line that it is unnecessary for any Indian party to incur the odium of opposing the Moslem demand as no British Government is likely to concede it. We do not approve of this attitude which is more tactical than candid. The other view with which we have more sympathy is that the Central Government in a modern state, is bound to get all residual and many even of provincial powers concentrated in its hands, as has happened in the United States in spite of strict express provisions in the written Constitution. But we do not agree that, therefore, we may pretend to agree to the demand, well-knowing that it is an illusory one. Abraham Lincoln had to assert the controlling authority of the Federal Government by armed force, and the Commonwealth Government of Australia has to sue the Government of New South Wales in the Supreme Court in order to get the latter to pay up its contribution towards the repayment of war loans. Assuming that the judgment of the Court is against the defaulting State, it remains to be seen how the decree will be enforced. In the face of these and other facts, it will not be wise from motives of tactics to accept a provision well knowing that it is incompatible with the best interests of the country. This question, to our mind, is more important than the one regarding joint electorates. Twenty-two years ago, as Sir Ali Imam said in opening the Lucknow Conference, Muslims almost to a man were against him in his protest against separate electorates. Today, practically the whole Muslim intelligentsia has come round to his view, and in ten years, there will not be a single Mussulman who wishes to have separate electorates. These, therefore, will disappear in ten years' time. If, however, the residual powers are vested in the provinces, the fissiparous tendencies which are already disclosing themselves, will in less than a decade undo the work of a century of British rule and put back the country where it was a century ago. If we are to choose between the two we should unhesitatingly vote for separate electorates and residual powers with the Central Government.

Should Mahatmaji go ?—Mahatma Gandhi has made a statement of the reasons for which it has been decided that he should alone represent the Congress point of view at the Round Table Conference. The reasons adduced for sending a solitary delegate to this Conference are equally applicable to the National Congress and to the Legislative Council. It is less expensive to have only one person attending them, and it may be more efficacious too in that it will eliminate debate and save time. But the utility of councils and conferences rests on the belief that the application of many minds to a public question is better calculated to lead to an equitable decision than its presentation by a single person. The power of attorney analogy is obviously far-fetched. It is true that Mahatmaji will represent only the Congress point of view but the Congress, we think, claims to represent the country as a whole, and not any particular party or community. In fact, we were about to suggest that Mahatmaji should immediately call a Conference of delegates to the Round Table Conference who, we are sure, will be glad to place themselves as far as possible under his leadership. It is, however, unnecessary to argue the matter further, especially as on second thoughts we are inclined to think that the whole question should be reconsidered. We suggested not long ago the desirability of a few other prominent leaders being associated with Mahatma Gandhi in the Congress delegation to the Round Table Conference. On further consideration, we are inclined to doubt if Mahatmaji should be in the delegation at all. President Wilson undertook to represent the United States at the Peace Conference after the Great War, and it is now generally recognised that he made a tremendous mistake in doing so. If he had remained at Washington and deputed some prominent American statesman to represent his country at the Conference, he could have ensured the acceptance of his fourteen points to a greater extent in the Peace Treaty which practically ignored most of them, and of the Treaty itself by the Senate. Mahatma Gandhi's position in India though unofficial is comparable to that of President Wilson in America before he got entangled in the meshes of European diplomacy.

Dr. Ansari's Suggestion:—In an interview with an Associated Press representative Dr. Ansari a day or two after the Lucknow conference proposed a Board consisting of Mr. Gandhi (President) the Nawab of Bhopal (Muslim) Pandit Malaviya (Hindu) Master Tarasingh (Sikh) Dr. Ambedkar (Depressed Classes) Colonel Gidney (Anglo-Indians) Sir A. P. Patro (Non-Brahmin) Dr. Dutta (Indian Christians) and the President of the European Association to arbitrate in all communal issues. We have more than once pointed out that the talk about a Hindu majority is a myth, and Dr. Ansari's selection of Pandit Malaviya, Sir A. P. Patro and Dr. Ambedkar to represent Hindus, Non-Brahmins and Depressed Classes is a striking confirmation of it. Are not Non-Brahmins, Hindus? Are not Depressed Classes, Hindus? Are Brahmins and Baniyas only Hindus and the rest just non-Brahmins and Depressed Classes? The "Hindus" in at least Madras and Maharashtra will be a small minority, certainly smaller than the Moslem minority, if these two categories of them are left out. Dr. Ansari suggests that this Board should arbitrate in all communal issues. An arbitrator must be one who is not personally interested in the issues in a dispute. The names proposed for the Board, however, are those of men who are themselves leaders of communities and, in fact, they are put in avowedly as communal representatives. The only way in which such a Board can function is that known as "log-rolling" in political slang, with Colonel Gidney holding the key position. That communal differences can be satisfactorily settled in such a way, does not appear to us to be possible.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
BOMBAY, MAY 2, 1931.

PROSELYTISING MISSIONS.

We reprint to-day Mahatma Gandhi's article in Young India in reply to critics of his recent statement about the probable attitude of a national Indian Government to proselytising missions. We doubt if his explanation would satisfy those who had raised an outcry over the earlier report of his opinion. You can awaken a man who is sound asleep; but not one who only pretends to be so. Mahatma Gandhi's critics know perfectly well what he meant. They have known it all the time during which foreign Christian missions have been at work in India. Indian reformers who were most appreciative of the life and teachings of Jesus Christ, from Raja Ram Mohan Roy to our own times, have been the loudest in their protest and condemnation of organised proselytism. Thoughtful European Missionaries themselves have denounced it as entirely contrary to the teachings and example of Jesus Christ. "He, to whom we are accustomed to attribute the great commission to evangelise the world", wrote the Rev. Bernard Lucas in his arresting book, "Our Task in India", published in 1914, "was the very one who in the most scathing terms that could be used, denounced the religious leaders of His day "who compassed sea and land to make one proselyte" and declared that the result of their labour was to make the proselyte "twofold more a son of Gehenna than themselves." The repugnance here so forcibly expressed to anything savouring of proselytism, coupled with Christ's practical abatement from any ministry save to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, are sufficient to show that whatever commission He may have given to His disciples, it certainly could not have been one to proselytise." "With hardly a single exception", Mr. Lucas went on to observe, "Hindus regard us as Proselytists pure and simple. Our presence in India means to them destruction of Hindu religious and social life, and the establishment of a foreign religion and a Western social order. The missionary is regarded by them as the enemy of Hindu religion and the destroyer of caste. Christianity is the religion of the foreigner, and the church is a foreign ecclesiastical order. This is undoubtedly the impression which our Christian propaganda has produced; and the Patriotism which we have been so largely instrumental in generating, is likely to be as antagonistic to our work as the caste system we found, and against which efforts have been so largely directed."

For a discriminating and at the same time sympathetic analysis of the work of foreign missions, we may refer our readers to the book entitled "The Indirect Effects of Christian Missions in India" by Mr. Robert Wilson Smith which secured the Sir Peregring Maitland Prize in Cambridge University in 1927 (James Clarke and Co., London.) One sentence from it may be quoted. After showing that the statistics relating to the increase of Christians at each successive Census, should not be taken at their face value, Mr. Smith remarks: "It is significant that the increase of the Christian community is recorded largely, not in those areas where the Church has been well established for many generations, but almost entirely in those districts when missionary work is of very recent history."

Even more important is the fact that Indian Christians are to-day the strongest critics of proselytising missions. Mr. Cornelius' article on "Religious Imperialism" which we published in the last issue and the letters and articles which we publish in this, prove this beyond the shadow of a doubt. In China, the National Government including several Christians, has strictly defined the terms on which foreign missions will be allowed to work in the country. In Italy, the Pope has publicly protested against the proselytising activities of Protestant Missions. From the point of view of non-Christian communities, foreign Missions financed from abroad, stand precisely on the same footing as Bolsheviki propaganda in capitalistic societies. Religious freedom means that every one is free to profess and practice whatever religion he likes. It does not and cannot mean that he is free to organise a campaign to upset other people's cherished beliefs with the help of money collected from pious people in their native lands by grossly distorted pictures of non-Christian religions. The Times of India thinks it has cornered Mahatma Gandhi by asking if he will apply the same principle to Mahomedans. There is very little of organised religious proselytism on the part of Islam like that of Christian Missions. And Mahomedans are Indians and not foreigners, and they are as much opposed to the Missions as Hindus. Any policy which a nationalist Indian Government adopts regarding foreign Missions, we are sure, will be determined in full consultation with Indian Christian leaders and will almost certainly be entrusted to them to carry out. If we are sure of one thing about a national Indian government, it is this: that it will be more genuinely inspired by the spirit of Christ's precepts than the Anglo Indian Government and that, while according perfect freedom to every one to worship God according to his conscience or custom, it will not tolerate insidious ways of undermining another's faith under cover of relieving him of malaria or tooth-ache.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. V.

( BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI. )

"Who is the greatest woman in the world?" asked Madame de Stael of the great Napoleon shortly after his return from the conquest of Italy. The hero, who was always in need of men as 'food for gunpowder,' readily answered: "She, Madam, who has borne the greatest number of children." But even he did not stipulate specifically for male children.

The average Hindu is not a hero like Napoleon. Nor is he by nature a blood-thirsty adventurer consumed with greed for other people's possessions, or fired by an ahamkâric zeal to exalt himself in his own estimation by trampling upon the dearest sentiments, self-respect and personal freedom of other nations. Nothing in fact distresses him more than to see others hurt or to have his own children or others' children exposed to the danger of fire or sword or the slightest injury of any kind for any cause. Yet this meek and inoffensive votary of Ahimsa, living without a care or fear of harm from neighbours or enemies under the Pax Britannica, craves for the possession of male children just as keenly as Napoleon ever hankered after men to fill his Grand Army.

"A son! A son! A kingdom for a son!" That is the cry which rings out from his soul if his wife happens to be unreasonably tardy in presenting him with at least one. But the more the happier. For "one son is practically no son," since anything may happen to that one any time and then he would be left sonless altogether! Any number of daughters are no good to assuage this anguish in his heart. They are of course welcome since he cannot prevent their coming and once they come they entwine themselves round his heart and become as dear as life to him. But they are more an encumbrance than a blessing. They only add to his cares, affording so many vulnerable points in the armour of his family pride through which the arrogance and greed of sons-in-law and their people may dart at him to gall, to humble, to blackmail and to enslave him. Not a thousand daughters put together can be a possible substitute for a single son "for the celebration of name and due perpetuation of lineage," not to speak of the never to be forgotten "funeral cake" which a son alone can provide and the anticipated want of which after death is bound to fill the sonless Hindu, however young, with far greater dread and grief than the immediate want of daily bread to himself and his wife while still alive on earth.

And what is the reward to the devoted woman who goes through the gates of death every time intent on giving birth to the much coveted precious son? Of course there is for her too the hope and joy ineffable of having one funeral cake assured to herself whenever she may have the luck to shuffle off this mortal coil and quit the painful scene of her travails here. In the meantime she enjoys also the satisfaction of having fulfilled her life's purpose on earth by pleasing her husband, and incidentally, of acquiring greater importance and stability for her own position in his family. But above all, she has the precious joy and romance of motherhood, to compensate her for the total abolition of the care-free innocent joys of girlhood and the stern suppression of every romance of wifehood under the rigid social discipline, now happily on the decline but not defunct, which consigns her to the Martial Law care of a mother-in-law in a joint family of utter strangers, when yet a child unconscious of her human individuality, with no other hope to sustain her but that she may one day attain to the authority of a mother-in-law herself through her sons innumerable.

But what exactly are her legal rights in her husband's family as wife, widow or mother, and what are the rights of her female progeny under the Hindu law of today? And how do these fit in with our high claim for civilisation? For as the learned Hindu Law Reform Committee of Mysore justly point out quoting Mill, Maine and Dwarka Nath Mitter in their support, "the position of women in any system of law forms a fair index of the civilisation and culture" of the community concerned.

One thing must be said at once in fairness to our ancient law givers and their modern agents on the judicial bench of British courts. They do not make marriage a ground for robbing woman, as was being done it is said, till very recently in the civilised West, and handing over to her husband every bit of property she may have possessed before or might acquire later, on the pretext that by her marriage her personality became merged in his and that two constituted a single person in the eye of the Law.

Whatever property a Hindu woman may have obtained before her marriage by gift from parents and relations or even strangers, and whatever she may have acquired by her own labour and skill, is her Stridhana or "Woman's wealth", over which she has absolute and independent power of enjoyment and disposal. So also are the gifts received at her wedding whether from husband, parents and other relations or utter strangers. Gifts subsequently received by her and earnings made by her own exertions and abilities are likewise her Stridhana. Besides these she may also possess properties which devolved on her by inheritance from male or female relations. These may or may not be recognised as her Stridhana by the British courts in India according to the view the Privy Council takes, rightly or wrongly of the law applicable in each province. But in any event the income thereof belongs to her absolutely during her life and the husband has no manner of interest in the properties or the income any more than in the others specifically recognised as her Stridhana.

Still during coverture, that is, while the husband is alive and she is under his care, even the Hindu law places her properties under his "dominion" in two ways. It restrains her from disposing of a certain class of her properties during his life except with his consent. It also gives to the husband certain powers of appropriation over all her properties under circumstances varying with the nature of their origin, though, fortunately, such powers are made personal to him and do not create any right enuring to the benefit of his creditors or heirs.

Thus in the case of properties which came to her directly as gifts from "affectionate kindred" or by purchase with the help of such gifts, and which are therefore named Soudāyika Stridhana, she has the entire control and right of disposition even against the husband's will. Gifts, however, made by the husband himself, whether they consist of houses or lands or mere moveables, stand on a different footing though they also are Soudāyika. They cannot be disposed of by her except with the husband's consent. After his death she may dispose of the moveables at her discretion but not even then the immoveable items among his gifts. In addition to this control over his own gifts, he is given another privilege over all varieties of Soudāyika Stridhana belonging to his wife, whether derived from himself or other relations. He may take and make use of them for himself as a "gift of affection" under exceptional circumstances of distress, such as famine, illness, imprisonment etc., to the measure of his need, but he is morally bound to reimburse her for it when able. As regards her non-Soudāyika properties however, such as gifts from strangers and her own personal earnings etc., he is given still greater powers. He may not only prevent her during his life from disposing of them as she pleases, but may use them up himself without the excuse of any distress and without any pretence of hoping to repay her, but simply relying on a wide interpretation of the texts of Kātyayana and Yajnavalkya. These one-sided privileges are perhaps the last vestiges of those bygone chivalrous times when, as we gather from Jaimini, the wife was joint owner of the family estate with her husband and he was held incompetent, male as he was, to make a valid gift, even of his own property, without the wife's consent. Hindu society has long out-grown that stage and it is very doubtful, if in practice, Hindu husbands take their invidious privileges now seriously. But there is no doubt that the law which concedes such privileges is a dangerous and cruel anachronism at the present time when a Hindu wife is not legally entitled to claim from her husband anything more than bare "maintenance" in return for all the daily household drudgery rendered to himself and his family which would have cost him at least double the expense for less than half the comfort had he employed a salaried house-keeper. The Hindu wife can always be trusted to succour her distressed husband with her last pie and her last breath even if he is underserving. But if she is found to harden her heart and refuse voluntary help to him in any case, it is clear that there is absolutely no love lost between them or the needs of her children are overweighing all other considerations. In any event, what right has the Hindu community to strengthen the man's hands with a law to rob her forcibly of what should never be taken except as a "gift of affection"? Genuine lovers of our ancient past must be sincerely regretting their incapacity at the present day to restore to woman her ancient right of co-proprietorship with her husband in his family estate. They will, let us hope, do her at least the favour of co-operating with the Hindu Law Reform Committee of Mysore in relieving her from the risk of being cruelly filched by her husband of her own separate property against her will. The Committee's recommendations in this regard are very simple and at the same time equitable. Clause 13 of the proposed Bill runs as follows :

(1) A female owning Stridhana property of any description shall have over it absolute and unrestricted powers both of enjoyment and of disposition inter vivos and by will, subject only to the general law relating to guardianship during minority.

(2) Except when acting as the lawful guardian of his wife if she be a minor, a husband as such has no right to or interest in any portion of his wife's stridhana during her life, nor is he legally entitled to control the exercise of her powers in relation thereto."

Nationalist Hindus who mean business and honestly wish to implement the Congress declaration in favour of equality of rights and obligations between the sexes will be glad to know that section 20 (1) of the Indian Succession Act of 1925 already provides for mutual safeguards in the following terms :

"No person shall, by marriage, acquire any interest in the property of the person whom he or she marries or become incapable of doing any act in respect of his or her own property which he or she could have done if unmarried."

A battle royal may however be expected to rage round another recommendation of the Committee in the Mysore Representative Assembly. Clause 12 (3) of the Draft Bill seeks to include in the definition of Stridhana "all gifts and payments other than or in addition to, or in excess of, the customary presents of vessels and apparel, made to a bridegroom in connection with his marriage, or to his parent or guardian or other person on his behalf, by the bride or her relatives or friends." The object is to draw the fangs of the pernicious practice of extorting bridegroom price from the bride's people by the bridegroom's party, which has become so rampant throughout India in Hindu circles which are otherwise "civilised," "cultured" and "religious," and to turn it into a semi-blessing, without condoning it by any means, by making the recipient legally responsible to the bride as a trustee for the excess amount taken by him. How far this object can be achieved by a mere definition of this sort, and how and when the inexperienced child-bride, whose parents and friends were themselves too weak to resist the extortion, is to compel the powerful extortioners, who hold away over her destiny in her husband's house, to disgorge their ill-gotten loot and utilise it for her benefit, is a matter of detail which is not clear from the text of the proposed Bill or the explanatory Report accompanying it. But the proposal is worth an earnest trial. The nearest parallel which occurs to one's mind off-hand in this connection is the historic trust, the practical working of which must be familiar to the Mysore Representative Assembly. It is the trust which was created in favour of the Mysore Government for the surplus revenues of the Civil and Military Station at Bangalore by the unavoidable occupation of it by the British. We earnestly hope that the sense of humour and sense of honour of the cultured and refined citizens of the Mysore state will rise equal to their opportunity and ensure cordial and unanimous acceptance to the proposed definition of bridegroom price as the bride's Stridhana. It would be very interesting to see how the implied trust is going to implement itself in practice. Those who cannot forego the bridegroom-price under any circumstances may readily welcome this innocuous definition which invests their greed with the appearance of a disinterested act of far-sighted prudence undertaken in the interests of the bride herself.

Mr. Strutton on the Criminal Tribes:—The Director of Information, Bombay writes: "The Government of Bombay have issued the following resolution: "On the departure of Mr. H. H. Strutton from India, the Governor in Council is pleased to record his appreciation of the service rendered by him to the Government of Bombay particularly in connection with the reformation of Criminal Tribes. Mr. Strutton, after service with two other Missions, joined the American Marathi Mission in 1917, when that Mission arranged with Government to take over the management of the Criminal Tribes Settlement at Sholapur. His missionary service extended over a period of nearly 35 years, during which time he acquired a great knowledge of character and habits of the men to whose reformation and advancement he has devoted the best part of his life. His ability to maintain order and inspire confidence among the rough settlers was particularly notable. Mr. Strutton acted as Criminal Tribes Settlement Officer for about eight months in 1930, this being the first occasion on which anyone other than a member of the Indian Civil or Indian Police Service had been selected to hold this post. As was only to be expected he discharged his duties admirably. Mr. Strutton has the good wishes of the Government of Bombay and they regret that they will no longer have his co-operation in the social work to which he has devoted so much of his life. Their regret is increased by the poor health of his wife who for many years has helped him in his work. Her work amongst and influence over the women of the Sholapur Settlement has been of great value."

LATE MR. K. T. PAUL, O.B.E.,
(BY MR. J. CHINNA DURAI, Bar-at-Law)

Looking through my window one hot afternoon in Sannadhi Street, Salem, over a quarter century ago, I saw the figure of a man in a plot of ground in Fort, Salem, scantily but quely clad, for he had a dhoty tucked round waist in an unorthodox fashion, a white cloth thrown carelessly on his bare body over his shoulder, a pair of sandals on his feet and a khaki sun hat on his head in deliberate affront it were, to Kipling's famous challenge "East and West is West; And never the twain meet." To be able to dress in that manner those days required courage, and the figure which seemed to possess that wonderful quality in abundance, for apart from being dressed in a remarkably simple yet original manner, he was a subject to the gaze—nay, ridicule—of many who made him the target of their criticisms. Yet, the man stood there unmoved and then oblivious to things around him except his occupation which consisted of supervising a building operation and making the lazy labourers work. That was the late lamented K. T. Paul and the characteristics which were latent in him in that incident—namely courage, originality, simplicity, practicalness, adaptability and devotion to duty—manifested themselves in all his undertakings his after years, so much so that when I met him long ago in England in 1929 as a 'world figure' of international reputation and importance I was the least surprised.

Mr. Paul was born in Salem in the year 1894. In taking stock of his achievements you must put a veil over three and a half decades of his existence for he was quite an obscure figure in the early part of his life. People knew him in Salem in his good old days as the only son of that famous Sheristadhar 'Paul Pillai' as he was popularly called whose name stood for 'wealth', 'prosperity' and all those nice things that go to make life pleasant and comfortable. Placed in such a comfortable and enviable position, young Paul seemed to have no ambition in the beginning except to look after and manage his ancestral properties and a natural thirst for knowledge which he acquired by reading as many books as money can buy, besides taking the degree of B.A. in the Madras University, and qualifying himself for teaching by passing the L. T. examination. He had a mind to qualify for the Bar but some one found after gaining admission into the Madras Law College that his inclinations did not really favour the law and so withdrew himself from it immediately. He started life as a teacher in the Salem Municipal College but either his appointment ceased or he was not like to be employed in that capacity, so he shook off his teaching responsibilities and followed then a lull in his career which in the modern day would come under the category of 'unemployed.' Not having really anything to do, he contested a seat in the Local Municipal Council for more for the 'thrill' of it than for anything else, and, as luck would have it, he found himself elected to the Salem Municipal Council. It was there that he conceived his loftier ideas and found S...

small for his activities. Indeed the Salem Municipal Council provided such an excellent training ground for him that wherever he was or whatever he did he always thought in terms of 'Municipal Councils.' He was bubbling with ideas and knowledge, having stored them up in his head and mind by dint of industry and constant reading, but there was no scope to display or use them. It was a sad case of being 'all dressed up and nowhere to go.' At last he found in the N. M. S., an excellent avenue not only for expressing his personality, individuality and originality but also for proving his wonderful capacity for organising and revealing to the world his hitherto obscure identity. From then on, his rise to fame was as rapid as it was deserved and with lightning speed he rose to the highest position in the Y. M. C. A. which it was possible for any Indian to attain and from which enviable position he retired only last year that he might be of service to his mother country in the political field which he felt was the crying need of the time. The crowning act of his glories was when he sat as arbitrator over India's affairs in the Round Table Conference in London last winter which unfortunately seems to have cost him his life as he suffered from inflammation of the chest ever since he returned to Salem from England.

In the annals of the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Paul's name will stand unique for all time. In America, England, and on the continent of Europe and Asia his name was a byword. There are not many countries in the world which did not know that pleasant looking, handsome, middle aged, robust figure, whose peculiar features were a striking forehead, a bushy moustache, and a huge white turban, who delighted to walk in the streets of London and New York in his own national costume—a powerful 'ambassador of India' proclaiming as it were to the world that he was very, very proud of being 'Indian'. He was an out and out nationalist and he made no secret of it although such a political attitude of his was not altogether in keeping with his mission in the Y. M. C. A. and brought him into conflict with his colleagues. As a politician however, he was not a great success. The Indian Christians whom he represented in the R. T. C. were not at all taken up with his enthusiasm for 'common electorates' to the Legislature. Perhaps had he lived longer he might have changed his views in time to be of real help and assistance in the political aspirations of his community. If, instead of indulging in politics he had devoted his time and energies to the social uplift of India, Mr. Paul might have undoubtedly become a 'Social Gandhi'. His Christian influence would have gone a great way towards bringing together the warring divergent communities and his conciliatory tendencies would have easily won for him the much coveted 'Nobel Prize'. His wide experience and vast learning gained as a result of his extensive travels throughout the world would have been an invaluable asset to India.

Mr. Paul was besides a good writer and a sound thinker being an author and a journalist as well. In his untimely death India has sustained an irreparable loss and the Indian Christian community their foremost leader. To the consolation of those who mourn his loss today, it may be said of him,

"Life's race well run
Life's work well done
Life's crown well won
Now comes Rest."

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY, LAHORE (PUNJAB).

( BY MR. S. A. WAIZ. )

About seventy years ago, the Punjab Government granted over two thousand acres of land in the Lahore District for Indian Christian settlement. One of the conditions laid down by the Government was that, if within twenty years Indian Christians were unable to develop the land, they would forfeit the right of ownership. This period was extended by another ten years. But unfortunately owing to lack of funds and the limited number of Indian Christians available for agricultural pursuits, it became more and more obvious that the proposed scheme was not likely to be successful without the help of an outside agency. The duty of the Indian Christian leaders was clear. They ought to have returned the land to the Government to be disposed of at their discretion or to have arranged for the necessary capital. But the tragic lack of foresight led them to abandon their right in favour of the Church Missionary Society. Thus the Mission became the landlord of a settlement to which they had no moral right. However, with huge funds at their disposal they were able to develop the land, and the settlement came to be known, and is still known, as Clarkabad, for it was Rev. Clarke who negotiated the transaction and out-maneuvred the Indian Christian leaders.

During the early days many Muslims had settled down on the land. But after it had become the property of the Mission, they were asked to quit, which they declined. But the late Rev. Clark had much influence with the Government of the day and was able to procure land for these Muslims elsewhere where they became peasant proprietors. Thus the poor Indian Christians were deprived of a colony which morally still belongs to them.

The land is very fertile and is irrigated by canal water. In the early days, the tenants paid one-sixteenth of the produce to the Mission which later on was raised to one-twelfth, and then to one-eighth and today the white Christian owners exact one-third of the produce. In addition to this the tenants are also responsible for the water tax. The Mission pays the land revenue to the Government. The produce of the land is taken direct from the fields to the Mission store house, and from there the poor tenants who are, as a rule, illiterate and ignorant, receive their shares which generally come to almost nothing and they are obliged to live throughout the year by borrowing. They are being ground between two mighty stones; on the one side is uncharitable Nature with her grim law of Diminishing Returns and on the other are the equally uncharitable Christian Missionaries with their Draconian law, which they are in a position to enforce, of increasing returns to their coffers.

I most emphatically repeat that the land belongs to the Indian Christians and is usurped by the trustee for the excess amount taken by him. How far this object can be achieved by a mere definition of this sort, and how and when the inexperienced child-bride, whose parents and friends were themselves too weak to resist the extortion, is to compel the powerful extortioners, who hold sway over her destiny in her husband's house, to disgorge their ill-gotten loot and utilise it for her benefit, is a matter of detail which is not clear from the text of the proposed Bill or the explanatory Report accompanying it. But the proposal is worth an earnest trial. The nearest parallel which occurs to one's mind off-hand in this connection is the historic trust, the practical working of which must be familiar to the Mysore Representative Assembly. It is the trust which was created in favour of the Mysore Government for the surplus revenues of the Civil and Military Station at Bangalore by the unavoidable occupation of it by the British. We earnestly hope that the sense of humour and sense of honour of the cultured and refined citizens of the Mysore state will rise equal to their opportunity and ensure cordial and unanimous acceptance to the proposed definition of bridegroom price as the bride's Stridhana. It would be very interesting to see how the implied trust is going to implement itself in practice. Those who cannot forego the bridegroom-price under any circumstances may readily welcome this innocuous definition which invests their greed with the appearance of a disinterested act of far-sighted prudence undertaken in the interests of the bride herself.

Mr. Strutton on the Criminal Tribes:—The Director of Information, Bombay writes: "The Government of Bombay have issued the following resolution: "On the departure of Mr. H. H. Strutton from India, the Governor in Council is pleased to record his appreciation of the service rendered by him to the Government of Bombay particularly in connection with the reformation of Criminal Tribes. Mr. Strutton, after service with two other Missions, joined the American Marathi Mission in 1917, when that Mission arranged with Government to take over the management of the Criminal Tribes Settlement at Sholapur. His missionary service extended over a period of nearly 35 years, during which time he acquired a great knowledge of character and habits of the men to whose reformation and advancement he has devoted the best part of his life. His ability to maintain order and inspire confidence among the rough settlers was particularly notable. Mr. Strutton acted as Criminal Tribes Settlement Officer for about eight months in 1930, this being the first occasion on which anyone other than a member of the Indian Civil or Indian Police Service had been selected to hold this post. As was only to be expected he discharged his duties admirably. Mr. Strutton has the good wishes of the Government of Bombay and they regret that they will no longer have his co-operation in the social work to which he has devoted so much of his life. Their regret is increased by the poor health of his wife who for many years has helped him in his work. Her work amongst and influence over the women of the Sholapur Settlement has been of great value."

LATE MR. K. T. PAUL, O.B.E.,

(BY MR. J. CHINNA DURAI, Bar-at-Law.)

Looking through my window one hot afternoon in Sannadhi Street, Salem, over a quarter of a century ago, I saw the figure of a man in a small plot of ground in Fort, Salem, scantily but grotesquely clad, for he had a dhoty tucked round his waist in an unorthodox fashion, a white towel thrown carelessly on his bare body over his right shoulder, a pair of sandals on his feet and a huge khaki sun hat on his head in deliberate affront as it were, to Kipling's famous challenge "East is East and West is West; And never the twain shall meet." To be able to dress in that manner in those days required courage, and the figure in question seemed to possess that wonderful quality in abundance, for apart from being dressed in a remarkably simple yet original manner, he was subject to the gaze—nay, ridicule—of wayfarers who made him the target of their criticisms, and yet, the man stood there unmoved and thoroughly oblivious to things around him except his occupation which consisted of supervising a building operation and making the lazy labourers work. That man was the late lamented K. T. Paul and the characteristics which were latent in him in that little incident—namely courage, originality, simplicity, practicalness, adaptability and devotion to duty—manifested themselves in all his undertakings in his after years, so much so that when I met him not long ago in England in 1929 as a 'world figure' of international reputation and importance I was not the least surprised.

Mr. Paul was born in Salem in the year 1877. In taking stock of his achievements you must draw a veil over three and a half decades of his existence, for he was quite an obscure figure in the early part of his life. People knew him in Salem in those good old days as the only son of that famous Sheristadhar 'Paul Pillai' as he was popularly called whose name stood for 'wealth' 'prosperity' and all those nice things that go to make life easy and comfortable. Placed in such a comfortable and enviable position, young Paul seemed to have no ambition in the beginning except to look after and manage his ancestral properties and a natural thirst for knowledge which he acquired by reading as many books as money can buy, besides taking the degree of B.A. in the Madras University and qualifying himself for teaching by passing the L. T. He also had a mind to qualify for the Bar but somehow he found after gaining admission into the Madras Law College that his inclinations did not really lie that way and so withdrew himself from it immediately. He started life as a teacher in the Salem Municipal College but either his appointment ceased or he did not like to be employed in that capacity, he soon shook off his teaching responsibilities and there followed then a lull in his career which in the modern day would come under the category of being 'unemployed.' Not having really anything to do he contested a seat in the Local Municipal Council, more for the 'thrill' of it than for anything else and, as luck would have it, he found himself elected to the Salem Municipal Council. It was there that he conceived his leftier ideas and found Salem too small for his activities. Indeed the Salem Municipal Council provided such an excellent training ground for him that wherever he was or whatever he did he always thought in terms of 'Municipal Councils.' He was bubbling with ideas and knowledge, having stored them up in his head and mind by dint of industry and constant reading, but there was no scope to display or use them. It was a sad case of being 'all dressed up and nowhere to go.' At last he found in the N. M. S., an excellent avenue not only for expressing his personality, individuality and originality but also for proving his wonderful capacity for organising and revealing to the world his hitherto obscure identity. From then on, his rise to fame was as rapid as it was deserved and with lightning speed he rose to the highest position in the Y. M. C. A. which it was possible for any Indian to attain and from which enviable position he retired only last year that he might be of service to his mother country in the political field which he felt was the crying need of the time. The crowning act of his glories was when he sat as arbitrator over India's affairs in the Round Table Conference in London last winter which unfortunately seems to have cost him his life as he suffered from inflammation of the chest ever since he returned to Salem from England.

In the annals of the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Paul's name will stand unique for all time. In America, England, and on the continent of Europe and Asia his name was a byword. There are not many countries in the world which did not know that pleasant looking, handsome, middle aged, robust figure, whose peculiar features were a striking forehead, a bushy moustache, and a huge white turban, who delighted to walk in the streets of London and New York in his own national costume—a powerful ambassador of India proclaiming as it were to the world that he was very, very proud of being 'Indian'. He was an out and out nationalist and he made no secret of it although such a political attitude of his was not altogether in keeping with his mission in the Y. M. C. A. and brought him into conflict with his colleagues. As a politician however, he was not a great success. The Indian Christians whom he represented in the R. T. C. were not at all taken up with his enthusiasm for 'common electorates' to the Legislature. Perhaps had he lived longer he might have changed his views in time to be of real help and assistance in the political aspirations of his community. If, instead of indulging in politics he had devoted his time and energies to the social uplift of India, Mr. Paul might have undoubtedly become a 'Social Gandhi'. His Christian influence would have gone a great way towards bringing together the warring divergent communities and his conciliatory tendencies would have easily won for him the much coveted 'Nobel Prize'. His wide experience and vast learning gained as a result of his extensive travels throughout the world would have been an invaluable asset to India.

Mr. Paul was besides a good writer and a sound thinker being an author and a journalist as well. In his untimely death India has sustained an irreparable loss and the Indian Christian community their foremost leader. To the consolation of those who mourn his loss today, it may be said of him,

"Life's race well run
Life's work well done
Life's crown well won
Now comes Rest."

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY, LAHORE (PUNJAB).

(By MR. S. A. WALZ.)

About seventy years ago, the Punjab Government granted over two thousand acres of land in the Lahore District for Indian Christian settlement. One of the conditions laid down by the Government was that, if within twenty years Indian Christians were unable to develop the land, they would forfeit the right of ownership. This period was extended by another ten years. But unfortunately owing to lack of funds and the limited number of Indian Christians available for agricultural pursuits, it became more and more obvious that the proposed scheme was not likely to be successful without the help of an outside agency. The duty of the Indian Christian leaders was clear. They ought to have returned the land to the Government to be disposed of at their discretion or to have arranged for the necessary capital. But the tragic lack of foresight led them to abandon their right in favour of the Church Missionary Society. Thus the Mission became the landlord of a settlement to which they had no moral right. However, with huge funds at their disposal they were able to develop the land, and the settlement came to be known, and is still known, as Clarkabad, for it was Rev. Clarke who negotiated the transaction and out-manoeuvred the Indian Christian leaders.

During the early days many Muslims had settled down on the land. But after it had become the property of the Mission, they were asked to quit, which they declined. But the late Rev. Clark had much influence with the Government of the day and was able to procure land for these Muslims elsewhere where they became peasant proprietors. Thus the poor Indian Christians were deprived of a colony which morally still belongs to them.

The land is very fertile and is irrigated by canal water. In the early days, the tenants paid one-sixteenth of the produce to the Mission which later on was raised to one-twelfth, and then to one-eighth and today the white Christian owners exact one-third of the produce. In addition to this the tenants are also responsible for the water tax. The Mission pays the land revenue to the Government. The produce of the land is taken direct from the fields to the Mission store house, and from there the poor tenants who are, as a rule, illiterate and ignorant, receive their shares which generally come to almost nothing and they are obliged to live throughout the year by borrowing. They are being ground between two mighty stones; on the one side is uncharitable Nature with her grim law of Diminishing Returns and on the other are the equally uncharitable Christian Missionaries with their Draconian law, which they are in a position to enforce, of increasing returns to their coffers.

I most emphatically repeat that the land belongs to the Indian Christians and is usurped by the Missionaries. If they care for truth and justice, they ought to return it to its rightful owners. The Missionary motive, we are told, was the development of the physical, intellectual, and moral qualities of the Indian Christian settlers. But they have failed to come up to their high ideals of service. No matter by what means they get a lion's share of the produce of the land, so long as they are able to get it, they don't care a fig what happens to the Indian Christians. Whenever any village Hampden raises his head and asserts his right, he is most unceremoniously put down. Either he is turned out forthwith from the village or some sort of legal case is brought against him and generally his life is made so miserable that he is left no alternative but to quit the village. This is, in the words of Herbert Spencer, "a combination of one-tenth of nominal Christianity with nine-tenths of real paganism."

The missionaries, time and again, have reduced some of these poor people to abject poverty by involving them in expensive litigation. They refuse to reconcile and at the slightest pretext drag them to law courts. Scores of them have been rendered penniless and homeless. It is a pity that none of the so-called Indian Christian leaders have ever cared to raise their finger to help these poor people. Once, however, an Indian Christian leader in the Punjab, an employee of the American Missions, mustered courage and made an effort to expose the un-Christian behaviour of Missionaries at Clarkabad. But the head of the Church Missionary Society in the Punjab, one Rev. Force Jones, complained against him to the head of the American Mission and then we heard no more of anything or any one and the matter was hushed up for the time being. This is one of the ways how the foreign Christian missionaries work together for the evangelisation of a heathen country. It is nothing but downright exploitation of the poor people under the cloak of Christianity. Rev. Force Jones cannot plead ignorance for he has been repeatedly informed of the trend of events at Clarkabad, but owing to obvious reasons he has so far refused to take any action.

The Manager at Clarkabad is an inexperienced Indian Christian. He has mismanaged the whole village but no one dare say anything against him for the mighty Christian Lords of the Mission are there to support him. He has been able to show a bigger income at the cost of the poor and so the capitalistic missionaries are greatly enamoured of him. I am genuinely sorry to learn that Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram of the Y. M. C. A., is a member of the Church Council. Merciless treatment of the people regardless of their position in life has been freely indulged in by the underlings. Even women have not escaped persecution and have been beaten by hirelings to please the missionary bosses. According to H. G. Alexander in "The Indian Ferment", the Englishman in the tropics often ceases to be a gentleman; and certainly when he begins to beat a woman or get her beaten by his hirelings, he descends to that state. The harrowing tales of untold suffering inflicted on the poor Christians of Clarkabad irresistibly remind one of the stories told by missionaries of the aborigines of the South Sea Islands and of some stories of Africa. The early Christians suffered silently under Pagan Rome and it may sound incredible but it is true that the poor Indian Christians of this place, in the year of grace one thousand nine hundred and thirty one have realised that there is not much difference between a pagan and a Christian overlord. Any man who sees this state of affairs and does not speak out is a coward. I have done my duty with a view, if possible, to alleviate the sufferings of the poor and shall continue doing so until justice is done to them.

Several charges have been levelled against the Manager. Some time ago a Commission of Enquiry consisting of missionaries and some Indian Christians was instituted and it was decided by this commission that the Superintendent of the village should be asked to investigate into the allegations. That was a clever ruse to silence the poor people. However, this white Christian gentleman did not move in the matter at all; and the matter ended there.

These are plain facts and the Rev. Force Jones and the Church Missionary Society have got to face them. They have no moral right to the ownership of Clarkabad unless they believe that moral right as a world force has about as much significance as fire insurance in hell. But perhaps according to A. G. Gardiner, they are wise men; for he says that "a wise man is he who manipulates material forces most skilfully and with the least regard to moral consequences." The estate of Clarkabad sooner or later must be returned to Indian Christians; it belongs to them. Surely the Christian Missionaries are at least as conscientious as the British Government for the latter returned Mysore to its rightful owner. Will they emulate the noble and Christian example of the British Government? The present management of Clarkabad is heartless, inhuman and unchristian and the sooner its personnel is improved the better for the fair name of Justice at any rate.

One thing that emerges from these revelations is that the so-called Indian Christian leaders, who, as a rule are either mission servants or the employees of the Y. M. C. A., cannot—it is impossible for them—help the oppressed brethren. We, the poor Indian Christians, have to look for help elsewhere. There are still good Christian missionaries left in India, who I believe will be moved by this disclosure and try to hold out a helping hand to the oppressed people of Clarkabad. At this juncture, it will not serve any useful purpose to import politics to the Clarkabad situation though it may be necessary later on. For the present, therefore, I beg to draw the attention of the Lord Bishop of Lahore to the intolerable state of affairs in his diocese.

MISSIONS AND THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT.

The Editor, Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I am very much interested to read the apologia of Mr. Simpson of Secundarabad in your issue of the 11th April for his work as a missionary. He is quite right in feeling and saying that missionary work has a legitimate place in any country, and I myself have discussed his question at length in my book, "Rajarsi Ram Mohan Roy." I have also written a fairly long article on this subject and it is expected to appear in the next issue of the C. S. S. Review. There I have tried to describe the ideal of a missionary and define the conditions under which alone true missionary work could be done.

As regards the present missionary work, my criticism is that it is not missionary work at all. About twelve years back the head of a most important Anglican Mission told me that the real mission work had not even begun in India and that the so-called mission work was philanthropy only. I corrected him by saying that it was this only when it was at its best, and he accepted this statement.

The fact is that it is only Sannyasis, which means people who are socially, civilly, politically and racially dead, who can be true missionaries. It was because this condition was fulfilled by the Buddhist monks who went to China, etc., that they were able to do true mission work. Mr. Andrews, who knows Christian mission work as well as any one else, has said that the Buddhist missionaries were the best of all because they never used compulsion of any kind.

The Roman Catholics believe in Sannyas but not to the same extent as the Buddhists. This is why they have done and are doing even to-day a good deal of excellent mission work all over the world, but unfortunately their work has not been quite free from carnal elements derived from their alliance with political powers such as Portugal, Spain, etc., and also from the temporal power of the Roman Church itself.

The Protestant Churches do not believe in Sannyas, rather they have discarded it altogether; with the result that they are suffering in their own countries from an excessive amount of secularism and their mission work suffers from racialism, imperialism, etc. Several of these Churches started as national bodies and they have never become free from their original political bias. Rather this last has gone on increasing and it has had full play on the Mission fields.

That there was great danger from such mission work to the religions of India was noticed by Raja Ram Mohan Roy more than a hundred years ago. He in those early days pleaded with British people not to allow India to be exploited by these foreign missions. This is what he says:

"But as the English are celebrated for the manifestation of humanity and for administering justice, and as a great many gentlemen among them have an aversion to violate equity, it would tend to destroy their acknowledged character if they follow the example of the former conquerors of the country in disturbing the established religion of the country, because to introduce a religion by means of abuse and insult, or by affording the hope of worldly gain, is inconsistent with reason and justice."

The worst fears of Ram Mohan Roy were realized, however, long after he was gone. This was after the mutiny when the Christian mission work began in right earnest. This was because of a discovery which is thus described by Dr. Richter in his celebrated "History of Missions in India":

"At Chota Nagpur the German missionaries offered ten thousand Kols (an aboriginal tribe amongst whom the mission was working) as auxiliary troops. From Burma, Dr. Mason, an American Baptist, promised a battalion of Christian Karens (an aboriginal tribe in Burma). All these offers were declined by the short-sighted Government in order not to make an invidious distinction by accepting the help of the native Christians. But for any one with eyes to see, it was clear as day-light that in the native Churches there was a class of people whose interests were co-incident with those of the Government and upon whose good faith reliance could be put absolutely."

This discovery was made while the mutiny was going on and by making it the missionaries proved themselves even more pro-British than the Government itself. Since that time mission work has increased all over India many times over and the missionaries have taken full advantage of this rich discovery. The Government too has helped them indirectly if not always directly. The result of this has been tremendous increase in numbers of Christians drawn almost exclusively from these classes.

This is proselytism and it is of the worst kind. It is no wonder if the Hindus and the Moslems have felt uncomfortable all along at the Christian mission work and I am glad that Mahatma Gandhi has taken the first opportunity to say what he has said.

But this is nothing more than what has been done already by the Turkish Government years since, and if the missions have accepted to work on those terms there, what reason could there be for their refusing to do so in India? The Indian people have surely less ground for trusting missionaries for all that has been done than perhaps any other people, for not even in China has Christian mission work been done in such close alliance with Imperialism.

One more word. While the last great war was going on the British Government expelled or interned all the German missionaries, and I doubt if even now they have all been allowed to come back. If one Christian Government cannot trust the Christian missionaries of another Christian Government, is it proper to expect non-Christians to trust missionaries who are out to destroy their national faiths and that too in such a manner as described above?

Rajkot, }
14th April 1931. }

Yours etc.
MANILAL C. PAREKH.

FOREIGN MISSIONARIES.

Mahatma Gandhi writes in Young India :— Correspondents angry or curious have sent me clippings from the press or their comments on what has been ascribed to me by interviewers on the subject of foreign missionaries. Only one correspondent has been cautious enough to ask me whether I am correctly reported. Even George Joseph, my erstwhile co-worker and gracious host in Madras, has gone into hysterics without condescending to verify the report. That is the unkindest cut of all.

This is what a reporter has put into my mouth :

“ If instead of confining themselves to humanitarian work and material service to the poor, they do proselytisation by means of medical aid, education, etc., then I would certainly ask them to withdraw. Every nation's religion is as good as any other. Certainly India's religions are adequate for her people. We need no converting spiritually.”

I have given so many interviews that I cannot recall the time or the occasion or the context for the statement. All I can say is that it is a travesty of what I have always said and held. My views on foreign missions are no secret. I have more than once expounded them before missionary audiences. I am therefore unable to understand the fury over the distorted version of my views.

Let me re-touch the statement as I should make it:

“ If, instead of confining themselves purely to humanitarian work such as education, medical services to the poor and the like, they would use these activities of theirs for the purpose of proselytising, I would certainly like them to withdraw. Every nation considers its own faith to be as good as that of any other. Certainly the great faiths held by the people of India are adequate for her people. India stands in no need of conversion from one faith to another.”

Let me now amplify the bald statement. I hold that proselytising under the cloak of humanitarian work is, to say the least, unhealthy. It is most certainly resented by the people here. Religion after all is a deeply personal matter, it touches the heart. Why should I change my religion because a doctor who professes Christianity as his religion has cured me of some disease or why should the doctor expect or suggest such a change whilst I am under his influence? Is not medical relief its own reward and satisfaction? Or why should I whilst I am in a missionary educational institution have Christian teaching thrust upon me? In my opinion these practices are not uplifting and give rise to suspicion if not even secret hostility. The methods of conversion must be like Caesar's wife above suspicion. Faith is not imparted like secular subjects. It is given through the language of the heart. If a man has a living faith in him, it spreads its aroma like the rose its scent. Because of its invisibility, the extent of its influence is far wider than that of the visible beauty of the colour of the petals.

I am, then, not against conversion. But I am against the modern methods of it. Conversion now-a-days has become a matter of business, like any other. I remember having read a missionary report saying how much it cost per head to convert and then presenting a budget for ‘the next harvest.’

Yes, I do maintain that India's great faiths are all-sufficing for her. Apart from Christianity and Judaism, Hinduism and its offshoots, Islam and Zoroastrianism are living faiths. No one faith is perfect. All faiths are equally dear to their respective votaries. What is wanted therefore is living friendly contact among the followers of the great religions of the world and not a clash among them in the fruitless attempt on the part of each community to show the superiority of its faith over the rest. Through such friendly contact it will be possible for us all to rid our respective faiths of shortcomings and excrescences.

It follows from what I have said above that India is in no need of conversion of the kind I have in mind. Conversion in the sense of self-purification, self-realisation is the crying need of the times. That however is not what is ever meant by proselytising. To those who would convert India, might it not be said, ‘Physician heal thyself’?

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS AND THE CONVERSION OF THE “HEATHEN.”

The Christian Missionaries have been pioneers in Occidental learning and medical relief in different parts of the world. In India, too, they have played a great rôle in the spread of Western education, and have been responsible for carrying on various acts of charity, bringing succour to the poor and the distressed in many parts of the country. They have rendered to the people of India services which Indians themselves have not cared to do for their countrymen. But if the good done by the Christian Missionary Societies has been considerable, the harm done by them to the Indians has been no less so. And what is true of India is true of other “heathen” lands as well.

Speaking of the Christian missionary activities in Africa, Prof. Julian Huxley of the Royal Institute, London, has made many a thought-provoking observation in an impartial article on “Missions and the Life of America” contributed to the Harper's Monthly Magazine. Professor Huxley very rightly praises the Missions for the “credit side of the balance,” and quite justly he also blames them for the “debit side.” And what he says in connection with Africa holds good more or less in the case of India and other non-Christian lands.

It is a well-known fact that the missionary bodies do not represent the same culture and outlook, and are often very different in their ideas from one another. And so great is the divergence that, to quote the words of the writer, “not merely will one missionary body base itself on quite different ideas from another, but two stations or sections of one and the same Missionary Society may be as different as chalk from cheese—one may be dominated by old-fashioned ideas and narrow, bigoted minds, the other by the most humane and modernist temper." Thus the Christianity that is preached to the "natives" is divided into a number of separate sects, "each assuring the black man that it alone holds the secret of his eternal salvation—and implying, if no longer openly asserting, damnation to the rest."

But in spite of all their differences naturally bewildering to the native, the white missionaries have all got a common point in view. Their ideal of service is as a rule dominated by the thought of conversion. This is true not only in the field of medical service but also in that of education. Prof. Huxley thus exposes the Christian missionary's underlying motive which has already been detected by the "heathens" whose souls he is anxious to save,—“With few but notable exceptions missionary endeavour puts conversion far above education, concentrates as much as possible on religious teaching, and often—though this attitude is decreasing—sees in secular knowledge merely a bait with which to angle for souls. (That being so, one can hardly blame those among the natives who being astute enough to see this manage to secure the bait without swallowing the hook.”

Actuated by an inordinate desire to impress subscribers at home by scoring as many conversions as possible, the Christian missionary tries to destroy ruthlessly the convert's native culture, and supplant it by his own. This thoughtless method baffles the purpose of true education and goes against the first principles of evolution. It denationalises the proselyte, and very often makes him a cultural hybrid who represents neither the native nor the foreign culture. As the writer points out, "Where conversion is the prime aim, it is almost inevitable that many valuable native customs will be lost in the process. Converts often come to despise all their own customs. They throw the baby out with the bath and abandon respect for tribal elders and tribal traditions. Yet they almost invariably fail to imbibe our Western traditions properly (how could they in a few short months?) and so usually fall between two stools."

Christianity is the religion of the dominating white race possessing an abnormally developed superiority "complex." And coming in contact with the missionaries of this "superior" race, the convert, who very often accepts the new religion not for any religious motive but for mere worldly considerations, learns to look down upon his own people. Further, he contracts a new mental disease in the form of religious intolerance from which he was free before. Prof. Huxley diagnoses the malady correctly when he observes, "Intolerance is only to be expected among half-educated converts who have been assured that Christianity (or rather one particular branch of it) means salvation, while all other religions mean damnation."

It is the narrow-mindedness of the intolerant missionary that breeds narrow-mindedness in the converts. And there is no doubt that in spite of a change for the better, missionary groups in non-Christian lands are more narrow-minded than the religious circles in the Western countries from which they are drawn. It is an irony that often the proselytising zealots are no more advanced in their thoughts and ideas than the people of the "backward" races whom they are eager to enlighten! Very pointedly does the writer remark, "We attempt to wean the negro from his addiction to magic and yet allow him to be preached at and converted by people who solemnly believe in prayers for rain, the literal translation of the bible, the historical truth of the Genesis' account of creation, and all the rest of it! Thus the missionary wants to replace one form of superstition by another. And where he succeeds he manages to bring about in most cases a social and cultural chaos which is as deplorable as it is dangerous in its havoc. According to the writer, what is needed is a better type of missionaries thoroughly trained in their work, and fully acquainted with the spirit of the culture and tradition of the race which they propose to serve.

Prof. Huxley pleads for the slow process of "anthropological missionizing" as opposed to "the more spectacular business of quantitative conversion." But is missionizing necessary at all? Should not a better method be adopted by which each people may be helped to follow its own law of evolution, both in social and religious matters, and to attain to its individual and collective self-realisation? Such a scheme of evolution will certainly be better than anthropological or any other form of missionizing. But this will be possible only when the missionary frees his mind from the thoughtless desire for formal conversion that taints his mind to no small extent.

A question, not raised by the writer, naturally arises in this connection. The Christian missionary bodies are carrying on along with their beneficent work also thoughtless acts of destruction, and this under the protection, and often with the help of the so-called Christian Governments. But can such activities be continued eternally? What will happen when the administration changes hands, as some day it must, when the natives come into power, and realise the immensity of the harm done to them in the name of religion? Young China has been disillusioned and has become positively antagonistic towards the Christian Missions. Will not the African and other "backward" peoples also open their eyes some day and see facts as they are? And what will be their attitude towards the missionary bodies? Will they also be actuated by an anti-Christian feeling like the Chinese nationalists? Time alone can answer this question. But there is no doubt that the future of the Christian Missions in non-Christian lands will be very gloomy unless the missionaries are able to transform themselves into agents, not of destruction but of fulfilment.—Prabuddha Bharata.

NATIONALIST MUSLIM SCHEME.

The following is the text of the principal resolution passed by the Lucknow Nationalist Muslim Conference. It is taken from the Bombay Chronicle of the 21st April :

RESOLUTIONS.

Having secured general agreement in regard to the following matters which affect the interests of the nation at large.

(1) that there shall be provision of fundamental rights in the constitution guaranteeing to all citizens, protection of their cultures, language, script, education, profession and practice of religion, religious endowments and economic interests,

(2) that fundamental rights and personal laws shall be effectively protected by specific provisions to be embodied in the constitution,

(3) that future constitution of the country shall be federal and residuary powers shall vest in federating units,

(4) that all appointments shall be made by the Public Services Commission according to a minimum standard of efficiency without at the same time depriving any community of its fair share in the services and that in the case of lower grades no monopoly shall be permitted and,

(5) that Sind shall be constituted into a separate province,

(6) that North West Frontier Province and Baluchistan shall have exactly the same form of Government and administration as other provinces in British India.

The Nationalist Muslim Party strongly holds that settlement of the outstanding questions relating to the measure and method of representation in Federal and provincial legislatures should be based on the following principles :

- (a) Universal adult franchise,
- (b) Joint electorates,

(c) reservation of seats in the Federal and Provincial legislatures on a population basis for minorities less than 30 per cent with right to contest additional seats.

Having regard however to the present unfortunate position in the country, particularly the propaganda carried on by a body of Mussalmans, as well as the attitude of certain section of other communities and with a desire to secure a speedy settlement and create peaceful atmosphere in the country, the Nationalist Muslim Conference is prepared to negotiate for a settlement of the outstanding questions on the basis of joint electorate and adult franchise.

ADVERTISEMENTS*WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.
PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
" Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.*SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a

HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT

with us and earn 3½% interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE :

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches : BULLION EXCHANGE.
(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)
BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents :—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balances Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent. on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GBAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhoi, Surat, Petlad, Patsan, Anarell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwaraka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda).
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Nalb Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhalal Dajibhai Amin B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alombic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad).
 Mr. Manilal S. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Sar Suba, Baroda State, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Musumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-5-26.

O. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 s d

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

aramati (District Poona).	Dhulia (District West Khandesh).
Bira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kalvan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Palghar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akni (District Solapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Virangam (District Ahmedabad).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorized Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay
 Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling
 at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other
 coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MOBARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,

A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,

Dadar, Bombay, 14.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital (Paid up) ... Rs. 71,21,055

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN PAIN BALM
PRODUCE
BEST RESULTS

IN

Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

**&

MADRAS.

(REGD.)

—A SAFE—
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies'
Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of
India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed!)

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1928 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. R. H. The Nizam's Dominions
ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 67.

FEET FIRST

10 Parts, featuring

HAROLD LLOYD AND BARBARA KENT.

A Paramount All Talking, All Laughing Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 28 and 29.

IN THE SHADE OF THE OLD APPLE TREE

1 Reel,

Paramount Screen Song.

GRUMPY

9 Parts, featuring

CYRIL MAUDE.

Paramount All Talking Comedy

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

WOLF OF THE WALL STREET

8 Parts, featuring

GEORGE BANKROFT, BACLANOVA, NANCY CARROLL & PAUL LUCAS

A Paramount All Talking Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

WHAT EVERY GIRL SHOULD KNOW

7 Parts, featuring

PATSY RUTH MILLER

A Warner Bros. Picture.

BROADWAY LADIES

2 Parts, featuring

ALBERTA VOUCHAN & AL COOKE

F. B. O. Racing Blood Series.

Time:—4-30, 6-30 and 10 p. m.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1931

No. 36

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

A Pioneer of Social Reform. Precept and Practice. Hindi in South India. Retrenchment in Government Expenditure. Miss Mayo Again. The National Flag. More Haste, Less Speed. Vishnu Parashuram Shastri Pandit.	Where to Retrench. Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. VI. Religion through Business. The National Flag. Women's Place in the Future Constitution of India. News and Views.
--	--

NOTES.

A Pioneer of Social Reform:—We publish today a sketch of Vishnu Parashuram Shastri who occupies in the history of social reform in Western India, the same place as Iswar Chandra Vidyasagar in Bengal, Veeresalingam Pantulu in Andhra and Dewan Bahadur Raghoonath Rao in Madras. All these great men belonged to what was called the Shastric school of social reform, though of course, they were inspired also by a strong feeling of reason and justice. That is, they justified the reform which they advocated, namely, the abolition of the custom of enforced widowhood among high caste Hindus, by proving from texts from the Shastras that the custom had no basis in the sacred laws. This often led to bitter controversy with orthodox Pandits and one of this writer's earliest and most vivid recollections of social propaganda, is what nearly proved to be a lathi charge on the Shastri who sided with the reformers by infuriated Pandits who supported the orthodox prohibition. The debates, however, had a high propaganda value and the bad blood which they seldom failed to create was amply compensated for by the steady progress of opinion in favour of the remarriage reform. We may mention in passing that the Indian Social Reformer was launched as a challenge to the Shastric school to abandon their verbal tournaments and take their stand on reason and justice which ought to be the sole tests by which a social reform proposal should be judged. The Shastric school very soon declined and today nobody hears of any reform being supported or opposed on the ground that certain texts of this or that Smriti or commentator is for or against it. Vishnu Shastri not only advocated the remarriage of widows but he himself married a widow as a practical example to his friends. The risks attendant on the reform at that time were well brought out at the meeting at which the paper was read by Mr. M. R. Jayakar who mentioned the case of a Pathare Prabhu gentleman, Moroba Kanhoba, who with his bride was murdered on the very night of their wedding. The opposition to the remarriage of widows as to other reforms has now practically ceased, and it is difficult for the younger generation to realise the difficulties and dangers which the reformers had to face in the early stages of the movement. Men like Vishnu Shastri are the salt of the earth and it is to their gallant example that we owe the emergence, that we see all around us, of Indian womanhood in the public life of the country.

Precept and Practice:—It is curious that some of Mahatma Gandhi's severest critics, were his closest associates in the non-co-operation campaign ten years ago. Maulana Shaukat Ali is one. Mr. George Joseph is another. Referring to the Mahatma's views about the probable attitude of a nationalist Indian Government to proselytising missions, Mr. Joseph protests that Jesus Christ bade His followers to convert the whole world, and they are, therefore, bound to make proselytes as a religious duty. It has been pointed out by devout Christians, on the other hand, that Christ was dead against proselytising, and His commission to his disciples was to proclaim His message to all men. Assuming, however, that Mr. George Joseph correctly interprets Christ's precept in this matter, what, we may ask, about His other precepts as to the duty of His followers. (The term "Christian" was, of course, unknown to Him, as He lived and died a Jew.) One of these, if we remember, is that well-to-do men should sell their belongings and give the proceeds to the poor. Another is to forgive an erring brother forty-nine times. A third is to avoid going to law by agreeing with one's adversary quickly. A fourth—we are citing each as it occurs—is, if a man asks for your coat, to give him your cloak also. A fifth is to take no thought for the morrow, about food, drink or clothing. How many Christians, even Christian Missionaries, carry out these precepts of Jesus? "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the son. If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." We are not Christians in the sense that Mr. George Joseph is, but we implicitly believe that if any one lived strictly according to the precepts of Jesus, he will be able to get things done for the mere asking. This is also the teaching of other great religions. Instead of trying to convert other religionists, it would seem that Christians have a more urgent duty themselves to live up to the precepts of Jesus. It will be interesting to know how many Hindus have been converted to Romanism by Mr. George Joseph in pursuance of his Master's mandate, as he understands it.

Hindi in South India:—We have nothing but admiration for the strenuous efforts that are being made by the protagonists of Hindi as India's lingua franca to spread the knowledge of the language in Southern India. We print a short account of the work in the news columns. It seems that in twelve years, four lakhs of pupils have passed through the hands of the Hindi Pracharak Sabha but, says the Report, "unfortunately for us, our boys have not that firmness of purpose, and consequently a considerable number of these people left off after a month or two." We rather sympathise with the boys who had the firmness of purpose to attend even for two months a class in which they are taught a language which can be of no conceivable use to most of them except to address a Congress meeting, if the loud-speaker is in working order. The laws which govern the spread of languages are still not fully understood by philologists, but that it follows definite laws and cannot be arbitrarily controlled by the fiat of a popular assembly, is sufficiently established. There are practical difficulties which limit the number of people in South India who can learn to speak the Hindi language with fluency. The Tamil language which is a highly evolved language—much higher perhaps than Hindi—has no aspirates and it is a great strain on the average Tamilian to have to eject these into the microphone. Add to this the fact that Hindi has no sort of association with the loves or hates, work or worship, of the average man in South India, and it will be seen that nearly all the conditions which favour the natural spread of a language in a given area are almost totally absent. Even Sanskrit with its tremendous religious prestige was unable to make head against the Dravidian languages, and had to accommodate itself as well as it could to the phonetic aptitudes of the people. One of the curious developments to which the National Congress is steadily drifting, is the resurgence of the ancient divergence between Hindusthan and the Deccan. There is a growing feeling that, without intending it, Mahatma Gandhi is reviving the ancient predominance of Northern India over the South which, in the sphere of religion, was broken a thousand years ago, and in the political sphere, has never been thought of since the collapse of the Moghul Empire. If the rule laid down at Karachi that no one who cannot speak or at least profess to understand Hindi, should become a delegate to the Congress, is seriously sought to be enforced it must inevitably lead to the dropping out of the South from the Congress.

Retrenchment in Government Expenditure:—We publish today a well-considered article by a student of Indian Public Finance pointing out some sources to which the Retrenchment Committee which the Government of India have appointed may usefully direct its attention. Judging from past experience, it is hardly likely that much good will come out of this Committee's labours. Nearly all the big items of expenditure are fixed and beyond the control of the Indian Legislature. The Government of India in their despatch to the Secretary of State containing their views on the Report of the Simon Commission, estimated that 80 per cent of their net revenue was ear-marked for expenditure in ways which do not fall within the purview of the Indian Legislature. The new Committee will, therefore, have to confine its attention to the remaining 20 per cent. and it is doubtful if it will be able to reduce even one per cent of this expenditure. However, let us hope that it may do much more.

Miss Mayo Again:—Miss Katherine Mayo has made it a point to bestow periodically her unwelcome attentions on India. Hardly had the indignation caused by her first book abated when she produced another entitled "The Slave of the Gods" in which she claimed that the passing of the Sarda Act was entirely due to the volume of opinion created against child-marriage by her first book on India. It is, indeed, surprising that Miss Mayo should now turn round and declare in her third and new volume that the Government of India's Child Marriage Act was a "Great April Fool Joke"! Consistency we suppose, is the virtue of angels and not of "Drain Inspectresses! In the West, modern thought is striving hard to remove the stigma of illegitimacy from innocent victims and to secure for them the same rights as legitimate children. For Miss Mayo to suggest in the 20th century even as an expediency that child marriages should be invalidated and the offspring declared bastards savours of the old dispensation. We trust that in her next book Miss Mayo would be more up-to-date in her ideas, and turn the searchlight of her criticisms to problems such as, too frequent divorce, and looseness of morals in school-going girls and others nearer her own home.

The National Flag:—Mr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya's letter which we publish elsewhere seems to limit the invitation for suggestions about the National Flag to minor additions or alterations to the present one which "by usage and convention" has gained in popularity. It is, no doubt, difficult to discard a symbol which a large number of people has come to regard as national, and this, we fancy, will be the principal difficulty in the way of devising a perfectly appropriate flag in consonance with the tradition and aspirations of the country in fields higher than the merely political and industrial.

(Continued from Page 568).

should be a split among Mussalman leaders. We have a notion that there would be more peace in the world if there were fewer persons who make a profession of peace-making. Moral issues cannot be solved by mechanical means. An American exchange quotes a profound observation of Gladstone, which we have not seen before. "The politician tries to find where the people are, in order that he may stand with them, while the statesman tries to find where God is in order that he may stand with Him until his minority of one shall come to be a majority of many." We would merely change the word "statesman" to "social reformer" the first maxim in whose code is "more haste, less speed".

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, MAY 9, 1931.

MORE HASTE, LESS SPEED.

Syed Sir Ali Imam told the Nationalist Muslim Conference at Lucknow a few days ago, that though he was one of the deputation which waited on Lord Minto demanding separate electorates, in about five years he had realised that these were detrimental to Muslim interests. But his voice was then a voice in the wilderness. Indian Mahomedans almost to a man were set upon separate electorates. Now, after twenty-two years, he added, he found that the Muslim intelligentsia had come round to his views. This need not necessarily mean that those who were for separate electorates twenty-five years ago were wrong. Any how, it is plain that in about ten years more the whole community will come to feel that separate electorates are no longer needed. Perhaps in even less time, as ideas once started gain momentum and move with a continuously accelerated velocity. On the other hand, attempts to induce Mussalmans who still believe in separate electorates to accept joint electorates by concessions on other matters, perhaps more vital to national progress, have the directly contrary effect of retarding the growing opinion in favour of the latter.

There is also a certain inconsistency in this procedure. The main argument of nationalists, Mussalmans and non-Mussalmans, against separate electorates, is that they are harmful to Muslims themselves. If that is so, why should any concessions be asked or offered to make them accept what is avowedly good for them? Why not give the separatists time to learn by experience what the nationalist Muslims have already learnt? Reservation of seats, which is advocated as a substitute, is only another form of communal recognition and is open to the same objections, though perhaps in a little less degree, as communal electorates. Small reforms are often the enemy of great reforms. It is arguable that the method of reservation of seats may keep the communal fire smouldering for a longer time than communal electorates whose defects are not hidden by the veil of joint electorates. Further, we are not at all sure that the mere adoption of joint electorates will effect any immediate improvement in the calibre or outlook of the candidates elected to the Legislatures. We are not, of course, pleading for separate electorates, but only that they may be allowed to die a natural death at no distant date.

Once the deadset against separate electorates is abandoned, the other issues will at once assume their normal aspect and can be discussed on purely rational grounds. They will no longer be terms of a bargain. The location of the residual powers, is an immensely important one, far more in fact than joint or separate electorates. Freed from the emotional excitement engendered by a discussion of communal electorates, the plain lesson of history and contemporary example will find ready entrance into the minds of educated men of all communities. The separation of Sind may then be considered solely with a view to the advantage of the whole province and not to that of this or that section of its population. Another matter which will emerge from its present confused associations, is that of weightage in the electorates. If separate electorates cannot be abolished without the consent of those who have them now, it is obvious that weightages at present enjoyed at the expense necessarily of other interests and communities, cannot continue to be extended without the consent of the latter. In our opinion, the principle of weightage is absolutely wrong. The doctrine of surrender does not apply to principles and this is a question of principle. That some persons should have preferential franchise rights merely because they call God Allah over some others merely because they call Him Brahma, is repugnant to reason and commonsense.

In a lengthy statement by Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, which the Times of India published on Monday, we read: "The fact, however, must be squarely faced that the Muslim and the other minorities in fact entertain apprehensions about their position in the new constitution. It is immaterial how far those apprehensions are justified. It is for the majority communities to win the confidence of the minority communities and convince them that sufficient security is afforded by the safeguards that the majority are prepared to agree to." This sounds grand but let us look a little behind the words. We are told that the minorities distrust the majorities. That is to say, Mussalmans distrust Hindus, Christians distrust Mussalmans and Hindus, Sikhs distrust Christians, Mussalmans and Hindus, Parsis distrust Sikhs, Christians, Mussalmans and Hindus, and Jews distrust Parsis, Sikhs, Christians, Mussalmans and Hindus. We do not think Sir Chimanlal intended to suggest that each of the majorities should win the confidence of its appropriate minority or minorities, as the use of the plural implies. It is purely a device to give a specific step which Sir Chimanlal has in mind, the air of a broad general principle of political philosophy. That is by the way. Sir Chimanlal says it is immaterial whether the apprehensions of the minorities are justified and that the fact alone matters. On this reasoning, if we happen to meet Sir Chimanlal driving and apprehend that his car may run over us, it is immaterial whether our fear is justified, we would be justified in puncturing his tyre. It is on this identical reasoning that Government in India and elsewhere have justified from time to time the suspension of civil liberties and the wholesale arrest of persons whom they apprehend to be contemplating a revolution. It is not cheap and flimsy statesmanship of this sort that is going to solve the Indian problem. It is moreover an insult to the intelligence of minorities to assume that they expect or require their whims and fancies to be satisfied by the majorities as the price of co-operating to obtain and exercise the rights of self-government. Not long ago the honoured head of the Ahmadiyya sect wrote an article in the English weekly organ of the community stating in six categories the reasons why Mahomedans wanted separate electorates. We noticed it in a series of articles in these columns, and there was a sober and well-reasoned reply to our comments in the columns of our contemporary. That shows that Muslim leaders do not want their demands to be conceded without careful examination. But, in the reply to our articles, we missed an answer to our principal argument, namely that, unlike in Europe, the religion, culture and social life of minorities have always been scrupulously respected as a matter of national policy from the days of Asoka in this country. Speaking not long ago in New York, Professor Einstein said that the treatment meted out to Jews was the acid test of the civilization of a country. Judged by this test, no country in the world emerges with more credit than India. Take, again, the Parsis. In their native land, they had the greatest difficulty in practising their religion, while in India they were given perfect freedom to live and worship according to their traditional ways. The Hindus have many defects, but religious intolerance has never been one of them. To represent them for political purposes to be waiting to destroy the culture and religion of minority communities, is a gross travesty of history. This fact, which cannot be gainsaid, makes it incumbent on all who value historical truth to approach the problem of minorities in India from an entirely different angle from that which is indicated by European history.

We do not overlook the recent happenings at Cawnpore and other towns in the United Province. Whoever instigated them, the Hindus certainly appeared there in a new light. They were no longer the passive sufferers they had been so long but active participants in the carnage at these places. What has wrought the change? Just after the Mopla outbreak, a very level-headed Hindu statesman told this writer that the Hindus, if they did not wish to be utterly destroyed, ought to take a leaf out of the book of their Moslem countrymen. They must, he calmly went on to say, cultivate fanaticism as a virtue. They must show to the other side that this is a game which two can play at. This feeling, he said, was shared by many Hindus. If that was the case, no further explanation is needed to explain how the hitherto mild and timid Hindu has taken on the characteristics of a bloodthirsty fanatic. National character does not remain the same under all circumstances. The Sikhs and the Germans are remarkable instances of a radical change of character. Persecution turned peaceful Jats into fiery soldiers. The dreamy, metaphysical Germans of the 18th century, became the most powerful military power in the world under the humiliation inflicted on them by Napoleon. Hindus all over India have a feeling that their very existence as a people is at stake, and they must fight if they are to survive. They are convinced that they can expect no protection from Government, and that they must rely on themselves to meet the onslaughts that are made on their religion, civilization, and culture as well as civil status from many directions. Strange as it may seem to those who have followed Maulana Shaukat Ali's recent invectives against him, Mahatma Gandhi is credited by many Hindus with responsibility for the sufferings and humiliations of their co-religionists.

It will be said that what we have said about the tradition of Hindu religious toleration, is contradicted by what we say about the change that is taking place in Hindu character. We do not deny it. But we think that this development in Hindu psychology is a passing phase. It is born of fear and is, like everything so born, really a species of cowardice. Like a horse frightened by its own shadow, both the Hindu and Mahomedan communities objectivise their own weaknesses of character in each other. In the old days, they as well as other communities had devised a modus vivendi which worked very well. Each recognised and respected the idiosyncracies of the other. The introduction of the political factor has temporarily upset the equilibrium so established, but like the ripples caused by a stone thrown into a pool, they will pass, leaving life placid as before. It is, amongst other reasons, because we recognise that there is a temporary disturbance in the normal relations of the communities, that we deprecate forcing the pace in regard to joint electorates. The Mahomedan leaders who hold that separate electorates are needed some time longer are not less patriotic or intelligent than those who would abolish them immediately. It is not to the interests of the country or even of the Hindus that there

(Concluded in the 2nd column of page 568.)

VISHNU PARASHURAM SHASTRI PANDIT. *

( BY MR. SHRIDHAR SAKARAM PANDIT. )

Thursday the 29th April, was the fifty-fifth anniversary of my revered uncle, the late Mr. Vishnu Parashuram Shastri Pandit. After more than half a century his contemporary men and literature being grown scarce I could not be able to do more than present you with a mere sketch of his outstanding merits and his many sided activities in his short career of 49 years. He was a pioneer in social, political and religious reform. The present generation is tasting the good fruit of his and his colleagues' sacrifice in respect of health, mind and money to uplift India.

Pandit Vishnu Shastri was the son of Parashuram Shastri, who came to the capital of Satara, where Shiwaji's scion ruled, from Bawdhan, a little village near Wai Taluka. He was an erudite Shastri and owned a house and some land at Satara. Vishnu Shastri was born in 1827. He had an elder sister and two younger brothers, viz., Balshastri and Sakharampant.

After spending the first six or seven years of childhood in playing he was given to the care of one Raghvendra Charya Gajendragadker, a very respectable and learned Pandit who newly arrived in Satara. Under this worthy teacher Pandit Vishnu Shastri studied Nyaya and Vyakaran Shastras for complete twelve years and got proficiency in them.

In 1845 Pandit Vishnu Shastri after completing his Sanskrit studies went to Poona to execute English studies also. The English class was opened there in 1842 which after the affiliation of Sanskrit class was termed "Poona College" in 1851. During these intervening years many Shastris learned English language here. Major Candy, the first Marathi-English lexicographer was conducting the class. Late Mahadeo Shastri Kolhatker, Krishna Shastri Taleker, and Krishna Shastri Chiplunker (author of Marathi Arabian Nights' Entertainment) were the class-mates of Pandit Vishnu Shastri.

But unfortunately Pandit had to give up study in 1848 as his dear father died and he had to return to take charge of home affairs all of a sudden.

Pandit Vishnu Shastri spent some seven years in these affairs. He gave in marriage his elder sister to one Narsinh Shastri Sathe of Poona, whose son Mr. Narayan Narsinh Sathe was assistant editor of Indu Prakash for many years after the Pandit's death. Pandit's second brother Mr. Balshastri was serving as Deputy Educational Inspector at Kolhapur and Col. Anderson spoke highly of his services in 1870 on the occasion of a Prize distribution ceremony. The youngest brother Sakharampant—the father of the writer of this sketch—passed his Little go examination and rose to the office of a curator at Nagpur. That office he resigned and joined his brother, Pandit Vishnu Shastri in 1868 at Bombay. Since then to the last, 1897, he conducted "Indu Prakash" the weekly Anglo-Marathi newspaper devoted to political, social and religious subjects.

*Being an address delivered on the occasion of the 55th death anniversary of the Pandit, at the Bombay Prarthana Samaj on the 29th April 1931.

Pandit Vishnu Shastri after setting right his home entered Government service. He was given a small job in the Education department in 1855. Here he had to conduct classes and translate educational books. He had to examine other people's books sent to Government ( Director of Public instruction ) for appreciation and encouragement. Vishnu Shastri did all these things to the satisfaction of his officer. He was promoted to higher posts and things went on smoothly. He was appointed English teacher at Malegaon and Dharwar schools in 1864. Some say he had a difference of opinion with his immediate superior and so he sent in his resignation and came down to Bombay.

In the beginning of the latter half of the nineteenth century Bombay was at the height of her glory. The extension of railway into the heart of several districts full of commercial commodities brought wealth to Bombay by importing and exporting same to foreign countries. Educated and enthusiastic personages like the late Rao Bahadur Gopalrao Hari Deshmukh, Karsondas Mulji, Dr. Bhao Daji, Mr. Moroba Kanoba, Mr. Bal Mangesh Wagle, M. G. Ranade, Vishwanath Narayan Mandlik, Janardan Sakharam Gadgil and many other public spirited men were fighting against illiteracy and tried to establish emancipation of Hindu widows and political rights of the people of India.

In order to disseminate new and reformed views among the masses Messrs. Keshav Shastri Gadgil, Luxman Shastri Halbe and Mahadev Shastri Kolhatkar hailing from Wai started an Anglo-Marathi weekly named The Indu Prakash in Bombay in 1862. Late Justice Mr. M. G. Ranade was conducting the English columns in this paper at the beginning but he discontinued from 1863. After which Mr. Janardan Sakharam Gadgil conducted the paper for a pretty long time.

The Marathi columns wanted some able man, and this was found in Pandit Vishnu Shastri. No sooner the news of his resignation reached his friend Mahadeo Shastri Kolhatkar who was a curator here, than he was offered the editorship of Marathi side of Indu Prakash and was called to take charge of the same. The Pandit joined the staff at once and new life was infused into the paper. The translation of Pandit Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar's book "Marriage of Hindu Widows" began to appear serially. Independent articles on social subjects wherein abolition of caste distinction, baneful effects of early marriage, necessity of foreign travel which was allowed by Shastras etc. were treated. Pandit Vishnu Shastri supplemented his income by business talent also.

To encourage the direct study of Sanskrit, Pandit Vishnu Shastri published one Sankrit Maharashtra

Dhrdoo Kosh (Dictionary). He had Dr. Bulher's help and sympathy. In the essay on "Smriti Shastra" he advises people not to use translations to get the real insight into Vedas. He concludes remarking:—The ungrammatical study of a language, crossing of a river in a leaky boat, taking of medicine without minding the proper directions, these three things better not be done at all, than doing."

In 1866 Pandit Vishnu Shastri was the member of the Working Committee of the East India Association and in 1867 that of Bombay Association too. Through these institutions late Dadabhoj Nowroji, Sorabji Shapurji Bengalee and Nowroji Furdunji the Parsee patriots worked to educate the British Parliamentary members and the public in general, about the real state of India and Indians. Before the Parliamentary Committee of Indian Finance in 1872 three persons were to be deputed but owing to the great fear of caste ex-communication if foreign travel was undertaken, no Hindu member came forward; and thus Mr. Nowroji Furdunji had also to represent the Poona Sarvajanic Sabha. Pandit Vishnu Shastri published his essays. "The Comparative study of Ancient and Modern modes and customs of Aryans," and "It is permissible by Vedas that the Dwijas (twice borne) should undertake sea voyage" were published at this time to dispel the unfounded dissent of Shastras to foreign travel.

Mr. C. V. Vaidya says: The years 1866-70 were most busy for Vishnu Shastri. He established the Widow Remarriage Association on 14-12-1865 and served as its secretary. His writings in the Indu Prakash brought down on him scathing remarks from four quarters, yet undaunted he parried all attacks with argument, citing chapter and verse for maintaining his ground.

In 1868 Pandit published his original work in Sanskrit named "विधवोद्वह विवेक" Vidhavodwah vivek. The preface appended to this book is in English and Pandit gives reason for same as under:—"Sanskrit is known by all the Shastris of different provinces of India, and moreover the authorities of Vedas, Shrutis, Smritis quoted herein, in favour of my argument being originally in Sanskrit, the book perforce had to be written in Sanskrit."

In the order to spread reformed ideas among the masses by elocution he toured round Poona, Nasik and Sholapur districts. He not only preached but celebrated two widow marriages among the high caste Hindus (Brahmins) in 1865 and 1869. The latter was of much pomp and splendour. Leaders of all communities were present. Pandit inspite of Gandas' (hooligans) threat performed this under the very nose of orthodoxy. All the shastric rituals of marriage were gone through just as if it was a first one. The bride's name was Venubai Paranjpe while the bridegroom was Mr. Pandurang Vinayak Karmarkar.

Soon after this marriage the Pandit was invited by H. H. Khanderao Maharaj Gaikwar of Baroda. He in company with his colleagues went there, and discussed the topic of widow remarriage with Durbar Shastris. His Highness was convinced of the righteousness of the new party. Farther discussion was to take place in Christmas next and the party returned to Bombay, unfortunately the untimely demise of the illustrious ruler put a stop to further progress in this matter.

After returning to Bombay the Pandit accepted the challenge of one Vithoba Anna Daftardar, a highly honoured Shastri of orthodox party. Pandit went in person to Poona, asked Vithoba Anna to have discussion forthwith. But the Shastri put off the meeting from time to time and insidiously called a gathering the old party, and began to emphasise his points. When Pandit learned this he called open meetings where thousands thronged to hear his vehement attacks on tottering faith and were won over by his lucid way of natural oratory and argument, so much so that on the 1st of January 1870 the savants of Poona called a public meeting in honour of Pandit Vishnu Shastri and presented him with a rich Cashmere shawl and turban as mark of respect.

In the April of the same year Pandit met Jagatguru Shankeracharya of Sankeshwar and Karaveer muth. It was a big meeting ever witnessed by Poona people. Native rajas, chiefs, shastris from all provinces were gathered. The subject was the legality of widow remarriage. The Pandit's adversary was his Guru's son, Narayanacharya Gajendragadker. Yet with all respect to Guru bandhu the Pandit defended his cause with extreme balance of mind for seven days. He refuted the orthodox party's points one after another. At last Shankeracharya seeing Pandit more than a match induced Vyankat Shastri mate (one of the Panch by threats, and denunciations, formed his majority and excommunicated the Pandit and his party.

The very next year i.e. 1871 the Pandit undeterred performed the remarriage of widow Jijibai with Seth Madhavdas Raghunathdas, a member of the Kapole caste in Bombay.

In 1872 Shudra Dharma, 1873 Smriti Mantra, 1874 Pushpamala were published. The last book is the bunch of Pandit's own songs and poems composed off hand at the time and place of public preaching (kirtana). He invoked his countrymen to use indigenous articles, educate the masses, beware of the foreign sway, and to regain ancient prestige they should have united effort to baffle the onrush of Western dominance. Freedom, freedom, freedom was his goal, religious, social and national. Berde, a contemporary poet says of Pandit, that he preached so nicely that he was loved by young and old.

In the year 1874 Pandit had to suffer the loss of his life-long companion in his dear wife. He was over forty-five, he had a very clever son of nearly six or seven years old. How can a man think of matrimony in such circumstances. But no. In the same year—people may not point him out as a coward, deserter and a man of no conviction—he espoused the hand of a 25 year old widow Kushabai.

In the year 1875 Pandit read a paper on "The Rights of Women" before the "Dnyan Prasarak Sabha." In this he has shown that they should not marry early but late, at child marriage and enforced widowhood were disallowed by shastric tenets, the girls could study Vedas just like boys after having their Upanayan sanskar (स्नान), they could prosecute further and higher studies life long, having maintenance or श्रद्धा अन्न just like boy students. In married life they have the right of keeping family accounts. In case of widowhood they can remarry in any stage of their life just as men do. At the end he quoted shastric rules meaning "women should always be respected, they should not be illtreated, if they invoke destruction through extreme pain the whole family is sure to be ruined."

This seems to be the last message of the Pandit. On 29th April 1876 this great soul of Western India breathed his last after a very short illness of brain fever in the quiet heights of Mahabaleshwar. His death in the midst of natural lovely scenery of mountain tops shows that this great soul was much in advance of his time and seeing this blunder nature herself called him back to eternal rest; or it would not be amiss to say this warbler, the harbinger of spring Reformation was taken away from the anapestic din and clatter of unencouraging orthodoxy to the charming woodlands of Mahalabeshwar where uninterrupted vernal beauty reigned, and there he was lulled to sleep as his charming notes were rather too early for the city slumberers here.

Any way the morning star of Reformation of Western India, Pandit Vishnu Shastri, stopped shining all of a sudden.

I can now quote in English one of his poems wherein he unwittingly gave his life :—

I have dedicated my life to the cause of motherland by God's inspiration.

I have very often tried to carry her message to you, the public, with all my powers; now would you not give me some hope?

I have spoken things for your own good; pray, give me thine ear.

I do not hanker for paltry gold and gilded titles, I expect love for motherland from you.

Don't suppose me and men of my disposition as beggars in the street, we abhor the gold.

Friend (Pandit spoke of himself as "friend" in verse) says the only bestower is He, all the rest are nonentities before Him.

WHERE TO RETRENCH.

The recent publication of the Visveswarayya proposals with its suggestions about an annual payment to members of the legislature and a somewhat reduced salary for the Ministers, raises the whole question of expenditure in the Government of India and in the Provincial Governments, in the various departments of the Secretariate, in short, the whole of the higher paid services throughout the country. The subject is a vast one and cannot be adequately dealt with without a comparison of the existing scales of pay of corresponding offices in other countries in Europe and America, especially in those that claim to be more advanced than India. Such a comparison needs a book or atleast a good sized pamphlet and cannot be properly treated within the scope of a letter or a few letters. I shall therefore confine myself to indicating the broad issues. But, even this cannot be fully done without a reference to Provincial and Imperial budget figures which are not available to me.

Taking the Government of India first, it will be useful to try and compare the conditions as they existed before 1914 with the present day conditions. During the War all the departments swelled nearly to double their previous strength and on its termination were in no way reduced. After the introduction of the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms the same strength was kept up under ingenious pretexts which the Secretariat knows so well to put up. One department in particular is what is known as the Education, Health and Lands Department which was formerly the Education Department. It is well-known that after the reforms all these subjects became not only Provincial but were transferred to Ministers in all the Provinces. Nevertheless both officers and staff in this department have been increased.

Take the Finance Department. Before the Reforms, this department used to deal not only with the Imperial but also with the Provincial budgets. This is no longer the case and the department now deals only with the Government of India budget. Nevertheless, the staff of the department has been increased nearly double. A study of the figures will be very illuminating. Where there were formerly five or six officers under the Finance Member in this Secretariat, there are now nearly twelve with a corresponding (or nearly corresponding) increase in staff. Several posts of Financial Advisers in various departments have been created without any reduction whatever in the staff in those departments, in fact there have been a further increase in establishment on account of these new appointments.

Again there is a new office, the Central Revenue Board. The creation of this office, big as it is, has no doubt taken away a lot of work done by various other offices but since its inception there has been no reduction elsewhere in the strength of those offices whose work has been lightened consequent on this new organisation.

Industries is a Provincial transferred subject and so perhaps is labour; but there is a very huge Secretariat with all the paraphernalia of a Member, Secretary etc., to deal with what?

Home Department appears to be perhaps the only one which has not expanded to the same extent as the others; but then there is the Public Services Commission attached to it and it is not known how far there has been a reduction in the work of the department.

The Legislative Department which up till recently included the Legislative Assembly Branch also, is another case in point. This department which now deals with the Council of State work and has nothing to do with the Legislative Assembly is nevertheless nearly double of what it was, when it had only the Imperial Legislative Council to deal with in 1914; and it cannot by any means be pretended that the present Council of State does more work or sits longer than that old Council. In fact, it is notorious that it hardly sits for two or three full days in the year and that the majority of its sittings are only for a few minutes a day. Nevertheless we have a huge staff, a costly president (where formerly the Viceroy used to preside) and an establishment which has absolutely nothing to do for more than eleven months in the year. Under the new dispensation it might very profitably be considered whether the Viceroy could not be requested to preside over its deliberations and a member of the Executive Council made the Vice-President. One wonders whether in any national government for the people such patent waste of public money will be tolerated for a single day.

The Legislative Assembly Department is another instance of waste and one cannot but be sorry that such a distinguished president as Mr. V. J. Patel could not strike out a new line and set an example to the rest of the Secretariat, but apparently his hands were tied and he could not do anything against the dead weight of officialdom and vested interests, superior and subordinate; otherwise it is difficult to account for such a big staff lying idle for nearly six months in the year though of course by comparison with the Council of State it is not so wasteful.

It must also be remembered that all these departments move regularly between Delhi and Simla. It is doubtful whether even the old Calcutta Simla move cost as much as the present move; the staff was much less in those days. But, now every two penny half penny office and officer must move to Simla in spite of the fact that a good nineteen crores have been spent on buildings in New Delhi and the office buildings have been specially fitted with cooling and heating apparatus.

It is to be wondered what our blessed legislators are doing. For all the visible result that one can see, they might as well have not gone to Delhi at all. They prefer moving vote-catching resolution and doing spectacular work while the poor Indian tax-payer is ground and ground till he can bear no more. What is the use of Swaraj or Dominion Status in substance if officialdom is to be continued on the present lines and on its present ruinous scales of pay?

But perhaps the most glaring case of all the departments is the case of the Railway Board. With a President, two members and a Secretary in 1918, it has now expanded to such an extent that the number of its officers almost equals that of its clerks and assistants. There are now Members, Directors, Deputy Directors, Officers on special duty, Standardisation officers, Audit officers, Account officers, Financial Advisers etc., till one is lost in the maze and it is impossible to find out which officer deals with which subject unless one goes round the whole office. Crores and crores of rupees are wasted year after year on the plea that India possesses the second largest mileage of railways in the world but without any thought for the general mass of travelling public. It is also a crime that even though millions are thrown to keep up the foreign industries and iron foundries India possesses nothing like even an apology for a Railway Industry. And this does not strike any of our worthy legislators.

As if these were not enough, we have a Railway Rates Advisory Officer—Sir B. N. Sarma. On a high salary with a costly establishment, who has been in existence for several years now; and for all the results he has turned out so far he might as well have not been engaged at all. Nothing of any value or redress to the public or to benefit other modes of transport seems to have been the result of this office and no legislator also cares even to enquire what is being done by this wonderful office. It would be uncharitable to suppose but one is unable to resist the conclusion that the job was created without adequate public justification on public grounds.

Confronted with all this monstrous waste, the only way to a possible solution seems to lie in the appointment of a strong retrenchment committee, not of the type of the Incheape Committee of blessed memory, but one which really has the interests of India and of the long suffering taxpayer at heart and which will attack the evil without any preconceived ideas in favour of this or that service. The time has, in fact, come when there should be a Salaries Commission to fix the maximum salaries of the various services in India, bearing in mind the reduced responsibility that the services will have owing to the responsibility being shifted to Ministers elected by the representatives of the people. Even a Secretary to Government will then be a glorified clerk however much there may be a talk of placing his administrative and other experience at the disposal of Ministers. India's earning capacity is low and the pay of her officers should be strictly commensurate to her earning power. Even the scale of salaries that obtain in Continental countries like France and Italy seems too much for officials in India and the commission should ruthlessly cut down these high wages in the interest of the people of India.

One more point. It has been the common experience of our retrenchment committees and officers in the past to retrench the lowest and the lower paid staff and in their place create a few fat jobs for Europeans or I.C.S. men, thereby showing a reduction in numbers and increasing the expenditure. There is also a tendency to lower the salary of the already ill-paid clerks and menials who are on starvation wages, while the allowances of officers in the shape of Exchange or Overseas, or by whatever name it is camouflaged, increase. No retrenchment is worth the name unless it seems a lowering in the number and salaries of high officials and at the same time retaining the services of the poor clerks until at least they earn their full pension. There should be a ruthless levelling down of the higher or heaven born service and a reasonable raising or levelling up of some of the low paid.

The personnel of such a retrenchment committee must consist of Indians only, not of the type of our existing high paid officials who desire to secure well paid jobs for their sons and relations, but non-officials and administrators who have retired from British and Indian service, men of the type and experience of Sir M. Visveswarayya, men with the ideals I have indicated above in their minds. Will our legislators in the midst of their tea parties and dinners in the current Delhi session find time to think over this matter and attempt to do something to justify their name as members of a popular Assembly?

X.

Swadeshi Exhibition:—The Swadeshi Prachar Samiti, which has been established by the Gujrat Provincial Congress Committee, has undertaken a momentous task of holding a Swadeshi Exhibition and Bazaar in the middle of May, 1931. Great preparations are being made by the Samiti to make the Exhibition and Bazaar a great success. Representatives of the Samiti are sent to all parts of India for the purpose of collecting exhibits of art and manufacture, and for canvassing stalls for different swadeshi articles, and it is expected that fine exhibits of different varieties from different parts of India will be placed by manufacturers, and a good number of stalls will be held by different traders from different parts of India. The unique feature of this exhibition is that the mills are excluded and great importance is attached to Khadi. The Samiti is fortunate to get the services of the A. I. S. A., through Mr. Shankerlal Banker, who has promised to invite all the centres of the A. I. S. A., to hold stalls and show the processes of the manufacture of Khadi in the Bazaar. It is expected that this exhibition and bazaar will be a huge success like the Azad Bazaar which was organised by the same Samiti under the name of the British Goods Boycott Committee. It is trusted that this exhibition and Bazaar will set an example to different parts in the Bombay Presidency in particular and other parts of India in general to give Khadi the highest place it deserves as a symbol for the economic salvation of India.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. VI.

( BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI. )

The late Lord Curzon often declared that he loved India, and he was a man, as everyone knows, who never doubted his own truthfulness. The O'Dwyers and Churchills, the Rothermeres and Beaverbrooks, of present day England are even more outspoken and valuable in their esteem and regard for us. They all love India as a rider loves his horse, as a hunter loves his trophy and as a farmer loves his cattle, though not perhaps exactly as a slave-owner loves his human chattel.

Even the most inveterate opponent of female emancipation may truthfully claim that he loves and honours womankind. He does not deny even to himself that woman is essential to human society, that she has an indispensable part to play in our social economy. In fact it is his lively appreciation of her indispensable utility that makes him so anxious to hold her in bondage. It is not that he holds her honour in light esteem. On the contrary he is so overwhelmed by a supersensitive regard for the honour as essential to his own prestige, that he dare not trust her to keep herself honourable on her own account. A virtuous woman is a shining ornament to society. A faithful wife is the brightest gem in the diadem of man. An obedient wife, readily subservient to his needs and comforts and even whims is an essential asset for the happiness of man. Hindu law and social custom have therefore been so manipulated in later ages as to override every other consideration but that of producing a dead level of machine made virtue and subservience in woman, that married life may be made safe and easy for man and he be provided with a combined toy and slave for his amusement, comfort, and vainglory.

Of course, women can be faithful and good and serviceable of their own accord, out of the strength of their innate virtue, enlightened self-respect, and sense of loyalty to husband and duty to family. In fact, as Professor Radhakrishnan assures us in his "Hindu view of Life," woman is capable of great heights of self-control and self-denial, and is, in respect of morality, the natural superior of man. But why trust to her nature and take any risks, when it is apparently so easy to extract virtue by a law which will ensure man's authority, glory and happiness without imposing on him the least compulsion to be virtuous himself? Once you give legal freedom to woman and she has learnt that she is entitled to have a will of her own and to scrutinise man's conduct, how can he utilise her for anything except upon her own terms? And when a woman begins to dictate terms to man with the strength of the law behind her, what is family life worth thereafter to him in this world? No. Such a humiliating and embarrassing situation as has enslaved man in the West cannot be tolerated for a moment here. Men must have his present safeguards and reserve powers secured to him under any new constitution if he is to accept the responsibilities of family life in Hindu India. And for the sake of the manes of his ancestors and the future good of the world, he is bound, as everybody knows, to "accept" such responsibilities willy nilly before he has scarcely passed his adolescence!

But why should it be thought that he would misuse his powers? He is the natural breadwinner and protector of the family, whereas woman is only a bread-maker and bread-server. If he is to function efficiently, he must be protected against all feminine tantrums. He must have extraordinary powers placed in his hands to be used expeditiously and without fuss in an emergency, and he must be trusted to use his unfettered discretion with justice and moderation, not for his good only but for the good of both. Even if he proves selfish and uses his powers harshly or even cruelly on occasions, where is the harm? Woman is naturally capable of any amount of self-denial, like Clive's Indian sepoy at Arcot, who gave away their rations of rice to the English soldiers and staved off their own hunger with the Kanji water, leaving an undying tradition of comradeship and a standard of relative values for all times. In fact, as was astutely observed by Professor Radhakrishnan in his "Hindu View," we only pay a compliment to woman's acknowledged natural superiority over man by depriving her of her natural rights and imposing unnatural restrictions on her freedom and happiness in this world. We practically do her a favour by providing a splendid opportunity to rise to the fullest heights of her god-given powers of self-control and self-denial.

A 'female', therefore, if we are to get the best out of her, must be taken hold of when yet an infant or at least an immature child, tied irrevocably in marriage to some one not of her choice, whether he be a boy of tender years or a bridegroom of ripe old age with one foot in the grave, and taught to regard herself as created entirely for his service and happiness, whether he treats her well or ill during life, and for keeping his memory green with her tears after his death. She must be kept secluded for this purpose, uneducated and ignorant of the outer world. Her maintenance must depend upon her good behaviour and obedience even under humiliating circumstances; her honour must depend upon the goodwill of her husband and his relations. She must be cut off from all sources of economic independence by laws of property and inheritance which discriminate against her in favour of male relations of every degree, either excluding her entirely as far as possible or curtailing her powers of enjoyment where it is found unavoidable to let property to descend into her hands, and placing even her Stridhana under the control of her husband during coverture.

But there is one flaw in all these idyllic arrangements. They ignore the fundamental fact that woman, though physically weak, is the possessor of a great human personality which is as sacred and inviolable in her as in man. This personality can not be harassed and injured or fettered and cheated without impairing and enslaving the personality of the whole race, for it is through her that the progeny of man derive their human individuality. And of all the inequalities and inequities to which the Hindu woman has been victimised by the Hindu law of our day, there is none which violated her human personality more outrageously than the law relating to marriage.

RELIGION THROUGH BUSINESS.

The Editor, Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Some time ago a minister who was, and is, a newspaper columnist, left the ministry to engage in other work, work which included, I think, service in a business house. At the time he left the ministry he said in his column: "I have long been under the conviction that the real religious life of our age is to be sought among scientists and business men, who are using all their ideals of truth and honor to make the order of human life more satisfactory." Referring to businessmen, he said: "The guiding star of modern affairs is to be sought in the offices of those who control the blood stream of life."

It is not hard to find good reasons—or reasons that seem good—for doing things we are very anxious to do. One reason why we ought to be compassionate with sinners is that when a man is tempted to do something that he knows in his heart is wrong, reasons involuntarily crowd into his mind to persuade him that his course is right. If this minister and columnist had not been so anxious to go into business, presumably to make money, he would have seen clearly the truth that scientists and businessmen make poor spiritual and religious guides.

It is indeed true in a measure, as this former minister said, that scientists and businessmen guide modern affairs, and "control the blood stream of life." But it is not right that they should do so. These men, some of whom are evil, and others good, like other classes, including the clergy, are concerned altogether with the material aspects of life. The businessmen's ideal is to make money. A large part of the "ideals of truth and honour" that he shows towards his employees and towards the public, he is required by law to show, and another large part he practises voluntarily because it pays him in hard cash to do so. As for the scientist, his work is merely to make the material side of life more convenient, comfortable, and pleasureable, and to bring about speedier means of transit and communication.

Souls cannot be counted and tabulated in business offices; neither can they be weighed on scales, analyzed in test tubes, or scrutinized through microscopes and telescopes.

Coeur d'Alene, Idaho,
U. S. A.
March 24, 1931.

} Yours etc.,
CHARLES HOOPER.

THE NATIONAL FLAG.

Dr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya, Convener of the Flag Committee, writes from Musulipatam, under date April 23 :

Permit me to bring to your notice the following resolution regarding the National Flag, passed by the Working Committee at their meeting held on the 2nd April 1931.

"Whereas the National Flag now in vogue has gained in popularity by usage and convention and whereas objection has been taken to the three colours in the Flag on the ground that they are conceived on a communal basis, the Working Committee hereby appoints the following as a Committee for the purpose of examining the objections and recommending a Flag for the acceptance of the Congress. The Committee shall have the authority to take such evidence as it may consider necessary and to send its report and recommendations to the Working Committee on or before the 31st July, 1931." (Names omitted.)

May I request you to answer the following questions in particular and send up your suggestions in the matter :

1. Is there any feeling amongst any group of people or community in your province, in regard to the design of the National Flag, which in your opinion should be taken into consideration by this Committee ?

2. Have you any specific suggestions for making the Flag more popular ?

3. Is there any defect or drawback in the design now in vogue, which you consider, demands attention ?

Note :—Let me submit that in sending up your suggestions, you will be greatly adding to their weight if you take the trouble of accompanying them with a Flag (preferably in cloth) so as to illustrate your ideas.

Further I would suggest that these replies might be sent up by the P. C. Cs. and the public by the end of May. If the Committee consider it necessary, they will ask you to tender oral evidence later.

WOMEN'S PLACE IN THE FUTURE CONSTITUTION OF INDIA.

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.
Sir,

On the 21st of March last, an influential group of Bombay ladies sent a telegram to the Congress leaders, urging upon the then ensuing session of the Congress at Karachi to pass a resolution enfranchising women on the same terms as men, and thus consequent on the woman's holding property in her own right all possible steps thereto should be taken. But it is a pity that the legitimate demand did not receive the attention it deserved.

Nearly every recent Committee which has studied social conditions in India, has stressed the urgency of women's needs in matters of education, of health, and of relief from certain oppressive social customs as well as certain unjust laws. The many and various handicaps placed on women must make all true lovers of the country so determined as to do all in their power at least to see that general principles to safeguard women's needs are laid down in the future Constitution, not only for their own sake, but in the interests of the whole country. Women deserve all the more justice because they preserve us, mould us, and are the true makers of a country and its people. What hope can we have for the future of women in a country like India where women have been for centuries in a condition of serfdom, unless we have some assurance to the effect that the voice of women shall be heard upon their own claims and their own needs, by every consultative body that may be set up to complete the terms of the Constitution.

As under the present Hindu Law, very few women can inherit property in their own rights, therefore the question of women's representation on the legislative bodies cannot be solved simply by inserting in the proposed Fundamental Rights the words "equal rights and obligations of all citizens without any bar on account of sex", unless we give some assurance that the present Hindu Law of inheritance will be amended so as to include the equitable rights of women therein.

Further we should like to point out that the clause 11 of the Congress resolution on Fundamental Rights, providing for "adult suffrage", is by no means clear enough. Does it refer only to the rights of men? Or does it refer to the adult persons of both the sexes? But we very much regret that a clause so wise in its intention but so ambiguous in its wording should have passed there unchecked.

Now that the Hindu woman has proved herself more than man's compeer in the cause of India, and that with such a selfless courage and capacity for self-sacrifice and service that causes even the greatest of the Indian leaders to acclaim the female as not the weaker, but the nobler sex; it is time that we recognised the equality of women with men in all matters of self-protection and self-determination. Those who believe in self-protection for men, must also believe in it for women.

Ferozepore Cantt., }
15th April 1931. }

Yours etc.,
BHAGAT RAM.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Hindi Prachar in South India :—Mr. K. Santhanam writes : "We have all heard of the proverbial banyan tree whose seed is hardly visible but which in a few years spreads its branches so wide that a whole army can rest under its shade. The story of the Hindi Prachar work in South India is not less wonderful than this. It was started in 1918 just twelve years ago when Gandhiji sent his son Sjt. Devadoss on the apparently quixotic errand of converting the South to Hindi. That little seed has struck firm root and has grown and grown to its present vast proportions. The work was conducted by the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan, Allahabad, till 1927 when it was found necessary to organise a separate Sabha for South India. During these twelve years, the Sabha has taught no less than four lakhs of students. If all these four lakhs had the tenacity and purpose to continue their study till they had acquired it sufficiently for practical purposes, the Sabha might as well be closed now. But unfortunately for us, our boys have not that firmness of purpose and consequently a considerable number of these people left off after a month or two. It is, however, satisfactory to know that 2½ lakhs of pupils have acquired a working knowledge of the language. It is only a great record of valuable work done. There is no economic value attached to Hindi examinations. Yet no less than eleven thousand students have appeared for these examinations and ten thousand of them now possess some certificates from the Sabha.

The late Dr. Reuben S. Birwadkar :—Dr. Reuben of Karachi, Bhakta Reuben of Sindh, left this world at 8-45 a. m. on Tuesday April 14th last, rather suddenly through an attack of apoplexy. Only fifteen minutes before he was moving about and planning to go to Hyderabad to see his daughter. Born of a Jewish family of Maharashtra, Dr. Reuben worked and died in Sindh, full of years (he was over seventy) and full of Bhakti and spiritual fervor with which there was combined a transparent simplicity and childlikeness. He came under the influence of the late Sadhu Nandalal Sen nearly forty years ago when serving as doctor to the local jail at Karachi and his adoption of Navavidhan as his religion and culture soon followed. Nanda Lal and he remained fast friends till death parted them and it is difficult to appraise their mutual influence and affection. In the brotherhood of Navavidhan says the Nava Vidhan, Bhakta Reuben commanded a love and reverence all his own and the magnetism of his personality has touched many a soul consciously or unconsciously. Through this Bhakta of far away Sindh the cause of Navavidhan gained an impetus all over Northern India and Bengal and his familiar figure at our Maghotsavs, clad in gairik, covered with a turban, playing on the uplifted Ektara, singing and dancing with a ring of children, had a charm of its own and affected men and women in the very depths of their hearts. When will the Mother of Navavidhan raise another such Bhakta in this land to convince us all that Jew and Gentile alike are inheritors of the Kingdom of Heaven?

ADVERTISEMENTS

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.
PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of

OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to :—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE :

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

Branches : BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents :—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhoi, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amroli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kelol, Kadl, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	Rs. 60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sr Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Magsulal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 Mr. R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Nalb Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhalial Dajibhai Amla B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alombic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Sar Suba, Baroda State, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Musumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

aramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Bira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirale ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivra ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Paighar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akni (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Viramgaon (District Ahmedabad).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MOBARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,
10-12-26, Bombay,

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes:

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents:—

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
ransacting all classes of Insurance:—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital (Paid up) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

*Head Office:—*Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJANI PAIN BALM PRODUCE BEST RESULTS

IN
Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Every where—postage extra.
AMRUTANJANI DEPOT.

BOMBAY

**&

MADRAS.

—A SAFE—
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—
KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of
India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Subscription (including postage).

	Rs. 2	5
Inland ...	5	0 0
" " Foreign ...	5	8 0
Single copy ...	0	8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed.)

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1928 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 58.

TOYS

1 Reel, featuring
ARMOND SISTERS.

THE BIG POND

8 Reels, featuring,
MAURICE CHEVALIER AND CLAUDETTE COLBERT

Paramount All Talking, and Singing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 30 and 31.

MARRIED IN HOLLYWOOD

12 Reels, featuring

J. HAROLD MURRAY, NORMA TERRIS AND WALTER CATLETT

Wm. Fox All Talking Singing and Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

LOVE COMES ALONG

8 Reels, featuring
BABE DANIELS

R. K. O. All Talking and Singing Picture.

FOOTLIGHT FOLLIES

2 Reels, Universal Comedy, featuring
ANN CHRISTLY AND ALICE DOLL.

LILIAN RUTH AND HER PIANO BOYS

1 Reel, Paramount Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

THE UNKNOWN LOVER

7 Reels, featuring
ELSIE FERGUSON

Vitagraph Picture.

KO KO IN THE CIRCUS

1 Reel, Paramount Cartoon.

BEAR FACTS

1 Reel.

Time:—Sat. 6-30 CINEMA and 9-30 p. m. INDIAN VOCAL CONCERT by Prof. A. N. BOSE.

Sun. 6 p. m. Indian Vocal Concert by Prof. A. N. BOSE and
10 p. m. CINEMA.

Mon. to Fri. 6-30 and 10 p. m. CINEMA.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, BORY.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1931

No. 37

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Sikhs and Hindus. Federation versus Confederation. Residual Powers, A Muslim Comment. Political Hypochondria, The Women's Movement in Bengal. Mahatma and His Motor Car. Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. II. Christian Missions in India. Protecto of Depressed Classes.	Should Mahatma Gandhi Attend R. T.C.? Moroba Kanhoba's Case. Hindu Mahasabha on Constitu- tional Reforms. The United States Constitution and the Prohibition Amend- ment. Allahabad Agricultural Institute. Post Tagore's Seventieth Birth- day. News and Views.
---	---

NOTES.

Sikhs and Hindus:—A prominent Sikh leader has recently argued in connection with the question of Punjab electorates that the Sikhs are a distinct community like the Mahomedans in relation to the Hindus. Any one who knows something of domestic and social life in the Punjab, will hesitate to endorse this view. The separateness of the Sikh community in the Punjab is, like the separateness of the non-Brahmins in Madras, largely the creation of Anglo-Indian policy. As a matter of fact, the Sikhs are nearer to the Hindus than the non-Brahmins to Brahmins. Intermarriage between Sikhs and Hindus is of common occurrence, while it is prohibited between Brahmins and non-Brahmins. In this respect the Sikhs stand to Hindus in the Punjab in much the same relation as the Jains to Hindus in Gujarat. In our news columns will be found an account of the marriage of the daughter of the Maharaja of Patiala to a descendant of the famous Prime Minister of Nepal, Maharaja Sir, Jung Bahadur. The Maharaja is a Sikh while the hereditary Prime Minister of Nepal is an orthodox Hindu. The account, which we take from the Leader of Allahabad, omits to state by what rites the marriage ceremony was performed. The Maharaja of Patiala, it may be recalled, was received into the Rajput brotherhood some years ago at a gathering of Hindu princes at Jamnagar under the auspices of the Maharaja, Jam Sahib. A Hindu Prince who married a Moslem lady would, we think, commit what virtually would amount to an act of abdication, like the Raja of Pudukotta who after his marriage with an Australian lady had to spend his days in Europe and whose son the Paramount British Power would not recognise as heir to the gadai. We do not think that any such consequence will follow if a Sikh Prince marries a Hindu Princess, or a Hindu a Sikh Princess. So much is the kinship of the two communities recognised in practice that, while Mahomedans and Europeans have to be admitted to the Golden Temple at Amritsar by special arrangement, Hindus enter as a matter of course and join in the Sikh worship. Sikhs and Hindus may quarrel and even more bitterly than Hindus and Mahomedans, but that does not alter the fact that socially they have much in common and are for many purposes members of one community. Hinduism threw up many waves in the course of its long history to meet particular emergencies, but when the emergency passed, the waves subsided into the vast ocean from which they sprang. The Brahma Samaj and the Arya Samaj which were vigorously antagonistic to Hinduism at the outset, have now become its champions, although, it is also true, that their main ideas have largely been accepted by the parent body.

Federation Versus Confederation:—An American exchange has taken the trouble of compiling a list of prohibitions which the federal constitution of the United States imposes on the constituent States. We reprint it elsewhere. It will repay perusal by our Muslim friends who believe that vesting residual powers in the constituent units, is a practical proposition at the present day. In the United States Constitution, the States have the residual power, and hence the necessity of the original prohibitions to which from time to time amendments have added others. Sir Manubhai Mehta does not seem to have realised this in London. The Servant of India quotes a sentence from "an undelivered speech" of his intended for the Round Table Conference which strikes an entirely different note from that of his latest pronouncement. After coming to India the Prime Minister of Bikaner has had time to study the literature on Federalism and he realises that this is not what the Princes want but "Confederation" which is so contrary to Federation that one of the forty-three prohibitions to which the States are subject is to become members of a Confederation. In passing, we have heard that some Princes profess to be surprised at Sir Manubhai's speech. But none of them has come forward publicly to contradict it, and we can only think that if it was an indiscretion, it was a carefully calculated indiscretion. Informed public opinion in British India, was never enthusiastic about the Princes' dramatic intervention in London, and if the Princes want to back out, it will not go out of its way to prevent them from doing so. There has been a difference of opinion as to whether the Conference was definitely committed in London to the Federation plan. But the Confederation idea was not even mentioned there.

and since a responsible member of the States delegation now asserts that it is Confederation and not Federation that the Princes will agree to, the whole question of the admission of the States at this stage should obviously be open to revision.

Residual Powers:—Our observations relating to the vesting of residual powers in the central government have evoked comments from two opposite quarters. The Servant of India, which endorses them, invites us to state explicitly whether they apply only to Provinces or to States as well in any probable Federation. They apply to both equally, if anything even more to the States than to the Provinces. Our reason is this. Over a century of English education and British administration, has created a bond of cultural unity between the Provinces among themselves and between them and the central government. Social and religious reform movements have awakened them to the necessity of conscious progress. The Press has grown to be a powerful medium for promoting mutual sympathy and co-operation in public questions. Of the great majority of the States, it is no exaggeration to say that they have stood out of these unifying influences and that there is little to bind them to each other or to the central government. The danger of their drifting out of the federation, therefore, is greater, and must be provided against by making the central government and not the States the repository of residual powers. The protestations of the Princes of their undying loyalty to the British connection, are no doubt sincere. But unless historical precedents are absolutely devoid of significance in India, we, for one, cannot dismiss the feeling that if ever the Independence movement passes beyond the stage of speculation, some one of the States will be found to be at the back if not at the head of it. India has to fulfil her mission to humanity through the British Commonwealth, and it is, therefore, necessary that the links which bind it to the Commonwealth should be strengthened where they are weak, and this is more the case with the States than with British India.

A Muslim Comment:—The comment of the Sunrise, the outspoken Muslim weekly of Quadian, on our view about residual powers, is of a different character. Our contemporary seems to be surprised at "a journal of such sane and sober views as the Indian Social Reformer taking a solid stand against the acceptance of the Muslim Nationalists demand in regard to the vesting of the residual powers in federating units in the future constitution of the country." The Sunrise implies, though it is too polite to say so, that we have temporarily lost our sanity and sobriety in opposing this particular demand of the Muslim Nationalists. May we point out that the Sunrise also is opposed to a Muslim Nationalist demand, namely, that for joint electorates, and may it not be said that it has, therefore, ceased to be a journal, as it claims to be of "sane Muslim thought"? "Separate electorates and the vesting of the residual powers with the provinces," says our contemporary, "are the two pivotal demands of the Muslims." We have conceded the first demand as one which logically and legitimately concerns the community, and on which it is entitled to have its decision respected. But we cannot admit that the question of residual powers is a communal issue at all. It is really the question of finding its true political centre of gravity with a view to ensuring the stability of the future national state. Walter Bagehot wrote a very suggestive book entitled "Physics and Politics," showing how political theories have been revolutionised by the discoveries of physical science. This is much more the case today than it was fifty years ago. The question of residual powers belongs, so to speak to the Physics of Politics, and there cannot be a Hindu or Mahomedan view of it, any more than of whether a cone should be stood on its base or its apex. If all the world demanded that the State should be constructed on the model of an inverted pyramid, it simply can not be done. If there is to be a Central Government at all, it must have the residual powers. We understand that some Muslim leaders and Princes of both denominations do not want a Central Government. We are half inclined to believe it.

Political Hypochondria:—That Sir Tej Bahadur and Sir Chimanlal Setalvad applauded the London session of the Round Table Conference as a great success, did not strike us as extraordinary. But we were and are still puzzled by the complete satisfaction expressed by Dr. Moonje at its result, though none is apparent to observers. At the conclusion of the Conference Dr. Moonje was reported to have declared that he would thenceforth devote himself to organising military education in this country. In order to prepare himself for this task, he visited military colleges in several countries of Europe and seems to have been accorded special facilities for studying the subject of military training in them. He recently stated with confidence that Government were not likely to make any difficulty about his programme of work. He presided at the Punjab and Frontier Hindu Youth Conference at Lahore on the 10th instant, and made a speech which is strikingly different from any that an Indian of his position has made for a long time. He does not believe that Swaraj cannot be achieved without Hindu-Muslim unity. He advised those who were of that view to proceed forthwith to the nearest mosque and accept Islam. Dr. Moonje said the Hindus had three enemies: their own weakness, Islam and Christianity. Dr. Moonje appealed to the Punjab Hindu youths to start non-official military colleges, and promised that if they did their task, he would bring his Maharashtrian youths to join them and the "Punjabi and Maharashtrian Hindus would then be able to face any difficult situation in India." The report in the Tribune from which we have quoted, says that Dr. Moonje's remarks were received with loud applause. We doubt, however, if they will get the same reception in many other places in the country. The speech was made in Hindi and the English report is very scrappy, but the one or two facts which Dr. Moonje adduced as the basis of his arguments are by no means unimpeachable. One of the symptoms of hypochondria is the feeling that one is surrounded by enemies on all sides but we should have thought that Dr. Moonje was the last man to fall a victim to political hypochondria.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, MAY 16, 1931.

THE WOMEN'S MOVEMENT IN BENGAL.

Bengal was the birth-place of religious and social reform in modern India. Raja Ram Mohun Roy founded the Brahmo Samaj one hundred years ago and he was mainly instrumental in getting the practice of suttee made penal. Pandit Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar started the movement against enforced widowhood among Hindus and his advocacy led to the passing of the Act legalising remarriages. The first women's High school and college was founded in Calcutta. Yet with all these advantages, social reform has lagged behind. The genius of Bengal has found expression in literature, art and politics rather than in social reform. Not that social abuses have gone unchecked. Kulinism has disappeared. The restrictions of the purdah have considerably relaxed and behind the purdah much has been done for the education of women. All this spadework has been patiently persevered in, and it has now been found opportune to launch an All-Bengal Women's movement. The first All-Bengal Women's Congress met in the Calcutta Town Hall on the 1st instant. Three hundred delegates from all the districts attended. Mrs. Sarala Devi Choudhrani, niece of the Poet Rabindranath Tagore and one of the pioneer women workers of India, presided. Such conferences have been held for some years past in other provinces and for All-India also, and it has not been necessary to offer any justification for them. Women have so long remained absorbed in their home affairs, that when they first come into public life, they naturally feel less free to express themselves in mixed gatherings than in those where women predominate. This is a transitory feature and will not be necessary as women gain more experience except in regard to such subjects as specially concern their biological functions. This, we believe, is the view generally held by leaders of the women's movement in this part of the country, who are absolutely opposed to anything savouring of a feminist movement in antagonism to men such as has grown up in Anglo-Saxon communities.

If the report of her address in Liberty is substantially correct, Mrs. Sarala Devi Choudhrani wants to inaugurate just such a movement in Bengal. That a cultured lady of her wide and varied experience should express adverse opinions in regard to men's attitude to women is indeed astonishing. Mrs. Sarala Devi acknowledged in two or three perfunctory sentences the services of Indian reformers to the women's cause. Public-spirited men, she admitted, have generally accepted the "standardised value" of women as co-operators in the public life of the country. "But we do not discern", she went on to say "any great change in the mentality of the average man yet. Though a fair number of men in high position has espoused the women's cause and earned her gratitude, we do not find the general mass of men interested in improving her lot or status." The "average man" is an abstraction whose mentality, if he has any, it is extremely difficult to gauge. But we certainly differ from Mrs. Sarala Devi—and we appeal to her to carry back her own mind thirty or even twenty years back, to confirm our view—when she says that the general mass of men are not interested in improving women's lot and status. We can speak with some confidence, and we emphatically affirm that the attitude of the general mass of Indian men to-day is wholly favourable to according the highest status to women in public and private life. Mrs. Sarala Devi makes the mistake of identifying "the average man" and "the general mass of men" with the lowest type of men, the cave-men, so to speak, of whom India like other countries has its quota, who seek to keep their women in order by the method of the "big stick and the bag of gold." She is entirely wrong. She is also wrong when she says that the extension of the municipal and legislative franchise to Indian women not merely without serious opposition but actually with unfeigned gladness, was due chiefly to the success of the suffragettes in England in breaking down the opposition of their countrymen to their being enfranchised. As a matter of fact, Englishwomen did not get the franchise by their window-smashing exploits but by their whole-hearted co-operation with Englishmen during the war.

"Man and woman" observed Mrs. Sarala Devi, "have a mutual need of each other in every walk of life." Nevertheless, she seems to maintain that there is an underlying, subconscious, ineradicable antagonism between the two sexes. She explained "the self-consciousness of the women of Bengal"—and this applies equally to other women—in an elaborate argument. "It is," she said, "the differential treatment meted out to her at different stages of her life that brought this consciousness into being. It was stored up layer after layer in the sub-conscious self of every woman and had only to well up into the conscious self some day and bring women together. It was planted as a seedling in her innermost being when as a child she was often deprived by her own mother of many a delicacy reserved for her brothers—members of the superior sex." There is some truth in all this, but the responsibility of the differential treatment does not, as Mrs. Sarala

Devi thinks, wholly lie with man. That mothers as a rule have a preference for sons and fathers for daughters, is well-known, and almost every modern writer on what is called the New Psychology has given his own explanation of this wide-spread phenomenon. But, we ask Mrs. Sarala Devi, how is it the man's fault if the mother withholds from her daughter delicacies reserved for her brothers? Now that Mrs. Sarala Devi has raised this point, we are inclined to suggest that the laws favouring sons, might have been inspired by the same mother instinct which reserves the delicacies for them instead of distributing them equally among sons and daughters. It is interesting to note that two important amendments were carried by large majorities in the Bengal Women's Conference to resolutions drafted by the Subjects Committee, at the instance of Srimati Anurupa Devi described, in the Liberty's report, as a renowned authoress. One was to omit inter-communal marriages from measures recommended for promoting communal harmony, and the other was to omit the right of divorce from a resolution embodying certain fundamental rights of Hindu women. The latter amendment was, we read, strongly opposed by Mrs. Sarala Devi, but it was nevertheless carried by a large majority.

Mahatma And His Motor Car:—Some Anglo-Indian newspaper correspondents in Simla, seem to be put out because Mahatma Gandhi went to his residence in Simla in a motor car. It seems that only the Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief are allowed this privilege. If the correspondents were not obsessed by their prejudices, they would have easily seen that Mahatma Gandhi was as much entitled to the use of a car as Lord Willingdon. He is of about the same age as the Viceroy, and is liable like him, to have his pulmonary and circulatory systems strained by a sudden change from the plains to the high altitude of Simla. Lord Willingdon, notwithstanding that he had three months' rest in England and a fortnight on the sea before he assumed the Viceroyalty, found it necessary to rest several days at Dehra Dun in order to prepare his constitution to the rarefied air of the Himalayas. Mahatma Gandhi since his release from prison has literally not had a day's rest. From the heat of Gujarat he has rushed to the heights of Simla not for his comfort but in discharge of a high public duty to India and Great Britain. His motor-car will not assuredly ruin the roads of Simla. Why make a fuss over this petty affair? Surely, journalists are expected to have commonsense; and it is not commonsense to raise an outcry about this slight departure from Simla etiquette.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. VII.

( BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI. )

“ Man is a polygamous animal all the world over it is only the man of the East who has the courage to avow the fact.”

In these words, or in words like these, did a stalwart Muslim legislator manfully declare his faith matrimonial in the Legislative Assembly at Delhi a few months ago. The occasion was the fateful debate on Dr. Gour's Civil Marriage Bill which sought to provide an optional law of marriage for all Indian nationalists who believed in equality of matrimonial rights and obligations to all citizens irrespective of race, colour creed or sex, and without detriment to any one's individual conscience and religious faith. What offended the courageous councillor was that the Bill extended the obligation of monogamy to the hitherto privileged male instead of confining it to the female alone as is done under the communal laws of Islam and Hinduism.

There were Hindu stalwarts too in the Assembly who were opposed to the Bill. But they were not equally courageous to distinguish themselves by open championship of polygamy. The Honourable the Law Member of the Government of India happened to be a Hindu. He too opposed the Bill. He opposed it vehemently, one might say, blusteringly. He declared that all communities were up against it. He even committed himself to an unauthentic assertion that Christians did not need such a law, when as a matter of fact an authoritative Christian deputation, apparently unaware of the pending Bill, was on the eve of seeking an interview with him to discuss among other matters the possibility of a general civil marriage Act on the same lines, with a view to relieve the Indian Christian Marriage Act of the anomalies and uncertainties of Part V and Section 88. (Vide the Reformer of 1st November 1930 and 21st February 1931.) He would not agree to pause a while to elicit public opinion or even to allow the withdrawal of the Bill. He was resolved, as keenly as the Acharjars and the Bahadurs of ordeal orthodoxy, that it shall be destroyed on the spot. He flung his official cohorts against Dr. Gour and did kill for the time being the beneficent, democratic, far-sighted, equitable and virtuous measure which sought to compel none but only offered to serve all Indians impartially whenever and by whomsoever its services were voluntarily sought.

But that was politics. His obvious purpose was to placate the communal die-hards whom the Government had already once displeased by helping to pass sometime back, though doing nothing since to honestly enforce, the Child Marriage Restraint Act of Rai Bahadur Har Bilas Sarda. It by no means proved that the Honourable and learned Law Member himself desired child marriage or was personally enamoured of polygamy. In fact no Hindu true to his culture looks upon marriage as a device for multiplying the means of paandering to the animal pleasures of man. He knows that the Grihaatha-Ashrama or householder's career was prescribed to him as a necessary course of righteous duty and disciplined experience designed for the service of the world and the evolution of his own soul. Whatever may be the personal weaknesses and failings of any Hindu, the stern and lofty monogamic virtues of Sri Rama and Harischandra are still looked up to with pride and adoration as valid examples for his guidance even in these degenerate times. It is, therefore, not surprising that no Hindu legislator, however truculent or flippant, had the courage to stand up in the Assembly and condemn or ridicule the monogamic principle as a hypocritical Western fad.

But although the outlook and practice of a Hindu is not as a rule polygamous, it is true, generally speaking, that he is reluctant to bind himself by law to be monogamic under all circumstances. There is a religious ground which he may plausibly plead in extenuation of an occasional breach of that principle. The first wife may turn out to be barren or at least incapable of yielding male issue; and the sonless Hindu, as is well known, has no happy future in the next world. Hindu law in fact as conceived by our ancients, allowed a second wife to man in the lifetime of the first only to meet such a contingency. But, with a fine regard for the interests and feelings of the first wife, it further stipulated that her free consent is essential for the validity of the second marriage. And since the birth of a son either to herself or to her husband was believed to be necessary to save both from the apprehended horrors of the future, we may take it that the pious Hindu woman of old who was assured of an honourable treatment in any event gave her willing consent almost always under such circumstances. But in case she did not believe herself really sterile, an alternative course was open to her to save herself and her husband from the untoward fate reserved for the sonless. Our ancient sages were indeed so intently honest in their religious motive and so fiercely logical and so fairly impartial in implementing it that they did not hesitate to give to woman too the freedom to raise seed for the family by associating with a worthy man of her husband's choice until the desired object was fulfilled. This liberty however soon fell into disuse, presumably through the growing preponderance of the force of natural jealousy in man and sense of delicacy in woman over the religious urge. The other alternative alone, therefore, continued to hold the ground, which gave man freedom to remarry for the sake of a son. This too has lost its religious excuse now for some centuries past through the growth of the custom of adoption and the universal acceptance of the adopted son as in every respect the exact image and therefore for all purposes religious as well as secular, a thoroughly adequate substitute for the surasa or natural born son. But man's privilege of a second marriage has nevertheless contrived to remain unabrogated.

The greatest blow, however, to woman's honour and safety in the Hindu family was given when the British courts in India swept away the ancient safeguards provided by Manu and other sages which required that no woman shall be embarrassed with a co-wife except through religious necessity and with her previous consent. How this carefully guarded practice of honest bigamy of old which was permitted by the Hindu law of the Rishis only through a sense of sad religious need and as a rare and unavoidable exception to the general rule of monogamy, came to be converted under the regime of monogamic Western administrators of the unchanging East, determined to deal out nothing but pure and unadulterated "Gentoo" law to the "Gentoo," into an unconditional, unlimited and indefeasible right of polygamy vested in the Hindu male without any pretext of religion, and in utter disregard of the feelings of the superseded wives and their already begotten sons, is a mystery which is worth investigating at a more convenient time. But for the present it is sad to reflect that in this respect the civilised and refined Aryan Hindu wife has been relegated by our courts to a worse plight and lower position than the aboriginal Kondh woman of our Eastern Hills who, as Hunter informs us in his "Orissa," still enjoys the power given to her by her ancient tribal usage to prevent her husband not only from marrying a second wife by refusing her consent but even from keeping a concubine against her will. (vide Mayne: Para 92.)

We have no right to think that it was through a lack of confidence in their countrymen or through oversight that the learned Hindu Law Reform Committee of Mysore omitted to recommend to them a self-denying ordinance of righteousness in marriage. They must have found that the extreme laxity of the present law towards the male has not prevented Hindu men from living wholesome lives or lowered the tone of their moral fibre, and therefore decided to remain silent and let sleeping dogs lie. But we wish they had proposed a clause in their Draft Bill, binding all Hindu men by law to as strict a life of monogamy and chastity as has been imposed upon Hindu women from time immemorial. We have no doubt that even without a binding law the morality of the major portion of our men is above reproach, and of course no amount of law can make an immoral man really moral. But in so far as the present law tends to indicate a lower level of morality in Hindu men than is justified by the facts, it belies the truth to that extent, casts a cloud upon Hindu character and moral worth, and stands false witness against Hindu civilisation and culture. Sanātana-Dharma is not opposed to man's continence and chastity. A clause of the kind proposed would, without offence to any one, ennoble Hindu life at one stroke and uplift the status of Hindu woman by making her husband her equal partner and comrade in virtue, worthy of her whole-hearted fidelity in the eyes of the whole world as he is in fact already in her eyes. But, failing this supreme act of confidence and courage, could not the Committee at least restore to Hindu woman her ancient right to veto her husband's remarriage during her life, especially now that the universally popular system of Adoption has made the religious plea absolutely untenable? And, if we may venture upon a farther suggestion, could they not add to that ancient Aryan right of hers, the remarkably superior prerogative enjoyed still by her aboriginal sister, the free and happy Kondhuni of our Hills, to veto even the keeping of a concubine by her husband?

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN INDIA.

( BY DR. CLIFFORD MANSHARDT. )

The last command of Jesus to be recorded in the scriptures is the passage known as the "Great Commission". In this passage Jesus addresses the eleven remaining apostles, bidding them to go and "teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." And the Christian Church has accepted this command. Men and women almost without number have gone into the world, teaching and baptizing.

"Go ye therefore, and teach" I. What shall we teach? Different generations and different people have given varying answers to the question. Some have preached Christ crucified—a bleeding, dying, resurrected Saviour who gave his life for men, that men by believing in him might find life. This message has proved itself to be a powerful missionary dynamic. "Christ died for us. We who were sinners, are saved. The necessity is therefore upon us to preach the glad tidings unto all men." Or another approach. "The world without Christ is lost. We who know Christ must help a sinful humanity to find him."

Other missionaries have found their impetus in the belief in the imminent second coming of Christ. "The world is bad. The signs point in but one direction—to the speedy return of Jesus Christ. In the meantime some souls can be saved. All will not believe, but all should have the opportunity of hearing the message." Fired by this motive men have endured untold hardships and travelled almost unbelievable distances, that the ends of the earth might hear.

Still another group of missionaries has emphasised the love of God. "God is a father who loves all men. The world is a family in which all men are brothers. It is Christ who reveals the heart of God," and hence the life and teachings of Christ are placed at the center. The preaching of this group has a strong ethical emphasis.

"Go...teach all nations, baptizing them." Baptise them! And the missionaries have baptised. Whether the converts have been taught or no, they have been baptised. Baptism has been the mark of the Christian, and has raised a most effective barrier between various communities of Christians. Even today the mission field is compelled to witness the sorry spectacle of conflict over the mode of baptism.

To disparage the missionaries and the missionary methods of the past takes us nowhere. Would that some of their indomitable spirit and fire might make its way into the modern world. The missionary goes abroad because he is a man of strong convictions, and certainly our world needs more and not less of principled conviction. But at the same time, one reserves the right to question.

Historically, the missionary movement has been based upon the uniqueness of the Christian revelation. "The Christian message is different from and superior to the messages of all other religions." The missionary has gone abroad because he has had something definite to give. There has been no question upon this point. Perhaps he has at times failed to separate the benefits of civilisation from the benefits of religion, but at least he has been in earnest.

In the early days of missionary history the missionary was a dictator. He organised institutions and ran them as he himself desired. Coming in as he did with strange customs and a strange message he did not receive the constructive criticism that is so helpful in the development of any new enterprise. Perhaps already an individualist, the atmosphere in which he worked tended to make of him even more of an individualist.

And in the course of time came converts and the organisation of a small Christian society. Absolutism gave way to paternalism. The missionary was now a father and the members of the Christian community his children. The father heard the requests of his children and granted them as he saw fit. He counseled in a friendly manner, but the voice was strikingly like unto the voice of command. "Milk for babes, and meat for men." The Christian converts were spiritual babes and received their sustenance of missionary pap.

With the growth of the Church the missionary problem became more complicated. A strong church demands a strong leadership, and a strong leadership means a growth in the spirit of independence. The most recent trend in missions has been towards an equality of status between missionaries and national leaders, with the missionaries at times taking subordinate positions under national leadership. There has been a most healthy development along the line of inter-national co-operation.

As the Church came more and more to the front a new element entered into the definition of missionary purpose, culminating in the statement that the aim of missionary endeavour is the "formation of self-governing, self-supporting, and self-propagating churches." The terms "self-government," "self-support," and "self-propagation" might well be called the big three in recent missionary history. It is for the growth of the Church that missionaries have professedly laboured, and no effort has been spared in building up a stronger Church. (Witness the growing tendency towards church union in missionary lands, in large measure missionary inaugurated.)

The extensive knowledge that we now possess of other nations is a comparatively recent achievement. Anthropological, geographical and sociological research is each year adding a new chapter to the rapidly expanding volume of world knowledge. Cook's tourists now rush in bravely where formerly angels feared to tread. The American businessman who used to give of his means "to save the heathen" has discovered for himself that these so-called "heathen" have a culture and civilisation of their own. Having served with pride upon the local committee responsible for the erection of the twelve-story building upon Main Street, he feels a bit taken back as he compares the city triumph with the matchless beauty of the Taj Mahal. Loud in speech and hurried in manner, he is just a bit uncomfortable in the presence of the quietude and serenity of the East. Accustomed to Western harmony, even though he be somewhat of a musician, he experiences difficulty in appreciating the minute tonal divisions of the Indian scales.

( To be concluded )

PROTECTOR OF DEPRESSED CLASSES.

The Editor of the Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

The Government Communique dated the 25th March 1931 approving the appointment of a Protector of Backward Classes, which include the untouchable castes, aboriginal and hill tribes and other Backward Classes is to be welcomed, no doubt, as far as it goes. The Labour Commissioner in Madras, who does identical work in that Presidency for the last twelve years, has done a good deal to promote the well-being in the social and the economic sphere of all untouchable classes and we expect similar welfare work to be done by the State hereafter for all backward classes in this province. But I take leave to draw attention to the fact that the Government have accepted only a part of the scheme recommended by the Starte Committee which was appointed in 1928 to suggest means for the uplift of (1) the untouchables and (2) the aboriginal tribes. The Committee recommended that "it is very necessary that a backward class Board with a backward class officer working with it should be appointed to watch over their interests." (Para 107).

The Government while considering the same report of the Committee has accepted so far the appointment of the backward class officer only, which entails fortunately no additional expenditure and will approach the Legislative Council next July for a supplementary grant to meet the cost of the small staff to be placed at his disposal. So far so good. But with regard to the appointment of the backward class Board, they have postponed the question "till the backward classes Officer is appointed". It is not understood from the wording of the G. R. as to whether the question of the appointment of the Board will be considered and decided immediately after the appointment of Mr. Starte, (which may be said to have already taken place) or soon after he is supplied with the necessary staff in, say, August next, or after the result of the working of the officer and his department for some length of time is known and judged in the Secretariat. One may very well doubt if the question of the appointment of the Board was postponed sine die, as no indication is given as to the period of postponement, and that it may take a long time for the Government to make up their mind to appoint the Board or not. If this reading is correct it will be tantamount to shelving the proposal for the Board.

In this connection I will quote para 111 of the Committee's report, showing the necessity of the Board.

"111. We are of opinion that this Officer should have a Board associated with him for consultative and directive purposes on important problems relating to the backward classes. The Board will help to keep him in touch with current public opinion and in shaping that opinion towards the removal of the disabilities of the backward classes."

The Committee proposed that the Board should consist of nine persons, three to represent the untouchable classes, three more to represent aboriginal tribes, all these six to be chosen as far as possible from the Legislative Council members coming from those classes and tribes, (and failing them to be chosen by Government), and three more members of the Legislative Council to represent general interests. The Officer was to act as the Secretary of the Board, and collect such information as may be required by it. The resolutions of the Board were intended to be forwarded to Government for their consideration.

In order to avoid cumbrousness of the Board, and to make it not a costly affair, it was provided that "service in this Board should be honorary, but its members should receive travelling and halting allowances at the rate allowed for committees of the Legislative Council." In order to keep the cost as low as possible, it was further provided that "the Board should meet for a few days during Legislative Council Sessions, and at other times when necessary, but not less than four times a year."

The importance of such a Board acting in consultation with the backward classes officer cannot be too much emphasized nor requires much explanation. The Board would be a connecting link between the untouchables, the aboriginal tribes, and other Backward classes on the one hand, not an educated and cultured lot, and the officer concerned on the other. The very presence of educated men coming from those classes (untouchable and aboriginal) is enough to inspire confidence in them that the needed protection had come and was easily obtainable by the help of the Board members who were their own kith and kin, and that the state was in real earnest to do something for them and to see that they were no longer neglected as heretofore. If the idea of the appointment of the Board be dropped altogether, or if it took a couple of years before it was appointed, the backward classes themselves will come to believe that the new department created was one, in the management or the decisions of which they had not the least voice, and that their opinion could not influence that department.

The Board and the Officer should be appointed simultaneously, not one after the other. The new machine should be provided with two legs at one and the same time and not one, nor one after the another. The Board is as essential for the uplift of the backward classes as a sympathetic and well-meaning executive officer. The members of the Board, coming as they do from the same classes as the people to be helped, know where the shoe pinches and where their disabilities and handicaps lie. Besides, the members of the Board are expected to do honorary service, will be mostly members of the Legislative Council and their meetings at the time of the sessions will cost very little, if anything, in the way of travelling and halting allowances; but the service rendered to the cause will be immense and will go home to the down-trodden and the neglected and will be highly appreciated. This is not a question of providing large funds immediately for the welfare work of the backward classes, but of providing suitable machinery at very little cost, which will be of great use in the near future and will frugally utilize funds wherever they are placed at the disposal of the new department hereafter.

Poona, 13th May 1931.

A. V. THAKKAR.

SHOULD MAHATMA GANDHI ATTEND R. T. C. ?

The Editor, Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Your suggestion that Mahatma Gandhi, instead of himself attending the Round Table Conference, should arrange to send others to it as delegates on behalf of the Congress while constantly instructing them from India, comes, I think, opportune, though I am not sure that it will be adopted by the Congress Working Committee. I have myself been thinking in the same direction, but before my thinking could mature into a definite conclusion, you have given the lead for which you deserve congratulation.

It is a well-known fact that the tentative conclusions arrived at in the Round Table Conference in England were influenced, not so much by the speeches and arguments of the Indian delegates present there, powerful and cogent undoubtedly though they were, as by the movement that was in progress in India. If the testimony of the delegates themselves is to be believed, it appeared that British delegates, especially those who spoke on behalf of the Government of the day, were addressing their arguments to Mahatma Gandhi in India, though physically speaking before the conference.

There can be no doubt that Mahatma Gandhi would be able to exercise effective influence on the next session of the Round Table Conference by remaining in India but conferring with his (Congress) delegates there by cable, constantly instructing them on matters of discussion as they arise in the course of the proceedings. You have pertinently pointed out how Woodrow Wilson would have fared better and made better progress with his fourteen points if he had contented himself with the function of giving cable instructions from Washington, instead of attending the Versailles Conference in person.

You are aware, I hope, that "Dominion Parliaments are jealous of the possibility of their spokesmen being overwhelmed by the superior dialectic of British ministers or the fascinations of Imperial hospitality, into forgetfulness of the needs of the Dominions," and it is for this reason, as Sir Arthur Keith has pointed out, that the essence of the Imperial conferences is that their resolutions are no more than expressions of opinion by the Governments represented. "They impose no obligation, and it is utterly misleading to compare them to treaties, which are morally if not legally binding."

In the case of the Indian Round Table Conference, the agreements reached will be in the nature of a treaty between the Indian nation and the British nation and therefore will be binding on both parties, and the British Government will readily undertake legislation to give effect to the treaty, while Mahatma Gandhi will deliver the goods on behalf of India. There is no Parliament in India as yet with self-governing powers to ratify the agreement made by the delegates, but something approaching it substance is obtainable if Mahatma Gandhi is left to judge of the proceedings from day to day from distance with some little detachment, guiding but not actually in it. Not that he should be the sole arbiter to accept or reject once the agreements are reached; but he should influence the proceedings through his delegates to the Conference who will keep him informed by cable of every new situation that would arise. His judgment then will be dictated by a broader outlook and more impartial consideration than by an accommodating regard for the exigencies of the moment.

I do not by any means suggest that Mahatma Gandhi will be easily taken in. He has undoubtedly developed a shrewdness in recent years which should prove a great asset. But after all, at the Conference he will be one among many delegates. The atmosphere there will be the same as in the Indian Legislative Assembly where, as the Mahatma has himself pointed out on several occasions, many undesirable influences are unavoidably at work. Unless there is somebody to pull from outside, the R. T. C. conclusions may not be as satisfactory as they should be.

This somebody to pull from outside must be Mahatma Gandhi himself, invested as he is with full dictatorial powers. It is necessary, I think, that the British Government should continue to feel that they have still to address not so much the Conference as Mahatma Gandhi in India, and that unless they satisfy his demands they would not satisfy India, however otherwise eminent the other invitees may be.

If the Mahatma is to stay in India and to instruct his delegates from here, the question arises, who should be the delegates to attend the conference on behalf of the Congress? It is at a time like this that we realise truly the great loss we have sustained by the death of Pandit Motilal who would have been the proper man to head the Congress delegation, while keeping himself in close communication with Mahatma Gandhi in India. But now that he is no more, I would propose that Dr. Ansari, Vallabhabhai Patel and Jawaharlal should form the delegation with Mahatma to guide and instruct them from India. Dr. Ansari is known to be a skillful negotiator, Mr. Vallabhabhai will take care to guard the rural and labour interests, and Jawaharlal would represent the spirit of the youth of the country, on whose goodwill the success of the new constitution will ultimately depend.

S. G. WARTY.

Rabindranath Tagore:—The poet Rabindranath Tagore completes his seventieth year on the 8th May, 1931. The event should be celebrated in a fitting manner, in Calcutta, on a convenient date, when a reception should be held in his honour and felicitations offered to him on behalf of his countrymen and all sections of the community. To take the necessary steps to organise the celebrations, a public conference will be held on Saturday, the 16th May, 1931, at 6 p. m., at the Calcutta University Institute. A requisition to this effect was made by representative citizens.

MOROBA KANHABA'S CASE.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

With reference to your editorial note in the issue of 9th inst., I may draw your attention to the following cuttings taken from the Native Opinion, and Anglo-Marathi organ of old. From the cuttings you will see that Mr. Moroba Kanhoba of Pathare Prabhu community and his remarried wife were not murdered as was suggested by Mr. M. B. Jayaker in the Prarthana Samaj meeting held for celebrating the 55th death anniversary of late Pandit Vishnu Shastri. They committed suicide.

Native Opinion dated 13-2-1870 :

Rao Bahadur Moroba Kanhoba, the retired judge of the Bombay Small Causes Court, was for a considerable time past contemplating to remarry a widow from his Prabhu community. Fortunately Rao Bahadur's efforts seem to fructify as he has found one to his taste whom he thinks to marry in a very short time.

Native Opinion, dated 10-4-1870 :

Last Tuesday a gathering of Prabhu community was held at Mr. Rajguru's place. In the meeting a very long discussion was carried on till midnight on the topic of Mr. Moroba Kanhoba's remarriage. In the end the newly wedded couple and the person who stood as father to the bride and gave her in marriage, these three were excommunicated. Some of the party were of opinion that as a big controversy was in progress at Poona on the same subject they should withhold their decision of excommunication. According to our knowledge, the editor remarks, remarriage of widows had been in vogue in the Pathare Prabhu community for a very long time. It was stopped latterly. If such be the case, then the necessity of Shastrie authority for remarriage which is thought essential by the Brahmins need not be waited for by the Prabhus. Their caste should be strong enough to continue or discontinue the custom of remarrying widows according to its free will. It is its prerogative.

Native Opinion, dated 5-3-1871 :

Mr. Moroba Kanhoba :—We have already published the news of the death of Mr. Moroba Kanhoba and his remarried young wife Bhalabai, who got themselves drowned in a well. Regarding same a jury was convened and it carried its investigations in the matter and declared its findings last Monday. The jury arrived at the conclusion that both the deceased persons intentionally committed suicide at a place near the Bungalow at Gowalia Tank, on the night of Friday the 17th or during the early morn of Saturday the 18th ult. The reasons for committing such act other than the ones given before the jury must only be known to the deceased persons alone. The jury is not of opinion that either of the two must have lost his or her reasoning power and thus was led to this rash deed.

The above paragraphs being in Marathi I have tried to translate them into English for your readers.

Bombay, }
11th May 1931. } SHRIDHAR SAKHARAM PANDIT.

HINDU MAHASABHA ON CONSTITUTIONAL REFORMS.

The Working Committee of the Hindu Mahasabha has adopted the following statement on the question of Constitutional reforms, which is published for general information.

The Hindu Mahasabha desires to point out that it has, throughout and consistently, taken up a position which is strictly national on the communal issue. It believes that no form of national responsible self-Government which India is struggling to achieve and which England is pledged to agree to, is compatible with separate communal electorate or representative in the legislature and administration which function for the general good and secular well-being of the country as a whole. It is prepared to sacrifice, and expects other communities to sacrifice, communal considerations to build up such responsible government, which can be worked only by a ministry of persons coming together as belonging to the same political party and not necessarily to the same creed, so that agreement on public questions, economic, social and political should be the basis of mutual confidence and co-operation. The position of the Hindu Mahasabha is embodied in the following propositions:—

(1) There should be one common electoral roll consisting of voters of all communities and creeds as citizens and nationals of the same State.

(2) There should not be any separate community electorate, that is, grouping of voters by religion in community constituencies.

(3) There should not be any reservation of seats for any religious community as such in the legislature.

(4) There should not be any weightage given to any community as it can be done only at the expense of the other communities.

(5) The franchise should be uniform for all communities in the same province.

(6) The franchise should be uniform all over India for the Central or Federal Legislature.

(7) There should be statutory safeguards for the protection of minorities in regard to their language, religion and racial laws and customs as framed by the League of Nations on the proposals of its original members including India and His Majesty's Government and now enforced in many a State of reconstructed Europe including Turkey.

(8) There should be no question of protection of majorities in any form.

(9) There should not be any alterations of existing boundaries of provinces without expert examination of linguistic, administrative, financial strategic and other considerations involved, by a Boundaries Commission to be specially appointed for the purpose.

(10) In the proposed Federation, residuary powers should rest with the Central or Federal Government for the unity and well-being of India as a whole.

(11) Differences of religion, creed or confession shall not prejudice any Indian national in matters relating to the enjoyment of civil or political rights, as for instance, admission to public employment, functions and honours, or the exercise of profession and industries.

THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION AND THE PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

That national prohibition legally is not an anomaly, writes the National Advocate, but a logical amendment in the Federal Constitution says Judge Andrew A. Bruce, President of the American Institute of Criminology, and Professor of Law of Northwestern University, in a statement made public through Charles R. Jones, Chairman of the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation.

The opinion lists the following forty-three prohibitions upon states in the Federal Constitution:—

In the original Constitution no state shall:—

1. Enter into any treaty ;
2. Enter into any alliance ;
3. Enter into any confederation ;
4. Grant letters of marque and reprisal ;
5. Coin money ;
6. Emit bills of credit ;
7. Make anything but gold and silver coin legal tender in payment of debts ;
8. Pass any bill of attainder ;
9. Pass any ex-post facto law ;
10. Pass any law impairing the obligation or contracts ;
11. Grant any titles of nobility ;
12. Lay any imposts on exports ;
13. Lay any duties on exports ;
14. Lay any imposts on imports ;
15. Lay any duties on imports ;
16. Lay any duty on tonnage ;
17. Keep troops in time of peace ;
18. Keep ships of war in time of peace ;
19. Enter into agreement with another state ;
20. Enter into any compact with another state ;
21. Enter into any agreement with a foreign power ;
22. Enter into any compact with a foreign power ;
23. Engage in war ;

In the amendments in the Constitution, in addition to the Eighteenth, the following prohibitions upon states appear :

No state shall :

24. Establish slavery ; (Slavery and peonage are prohibited both to the state and to the individual. The clause is general. They shall not exist) ;
25. Establish involuntary servitude except as a punishment for crime, etc. ;
26. Make any law to abridge the privileges of citizens of the United States ;
27. Enforce any law to abridge the privileges of citizens of the United States ;
28. Make any law to abridge the immunities of citizens of the United States ;
29. Enforce any law to abridge the immunities of citizens of the United States ;
30. Deprive any person of life without due process of law ;
31. Deprive any person of liberty without due process of law ;
32. Deprive any person of property without due process of law ;

33. Deny any person the equal protection of the laws ;

34. Assume any debt incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion ;

35. Pay any debt incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion ;

36. Assume any obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion ;

37. Pay any obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion ;

38. Assume any claim for the loss of any slave ;

39. Assume any claim for the emancipation of any slave ;

40. Pay any claim for the loss of any slave ;

41. Pay any claim for the emancipation of any slave ;

42. Deny the right of any citizen to vote on account of race ;

43. Deny the right of any citizen to vote on account of colour.

POET TAGORE'S SEVENTIETH BIRTHDAY.

With the solemn grandeur of the ancient Vedic rituals, writes the special correspondent of Liberty, the Seventieth Birthday of the Poet Rabindranath Tagore, was celebrated at Santiniketan on Friday (May 6). In the sombre atmosphere of that "Abode of Peace",—the typical hermitage which recalls to the mind the Asram of our Arya Rishis—the performance of the ceremony inspired in those who had witnessed it, a reverential awe and a spiritual delight whose chastening effect cannot easily be obliterated.

Before the mellow light of dawn broke on the eastern horizon, a batch of girls, functioning as the 'Baitaliks' paraded the whole area of the Asram, heralding the glorious day of the Birth Anniversary of the Poet.

The day dawned ; the crimson light of the rising sun flooded the earth and the inmates of the Asram, as well as the visitors, gathered at the Mango-grove, where the ceremony was arranged to be performed. The place was decorated with an artistic excellence and perfection, which the supreme talents of Nandalal Bose and Suren Kar, could accomplish. The 'Alpana,' the lotus and other flowers, the mango foliage, the burning incense giving out charming fragrance, and all the paraphernalia of a 'Shastric' rituals, were there.

The visitors including Europeans, Americans, Japanese and Chinese, the professors, the pupils and the girls took their seats in front of the 'Bedi.' At about six o'clock the post came, and all eyes were riveted on that saintly figure whose face was resplendent with a spiritual fervour.

Some 20 girls robed in the 'Basanti' colour and some boys in their uniform of deep orange colour hailed the poet with a song.

The actual ceremony then began with the recitation of selected 'Slokas' from the Vedas by Pandit Bidhu Sekhar Shastri. This was followed by another song in chorus by the boys and girls. ("He Chira Nutan Aji A Dinner Prathama Gane").

"Arghya" was then offered to the poet now sitting on the 'Bedi,' by five girls, Sm. Rekha Devi, Mamata Devi, Basanti Devi, Kamala Devi and Nivansani Devi, who anointed the forehead of the Poet with sandal wood paste, and Pandits Shastri and Kehiti Mohan Sen again chanted 'Slokas' from the Vedas.

Homage was then paid to the poet in the form of presents by the local Rabindra Parichaya Sabha, the Rabindra Parishad of the Presidency College and by his friends and admirers including a Chinese artist Mr. Kau who presented the Poet with a big scroll. A Chinese poet Dr. Leo also read a poem and a prose piece in Chinese. Sm. Bina Sanyal then read a piece of poetry entitled the "25th of Baishak" and some other selected pieces.

In reply the poet read two newly composed pieces of poems of his own and addressed the gathering for a few minutes.

In rose coloured long robe, and sitting on the 'Bed' in the glare of the morning rays, the aureoled saint uttered the words with a melodious intonation.

He said, in his inimitable way, that he was a poet first and a poet last and not, as some would have it, a philosopher or a prophet. The role of either illfitted a poet. He had no message of salvation to give. He was a 'Sadhaka,' not a 'Guru'. He had lived in the world, one of the world, and drank deep at the fountain of life, tasted all its sweets and bitter and played upon the lute that his Maker had given him to make Music with. To-day, at the end of his days he had no other desire, no other ambition except that he could say, before he took leave of his friends and the world that he had loved and loved deeply and would only like to leave his Love behind.

The poet then performed the ceremony of "planting trees" (Briksha Ropan Utsab) which had been being observed for the last several years, on the day of his Birth Anniversary.

He performed the opening ceremony of the "Propa" for drinking of water by birds. Thereupon the ceremony came to a close with a song in chorus "Amader Shantiniketan."

The guests were then entertained with sweetmeats and 'Sarbat'. Distinguished among those present were Sjt. Ramananda Chatterji, Dr. and Mrs. Kalidas Nag, Sja. Narendra Dev, Girija Kumar Bose, Mukul Dey, Basanta Mahalanobis, Amal Home, Mr. and Mrs. Annada Sankar Roy, G. S. Dutt, Dr. Suniti Chatterji, S. K. Gupta, and Girija Bhattacharji.

Congratulatory messages were sent by Prof. Sylvan Levy of Sorbonne, Prof. Foucher, Dr. Lasney of Czech community, Prague, the Chinese community at Tientsin, some members of the Labour Office, League of Nations.

In the evening there were music and dance by the pupils of the Anram.

ALLAHABAD AGRICULTURAL INSTITUTE.
The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

As there are a number of dairy students among your readers, who will be interested in the change of the date of admission to the Indian Dairy Diploma course, it will be a service to them and to this Institute if you kindly publish the following notice:

Admission to the Indian Dairy Diploma course at the Allahabad Agricultural Institute will be in July this year instead of in October as formerly. The Imperial Dairy expert has given his consent to this change, which is made in order to save students the necessity of waiting several months after the beginning of the educational year, and in order to make admission to this course coincide with that to the Intermediate course in Agriculture.

Allahabad, }
May 6, 1931. }

Yours, etc.,
W. B. HAYNE,
Vice-Principal.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

All India Trade Union Congress:—It is admitted without question that since the advent of the All-India Trade Union Congress, the working class movement in this country has made appreciable progress. Yet it needs highly organised forces to fight against the ills of capitalism and imperialism, under intelligent and cogent lead; that is expected to be had from the forthcoming session of the Congress which assembles in Calcutta towards the end of June next. The definite date as may be fixed will be announced later on. The 11th Session will be held in Calcutta and Sjt. Subhas Chandra Bose will preside. The Unions which are not yet affiliated to Congress, are most cordially invited to do so as per the Congress rules (vide Article 4 of the constitution). The affiliated Unions are requested to forward their resolutions and the full quota of delegates to which they are entitled as per the Congress rules (vide Articles 13 and 10 of the constitution). All Communications to be addressed to Mr. Mukunda Lal Secretary, Provisional Reception Committee, 5, Pollock Street, Calcutta.

Inter-Marriage in Wardha:—Mr. Pornamohand's residence at Wardha witnessed a unique incident of social reform amongst Marwaries, when Shriyut Kenhayalal Bhai a Maheshwari who had gone to jail in Civil Disobedience movement as Secretary War Council, returned after marriage with Satyawati Devi, about 18 years old and a Matrie, daughter of Professor Gaurishanker Jhavar of Dehradun. This is an inter caste marriage with which group the Maheshwari Community is so much agitated to which Messrs Birla and Sir Bhisensardas Daga also belong, during the last seven years. There was a grand procession in which ladies and gentlemen of many communities took part. The bride was without veil and there were many marwari ladies who did not observe Parda.

A Sikh-Hindu Marriage:—The wedding took place at Patiala on the morning of May 2, of Rana Parakram Jung (of Allahabad), the great-grandson of the late Maharaja Sir Jung Bahadur, prime minister of Nepal, with the Maharajkumari of Patiala, the eldest daughter of the Maharaja of Patiala. The marriage party consisting of about 250 persons left Allahabad by a special train on April 29. Among those who accompanied the party were Mr. Justice Uma Shankar Bajpai, the Raja of Mahewa, the Raja of Harha, Col. Raja Jai Prithvi Bahadur of Bajang, Dr. L. D. Joshi, Lt. G. R. Negar and the Raja Bahadur of Kotla. The band of the 4/19th Rajputs also accompanied the party. The party on arrival at Patiala was accorded a magnificent reception, among those, who received it at the station being the Maharaj-Kumar of Patiala accompanied by Sir Frederick Gauntlett, the finance member of the State. The whole of Patiala was en fete on the occasion of the wedding, the special features of which were a magnificent procession and a State banquet. The marriage ceremony which took place in the early hours of the morning of May 2 in the 'Qila Mubarak' was signalled by the firing of 200 guns. Among the numerous Rajas and Maharajas, who participated in the wedding functions on the side of the bride was the Maharaja of Dholpur. The marriage party returned to Allahabad on May 4 and among those who have arrived at Allahabad with the party from Patiala state are Yuvaraj Yadvendra Singhjee, the heir-apparent, and the prime minister and the Diwan of the state. Rani Prem Kumari Devi, the bridegroom's mother, was 'at home' in the Phaphaman castle, Allahabad, to meet the heir-apparent of the Patiala state. A large and distinguished audience attended the function. It is understood that dowry worth about ten lakhs has been given to the bridegroom by the Maharaja of Patiala.

Tagore's message:—Asked by a press representative about what he considered to be the duty of his countrymen in this juncture, the poet said that he really did not know—what to say. He could, however, tell what he himself believed and tried all through his life to act up to. He continued. "Politics are not my sphere. The big political questions are not for me to solve. All that I know is that as an Indian I ought to put forth all my energies not in paying sentimental homage to a deified Mother India who is an abstraction but in trying to do good to ameliorate the lot of as many of my countrymen as lies in my power to do. If you call it a message, I hate the word message—my message to my people is this.—"Don't let all your energies be spent up in sentimental out-burst but translate them into action. You have had enough of Bande Mataram. Let Bande Mataram be now replaced by Bande-Bhrataram. Neither by waving the national flag nor by spinning your allotted quota of cotton on the Charka, can you win Swaraj, but only by constructive work for the masses, only by actual services to your fellow country men, can you achieve it."

ADVERTISEMENTS

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription.	Inland	...	Rs. 2-3-0	V.P.P.
"	Foreign	...	" 2-8-0	Post free.
"	Single Copy	...	0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a

HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT

with us and earn 3½% interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE :

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BULLION EXCHANGE.
(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)
BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 31st December interest is allowed at 2 per cent. on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE—BARODA.

Branches—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadl, Dwaraka, and Port Okha.

JAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

- Sr Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).
Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
Marsulal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd. Baroda.)
R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewar, Baroda.
Raj Ratna Bhalal Dajibhai Amin B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda).
Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
Sr. Hanilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penu.)
Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on applications.

8-8-26.

G. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

—:01—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 1/2

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

aramati (District Poona).	Dhalla (District West Khandesh).
Bira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shabada ( " " ).
Ta-gaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Siakheda ( " " ).
Shirale ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Palghar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Aklaj (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Viramgaon (District Ahmednagar).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorized Capital	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...	Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 3 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay

Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle, Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MOBARJEH & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,
INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital (Paid up) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJAN PAIN BALM PRODUCE BEST RESULTS

IN
Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.
AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

IT IS YOURS

A SAFE

And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. a.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0

Foreign ... 5 8

Single copy ... 0 3

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed.)

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8	(Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10	(Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,

MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS,

SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO.,

1337, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 69.

DAWN PATROL

12 Reels, featuring

RICHARD BARTHELMESS, DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS JR. NEIL HAMILTON

First National All Talking Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 32 and 33.

JUNGLE JINGLE

1 Reel,

Universal Oswald Bucky Rabbit Cartoon.

THE BIG POND

8 Reels, featuring

MAURICE CHEVALIER AND CLAUDETTE COLBERT

A Paramount All Talking Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P.M.

EMPRESS CINEMA SHOW BOAT

16 Reels, featuring

LAURA LA PLANTE AND JOSEPH SHILDKRAUT

Universal All Talking, Singing and Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE RELEY THE COP

6 Reels, featuring

FARRELL MACDONALD, NANCY DREXEL AND LOUIS FAZANDA

A Fox Picture.

Time:—Sat. 6-30 CINEMA and 9 p. m. Variety Entertainment by the BOMBAY LITERARY CIRCLE.

Sun. 8 p. m. Indian Vocal Concert by Prof. A. N. BOSE and
10 p. m. CINEMA.

Mon. to Fri. 6-30 and 10 p. m. CINEMA.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1931

No. 387

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Mahatma Gandhi and Missions. The Law Membership. Indian Women's Demand. The Language Problem. A Painful Case. Evading the Sarda Act. Mahatma Gandhi. Sayaji Rao III, Maharaja of Baroda.	Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. VIII. Christian Missions in India. Tari or Beef? Missionaries and Non-Christian Endowments. Status of Women in Future Indian Constitution. Buddha Jayanti. A Medical Men's Lapse.
---	--

NOTES.

Mahatma Gandhi and Missions:—Mahatma Gandhi has been alarmed by the outcry raised by some Christian missionaries and anti-Indian politicians over his simple statement of the proper attitude of a nationalist government to proselytising activities. He concludes his reply to one of them thus: "In India under Swaraj I have no doubt that foreign missionaries will be at liberty to do their proselyting, as I would say, in a wrong way; but they would be expected to bear with those who, like me, may point out that in their opinion the way is wrong." This, we need hardly say, is a complete retreat from his statement that he would ask missionaries who pursue the wrong method to withdraw. Mahatmaji, of course, must have good reasons for his change of front but, for our part, we are sure that it will be the duty of a national Government to stop organised proselytising financed and directed from foreign countries. No European country would for a moment countenance the exorbitant pretensions put forward in the name of freedom of religion in this country. Spain is one of the oldest Catholic countries, but even she has found that the Bishop and the Autocrat cannot subsist apart from each other. We do not want to expel any priest, but surely it is not too much to ask that he should not employ quinine or the Royal Reader as a bait to draw people to his fold. Mahatmaji's revocation is all the more strange as thoughtful Christians themselves are coming to see that he was right in his original statement.

The Law Membership:—It is stated that the Law Member of the Government of India, Sir B. L. Mitter, will lead the Indian deputation to the League of Nations Assembly at Geneva and that Sir C. P. Ramaswami Iyer may be asked to act for him. This has thrown Justice, the organ of the Madras Ministerial non-Brahmin party, into a paroxysm of rage and it has thrown the decencies of journalism to the winds in denouncing the mere idea of his appointment. There can be no two opinions regarding Sir Ramaswami's qualifications for the post, but we should like a doubt to be cleared. Sir Ramaswami was a candidate for a seat in the Legislative Assembly at a by-election in March 1930. Raja Bahadur Krishnamachariar was also a candidate for the same seat on the issue of opposition to the Sarda Marriage Act. It was stated in the Press that the Raja Bahadur withdrew on Sir C. P. Ramaswami giving a pledge in the course of which he undertook "to co-operate in attempts to exempt from the Sarda Act those communities and individuals who feel as a matter of conviction that the provisions run counter to their religious faith and duties." There has been a General Election since in which the Raja Bahadur has been returned to the Legislative Assembly, and Sir Ramaswami to the Council of State. The Raja Bahadur, it is understood, has applied for or secured permission to introduce a Bill to exempt Brahmins of South India from the Sarda Act. If Sir C. P. Ramaswami is to act as Law Member of the Government of India, when the Bill comes up for consideration, will he be bound by his pledge or not?

Indian Women's Demand:—We publish the full text of the memorandum issued by the important women's organisations in the country on their status in the proposed new Indian constitution. Differing from some of their officious British champions, they not only do not want but they positively repudiate any special expedients like reservation, nomination or co-option for securing their entry into the Legislative and other Councils. "The Women of India," the memorandum declares in bold type with the added emphasis of underlining, "have no desire to seek any specially favoured treatment for themselves, as long as their full and equal citizenship is recognized in practice as it has been in theory." They point out any sort of qualification, property or education will in their present condition, reduce the proportion and number of women voters to an insignificant minority, and they disapprove of the suggestion of the Simon Commission that wives and widows of voters should also be enrolled as voters. The memorandum maintains that "the elementary rights of women as human beings should not be based on an extraneous factor like marriage." There may be difference of opinion as to whether marriage is an extraneous or intrinsic factor in the life of women, or of men for that matter, but there are other grounds also on which the suggestion is objectionable, and we are, therefore, glad that it is unacceptable to those for whose benefit it was intended. The memorandum demands adult suffrage for men and women as the only sure way of ensuring their franchise rights. Adult suffrage is, of course, the ultimate and inevitable solution. But its introduction immediately even for men and much more for women offers practical difficulties. The reform of the laws relating to women's property, seems to offer a way out. We mean not merely the reform of the law of succession and inheritance but the creation of a legal obligation during the life-time of the husband to give a share of his income to be her absolute property to his wife in consideration of her services in managing the household with its interminable duties. The economic independence of the wife will thus be assured, and a nominal property qualification will bring on the roll proportionately as many women as men. Pending such legislation, the practice may be voluntarily adopted by the educated classes who realise the importance and value of women's co-operation not only, to use Mrs. Sarala Devi Chandhirani's piquant phrase, in law-breaking but also in law-making.

The Language Problem:—The People of Lahore commenting on our remarks on the Congress project of compulsory Hindi, asks us to state what our solution of the language problem is. To our mind, there is no language problem and what there is of it is solving itself. Educated Indians all over the country are bi-lingual, that is, they use English for inter-provincial purposes and their own vernaculars for intra-provincial purposes. This practice which has grown up in the course of the last half a century, is working fairly satisfactorily, and it may be left to develop further in its own way. The People itself is a proof that the English language fills a necessary place in Indian national economy. If Hindi was an adequate substitute, we may be sure that Mr. Firoz Chand would have preferred it as the vehicle of his views on national questions. Even in Moghul times when political ideas were not far advanced, Hindi was found to be deficient for administrative purposes, and the celebrated Finance Minister, the Indian Turgot, Raja Todar Mal, substituted Persian as the official language in place of Hindi. English is far superior to either Persian or Hindi as an instrument of political thought. Both Hindu and Moslem culture was weak in this respect and that is why Raja Ram Mohun Roy who was a master of both, founded an English school and threw the weight of his great influence on the side of English education. Referring to our remark that Mahatma Gandhi is unintentionally reviving the supremacy of northern over southern India, the People asks with severe irony "Is not that infinitely more abominable than the supremacy of the English over both?" There is no question of either being "abominable"—Mr. Firoz Chand should be above seeking to side-track serious issues by indulging in unsavoury adjectives—but the fact remains that British rule represented a higher ideal of freedom than the Moghul empire which was itself a higher type of political organisation than the decadent Hindu princelings whom it displaced. The high promise of British rule has not been realized, but still its standard is higher than that of the purely Indian governments and the subjects of the latter have no higher ambition at present than to be like their British Indian neighbours. The barren wife in Ibsen's play consoles a bereaved mother for her loss by pointing to her own plight in not having the satisfaction of having a dead child even to mourn for. The British Indian has his grievances, but the subjects of Indian States lament that they are denied the privilege of sharing in them! Perhaps, our patriotism is not of the same quality as the People's. Yet we certainly do not think that the displacement of the British by North Indian rule is an end in itself at present. What is needed is a higher standard of equity and justice. The seat of Government is not a matter of much consequence in these days of rapid communications and means of transit.

A Painful Case:—The Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad, Mr. G. Davis, sentenced last week Dr. Balubhai Harishanker Bhatt, chairman of the Municipal Sanitary Committee of Nadiad, to one year's rigorous imprisonment, for committing an indecent assault on Miss Ahalyabai Samant, lady doctor in charge of the Female Ward of the Municipal Dispensary of Nadiad. The complainant's case was that Dr. Bhatt asked her to accompany him one night to see a woman patient in a neighbouring village, and while on the way committed the assault complained of. The lady was unwilling to prosecute the accused but she was forced to do so by the action of two other Municipal Councillors who tried "to make money out of her plight" which means, we suppose, to blackmail her. The Judge in passing sentence passed severe stricture on the conduct of the accused. The accused was said to have been drunk when he committed the offence. We reprint the judge's observations in this issue, but as the accused has appealed to the High Court, and has been allowed bail, comments have to be reserved for the present.

Evading The Sarda Act:—The United India and Native States writes: "The urgency of the Indian States enacting legislation on the lines of the Sarda Act has been brought to the forefront by a case from Ajmer, in which a girl from the family or clan of Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, the author of the Act himself, was married at the tender age of nine, the parties having gone to the neighbouring State of Kishengarh to perform the marriage, in order to avoid the consequences of the British Law. Such incidents naturally create the impression that the States are backward or reactionary in social legislation, though in many instances the case is quite the reverse." It is a question for serious consideration whether marriage legislation should not be included among federal subjects in the future constitution of India. Meanwhile, the Act should be amended so as to make it an offence for a British Indian subject to break the law in or out of British India.

Mahatma Gandhi:—Mahatmaji has stated that he does not intend to visit America. Still the following from a friend, received yesterday, is of interest. "Papers here are talking of the possibility of Gandhiji visiting America. I sincerely hope you will make an effort to persuade him not to come. I write this as a firm friend of you and as an admirer of him. The American people just now would take him as the latest novelty. It would be an idle curiosity that would be crowding in wherever he went; so that it would be difficult for him to make the contacts he ought to. Perhaps you don't know how romantically excited our people get over something that tickles their fancy and in their manner of showing it they fail sometimes to discriminate between a very great man and a notoriety seeker. I hope you will not misunderstand this word of caution. A reception like I have described for Mr. Gandhi would not in any way assist him in his large program for India."

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, MAY 23, 1931.

SAYAJI RAO III, MAHARAJA OF BARODA.*

Within recent years two biographies have been published of rulers of Indian States, Mr. Latthe's Life of the late Maharaja of Kolhapur, and Colonel Haksar's Life of the late Maharaja Scindia of Gwalior. Both the "Lives" appeared after the death of their respective subjects. They were frankly laudatory, Mr. Latthe's book wholly so, while Colonel Haksar's, if we remember, contained references to some eccentricities which set off to advantage his admiration of his royal master.

We received this week the "Life of Sayaji Rao III, the Maharaja of Baroda" in two volumes by Mr. Stanley Rice. In the author's Preface, there is a bit of self-revelation by way of warning, we suppose, to the reader before he dives deeper into the book. "I am not at all conscious of the defects of this book," observes Mr. Rice, "if I were I should have corrected them. One disadvantage I cannot escape and one defect I cannot cure. For national—or for racial—reasons an Englishman cannot look at things with the eyes of an Indian. Sympathy he may have and understanding, but intuition in the fullest sense of the word he never will have." This is fully borne out in the "Life". The frank avowal in the preface does Mr. Rice credit. On almost every page there is evidence of the struggle between the will to be appreciative and the duty to uphold European and particularly British superiority to brown Indians.

"When the Maharaja fell under the heavy suspicion that he was anti-English in sympathy and disloyal to the Crown," writes Mr. Rice, "he exclaimed pathetically that he had taken more Europeans into his service than any other Prince." For many years, we learn, His Highness had an Irishman in charge of his stables, that he has an Englishman for his principal valet, and an Italian as his principal chauffeur. An Englishman as biographer, therefore, is not a departure from this train of ideas. It is true that the groom, the valet and the chauffeur, are not called upon to form or express any opinions of their master's life and character while the biographer has to do so all the time. The personal equation of the three functionaries does not count. It is otherwise with the biographer.

Besides being an Englishman who can not look at an Indian except as a foreigner, and a man of a subject race at that, Mr. Rice had another serious disqualification to be the Maharaja's biographer. He had, we gather, acted at some time as His Highness's Private Secretary. No man, it is said, can be a hero to his valet. Few can be that to their Private Secretaries. When the Private Secretary happens to be an Englishman and his master an Indian, the inevitable disillusionment is subconsciously underlined by the instinctive feeling of political superiority which few Englishmen seem able to escape in this country, try how they may.

Mr. Rice does not even try. It is an article of faith with him that an Englishman cannot look at things with the eyes of an Indian. Public opinion, to him, always means English opinion, and Indian opinion is always—rather deprecatingly—nationalist opinion. The highest praise he accords to the Maharaja, is that "it would be hard to discover in the Maharaja's philosophy one single point which does not conform to the highest standard of the West." (Vol. II p. 51). But while the West is great, British is greater. Mr. Rice notes with evident satisfaction that the Maharaja, who had two nurses on one occasion, one English and the other French, disapproved of the Frenchwoman and dismissed her. The Maharajah and the Maharani did not seem to enjoy their visit to the United States and Prince Jaisingh Rao went to Harvard "where he acquired a pronounced American accent." British officers in India even when they blunder egregiously are to be discreetly dealt with. As for Indians "since their mental equipment is not adapted to detailed examination or to the forecasting of possible contingencies, enthusiasm is apt to flag and the task undertaken to come to nothing or to end in disaster." Mr. Rice had evidently not heard of the Bombay Development Department and the Back Bay Reclamation scheme, the relic of which the dredger Sir George Lloyd, has just been sold to Australia. It is repeatedly emphasised that Baroda was merely following at a distance British India and Mr. Rice is at some pains to show that, whatever was tried in advance of British India, has proved or is bound to prove more or less a failure.

The picture which Mr. Rice paints of the Maharaja is a pathetic one. No one who reads it can form any other opinion than that His Highness has not made a conspicuous success of his life as a householder. "No parent was more anxious than Maharaja Sayaji Rao for the proper upbringing of the younger generations; no parent has more carefully weighed what was best to be done at each stage. Few parents have been less rewarded for their pains." Some passages in the chapter on the Maharaja's domestic relations and trials are not remarkable for the reticence which is proper in referring to the intimate private life of a living subject. Mr. Rice seems to feel this, but he cannot resist the temptation to read the Maharaja a lesson in parental wisdom, though he knows well that it can be of no conceivable use at this stage of life to His Highness. In the State, the Maharaja is depicted as a sort of slave driver impelling incompetent and dishonest servants to do their assigned duties by the lash of tongue and pen. "He felt that he was ploughing a lonely furrow. Men who were able and willing to prosecute eagerly their claims for advancement or negotiation for a government loan, were, when there was government work to be done, seized with a timely attack of gout or a disabling headache." He is a bad workmen who complains of his tools. The Maharaja like other men has no doubt his splenetic moods, and Mr. Rice has assiduously collected his pessimistic outbursts against Indian character and competence, well knowing that this is not the Maharaja's normal mind. "His Highness may have felt," he writes "that his a lonely man slaving for the good of his people in an atmosphere of indifference and incompetence, but when the clouds have disappeared, and his better self has reasserted itself, he knows that it is not so." (p. 52.) It would have been fairer and more true to character if this side of the Maharaja had been more prominently brought out in his Life."

* Oxford University Press, 81 Shillings.

Mr. Rice is not a whit less hard on the Maharaja himself. Take this passage. Referring to the Maharaja's tendency to embody his ideas from time to time in memoranda which his officials were liable to mistake for orders, Mr. Rice observes: "It is one of the disadvantages of autocratic rule that every order of the Ruler is implicitly obeyed, and that with each apparent change of fancy on the part of the autocrat, executive action is apt to vary. The Maharaja has himself admitted that he may occasionally issue contradictory orders, having forgotten for the moment what he had already said, and he has laid stress—with perfect justice—on his readiness to correct mistakes." (Vol. II p. 81). There is a simple way of providing against forgetfulness—to keep a pocket diary and to consult it from time to time. Even the most economical autocrat need not be ashamed of adopting this not very costly device. It will save his officers much worry and himself some confusion. In any case this is a point against autocracy, and by no means the only one in the book.

We cannot help at some places feeling that Mr. Rice is writing with his tongue in his cheek. The Maharaja's most frequent reasons for his now annual foreign tours are, his health and the picking up of information which can be utilised to the benefit of the State. Mr. Rice suggests a third. "Like all virile men," he writes, "His Highness delights in ladies' society which brings him into contact with the female point of view. And in Europe where the women are as free as the men, he was able to gratify his taste for feminine society to the full." The idea of travelling six thousand miles to ascertain the female point of view which he can ascertain any day and every day from the President of the National Council of Women in India, who happens to be Her Highness the Maharani of Baroda!

Mr. Rice compares the Maharaja to Lord Curzon, and readers of his "Life" may be led to compare him with Kaiser William II also. Every autocrat, we suppose, has at times to be a bit of a charlatan. Lord Ronaldshay to whose biography of Lord Curzon Mr. Rice's book has more than a passing resemblance, has shown that the promposity of the late Viceroy often made him look ridiculous. Whatever Sayaji Rao's defects, pomposity is not of them. On the other hand, his simplicity in dress and deportment verges in a Maharaja on affectation. Neither does he like the Kaiser claim a partnership with God in the management of his State. "Personally," wrote the Maharaja to a friend, "I have very few religious preferences, and really could not say whether I think the Vedas more authoritative or the Bible or the Koran or the Avesta." He put them all into the single category of "the interested inventions of the priests." (Vol. II p. 198). It is perhaps because he lacks the intintion of the native Indian that Mr. Rice has not found a key to the Gaekwar's seemingly complex and even contradictory personality. He can not see the wood for the trees. "Call no man happy," said one of the wisest of men, "until he is dead." It may be no less wrong to conclude that a man's life has been a failure while he is alive. Sayaji Rao not many years ago seemed to be the man destined to lead Indian nationalism. He came very near to Tennyson's picture of the divinely-gifted man

Whose life in low estate began
And on a simple village green.
Who breaks his births invidious bar,
And grasps the skirt of happy chance,
And breasts the blows of circumstance,
And grapples with his evil star,
Who makes by force his merit known
And lives to clutch the golden keys,
To mould a mighty state's decrees
To shape the whisper of a throne,
Add moving up from high to higher,
Becomes on fortune's crowning slope,
The pillar of a people's hope,
The centre of a world's desire.

If the Maharaja does not today call up this picture, what has been the secret of the change? The time is not come for exploring it, and before it comes, His Highness may—who knows?—recapture some part at least if his old idealism which seems to be lost but may only be waiting for the opportunity to fulfil itself.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. VIII.

( BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI. )

To the Hindu, marriage is a sacrament; not a contract as in the west. This is the formula, at once biting and unctuous, which is favoured of the pious for opposing any attempt to improve the married lot of the Hindu woman or mitigate the legalised license of the Hindu male. Any measure therefore which seeks to grant equal marital rights to both sexes and to impose on them equal obligations of chastity, affection and faithfulness, with equal liabilities and reliefs for their breach, must run the gauntlet of this formula and be prepared to be denounced as unsacramental and un-Hindu.

The word Sacrament is a sublime word of high significance and holy associations. No one with proper religious feeling would like to belittle its spiritual value or speak of it with irreverence. But in the mouth of the die-hard champion of unsacramental child-marriages, of man's unholy legal right of infidelity to wedded wife and of woman's irremediable bondage to man under every kind of cruel circumstance, even this holy word loses its sanctity and becomes less impressive than the blessed word "Mesopotamia"—and even less inspiring than the unscriptural modern word "Bunkum."

We are not concerned to defend the character of the marriage systems of the west.—It can very well take care of itself. The western people are at least a living race of lively men and women who can wisely mend themselves according to their needs. Those of the East who love to gloat in the thought that the western woman is hopelessly bad and shut their eyes to the highest and best in human nature that she has proved herself capable of by her own strength and self-respect in every department of life including the domestic, may be pityingly left to draw such miserable solace as their prurient fancies may offer to their wounded political pride. There is the loss, and not of the strong-minded, self-reliant staunch and high-souled women who abound in the west and whose existence is sought to be ignored in petty dudgeon and senseless prejudice. For they deliberately shut themselves off from the complete light of truth and brotherliness and recklessly throw away their wholesome faith in human virtue and end by making themselves incapable of self-improvement; becoming as ghoulish and despicable in their putrid researches and inventions as the virgin Mayos and other organised pests which befoul and poison the atmosphere of the East with their vile propaganda seeking to hamper the surge of human freedom and rendering the task of social reform unnecessarily hard in this country.

By all means let us preserve the sacramental character of Hindu Marriage. Marriage is indeed a solemn event in the life of man and woman. May divine grace be humbly invoked with solemn ritual and may it flow in abundance on the devoted couple by every channel that religion can open up for them. May their mutual vows be blessed. May their plighted troth have more far-reaching legal consequences and be more irrevocably binding than a mere contract. But, for God's sake, let us not make a cynical farce of the Marriage sacrament by forcing into it innocent children unfit even to enter into an ordinary contract or by forging legal fetters for the female from which the male is left entirely scot free. If Hindu Marriage is to be a sacrament let it be one which is self-accepted with full understanding of the consequences by the marrying couple. And let the legal effect of the sacrament weigh equally on the male as on the female. But if extra-sacramental considerations are admissible for relaxing the law of the sacrament in the case of the male, let the same considerations avail mutatis mutandis to give relief from the sacramental law to the female.

It is not a pleasure to have to displease the pious people of our race to whom we belong and who belong to us. But it is necessary to know what it is that appeals to them in the present day Hindu system of marriage as partaking of the nature of a sacrament. Do they call it a sacrament because a bride of three to eleven and a bridegroom of six to sixty sit tearfully rubbing their eyes before the uncomfortable smoke and heat of the sacrificial fire while an unlettered priest chants away amidst deafening beat of drums and music, in a language which not even he understands, the holy words of invocation as well as the noble words of courtship and response and mutual promise which a marrying couple of properly mature age were expected to address to each other in ancient days? The graduate groom purchased at great price is left legally free to set aside unceremoniously his loving and obedient wife and marry again if the cut of her face is not quite to his taste, or if her parents are not duly humble and serviceable to his own, or if their presents are not plentiful and frequent enough to please his self-esteem, or if she foolishly fall ill for months and tire out his patience, or even for no reason at all except to gratify the malicious whim of a masterful mother jealous of her influence with her cub. The unfortunate wife has no remedy but to weep and pine. She cannot refuse to live with her husband along with her co-wives without offending the law. No amount of humiliation, embarrassment and harassment consequent on her husband's remarriage or keeping of concubine somewhere and no physical ill-treatment which falls short of being demonstrable in a court as "habitual" cruelty endangering her health or personal safety, would legally justify her in voluntarily quitting her husband's roof. If she leaves she not only runs the risk of starvation and ignominy but is liable to be forced back into the custody of her incensed husband and jealous co-wives by the decree of a civil court in a suit by him for restitution of conjugal rights. If she refused to obey the decree, the courts had till recently the power to commit her to the civil jail and can even now reduce her to destitution by seizing any property she may possess. She cannot plead the husband's later marriages or acts of immorality and insult which made life feel a burden to her in the husband's home as a valid excuse for living apart. But she may be turned out of the house any time at the husband's sweet will. To struggle for restitution of conjugal rights would under the circumstances be a tragic farce and the only feasible relief is to accept a miserable allowance to keep body and soul together, but that too cannot be had in most cases except after much contention through court. Humane and enlightened public opinion and neighbourly commiseration have simply to stand by wringing their hands in utter helplessness in the face of a law which gives such autocratic powers to the husband. Even a mighty member of the Viceroy's Executive Council must, if he is a Hindu, quake before the vagaries of his almighty son-in-law who may be a petty official or a village clerk or a mere nobody, more especially if he is a nobody.

It is of course entirely out of the question to make any amount of immorality, cruelty or desertion on the husband's part, or any other earthly reason whatsoever, a legal ground for freeing the woman from her marriage bond. No divorce laws, no divorce possible to an injured wife, absolute and unquestionable rights of practical divorce, polygamy and concubinage to the pampered husband, silent suffering to the ill-fated woman, no explanations, and no washing of family linen in public courts or scandalous reports in the public press as in the shameless west: Such is the immaculate glory of the Hindu marriage sacrament as conceived by the pious men who proudly oppose and witheringly denounce every attempt at social legislation in British India.

But what is there to be proud of in a sacramental law which lends itself to so much inequity and unhappiness? If the race is still able today to hold up its head as a civilised community, it is because through the merit of its past it has managed somehow to produce within its fold a surprisingly high proportion of godly men worthy of their ancient heritage, who do not succumb to the temptations of the degenerate sacramental law of the present day and do not allow it to deflect them from taking a lofty view of their marital duties and from living noble and virtuous lives. There can be no valid reason to suppose that this high proportion of good men will dwindle or vanish if legal obligations also are put upon them to be virtuous and fair to their wives, or that they would be unfairly hit if freedom to secede from man's dominion and partnership is accorded to woman when he unfairly makes her wifely position intolerable. It is the fundamental constitution of society which makes or mars the freedom and happiness of woman in the aggregate, not the accidental goodness or badness of individual men. Mankind, it is said, is governed by names. But it is time that the entire womanhood of India rose up in determined revolt and repudiated the unholy pretensions of selfish mankind to entrap and crucify the Hindu woman in the name of the marriage sacrament.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN INDIA.

( BY DR. CLIFFORD MANSFORD. )

( Concluded from the last issue. )

The study of comparative religions has also had its effect. The early missionary was convinced of the absolute supremacy of the Christian message. "God had revealed himself in part to the Jew, His final and complete revelation was reserved for the Christians. Christianity alone was true, all other religions were false, and their leaders but leaders of the blind." The natural result was denunciation rather than appreciation. Of late there has been a shift. Christianity is seen as one of various approaches to God, though the great majority of Christians are convinced that it is all the superior. The other world religions are tolerated, but they must all be fulfilled in Christianity is the "crown of all". The figure is that of a triangle with religions placed one on top of the other in the order of their relative goodness with Christianity occupying a lone position at the top.

With the concession of the toleration of other religions as an opening wedge, a few missionaries prepared to advance a bit further and to declare themselves in favour of mutual respect and cooperation. They would replace the figure of the triangle and its horizontal divisions absolutely dividing religions, with the graph, endeavouring to show the high ethical positions, the low ethical positions and the common elements of all religions. They would reject the materials having little or no value for progressively developing the good life, and concentrate their attention upon the materials, drawn from whatever source, giving promise of more fruitfulness.

Having accepted such a position the issue comes to the fore whether the missionary can continue to be a missionary in the accepted sense of the word, namely a proselytiser, endeavouring to persuade men of other religious faiths to enter into the fellowship of his own. For some, the orthodox position is becoming increasingly difficult.

The writer happens to live in India. During the past centuries nations have risen and fallen, reformations have been followed by counter-reformation, religions have flourished and perished, but Hinduism has remained. It is true that popular Hinduism is grossly superstitious. It does not help the matter any to point out that religious superstition is also found in Los Angeles and in New York itself. But it does help the matter when one endeavours to analyse the Indian situation. To attribute the ills of India to Hinduism is a far too simple solution of the problem. Probably the two greatest curses of India today are illiteracy and poverty. I say this advisedly, for in my opinion illiteracy and caste go hand in hand. Certainly among educated Indians there is not the same caste bigotry that is found in the Indian village. Neither illiteracy nor poverty can be attributed to religion alone. To say that the poverty of India is due to the religious veneration of the cow is a striking, but ill-founded particularism. Lack of proper rainfall, inadequate fertilisation, lack of proper farming instruments—these are but a few of the contributing causes of Indian poverty. And schools cannot be run without money. Government, Indian leaders and missions are working at the educational and economic problems. Industry is beginning to lend its assistance in sharing the excessive burden hitherto born by agriculture alone. No immediate relief looms upon the horizon, but looking into the future there is reason to hope that the extreme poverty and illiteracy will in some measure at least be ameliorated. And as these two enemies to Indian progress disappear we may also expect a corresponding religious revival.

Philosophic Hinduism has produced some rare souls. I need mention but a few. Passing from the mediaeval saints to modern times we have Raja Ram Mohun Roy making the endeavour to separate essential Hindu religion from its accretions, fighting idolatry and polytheism, coming out in favour of social reforms, and advocating education both for men and women. We have Devendranath Tagore, finding a pure theism in the Upanishads and promulgating a more or less definite theory of the intuitive knowledge of God. We have Keshub Chandra Sen endeavouring to establish a universal and cosmopolitan religion upon the foundations laid by Ram Mohun Roy and Devendranath Tagore. We have Ramkrishna Paramahansa, of whom Swami Vivekananda said his mission in life was "to proclaim and make clear the fundamental unity underlying all religions," and who taught the doctrine of the motherhood of God. We have Vivekanand himself, endeavouring to carry forward the teachings of his master, Ramakrishna. We have Swami Dayanand Saraswati, the founder of the Arya Samaj, with his passionate desire to purify Hinduism and to get back to the religion of the Vedas. We have Ranade, social servant, religious leader, and patriot and many others. These men have opposed the wrongs of untouchability. They have stooled for education. They have worked for social reform. They have brought their religion into life.

Shall the missionary oppose these attempts to reform Hinduism from within, or shall he co-operate with them? Co-operation does not mean that the missionary becomes any the less a Christian. A man is no less a patriot because he sees beyond the bounds of his own village. He does not cease to be a citizen of his nation when he begins to think in terms of world brotherhood. Nor does he cease to be a Christian as he thinks in terms of religious unity. As he works in and through the old-world faiths he finds his Christianity becoming richer. He is now labouring with the people of the nation instead of for them. There is no necessity for the missionary to bear all the burdens of Indian society. Educated India has accepted social and religious maladjustment as its own problem. For years to come the missionary can stand shoulder to shoulder with socially minded Indians and will be welcomed as a co-operator and friend.

"But," the objection comes to the fore, "What of the Church?" Yes, what of the Church? The Christian Church in India is a fact. It is growing in numbers and it is growing in influence. The Church could not be blotted off the Indian horizon even if it were deemed advisable that it should be. But the Christian Church can be purified. Instead of endeavouring to secure numbers of converts, the missionary has a most fruitful field of work in helping the existing Church to become a real spiritual power house. Petty strife, jealousies, intemperance, superstition and ignorance must be banished before the Church can stand as a city upon a hill, or can act as the salt that gives savour to the earth. Under the co-operative conception of missions the function of the Church ceases to be that of proselytism. It becomes the building up of a rich spiritual life within and the strengthening of the social body without. And as the Church lives its own gospel converts will come. But there is a difference between accepting mature men and women with definite convictions and baptising the masses. There is a difference between giving guidance to spiritual seekers and to collecting together the widows and orphans.

Idealists in all lands are longing for a new world. We do not hesitate to drink Indian tea, or to accept the contributions of so-called non-Christian lands to our material well-being and happiness. We do not regard the spheres of art, literature and science as closed to any foreign influences. But when we come to religion we draw the line. Perhaps this accounts for much of the religious weakness that we find in the world today. Be this as it may, some minds are questioning. For some the missionary issue has shifted from converts to co-operation.

His Excellency the Bishop:—His Holiness the Pope has conferred the title of Excellency upon all Catholic Bishops. The English Catholics, however, have decided to keep to the present titles of "His Grace" for an Archbishop and "His Lordship" for a Bishop, but the Examiner wants the new title to be brought into use in India. It writes: "In India the popular association of the title 'Excellency' with 'one who governs,' or the chief authority, is a strong reason, in our opinion, for using the new title conferred by the Holy See. The object of conferring that title was precisely to distinguish those in the hierarchy who are directly concerned with the 'government' of the Church, and that object is certainly fulfilled in this country by giving bishops the same title of 'Excellency,' that is given to the Viceroy and to Governors." In India, not only the Viceroy and Governors, but also the former's wife, and the Commander-in-Chief are entitled to be addressed as "Excellency." Governors' wives too, used to be addressed in the same way, but this has been officially banned though unofficially the practice still persists. How a Bishop will be benefited by being burdened with this epicene honorific, we are unable to understand!

TARI OR BEEF?

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In public life questions often crop up when silence is more expedient than the expression of one's life-long convictions. But I am afraid that it is just on those occasions that for a self-respecting man self-effacement is purchased at too heavy a cost of the disregard of conscience. Terrors of unpopularity never deter honest workers from giving their views to the public.

One such problem at present is the wanton destruction of palm trees and the other the too often malicious picketing of tari shops. (I abhor the Anglo-Indian hybrid toddy.) It is now axiomatic that no human efforts, however prolonged, at imposing prohibition on mankind in general have succeeded. We have the examples of modern Europe and America before us. Then there are Russia and Turkey. All have tried and all have failed in bringing about the taboo on intoxicants. The thirteen centuries of Islam, which has employed prohibition as a religious ordinance, the mightiest force known to us have proved abortive.

The Parsis have plied this trade ever since they are known to history in this country. Neither the Hindu nor the Musalman rulers ever forbade the trade. These rulers themselves were scarcely abstainers. Their bacchanalian feasts will live long in man's memory. And it is not the Parsis alone who carry on business in tari. We note with surprise that from time to time reformers like Gandhiji, and even our sympathetic friend Mr. K. Natarajan, exhort only the Parsis to give up the liquor and tari trade. I confine myself only to tari. For it is about this trade that the complaints are most genuine and most serious. It is now beyond question that through whatever causes, it is the Parsi *tari*vala who is the particular point of the picketers' concentration in a given locality. The Hindu Bhandari is comparatively immune from their evangelic attentions!

Two wrongs do not make one right. The flourishing trade in other liquors may not excuse the trade in tari if it was immoral. But when we have several social cankers, is it not incumbent on us to tackle the greater ones, and the more vulnerable ones, first? Have any of our social reformers thought of picketing the ganja, bhang and charas shops? Is the consumption of opium sternly discouraged? And are not these drugs more ruinous than tari? Have any of our zealous friends thought of picketing the houses of ill-fame?

Let me ask the associates of Gandhiji one question. Is it their conviction that the consumption of tari is a more potent evil than the slaughter of thousands of kine everyday of the year, and the consumption of enormous quantities of beef in this pastoral and agricultural country of ours?

Who ever pickets the lawyers' offices? Are not these the dens of "licensed free booters" in the language of the late C. R. Das? Who turns away the frequenters of billiard rooms and cabarets? Where is the campaign against congregating at cinemas where our youth learn their first lesson in bank frauds and secret assassinations, bomb throwing and conspiracies? I ask Mahatma Gandhi if it is not himsa ruthlessly to cut down verdent flourishing living trees with their beneficent foliage? And what is the direct result of the reckless devastations? Only the multiplication, enormous multiplication, of illicit stills, smuggling and the dissemination of poisons labelled stimulants?

And now glance at the credit side of occasional use of tari. Relatively few advantages can be claimed for their favourite vices by the elixirs of drugs. On the other hand, it is therapeutically demonstrated that tari contains essential vitamins. They are the suppliers of vital principles. They are almost infallible remedies against certain diseases. The palm tree itself, every fibre of it, is an asset to our poor country. There is no comparison between the deleterious effects, if any, of tari and the colossal economical loss sustained by the slaughter of cows. I do not take into consideration the shock to the religious susceptibilities of millions of Hindus and many Parsis generated by the knowledge that beef is an article of food and that the killing of cows to procure it goes unhindered in a land where the cow is worshipped. Can we not appeal to the Mahatma to turn the picketers away from the tari shop and on to the slaughter houses and the beef stalls? It is feasible wholly to do away with cow flesh as an article of food. In Indian states ruled by Hindus it is unknown. In Kashmir the accidental death of a cow or a bullock entails penalties, the weight of which appears to us to be ridiculously disproportionate to the crime. All Rajputana knows little of beef.

It is almost impossible to extirpate, even if it was desirable, the occasional indulgence in tari and be it noted that tari is more a food than an exhilarating beverage. An Emperor of China once took into his head to uproot all his vine plants throughout his vast dominions. No more stupendously radical endeavour at enforced sobriety than this has ever been conceived. And yet China has not been a land of teetotalers!

Let the palm tree be spared. Let an impossible and futile campaign be arrested in time. Its concomitants are unnecessary harassment; its consequences avoidable economic loss.

G. K. N.

[We do not approve of the cutting down of trees, toddy or other, except to make room for more useful purposes. Fresh, unfermented toddy is innocuous, probably beneficial, but fermented toddy comes within the category of intoxicating drinks. The fact that Parsis have clung to this business for many years, does not seem to us to have any bearing on its merits.—Ed., J. S. R.]

MISSIONARIES AND NON-CHRISTIAN ENDOWMENTS.

The Editor, Indian Social Reformer.

Dear Sir,

During the last few weeks I noticed the discussions of Mr. Edwards, a missionary, and Mr. Parekh, an Indian Christian, and attacks by Indian Christians upon missionaries for what they are pleased to call misrepresentations of Indian life. It must strike non-Christians as yourself queer that attacks of that sort should come from such a quarter. To me this seems to come chiefly from an overflowing of the patriotic feeling, something in itself admirable when kept within reasonable measure, but in danger of being detrimental to other high ideals when one becomes intoxicated with it. At times of political stress every nation gets into that condition.

I do not claim that missionaries are an exclusive class of saints where there are none who should not be there, or others who have not traits of character which they should not have, or some who do not make mistakes, though quite unintentionally they may be. I appreciate the claim of Indian brethren to be treated anywhere in the world with the same respect as their foreign brothers are treated, and that without respect to caste or creed. In fact, I always argued against the idea of inherent superiority of any race, be it Eastern or Western.

But it surely is not correct and fair to construe our appeals for help on the basis of the need as we see it in India, medical, economical and religious, as an attempt to discredit India in the eyes of the world. To get help one must show the need. I always try to point to the good things in India and the good characteristics and great achievements of Indian people along with the present needs of India. And I try to point out that such books as 'Mother India' do not give a true picture of India but just a very one sided description.

As a whole I believe missionaries are grateful for all the enlightenment that they possibly can get from their Indian brethren on real Indian life and thought and even the criticism will help us to learn and profit in our relations with Indian people. But we do crave the same spirit of fairness and consideration that is expected of us. This is something which I admire in your paper. It helps toward a better understanding and fellowship inspite of difference in convictions.

As for hospitals, I suppose you will concede that those in charge have the right to manage them as they see fit, provided the funds are given voluntarily with that understanding. Peoples of all castes and creeds are treated alike in the mission hospitals no matter whether they accept the gospel they hear there or not. Gifts from Hindus are not used to preach or pay for preaching the Christian gospel. What is the wrong in this?

625 E. Oklala Ave.,
Enid, Okla.,
7th April, 1931.

H. A. FEIERABEND.

[We had closed this correspondence. But the letter was written before Mr. Feierabend could have read our notice. Therefore, we publish his letter.—Ed., I. S. R.]

STATUS OF WOMEN IN FUTURE INDIAN CONSTITUTION.

The National Council of Women in India, the All-India Women's Conference and the Women's Indian Association welcome and endorse the Declaration of the fundamental rights of citizenship in India under the future constitution, made by the accredited leaders of the nation namely:—
"Equal rights and obligations of all citizens, without bar on account of sex.

No disability to attach to any citizen by reason of his or her religion, caste or creed, or sex, in regard to public employment, office or power or honour, and in the exercise of any trade or calling."

This Declaration of the fundamental Rights of citizenship in India having been made, the recognition of women's equal citizenship in all matters relating to franchise, representation, or employment, has become an accepted principle. The present Memorandum is, therefore, concerned only with the actual methods by which women may be enabled to exercise fully their legitimate rights.

The women of India, on the basis of their admitted and declared equality demand that in actual practice no disqualifications or conditions shall be laid down for the exercise of the rights, whether of voting at public elections, or candidature for seats on Legislative or administrative institutions, or holding of public offices, or employment, which would, in effect, bar or even hinder women from taking their full and equal share of civic rights and obligations.

The experience of women under the existing constitution makes the foregoing demand imperative. In spite of equality in theory, they suffer in practice from a grave inequality owing to the right of voting being conditioned by property-holding, or other similar qualification, ordinarily inaccessible to women in India. Though the Resolution of the Indian National Congress declares for an immediate acceptance of the principle of Adult suffrage, it may be argued that the first step towards the adoption of the principle in practice actually, might require the exercise of the right to be conditioned by some qualification of the type mentioned above. We cannot but point out that though under such a practice, the theoretical equality of men and women citizens might be maintained, the position of women will under the existing social systems be rendered wholly unequal, since it is a well-known fact that very few women hold or own property in their own name, or right. Even if the property qualification for voting or candidature is made nominal, women are likely to suffer so long as our social system remains what it is. As compared with men, very few women would have even nominal property in their own name and right. And as a very considerable proportion of the Adult women of India, are married or widowed, their voting rights, would on a property basis of any kind, have to follow the corresponding rights of their husbands, or late husbands.

There is another difficulty to be considered in this connection. Even if the franchise system permits a wife or widow to have the same voting rights as the husband, that position will not commend itself to the educated and thinking women of India, in as much as it makes women's citizenship contingent on her relationship,—past, or present—to a man, for a very large proportion of women in India. We are strongly of opinion that the elementary rights of women as human beings should not be based on an extraneous factor like Marriage.

If a literacy test of any kind is introduced, as a condition precedent for the exercise of civic rights, women will be at a still greater disadvantage, in as much as there is a far greater proportion of literate men than women.

Age Limit.—And if, as is likely, and necessary, some age limit is fixed for the exercise of such rights, the handicap on women will be still further increased, since there are, relatively speaking, fewer literate women above the voting age, than there would be below that age.

The conditioning of the right of Franchise, therefore, by property or literacy qualifications, would be fundamentally inconsistent with the Declaration of Rights quoted above.

In these circumstances, the National Council of Women in India, the All-India Women's Conference, and the Women's Indian Association consider the immediate, unqualified, and unconditional adoption of the principle of Adult Franchise to be the best and the most acceptable mode of assuring political equality between the men and the women of this country. They consider all conditions or qualifications or tests, for the exercise of this right whether based on property or literacy, to be needless impediments in the enjoyment by women of civic equality.

Recommendation :—They accordingly recommend that :

Every man and woman of the age of 21, should be entitled to vote and to offer himself or herself as a candidate at any election to an Administrative or Legislative Institution.

Representation :—We are confident that if this practical equality is secured for women in the matter of Franchise, they will be able to find their way in the Legislative and Administrative Institutions of the country through the open door of ordinary election. No special expedients for securing the presence on women on those bodies, like reservation or nomination or co-optation would then be necessary. The women of India have no desire to seek any specially favoured treatment for themselves, as long as their full and equal citizenship is recognised in practice as it is in theory.

It is but a corollary to this practical equality between men and women that women should be eligible, as much as men, and on the same conditions, for all grades and branches of public services, as they are entitled under the Declaration of Rights, to equality in the exercise of the trades, professions, and employment.

As distinguished from the qualifications, etc., for voting, in which the women of India demand an absolute and effective equality, the disqualification, for the exercise of civic rights, should be purely personal. A woman's relationship to a man, or the disqualification, if any, attaching to her male relative of any degree, should in no way prevent her from exercising her legitimate rights.

Chimnabai Gaikwad (H. H. Maharani of Baroda),
President, National Council of Women in India.

Muthulaxmi Reddy (Dr. Muthulaxmi Reddy),
President, All-India Women's Conference.

Tarabai Maneklal Premchand (Mrs. Maneklal
Premchand, Acting Chairman, N. C. W. I.

Hilla Rustomji Faridoonji (Mrs. Rustomji Faridoonji.)

S. Hamid Ali (Mrs. Hamid Ali).

S. Faiz Tyabji (Mrs. Faiz Tyabji).

Ammu Swaminathan (Mrs. Swaminathan, Women's India Association).

Malini Sukthankar (Dr. Mrs. Sukthankar),
Social Secretary, A. I. W. C.

Laxmibai Rajwade (Rani Rajwade),
Organizing Secretary, A. I. W. C.

Hansa Mehta (Mrs. Hansa Mehta),
Honorary General Secretary, N. C. W. I.

BUDDHA JAYANTI.

A distinguished gathering of ladies and gentlemen was present at the Bai Yamunabai L. Nair Charitable Hospital, Byculla, on the occasion of the opening Ceremony of the Anand Vihara and to consecrate the memory of Bhagwan Buddha's 2555th Thrice Sacred Day on Saturday the 2nd May 1931. H. H. The Maharaja Saheb Gaekwar of Baroda was to have opened the Vihara; but in the unavoidable absence of the Maharaja the opening ceremony was performed by the Rev. Ottama. Mr. M. R. Jayakar, Bar-at-law, presided over the function. Among the distinguished persons present were Sir M. Visweswaraya, lately Dewan of Mysore, Sir Lallubhai Samaldas, Dewan Bahadur V. T. Krishnamachari, Dewan of Baroda, Dewan Bahadur K. M. Javeri and Mr. Madgaonkar, ex-Judge of the Bombay High Court, Consul General of Jugo-Slavakia, Rev. Rao Kai of China, L. R. Tairsee, R. Nana Shankar Seth and many other distinguished Indian, Burmese, Ceylonese, Chinese and Japanese personages.

On the request of Dr. A. L. Nair, the President of the Buddha Society, Rev. Ottama declared the Vihara open. Dewan Bahadur Krishnamachari then read the speech of the Maharaja regretting his absence, which dealt with the great teachings of Lord Buddha. His Highness's speech will be published next week.

Prof. Dharmanaud Kosambi thanking Rev. Ottama for performing the opening ceremony recalled what the Maharaja of Baroda had done during the last quarter of a century for spreading the teachings of Lord Buddha, in India. He said that the principle of Ahimsa was preached by Parshva at least three centuries before Buddha. What Buddha did was to put it into practice and to socialize it. He drew the attention of the audience to the pride with which eastern countries like China and Japan looked at India and added, the only way to make India great, was to put Lord Buddha's teachings into practice. Sjt. C. Muchhala, the Hon. Secretary of the Society, then read out a number of messages, which included those from Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Nawab Sir Hyder Jung Bahadur, Sir Raghunath Rao Sabnis, Dr. Rajabally Patel, Mahabodhi Society, Madam Wadia, etc.

The Rev. Ottama then delivered a sermon on Buddha's Life and teachings. Sir Lallubhai Samaldas proposing Sjt. M. R. Jayakar to the chair eulogized his services to the Society and to the country. Prof. N. K. Bhagwat seconded and Sjt. Jayakar occupied the Chair and delivered his presidential address:—

Mr. M. R. Jayakar in the course of his Presidential address congratulated Dr. Nair on his public spirit and said that the opening of the Anand Vihara was the crowning glory of his life, other similar acts of his being the opening of a Medical College and the opening of the Hospital. He had that day dedicated to the public of Bombay a really useful institution which he hoped would be largely availed of, by the religiously inclined people. A Vihara meant that place where religion "sportively dwells" in the sense that there, it is unhampered by convention, sect or religion. The fact that it was in the heart of a city like Bombay added to its importance and usefulness, for the obsessed and tired-out man in life could well turn his attention to the institution and find solace and peace within its walls. The greatness of Buddhism lay in the fact that it was spread without the sacrifice of a single life or the spilling of one drop of blood. The great features of Buddhism that made a direct appeal to people were its simplicity, its conception of life that it was a gift to every living being whether man or beast for self-expression and self-development and lastly, its freedom from ritualism and superstition. These characteristics made it simple, accessible and practicable. It was a God-blessed religion because it did not recognise a separate God and believed each man and woman to have God in him. Mr. Jayakar hoped that like the old Viharas this one would help people to realise more and more the affinity between man and man and of life and life. He believed it would dispense with sectarianism and bring about real unity and harmony.

Dewan Bahadur K. M. Javeri, on behalf of the Society thanked Sjt. Jayakar for presiding at the gathering. Dr. A. L. Nair the President of the Society garlanded Sjt. Jayakar and the meeting came to a close.

On the whole, the Jayanti occasion proved a very great truth that the people of India are anxious to receive back the Buddha amongst them and to learn his Teachings and the Buddha Society with its President, Dr. A. L. Nair, has been gradually making head-way in the work of educating the people in the life and teachings of the Bhagwan Buddha and creating a suitable atmosphere for this willing reception of the Bhagwan.

A MEDICAL MAN'S LAPSE.

"Here is a young Brahmin woman of good education and character summoned by a doctor to accompany him on what must be considered a case where medical assistance is most urgently needed by another woman. He occupies to her a position of authority because as a chairman of the hospital committee much must depend upon his good report. She is induced on the plea that another woman urgently requires her services as a woman doctor to accompany him in his car in the night and she is indecently assaulted and left to find her way home at night alone and unprotected, while this man who abused the authority of his profession goes home to sleep. It must be made clear that young Indian women who are engaged in municipal services in the districts either as doctors or in other social service are not the prey of the non-officials. I am not passing the sentence in anger or indignation which the circumstances must arouse in any decent man, but this is a bad case and there are aggravating circumstances, and the public interest demands that I should pass a sentence which would leave no room for doubt and misunderstanding. I convict the accused of assaulting the complainant with intent to outrage her modesty and sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for one year." In these words Mr. G. Davis District and Sessions Judge, Ahmedabad, passed sentence on Balubhai Harishankar Bhatt, a Brahmin medical graduate of the Bombay University practising at Nadiad, who was charged with abduction of, and assault on Miss Ahalya Bai Samant, a lady doctor in charge of the female ward of the Municipal Dispensary at Nadiad.

The prosecution story was that in the early hours of December 8 last, the accused, who was then a member of the municipality and chairman of the Sanitary Committee of the same municipality and therefore occupying a position of authority over the complainant, who is a young Brahmin lady aged 25, came to the lady in his Baby Austin car and sought her assistance in a labour case at the village of Marida. The complainant agreed to go with him if her cousin Balkrishna accompanied her. Before however, her cousin could get in the car, the accused drove off not on the road towards Marida, but towards Saloen and after having gone some way indecently assaulted her. The prosecution further stated he was under the influence of liquor. The complainant left the car and hid herself first behind a tree and then in a dharamsala and arrived at Nadiad next morning. Her saree was torn and her person bore injuries caused by scratches and thorns.

The accused contended that, while he was driving with the complainant towards Saloen, where there was a labour case, the car met with an accident on the way and that he caught hold of the complainant to save her from harm. She was frightened and hysterical and had left him. At the call of duty he had gone to Saloen with his companion and on return he was too exhausted to inquire personally whether the complainant had returned home.

After reviewing the prosecution evidence at length, the learned Judge observed that the complainant would not have agreed to go to a court of law, but for the action of one Bapalal a member of the Nadiad Municipality and "a man of thoroughly bad reputation" and who, he had no doubt, with a fellow scoundrel named Pir Bax, another municipal councillor, "had gone into the business for what they could get out of it". The fact, however, that two members of the municipality are such scoundrels that they tried to make money out of the plight of the complainant and the fact that a young Brahmin lady is unwilling to go to court for the sake of her good name and who is content only if the doctor, another municipal councillor, should no longer be in a position of authority to molest her, was no reason why when the case came to court, the doctor, if the offence was proved, should not get the punishment he deserved; nor did it throw any doubt upon the truth of the lady's statement.

Disbelieving in toto, the differing accounts of the alleged accident given by the accused, the learned Judge said there was no accident at all and that the subsequent conduct and the statements of the accused were incompatible with his innocence. When he returned home he made no inquiry of the well-being of the complainant whom, he says, he had tried to protect. The statement that he inquired through his servant is false and he carefully avoided the complainant when an opportunity for searching her on the return of her mother and another, doctor was afforded.

The Judge further was of opinion that the accused, under the influence of liquor indecently assaulted the complainant, whom he had required to accompany him on a pretext only more or less true and whom he had left to find her way home as best as she could possibly do. "It is needless to say anything regarding the helpless position of the complainant, taking into consideration the time and place where the offence was committed and the profession of the accused that only a serious view can be taken of his offence."

The Judge accordingly passed sentence as above.

ADVERTISEMENTS

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.
PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for electrical engineering college opening at Bombay. Preparation for London City and Guilds examination. Railfare Paid. Prospectus on 2 annas stamps.—Technical Institute of India, Ltd., Delhi.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest an i safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of

OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

Branches: { BULLION EXCHANGE.
(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.,
BANDRA.
CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent, on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Moksana, Dabhoi, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amroli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadl, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	Rs. 60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	80,60,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vitthaladas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Hazanlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
 Mr. Ratna Bhallal Dajibhai Amin B. A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manlal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)
 Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.)

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock on moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced ½ per cent. and ¼ per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

1-3-26.

O. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

—101—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY
 DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
 POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 ANNS

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
 CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

aramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Bira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirale ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaiwas ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Bohad (District Panh Mahals).
Paighar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akni (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Viramgaon (District Ahmednagar).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital	Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay
 Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling
 at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other
 coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
 Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,
 10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes:

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents:—

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance:—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital (Paid up) ... Rs. 71,21,0

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,5

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bomba

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJAN PAIN BALM PRODUCE BEST RESULTS

IN

Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.
AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

—A SAFE—
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women
India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul

Rs. a.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

" " Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single copy ... 0 3 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed.)

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine value of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY. 24, BRUCE STREET, FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 70.

CHECK AND DOUBLE CHECK

8 Reels, featuring

AMOS 'N' ANDY IRENE RICH AND SUE CARROL

R. K. O. Picture.

KISSES

2 Reels, LYNNE OYERMAN

Paramount Talking Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 34 and 35.

THE BAD ONE

8 Reels, featuring

DOLORES DEL RIO AND EDMUND LOWE

United Artists Picture.

LADIES MAN

2 Reels,

Fox Movietone All Talking Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

BERT LEWIS

1 Reel,

Popular comedian accompanied by JACK CARROL at the Piano.

Warner Bros. Picture.

DAWN PATROL

12 Reels, featuring

RICHARD BARTHELMESS, DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS JR. & NEIL HAMILTON

First National Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

DOMESTIC TROUBLE

6 Reels, featuring

LOUISE FAZENDA AND CLYDE COOK

Warner Bros. Picture,

SUITE HOMES

2 Reels, A JAZZ VERSION OF O'HENRY STORY.

Fox Comedy.

TIME:—Sat. 6 P.M. Variety Entertainment in aid of RUSTOM BAUG GYMKHANA AND 10 P.M. CINEMA.

Sun. 4-30, 6-30 and 10 P.M. CINEMA. | Mon. to Fri, 6-30 and 10 P.M. CINEMA.

MATINEE AT ALL THE THEATRES ON FRIDAY 29th MAY (BANK HOLIDAY).

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, MAY 30, 1931

No. 39

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Mr. Munshi on Federation. The Better Way. Hindi in South India. Mahatma Gandhi and the Round Table Conference. Mahatma's Reasons. An Unhappy Illustration. Chestity and Purity. Divorce Among Hindus. Muslims and Central Responsibility.	An Unsavoury Case. What Buddhism Teaches. Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. IX. India To-Day. Political Hypochondria? Arya Young Men's Conference. In 1928. American Churches on Birth Control. American Interest in Mahatma Gandhi.
--	---

NOTES.

Mr. Munshi on Federation:—Mr. Kanaialal M. Munshi gave an admirably lucid exposition of the kind of Federation which Indian Nationalists can accept without reservations, statutory or mental. His views so closely approximate to those expressed from time to time in these columns that it is not necessary to repeat them. He is not altogether pleased that the Gandhi-Irwin Pact has committed the country—has it really?—to a federal form of Government. Even the full federal scheme which alone Indian Nationalists can accept, is inferior to the Unitary system, and many will agree with Mr. Munshi that it can be accepted only as a half-way house in the road to a compact national government. Mr. Munshi has no difficulty in showing that the Princes had in principle agreed to real Federation, and he is surprised at Sir Manubhai Mehta's attempt to whittle it down to a Confederation. Mr. Munshi's paper is a well-thought-out pronouncement which deserves to be widely read. There are two contingencies likely to arise that have to be considered. The first is, the possibility of the confederation plan being adopted in opposition to nationalist opinion. In that case, Mr. Munshi thought that "British Indians will be driven to resort to stirring up a kind of revolution in the States." And, headed, "If the States' representatives combine with the Governor-General, British India will have again to commence a desperate struggle by means of direct action before it can achieve real freedom."

The Better Way:—This, of course, is to be avoided as far as possible. It would be better, in our opinion, for the British Indian delegates to obviate this contingency by declining to participate in the Conference if the Princes do not adhere to their promise to come into a regular Federation. The other contingency will arise, if Indian Nationalists carry their point and the Princes decline to come into the Federation. Mr. Munshi did not touch on this possibility which has, indeed, become a probability during the last few weeks. Our suggestion is that we must then drop the idea and concentrate upon the unitary plan for British India. We are told that if the Princes stand out, we cannot get responsibility in the Central government. Mr. Ramsay Macdonald said he was willing for his own part to give this even without the States, but the other British parties were opposed. It is, then, the business of the latter to get the Princes to fall in with British India. But British India cannot agree that her right to responsible Government is contingent on the action of the Princes who, until Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru 'popped the question' in the London Conference, were not in the picture at all. Let us not forget that the grant of responsible government to India is as much a necessity from the British as from our point of view. This British statesmen fully realise, but Moderatists like Sir Chimanlal Setalvad can not.

Hindi in South India:—The editorial note in the Reformer of the 9th May with this heading, would seem to have been understood as depreciatory of the value of the work of the Dakshina Bharat Hindi Pracharak Sabha. This was certainly not our intention. We have ourselves obtained the Hindi primers published by the Sabha and found them well designed to assist students in learning the Hindi language. Nor do we under-estimate the value of a working knowledge of Hindi to Indians to whom it is not their mother-tongue, as Hindi in some one of its many variations, is understood in most parts of the country except in the extreme south. The admiration which we expressed for the efforts of the Sabha, was perfectly sincere. What we took exception to was the reflection cast on the young men, of want of firmness of purpose, while the fact that many of them left off after a month or two, was obviously due to practical reasons. This difficulty is not an insurmountable one, and may be overcome by conversational circles in Hindi, like similar circles for French and German in Bombay. Our other objection was to the Fascist method of gagging people who cannot speak Hindi, employed at the Karachi Congress and threatened to be employed on a larger scale in future. But the Dakshina Bharata Hindi Pracharak Sabha is not to blame for this zuber-dastism. Perhaps, it was our tacking on our protest against it to the use of Hindi in South India, that led to the misunderstanding.

Mahatma Gandhi and The Round Table Conference:—We reprint elsewhere a leading article from the Toronto Star which has been consistently friendly to Mahatma Gandhi. Our Canadian contemporary uses the identical arguments almost in the same words that we used in expressing our doubts about Mahatmaji going to the Round Table Conference as the sole Congress delegate. The latest news is that he is prepared to go immediately to London even if the communal problem remains unsettled but in that case he will only state the Congress point of view, and will not participate further in the proceedings. We do not think this feasible. When Mahatmaji says that such and such is the Congress view, some one may ask for explanation of this or that detail, and he cannot explain without "participating" in the Conference. Moreover, it is not necessary for him to go personally merely to state the Congress view. A considered statement drawn up in consultation with his colleagues, may be sent by post, and from the point of view of expenditure of money as well as energy, this is even more economical than Mahatmaji going personally. If Mahatma Gandhi goes to London and returns disappointed, as under present circumstances it seems as likely as not, the extremist sections will at once gain the upper hand and the country will be swept into another civil disobedience campaign which may not be non-violent to the same extent as the last one; whereas if he remains at the base here, there may be some chance of further negotiations for a peaceful settlement. "The place of the leader," it has been well said, "is not at the van of a movement, but just ahead of the central force."

Mahatmaji's Reasons:—In view of the difference of opinion about Mahatma Gandhi's going as sole Congress delegate to the Round Table Conference in London, we reprint his reasons as stated in Young India. He writes: "The idea behind it was that what was to be presented was not several points of view but only the Congress view. The Congress view was set forth in the mandate. What was not in the mandate was to be covered either by a letter of instructions from the Working Committee or instructions received from time to time. Either therefore the whole Working Committee should be appointed or only one member holding its power of attorney. The latter arrangement thus easily became the best, most efficacious and most economical in every sense of the word. For not only would money be saved but energy. What is more, Congress could not afford to keep away from the country without sufficient cause its best workers for any length of time. It is the implicit belief of Congressmen that in the end it will not be work at the Conference that will bring Swaraj; it can only be work in India that can do it. Not the ability of the delegation will tell at the Conference but the power behind it. It was further thought that the Congress delegation was not designed to enter into or examine details but to discuss and examine principles and their application. And whether at the end of the Conference it was to be peace or war, every available hand was needed in the country. We want all our men and women in the country to avoid war. For the best way to ensure peace is to push up the constructive programme and to implement the conditions of the provisional settlement. Moreover the reader should know that the people directly affected by the settlement are not at all satisfied with the way in which the agents of the Government are carrying out its conditions. Constant vigilance on the spot is therefore necessary."

An Unhappy Illustration:—By way of comment on our enquiry, with reference to Mr. George Joseph's protestation about Christ's Commandment to proselytise, about the attention paid to His other Commandments, the Catholic Leader writes: "This is not the first time that the Reformer fails to perceive the obvious distinction between the commandments of Christ and His counsels of perfection. The former are obligatory on all, the latter are meant for an elite in the Church who desire to follow Him more closely. Christ expressly pointed out to His followers the two special counsels of perfection, chastity and poverty and added: "He that can take it let him take it." (Matt. XIX. 12)." Our contemporary's illustration is not a very happy one. Jesus Christ had, in reply to the Pharisees, declared that to divorce a wife except for fornication was adultery and also for the divorcing husband to marry another wife. His disciples, who were listening to the conversation and who, strange to say, seemed to have been taken unawares by their Masters' declaration, exclaimed on hearing it: "If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry." It was in reply to the disciples' remonstrance, that Jesus spoke the words quoted by the Catholic Leader. The full text is as follows: "But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's wombs: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs, of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it."

Chastity and Purity:—Jesus was evidently referring in the last sentence to a then existing practice and not confounding, as the Catholic Leader does, a physical deprivation with a moral virtue. The following from the Encyclopædia Britannica shows that early Christians, too, understood this saying literally. "Voluntary eunuchs who emasculated themselves, or caused the operation to be performed on them, for the avoidance of sexual sin or temptation, appeared in early Christian ages, its votaries acting on the texts Math. XIX. 12 verses 28-30." Jesus Christ attached far less importance to physical chastity than to moral purity, and that, perhaps, is, His greatest contribution to the ethical progress of the human race. What He probably meant by the words quoted above, was that a man had a greater chance of realising the kingdom of Heaven within him by being faithful to his marriage vow than by emasculating himself as some zealots did in those days. It was a rebuke to the disciples who thought that it would be better not to marry if men were not free to divorce their wives, as permitted by Moses, practically whenever they liked. Peter had a mother-in-law who figures in the Scripture and, presumably, therefore, also a wife, though no mention is made of this lady in the Bible. Some of the other disciples also were probably married men, and Jesus, as He often did, was indirectly rebuking them for their "hardness of heart," while appearing to answer the hypocritical question of the Pharisees.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
BOMBAY, MAY 30, 1931.

DIVORCE AMONG HINDUS.

The Times of India has found out that the very idea of a Hindu woman divorcing her husband seems to give the shivers even to most social reformers. Our contemporary pours ridicule on the Hindu marriage as a sacrament. Marriage is a sacrament not only among Hindus but also among Christians and, during the debate in the Legislative Assembly on the Sarada Bill, some Mahomedan speakers maintained, to Mr. Jinnah's surprise, that it was so in Islam also. To make fun of sacraments is not "good form" and many people, even though they may have no religious scruples, will not think well of one who scoffs at the sacred beliefs of his fellow-men. When it is a question of extending self-government to India the Times is oppressed by doubts and fears but it is ready freely to extend the blessings of the divorce court to Hindu wives. Freedom of the citizen in India is not of much account to our contemporary except in the single particular of his freedom to drink, which is sacrosanct. Indian social reformers have long realised the need for providing by legislation for the relief of Hindu wives in certain cases involving real hardship without detracting from the sacramental character of the marriage institution. Their object, after all, is to reform and not to deform much less to destroy Hindu society, and they are in the best position to judge how a diseased part can be cut away without injuring a living society at a vital point. In this case, the difficulty is entirely due to the wrong interpretation by the British Indian Courts of the Hindu law which had provided safeguards, amply sufficient to protect the dignity and relieve the hardships of wives, and these, if applied, as all law should be, with due regard to the growth of the social conscience in a community, would obviate the necessity for special legislation.

MUSLIMS AND CENTRAL RESPONSIBILITY.

The Working Committee of the All-India Muslim Conference, at a meeting held at Delhi last week, is reported to have resolved to call upon the Muslim members of the Round Table Conference to refuse to agree to the introduction of responsibility at the Centre until and unless the minimum demands, as embodied in the resolution of the All-India Muslim Conference, have been conceded. Even if these demands are conceded, however, responsibility at the centre may still be a long way off as there are other interests such as the Princes, Sikhs and British Commerce and Finance who also have their minimum demands which must be conceded before any step can be taken. When all these minimum demands have been met and every body conciliated, the British Government may discover that the international situation is not propitious to part with their responsibility. It may also happen that after all the minimum demands have been conceded, what remains behind will be only the shadow of responsible Government hardly worth all the trouble and expense involved in its attainment. The assumption underlying all these demands seems to be that some body is desperately anxious to get responsibility at the centre or for that matter at the circumference, even though the price to be paid may reduce it to a mere name. So far as we know, there is no one who answers to this description. We cannot, however, see how the absence of responsibility at the centre, will particularly benefit Muslims. If, however, responsible Muslim leaders really believe that they are better off without than they would be with responsible Government, it is their plain duty to stand by the present system instead of making terms for helping to end it.

AN UNSAVOURY CASE.

The Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay delivered judgment on Wednesday in the case in which a Sergeant and a sepoy of the Bombay Police were charged with having made remarks offensive to the modesty of some young women when under Police custody in connection with the late Civil Disobedience movement. The trial of the case occupied several days. Some people are inclined to think that the case need not have been brought at all, as the chances of bringing home their guilt to the accused in such cases are very remote, while the aggrieved parties are certain to be exposed to the annoyances incidental to appearance in Police Courts. We do not share this view. The young women who came forward to lay their complaints before a public Tribunal, well knowing that they had not a pleasant prospect, showed themselves to be possessed of true public spirit. The accused in this case owe them a debt of gratitude for giving them the opportunity of clearing their character before a Court of Law. We are bound to accept the learned Magistrate's verdict acquitting them of the offence with which they were charged, but not the arguments by which His Worship justified it in his judgment. One of these struck us as odd when we read it in the speech of Counsel for the defence, and it did not strike us as less odd when we saw it repeated in the judgment of the learned Magistrate. The girls had complained that when their names were being registered at the Police Station after arrest, the Sergeant remarked: "Oh, there are so many unmarried girls and I am a bachelor. I can get one. Oh, pretty sweet lovely misses, what can I say?" The defence Counsel said and Mr. Dastur repeats in his judgment that these are words "which could not have been used by an English speaking witness." We do not know. All English-speaking persons do not derive their English, as Mr. Dastur seems to think, from standard authors, and many, even among men, with pretensions to education nowadays, seem to acquire theirs from the music hall rather than from the library. If the Magistrate would glance at a catalogue of gramophone records, he will find that not every one who is supposed to speak the tongue which Shakespeare spoke, professes to hold the faith and morals which Milton held.

WHAT BUDDHISM TEACHES.*

(By His Highness THE MAHARAJAH GAEKWAR.)

When the President of the Buddha Society requested me to perform the opening ceremony of the "Anand Vihara", I thought it my duty to accept the call and it has indeed been a most pleasant duty to me to have had the opportunity of associating myself today with an undertaking of this noble nature whose sole object is to promote the cause of humanity. Having to go on a tour of inspection to Okhamandal, I was at first feeling a little nervous about my being able to be present here today, but I am glad that I have been able to return in time and to fulfil my engagement.

As you all know, the essence of Buddha's teachings is the great respect he attached to life, irrespective of caste, creed or sex, in the pursuit of the path of emancipation by training, controlling and purifying the three avenues of action—body, spirit and mind.

A good deal of the success of the faith is due to the order of monks founded by Buddha and it was the Sangha which first ensured for this religion its great vitality and its rapid spread, the members repeating the three refuges, namely to the Buddha (intelligence) to the Dharma (Law) and to the Sangha (the Assembly) and taking vows of abstaining from all that is unhealthy and wicked. Gautama tried to start an organised life in the Sangha and through the members of that body, he disseminated his teachings. He defined the scope of religion as active charity and cultivation of good thoughts and destruction of evil ones. He awakened all the classes to a sense of the real duty that they owed to man and all living creation. He started Viharas to localise the activities of the Sangha, by providing means of education, imparting of religious instruction, opening of hospitals and doing all kinds of humanitarian work. The Viharas, for a long time, fostered a healthy spirit of fellow feeling, encouraged arts and proved to be centres from which social, religious, moral and intellectual movements spread in all directions.

I should have liked to say something on the growth and decline of Buddhism and compare it with other religions; but in doing so, I shall only be taxing your patience which I do not wish to do. I, therefore, wish to confine myself to making only a few observations.

If we make comparison of the great faiths of the world, we learn that they mostly arose as a protest against religion over-run by superstition and priestcraft. Zoroaster protested against the superstition of his time and country. The first tenets of Christianity were appeals to revert to the true spirit of Jewish faith. The mission of Martin Luther was to preach the return to Christianity as taught by Christ himself. The mission of Shri Shankaracharya was to restore and purify the different Hindu sects which had grown old feeble and degraded.

*Address read by Dewan, Rao Bahadur Krishnamacharya, at the opening ceremony of Anand Vihar on the 2nd instant, on behalf of His Highness the Maharaja who could not attend owing to indisposition.

"The old order changeth, yielding place to new.
Lest one good custom should corrupt the world,
Thus God fulfils himself in many ways."

So, the Faith of Buddha was his noble doctrine promulgated as a vigorous protest against the gross superstition and priestcraft of the Brahminical order which preached "Karma Kanda" and the vain attempt to attain salvation by asceticism and the worship of idols. Even the modern movements preach in the same spirit of healthy reform.

Long had Buddha felt that life is vanity, full of suffering and full of sympathy and he, the son of a king, secretly stole away from the palace, renouncing rank, wealth and family joys and betook himself to the pursuit of philosophy and religion. He practised severe penances to acquire superhuman wisdom and power but convinced of the futility of the exercises, he was seized with the temptation to return to his home and worldly affairs but at last, the light broke upon him, as he perceived that in self-conquest and universal love, lay the true path of salvation. The instant, he became the BUDDHA—the enlightened one.

Strange to say, the faith of the Buddha no longer prevails in the land of his birth but his doctrines have left an ineffaceable mark on the country and today, he is regarded on an "Avatar".

Just as the Founder of the Christian Church inaugurated his mission by the Sermon on the Mount, so Gautama Buddha expounded the essentials of his doctrine in his first discourse in the deer park at Gautama, "setting in motion the wheel of the law". There are two aims which men should renounce: complete absorption in those things whose attractions depend upon the passions on the one hand, and the practice of asceticism on the other, which is painful—but there is the middle path—the golden mean—which opens the eyes, bestows understanding and leads to peace, to insist, to the highest wisdom, to Nirvana. So judged certain men with their finite powers of knowledge. It is the eightfold path: right views, right aspirations, right speech, right conduct, right mode of livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness and right rapture.

What we want is Peace. The means to attain it are loving kindness and Ahimsa or harmlessness. Hatred cannot cease but by love. Overcome evil with good. This is the essence of true religion.

The teachings of Buddha are gloriously simple and worth following. His doctrines have been the consolation in life and death, to untold millions, softening wild and savage races, by tender words of loving kindness, raising the despairing to higher things and sharing the blessedness of the Noble Aryan middle path.

In these days of strife and the clashes of races and religions, we are in need of the ethical, humanitarian and altruistic aspects of religion. To achieve this ideal in a cosmopolitan city like Bombay, there would be no better institution than the 'Anand Vihar.'

There can be no higher religion than Truth which alone leads to happiness. Establish the truth in your mind, for the Truth is the image of God.

Ladies and gentlemen, I do not wish to detain you longer. Dr. Anandrao Nair's has been a labour of love; the college, industrial works and the charitable hospital named after his mother are all living examples of his humanitarian and charitable ideals and this splendid building which I have the honour to open has been the crowning glory.

I congratulate Dr. Nair and the Buddha Society on this, their great work. I trust that this symbol of Buddha's greatness and self-sacrifice will be an incentive to many others to follow in their footsteps, to the best of their abilities. I hope this institution will be a source of consolation and inspiration to the poor and suffering and afford a quiet retreat to those who stand in need of peace.

I have much pleasure in declaring the VIHARA open. I thank you, Dr. Nair, for so kindly inviting me to perform this function. May this bring peace and happiness to all.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. IX.

(BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI.)

Unlike the Rao Bahadur Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai Committee of Baroda who had to deal only with the property rights of Hindu women, the Hindu Law Reform Committee of Mysore had the whole field of women's rights open to them. By their terms of reference, they were to examine in all aspects "the question of improving the position of woman under the Hindu law, inclusive of any other incidental points that might arise in connection with it". But, for some reason, the Committee interpreted the scope of their work to be confined to an examination of the rights and disabilities of women under the Hindu law in such matters only as "inheritance, the order of succession, joint family incidents, maintenance, stridhana, the nature of woman's estate, their powers over property, etc." They have accordingly omitted to tackle the most fundamental problem of women's rights, namely, the problem of marriage in its incidence on women's personal happiness, freedom and status in the Hindu family, without solving which all talk of the emancipation of Hindu women is bound to remain mere moonshine.

This is for instance the question of the right of the Hindu female to unmarried freedom during the entire childhood, uncoerced by parental or communal authority. The Mysore Infant Marriage Prevention Regulation of 1894 has done good work in its day, but obviously not quite up to the mark as its very name discloses. The Committee's views and proposals as to the minimum age within which no female shall be hurried into the marriage bond would have been invaluable as laying the foundation for her improved human status. So also their views and proposals on the maximum marriageable age of a bridegroom where the bride is a minor and as such incapable of exercising her free choice or giving her free consent to her marriage with an old man chosen by her guardians.

It is, however, matter for satisfaction that a Bill closely modelled on the Sarda Act of British India for restraining child marriages is to be introduced in the Mysore Legislative Council by Diwan Bahadur Sir K. P. Puttanna Chetti, Kt., C. I. M. The Draft Bill is said to have been published by the Mysore Government to elicit public opinion. One salient departure from the Sarda Act is indicated in the press report. While adopting 14 years for a female and 18 years for a male as the minimum age of marriage as in the Sarda Act, Sir Puttanna Chetti seems to be in favour of giving some latitude to parents and guardians in certain cases. It is proposed that "the marriage of a girl who is under 14 years of age and above 12 shall be valid if her parent or guardian obtains the sanction of the principal court of jurisdiction upon an application stating the circumstances under which he is compelled to solemnize the marriage." We wish we had more light on this point. It is not so much a relief given to parents and guardians as an opportunity given to pretentious busybodies in the community to put pressure upon every parent and guardian to perform the marriage of their girls under cover of this proviso as soon as the twelfth year is completed. It is doubtful if the word 'valid' in the above quotation is accurately used. It seems to imply that the marriage of a girl below 12 would be void according to the proposed Bill. If there is really such a provision in the Bill we would welcome it but 14 must be the limit. Although it may involve some hardship to the ignorant till the law is well promulgated there is no other effective way of preventing the deliberate circumvention and practical nullification of the law by interested parties. The hardship may be relieved later on by a special Validation Act for legitimatising all marriages performed in ignorance of the new law during a period of three to five years or more from the passing of the Act, or by some other legal contrivance. (Cf. the Indian Christian Marriage Act of 1872 and the Marriage Validation Act of 1892.) But it is essential that breach of the law shall entail some automatic civil consequence apart from the penal liabilities which require the immediate vigilance of others for their enforcement. It will strengthen the backbone of parents marvellously in overcoming their vague fears of the displeasure of caste people.

The Mysore Ladies' Conference has favoured the raising of the marriageable age of girls to 16. It would be a great pity if the proposed Bill practically exempts from its penalties those who bring about marriages of girls below 14. In any case it is to be earnestly hoped that criminal prosecution for breach of the law will be made primarily the duty of the State itself. Parents who would gladly postpone their daughters' marriage if only the law could be relied upon to take notice of every breach and punish it systematically, are at present obliged to join the law-breakers through fear of that nebulous but all pervading "orthodox" caste opinion which cannot be safely ignored by any single individual on his own responsibility until the law asserts itself and makes itself uniformly and inevitably felt by all. To rely on the private spite of individual citizens to set the law in motion against delinquents is unhealthy. It makes the administration of the Act not only precarious and uncertain but makes it hateful as a weapon of vengeance and blackmail. To rely on the public spirit of individual citizens or unofficial organisations to bring offenders to book is equally futile. Among the generality of Hindus it is considered highly meritorious to bring about a marriage and thus help to set up a new home or prop up an old one. This humane and fine sentiment of helpfulness has been so exaggerated and perverted in the course of ages that it has now come to be considered highly meritorious to bring about a marriage even by fraudulent and improper means, however harmful it may be to the female concerned. "Tell a thousand lies if need be, but help to tie a wedding knot." So runs the popular adage. Although this is not literally followed or approved by the cultured. It can be easily seen how odious to the Hindu mind is the task of kicking up a row and dragging people to court over a marriage already accomplished and which the law itself dare not declare to be invalid. Even High Court Judges find such an incongruous position obnoxious to their sense of decency. Mr. Justice Walsh of Allahabad expressed his abhorrence of it in another connection in the following terms: "The result seems to be that at present according to the law in Madras a valid Hindu marriage may be a criminal offence both on the part of the principals and those who celebrate it. I cannot accept this consequence." (I. L. R. 40, All. 393). Even personal spite quails before the withering contempt of popular opinion such a fuss as ridiculous and unseemly, if not sinful. To demand besides a cash-deposit of Rs. 100 from the complainant as a guarantee of his good faith is to make this naturally odious and humiliating task so onerous as to scare away any little public spirit a decent man well-disposed towards the law may happen to possess.

Let the State provide itself with accurate and reliable birth records and make it compulsory for all citizens to notify the marriages performed by them, just as it is compulsory, or should be compulsory, to report to the appointed Registrars all births and deaths occurring in the family. And let it be made the special business of some state official to collect information and collate facts and records and launch necessary prosecutions to vindicate the law and protect our helpless female children from the rapacious hands of unscrupulous merit seekers and bride catchers whom the parents feel powerless to resist owing to the time honoured custom which compels them to give away their daughters in marriage at any cost before they attain puberty.

(To be concluded).

INDIA TO-DAY.

(By J. CHINNA DURAI, Bar.-at-Law).

Has India advanced during the past few years? Put this question to a Congressite and he will answer it in the affirmative and most emphatically too. I think he will be perfectly justified in coming to such a conclusion, for to him, 'India' means 'Political India.' That India has progressed politically few would deny and the whole world is certainly aware of the "Political Renaissance" that is sweeping the country with a whirlwind pace. Boys and girls, men and women, and even old men and old women have been converted into thinking for good or evil that the only thing that counts in India is "Politics". In fact the whole atmosphere in India from the Himalayas to Cape Comorin and from Calcutta to Bombay is surcharged and saturated with 'Politics' to the exclusion of everything else—all credit to that great missionary Mahatma Gandhi—whose name posterity shall acclaim as the greatest in political history and whose political genius far outshines the military prowess of the greatest general in years past and perhaps in years yet to come.

But put the same question.—Has India advanced?—to a rational Indian who has travelled wide and has observed the advance and progress of the countries of the West where the ordinary men and women do not care a rap for politics and where indulgence in such an unprofitable game is looked upon more as a luxury than as a necessity and where none the less general conditions are more prosperous than and infinitely superior to India. He will doubtless answer it in the negative and perhaps feel perfectly justified in his negative assertion, for, his mind unlike his compatriot's is not so obsessed with 'Politics' which he not only considers is not 'everything' but believes—and believes firmly, that there are other things, besides, which ought to receive equal attention if India should aspire in the near future to take her place among the great civilized countries of the World.

So, it will be seen, on the question of the progress of India, there are two different schools of thought—the 'nationalist' who sees in the present political upheaval, signs of India's general advance and progress and the 'rationalist' who after his experience of more enlightened countries cannot be persuaded to see any progress whatever in India. The question now arises as to who is right and who is wrong.

To an Indian with an international or world outlook, India is a great disappointment. To him it seems as though the national edifice of India known as 'independence' is being built on slender foundations almost analogous to building St. Paul's Cathedral on a foundation scarcely sufficient and suitable to hold and sustain an Indian Teddy shop. Other countries started from the bottom with such things as education, enterprise and industry not to speak of their social, cultural, religious, intellectual and economic uplift as the foundations and attained 'Purna Swaraj' as a matter of course which, when they got, they were able to preserve and maintain by virtue of their fitness and ability against the whole world. But India alone is acting contrary to universal practice. Her motto seems to be, 'Purna Swaraj first—and all the rest afterwards.' In other words she is anxious to erect the edifice without caring to dig out the foundations. Thanks to Mr. Gandhi the 'edifice' seems possible even without a foundation, but the spirit of Gandhi which is certainly working miracles in India at the present day cannot be expected to lead India eternally. What of India after Gandhiji? The average Indian does not possess even one thousandth of the grit, courage, initiative, foresight, intelligence, education, tact, and political genius of the Mahatma not to speak of the millions of Indians who are ignorant, illiterate and uneducated. It is to these people the destinies of India will be handed after our present political 'stars' who are so few in number, fade away. What of India then? Who is to support the edifice? The 'foundation' was neglected in a hurry to put up the 'building'—and Gandhiji who had supported it with the strength of a Samson is not there any more to prop it. If the edifice falls as it is bound to fall, will it not mean a voluntary abdication of victories so ably won for us by the sweat and blood of Gandhi?

Therefore, I think, it is time another Gandhi appeared on the scene—a social Gandhi, as distinguished from our famous political Gandhi who shall carry everything before him in the social world and be the means of bringing about a 'social renaissance' in India—a Gandhi who shall lose no time in putting up a 'foundation' for the 'edifice' that our Mahatma is erecting. In the advent of this Gandhi lies the real hope and salvation of India. All things considered, India is as backward to-day as Europe was prior to the days of Julius Caesar—illiteracy is still rampant. Communal strife and caste prejudices, superstitions and silly customs are still the order of the day. Cities and homes are terribly lacking in grace and beauty and insanitary conditions combined with general uncleanness make things unbearable. Poverty, disease, sickness, mortality, deliberate nuisances on the road, the incalculable "Beggar problem" and the manner lepers are let loose on public thorough-fares, strike horror to a casual observer from the West. Life in the villages and even in most parts of towns and cities and the treatment of women smack of semi-barbarism. The people do not seem to have either ambitions or aspirations and are sadly wanting in initiative, industry and enterprise. Economically the country is in a deplorable state. In short there are a thousand and one other things that can be said to the discredit and shame of India in comparison with the other civilized countries of the world—but lest the enumeration of them make the task of our "Social Gandhiji—to-be" seem difficult of fulfilment I desist from so doing.

Social Gandhi! Wherever thou mayest be—let not the stupendous nature of thy task frighten thee. Come out of thy seclusion—and I assure thee thou shalt have as good and mighty a following as thy revered brother—the Mahatma. India needs thy services—and needs them very badly.

POLITICAL HYPOCHONDRIA?

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.
Sir,

It may be one of the symptoms of political hypochondria to imagine oneself to be surrounded by enemies, but surely the words "the Hindus have three enemies: their own weakness, Islam and Christianity" do not seem to be uttered by a man suffering from a like disease.

For one thing it is a fact borne out by past history as well as by recent happenings that there was no love lost between these two great communities of India namely, the Hindus and Muslims.

The past history of India teems with examples of Muslim tyranny over the Hindus, of their cruel ways of conversion, and of religious fanaticism and intolerance. Some of the Moghul Emperors were notoriously ambitious of converting all Hindus to Islam and of establishing a sort of colony in India. The substitution of Islamic—such as Hyderabad, Allahabad, Doulatabad—for the ancient Hindu names of holy places associated with the great traditions and legends of the land, the demolition of temples, the breaking to pieces of idols are ample testimonies of motives behind their establishing a dominion in India—motives namely of imposing their own culture and their own religion on the "timid and mild" Hindus.

This much about past history which however we shall forget.

But supposing that we did our best to forget these old memories of oppression and to let bygones be bygones, do we find any substantial improvement in the attitude of the Muslims towards the Hindus today?

Maulana Shaukat Ali "the man of peace"—did he not say that the Muslims all the world over want to make Jerusalem the centre of Islamic culture? Thank heavens, he did not as yet feel the necessity of making Benares the "centre of Islamic culture"!

Again, is it not rather a significant fact that while the Hindu leaders ask us to forget the tale of past oppression, the same "man of peace" was reported to have asked his co-regionists not to forget that Muslims ruled India for upwards of three centuries?

These remarks, I take it, are but instances of the same narrow-mindedness and religious fanaticism as was in vogue in the times of the Moghul Emperors.

Yet this is not all. The Muslims in India have been the least influenced by Hindu culture. This is because they have sedulously kept themselves aloof from everything that is Hinduistic. The Indian Muslims speak their own language. Their dress in certain respects is peculiarly their own. The Indian Muslims will never take part directly or indirectly in the religious festivals of the Hindus while on the contrary the Hindus attend certain Muslim festivals such as the Urs, and the Mohurrum and in certain places wholly conduct them.

This separatist tendency is not confined to one field of activity but to all,

Even today many daughters of low caste Hindus are found to be married to Muslim youths, but no Muslim girls are ever reported to have been married to Hindu youths.

These are sufficient indications to acquaint one with the mentality of the Muslims.

Now let us turn to the Indian Christians.

I have seen both Christian Mahars and Muslim Mahars and it is my impression that while a Christian Mahar is invariably an improved man both from the point of view of cleanliness and behaviour, a Muslim Mahar is not only a degraded Hindu but is generally anti-Hindu in spirit. Again what a world of difference is there between the methods of proselytising as practised by the Christian Missionary and the Mohammedan Maulana. Indeed as I read your caustic comments about the work of Christian Missionaries and think over the question of proselytisation I become puzzled in my mind as to whether the Missionary is after all so very serious a menace to Hinduism as the Muslim Maulana.

The Christian Missionaries are all invariably polite gentlemen. Their polished ways of behaviour, their sense of discipline, their regard for the observance of social etiquette and above all their readiness to help others—are indeed very strong points in their favour.

Again the Indian Christian, too, is by instinct more akin to the Hindu. His masculine proclivities are not so notorious as those of his Muslim neighbour. Most of the Christians speak the language of their Hindu neighbours and where they are not taught to dress differently by their Gurus, dress like Hindus. They also share many aspirations of the Hindus. In short the Indian Christians are nearer to us Hindus than our so-called Muslim brothers.

These are some of my personal observations and experiences.

In the light of these remarks it is in my opinion unfair to attribute the fears entertained by Dr. Moonje to his being affected with "political hypochondria."

Yours etc.,

M. S.

Dated 23rd May 1931.

[ Assuming for the moment that our correspondent has correctly represented the Doctor's reasons, we may point out that all of them are wrong. We are glad that our correspondent does not regard the record of ancient and medieval Muslim rulers as a reason for distrusting present day Mahomedans, and he might have spared himself the trouble of recalling them. As for Mr. Shankat Ali's desire to make Jerusalem the centre of Islam, we do not see why any Hindu should take offence at it. Jerusalem is the immemorial sanctuary of the Semitic peoples and for some time even after the commencement of the Prophet's ministry, it remained the principal Holy Place of Islam. Mecca was later substituted, on the ground that the retention of Jerusalem led to Islam being confounded with Judaism. If the Maulana wants to restore Jerusalem to its original status, it is a perfectly legitimate desire and no non-Muslim is entitled to object.

Our correspondent says Indian Muslims have been least influenced by their Hindu surroundings. This is an extraordinary statement seeing that, except a small minority in Upper India, Mussalmans dress and live like their Hindu neighbours, speak the same vernaculars, practice child marriages, follow a system of caste, have in one sect at least adopted the doctrine of avatars, and among the higher social strata eschew beef and observe the restrictions against the remarriage of widows. Our correspondent compares the Mahar convert to Islam with the Mahar convert to Christianity, to the disadvantage of the former. In respect at least of one vice, namely, drink, the Christian is on a distinctly lower plane than the Mussalman. Our correspondent is also mistaken in his view that Mussalman religious missionaries are less gentlemanly than Christian missionaries. The former were in many cases saintly men revered as such by the whole countryside, as the sadhu idea is common both to Hindus and the Mussalmans. We do not think that the Muslim masses are less near to the Hindus than the Christians. As a fact they are closer, which facilitates abduction which is one of the indictments against Muslims in some parts of the country. In one case which became public owing to the action of the Hindu Rescue Home in this city, a pujari having occasion to go to a neighbouring village, left his young daughter to the care of his Mussalman neighbour whose servant kidnapped her and brought her to Bombay. To those who know the real facts, the Hindu-Muslim problem is the creation of some scheming Anglo-Indian officials in high place and their organs in the Press, who feel that their only chance now is to play off the two communities against each other. The game cannot be indefinitely prolonged, and, therefore, our advice to our political leaders is to spare themselves and let the social forces settle the so called "problem". Ed. I. S. R. ]

ARYA YOUNG MENS' CONFERENCE.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT)

Presiding at the 19th annual session of the All India Arya Youngmen's Conference held on 9th May in Ganga Prasad Hall, Lucknow, L. Deshbandhu Gupta, Director daily "Tej" Delhi, delivered an important address, in the course of which he held that in Vedic Dharma as professed by Arya Samaj there was the fullest scope for patriotic minded youngmen to work for the achievement of freedom. To liberate the country from the shackles of slavery was, he declared, the first and foremost duty of every follower of Rishi Dayanand. He could not conceive of a true Arya Samajist who was not a true Indian.

Exhorting the youngmen to participate fully in the struggle for Swarajya, he remarked that Arya Samaj stood far above other religious bodies in its fearless advocacy of India's right to freedom. If proof were required to support this contention ask the adversary himself, said the speaker, look into the early and confidential despatches of the Government, and you will come to know how the Government in Northern India interpreted the various activities of the Arya Samaj. Time and again, it was described by some highly constituted Government Officials as a political organisation working under the garb of religion, for political ends.

In a free India, Arya Samajists will have just cause to feel proud of these allegations.

Touching the question of the social reforms, amongst other things, he urged the necessity of discouraging joint family system amongst the Hindus. This, he said, was responsible to a great extent for the deplorable want of self-reliance, and necessary will, amongst our youngmen to face the difficulties that confront them on every step, in the achievement of higher objects.

He threw out several bold suggestions to the leaders of Arya Samaj to make necessary changes in the mode of their work in the light of changed circumstances. He advocated inter-dining with Mohammedans and followers of other faiths, without giving up vegetarianism. He considered this step would help to pave the way for lasting communal unity to a great extent which was so desirable in the interest of peace and political advancement of this country. Simplify the religion, give up all superfluous rigidities, and keep pace with the march of time in the matters of social and religious reforms, was the valuable lesson, which one ought to take from the fate of Islam in Turkey, observed the speaker. He also suggested the necessity of publishing books containing free rendering of the scriptures in simple Hindi and other languages in use for the benefit of the average people. It did not stand to reason to insist on holding the daily prayers and other religious ceremonies in Sanskrit regardless of the fact whether one understands or not the import and meaning of the mantras which he recites. Bible in English or other languages was considered to be as sacred as the Hebrew; there was no reason, therefore, as to why a progressive religious body as the Arya Samaj should prove conservative in this respect.

He also dwelt on the immediate necessity of raising the present general standard of the preachers of Arya Samaj. It was quite imperative today, both in the interests of the religion itself, and the country, that religious preachers should know the present day sciences and possess a fair knowledge of the affairs of the country along with that of the scriptures.

In the end Mr. Gupta appealed to the youngmen to follow the high ideals of public service, love for their country and Dharma, spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion to the noble cause of serving the humanity at large, laid down by their noble preceptor, Rishi Dayanand.

Andhra Province:—The Times of India's Ootacamund correspondent: Interviewed the Hon'ble B. Muniswami Naidu, Chief Minister to the Madras Government, who is himself from Andhra regarding the agitation which is being carried on the creation of a separate Andhra Province. He said that he was not against the creation of an Andhra Province, but he thought it was premature to agitate for the creation now. Unless the consequences which must follow upon the creation of a separate province of Andhra and the effect this could have upon the Ceded Districts and Orisstoor were clearly understood and provided for it might not be possible to induce these districts voluntarily to come into the Province". At any rate, the creation of a separate Andhra Province," he said, "will entail heavy expenditure and I do not think that the financial effect of the constitution of a separate province can be satisfactorily understood until after full provincial autonomy is granted to the Presidency and the people have got control over the affairs of the country." This is exactly what we said about the separation of Sind from Bombay Presidency.

IN 1828.

Mahatma Gandhi writes in Young India :

Sjt. Satishchandra Das Gupta of the Khadi Pratiathan is editing a Bengali newspaper called Rastra Vani. He recently unearthed a letter addressed to the Editor of Samachar Darpan which was published in Bengali in the twenties of the 19th Century. As the letter was of great importance showing how the Charkha was being slowly destroyed and how it was valued by women in those days, he has published it in his paper and sent me its translation. I am sure, it will be read with interest by all who are at all interested in the Khadi movement. Here is the letter :

"THE REPRESENTATION OF A SPINNER.

"To the Editor, The Samachar.

"I am a spinner. After having suffered a great deal, I am writing this letter. Please publish this in your paper. I have heard that if it is published it will reach those who may lighten my distress and fulfil my desire. Please do not slight this letter from a poor sufferer.

"I am very unfortunate. It will be a long story if I were to write all about my sufferings. Still I must write in brief.

"When my age was five and a half gandas (22) I became a widow with three daughters. My husband left nothing at the time of his death wherewith to maintain my old father and mothers-in-law and three daughters. He had several businesses. I sold my jewellery for his Shraddha ceremony. At last as we were on the verge of starvation God showed me a way by which we could save ourselves. I began to spin on Takli and Charkha.

"In the morning I used to do the usual work of cleaning the house-hold and then sit at the Charkha till noon and after cooking and feeding the old parents and daughters I would have my fill and sit spinning fine yarn on the Takli. This I used to spin about a tola. The weavers used to visit our houses and buy the Charkha yarn at three tolas per rupee. Whatever amount I wanted as advance from the weavers, I could get for the asking. This saved us from cares about food and cloth.

"In a few years time I got together seven ganda rupees (Rs. 28). With this I married one daughter. And in the same way all three daughters. There was no departure from the caste customs. Nobody looked down upon these daughters because I gave all concerned, the Ghatikas and Caste people, what was due to them. When my father-in-law died I spent eleven ganda rupees (Rs. 44) on his Shraddha.

"This money was lent me by the weavers which I repaid in a year and a half. And all this through the grace of the Charkha. Now for 3 years, we two women, mother-in-law and me are in want of food. The weavers do not call at the house for buying yarn. Not only this, if the yarn is sent to market still it is not sold even at one-fourth the old prices

I do not know how it happened. I asked many about it. They say that Bilati yarn is being largely imported. The weavers buy that yarn and weave. I had a sense of pride that Bilati yarn could not be equal to my yarn, but when I got Bilati yarn I saw that it was better than my yarn. I heard that its price is Rs. 3 or Rs. 4 per seer. I beat my brow and said: "Oh God, there are sisters more distressed even than me. I know that all men of Bilat are rich but now I see that there are women there who are poorer than me." I fully realised the poverty which induced those poor women to spin. They have sent the product of so much toil out here because they could not sell it there. It would have been something if they were sold here at good prices. But it has brought our ruin only. Men cannot use the cloth out of this yarn even for two months, it rots away. I therefore entreat the spinners over there, that, if they will consider this representation, they will be able to judge whether it is fair to send yarn here or not.

A representation from a suffering spinner.

Samachar Darpan."

The reader will not fail to observe the nobility of the writer who in her blissful ignorance felt that yarn was spun by the hands of her Bilati sisters poorer than herself and therefore felt for them. Alas, her belief was baseless. She could have stood her own if the foreign yarn had been hand-spun. She could have stood her own even against the foreign yarn, if behind it there had been no policy of determination to capture the Indian trade and kill the national village industry.

AMERICAN CHURCHES ON BIRTH CONTROL.

The statement dealing with the moral aspects of birth control, issued on March 21 by the Committee on Marriage and Home of the Federal Council of Churches of the United States, is published. The report is the result of more than a year's work, during which the committee was assisted by eminent clergymen, social scientists, physicians and psychologists. It is the second of a series of studies dealing with the family. The first, Ideals of Love and Marriage, issued in 1929, laid the foundation for future studies and action.

While the text of the present statement contains majority and minority points of view, the committee is in agreement on the major part of the document. The differences in point of view reflect similar divergence in Protestant opinion and in the medical profession itself. The statement follows:

"Birth control is nearing the status of a recognized procedure in preventive and curative medicine. Knowledge of contraceptives is also widely disseminated, and the question of their use has become one of great social importance. The public therefore has a right to expect guidance from the church on the moral aspects.

"In conception we are in the presence of the wonder and mystery of the beginnings of human life. In this mystery the two mates, knowingly or unknowingly, are acting creatively with God. When so understood, the circumstances and incidents of conception, growth and finally of birth are astonishing manifestations of divine power, and inexpressibly beautiful. To be a mother is seen to be the supreme fulfilment of womanhood, as to be a father is of manhood. It becomes apparent, also, why sex relations are guarded as by a flaming sword, why prostitution is abhorrent to the conscience of mankind, and why the instinct of the race regards intercourse between unmarried persons as immoral and anti-social. A man, said Christ, expressing the pure ideal, is not to harbour the thought of adultery in his heart.

"But in the sex relations between husband and wife we are also in the presence of another mystery. 'From the beginning of the creation God made them male and female,' said our Lord. 'For this cause,' He continued, 'shall a man leave his father and mother and shall cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh.' We have here the passing of shame and the realization of the meaning of sex in the divine economy, which make the union of the two mates a supreme expression of their affection and comradeship. These relations, therefore, have their source in the thought and purpose of God, first for the creation of human life, but also as a manifestation of divine concern for the happiness of those who have so wholly merged their lives.

"The moral problems of birth control have to do with these two functions of sex. They arise in connection with the spacing of children, the limitation of the number of offspring, the safeguarding of the health and oftentimes of the lives of mother and child, on the one hand; and, on the other, they arise in considering the rightfulness of intercourse in itself without the purpose of children, and consequently the rightfulness of the use of contraceptives.

"Physicians have long known that under certain physical conditions of the mother, pregnancy is hazardous to mother and child, and that large numbers of women are so imperilled. Although there are few women who do not desire children, the fear of untimely pregnancy rests as a recurring anxiety upon most married women for two decades after their marriage. Even with a healthy mother and a sound inheritance of bodily and mental vigor on both sides, too frequent and too numerous pregnancies are to be avoided, as undermining the mother's health and as taking her from the care of her living children. When the mother is not entirely well and the endowment is not of the best, spacing and limitations are the more necessary.

"Economic considerations also enter into most cases, and in families where the mother must work outside the home the question of the number of children and of the intervals between them is most acute. Very large families tend to produce poverty, to endanger the health and stability of the family, to limit the educational opportunities of the children, to overstrain the mother and to take from her her own chance for a life larger than the routine of her home.

"The problems of overpopulation are also involved in the consideration of birth control. While overpopulation, with its consequent lowering of living standards and provocation to war, is not likely to become a general condition in this country for a considerable period, and, with the development of science and more Christian standards of production and distribution, may never become so acute as in many countries of the Old World, it is nevertheless now pressing upon great numbers of homes in which the family is too large or the income inadequate.

"As to the necessity, therefore, for some form of effective control of the size of the family and spacing of children, and consequently of control of conception, there can be no question. It is recognized by all churches and all physicians.

"There is general agreement also that sex union between husbands and wives as an expression of mutual affection, without relation to procreation, is right. This is recognized by the Scriptures, by all branches of the Christian church, by social and medical science, and by the good sense and idealism of mankind.

"As to the method of control of conception, two ways are possible. One is the use of contraceptives, or methods other than abstinence, which may be classified as such. The other is self-control or abstinence for longer or shorter periods of time. Both may be considered as forms of birth control.

"As to the rightfulness of the use of contraceptives, Christian opinion is not united. The problem in its present form is a new one. The Scriptures and the Ecumenical Councils of the Christian church are silent upon the subject. The Church of Rome inflexibly opposes the use of contraceptives as contrary to Christian morals. In the Anglican communion opinion is sharply divided, as indicated by the fact that at the Lambeth Conference of 1930 the resolution approving birth control under certain conditions was the only vote during the conference which indicated division of opinion upon a question of fundamental importance. It is known that opinion in the churches of the United States is divided, as is also the medical profession, but nobody knows as yet the prevailing opinion. Under the circumstances, the problem requires unprejudiced study, and guidance should be sought from the Holy Spirit, the Lord and Giver of Life. It should be expected that guidance will find expression through the researches and experience of physicians and men of science as well as through the corporate conscience of the church.

"Whatever the final conclusion may be, the committee is strongly of the opinion that the church should not seek to impose its point of view as to the use of contraceptives upon the public by legislation or any other form of coercion; and especially should not seek to prohibit physicians from imparting such information to those who, in the judgment of the medical profession, are entitled to receive it.

"So far, the Committee on Marriage and the Home is in agreement. But at this point it has been found necessary to express divergent views. Perhaps such honest differences, frankly expressed, may have compensating value in helping Christian people to face the issues involved, especially since they mirror also the perplexity in the public mind.

AMERICAN INTEREST & MAHATMA GANDHI.

America's Support to Mahatma Gandhi:—A special cable dated 15th May, New York, of Calcutta says: America's support to Mahatma Gandhi's success in achieving India's complete independence will be voiced in the Gandhi Testimonial Dinner on the 4th June at Astor Hotel, New York. Amongst the speakers will be Senators. Royal and Copeland, Judges Daniel and Cohalan, Bishop Francis McDonnell, Mr. Raymond Robins and Mr. Sailer Ghose. The programme will be broadcast by 10 to 10-30 (New York time) and can be heard all over the world in the evening.

If Gandhi Goes Alone:—A Canadian friend sends us the following cutting from the Toronto Star paper which has been consistently friendly to Mahatma Gandhi: The editorial appeared in the issue of 7th April. "While one may wisely decide not to accept too readily rumors of a growing disposition in India to find fault with Mahatma Gandhi yet one may have some reason for feeling that the reported decision of The Little Man to proceed to England alone to confer with the British Government as to the future of India must prove to be a mistake. It was understood that he desired to have with him on his journey to London twelve leading countrymen of his, but the report now is that he has changed his mind and means to travel alone, as the sole representative of India, accompanied, perhaps, by only a personal companion or two. Some will feel that Gandhi makes something like a fatal error in departing at all from his natural background and going to England in any circumstances. He remained away from the last conference, with the result that England had to come to him. The advantage which this gave him he relinquishes when he arises from his mat and crosses the seas to London. Two mistakes were made by Woodrow Wilson in connection with the settlement after the great war. One was in leaving his own country and the other was in going practically alone—refusing to take with him representatives of all parties, friendly and unfriendly, to come under the same influences which affected himself and modified even some of his most hard-set opinions. The Wilson lesson for Gandhi is that it is not what he goes away to face that will undo him, but that which he leaves behind. If he proceeds to London alone he will leave behind him at home a number of strong leaders who will feel that they ought to be with him. Some of them who are politicians enough and can afford it will happen to be in London when he is there, and while their presence in London may mean nothing; in London it may be taken to mean much in India. If Gandhi were to succeed entirely in London all might go well with him on his return, but is it remotely possible that he could succeed well enough to satisfy discontented opinion in his own country? It does not seem to us as being at all possible. Gandhi at home, sitting on his mat, against his own background, might be able to sit alone and cope better than any assembly of persons with the difficulties of the negotiations that have to be gone through. But if he goes to London and goes alone he will, we believe, need to perform miracles or lose India."

"Gandhi Limited".—The other point of view is stated as follows in another Canadian Journal. "Gandhi has flabbergasted his Nationalist colleagues in India by naming himself sole delegate to the final Round Table Conference in London. It is true he will be accompanied by ten or twelve expert advisers. But Gandhi alone will have the say for Indian Nationalism. Naturally, ambitious Indian politicians are disgruntled as a result. Their dreams of making fiery speeches—perhaps when Gandhi took his weekly day off for silence—have gone a-glimmering. The little brown man is to monopolize the limelight. Whether or not India will be as well represented as otherwise is a matter for conjecture. Most experienced negotiators are of the opinion that it is a case of "the fewer the better." It is well known that the real work at conventions and conferences is usually done by little groups working in committee. It was Disraeli—himself a master in negotiation—who declared that the best possible committee contained three members, one of whom was always ill, and another of whom was always absent. It is indisputable, of course, that two heads are better than one in devising policies. But devising programs and policies is a different matter from having those programs adopted by an outside interest or party. The great commercial organizations almost invariably send their salesmen out alone. Gandhi is not a salesman. But he is the recognized of Indian Nationalism. His name signed to an agreement in London will be as binding as would twelve such signatures—incidentally it will be much more spectacular—and Gandhi has never dodged his place in a spectacular picture.

ADVERTISEMENTS

MISSIONARY SETTLEMENT FOR UNIVERSITY WOMEN.

Women students' hostel Monsoon term begins on June 1st. Accommodation for University Women students and professional women. European and Indian vegetarian food provided. Charges from Rs. 30 up per month. A bus is provided to take students to and from the College at an extra charge.

Social Training Class under the direction of Miss Wright (M. A. Cantab.) & other classes are held in the Settlement.

Apply to :—THE WARDEN,
University of Settlement
Reynolds Rd.,
Byculla, Bombay 8.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription.	Inland	...	Rs. 2-3-0	V.P.P.
"	Foreign	...	" 2-8-0	Post free.
	Single Copy	...	0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for electrical engineering college opening at Bombay. Preparation for London City and Guilds examination. Railfare Paid. Prospectus on 2 annas stamps.—Technical Institute of India, Ltd., Delhi.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a

HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT

with us and earn 3½% interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE :

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

(BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.,

BANDRA.

Branches : { CALCUTTA.

{ AHMEDABAD.

{ POONA.

{ SURAT.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents :—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 31st December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate rates, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Pottled, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda).
 R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Nalb Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhalla! Dajibhai Amin B. A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alombic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad).
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Ponn.)
 Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26.

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

—:0:—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Anna.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

aramati (District Poona).	Dhulia (District West Khandesh).
Bira ( " " ).	Dondaicha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nashk).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivasa ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhilwadi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Paich Mahals).
Palghar ( " " ).	Kalot ( " " ).
Aklaj (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Viramgaon (District Ahmedabad).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...	Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 3 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Taticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprot Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free dist add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :— Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

AMRUTANJAN PAIN BALM PRODUCE
BEST RESULTS

IN
Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.
AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY & MADRAS.

(REGD.)

—A SAFE—
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—
KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies'
Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindignl.

Rs. a. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ...	5	0	0
" " Foreign ...	5	8	0
Single Copy ...	9	8	0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsarl Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 71.

PLUNDER

11 Parts, featuring

RALH LYNN AND TOM WALLS

British Dominion Film

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 36 and 37.

TITA SCHIPA

1 Reel, featuring

WORLD'S PREMIER LYRIC TENOR

A Paramount Picture.

THE AMERICAN PRISONER

8 Reels, featuring

CARL BRISSON, MADELIENE CARROLL AND CECIL BARRY

British International Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

MEET THE MISSUS

2 Reel, featuring

JAMES GLEASON AND LUCILLE WEBSTER GLEASON

Paramount Christie Talking Play

NIGHT PARADE

8 Reels, featuring

DOROTHY GULLIVER AND HUGH TREVOR

R. K. O. Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

WHY GIRLS GO BACK HOME

6 Reels, featuring

PATSY RUTH MILLA AND CLIVE BROOK

Warner Bros. Picture.

Time:—4-30, 6-30 and 10 p.m.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1931

No. 40

* I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard.
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Sir P. Pattani on Federation. The Time Lag. Mysore Finance. Retrenchment and Education. " Christian Charity." Proselytising Missions under Swaraj. The Hindu Idea of Sovereignty. An Oracular Order. Dr. Moonje's Fallacies. Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. IX.	Rao Bahadur K. Viresalingum Pantulu. Waman Shirodkar. Pitfalls of Retrenchment. Church Missionary Society, Lahore. Hindi in South India. Religion Through Business. Depressed Classes and the Police. Indian Women and R. T. C. Why I am a Social Worker. News and Views.
---	--

NOTES.

Sir P. Pattani on Federation:—An interview with Sir Prabhashankar Pattani, at Bardoli where he has been on a visit to Mahatma Gandhi, on the question of Federation, was published in the Free Press Journal of the 2nd June. Sir Prabhashankar was a member of the States' delegation to the Round Table Conference, and can speak of what happened there with as much knowledge as any other member. It is, therefore, reassuring to see that he has no misgivings regarding the attitude of the Princes. He is certain that, having accepted the principle of Federation, they will in time accept the full implications of the Federal ideal. The States, he pointed out, have a distinctive function and played an important part in the preservation of ancient Indian culture. We wish this was true of all or most of the States as it is of a few. He mentioned almost casually that the States would bring to the Federation an element of strength in the shape of a fully trained army, implying, no doubt, that its control will be vested in the Federal Government. Otherwise, of course, the States' troops will be a danger rather than a source of strength to the national Government. Sir Prabhashankar seemed to suggest that until self-government on a democratic basis was firmly established in British India, the "hut of the Indian States" might be allowed to stand as it is. The metaphor, like most metaphors, ceases to be apt beyond a point. Although it comes naturally to Princes and their Ministers to speak of States as if they were bridges or buildings, to the ordinary man, the mention of States brings up the picture of the people first of all. With great respect to the veteran statesman, we fail to see any comparison between the States and the communal problem. The advice that Hindus should concede Muslim demands for the sake of national peace, it may interest him to know, is resented by intelligent and educated Mussalmans who do not appreciate being treated like spoilt children. They do not want anything beyond what they consider essential to their cultural and religious security, and they are prepared and, indeed, anxious to have these settled by open discussion before all the world.

The Time Lag:—Speaking at the banquet of the Institute of Journalists in London, Mr. Bernard Shaw spoke of "the time lag" as being the great difficulty in adapting institutions to their environment. He explained what he meant by the phrase with reference to himself. "Nature," he said, "has constituted me so that when a thing happens I perceive it has happened. Most people take twenty years to realise it." The reason for this slowness is that events originate as ideas in the human mind, so that it may be said that events happen psychologically long before they are manifest as phenomena. Now, to our mind, the Federation of British India with the States was consummated the very moment that the word was pronounced at the Round Table Conference. The minds of the people of the two Indias rushed towards and mingled with each other, so that today there is only one India psychologically though there may be two or even two hundred politically. No power on earth can prevent this new birth in the Indian mind from growing and manifesting itself on the political plane. We are, therefore, content to wait in patience for the event which is now inevitable. The Indian States Conference, which is to be held next week, will do well to frame its proceedings in a spirit of confidence which is the spirit of moderation. The victory having been won almost without a struggle, our efforts should now be directed to making it easy and pleasant for those who have now the reins of power to hand them over to responsible ministers with the least dislocation of existing arrangements.

Mysore Finance:—The Dewan of Mysore opened last week the Budget session of the Representative Assembly with an address in which he enumerated the various measures proposed to meet the expected deficit. In passing, it may be mentioned that Mysore is perhaps the only State in India which has adopted the sound principle of not taking from the people in any year much more than what is needed for the expenditure in that year and of meeting capital expenditure on public works whose benefits are spread over many generations, by public loans and not from current revenue. This is in itself a proof of the stage to which Mysore has advanced in constitutionalism. Mr. Stanley Rice in his "Life" of the Maharaja Gaekwar explains why this rational method is not followed more generally in the States. "Where everything depends upon the idiosyncrasies of one man," he writes, "investors are likely to be shy, and even though the particular despot might be of the benevolent type with rational ideas of the value of State money, there was no guarantee that his successor would not turn out to be thriftless and extravagant." This should convince Princes and Ministers who are inclined to regard the subjects' demand for constitutional rights as a culpable repudiation of natural rights of allegiance, that it is much more than that, being intimately connected with sound finance which is the basis of all good government.

Retrenchment and Education:—The Dewan of Mysore proposes to meet the deficit both by retrenchment and new taxation in the shape of an enhancement of the income tax. Among these measures is one which is wrong in principle as its effects are bound to retard the progress of future generations. We refer to the proposal to reimpose fees in Middle Schools which were abolished eleven years ago. At a time of depression this is sure to press hard on middle class families to which most of the pupils in this stage of education belong. It will cause a serious set-back to secondary and higher education for several years to come. On the same principle as spreading expenditure on permanent works over many generations, it is wrong to sacrifice the interests of future generations in order to meet a deficit which the Dewan rightly insisted was due to temporary causes. The revenue expected from the fees is a little more than one lakh of rupees but the consequences to future progress cannot be estimated in terms of money. It is to be hoped that the Government of Mysore may see their way to do without this additional taxation on a class which is suffering most from the effects of the present depression, for doing its duty to future generations.

Christian Charity:—The Examiner (May 23rd), writes:—"On a par with the passage we have just criticised is the description of Mr. Gandhi, which we have read now in two papers written by Catholics, as "perhaps the finest flower of Christian civilisation." Really, this sort of thing simply makes us ridiculous. How can a man brought up in Hinduism, and still a Hindu, possibly be a "flower of Christian civilisation"? People who say these things obviously have but the vaguest idea as to what Christian civilisation means. But whatever nonsense they may write about Mr. Gandhi, our Catholic publicists are making a terrible blunder if they fail to realise that what we have got to face is a dominant Hindu or Muslim civilisation, according to the part of the country we are in." We emphatically protest against the use, which has been frequent of late in the Examiner, of the term "pagans" as applying to Indians. The word literally means "peasants" but it has come to mean people without religion. We may tell the Examiner that there are men of religion among Indians the latchet of whose shoes many so-called Christians are unworthy to unloose. Italy following Spain has risen against the Catholic hierarchy and, should ever the time come for the Holy Father to set up St. Peter's Throne in another land, India, despite the calculated discourtesy of exponents of Catholicism like the Examiner, will receive him with the veneration due to the head of a historic Church, and consider it a high privilege to have the Vatican replanted on her sacred soil.

Proselytising Missions under Swaraj:—We reproduce in our news columns the comments of the Guardian of Calcutta on our remarks regarding foreign proselytising missions. Our contemporary says that the opinion against proselytising is growing among Indian Christians and that in the near future the whole policy of missions in this country would be determined not by foreign missionary bodies but by the Indian Church itself. We ask for nothing more, provided of course, the Indian Church is a bona fide expression of the Indian soul—and not a benam holder for some alien principal. In our leading article on the subject in the Reformer (2nd May we italicised—which we seldom do—the following sentence: "Any policy which nationalist Indian Government adopts regarding foreign Missions, we are sure, will be determined in full consultation with Indian Christian leader and will almost certainly be entrusted to them to carry out." We adhere to every word of the very deliberate statement.

The Hindu Idea Of Sovereignty:—E. I. Havell in his "History of Aryan Rule in India" observes: "Kalhana's chronicles bring out clearly an important principle of Indo-Aryan polity, the power vested in the Ministerial Council for checking the arbitrary conduct of the monarch and for altering the line of succession when the interests of the State demanded it. The Yudishthira I. was expelled from his kingdom for misconduct, and Kalhana pathetically describes the fallen king's departure from his capital, the distress of the citizens at seeing the sorry plight of his delicately nurtured queen, and the misfortune which overtook the royal party on their march to the frontier." After mentioning other instances Havell writes: "The traditional authority of the Supreme Council of State made one of the fundamental differences between Indo-Aryan polity and that of Islam in which the sovereign ruled by divine right—derived from his descent from the Prophet, or bestowed upon him by the Khalifa the Prophet's representative." In the Dravidian South, the constitutional limitations on the rule were even greater. Havell observes that Megasthenes was not exaggerating when he stated that the popular Assemblies of the South held the power of kings in check. "Even when the King's intervention in the affairs of the village union is invoked," he writes, "the edict of the Assembly which settles a dispute is not issued in the King's name, but in that of the 'great men,' to whom the royal envoy himself respectfully applies the honorific form of address 'their Majesties.' The Tamil word, Tiruvadiar, is more correctly translated as "their Worships" than as "their Majesties."

An Oracular Order:—We publish today a letter from Mr. Nadkarni on a recent order of the Government of Bombay. It relates to the employment of men of the Depressed Classes as policemen, is reminiscent of the deliverances of the Delphic Oracle. Government seem to have overlooked the fact that the Order is intended to be carried out, and that those who have to carry it out are not very much helped when they are told that no difficulties can arise which may not be (Concluded in the 2nd column of page 632).

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, June 6, 1931.

DR. MOONJE'S FALLACIES.

While commenting on Dr. Moonje's speech at the Punjab Hindu Youth Conference in the Reformer of May 16, we took care to point out that the speech was made in Hindi and the English report was scrappy and, as regards the Doctor himself, we indicated our opinion that he was the last man to fall a victim to political hypochondria. It turns out that the report in the Tribune did not correctly present what Dr. Moonje said. He sent a summary of his actual remarks to that paper, which unfortunately escaped our notice, and he repeated it last week in a letter to the Times of India from which we reproduce it here. This is what Dr. Moonje said:

"Hinduism is dying every day bit by bit. From our Puranas and Itihases we find that there were 60 or 62 crores of Hindus on the face of this earth. We have now been reduced to 22 or 24 crores. In Bengal, in our very life time Hindus have been reduced from 55 per cent. to 45 per cent. The whole of Kashmir, which was a purely Hindu Province, some 150 year ago, is now practically a Muslim Province, the Hindus being reduced to hardly 8 per cent. What is it that is thus eating away Hinduism? Our first and foremost enemy is our own orthodoxy, our Pandits and Shastris. As the Geeta says "we are our own enemy." Then there is Islam on one side and Christianity on the other, which are both proselytising religions, while Hinduism is not. Thus, unless we overhaul and re-organise our Hindu sociology, we have no chance of maintaining our position in competition with other proselytising religions."

This, of course, is very different from what was ascribed to him in the Tribune's report, being an exhortation to Hindus to put their house in order and not the call to arms which the first report seemed to be. Incidentally, we may suggest that Indian leaders of note should supply a summary in English of their more important utterances to the Press, particularly when they speak in a vernacular. This is not derogatory to the vernacular, but only to prevent serious misunderstandings such as have occurred in consequence of the unauthorised version of Dr. Moonje's speech. Till Hindi become as well-understood among the intelligentsia as English is, speakers in dealing with questions which have more than a purely local interest, will do well to adopt this plan, as Mr. Jamnalal Bajaj has wisely done in respect of his address, a model of perspicacity, at the Karnatak Conference held at Hukeri last week.

In our paragraph on "Political Hypochondria," we stated that, apart from the purport of his speech, the facts adduced by Dr. Moonje were by no means unimpeachable. That remark holds good even of the revised version. He said that Hinduism was dying every day bit by bit. We say emphatically, No. We received not long ago a book by a reputed American writer, Mr. Wendell Thomas, entitled 'Hinduism Invades America'. In the last issue of the Prabhuddha Bharata, the organ of the Ramakrishna Mission, there is a comprehensive review of the many ways in which Hindu ideas have influenced European thought during the last one hundred years. In the face of this tremendous fact it is obviously absurd to speak of Hinduism as dying. Dr. Moonje's fallacy consists in confusing Hinduism with Hindus. Hinduism is a spiritual entity which will continue to live on even though the whole Hindu race is wiped out. Professor Sylvain Levi, speaking at the Buddha Society in Bombay not many years ago, prefaced his observations by expressing his belief that Hindu ideals might have to seek fulfilment through the more energetic races of the West. If this happens, the Hindu race may be well content to efface itself after handing over the torch which it has kept burning for centuries to other nations better equipped to bear it aloft under modern conditions.

But we do not think that the Hindu race is dying out either. The estimate of the Puranas and Itihases of the Hindu population at about 60 or 62 crores, which Dr. Moonje accepted without question, is, on the face of it, hyperbolic. Thirty-three crores is the number of devatas proverbially assigned the duty of guarding the Hindu religion, and Swami Vivekananda characteristically interpreted this to mean the Hindu people each one of them being a devata himself. Even this would be an exaggeration, unless by "Hindu" is meant all the inhabitants of India, as Dr. Moonje himself in a moment of happy inspiration told an interrupter at the Round Table Conference. Nor is it any more accurate that the Hindus have been reduced to 24 crores. The Census Reports show that the Hindus have increased since 1881. Musalmans and Christians have increased at a higher rate. But that is another matter altogether. Apart from the influence of conversions and the birth-rate, the enormous disparity between the totals of the Hindu and other communities must not be left out of account. One of the canons of statistical comparisons is that the aggregates compared must be approximately equal. As regards Christians who have increased proportionately many times more than Musalmans, a recent English writer has analysed the figures and shown that these should not be taken at their face value. This is even more true of Mahomedans who have no regular organized proselytising propaganda like the Christians, except perhaps temporarily and in special localities. The case of Bengal is somewhat peculiar. The variation is chiefly in Eastern Bengal where large numbers of the aboriginal races, who were only half-Hindu, seem to have become half-Mahomedans in recent years. As regards Kashmir, Sir Walter Lawrence tells an interesting story in his "The India that We Served." "When I was in Kashmir," he writes, "an Arab preacher visited me. His object was to put life into the languid observances of the Moslems of the Valley. I introduced him to the leading men of the country, but after a long tour through the villages, he returned, baffled and dejected. He told me that he had found no true believers—in their hearts the Kashmiris of the Valley were as Hindu as were the Brahmins of the capital." This is not all. Sir Walter reverts to the topic in the closing pages of his book—it was published only three years ago—and referring to the Shuddhi and Tabligh movements, observes: "I cannot express an opinion as to the prospects of the Tabligh movement, but I know intimately two large communities converted from Hinduism to Islam, and I am certain that most of these could be whistled back to the fold". If Hinduism and Islam are not to be valued as spiritual systems but, as Dr. Moonje does, as so many communal pens, how is it possible to blame the Mussulman leaders who greatly fear that their religious and cultural interests are in danger from Hindu domination, knowing as they cannot but do that large sections of Indian Mahomedans are still in the indeterminate stage between the two religions? If, on the other hand, we concentrate our thought on the ideals of the world religions, and not on the numbers of those who profess them seldom very worthily, we shall not be overmuch perturbed by statistical considerations. We fully recognise the need for overhauling the Hindu social system, and that is the primary object of this journal. But there is no need to indulge in panicky language which has a tendency occasionally to become provocative. To the healthy mind an obstacle is an opportunity to be embraced and not an enemy to be repelled.

There was an important statement attributed to him in the Tribune report which Dr. Moonje has not touched in his version. It is his repudiation of the hackneyed formula that without Hindu-Muslim unity India can not have swaraj. We were pleased to see that Dr. Moonje frankly confessed that he did not believe in it, and we do not believe in it either. Hindus alone can achieve swaraj, or Mussalmans alone, or Christians alone, or even the Parsis alone minute as their proportion is in the total population, but not more minute than the British in India. It is not a question of the numbers but of the dominant idea of each community. The Hindus, despite their large number, are not primarily or permanently interested in politics. Their dominant idea is religion and, though they may join a political struggle, they are liable at any moment to be turned aside by a religious appeal. The Mussalmans cannot get because their Swaraj dominant motive is to keep the Hindu idolators at bay and British rule, they fancy, helps them to do so. As a matter of fact what they fear is their own past, because they know, or ought to know, that the Hindu is a believer in the law of Karma, and takes good and evil as it comes as a matter of course. The Indian Christians cannot secure swaraj because they are inured to the supremacy of the European missionary and are instinctively inclined to look on white domination as in the nature of things. It is the Parsis who are most likely to take the leading part in achieving swaraj, and it is significant that it was Dadabhai Naoroji, who first gave that watchword to his countymen, and that the most strenuous political fighters in modern India have been Parsis. The reason is not far to seek. It was trade which brought the British to India and which keeps them here. The dominant interest of the Parsi is also trade, and it is in the field of trade that the political issue will be fought and settled. Reviewing the conditions which led to the British connection with this country, Sir John Seeley noted that the Parsis might have established their dominion instead of the British and by the same means. "We may suppose," he said, "that a number of Parsee merchants in Bombay, tired of the anarchy which disturbed their trade, had subscribed together to establish fortresses and raise troops, and then they had had the good fortune to employ able generals. In that case they too might have had their Plassy and Buxar; they too might have extorted from the Great Moghul the Dewanee, or financial administration of a province, and so laid the foundations of an Empire, which might in time have extended over all India." What they failed to do then, they may yet do.

(Continued from Page 630).

overcome by tact on the one side and by the development of public opinion on the other. A Police officer can and should exercise tact, but how is he to develop public opinion? Again, the officers entrusted with selection are told to so regulate enlistment as, on the one hand, to afford men of the Depressed Classes an opportunity of showing their worth and, on the other, to safeguard the efficiency of the force and avoid antagonising public opinion. The writer of the resolution seems to suffer like the horse from the natural infirmity of seeing at the same time both sides of where he is going, and might be supplied with a suitable pair of blinkers.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. IX.

(BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTLI.)

(Concluded from the last issue.)

The learned Hindu Law Reform Committee were thoroughly competent to deal with this question, since the right to remain unmarried, and therefore the right to be scrupulously left unmarried till one attains at least the age of discretion, is as much a fundamental right of the Hindu woman as the right to marry if she likes and qualify herself for the splendid "Maintenance" provided like maana for the Hindu wife by latter day Hindu law along with the Damocles sword of supersession and desertion. But it was perhaps as well that they have desisted from setting their hand to this task. The question has a wide and general application to all citizens of the State irrespective of their religion and is as such big and complicated enough to require a special Committee and a special Bill all to itself.

The Hindu woman's eligibility for marriage, that is, her right to contract a valid marriage, not only with a man of her own sect or caste but with any Hindu of a different caste, might also without impropriety have engaged the attention of the Hindu Law Reform Committee which had to investigate the whole problem of women's rights under the Hindu law. Recently in British India the validity of such a marriage where the bridegroom was of a caste higher than the bride's was recognised with rare courage and generous vision by the late Mr. Justice Lallubhai Shah of Bombay in Bai Gulab's case, relying on the ancient Smriti texts which expressly permitted anuloma marriages and which he held to be living law though left unused for some centuries past. (A. I. R. 1922 B. 32 = I. L. R. 46 B. 871.) Mr. Justice Venkata Subbarao followed his decision in Madras to uphold the validity of the marriage of a European lady converted to Hinduism with a born Hindu of the Vaisya caste which occurred in 1922. (A. I. R. 1928 Madras 1279). An earlier Bombay decision of 1912 by the late Sir Narayan Chandavarkar had similarly favoured anuloma marriages only to find that the case in hand being a pratiloma marriage, that is, the marriage of a high caste woman with a man of inferior caste was invalid under the Hindu law (Bai Kashi v. Jannadas: 13 Bom. L. R. 547—16 I. C. 133). Mr. Justice Venkata Subbarao however while following the Smriti texts and the Bombay decisions in so far as they upheld the validity of anuloma marriages, expressly warns us that he is not to be understood as saying that pratiloma marriages are invalid. Pandit Golap Chandra Sankar Shastri in his famous work on Hindu law is of opinion that although marriage of an inferior man with a superior woman may be disapproved and condemned, still if such a marriage does in fact take place, the same must be regarded valid as between the parties to it, and the issue legitimate. "They may be excommunicated and excluded from inheritance of their relations but as between themselves the relationship of husband and wife and of parent and child must be held legitimate and there must also be reciprocal heritable right among themselves,—there being no authority for pronouncing the marriage to be invalid, however reprehensible the same may be represented to be." "But questions of anuloma and pratiloma need no longer trouble any one in British India. The Special Marriage Amendment Act of 1923 provides a valid form of inter marriage for Hindus of all castes on an equal footing, if the bride is not under 14 years of age or the bridegroom under 18.

This Act removes also another anomaly and gives to the Hindu woman a new right of eligibility in marriage. It is in respect of the prohibited degrees of relationship created by gotra or consanguinity or affinity. Custom, recognised as valid by Hindu law, has already sanctioned certain marriages in some Provinces which would otherwise be regarded as incestuous under the strict rule of the Shastric law. A Brahman girl of the Madras province, for instance, may marry such a close relation as her father's sister's son or even her mother's brother with the blessing of the law and the community. But let her marry a young man of a different sect or race of Brahmans of a different province with whose family her own had never had anything in common since the days of Vasishta and Viswamitra except the gotra which is only the name of some ancient Rishi who was the original founder or Guru, and the marriage would at once fall under the rule of prohibited relationship and be held incestuous and unlawful. The Special Marriage Act removes this anomaly, and while allowing all the latitude given by the present law and custom as regards permissible marriages, relaxes their rigidity in other respects by providing that no such law or custom shall prevent a marriage "unless a relationship can be traced between the parties through some common ancestor who stands to each of them in a nearer relationship than that of a great-great-grandfather or great-great-grandmother or unless one of the parties is the lineal ancestor or the brother or sister of some lineal ancestor of the other."

We wish that something could be done to extend women's rights along all these lines in Mysore. But the most momentous problem of all still remains untouched. The real crux of the women's problem under Hindu law which needs most urgent attention from all well-wishers of the Hindu woman and the Hindu race is the grievous one which centres round the absence of the monogamous rule for the male and of divorce rights for the female.

RAO BAHADUR K. VIRESALINGUM PANTLU.

A GREAT SOCIAL REFORMER.

(BY MR. V. G. PUNTHAMSEKAR.)

During the latter part of the last century a wave of enthusiasm for religious and social reform swept through the whole length and breadth of India. There was not a single province, aye not a district that did not boast of its own reformer. Bengal gave birth to such eminent personages like Keshub Chunder Sen, Pundit Shivanath Sastry and Swamy Viwekanand while Bombay had its Ranade, Bhandarkar and Chandawarkar. Punjab was the scene of activities of the great founder of Arya Samaj Swamy Dayanand. When the turn of Madras came it was not a prosperous lawyer or a rich merchant prince or official that came to take the lead and brave the orthodox opposition, but a humble and not an over-rich school-master, who dedicated his life for his country and his people. And that school master was Mr. Viresalingam Pantlu.

When Mr. Viresalingam began his career he was not a rich man. But he had something that counted more than silver rupees,—a sincerity of mind and purpose which stood him in good stead during the troublesome part of his career when he had frequently to fight against opposition. Again he had a powerful knack of using his pen, which he placed unreservedly at the service of his country. And it is absolutely no exaggeration to say that the Telugu reading public are under a deep debt of gratitude to Mr. Viresalingam for the numerous works he had written, pertaining to social and religious reforms.

Quite early in his life he saw the various disabilities and injustice, not to say of positively cruel treatment, the widows suffered from in the Hindu society and directly he set upon himself the task of righting this great wrong. It was for achieving this, that he spent a good slice of his modest salary and almost all the proceeds he derived from the sale of his books. Was he satisfied with merely rendering monetary help to the cause? No! Not he. By words, as well as deeds, he enlisted sympathy for the poor widows. In his book he feelingly pleaded for their cause he undertook numerous journeys to different parts of the Andhra country for the sake of propaganda in favour of widow-remarriage. Of course there were the usual threats of social boycotts and encommunications by the orthodox. Occasions were not wanting when he was denied entrance into orthodox homes and more than once he had to leave a village without any food. He braved the difficulties and obstacles and conquered them. It was not on himself alone that insults and annoyances were heaped, but on all his friends and admirers. Undeterred he went on toiling for this selfless cause. He had the marriages of poor widows celebrated at his expense. If the priests refused to conduct the ceremonies, he officiated as the priest. If the cooks refused to cook for the feast he and his friends were ever-ready to offer their personal help. His sympathy for the unfortunate widows did not stop with their marriage. Their settlement in life became an earnest concern of his. He helped the married couples with money and advice and they knew where to look for a friend in time of need. It is not a matter of surprise that success crowned the efforts of such a sincere and good man.

Rao Bahadur Viresalingam Pantlu ranks among pioneers of the Brahma Samaj movement in this presidency. A man of broad and catholic views that Viresalingam Pantulu undoubtedly was, could not but condemn the meaningless rigidity of caste-system. Naturally the teachings of Raja Ram Mohan Roy attracted Mr. Pantlu. The doctrines of the "Fatherhood of God" and the "Brotherhood" of man made a strong impression on him. And today, thanks to efforts, Brahma Samaj has some of its ardent admirers in Andhradesa.

The popularity of Rao Bahadur Viresalingam Pantlu's work in literary, social and religious fields can be gauged by the fact that his name has become a household word in the Northern Circars.

WAMAN SHIRODKAR.

SYMBOL OF THE NEW URGE.

(BY THE REV. WALTER B. FOLEY.)

Born in Portuguese, Goa, on the West Coast of India, the youngest of ten children in the family of a Brahmin Mohunt (guardian, keeper and priest of temples), Waman, from his very childhood, was in revolt against unexplainable and unreasonable social practices of his people. Always his question was, "Why do you do that? When no answer was forthcoming he declared that those who followed such silly practices were foolish.

One of his earliest recollections is that of his father-priest sitting on the high platform before the dais on which the idol of the temple was placed and singing for hours on end. This memory has its place later in our description. The father's favorite songs were from the compositions of Tukaram, the saint who made a god, Vithoba, for the doms, who were outcastes.

His mother was, as is often the case, the member of the family who wanted all her children to have an education. Because there were no educational facilities, and even though there was greater freedom for women in Portuguese territory than in "British India", she insisted on the family moving to Karwar a beautiful little spot between a river and the sea in the southernmost section of the Bombay Presidency. The hills, the river, and the lapping of ocean waves are a part of the man, Waman Babu, whom we know today.

So the family moved from Shiroda in Goa, taking the name of the place with them as a family name, Shirodkar—man of Shiroda. In the Brahmin community his father's group is called Goud-Sharashwat. The compound name indicates that as a whole they worshipped the goddess of knowledge, Saraswati, and that they originally came from Goud, a famous centre of Sanskrit learning in Northern Bengal. The pilgrimage to Western India is supposed to have taken place when their Bengal center was disturbed by inroads of Moslem invaders.

For three or four years the children attended the little village school in Karwar. This was a play period for Waman. He then was sent to Hubli in the Dharwar District. Here on the other side of a range of hills from Karwar he went to St. Mary's Catholic School. The religious teaching of this school he remembers only faintly as having been performed in honour of the teacher. In Hubli his oldest brother had become a timber merchant.

For five years Waman lived in that village, and then proceeded to Bombay in order to attend High School. Through some oversight on the part of the authorities he was placed in the second year of High School rather than the first. The mistake was not discovered for eight months and then he was permitted to continue until the end of the year. He then transferred to the Imperial High School and finally graduated, or matriculated as the expression goes in India, in 1920.

His education was continued for two years in St. Xavier's College and until the time when he was to have taken his Intermediate Arts examinations. He found himself swept into the non-cooperation movement of that year when hundreds of college students left their classes to express their protest against the British regime. His work had been largely in the field of economics with a considerable interest in Sanskrit. He could not bring himself to return to an ordinary college, but having read much about Santiniketan and the University, Visva-Bharati, of the Poet, Dr. Rabindranath Tagore, he applied for admission.

His application was accepted and some five days before he was to leave home he told his family of what he planned to do. Again his mother appears in the story. While the rest of the family were opposed to his plan his mother gave her approval and her blessing. As a matter of fact Waman seems to have been encouraged in his opposition to superstition by his oldest brother, who went first as a merchant, and later in the engineering corps, with the expeditionary forces that operated during the world war at Basra and Cairo, largely in a spirit of investigation and enterprise.

Waman Babu has in his possession a sort of diary that he wrote during his early school days. In this he has recently discovered that even then he was opposed to a degree career centering about a job in the Indian Civil Services. He discovered pages where he recorded as a boy the fact that he wished to return to organize a more practical and ideal school in a village for the promotion of better village leadership. He noted among other details defects in the schools he attended; how they cramped the personalities of the students and gave no opportunity for freedom of choice.

(To be concluded).

PITFALLS OF RETRENCHMENT.

After a lot of pother and fuss the Central Retrenchment Committee is meeting in Simla this week; the Provincial financial wisecracks have come and gone, and though there are many rumours about their doings and recommendations and though the public is not any the wiser so far after their confabulations, still the public might perhaps wait and see what they have done and what the Central government is going to do on their recommendations.

It is the Central Government Committee, however, which is the more important of the two, since presumably it has the power (sic) to lay down the policy about retrenchment. It is meeting behind closed doors and nothing of its proceedings has so far appeared in the Press. Its composition, elected as the Assembly was at a time when the public at large had boycotted the legislatures, does not inspire confidence that the work of retrenchment will be done rightly and thoroughly and with due regard to the circumstances of the case. In fact, rumour has it that some of the members are there to see that their community does not in any way suffer as a result.

By the way it is a curious commentary on the heaven born Indian Civil Service (and allied services) which profess their love, in season and out of season, for the dumb masses of our countrymen, that we have seen no sign so far of their intention to give up their illgotten Lee loot. Surely bare decency required that they should have made a voluntary offer, months back when the local and central governments first became aware of the parlous state of our finances, to forego these allowances. They were not so laggard when the Montagu-Chelmsford proposals were on the anvil. We had then the equally disgraceful spectacle of the I. C. S. associations in the various provinces trying their best to sabotage the reforms before they were brought into being and partially succeeding in doing so. But no. When it comes to a question of giving up even a portion of their allowances at a time of general depression and poverty and fall in prices, their oft-professed concern for the masses vanishes into thin air. They do not care a rap really what happens to the masses so long as they can get free passages to Europe for themselves and their families, plus over-seas pay plus the advantage of the 18d. ratio, plus what not!! We will stop there for the moment.

The Central Retrenchment Committee is, as stated above, sitting behind closed doors, and the plan apparently seems to be that they should be sub-divided into various sub-committees to deal with the various departments, if necessary co-opting any outside 'experts'. The one thing that strikes the onlooker immediately is that this sub-division will at once lead to a frittering away of even the little energy or reality of purpose that the Committee might have. Each of these sub-committees will be confronted in their labours by officers of long experience in the various departments who can and will put up an un-answerable case for the retention in full of their own staff and allowances and pull the wool successfully over the eyes of any sub-committee or experts so called. It is too much to expect that a committee, some of whose members have come to Simla not merely for the purpose of retrenchment or is it to arrange a passage at Government cost to London?—with so little inside knowledge of departmental machinery (and machinations) will be able to do anything but sign tamely whatever may be put before it. It is freely rumoured that every department of the Government of India is putting up a stubborn fight and refuses to cut down anything more than the merest trifle in the way of stationery and things like that. One Department has even gone further and has budgetted for new expenditure in the shape of an officer! Your readers might be aware that in the Assembly Department a Deputy Secretary is shortly going to be appointed, for doing what? No one seems to know what except that the appointment has been offered to a Muslim gentleman who is the son of a Muslim Knight who distinguished himself by his consistent loyalty to Government in the dark days of 1919 and subsequently as a consistent supporter of communal or separate electorates. It speaks much for the tone of the Assembly that an appointment should be made like this in its own department at a time like the present. Perhaps it also gives an indication of the way in which the Assembly is going to tackle this matter of retrenchment seriously.

But may we ask whether our Assembly members, such as they are, are here to see rewards doled out to loyalty or to see that the tax-payer is not mulcted unduly? Perhaps the fact that the appointment is for their own department might lead many Members to refrain from even criticising the appointment; but it goes without saying that in this time of stress and deficit it is simply monstrous that a department where there is very little work doing apparently, a fresh charge should be incurred to appease communalism or loyalty, whatever you may call it. Or is it that the argus eye of the Finance Department became blind when the appointment was justified on grounds other than those of necessity? It is not too much to say that this department requires a lot of looking into. One has merely to step into this department to see the way the staff are lounging about leisurely doing nothing for eight months or more during the year.

The Legislative Department, another allied department, belongs to the same category; but perhaps its strength may be sought to be justified on account of the legislative drafting and consultative work that it does; this department also requires to be closely scrutinised along with certain other administrative departments of the Government of India.

The Retrenchment Committee would do well to go closely into the working of the various departments after shedding their personal and communal predilections: one fervently hopes it may not be too much to expect of them, considering their composition. The poor and ill-paid clerks anticipate that its labours will result as is already the case in the Railway Department in the discharge of peons and clerks, with probably the addition of an officer or two, as it is proposed in the Assembly. But is it too much to hope that some members of the committee at least will listen to their wails?

S. R.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY, LAHORE.

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Through the courtesy of a missionary friend on S. S. the Pilana, I have seen the issue of May 2nd, of your valuable paper. I have read with interest the article of my esteemed friend Mr. S. A. Waiz concerning the C. M. S. Estate Clarkabad, Punjab. There are two aspects of the matter one involving the general principle of christian settlements under missionary management, and the other this particular case.

With reference to Clarkabad I may be permitted to make a few observations:—

(1) The case as stated by my friend Mr. Waiz is entirely one-sided. The fault is by no means with the management only.

(2) In most of the Christian villages the land is under heavy mortgage, and if the Clarkabad village had belonged to individual families it would have shared the same fate. In addition like other villages the land would have become divided into small holdings to utter detriment of the owners.

(3) The one third share of the produce retained by the mission is sold and the profits used for the uplift of the village itself. There are schools for boys and girls, the later being in a flourishing state.

(4) It has always been a matter of surprise to me that church missionary society should continue to hold the land and not divest itself of this burden. It is certainly not consistent with the objects of a missionary society. It may surprise even Mr. Waiz to know that the village is not under the Church Council. It vests in a trust in England and it is under the direction of a committee entirely European. In fact it is a 'reserved' subject. Such a policy on the part of the mission is entirely incomprehensible and I believe the mission is doing more harm to itself and the cause it represents than it realises. My object, however, is not to criticize one particular mission. If I have written candidly it is because I am privileged to be a member of the highest body of the mission in the Punjab, and share the blame. The important matter is that of christian settlements.

In the early days the missionary societies were the natural guardian of the infant church, but now that the situation has changed, it is no longer justifiable for Trusts in foreign land to hold on to the property which on the very face of it belongs to the church in India. It is almost breach of trust. It is very much to be hoped that without any further delay the foreign missionary societies will take steps to set matters aright, otherwise they will do an immense harm to the christian cause, and the legislators of India may have to intervene. Now that Mr. Waiz has drawn public attention to this subject, we may expect that it will receive due consideration at the hands of all societies responsible for christian settlements.

Piroscafo "Pilsna"

B. L. RALLIA RAM,

HINDI IN SOUTH INDIA.

The Editor, Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

The Indian Social Reformer's remarks on the Hindi Prachar appear to be based on two misapprehensions.

Hindi is not in the least intended as a rival to the Dravidian languages competing for the allegiance of their peoples. In fact Hindi Prachar has gone hand in hand with the revival of vernaculars. The reason is obvious. Our vernaculars have been moribund owing to the contempt with which the English educated people are used to treat them. By striking at the unnatural predominance of English, Hindi has restored the rightful position of the vernaculars. No Tamilian or Andhra is likely to consider Hindi as superior to Tamil or Telugu as he has often considered English to be. At the most, he will accept Hindi only as the natural lingua franca of India being the principal dialect of India. This is all that the Hindi Prachar workers seek to do.

Again it is not hoped, expected or desired that the vast masses of the South should learn Hindi. For them their own vernacular will be quite sufficient. But, for the intelligentsia and the mercantile classes who will have to keep themselves in constant touch with North India, they have to learn some language common to all India. Perhaps the Indian Social Reformer would like English to play the role. If so, he will have to oppose the Hindi Prachar movement which if successful will dethrone English from its powerful position in this country. But to object to Hindi propoganda as a champion of the South Indian vernaculars is to confuse issues and provoke an unnecessary and avoidable antagonism, between North and South India. I hope it is not the view of the Social Reformer that in order to maintain the equality of the South and North both should labour under the burden of a foreign language.

Third Street,
Mannargudi. }

K. SANTHANAM.

[As we explained last week, we are not against the Hindi Prachar movement. Our objection is to the Pracharaks developing the mentality of proselytising missionaries and degrading those whom they seek to serve. English and Hindi may be left to find their place in Indian life on their merits. If we are to reject everything 'foreign' even the work of the Dakshina Bharat Hindi Pracharak Sabha, may be greatly hampered. The tendency to deery things merely because they are foreign is a reversion to a primitive type of civilisation.—Ed., I. S. R.]

RELIGION THROUGH BUSINESS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Your correspondent Mr. Charles Hooper of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, U. S. A., writing on the subject of Religion through Business in your issue of the 9th instant, has shown a total ignorance of the high moral standard of the seventeenth century merchants, otherwise, he would not have concluded his letter by saying, "Souls cannot be counted and tabulated in business offices; neither can they be weighed on scales, analysed in test tubes or scrutinized "through microscopes and telescopes."

The Puritan merchants of England combined "piety with profit." Their object was to serve God and incidentally to serve themselves. The East India Company, who started business in Surat, used to engage the services of a minister, who reminded them daily of their duty to God and men. Their object was certainly to make money, and they did make money in plenty, but it was not their sole purpose, neither the "ideal" in life. Wherever these Puritan merchants settled as colonists, they were honoured and respected for their high principles and religion and acquired great social influence.

What has been said of the English merchants of the seventeenth century is equally true of the Indian merchants. The seventeenth century represents a surprising picture of moral excellence, so different from our own times.

"As for the scientist," says Mr. Charles Hooper, "his work is merely to make the material side of life more convenient, comfortable, and pleasurable, and to bring about a speedier means of transit and communication." But, what are scientists if not the priests of science? Why should "they make poor spiritual and religious guides", since they pass their lives in the pursuit of truth and since they work for the comfort and happiness of others? This in itself is their religion "Happiness be to him", say the Gathas, "who is the source of happiness to others."

Scientists are thus blessed in a book of religion for their good work. And good work is religion. To forget "Religion through Business," therefore, is to commit sin, and to sacrifice larger experiences for immediate gain.

Surat, 20th May 1931.

A. PARSEE.

DEPRESSED CLASSES AND THE POLICE.

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

A resolution of the Government of Bombay relating to the recruitment of the Depressed Classes to the Police, while laying down that the question of their caste should not enter into the matter, and by stating that in the choice of candidates for the Police Training School the Committee entrusted with the final selection will so regulate their enlistment as to "avoid antagonising public opinion".

Evidently the public meant here is the public minus the Depressed Classes. The authorities, it seems, may safely antagonise the opinion of the latter. For, are they not a poor, weak, scattered, shrinking lot of people so-called, scarcely daring to complain, even if conscious of their grievance? Their opinion, their feeling, you see, does not count cannot count with a Government, or for that matter with its 'public', which has no use for a citizen's natural rights, except so far as they are backed by Leagues, Conferences and the like, and these again by 'direct action' sufficiently vigorous. Then only, and to that extent only, do the Depressed Classes seem likely, as things go at present, to gain recognition of their human rights in actual practice, only when the Depressed Classes make 'trouble', it seems, their opinion is going to carry weight with Government and its 'public'.

Till then, what Bhai Parmanand as president of the Punjab Hindu Conference declared the other day, quoting an old Punjab worthy who himself had quoted old Manu, with regard to the position of the Hindu Panjabis against the rest of the Panjabis, will continue to hold good of the 'Adi-Hindus' in relation to the rest of the Hindus: "This is the true order of destiny, and our ancient law-giver Manu declared it at a time now measured backwards by tens of centuries", viz. that 'whatever exists in the world, Prajapati hath ordained to be the prey of living beings;...the non-moving, of the moving; the toothless, of the toothed; the handless, of the hand-possessed; and the timid, of the brave.' (V. 28-29.) Verily, this ordinance of Prajapati has not ceased to be in force in these days of Soul-force.

Karwar; May 28, 1931.

S. D. NADKARNI.

INDIAN WOMEN AND R. T. C.

A deputation of 15 ladies, representing the All-India Women's Conference, waited upon His Excellency Lord Willingdon and urged the need for adequate representation of Indian womanhood with a view to ensuring the success of the Round Table Conference. The deputation consisted of Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, Lady Manubhai Mehta, Lady Mitter, Mrs. Sushana Sen, Mrs. Hansa Mehta, Mrs. Ruetoomji Faridoonji, Mrs. Miles Irving, Miss S. J. Vincent, Miss Kamala Kaur, Miss Naqvi, Miss Raksha Sondhi, Begum Aizaz Rasul, Sardar Pritamsingh, Mrs. Sewa Singh and Mrs. Lakshmi bai Rajwade. They presented a memorial from which the following are excerpts:—

We feel sure that one of the most remarkable changes that you must have realised on your return to India is the strength and growth of the women's movement which has been well said to hold the key of progress and the results of which are bound to be incalculably great. It was because of the growth of this movement that the appointment of two women to the last session of the Round Table Conference was made. All the same though unprecedented in itself was still of an inadequate nature. And hence it is that we claim that more women should be invited to take part in the deliberations of the next session. India's women have become more and more politically conscious, while they have absorbed the culture of all ages, adapting it with innate felicity to true Indian development than perhaps has been the case on the part of the men. We think that there can be no doubt whatever that women should be more widely represented on the Round Table Conference. The question of selection is most important and that is the primary reason of our deputation to-day. We desire to bring to your Excellency's notice that the All-India Women's Conference has been in existence for five years and to its valuable work it has added the formation of the All-India Women's Education Fund Association which is concerned with the foundation of an All-India college for women based on a new appreciation of the Indian women's development. Our Conference feels very strongly that in the new constitution the fundamental rights of the womanhood need very special attention. We realise that it may not be possible for your Excellency to recommend more than a very limited number of names, but we do trust that at least three ladies from amongst our number will be sent to England. Your Excellency can rely on us that we will lend a most sympathetic consideration to decisions in which our representatives have had a share and will thus be able to influence the very powerful body of educated opinion."

VICEROY'S REPLY.

His Excellency replying expressed his great surprise and real pleasure at the extraordinary growth of the women's movement in India during the few years he had been away and said that the increasing influence of women in the public affairs of India could not but have a beneficial effect upon the country. He assured them that he would do what he could to support and assist the women in India in their efforts to take a more active part in the public life. He paid a tribute to the work done by Begum Shah Nawaz and Mrs. Subbaroyan at the last session of the Round Table Conference and added that he would bear in mind the request of the All-India Women's Conference for further representation at the next session.

Mahatma Gandhi and the Negro Problem:—This is from Indian Witness, published by the Methodist Episcopal-Church, Lucknow:—We hope Mr. Gandhi will visit America. We hope his accomplishments in India during the next few years will be such that his reputation for sound judgment will be enhanced. Then we hope he will go to America and will give the American people some wholesome advice and suggestions concerning the race problem which exists there, that will put even his famous India march to the sea into the background. We would like to see Mr. Gandhi 'exploited' in America by the leaders of the Negro race. We would like him to be personally accompanied by some outstanding negro leader and to have him refuse to put up at any hotel or to be entertained in any home or to speak from any platform where his negro companion was excluded. We would like him to carefully study and observe the race problem as it exists in the United States. We would like to see the leaders of both races who are seriously looking for a solution of the problem, join together in giving a welcome to Mahatma Gandhi but we hope when he goes he will make it very clear that he is there to serve and help those who stand most in need of that help. A visit of this sort to America when India's problems have been somewhat smoothed out, would be well worth the serious consideration of Mr. Gandhi and we invite him to give it such consideration. We believe he will,

WHY I AM A SOCIAL WORKER.

(Social Welfare, TORONTO.)

I became a social worker because I had a vague, sentimental desire to help other people.

I learned that people are not equally desirous of gratuitous help. I found out that they want a chance to live their lives in their own way, with due opportunities for education, health, economic independence and a reasonable amount of leisure time. My sentimental altruism had not revealed this fact of human psychology; my practical experience did. I remained a social worker for four reasons which appear to me valid:

1. I am not interested in money-making as such, nor in helping any firm or corporation to amass wealth. Social work is not concerned with profits, other than those in human welfare. In this it appeals to my sense of fitness.

I am interested in receiving a regular and adequate return for services which afford me emotional satisfaction. Social work supplies this need.

2. I believe that man has a right to the development of his personality in the directions towards which his own innate capacities tend. I believe that this is as true of myself as of my neighbour. I do not believe that this development can be successfully directed by plans superimposed from an extraneous source. Because the first principle of social case-work accords with this, my own conviction, I am content to remain a member of the profession which advocates it.

3. I believe that the present economic and industrial system of so-called civilized countries is unsound. I do not believe that any revolutionary upheaval will produce improvements of a lasting character. History would indicate that I am correct in this. I do believe that by first-hand study and evaluation of present conditions, by a large number of people, over a period of time, fundamental changes can be effected. Social workers have the opportunity to contribute to such study and evaluation. Here and there they are taking advantage of it. Because even this glimmering of perception seems to me to have in it the germ of sanity, and to be the beginning of greater achievements, I want to be in on the ground floor.

4. Tradition as a criterion of conduct derives no virtue for me from the fact that it is tradition. I want to know the reasons for contemplated action and to make my own decision as to their validity. Organized social work is a new profession, comparatively unhampered by "dead-wood" accumulated through past ages. It offers an opportunity for pioneer thinking and individual initiative. It gives me scope for living in my job, as well as in my leisure.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Rights of Women in Hindu Law:—At the forthcoming session of the Mysore Representative Assembly, which meets at Mysore on the 1st June next a bill to amend the Hindu Law as to the rights of women will be introduced. In discussing the general principles of the Bill, Government state as follows: The question of improving the position assigned to women under the Hindu Law as at present administered by the courts in the State was frequently pressed on attention of Government. A resolution was also moved at the Dasara session of the Representative Assembly in 1928 and, as a result of the discussions therein, the Government appointed in June 1929 a Committee consisting of ten non-official gentlemen with Rajadharmapravina Dewan Bahadur K. S. Chaudrasekhara Ayyar, B. A. B. L. as Chairman, to examine the subject in all its aspects, to submit a report to Government indicating in what respect the present law stands in need of reform and to prepare a draft bill. The committee submitted in September, 1930 a comprehensive and unanimous report together with a draft bill. Speaking about the reception given to the report by the public, Government observe "Judging by the expressions of well-formed and enlightened opinion, the recommendations of the Committee are generally viewed on the whole with a considerable measure of appreciation. It is true that in the opinion of several sympathetic critics the prepared changes do not go sufficiently far to improve the position of women. On the other hand, there are a few who are opposed on principle to any change whatever in the existing law. Apart from these various suggestions have been received for improving and amending the provisions of the Bill on points of detail which will be duly considered at the proper stage. As it appears that the weight of public opinion is in favour of undertaking legislation, the Government desire to place before the Assembly a statement of the general principles underlying the Bill for the expression of its opinion."

An Inter-caste marriage:—A correspondent writes:—Under the auspices of the Hyderabad Deccan Arya Samaj an inter-caste marriage was celebrated in the evening of Thursday, May in the Samaj Mandir according to Vedic rites. The bride-groom, Mr. Rama Rao Ganpat Sale, who is employed as an engineer in the firm of Nathoolal & Co, Residency Bazaar, and is aged 23, belongs to the Kayastha Prabhu sub-section of the Khaetriya caste. The bride, Shreemati Sarala Bai Savle, who is aged about 19 comes of the Devruki Brahmin community. The bride's father, Mr. Lakshman Mahadev Savle, is the founder of the Indian National Congress of East Africa and recently returned to India after rendering yeoman service to the cause of Indian nation-hood in Africa. There was a large gathering of ladies and gentlemen—both Sanatanists and Arya Samajists—including the bride's parents present on the occasion and blessed the newly married couple. Pandit Chandra Bhanooji, the resident upadeshak of the samaj, conducted the ceremonies with the assistance of Sudhaka Siddhantananda and Pandit Rajaratnam. After the ceremonies were over, the Sadhaka delivered a stirring speech in the course of which he dwelt on the religious duty which every person owed to his ancestors to beget and bring up strong and healthy children. The function came to a close with the distribution of Aitar and Pan saptari. The marriage was also registered under Act 3 of 1972.

Religion Under Swarj:—Thus the Guardian, the British weekly Journal of public affairs published in Calcutta. Since Gandhiji made his somewhat upsetting announcement regarding the attitude of a Swaraj Government to proselytising missions much discussion has taken place both inside and outside India concerning this matter. As our contemporary, the Indian Social Reformer points out, in his most recent statement Gandhiji has almost completely retreated from his previous position. He is reported to have said, 'In India under Swaraj I have no doubt that foreign missions will be at liberty to do their proselytising as I would say in a wrong way, but they would be expected to bear with those who like him may point out that in their opinion the way is wrong.' As the Indian Social Reformer states, this is practically a complete retreat from his previous statement. Our contemporary, however, goes on to say, Mahatmasji of course, must have good reasons for his change of front, but, for our part we are sure that it will be the duty of a national Government to stop organised proselytising financed and directed from foreign countries.' We must confess we cannot understand the attitude of the Indian Social Reformer with which we are usually to find ourselves in agreement. There is no doubt that in the past and perhaps even in the present there are a good many things in the methods of missions which are open to criticism, but we believe that gradually things are being improved. Among both missionaries and Indian Christians there is a desire to get rid of these objectionable methods. Not only so but there is a growing feeling that the bringing to bear of undue influences upon other in any form with a view to bring about a change of religion is not in accord with the teaching of Christ. This opinion is growing in strength in the Indian Christian Church and in the near future the whole policy of missions in this country will be determined not by foreign missionary bodies but by the Indian Church itself. The progress of the Indian Church towards Swaraj is steady every year it is being accelerated.

ADVERTISEMENTS

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for electrical engineering college opening at Bombay. Preparation for London City and Guilds examination. Railfare Paid. Prospectus on 2 annas stamps.—Technical Institute of India, Ltd., Delhi.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of

OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDRA.

Branches: } CALCUTTA.

AHMEDABAD.

POONA.

SURAT

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhoi, Surat, Pottlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kaloi, Kadi, Dwaraka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

- Sr Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
- Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
- Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
- Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Mahareji Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
- R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewar, Baroda.
- Raj Ratna Bhaibai Dajibhai Amin B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alomble Chemical Works, Baroda).
- Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd. Ahmedabad.)
- Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penu.) Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
- Mr. N. M. Musumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the safe and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

3-5-26.

G. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Bira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindheda ( " " ).
Shirale ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Paighar ( " " ).	Kaloi ( " " ).
Akni (District Sholapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Viramgaon (District Ahmedabad).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution re-registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,
10-12-26, Bombay.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,
33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

AMRUTANJANI PAIN BALM PRODUCE BEST RESULTS

IN

Headaches, cold, cough, burns and all other bodily
ACHES AND PAINS.

Price 10 Rs. per Bot.—Sold Everywhere—postage extra.

AMRUTANJANI DEPOT.

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

—A SAFE—
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch :—
KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

	Rs.	a.	p.
Subscription (including postage).
Inland ...	5	0	0
" " Foreign ...	5	8	0
Single Copy ...	0	8	0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931 :—“ We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine.”

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931 :—“ May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper.”

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931 :—“ I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days.”

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931 : I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to :—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1928 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

SELLING AGENTS :—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions :
ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan :
RASHID KHODADAD & CO
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

“ BOMBAY HOUSE ”,

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 72.

MOROCCO

12 Reels, featuring

GARY COOPER, MARLENE DIETRICH AND ADOLPH MENJOU

A Paramount All Talking Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 38 and 39.

PURE AND SIMPLE

2 Reels, featuring

LOUISE FAZENDA

R. K. O. Comedy.

STRIKE UP THE BANT

1 Reel,

A Paramount Screen Song.

SOCIAL LION

7 Reels, featuring

JACK OAKIE, MARY BRIAN, SKEETS GALLAGHER AND OLIVE BORDEN

A Paramount All Talking Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

PHANTOM OF THE OPERA

10 Reels, featuring:—LON CHANEY, MARY PHILBIN AND NORMAN KARRY

A Universal Talking and Sound Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30 and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

DRY MARTINI

6 Reels, featuring:—DAVID ROLLINS AND NANCY DREXEL

Fox Picture.

TIME:—Sat., Sun. 4-30, 6-30 and 10 P.M. CINEMA.

Mon. 6-30 and 10 P.M. CINEMA.

Tues., Wed., and Fri. INDIAN STATES' PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE from 9 A.M. till midnight. NO CINEMA SHOWS.

Fri. 6-30 and 10 P.M. CINEMA.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JUNE 13, 1931

No. 41

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Mr. Ramanand Chatterjee's Address. Social Legislation in Federated India. Mr. Joseph's Letter. Muslims and Central Responsibility. Buddha and Women's Status. Nudity in Law. Religion and the State. Divorce. Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. X.	Waman Shirodkar. Bombay Vigilance Association. The Rural Uplift Conference. Lord Buddha as the Great Emancipator of Indian Women. Christian Missions. South African Visitor Observes American Prohibition. The Brahma Samaj and Christian Missions. News and Views.
---	--

NOTES.

Mr. Ramanand Chatterjee's Address:—The organizers of the All-India States' People's Conference, showed great discernment in inviting Mr. Ramanand Chatterjee, the distinguished and scholarly editor of the Modern Review, to preside at its third session which opened in Bombay on Wednesday. Mr. Ramanand Chatterjee does not belong to the ranks of professional politicians, having been all his life interested mainly in education and social and religious reform. His presidential address was expected to be an important contribution to current political literature. But it has proved to be much more than that. It is a classic of political philosophy on the future evolution of United India, touching as it does on all aspects of the complex question with a wealth of lore, insight and wisdom which disarms opposition and leads the reader without an effort to the conclusions that Mr. Chatterjee draws with unerring hand from his premises. These conclusions are always much less wide than his premises warrant. His statements are all understatements. There is not a trace of heroics, nothing to hurt the susceptibilities of the most sensitive Prince or Minister. Light without heat, is the keynote of the address. But it does not lack in the warmth which comes of the ethical nature of the speaker being engaged in his thesis. The general rule observed by Mr. Chatterjee is to suggest rather than to insist. In one place only he is emphatic. It is with reference to the proper repository of residual powers. "I have not the least doubt," he said, "that the Central or Federal Government should have these powers." It is a pleasure and a delight to read his address. It has invested the third session of the States People's Conference with a prestige and an authority which few movements attain during such a short period of existence.

Social Legislation in Federated India:—Among the important resolutions passed at the Indian States People's Conference, the most important, perhaps, is the one which dealt with the subjects to be specifically assigned to the Federal Government. The first place among these was given to Civil Law which, of course, includes social legislation. The disruptive effects of each province and State passing its own marriage, divorce and succession laws, are obvious, and equally obvious is the need for uniformity in these laws. This point was emphasised in the article in which Mr. K. M. Munshi reviewed the Mysore Committee's report in the Reformer. We are glad, meanwhile, that the Mysore Representative Assembly has practically unanimously accepted in principle the main recommendation of the Report, which will now be put into legal shape and introduced in the Legislative Council. Professor Abhyankar in moving one of the resolutions at the Conference made appreciation reference to the Mysore Government as a "responsive" though not yet "responsible" one and to Sir Mirza Ismail's calling into consultation representatives of the State and British India before he left to attend the Round Table Conference. We are glad to see that the Dewan in response to public opinion has dropped the proposal in the Budget to revive school fees in middle schools.

Mr. Joseph's Letter:—Mr. George Joseph in his letter published elsewhere warns or advises us not to presume to form or express an opinion of the precepts of Jesus which is different from that of professing Christians like himself. If he reflects a little, he will realise that the very precept to carry the gospel to all men implies the right of all men to interpret it in the light of their own knowledge and experience. This writer has read the New Testament for many years and meditated much on the life and teachings of Jesus. Without questioning the right of Mr. Joseph and other professing Christians to follow the traditions of their Church, he thinks he is entitled to form his own conclusions, and one of these is that Jesus never wanted his followers to upset other people's religious beliefs and that it is contrary to the whole tenor of His teachings to assert that He did so. Mr. Joseph is not a greater authority on Christian teaching than His Holiness the Pope who publicly protested a few months ago against the increase of Protestant propagandism in Italy and made diplomatic representations to the British Government with reference to the visit of the Archbishop of Canterbury to Jerusalem. The Catholic journals are full of diatribes against Protestants, and at one time Catholics used to burn Protestants alive, and the flames of the Inquisition were wafted over the seas even to distant Salsette where these lines are written. The only effective safeguard against the recurrence of these distressful episodes of rival religious propagandism, is the traditional Indian policy, to which our leading article refers, of the State being the Protector of all religions and ensuring for the professors of each freedom from molestation from others.

Muslims and Central Responsibility:— Commenting on the resolution of a recent Conference that unless Muslim demands were conceded, the leaders will not agree to responsibility at the centre, we enquired how absence of responsibility will help the community. The Sunrise which is nothing if not intrepid, replies as follows: "Any increase of responsibility at the centre, we are perfectly convinced our contemporary knows, would mean an increase of power in the hands of the Hindus. And as the Hindus have completely lost the trust and confidence of the Muslims, the latter do not want that more power be given in the hands of the former unless they (the Muslims) are assured by the provision of effective statutory safeguards that the Hindus will not be allowed to use that increase of power to injure and damage Muslim interests. In view of the present atmosphere of the country the Muslims positively do not want the extension of any power in the hands of the Hindus. Hence their opposition to the introduction of responsibility at the centre if their demands are not accepted in toto". It seems to us that so long as Hindus are a majority, the presence or absence of responsibility at the centre, can make no material difference. Even Muslim rulers found it necessary to be responsive to Hindu sentiments, not necessarily because they sympathised with them but because otherwise the administration could not be carried on. Babar's testament, found in the Bhopal Library, lays down the broad principles to be followed by his successors and it is noteworthy that the founder of the Moghul Empire exhorted his successors to stop cow-killing as it would bind the Hindus to the Empire as nothing else could. The British Government, by its very constitution, cannot be less regardful of Hindu sentiment than the Moghul Emperor, and careful observers can discern signs even now that British opinion is beginning to get restive at the thought of holding up Indian reform because minorities refuse to be conciliated. The comment of the Times cabled this week by Reuter is significant. We do not understand what is meant by saying that the Hindus have completely lost the confidence of the Mahomedans. It may be that the writer in our contemporary has been let down by his Hindu friends, but to talk of some 200 crores of people losing the confidence of 70 crores or vice versa, conveys no intelligible meaning, and is really of a piece with the political hypochondria to which we referred sometime back. As for statutory safeguards, statutes do not execute themselves, and we shall be interested to know what source or force it is intended to rely on for safeguarding the safeguards.

Buddha And Women's Status:—We yield to none in our reverence for the Founder of Buddhism but we do not think as Mr. Bhagat Ram, whose letter we publish elsewhere, does that His greatness depends to any extent on what He did to raise the status of women. Mr. Bhagat Ram contrasts the position of women in pre-Buddhist times with that in Buddhist times to the disadvantage of the former. There is no evidence to support this opinion. On the contrary, women in Vedic India which was not far remote from the time of the Sakyamuni, enjoyed freedom which was quite modern in all essentials. This is almost a commonplace of Indian sociology and we need not say anything more about it. Even the admission by Buddha of women as nuns, to which Mr. Bhagat Ram refers, was merely carrying forward a practice which had been adopted by Jains before His time. Hindu scholars, not all of them orthodox, trace the lowering of woman's status and the incidents referred to by our correspondent, to Buddhist influence with its stress on the monastic as superior to the householder's life. The fact is that Buddha's attitude to women, like Christ's, completely overlooked the physical attribute of sex and concerned itself with them purely as spiritual potentialities co-equal with man. To claim Buddha as a leader of the women's movement twenty-five centuries ago, is unhistoric, however grateful it may be to reformers who like to have some ancient name to lean upon.

Nudity in Law:—One of the ancient orders of the Jain monks, known as the Digambaras, wear no clothes. Recently a party of them visited Broach and was arrested for walking naked in a public place. After a few days, they were released and, we think, the general opinion was that the arrests were due to overzeal on the part of local officials and that the release was the result of intervention from higher authorities who took a broader view of the incident. We are, therefore, surprised to get a Press Note with the complements of the Director of Information, explaining, quite unnecessarily, that the Munis were not released unconditionally but on their giving an undertaking (a) that the Munis while passing along a public street near populous areas would be surrounded by at least 10 Sevakas and (b) that instead of proceeding through the Bombay Presidency to South Kanara, as was their original intention, they would go to the Central Provinces by the shortest route from Broach, namely via Katagan (near Surat), Vyara and Khandesh, thereby avoiding populous cities. The first was a reasonable condition. We think, indeed, that the proper thing would have been to require the local Jain community to provide an escort with a cloth screen to protect the Munis from curious eyes. As the object of the Munis is to conform to a religious precept and not to exhibit their naked bodies, they could not have objected to this arrangement. But the second condition, namely, that the Munis will not march through Bombay presidency but will make a bee-line to Sir Montagu Butler's territory, seems to be a bit of unjudicial joke which, however, suggests the sinister possibilities of vesting residual powers in the provinces and States of Federated India. As we are on the topic of nudity, may we point out that the stark nudity of the sadhus is less detrimental to public morality than the three-quarter or even four-fifths nudity of fashionable women which is apparently approved by the law. Fashion can evidently condone what religion can not.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, June 13, 1931.

RELIGION AND THE STATE.

The attitude of the National Congress to religion is indicated in the clause in the resolution on "Fundamental Rights" purporting to secure to every citizen "freedom of conscience and the free profession and practice of religion, subject to public order and morality." It is also laid down that "neutrality" is to be the State's attitude towards religion. Mahatma Gandhi in introducing the Karachi resolution explained it to mean that "Swaraj will favour Hinduism no more than Islam, nor Islam more than Hinduism. But in order that we may have a State based on religious neutrality, let us from now adopt the principle in our daily affairs and let not a Hindu merchant hesitate to have deserving Muslims as his employees and let every Congressman make religious neutrality his creed in every walk of life." If this is what the resolution means, there is nothing in it to which exception can be taken. The State is not to remain aloof from but to "favour" religion, but no one more than another. Individual citizens in their business relations are to set a wholesome example by not discriminating against persons on the score of religion. The crux of the matter is that, according to Mahatmaj's explanation, the State is not to "boycott" Religion. It must look with an equal eye on all religions professed by its citizens. This is in perfect accord with Mahatmaj's character and it is the traditional Indian policy, still recognised more or less in the Indian States.

Neutrality, however, is hardly the right word to describe that policy. That word correctly represents the attitude defined in the Nehru Report when it laid down that the State as such should make no endowment to any religion either directly or indirectly. That is also the policy followed by most of the European States and it rightly represents the position which religion occupies in the life and thought of Western races. But the place of religion in the life of the people of India is entirely different and the policy of the National State should correspond to it. There is a group of Indian politicians who would like the Indian attitude to religion to be transformed to what it is in Europe. This may or may not be a good thing, but the political constitution of the country should not be made an instrument of anti-religious propaganda. Indian civilisation as compared with western civilisation is poor in material achievement but it has better conserved spiritual values, because it is rooted in religion. Sir Bampfylde Fuller, recording his impressions of the United States, is disconcerted by the supremacy of wealth in the great Republic. "In India," he reflects, "I have seen a local millionaire drive through his town absolutely unnoticed, although he had an English coachman, whereas, when a Hindu or Muhammadan "saint" passed, almost naked, along the street, there was not a shopkeeper who did not rise and salute him. In America—and with us at the present day—the case is exactly contrary."

It is obvious that this did not strike the ex-Indian official as quite an improvement on the Indian point-of-view. But this is not all. The clause which ensures freedom of conscience to the citizens also gives the State the power to set up a moral code independent of religion. In fact it postulates that religion is likely to antagonistic to morality and that the State has an infallible instinct to judge what is moral and what is immoral. We do not think that such a pretension has ever been put forward anywhere outside British India. Our Christian rulers could not accept the religions of India as having a moral basis. The National Congress has adopted their attitude without understanding its real significance. Does any Hindu or Mahomedan, Jain or Buddhist, Jew or Parsi, admit, that his religion sanctions practices contrary to morality and that the State is more competent to undertake responsibility for the morality of the citizens?

The traditional Indian policy of uniting the State and Religion in the closest bonds resulted not only in creating sympathy between the rulers and the ruled but it also strengthened the foundations of the State. Under the proposed scheme religion will develop its speculative aspect while the State will flounder in just those matters which affect most deeply the lives of the citizens. There is another consideration which cannot be too forcibly urged. The subjects of a secular State, and this is very much the case in India, will of necessity owe it a divided allegiance. Religion here rouses such intensity of feeling that it is almost dangerous for a Government to lose touch with it. The more so in a Federal Constitution where religious organisations will command a wider appeal than the State which to the majority will probably be too dim and distant an entity to arouse interest or enthusiasm. Religious rivalry may well increase, communal distrust under such conditions will assuredly flourish and, instead of harmonising the relations of communities, a secular State will introduce more discord. Congress has dealt with the issue in a very perfunctory manner and it has not taken pains to study the history and traditions of this country. Religious neutrality is an impossible attitude for the Indian national State to take up. In practice it will infallibly work out to supporting reactionary forces in religion and society as the experience of British India amply demonstrates. It is inconceivable to the average European that a State can be the Protector of several religions. Not a little of the primitive idea of a jealous God has inhered in the Western concept of religion and whenever a State was associated with religion, it was with only one—Catholic or Protestant. But the Indians many centuries ago thought of religions in a very different way, as so many different pathways to salvation. Hence it has been not only possible but necessary in this country for the State to be the protector of all religions. This is no mere theory. It has been practised in many states as a matter of tradition, and is being systematized today in Mysore where an orthodox Hindu Maharaja and his Moslem minister are working out the synthesis which alone can ensure communal harmony in the country.

DIVORCE.*

In this little book of less than one hundred pages eight well-known authors on social subjects frankly express their views on the question of divorce. Mr. Bertrand Russell observes that children are the one purpose of marriage, that clearly the interests of children provide the main argument against too easy divorce, that, therefore, when a marriage is childless, the State has no interest in its permanence, and it ought to be dissoluble on the application of either party. But when there are children, the matter is more complicated and, though he thinks that here too the balance of advantage is in favour of permitting divorce, but on a more restricted scale, he comes to that conclusion because he expects that conscientious parents will hesitate to subject their children to the emotional strain and nervous damage too often entailed by separation or violent disagreement. He would rely on making parents more conscious of their obligations towards children, and holds that, as a matter of private morality, parents ought to be slow to resort to divorce except for grave cause.

Miss (or Mrs.) Fanny Hurst writing with special reference to the wide diversity of the law of divorce in the United States, takes more or less the same view as Mr. Russell. The problem, as she puts it, seems rather how logically and humanely to deal with the sacrament of marriage after it has ceased to be that. "Not that anybody" she adds, "can sanely regard divorce as anything short of a sordid, vulgar, and most of the time a reprehensible social ill." Divorce is an evil but in the conditions prevailing in America it is a necessary evil. Miss Rebecca West also regards the divorce of married people with children as being nearly always an unspeakable calamity. Her own temperament, she says, hates to own failure and she would never wish to break a marriage which she had made. She also believes in the sanity and stability of the vast majority of human beings, and, therefore, sees no great risk in making provision for the annulment of unhappy marriages. Miss West says she is thinking of English conditions which are stabilised by long usage, but admits that in America there are forces which tear marriage asunder, such as the geographical instability of life which keeps the population perpetually on the move and the housing system typified by the sky-scrapers.

Mr. Theodore Dreiser, another American writer of distinction, applauds the Soviet system in which the problem has been simplified by the State stepping in at birth and having everything to say as to how the child is to be nursed, fed, clothed, exercised, educated and what not else.

* Noel Douglas, London.

And then, there is no private property in Russia and no reason for either husband or wife or children to hang on, love or no love, in the hope of making something out of it. As the State not only provides, but compels labour at equal pay for equal work for both parents as well as all children over sixteen, husband and wife are quite free to leave the other and go their way to any part of the country. Up to the age of sixteen, husband and wife contribute pro rata out of their earnings until the child is old enough to work. If what they can give is not enough, then the State does the rest. "Personally," writes Mr. Dreiser, "I am not, as yet, prepared to wish for Communism in toto, but when I contemplate the Russian, as opposed to our own marriage and divorce systems, I can only wish that the Russian system could apply." As the Russian system is founded on the abolition of private property, we do not see how, without accepting communism in toto, Mr. Dreiser can wish for this incident of it.

Mr. H. G. Wells is uncompromisingly hostile to divorce which he denounces as inhuman. "No devout Catholic," he writes, "could be more flatly opposed to divorce than I am." The very idea appals him. "It seems entirely dreadful to me," he observes, "that two people who have been linked by anything more than a casual encounter, who have gone about as close allies, who have done tender and unselfish things for each other, who have cared for the same things, who have laughed together, and made happiness and delight for each other, should be supposed to be capable of a complete mental and physical separation." We are not quite clear as to what exactly Mr. Wells recommends. He objects to the conclusion of any marriage before offspring are assured. Until children appear, he would not have the State intervene either to make people live together or to oblige them to live apart. But the moment a child is born, he would apparently make the marriage irrevocable by statute. In case there should subsequently arise disagreement between husband and wife, Mr. Wells suggests that the State should appoint trustees and assessors with authority and powers "to recall them to their responsibility, and arrange the best working scheme for the child or children concerned."

Mr. Warwick Deeping pleads passionately for perseverance in marriage. He writes: "It is just because marriage transcends mere physical contact and the facility of the sex spasm—and is at its best a contact of minds and temperaments and ideals—that it presents to those who have persevered in comradeship a permanency that is far more beautiful and satisfying than any come-and-go-as-you-please arrangement. If we believe that marriage is somehow sacred, because of the almost sacred associations it involves, and that it offers to man and woman the fullest self-expression in the field of comradeship, we can say that life is not a night-club affair". He admits at the same time that there are hard cases, and there should be provision for meeting them. He specifies certain reasons such as chronic meanness or an uncontrollable and venomous temper, addiction to drink or drug, for which divorce should be allowed. But this he would make contingent on a review of the situation at the end of a period of three years. "If at the end of the three years one of the partners should still demand annulment of the marriage, let it be so." This suggestion overlooks the fact that if two people get accustomed to do without each other's society for three years, the chances are that, except in rare cases, they may find they can do so permanently.

Many of us derive our ideas exclusively from English sources and are, therefore, apt to regard the English point of view as the typically Western point of view. That this is not the case is shown by the striking contribution to this symposium by M. Andre Maurois who after briefly tracing the history of the law of marriage in France, concludes that the present French divorce laws are well adapted to their manners and that they have no need to enlarge them. "The Marriage that we know in France", he writes, "is founded on three essential elements, a religious belief, the physical and economic inferiority of women and the education of children by their parents within the family circle." The Catholic view of marriage as indissoluble except by annulment of the Pope, has a strong hold on the French people and is not materially affected by the civil law permitting divorce. The economic position of women is changing and there must first of all be great changes in women's political status for a new form of marriage and divorce to occur in France. "In regard to the education of children", observes M. Maurois, "which in Anglo-Saxon countries is carried on in the school, it still remains part of the family rule here."

The German view represented by M. Lion Feuchtwanger is very much a matter of fact one. He favours freedom of divorce but insists on marriage being first made a clean economic contract stipulating that at the wish of either party it must be severed without delay. The contract should specify exact conditions for the regulation of the economic side of such a severance with special reference to the existence or absence of children. Mr. Feuchtwanger makes an important suggestion. In the case of the wife having no profession of her own, or if she gives up her profession in order to marry, it would have to be laid down how her domestic work should be remunerated. "It would be beneficial too," he goes on to say, "if the State would pay more attention than heretofore in its labour laws to the profession of the housekeeper wife." This is an attempt to provide for the economic incidents of divorce in a system based on private property.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. X.

( BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI. )

( Concluded from the last issue. )

When the patriot prince Mir Kasim, Nawab of Murshidabad, who ruled over Bengal under the thumb of the East India Company, found that the Indian trades from whom he strictly exacted tolls and duties were ruined by the unfair competition of the Company's servants who carried on private trade for their own profit but from whom he was absolutely powerless to collect any tax, he desperately abolished all duties, tolls and taxes on internal trade in order to equalise the chances of his native subjects and save them from the unscrupulous tactics of his irresistible western friends. And in the result he succeeded only in ruining himself.

To disturb and offend vested interests by imposing legally a rigid monogamic obligation for life on the Hindu male is no joking matter considering how powerful is the hold of the privileged masculine element in every department of life in this country. Even the go-ahead Government of Baroda has not yet attempted it except by the Civil Marriage Act of 1908 which is however only an optional law. But the desperate alternative of abolishing the monogamic obligation altogether even from the Hindu female, in order to equalise her matrimonial status with that of the male, would have horrified the whole world and ruined the prestige of any Law Reform Committee, for it is universally agreed by every civilised community without exception that woman at least must on no account be exempted from the observance of that principle and allowed the right of polyandry.

An equitable middle course, however, may not be impossible. Man may be conceded the privilege of marrying again lawfully but only with the consent of his previous wife, as was the law throughout in ancient India and as is still the law in French India. But the second marriage of the husband even though contracted with the wife's consent, should entitle her to obtain judicial separation or even a dissolution of her marriage bond with him if she so desires at any time. And whatever misconduct (like unmanageable turbulence or infidelity) or misfortune (like barrenness or other disability or disease of an incurable character) on the woman's part may be held to justify man in discarding his wife and marrying again, similar misconduct or misfortune on the husband's part should entitle woman to get her marriage with him dissolved. This legal concession given to the individual however would not interfere with the right of each caste and sect to restrain its female members, even if they obtain a divorce according to law, from marrying again in the life-time of the first married husband on pain of excommunication or other social penalties, so as to keep up a standard of domestic life within its fold consistent with its own ideas of parity, decency and high culture.

We are happy to learn from a remark in the Report of the Desai Committee of Baroda that a Hindu Divorce Bill is now on the legislative anvil in that progressive Hindu state which has never hesitated to amend the Hindu law from time to time, even "against the long cherished notions of Hindu Dharma and Vyavaha'ra Sha'stra," with a view "to bring Hindu law on a line with the advance of Hindu society and into harmony with the ideals of the people." Mention was made in the Reformer long ago of the introduction of this Bill. It is to be hoped a full text of the Bill will be soon made available through its columns.

The Memorandum accompanying the Questionnaires sent out by the Hindu Law Reform Committee inviting the considered views of the public, set forth that "among the matters which will engage the attention of the Committee, an enquiry into the conditions obtaining with regard to the position of women generally under the Hindu law as at present administered operates harshly, unequally or anomalously, or fails to meet sufficiently the needs and conditions of the time, will occupy an important place." In the Questionnaires however and also in the Report and the Draft Bill, the Committee have refrained from coming to grips with the fundamental questions of Monogamy and Divorce the neglect of which lies at the root of women's present sad position in Hindu family life. But at the same time the learned Committee were too large-hearted and humane and too wide awake to the "just and reasonable requirements of the immediate present" to ignore the fundamental facts of the situation. They have in fact neither shut their eyes nor closed their hearts to the woes and wails of the superceded and crucified Hindu wife. On the other hand, within the limits set for themselves under a restricted interpretation of their terms of reference, though they could do nothing to prevent or discourage the abuse of excessive irresponsible power now centred in the hands of the Hindu husband, they have done their utmost to mitigate the wife's agony and save her self-respect from the moment that her life's happiness is irretrievably shattered and she is thrown on the scrap heap. This they have amply succeeded in doing by concentrating and compressing all their compassion for her into the domain of "Maintenance" the last refuge of all hopeless derelicts.

Brother's Sin Visited on Sister:—A Lahore message dated the 3rd June to the Hindu Says:—A sensation has been created in Lyallpur over the sudden expulsion from the Government Girls' High School of Lilavati, sister of the late Sukhdev who was executed along with Bhagat Singh in the Lahore Conspiracy case. It appears in March last when Srimathi Lilavati, with other relatives, came to Lahore to have a last interview with her brother, her name was struck off the rolls of the school. On her return to Lyallpur, however, she was assured her name would be re-entered and was attending school for the last two months; but, now she has been informed she could not be kept in the school any longer.

WAMAN SHIRODKAR.

SYMBOL OF THE NEW URGE.

(BY THE REV. WALTER B. FOLEY.)

(Concluded from the last issue.)

So at twenty years of age the young man leaves Western India and makes the 1,300 mile trip across to Bengal to enter Santiniketan as a student of Sanskrit. This ancient language and literature formed the center of his attention for a year and a half. He made trips through the Province of Bengal studying in far away villages the old forms of speech with their modern equivalents. In this study he learned more of the story of the pilgrimage of his ancestors from Goud. He found again and again words that were identical with those to which he had been accustomed from childhood. In fact it took him only one month to obtain a good working knowledge of Bengali.

Yet as he tells his story one can discover two other forces working in his mind in addition to his interest in Sanskrit. He was socially minded and therefore greatly desirous of bettering the condition of village people with whom he was in constant association. Then, too, he found himself becoming more and more interested in music. Finally, the urge for music overpowered him and he went to one of the teachers of the subject and asked him to give him a twenty minutes lesson per day. The teacher laughed at him and asked him how he thought he could learn music that way. Somewhat discouraged he did not approach the teacher again, but began picking up a few songs from the boys as he heard them singing.

Finally, drawn by some deep desire, he went alone, as he thought, to the Kala Bhawan, or Music Hall, and there sang whatever came to his mind. While he sang, a figure appeared behind him and, turning, he found he was singing in the presence of the great Poet, Rabindranath Tagore himself. The Poet had been in the upper art gallery and had been so attracted by the charming voice of the youthful singer that he had descended to discover that he had in his cultural center one of those rare musical voices that sing their way into human hearts.

Immediately the Poet took Vaman Babu to Dinu Babu (Dinendranath Tagore) the grandson of his oldest brother, and the leader of music in Visva-Bharati, requesting him to teach Vaman all that he knew.

This marked one of the sudden changes that seem to come to men of genius in all ages. Vaman did not really believe that he could take up the study of music seriously after he had reached the age of twenty-one. But the urge was upon him and he settled himself to the task which he found to be an exceedingly joyous one. As he studied over his seemingly rapid development of musical interest his mind went back to the days of his father's singing before the little temple. Then he traced the fact throughout his life that his ears had been constantly attuned to music.

Within three years he completed the course under Dinu Babu and became at once one of the teachers. When he entered upon this phase of his experience he began the study of painting, thus giving himself still another cultural outlet.

Though his mind was fixed on his music he could not avoid (nor did he wish to) the numberless calls of social needs about him on every side. The atmosphere of Santiniketan promoted all kinds of high ideals and coupled with them a desire to serve the nation. The old challenge to do something for Indian villages returned, or rather was strengthened. He began to toy with the thought of leaving Santiniketan and of attempting to do a constructive personal piece of work.

At just this time it was the good fortune of the writer, who was then Director of Ushagram, a village reconstruction center for boys, to meet Vaman Babu and a few other friends in connection with a closely developed association with Shantiniketan. The result of our conferences was that Dr. Tagore gave permission for Vaman Babu to spend one week of each month at Ushagram.

The young musician came and for the first time our boys and girls at Ushagram began to get a simple realization of what modern Indian music actually means. For six months this preliminary experiment went on. We had numerous long talks and walks together when we went far across the rice fields and sat for hours talking of the India, that was beginning to rise with a new desire for modern knowledge and active leadership.

Some months after when the writer had accepted an editorial position a letter came from Vaman which remains our treasured possession. It told something of the yearning desire of his heart and mind to do something for his mother land, particularly through the development of village life. It spoke of hearing Bishop F. B. Fisher in a stirring address on "Creative Freedom." It gave sentences to the social views we held in common, and ended by asking whether it would not be possible for the writer of the letter to throw his life and the activities of Ushagram, there to develop among village boys and girls latent talent in music and painting which he had discovered was present.

So it came about that Vaman Shirodkar travelled the great distance geographically, mentally and socially that lay between his childhood day and his young manhood.

For two years and a half the young artist musician has given his days and his nights to bringing out the best in boys and girls at Ushagram. The talent he has discovered is amazing. I have in my possession the second picture painted by one of the boys. It is true in all its fundamentals. Only a superficial technique can be taught to the boy. Another boy is moving fast along the road to becoming a fine sculptor and so the story might go.

And remember these are village boys without background, or heredity or anything we might call cultural. But genius is there. Vaman Babu is calling it forth.

The life of the village of Ushagram grows normally. The present Director has given Vaman every opportunity at his command. He too is young and, with the best of experimental education from Columbia University, he serves in a land where the socially minded are coming to be the leaders of a great people. As Fred Williams and Irene and Vaman and Narayan and Nirajan and Fajjan go in and out from this creative center the culture of Vedic India mingles with the eager expectancy of our modern times to produce a belief in the excellence of days that are to be when youth will give itself in finer service in the greater nation.

BOMBAY VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

The following is the Secretary's report of the work done by the Bombay Vigilance Association during the month of February 1931 :

Brothel Area :—In my reports for the past few months it was mentioned that a great change had taken place in the Brothel Area. Notices were given to many brothel keepers to vacate the premises, many houses were vacant, some were partially occupied and there was a marked decrease in the number of women in the whole area, especially when the test cases were made. But now it seems that this change was only temporary and that the area will soon be crowded with prostitutes as before. Perhaps this was due to fear of the Amended Act being put into force vigorously. Some of the landlords who had served their tenants with notices have not taken any further action to eject them. Some buildings like the Alexandra Terrace at the corner of the Foras Road, which were partially occupied some months back are now fully occupied. Two houses on the Falkland Road near Play House Tram junction are now vacated but the Cooper buildings at the other end of the Falkland Road which were almost vacant are again fully occupied.

Outside the Brothel Area :—There were some groups of buildings in different parts of the city outside the Brothel area which were wholly occupied by prostitutes. Some of these buildings are now cleared of prostitutes by the landlords and are reoccupied by respectable families and the prostitutes have been scattered all over the locality and are carrying on their business mostly through pimps.

Complaints :—Among those complaints investigated during the month were :—

(1) A complaint was received that a woman was behaving in a disorderly manner and was a source of danger to public morality near Naigaon D. D. chawls. After investigation I found that there were about half a dozen Manggarudi (a criminal tribe) women who got drunk and carried on solicitation openly on the road. They were living with some other people belonging to the same caste on the open ground near the D. D. chawls and it was really a source of danger to public morality. As it was not possible for me to do anything more in the matter, the complainant was asked to refer the matter to the police and request them to take action under the Prostitution Act. But the complainant said that the matter was brought to the notice of the Police but no action was taken by them.

(2) A gentleman complained that his wife who had disappeared from his house some three months back was brought to a room facing his own in the opposite building by a pimp, was compelled to put on Mahomedan dress though she was a Christian and was made to earn money by prostitution. After careful investigation it was revealed that though there was a woman living with a pimp and carrying on prostitution in the building she was not the wife of the complainant and the husband made a mistake in identification. This was proved to the satisfaction of the man and he had to admit his mistake.

(3) A complaint was received from a tenant of a house at Colaba that a notorious procuress had recently come to stay in the building and as her immoral activities were going on by day and night she had become a source of nuisance to the tenants of the whole building. They had made a complaint to the landlord as well as the police but no action was taken. After investigation I found that the woman was a notorious procuress and was well-known to the police and other rescue workers. She was carrying on this business also in the building where she was living formerly and it was after a great trouble that the landlord got her ejected from the house. Now she has become very old, even unable to walk in the house, and she therefore cannot do anything. But she has kept a girl as her sub-tenant who is in the keeping of a man and also receives customers occasionally. But she is living alone and it could not be called a brothel and no action would be taken under the Prostitution Act.

Amusement Parks :—Eight Amusement Parks were working at the beginning of the month. Three more were opened and three were closed during the month leaving eight at the end of the month. One of those which were closed had been transferred to Surat. Some of these parks changed their names during the month but the management remained the same.

Poets' Remarriage :—The marriage has taken place of Srimati Radharani Dutt, a Hindu widow, with Babu Narendranath Dev. The event is unique from more than one point of view. Both the bride and the bridegroom are high class Kayasthas by caste and are wellknown to literary Bengal as poets of a high order and the occasion is rare when a poet marries a poet. The function has been blessed by Rabindra Nath Tagore who has sent a letter to Srimati Radharani from Darjeeling. Rai Bahadur Jalandhar Sen, Editor of the "Bharatvarsha" took a leading part in the ceremony which was performed under strict Hindu Shastric rites and was attended by a large number of men and women of letters as well as journalists.

THE RURAL UPLIFT CONFERENCE.

It has been now universally recognised that the condition of the people residing in villages has been far from satisfactory and the work of agriculture on which the prosperity of the country mainly depends has been suffering enormously owing to the deterioration and demoralisation which have set in as a result of heavy economic depression. The urban population has increased by leaps and bounds in the last 40 years on account of the not very enviable attractions available in cities and towns. The intelligent section of the rural population has drifted to these places only to find urban unproductive employment. The over-production by the universities has also resulted in unemployment and alienation of the people from their village pursuits. This state of affairs has resulted in general disappointment and dissatisfaction regarding the prevailing conditions both in rural and urban areas. Under the circumstances it is a happy sign of the times that rural welfare is regularly engaging of late more and more attention of thinkers to this highly important question of improving the economic and moral condition of the inhabitants of the rural areas who have been impoverished by litigation in courts and by the facilities which have been offered in the supply of intoxicants such as liquor, opium, etc. Several individuals and institutions, private as well as official, have been making efforts for improvement, some in silence, others with more or less advertising. While success has been attained by some to a more or less extent the efforts of others have ended in failure as soon as the artificial forces which prompted the efforts collapsed in course of time.

The Deccan Agricultural Association after due consideration has taken up general rural welfare as its principle nay its sole activity in extension of the work of agricultural improvement to which it had confined itself until about two years ago. With a view to give effect to this policy the Deccan Agricultural Association started a centre at Khed-Shivapur which is a group of three small village hamlets situated a mile in the interior from the Poona-Satara road at a distance of about 16 miles from Poona. The village is an ideal one and although a good deal of spade work has been done it is not pretended that the association has been able to show much tangible work owing to the comparatively short period of two years which it has been able to devote to such an experiment. Numerous inquiries have been however made from time to time and a number of visitors are also attracted to the place. These inquiries and visits as well as letters and articles appearing in the press clearly show that there are a number of intelligent and leading inhabitants throughout India who are thinking seriously on the subject. While some consider that the spread of general education is the only remedy for improving the moral tone, others think that unless Village-Panchayats are started throughout the country the villagers will not be able to realise the importance of self-reliance. There are others who are of opinion that the increase in agricultural production is all that is needed to relieve the pressure of economic depression. It is needless to repeat here the various other directions in which improvement is contemplated.

In order to give an opportunity to the leaders of thought to exchange their views it has been decided by the Association to hold Conference of workers in the cause of village uplift and to invite them to Poona which is one of the few cities in the country having a salubrious climate at this time of the year. This is the first year for a general conference of village uplift workers and therefore a short programme for a couple of days 20th and 21st of June 1931 has been arranged. The conference will meet at a convenient time at Khed-Shivapur. Details of programme will be supplied later on. Plenty of time will be found for informal discussion and time will be allotted for reading papers on the various branches of the work to those who have started experiments in their places. The subject matter of the paper will ordinarily be a narration of actual work already undertaken showing the ideals in view.

As the funds of the Association are limited it is not proposed to hold an exhibition on a large scale but room will be provided for, locating exhibits should any be sent or brought up by exhibitors at their own cost.

The replies to this appeal may kindly be addressed to the General Secretary, Rural Uplift Conference, Seva Sadan buildings, Poona No. 2. Information about the details of arrangements for receiving and lodging members of the Reception Committee, Delegates and other guests will be supplied on request being made in good time.

Miss Katherine Mayo's Method:—Miss Ellen Wilkinson, M. P., has addressed the following letter to Miss Blanche Watson (New York) in reply to the latter's letter regarding Katherine Mayo's new book on India. "Thank you for your letter. Katherine Mayo has no authority whatever to use my name in connection with her book. I protested on the floor of the House of Commons about its propaganda character and I have protested on public platforms in London. I asked her to a meal at the House in order that she should meet certain Members of Parliament who were particularly interested in India. I took care that Mr. Saklatvala, the Indian who was at that time a Member, should be present and he completely floored her statements about the Indian hospitals. I certainly never said that her book was very valuable, or true. I did say it had interested me enormously. I said that in a speech to the meeting mentioned above. That is the only sentence I have ever used to give the faintest color to what she is saying. I shall be very glad if you will deny her statements about me wherever you can, and if there is any channel in which I can make this statement public, I shall, of course, be willing to do so."

LORD BUDDHA AS THE GREAT EMANCIPATOR OF INDIAN WOMEN.

In pre-Buddhist days women's status had not been worthy of their intelligence, of the tasks they so ungrudgingly performed, or of their devotion to husbands whom they were supposed to treat as gods. Wives and daughters were regarded as so much property to be exploited. Widows were creatures of illiomen. Women were obtained for marriage also by capture or by purchase. Only as a mother of sons did a woman command any respect,

With the advent of Buddhism women's disabilities diminished until women approximated to equality with men. Motherhood retained the supremely honoured position. The position of widows underwent a rapid, striking, and salutary change. They had no longer to proclaim their state of austerities—such as shaving their heads, discarding their jewels, and sleeping on the bare ground. Wives took a full share in the management of the children and the property.

An unhappy wife might divorce her husband in cases he were guilty of adultery, that is, one of the five main offences. She could then build up her married life anew, if she desired so. On the other hand, a man might divorce his wife for this reason, also if she were barren; but not (as in pre-Buddhist days) if she were disobedient and quarrelsome.

Being singularly free from the taint of outward rites and ceremonies, Buddhism did not believe that "sons were necessary for the safe translation of their fathers to Heaven". Hence the birth of girls began to be welcome as that of boys. A girl was no longer a curse; but in the words of Lord Buddha, "she may prove even a better offspring than a boy".

Child marriage was not prevalent. On the contrary, it was usual for a girl, having reached years of discretion, to have some considerable say in the selection of her husband. Moreover, she was not slighted if she did not marry.

This increasing freedom of conscience culminated in one of the strangest phenomena in Buddha's religious history, namely, the formation of a Buddhist Order of Bhikshani-women. Lord Buddha recognized the mental and spiritual capacity of women even as He did that of men. Thus women were deemed to be equally capable with men, of winning Arhant-ship or Sainthood—the goal of the religious life. And great was the work of preaching and conversion done by the Bhikshani-women, as they journeyed from one place to another in all but the rainy seasons.

All these facts are explicit in the teaching of Lord Buddha, and reveal His great belief in the dignity and rights of women as the equals of men.

Ferozepore Cantt.

BHAGAT RAM.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I know this letter is belated, because it refers to a note in the Reformer of May 9. My plea is that I am not a regular reader and my attention was drawn to it by a friend who furnished me with a copy of the issue.

There is only one point I wish to make now. You seem to doubt whether it is the duty of Christians to convert others to the Faith. I do not know how there can be any such doubt. The whole history of the Church from the time of the Apostles and the Early Fathers makes it perfectly clear that they deemed it part of their religious duty to win souls for the Lord. They could not conceive how a man can have God's grace except as a member of the Church. On this question no well-informed person can have a second opinion. You say that there are devout "Christians" who hold a contrary view. I do not know who they are. Even if there should be such "Christians", I venture to think that it will be some odd person who breaking away from the discipline of the Church sets up some heresy or other for his delectation and the misleading of the ignorant.

As for your interpretation of Christianity and what Christ meant, I shall not enter into a discussion. There is a saying of Wendell Holmes that controversy is futile as long as there is no agreement on the premises. You are not a Christian and I am one. We differ on the premises. I believe in the Divinity of the Lord and the authority of the Church, its traditions and interpretations. You do not. I would therefore respectfully deprecate the laying down of Christian dogma by a non-Christian, at least to the extent of its being of any use to a Christian.

All that is relevant is this: Christians believe that it is their duty to convert others to Christianity. It is for them to define and practise it as long as there is neither fraud nor force. They live in a country which is mainly non-Christian. Gandhiji says that there should be no conversion, that Christian missionaries running hospitals and Colleges will be driven out under Swaraj; or to use his language, they will be invited to withdraw. I say that such a ban will amount to the violation of religious neutrality, and that it is unjust. Gandhiji who ten years ago dragged the whole of India to the defence of the Khilafat in support of the religious liberties of a minority acted wisely and justly. Now that he is on the verge of political victory, it seems a little sad that he is pursuing policies and making declarations which perplex and distress the religious minorities. You mention Maulana Shaukat Ali and myself. It is an agony for me to differ from Gandhiji: he is such a great and valiant chief. I daresay Shaukat Ali feels just as I do. But for the moment, it looks as if Gandhiji has allowed his judgment to be dominated by the fact that the Hindu majority is the only one that counts in India, that the Hindus count and that the 3 millions of Sikhs count, that the Mussulmans can be divided and 4 millions of Christians (perhaps they are 6 millions today) can be ignored. It is tragic for co-workers of Gandhiji to differ from him. You may be sure that I have not done so lightly. But I can none other.

Madura,
5th June 1931. }

GEORGE JOSEPH.

SOUTH AFRICAN VISITOR OBSERVES
AMERICAN PROHIBITION.

The Tribune, of Capetown, South Africa, reports very interesting comment on prohibition from Mrs. H. C. Horwood, counsel and leader in the Trained Nurses Association of South Africa. Mrs. Horwood has recently returned from a three months visit to the United States. She is not, she says, a prohibitionist and visited America to observe the operation of public health measures. "I can claim that my observations are free from bias," says Mrs. Horwood.

"I was three months in the United States, and visited many of the big cities—New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Providence, Washington, Baltimore, Nashville, Atlanta, and others. In New York I spent four hours one night tramping the meanest and most squalid streets, streets formerly notorious for their saloons and drunkenness, yet although we were out until nearly midnight, we saw not one drunken man or woman; nor did we see one illnourished, under-fed, or under-clothed child. All over the city, where the saloons once stood, are today handsome shops—jewellers, drapers, furniture stores, etc.—certainly not there to look at, but to serve the needs of a community with money to spend.

"In the Philadelphia General Hospital, two wards, one for D. T's and one for mental cases, have been closed through lack of patients. The Superintendent of Nursing held prohibition to be one of the greatest blessings of the present day. On the other hand, the Psychopathic Department of the huge Municipal Hospital in Chicago was full to overflowing with terrible cases of D. T's and other mental disturbances, and I was told that a large proportion of these last were attributable to alcohol in some form. Evidently there are varying degrees of law enforcement, and these produce in different places differing results. In Atlanta, when studying social welfare work there, I encountered some cases of habitual drunkenness, so it is clear that alcohol is not wholly out of reach of the poorer sections of the community. But so far as this is so, it serves to establish the manifest benefits which these sections have generally reaped under prohibition as the fruits of a voluntary compliance with the law rather than a forced abstinence.

TRAVELING IMPRESSIONS.

"In the whole of my three months' tour of the States I did not see one intoxicated man or woman on the streets. Traveling as a stranger with nothing to indicate my personal views, I was not once offered any alcohol or even asked whether I was an abstainer. It was taken for granted among the people I met that one obeyed the law. This does not mean that I saw no evidence whatever of drinking. In some of the hotels at which I stayed it was plain that alcohol could be obtained, and was being consumed in some of the bedrooms. Indeed, in one hotel I told the manager that my neighbors sounded as though they might become unsatisfactory; he said it should be attended to, and it was. But this was exceptional, and I had no personal experience like that related to me by one of America's leading medical men, who said that in a Pittsburgh hotel he had complained to the management when a crowd of young people under the influence of liquor made themselves objectionable, and was then informed that no less than 34 had been turned out for this cause the night previous. From what I saw and heard I can only conclude that hotel conditions vary from place to place, and possibly with different hotel in the same place, but that there is much less drinking than there was with the open bar.

A GENERALIZED VIEW.

"This indeed is the general impression I gained, that prohibition in the United States is not all of a piece, but subject to striking variations in different places and with differing strata of society. I was told everywhere by social workers, both white and colored, that the poorer sections of the community cannot and do not obtain alcohol easily, and that the consequent improvement in their home life and social conditions is plainly visible. Rising in the social scale, some of the better class workers do keep, drink, and offer alcohol. Among a section of the wealthier people, so I was assured by serious and responsible citizens, it is considered correct to offer alcohols, and to be under the influence of liquor in a friend's house is not considered a disgrace. Consequently, among the more educated and more favourably placed classes there is a feeling in some quarters that the law as it stands is not satisfactory. But those who protest the loudest all declare that they would never contemplate returning to the old days of the saloon. So it would seem plain that comparing now and then, there has been a manifest improvement.

THE CHILDREN.

"While the lower classes have benefited enormously as a result of prohibition, it is, I think, the children who have felt the advantage most. Shall I ever forget the fine physique of American youth, the evident well-being of American children and the real intelligence devoted to their care? It filled me with envy?

"Of course it would not be fair to claim all the improved conditions I saw as the effect of prohibition. Hand in hand with prohibition have gone intensive welfare work, health education on a scale and a degree undreamt of in a community like ours, and a cycle of commercial and industrial prosperity that must show itself in the physical well-being of the workers. Also there has been throughout the world a development of recreational facilities, offering counter-attractions that must affect the demand for alcohol. The factors bearing on the social and economic condition of any country are so varied and interwoven that one hesitates to ascribe too much weight to any one factor, yet any social or child welfare worker studying conditions in the States, particularly in comparison with the Cape or with the old days in London, must admit that more than anything else the fine physique of the children, the wonderfully lowered tuberculosis rate, and the rapidly improving V. D. returns, are due primarily to prohibition.

THE BRAHMO SAMAJ AND CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

Our attitude towards Christian missionaries and Christian missions are well-known writes the Indian Messenger, the organ of the Sadaran Brahma Samaj. Raja Rammohun Roy, the founder of the Brahma Samaj, was instrumental in inviting Dr. Alexander Duff, the Prince of Protestant missionaries, to work in Bengal. What help the Raja rendered to the newcomer is by this time authenticated by history. When Rammohun left Kamal Bose's house, previously occupied by the Brahma Samaj, to Dr. Duff for the use of his newly-started school, he (Rammohun) pointing to the punka, said to the doctor, "I leave this my legacy to you." The Raja's biographer Nagendranath Chatterjee in a private conversation with the present writer interpreted this legacy to be symbolic of the educational work placed in the hands of the foreign missionary, reserving the work of religious reform for the Brahma Samaj founded by him. The Raja well knew that as the result of English education there would be more educated men in the country than the number of stray converts to Christianity. He valued and welcomed Christian philanthropy, which is of the essence of Christ's teach. For this part of their work, which the missionaries, both Catholic and Protestant, have to their credit carried on till now, we are grateful to them. Enlightened Indian leaders have suffered Christian dogmatism for the sake of Christian philanthropy and they still do suffer it, thinking that a few millions of converts among a people of 33 crores strong would not matter much. But what offends them is the denationalisation of the converts and the political use made of them.

We say to our friends, the Christian Missionaries, 'you cannot serve two masters, both God and Mammon. Be about your Father's business, as your master was about his. Part with racial pride, aspire not for world domination nor help in the exploitation of weaker races, if you are the true disciples of the Jagatguru (the world-teacher) Jesus who was aniketa (without a limited home) having no place where to lay his head. Proud of your possessions you cannot preach Christ who said "Sell all thou hast and follow me." India judges you by this high standard. Either you must come up or recede.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Andhra University Science Institute:—A committee consisting of Sir M. Visweswarsya, Sir G. V. Raman, Messrs. V. Ramakrishna, H. Narayana Rao, Visa Appa Rao and B. Dey will meet shortly at Waltair to draw up plans and recommend other arrangements for the starting of the Science Institute of the Andhra University next year.

Pilgrims to Iraq:—The Protector of British India Pilgrims attached to the Secretariat of the High Commissioner for Iraq warns Indian pilgrims of the dangers to which they are exposed if they enter Iraq without proper papers. "It cannot be too strongly emphasised" says the Protector, "that Indian pilgrims who attempt to enter Iraq without proper papers are running grave risks. The Iraq control send back to India by the steamer in which they arrive any pilgrims who land at Magil without papers. Pilgrims found in Iraq without papers are liable to fines and imprisonment under Article 12 of the Iraq Residence Law, and the Iraq authorities strictly enforce this article. "With improved security and facilities for travel in Persia, the number of Indian pilgrims who make their way to Iraq as best they can either along the shores of the Persian Gulf or through Central Persia is bound to increase. During 1929 many Indian pilgrims reached Iraq in this manner without papers, having avoided the various control posts en route, only to be apprehended by the Iraq Police on arrival. Such persons are of the poorest class of pilgrim determined, in defiance of all obstacles, to reach Karbala or Mecca. They are illiterate and ignorant of the routine of foreign travel. Some reach Iraq in a state of exhaustion with neither the means nor the strength to return home to India and have to be repatriated at Government expense. Others beg for facilities to enable them to proceed with their journey on foot to the Hedjaz, representing that all their effort in crossing Persia would be of no avail if they were obliged to return home from Iraq without performing the Haj, merely owing to lack of formal papers." It must, therefore, be emphasised that it is quite impossible for a pilgrim to travel overland to Mecca through Persia, Iraq, Palestine and Egypt without proper papers.

ADVERTISEMENTS

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription.	Inland	...	Rs. 2-3-0	V.P.P.
"	Foreign	...	" 2-8-0	Post free.
	Single Copy	...	0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for electrical engineering college opening at Bombay. Preparation for London City and Guilds examination. Railfare Paid. Prospectus on 2 annas stamps.—Technical Institute of India, Ltd., Delhi.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a
HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT
with us and earn 3½% interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

(BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memoa Street, Bombay.,

BANDRA.

Branches: { CALCUTTA.

AHMEDABAD.

POONA.

SURAT

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhoi, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadl, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

JAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Shri Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vitthaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhalial Dajibhai Amin B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)
 Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Muxumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

G. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

—101—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 ANNAS.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulia (District West Khandesh).
Bira ( " " ).	Dondaicha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Mandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindheda ( " " ).
Shirale ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kalva ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Paighar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akni (District Solapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Virangaon (District Ahmedabad).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorized Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay

Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle, Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,
INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital (Paid up) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

SAFELY RELY

ON

AMRUTANJAN BALM

FOR THE CURE OF

Colds, Cough, Headaches, Rheumatism, Swellings and all other kinds of Aches and Pains.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

IT IS YOURS

A SAFE
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—
KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies'
Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. s. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

" " Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single Copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Began in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1928 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

Hardens Rapidly giving Standard 28 days Concrete strength at 4 days.

DISTRIBUTORS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 73.

DIXIANA

12 Reels, featuring

BEBE DANIELS, EVERETT MARSHAL, BERT WHEELER

AND

ROBERT WOOLSEY

R. K. O. All Talking, Singing and Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 40 and 41.

TONS OF MONEY

11 Reels, featuring

RALPH LYNN, YVONNE ARNAUD, MARY BROUGH AND MADGE SAUNDERS

British Dominions Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

NUTS AND JOLTS

1 Reel,

Universal OSWALD LUCKY RABBIT Cartoon

DEAR TEACHER

2 Reels, featuring

CHARLES DALE AND JOSEPH SMITH.

A Paramount All Talking Comedy.

MELODY OF LOVE

8 Reels, featuring:—WALTER PIDGEON AND MILDRED HARRIS

Time:—4, 6-30 and 10 p. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

TRUTH ABOUT WIVES

6 Reels, featuring:—BETTY BLYTHE

B. B. Production.

TIME:— 4-30, 6-30 and 10 P.M.

Sun: 9 to 12 noon VARIETY PERFORMANCE

organised by

MISS MANI BEN KARA.

MATINEE AT ALL THE THEATRES ON MONDAY 15th (BANK HOLIDAY)

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JUNE 20, 1931

No. 42

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Lady Dorabjee Tata.	Babar's Testament.
The Maharaja of Patiala's Scheme.	Inter-Communal Amity.
Six and Half a Dozen.	Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. XI.
Congress and Hindus.	Hindu Widow Remarriage Movement.
Ashamed for Nothing.	British India and Indian States.
Bombay University and Women Students.	Hinduism in India.
The Threefold Commonwealth.	News and Views.
The Future of the Brahmin.

NOTES.

Lady Dorabjee Tata:—The death of Lady Meherbai Dorabji Tata in a Nursing Home in Wales, news of which was received on Friday, is a serious loss which is sure to evoke widespread feelings of grief all over the country. As she advanced in years, she grew more and more inclined to identify herself with the Indian view of things and, within the last two or three years, she had by general acceptance taken the position of the recognised and responsible leader of women's movement in this country. She spared herself no trouble, even in a poor state of health, in attending to every call made on her energy and time on behalf of women in any part of the country, and she kept herself well posted in every good work in which Indian women collectively or singly were engaged from Assam to Colombo. Some time last year, this writer had occasion to discuss the various phases of the women's movement with Lady Dorab, and he was surprised by the wide range of her information and interest. She was in touch with all leading women workers in the country and knew many of them personally. The address which she delivered as Chairman of the Reception Committee of the All-India Women's Conference, held in Bombay last year, showed that there was not a single matter concerning Indian women's welfare of which she had not thought and on which she had not formed definite opinions. Her death at a comparatively early age and at this juncture, is a grievous loss, and Sir Dorab Tata and the family have the sympathy of every class and creed in their sad bereavement.

The Maharaja of Patiala's Scheme:—The Maharaja of Patiala published this week his plan of how to proceed towards bringing about the federation of British India and the States. His Highness candidly avows that he had changed his mind since he returned to India from the Round Table Conference, that he now regards it would be dangerous particularly for the smaller States to enter into the Federation individually, that they should first federate all the States under the suzerainty of the Sovereign, and later on join British India with greater prospects of safeguarding their interests and helping national progress. Many of the premises of the Maharaja are wholly untenable on the face of them as, for instance, when he implies that there is more affinity between Patiala and Sangli than between Patiala and the neighbouring British districts in the Punjab or between Sangli and the neighbouring Bombay districts of Poona, Dharwar and Belgaum. The Patiala scheme is full of such faults. It bears in fact the same relation to a true Federal Constitution as a child's kindergarten cottage does to the Viceroy's House in New Delhi. But that is no reason why the Maharaja should be denounced as he is being denounced, especially by certain scribes who have taken upon themselves to act as bull-dogs of the Federal Committee's scheme. One of these egregious persons has gone so far as to rake up old scandals and to threaten the Maharaja with dire pains and penalties at the hands of the Government of India. We cannot understand what all this fuss is about. The Maharaja has merely gone a step farther than Sir Manubhai Mehta, and both were perfectly entitled to modify their views as all conclusions of the London Conference were expressly declared to be provisional.

Six and Half a Dozen:—From the British Indian as well as from the States' Peoples' point of view—both are in substance identical—the scheme outlined in London is quite as objectionable as the scheme adumbrated from Patiala. When Princes disagree, the people have, perhaps, a chance of coming by their own. From this stand-point, the publication of the Patiala scheme is by no means a calamity. As we have often said, it is far more important that the right thing should be done than that something should be done instantly. The anxiety to have the matter settled in hot haste, is itself suspicious. "If it were well that it were done, then it were well it were done quickly." That was Lady Macbeth's argument to incite her husband to despatch Duncan, but it is not an argument for statesmen. The elimination of the official block in the Legislature will not be much of a gain if it is to be replaced by thirty or forty members from Indian States imbued with the doctrine of the laws of natural allegiance, alias, the divine right of Princes. The British official in the last resort is responsible to a democracy even though it is a remote and inaccessible one, and whatever may be his private opinion, so long as he holds his office he must see to it that his reasoning does not contradict, not at least flagrantly, the fundamental principles of the British constitution. Unless these fundamental principles are accepted by the States entering the Federation and embodied in their constitution, the representatives from British India and those from the States will, to all intents and purposes, be speaking mutually unintelligible languages in politics and administration. It is not at all desirable from the point of view either of the States or of British India, to form an incoherent Federation for the mere purpose of satisfying Lord Reading and Sir Samuel Hoare and to induce them to agree to "responsibility at the centre" which will in truth make the centre more irresponsible than at present, and, worse, banish the very idea of the rights of citizens from the realm of practical politics for at least a whole generation.

Congress and Hindus:—There is a feeling among Hindus that, in their anxiety to demonstrate that they are above any communal feeling, Congress Hindus tacitly acquiesce in and sometimes even openly associate themselves with palpably unfounded statements bearing on Hindu history. There is some ground for it. The most recent instance is to be found in the speech which Pandit Jawharlal Nehru made at a public meeting in Bombay last Saturday. Referring to the communal problem, the Pandit said that really speaking there was no such problem. It was just like the belief in ghosts of people who are a prey to their own fears. This is precisely our own opinion. The Pandit went on to speak of the minority demand for safeguards: "What really affects the minorities", he said "is not the few seats that they get on the legislature but it is the freedom of language, freedom of culture, religion and education." He recalled how hardly minorities fared in European countries, and added that since the Indian National Congress by passing a resolution on fundamental rights had guaranteed this freedom, minorities might rest satisfied. The implication is that but for the Congress guarantee, European precedents would have been followed in this country. The desire of Congress leaders to magnify that body is quite intelligible. At the same time, historical truth should not be sacrificed, and the truth is, whatever might have happened in Europe, in India it has been the immemorial policy, with occasional breaks during the Mahomedan period, to leave every community perfectly free to follow its own culture and traditions. If Pandit Jawharlal did not know this, his knowledge of the history of his own country, must be imperfect. If he knew this and still applied the European parallel to entirely different Indian conditions, we hardly know how to explain his remissness. In order to be fair to minority communities, it is not necessary to be unfair to the majority community, though it may happen to be one's own.

Ashamed For Nothing:—We reprint to-day the part of Mr. Ramanand Chatterjee's presidential address at the States' Peoples' Conference, in which he contrasted the conditions in British India with those in several of the States. He said that it must be admitted to "our shame" that the latter is inferior to the former in many respects. We do not see why British Indians should be ashamed of the fact. The progress in British India is as much the result of the co-operation of Indians as of the British, and its achievements are, therefore, as much ours as of the British. Britain has not produced similar results in any other country with which she has been connected. Some years ago, a distinguished British journalist told us that it was a pity that there was no one in Egypt who came up to the level of Gokhale as a statesman. In other walks of life, too, British Indians have distinguished themselves. There is nothing to be ashamed of in all this. British rule has broken down the walls within which the soul of India sat confined and let in a flood of light and air which has awakened her to her great duties to herself and to the world at large. The great point of difference between us and the so-called "advanced" type of politicians—who are really retrograde—is that we regard the British period as an organic part of Indian history, while they seem to draw an arbitrary line between it and pre-British Governments. What India is to-day is as much the result of historical evolution as what it was before Britain took the helm. The evolutionary view of Indian history, which Ranade did much to pioneer, can alone be the basis of constructive statesmanship. There are many things in Hindu society of which we do not approve, but we are not ashamed for that reason of being Hindus, but work in the best way we can to improve conditions. We must cease to look upon the British period as a period foreign to Indian history, if we wish to realise the full potentialities of the British connection not only to raise India to the plane of self-government but to become the medium through which the genius of India can find its highest expression as a world influence.

Bombay University and Women Students:—The Senate of the Bombay University cannot be congratulated on the cursory manner in which it dealt with the serious problem of hostel accommodation for women students in Bombay city. The main argument advanced against the University providing such accommodation, was that it was the duty of the colleges. But there are no women's colleges in Bombay and women students are distributed among half-a-dozen Arts and professional colleges in such a way that there are not enough in any single college to encourage investment in this direction. Nevertheless, we are glad to know that Wilson College is making a beginning. But Wilson College is a denominational college and the position of such colleges in a national system of education, will call early for consideration and possibly revision. Another difficulty peculiar to Bombay is that of finding suitable sites for hostels in the vicinity of the colleges. For these two reasons, among others, a central hostel maintained and managed by the University seems to be the best solution to the problem which, we repeat, is a very serious one in the conditions prevailing in the city. The matter cannot be allowed to rest in the indeterminate stage at which the Senate's resolution has left it.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, June 20, 1931.

THE THREEFOLD COMMONWEALTH.*

On reading this book for the first time, it occurred to us that "Towards Caste" would be the most appropriate heading under which to review it. On second thoughts, we felt that it would not be fair to the author, Dr. Rudolf Steiner, to introduce his book with a title which might prejudice it with those—and their name is legion—to whom the word "Caste" is as a red rag to a bull. Moreover, although Dr. Steiner makes no reference whatever to the Indian institution and, in fact, appears to be wholly unaware of its existence, in his concluding section he protests that he is not attempting to revive the three old "estates" of the Plough, the Sword and the Book, which is the nearest Western equivalent of Caste, and that what he intends is, indeed, just the very opposite to such division into grades. We, therefore, think it proper to notice Dr. Steiner's book under the title of his own choice leaving the reader to find for himself if "The Threefold Commonwealth" awakens in him, as in us, thoughts which suggest an analogue to "Caste."

Dr. Steiner's essay was first published in April 1919 with the title "The Threefold State"—Die Kernpunkte der sozialen Frage. It attracted considerable attention as an attempt to find a middle way between Socialism and Capitalism. A second edition of Dr. Steiner's essay was published in 1920 under the title Dreigliederung—The Threefold Commonwealth—and the book before us is the English translation of this edition. A reprint of Dr. Steiner's article in the Hibbert Journal of January 1921, with the heading "Spiritual Life, Civil Rights, Industrial Economy" is inserted as a special foreword to this edition, and it gives in brief the essentials of his scheme for reconciling the rival creeds of capitalism and socialism.

Dr. Steiner starts with the arresting observation that the evils which Socialism seeks to remedy are real but that Socialists are mistaken in attributing them to Capitalism as such whereas, really, they are due not to Capitalism which, within the industrial sphere, is useful and necessary, but to capitalistic influence invading spheres to which it is alien and harmful. Because a man is a successful financier it does not follow that he is a great statesman or a great artist or a religious teacher. Yet in modern life a successful businessman, merely because he has run a bank or factory profitably, often exercises a dominating influence not only in politics but even in the spiritual sphere. "Out of any special sphere of life", says Dr. Steiner, "man can only develop the interests peculiar to that sphere. Out of the economic sphere he can develop economic interests only. And if out of this sphere he is called on to produce moral and civil interests as well, then these will merely be economic interests in disguise." Prevent capitalist influence from invading the civil and spiritual spheres, and likewise the civil from invading the spiritual sphere, and you have "The Threefold Commonwealth" functioning harmoniously in all its parts.

The ancient Varnashrama of the Hindus tried to do this by assigning these functions, which it conceived as fourfold, to four several classes or groups. The Brahmin who had charge of spiritual functions was forbidden to make money or to take active part in government; the Kshatriya's function was to preserve peace and protect the country from foreign invasion and he too was not to engage in gainful occupations; the Vaisya to whom was entrusted the economic life of the community was not concerned either with the civil government or the spiritual direction of the people; and the Sudra or the manual worker supplied the physical basis of the social structure. Whether this Fourfold Commonwealth was at any time realised in its full integrity, it is difficult to say. But it is clear that the scheme was conceived in a scientific spirit, and if it had not hardened into hereditary castes, it might have changed the course of Indian history. Arjuna in the Gita is anxious to avoid war because its result, whatever it was, must lead to the confusion of the social functions, bringing disaster in its train. It is Dr. Steiner's considered opinion that the crisis in Western Civilization which culminated in the late War and the rise of Bolshevism is the direct outcome of a similar confusion of functions in the Threefold Commonwealth.

Dr. Steiner anticipates the criticism that his Threefold Commonwealth may also degenerate into a stratified society, and he assures the reader that it will not. He writes that by his methods

"men will not be divided into functions of the body social, neither as classes, nor Estates. It is the body social itself which will be functionally divided. And thereby man for the first time will be able to be truly man; for the three social divisions will be such that he himself has his own life's roots in each of them. His calling gives him a footing in one of the three, and to this he belongs through his practical interest. And his relation to the other two will be a very actual and living one; for his connection with their institutions is of a kind to create such a living relation. Threefold will be the body social, as apart from man and forming the groundwork of his life; and each man will unite its three divisions within himself."

* Anthroposophical Publishing Co., London.

Anthroposophy, the designation of the new science which Dr. Steiner's book expounds, aims at bringing together spiritual and practical forces which have got separated in modern life. "While fully recognising all that the natural science mode of conception means for the progress of humanity," Dr. Steiner observes, "Anthroposophical Science yet sees that all that can be arrived at by the natural science mode of knowledge will never embrace more than the external man." Failure to recognise this simple truth is the fundamental weakness both of Capitalism and Socialism, and insistence upon its recognition and embodiment in the constitution of Society and the State, is the central purpose of Anthroposophy. How this purpose is sought to be achieved in Dr. Steiner's scheme, must be left for separate treatment.

THE FUTURE OF THE BRAHMIN.

In connection with some of the incidents of the Karachi session of the Indian National Congress, we remarked recently that they, if repeated, might lead to the dropping out of South India from the movement. Perhaps, too, Congress head-quarters received a similar intimation from the Tamil Nadu leaders. Anyhow, two leaders of the front rank, and one on the way to it, namely, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Mr. J. M. Sen-Gupta and Mr. K. F. Nariman, made a tour of Southern India recently. The two recognised Tamil Nadu leaders are both Brahmins and the non-Brahmin movement which is to-day well entrenched in the South, will have no truck with them. If the non-Brahmins are to be drawn to the Congress, it must be by showing them that Congress has no more love for Brahmins than they have. This is the line which Mr. Sen Gupta would seem to have taken in one of his speeches in the South. A "Brahmin correspondent from Madras" reported to Mahatma Gandhi that during his tour Mr. Sen Gupta said that Swaraj Government would pass legislation to crush Brahmins and asked that Mahatmaji would state clearly the Congress attitude towards orthodox Hindus. We doubt if the writer of the letter was really a Brahmin. In spite of all his derelictions, the Brahmin, especially in South India, retains complete confidence in himself and is not easily moved by the outbursts of itinerant politicians. What seems to us more probable, is that the writer wanted to lead Mahatmaji to think that the Brahmins are the greatest obstacles to the removal of untouchability and other necessary reforms, and to draw from him a scathing denunciation of Brahminism. If so, he has partially succeeded in his object.

Mahatmaji says in his comments on this letter, published in Young India, that he does not believe that Mr. Sen Gupta made the statement attributed to him; in other words he believes that the correspondent is either telling a lie or has not taken care to verify his information. When Sir P. C. Roy could publicly express a wish, as he was reported to have done on one occasion, that the whole Brahmin race should be bundled in a sack and thrown into the Bay of Bengal, there is no inherent improbability in Mr. Sen Gupta undertaking when Swaraj came to crush Brahmins out of existence. Mahatmaji has availed himself of the opening offered by his correspondent to repeat that there will be no differentiation of rights as between touchable and untouchable under Swaraj. This is all right. But when he goes on to say that the Brahmin will not be obliged to touch the Pariah, implying that untouchability is mainly the doing of the Brahmins, we can cite more than one case which came to our knowledge in recent years, to show that to-day the Vaisya or the commercial castes are the greatest obstacles to the removal of this crying evil in Hindu society. When Swami Sarvananda came to Bombay some years ago to start the Ramakrishna Mission, one of the proposals before him was to open a settlement for untouchables. This was strenuously opposed by the mercantile gentleman at whose house the Swami happened to put up in response to his urgent request. More recently, although the Swami who founded the Fanaswadi temple was benevolently inclined towards a suggestion to admit untouchables, his rich Marwar supporters raised a hue and cry when Mr. Ambedkar and forty or fifty of his friends appeared at the gates. Why the Brahmin, who has many sins of his own to account for, should be saddled with the sole responsibility for the iniquities of Hindu society, and by Mahatmaji of all men, passes our understanding. If it be said that the Brahmin is taken as the most prominent and, therefore, typical representative of all Hindus, Mr. Sen Gupta's dictum would commit the Swaraj Government to crush the whole Hindu population, that is, three-fourths of the tax-payers!

The Brahmin to-day is the most hated and feared of Indian people. He is the object of a massed attack from all sides—from foreigners as well as from his own countrymen. Miss Mayo's worst attacks were directed against him. Most English writers, missionary and others, hold him up as the villain of Indian history, the evil genius of the Indian race. Sir Walter Lawrence in his "India that We Served", is torn between admiration for the patient persistency of the Brahmin and fear and dislike of what he regards as his machiavellian ways. He writes: "Unmoved by the imperial splendours of the Moghul, unshaken by the business grip of John Company and the subsequent triumphs of the British Engineer over space and drought, he (the Brahmin) can afford to watch with quiet indifference political experiments, exotic and of foreign inspiration. All these are for him so many smoke clouds, behind which he quietly works and consolidates." Again, "The patient Brahmin smiles. He has great hereditary qualities, amongst them the quality of waiting. He has seen mass desertions. He has seen many an inspired teacher trudging away to the delectable mountains. He knows that in good time they will all come back."

that they cannot do without their Brahman—not even the Sikhs, the Jains, not even the Buddhists.” Writing of constitutional reforms, he observes: “To me, India is Hindu, and whatever picture of “India Reformed” may have been in the minds of the imaginative men who made the rough sketch, in the finished work the Brahman will be the central and striking figure.” The Kashmiri Pandits were the strongest opponents of Sir Walter when he was Revenue Settlement Officer in Kashmir, and much of his exaggerated view of the power and influence of the Brahmin in Hindu society, is obviously due to that fact. That Brahmins have exercised in the past an influence in Hindu social life out of proportion to their numbers, cannot be denied, and we, for one, can hardly believe that they could have done so had they been the deepdyed monsters they are often portrayed to be. As a matter of fact, none of the great civilizing races, Roman, Arab, British, have so consistently adopted pacific methods as the Brahmin. They have certain qualities which rightly directed can yet be of great service to the country and, though they have deteriorated in many ways, they are still capable of contributing magnificently to the well-being of the land for which they have wrought and suffered for centuries.

Tho' much is taken, much abides ; and tho'
We are not now that strength which in old days
Moved earth and heaven; that which we are we are:
One equal temper of heroic hearts,
Made weak by time and fate, but strong in will
To strive, to seek, to find and not to yield.

BABAR'S TESTAMENT.

The following are the terms of the confidential Will which the founder of the Moghul Empire, Babar, left to his son, Humayun, and the original copy of which is in the State Library at Bhopal :

“O my son : People of diverse religious habit India ; and it is a matter of thanks-giving to God that the King of kings has entrusted the government of this country to you. It therefore behoves you that :

1. You should not allow religious prejudices to influence your mind, and administer impartial justice, having due regard to the religious susceptibilities and religious customs of all sections of the people.

2. In particular refrain from the slaughter of cows, which will help you to obtain a hold on the hearts of the people of India. Thus you will bind the people of the land to yourself by ties of gratitude.

3. You should never destroy the places of worship of any community and always be justice-loving, so that relations between the king and his subjects may remain cordial and there be peace and contentment in the land.

4. The propagation of Islam will be better carried on with the sword of love and obligation than with the sword of oppression.

5. Always ignore the mutual dissension of Shi'ahs and Sunnis, for otherwise they will lead to the weakness of Islam. Treat the different peculiarities of your subjects as the different seasons of the year, so that the body politic may remain free from disease.”

INTER-COMMUNAL AMITY.

(By SWAMI VISHWANANDA, OF THE RAMA KRISHNA MISSION.)

Nothing is more distressing to a thinking man than the communal squabble which is dragging the fair name of India in the mire. It is indeed a strange fact of history that religion has been the most potent cause for engendering love as well as hatred amongst different nations. In the name of religion our antipodes become dearest brothers and the next-door neighbour is considered an implacable enemy. How often has Mother Earth been drenched in blood in the name of religion ?

Those who hug to their bosom the external forms of religion, the encrustation of centuries, become howling fanatics. They fondly hope that in the near future the whole world will accept their credal religion. These are the denizens of fools' paradise. For good or evil, in Europe man is relying more on reason than scriptural texts since the Renaissance. The Indian youth has been inoculated with European ideas and sentiments. To him truth and humanity are dearer than doctrines and dogmas.

The silent, peaceful revolution that was going on in the sub-continent of India during the last year drew the attention of an admiring world. The moral and spiritual force stored up by the Weaver of Sabar-mati flooded the country. The sleeping leviathan woke up at long last. The glorious part which our mothers and sisters played in the struggles has been beyond the dream of the most ardent feminist. It seems India became overnight a nation. But what will be the contribution of India to world politics ?

“Anger cannot be conquered by anger, hatred cannot be conquered by hatred.” This was the message given by the Shakyamuni twenty-five centuries ago and a countryman of His has boldly come out today to apply the same principle in the sphere of international politics. To the nations of Europe, nurtured on the politics of Machiavelli and ethics of Hobbes, this appears to be an engima. But the war-weary world will find in it a ray of hope in the midst of thickening gloom.

Europe does not seem to have become wiser by the experience of the last Armageddon, which demanded sacrifice of nine million beings made in the image of God to Moloch. The world is receding from a great resolve made over the bodies of the glorious dead.

The war-mongers are rattling the sabre again. In July 1930, speaking at a banquet of the International Congregational Council, Mr. Lloyd George said, “I live in a quiet place in Surrey, far away from any towns, and I went there for quietness ; yet, every day I can hear the rattle of machine-guns in one camp, the hoarse roar of guns in another camp, and now and then I can hear the boom of the naval artillery down in the direction of Portsmouth. What for ? To slaughter men. And this is going on in every land on earth—I beg your pardon, in every civilized land on earth. It is really time the Churches took this in hand.” This is the cry of despair of one who should be the most potent force in restoring peace in Europe!

Nothing has been more gratifying in the proceedings of the London Conference than the declaration by Cabinet Ministers that they want to see India a world force. It is not by marching cohorts over the dead bodies that India has conquered other nations. Like the dew that falls unseen, unheard, yet brings into being the fairest of roses, she has conquered the world by peace and love.

But, how can India fulfil her mission if the Hindus and Muslims go on wrangling? Did not a prominent Muslim leader declare: "The Hindus and the Muslims are the two eyes of Mother India." Does any sane man amongst the Hindus think that seventy million Muslims can be driven to the deserts of Arabia? Does any Muslim seriously believe that a Muslim emperor, sitting on the Peacock Throne will be ruling over India once more? The wheels of history move onward and never go backward. The world is moving fast towards democracy and socialism, and the age of feudalism and communalism is gone for ever.

It is a thousand pities that the Hindus and Muslims have lived in this country for centuries, yet they have not tried to appreciate each other's culture. Ignorance is the cause of all suffering. How many Hindu boys, who quote from Chaucer and Spenser, Tennyson and Browning, know the name of Omar Khayyam? The study of comparative religion should be encouraged. Art does not recognise barriers of caste or creed, race or colour; and in killing this demon of communalism Art is destined to play an important part. Is it not an irony of fate that Hindus and Muslims should go on fighting in the name of music, when we find that the best exponents of Hindu music in northern India are Muhammadans? The sons and daughters of mother India can not afford to quarrel at the threshold of the new era. India has a glorious past. It is for them to make a more glorious future and to build up a noble type of civilization, which will be the admiration of the world.

Sarda Act at Naokhali:—The first case in Naokhali under the Sarda Act—the Child Marriage Restraint Act—was instituted recently in the court of Mr. B. R. Sen, the District Magistrate, by Abdul Gani of Manikpur, Ramganj, against two brothers, Abdul Aziz aged 50 and Abdul Kadir, on a charge of marrying two minor girls, sisters aged 4 and 2, respectively. It was alleged that the minor girls were the first cousins of the two men and that, in order to obtain the minors' share of the property, they were forcibly taken away from the custody of their mother, Chandra Banu, who married the complainant after the death of her former husband i. e., the girls' putative father. The Magistrate, after examining the complainant, issued an order on a security bond of Rs. 100 under Section 9 of the Act and transferred the case to the file of Mr. N. Bardhan, Deputy Magistrate, for preliminary enquiry and report.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. XI.

( BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTI. )

In Baroda, a "Hindu Marriage Act" has already restored to the Hindu wife her ancient right of co-ownership in her husband's property. But she cannot claim a separated share of it during his life-time except when he and his sons divide the property among themselves, and then she is given a share equal to that of a son. So long as the property is not divided, she has only a right to be maintained by her husband. But the obligation to maintain his wife is personal to every Hindu husband even in other parts of India where the current Hindu law does not accord co-proprietorship with him to the wife. It is in fact not dependent at all on the possession by him of any property but arises from the peculiar relationship created by the marriage.

This personal obligation of the husband, however, ceases when the wife leaves him of her own will and lives apart, except for causes recognised by the law as rendering such desertion justifiable. We learn from the Desai Report that by Section 28 of the Baroda Hindu Marriage Act, the wife is entitled to "ask separate maintenance and residence up to  $\frac{1}{4}$ rd share of her husband's income when there are any of the justifying causes." We wish we had that Act itself before us to know what the justifying causes are in that enlightened and progressive State. But we know what circumstances are deemed by the courts in British India and Mysore to entitle a wife to live separately and resist the claim of the husband for restitution of conjugal rights and yet ask for maintenance from him. (45 M. 812).

These "just causes" have been summarised by the Hindu Law Reform Committee in the long Questionnaire in Appendix I of their Report. They are: (1) Where the husband is suffering from a loathsome disease; or (2) keeps a concubine in the house; or (3) is guilty of gross cruelty; or (4) adopts another religion. To these, the learned Committee have added two more by clause 25 of their Draft Bill.

One of these additional clauses is "where the husband habitually misconducts himself with other women." This may be supposed to include not only general laxity and fickleness in sexual matters but also the keeping of a regular concubine though somewhere else than in the family house. "Personal laws are as a rule not overstrict as regards masculine lapses from moral rectitude but unduly harsh to those of the female," complain the learned Hindu Law Reform Committee of Mysore. "The law is much more considerate to the moral failings of the husband," they reiterate. "The mere fact that the husband misconducts himself with other women, or even has a concubine in his regular keeping, unless he goes so far as to keep her in the same house, does not justify the wife in leaving his protection. The view has even been seriously suggested (vide Mayne's Hindu Law: § 456) that the keeping of concubines is a matter of familiar usage among Hindus, especially of the higher ranks, and so not a matter to be objected to as offending the self-respect and religious feelings of married women, to the same extent at any rate as the keeping of non-Hindu concubines would be. One would be sorry to think of Mysore Courts lending countenance to any such immoral views and extraordinary distinctions." We have no doubt the Mysore Representative Assembly would be equally sorry to think of it.

The other just cause for separate maintenance newly recommended is "where the husband marries a second wife." Here again the learned Committee justly complain: "The law as administered does not take sufficient account of human nature or of the sensitive feelings of womanhood when it treats the taking of a second wife by the husband, even in the utter absence of a justifying cause, as disentitling the first wife from leaving her home. For it regards such a step callously as "one of the incidents of Hindu married life," even though other systems treat bigamy as culpable." All right-minded persons will agree with the Committee in thinking that "intelligent public opinion will welcome a change of attitude in this respect."

Besides making these two additions to the already accepted "just causes" for separate living, the Committee have also interpreted the old-time cause of "gross cruelty" in liberal terms. A husband is to be hereafter deemed guilty of gross cruelty not only when he "habitually" treats his wife with "such cruelty or harshness as to endanger her health or personal safety," but even when he "habitually" treats her with "such neglect or lack of consideration as to make her life with him miserable or unhappy." As the Committee feelingly observe: "There is a cruelty in treatment which may be far more galling to a sensitive spirit than physical violence, but which the prevailing law omits to take into account. A man may treat his wife with such utter lack, not merely of affection but of ordinary consideration, as to embitter their mutual relations and to make life a burden to the woman; and yet she has no alternative (where she can resist the temptation to suicide) between a prolonged existence of dependent misery and the being turned out of home into destitution and ignominy."

This is the terrible fate from which the Hindu Law Reform Committee of Mysore have striven to rescue the unfortunate Hindu wife. And this they have done by recommending for her a separate maintenance under the circumstances specified. An isolated act of unkindness or cruelty, such as an occasional slap in the face, or a non-habitual non-dangerous intermittent kick on some other part of the body, or an abusive outburst of temper, or a false and offensive imputation, or a rude snatching of the jewels, cannot of course be seriously resented or helped by law in this country where man has practically no place outside the inner apartments of his home to show off his masterfulness. Besides, these interesting little incidents are all part of the game of domestic camaraderie with a person who has behind him the age-long prestige of the superior sex for physical strength and audacity, and must be philosophically endured as such until jiu jitsu is made part of the regular curriculum of girls' education in every home. But to the Indian wife whose personal law at present neither helps her to prevent the husband from blasting her life by supercession, nor permits her to free herself from her bondage to him and rebuild her broken life honourably as best she can, but rigidly insists on keeping her tied by the neck to his feet even when she is trampled upon, on his making himself lawfully comfortable with another woman, by adding daily insults to injury, it is an inestimable boon to be given, as the learned Mysore Committee recommend, at least the power to assert her self-respect and save her soul from the corroding wrongs and insufferable outrage through a provision for separate shelter and fair livelihood, though bereft of the dignity of wifehood and denied the freedom of widowhood.

Within the Pale of Hinduism:—Dr. S. B. Munje writes: It has been brought to the notice of the Hindu Maha-Sabha that the sections of Leva Kunbis of Gujarat, Ootch and Khandesh who are known as Matias who follow the Atharva Veda and call themselves Sathpanthis or followers of truth, and who observe most of the Hindu customs, but who also pay homage at the tombs of some Musalman Saints, and are therefore also called Pir Panthis, but who have notwithstanding this, for centuries regarded themselves as Hindus and have been so regarded by others, have recently been declared by His Holiness the Shankaracharya of Sankheshwar and Karavir Maths as being outside the pale of Hindu Vedic religion. The Hindu Maha Sabha is advised that so long as a Hindu retains his faith in the cardinal teachings of Hindu religion and follows the main rules prescribed by it, he does not cease to be a Hindu simply because he observes certain days of fasting which are also observed as such by Muslims or Christians or pays respect to the tomb of some Musalman or Christian Saints. It is not a sin nor a sign of a change of faith to do so. Hinduism is most tolerant in giving freedom of personal beliefs, and has in its catholicity provided purificatory rites and means of spiritual uplift for even real lapses from religion. It has also provided for the admission into its fold of any one who accepts its cardinal teaching. The idea of putting a Hindu out of the pale of Vedic Hindu religion because he has adopted some customs or practices of another religion which do not clash with the teachings of his own religion is opposed both to the letter and the spirit of the teachings of Hinduism. The Hindu Maha Sabha exhorts all good Hindus to be generous in their attitude towards the brethren of their faith even though they follow some customs of another faith, and by such an attitude to encourage them to realise in a larger measure the truth and excellence of the teachings of Hinduism in their unadulterated form. The Hindu Maha Sabha warns all good Hindus against adopting or approving a narrow or too strict a policy in matters of forms of worship as might drive any of their co-religionists to leave the Hindu fold, and calls upon all of them to regard Satpanthis as Hindus as before and to give them all the service and benefit of belonging to the Hindu society.

HINDU WIDOW REMARRIAGE MOVEMENT.

Mr. D. V. S. Prakasa Rao B.A., Cocanada, writes as follows :

The first Hindu widow remarriage was celebrated in the Andhra Desa on 11-12-1881 according to strict orthodox religious rites by the Late Rao Bahadur K. Veeresalingam Pantulu in his house at Rajahmundry. The 50th anniversary of the remarriage movement will therefore fall due on 11th December 1931. The open manner in which the Mathathipathis of the day, the higher castes, the Hindu society in general, the pandits and to some extent the local authorities combined together to throw obstacles in the path of reformers and the extent to which the reformers were exposed to social troubles and persecution are known only to those that had witnessed them at the time and are still alive to explain or describe them. Men of the present day when reforms of all kinds are being carried out simultaneously on a large scale in some cases and to a moderate extent in others cannot imagine or realise the dangers and persecution undergone by the reformers half a century ago.

Widow remarried couples, their families and their descendants are now scattered over in the Andhra Desa from Nagpur and Khargpur in the north down to Madras and Bellary in the south. It is therefore suggested that they may be assembled on 11th December next at Rajahmundry, the Home of the remarriage movement, for celebrating the 50th anniversary in a befitting manner.

There will be every prospect of success to the celebrations if Sir R. Venkataratnam Naidu and the Maharajah of Pithapuram kindly condescend to befriend it as they are the advocates and friends of an allround reform in the Hindu society. The jubilee, of a momentous event in the social history of the Telugu country is now proposed to be celebrated and it cannot be brushed aside or forgotten as of ordinary importance. It therefore behoves the people of the East Godavary District in general and the citizens of Rajahmundry in particular to participate eagerly and endeavour to make it a success. In addition to the two gentlemen named above a small sub-committee consisting of Messrs. Rao Saheb Dr. V. Ramakrishnarao M.A.L.T., Ph.D. (Principal, Pithapur Rajah's College, Cocanada), Koka Venkata Subba Rao Naidu (Dewan of Pithapur estate), Ch. Lakshminarasimham (the Sir Walter Scott of the Telugu country), Rao Bahadur Pydah Venkata Chalapathy, the well-known philanthropist of Cocanada), K. Hanu-mantarao (Supdt., Widows Home, Rajahmundry) and Sir K. Sitaramachandrarao, a public spirited zamindar of Rajamundry), may be formed to work out the details.

Friends and sympathisers of the widow marriage movement are now to be found in sufficient numbers in every important town and village of the Telugu country. Such sympathisers may form themselves into small local sub-committees in their respective places so that the jubilee celebrations may take place not only at Rajahmundry, the birth place of the movement but simultaneously all over the Telugu country so as to create an ineradicable impression on the people at large of the sacredness and importance of the movement. It is hoped that this appeal will have an adequate response from all advocates and sympathisers of social reform in the Andhra Desa and that they will not lag behind in expressing their gratitude and admiration in a worthy manner for Mr. Veeresalingam Pantulu, his financial supporter Sri Pydah Ramakrishna Chetti and the remarried couples of the first batch who had undergone indescribable hardships and social persecution for their patriotism, humanity and courage of convictions.

Hindi and Urdu:—'A Bilingualist' writes in the Leader: The problem of the unification of Hindi and Urdu is a very old one. It dates back from the time of Lord Wellesley (1798—1805) when the Hindi and the Urdu prose forms were rather officially created for the use of Europeans, out of the current speech of Hindus and Mahomedans. Although later European writers charged Dr. Gilchrist, the head of the Fort William College of those days, and the prime mover of the two varieties of Hindustani prose, with the offence of unnecessarily dissecting the language of the people of Hindustan, nothing serious appears to have been done to bridge the gulf. The two varieties were recognised as the media of vernacular education and books were written in them for the use of schools. European writers wrote grammars of the two dialects on the basis of their different classical back-ground and in time the two forms of prose grew apace. In those days, however, the dialects had a simple vocabulary and an uncomplicated structure. With the spread of English and vernacular education after the mutiny, the controversy was revived and scholars like Raja Sheo Prasad of Benares made efforts to write the same language in Hindi and Urdu scripts. The Raja wrote the first two parts of his Itihasa-Timira-Nashak in the mixed dialect but had to fall back on pure standard Hindi for the third part of his book as it mostly dealt with the Hindu period. Later on he compiled a selection of pure Hindi extracts for use in schools out of the literature created by Bhartendu Harishchandra and his contemporaries. Thus the initiative for bringing about the unification of Hindi and Urdu was taken by Hindu partisans of Urdu. The effort, however, failed. Another such attempt was made at two different times by two different writers, one a Mahomedan and the other a Hindu. This was directed at using purely native (Thati or Tadbhava) words without having any recourse to Sanskrit or Persio-Arabic. Insha-Allah-Khan wrote his Rani Keski about the time of Dr. Gilchrist, and Pandit Ayodhya Singh Unadhyaya wrote his Thati Hindu Ka Thati in our own days. These books sounded a note of optimism in the solution of the problem, but they never inspired later writers to confine their compositions within these lingual limits. The controversy, on the contrary, encouraged extreme views and each party tried to make its dialect as unintelligible to the other as it could. The result has been that the chances of bridging the gulf and bringing about the unification of Hindi and Urdu have become more remote than they were at the close of the last century. They have, however, each developed a literature which bids fair to control the thoughts and aspirations of the two separate communities.

BRITISH INDIA AND INDIAN STATES.

Mr. Ramananda Chatterjee who presided over the third session of the Indian States Peoples' Conference instituted the following interesting comparison between Indian States and British India :

One of the gravest complaints against the Indian Princes generally is that far too much of the revenues of their states is spent for upkeep of their household and their personal pleasures. The states are not their personal property. Even private individuals who spend too much of their personal incomes for self-gratification and too little for the common good are blamed for falling below the ordinary human ideal of conduct. The Princes are, therefore, expected to cut down their personal expenditure and spend much more on what are known in the Provinces as nation-building departments, s.g., education. The British sovereign's civil list, that is, the sums assigned for the expenses of the sovereign and the Royal household, ought to be instructive to our Princes. The total amount of the British King's civil list is £576,000, and the total ordinary British revenue for 1929-30 was £734,188,748. So the King and his household get about .08 per cent. (or eight per ten thousand) of the British revenues. The actual amount of the British civil list in Indian money at the present rate of exchange is Rs. 76,80,000. I am sorry I do not have before me the administration reports of all the Indian States which publish them. Therefore, it will not be proper for me to mention the names of the two progressive States whose latest reports are before me and from which I shall take the figures for comparison with the British civil list.

In one State of which the total revenue receipts for the year was only 249 lakhs, the expenses of the royal household amounted to Rs. 29,60,000. This works out at a little less than 12 per cent. of the total revenues. In another State the total ordinary receipts amount to Rs. 247,23,000 and the palace expenses amount to Rs. 13,67,000, or 6.54 per cent. of the total revenues. This latter State spends 20.12 per cent. of the revenues on education. Therefore its palace expenditure must be considered as moderate, though comparatively not as moderate as that of the British royal household. Of course, on account of the immense revenue receipts of Great Britain its civil list appears very small in proportion. But considering that King George is the head of the largest far-flung Empire, the actual amount assigned for the expenditure of his household must be considered very moderate compared with even the amount spent for the palace of the last-mentioned of the two Indian States, which are very small in comparison with the British Empire. These, as I have said, are progressive states. There are states where the Prince spends more on his stable, his garage and his kennel than for the education of his subjects.

Whatever other things our Princes may or may not care for, I am sure they would be pleased if the income of their states increased. That increase would depend on better development and utilization of the natural resources of their states. Such development and utilization would be possible if only their subjects grew more healthy, and received adequate general, vocational and technical education of the right kind. It must also be evident that the increased production of wealth in their territories would depend not only on the increased physical working capacity, knowledge and skill of the people but also on the increase in the labour force and in the directing force available in their territories. In other words, there would be greater wealth if the health conditions were better, facilities for the right kind of education were increased and the number of capable workers increased by the increase of population. Briefly, there must be better workers and more workers. The improvement I have in view would benefit both the people and the princes. At present large numbers of states' subjects sojourn or permanently settle in British India and grow wealthy there, showing that they have enterprise and brains. These can be equally utilized for developing the resources of the regions where they were born.

Some people may think that in speaking of the need of increased population for the states, I am overlooking the danger of overpopulation. I am not. The average density of population in British India is 226 per square mile, and in the states only 101 per square mile. The only regions in the states which can be said to be densely populated are the Madras States Agency, with 511 persons to the square mile. Other regions are sparsely populated. How sparsely, will appear from the fact that the total area of 718,032 square miles of the states has 71,939,187 inhabitants, whereas the total of 1,093,301 square miles of the Provinces has 247,003,293 inhabitants. That is to say, the area of British India is about 56 per cent. more than that of the states, but the population of the former is more than three times that of the latter.

This difference will appear still more striking if we leave Burma out of British India. Then the area of British India will be 860,593 square miles and the population 233,721,101, as compared with the area of 771,032 square miles of Indian India with a population of only 71,939,187. Leaving out Burma the density of population of British India is 271 per square mile as compared with 101 per square mile of the states.

It may be that British India contains a larger population of cultivable and fertile land than the Indian States. It may also be that the Provinces are comparatively richer in mineral resources than the states. Exact data are not available for arriving at a definite conclusion on these points. It has also to be borne in mind that the best harbours and the largest number of harbours belong to British India, giving it facilities for maritime commerce which the states, mostly inland, do not possess. But making every allowance for the superior advances assumed to be possessed by British India in all the above-mentioned respects, they do not appear to me to be such as to account entirely for the immense difference between British India and Indian India in density of population. It seems to me that some other causes must have been at work for some appreciable length of time to produce such difference. These causes may relate to utilization of the resources of the regions; nutrition; sanitation; facilities for medical relief; education; facilities for trade and agriculture; the comparative presence or absence of the reign of law, personal liberty, and security of life and property; independence of the judiciary; and freedom of speech, association and of the press. Vital statistics for the Indian states as a whole are not available. Perhaps a few states are equal to British India in education and in some other matters, a fewer may even be superior in some respects. But on the whole, it must be admitted to our shame, that at present Indian India is inferior to British India in all or most of these respects I have mentioned. There is a dwarfing of the mind in the Indian states as a whole. It has been well said that in creation there is nothing greater than man and in man there is nothing greater than mind. If in any region, only the material welfare of the people were well looked after but the mind was dwarfed, it would after all be like a well-managed cattle farm. Nothing can compensate for the stunting and atrophy of the mind of the people. But it cannot be said that in Indian India as a whole even the material welfare of the people is cared for.

It gives me pain and makes me ashamed to have to point out the defects of the Indian states in general, because their rulers are our countrymen; but duty compels me to do so.

Hindu or Muslim:—By consent the suit in which the question arose whether Babu Lal, a sweeper of the city, who had left 18 houses and cash amounting to Rs. 1,14,000 was a Hindu or Mahomedan was dismissed on June 14th by Justice Buckland in the Calcutta High Court. This was a suit by Musammat Hira Bibi against her brothers Pannalal and others for a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to an undivided one-tenth share in the estate left by their late father Babu Lal as she alleged that her father was during his life time and at the time of his death a Mahomedan of the Sunni sect. The four sons of the defendant on the other hand contended that their father was a Hindu governed by the 'Dayabhs' school of Hindu Law and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any share in the estate. At the conclusion of the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, defendant Pannalal examined by Mr. S. N. Banerji said that his father was a Hindu. All marriages in the family were performed according to Hindu rites and the bodies of the dead were buried at the Hindu burial ground at Topsy. Satya Narain, Kali and Durga pujas were also performed in their family. The mosque at Debi Serampore Road was built by his grandfather for the benefit of their Mahomedan servants. The Sradā ceremony of his father and grandfather was performed according to Hindu rites. Eventually according to the terms of the settlement his lordship dismissed the suit, the plaintiff abandoning the claim that her father was a Mahomedan. The principal defendants agreed to pay Rs. 9,000 to the plaintiff within a fortnight, in default she was at liberty to execute a decree for that amount.

HINDUISM IN INDIA TO-DAY.

Prof. D. S. Sarma, M.A., writes in the current number of the Young Men of India :

Writing in the last century, a European critic in his book on Religions of India characterized Hinduism as "a religion that is condemned to die but determined to live." During its long history of more than forty centuries, Hinduism must have often presented to an outsider the appearance of a religion in the last stage of decrepitude. But somewhere in the interior of its amazingly complex growth, there seem to be centres of vitality which assert themselves again and again, and bring about Renaissance, falsifying the predictions and perhaps the hopes of its critics. To-day Hinduism is passing through such a Renaissance,—probably the fifth of its kind in historical times.

But the present Renaissance differs from those that preceded it in several respects. Firstly, India is no longer isolated from the world. The political and social forces that are moving the minds of men in Europe and America are reaching Indian shores also, and they cannot be ignored. The future existence of India will largely depend on the reaction she offers to them. Some of these, of course, are not so new to her as they seem to be at first sight. For instance, the passion for experiment, and liberty of thought and distrust of authority, which are supposed to be the characteristics of modern science and modern criticism, are implicit in all Indian Philosophy. They are principles forgotten indeed by us, but not unknown to us. Secondly, there is no longer a Hindu State to foster and encourage the present Renaissance, as there was in the early periods of our history. On the other hand, we have as our rivals two great world-religions which look beyond India for inspiration, and which have brought into existence two big communities which cannot be fitted into the Hindu social structure. And lastly, there is the deep internal unrest in certain classes of the Hindu society itself—unrest caused by the petrification of the ancient social order and the consequent social injustice and tyranny. Great insight and wise statesmanship are required to direct these new forces properly and evolve a type of religion that would satisfy the demands of the hour.

The 'soul of Hinduism' has ever been the same, though it has had different embodiments in different ages. Hindu teachers of all ages and schools of thought have insisted on certain fundamentals which may be expressed in modern terms thus:—

(1) That, our ultimate authority in religion is neither miraculous revelation nor individual reason, neither mere tradition nor the teaching of any "Founder", but the spiritual experience of a host of seers which every man can make his own by undergoing the necessary discipline.

(2) That, just as there is a law of causation in the physical world, there is a law of consequences in the moral world, according to which man reaps as he sows, his present life being largely determined by his past, and his future by the present.

(3) That, out of this region of relativity there is a way called Yoga—in the general sense of the term—which consists chiefly of Karma (selfless action), Bhakti (loving devotion) and Jnana (divine knowledge), and which leads man to the ineffable perfection of God.

(4) That, the Absolute is one, though men give it many names and forms according to their spiritual needs and different degrees of understanding, and that therefore the widest possible toleration is imperative in matters of religious belief and practice.

(5) That, as the life of the individual, the formation of society, the evolution of human history and the entire cosmic process are only different aspects of the one universal purpose running through all creation, viz., of returning to God, who is its home, every man's Dharma (rule of life) is determined to a large extent by his station in society and the world, as well as by the status of his own soul.

Besides these universal principles which Hinduism at its best has always affirmed, there are certain individual traits which Hinduism as a historical religion has developed in the course of its evolution. Such, for instance, are its emphasis on ahimsa (non-violence), its veneration for sannyasa (renunciation), its insistence on the control of the senses, its predilection for Yogic exercises, its passion for complex rituals, and its love of a stable social order which would serve as a school for the spirit of man.

The question now is, how far has Hinduism been able, in the present age and amidst new forces, to preserve its soul, maintain its individuality and at the same time satisfy the deepest aspirations of the modern spirit. For, it is only then that a religion can justify its existence, and claim a spiritual sanction for its disciplinary rules and regulations. It is only then that the present Renaissance can be said to have fulfilled its purpose.

No social worker who sees the conditions under which our depressed classes are forced to live can ever believe that Hinduism teaches the inherent divinity of every human being. No student of religion who witnesses the type of faith that satisfies too many even of our educated classes to-day can ever believe that Hinduism has at any time taught anything more than gross ritualism or achieved anything more than mere Pharisaism. In fact, when one sees the silent opposition to Mahatma Gandhi's campaigns against untouchability, or when one counts the number of child-marriages that took place last year to evade the operation of the Sarda Act, or when one considers the innumerable little sects and sub-sects into which the Hindu society is divided, each with its own walls of separation, for all of which a religious sanction is claimed, one may be tempted to say that Hinduism is nothing but a mass of dead wood cumbering the path of progress.

But this would be a very superficial, if not a wilfully perverse, view. For notwithstanding all appearances to the contrary, there is no doubt that Hinduism in India at the present day is renescent.

To have a correct estimate of the progress made, we have only to compare the state of things to-day with that which obtained twenty or twenty-five years ago. To-day the ban on foreign travel even in the most orthodox families has disappeared. Cosmopolitan dinners have become much more frequent even in the conservative South, and are attended by almost all as a matter of course. Many more associations have come into existence for the purpose of rendering social service. There is a greater dissatisfaction expressed towards a purely secular education without any religious background. One hears more often of Bhajan parties, religious lectures and competitive examinations in Hinduism. Many more copies of the Bhagavad Gita are in circulation now than a generation ago. And most of the educated Hindus are able to-day to quote verses from that great scripture. Indian booksellers say that, apart from the text-books prescribed in Schools and Colleges, the only books which have a large sale are books on religion, especially those being on the Gita. Many excellent books on Hindu religion and philosophy, such as those of Professor Radhakrishnan, have appeared in the last few years and are selling rapidly. And, above all, the typically Hindu character of Mahatma Gandhi has touched the heart of the masses throughout India and quickened the spirit of Hinduism more effectively than a thousand books could do. And it must be admitted that his experiments in Satyagraha on a nation-wide scale open a new chapter in Hindu ethics.

All this is satisfactory. But it is nothing compared to the work that has yet to be done by the rising generation, the young men of India who believe in Hinduism. Most of the sins that are laid at the door of Hinduism are really due to the appalling poverty and ignorance of our masses and the want of opportunities for self-expression of our classes.

Young men have to be taught to face realities in religion, as well as politics, and not to waste their energies on empty formulas from which truth has departed. If this is done with courage and insight, there is no doubt that Hinduism, the most ancient of religions, with its great ideals of toleration and non-violence, its unique and elastic concept of Dharma, its doctrine of the non-violability of the moral law, its integral vision of an evolving universe and its rich and adequate conception of God as a Being both transcendental and immanent, both personal and impersonal, may still have a message to deliver to the world.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Case under the Sarda Act:—The Mangalore correspondent of the Hindu writes under date June 10: An interesting case, the first of its kind in this district, came up before the District and Sessions Judge of South Kanara. The facts briefly are, one Ratnamala aged about fifteen years and daughter of Mr. Mudabidri Aramane Dharmasamraja was proposed to be married on 24th May 1931 to one Nagaswami aged about 15 years, son of one Sringeri Padmaraja. The parties are governed by the Aliyasantana Law. The grand-uncle of the girl Mr. Kattemar Raghuchandra Ballal, a big landowner and an ex-M. L. C., filed a petition before the District Judge praying that the marriage may be stopped by the issue of an order of injunction on the ground that the bride was a minor and that the marriage was not in the best interest of the girl. The Judge overruling the objections of the respondent that petitions of civil nature could not be entertained in the vacation, and hearing the parties issued an order of interim injunction, prohibiting the marriage pending disposal of the petition. On the 30th ultimo the parties filed a compromise petition postponing the marriage by six months and at the end of the period, the marriage of the girl to be considered. Petitioners were represented by Messrs. K. Sadashiv Rao, M. N. Prabhu, S. Nagaraja and N. N. Suvarna, and the respondents by K. R. Karant.

Dr. A. B. Keith on Indian Federation:—Dr. A. Berriedale Keith writes as follows to Mr. D. V. Gundappa of Bangalore in a letter dated May 14 published in the Servant of India: "I have received your letter of the 23rd of April and a copy of your work on 'the States and their People in the Indian Constitution.' I have read the latter with interest and appreciation. The facts upon which it insists are fundamental, and if political changes were governed by logical considerations, effect would have to be given to the just claim that, if responsible government alone is good enough for the people of British India, it is equally due to the people of the Indian States. Unfortunately the spokesmen of British India appear to have sacrificed the claims of the people of the States in order to secure the readiness of the Princes to accept federation, with the result that the British Government has failed to appreciate the unfair character of the position. I hope that some enlightenment may proceed from your statement; but it would be idle to pretend that this aspect of the situation is intelligently understood in this country or that due attention will be paid to it."

ADVERTISEMENTS

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription.	Inland	...	Rs. 2-3-0	V.P.P.
"	Foreign	...	" 2-6-0	Post free.
"	Single Copy	...	0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for electrical engineering college opening at Bombay. Preparation for London City and Guilds examination. Railfare Paid. Prospectus on 2 annas stamps.—Technical Institute of India, Ltd., Delhi.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of

OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDRA.

Branches: CALCUTTA.

AHMEDABAD.

POONA.

SURAT

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mohansar, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	Rs. 60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	80,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhalaji Dajibhai Amia B. A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alombic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)
 Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.)

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhule (District West Khandesh).
Bira ( " " ).	Dondicha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shakada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirale ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kaivasa ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Bohad (District Paunah Mahals).
Paighar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akni (District Solapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Virangam (District Ahmednagar).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorized Capital	—	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital...		Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 2 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay

Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle, Tellicoora, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MOBARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :—

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

SAFELY RELY

ON

AMRUTANJANI BALM

FOR THE CURE OF

Colds, Cough, Headaches, Rheumatism, Swellings and all other kinds of Aches and Pains.

AMRUTANJANI DEPOT.

IT IS YOURS

A SAFE

And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR).

Bombay Branch :—
KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. s. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single Copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed),

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

1925 BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

Hardens Rapidly giving Standard 28 days Concrete strength at 4 days.

DISTRIBUTORS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

British Movietone News Vol. 2 No. 74.

THE SPORT OF KINGS

featuring

LESLIE HENSON, GORDON HARKER, HUGH WAKEFIELD

An Ideal Gainsborough Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News No. 42 and 43.

DANGEROUS FEMALES

2 Reels, featuring

MARIE DRESSLER AND POLLY MORAN

A Paramount All Talking Comedy.

LOCKED DOOR

8 Reels, featuring

ROD LA ROCQUE, BARBARA STANWYCK, WILLIAM BOYD

AND

BETTY BRONSON

United Artists All Talking Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

DIXIANA

12 Reels, featuring

BEBE DANIELS, ROBERT WOOLSEY, BERT WHEELER

AND

EVERETTE NARSHAL

R. K. O. Talking, Singing and Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30 and 10 p. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

BLINDFOLD

6 Reels, featuring

GEORGE O'BRIAN AND LOIS MORAN,

AND RAGINI DEVI.

in a select programme of Indian Dances and Songs.

TIME:—6-30 and 10 P.M.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1931

No. 43

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Muslim Problem.
The Way Out.
Indian Esteem for Princes.
A Painful Controversy.
China and her Antiquities.
Proselyting Missions.
The British Government and the States' Peoples.
The New Law Member.
The Threefold Commonwealth.
Prohibition in India.

Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. XII.
The Congress and the Workers.
Sir C. P. R. Aiyar and Sarda Act.
Mr. George Joseph on Proselytism.
The Language Problem.
Dr. Dhalla against Parsi Migration to Persia.
Anglo-Indian Association.
Separation of Burma.

NOTES.

The Muslim Problem:—With the rejection of the proposals of the Nationalist Muslim party by the party which henceforth may be distinguished as that of Muslim Separatists, there is no longer a Hindu-Muslim problem but only a Muslim problem. We cannot express in adequate terms our admiration for the fine temper, moderation and high political courage of Dr. Ansari and his friends, which the publication of the details of the negotiations brings into relief. Their efforts have been repulsed. The question now is what is to be done next. We do not often find ourselves in agreement with Sir Chimanlal Setalvad but on this occasion he is right in saying that it is for the Hindus now to take the matter into their hands. Our agreement with Sir Chimanlal, however, stops there. We emphatically disagree with him in his carping criticism of the attitude which responsible Hindu leaders felt obliged to take in London, mainly, let us say, owing to the inexplicable intransigence of Sir Chimanlal and one or two other Liberals. The Hindu community can be persuaded but it will not be bullied into a course which, in the conditions which existed then, meant surrender to unreasonable demands. Sir Chimanlal repeats what he said before that the question of reasonableness or otherwise, is immaterial. On the contrary, it is very material to a settlement which is to be one not merely on paper, but which is to endure and be of lasting benefit to both communities. If the distinction between right and wrong has a place in politics, as we think it has, the choice cannot be shirked by passing a sponge over the border-line between them.

The Way Out:—The rejection by the Separatists of the nationalist Muslim overtures, however, has totally changed the situation and what the Hindus rightly refused under duress has now become a sort of moral obligation on them to consider from the point of view of their duty to the nation at large. Whatever may be said of India not being the country only of the Hindus and so on, the fact remains that they as the oldest, largest community have laid upon them in an especial measure the responsibility of supporting every cause which is calculated to advance Indian solidarity. By virtue of that great responsibility, it is now their imperative duty to ensure that the point of view of Dr. Ansari and his gallant band are not left without means of effective expression in the future constitution of the country. We have no time to elaborate details now, but our idea is that the next move should be in the direction of making it possible for nationalist Muslims to affiliate themselves to the general electorates, and this move must, of course, be initiated by the Hindu leaders. In brief, the weightages plan at present enjoyed by Muslims must be given through the general electorates, the separate electorates returning the proportion of members indicated by the population proportion. We are on principle against the continuance of the weightages but, in the special circumstances and, in view of the firm adherence to principle of nationalist Muslims, they should, if necessary, be allowed for the time being. We are absolutely convinced that the inclusion of this group will be a source of real strength to the national cause, and will, in no way, weaken the position of the majority community.

Indian Esteem for Princes:—The Princes of India as a class, apart from the individuals who compose it, are cherished by the Indian people as a national heritage. Mr. Edward Thompson in one of his books notes that the educated Indian who meets the highest-placed English officials on easy terms, will show marked deference to a ruling Prince when he happens to meet one. He concludes from that that British India would welcome a scheme for parcelling it out amongst Indian rulers. This is not the right inference. The Indian's respect for a Prince has its root in his historic consciousness, that is, in his national self-respect, and has nothing to do with his political consciousness. Because of the respect in which the Order is held, no Indian likes to see a Prince held up to public obloquy in or out of India because he feels that it in some sort of way as bringing the Indian people into disrepute. Much less does he like to see two Princes engaged in a wordy controversy in the public Press, imputing motives, insinuating intrigue and generally bespattering each other with polemical mud. This is our feeling on perusing the long letter or statement of the Maharaja of Bikaner in Wednesday's Times of India castigating his brother of Patiala for his Note repudiating the Federal scheme sketched out in London at the Round Table Conference. As we said last week, we do not see how the offence of the Maharaja of Patiala is worse than that of Sir Manubhai Mehta who declared recently that what the Princes understood by Federation was Confederation which is as distinct from each other as chalk from cheese.

A Painful Controversy:—The Maharaja of Patiala says in effect that he did not realise what he was letting himself in for when he supported Federation at the Conference, that he does so now, and that he washes his hand of it and will have nothing more to do with it. He would have been wise if he had stopped there. But he is ambitious and wants to be thought he is constructive and proposes something else which he himself does not seem to be clear about and which shows his Highness to be ignorant of the rudiments of politics. So far as we know, no man of any note in the country, has attached much importance to the Maharaja's project. Sir Mirza Ismail dismissed it with the remark that the ship of Federation will start in its voyage whether Patiala chooses to sail in it or not, and that is about all that need be said about the matter. There is one sentence or rather phrase in the Maharaja of Bikaner's letter which shows that there has been a "change of front" not only on the part of the Maharaja of Patiala. All the time the Princes have been telling the world that they were making great sacrifices in joining the Federation. The Maharaja of Bikaner says in this letter that the rejection of Federation will mean to the Princes and the States, "committing political suicide." Is it such a great sacrifice to adopt a course which obviates suicide, political or biological?

China and her Antiquities:—The Chinese National Government has ordered Sir Aurel Stein, the famous archæologist, to leave the country, in response to the demand of the Chinese Society for the Preservation of Ancient Relics. Sir Aurel is reported to have made a speech in the United States on his way to China attacking the Chinese Government. Many Europeans have curious views of their duty to Asiatic countries whose salt they eat and whose hospitality they enjoy. Sir Aurel seems to be one of this type. The time, however, is past when intelligent and self-respecting Asiatics attach any importance to the self-sufficient chatter of supercilious white men and if they do not learn to behave themselves with the same consideration for national sentiments as they do in European countries or in the American States, they must expect to be dealt with as Sir Aurel has been. Moreover, these explorers have often little scruple in carrying away valuable records and objects which they find in their explorations to their own land or in selling them to other countries. This is robbery pure and simple and Asiatic countries which have suffered greatly from their depredations have been so long obliged to acquiesce in them. But there is a turn in the tide, and we expect that the more honourable of the Western nations will, as a matter of conscience, restore such stolen antiquities to the countries to which they naturally belong. India, too, has a grievance in this respect, which, we hope, will not long remain unredressed.

Proselytising Missions:—A recent issue of Young India published a remarkable letter from the Rev. B. W. Tucker in which he expressed his full agreement with the protest against the methods employed by Christian missions in their efforts to gain proselytes through education, medical service and the like. He pointed out that many missionaries who denounce interference with this method as an interference with freedom of religion, are carrying on their operations under terms which in practice amount to a pledge to support Government. "It is a standing indictment", he writes, "of the alliance of Christian Missions in India with the world's greatest collective evil, imperialism, that they have acquiesced in this arrangement." He approves of Mahatma Gandhi's latest assurance that this kind of proselytism will be permitted even under a Swaraj government, for the curious reason that he thinks it carries within it the seeds of its own destruction. "The present universal dissatisfaction with missionary activity demonstrates," he writes, "that such methods carry within themselves the seeds of their own destruction, and it is never necessary to pass laws to establish the eventual triumph of truth and right in such matters." Truth cannot triumph unless men exert themselves to destroy falsehood and the way of legislation is the only alternative to the way of violence.

The British Government and the States' Peoples:—We reprinted in our news columns last week the letter which Dr. A. B. Keith, the eminent Sanskrit Scholar and authority on Dominion Constitutions, wrote to Mr. D. V. Gundappa. Thanking him for a copy of his excellent presentation of the subject of "The States and their People in the Indian Constitution," Professor Keith said: "Unfortunately the spokesmen of British India appear to have sacrificed the claims of the people of the States in order to secure the readiness of the Princes to accept Federation, with the result that the British Government has failed to appreciate the unfair character of the position." We do not quite see how the failure of British Indian delegates to recognise the existence of the people of the States, can justify the failure of the British Government which is responsible for good government both in British India and the States, to do so. The British Government—and a Labour Government, too—has no excuse for acting as if the States were so many solitudes relieved by the presence in each of a Prince and his entourage.

The New Law Member:—It is officially announced that Sir C. P. Ramaswami Iyer has been appointed to succeed Sir B. L. Mitter as Law Member of the Government of India, when the latter goes next month to Geneva as leader of the Indian deputation to the September session of the League of Nations Assembly. We called attention when Sir C. P. Ramaswami's selection was mentioned as probable, to his commitment in respect of the Sarda Act, amendments to whittle down which are likely to be proposed in the Legislative Assembly. Neither the Government of India nor Sir Ramaswami has explained how far this commitment, reprinted elsewhere, will bind the latter in his position as a member of the former. It is our duty therefore, to record our protest against a selection which is calculated to unsettle the public mind regarding the intentions of the Government of India in respect of the most important piece of social legislation enacted in the last fifty years.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, June 27, 1931.

THE THREEFOLD COMMONWEALTH.

THE INDUSTRIAL SPHERE.

The most important part of Dr. Rudolph Steiner's book—and also the one most likely to be neglected—is that in which he expounds his central idea, namely, that the present world-wide revolt of workers is really due to a hunger of the soul, though the workers themselves believe that it is a hunger of the belly. In proof of this, he points out how the large increase in Welfare Work and social legislation in several countries has failed to prevent it and has, in fact, forced it upward, the crucial example being Germany. Even if the machinery of production be taken over by the State, as desired by Socialists, the revolt will not, Dr. Steiner thinks, cease, because its real cause lies in the spiritual sphere. When men worked at handicrafts, their whole being, spiritual as well as physical, found satisfaction in their daily toil. While attached to a machine, their body alone is engaged and the soul is starved. A conclusive proof that it is soul-starvation that is at the bottom of the revolt, is provided by the fact that the socialist movement has assumed more or less the form of a religious creed, with its roots in the conclusions of natural science. We cannot better explain Dr. Steiner's meaning than in his own words. He observes :

In the kind of connection which the medieval handworker felt between himself, as a human being, and his craft, there was something that showed life within the whole human confraternity in a light which made it seem, for his individual consciousness, worth living. Whatever he might be doing, he was able to regard it in such a way, that he seemed through it to be realising what he desired, as a man to be. Tending a machine under the capitalist scheme of things the man was thrown back upon himself, upon his own inner life, whenever he tried to find some principle on which to base a general out-look on Man and one's consciousness of what as a man one is. Technical industry, capitalism—these could contribute nothing towards such an outlook. And so it came to pass, that the working class consciousness took the bent towards the scientific type of thought. The direct human link with actual life was lost.

The scientific view of man as a natural object amidst a purely natural order of things, also influenced the thought of the upper classes but, in their case, it did not fill their whole mind because education, tradition and social conventions helped them to keep a hold on the old conceptions of the universe that rested on religious foundations. Though they too accepted the conclusions of natural science they did so with many and important mental reservations. But the modern worker, as Dr. Steiner says, was torn out of his old setting in life. "He was the man whose life had been put on a totally new basis. For him, when the old bases of life were withdrawn, there disappeared at the same time all possibility of drawing from the old spiritual springs." Nature, red in tooth and claw, as natural science sees it, became to him the ultimate principle of social life, and class war thus came to be regarded as a duty which he owed to himself and the whole world of workers.

The blame for this does not lie with the worker, but with the industrial system which deals with Labour as a commodity subject to the rule of supply and demand like all commodities the production and consumption of which constitutes economic life. In the days of slavery, the entire man was sold as a commodity. In serfdom, rather less of the man, but still a portion of the human being himself was incorporated in the economic process. Dr. Steiner does not seem to have heard of "the indentured labour" system, which was invented to supply the place of slave labour when it was abolished in British colonies, and under which thousands of Indians were exported to Natal and other places to work for a term of years under servile conditions. Slavery, serfdom and indentured labour have been formally abolished but today, we are again quoting Dr. Steiner, capitalism is the power, through which still a remnant of the human being,—his labour power,—is stamped with the character of a commodity. Herein lies the root-evil. Socialism is an endeavour to remodel the economic process so as to give it a shape in which human labour may come by its rights inside the process itself. But this is bound to fail. "One cannot divest human labour-power of its commodity character, unless one can find a way of separating it out from the economic process. What one must endeavour, is to find a way of separating labour-power out from the economic process, and bringing it under social forces that will do away with its commodity character." It is not necessary to destroy the capitalist industrial system, as Communists want, in order to effect this reform. The capitalist system is valuable as furnishing the incentive to the best talent in the community to enlist itself in economic production. But it should no longer have the right or the power to treat human labour, that is human beings, as commodities. And this should be prevented by the Political State clearly defining the rights of workers. This necessarily involves the subordination of industry, but without it the worker cannot be released from his present plight as a commodity. "Only the subordination of the general economic prosperity to the common sense of right" observes the author, "can prevent man from being so used up and consumed by economic life that his existence no longer seems to him worthy of humanity. And it is this sense of an existence unworthy of human beings that lies, in reality, at the bottom of the convulsions in the body social." Just as economic life is conditioned by a "nature-basis" such as land, climate &c., so too it has to be conditioned by a "rights-basis" which has to be created on the free and independent ground of the Political State—detached from economic life, and out of the common sense of right.

In such a system, the value of goods will be determined by what men actually put into it in the way of work. "It will not allow the work men do to be determined by goods—values into whose formation human welfare and human dignity do not enter." It will not be blind to rights that arise from purely human relations. Children will have a right to education. The father of a family will be able to have a higher income than a single man. The right of the aged, of invalids, of widows and sick persons, to a maintenance, will be secured, and so on. "The essential part in all this is," Dr. Steiner writes, "that the income received by any one who is personally an earner, should not be an outcome of economic life; but the other way about:—economic life must be dependent on what is the outcome of the common sense of right." In other words, the general well-being of the social body must be the first charge on the returns of industry. "Laissez faire" or "the devil take the hindmost," is not a fit principle on which to base a healthy social life.

While thus the Rights State intervenes at one end to take the worker out of the category of commodities, at the other end, it will intervene to limit the rights of capital. Dr. Steiner demands that material property should, for inheritance purposes, be placed on the same footing as what is called "spiritual property." If a man writes a book or paints a picture, the law allows him or his heirs the sole right to benefit materially by it for a limited number of years, after which it becomes public property. Even so, Dr. Steiner argues, should the ownership right in material wealth be shiftable directly this right begins to turn to a means of unrightfully acquiring power. And here is his reason for it. "By aid of his property", writes Dr. Steiner, "the individual person produces for the service of the community; but this is only possible in co-operation with the community. And accordingly the right to the use of a piece of property cannot be exercised apart from the interests of the community. The problem is not, how to abolish the capital-basis; but how can ownership be best turned to the service of the community." He sums up: "The "rights state" will not interfere with the formation and control of private property, so long as the connection of the capital-basis with personal ability remains such that this private control implies a service to the total community. It will never take over the ownership of private property. It will only ensure that the right of use is transferred at the right moment to a person or group of persons who, again—through individual conditions, are capable of establishing a purely personal relation to this ownership."

PROHIBITION IN INDIA.

The Anglo-Indian Temperance Association of London is one of the landmarks in the history of co-operation between Englishmen and Indians in the field of social service. It was founded in 1889 by the late Mr. W. S. Caine and has been successful in keeping before the British public one of the gravest defects of the Indian administration for which it is responsible. If it has not been able to do more, it is because official opposition and vested interests have blocked the way. The Association held its annual meeting on the 13th May with Dr. Harold Mann in the chair in the absence, owing to indisposition, of the President, Lord Clwyd, who has been indefatigable in his interest in the moral and material well-being of this country for over forty years. Dr. Mann, of course, is a household name in this Presidency as one of the few Englishmen in Government service who did their best to identify themselves with the people of India. He was actively associated with the movements for the elevation of the depressed classes, for Temperance and for rural uplift. In the University of Bombay, he was conspicuous for the independent line which he took on all questions, and which generally ranged him alongside of non-official rather than of official opinion. In the special department of Agriculture with which he was connected, he belonged, we think, to the school which has more faith in building on indigenous foundations than on the wholesale importation of ideas, men and machinery from abroad. The cultivator, to him, was the crux of the problem, and he did whatever he could to raise him and to work through him. All this went against the grain of the bureaucratic tradition, and no wonder, Dr. Mann retired without a prefix or suffix to his name after years of strenuous service.

We are glad that he occupied the Chair at the last annual meeting of the Association which henceforth, he announced, will have for its chief purpose the helping of the Prohibition movement which, it has rightly decided, will have its headquarters in this country. The Temperance movement is now merged in the Prohibition movement which has to be pushed on through the Legislatures with such temporary and subsidiary help as can be got from voluntary efforts. Dr. Mann and other speakers declared that the experience of last year had put hope in their hearts for the success of the movement. "I remember", said Dr. Mann, "when I attended this meeting last year, I said quite clearly that I was disappointed and distressed, but what has happened during the past year has encouraged all those who have been fighting year after year for the Temperance cause in India." Mr. Ernest Winterton, M. P., who followed, paid a glowing tribute to the work of women picketers. He said:

I hope we are not going to be censorious in our judgment of these women who have felt it to be their duty to stand outside the liquor shops and pray men not to go in—and "pray" is the right word, Mr. Chairman. As Miss Campbell showed us, standing mutely there, with clasped hands, no Indian could resist that silent appeal and no Indian strove to go past that barrier between his own welfare and the evil. The women who did that, coming from sheltered lives, coming, as some of you know, from the retirement which we, Westerners, can hardly comprehend, to take up a work of that kind, have not only done a service to India but to humanity. Just as in the case of the U. S. A. it was the prayer of consecrated Christian women which first set rolling that stone which found no resting place until Prohibition was written into the Constitution of the United States, it will also be written in the future history of India, that these women by their silent prayers won the victory for Prohibition.

In the face of such a splendid protest against the curse of drink by her sisters, it was almost cruel on the part of Begum Shah Nawaz to have told Mr. Winterton that "much as we would like prohibition, we cannot even purchase prohibition at a price so high as keeping our own people in ignorance." It can be shown easily that the Begum is wrong in thinking that the excise revenue of India is ear-marked for education. Even if it were, it would have to go, as a drinking parent is not the best object-lesson for his child. But apart from the error of her view, Begum Shah Nawaz did not truly represent on this important question the mind of the women of this country, whom she was selected to represent at the Round Table Conference. Does the Begum think that the women who in their hundreds picketed liquor shops and went to prison last year, had no intelligence and did not know what they were about? In her address to the All-India Women's Conference held in Bombay last year, the late Lady Dorab Tata gave a prominent place to Prohibition as a reform which was needed in the interests primarily of women. The words which she used are worth quoting. Now that she is no more, they must appeal to her countrywomen with special solemnity. She said:

Another movement which is closely associated with women's well-being is that known as Prohibition. The question of Temperance has always been associated with Social Purity. And rightly so, as it is the palpable fact that the use of intoxicating drinks and drugs is inseparably associated with loose sexual morality. The adoption of Prohibition in the United States has greatly benefitted women and children, and it is due largely to the women's vote that President Hoover succeeded in being elected to the Presidency against his powerful rival who was opposed to Prohibition. Drink is the cause of great misery in India also, and it is well-known that most of the increase in wages which the mill-workers secured during the War and after, went directly into the liquor shops. I have no doubt that the introduction of Prohibition will be a great benefit to the country's industries as well as to family life, and I am sure that the women of India are whole-heartedly with the Prohibition reformers of the country.

The Begum's ill-considered statement to Mr. Winterton emphasises the need of the addition of representative women to the forthcoming session of the Round Table Conference. As Dr. Harold Mann put it, we must deal with the liquor traffic independently of finance. Even if it means the absence of balanced budgets for a time, we have to get the nefarious traffic abolished.

The Logic of Mother-Love:—In an interview with Dr. Stanley Jones, Mahatma Gandhi is reported to have expressed the opinion that no man should change his faith, in the sense of going over from one religious system to another. Dr. Jones put forward his own view of the question but Mahatmaji is said to have regretted that he could not accept it, as he did not feel that any one should change his faith to that of another in any outward sense. The Indian Witness comments on this that it does not believe that a man can logically hold such a position. A very simple answer to this objection was given by the Swedish author, Mr. Axel Idestrom, who visited India recently and contributed an article to the Reformer headed "Hinduism and Christianity." In it he said: "I don't think the tenets or rituals of any Church just now existing on earth is perfect or absolute. As people grow up to more knowledge and understanding the tenets must also grow and develop. The one people has to learn of the other, East of West and West of East. But I don't think it necessary to give up one's national or religious character. Everyone loves his own mother. If she is poor, you can strive to make her better. But if you honestly love her, you must not abandon her to cherish the mother of your neighbour." It is impossible to establish syllogistically why one should love one's own mother rather than another's. The social and religious environment in which one is born and brought-up is much more than a mother to him. It is the home in which his mother and her mother and her mother's mother and countless generations of them were born and reared. Our missionary friends would persuade the Indian that his "mother" is old and haggard and poor and politically subject, while their "mother" is young and beautiful and rich and dominant. But the answer of the Indian is "I love my mother all the more for her grey hair, poverty and decrepitude."

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU
LAW. XII.

(BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTIY.)

The Hindu Law Reform Committee of Mysore did not stop with merely granting a separate maintenance to the injured wife. They improved the law of maintenance itself in at least three important respects to ameliorate the lot of all females, including wife, entitled to maintenance in a Hindu family, by providing greater freedom, a fairer scale, and larger stability and security for its enjoyment than is afforded by the view of the law taken at present by our courts.

But before entering upon this task, they enlarged the category itself of these female dependents. (Clause 24). There is already a legal obligation on every Hindu—an obligation based on relationship and not dependent on his possession of any property—to maintain his mother, his wife and his unmarried legitimate daughter. To these claimants, the learned Mysore Committee have generously added the step-mother, the unmarried sister, the widow of the predeceased son, the unmarried illegitimate daughter, the destitute widowed daughter and destitute widowed sister. And the liability to maintain all these dependents passes to the man's heirs to the extent of the property inherited from him; or, if he be a member of a joint family, the manager is liable for their maintenance to the extent of the joint family property in his control.

Of these additional claimants, the Baroda Committee of Rao Bahadur Govindbhai Hathibai Desai considered the case of the destitute widowed daughter alone and made a qualified recommendation for her benefit. It is to the effect that she shall be given means of maintenance in the father's house provided she was living there at the time of her widowhood and then too only if her father's family can afford it. The same rule of course applies to a destitute widowed sister.

That a widowed daughter, perhaps a child-widow, "who used to live and be maintained in the father's house, should not be entitled to be maintained" and that her father's heirs (or even her father for that matter) should "turn her out into public street in a destitute condition", seemed to the Baroda Committee, as to Pandit Sarkar Shastri, to be "most abhorrent to Hindu feelings." They refused however to make the same concession in the other extreme case of a destitute widowed daughter who after marriage had resided in her father-in-law's family for a considerable period before being widowed and then came back and resided in the father's house. But Mrs. Dipakbai Himatbhai Desai, one of the two lady members of the Committee (the other being Mrs. Sushilabai Modak, B.A.), in her remarkable dissenting minute in Gujarati, pleads against such discrimination, and says that the widowed daughter who cannot get any maintenance from her father-in-law's family should have the right of maintenance from the father's property even though she may be residing in her husband's family.

The Hindu Law Reform Bill of Mysore, however, (the first reading or 'preliminary stage' of which, we rejoice to note, has been unanimously passed with but three dissentients by the Mysore Representative Assembly at its recent session), makes no discrimination in such cases. A destitute daughter is a destitute daughter to the Chandrasekharaiyar Committee, and must be succoured as such whether she had been previously residing in comfort in her father's house until the news of her widowhood and her father-in-law's poverty reached her ears, or she had gone forth battling with life for some years away from the paternal roof until she was widowed and broken and thrown back upon its hospitality. They are opposed on principle to make either the accrual or the continued enjoyment of the legal right of maintenance to turn upon the place where or the persons with whom a woman resides or to be hedged round and curtailed by any other conditions to which the woman herself is not a free consenting party. (Clause 26.) In fact that is the very first of the three improvements they made in the law of maintenance applicable to all female dependents.

The fate of another unfriended female relation whose claim to maintenance is favoured by the Mysore Committee has been indirectly disposed of against her by the Baroda Committee without knowing it. It was that of the illegitimate daughter. Under the Baroda Hindu Joint Family Act the concubine of any of the family members is as much a recognised Samskrita or dependent of the family as his wife or widow, and therefore entitled to maintenance from the family property and to residence in the family house. Under the Baroda Hindu Parents and Sons Act, illegitimate sons of the member are also dependents of the family and as such are entitled to be maintained not only from the separate property of their father but also from his undivided interest in the joint family property. But this right is not given to illegitimate daughters.

According to Golap Chandra Sarkar Shastri, instances of one's concubines and illegitimate sons living as members of one's family must be very exceptional and rare in modern India, being only possible either in the case of Rajas and holders of big estates or in the case of low-caste people, because the former are above public opinion and the latter are beneath it. However that may be, it is a fact that even in British India at the present day a Hindu of whatever rank or caste is legally bound to maintain his illegitimate sons, and after his death these sons are entitled to maintenance (or in some castes even a share) out of his separate property or, if he was joint at his death out of the joint family property. And as for his concubine, though she has legally no personal claim on him during his life, his estate is liable, after his death, for her maintenance in the hands of those who take it, whether she had resided or not in the same house with him along with his wife and family, provided she was in his exclusive keeping until his death and remained chaste thereafter. But there is no provision for the maintenance of an illegitimate daughter even in British India under the Hindu Law.

( To be continued. )

THE CONGRESS AND THE WORKERS.

(By Mr. N. N. MANON.)

The Congress leaders have always been found to be very solicitous for the welfare of the workers and have been making promises after promises which were never lacking in profoundness and profuseness but one is hardly able to reconcile their professions and practices. These leaders must realise that the days when the imagination of the workers could be caught through high sounding expressions of sympathy have gone and unless their actions are directed towards the translation of their professions into solid actions, nobody will attach any value to their lip sympathy.

Of course in the last resolution of the Karachi Congress the workers are promised certain things the materialisation of which is neither sure nor near, but even without that is it not possible to do something for the amelioration of the miserable condition of the workers now?

During the last few months Mahatma Gandhi was busy interviewing the leaders of the Indian Commercial community, Mill-owners and other big capitalists with a view to the best way of safeguarding their interests. He has agreed to incorporate their suggestions in the demands of the Congress which are to be put before the next session of the Round Table Conference. Further, all attempts are being made to export all the foreign cloth from the country, thereby giving the sole monopoly of Piece-goods Trade in this country to the Indian Textile manufacturers. In fact everything is being done today in the interests of Indian capitalists, and if so much could be done in their interests, is it unreasonable to demand from them in return an assurance of better wages and more favourable conditions of service for the workers? It is possible for Mahatma Gandhi to take such an assurance from the Indian capitalists and this would have brought about the uplift of the working classes earlier than expected, thereby ensuring their allegiance to the Congress. Perhaps Mahatma Gandhi is pinning his faith in the possibility of solving the labour problem after the attainment of Swaraj on the lines specified in the last resolution of the Karachi Congress. If that is the case, then Mahatma Gandhi's action is in no way better than that of one who lets loose the birds in his hands with the hope of catching the flying ones.

The call of the Congress for the adoption of swadeshi met with a splendid response from the public and the results have been marvellous, but who were benefitted by this swadeshi movement?

It was the Indian capitalists. The swadeshi and the boycott movements deprived hundreds of educated people of their means of livelihood since many English firms as well as some other foreign firms were forced to retrench their staff and in some cases even to close down their business in this country. Surely what was lost by foreigners was the gain of the Indian merchants and manufacturers but our Indian employers never cared to consider the possibility of absorbing these unfortunate educated labourers nor did the responsible Congress leaders like Mahatma Gandhi ever think of it. The Indian employers preferred to cope with the increase in the volume of work by squeezing out their low paid employees.

The Indian Mill-owners had a very good opportunity to dispose of their stock and they also found ready demand for increased production thereby making huge profits. In spite of this, they were always found to be devising ways and means of encroaching upon the meagre income of their poor paid workers creating epic scenes of strikes and dissatisfaction among the workers.

In the Subjects Committee of the Congress at Karachi Mr. Jamnadas M. Mehta moved an amendment to the resolution on Foreign Cloth and Khaddar for the addition in Clause 6 of the words "By assuring Mill workers a minimum wage and the control of conditions under which they are to work." The soundness and necessity of this amendment is clear to all right-thinking men and surely the workers would have been more satisfied if this was accepted by the Congress, but the veteran disciple of Mahatma Gandhi, Mr. C. Rajagopalachari, opposed it on the flimsy ground that the addition of these words to a resolution even otherwise long enough would amount to going into details and there would be no end of it. Mr. Rajagopalachari did not at all think about the serious consequence of his opposition and what result it would have produced in the minds of the workers. He proved to be quite ignorant of, and incapable of understanding the Labour problem in India today which is shaking the very foundation of society.

To put the whole matter in a nutshell, it is evident that the cause of the workers has been thrown into the background by the Congress leaders, and the workers themselves will have to work out their own salvation. If that is the case, then the Congress steamer will have to sail through a very stormy sea and if the vessel sinks in the mid-ocean the responsibility will be of those who have sacrificed everything at the altar of their Motherland. As long as the Congress does not take immediate steps to alleviate the distress of the starving workers, so long the workers will be forced to play in the hands of reactionary labour leaders who are more concerned with the propagation of their Communist principles than the economic, educational, and social uplift of the workers. Every one abhors dissensions and divisions among the rank and file of the masses but abhorrence will not serve as a veil for the ill-advised actions of those who knowingly or unknowingly pave the way for the creation of faction among the people.

SIR C. P. R. AIYAR AND SARDA ACT.

The Indian Social Reformer, March 22, 1931.

A friend calls our attention to the following which was published in the Pioneer of the 16th instant, in connection with Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar's election to the Legislative Assembly:—

Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar signed and delivered a pledge before a representative conference of electors at Kumbakonam upon which Rajah Bahadur G. Krishnamachariar, who stood on the issue of opposition to the Child Marriage Restraint Act, was persuaded to withdraw from the contest in favour of Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar.

The pledge runs: "Feeling as I do that social reform is essentially a growth from within, and not of compulsion from without, I am against penal legislation in social matters, and if and as soon as opportunity arises, I shall make and co-operate in attempts to exempt from the provisions of such legislation as the Sarda Act, those communities and individuals who feel as a matter of conviction that the provisions run counter to their religious faith and duties. I also hold that in matters affecting particularly the organised and established social life, or the personal law, of any distinctive community, legislation by composite legislatures is wrong, and I shall not countenance or support such legislation. I shall endeavour to my utmost to persuade those in authority to arrange for representation at the Round Table Conference of persons holding the Orthodox or the Sanatanist Hindu views, and on all occasions shall press, and fully co-operate in any efforts made, for securing religious neutrality and non-interference by the Legislatures or the Executive in matters concerning the religious rites and usages of any community."

We could scarcely believe our eyes when we read this, and we still think that there must be some mistake. If, however, it is correct—and there has been no contradiction, so far—the Liberal party must have become very accommodating, indeed.

MR. GEORGE JOSEPH ON PROSELYTISM.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Your comment on my letter cleverly avoids the real point in controversy. In your original article you started by saying that "Pious Christians" held that conversion was against the teaching of Christ. I challenged you on that; you turn round and say that as a result of repeated reading of the Bible and meditation on the Lord, you had come to the conclusion that conversion was inconsistent with Divine Teaching. Surely, that is running away from the point. You then seek to cover your retreat by quoting something that "His Holiness the Pope of Rome" said. (Why of Rome? There is the only one Pope. That he happens to be the Bishop of Rome also is beside the point. The significant thing is that such blunders will happen when people unfamiliar with the fundamental categories of discussion will persist in butting into technical controversies with which they have nothing to do). You refer to something that the Holy Father is reported to have said; and you want to draw from that the astounding inference that the Head of the Catholic Church is against religious conversion. If instead of worrying about what the Pope said, you took the trouble to ascertain what the Pope did, you would not have gone wrong. Even you could not have failed to notice that there are Catholic Missionaries in Bombay and that the very Inquisition which you mention with bitterness and misunderstanding was only an incident in the age-long effort of the Papacy to convert the whole world to Christianity.

You then refer with a certain amount of sanctimoniousunction to what you call the Indian way of dealing with the problem. I suppose you mean the Hindu; for obviously, though the Christian and Islamic ways are also part of the Indian way, you are not content with them, nor, I take it, with the Arya Samajist way. In this matter, you stand for latitudinarianism in common with the most orthodox of Sanatanist Hindus. Your attitude is intelligible as long as you are a Hindu and Hindus form much the largest section of the population; for you, the right thing is to have no conversion at all which might have the unpleasant result of reducing the majority. There was a time, however, when Hindus were in a minority, namely, of Buddhist and Jain dominance. In those days, there were Hindu Missionaries keen on converting Buddhists and Jains to Hinduism; and I do not blame them. Here in Madura, the memory is still green of the struggle between Jainism and Hinduism. Jains were tortured, persecuted and martyred in the Brahmin attempt to wipe out the dominant religion; there was nothing which the wicked Christians had to teach them. I am not now concerned with the question whether religious persecution is right; my point is that as long as a religion is new and has the elements of strength, it can survive and establish itself only by the conversion of others to its faith. The formula of safety for the religion in possession will be to say that there should be no conversion and that all religions are equally true because they are equally false. That is exactly what you say, what Gandhiji says and what every decent Hindu cannot help saying to-day. All the same, you are wrong; and the test of it is that you cannot get a Christian or a Mussalman with the genuine stuff of religion in him to say it with you.

Madura, }
18th June 1931. }

Yours, etc.,
GEORGE JOSEPH.

[Mr. Joseph challenges us to produce the opinion of professing Christians against proselytising. We have in type an article by Dr. Stanley Jones which was published in the Fellowship, but for which we are unable to find space in this issue. Mr. Joseph will find that Dr. Jones uses stronger language than we did regarding organised proselytism as a mode of Christian propaganda. There is also the Rev. B. W. Tucker's letter to Mahatma Gandhi to which we refer in an editorial note. We must insist that the Hindu policy of religious toleration is the Indian policy to which all new comers, who benefited by it, must be held to have tacitly subscribed. The Jain episode, to which Mr. Joseph refers, is an isolated one and has no bearing on the general policy of the Indian State. Finally, we would call Mr. Joseph's attention to the fact that, according to his theory, Catholicism cannot live on equal terms with any other religion, and request him seriously to ponder its implications in this country. The Emperor Babar's Testament published in the last issue and the subsequent history of India shows that Indian Mahomedans whom Mr. Joseph claims on his side do not share his views. Ed. I. S. R.]

THE LANGUAGE PROBLEM.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

The I. S. Reformer has adduced the following chief reasons in favour of retaining English for inter-provincial purposes in preference to Hindi.

1. The practice which has grown up in the course of the last half a century is working fairly satisfactorily.

2. In Moghul times when political ideas were not far advanced, Hindi was found to be deficient for administrative purposes; and therefore Raja Todar Mal substituted Persian as the official language in place of Hindi.

3. English is far superior to either Persian or Hindi as an instrument of political thought.

4. To make Hindi the lingua franca of India is to give a chance for the revival of the supremacy of the Northern over Southern India.

These reasons do not appear to be convincing.

1. In the first place the practice of speaking English has not grown up of itself. It is partly the result of a mistaken belief and partly of compulsion. The mistaken belief was that English was the only adequate means of expressing advanced thought whether in politics or in science or in literature or in philosophy. A very significant incident which took place nearly half a century ago may be recalled here. Babu Rajanarayan Bose was invited to take part in the annual celebrations of an Institute named after David Hare—the pioneer in the field of English education in Bengal.

After the preliminaries were gone through, the authorities of the Institute proposed a speech from Babu Rajanarayan who complying with their request rose to speak. But instead of speaking in English as was the practice, Babu Rajanarayan began to make his speech in Bengali. This sprang a surprise on the enlightened audience who rose in disgust at the audacity of the speaker and thought it better to leave the lecture Hall than to be a party to what they considered nothing less than a sacrilege!

The practice of making public speeches in English was, as has been noticed above, the result of necessity. The Congress comprised of men speaking mutually unintelligible vernaculars. Again nearly all the responsible members of the Congress had a thorough knowledge of English; hence as an expedient course they adopted English as the medium of expression.

The Congressites thus seem to have laid down a sound rule of practice in respect of the language problem!—The choice of language must depend primarily on one criterion whether those—or the majority of those whom the Congress represents have or have not a working knowledge of that language.

Formerly the Congress represented only a microscopic minority among the vast Indian population and that minority comprised mostly of educated men having a fair knowledge of English—hence the choice of English was considered to be the best in the circumstances. Now the Congress stands for the masses who have no knowledge of English and who, nevertheless, are indispensable to the Congress, for they not only take interest in what the Congress does, but try their utmost to further the cause of the Congress.

Hence the advocacy of Hindi as the common language of India in preference to English.

2. As regards the second objection against Hindi, that Hindi is deficient for administrative purposes. It is a trite saying: Language is a medium of thought. Nevertheless it is true. Hence as thought progresses language too must progress. That Hindi was found deficient for administrative purposes in the Moghul period was no fault of Hindi. A bad workman often finds fault with his tools and imputes his own weakness to something extraneous. That is human nature.

3. English Literature is undoubtedly richer and more varied than either Persian or Hindi. But no nation has ever been known to inflict other nation's language on its subjects simply because its quality is higher, or its range wider. On the contrary we find literary men of one nation trying to enrich their own literature by importing whatever excellent they find in the literature of other nations. For instance, English is deficient as regards Chemistry and Mathematics. Yet the Oxford and Cambridge Universities have not adopted German or French either of which is "a superior instrument of scientific thought" though they have made those two languages compulsory subjects for students taking up Chemistry or Physics, etc., for their special study.

4. The question of supremacy of the Northern over Southern India does not arise here; because Hindi is to be used for inter-provincial purposes only. The vernaculars on the other hand being reinstated in their former places, Hindi will be regarded as a secondary language. In other words unlike English, Hindi will have no chance to get ascendancy over the vernaculars which will in itself be a great boon to the latter for they will not be stifled as they are now, once their importance is fully understood.

There are other reasons as well which compel the rationalist to reject any scheme of educational or national reform in which a foreign language is given such an undue importance. A foreign language is closely bound up with foreign tradition, foreign culture, foreign civilization. To encourage it to the detriment of the vernaculars in our own land is to stunt the growth of our culture and civilization.

Of course one must give the devil his due. We must admit that the English literature created in us the critical faculty which we so long lacked and which we badly required. It taught us how to examine the complex problems of this world. It delivered us from the intricate meshes of Pauranic babble.

For all these and other salutary effects we must be grateful to those who first tried to introduce English in our curriculum, but we shall certainly be failing in our duty to our mother tongue and mother country if seeing the evil which our forefathers never had occasion to imagine, we do not take timely measures to check it.

3rd June 1931. }

Yours etc.
M. S.

[We are sorry that the publication of this letter was delayed. Ed. I. S. R.]

DR. DHALLA AGAINST PARSIS
MIGRATION TO PERSIA.

( BY MR. G. K. NARIMAN. )

In the course of his most thoughtful address before the Karachi Parsis as Chairman of a meeting convened to hear the message of the Persian gentleman, Mr. Saif Azad, who is on his way to Berlin to resume the editorship of his "New Persia", Dastur Mr. Dhalla, M.A., Ph.D., made certain observations relating to the devotion of the Parsis to India, their true mother-land which are of more than passing interest. Dr. Dhalla said in effect:—

"Two causes only would induce the Parsi community, or in fact any community, to give up their country and migrate to another. Either utter destitution such as was inflicted upon the ancestors of the Zoroastrians who migrated to India, or excess of prosperity would urge a community to migrate and undertake an enterprise abroad. The Parsi is a small but happy community. Despite the perturbing agitation all round and despite the many sacrifices the Parsis have made, they are not placed in such straitened circumstances, and they will never be placed in such a predicament, as to compel them to abandon India to seek means of livelihood in a foreign land.

As to enterprise and capital, it is a fact that the Parsi community has not retained its former spirit and endurance. The present generation has not the venturesome zeal to navigate Chinese and Japanese seas like its ancestors. The circumstances in those days were different. Then the Parsis had abundance of energy,—a superfluity of it. The life of the community was at its beginning. The people were ordinarily engaged in liquor and toddy business, or agriculture and as drivers of vehicles or were occupied in petty trade. In those days the general economic conditions were favourable to advance. Today the situation has altered..... We have no extra energy to spare. The middle-class are unable to take advantage of the agriculture so near at hand. Where in the world can you get land so richly fertile as in Gujarat? If the Parsi community, which has become a community of quill drivers is not in a position to take advantage of the Sukkur Barage lands how can it possibly proceed to Persia?

How many fields of enterprise are there in India lying virgin where we can employ capital and energy with advantage? India is a sub-continent 1,800 miles long by 1,600 miles wide, which we have made our motherland. If we sink our superfluous capital for its regeneration and for our regeneration which is linked with its own, the return will not be insignificant. Under these circumstances, we are unable to accept the invitation of our Persian brethren, however benevolent, sincere and affectionate the same happens to be. In other words, the Parsis cannot go to Persia and cannot carry their capital and enterprise there."

ANGLO-INDIAN ASSOCIATION.

DR. HAROLD MANN'S SPEECH.

The annual meeting of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association was held at Caxton Hall, Westminster on Wednesday 13th May at 5-30 p.m., Dr. Harold Mann presided.

Opening the proceedings the Chairman said: "Ladies and Gentlemen, I am occupying the chair to-day as a very feeble and unworthy substitute for Lord Clwyd who is attacked by influenza and has not been able to come up from Wales."

The General Secretary, Mr. F. Grubb, presented the report.

Having submitted the financial statement for the year the Chairman said: In moving the adoption of the report and of these accounts, I hope you will allow me to say just a few words with regard to the position of our movement in India. I am only sorry that Lord Clwyd is not in the chair instead of me. He has been a man who has been connected with this Association almost from the beginning if not right from the beginning and has been at the annual meeting practically every time since at any rate I have been in the Association. I might mention too that our Secretary tells me that he has been at the annual meeting of the Association for forty years without a break. I am sure we must congratulate ourselves on having an efficient worker and an efficient Secretary for all that time. I first came into contact with the Association soon after I went to Calcutta in the year 1900 and I have been in correspondence with Mr. Grubb almost ever since. I should say that he is almost an ideal Secretary. There are just one or two other names I would like to mention, who have gone from us during the year; people who have borne the burden and the heat of the day for many years; people who have worked hard both in India and England for the cause we have at heart. The first I mention is Mr. D. D. Gilder of Bombay, a very old personal friend of mine, a man who really devoted his life to temperance in Bombay, who for many years carried the banner of temperance when there were very few other people to carry that banner at all. His loss is one we do feel and shall feel. I am only sorry that he has gone from us just at the time when I feel that our cause is beginning to show a triumph that we a few years ago hardly expected to see.

Then I should like to mention one who was perhaps my greatest friend in the whole of my life, namely Mr. A. E. Goodwin. He was my chief colleague in Calcutta in the years between 1902 and 1907 when we founded the Calcutta Temperance Associate Federation, and when I think we made temperance a live issue in that city. In him we have lost another great worker and one I am very sorry we have lost just at the time when I think the triumph of our cause is almost in view.

But I feel that, while we are sorry for their loss, yet we meet to-day under much more cheerful conditions than we did even a year ago, I remember when I attended this meeting last year, I said quite clearly that I was disappointed and distressed, but what has happened during the past year has encouraged all those who have been fighting year after year for the temperance cause in India. People used to imagine that it was simply a matter of a few European fanatics and of the members of the higher Hindu castes, and again and again that view has been expressed to me. But it has been shown during the past year in a way that nobody can doubt it any more, that temperance and prohibition in India is a real national movement and that Hindus and Mahomedans are not only historically temperate but are anxious that India should become a temperance country.

I have felt that for a long time. My experience among not merely the upper classes but among the "untouchable" classes, the so-called lower classes in the country, made me feel that in Western India at any rate those classes were really at heart as strongly in favour of the prohibition of liquor as anybody else.

A good many years ago we paid a visit to a Deccan village to find out if we could get evidence for the closing of a particular liquor shop. We attempted to interview the biggest drunkards in the village. They belonged of course, to the "untouchable" class in that village. We asked them did they want the liquor shop? They replied "For God's sake shut it. As long as it is there, we cannot help drinking but we want it to be shut." We went back to Poona and got it shut.

That only expresses something of the feeling that I think prevailed right among not merely the upper classes and the higher classes, but the feeling which prevailed among even those castes which normally do drink. I had another instance of that in connection with some of the hill tribes. There was a temperance movement started among those castes, who normally do drink. The banner of temperance went from village to village, almost every member of these outcaste peoples in that district signing the pledge that they would touch no liquor. Every liquor shop was picketed by them themselves but the liquor shops were not shut. I may say that that is a district where the excise revenue is bigger than any other form of revenue. The shops were not shut, with the result that even against their own will the people gradually drifted back into drink, and now those hill tribes and outcaste classes drink practically as much as they ever did before.

When I saw that, I felt "well, the only remedy for this is prohibition. The people want it. Why should it be placed before them?"

Until last year many of us were disappointed. We had thought in 1921 when the reforms came, that we should have rapid progress towards restriction if not prohibition and we were disappointed. I do not blame the legislative councils. I do not blame the members of those Councils, because almost in every Council in India there have been prohibition resolutions passed, and the Government have been urged to make prohibition the goal. But the reform for 1920 was so arranged that it was almost impossible for such a spirit to become realised. Only during the last year we have been told in Madras that the position is worse even than we thought because it was stated in the Madras Legislative Council that even if the Council decided on prohibition, the Government of India would prevent that action being carried out, always of course on financial grounds.

We must deal with the liquor traffic independently of finance. Even if it means the absence of balanced budgets for a time, I feel we have to get abolition of the liquor traffic.

HISTORY OF THE ASSOCIATION.

Just a few words about the Association. The Association was founded in the year 1889, very largely as the result of a conference held in Bombay, at which the late Mr. W. S. Caine was present. Anyone concerned with temperance in India looks upon Mr. Caine as being a man to whom we owe more than we can tell. At a time when this subject was unpopular on this side, and particularly unpopular among Europeans in India he stood out boldly and determined that what he could do should be done to bring about the abolition of the liquor traffic. But it was a group of Indians in Bombay who persuaded him that an Association like this founded in England, to hold the banner up at this end, would be of enormous value, and I think it has been.

One of the happiest times in my life was when Mr. Samuel Smith in the year 1906 came to Calcutta and really brought the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association to our doors during the Session of the Indian National Congress in Calcutta in 1906. Even his death was an encouragement and I do not think those of us who passed through that time will ever forget the stimulus that he gave to us. He represented this Association during the visit to India at that time.

But now, as the report stated, conditions are changing. Within a very short time India will be certainly the master of its own destinies, and it seems probable that in the near future the propaganda which this Association has done will no longer be required exactly in the same form.

Hence at the last meeting of the Committee a resolution was passed, suggesting that next year in 1932 we should not wind up the Association, but we should put it on rather a new basis in which we in England should become a relatively small Committee, advising and helping our Indian people, but throwing the whole of the work on to those who are in India. I hope that this if carried through, will not mean that we in England shall feel any less responsibility. I hope that our Indian friends in India will be able to draw from us even a bigger supply of energy and a bigger supply of money and a bigger supply of help than they have been able to do in the past.

I am hoping within a very few years that those who take up the banner in India will be able to do what we have not succeeded in doing through these 40 years and will be able to make prohibition a real thing, as actual fact throughout the length and breadth of India.

SEPARATION OF BURMA.

U. Maung Maung Ji, prominent Burman leader, who is now in Simla, has issued the following statement to the press:

"The political associations that count in Burma have always opposed separation, but full accounts of their work and aspirations have always been kept back from the Indian public with the result that the people in this country are not acquainted with the true facts.

The majority of the Burmese people are against separation, and are now united in their demand for the representation of Anti-Separationist opinion in the Federal Structure Committee and the Round Table Conference. We are aware that separation will only strengthen the British Imperialism in Burma and that a Federation will give to Burma the benefits of separation without any of its evils as she will enjoy complete national autonomy, and will be connected with India only for the administration of Federal affairs in which the interests of Burma are in no way different from those of the other Indian provinces.

Burma by remaining within the Indian Federation will derive immense benefit from the supreme international status of India as an original member of the League of Nations but which will be denied as Iraq had been, if Burma is isolated from India.

Again if Burma remains within the Federation she will benefit automatically from the humanitarian legislation undertaken by the I. L. O. In a country like Burma where the plantations, industries and trade are mainly in the hands of non-Burmans, the direct application of these beneficial laws is of no small importance.

In the event of separation, currency, exchange and credit of Burma will be dislocated and Burma will be the sufferer not only in these spheres and also will lose the Indian market which now consumes rice, timber and petroleum. Separation will mean the greatest political calamity to Burma from which we will never be able to extricate ourselves. A representative deputation of the leaders of the General Council of Burman Associations which is like the National Congress, has arrived in India to place the anti-separationist view before the Viceroy.

ADVERTISEMENT

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.
PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for electrical engineering college opening at Bombay. Preparation for London City and Guilds examination. Railfare Paid. Prospectus on 2 annas stamps.—Technical Institute of India, Ltd., Delhi.

THE
Central Bank of India Ltd.

SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a
HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT
with us and earn 3½% interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDRA.

Branches: { CALCUTTA.

AHMEDABAD.

POONA.

SURAT

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent. on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwaraka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	Rs. 60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vitthaladas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharsa Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhalilal Dajibhai Amin B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)
 Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Musumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.)

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1925, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

O. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

—101—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Bira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Shabada ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Koregaon ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Satana ( " " ).
Belapur ( " " ).	Kalvan ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Bhiwandi (District Thana).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Paighar ( " " ).	Kalol ( " " ).
Akluj (District Solapur).	Parola (District East Khandesh).
Virangaon (District Ahmedabad).

SHARE CAPITAL:—

Authorised Capital	...	Rs. 15,00,000
Issued Capital	...	Rs. 13,00,000
Subscribed & Paid Capital	...	Rs. 12,87,750

1. The Bank finances institution registered under the Co-operative Societies Act in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, Poona.

2. Accounts are audited by a special Government Auditor and quarterly statements of financial position are published in the Bombay Government Gazette.

3. FIXED DEPOSITS are received for long and short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

4. SAVINGS BANK ACCOUNTS are opened and interest allowed at 3½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

5. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened at 2½ per cent. interest on daily balances upto Rs. 1,00,000 and at 3 per cent. above Rs. 1,00,000.

6. Five years Cash certificates are issued yielding interest at 5½ per cent. Rules can be had on application.

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORABJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26,

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,
INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :—

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY.

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR,
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,371

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

SAFELY RELY

ON

AMRUTANJAN BALM

FOR THE CURE OF

Colds, Cough, Headaches, Rheumatism, Swellings and all other kinds of Aches and Pains.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT:

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

(REGD.)

— A SAFE —
And Satisfying
A Perfect & Pleasing
TONIC.

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS.

Rupee ONE for a Tin (32 Pills).

Atank Nigrah Pharmacy,
JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR):

Bombay Branch:—
KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. s. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single Copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8	( Post Free ).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10	( Post Free ).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high-tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

OHAR BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

LATEST BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

Hardens Rapidly giving Standard 28 days Concrete strength at 4 days.

DISTRIBUTORS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.
"BOMBAY HOUSE", BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

BRITISH MOVIE-TONE NEWS VOL. 2 No. 74.

BRITISH MOVIE-TONE NEWS VOL. 2 No. 75.

MEDALS

9 Reels, featuring
GARY COOPER AND BERYL MERCER

A Paramount All Talking Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News Vol. 2 No. 1.

HUMENETTE'S SERIES

No. 1, featuring

DENNY RUBIN

R. K. O. Comedy.

FLAME OF LOVE

8 Reels, featuring

ANNA MAY WONG, JOHN LANGDEN AND GEORGE SCHNELL

British International Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

LOVE TREE

2 Reels

PAT ROONEY FAMILY

Universal Film.

COME TAKE A TRIP IN MY AIRSHIP

Paramount Screen Song.

AFRICA SPEAKS

8 Reels, Columbia Picture

Time:—4, 6-30 and 10 p. m.

EXTRA MATINEES ON WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY AND FRIDAY AT 4 P.M.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

NO CINEMA SHOWS.

THE GRANT ANDERSON REPERTORY COMPANY.

TIME:—Sat. 9-30 p. m.

Sun. 6 p. m.

Mon. to Fri. 9-30 p. m.

EXTRA MATINEES ON WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY AT 6 P.M.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1931

No. 44

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

President of Next Mahasabha. Pulling Down British India. Brahman Baiting. The Technological Movement in Bombay University. Agriculture and Technology. Where does Compensation come? Persian in India. The Threefold Commonwealth. Confiscation of Temples.	Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. XII. British India and Indian States. Rural Reconstruction in India. Swaraj and Proselytizing. To Proselytize or to Convert, Which? Neutrality or Toleration? Indian Women's University. News and Views.
--	---

NOTES.

President of Next Mahasabha:—
 It is announced that Dewan Bahadur C. Vijayaraghavacharya of Salem has been unanimously elected to preside over the next session of the Hindu Mahasabha to be held at Akola, in Berar, on the 9th and 10th August, and that he has accepted the offer. The Mahasabha deserves to be congratulated on the sound instinct which has guided its choice. Mr. Vijayaraghavacharya has not been in the public eye for some years past, and the Mahasabha leaders were not likely to have pitched upon him without much anxious search for the most suitable President for the next session. The President-elect is well past the Hebrew psalmist's allotted span of life, though he is well within the Hindu sage's limit of one hundred years. He is first and foremost a man of unspotted private and public life. Next, he is a man of indomitable courage, honouring his conscience as his king, staunch in his principles, immovable as a rock from any position which he takes up, and he never takes up one without much deliberation. One of the foundation members of the National Congress, he stuck to it after many of his colleagues except Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya had left it. He presided over the fateful Nagpur session at which that body formally adopted non-co-operation as its creed. Since then he has lived the life of a recluse, only stepping out occasionally to contribute a weighty word on the constitutional problem. He was the first to suggest the incorporation of fundamental rights in the Constitution, the reference of the Minorities Question to the League of Nations and also that Dominion Status can be conferred by an order of the King in Council and no Act of Parliament was needed for it. The fact that he has agreed to preside at the next session of the Mahasabha has a profound significance. It means that he feels that there is need at this juncture for the principles of sobriety, continuity and tolerance to be emphasised and that this has to be done from a platform outside the Congress.

Pulling Down British India:—We received last week facsimile copies of a letter purporting to be addressed by the Maharaja of Nawanagar to his brother Princes. It is stated in that letter that a Committee of which His Highness was Chairman met to consider (1) how boycott of foreign goods and picketing can be prevented and (2) how the circulation of scurrilous literature and newspapers can be stopped. The Committee decided that the first question was beyond its competence and as to the second "it was agreed that while the States could afford to treat this literature with silent contempt, it was unwise not to consider its educative effect on the minds not only of the ignorant but also of the young generation which make up (sic) future India." To gain this highly altruistic end, it struck the Committee that the easiest way was "to ask Government to include the Indian States in the application of orders recently passed in connection with Afghanistan." The reference is perhaps to an Ordinance issued by Lord Irwin before he left India penalising papers which wrote against foreign states in a way which imperilled friendly relations between them and British India. It is curious that, while the Princes are talking of Federation at one place, at another they desire to be accorded the status of Foreign countries. If this is done, the Maharaja of Nawanagar is confident that "much of the internal trouble of India would automatically disappear." Sir Prabhasbankar Pattani is mentioned as one of the members of the Committee but we should be surprised if he had agreed to this preposterous proposal. He was opposed to the enactment of the Princes' Protection Act, and it is scarcely likely that he could have viewed this with a more tolerant eye. The easiest way is not always the safest way. The Jam Saheb has doubtless read in his school days in England of the different destinations of the broad and strait roads. The internal troubles of India are due not, as the Maharaja in his self-sufficiency thinks, to the writings in the Press about the States. It is due to the progressive decline of the British Indian Government towards the standards of the States. The present suggestion, if adopted, will be another step in that process.

Brahman Baiting:—In an article headed "The Future of the Brahmans" in the Reformer of the 20th June we suggested that it was high time that Brahman baiting ceased as it was becoming rather disreputable. Justice, the organ of the official Non-Brahmin party of Madras, is naturally annoyed at our temerity. We pointed out that it is unfair to saddle the Brahmans with the sole responsibility for the evils of Hindu Society—a proposition in which we are glad to have the support of the Indian Messenger, the organ of the Sadaran Brahma Samaj. Justice, however, insists that the Brahman alone is to blame for whatever is amiss in Hindu social life. Our contemporary solemnly avers: "We maintain the Vysia, the Sudra and all others are the creation of Brahmins, and, as such, the Brahmin cannot disclaim all responsibility for their action." The Brahman does not disclaim "all responsibility" but only "sole responsibility" for Hindu social evils. As for Vysias and Sudras being the "creation" of Brahmans, surely, it is rather a feat to make scarcely 5 per cent. of the population the creators of the bulk of the remaining 95 per cent. Brahmans, it is said, were the lawgivers. The utmost that can be said is that they "gave laws" to the Brahmanical tribes only, though probably even here they did not so much make laws as merely record the customs most generally followed and opinions commonly held in them. The general structure of Hindu Society was, no doubt, determined by the circumstances of the whole community. It is almost an axiom in the study of ancient institutions that not one of them was created except in response to a felt, and often a long-felt, want of the whole community. The Brahmans had at no time either the political power or the military strength necessary to impose arbitrarily a system which was opposed to the consensus of Hindu opinion.

The Technological Movement in Bombay University: Mr. Lees-Smith, Post-Master-General in the present British Labour Government, delivered some twenty-five years ago a series of lectures on economic subjects in Bombay. In one of these he remarked that India seemed to be picking up old clothes which were being discarded in European countries. The cry of "Back to the Land" was being raised there with increasing force, he said, while here we were anxious to convert ourselves as quickly as possible from an agricultural into an industrial, that is, manufacturing country. This observation has gained enormously in significance since the War. At the present time, the industrialised countries are going through a crisis while the agricultural countries are comparatively immune from the worst effects of economic depression. In the former, the factories are overflowing with goods, and the banks with money, but the goods cannot be sold, unemployment is rife and the revolutionary spirit is abroad. Thoughtful observers seem to agree that the industrial revolution which started a hundred years ago in Britain, is played out, and that nineteenth century ideas require complete revision. Judging from the enthusiasm about Technology shown at the recent meetings of the Senate of Bombay University, it would seem that the members of that body are completely unaware of what is happening around them.

Agriculture and Technology:—So far removed are the Fellows from the realities outside that they actually resolved to make Agriculture a sub-department of Technology which Webster defines as the science or systematic knowledge of the industrial arts, especially, the more important manufactures, as spinning, weaving, metallurgy &c. This was done in spite of the earnest remonstrance of Mr. Burns, the Director of Agriculture, who pleaded that he was not opposed to the promotion of industries but that Agriculture and manufactures belonged to two different categories, were controlled by different conditions and that they should not be grouped in a single Faculty of Technology. The supersession of Agriculture by manufactures in its human incidence means the replacement of a free peasantry by a wage-earning proletariat, which is scarcely an improvement from the point of view of social well-being. No one can fail to realise the loss to the country of having to depend on foreign countries for its manufactured goods, especially those produced from raw materials which are largely grown in and exported from India. This must be avoided, but we doubt if the mere founding of costly Technological Institutions, will help much to do this. We may have unemployed Engineers and Electricians in place of unemployed graduates in Arts, which will not improve matters.

Where does Compensation Come?—Writing in Young India of what he would do for Prohibition if he was Dictator of a Swaraj Government, Mahatma Gandhi said: "The first thing I would do would be to close without compensation all the liquor shops." Some journals have pounced upon the phrase "without compensation" and tried to frighten people by raising the bogey of spoliation. As a matter of fact, no question of compensation can arise as the one and only redeeming feature of the Anglo-Indian excise system, with its annual sales of licenses, is that no vested interests in the trade exist such as have grown up under the English system. By "compensation" Mahatmaji evidently meant reimbursement of fees paid for licenses in the particular year in which Prohibition takes effect. If the loss of the dealer is due to the voluntary abstinence of his customers, he cannot obviously claim any compensation, but can the State, having taken his money for permission to exercise his trade, rightfully keep it when it prohibits the trade altogether? The question cannot be answered offhand.

Persian in India:—Mr. S. D. Nadkarni of Karwar asks for our authority for the statement recently made in these columns that Todar Mall made Persian the official language of the Moghul Empire. He will find it in the Count of Noer's "Emperor Akbar" an English translation of which in two volumes by A. Beveridge was published in 1890. "Up to his (Todar Mall's) time," writes the Count who made a special study of Akbar's reign, "all accounts had been kept in the Hindi language and with Hindi numerals; Todar Mall gave orders that in all official documents Persian and Persian numerals should be employed. By this means, he compelled his countrymen to learn Persian, a study hitherto neglected by them, and without which they were incapacitated from entering into the higher careers of the State. By this means also it came to pass that before the end of the 18th century the Hindus became teachers of Persian to the Muhamadans."

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
BOMBAY, July 4, 1931.

THE THREEFOLD COMMONWEALTH.

THE RIGHTS STATE.

The second branch of the body social in Dr. Rudolf Steiner's "Threefold Commonwealth," is the Rights State, dealing with the life of public rights—political life in the proper sense. These rights spring out of purely human relations. They come up from the deep recesses of the inner life and affect man's relations to man. "It is essential to a right understanding of the composition of the social organism," says the author, "that one should clearly recognise the difference between the system of "public right" which can only deal from inner and purely human grounds with man to man relations, and the "economic system" which is concerned solely with the production, circulation and consumption of commodities. People must become possessed of an instinctive sense for distinguishing between these two in life so that in practice the economic life and the life of "right" will be kept distinct—just as, in man's natural organism the lung's function in working up the outer air keeps distinct from the processes going on in the nervous and sensory life." Dr. Steiner, it is interesting to note, elaborates at some length an analogy between his Threefold Commonwealth and the three systems of the human body—life of the nerves and the senses, which he calls the head system, the "rhythmic system" also called the "lung and heart system," comprising the breathing, the circulation of the blood and all that finds expression in rhythmic processes within the human organism, and the system which comprises all those organs and functions that have to do with the metabolic process. Dr. Steiner is not the first to institute an analogy between the human body and the body social, he cites others who have done the same, though from different stand-points, and he explains that the object is "to use the human body as an object lesson for training human thought and feeling to a sense of what organic life requires, and then to apply this perceptive sense to the body social." May it not be that the Vedic purusha sukta which has been subjected to gross perversion at the hands of orthodox Hindus and their opponents, was just such an attempt to train human thought and feeling to a sense of what organic life requires?

We have already seen that the Rights State will prescribe the conditions subject to which the Industrial State will employ workers in the Threefold Commonwealth. These conditions will be formulated with reference to the ethical principles which should govern the relations between man and man. In fact, Dr. Steiner's scheme in this respect merely gives effect to the logical position of Economics as a branch of Ethics. In a sound social system, the economic system will have its roots in and be controlled by the ethical system, instead of as at present seeking to control the latter. "The first and indispensable object to be worked for in public life today," insists Dr. Steiner, "must be the radical separation of economic life from the "rights" organisation." Socialists want the State to undertake industrial and commercial functions. This is exactly what should not be done. It will only make matters worse instead of better. In so far as this movement to "nationalise" industrial and commercial undertakings has gone, Dr. Steiner calls for a reversal. "There must", he writes, "be a reversal of the movement which has set in in leading circles and which has already brought various departments of economic life (e.g., the postal and railway services, etc.), within the workings of the State. The opposite must begin: a movement towards the elimination of all economic activity from the domain of politics and State organisation." The main reason for State control is that it will prevent the exploitation of labour by capitalist employees. As a matter of fact, the State by taking over economic enterprises also takes over the mentality of capitalists as can be seen by its dealings with the lower grades of its employees. In consequence, its capacity to define and protect the rights of workers, is considerably impaired. The State, in fact, ceases in such a case to be a guardian of the people's rights. It can function efficiently as a Rights State only if it keeps its hands off the economic field, except to see that the human rights of workers are adequately provided for. The Fascist conception of the State answers more nearly to Dr. Steiner's idea than the Socialist State. In Mussolini's Italy the workers' rights are laid down and enforced by the State which otherwise leaves the management of industry to capitalists. Where Fascism falls short of Dr. Steiner's ideal of the Threefold Commonwealth, is in its subordination of the Spiritual State the free functioning of which is essential to the growth and well-being of the body social. This will form the subject of our next article.

Confiscation of Temples:—It has been authoritatively announced on behalf of the Congress that Hindu temples which persist in keeping their doors closed to antyaajas will be confiscated by the Swaraj Government. Some questions arising out of this declaration require elucidation. Would this be in consonance with the policy of neutrality in religious matters adopted at the Karachi Congress as a fundamental law of the future Indian Swaraj? Will this apply to Hindu temples only but also to Christian churches and Moslem mosques which practice similar exclusions?

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU
LAW. XII.

(BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTHY.)

(Concluded from the last issue.)

The learned Committee appointed by His Highness the Maharaja Gaekwad very naturally denounce the old system of concubine-keeping as an "immoral" and "revolting" practice under modern conditions. And in their eagerness to purge Hindu society of that "demoralising" evil they recommend that the provision for maintenance of concubines and illegitimate sons should be discontinued "without further delay"! There was thus no chance at all, of course, for any pity being wasted over, or thought given to the need for subsistence of an illegitimate daughter who has at present no claim under any system of Hindu law either in Baroda or out of it.

At first blush the drastic action favoured by the learned Rao Bahadur Desai Committee appears highly moral and commendable. But, with due respect, we are constrained on second thoughts to regret that they have unconsciously slipped into a sad metathesis of moral judgment and committed an unhappy transposition of moral responsibilities which serves no higher purpose than that of tinkering cheaply with a grave human problem at the wrong end. It is no doubt immoral and revolting that Hindu society should even under modern conditions complacently let a man keep a concubine or produce illegitimate children, without at once punishing him with excommunication and expulsion from joint family and some legal penalty to mark its disapprobation. But so long as the present Hindu law, even in Baroda, dare not permit a Hindu woman to contract a valid marriage as of old with a man of different caste and so long as it feels bound to treat incontinence in a wedded man, not only by way of bigamy but by the keeping of a concubine, as in no way offensive or improper, it at least shows a commendable sense of humanity in making his property liable for the protection of the victims of his lust and of the inevitable offspring of their unblest union. For we must bear in mind that the immorality which the law supinely permitted it practically commanded and brought about. If, further, we take care to remember that the Avaruddha Stree who is entitled to maintenance from a man's estate under the Hindu law and whom we, in modern parlance, stigmatise and denounce as a "concubine," is not a wanton woman of the town but a wife in truth, though unwedded and of different caste, who remained faithful to the man till his death and even afterwards, we shall not fail to realise that the Committee have unfortunately allowed their moral indignation to burst in the wrong quarter. They have in fact destroyed the means of livelihood of quite moral and inoffensive persons, while relieving the immoral man and his property of their just legal responsibility to protect the devoted woman whom he had persuaded to trust him with her life and the innocent children whom he dragged into unsolicited existence. We are glad that the Mysore Committee have extended to the unmarried illegitimate daughter under the Hindu law the protection which is accorded to her in British India only under the Criminal Procedure Code during her minority. We only trust that another Mysore Committee will soon come forward to grapple boldly with the twin roots of the evil system of concubinage, namely, the legal charter granted to man's infidelity and moral fickleness, and the legal bar raised against his honourable marriage with a beloved faithful woman of different caste.

But all this is by the way. What we are immediately concerned with is the trifold improvement which the learned Mysore Committee have effected in the substantive and adjective law governing maintenances. For it helps to render the lot of a Hindu wife, superceded in her husband's affections by a second wife or a concubine, less intolerable than it would otherwise be even after conceding to her a separate living under the present Hindu law.

BRITISH INDIA AND INDIAN STATES.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have read your note headed, "Ashamed for Nothing," in your last issue.

I wish to tell you why I feel ashamed that "Indian India" is inferior in many respects to "British India." British India has made some progress, sometimes with the consent and co-operation of the Britishers and sometimes in spite of their passive and active opposition. Whether their consent and co-operation were due to philanthropy or to the motive of facilitating administration and exploitation, or both, and, if the last, in what varying degrees, I need not discuss. I have also no doubt that Indians themselves are entitled to much of the credit for the progress made in British India.

The Indians in Indian India are not racially different from and inferior to "British Indians." So they are quite capable of making as much progress as ourselves. And their rulers also are Indians. These rulers being natives of the country are naturally expected to be more interested in the welfare and progress of their states than the foreign British rulers of India. But it is to be regretted that they are not, speaking generally, of course. If they were, Indian India could have made greater progress than British India.

It is usual to be proud of the achievements of our countrymen, as it is to be ashamed of their faults and failures. For this reason, I used the words "to our shame." It may, of course, be argued that, strictly speaking, we are not responsible for the backward condition of the Indian States, and so need not be ashamed of that condition. It would be as difficult to demonstrate with mathematical precision that we are not in the least responsible as that we are responsible for it. In any case, I did not in this part of my speech want to speak like a scientist but like one perhaps who has the crowd mentality, and that not in any derogatory sense.

RAMANANDA CHATTERJEE.

RURAL RECONSTRUCTION IN INDIA.

(By Sir M. VISVESVARAYA, K. C. L. E.)

INTRODUCTORY.

There are many phases of rural uplift work clamouring for attention but the scheme suggested in this brochure concentrates attention on two aspects only—and these not the least important—namely, increase of production and improvement in the working efficiency of the villager.

The scheme is adapted from a similar organization found in actual operation in parts of Japan where, under Government encouragement, a large measure of success has been achieved. Records of villages exist in that country which, under the operation of such a scheme, have increased their income five-fold or more in the course of twenty years. Progress under the scheme is measured from year to year by the gross earnings of the village population and schedules are prepared which enable single families, as well as the village population collectively, to think in figures, and to provide themselves with the means of measuring their progress in comparison with their own past as well as with other neighbouring villages.

Agriculture is conducted in Japan on the principle of family management on a small scale and it plays the same important role as in India. The same handicaps, also, operate in both countries, namely, the small size of the holding, over-population and indebtedness, but in India there is in addition illiteracy which has deepened the impoverishment of the rural communities.

The rural population is at present the least able to help itself and on account of its overwhelming numbers, even a small improvement in its condition will mean a great gain to the country at large. The betterment of this population has become without question one of the most outstanding problems of our time. The great growth of population revealed by the recent Census is a warning that the occasion demands a more vigorous programme of agricultural reform than any attempted in the past, necessitating large organizations and strong popular support for its success.

OBJECT OF THE SCHEME

According to the latest Census, India contains no less than 350 million inhabitants or about one-fifth of the entire population of the globe. The recorded figures show that 9 per cent. of this population is literate, 90 per cent. of it resides in rural areas and 73 per cent. earns its living from agriculture. The country is undeveloped in the modern sense; the population, though growing rapidly, continues to be predominantly rural. Whether due to the peculiar seasonal conditions, or because the country is not organized for the production of wealth, about one-fourth of the entire population, although capable of working, remains idle for the greater part of the year, and among the remaining number also there is an alarming amount of short employment. The result is, small output of work, disproportionately small production, low earning power, and poverty beyond any knowledge which Western nations have of it.

Of late years problems affecting the rural population are attracting attention and in many quarters a genuine interest is being evinced to improve the lot of the villager. Public-spirited citizens, Government officials, university professors, graduate volunteers and others are carrying on village surveys. A certain amount of statistical and other information has been gathered and illuminating reports have been written about village social and economic life. But action of a definite kind has been overdue for some time now. It is true, in a few places, particularly in the Punjab and in the Bombay Deccan, actual reconstruction of village life has also been attempted. But most of the work done has been of the nature of investigation. The disease has been diagnosed but it has not been found easy to devise effective remedies. This is due to the inherent difficulties of the problem, and to the population being illiterate and lacking in initiative and power of co-operation. Some of the remedies suggested have been very elaborate, and for that reason they are not such as to promise appreciable results within a reasonable time. It is therefore thought necessary to sacrifice thoroughness, to some extent, if thereby the chances of introducing a workable scheme could be improved.

In what follows, a rural improvement scheme suited to local conditions is outlined. The scheme aims at increasing income in villages by increasing production from agriculture, by extending subsidiary occupations and industries and by increasing the hours and output of work as practised by the village communities. It aims at progress by laying emphasis on production, in other words, by appealing to the self-interest of the villager. It attempts, at the same time, at increasing the working efficiency of the villager, by initiating a system of home discipline, by providing for vocational or occupational training and by extending educational facilities as widely as local resources might permit. While external aid is fully availed of, its primary object is to give full play to the villager's capacity for self-reliance and self-expression.

VILLAGE IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION AND COUNCIL.

To give the reader some idea of the agency required and the methods that will have to be followed in introducing the proposed scheme, it might be useful to describe the organization witnessed in one of the model villages of Japan. The village in question had an association consisting of the headmen of families in the area, or house-masters as they were locally called, for the purpose of increasing production and occupations and its material prosperity generally. This Association met twice a year in Conference. At these Conferences, questions pertaining to the wants and desires of the village in respect of production and occupations, and to the funds and measures required to promote both, were considered and discussed and, with the assistance of the Council of the Association, a programme of work and budget of expenditure was drawn up. Enquiries showed that the expenditure was met by contributions from the members of the Association (i.e., headmen of families), every farmer's family paying its share according to its estimated income or earning capacity.

The Conference carefully examined every measure suggested with a view to increasing production and income, whether from agriculture, subsidiary occupations, industries or service. Experienced leaders and business-men, who had studied rural problems, were invited from the neighbouring cities to advise the people how occupations might be multiplied, production increased and the prosperity of the village promoted. Lectures were delivered, discussions, fairs and exhibitions held, and the Conference was wound up by a visit to the village Shinto temple, where divine blessings were invoked on the undertakings initiated by the Association.

The Village Council with its elected Chairman, who is usually the village chief, and Vice-Chairman, who generally is the school-master, constituted the executive body of the Association. It usually met once a month to give practical effect to the policies and programmes of the half-yearly Conferences. This was attempted by distributing the work to be done among the village headmen and enlisting their close co-operation and also seeking advice and help, from persons of light and leading outside the village, whenever needed.

A similar Association with an executive committee and headman can be brought into existence, to serve the same purposes, with similar results, in any Indian village, or group of villages, whether situated in a British Province or in an Indian State.

VILLAGE UNIT.

According to the 1921 Census, the average population of an Indian village is about 418 persons.* Taking 4.9 persons per family, such a village should contain about 85 families. A village of this size will not have sufficient resources in men or money to carry on the work of the Village Improvement Association. But if the village contains, say, 500 families or more, it may be expected to provide the resources needed to work the scheme. Otherwise in order to find the requisite number of qualified literate men and adequate funds for the purpose, it will be necessary to form a circle of, say, 4 to 6 villages into a Union (if the villages are of the size of the average Indian village mentioned) and to make the central village in the circle its headquarters.

A similar measure was adopted in Japan in order to render village administration efficient. Formerly there were 70,000 distinct villages and hamlets in that country. That number is still there, but by grouping them for administrative purposes in the manner explained, the number of rural administrative units has been brought down to about 12,000.

* The average population of a village for India as a whole is 418 persons; that of a village in the Bombay Presidency is 562; in the Madras Presidency is 710; in the Bengal Presidency 512; and in the Indian State of Mysore 309.

Where a number of villages or hamlets are grouped together in this way, the Central Council appoints separate local representatives for each village or hamlet to carry on the duties with the aid of the executive staff of the Association.

The house or family is the unit recognized in Japan for the purpose of estimating the produce and income and for supplying the funds needed to maintain the staff and activities of the Association. The same unit will be most appropriate for the conditions of India. The headman of each family, or any member of the family who administers its affairs, should, as in Japan, be held responsible by the Association and by public opinion, for contributing the family's fair share of the work and expenses of the Village Improvement Association.

UPLIFT WORK IN ISOLATED VILLAGES AND HAMLETS

Although in the great majority of cases it will be necessary to adopt the village union system just described, yet the scheme can be introduced into, and worked in, any individual village or hamlet, however small. But in such cases, it is necessary that the responsibility for working the scheme should be shouldered by an influential inamdar, headman or leader, who understands the scheme and who at the same time, enjoys the confidence of the people of the village and has sufficient strength of purpose to persevere until substantial results are achieved.

( To be continued. )

SWARAJ AND PROSELYTIZING.

“ MAHATMA GANDHI AND CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA.”

The Editor, Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Mahatma Gandhi's pronouncement on the activities and the place of the Christian Missionary Institutions in the National regime for which he is working day and night, whereas it has caused a stir and a certain amount of concern amongst the serious minded Christians, should bring to the forefront of the public discussion this very important aspect of Religious liberty in this country. The issue is all the more grave because the National Dictator in spite of the professed largeness of his soul has singled out one minor community to be the target of his unjustifiable observation regarding what he calls “ proselytizing.”

As regards his own co-religionists the fact is that at the last conference of the Hindu Maha Sabha in Karachi Mr. Ramanand Chatterji, the President-elect declared that the “ Hindus should be conceded their rights of proselytizing ” and that the statement evidently has gone unchallenged by the Hindu Mahatma. Again it is an open secret that at Karachi this Conference had a definite Congress back-ground and not a single member of that national body thought it fit to comment on the declaration of the President of the Mahasabha on this matter. How great indeed is the smallness of these Big Souls.

The Mahatma is at once afraid to touch the major minority, the Mohammedans, just at the present time, for he is cultivating a sort of peace mentality. But anyone acquainted with the Missionary work which is being energetically carried on by the Ahmadiyas of Lahore and Quadian, can foresee the state of the communal opposition if our Muslim countrymen are denied the rights to share their faith by legitimate means with others and the right to make converts to Islam. The right to win converts to their religions is an important element of both the Mohammedan and Christian religions and on this in the last analysis will hang the satisfactory solution of the communal problems.

The Bishop of Portsmouth's observation that the Indian Christians will give suitable material for a stable and constitutional government is a fact which is substantiated by our stand as a community at times of political crisis. At the last Round Table Conference, the Indian Christians were the only minor community whose representative, the late Mr. K. T. Paul repudiated communal representation and this was done in the interest of India's national welfare at a time when the representatives of the other major communities were fighting over the questions connected with the distribution of the political loaves and fishes in this country. Again, in the statement submitted by the Indian Christian Conference to the Simon Commission we showed our willingness to forego our rights on the basis of communalism. Thus in the East as well as in the West, the Christian community was the only minor community to take a patriotic stand in regard to the problem of minorities which will always be a fundamental question of our national life. The tragedy of the whole matter is that our admirers live outside India and howsoever sacrificial an attitude we have taken towards the national problems it has always been taken without a word of admiration from our countrymen of Mabsabha or of Tanzim even though their list happened to include the advocate of the Soul Force. On the top of it our patriotism is rewarded with an injunction forbidding us to share our spiritual experiences with others.

Mahatma Gandhi's conception of Religious Truth is decidedly unphilosophic and absurdly narrow, when he says that the religion of one nation is as good as of another and that India does not need foreign spirituality. In a letter to the Daily Mail the Bishop of Portsmouth is much nearer the truth by saying that the "religion of one nation is not as good as another." Truth by nature is universal and therefore incapable of being localised or of being regarded the property of a nation.

My friend Dr. Wendell Thomas who has made an exhaustive study of the Hindu Missionary movements in a Christian country like the United States of America clearly shows in his book "Hinduism Invades America" that none of these Hindu Missions could have made any progress if the Missionaries had not been generously supported by their American admirers. Maulvi Sadar-ud-din, B.A., B.T., of Sialkot who till his return to India recently was the Imam of Woking Mosque in London has a romantic tale to tell about the work and the workers of the Ahmadiya Mission in England, with the increasing number of its British converts to Islam.

Will Mahatma Gandhi on the same principle on which as the national dictator of the Swaraj Government, he thinks he would ask the British and American Missionaries to withdraw from India, insist on the recall of these Hindu and Muslim missionaries from America and England?

The Evangelist Dr. E. Stanley Jones who to my mind is one of the most precious gifts of the U. S. A., to India in our times once gave me a definition of Tolerance by quoting Voltaire who said, "I disagree with everything you say, and yet I would fight to the death for your right to say it." This is tolerance which since the day of the philosopher Locke has been regarded as the basic principle of all forms of Government. For example, as a votary of Jesus Christ, my Master, in a democratic form of Government, I have a right to say that without Personal Regeneration through being uplifted to the plane of Christ's personality through faith in Him and the experience of the Holy Spirit, nobody can have a definite conception of political freedom. Mahatma Gandhi and others have a right to accept it as a Gospel Truth as they accepted not long ago the Sermon on the Mount or not to accept it; but none of them has a right to restrict my liberty to proclaim this Gospel so far as it has been made real to me through personal experience.

As a matter of fact no Christian whether he is regenerate or nominal can ever believe in adding to the number as is but too often done by our Hindu countrymen. We on the other hand believe in the evangelisation of this country in particular and the world at large, not making a case for the Gospel of our Master. As Evangelical believers, we are His witnesses and not advocates. In the words of the Master, as reported by the evangelist John, "We speak that we do know and testify that we have seen; and you receive not our Witness."

I think there is no freedom more fundamental than the right to believe and share with others our precious experience of God's salvation.

Christian conversion of the experience of Regeneration is a matter of first-hand knowledge with me, both intellectually and experimentally. I will not therefore allow Mahatma Gandhi's statement that Indians do not stand in need of spiritual conversion of this kind to pass un-challenged. Christian conversion is a creative act of God's Spirit made possible by entire surrender of ourselves to God as made manifest to us in the towering Person of Jesus Christ, the first step therefore being an appropriating trust in Jesus Christ as our Personal Saviour.

It is the only way of having ourselves, corruptible, as we are by nature, lifted up to the morally perfect plane of Jesus Christ and thus becoming Christlike.

General Booth told Mr. Churchill that he stood in need of this conversion. Do we need it? We are as citizens sadly lacking in public spiritedness. Recent riots and our political conferences can serve as good mirrors showing us our old nature that has got to be converted and made Christlike.

Education can improve our old nature only but cannot change its essentials. Education is therefore inadequate and cannot meet our need. What we need is a thorough transformation in our scale of values and in our very being, by a direct and close contact with the Truth or Reality and by the creation of pure heart.

May I end with a sentence from Ibsen's Pillars of Society, "Truth and Freedom are the Pillars of Society." But a greater than Ibsen said, "Truth shall make you free." No real freedom is possible without the Real Truth. My prayer therefore is that the nation may learn to appropriate both Truth and Freedom.

Yours, etc.,

C. L. SURY,

Pleader and Evangelist.

[ Much of this letter is beside the point. Neither Mahatma Gandhi nor any one else denies that every person is entitled to believe what he likes. The objection is to organized proselytisation, the case against which cannot be put more forcibly than it has been by Dr. Stanley Jones, whose article we print below. Ed. I. S. R. ]

TO PROSELYTIZE OR TO CONVERT, WHICH?

( BY THE REV. E. STANLEY JONES. )

In Young India of May 7th Gandhiji says in reply to a Ceylon correspondent that, "In India under Swaraj I have no doubt that foreign missionaries will be at liberty to do their proselytising as I would say, in the wrong way; but they would be expected to bear with those who, like me, may point out that in their opinion the way is wrong."

This clears the matter of Gandhiji's attitude toward the future of Christian missions. Missionaries would be allowed to "proselytize," but under the protest of such men as hold the views of Gandhiji, the protest being based on the view that the method is wrong. It is well to note that he uses the term "proselytize."

In the National Christian Council Review two open letters to Gandhiji were printed, one being written by a Catholic Christian and the other by the present writer. The Catholic brother pleaded for the right to "proselyte." The present writer repudiated "proselytization." I have before me a sermon preached at the C. M. S. Conference Session in Bombay in which the preacher says, "If we are not out to proselytise, if we are not out to carry out the terms of the great Commission then we are sailing under false colours." Here he seems to make proselytising and the carrying out of the great Commission synonymous.

If Gandhiji thinks that we are out to proselytise he has some basis for it, for it seems that many Christians feel the same way about it. On the other hand some of us feel that we are not out to proselytise. There is evidently a good deal of confusion. The issues must be made clear.

My own view is that we are out to convert, but not to proselytize. Is there a valid distinction? Webster says that to proselytize is "to cause to be converted to some system, opinion, or party." Note that it does not necessarily involve any change in moral or spiritual character. It merely means the coming over to a party, or group or opinion. When we look at the word "to convert" in the same dictionary we find two outstanding meanings: 1. "To change or turn from one religion to another or from one party or sect to another." 2. "To turn from a bad life to a good one; to change the heart and moral character from the controlling power of sin to that of holiness." In one of the meanings the word "to convert" has the same meaning as the word "to proselytize," but it has another and deeper meaning utterly lacking in the other, namely that of a change of moral and spiritual character.

In preferring the word convert to the word proselytize we have not only the authority of the dictionary, but the word of our own Lord. He condemned proselytizing in the words: "Ye compass land and sea to make one proselyte and when ye have done so you make him two-fold more a child of hell than yourselves." There was something in this spirit of proselyting which was very repugnant to Jesus. It was the getting a man to come over to another faith without involving any change of moral and spiritual character. On the other hand He insisted that "Except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall not enter the Kingdom of Heaven." Here conversion involved an utter change of heart and life. In fact the one converted became so new that now it is like starting all over again as a little child. Nothing could be more radical than this. Jesus therefore repudiated one term and all that it stood for. For it was organized religion, partyism, organized selfishness. But He accepted the other term and all that it stood for. It was not organized selfishness or partyism, it was organized unselfishness and brotherhood. The first step in the finding of conversion is to lay down the self. The first step in undergoing proselytism is the appeal to some selfish purpose or interest in a group selfishness.

Christian missions should make it perfectly clear that they will have nothing to do with proselyting. It smacks too much of religious imperialism, too much of organized selfishness, too much of everything that Jesus opposes. No Christian missionary or worker should ever make a proselyte. We have made many—to our sorrow. Let us face the facts. Very often in Christian missions we have taken people into the Christian fold and the only qualification was their willingness to come. I do not mean to say that this has been the dominating spirit of Christian missions. But it has been too often found among us. Let us confess it.

I do not agree with Gandhiji's position in regard to these matters, but if his statement helps us to cleanse from our midst this spirit of proselyting then he will have done us a service. For the Christian movement can only go on with power when it is true to the mind of its Master. And proselytizing is opposed to His mind.

But conversion is the very breath of the Gospels. The Gospels set up the Kingdom of God as the personal, social, economic and political goal of mankind. This necessarily involves change in every single department of life. It begins at the heart and goes to the very utmost limits. The Christian stands for change from things as they are to things as they ought to be. The very heart of his religion is change, a change which begins in his own life and goes to the whole of life. But no outer conversion into the Christian fold should take place unless and until it involves an inner change. If it does not involve an inner change it is proselyting, if it does involve an inner change it is conversion. The one has been and is the cause of deepest disruptions and clashes; the other is the one hope of our disrupted and clashing humanity. Proselytizing is the supreme bane of religion; conversion is the supreme business of religion. When religion can no longer make bad men into good men, weak men into strong men, selfish men into unselfish men, men devoid of the God-consciousness to men with a radiant sense of God it has lost its right to live. The greatest necessity in the world today is conversion. And that religion will survive that will be able to do it most thoroughly and consistently and on the widest spread scale.

We should accept this challenge to get rid of proselyting. And at the very same time we should accept the challenge to produce conversion. We will never be able to truly convert unless we get rid of proselytizing. We are not out for numbers, we are not out for political power, we are not out to dominate anyone's soul, we are not out to impose something on others, we are not out to destroy everything in India's culture and past, but we are out to convert, first ourselves and then every man everywhere who is in spiritual and moral need. And that includes us all.—The Fellowship.

Forgot She was Married:—Nirmal and Haider, two peons of certain Government departments at Allahabad are being prosecuted before Mr. P. J. Moore, subdivisional magistrate, on the charge of abetment of the offence of enticing away a married woman, on the complaint of one Rampal, the alleged husband of the woman in dispute. The complainant alleged that on his return from the Pertabgarh district, where he had gone to see his sister, he discovered that his wife had disappeared from his house. A search was made for the woman and she was found in the house of one Sarju Maharaj living in Katra, Allahabad. The woman examined as the complainant's witness stated that she forgot having been married, as the marriage had taken place when she was only five years of age.

NEUTRALITY OR TOLERATION. ?

Our contemporary the Indian Social Reformer has an interesting article on 'Religion and the State' in its last number. In this article the Editor takes exception to the term 'neutrality' as describing the attitude of the future Indian State towards religion. It is pointed out that the attitude of the Nehru Report was that of neutrality. It was laid down in that Report that the State as such should make no endowments to any religion either directly or indirectly, and that this is the general policy followed in most of the States in Europe. Then it goes on to say :

'The place of religion in the life of the people of India is entirely different and the policy of the National State should correspond to it. There is a group of Indian politicians who would like the Indian attitude to religion to be transformed to what it is in Europe. This may or may not be a good thing, but the political constitution of the country should not be made an instrument of anti-religious propaganda. Indian civilisation as compared with Western civilisation is poor in material achievement but it has better conserved spiritual values, because it is rooted in religion.'

Our contemporary has again and again declared that the Indian ideal is not that the State should boycott religion in all its forms, but that it should show an impartial toleration to all religions and it says that the traditional Indian policy is that of uniting the State and religion in a closer bond. The clause in the resolution on Fundamental Rights adopted by the Karachi Congress gives "freedom of conscience and the free profession and practice of religion, subject to public order and morality" to every citizen, and the Indian Social Reformer interprets this to mean that the State will look with favour upon all religions rather than that the State will have nothing to do with any religion. There is no doubt that our contemporary is right that the attitude of toleration is more suited to Indian conditions than the attitude of neutrality as defined in the Nehru Report. The Right Hon. Mr. Srinivasa Sastri in his address in London at the East India Association recently also emphasised this point and said that it was one of the fundamental principles of the Hindu State to give freedom to all religions to carry on their work. He said that "the lawful operations of Christian missions would never be hindered by legal obstacles." The Indian Social Reformer points to Mysore as the exemplary Hindu State in this matter in which a Hindu Maharajah with a Moslem Dewan and Christian Minister are working together for the development of the country. It must be admitted that this method of impartial toleration is not an easy thing for any State to carry out in its everyday administration, but it is an ideal which we hope the future Indian State will always have before it. Religious neutrality, as the Social Reformer points out, in practice nearly always becomes the support of reactionary forces in religion and society. Whereas toleration gives the fullest possible opportunity to the development of religious and social reform. We believe this is the true Christian position, and we are very glad that our contemporary has pointed out this difference and made it possible for Indian public men to realise that a State can be impartial in religious matters while maintaining a religious attitude towards life. The Guardian, Calcutta.

INDIAN WOMEN'S UNIVERSITY.

Dr. Muthulakshmi Reddi delivered the address at the Convocation on Monday. Addressing the graduates, she said :

You have enjoyed the privilege of having completed your courses under the auspices of this famous University and in my opinion you go out better equipped to face life's battle and serve humanity than many of your sister graduates who pass out from the other universities because it has been your good fortune to have come under the direct influence of such devoted and selfless life workers as Prof. Karve and his colleagues and to have realised during every minute of your stay here that your education has been made possible by the goodness and generosity of such high-souled philanthropists as Sir Vitthaladas Thackersey, and other benefactors of this University. Therefore, having yourself tasted the benefits of these great qualities, wherever you may go and in whatever station of life you may be placed, you would endeavour to your utmost to practise those virtues yourselves and thus be an example and an influence for good, to others.

Bombay has earned a name for the patriotism and valour of its women and for their service and sacrifice in the national cause. Their glorious part during the recent non-violent campaign to stop drink and to prevent the import of foreign cloth has claimed the admiration of the whole world and have also convinced our own men of the women's immense capacity to serve and of the value of that service to the nation.

A study of our past history will disclose that in ancient India, women have enjoyed absolute equality with men in every walk of life and had equally shared with men the duties and responsibilities of public life and it was only during the middle dark period in Indian history women had allowed themselves to be made the slaves and toys of men and have permitted them to frame laws for their conduct with the natural consequence that these one-sided laws and codes have deprived her of her freedom and her rights as a human being and have hampered her full physical and mental growth. Freedom, education and responsibility brings out all that is best in the individual and in the race. What is true of nations is equally true of the individual man or woman.

But at the same time, it is good for us to remember that not only Indian women but also women all over the world are going through the same sad experience and are suffering from similar laws and customs. We were, till of late, under the false notion that we are the only victims of man's monopoly. Now we have discovered to our relief that women all over the world are more or less in a similar plight and are fighting hard for justice and equality for their sex. Therefore women whether East or West are not exempt from the evils of unequal and unjust laws framed by the other sex. In one respect Indian women are fortunate to have met with no opposition from the majority of their men in their demands for equality while on the other hand from the very commencement of the British rule, men reformers in India have been labouring for our emancipation. Through their noble efforts and brave examples of women in other free and advanced lands, Indian women are slowly taking their rightful place in society and are making their influence felt in the public life of this country. Now our men realise that women's help and co-operation is essential for the social, economic, educational and political development of the country ; to remove illiteracy from the land, to spread education among the masses, to relieve sickness and suffering and as wives and mothers to train to guide and form the character of the future generation. There are other spheres of human activity from which the majority of our women have been by sheer force of customs and conventions, shut off for centuries. I mean the administrative and the law making departments which departments through our own apathy, have been monopolised by the men till now.

The All-India Conference of women representing all communities, all creeds and races through its delegates elected by 33 constituencies in India at its last session, has resolved to abolish child-marriage, to reform the Hindu laws relating to marriage, inheritance and guardianship of children, to promote a high and equal moral standard between the sexes, to protect minor girls, to put down traffic in women, to abolish polygamy and purdah, to remove untouchability, to bring about prohibition, to improve labour conditions, to abolish child-labour, to spread free, primary and compulsory education among boys and girls, to reform education and to provide adequate trained medical help to women and children ; unless women secure seats in the Councils, the Assemblies, Municipalities, District boards, and educational bodies as senate, syndicate, academical councils, the above mentioned reforms will not be possible in the near future.

Therefore in the new constitution that is to come women have yet to play an important part and we are justified in demanding that in the very shaping of the swaraj constitution, we should have a hand to clearly define and formulate our own status therein. The Congress have already accepted the principle of sex equality in their Declaration of fundamental Rights. But unless that equality is recognised in practise as in theory, we will not have equal opportunities for serving the nation.

The clauses in the Fundamental Rights enunciated by the Indian National Congress are :

“Equal rights and obligations of all citizens without any bias on account of sex.

No disability to attach to any citizen by reason of his or her religion, caste, or creed or sex in regard to public employment, office of power of honour and in the exercise of any trade or calling.”

Even now we possess equal political and civic rights with our men and all professions are open to us, but the majority of us are prevented by other legal and social disabilities from fully exercising those rights. Therefore, I would ask my educated sisters to bear constantly in mind that, unless and until we secure economic independence and until we do away with all those customary laws that keep us under bondage, even in a free self-governing India, women's freedom and equality is not guaranteed.

But the future is full of hope. Let us meanwhile give our unstinted service to the nation and bring to bear upon the public life of the country those special qualities of women namely love and beauty, devotion and purity, the spirit to forgive and forget, our zeal for service and sacrifice, our love for peace and harmony. Let these be our distinctive contribution to the creation of a better future for man and woman.

Before I close my address, let us once again remind ourselves of our great indebtedness to the founder of the Indian Women's University.

Prof. Karve is now 73 years old. He does not seek any rest at this age. Having only recently finished a world's tour, he has again undertaken a trip to East Africa on behalf of this University.

How are you going to deserve all that devotion and service? An adequate return could be found only in a similar service and devotion for the cause that is so dear and near to his heart.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

A Notable Wedding:—Prof. O. V. Krishna Iyengar of the Government Inter College at Bangalore was married on the 26th June to Prafulla Devi, daughter of late Mr. A. Sesha Iyengar, Advocate, son of late Mr. K. Ramaswami Iyengar, Supdt. of Survey of Mysore Government. This happy event recalls many interesting reminiscences of the earlier days of the social reform movement led by veterans of the day among whom were the late Diwan Bahadur Raghunath Rao, Messrs. Veeresalingam Pantulu, G. Subramanya Iyer, editor of the 'Hindu', A. Subba Rao of the Presidency College, K. Natarajan of the 'Indian Social Reformer' and K. Subba Rao, late of the 'Hindu' and now the Political Adviser to the Chief of Dewas Junior in Central India. The bride is 18 years of age having just passed out of the School Final Course of the Mysore University. The bride-groom is an M. Sc. Botany of the Calcutta University and a rising research scholar in South India nick-named 'Bose Sahib' by his chums after the eminent scientist Sir J. C. Bose. He is the eldest of the seven living children of Mr. O. Venkatarada Iyengar and Mrs. Krishnamma Venkatarada Iyengar of Penukonda. They were married nearly forty years ago at Mylapore. The event was acclaimed all over India as a treble achievement in the newspapers of the day combining in one as it did adult marriage, re-marriage and intercast marriage. Among those that graced the occasion and blessed the couple were besides those named above Messrs. Diwan Bahadur B. Kesava Pillai, late Diwan Bahadur P. Bajaratna Mudaliar, Secretary to the Board of Revenue, T. Sivasankaram of Penukonda, and V. Sudarsana Mudaliar, Huzur Sheristadar of Anantapur. During these forty years Mr. and Mrs. Iyengar have been striving hard and silently in the work of uplifting destitute women and children in their Abala Asram at Basavangudi which is a home for waifs and strays run by them. About a dozen of the inmates who were infants when they were first admitted into their home are now married and are heard of as happy families. About twenty young widows who came into contact with Mrs. Iyengar have been persuaded and actively helped to take to teaching profession and it is to their credit that one and all of them are leading self-reliant and useful lives. The fact that the bride Prafulla Devi being the sister of Prof. Kuppaswami Iyengar, Professor of Mathematics of the Central College was responsible for the attendance of a large number of distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen. The happy couple were recipients of numerous gifts and at the dinner which followed, the guests were treated all alike without distinction of caste or creed. It was a sight to see a large number of the fellow pupils of the bride conversing freely in English. The function as a whole afforded a comparative view of conditions as they existed forty years ago in matters social and indicated strides of advance the country has made in this direction.

Child Marriage:—One Nagina Singh of village, Baniapore, in Chapra district, had made an application under the Guardians and Wards Act, before Mr. R. B. Beevor, I.C.S., District Judge of Saran, for being appointed the guardian of two minor girls, namely, Asharfi and Sheodulari aged 6 years and 3 years respectively, who were related to him as his cousins. In the course of the proceeding, another petition was made by the applicant to the effect that the mother of the two girls had settled their marriages in "golawat" form, which were proposed to be performed on June 12, and the applicant further prayed for the issue of injunction against Mussamat Babuni, the mother of the two girls, restraining her from giving in marriage the two girls, inasmuch as the proposed marriages contravened the provisions of the Sarda Act. The applicant also gave an undertaking in writing that he would proceed against the offenders under the Sarda Act in case the Court's order was disobeyed. The Judge issued an injunction accordingly, and directed the Sub-Inspector of Police, Basantpur Police Station to see that the Court's order was obeyed. The Sub-Inspector has reported that the Court's order has been disobeyed in case of elder girl. The Judge has called upon the mother to show cause why she should not be punished under Order 39 R. 2 (3) C. P. C. for disobeying the Court's order. Nagina Singh has also instituted a case under the Sarda Act against the mother of the girls and others concerned before the District Magistrate of Saran for giving away the elder minor girl in marriage. The District Magistrate has ordered an enquiry into the case by a first class Magistrate.

Social Workers' Training Class:—The Social Service League, Bombay, has decided to organize a class for the training of social workers for a period of about eleven weeks beginning with the 11th July 1931. The class will be held at the Head Office of the Social Service League, Girgaum. Lectures will be arranged generally on Tuesdays and Saturdays in the evenings, and visits to social service institutions will be paid on days on which there will be no lectures. The following well-known social workers have been requested to conduct the class on the subjects mentioned against their names:—(1) Prof. B. M. Joshi, M. A., B. Sc., I. E. S., (Industrial Revolution and its Social effects) (2) Dr. Miss. Jerbanoo E. Mistri, L. M. & S., (Child Welfare); (3) Prof. P. A. Wadia, M. A., (Problems of Poverty); (4) Mr. H. D. Chhatrapati, B.A., (Education and Care of the Blind in India); (5) Dr. H. D. Khote, D. P. H., M. B. O. P., (Health and Hygiene); (6) Mr. P. G. Naik, (Vigilance and Rescue Work); (7) Mr. S. G. Warty, M.A., (Indian Labour Problems); (8) Principal T. A. Kulkarni, B.A., (Crime and Punishment); (9) Dr. G. S. Ghurye, M. A. Ph. D., (Sociology); (10) Dr. W. N. Welinkar, (Social Hygiene) (11) Mr. M. H. Vakil, M. A., LL. B., (Adult Education); (12) Mrs. A. W. Maclean, (Personal Equipment of a Social Worker); (13) Prof. H. L. Kaji, M. A., B.Sc., I. E. S., (Co-operative Movement); (14) Rev. J. F. Edwards, (The Drink Evil and Prohibition). An examination will be held in the last week of September and certificates will be awarded to the successful students. Those desirous of joining the class are required to register their names at the office of the Social Service League, Servants of India Society's Home, Sandhurst Road, Girgaum, Bombay, as early as possible. Students are required to pay an entrance fee of Rs. 2 only. Names should be registered any time from 11 A.M. to 7 P.M. (S. T.). For further particulars apply to the Assistant Secretary, Social Service League, Bombay.

ADVERTISEMENTS

"MY EXPERIENCE AS LEGISLATOR."

BY

DR. MRS. S. MUTHULAKSHMI REDDY,
M. B. & C. M.

Ex-Deputy President, Legislative Council, Madras.

PRICE Rs. 2/-

Can be had from the Manager,

The Indian Social Reformer.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription.	Inland	...	Rs. 2-3-0	V.P.P.
"	Foreign	...	" 2-8-0	Post free.
	Single Copy	...	0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for electrical engineering college opening at Bombay. Preparation for London City and Guilds examination. Railfare Paid. Prospectus on 2 annas stamps.—Technical Institute of India, Ltd., Delhi.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of

OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the India Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDEA.

Branches: CALCUTTA.

AHMEDABAD.

POONA.

SURAT.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent. on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at mode rate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amrell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

JAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	Rs. 60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhalil Dajibhai Amla B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alombic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)
 Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Muxundar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 3 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-5-26.

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulia (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Satara ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Dohad (District Panh Mahals).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Kalol ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Belapur ( " " ).	Satana ( " " ).
Ahmednagar ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Parola (District East Khandesh).	Kalwan ( " " ).
Akluj (District Sholapur).	Shiwandi (District Thana).
Virangam (District Ahmedabad).	Palghar ( " " ).

DIRECTORS:

Sir Chunilal V. Mehta, K.C.S.I.,
 Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt.,
 V. V. Garud, Esqr.,
 G. K. Devadhar, Esqr.,
 G. B. Trivedi, Esqr.,
 Rao Saheb V. C. Jadav,
 D. V. Gokhale, Esqr.,
 R. N. Rajadnya, Esqr.,
 Madhowjee D. Thackersey, Esqr.,
 Principal M. L. Tannan,
 Dewan Bahadur A. U. Malji,
 Rai Bahadur Pritamdas,
 Dewan Bahadur S. V. Mensinkal,
 V. L. Mehta, Esqr.,

SHARE CAPITAL:—

(Fully Paid) ... .. Rs. 12,96,900

1. DEPOSITS fixed for one year and shorter or longer periods are accepted. Rates and other particulars may be ascertained from the undersigned.

2. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened for Co-operative Societies and individuals. Interest is allowed at 2½ per cent. on daily balance not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000.

3. SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS are accepted and interest paid at 3½ per cent. on minimum monthly balance. Rules may be obtained from the undersigned.

4. THE BANK has issued Five Years Cash Certificates yielding 5½ per cent. per annum. The Bank has also arranged for the issue of Ten Tolas Gold bars. Particulars on application.

5. Drafts are issued on district and other towns on terms to be ascertained on application.

6. The Bank finances only registered Co-operative Societies in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency.

7. Accounts are audited quarterly by a firm of Incorporated Accountants and yearly by a Special Government Auditor. Quarterly statements of financial position are published in the "Bombay Government Gazette".

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay
 Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling
 at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other
 coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MOBARJEE & Co.,
 Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,
 10-12-26. Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate,

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHBA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

SAFELY RELY

ON

AMRUTANJAN BALM

FOR THE CURE OF

Colds, Cough, Headaches, Rheumatism, Swellings and all other kinds of Aches and Pains.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

LOW IN PRICE
HIGH IN EFFICACY

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS

to cure constipation, brain-fag, etc.

Rupee One ( 32 pills ).

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY,

JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch :-

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies'

Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. a p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

" " Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single Copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931 :—" We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931 :—" May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931 :—" I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931 : I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to :—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

LATEST BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

Hardens Rapidly giving Standard 28 days Concrete strength at 4 days.

DISTRIBUTORS :—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Domains :
ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan :
RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

" BOMBAY HOUSE ",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

FLIT ADVERTISEMENT FILM No. 1.

BRITISH MOVIE TONE NEWS VOL. 2 No. 77.

AROUND THE CORNER

7 Reels, featuring

GEORGE SIDNEY AND CHARLEY MURRAY

Columbia Picture.

SOCIETY GOES SPAGHETTI

2 Reels, featuring: NICK AND TONY

R. K. O. Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News Vol. 2 No. 2.

SHE IS MY DAISY

1 Reel, featuring

SIR HARRY LAUDER

Gaumont Picture.

MARTIN AND HIS BAND

1 Reel, Gainsborough Picture.

SECOND WIFE

7 Reels featuring: CONNOR MAGEE AND LILA LEE

R. K. O. Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

HUMENETTE'S SERIES No. 1.

1 Reel ]

—BENNY RUBIN—

[R. K. O. Comedy

FLAME OF LOVE

8 Reels, featuring

ANNA MAY WONG, GEORGE SCHNELL AND JOHN LANGDON

British International Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, 10 p. m. Sunday 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

NO CINEMA SHOWS

THE GRANT ANDERSON REPERTORY Co.

Sat: 9-30 p.m. and Sun. 6 p.m.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1931

No. 45

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Welfare of India League. The Times of India on Proselytising. Dr. Ansari's Critics. Weightage, the real Evil. "The United Front." Persis and Persia. A Programme for Swaraj. The Threefold Commonwealth.	Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. XII. Rural Reconstruction in India. Christian Missions and Proselytism. Mr. Joseph's Last Word. Welfare of India League. Fundamental Rights.
---	---

NOTES.

The Welfare of India League:—We publish elsewhere the statement of objects of a new association about to be started in Bombay with the above name. The idea, which has our cordial sympathy and good wishes, owes its inception to Mr. M. I. David who, with an insight rare in one young in years, has grasped the fact that the welfare of India can be advanced only by harmonious co-operation between all communities and all races whose fortunes are bound up with the progress and prosperity of this country. It is not altogether a new idea. Others have attempted to give effect to it before, notably the Rev. R. M. Gray who used to have regular weekly gatherings of Indian and English friends at his house. The pioneer work of men like him has not been without result, and it is due to it that the stress and strain of last year affected but slightly and superficially the good relations between the British and Indian communities in this city. The success of the Association, which Mr. David is labouring strenuously to bring into being, will depend largely on his being able to retain his enthusiasm for it and to continue his personal devotion to it for at least the first few years. The work will be somewhat of an uphill one and there are many things—trifling in themselves but cumulatively not negligible—to damp one's zeal for such a cause. But the time is more propitious than it was ever before for the attempt. Englishmen in India and in England are at last beginning to see that the key to the problem of the relation between Great Britain and India, is goodwill on both sides. There is a corresponding recognition on the part of Indians that the goodwill of the British will save India a long and wasteful diversion in her pursuit of swaraj. We do not quite like the name 'Welfare of India League.' Besides that it suggests associations with the Child Welfare and other such bodies, it is too vague and general to focus the public mind on its central aim, which is to advance India's welfare specially and particularly by promoting goodwill between British and Indians. The name first intended was, we believe, "Goodwill League" and that is perhaps more effective for this purpose. The success of the League will mean not the elimination of all differences or possibility of difference, but that whatever differences may exist or may arise hereafter, and, however serious they may be, will be approached from either side with complete confidence in the goodwill of the other.

The Times of India on Proselytising:—The Times of India has rendered a public service and removed what might have proved a serious obstacle in the way of friendly understanding between Indians and Englishmen, by its outspoken leading article headed "Should Christians Convert?" in its issue of the 4th July. Referring to the criticisms provoked by "Mr. Gandhi's sensible warning" to proselytizers, the Times says that the ideas which inspired the sending of Missions to convert the "heathen" in the beginning of the last century, are hated by the present generation of Englishmen "as much as it hates Victorian prudery." Our contemporary observes that the aims and objects of the Hindu Mahasabha are perfectly intelligible to fair-minded observers, beset as the Hindu community is by the aggressive activities of two proselytising religions. It goes on to declare: "The majority of Englishmen are completely indifferent to missionary work. They believe that Mahomedanism for the Mussalman and Hinduism for the Hindu provides a religion as satisfying spiritually and mentally as Christianity for the Christian." It points out that missionaries have worked hitherto upon a privileged basis in British India and that they cannot in the nature of things expect it to continue any longer. With the ground thus cleared, few intelligent Indians will disagree with the Times when it refers to the great work done by educational missionaries, some of the greatest of whom set their face steadfastly against proselytising and incurred, thereby, unpopularity among their confères of the street corner and the village mela. The greatest service of Christian Missions in this country, when the balance is struck, will be found in directions far removed from those which they had directly in mind. They have helped to spread the knowledge of the life and teachings of Jesus Christ by cheap and often gratuitous distribution of the New Testament, and also by the lives of some of the noblest among them. But the more India knows of Christ, the less is it inclined to appreciate the work of proselytising missions. It is really a question of, Nearer to Christ, the farther from Missions. India will always receive with respect men and women who bear witness to Jesus Christ in their lives. Every one who knows anything of India knows this. What she cannot tolerate is the driving of ignorant men, women and children pellmell into the mission compound, as one sees sheep and goats driven into the Bandra Slaughter House premises every day.

Dr. Ansari's Critics:—We are surprised to read rather strong criticisms in the Modern Review and the People of Lahore of Dr. Ansari's speeches at the Faridpur National Muslim Conference over which he presided. The gist of the criticisms seems to be that Dr. Ansari's difference with the Muslim Separatists concerns only one of the latter's fourteen points, and that as regards the other thirteen, he is as strong as, if not stronger than, his opponents. But, surely, the one point for which he stands out reveals a whole world of difference between his outlook and that of the Separatists on national progress and gives a different complexion to the other points. Moreover, it was known all along that Dr. Ansari and his friends agreed with the Separatists on all points except that of separate communal electorates. Once there is agreement about joint electorates, a wide field is opened for the ordinary give-and-take of politics. It will be a matter of minor concern, if of any at all, whether one group has a few more or less seats in the Legislature, because policies and not religious confessions will become the pivot of political action. Dr. Ansari's agreement on thirteen points and his disagreement on only one, makes his action in refusing to compromise more and not less worthy of appreciation by journals like the Modern Review and the People both of which have a horizon reaching beyond the politics of the market-place. As a man of conviction himself, Dr. Ansari does not expect other men to be less firm in adhering to their own convictions, and we repeat that Indian Swaraj will start with a heavy handicap if men of the calibre and character of the Muslim nationalists and their leader, Dr. Ansari, have no place in it.

Weightage, the real Evil:—In the course of its comments on Dr. Ansari's speeches, the People incidentally shows that Hindus who are about 70 per cent of the population of Bombay Presidency have only 24 out of a total of 52—that is a minority of—elected seats in the Provincial Legislative Council. This is literally true. The non-Hindu members from the general electorate, however, were elected largely on Hindu votes and some of them are more effective champions of the interests of the public, of which the Hindus form the largest part, than others who are Hindus but consistently misrepresent and oppose the general interests. Nevertheless the anomaly pointed out by our contemporary exists, and we find not the least difficulty in tracing to it the solidarity of Hindu support to the civil disobedience movement in this part of the country. If you shut out a majority by artificial weightages from its due representation in the Legislature, you drive it to seek other means of making its power felt outside the constitution. The real mischief of the present electoral arrangements is due not so much to separate electorates as to the utterly inequitable system of weightages. These carry with them a rankling sense of injustice in the minds of those at whose expense they are provided, and antagonise the relations between classes who otherwise deal with each other on an equal footing. Shorn of weightages, the opposition to separate electorates will lose much of its acerbity and there will be a better chance of their being discussed purely on their merits as a political institution.

"The United Front":—Bombay last week was full of Princes, their Ministers and their entourage, engaged arduously in arranging for "the united front" which, nowadays, has usurped the place of truth and justice in public affairs. The Maharaja of Patiala had, by the publication of his "scheme", supplied an element of verisimilitude to these proceedings. The Maharaja of Bikaner's letter in the Press was rather overdone but it has proved a public service in an unintended direction. The controversy raised by it has radically altered the conditions in which the Princes' delegation will speak at the next session of the Conference in London. Firstly, the Conference cannot shut its eyes to the facts that the "united front" so painfully achieved screens serious differences among the Princes, and that they are really united only in one thing, namely, keeping their subjects out of the "completed picture", another hackneyed phrase in the Round Table Conference jargon. The second and even more important change is as regards what the Princes feel subjectively towards Federation. At the first Conference, their feeling was one of intense self-commiseration at having to make sacrifices at the call of patriotism. Now it is one of avoiding political suicide, as His Highness of Bikaner candidly avowed in his letter castigating the Maharaja of Patiala for breaking away from the concert of the Chamber of Princes. The specific proposals which have emerged from the Bombay pourparlers, have not been published, but when they are, they will be scanned for evidence of these fundamental changes in the Princes' attitude to Federation.

Parsis and Persia:—We have received too late for publication a printed open letter to Agha Saif Azad, who is said to be deputed by His Majesty Reza Shah to invite the Parsis to Persia, by Mr. Jehangir R. P. Mody. Dastur Dr. Dhalla, who presided at a meeting which the Agha addressed at Karachi, gave a courteous but decisive reply to the effect that the Parsis regarded India as their mother country and that they had no intention of deserting her. The Agha has since come to Bombay on the same Mission. Mr. Mody seems to suspect that it may be a self-imposed one without any sanction of the authorities in Persia. The Persian Consul at Karachi could only say that for aught he knew the Agha might have been sent by the king of Persia but that he was not aware of such a mission being entrusted to him (the Agha). However that may be, the King of Persia if he really wishes to avail himself of Parsi talents and enterprise in developing his country can do so in many other ways than inviting them to emigrate as a body to his kingdom. While Government in this country are allowing a mission like that of the Agha's to extol the present regime, they are prosecuting the People in Lahore for publishing a communication setting forth certain grievances of the subjects of the Shah, and asking for an international enquiry into them.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
BOMBAY, JULY 11, 1931.

A PROGRAMME FOR SWARAJ.

On the last day of the Karachi Session of the National Congress a resolution embodying a long list of propositions was brought forward under the name of "Fundamental Rights" for its approval. There was considerable opposition to the disposal of an important resolution laying down the policy and programme of the future Swaraj Government in a slap-dash manner. The opposition was mollified by the promise that the propositions contained in the resolution will be open to revision by the All-India Congress Committee. The resolution was, accordingly, referred forthwith to a Committee for consideration. The Committee has now made its recommendations which are printed elsewhere. It recommends that the first Article defining Fundamental Rights should be applicable to all citizens of India, including Indian States. This Article contains 17 clauses, the first nine of which, being elementary rights of civilised citizenship, should be secured to subjects of Indian States as to British Indians. Universal adult suffrage, free and compulsory education (elementary education is, of course, meant), and the abolition of titles, however, do not come in the same category. In many States, the principle of election is altogether unknown. The adoption of universal adult suffrage in them at a single bound, will not be practicable. In several States, the introduction of free and compulsory education, must remain a counsel of perfection for many years, as in them education is still very much in the air. The abolition of titles in the States does not seem to be a matter of immediate importance. Congress may give a lead in this form by practising its precept. With these reservations, the Committee's recommendation of the clause relating to Fundamental Rights could apply to the whole country, may be accepted.

The Committee has added the word "Duties" to "Rights" in the heading. So far as citizens are concerned, the only "duty" which is contemplated, is in the Article on "Fundamental Rights." It is the curious "obligation" to keep and bear arms. As the Committee does not refer to this in its "explanatory notes," we presume that it is in the original resolution of which we have a copy at hand for reference. Even so, there does not seem to be any need to require every man and woman to keep and bear arms in the Swaraj State which, according to Article 9, is to pursue a policy of peace with neighbouring countries. We are not aware that such an obligation exists in any other constitution, and it seems to be especially incongruous in a nation pledged to ahimsa. Nearly all the other "duties" are imposed not on citizens but on the State.

We have already expressed our opinion of the clause relating to religious neutrality. At the Congress, Mahatmaji, who was in charge of the resolution, explained that it meant that one religion will not be favoured more than another. This statement, which is what we should expect from one of his intensely religious temperament, seemed to us to remove the objections that we felt to the word "neutrality." But a later explanation by Mahatmaji, which we came across, seemed to be capable of being understood to mean that the State attitude is not to be one of equal favour to but one of equal aloofness from all religions. We published last week the comments of the Guardian, the progressive Christian weekly journal of Calcutta, on the subject, and this support from an unexpected quarter is very welcome. Moslem Ulemas, Christian priests and to a less extent, Hindu priests exercise great influence not only in the religious but also in the secular affairs of their respective communities, and the State by declining all contact with them, will put itself in a position of impotence in regard to important reforms affecting the physical and moral well-being of its citizens. A Consultative Council of Ecclesiastics of the different important denominations, will be an effective means of promoting communal concord, besides keeping before the State the importance of having a spiritual outlook.

The Articles dealing with industrial workers are on the face of them borrowed, and not very intelligently, from social legislation in Western countries. Article 3 which says no person shall be compelled to labour against his will, is a ghastly irony in the face of the wide-spread unemployment in the world. It will be more to the purpose if the Constitution lays down that no one will be compelled to remain idle against his will, laying on the State the responsibility of seeing that workers do not starve for want of employers. The labour problem cannot be solved by borrowing from Fascist Italy or Soviet Russia. It will have to be considered and solved in the light of Indian conditions and in consonance with Indian experience.

In Article 7, "uneconomic holdings" are recommended for total exemption of rent or revenue. By "uneconomic holding" the Committee evidently means a holding which is too small to admit of remunerative cultivation. But a large forest maintained as a hunting preserve or even as a private park, is also an "uneconomical holding," and it should be made clear that it is not intended to exempt areas used for uneconomic purposes of this class. We do not see why Congress does not boldly advocate a policy directed against huge landed estates and favouring small holdings under a permanent tenure.

Princes and lords may flourish or may fade
A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride
When once destroyed, can never be supplied.

The Committee has raised the limit of salaries in the public services to Rs. 1000, from the original limit of Rs. 500. The rupee is not now a standard coin, and if the exchange value is reverted to 16d, as demanded by Indian economists and industrialists, the limit will have to be raised again by 12½ per cent. A more scientific limit would be a certain multiple of the average income per head of the population. Thus, if the average is Rs. 120 a year, the maximum permissible salary may be ten times that amount, or about Rs. 100 a month. Rs. 1000 a month will be a hundred times that average income. This method will give officials a direct incentive to increase the productive power of the people as a reduction in it will automatically take effect in a cut on their salaries from the Viceroy down to the official who gets a wage in excess of the average income. It will also serve to keep constantly before the officials the wholesome principle that their well-being is closely related to the prosperity and contentment of the people and bears a constant proportion to it.

The Committee has added a new clause providing for the protection of provincial vernaculars. It would be interesting to know what led it to do this. From what quarter does it expect danger to provincial languages? If it is intended as a warning against excessive zeal in pushing forward Hindi, it can not be said to be ill-conceived. That there is real danger of the local vernaculars being detrimentally affected from this direction, there are already sufficient indications to suggest. We have seen the recent drastic curtailment of salaries of Professors of vernaculars in Bombay Government Colleges, sought to be justified on the ground that now that Hindustani has been declared by Congress to be the national language, there is no harm in attaching less importance to local vernaculars. Partisans of Hindi speak of it sometimes as the future national language and sometimes as the lingua franca of India. A national language is evolved by the gradual elimination of local dialects, whereas a lingua franca is a language of intercourse, cultural and commercial, between educated citizens of different States and Provinces. The position of English as the lingua franca is, to our mind, fixed and cannot be shaken. India's need for international intercourse is not less urgent than for inter-provincial communications, and when one language can serve both purposes, few men will prefer to have two for them. It is only as the future national language, therefore that Hindi must face the local vernaculars, and the measure of its success in that direction must necessarily be the measure of retrogression of the local languages.

The Committee has not taken notice of some recent pronouncements foreshadowing fresh additions to the Karachi resolution. One of these which has aroused some apprehension, is the proposal to "confiscate" Hindu temples which persist in keeping their doors shut against antyajas. There are Christian Churches which follow a similar policy, and what applies to temples must, of course, apply to them also. The Committee, however, while modifying the original clause relating to common rights of all to the use of roads, tanks &c, has not seen fit to include places of worship. The Emperor Baba warned his son against interfering with places of worship. The Emperor Aurangzebe who disregarded the warning most flagrantly, left the great edifice, which Akbar had raised, tottering to its foundations. It is not well to neglect such warnings of history.

THE THREEFOLD COMMONWEALTH: THE SPIRITUAL STATE.

The word "spiritual" arouses much prejudice in the modern world. It is generally understood to be the antithesis of "practical." There is justification for this misconception. In the first place, the word has come to mean things pertaining to religion in the narrow sense of the term. And religion in Western life, and in Eastern so far as it follows the West, has come to mean something which is quite apart from and has no bearing on men's day-to-day life. Worse still, religion afraid of its isolation has made itself subservient to the State, itself subservient to the economic system. Dr. Steiner understands by spiritual the moral, intellectual, aesthetic as well as religious aspects of human life—the ideal side of it. "One can see," he writes, "two main streams running side by side even in men's habits of thought, one of which remains up aloft as it were in divine spiritual altitudes, and has no desire to build a bridge from spiritual impulses to life's ordinary affairs. The other stream runs on, void of thought, in the everyday world. By life is a single whole. It cannot thrive unless the forces that dwell in all ethical and religious life bring driving power to the most commonplace, every-day things of life, into the sort of life that some persons may think rather beneath them. For if people neglect to build the bridge between the two regions of life, then not only their religious and moral life, but their social thinking too degenerates into mere words and sentiment, far removed from commonplace, from realities. And then these commonplaces have their revenge as it were." The quotation is long but it brings out clearly what Dr. Steiner means by "spiritual" in his scheme. It is essential to the healthy functioning of the Spiritual State that it should be untrammelled by economic and political influences. Then alone can it operate on the two latter instead of being reduced by them to a position of subservience to their ends. The freedom of the worker in the spiritual field, however, carries with it a severe condition. "What anybody chooses to do in the matter of spiritual work," writes Dr. Steiner, "will be nobody's affair but his own; but for any service he may render to the body social he will be able to count on willing recompense from people to whom spiritual goods are a necessity. Anyone, who is not satisfied with the recompense he receives under the spiritual organization, must have recourse to one of the other fields, either to the political state or to economic life."

It will be a mistake to think, however, that the Spiritual State will be unrelated to the other two States. Two important functions which are at present performed by the Political State, Dr. Steiner would transfer to the control of the Spiritual. They are Education and Justice. The present practice of State control of Education leads inevitably to the mind of the community from early youth being given a strong bias towards the politico-economic system. Dr. Steiner points out that science has received its whole cast from the fact of its management forming part of the State system. "Of course," as he observes, "the results of mathematics and physics cannot be directly influenced by the State. But consider history and other subjects of general culture. Have not they come to reflect the connection of their professional representatives with the State system?—to be an obedient mirror of State requirements?" In the debate in the last meeting of the Senate of Bombay University on the dismissal of the University Professor of Economics, Mr. K. T. Shah, it was stated without contradiction that the Vice-Chancellor had been warned that Mr. Shah's retention in the University, may involve, forfeiture of the Government grant. All this will be changed when teachers in the schools, beginning from the lowest grades, take their line from a spiritual life that rests on its own independent footing. The effects on the citizen can not be over-rated. "Strong in the freedom of the spiritual life, a man's education and schooling will send him forth equipped with impulses, that will lead him, thanks to his social sense, to realise the bent of his personal abilities." In other words, every person will be free to grow to the full height of his stature, instead of, as at present, having to bend to the exigencies of the politico-economic system.

The Administration of Justice will not continue to remain a function of the State. In India more than in the self-governing countries the evils of combining the executive and judicial functions have been unmistakable. The voice of criticism is hushed by stringent summary provisions of the penal law to protect judges and magistrates. "It will be for the state institutions," writes Dr. Steiner, "to lay down the rights that are to be observed between men and groups of men; but the passing of judgment comes within institutions proceeding from the spiritual organisation. In passing judgment, a very great deal depends on what opportunity the judge has for perceiving and understanding the particular circumstances of the person whom he is trying. Nothing can ensure this perception and understanding, except those ties of trust and confidence that draw men together in the institutions of the social order, and which must be made the main consideration in appointing the Courts of law." As things stand, whether a wrong-doer is punished or even prosecuted depends very much on whether he is able to engage eminent counsel and otherwise bring political and economic influences to bear on the State. This is an evil of long standing. Shakespeare has described the anomalies of state-administered justice in some biting lines in Lear.

The usurer hangs the cozener.

Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear;
Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Plate sin with gold

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

We have thus far set largely in Dr. Steiner's words the main features of his "Threefold Commonwealth." He tells us that the essential feature of his proposals is that they do not propose to bring about a better future by destroying the present social order further than has already been done; but that their realisation will come through building upon what already exists, and that as the building up process goes on, what is rotten and unsound will fall away. Dr. Steiner fully realises that his scheme will be attacked by both the supporters of the present system and those, like the Socialists, who have ready-made schemes of their own to supplant it; and that the opposition will be strongest from those groups of mankind which have clustered round a common origin of speech and national culture. His hope is in the awakened conscience of mankind as a whole, which, he is confident, will come to feel that each of its many parts can only lead a life worthy of its common humanity, when bound in living links to all the rest.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU
LAW. XIII.

(BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTHY.)

Hindu women naturally wield enormous influence in their homes. It is nevertheless true that the Hindu home is the graveyard of women's rights. It has become so through the "unchangeable" but ever-shifting and ever-deteriorating Hindu law of the Smritis and British courts. Apart from the privileged position to which she may attain any time through man's affectionate indulgence, grateful appreciation, carelessness or imbecility, a woman has but two indefeasible rights in the Hindu family. They are her right to drudge and her right to be honoured with funeral rites. But unfortunately neither of these is a right which in the nature of things she can be said to enjoy in this world. The right to maintenance during life is also her fundamental right under the Hindu law. But unfortunately it is a right which is not indefeasible. It can be and in fact is, often defeated easily by her improvident or fraudulent male relation with the help of his creditors, or at least whittled down with the help of the courts, and burdened with annoying, humiliating or enslaving conditions with the help of the law.

The first improvement, therefore, which the Mysore Law Reform Committee want in the law of Maintenance is to ensure the personal freedom of the recipients. Clause 28 of their Draft Bill makes the accrual and enjoyment of the legal right of maintenance independent of the whims and fancies of the husband or any other person, so that it may not be curtailed by any act or hedged round and adversely affected by any conditions or restrictions to which the woman herself is not a free consenting party. The place where or the persons with whom she should reside, or the services she should render or the avocations she should pursue or avoid, or the mode of living she should adopt or eschew are matters of discretion which she should be entirely free to decide and choose for herself.

This clause is also intended to relieve the woman from the inquisitorial attentions of the maintenance giver who would otherwise seek to pry into her "chastity" and sit in judgment over her morals whenever she asks for her "maintenance." As the learned Committee justly observe: "A charge of immorality is easily brought against a woman, and not always easily disproved. The temptation, now so strong, to put forward such a charge as a plausible defence to almost every suit brought by a woman not past her prime, will be removed by treating the private conduct of the claimant as irrelevant in connection with the establishment of a civil right like maintenance,—as much so in the case of the widow as in the case of the mother or daughter, and as much in the case of women as a class as in the case of men." The Committee further consider that there is much force in the view that the law should uphold rights irrespective of the private character of individuals. "In any case," they conclude, "it admits of little doubt that the complete removal of private morality as such from the sphere of civil rights will not only simplify the law, but make for a more tolerant and humane spirit in its administration."

The Committee next turn their attention to the amount payable to a woman for her maintenance. Mr. Justice Madgaonkar, who is himself the head of a Law Reform Committee in British India, advised the fixing of a statutory proportion. But clause 27 of the Mysore Draft Bill only restates in an improved form the general rules which should guide the courts in assessing the amount at their discretion in each case. In Baroda, the Rao Bahadur Desai Committee are in a happier position in this respect. They are able to say that "the present provision in law for giving maintenance and residence to those who are entitled to it is ample and requires rather curtailment than enlargement." We regret we have been unable to trace the data which the learned Committee promised at page 81 of their report to "show later." But experience in South India only confirms the observation made by the Mysore Law Reform Committee that our courts as a rule are not over-liberal in the amounts awarded by way of maintenance to females, and that the tendency, if any, is generally to fix too small a sum, although the theoretical basis on which the award is made is unexceptionable.

It is chiefly in determining what are the "reasonable wants" of the female in question that justice discloses an unhappy genius to be "insufficiently liberal" in this country and then too to vary with the judge's boot, as it were. Good old judges are for construing a woman's "maintenance" too literally and reducing it to the bare means of living. They therefore confine her "reasonable wants" to food, raiment and shelter, and that too according to their own gratuitously stoic notions as to how self-effacingly and self-abasingly a decent minded Hindu woman, especially a Hindu widow or discarded wife, ought to live. Some provision for the discharge of religious obligations and ceremonial duties incident to her station in life are also supposed to be taken thought of. But that amounts to nothing more than a ghastly pretence when the necessities of decent living are themselves not adequately provided for. And then advantage is taken of her possible capacity to earn a casual pittance by manual labour or skill in arts or of her possessing some Stridhana, without due regard to the unproductive character of such possessions as vessels, jewels, furniture etc., to relieve as far as possible not only the male relation who is personally liable to maintain her out of his earnings but also the male heirs of such relation who were helped by the sex-prejudices of the law to rob her of her inheritance. And, as the learned Committee of Mysore point out, it has also been held that "other circumstances, and even the position and conduct of the claimant may reduce the maintenance," though the same may never be allowed to increase the amount!

All this unhappy state of things has led the Committee to revise and restate in a broad and generous spirit the circumstances to be taken into consideration in determining and varying the rate of maintenance to suit the conditions of the present day. "Old-time conceptions of austerities and self-repression," they earnestly plead, "should not be the sole consideration. Proper regard must be had to the rising aspirations of womanhood and the changing values of human motives and ideal. Reasonable wants should, in any case, be understood as including provision, not only for religious and ceremonial but also for social duties and functions incidental to the station in life of the woman concerned, and also, where necessary, reasonable provision even for educational and cultural needs. Thus an unmarried daughter or sister should have the right, not only to be married away at the proper time but as long as she remains in the family of her birth, to receive an education suited to her capacity and the means of the family, to the same extent as her brothers. A discarded wife should be free to develop the higher sides of her nature, to cultivate latent talents, or to qualify herself for useful positions in life, and not be constrained to live a gloomy life of repression, asceticism or domestic drudgery."

RURAL RECONSTRUCTION IN INDIA.

(By SIR M. VISVESVARAYA, K. C. I. E.)

(Continued from the last issue.)

The improvement in earning power or the well-being of a farmer's family, or of a village as a whole, from year to year, should be gauged by the increase in his or its income, which again should be regularly estimated or valued. This income of a farmer's family will depend on the nature and variety of the occupations pursued by himself and the members of his household. It usually falls under three heads:—

- (1) Agricultural produce,
- (2) Products of subsidiary occupations and minor industries, and
- (3) Income from labour or service; all other miscellaneous incomes.

The income may consist of the produce of the fields cultivated by the family, the products of home industries and occupations, the proceeds of sale of milk and milk products and vegetables and other sundry produce, money earned by plying carts for hire, wages of labour or service rendered to people within or outside the village, and other sources. Income from investments, remittances from family members residing abroad and every other source should be ascertained and brought into account. The total of this figure divided by the number of persons in the village, will represent the average income per head of the village population.

The Village Association should carry on propaganda to educate the people in rural economics.

Production from agriculture may be increased by increasing the area cultivated; by extending irrigation from tanks, canals and wells; by consolidating holdings; by providing special credit facilities; by growing more profitable crops, such as commercial and fruit crops; by using better seed and manure, including where necessary green manure; by removing insect pests; and generally by practising scientific methods and co-operative principle both in cultivation and finance.

The subsidiary occupations and minor industries that may be encouraged are hand-spinning and weaving, silk reeling, carpentry, smithing, leather work, pottery, brick and tile making, carpets, mat, basket and rope manufacture, live-stock improvement, fishing and the like. Besides these age-old known industries, the newer home industries practised abroad which are more profitable and which require a knowledge of science and special skill should be introduced, gradually or rapidly, according to the diligence and enterprise shown by the village community concerned.

Under labour and service will come hiring tools and machinery, farm and domestic service, plying carts for hire, collection and sale of manure and such other pursuits.

When the economic implications of rural occupations are better understood, the farmers might be expected to start on a career of reform. They may learn to produce, locally, as far as they can, the greater part of the commodities they consume and to manufacture finished products for sale. They may learn to reduce the cost of farm operations by sharing the use of each other's bullocks, farm tools, and personal labour on the co-operative principle. They will also learn to diversify the industries and occupations, according to the special resources and conditions of each locality, instead of carrying on the same on a monotonous scale for every village group or unit.

IMPROVING THE WORKING CAPACITY OF THE VILLAGER.

The adult persons of a village will become efficient working and earning members of their respective families if they are instructed in the 3 R's and taught habits of steady work, industry and thrift. These habits should be inculcated by means of school lessons, other forms of propaganda and lectures. The responsibility for this would rest jointly on the Government agencies in control of education and on the headmen of families immediately concerned, who would be the persons to benefit most by maintaining a high level of working efficiency among the members of their households. The Village Improvement Association should maintain the necessary propaganda to ensure that heads of families take active steps and do their duty faithfully by the village in this respect.

The first measure needed in this connection is home discipline to train the body, the mind and the character of the villager and to educate him in practices of self-reliance and self-help. The requisite training would fall mainly under the three following heads :—

1. Every adult member of the family should be induced to work for about 8 hours a day and 6 days in the week. The task and hours of work may be varied according to age, state of health, working capacity of each member and the time of the year. When the work is light, the hours may be longer. In the busy season, the agriculturist has to work from early dawn till late in the evening or, as is said in Japan, from star to star. If only the farm population acquires the habit of a regular 8 hours gainful occupation in the slack season, that single acquisition alone may prove the salvation of the community.

2. Every member of the family should be instructed to cultivate the saving habit so that the family may at no time fall into debt for unproductive expenditure. Experience shows that it is easy to earn a rupee—hard to save one. The ignorant villager is badly in need of lessons in thrift as he is often so improvident as to barter away even his land—his only source of livelihood—to meet the expenses of a social function, like a marriage or a funeral.

3. The qualities of frankness and trustfulness should be specially fostered so as to remove the prevailing distrust, and apathy born of distrust, and to promote teamwork and brotherliness between neighbours. At harvest time and in emergencies, the cultivators do help one another even now, but a closer and more deliberately planned co-operation in many more fields of endeavour, bringing manifold benefits with it, is possible, and it can only come by special instruction, exhortation and example.

( To be concluded. )

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS AND PROSELYTISM.

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have been following the controversy on "Missions and Swaraj" with painful interest. I find myself sharing much of the feeling expressed by Mr. George Joseph in your issue of the 13th June. While grateful for many of your suggestive criticisms made in your journal from time to time regarding Christianity and also about politics and sociology generally, I have been unable to appreciate the attitude you have taken up in regard to the work of Christian Missions in India. The Swaraj of which you envisage a picture in ideas will be a very poor and limited Swaraj indeed. You are right in holding that Mr. Gandhi has completely retreated from his original position by giving subsequent explanations. This change of attitude on his part is regrettable for more reasons than one. In many quarters it might be interpreted as a mere political gesture. Such construction of Mr. Gandhi's motives is apt to increase communal suspicion. However, I am not here primarily concerned with his position but rather with the views expressed by you in the course of the past few months.

If I have understood you aright you are for stopping the work of Missions directed by foreign men with foreign money under the Swaraj Government; because such work means transfer of people from the Hindu community to the Christian Church. You are against such transfers of communal loyalty though you would not be against the permeation of Hindu mind and society with Christian principles. I suppose this is your essential position. Many missionaries and Indian Christians have tried to answer you but you have retorted very strongly and I grant that you are entitled to your view. The structure of Hindu society with its caste system is mainly responsible for the creation of a separate "Christian community" as distinct from the Church which is a spiritual Fellowship of believers. You cannot morally blame the thousands of lower caste Hindus and untouchables who have embraced Christianity mainly from motives of social emancipation and material improvement. Is it not part of the duty of a true religion to uplift the down-trodden and succour the distressed and to give to every man impartial opportunity to grow unto his fullest stature both in matters of soul and body? These depressed classes have been smarting under inhuman conditions for ages and if at last they felt that the Church offered them a better home you can blame neither them nor the missionaries. Your suggestion that missionaries should confine themselves to mere philanthropy and should not convert these people is unpractical. Missionaries cannot be content by giving them merely material benefits. They must have the very lever of their regeneration, the message of power of Christ himself a perpetual source of inspiration and strength. The love of Christ which is the motive in the minds of missionaries must also be the motive in the lives of those whom they are privileged to serve. Mere philanthropy without spiritual grace is dangerous.

Let me tell you quite frankly that the political consequence of your position is the weakening of the nationalist leanings of the Indian Christians and of other similarly situated communities. And later on such an attitude, if ever adopted by the Swaraj Government, will mean renewed and increased communal conflicts. Mr. Manilal Parekh has been wanting to muzzle the missionaries. (Mr. Parekh is a devoted Christian. E.I.S.R.) Such words are not only unwise but unfair. Indian Christians are indeed interested in foreign missions but not quite in the sense or from the motives that you or some of your correspondents impute to them. The spiritual relationship is much more real and deep than the mere financial or administrative. Then you ought to give due weight to the fact that for the last quarter of a century most Missions have been reorganising themselves and it is not so much the Mission but the Church that counts now-a-days. You do not seem to sufficiently appraise this fact and so much of your criticism is really wide of the mark. Both Indian Christians and missionaries have come in for severe castigation at your hands for their alleged denationalisation and alliance with British imperialism. But, Dear Sir, you will pardon me for saying that in these days more Hindus are guilty of these offences than Christians and during my 20 years life in the Indian Church I have not found in what way exactly Christians are denationalised and Hindus are not and how Christians have more sympathy with the foreign Government and Hindus have not. In season and out of season the accusations are being heaped on the devoted heads of Indian Christians.

Just a word about proselytism—that much abused term. It is essentially a quarrel over words. Some of your correspondents have shown what it really means and that there is no essential difference between it and evangelisation, at any rate, from your standpoint as I have understood it.

Benares Cantt., }
18th June 1930. }

R. C. DAS.

[We have to hold over the rest of Mr. Das' letter for the next issue. Ed., I. S. R.]

Sir Rabindranath Tagore on Proselytism:—The following letter from Rabindra Nath Tagore to one who was intending to come out as a missionary to India will be read with interest and should be carefully considered. "I have read your letter with pleasure. I have only one thing to say; it is this: Do not be always trying to preach your doctrine, but give yourself in love. Your Western mind is too much obsessed with the idea of conquest and possession; your inveterate habit of proselytism is another form of it. Christ never preached himself or any dogma or doctrine, he preached the love of God. The object of a Christian should be to be like Christ—never like a coolie recruiter trying to bring coolies to his master's tea garden. Preaching your doctrine is no sacrifice at all—it is indulging in a luxury far more dangerous than all the luxuries of material living. It breeds an illusion in your mind that you are doing your duty—that you are wiser and better than your fellow-beings. But the real preaching is in being perfect, which is through meekness and love of self-dedication. If you have strong in you your pride of race, pride of sect, and pride of personal superiority, then it is no use to try to do good to others. They will reject your gift, or even if they do accept it they will not be morally benefitted by it—instances of which can be seen in India every day. On the spiritual plane you cannot do good until you are good. You cannot preach the Christianity of the Christian sect until you be like Christ—and then you do not preach Christianity, but the love of God, which Christ did."

Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ:—The first anniversary meeting of the Advent League, a society composed of members belonging to the various Protestant Christian Churches in Bombay, will be held in the Cowasji Jehangir Hall, on Tuesday, 14th July at 6-30 p. m. The speaker will be Mr. Wm. O. Irvine, Editor of the Indian Christian. The fact that the Lord Jesus Christ may come at any moment and that the signs of the times in which we live, all seem to point to His near return, make this event to be of the utmost interest and of world-wide concern. The meeting is open to the public, of all denominations and creeds. All seats will be free, and no collection will be made.

MR. JOSEPH'S LAST WORD.

The Editor, Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

May I have the luxury of a last word. For in the nature of things there can be no logical end to such controversies: all that the protagonist can do is to leave their facts and arguments to work in the unconscious mind and lead to results in practical action confident that God and His truth will prevail.

My present point will however be short. It is odd the way you go round and round. You started by saying that "pious Christians" were against "proselytisation." I challenged you on that. Then it turned out that you were yourself the "pious Christian." On subsequent enquiry it appears that it was "professing Christians" you had in mind. There are so many hundred millions of them, and the information does not take us far.

Then there is Dr. Stanley Jones, not to mention Mr. Tucker. I have seen the latter's declaration of faith in Gandhiji. I do not know under the auspices of what Christian mission Mr. Tucker came out. But I take it that it must be some body pledged to the evangelisation of India. To me the fact that Mr. Tucker came out to proselytise India as the member of an "organised body" is of much greater importance than that under Gandhiji's influence he has changed his opinions. Similarly about Dr. Jones. He is a missionary working for the evangelisation of India. Do you not think that his life and what he does as his main business in life are more important than his writings which you construe as essays in latitudinarianism? I know Dr. Jones. Unlike the missionaries of a generation ago, he thinks that there is "something" in Hinduism: but in the matter of winning souls for Christ through the Church I believe he is as zealous as any other of the non-conformist missionaries.

What shall I say about your extraordinary notion that Islam in India is not a missionary religion? Its forms and methods may not be quite those of Europe: but in heart and essence, it is definitely a missionary religion. You mention the Testament of Babar. I myself do not construe it as contrary to the missionary purpose of Islam. But even if your construction should be right, how does it affect the case? It is merely another illustration of your incurable habit of ignoring facts and building on words. Supposing Babar said that conversion to Islam was wrong, it does not make a bit of difference. The fact is that to-day there are more than 70 millions of Mussulmans in India. The actual number of Mahomedans who came into India from Arabia and across the Khyber Pass did not exceed a million. Where did the balance of near 70 millions come from? They are the result of conversion from Hinduism. In other words, Islam is a missionary religion. In India as elsewhere, Islam has been singularly faithful to its task of conversion. It is a pure illusion to suppose that Islam can be anything else: or Christianity or any other religion with the vital urge of truth in it. You may lay it down as a fairly universal proposition that the heresy of Liberalism or Latitudinarianism overtakes a religion only when it is tired or exhausted. And I do respectfully suggest that it is your tiredness that makes you a latitudinarian, not your Hinduism. Hinduism is latitudinarian in India, not because it is tired, but because Hindus are in a majority. If you want to see what Hinduism can be as a missionary religion, as the religion of a minority, a religion with the desire of growth, I need not refer you to the history of a thousand years ago in Java and the East. Hindu missionaries are having the time of their life in America. Though the Ramakrishna Mission has languished, there is Yogananda preaching with enormous success Hinduism under the name of Yogoda. I would commend to you an interesting book 'Hinduism Invades America' by Wendell Thomas.

You seem to suggest that the Christian claim to truth is past thinking about in India. But there it is: the Christian, the Catholic claim is unescapable. However uncomfortable it may be, the claim is there: India and the rest of the world have to make up their minds to put up with it as best as they know how. Various ways have been tried: persecution, ridicule, martyrdom; but Christianity has survived them. The Christian certainty is that it will survive the Latitudinarianism of the modern world also.

Madura,
July 2, 1931. }

Yours truly,
GEORGE JOSEPH.

[We are glad to let Mr. Joseph have the luxury of the last word. It would have been well if he had waited to see Dr. Stanley Jones' article which he knew was in type. It was published last week and it will be seen that Dr. Jones points out the difference between the Catholic and his attitudes to proselytising. We did not say that Islam was not a proselytising religion. What we did say was that Islam in India did not maintain, as Catholics seem to do, that it is the only true religion and we cited Emperor Babar's testament in proof. The example of Akbar is even more striking. Any one is free to claim anything, but others are also free to accept or reject such claims. Ed. I. S. B.]

WELFARE OF INDIA LEAGUE.

Mr. M. I. David, the originator of the goodwill movement, writes:

The idea of forming a Welfare of India League has been before the public for some time. As it is the political question that divides Englishmen and Indians to-day, the League represents an attempt to bring about a rapprochement on that issue by erecting, on the basis of a political understanding, a common platform of work. The League will consist of Europeans and Indians, who subscribe to a formula which to-day represents the greatest common measure of agreement between them.

The League will serve as a common meeting-ground for various parties and sections and in time, it should become a useful independent intermediary body, or rather a lubricant in the political world.

The aims and objects of the Welfare of India League are as follows:—

1. To provide a common platform for those Europeans and Indians who stand for the speedy creation of a system of government which secures for India her proper place as an equal partner in the British Commonwealth of Free Nations.
2. To organise all the forces in the country which believe that in the promotion of inter-racial and inter-communal friendship, lies the key to the situation in India.
3. To make the League as representative as possible of Indians and Europeans and to encourage intellectual and cultural co-operation.
4. To consider ways in which the political and economic interests of India may be furthered.
5. To maintain touch with Government as well as with the leaders of the Indian national movement and of various communities, and to place at all times the League's services at their disposal.

SUPPORTERS OF THE LEAGUE.

The above aims and objects have met with general approval, and the following persons have expressed themselves in sympathy with them and have agreed to form the League:—

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, the Rev. John Mackenzie, Mr. Hoosinbhoj A. Laljee, Mr. L. R. Tairsee, Mr. J. B. Boman Behram, Mr. Albert Raymond, Mr. P. J. Murzban, Mr. S. T. Sheppard, Mr. N. C. Kelkar, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Mr. M. B. Jayakar, Mr. K. Natarajan, Sir Chinnlal Setalvad, Mr. R. J. Duff, Mr. H. P. Mody, Mr. F. W. Wilson, Sir Phiroze Sethna, Mr. P. S. Mellor, Sir Shapurjee Billimoria, Sirdar Saleman Cassum Mitha, Mr. G. M. Rose, Mr. J. K. Mehta, Mr. W. McKee, Mr. Hoosenally M. Rahimtools, Mr. B. N. Karanja, Mr. E. B. Hirjibehdin, Mr. T. Maloney, Mr. R. P. Masani, Mr. V. N. Chandavarkar, Mr. M. C. Chagla, Mr. A. M. Kajiji, Dr. M. D. D. Gilder, Mr. A. Smith, Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer, Mr. Gordhandas G. Morarji, Mr. A. F. S. Talyarkhan, Mr. J. L. Coates, Mr. A. R. Wadia, Mr. D. E. Cooper, Sir Cowasji Jehangir (Jr.), Mr. F. C. Annesley, Mr. N. B. Saklatvala, Mr. J. Bullock, Mr. D. W. Dichbarn, Mr. Fred Stones, Mr. J. B. Gilroy, Mr. J. M. Gunthorpe, and Mr. G. W. Wardle.

Those who are in favour of this movement and desire to join the League are requested to communicate with Mr. M. I. David, P. O. Box 758, Bombay 1.

The Bank of India Limited:—The transaction of the past six months, after writing down the Bank's Investments in Government Securities, etc., to market price, and deducting the sum of Rs. 70,000 for Income Tax and Super Tax, have resulted in a profit of Rs. 6,58,374-9-3. To this amount has to be added Rs. 4,44,021-14-5 brought forward from the last account, making a total of Rs. 11,02,396-7-8. This sum the Directors have disposed of as follows:—In payment of an ad-interim dividend at the rate of ten per cent. per annum (Rs. 2-8-0 per share) free of Income Tax on the paid-up Capital of Rupees One Crore for the half year ended 30th June 1931, which will absorb Rs. 5,00,000; carried forward to the next account Rs. 6,02,396-7-8.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS.

Mr. Sri Prakasa, convener, Fundamental Rights Committee appointed by the Karachi Congress has issued the following to the Press :

The fundamental Rights Committee that sat at Masulipatam on the 24th and 25th June, carefully considered the clauses of the original Karachi resolution and all the amendments and suggestions received and have recommended the resolution in the revised and amended form given below. The principal changes are brought out in the explanatory notes appended.

The Swaraj Constitution should provide or enable the Swaraj Government to provide for the fundamental rights and duties and economic, social and administrative reforms :

(1) (i) Every citizen of India has the right of free expression of opinion, the right of free association and combination and the right to assemble peaceably and without arms, for purposes not opposed to law or morality.

(ii) Every citizen of India shall enjoy freedom of conscience and the right freely to profess and practise his religion, subject to public order and morality.

(iii) The culture, language and scripts of the minorities and of the different linguistic areas shall be protected.

(iv) All citizens of India are equal before the law, irrespective of religion, caste, creed or sex.

(v) No disability attaches to any citizen, by reason of his or her religion, caste, creed or sex, in regard to public employment, office of power or honour and in the exercise of any trade or calling.

(vi) All citizens have equal rights and duties in regard to wells, roads, schools, and places of public resort maintained out of State or local funds, or dedicated by private persons for the use of the general public.

(vii) Every citizen has the right and obligation to keep and bear arms, in accordance with regulations and reservations made in that behalf.

(viii) No person shall be deprived of his liberty nor shall his dwelling or property be entered, sequestered, or confiscated save in accordance with law.

(ix) The State shall observe neutrality in regard to all religions.

(x) The franchise shall be on the basis of universal adult suffrage.

The State shall provide for free and compulsory education. The aim of educational institutions shall be good moral training, cultivation of public spirit, personal and vocational efficiency, and the development of the spirit of Indian nationality, and international friendliness. In giving instruction in public educational institutions, care shall be taken not to wound the susceptibilities of those holding different opinions.

(xi) The State shall confer no titles.

(xii) Every citizen of India is free to move throughout India and to stay and settle in any part thereof, to acquire property and to follow any trade or calling.

(xiv) No person shall be punished for any act which was not punishable under the law at the time it was committed.

(xv) The privacy of correspondence and of postal, telegraphic, and telephone communications shall not be infringed except in accordance with law.

(xvi) Every citizen has the right of complaint or petition to competent authorities or the representatives of the people. This right may be exercised by individuals or by several persons in common.

(xvii) There shall be no capital punishment.

LABOUR.

2. The State shall safeguard the interests of industrial workers and shall secure for them, by suitable legislation and in other ways, adequate wages, healthy conditions of work, limited hours of labour, suitable machinery for settlement of disputes between employers and workmen, and protection against the economic consequences of old age, sickness, and unemployment.

2. No person shall be compelled to labour against his will and without due compensation, except when such labour is imposed by law.

4. Attention shall be paid to the special needs of women workers, including care of infants when their mothers are at work and adequate provision during the maternity period.

5. Children of tender age shall not be employed in mills and factories.

6. Workers have the right to form unions to protect their interest.

TAXATION AND EXPENDITURE.

7. The system of land taxation shall be reformed, and an equitable adjustment made of the burden, immediately giving relief to the smaller peasantry, by a substantial reduction of agricultural rent and revenue, now paid by them, and in case of uneconomic holdings, totally exempting them from rent or revenue, with such relief as may be just and necessary to holders of estates affected by such exemption or reduction in rent ; and to the same end the imposition of graded tax on net income from land above a reasonable minimum.

8. Death duties on a graduated scale shall be levied, on property above a fixed minimum.

9. A policy of peace with neighbouring countries will be pursued and there shall be a drastic reduction of military expenditure so as to bring it down to at least one half of the present scale.

10. Expenditure and salaries in Civil Departments shall be largely reduced. No servant of the State, other than specially employed, experts and the like, shall be paid above a certain fixed figure, which should not ordinarily exceed Rs. 1,000 per month.

11. No duty shall be levied on salt.

12. The State shall protect indigenous cloth and for this purpose pursue the policy of exclusion of foreign cloth and foreign yarn from the country and adopt such other measures as may be found necessary.

13. Intoxicating drinks and drugs shall be totally prohibited.

14. Currency and exchange shall be regulated in the national interest.

15. The State shall own or control key industries, mineral resources, railways, shipping and other means of public transport.

16. Adequate steps shall be taken for the relief of agricultural indebtedness and the prohibition of usury.

17. The State shall take steps, directly or through local bodies, to improve the condition of people in rural areas by providing healthy amusements, facilities for adult education, the extension and improvement of agriculture, the revival and development of hand-spinning and hand-weaving and other indigenous arts and crafts and the adoption of an effective programme of village sanitation, drinking water supply and medical relief.

18. The State shall provide for the military training of citizens so as to organize a means of national defence apart from the regular military forces.

ADVERTISEMENTS

"MY EXPERIENCE AS LEGISLATOR."

BY

DR. MRS. S. MUTHULAKSHMI REDDY,
M. B. & O. M.,

Ex-Deputy President, Legislative Council, Madras.

PRICE Rs. 2/-

Can be had from the Manager,

The Indian Social Reformer.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
" Single Copy ... " 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

WANTED.

Candidates for electrical engineering college opening at Bombay. Preparation for London City and Guilds examination. Railfare Paid. Prospectus on 2 annas stamps.—Technical Institute of India, Ltd., Delhi.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a

HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT

with us and earn 3½% interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDRA.

Branches: CALCUTTA.

AHMEDABAD.

POONA.

SURAT.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Motisana, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amrell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadl, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED ... .. 60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID UP ... .. 30,00,000
RESERVE FUND ... .. 24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
Sheth Durgaprasad, Sharabhuprasad, Laskari. (MIL Agent-Ahmedabad).
Bhaskarrao Vitthaldeo Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Late Nalb Dewan, Baroda.
Raj Ratna Bhalil Dajibhai Amla B. A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda).
Sheth Pransukhbhai Malatiai (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)
Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
Mr. N. M. Musumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscriptions: Inland, Rs. 4/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondaicha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Sindheda ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Mandurbar ( " " ).
Sitara ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Kalol ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nashik).
Belapur ( " " ).	Satana ( " " ).
Ahmednagar ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Parola (District East Khandesh).	Kalwan ( " " ).
Akni (District Solapur).	Bhiwandi (District Thana).
Virangam (District Ahmedabad).	Palghar ( " " ).

DIRECTORS:

Sir Chunilal V. Mehta, K.C.S.I.,	Madhowjee D. Thackersey, Esqr.,
Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt.,	Principal M: L. Tannan,
V. V. Garud, Esqr.,	Dewan Bahadur A. U. Malji
G. K. Devadhar, Esqr.,	Rai Bahadur Pritamdas,
G. B. Trivedi, Esqr.,	Dewan Bahadur S. V.
Rao Sahab V. C. Jadav,	Manstikal,
D. V. Gokhale, Esqr.,	V. L. Mehta, Esqr.,
R. N. Rajadnya, Esqr.,

SHARE CAPITAL:—

(Fully Paid) ... .. Rs. 12,96,900

1. DEPOSITS fixed for one year and shorter or longer periods are accepted. Rates and other particulars may be ascertained from the undersigned.

2. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened for Co-operative Societies and individuals. Interest is allowed at 2½ per cent. on daily balance not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000.

3. SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS are accepted and interest paid at 3½ per cent. on minimum monthly balance. Rules may be obtained from the undersigned.

4. THE BANK has issued Five Years Cash Certificates yielding 5½ per cent. per annum. The Bank has also arranged for the issue of Ten Tolas Gold bars. Particulars on application.

5. Drafts are issued on district and other towns on terms to be ascertained on application.

6. The Bank finances only registered Co-operative Societies in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency.

7. Accounts are audited quarterly by a firm of Incorporated Accountants and yearly by a Special Government Auditor. Quarterly statements of financial position are published in the "Bombay Government Gazette".

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay;

Karachi and Calcutta; Bombay sailing;

at Salla, Tuticorin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORABJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,
10-12-26. Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :- Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

SAFELY RELY

ON

AMRUTANJANI BALM

FOR THE CURE OF

Colds, Cough, Headaches, Rheumatism, Swellings and all other
kinds of Aches and Pains.

AMRUTANJANI DEPOT.

BOMBAY

**&

MADRAS.

IT IS YOURS
LOW IN PRICE
HIGH IN EFFICACY

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS

to cure constipation, brain-fag, etc.

Rupee One ( 32 pills ).

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY,

JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch :-

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. s. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single Copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed),

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8	(Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	Rs. 10	(Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

LATEST BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

Hardens Rapidly giving Standard 28 days Concrete strength at 4 days.

DISTRIBUTORS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

BRITISH MOVIE-TONE NEWS VOL. 2 No. 78.

MONTE CARLO

10 Reels, featuring
JEANETTE MACDONALD, JACK BUCHANAN, CLAUDE
ALLISTER AND ZASU PITTS.

A Paramount Picture.

FLIT ADVERTISING FILM No. 2.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News Vol. 2 No. 3.

SPECKLED BAND

10 Reels, featuring
LYN HARDING, RAYMOND MASSEY AND NANCY PRICE

British Dominion Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

FLIT ADVERTISEMENT FILM No. 1.

SOCIETY GOES SPAGHETTE

2 Reels.

AROUND THE CORNER

7 Reels, featuring
GEORGE SYDNEY AND CHARLEY MURRAY

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

DAUGHTER OF THE NIGHT

FOX FILM

AND

INSTRUMENTAL RECITALS

ON VEENA

BY

KESHAYRAO MURTI

TIME: Sat. 6-30 and 10 p. m. CINEMA and VARIETY, Sun. 3-30 p. m.

"MASINO MAKO," [and 10 p. m. CINEMA & VARIETY

Mon. to Fri. 6-30 and 10 p. m. CINEMA & VARIETY.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1931

No. 46

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Ferment in Indian States. The Round Table Conference. The Congress Working Committee's Proposals. Residuary Powers. Todar Mall and Ram Mohan Roy. Financial Relations between India and Britain. Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. XIV.	The Degradation of Caste. Rural Reconstruction in India. Christian Missions and Proselytism. Vitamins in Toddy I &amp; II. Congress Working Committee's Decisions. The Future of the Privileged. News and Views.
--	---

NOTES.

The Ferment in Indian States:—A few days ago the Kashmir Durbar issued a press communique setting forth in detail how the Maharaja dealt with what looked like a petty incident between two men in the State Police over an alleged insult to the holy Koran. This in itself suggested that there was something behind and it caused no surprise when it was stated a day or two later that a Mahomedan had been arrested for fomenting sedition. On Tuesday, came the alarming news that a mob of several thousand Mussalmans had attacked the jail in which the man was kept in custody, pending trial, that troops had to be called, that they had to fire killing ten men and injuring others. This was in the extreme north. On Thursday came the news that in the small State of Pudukota in South India, the mob broke open the jail, released all the prisoners, marched to the house of the President of the Administrative Council with the object of killing him, and that troops had been called from Trichinopoly to preserve order. The motive of the outbreak is said to be resentment at the enhancement of property tax. The Times of India commented on the Kashmir incident on Thursday morning and hinted that the Kashmir administration was not as even-handed as it should be in dealing with its Hindu and Mahomedan subjects. The Times is known for its support of authority whether in British India or the States, and its observations on the Kashmir incident, therefore, came as a surprise. The similar incident in Pudukota, at the other end of the country, which was reported in the same evening, however, shows that behind the immediate cause of such outbreaks, there is a more general one extending beyond individual States. And this is the fact. The discontent amongst States' subjects nearly everywhere is reflected to some extent in the proceedings of the States' People's organisations in the country. Next to the National Congress the All India States' People's Conference is, perhaps, the most widely organised political movement at the present day. The British and the Indian Governments have ignored the prayer of the States' subjects to place their point of view before the Butler Committee on Indian States and to send their representatives to the Round Table Conference. The incidents in Kashmir and Pudukota should warn them that all is not well in the States, and that it is always wise to provide safety valves in States as in steam-engines.

The Round Table Conference:—The first selection of delegates to the Round Table Conference from British India was made by Lord Irwin professedly without any idea of local or communal representation. The result was that while some interests and provinces were over-represented others were practically left to find such representation as they could from the complacency or condescension of those who have had the fortune to secure the Viceregal ticket of admission. The States were represented by some sixteen Princes and their Ministers and, besides, there were amongst British Indian delegates some who were closely associated with them as legal advisers in important matters relating to their status and administration. That these gentlemen did not in the least allow their professional relations with the Princes to affect the discharge of their political duties as representatives of British India at the Conference, goes without saying. They are men of the highest probity and independence whose perfect detachment it will be absurd to question. The lawyer's relations with his client ceases the moment a case is decided and the fees are paid, and he is perfectly free thereafter, according to the etiquette of the profession, from any sort of obligation to the latter. It makes no difference, or should make none, whether the client is a prince or a peasant. Under any other conditions, the lawyer's profession will be impossible, and every educated man knows this quite well. We say this because we have been told that Professor Berriedale Keith's criticism of the failure of British Indian delegates to press the case for the subjects of Indian States at the Conference, cannot be disposed of as was done by the Reformer. We still think, however, that the British Government must bear the chief blame for ignoring the people of the States, as it is responsible for the good Government of British India as well as of the States. We call attention, nevertheless, to the criticism in order that, in making fresh selections to the Federal Committee or the Conference, it may be given whatever weight may attach to it.

The Congress Working Committee's Proposals:—The Working Committee of the National Congress at its sittings in Bombay last week after prolonged discussion formulated certain proposals regarding Muslim demands, which are published elsewhere. On the question of joint electorates the Committee has been unable to agree to any concession. To meet the apprehensions of minorities, however, the Committee has adopted the principle of reservation of seats on the population basis, with freedom to compete for more seats through the joint electorate, where a minority is less than 25 per cent. of the population. The Nationalist Muslims have accepted the proposal. But the Muslim League party which is inflexible on the retention of separate electorates, has already declared against it. Speaking for ourselves, we would try to secure the concurrence of this party by agreeing to the retention of separate electorates, returning members on the population basis. Reservation of seats, it is admitted, is only a modified recognition of the communal principle, and since it is unacceptable to the Muslim League people, we see no harm in letting them have separate electorates. The proposal to allow Muslims to compete for additional seats in the general electorates, will, of course, stand as it is the only way in which Nationalist Muslims can find a place in the new constitution. That some Muslim leaders are unable to rise above communalism should not prevent those who can do so from acting up to their convictions. The reformer must boldly lead the way, though it may be a lonely one in the beginning, for the mass to follow. The additional seats which Muslims secure in the general electorates will necessarily mean so many less for non-Muslim, especially Hindu, candidates. But this will not be a loss except in a narrow communal sense. Nationalist Muslims will be equally, if not more, effective and courageous champions of public interests, which are largely Hindu interests, than half a dozen Hindus one can name who are returned by the general electorates. The only danger that we can see in this proposal is that orthodox Hindus may make common cause with Muslim sectarians to impede social legislation like the Sarda Act, and return reactionaries to the Legislatures; but this if it happens can happen only in a very few places, and the risk is well worth taking, having regard to the important principle involved.

Residuary Powers:—The Working Committee's proposals in respect of Sind, North West Frontier Province and Baluchistan, are in accord with Muslim opinion, and are not likely to meet with serious opposition from non-Muslims. As regards due representation of all communities in the Public Services, the Committee's recommendation need cause no anxiety. Moreover, employment in these services in self-governing India will cease to have the artificial attraction it has under the present system in which the official is given a highly privileged place. The Civil Service will have merely to carry out the policies and measures of Ministers responsible to representative Legislatures, and salaries, pensions and other allowances will be more in keeping with the economic condition of the population. The Committee's proposal to have communal representation in Cabinets is on a different footing. The present policy of nominating Ministers on the ground of their religious profession apart from ability, character or general reputation, has led to deplorable results. We are sure that among members from all denominations nationalists will be forthcoming who rely for their preferment on their personal qualifications and not on their religious beliefs. The Working Committee has gone against the weight of informed opinion as well as of all communities except the Muslim, in expressing even a tentative preference for vesting residuary powers in the Federating unit. But the door is kept open for reconsideration by the clause "unless on further examination it is found to be against the best interests of India." The Committee would have done well, particularly in view of the great mass as well as weight of opinion in favour of vesting these powers at the centre, if it had not committed itself even provisionally to the opposite view. The Hindu Mahasabha, the Indian Christians, and the Sikhs have all declared for the central Government as the repository of these powers. Every Indian writer on the constitutional question has done likewise with scarcely a single exception. The past history of India is replete with proof of the disasters consequent on the bloated ambitions of provincial satraps. The Working Committee has, therefore, been precipitate in committing itself to a sectional view on this vital matter. We are, however, glad to note that Dr. Ansari agrees with Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya that this is a purely constitutional question and should be finally decided on its merits as such, though he thinks that it will be found on examination that the Muslim view is the right one.

Todar Mall and Ram Mohan Roy:—Referring to the Count of Noer's account of the substitution of Persian for Hindi as the official language of the Moghal Empire by the order of Todar Mall, the Indian Messenger of Calcutta writes: "Is it not rather difficult to believe that Todar Mall, a Hindu and Rajput, replaced Hindi by making Persian the official language of the Moghul Empire? It is clear that the innovation was a political necessity at the time. Who could realise it better than the great Hindu statesman and finance minister? The introduction of Persian not only gave the Hindus a better chance for higher careers, but also threw open to them the Islamic culture of Bagdad and Cordova. Through Persian, Maulana Rumi and Hafez became the breath of their nostrils. Masters of the lingua franca of the East, they gradually commanded a wider outlook on life. History has repeated itself in the introduction of English as the medium of education. The greatest advocate and staunchest supporter of this innovation we find in the Zubbardast Maulvi and the peerless Sastri that Rammohun was. Modernisation of India, he perceived, required the English medium of education through which the Indians could imbibe the free thought and scientific spirit of the West." We are sure that Raja Ram Mohan Roy's prevision will be vindicated although for the moment supporters of his view are likely to be regarded as wanting in patriotism. Todar Mall, by the way, was not a Rajput but a Khatri of Oudh. Beginning life as a humble writer, he distinguished himself as a General in the Moghul army in Afghanistan and Kashmir before he became virtual Prime Minister of the Empire.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, JULY 18, 1931.

FINANCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN INDIA AND BRITAIN.*

A few days ago the British Prime Minister astonished informed Indian opinion by declaring in the House of Commons that His Majesty's Government had decided that, should the need arise, they will apply to Parliament for the authority necessary to enable them to give financial support under suitable conditions to a Government of India for the purpose of maintaining the credit of the country. "It will not be possible," explained the Prime Minister, "to introduce the proposed constitutional changes if financial stability is not assured and His Majesty's Government are determined not to allow a state of affairs to arise which might jeopardise the financial stability of India." It has since been stated that the announcement was not called for by any immediate necessity.

The astonishment which this declaration created in informed Indian circles was due to several causes. In the first place, in every Budget statement down to the last, the Finance Member of the Government of India has been assuring the country that its financial position was extraordinarily strong. A statement implying that it might even as a distant possibility require to be supported by the British Government, from no less a person than the Prime Minister, endorsed subsequently by the leaders of the two other British political parties, cannot but throw doubt on the reliability, not to say veracity, of the repeated official assurances regarding India's financial stability. If it be said that the Prime Minister's declaration is contingent on the introduction of constitutional changes, still it is calculated to prejudice in advance such changes by suggesting that, in the British Government's belief, their own "constitutional proposals" are likely to upset India's financial stability. As these "proposals" have not yet been agreed upon, it was at least premature to precast adversely their probable effects, and the prematureness of the announcement gives rise to speculation which it is not statesmanship to foster as regards its intentions.

But a greater cause of astonishment is, that it is a departure from the settled principle of the British connection with India that it should not involve any burden financial or other upon Great Britain. All the money and four-fifths of the army for the "conquest" of India was raised in India. Since then India has paid every penny of the cost of her administration and much besides. And it was well understood that when, if ever, India became a burden, the British connection with it will be instantly severed. "As it was acquired without effort on the part of the English state," wrote Seeley, "it must be retained in the same way. We are not prepared to bury millions upon millions or army upon army in defending our acquisition." This was said about fifty years ago, when Imperialism was just beginning to influence British politics. A British historian lecturing in June 1914 would certainly have held a different opinion. But the War has completely changed the aspect of the world. Britain is certainly far less able to shoulder heavy burdens on behalf of India, though there is a considerable body of British opinion which is bitterly opposed to leave India to govern herself in her own best interests. The Prime Minister's declaration means certainly far less than it would have meant before the War. England has to grapple with her own loss of trade and consequent unemployment. She is not in a position to undertake external burdens unless they are intended as investments certain to yield extraordinarily profitable returns political or financial, in the near future. In that case, the Prime Minister's offer may be in the nature of a Greek gift to be viewed with caution.

For practical purposes the Prime Minister's declaration is important only as calling the attention of the world to the precarious financial condition in which India will start on the pilgrimage to self-government. It becomes, therefore, pertinent to enquire how this position has been brought about. Indian reformers for many years paid but slight attention to the economic effects of British rule, absorbed as they were in the contemplation of the benefits of peace and order which followed the establishment of that rule. It was only after that rule had been in operation for about two generations that they began to think of the price which they had to pay for them. Ranade first sounded a note of warning by pointing out that the industrial domination of Britain was of more serious consequence to India than her political domination. Dadabhai Naoroji spent a long and devoted life in focussing attention in India and Britain on the drain of India's resources as a result of British rule and pleaded hard for its reduction, if avoidance was not possible. It was only when he found that his appeals to British justice produced little effect that he told the Indian people at the Calcutta Congress twenty five years ago that Swaraj was the only remedy. R. C. Dutt exposed the methods employed by the early British trader-rulers to open up India as a market for British goods. Gokhale concentrated on the financial aspect of British rule and in his Budget speeches in the Imperial Legislative Council pleaded not without effect for reduction of taxation and increased attention to the raising of the economic and educational average of the Indian population. But all these reformers accepted the established British system as the basis of their reforms.

*Report of the Select Committee appointed by the Working Committee of the National Congress to scrutinise the financial Obligations between Great Britain and India.

The resolution which Mr. C. Rajagopalacharya brought forward at the Gaya Congress in 1922 about the public debt of India, would have shocked these reformers, as it shocked Mr. C. R. Das and Pandit Motilal Nehru at the time. It was a challenge to the established system to render an account of its stewardship. Between 1922 and 1929, public opinion had travelled a long distance and the Lahore Congress in the latter year adopted practically without opposition a resolution insisting on an examination of the financial obligations between India and England to find out how far they were legitimately incurred. The Karachi Congress last March took the matter a step forward and appointed a strong committee to undertake the investigation and report in time for the departure of the Indian delegation of the Congress to London. The members of the committee were Mr. J. C. Kumarappa, Convener, and Messrs. K. T. Shah, Bhulabhai Desai and D. N. Bahadurji. Mr. Kumarappa qualified in England for the profession of Accountancy which he practised for several years before he joined the Gujarat Vidyapith on the invitation of Mahatma Gandhi. Professor K. T. Shah was till last year senior Professor of Economics in Bombay University and is author of several books on subjects connected with Indian finance. His views were regarded as so unorthodox as to lead to the intervention of a high Government authority against the renewal of his term of office when it expired. Messrs. Desai and Bahadurji are eminent members of the Bombay Bar, well versed in business matters.

British statesmen and publicists have with rare exceptions always publicly taken up the position that British rule is for the benefit of India and not only does Britain gain nothing but that it makes positive sacrifices in bearing the brown man's burden. In private communications and occasionally in public speeches in England, however, they have permitted themselves to acknowledge that India is the most valuable asset of the British Empire. Thus, Lord Curzon speaking at the Mansion House in London, tried to bring home to the British public the importance of India which, he complained, they seldom realised.

"If you want to save your colony of Natal from being overrun by a formidable enemy, you ask India for help, and she gives it; if you want to rescue the white men's Legations from massacre at Peking, and the need is urgent, you ask the Government of India to despatch an expedition, and they despatch it; if you are fighting the Mad Mullah in Somaliland, you soon discover that Indian troops and Indian Generals are best qualified for the task, and you ask the Government of India to send them; if you desire to defend any of your extreme outposts or coaling-stations of the Empire, in Mauritius, Singapore, Hongkong, even Tientsin or Shan-haikwan, it is to the Indian Army that you turn; if you want to build a railway in Uganda or in the Sudan, you apply for Indian labour. When the late Mr. Rhodes was engaged in developing your recent acquisition of Rhodesia, he turned to me for assistance. It is with Indian coolie labour that you exploit the plantations equally of Demerara and Natal; it is with Indian trained officers that you irrigate Egypt and dam the Nile, with the Indian Forest officers that you tap the resources of Central Africa and Siam, with Indian Surveyors that you explore all the hidden places of the earth."

From Lord Curzon's language, it may be thought that India had any option on all these occasions but to obey. She had none whatever. Not only that on most such occasions she had to furnish troops but she had herself often also to bear the whole cost of expeditions in any quarter of the globe east of Suez. During the last War even this limit was ignored. The Kumarappa Report has collected many instances of this kind in which either the whole or part of the cost has been thrown upon India, and it cites the opinion of English officials, in some cases of Secretaries of State of India, that these burdens were unjustly placed on India. Lord Curzon himself vehemently protested against the addition of more than £ 750,000 a year to the cost of the British troops in India after the Boer War. The question was referred to the arbitration of the Lord Chief Justice of England at the time who, of course, decided against India. This and other differences between the British and the Indian Governments in Lord Curzon's time, are discussed in Lord Ronaldshay's life of that statesman. Several other large sums under other heads improperly charged to India are also brought together in the Report. The total public debt of India at the present time is 1100 crores of rupees. The Kumarappa Report shows that of this amount, Rs. 730 crores should be returned to India on account of the sums wrongfully taken from her. (This is about the amount of British capital invested in the country). Mr. Kumarappa in a separate note makes a further claim, on account of interest, of 535 crores. If this is added the amount due would exceed the amount of the public debt. The Committee under these circumstances recommend that Britain following the precedent in the case of the Irish Free State, should start self-governing India free of all liabilities.

Indian reformers have not regarded the British connection as a matter of pounds, shillings and pence. This point of view has been really forced on them by the clamour of commercialists like Lord Inchcape who by raising it have brought down the question to the lowest possible level in which accommodation is almost impossible. If these men are to have the decisive word in the Indian settlement, India is bound to press her counterclaims which have been stated with business-like directness in the Kumarappa Report.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. XIV.

(BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTHY.)

The selfish dominancy of male kindred and the unselfish niggardliness of the courts towards female members of a Hindu family are not the only drawbacks of our maintenance law. The treacherous insecurity of even the grudging provision which it makes for their upkeep is the most deplorable of all its present defects.

A woman may have the legal right to be maintained by a person either from his own assets by virtue of her relationship to him, or from property which devolved on him as heir to another person who was so related and bound to maintain her, or from property held by him as manager of the joint family of which such other person was a member. But neither the accrual of the right, nor even its recognition by a court of law in the shape of a decree for periodical payment of a definite sum to her, can by itself operate as a charge and protect for her benefit the property to which in the last resort she must look to provide her with the means of living and shelter. Such a charge can be created only by a specific agreement or decree to that effect. Otherwise the debts and alienations of the actual holder of the property, though made subsequent to the arising of her right, prevail over her claim and may make it practically infructuous. But a formal and strictly business-like pre-arrangement of the kind expected by the present law is ordinarily impossible in the Hindu family. Various causes, such as delicacy of sentiment, fear, poverty, ignorance and helplessness of the female concerned, usually conspire to let matters adrift till the end, even after friendly relations had been strained between the parties. So long as a woman is living under the family roof or at any rate is receiving her sustenance from the family income, she may fancy herself quite safe for the future. But she may awake any day to find herself suddenly homeless and destitute because the person who should pay for her maintenance had either contracted overwhelming debts which swept away all the properties in his hands or sold them away himself for purposes which did not benefit her in the least but which the courts might hold lawful and binding on her.

In fact, as the Mysore Hindu Law Reform Committee truly observe, the right of near relatives to maintenance has been till now subordinated by our law to the convenience of the stranger-creditor or the whims of the profligate husband and thereby rendered more or less precarious in its nature. The only way of effectually safeguarding maintenance rights, they also find, is to treat the same as a charge upon the whole of the property, if any, liable to meet it, so that it may have priority over all debts of the person or joint family concerned and over all subsequent encumbrances or transfers of the property charged, whether made with or without notice of the claim of maintenance. But an exception is still made in their Draft Bill (clause 28, sub-clause 1) in favour of an alienation made, "in good faith" and "for legal necessity," by the manager of a joint Hindu family. And the wording of the clause also shows that no charge is intended in respect of the assets of a man personally liable to maintain his nearest female relations such as mother, wife, daughter, etc., enumerated in clause 24 (1).

The Committee further recognise that the right of the wife who is entitled to demand separate maintenance from her husband is especially liable to be defeated by him unless it is made a charge upon his assets and given priority over his personal debts. But, to have the benefit of such charge, they insist that she must show the intelligence and resourcefulness necessary to put forth her claim in writing and get it duly registered under the Registration Regulation. But, with all that, her right may still be defeated by an alienation made by the husband for a "necessary or reasonable purpose," which means of course some purpose of his own unconcerned altogether with the separated wife's necessity or future well-being. (Clause 28, Sub-clause 2.) It is also stipulated no doubt that the alienation to be exempted from the effect of the charge must be one for valuable consideration and made in good faith and without intent to defeat the wife's right. But we are afraid that, taken all in all, the safeguards provided for the rights of creditors and alienees under the proposed law are still perilously near to engulfing in most cases the safeguards of maintenance rights conceded to helpless female dependents, though we are profoundly thankful for the greater protection which the new proposals give them.

Even in Baroda, where the wife's right to maintenance stands on a higher footing than in other parts of India, being based in legal theory upon the co-ownership in property which she acquires under the Baroda Hindu Marriage Act, as in the Vedic age, from the date of her marriage, she is not yet sufficiently protected against unjustifiable transfers by her husband. As a matter of fact, she is even in a worse position than any other female dependents of her husband. The present law on the point is clearly set forth in the Desai Committee's Questionnaire. Under the Baroda Joint Hindu Family Act, it would seem, "all women in the family who possess the right of residence and maintenance, except the wife or widow of a member for whose debt the family property is sold, can raise the objection that the debt was not incurred on account of family necessity and can protect their right on proof of such allegations," but the said wife or widow has no right to challenge the transaction and thus her right of residence and maintenance is lost. Almost all suggestions for its remedy received from eminent judges, pleaders, and leading gentlemen and ladies were in favour of making the wife's right a legal charge on the family property, without any need for a formal agreement or decree, "so as to make it indefeasible against a purchaser or a creditor with or without notice." But this "indefeasible" right, however, is not to be an absolute one. The legal charge recommended by the learned Committee gives a wife only the "right to challenge" the transactions of her husband regarding them as the acts of a family manager and this right she is expected to exercise "by showing that the debt incurred was not for any legal necessity or for any lawful consideration." If she fails to show this, she loses her right of maintenance and residence just as surely as she did before her right was made indefeasible by the granting of a legal charge.

We fear that the onus thus thrown on the wife of proving this negative may prove too heavy for her in most cases. If, as the learned Committee themselves recognise, "it is the duty of a creditor or a purchaser to make proper inquiries and satisfy himself before advancing money on the property that it is not burdened with a charge," it seems but proper that the burden of proving that he has discharged that manifest duty should lie on him than that proof of the contrary be laid on the ignorant and helpless woman behind whose back the transaction ruining her statutory rights was conducted. But even if this small point of procedure in evidence be conceded at the final drafting of the legislative enactment the main fact still remains that a Hindu wife's right to maintenance and residence is not absolutely safeguarded even in Baroda. We do not know if the learned Desai Committee gave separate thought to the case of a discarded wife or of one otherwise entitled to separate maintenance. It may be, as they hold, that a wife and husband living together form a joint family of which he is the manager. But a separated wife can only be regarded as a divided member of the family. How then can the husband claim the privilege of managership to injure her rights after separation?

But here too we must acknowledge we feel sincerely grateful for the real advance made over the previous law. As observed by that profound lawyer, Mr. Vasudev Vinayak Joshi, whose brilliant monograph on Hindu Women's Property Rights forms the backbone of the Desai Report, our women have been reduced by modern case-law to the position of mere dependents on the family, and "if anything is primarily responsible for the great hardship which has fallen to their lot, it is the false notion, harboured in the present system of Hindu law, that a woman has got absolutely no right in the property of her husband except the claim of charity in the form of the right of maintenance." Until this notion is thoroughly got rid of and her coparcenary status is not only postulated, as urged by Mr. Joshi, but fully worked out in all its aspects, any suggestions made for "removing legal disabilities" must necessarily fall short of their aim, although one may not go so far as to say with Mr. Joshi that they "would not be worth the experiment."

THE DEGRADATION OF CASTE.

In an age of reason like this it is really deplorable that the guardians of "Sanatana Dharma" should drag their Dharma into the mire. If the cosmopolitan principles of Vedic and Shastraic Dharmas are examined there are texts in all Shastras which establish the fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man. The Vedic and Shastraic texts have emphatically shown that the object of worship according to all the religions of the world is God the Almighty, that the real worship of God consists in purity of thought, word and deed, that flattery and bribes do not constitute worship, that sins cannot be washed away by any amount of ablutions, pujahs, pilgrimages, feeding and feeding of idlers, that every one can work out his salvation only by so regulating his thought, word and deed as to gain the object of his sacred ambition, without creating the least pain to any of his fellow creatures. When most of these depositories of the sacred lore of India, offer their daily worship to God the Almighty they take great pride in saying "May all people on earth be happy." As soon as their hypocritical worship is over, they drive these sacred feelings to take to themselves wings and fly away from their heads leaving them to take a mad and fanatical part in their communal squabbles.

A number of orthodox men set the ball in fanaticism in motion and it has contributed to drive them into a veritable hell.

The ancient law givers, the framers of Sanatana Dharma, created the four castes according to their "Guna and Karma." These were practically the divisions of labour to promote the wealth of the country. Their latterday successors had, however, the audacity to create an impression that one caste was superior to another by birth and not by "Guna and Karma."

This is opposed to the spirit of the Dharma Shastras. All the great teachers of India have laid down that birth plays a very unimportant part in determining the sanctity of persons and that purity of thought, word and deed are the only factors that determine the godliness of individuals. This fact has been ignored by many Sanatanists.

The sacredness of divine Dharma has been so misrepresented and misinterpreted that to-day an arch sinner thinks that he is the most sacred being on earth, and that sinless and unsophisticated persons are destined for hell and are not only untouchables but also unapproachables and even their shadows carry contamination with them. It is this compound and complex ignorance, if not deliberate wickedness that is at the bottom of the hellish disabilities heaped upon the depressed classes in one form or another, not only in India but throughout the world.

You have raised your trumpet voice against these transgressions of Divine Law. God has ordained that justice is its own reward and injustice and foulplay their own punishment. As people sow, so they will have to reap. One commits a sin and the whole of his community whether guilty or not has to suffer the punishment meted out to that sinner. When a sinner perpetrates a sin that affects a large number of people, it is the duty of those who have the misfortune to belong to the community of the sinner, to see that the sin is rectified and atoned for. Some of the Brahmins created the backward and depressed classes and heaped, social, moral and spiritual disadvantages on them. The latter in their turn have now created an oppressed class and have been revenging themselves upon them.

It is high time to end this communal lunacy. Your leader has gone a great way to do this altruistic duty. May God bless you for it.

M. V.

RURAL RECONSTRUCTION IN INDIA.

(By SIR M. VISVESVARAYA, K. C. I. E.)

(Concluded from the last issue.)

A second measure necessary to increase the number of earning members in village families is to make provision for the giving of manual and business training, and instruction in some trade, occupation or profession. Now-a-days innumerable subjects come under the dominion of training. Vocational training has been a neglected feature of Indian life everywhere hitherto and special provisions will have to be made by the Village Improvement Association and the Government jointly to meet this need in future. In this connection it may be mentioned that the village population in Japan is placed in close touch with model farms and agricultural machinery. Agricultural courses are given in the villages in classes which are held at night time except in the busy seasons. Village industries are encouraged by subventions from the village Council, the District, Prefecture or the State according to circumstances.

A third measure is education. Although treated as a subsidiary measure in connection with the uplift scheme, yet it must be recognized that education is the root of all progress. Government maintain educational institutions to a certain extent and the Village Improvement Association should add to the facilities when and where it can. In the Japanese villages, nearly 60 per cent. of the local taxes is spent on educational institutions in the village itself.

The main thing to secure under this scheme is increase of income. If this is assured, the people will be better able to provide for all village services and amenities. The Village Improvement Association should accordingly confine its attention to problems and activities connected with production and income and to the training needed for that purpose. The ordinary administrative functions of the village should be left to the existing official agencies and kept quite distinct. If it is thought that any of the other village services such as road maintenance, conservancy or water-supply should also be entrusted to local unions or self-governing bodies, other rural voluntary associations or committees may be separately formed for the purpose as is the common practice in Japan. In every village in parts of Japan, there is an education society, a young men's association, a girls' society, an agricultural association and an industrial association of some kind or other. In some villages there are also an irrigation association, a credit association, selling association, producing association, purchasers' guild, and so on. Army people when they return to their village usually form an association of their own for local military men.

In India similar associations may be formed, wherever needed, if there is sufficient local enterprise for the purpose, but the duties of the Village Improvement Association proposed should not on any account be enlarged to embrace such services.

When the Provincial Governments in India become autonomous, as they are shortly expected to do, the very first step to be taken in the interests of the rural population should be to grant self-government to villages in a liberal measure similar to that functioning in Japan. Self-governing villages would soon create a much-needed spirit of self-help and constructive effort among the local population leading to healthy developments in every sphere of activity,—economic, social, cultural, recreational and the like.

Some of the model villages in Japan owe their business success and prosperity to the exertions of leading citizens who took up village uplift work as a matter of patriotic public duty. These men organized village associations, prepared improvement schemes and rules for operating them, and watched the progress of the schemes from stage to stage till the village folk acquired sufficient experience and enthusiasm to carry on the duties themselves without outside help.

In this country also the guidance and help of such leaders—public-spirited men, inamdars, local headmen and business-men—will be needed for the introduction of the scheme at the commencement. For each individual village or village group to begin with, the services of such a leader who understands the general principles and full implications of the scheme will be invaluable. The scheme affords an opportunity to leaders who have a passion to serve the people, and there are many such now-a-days. After some experience one such leader will be able to guide the movement over a dozen or more units with the aid of volunteers. If the movement extends, arrangements may be made to give a six-months' training to volunteers in an institution specially started for the purpose. In course of time men, fired with missionary zeal and competent to serve as volunteers, will come forward from the local areas themselves and the neighbouring Taluka towns. Under the scheme, young men who start work as volunteers may begin work with a bare allowance, just sufficient to cover their maintenance, and may be expected later to create for themselves and the population around new sources of profitable employment on village agriculture and industries. The need to harness literate young men to rural work is admittedly great. The Universities of India are making available young men of discipline and culture in large numbers and it seems justifiable to use them to a reasonable extent on betterment work in the rural areas of the country.

If the subject is taken up on a mass-movement scale with the support of Government, there should be a Central Advisory Association and Council consisting of members of the provincial legislature, Government officials, leading agriculturists and business-men, established at the headquarters of every Province or State, to guide the movement. Such a Council will be also able, with the help of this movement, to establish new industries and occupations and reduce unemployment in the country.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS AND PROSELYTISM.

(Concluded from the last issue.)

I think whatever mistakes missionaries might have made in the past their policies and work have been on the whole above board. Sweeping generalisations, on particular incidents, about six thousand missionaries and ten times more Indian ministers and preachers and fifty lacs of Indian Christians are neither correct nor just. Both as student and teacher I have passed through four great missionary educational institutions in North India and in the course of nearly 25 years I have not known of a convert coming out of the missionary work in these institutions. Other schools and colleges will testify to the same situation. Some of these institutions have existed for more than a century and yet they have not closed down for lack of results in conversions and it is mostly Hindus who have benefited from them. I do not know of institutions where Bible-teaching is compulsory in these days. I know many missionary doctors and Mission hospitals. I can never think for a moment that they heal a man in order to convert him to Christianity. [But the man is often misled into thinking that it is not the medicine but Christianity which healed him. Ed. I. S. R.] The cost of conversion in that case would be terribly out of proportion to the result. When they are getting the odium of ulterior motives they might easily adopt very much cheaper means if they wanted to. It is most unjust of you to charge missionaries of anything less than pure and deep love for suffering and wandering humanity. Converts have come and do come quite independently of philanthropical work of Missions.

The essential purpose of Missions is to set forth the love of God in Christ both through deed and word, and proclaim the saving power of the Lord; some people do see his love and feel his power and accept him; for this kind of moral and spiritual regeneration of men thousands, both Indian and foreign, have thrown away prospects in life and dedicated themselves to the service of God and men. If you would call this wrong, missionaries and Indians will continue doing it at all risks. The fact is that practically all great religions except Hinduism are missionary religions in their spirit, motive and method. You have remarked that Islam in India has not got the same organisation and ability as Christianity. This is not true. Islam has been acclimatised to a greater degree than Christianity. Its methods are more natural and insidious. Do you realise that every Musalman is a missionary and that Moslems get more "result" than all the Missions with their huge organisations and money power? At any rate that is how we know of Islam, but we do not grudge it. If I recall correctly you have from time to time contended that Hinduism also has been missionary in the past and, at any rate, some of its modern branches are quite virile and very active. You are trying, I fear, to fight the very spirit of Christianity. I respect your notions about Christ's religion but I differ from them as will all representative members of the Church. To my mind any man studying the New Testament will be convinced that Christ rather badly upset men's beliefs and the Church has been following it throughout the centuries. [Christ said, I come not to destroy, but to fulfil. Ed. I.S.R.]. You have every right, moral and legal, to stop fraud and force. None will be more grateful than the Missions of the Church if by healthy public criticisms and even interference the abuses and mistakes are purged out. But I humbly submit you have no moral right to injure individual liberty in respect of religious profession unless that liberty conduces to public immorality.

I have been pained to see that you deprecate the freedom of conscience in the matter of professing and practising one's faith. [We never did and never shall. Ed. I. S. R.]. You have also underrated the value of the principle of neutrality adopted by the present British administration as endorsed by the Nehru Report. Are you not leaning towards autocracy rather than democracy in the future governance of India? It is my firm conviction that India can never be a peaceful and progressive nation on any other basis and I feel sure this view will be upheld by almost all sane thinking men except yourself. You have so far suggested no practical ways in which a Government may positively protect and foster different faiths under its wings. The demands and needs of different religions will be different and Government by professing to satisfy them all will be apt to increase their greediness and communal rule and thereby make administration impossible. You have instanced the case of Mysore as trying, according to your idea, to conciliate different faiths by positive support. It will be interesting to know the details of the scheme. But it is more important to show cases from ancient history of India because there we may get experience whereas a modern experiment may fail or succeed. [Mr. Das may be referred to the Jews of Cochin, the Syrians of Travancore, and the Parsis, for the proof he wants from ancient history. Ed. I. S. R.]

You have shown the tendency to exaggerate the evils of foreign Missions ignoring the permanent and public good that they have rendered to India in general and to the Church in particular. The correspondence that you have published does not accurately represent the condition of either Indian Christians or missionary bodies. [They were mostly from Indian Christians. Ed. I. S. R.]. It is always dangerous to generalise. Many of us feel that the time has come in India for the whole Church and missionary forces to explain their position to the public. Meanwhile, one regrets that a lot of harm is being done among Christians and in other interested circles to the cause of the motherland and the common ideals we hold so dear to our hearts by the rather sarcastic slurs you have cast upon Mission work (I. S. R. May 3rd & 23rd) and by the expression of the views of Mr. Gandhi.

Then you also doubt the possibility of the Indian Church being "a bonafide expression of the Indian soul and not a benami holder of some alien principal" (I. S. R., June 6th). [The doubt is necessitated by the fact that Indian Christianity is not self-supporting like the Hindu and Muslim religions. Ed. I. S. R.]. The Indian Church truly cannot be the expression of the Indian soul alone. Christ will be the biggest factor in that expression. Christ cannot possibly ally himself with everything in Indian soul as it is today. From that standpoint and regarded as the standard of spiritual and moral values Christ himself might be regarded as an "alien" principal. That was a big part of the reason why he was crucified by his own countrymen. But your assurance that nothing will be done without consultation with the Indian Church whose views will have due weight given to them is a great relief to some of us. But one fears that your views and convictions being what they are, many in India will not be much enamoured of the assurance construing it as a prudent policy for the time being. The minorities must be enabled to have confidence in your goodwill and justice. [Certainly, if minorities are open to conviction. Ed. I. S. R.]. Without this no amount of safeguarding on paper constitution will save the country. Let me thank you again for your generosity and general sense of fairness exhibited in many ways towards Christians and their faith. One hopes that you will give closer thought to the subject under discussion and will see your way to modify your position.

Benares Contonment,
18th June 1931.

R. C. Das.

VITAMINS IN TODDY.

I.

Mr. C. Rajagopalachariar writes :

Sometimes ago the air mail brought an extract from an article in a British journal contributed by a Professor of Science the purport of which was that toddy contained vitamins and was therefore good for mothers. The Professor referred to certain experiences in Naran Island to support his contention. We were told that toddy was once prohibited in that island and infantile mortality went up; and that as soon as the prohibition was removed the previous percentage of mortality was reduced, showing that toddy helped infants to be well nourished.

Naran Island is a mandated British Island taken over from Germany in 1924. Its total population is 134 Europeans, 1,363 natives, 1,099 Chinese and 16 others, total 2,614. We have no details of how the experiment was conducted and no data to test the conclusion drawn by the Professor.

However I wrote to Col. McCarrison for information on the points arising out of the contention that toddy contained vitamins and was therefore good for India. But the Colonel is gone to England and my letter had to be forwarded there. Meanwhile Col. R. N. Chopra of the School of Tropical Medicine, Calcutta, to whom also I wrote, has replied. His opinion will be interesting to all impartial inquirers. Col. Chopra has been very ill and is now in Kashmir, ordered complete rest. He has therefore answered in a general way promising to write in more detail later on when back in Calcutta. Dr. Chopra writes: "It is quite possible for vitamins to exist in fermented toddy. Vitamins are not destroyed by the percentage of alcohol which exists in toddy. But I would certainly not recommend toddy for the sake of its vitamin contents. Its evil effects would outweigh even if it had any advantages when it is remembered that vitamins exist in large quantities in many of the harmless vegetable substances, many of which are articles of ordinary dietary, it seems to be entirely unnecessary. My own opinion based on observation for the past ten years is that an Indian getting his ordinary diet gets quite enough vitamins to keep him in health. Vitamins are becoming a fad and a lot of people who talk about them have not got a clear notion of what they are."

Thus much for the story that toddy is good for mothers. If all the mothers in India could only have their way, they would straightaway abolish toddy and the whole brood of Alcohol and their children would bless them.

II.

Mr. C. Rajagopalachariar writes :—

I published Dr. Chopra's reply to my queries regarding the vitamin content of toddy. I had referred the matter to Col. R. McCarrison, expert in charge of Food Research in the Pasture Institute at Coonoor, whose contributions in this department of knowledge are well-known. My letter was re-directed to England where the Colonel is at present. I have now received a reply from him which I publish below along with the questions I referred to.

1. Does the vitamin B-1 referred to by Prof. Haldane exist in unfermented sweet juice tapped from the cocoanut tree ?

1. Vitamin B-1 does exist but in small amount in the unfermented sweet juice tapped from the cocoanut tree.

2. Does it exist in the said juice when fermented into toddy ?

2. Vitamin B-1 is present in large amount in fermented toddy : its richness in this vitamin is due to the presence of yeast.

3. Does the vitamin referred to undergo any change or destruction by reason of being kept for some time in an 8 per cent solution of alcohol taking this as the alcoholic content of toddy ?

3. The vitamin referred to appears to keep well in the 8 per cent alcoholic solution represented by toddy. But so far as I am aware no investigation has been made of the extent to which the vitamin content of toddy is altered by ageing. There is no reason to believe that the vitamins would be destroyed by the concentration of alcohol.

4. What is the relative strength of the vitamin in butter-milk as compared with that in fermented toddy ?

4. Toddy contains more vitamin B-1 than butter-milk. But bulk for bulk butter milk is of much greater nutritive value than toddy, due largely to the high nutritive value of the protein contained in butter milk.

5. On the whole do you recommend the consumption of an 8 per cent alcoholic drink for the sake of the vitamin in it or would you consider the evil effects of the alcohol are greater than the beneficial effects of the vitamin contained ?

5. I would not deem it advisable to take an 8 per cent alcoholic drink for the sake of the vitamin in it. The vitamin in toddy is due to the presence of yeast which is readily obtained from other sources; many other food materials available to the people of India contain this vitamin and their use is highly advantageous from the health point of view. As a medicament and to provide vitamin B-1 in a readily assimilable form toddy may have its use in cases of Beriberi but to make a habit of taking toddy because of its vitamin B content would be a pernicious practice.

CONGRESS WORKING COMMITTEE'S DECISIONS.

At the close of the Congress Cabinet meeting on Sunday evening the following communique was issued by the General Secretaries :

At the critical juncture in the history of the nation it is felt that the Working Committee should suggest for adoption by the country a solution though communal in appearance yet as nearly national as possible and generally acceptable to the communities concerned. The Working Committee shall, therefore, after full and free discussion pass the following scheme :

A WAY OUT OF DEADLOCK.

1. (a) The article in the constitution relating to fundamental rights shall include a guarantee to the communities concerned of the protection to their cultures, languages, scripts, education, profession and practice of religion and religious endowments.

(b) Personal laws should be protected by specific provisions to be embodied in the constitution.

(c) Protection of political and other rights of minority communities in the various provinces shall be the concern and be within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

ADULT SUFFRAGE.

2. The franchise shall be extended to all adult men and women.

(Note.—The Working Committee is committed to adult franchise by the Karachi resolution of the Congress and cannot entertain any alternative franchise. In view, however, of misapprehensions in some quarters the Committee wishes to make it clear that in any event the franchise shall be uniform and so extensive as to reflect in the electoral rolls the proportion in the population all over India.)

JOINT ELECTORATES.

3. (a) Joint electorates shall form the basis of representation in the future constitution of India.

(b) For the Hindus in Sindh, Muslims in Assam and the Sikhs in the Punjab and North Western Frontier Province and other Hindus and Muslims in any province where they are less than 25 per cent., of the population seats shall be reserved in the Federal and Provincial Legislatures on the basis of population with the right to contest additional seats.

4. Appointments shall be made by a non-party Public Services Commission which shall prescribe the minimum qualifications and which shall have due regard to efficiency of public service as well as to the principle of equal opportunities to all communities for a fair share in the public services of the country.

5. In the formation of Federal and Provincial Cabinets interests of minority communities should be recognised by convention.

SIND AND N. W. F. PROVINCES.

6. The North-Western Frontier Province and Baluchistan shall have the same form of Government and administration as other provinces.

7. Sind shall be constituted into a separate province provided that the people of Sind are prepared to bear the financial burden of the separated province.

8. The future constitution of the country shall be Federal. Residuary powers shall vest in the Federating units unless on further examination it is found to be against the best interests of India.

The Working Committee has adopted the foregoing scheme as a compromise between the proposals based on undiluted communalism, and undiluted nationalism. Whilst on the one hand the Working Committee hopes that the whole nation will endorse the scheme, on the other it assures those who take extreme views and cannot adopt it that the Committee will gladly, as it is bound to, by the Lahore resolution, accept without reservation any other scheme if it finds acceptance of all the parties concerned.

ANTI-UNTOUCHABILITY BOARD.

The Working Committee is of opinion that the work of the Anti-Untouchability Committee which had merged in the campaign of last year should be revived and therefore instruct Seth Jamnalal Bajaj to take the necessary steps for the purpose. The Committee shall have such powers of co-option and the like that may be required.

The next meeting of the Working Committee will be held at Bombay on the 4th and 5th of August and the All India Congress Committee on the 6th of August.

Exemption Committee's functions: The Working Committee is of the opinion that the Textile Mills Exemption Committee should endeavour wherever possible and necessary to prevent by amicable arrangement any penalisation or victimisation of labour in the mills which have signed the Congress declaration and to help in the bettering of labour conditions in these mills.

THE FUTURE OF THE PRIVILEGED.

The coming Swaraj Government would be in large measure Government of the people, by the people and for the people. The privileged may be suffered for a long while that they may have time enough to adjust themselves to the change coming over the country, but no hope can be held out to them that they will be allowed to enjoy their privileges to the end of time. The bureaucrat and the privileged have something common between them. The wane of the former strikes terror into the heart of the latter. Not only the Mussalman, but the Brahmin also, has been set thinking about his future. 'The future of the Brahmin' forms the subject of an article in The Indian Social Reformer of the 20th June.

Nobody will say that the Brahmin alone is responsible for all the ills the Hindus of the present day are heir to. Others have a share in them, no doubt. But it should be remembered that he has been the lawgiver. The guilt of the lawgiver is immensely more than that of men who have followed the Brahmin's law. As regards the anti-Brahman attitude of Mr. Sen Gupta and Sir P. C. Roy, we can say this much that, though themselves reformers, they bear no ill-will toward the Brahmin. Sir P. C. Roy has his humorous way of saying things. To take his utterances literally will be doing injustice to him. However, we agree with our contemporary when it says: "As a matter of fact, none of the great civilizing races, Roman, Arab, British, have so consistently adopted pacific methods as the Brahmin. They have certain qualities which rightly directed can yet be of great service to the country and, though they have deteriorated in many ways, they are still capable of contributing magnificently to the well-being of the land for which they have wrought and suffered for centuries."

Hindu civilisation is not the work of the Brahmin alone. Men of several castes and creeds have contributed to it. Both credit and discredit for what has been done, must be shared by all, though not equally. Like the Samuri, let the privileged part with their two swords. The Indian Messenger.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Alcohol:—Dr. O. W. Saleeby, Chairman, British Birth-Rate Commission, says: "Alcohol is reckoned to stimulate the heart. The pulse becomes faster and fuller under its influence; but ask the heart specialist and he tells a different tale. He prefers foxglove or digitalis, which we used to think a heart depressant, and now know to be a heart stimulant. It makes the pulse slower instead of faster. Alcohol paralyses the nerves that rain the heart, and so it paces away to exhaustion." He says again: "Briefly, in a word, alcohol is not a stimulant, but a narcotic. As with other narcotics—opium, ether, chloroform—there is an initial stage of excitement, which is only the narcosis of control, but which superficial judgment calls stimulation. Alcohol is the biggest fraud there is, but we have found it out, and it shall mock us no longer."

A Widow Re-marriage at Ahmedabad:—On Thursday the 18th June 1931 a widow re-marriage was celebrated at Ahmedabad under the auspices of the Social Reform Association. The bride's name is Indumati, daughter of Chandulal Amritlal Mehta (Merchant of Rangoon) by caste Desa Nagar Bania. Her age is 20 years. She was married to Mr. Nemikumar Amritlal Seth who is a jeweller at Trichnopoly. Indumati became a widow at the age of 14. Both left for Madras after the marriage.

Jain Widow Re-marriage:—Bai Sunderaba, resident of Rajkot staying at Kalapur—Mamu Naik's Pole, was remarried to a Jain, Mr. Sakrabhai Lalloobhai Gandhi on 23rd June 1931 under the auspices of the Arya Samaj. Sunderaba was 30 years old while Mr. Sakrabhai is 35 years. Sunderba became a widow at Patan at the age of 20. Sunderba belongs to Mesri Bania caste. She was the widow of Sampatlal Ramji of Patan Desa Porwad caste and a daughter of Jivraj Dharai of Rajkot. The bridegroom gave ornaments worth Rs. 500 to the bride at the time of marriage and Rs. 25 in charity to Arya Samaj.

ADVERTISEMENTS

YOGA Scientific Series

Edited by SHRI YOGENDRA
FOUNDER OF YOGA INSTITUTES IN INDIA AND AMERICA

For the health of your body and mind, read the only authentic encyclopedic work upon practical Yoga scientifically explained. Fully illustrated. Volume Rs. 10.

His series are of exceptional practical, academic and scientific interest—Free Press.

Get acquainted with his most valuable series on practical Yoga—Mercury.

A scholar who has successfully met the challenge of clinical and laboratory tests—Daily Mail.

POST BOX 481, BOMBAY.

"MY EXPERIENCE AS LEGISLATOR."

BY

DR. MRS. S. MUTHULAKSHMI REDDY,
M. B. & C. M.,

Ex-Deputy President, Legislative Council, Madras.

PRICE Rs. 2/-

Can be had from the Manager,

The Indian Social Reformer.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of

OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDRA.

Branches: } CALCUTTA.

AHMEDABAD.

POONA.

SURAT.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent, on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Potlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vitthalidas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 R. B. Govindbhai Nathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhalil Dajibhai Amin B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Malatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)
 Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.)

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

O. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulia (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " )	Dondalcha ( " " )
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " )
Karad ( " " )	Sindheda ( " " )
Tasgaon ( " " )	Nandurbar ( " " )
Satara ( " " )	Sakri ( " " )
Kirloskarwadi ( " " )	Shahada ( " " )
Shirala ( " " )	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Kalol ( " " )
Shevgaon ( " " )	Mategaon (District Nasik).
Belapur ( " " )	Satana ( " " )
Ahmednagar ( " " )	Nandgaon ( " " )
Parola (District East Khandesh).	Kalwan ( " " )
Akluj (District Solapur).	Bhiwandi (District Thana).
Viramgam (District Ahmedabad).	Paigar ( " " )

DIRECTORS:

Sir Chunilal V. Mehta, K.C.S.I.,
 Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt.,
 V. V. Garud, Esqr.,
 G. K. Devadhar, Esqr.,
 G. B. Trivedi, Esqr.,
 Rao Sahab V. C. Jadav,
 D. V. Gokhale, Esqr.,
 R. N. Rajadnya, Esqr.,
 Madhowjee D. Thackersey, Esqr.,
 Principal M. L. Tannan,
 Dewan Bahadur A. U. Malji,
 Rai Bahadur Pritamdas,
 Dewan Bahadur S. V. Mensinkai,
 V. L. Mehta, Esqr.,

SHARE CAPITAL:—

(Fully Paid) ... Rs. 12,96,900

1. DEPOSITS fixed for one year and shorter or longer periods are accepted. Rates and other particulars may be ascertained from the undersigned.
2. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened for Co-operative Societies and individuals. Interest is allowed at 2½ per cent. on daily balance not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000.
3. SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS are accepted and interest paid at 3½ per cent. on minimum monthly balance. Rules may be obtained from the undersigned.
4. THE BANK has issued Five Years Cash Certificates yielding 5½ per cent. per annum. The Bank has also arranged for the issue of Ten Tolas Gold bars. Particulars on application.
5. Drafts are issued on district and other towns on terms to be ascertained on application.
6. The Bank finances only registered Co-operative Societies in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency.
7. Accounts are audited quarterly by a firm of Incorporated Accountants and yearly by a Special Government Auditor. Quarterly statements of financial position are published in the "Bombay Government Gazette".

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay

Karachi and Calcutta, Burma sailing

at Galle, Tuticorin, Colombo and other

coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MOBARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHBA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,
INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :- Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,
General Manager.

SAFELY RELY

ON

AMRUTANJAN BALM

FOR THE CURE OF

Colds, Cough, Headaches, Rheumatism, Swellings and all other kinds of Aches and Pains.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

(REGD.)

BOMBAY & MADRAS.

IT IS YOURS

LOW IN PRICE
HIGH IN EFFICACY

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS

to cure constipation, brain-fag, etc.

Rupee One ( 32 pills ).

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY,

JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch :-

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. a p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single Copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed),

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8	( Post Free ).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10	( Post Free ).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931 :—" We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine. "

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931 :—" May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper. "

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931 :—" I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days. "

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931 : I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to :—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

LATEST BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

Hardens Rapidly giving Standard 28 days Concrete strength at 4 days.

DISTRIBUTORS :—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions :

ALLADIN & SONS.
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan :

RASHID KHODADAD & CO.
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

" BOMBAY HOUSE ",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

FLIT ADVERTISING FILM No. 3.

BRITISH MOVIE-TONE NEWS VOL. 2 No. 76.

SALLY

12 Reels, featuring

MARILYN MILLER, JOE E. BROWN, ALEXANDER GRAY, PERT KELTON AND FORD STERLING

A First National Vitaphone All Colour Taking Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News Vol. 2 No. 4.

ESCAPE

8 Reels, featuring

GERALD DU MAURIER, EDNA BEST, AND MABEL POULTON

Basil Dean Production,

A Radio Picture.

MARTINI AND HIS BAND No. 2.

ROAMIN 'IN GLOOMIN' [1 Reel,

(SIR HARRY LAUDER)

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

FLIT ADVERTISEMENT FILM No. 2.

HONEY

8 Reels, featuring

NANCY CARROLL STANLEY SMITH, HARRY GREEN

LILIAN ROTH AND MITZI GREEN

A Paramount All Talking and Singing Picture.

LIVE GHOSTS

2 Reels, featuring

AN CHRISTY AND ALICE DOLL

Universal Comedy.

HIGH HAT

1 Reel, ]

—ALICE BOULDEN—

[ Paramount Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

NO CINEMA SHOWS.

LOPRETTI'S COMPANY.

Daily 6-0 and 10 p. m.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XVI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1931

No. 47

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Fergusson College Outrage. The National Liberal Federation. A Revealing Interview. The Ferment in Indian States. The Kallar-Moslem Conflict. Our Afghan Neighbour. Wanting in Perspective. The Round Table Conference.	Women's Rights under the Hindu Law. XV. Religious Toleration. Political Hypochondria. Round Table Conference. Sir V. Sassoon. Lord Irwin on Indian Affairs. Atheistic Propaganda in America. News and Views.
---	--

NOTES.

The Fergusson College Outrage:—On Wednesday, the acting Governor of Bombay, Sir Ernest Hotson paid a friendly informal visit to Fergusson College in Poona. His Excellency had nearly finished his tour of the college and had stepped, at the suggestion of the Principal, into the Reading Room where two hundred students had assembled. He was chatting with Principal Mahajani when a student, named Gogate, fired two shots from a revolver at him from a distance of a few feet. At the first shot Sir Ernest himself caught hold of his assailant. What followed is thus narrated by the Times of India's correspondent who was a few paces behind the Governor. "His Excellency was obviously shaken. He smiled, however, to the Principal and asked him to tell the other students to sit down. At the same time he felt his waist coat over his heart. Then he spoke to the young student. "What a foolish thing to do my boy" he said, "what made you do a thing like that?" The student remained silent, but ran his hands over his face as if he did not know quite what he was doing. "Well, I suppose he will have to be taken into custody" said the Governor, and Principal Mahajani immediately sent for the police, who were in the grounds." The bullet had passed through Sir Ernest's coat, through the cover of his pocket-book, through a wad of currency notes and come upon a metal button of the pocket-book, which prevented its further progress. An Aide-camp who was in attendance and who struck down the weapon from the student's hand, found on the latter's person two revolvers with most of the chambers full of ball ammunition. Gogate when he was questioned at the Police station is reported to have given as his reasons, first, that an Indian was passed over when Sir Ernest Hotson was appointed to act as Governor during Sir Frederick Syke's absence, and that he wanted to avenge the martial law regime last year in Sholapur. Congratulations to Sir Ernest Hotson mingle with a deep feeling of relief at his providential preservation from certain death through the metal button on his pocket-book. The innate chivalry of the few words which His Excellency spoke to the boy who would have murdered him but a few minutes previously, cannot fail to impress all who read them. Sir Ernest has been generally thought to be a hardened bureaucrat impervious to the finer feelings of humanity. The pity and charity of his words spoken at such a time are possible only to a man who has a habitual inner life, and they should be a lesson to all against judging hastily from appearances. Publicists will do well to follow His Excellency's example and refrain from drawing sweeping conclusions from this most deplorable incident.

The National Liberal Federation:—The National Liberal Federation meets in Bombay next week. It was started when the National Congress finally adopted non-co-operation as its method, and the goal was defined to mean self-government either within or without the British Commonwealth. When independence was definitely declared at the Lahore Congress two years ago as its objective, the rupture between the two schools of political thought appeared to be complete and unbridgable. The appointment of the Simon Commission, however, made a temporary bridge between the two, and in the non-co-operation against that Commission the Liberals accepted the leadership of Congressmen. The connections then formed persisted albeit unofficially throughout the Civil Disobedience campaign last year. While deprecating the breach of the salt and other laws, the Liberals by their vigorous and frequent condemnation of the repressive measures of Government to prevent or punish such breaches, did much to sustain the campaign in its most critical stages. The offer of a Round Table Conference by Lord Irwin enabled Liberals to recede from their attitude of non-co-operation adopted towards the Simon Commission in which they were becoming uneasy owing to its not being their proper role in Indian public life. They attended the Conference in London last year against the protests of Congressmen but the first use they made of it was to insist on efforts being made to bring Mahatma Gandhi and the Congress into the Conference. The meeting between Lord Irwin and Mahatma Gandhi was practically forced by them on Government and the Delhi Pact, therefore, is in a large measure the achievement of the Liberals and allied political Parties. Non-co-operation is thus non-existent for the time being. Co-operation is the watchword to-day. This is really a triumph for the Liberals and others who believe in methods of co-operation. The forthcoming session of the Liberal Federation, therefore, affords a unique opportunity for closing the rift in Indian politics. The President-elect, Mr. C. Y. Chintamani, is admirably qualified to undertake this patriotic task as, though in a different camp, he has always borne hearty testimony both by word and deed to the high ideals of the Congress party and of its illustrious leader. As the All-India Congress Committee is to meet in Bombay a joint session of the Federation and the Committee, either formal or informal, if it can be arranged will be an excellent means of arriving at a common plan of action on the important constitutional questions which await solution.

A Revealing Interview:—A week ago the Indian Daily Mail reprinted an article from the "Journal of the Swedish Chamber of Commerce" by a Mr. Thore Ericson suggesting large scale operations for capturing the bulk of Indian trade for Sweden which, he said, had a duty to Britain and Europe to prevent it from passing into American hands. The very next day the Evening News of India published an interview with Sir Victor Sassoon, the Bombay textile and racing magnate, whom its representative found busy packing preparatory to shifting his head-quarters to Shanghai. Sir Victor told the newspaperman that he had decided upon this course for two reasons. He could not compete with Indian concerns with low over-head charges, and he foresaw troublous times ahead in India whereas China having tided over her troubles was now settling down. Whether Swedish optimism or Sir Victor's pessimism regarding Indian commercial possibilities, is correct, it is not necessary to consider. The latter's reasoning is interesting as evidence that the capitalist has no country and that his sole interest is to make money wherever it can be made most easily. Sir Victor, however, intends to leave his race horses behind. We would rather he remained behind and sent his horses to Shanghai. As will be seen from his speech at the Poona Seva Sadan, which we reprint elsewhere, Sir Victor is not without a sympathetic interest in social regeneration as the foundation of national progress. But you cannot make an omelette without breaking eggs and the troubles which Sir Victor dreads so much are but the travails of the birth of New India. In a letter to the Evening News this week Sir Victor seems to realise that in his first statement, which also we reprint, he did not do himself justice, and intimates that China is to be the beneficiary only of his future enterprises. He also says that when things in India settle down, he will be glad to bring back his resources to India. The palm without the dust, however, is to some minds not worth the winning.

Ferment in Indian States:—In last week's Reformer we commented on the outbreaks in the Kashmir and Pudukotta States at the northern and southern ends of India, pointing out that, behind the immediate causes of these incidents, is the general discontent extending beyond individual States. On Monday came the news of troubles in Bangalore leading to the Police firing on the crowd, and a Kallar-Mahomedan conflict in a village in Pudukotta. The same day the papers reported that some Hindus were murdered by Muslims in Junagad, and that the Rewa State Police had to fire on the crowd at Satna. The Bangalore affair arose out of differences between the workers and managers of the Binny Mills owing to stoppage of bonuses. The Pudukotta incident is said to be a rising of Kallar debtors against extortionate Mahomedan money-lenders known as Rowthers in the Tamil country. It may seem that all of these cases cannot be referred to popular discontent against the administration. But as has been pointed out by experienced administrators, all conflicts between sections of the population, from whatsoever cause, which require the armed intervention of the Police, are really expressions of dissatisfaction with Government and of want of confidence in its power or disposition to protect all classes of citizens equally. It is to be noted that the conflicts are not confined to backward States; if anything, they are more conspicuous in the more advanced than in the less progressive ones. There can be, no doubt, that the political ideas of the people have outstripped the personal rule prevailing in most of the States, and that nothing but disaster can come from persisting in the policy popularly but erroneously imputed to the ostrich of burying its head in the sand in face of danger. Notwithstanding, or rather because of, the lavish manifestations of acute discontent with the bureaucratic system of administration, there is actually far less probability of any serious revolutionary outbreak in British India than in several States the rulers of which mistake stagnation for stability.

The Kallar-Moslem Conflict:—Beyond its political interest, the Kallar-Moslem trouble in Pudukotta has a deeper sociological interest. Muslims, it is well-known, are strictly forbidden by their religion to engage in usury. The Pathans, nevertheless, have money-lending as their principal trade in India, and in the South, even Indian Mahomedans seem to ignore this religious precept. In the Punjab and Sind, Hindus are held up to odium as the money-lending class sucking the life-blood of the Mahomedan zamindars. In the South, the role is reversed, showing that given similar conditions the Muslim reacts to them much in the same way as his Hindu compatriot. The Kallars are an interesting caste or tribe. The Maharaja of Pudukotta, the Raja of Ramnad and other important landholders in the Tamil Naidu are of this caste. The great mass of the Kallars, however, are now peasants. Till recently they had "thieving" as their recognised occupation, so much so that the word "Kallan" means in Tamil a born thief. The Kallars, however, were thieves of the Robin Hood and not of the pick-pocket type. Their caste organisation was perfect and, for an annual contribution of a fixed sum according to the means of each family, it not only guaranteed the cattle and crops of the contributors against being stolen, but undertook to re-imburse them for losses if by any chance there were any. And the undertaking was strictly carried out. The late Dewan Bahadur Srinivasa Raghava Iyengar, when he visited Bombay as a member of the Police Commission, told this writer that the British Indian system of policing villages, cannot be said to be more efficient than the old customary arrangement. Physically, Kallars are tall and well-built and though their complexion is black, their features are of the Aryan type. They represent perhaps, the earliest Aryan settlement in the country.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, JULY 25, 1931.

OUR AFGHAN NEIGHBOUR.

Early this month His Majesty King Nadir Shah inaugurated a departure in the Afghan system of Government, the potentialities of which are of intimate interest to this country. He opened what has been called the first Afghan Parliament. His Majesty's "Speech from the Throne" was an impassioned oration which, with its frequent and fervent invocations of the Deity, recalls the exhortations of Oliver Cromwell to the Long Parliament. Unlike Oliver, however, King Nadir Khan appears as a protagonist not of a reformed religion but of the orthodoxy which was ranged against and finally overthrew the reforming regime of Amanullah Khan. Those of us in this country who followed with sympathetic if anxious interest the intrepid attempts of the ex-King and Queen Souriya to modernise Afghanistan, can not but make a note of the difference. It is possible and, indeed, more than probable that King Nadir Shah who, during his long residence in Europe, would have understood the difference between the essentials and non-essentials of Western civilization, is not less desirous of modernizing Afghanistan than his predecessor though he shows more circumspection in promoting reforms. Oliver Cromwell refused the Crown which was pressed upon him. But Nadir Shah has with much reluctance accepted it, no doubt because he felt that as a King he could do more for his country than as King-maker.

King Nadir Shah made it plain in his address that Afghanistan is to remain a Muslim State. Turkey has dissolved the connection between Church and State and in Persia His Majesty Reza Khan seems to be pursuing a non-denominational policy. King Nadir Shah has not seen fit to announce a similar departure. In his very first sentence he pointedly referred to this Assembly of "Muslim Councillors." No non-Muslim, evidently, will have a seat in the Afghan Parliament. Afghan Kings have observed traditionally towards the small minority of their Hindu subjects a policy of perfect religious toleration and civil equality, and some of them have even had Hindu Ministers. An enlightened ruler like King Nadir Shah, is most unlikely to depart from this long-standing tradition. The constitution of the Afghan Parliament is yet to be settled and the present Assembly is more in the nature of a Convention. The King himself referred to it as the "National Jirga" as distinguished from the tribal Jirgas and, judging from the references in his address, it would seem that the members were nominated or chosen from amongst the members of the latter.

His Majesty explained to the Deputies that the Jirga of the Nation was the natural development of the ancient Jirgas which from remote antiquity have been the real rulers of Afghanistan, although he did not omit to point out wherein they differed. The King emphasised that the inauguration of the Assembly was his own voluntary act. "Although," he said, "the Nation has up to now expressed no desire for any such things, since I considered, and still hold, a National Assembly to be the foundation of prosperity and as a special instrument for the reform of the country and which I declared in my programme on the very first day, by the grace of God on this occasion when peace prevails all over Afghanistan I am enabled to inaugurate such an Assembly." The King expressed his faith in the new system in felicitous terms which may be commended to the ruling Princes in this country who cherish a pathetic belief in the stability of autocracies. His Majesty said:—

"If you exercise properly your rights and watch the proceedings of the Government and make attempts at improving the National Assembly of Afghanistan the same will become the moulder of peace and the foundation of the prosperity and the advancement of the country; and I hope in God the High that civil wars and dissensions and disputes will disappear for ever from this motherland of ours and personal questions will no longer be the cause of the downfall and the ruin of this Islamic land. And this country will ever remain happy and the changes and revolutions will not effect, or be the cause of shattering and uprooting, the prosperity and advancement of the country and Nation; and the miscreants will not have the chance again to be at the helm of affairs. Able and righteous rulers and benevolent agents of the country and the Nation alone will be selected for betterment of Afghanistan and they will engage themselves in her service. Tyranny and the worship of innovations and corruption and bribery will disappear altogether from this country. I am in a position to say that on the day that the representatives of the Nation in the Consultative Assembly understood their rights and distinguish the harmful from the beneficial from the point of view of the general happiness and self-interest, and dissensions are removed, just from that day the epoch of the happiness of Afghanistan shall commence."

The part of the King's speech in which he gave an account of his relations with Foreign Powers, is the most important part of it from the point of view of neighbouring countries. His Majesty was at pains to dispel the impression that he was helped by the British Government in overthrowing Baccha-i-Saquo and establishing himself as the dominant personality in Afghanistan. On the contrary, he stated that the British Government had put difficulties in his way, and that his sole supporters were the several Afghan tribes when they understood the real nature of his mission. After his accession, however, Great Britain without any condition rendered help to Afghanistan in the shape of a loan of £1,75,000 without interest and 10,000 rifles and five lakhs of cartridges. King Nadir Shah said he accepted these gifts since they were free from any kind of stipulation, secret or open. By way of precedent, His Majesty recalled that ex-King Amanullah Khan also had accepted motor cars, telegraph wires, rifles and cartridges as also amounts in cash, which were not made public, from the British and Indian Governments. The King said he had given concessions to no State and so long as he was alive no such transaction would receive his signature. His Majesty gave a list of rifles and cartridges which he had purchased or was under contract to purchase from the British, French and German Governments, which naturally suggests a question as to the intentions of these additions to Afghan armaments when the rest of the world is talking of disarmament. The country has an estimated population of between 6 and 8 millions and its annual revenue in Amanullah Khan's time was about £1,000,000.

WANTING IN PERSPECTIVE.

Reuter cabled this week a summary of a speech which Lord Irwin made at Harrogate. We share our late Viceroy's belief that if Indians and Englishmen seek an agreement "in the posture of confederates in a noble undertaking" they are sure to succeed. But this is possible only if both sides recognise that they have had an equal share in the achievements of the past and can contribute equally to the record of the future. This, however, is rendered difficult by statements such as that the British "established order in India out of chaos, brought justice within reach of the humblest, and gave India a new conception of political unity." Leaving the last-named gift aside for the present, Lord Irwin's statement is a bit of bombast which one would scarcely expect of him. It can be shown by irrefragable evidence from the writings of Englishmen intimately concerned in the affairs of India at the time, that there was an indigenous and well-trying system of administration which the wisest and most far-seeing of them were anxious to preserve as the surest foundation for British rule. We shall here content ourselves with quoting a sentence from an appreciation of one of the builders of the British Indian Empire by an English writer. Mr. G. W. Forrest in his compilation of the "Official Writings of Mountstuart Elphinstone", observes that the latter's success as an administrator was chiefly due to the fact that he saw that political institutions and social usages which had lasted for centuries could not be entirely devoid of merit. Elphinstone's great endeavour in the civil administration was "to show the people that they are to expect no change, but in the better administration of their former laws." Similar passages may be cited from the writings of Sir Thomas Munro and Sir John Malcolm. These men were far too shrewd to think of building the British administration upon chaos, if that could be done.

Lord Irwin made a special point of Justice having been brought by British rule within the reach of the humblest. As it happens, it is precisely on this ground that Elphinstone commended the Panchayat system which he found prevailing, and strongly deprecated the introduction of the costly and complicated machinery of the British system. British rule has brought Justice within the reach of the humblest, but few who know it actually in operation will agree that it has brought it within his grasp. Even as regards the conception of unity, though we shall be the last to deny the contribution of British rule in this important particular, Mr. Ramsay Macdonald showed a truer perspective in his opening speech at the Round Table Conference. "When I turn to the representatives of British India," said the Prime Minister, "I am mindful it is true, of India's different communities and languages and interests, but I am reminded still more of the quickening and unifying influences which have grown up irresistibly from her contact with Great Britain, and also, and still deeper, of the aspirations for a United India which were in the minds of her philosophers and her rulers before the first English trader set foot on her shores." Making due allowance for the rhetorical element in this sentence, it is far more in accord with fact than the mountain-high claim set up by our respected ex-Viceroy. It is evident from his reference to "the historical cash balance between the two countries" that Lord Irwin was stung into his rhapsody by the Financial Obligations Report of the Kumarappa Committee. But as we remarked in noticing that Report last week, it is not Indian leaders who first mooted the idea of a cash view of the relations between the two countries. Once it was started, Indians have to meet it, and if Lord Inchcape and his fellow-financiers find themselves hoisted on their own petard, it is they who ought to be blamed.

We had occasion recently to criticise the observation in Mr. Ramanand Chatterjee's presidential address at the third All-India States' Peoples Conference, that British Indians are ashamed that Indian States are lagging behind British India in many essentials of civilised government. We said that the achievements of British India are the result of the co-operation of British and Indians and that we had as much right to be proud of them as the British. It is on the foundations laid by Hindu and Muslim rulers that Britain has been able to erect her imposing superstructure. To the extent that she has kept faithfully to the ground plan laid by her predecessors, her work will endure. Where she has departed from it without regard to Indian sentiment, it will prove a Back Bay Reclamation multiplied many times over. The evolutionary view of Indian history, which Ranade taught was the very basis of all right thinking and planning for the future, is made as impossible by Lord Irwin's overweening theory of Indian history as by the "satanic" theory of British rule. In the evolutionary view, we concentrate more upon the solid, beneficent contribution which each period or race or community has made to the common stock of Indian history, than upon the mistakes and even wrongs of which it might have been guilty. Unfortunately, most of our school histories are uninspired by this principle. Anglo-Indian historians, as a rule, make out that the Moslem period of Indian history was a long nightmare of oppression and humiliation of the Hindus and that the Hindu period was a long orgy of superstition and priest-craft. The Brahmin—Non-Brahmin antagonism in Southern India and the Hindu-Moslem embitterment in Northern India, are both the direct result of this false history instilled into Indian children at the most impressionable period of life. The acerbity in recent Indo-British relations is due likewise to imperialistic sentiments such as those which Lord Irwin permitted himself to express at Harrogate. The posture of confederation in which Lord Irwin wishes Englishmen and Indians to seek agreement, is impossible if the Englishman rides a high horse and insists on the Indian accompanying him on a lowly ass to which it is proposed to strap him down with numerous safeguards in his own interests.

THE ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE.

A revised list of members of the Federal Committee of the Round Table Conference, which is to meet early in September in London, was published on Tuesday. It contains 36 names instead of the 21 in the original Committee. Seven out of the 15 additions, are new while the remaining eight were already members of the Round Table Conference, though not assigned to the Federal Committee. The new names are Mr. Pethick-Lawrence and Lord Hailsham among British delegates and among Indians, Mahatma Gandhi, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Sir Purshottamas Thakurdas, Mr. A. Rangaswami Aiyangar of the Hindu, and Sir Manockjee Dadabhai of Nagpur.

The new members, though formally appointed by the Prime Minister to the Federal Committee, also become, it may be assumed, members of the main body of the Round Table Conference. Mahatma Gandhi, of course, goes—if he does go—as the sole spokesman of the National Congress, and is a host in himself. In Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya he will have a valued co-adjutor. As the acknowledged leader of Hindu orthodoxy this veteran worker will occupy a position of influence, second to none, at the Conference. There is no Indian living who embodies so completely the principle of the golden mean and Panditji's presence will be a tower of strength to all who seek a settlement on the basis of peace and goodwill. Sir Purshottamas Thakurdas was kept back from accepting a seat at the Conference by the non-co-operative attitude adopted by the Indian commercial community before the Delhi Pact. His selection, therefore, merely gives effect to the choice of Lord Irwin. Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar's selection, however, is Lord Willingdon's own. Mr. Rangaswami is a close student of constitutional questions and his exceptional knowledge and ability was highly valued by Pandit Motilal Nehru during the time when they were both members of the Legislative Assembly. His nomination is specially noteworthy as a recognition of the status of journalism as a formative factor in Indian public life. Disappointment has been felt in some quarters that Dr. Ansari and Mrs. Sarojini Naidu have not been added to the Conference, the former to represent the Nationalist Muslims and the latter to represent the women of India. A revised list of delegates to the Minority Committee of the Conference is promised shortly and they will very appropriately find their place in it. A more serious omission is the failure to include even a single representative of the people, as distinguished from the Princes of the States. It is obvious that the Federal Committee must be gravely handicapped by the absence of any representative to speak for States' People. Lord Willingdon has shown much insight and foresight in the handling of the political situation during the last three months. It is not, therefore, without some hope that we commend to His Excellency even at this late hour the addition of at least one representative of the States' subjects. It is said that the Princes object to sitting at the Conference with their subjects. But it is not difficult to find men who are not subjects of any of the Princes in Federal Committee or in the Conference, who are equal in eminence to any of the Ministers who are delegates, and who also enjoy the confidence of the people of the States. Such an one is Sir M. Visvesvaraya whose presence will add to the weight and dignity of the Indian delegation.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS UNDER THE HINDU LAW. XV.

(BY MR. KOPARGAM RAMAMURTHY.)

Man, it is said, does not live by bread alone. Nor does woman, for that matter. The comfort and dignity of a legally secure and honourable wedded life is as much a civilised human need as food and raiment and is as much the rightful privilege of a female as of the male. The state, of course, cannot undertake the duties of a match-maker or guarantee happiness to every married couple, because marital happiness depends upon too many factors beyond the reach or ken of the law. But when two marriageable persons have decided of their own free will to live together in true wedlock, the law of any civilised community should be able to ensure fair and honourable treatment to both of them on an equal footing without placing either of them at an intolerable and irremediable disadvantage with the other. But the matrimonial status as well as the economic status of a woman in the Hindu family is hit cruelly hard by the Hindu law and usage of our day for no other reason than that she is a female.

To Caligula, the power-infatuated and blood-thirsty Roman emperor of old, it was highly amusing to think how with one word from his lips he could cause the heads of the greatest of his ministers and nobles to roll on the floor. He amused himself with a similar thought even about his favourite wife Caesonia. While fondling her neck, he is reported to have said to her: "Fair as it is, how easily I could sever it!"

Hindu law does not indeed empower even a wayward husband to sever his wife's neck with a knife. But it empowers him, if he is so minded, to cause her crown of wifely glory to roll in the dust without a moment's notice and yet insist on keeping her head unseverably dangling at his feet to be made sport of at his leisure or insulted by the malicious tongues of the vulgar. It is the legal vesting of so much arbitrary and irresponsible power in the hands of the husband that dishonours and enslaves a wife in Hindu society even though the average Hindu man may be a Bayard of domestic chivalry. It is again this matrimonial enslavement caused by the legal disabilities imposed upon inheritance by females, that has lowered woman's personal status and human worth in the estimation of Hindu men themselves to a depth that cannot be made up for by the elevation of any number of the female sex to the Congress Presidentship, or Executive Councilorship in the Government of India. For who are a free people? "Not those over whom Government is reasonably and equitably exercised," answers Lord Acton, "but those who live under a Government so constitutionally checked and controlled that proper provision is made against its being otherwise exercised."

And our women themselves are conscious of their sad position. Some of them, no doubt,—especially the non-sufferers—are still content to regard it as part of the divine order of things, and hold up the hands in pious horror when a different order suggested under which Hindu women would be able to prevent injustice and avoid unfair treatment to themselves if they please. From the pained and reproachful manner in which they receive the suggestion and invoke the holy names of devoted wives like Sita and Savitri to their aid, an unstructed stranger might imagine that it is proposed to compel or at least call upon every married Hindu woman to divorce her husband at the earliest opportunity. Or it may seem that, unless compelled at the bayonet's point, no Hindu woman would care to be a Sita or Savitri of her own self-determined free will because the invidious law which governs them has egregiously failed, and in fact never dared to attempt, to produce by its fitness any appreciable number of Sri Ramas and Satyabhamas worthy of a true woman's devotion in this iron age. All honour to those innocent souls who oppose reform for their moral fervour and simple loyalty. Man's polygamous laws cannot hurt them and a woman's divorce laws cannot tempt them. But their misunderstanding of the reformers' purpose is bound to be superficial and short-lived. For the iron has entered the soul of Indian womanhood. The happiest women in Hindudom fully know and feel in their heart of hearts that their happiness is only a happiness on sufferance, and they love to remind each other, though yet with pathetic resignation that theirs, indeed, is a futile life of hard suffering unrequited faithfulness and unreliable happiness in this world they being of the weaker sex. "Khachita Bai, vyarthha amhi abala!" is indeed true in a wider sense than perhaps the author of the social ever dreamed.

"We must live all the days of our life in a atmosphere of inferiority, and the tallest of us must bend in order that the exigencies of the present system may be satisfied....Our talents must gradually disappear owing to sheer disuse till at last our lot is stereotyped as hewers of wood and drawers of water in our own country!" So lamented the great patriot and reformer Gokhale before the Welby Commission over a generation ago. The noblest and worthiest woman must necessarily feel small in relation to the meanest male in our country when marriage laws and property laws and social laws have all been so manipulated and marshalled and mobilised as to reduce her to mere dependence and serfdom in her own home. The mothers of the nation, who were once co-owners of property with the males, have been degraded into a race of drudging maintenance-holders by our family law. It is no wonder that we have been reduced by the unerring laws of Providence to a nation of drudging maintenance-holders in our own country—a dependents of a commonwealth of which the truly woman-honouring virile nations of the earth have constituted themselves managing coparceners. Simon Commissions and Table Conferences may enlarge the measure of our maintenance, to satisfy just the unavoidable demands of some of our immediate modest wants. They may even grant us separate maintenance and provide some safeguards against that right being entirely defeated by the all-devouring creditors and managers of the commonwealth, while leaving sufficient loopholes, big and small, to safeguard more effectually the behind-the-back transactions of the latter. But none will postulate and work out for our benefit our inherent coparcenary right in the commonwealth which alone can prevent injustice, ennoble our labours and restore our self-respect. Far less will they recognise our independent ownership of our own property, or allow us to secede at our will, even for good reason shown, from the one-sided and involuntary partnership when it has ceased to be enjoyable or tolerable.

Verily, it is Heaven that hath decreed that "posterity shall be worthy of its mother!"

RELIGIOUS TOLERATION.

(By ARTHUR YOUNG.)

It would be easy to mention a score of Indian religious publications whose outstanding feature is tolerance.

To my mind much of this is a waste of time for India is already and has been for centuries one of the most tolerant countries in the world as far as religious thought is concerned.

In the West the Inquisitors, and later the various sects of Non-Conformists, each in their turn, disgraced the civilization of its day with their atrocities. Hundreds of men and women suffered un-nameable tortures and death for their opinions. We can only look back on those times as a series of foolish tragedies.

Fortunately India has been above this form of persecution. The worshipper of Shiva will give his daughter to a devotee of Vishnu without spending a moment to consider the difference. Husband and wife will have separate Gurus and think nothing strange in this attitude.

Why then is it necessary to waste reams of paper and valuable time harping about the unity of religious thought in a country where it would be difficult to find anyone to dispute it?

But is India really tolerant outside the realm of religious thought? When it comes to putting into practise the theories of the Vedas and living the philosophies of the Shastras India can make no compromise. Life here appears to hang on the slender thread of fanatical custom. The hollow street cry of the politician for freedom comes from the heart of a slave to the tyrannies of caste and the idiosyncrasies of petty rites and habits. Guru Govind Singh is said to have cut off the leg of the horse he was riding because a tobacco leaf had touched it while crossing a field. In Rameshwaram they washed the brass vessel in which I had eaten with the urine of the cow because I was an European.

This intolerance spells something more than the irksome burdens it lays on the people. It is soul destroying and demoralising. On the one hand India demands the right to live according to her own ideals of life but at the same time the Indian as an individual stoutly denies this divine right to his brother Indian.

This is the frame of mind which breeds the spiritual superiority-complex of the hypocrite who either enlarges the values of his own view-point or demands of an aspirant a code of conduct which he himself can never acquire or only pretends to outwardly possess. We have learnt to deify the symbols of virtue and not the things these symbols represent and the result has been a crop of spiritual mountbanks.

Brahamacharya, Simplicity, Abstinence, Humility and Ahimsa have become the stock in trade of every pedlar of piety. The Sermon on the Mount is meaningless if the preacher is not clothed in rags and the Gita has no value unless the reader has taken pains to see that his face does not appear to have been washed.

Back of this thick curtain of ignorance and intolerance lies India's beautiful vision of reality but those who have seen it do not talk. Commercialized spirituality has almost made it impossible to do so.

POLITICAL HYPOCHONDRIA.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

With reference to the above named article which appeared in the Indian Social Reformer on page 619 and 620 in which I have observed that you have very rightly objected to certain remarks made by Dr. Moonje against the Muslims. After giving the speech of Dr. Moonje you have given your own opinion opposing the views of the Doctor.

In another article by one B. M. S. in the same issue on the subject of Prohibition and cow-slaughter the writer has attacked Muslims for not giving up cow-slaughter in view of the sacred belief of the Hindus. That an Indian Christian, unlike Muslim, is more friendly and takes part in the Hindu holidays.

After giving the whole article of the writer without any deletion or addition you have given below it your own views which have defeated all the arguments of the Hindu writer.

I very much appreciate the way in which you first take the articles as they come in from the narrow-minded Hindus lacking in sense of judgment and give below the article your editorial views which totally eclipse those of the writers of the aforesaid type. Thus a great deal of misunderstanding between the Hindu writers and the Muslim community is removed.

It may interest you to know that the issue of the news in question was exhaustively read by many people here from whom I have heard many words of appreciation for your frankness.

May I, therefore, ask you to continue to give your opinion on such articles that are sent for publication in your paper and are directed to increase the Hindu Muslim tension instead of promoting the welfare, means for which, are so closely explored by our Nationalist leaders.

Zanzibar. }

Yours, etc.,
AKBARALI HASHIM.

ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE.

MEMBERS OF THE FEDERAL COMMITTEE

The following communique was issued on the 20th: The Prime Minister has nominated the following members to attend the resumed meetings of the Federal Structure Sub-Committee of the Indian Round Table Conference on 5th September. Lord Sankey (Chairman), Mr. H. Y. Lees, Mr. F. W. Pethick-Lawrence, Sir Samuel Hoare, Lord Peel, Viscount Hailsham, Marquess of Lothian, Marquess of Reading, His Highness Maharaja Gaekwar of Baroda, His Highness Maharaja of Bikaner, His Highness Nawab of Bhopal, His Highness Maharaja of Rewa, His Highness Chief of Sangli, Nawab Sir Muhamad Akbar Hydari, Sir Muhamad Mirza Ismail, Colonel K. N. Haksar or Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, Sir Maneckji Dadabhoy, Mr. M. K. Gandhi, Mr. A. Rangaswami Iyengar, Mr. M. R. Jayakar, Mr. M. A. Jinnah, Mr. T. F. Gavin Jones, Mr. N. M. Joshi, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Hon'ble Provosh Chunder Mitter, Dewan Bahadur A. Ramaswami Mudaliar, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Right Hon'ble Srinivasa Sastri, Dr. Shafaat Ahmed Khan, Sir Muhammad Shafi, Mrs. Subbarayan, Sir Syed Sultan Ahmed, Sir Purshottamdas Thakurdas, Sardar Sahib Ujjal Singh, Mr. Zafarullah Khan. Invitation to delegates in England are being issued by the Prime Minister and to delegates in India by His Excellency the Viceroy on his behalf. The Minorities Sub-Committee will be summoned to reach London on September 26th so as to be ready to resume work early in October. The names of delegates to be added to this Sub-Committee will be announced shortly. The date of the summoning of the full conference has not yet been definitely fixed, but it is hoped to make an early announcement together with names of the additions to the personnel.

PANDIT MALAVIYA AND THE R. T. C.

While the Civil & Military Gazette's Simla correspondent says that Mahatma Gandhi told him that he did not want Pandit Malaviya to accompany him to London, and that his place was in India along with Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, an A. P. I. telegram from Simla states that "it is understood that Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya will accompany Mahatma Gandhi to England by the S. S. Multan sailing on the 15th August." For our part we would much rather credit the second statement than the first. It is inconceivable, writes the Tribune of Lahore, that the Mahatma could in this matter, have bracketed Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya with Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel. Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, besides being the President of the Congress for the year, is a follower of Mahatma Gandhi in the strictest sense of the term. Pandit Malaviya, on the other hand, though in the Congress, holds a distinctly independent position, and in many matters of vital importance he has consistently opposed Mahatma Gandhi. Mainly for this reason he has not the same influence in Congress circles that Sardar Patel or Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru commands, though, of course, he is universally respected and revered. It cannot, therefore, be said either that the Pandit's presence in India is needed in the same sense or to the same extent as the presence of Sardar Patel is needed in the opinion of the Mahatma, or that his presence in England along with Mahatma Gandhi would be superfluous. He would undoubtedly, in many matters, bring an independent mind to bear on the questions that will come up for discussion; and both on account of the ripeness of his judgment and his vast and almost unrivalled experience of public life in India, his advice is bound to be of the greatest value both to Mahatma Gandhi himself and to the generality of delegates, both Indian and British. We, therefore, earnestly hope, whether the Congress delegation is or is not enlarged, that Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and some other leading Indians, including a number of nationalist Muslims like Sir Ali Imam and Dr. Ansari, will be definitely included in the Indian delegation.

SIR V. SASSOON

Sir Victor Sassoon is bidding good-bye to Bombay next October and making China, the principal centre of his commercial activities.

Questioned by a Times of India representative about his reasons for that decision, Sir Victor said things were getting stabilised in China and the Nanking Government and the Chinese banks were very anxious to carry out some joint scheme for the development of Shanghai and China generally. "I think the time should soon come when business will be possible on a large scale in that country whereas here in India we find our business is contracting, the only big stake we have here now being our mills and mill management."

Asked what the causes of the contraction of their business in India were, Sir Victor said that a great deal of it was due to the fact that they found they could not compete with Indian firms with small over-head charges. He continued "Then, too, the political situation does not encourage one to feel that one should launch out on big schemes in India for the time being. On the other hand China is now getting over her civil wars and other troubles. It looks as if India under Swaraj will have a great deal of internal trouble. That is what it looks to the ordinary business man."

China had her troubles for the past 15 years, but there appeared to be a prospect of her getting out of it. Incidentally, there was a general feeling in India which is against the foreigner developing the country which they called "exploiting" whereas in China, realising, as they did, the necessity for foreign finance, they were only too glad to have the foreigner working with Chinese interests.

"Is there no feeling against the foreigner in China?" Our representative asked.

Sir Victor answered: "There is a political movement in China against what they call unequal treaties; but, as far as the business community and the Government are concerned, they admit that China cannot be developed without the help of foreign capital and foreign experience and they are doing all they can to attract such capital and experiences. They are deliberately setting out to get foreigners to come into partnership with them. It is true that there was an instance the other day where certain nationalistic elements were complaining about the Kaifeng coal fields belonging to foreigners, but the Government are doing all they can to settle that trouble because they realise that, unless the foreigner is made to feel that he is welcome and that his money is safe, he will not be prepared to take business risks in China, which would be against the best interests of that country."

RACING ESTABLISHMENT TO CONTINUE UNDISTURBED FOR THE PRESENT.

Sir Victor was lastly questioned what he proposed to do with his racing establishment in Bombay and Poona. He replied that he had settled nothing about it; but until other arrangements were possible or until someone came forward to take over the racing establishment it would go on as at present.

He did not want to disturb the large number of people employed in his establishment and he did not want to cause any dislocation if he could help it, certainly no sudden dislocation. He added that he proposed every three years or so to pay short visits to India to see how things were going on.

In conclusion, Sir Victor said he was now busy packing up. He had been taking things easy for the past few months, as he had had a great deal of hard work during the past three years, what with his business and his public work. He was spending most of his time in Poona and coming to Bombay only for a couple of days in the week. He said, he was paying a visit to Simla next week.—Evening News.

AT THE POONA SEVA SADAN.

On Monday, July 13, Sir Victor Sassoon paid a visit to the several hostels and institutions conducted by the Poona Seva Sadan Society.

After returning to the Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey Hall where the staff and women students of the various departments had assembled, Mr. Devdhar introduced the distinguished visitor to the audience and in doing so, brought to the notice of the audience the very high position that he occupies amongst the prominent leaders of this country. Sir Victor made a brief speech. He said:

"I am an old bachelor and it is no use bringing an old bachelor to visit such an institution, as I am unworthy of your sex. Perhaps Mr. Devdhar thought that I may be of some use to this institution, because I had had to tour throughout India as a member of the Royal Commission on Labour in India for nearly two years. Everywhere the greatest need the Commission noticed was of educated women to teach their less-educated sisters; but where were the workers to be found for this purpose? I find that the Seva Sadan is the institution to supply that crying need. That is why I feel it a great honour to have been invited to pay a visit to this institution. If you, the present students as well as those who have already passed through this institution and those who would pass in future do your duty of educating your sisters, then they will be able to penetrate through the dense forest of superstition and ignorance and thereby advance the cause of this country. In my opinion the work that you will do in this direction is of much higher importance than the work that we, men have been doing in legislative assemblies and provincial councils."—Leader.

LORD IRWIN ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

An earnest appeal to India and Britain to approach the Round Table Conference as confederates in a great and noble undertaking, was made by Lord Irwin at the conclusion of a speech at Harrogate, in which he reviewed the conditions for a successful outcome of the Conference. Urging critics to face facts, Lord Irwin referred to the "remarkable and instructive" history of the British connection, and said that the British had established order out of chaos, brought justice within reach of the humblest, and given India a new conception of political unity. No praise, therefore, was too high for men who had given their lives to this service and created the present day India. Lord Irwin thought that, if it was ever seriously suggested to strike a historical cash balance between the two countries, Britain's account under such heads would be found to stand at an overwhelming credit. Lord Irwin emphasised that the big problem for him had been how to ensure the retention of a contented India within the British Commonwealth. He said that two broad facts had emerged from the history of Indo-British relations during the last century. On one side, was the fact that modern India, politically, administratively and intellectually, was largely a product of the British connection and it would be the greatest disservice to India for the connection to be rudely and suddenly dissolved. On the other hand, was the fact that the political thought of India was firmly determined to see India responsible for her own affairs, an aim which all British Parties had accepted. It was also clear, proceeded Lord Irwin, that any proposals designed to reconcile these facts, must have regard to the position of minority interests in India. No solution would work, which did not give the minorities a firm sense of security and content. Britain, therefore, was bound to satisfy herself that, if and when she transferred power to other hands, the just interests of minorities were fairly and adequately protected. Lord Irwin added that, while it was desirable that this, if possible, should be attained by agreement between the communities, Britain was unable to divest herself of responsibility, if an agreement was impossible.—Reuter.

ATHEISTIC PROPAGANDA IN AMERICA.

The Editor, the Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Some months back, I received a few leaflets from the American Association for the advancement of Atheism, 307 East 14th Street, New York City, bearing, of course, on the subject of Atheism in general. One of them is entitled, "What is Religion?", which is said to be the last public address of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, an American Atheist.

In this letter, an attempt is being made, in all humility, to touch upon the broad features of the address, which are meant only to disprove the existence of God.

A PANDORA'S BOX.

On page 2 of the leaflet, one finds a veritable Pandora's box:

"The dungeons against whose dripping walls the brave and generous have sighed their souls away, the scaffolds stained and glorified with noble blood, the hopeless slaves with scorched and bleeding backs, the writhing martyrs clothed in blame, the virtuous stretched on racks, their joints and muscles torn apart, the flayed and bleeding bodies of the just, the extinguished eyes of those who sought for truth, the countless patriots who fought and died in vain, the burdened, beaten, weeping wives, the shrivelled faces of neglected babes, the murdered millions of the vanished years, the victims of the winds and waves, of flood and flame, of imprisoned forces in the earth, of lightning's stroke, of lava's molten stream, of famine, plague and lingering pain, the mouths that drip with blood, the fangs that poison, the beaks that wound and tear, the triumphs of the base, the rule and sway of wrong, the crowns that cruelty has worn and the robed hypocrites, with clasped and bloody hands, who thanked their God—a phantom fiend—that liberty had been banished from the world, these souvenirs of the dreadful past, these horrors that still exist, these frightful facts deny that any God exists who has the will and power to guard and bless the human race."

The above passage, is, indeed, long and represents only the seamy side of life. Who is responsible for this? Man alone—no one else. Man has been developing his lower nature so far, and "as long as man is self-centred and erects walls of separation between himself and his fellows, his desires come into conflict with the law of universal love and retard his progress" (D. S. Sarma's 'A Primer of Hinduism' p. 53.) The imperfection of the world is his own creation and God cannot be, therefore, rightly blamed for it, especially, in view of the considered opinion of the Atheist that no God created or governs the Universe.

EXPERIENCE, THE SOLE FACTOR.

It is said in the leaflet that "Man advances, and necessarily advances through experience." Mr. Ingersoll refuses to believe what theologians say, "There is a power that works for righteousness." and supernaturalism cannot find a place in his theory. May I in this connection, beg to allude to an experience which fell to my lot on the 15th of February, that is the last Maha Sivarathri day. I was troubled in mind whether an Abishekam should be done for God Vinayaka here on account of Sivarathri. I looked into the account book to know whether there was any Abishekam last year on that day and when there was nothing in the book to show that there was one last year, I almost dropped the idea. No sooner had I done this, than a neighbour who is, at present, undergoing training in the Government Training School at Ranipet (North Arcot District) called on me and informed that he had come all the way from Ranipet to perform the Abishekam on that particular day. I was greatly over-powered with feelings of emotion and felt in the inmost of my heart that there is, behind all the hurly-burly of life, a great Power guiding and ruling the Universe.

FLING AT CHRISTIANITY.

Again, the leaflet in a happy-go-lucky manner tries to have its fling at Christianity. It says: "What has been the effect of Christianity in Italy, in Spain, in Portugal, in Ireland? What has religion done for Hungary or in Switzerland, in Holland, in Scotland, in England, in America? Let us be honest. Could these countries have been worse without religion? Could they have been worse had they had any other religion than Christianity?" The point to be noted in this connection is: How for these countries followed the precepts of Christ? The plain answer is that they have not done so to any appreciable extent, and so the question, "Has Christianity done good?" does not arise at all. This has been simply put forth just to cry down Christ and incidentally God—for Christ is the son of God according to the Christian doctrine.

NO MASTER FOR NATURE.

Another important feature in the leaflet is that Nature has no master and that it is uniform. In support of this Mr. Ingersoll says: "I have a theory and I have four corner-stones. The first stone is that matter—substance—cannot be destroyed, cannot be annihilated. The second stone is that force cannot be destroyed, cannot be annihilated. The third stone is that matter and force cannot exist apart—no matter without force—no force without matter. The fourth stone is that that which cannot be destroyed could not have been created; that the indestructible is the uncreatable." Then he adds: "If these four corner-stones are facts, Nature has no master. If matter and force are from and to eternity, it follows as a necessity that no God exists; that no God created or governs the Universe; that no God exists who answers prayer; no God who succours the oppressed; no God who pities the sufferings of innocence; no God who cares for the slaves with scarred flesh, the mothers robbed of their babies; no God who rescues the tortured, and no God that saves a martyr from the flames." Note, please, the 'if,' in the above passage, which greatly detracts its worth. Hinduism reveals that God is both transcendent and immanent. He is in the world and also beyond it. The Svetasvatara Upanishad says: "He is the one God, hidden in all creatures, all pervading, the self within all, watching over all works, shadowing all creatures, the witness, the perceiver, the only one free from qualities." On this authority, Edward Carpenter, the humanist, observes that there is "only one witness, one self, throughout the Universe. It is hidden in all living beings; men and animals and plants; it pervades all creation. In everything that has consciousness it is the self; it watches over all operations, it overshadows all creatures, it moves in the depths of our hearts, the perceiver, the only being that is cognisant of all and yet free from all" (Edward Carpenter—"The Teaching of the Upanishads" p. 23.)

CONCLUSION.

At the close of his address, Mr. Ingersoll, believing in Ernst Haeckel, flatly refuted the belief that God created man and all the living beings. He observes: "We now know, if we know anything, that the universe is natural, and that men and women have been naturally produced. We now know our ancestors, our pedigree. We have the family tree." He then referred to the failure of reformers in reforming the world, despite all their efforts, and pointed out that the installation of Passion in the place of Intelligence was the sole cause of the failure of the reformers hitherto and the filling of the world with failures. Science, and not religion, can be the lever of raising mankind and this is his fad.

The East always believes in the existence of God, and this belief is in the very bone and marrow of India. And no amount of propaganda to the contrary can dislodge us from such opposition.

Natteray
10th July 1931.

Yours, etc,
E. GOVINDAN.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Pratiloma Marriage:—A Hindu girl who was born in America of Brahmin parents, became an orphan and was brought to India by a friend. She was married to a wealthy Marwari as his third wife (though the other two were living) through the machinations of an unscrupulous gang later disowned by her husband, who challenged the validity of the marriage and contested her claim for maintenance. This was the story narrated before Mr. N. J. Shaikh, District and Sessions judge, Jalgaon. Jasoda, a poor minor girl, is now under the guardianship of Mr. G. K. Devadhar, President of the Servants of India Society, and is residing in Seva Sadan. The point involved in the case was whether a marriage between a female of a higher caste (in this instance, a Brahmin) and a male of a lower caste (in this instance a Marwari Vaishya) otherwise called a Pratiloma marriage by the Hindu Dharma Shastras is valid in law. The facts of the case came to light during the hearing of an appeal lodged before Mr. Shaikh by Nandalal, a rich Marwari of Chopda (a town in Jalgaon district) against the order of the second class sub-judge of Chopda granting maintenance of Rs. 100 per month to Jasoda, who claimed to be his wife by lawful wedlock. It appears that Nandalal was in search of a third wife although his first two wives were living. Jasoda was at the time staying with Mayaku Malla, who brought her to India. A man named Babulal and his associates came to know of her history and hatched a plot to make use of her for their own profit. They represented to Nandalal that she was a Vaishya girl and settled the marriage, which was celebrated with great pomp. Babulal and his friends received large sums of money. The fraud, however, was soon detected and before the consummation of the marriage, Jasoda was sent to Seva Sadan at Poona and information was lodged with the police. Babulal and his gang were arrested, prosecuted in the Sessions Court at Jalgaon and heavily punished. At the same time Nandalal filed a civil suit in the court of the sub-judge of Chopda against Jasoda, praying for a declaration that their marriage was void under Hindu law and that no rights whatsoever existed between them as man and wife. Jasoda, who was then 18 years of age, appeared through her guardian Mr. G. K. Devdhar and contended that she was the lawful wife of Nandalal. The Sub-judge held that the marriage between the parties was invalid but upheld Jasoda's right to maintenance from Nandalal as Pratiloma marriages, though looked upon with great disfavour, were allowed by Hindu law. Against the judgment, Nandalal appealed to the district court. In the appeal court a compromise was arrived at, by which it was agreed that the marriage was declared void and that no rights existed between the parties. Nandalal was to pay Rs. 2,000 to Jasoda and Rs. 500 to Seva Sadan. The appeal court sanctioned the compromise terms and allowed the suit to be withdrawn.

Depressed Classes and Bombay Police Forces:—A deputation of the Satara District Mahar Seva Sangh, Bombay, waited upon Mr. G. S. Wilson, C. S. I., the Commissioner of Police on the 12th June 1931, headed by Mr. R. S. Nekaljay J. P. ex M.L.O., in connection with the enlistment of Mahars from the Satara District in Bombay Police Forces. During the course of conversation Mr. G. S. Wilson, C.S.I. the Commissioner of Police assured the deputationists that he is ever ready to give all assistance and encouragement to the Mahars in the enrolment provided they were found physically and in other respects fit. It was also mentioned by the deputationists that Mr. Nekaljay has been trying hard for the enlistment of Mahars in the Bombay City Police Forces since 1924, and the then Police Commissioner (Mr. D. Healy) informed Mr. Nekaljay vide his letter No. 6235/256a of 9-7-24 as follows:—"That owing to other social disadvantages under which members of the Mahar community at present labour it is not possible to enlist them in the unarmed Police; it may be possible about two years hence when the new police lines will have been constructed at Naigaum for the armed Police to enlist Mahars then in the armed branch." But now the deputationists were overjoyed to know the recent notification of the Government of Bombay, to the effect that members of the depressed classes will be enlisted in the Bombay City Police Forces henceforth. The deputationists wanted to congratulate Mr. G. S. Wilson, publicly on the high honour of O. S. I. conferred upon him, and to show him some of the young Mahars of Satara District who are eager to get themselves enlisted in the Bombay City Police Forces. Therefore, under the auspices of the Satara District Mahar Seva Sangh, Bombay, wrestling matches were arranged from among the "Satara District Mahar Talimkhana" Bombay, and held at the Y.M.C.A.'s Hut at Naigaum, Dadar, on Tuesday the 7th July 1931 at 9-30 P.M. which Mr. G. S. Wilson, O. S. I. had been kind enough to attend and distribute prizes. Mr. Wilson was greatly pleased to see the well-built young men of Satara Dist. and further assured that he will see that some of them are enlisted. The function was attended by more than 3000 persons and nearly 1000 had to keep outside the hut, for want of accommodation. Mr. G. S. Wilson was garlanded and congratulated. The Satara District Mahar Seva Sangh is greatly indebted to Mr. O. H. Gibbs of the Y. M. O. A. for his assistance in lending the hut for the purpose and Prof. D. M. Kalyanpurkar for very ably managing the matches as one of the judges.—(From a Correspondent).

ADVERTISEMENTS

Yoga
Scientific Series
Edited by SHRI YOGENDRA
FOUNDER OF YOGA INSTITUTES IN INDIA AND AMERICA

For the health of your body and mind, read the only authentic encyclopedic work upon practical Yoga scientifically explained. Fully illustrated. Volume Rs. 10.

His series are of exceptional practical, academic and scientific interest—Free Press.

Get acquainted with his most valuable series on practical Yoga—Mercury.

A scholar who has successfully met the challenge of clinical and laboratory tests—Daily Mail.

POST BOX 481, BOMBAY.

"MY EXPERIENCE AS LEGISLATOR."

BY

DR. MRS. S. MUTHULAKSHMI REDDY,

M. B. & C. M.

Ex. Deputy President, Legislative Council, Madras.

PRICE Rs. 2/-

Can be had from the Manager,

The Indian Social Reformer.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.
PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a

HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT

with us and earn 3½% interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDEA.

Branches: CALCUTTA.

AHMEDABAD.

POONA.

SURAT.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balances Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent, on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mohans, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patau, Amroli, Bhavsagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kelol, Kadi, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED ... .. 60,00,000
 CAPITAL PAID-UP ... .. 30,00,000
 RESERVE FUND ... .. 24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

- Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
- Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent, Ahmedabad).
- Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
- Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
- R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
- Raj Retna Bhalla Dalibhai Amin B. A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda).
- Sheth Pransukhbhai Malatiai (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
- Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.) Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
- Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 2½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-2-26.

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

—101—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 annas

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

83/1, Amherst Street, CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Sludkheda ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Sutara ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Kalol ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nashik).
Belapur ( " " ).	Satana ( " " ).
Ahmednagar ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Parola (District East Khandesh).	Kaiwan ( " " ).
Akluj (District Solapur).	Bhiwandi (District Thana).
Virangam (District Ahmedabad).	Paighar ( " " ).

DIRECTORS:

- Sir Chunilal V. Mehta, K.C.S.I.,
- Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., Esqr.,
- V. V. Garud, Esqr.,
- G. K. Devadhar, Esqr.,
- G. B. Trivedi, Esqr.,
- Rao Sahab V. O. Jadav,
- D. V. Gokhale, Esqr.,
- R. N. Rajadnya, Esqr.,
- Madhowjee D. Thackersey, Esqr.,
- Principal M. L. Tannan,
- Dewan Bahadur A. U. Malji.
- Rai Bahadur Pritamdas,
- Dewan Bahadur S. V. Mensinkal,
- V. L. Mehta, Esqr.,

SHARE CAPITAL:—

(Fully Paid) ... .. Rs. 12,96,900

1. DEPOSITS fixed for one year and shorter or longer periods are accepted. Rates and other particulars may be ascertained from the undersigned.

2. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened for Co-operative Societies and individuals. Interest is allowed at 2½ per cent. on daily balance not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000.

3. SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS are accepted and interest paid at 3½ per cent. on minimum monthly balance. Rules may be obtained from the undersigned.

4. THE BANK has issued Five Years Cash Certificates yielding 5½ per cent. per annum. The Bank has also arranged for the issue of Ten Tolas Gold bars. Particulars on application.

5. Drafts are issued on district and other towns on terms to be ascertained on application.

6. The Bank finances only registered Co-operative Societies in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency.

7. Accounts are audited quarterly by a firm of Incorporated Accountants and yearly by a Special Government Auditor. Quarterly statements of financial position are published in the "Bombay Government Gazette".

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay

Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling

at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other

coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MOBARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA
and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,371

Prompt settlement of claims

*Head Office :—*Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

SAFELY RELY

ON

AMRUTANJAN BALM

FOR THE CURE OF

Colds, Cough, Headaches, Rheumatism, Swellings and all other
kinds of Aches and Pains.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

IT IS YOURS
LOW IN PRICE
HIGH IN EFFICACY

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS

to cure constipation, brain-fag, etc.

Rupee One ( 32 pills ).

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY,

JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Diadigul.

Rs. a. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single Copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

LATEST BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

Hardens Rapidly giving Standard 28 days Concrete strength at 4 days.

DISTRIBUTORS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore
BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:
ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:
RASHID KHODADAD & CO
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

FLIT ADVERTISEMENT FILM No. 4.

BRITISH MOVIE TONE NEWS VOL. 2 No. 80.

HALF SHOT AT SUNRISE

10 Reels, featuring

BERT WHEELER, ROBERT WOOLSEY AND DOROTHY LEE

R. K. O. Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News Vol. 2 No. 5.

MIND YOUR BUSINESS

2 Reels, Fox Movietone Comedy.

CANARIES SOMETIMES SING

10 Reels, featuring

TOM WALLS, YVONNE ARNAUD, ATHOLE STEWART AND

CATHELEEN NESBITT.

British and Dominions Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

FLIT ADVERTISEMENT FILM No. 6.

BEAU BANDIT

1 Reel,

EL BRENDA AND FLO BERT.

SALLY

12 Reels, featuring

MARILYN MILLER, ALEXANDER GRAY AND JOE E. BROWN

First National Vitaphone Production.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

NO CINEMA SHOWS

MATINEE AT ALL THE THEATRES ON TUESDAY 28th JULY

(BANK HOLIDAY.)

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XII.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, AUGUST 1, 1931

No. 48

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Murder of a Bengal Judge.	A Commendable Example.
The Liberal Position.	Untouchability Problem.
Dangers of Pseudo-Federation.	Liberal Judaism.
Sex Disqualification.	Evangeline Booth on Prohibition.
"What Then?"	Fallen Angels.
The Liberal Movement in Religion.	Reduction in High School and College Fees.
Missionaries and Missions.	Hindu Mahilashram.
Professional Women and Personal Standards.	A Medical Man's Lapse.
An Indefatigable Social Worker.	Congress and Conversion.
Prohibitor in America.	Levi Barbour Scholarships for Oriental Women.

NOTES.

The Murder of a Bengal Judge:—Mr. R. R. Garlick, District and Sessions Judge of Alipore, was shot dead in his court on Monday afternoon by one Bimal Das Gupta who was also shot dead by a policeman on the spot. A piece of paper found on Gupta stated that he did the deed as a reprisal for Mr Garlick's sentencing Dinesh Gupta for the murder, some months back, of the Inspector-General of Police in Bengal. The funeral of the murdered Judge was attended by a large gathering of Indians and Europeans, and the Calcutta Corporation and other public bodies have expressed their abhorrence and condemnation of the murder. There is not the least doubt that the great majority of the population, even of those who are not professing adherents of non-violence, view such murders with disgust. But there is no use shutting our eyes to the distressing fact that there seems to have grown up a group—it cannot be a large one—of young men who are prepared to lose their life in their self-imposed mission of murdering officials whom they regard as their special enemies. It is a disquieting fact which it would be folly to ignore. At the same time, the worst way of dealing with it is that, adopted by some Anglo-Indian newspapers, of discovering, inventing or imagining underground connections between it and political movements which work in the open. Instead of isolating the area of infection and applying to it appropriate disinfectants, they would widen it as much as possible and practically force people into it by suggesting whole-sale complicity in these fanatical crimes. Instead of securing the cooperation of the public, this method is calculated to estrange the public without whose support this poisonous growth cannot be rooted out. The law should, of course, take its course, and there are few of these cases in which it has failed to take its toll. Side by side, it is necessary if the evil is to be eradicated to find out why men of some education and intelligence think nothing of risking their young lives in this blind and futile manner. Meanwhile, we can but express our deep sympathy with Mr. Garlick's family and our strongest condemnation of the mad act which has caused them this cruel bereavement.

The Liberal Position:—The Bombay Liberals held a public meeting in the Servants of India Society's Hall on Tuesday. Sir Cowasji Jehangir presided and spoke on the "Task before the Liberal Federation." He was followed by Messrs. V. N. Chandavarkar, A. D. Shroff and B. N. Gokhale. Sir Cowasji said that the main achievements of the Round Table Conference were that all the British parties agreed to the transfer of responsibility at the centre, and that there was unanimous agreement that the future government of the country should be Federal. He gave a reason which we have not heard before for keeping the Army a reserved subject under the Crown when other subjects were transferred to responsible Ministers. It is that the Crown having, by treaties, undertaken to protect the Princes, the forces needed for this purpose cannot be transferred to an Indian Government without the consent of the latter. Two points arise from this argument. The Crown has no doubt undertaken to protect the Princes but it has not undertaken to withhold self-government from its Indian subjects in order to protect the Princes. If the Crown thinks that the time is come when its Government of India should become a responsible one, it has every right to transfer all the powers of the present Government to the new one. When the announcement of November 1917 was made, or when in November 1929 Lord Irwin declared that by that announcement full responsible government was meant and nothing less, we are not aware that the Princes were consulted or asked for their assent. Sir Cowasji Jehangir correctly represented the Princes' view of their own position. Perhaps, this was all that he intended. But it is not the British Indian and can not be the Liberals' view. Mr. Chandavarkar who followed pointedly demurred to this view and urged that the Liberal Federation should not be too sensitive as to what might happen if the Princes withdrew. He urged that the people of the States should have a voice in the election of the representatives of the States in the Federal Legislature because they could not have election in British India and nomination in the States.

Dangers of Pseudo-Federation:—The circumstances in which the Punjab States Peoples' Conference which met in Simla last week, was declared and dispersed as an unlawful Assembly are obscure. An All-India States' People's Conference was recently held in Bombay and Provincial Conferences have been held elsewhere without any trouble. The President of the Simla Conference, Mr. A. V. Thakkar, is a senior member of the Servants of India Society and is well-known for his solid social work among the Bhils. In his address to the Conference he laid stress on two important points. The first was that the Federation of the States with British India without any modification of the autocratic system prevailing in most of them, would result in its petrefaction, making future reforms much more difficult than if the States remained outside. The whole strength of Federated India will, under the proposed scheme, be at the service of the Princes for resisting constitutional progress. Secondly, British Indian freedom itself will be under constant danger of curtailment at the hands of a Cabinet in which upholders of the autocratic system are to have an assured place. Both are real dangers which should be avoided by restricting admission to the Federation to such of the States as are prepared to agree to grant fundamental rights to their subjects as defined in the Federal statute and to introduce the elective principle in the choice of representatives to the Federal Legislature. No one who is watching the course of events in the States during the last two or three weeks, can fail to see that affairs are rapidly moving towards a crisis in more than one of them. Sir Mahomed Shaffi and other Moslem leaders have set at nought the principle of non-intervention of British India in the affairs of the States and have demanded British intervention in Kashmir to protect Muslims. Mr. Lalji Naranjee and other Hindu leaders have appealed to the Viceroy to protect Hindus whose lives and property, they fear, are in imminent danger in Junagad. The communal movement which so far has kept within British India, is now overflowing into the States and there is no saying which will next come in its sweep.

Sex Disqualification:—Mr. Raffiuddin Ahmed, the Bombay Education Minister, has taken a bold step forward in appointing a lady Professor of English in Elphinstone College. Our own view is that in Government Colleges at any rate, the Professor of English should be an English scholar of standing. But if this is not possible, no distinction should be made on the ground of sex between men and women for this office. In the case of a similar appointment in Morris College, Nagpur, a Committee was appointed to make a choice from among candidates for the post. Amongst these, we understand, were two Indian ladies exceptionally well qualified, one of them having taken a special course in London University in the English language and literature, after graduating with distinction in Nagpur University. A correspondent, writing in the Hitavada, says that the Selection Committee has passed over the two lady candidates solely because of the accident of their sex. Nagpur which was long under the jurisdiction of Bombay University has taken over from the latter the principle of co-education in the collegiate stage, and there are, therefore, no separate women's Colleges. If professorship are not to be altogether barred to women, therefore, there should be no bar against their being nominated to the Morris College staff.

The appointment is not yet made, and it may be hoped that the Minister and His Excellency Sir Montagu Butler will take a broader view than the Committee of the question, as an important principle is involved.

"What Then?":—We published last week a letter written by Mr. E. Govindan commenting on a leaflet which he had received from America advocating Atheism. When we received the letter, we were surprised as we are under the impression that atheism is not now the fashion. It was a relief, therefore, to see that the tract consisted largely of excerpts from the writings of Colonel Ingersoll, a noted propagandist of Atheism some fifty years ago. We published the letter rather as a curiosity than as of current interest. The name, Ingersoll, nowadays is known chiefly in connection with a certain make of watches, but it was a great name in the anti-religious world half a century ago. A friend of ours was a great admirer of old Ingersoll and used to reprint his writings and distribute them free by hundreds wherever he went. On one occasion, he handed a batch of these to the late Mr. G. Subrahmanya Iyer, the founder and Editor for many years of the Hindu of Madras. Mr. Iyer just looked at them, and asked the enthusiastic distributor what it was all about. "Ingersoll, Sir," he replied "has conclusively proved here that there is no such thing as God." Subrahmanya Iyer was silent for a moment, and then quietly asked, "Granting that Ingersoll is right and God does not exist, what then?" The ardent admirer of Ingersoll was not prepared for this question. "What then?" he repeated half amazed and added feebly "Nothing". "Then, why take all this trouble about nothing?" rejoined Mr. Iyer and handed back his tracts to his would be proselytiser. This friend later in life became intensely religious. He daubed his forehead with vibhuti (sacred ashes) and performed the sandhya morning noon and evening with meticulous care. What wrought this change in him, not even his most intimate friends knew.

The Liberal Movement in Religion:—We reprint this week from the Unity of Chicago a remarkable paper on Liberal Judaism. It was published in that always stimulating paper in the form of a letter from a Jew to a Christian friend who had complained that he felt that he belonged nowhere and that he had given to Jesus what belonged alone to God. Our object in reproducing the larger part of this letter is two-fold. First we wish to call attention to the fundamental similarity of the liberal movement in all religions. The features of liberal Judaism as described by the writer, who is evidently one of its leading exponents, are essentially those of liberal Hinduism between which and Judaism there is a striking parallel, both historical and conceptual. On this we may have to say something more on a later occasion. Secondly, we wish to disabuse educated Indians of the wholly unjust idea many of us have acquired of the Jewish character from Shakespeare's Shylock. In the whole range of literature, there is no other instance so terrible of the devastating power of genius to stamp its prejudice on a whole race and for generations by a single portraiture. The letter will, we hope go some way to dislodge the idea that Shylock is the typical Jew for all time.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, AUGUST 1, 1931.

MISSIONARIES AND MISSIONS.

Children of men ! the unseen Power, whose eye
For ever doth accompany mankind,
Hath look'd on no religion scornfully
That men did ever find.

Which has not taught weak wills how much they can ?

Which has not fall'n on the dry heart like rain ?
Which has not cried to sunk, self-weary man :
Thou must be born again !

MATHEW ARNDLD.

Mrs. Ada Reed Fergusson, Director, Department of Temperance and Missions, of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union, Chicago, writes: "I am sorry your attitude seems to be against Missionaries, for I do not believe that you are really against them nor their work but we must agree to disagree on such questions and work together for the good of India as each one of us sees it." We are not against missionaries many of whom are valued personal friends, but we do strongly object to their proselytising methods. This is not our attitude only. It is that of all Indian social and religious reformers, beginning from Raja Ram Mohan Roy. Like the Raja also, Indian reformers have a profound reverence for Jesus Christ and his teachings. Moreover, amongst the first to protest against proselytising methods were some far-seeing and thoughtful missionaries themselves. We are glad to see that the protests made in India have induced thoughtful men and women among them to look into the question, and that they, with their innate sense of justice, are coming forward to declare that there is much truth in the Indian attitude. We received by the last mail a copy of "The Methods of My Master" (Arthur Stockwell, London) by Mr. W. M. Ryburn "one who first in the Great War and then on the mission-field, has come to grips with the deepest problems of our age." Mr. Ryburn's views on mass conversions are more uncompromising than those of Mahatma Gandhi, and is almost identical with that of Poet Tagore whose letter to an American correspondent we published in the Reformer of the 11th July. "Jesus," Mr. Ryburn writes, "had a grave suspicion of mass movements. He did not trust the crowd and its sudden enthusiasms. He disliked its emotion and knew too much of crowd psychology, ever to put reliance on the surgings of the multitude. One cannot imagine Him indulging in the methods sometimes used to convert men and women, where mob psychology is consciously and unconsciously brought into great play."

Mr. Ryburn says that many missionaries in India are finding that the mass movement has become a source of weakness to the Church rather than of strength and that in many places it is being found necessary to revise rolls drastically.

There is a passage in Mr. Ryburn's book which may be misunderstood to mean that it is our view that the social reform movement has failed because it did not attempt to reform the religious ideas of the people of India. This is emphatically not our opinion. There is, on the other hand, ample evidence that the movement has succeeded in nearly everything it undertook to reform. One has only to take an early volume of the Reformer to see how some changes which evoked the bitterest opposition have now ceased to attract notice. Prohibition of inter-dining and the ban on sea-voyage have disappeared. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya would not have dreamt of going to England fifteen years ago. Inter-marriages must always be the exception but they no longer call forth any public expression of disapproval. Remarriage of widows which more than any other reform aroused the fierce resentment of orthodox Hindus, is now regarded with acquiescence and the parties find little difficulty in mixing socially with their relatives and friends. Nautch parties have disappeared as a form of social entertainment and the institution of devadasis has been abolished in many temples. Except among elderly persons who contracted the evil habit in their younger days and are unable to give it up, total abstinence has become the rule among intelligent people, and Prohibition occupies the front place on the nationalist programme. The social reformers, it is true, do not seek to change the religious ideas of the people. In dealing with social evils, they adopted two lines of operation. The early reformers showed that the religious books of the Hindus did not sanction these evils, and the later reformers clinched the matter by insisting that social customs should not be made matters of faith but must be judged according to their results on social and individual wellbeing. The Sarda Marriage Act could not have been passed twenty years ago. The Women's Movement which has attracted wide attention, is not, as it is sometimes described, a sudden miracle at the call of Congress leaders but the fruit of years of patient work by social reformers in combatting the prejudice against women's education and association with men in the public life of the country. Though social reformers did not directly attempt to reform the Hindu religion, the indirect effect of their labours has been to relieve it of a dead-weight of depressing material and to open the way to a clearer understanding by the Hindus of the abiding truths of their religion.

PROFESSIONAL WOMEN AND PERSONAL STANDARDS.

Under the heading "A Medical Man's Lapse", we published in the Reformer of the 23rd May the judgment of Mr. G. Davis, District and Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad, in the case of Dr. Balubhai Harishanker Bhatt, Municipal Councillor of Nadiad. He was charged with abduction of and assault on Miss Ahalyabai Samant, a lady doctor in charge of the Municipal Dispensary at the same place. The Judge found the accused guilty of the charge of assaulting the complainant with intent to outrage her modesty and sentenced him to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Dr. Bhatt appealed to the High Court. The Sessions Judge had thought it necessary to explain why he gave a severe sentence in this case. He said: "It must be made clear that young Indian women who are engaged in Municipal services in the districts either as doctors or in other social service are not the prey of non-officials (sic). I am not passing the sentence in anger or indignation which the circumstances must arouse in any decent man, but this is a bad case and there are aggravating circumstances, and the public interest demands that I should pass a severe sentence which would leave no room for doubt and misunderstanding." In the High Court, the Judges accepted the finding of the Sessions Judge on the charge of assault but reduced the sentence to one of fine only. The reason for reducing the sentence to one of fine, seems to be contained in the following remarks in the Chief Justice's judgment. His lordship observed: "If women engaged in professional work come out into the open world, they must adopt the standards of ordinary men and women of the world. They cannot expect to retain the hyper-sensitive notions of modesty which their ancestors in the purdah may have possessed."

But for these observations occurring in the course of the observations of the learned Chief Justice, printed elsewhere, we should have had nothing to say on the result of the appeal in this case. The exposure and the loss of public esteem in a case of this kind, are in themselves sufficient punishment for a medical man whose private character is part and parcel of his professional competence in a sense which does not hold good of a lawyer or a merchant. The reduction of sentence, therefore, is not a matter for criticism. But the observations of the Chief Justice quoted above, lend themselves to the construction that the lady in this case was needlessly put out owing to her having retained the hyper-sensitive notions of her ancestors in purdah. Brahmin women, or other women for that matter, have never observed purdah in this part of the country. Of the women of India, they are the most accustomed to move about freely. Moreover, the complainant in this case, besides her school days, must have spent four or five years in a medical school or college along with men—there being no special institutions for women in this Presidency. The dissecting room is no place for prudery. A lady doctor, even if she had emerged from purdah herself to enter a medical school, will have very little hyper-sensitiveness when she begins to practice her profession. It appears from the judgment of the District Judge that the complainant had not taken the case to Court of her own will but had been forced to do so by the action of some other persons. She had only wanted that Dr. Bhatt should not continue to occupy a position of authority with reference to her in the Municipal service. It is rather a large proposition that women who take up a profession should adopt the standards of ordinary men and women of the world. What are these standards and who are ordinary men and women? Are the standards obtaining in Europe to be taken as the ordinary standards for India? If this is to be taken as the rule, the difficulties in the way of Indian women taking to social work, already great, would be tremendously increased. The District Judge from his experience of the country knew that when such cases come before a Court—which they seldom do—they have to be met with severe censure in order to stiffen public opinion which, unfortunately, lacks stiffening up in many places.

AN INDEFATIGABLE SOCIAL WORKER

Of all his co-adjutors none has thrown himself so whole-heartedly into the social and constructive side of Mahatma Gandhi's programme, as Sheth Jammalal Bajaj. For the removal of untouchability and other disabilities of the antya class, he has done much both by example and propaganda. Keeping strictly to whatever is good or indifferent in the ways of his people, amongst the most conservative of Hindu castes, Sheth Jammalal has boldly led the way in breaking down customs involving gross social injustice and cruelty. In his social work, Sheth Jammalal has his whole family with him. In the days when he was in jail, the calm courage with which Mrs. Jammalal and her daughters were to the front in every phase of the struggle, was an inspiration to those who saw it. In his genius for making staunch adherents of whole families, Mahatma Gandhi has a great advantage over other Indian leaders. Sheth Jammalal opened the other day a Hindu Mahila Ashram at Vile Parle, a suburb of Bombay, which is intended to be an institution for educating and training widows in social and national service. In doing so, he made a speech full of feeling for the sad condition of Hindu widows. In one remark, if it is correctly reported, he seems to have implied that before Mahatma Gandhi no one had thought of the position of Hindu widows. This, of course, is incorrect. The origins of history are sacred, and it is the fact that for about a century Indian reformers, beginning with Raja Ram Mohan Roy and Pandit Iswar Chandra Vidyasagar, have been very seriously concerned about the lot of widows. In Bombay, Maharashtra and Gujarat there were pioneers who braved persecution of a kind of which we can have no conception to-day to relieve them of their worst hardships. It is well, says an ancient preacher, to praise the fathers who begat us. Let us at least not forget them.

Prohibition in America:—The interested and insidious propaganda having for its object to discredit the Prohibition movement, has influential agents in India. One form of it which is very common is to suggest in various ways that Prohibition in the United States has failed. Even some Indians have swallowed this fable, and Ministers and Members of Government have defended their pro-liquor tendencies by pointing to the supposed experience of America. To such people, the careful and detailed statement which Miss Evangeline Booth, head of the Salvation Army in the United States, contributed to the Manchester Guardian, which we reprint, may be commended for perusal. Miss Booth does not say that the Prohibition law is implicitly obeyed by every citizen of the States. She estimates that of the 120,000,000 persons in the States, no less than 100,000,000 keep the law. She quotes Edison as being of the opinion that the liquor law is sixty per cent. enforced, which is rather higher than the enforcement of many other laws.

A Commendable Example:—We have more than once pointed out that retrenchment in education is peculiarly objectionable as being calculated to affect the life of future generations. Raising of school fees has the same effect, being in fact a fine on parents and guardians for not withdrawing children from schools. This is so obvious that it is a matter of constant surprise that not only Government but even Universities in India act as if they were totally blind to it. Several Provincial Governments including, we are sorry to say, the Bombay Government, have laid themselves open to this charge. We, therefore, note with pleasure that one Provincial Government, namely, that of the Central Provinces has resisted this temptation and has not only not raised fees, but has actually cut them down by about 30 per cent. We agree with our correspondent, whose letter we print today, that the Education Minister, Dr. S. Deshmukh, is entitled to credit for this measure of prudent statesmanship.

UNTOUCHABILITY PROBLEM.

ITS SOLUTION.

(BY SWAMI ISWARANANDA OF RAMAKRISHNA MISSION.)

How does one become untouchable? Just because he is lacking in soucham. No clean man likes to associate closely with another who is dirty in his habits. Therefore those communities who remained habitually dirty without trying to improve themselves were considered as a whole untouchable by others. This is how untouchability first arose. Therefore, in order to remove untouchability the cause which produced it must be removed and the solution of the problem lies in the observance of better and clean habits and customs by the so-called untouchables. No one is untouchable by his birth but makes himself so by his habits and it lies within his power to become a touchable by observing better acharas. In this way many individuals and communities who were considered untouchable silently gained admission to the touchable ranks, during Pouranic and medieval times, by an improvement in acharas and the same thing is happening even now. One has only to observe how the educated, and so of better acharas, from among the so-called untouchables are treated on many occasions on equal and familiar footing by the other castes without in the least discriminating against their caste or community, to be convinced that real purity in acharas and cleanliness will force its way to recognition. The less the demonstration the more sure. And the same treatment will be gained by all in proportion to their purity of acharas and soucham.

The Vaidika Dharma does not contemplate the keeping down of any community in degradation and outside its pale; if it were otherwise it would not have been Dharma, but Adharma. The object of Varnashrama dharma is to raise one and all to the highest ideal of Brahmanya through better and better acharas and ethical and spiritual culture. And in proportion as any community made progress in this line its social status also was raised and recognised and equal privileges accorded to it by others. And those who neglected to do so, lost their caste and were degraded in status. Says Manu (Ch. 10, verse 85): "As the son of a Shudra may attain the rank of a Brahmana and as the son of a Brahmana may become a Shudra, even so is it with the son of a Kshatriya or Vaishya." Apastamba Dharma Sutra (Khanda 11, Sutras 10 and 11) lays down the same principle. "When a change of Varna takes place that community which has led a virtuous life gets promoted to the next higher Varna and that which neglected its dharma slips down to the Varna next below it." Again, in the Mahabharata, Sri Mahadeva says to Uma: "Gifted with knowledge and science, purified from all dross, and fully conversant with the Vedas, a pious Kshatriya by his own deeds becomes a Brahmana. It is with the help of these deeds, O, Devi, that a person born in a degraded caste may become a Brahmana purged of all sins and possessed of Vedic learning." (Anusashana Parva, Ch. 143, Verses 45-46).* "Even a Sudra, O, Goddess, who has purified his soul by pure deeds and who has controlled all his senses, deserves to be waited upon and served with respect as a Brahmana. This has been said by the self-created Brahma Himself. When a pious nature and pious deeds are seen in even a Sudra, he should, according to my opinion, be held superior to a person of the three twice-born castes. Neither birth, nor purificatory rites, nor learning, nor offspring can be considered as grounds for conferring upon one the dignity of a twice-born person. Indeed, character is the only ground. All Brahmanas in this world are Brahmanas on account of character. A Shudra, if he is of good conduct, is considered as equal to a Brahmana." (Anushashana Parva Ch. 143, Verses 48-51).

It is, therefore, clear that according to the purport and intention of the Shastras the so-called untouchables must be given more and more privileges as they go on making improvements in their achara. According to Manu, there can be only four Varnas and not a fifth and this injunction can be fulfilled only by raising the status of the avarnas and giving them a place in the Chaturvarnyam. In Shanti Parva (Ch. 65, verses 13-18) it is laid down that the duties and rites laid down in the Vedas (Vedadharmakriyah) should also be followed by all the aboriginal tribes and foreigners settled in the country who were outside the Chaturvarnyam—peoples such as Yavanas, Chinas, Pahlavas, Kankas, Kiratas &c. Conversion or better assimilation to Varnashrama Dharma went on vigorously till the Mahomedan conquest and since then only slowly. In this way hundreds and hundreds of Avarna communities were assimilated and made Savarnas. The Vaidika Dharma is once more awake and the old process must go on vigorously. The object of the Varnashrama scheme will be fulfilled only when all Avarnas have been made Savarnas and not a single untouchable is left outside the Varnashrama. It is the sacred duty of every follower of Sanatana Dharma to fulfil this injunction of the Shastras and complete the plan of work laid down by our Rishis.

As regards temple entry, a standard of cleanliness may be insisted upon in the case of every one of every caste. Thus, as a suggestion, one who has taken his bath that day and put on freshly washed clothes may be allowed to go in and make darshan, whatever may be his caste. It is enough that the same standard of cleanliness asked of others be insisted upon in the case of the so-called untouchables, at the time of temple entry. Every Hindu knows that the sanctity and purity of the temple is not to be defiled by unclean clothes and bodies and this rule will be strictly observed by untouchables as well as by others. Mere birth should not be a bar to temple entry and when admission is given to those among them who observe soucham, it will serve as a great incentive for others in the community to emulate these and improve themselves. Similar rules of cleanliness may be insisted upon in the matter of the use of wells, tanks &c.

* Agamasampanna. This is in keeping with the Vedic declaration (Sukla Yajurveda, Ch. 26, verse 2): "These auspicious utterances (Yedas) have been given out for all mankind: Brahmanas, Kshatriyas, Sudras, Vaishyas, maid-servants and aliens."

(To be concluded.)

LIBERAL JUDAISM.†

(BY A LIBERAL JEW.)

Fosdick, one of the greatest living Christian preachers, and one of the bravest of the Christian liberals, sums up the difficulties in contemporary Christian thinking by distinguishing between the religion about Jesus and the religion of Jesus. He pleads for a return to the religion of Jesus. He declares that multitudes of so-called Christians.....

"...have a religion about Jesus. They suppose that that is Christianity. As a matter of fact, one cannot so have a religion about Jesus that by itself will make him a Christian. A man is vitally and inwardly a Christian only to the degree in which he himself possesses the kind of religion which Jesus Christ possessed..... This emphasis upon the centrality of the spirit of Jesus in Christianity is crucially important if our modern problems are to be successfully met. Here is a new generation needing as much as any generation in human history a vital and dynamic faith, but a mere religion about Jesus does not get within reaching distance of our major problems. A man can have a religion about Jesus and harbor bitter racial prejudice; he can have a religion about Jesus and be a rampant militarist, a narrow nationalist, a hard-handed industrial autocrat; he can have a religion about Jesus and be unfit to live within a home. But no one can have the religion of Jesus and be that..... One of the greatest hours in Christian history will have struck when once more the religion of Jesus takes the center of the scene."

This eloquent and moving plea is so striking and apparently so reasonable that it may be worth while to examine its logical implications—implications which perhaps even Dr. Fosdick has not followed to their end.

The religion of Jesus was Judaism. There can be no question about that. And a return to the religion of Jesus would be a return to Judaism. Does Dr. Fosdick plead for a return on the part of Christians to Judaism? This is the only possible construction of his words; but is Dr. Fosdick willing to go that far? There can be no half-way house. Either Jesus was the son of God in the exclusive Christological sense, or he was not. To those who reject theological Christianity, Pauline Christianity, the religion about Jesus—there is no alternative, if they be consistent. Fosdick's religion of Jesus is one of two things, either Fosdick's religion about Jesus or, it is the projection of an ideal human being in whom is all the best that humanity can dream or conceive. But, if he be the highest of which man can conceive he is still the creation of man. He is not God. And if one says, well, God too is the projection of the holiest we know, then there is no need of Jesus as God; for then there would be two Gods. But this is impossible. In making his plea for a return to the religion of Jesus Fosdick is presenting only another and a different religion about Jesus—namely, his religion about Jesus, for in Fosdick's religion of Jesus we have the Jesus personality at the center and core. He merely substitutes for the old-fashioned "religion about Jesus," [his new-fashioned "religion of Jesus." The only return from the religion about Jesus to the religion of Jesus is the return from Christianity to Judaism.

† Reprinted from the Unity of Chicago. See Notes.

I do not want to mislead you, however, as to our Jewish position. We, too, are going through the throes of theological disintegration. There are many Jews today whose loyalty to the synagogue is just as attenuated as the loyalty of thousands of Christians to the church. There are many who continue to support the synagogue for purely sentimental reasons or because they too are not brave enough to break completely, but follow the line of least resistance. Of course, with us there is this great difference. Christendom really at heart would not welcome the Jew, all the efforts at conversion to the contrary notwithstanding. But we, Jews, are faced with the same problems as our Christian brethren: how shall we rebuild the structure of religious life which is falling about our heads? This is as true of orthodox Jews as it is of reformed or Liberal Jews.

We, Liberal Jews, have broken with orthodox Judaism on many points. We have discarded the authority of the Schulchan Aruch, that codification of rabbinical laws made by Joseph Karo, a teacher of the sixteenth century, which prescribes the daily duties of the Jew. We have declared that the same right and duty which inhered in the Rabbis of old to legislate for their time is incumbent upon the Rabbis of today; that the sixteenth century cannot legislate for the religious needs of the twentieth century any more efficaciously than it can legislate for the traffic problems of our day. Liberal Judaism excludes from its prayer book those aspirations which voiced the longing for the rebuilding of the Temple and the reintroduction of the sacrificial cultus. It discards the beliefs in bodily resurrection and the coming of a personal Messiah. Liberal Judaism accepts the principle of evolution in religion as well as in science and looks towards the gradual achievement of a messianic time to which all good men of all creeds and peoples are contributing.

But Liberal Judaism has its problems just as heartbreaking as Liberal Christianity. The solution of them will mean perhaps the rewriting of our theology in very fundamental things. It will mean facing squarely many basic questions: What is the Jew? Is he a race? Is he a denomination such as Protestant or Catholic? Is he a nation in the sense that the French or English are nations?

Is he a nationality? What is nationality? Why should the Jew continue to refuse to intermarry? Why should he retain his distinctiveness? What is the "mission of the Jew?" In what sense, if any, is he a "chosen people?" What compromises in thinking and conduct will he be called upon and can he make without sacrificing his identity? How can he maintain his integrity and why? Our best critical thought today is engaged in examining anew the foundations of our beliefs and our purposes.

( To be concluded. )

EVANGELINE BOOTH ON PROHIBITION :

When Miss Evangeline Booth, Commander of the American Salvation Army, was recently in England, the Manchester Guardian asked her for two articles setting down her personal experiences of prohibition in the United States.

"The report of lawlessness in the United States," said Miss Booth, "should be read in the light of history. It is a drama that covers a century.

"In 1900 the rate for homicide was 2.1 per 100,000 of population. Under the regulation of liquor that rate rose rapidly to 7.5 in 1919—that is, it was more than trebled. Such crime is, as it were, cumulative, and once permitted, tends to increase by its own momentum. But despite the moral disturbance of the war and all that we have heard about bootlegging, the rate was in effect stationary at 8.6 in the year 1925—a figure which means that the whole of these illegalities and degradation of public life, including a high rate for murder and banditry, were antecedent to prohibition, and, indeed, created the situation with which Prohibition has to grapple. The question is not whether Prohibition has led to lawlessness. The only question is not to the extent to which the enforcement of Prohibition is progressively restricting the lawlessness organized by the liquor trade before this measure was adopted. Before Prohibition and after Prohibition the drink trade, legal or illegal, has flourished most where crime also has been most prevalent,

"NOT A FAILURE."

"Faced by prohibition, the liquor trade wherever it is carried on, and in whatever form, with it is associated less respectable enterprises, has been mobilized as a solid unit of opposition. Every weapon of ridicule and of misrepresentation has been brought into play against 'the noble experiment,' and in particular, the avenues of publicity have been filled with assumptions that Prohibition is a hypothetical failure. That is what liquor in Europe wants Europe to believe, but for Great Britain, confronted by a serious industrial situation, it is important, surely, to study the facts of the case."

Miss Booth here speaks of the economic benefit of the policy and says that in one great Corporation employing 101,000 workers, there were only thirty men discharged in 1927 for intoxication, whereas in 1915, there were 202 employees out of 8,755 dismissed for drinking, or 2·31 per cent. In 1925, only 1·8 men out of 13,100 were so dismissed, or ·89 per cent. In 1911, the number of discharges for liquor on an elevated railroad in New England was 81. In 1926, it was 8.

"The population of the United States is today 122,000,000. A reasonable estimate of the position is that 100,000,000 people are keeping the law. Of the remaining 22,000,000 we may assume, perhaps, that half are well-to-do and half are of the wage-earning class. From these figures, sufficiently near the mark to form a basis for judgment, it will be seen at once that statistics may be very misleading to the eye. Suppose that each of the 22,000,000 wets spends a dollar a week on liquor, it would work out at over dollars 1,000,000,000, or £200,000,000 a year, yet for each consumer it would only mean one drink every three days."

Miss Booth states as her opinion that under the Eighteenth Amendment, consumption of liquor has been enormously reduced from the pre-prohibition level of 22·66 gallons per capita annually, and she quotes Thomas Edison as being of the opinion that the liquor law is sixty per cent enforced, which is rather higher than the enforcement of many other laws. Miss Booth continues:

"The enormous decrease of expenditure is reflected in statistics, the meaning of which is unmistakable. In 1919 there were 18,000,000 savings accounts, totalling dollars 28,500,000,000. The sensational increase in insurance tells the same story. When the Eighteenth Amendment was carried, the amount of insurance was under dollars 30,000,000. It is now over dollars 180,000,000,000. It has more than trebled, and the numbers of holders of stocks and bonds doubled.

"Among numerous testimonies, here is one from a firm where there used to be 50 to 100 wives after every pay-day asking for advances because the husbands' wages had gone to the saloon. In three years under Prohibition there were two such applications. I can testify to the fact that such instances could be found in every centre of industry from coast to coast."

The Salvation Army, which is feeding 35,000 persons a day in New York, finds the relief problem simplified after the open saloon has been closed according to its commander. "If a law is 90 per cent enforced, the American claims it is 90 per cent a success," says Miss Booth. "The Englishmen answers that it is 10 per cent a failure, but the real question is not whether 'anyone can get it' but how many people do get it. When the theaters are closing on Broadway, the throngs go to the cream counters and cafes. In the smoking room of a Pullman train, some traveller may pull a flask from his hip pocket, but the main body of passengers travel for days and nights taking their meals on route without indulging in any breach of the law."

She states as her opinion that the workers of the United States "have been benefited beyond all expectations by the Eighteenth Amendment. A new era has been inaugurated.

"In Chicago we have two hotels; respectively, they accommodate 511 and 250 men. Ten years ago one-third of these men would have been described as drunks. On a given Sunday not long ago, selected because Sunday falls on a week-end, it was found that there were six drunks only. In January, 1930, the larger of these hotels was subjected to an unforeseen test. Owing to a report of smallpox in the city, all of the men were vaccinated without notice by an independent physician. Not one man was found to be under the influence of liquor—this in Chicago. On February 26, 1927, the Associated Press reported that in Chicago the two or three drunks per week did not justify the continuance of the Night Court, which hitherto had sat regularly to deal with such cases.

"From industrial homes and other institutions and from stores for the disposal of second-hand goods the verdict is all in the same direction. In New York City the famous night consecrated to rescue of drunks from streets and parks has had to be abandoned. There were not enough drunks in the streets and parks to justify that special evangelism. The experience of many charities tends in this direction."

Formerly, says Miss Booth, the Bowery in New York was notorious as the great crime center of the metropolis, if not of the country. There were four saloons to every block. The lodging houses in those days were notorious for the peddling of rum, dope, stolen goods, and debauchery. Prohibition has driven all this illicit traffic under cover and out of sight.

"There was much bootlegging going on in the days of the saloon—more than in these days. In fact, I have had policemen, some of them now retired, tell me that the Bowery and Third Avenue was a veritable hell on earth from the vices and brawls that went on, not only from the gangsters and the tough boys of the neighbourhood, but many families as well.

"A great change has come over the working man. They have gotten away, more or less, from the idea of the treating habit. They have gotten away from the habit of visiting the corner saloon; they are now saving their money, a fact which can be corroborated by the savings institutions, and some of the largest in New York City are located on the Bowery. There are more banks on the Bowery today than there are places where drink can be brought. I am speaking of the Bowery itself, not counting the intersecting side streets. There are more places of worship on the Bowery than speakeasies. There are more restaurants and coffee-houses; in fact, the Bowery is the headquarters of jobbers who supply equipment for the 'Coffee Pot' in greater New York. They are substitutes for the saloons."

FALLEN ANGELS.

(By ARTHUR YOUNG).

A previous issue of the Indian Social Reformer, dealt with the work being done in Bombay in connection with the removal of undesirable women.

Unfortunately this subject is one in which few people care to mix and most of those who do so approach it with the narrow mentality of the Puritan.

Let us face the facts and if possible acquire a truer perspective of a state of things which has existed in our midst from time immemorial.

So far it appears that the only solution which is being applied is to eject these women from their present homes leaving them to settle elsewhere till they again become conspicuous when the same remedy is repeated.

Brow-beaten by society, expecting nothing but cruelty from our so-called world of respectability, they move on from place to place.

They have not a friend to call their own. Everybody is their enemy. Even the men and saloon-keepers who make a living off them use every trick to swindle them.

They have ceased to know the meaning of human compassion and once having fallen, soon give up all hope of ever getting another chance.

Ejected from one home, these unfortunate women, do not leave the city. They simply scatter and hitherto respectable neighbourhoods are invaded.

If it were possible to stop prostitution in this way it would have stopped long ago. It never can be stopped, either in this way or another way, until we change human nature, and I hardly think we can do that.

An American writer on the subject, Mr. Robert McLaughlin states: "If you will grant that the elemental things in human nature cannot be changed to any great extent, is it not logical to conclude that it is impossible to stamp out sins which arise from these natural impulses which go deep into the very springs of human causes? We must decide whether it is better to set apart a district or wipe out such a district and drive its residents to all other parts of the city.

"Let us once for all recognise that the calling of these women is one of the oldest professions in the world; it is older than history itself. It is older than mythology. Venus, the aphrodite of the Greeks, is its goddess, and temples have been raised to her in all ages. History is filled with the names of her illustrious devotees. Among her devotees are names that have changed the map of the world. Helen of Troy is one and if she was a myth, Cleopatra was real.

"And there was Sappho, one of the world's greatest poets; and Phyrne, the model of Praxitides; and Aspasia, the classic mistress of Pericles, the Pompadour and Madame du Barry, and Catherine of Russia, and Dianna de Poitiers—women who have made and shaken empires, and Nell Gwynne the pet of a prince.

Is it not possible to tear down this veil of hypocrisy and try to penetrate the very heart of this human problem? One noble woman said: "Because I have been spared such an existence it seems to me now that I ought to deal gently with these sisters of mine."

Several years ago, Calcutta cleaned out a large area occupied by this class of European women. At that time hundreds of Anglo-Indian girls had begun to work in shops and offices to occupy their time and in a small way to supplement the wages of their parents till they were married. Far from proving a success this cleaning up only created a new market for these underpaid girls who up to that time had not been faced with this particular form of temptation. What resulted is well-known. Not only Calcutta but the other cities of India soon fell under the spell through contact and example.

These fallen women of our cities whom we openly affect to despise while every Census report shows we support by the thousand, are undoubtedly the greatest safeguard of our homes. Their very presence throws into relief the difference between the chaste and the impure. If, on the one hand, they corrupt some of our youth they also raise the value of chastity for them when it is to be found.

Each one of us lives in a frame of reference. Einstein calls it relativity. Our ancient Rishis called it Maya from the root "Ma" to measure. In this article I have made no attempt to offer a solution nor do I desire to condone sin. All I wish to do is to show a just and merciful view-point.

Let us try to understand a verse which appeared in the Dawn Magazine:—

Not hers, Oh Lord, the sin is mine.
My life is mirrored in that crime.
Mine is the evil, mine the shame;
Her heart, Oh Lord, is still Thy Shrine.

REDUCTION IN HIGH SCHOOL AND COLLEGE FEES.

A correspondent writes:

A remarkable reduction in fees for the High School and College students has been ordered by the C. P. Government with a view to ameliorate the present hard lot of the agriculturists whose sons and daughters would be eligible for this concession. It might be recalled that the fees had been recently enhanced by about 13½ per cent by the old Nationalist Ministry. The decision now taken would retain the old scale of fees in the High Schools in the case of the agriculturists, (which includes even the agricultural labourers) and in the case of the Colleges the reduction brings the scale lower by 25 per cent than even that which obtained in the province before the enhancement, the total reduction effected being 33½ per cent.

This decision of the C. P. Government is the more remarkable in view of the prevailing financial stringency. The total amount which the Government would have now to forego comes up to about Rs. 35,000. The credit for this achievement goes to the Hon'ble Dr. P. S. Deshmukh, Education Minister, whose zeal and keenness in the matter of educational progress is really commendable. The C. P. Government is also to be congratulated on their bold acceptance of the proposal of the Education Minister, especially in these days when Government could ill-afford to forego even a fraction of their revenue. The decision which other provincial Governments might well imitate is bound to evoke feelings of sincere gratitude amongst the public in general and the agriculturists in particular. The decision comes in force from the 1st October next. This is one more instance where the C. P. Government has given the lead to the rest of India.

HINDU MAHILASHRAM.

On the premises of the Bhagini Seva Mandir, Vile Parle on 16th July a select gathering met to witness the performance of the ceremony of the Hindu Mahila Ashram. The ceremony was performed by Sheth Jamnalalji.

Sjt. Kalidas Dave, the Secretary read the numerous messages of good wishes and bright prospects. Mahatma Gandhi, Kaka Kalelkar of Gujarat Vidya-pith, Smt. Jankidevi, specially sent letters to the Secretary regretting their inabilities to attend.

Mahatmaji in a brief but pointed Gujarati letter to Sheth Jamnalalji said: "I regret my non-attendance at the opening ceremony of the Ashram. This new responsibility is, however, far heavier and then already too numerous. But the works which men begin in the name of God, are always blessed by him. We must entertain in that faith. This is a very valuable experience for Shanta. May God give her faith and strength."

Sheth Jamnalalji then traced the history of the Ashram since its inception and narrated the appalling and the unbearable conditions in which Hindu society used to keep its womenfolk, specially the widows. The life of the Hindu widow, he said, was literally sacrificed at the cruel altar of custom and tradition, while they were considered to be doomed to eternal perdition. The plight of a Hindu widow of the upper class was thus deplorable, and something was necessary to be done to lift them up from the depressed condition. The writings and preachings of Mahatma Gandhi did much, to change the outlook of our society. He performed the super-human task, and brought a ray of hope, and an interest to live, to these unfortunate sisters. The ideals and the work of Mahatmaji in this regard were too well-known. And the Ashram is to be conducted on those ideals and directions. Whatever our individual opinion on re-marriages of widows, we must make it clear, that the policy of the Ashram would be non-interfering. The Ashram intended to train widows in the service of society and of the nation, and thus direct their depressed life in a useful channel of service and sacrifice. They will be allowed, otherwise, to develop the qualities and capacities in any manner they chose. They would be taught the burning problems of society and of the nation and would be free to serve in the direction of ameliorating the society.

Concluding, he appealed to all present to help in all possible ways the Ashram.

A MEDICAL MAN'S LAPSE.

Holding that his subsequent conduct was inconsistent with the view that in placing his hands on the person of the complainant he was acting in an entirely innocent manner, the Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court and Mr. Justice Barlee, on the appellate side, confirmed the conviction of Dr. Balubhai Bhat, Municipal Councillor and Chairman of the Sanitary and Hospital Committee of Nadiad, on a charge of outraging the modesty of a woman. Their Lordships, however, thought that the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment passed on him by the Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad was too severe and directed it to be reduced to a fine of Rs. 200.

The accused, while on his way to attend to an urgent labour case about three miles away from Nadiad, with the complainant Miss Ahilyabai Samant, also a doctor, placed his hands on her shoulders. She resented the act and, leaving the accused, climbed up a tree, where she was said to have remained for three-quarters of an hour, fearing that she might be further assaulted.

The prosecution story was that the accused took her away on the pretext of her being wanted to attend to an urgent labour case at about 1 a. m. on December 8 last and then committed the offence of outraging her modesty. He was, therefore, also charged with abduction in the lower Court, but he produced evidence to show that he had in fact received urgent summons from the pillage called Salon to go there with a lady doctor. The Sessions Judge, therefore, gave him the benefit of the doubt on that charge.

The lady in her evidence stated that the accused put his hands round her shoulders and kissed her, but the defence case was that as the result of an accident the car ran into a ditch when the accused, in order to protect her from the consequences of the accident, put his hands on her shoulders.

His Lordship the Chief Justice, in the course of his judgment, remarked that in the statements, which she made prior to her examination in the Sessions Court she had omitted the details regarding kissing. It was suggested that she had refrained from doing so out of modesty, but his Lordship was unable to see why she should have been less modest in the Court and was not prepared to accept the details, which she had added. His Lordship thought that all that the accused did was to put his hands on her person and there was no suggestion that he did anything, which could be described as an indecent gesture. It was also to be noticed that as soon as she protested, he refrained from doing anything further.

The Chief Justice disbelieved the defence story of an accident and held that the true story was really the one given by the complainant in a statement to the President of the Municipality that the accused put his hands on her person and in doing so the car ran off the road. If that was a true view of the facts, it remained to be seen whether the act of the accused amounted to an offence. The Government pleader had contended that in considering that question, one must have regard to the position in life of the complainant. In the present case they were dealing with a young Brahmin woman of good family and, his Lordship assumed, of the highest moral character. She was, however, trained as a doctor and was now carrying on her work as a doctor.

Proceeding, his Lordship observed: "If women, engaged in professional work, come out into the open world, they must adopt the standards of ordinary men and women of the world. They cannot expect to retain the hyper-sensitive notions of modesty, which their ancestors in the purdah may have possessed. At the same time, one also has to remember that it is extremely important for men, who are brought in professional contact with women, should be exceedingly careful and not do anything to outrage their modesty and they must be careful not to introduce into their relations with women any element of sex."

In the present case, his Lordship was satisfied on the evidence that the accused placed his hand on the person of the complainant and that he did so by way of making some sort of sexual advance. His conduct was quite inconsistent with the idea that he merely put his hand on her person in order to protect her from the possible consequences of the accident. The appeal was, therefore, dismissed. His Lordship, however, thought that the sentence was severe and reduced it as stated above.

Mr. Justice Barlee delivered a concurrent judgment.

CONGRESS AND CONVERSION.

The Catholic Leader of the 23rd July published the following communication from Mr. George Joseph:

Your editorial paragraphs about the Resolution of the Congress Working Committee are very interesting. You had some doubt whether the failure to mention the right to propagate religion was just accidental. I can tell you it was not: and I have a whole story about it.

When the Karachi Resolution was made over to a Committee of the Congress to examine, its convener Mr. Sri Prakasa who was an old friend of mine was good enough to send me the draft resolutions for comment and any suggestion of amendment. Clause (c) guaranteeing the Fundamental Rights of citizens reads as follows: 'Freedom of conscience and the free profession and practice of religion, subject to public order and morality.' I subjoin my reply to Mr. Sri Prakasa:

MY DEAR SRI PRAKASA,

I am obliged to you for your circular letter with the enclosure containing the Resolution on Fundamental Rights and Economic Changes passed by the Karachi Congress, 1931.

There are a number of items in the Resolution which in my view call for modification and others to which I am radically opposed. But I believe I shall serve public interests best by concentrating on one item which in view of recent events has become associated with my name.

To clause (c) of article 1, after the words 'practice of religion' and before the word "subject" I propose the addition of the following words: "including the right of conversion."

The words are necessary in view of a recent declaration of Gandhiji. I am not concerned with the exact words of his declaration: but discussion made it clear that the words I propose should be added. Some religions in India which may be described as missionary religions (Islam and Christianity are missionary religions, Hinduism on the whole is not) prescribe a specific obligation on their followers. The obligation is to bring the followers of other religions or no religion within the fold of their religion. In what follows, I shall confine myself to Christianity, partly to give point to it, and partly because I know something about Christianity. The Christian Church all through its existence has laid it as a duty on all its followers to try and win the whole world for their Lord and His Visible Church. In other words, freedom of conscience and the free profession and practice of religion by Christians include the right of converting non-Christians to Christianity. I concede that conversion should not be made by fraud or force: and fraud or force will be against "public order or morality."

I strongly suspect that Hindu members of your Committee will not agree to the amendment. It could hardly be otherwise. I do not suggest that opposition will be due to unworthy motives. The truth is that on this question, decisions will be governed not by ratiocination but by religious instincts and impulses transcending reason. But I do hope that my amendment will be accepted unanimously. For, if acceptance is not instinctive and unanimous, I know my cause is lost.

Yours sincerely,

GEORGE JOSEPH.

I have little to add by way of comment. Mr. Sri Prakasa in his reply suggested that the amendment was all right and that he did not expect any difficulty in its being accepted. But he was mistaken, and I was not. The truth is that he is a Cambridge man, and modern-minded, while the Congress and its Committees are dominated by Gandhiji and his disciples who accept the ideal of Ramarajyam, the rule of the ideal Hindu King. So my cause was lost.

LEVI BARBOUR SCHOLARSHIPS FOR ORIENTAL WOMEN.

The Barbour Scholarships, yielding $800 each per annum, plus University fees, are awarded annually upon a basis of merit by a committee of the Michigan University. The character of the candidate, her physical fitness, her scholastic attainment, her fitness for university work, including the ability to use the English language for study and classroom purposes, marked ability in some special field, and her desire to return to her native land for service after suitable preparation shall have been made, are the chief factors considered by the committee in making appointments. Preference is given to applicants who are graduates of Oriental Colleges. The awards are made annually, about December, to take effect at the beginning of the autumn term in September. The Scholarships are renewable at the discretion of the committee, whose policy has been to reappoint scholars doing creditable work, until their selected courses are completed.

All courses of instruction offered at the University of Michigan are open to women students, and the Barbour Scholarships are not limited to women pursuing any particular course of study. The scholarships are open to women of any Oriental nationality, no definite number being allotted to any one country. No race restrictions nor religious requirements are imposed. Married women are not eligible, except by special action of the committee.

Further information and application forms can be secured from Mrs. V. M. Ilahibaksh, Chairman, Barbour Scholarship Advisory Committee in India, Y. M. C. A., Naini Tal, U. P.

ADVERTISEMENTS

Yoga Scientific Series

Edited by SHRI YOGENDRA
FOUNDER OF YOGA INSTITUTES IN INDIA AND AMERICA

For the health of your body and mind, read the only authentic encyclopedic work upon practical Yoga scientifically explained. Fully illustrated. Volume Rs. 10.

His series are of exceptional practical, academic and scientific interest—Free Press.

Get acquainted with his most valuable series on practical Yoga—Mercury.

A scholar who has successfully met the challenge of clinical and laboratory tests—Daily Mail.

POST BOX 481, BOMBAY.

"MY EXPERIENCE AS LEGISLATOR."

BY

DR. MRS. S. MUTHULAKSHMI REDDY,

M. B. & C. M.

Ex Deputy President, Legislative Council, Madras.

PRICE Rs. 2/-

Can be had from the Manager,

The Indian Social Reformer.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.
PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of

OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDRA.

Branches: { CALCUTTA.

{ AHMEDABAD.

{ POONA.

{ SURAT.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent. on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Pottlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

JAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Magnolia H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda).
 R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhalal Dajibhai Amla B. A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alomble Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad).
 Mr. Hanlal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)
 Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.).

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

9-3-26.

C. E. BANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

—101—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC,
POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/—

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Sitara ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Dohad (District Panah Mahals).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Kalol ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Malgaon (District Nasik).
Belapur ( " " ).	Satana ( " " ).
Ahmednagar ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Parola (District East Khandesh).	Kalwan ( " " ).
Akluj (District Solapur).	Bhiwandi (District Thana).
Viramgam (District Ahmedabad).	Palghar ( " " ).

DIRECTORS:

Sir Chunilal V. Mehta, K.C.S.L.,
 Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt.,
 V. V. Garud, Esqr.,
 G. K. Devadhar, Esqr.,
 G. B. Trivedi, Esqr.,
 Rao Saheb V. C. Jadav.,
 D. V. Gokhale, Esqr.,
 B. N. Rajadnya, Esqr.,
 Madhowjee D. Thackersey, Esqr.,
 Principal M. L. Tannan,
 Dewan Bahadur A. U. Malji,
 Rai Bahadur Pritamdas,
 Dewan Bahadur S. V. Mansinkal,
 V. L. Mehta, Esqr.,

SHARE CAPITAL:—

(Fully Paid) ... .. Rs. 12,96,900

1. DEPOSITS fixed for one year and shorter or longer periods are accepted. Rates and other particulars may be ascertained from the undersigned.

2. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened for Co-operative Societies and individuals. Interest is allowed at 2½ per cent. on daily balance not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000.

3. SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS are accepted and interest paid at 3½ per cent. on minimum monthly balance. Rules may be obtained from the undersigned.

4. THE BANK has issued Five Years Cash Certificates yielding 5½ per cent. per annum. The Bank has also arranged for the issue of Ten Tolas Gold bars. Particulars on application.

5. Drafts are issued on district and other towns on terms to be ascertained on application.

6. The Bank finances only registered Co-operative Societies in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency.

7. Accounts are audited quarterly by a firm of Incorporated Accountants and yearly by a Special Government Auditor. Quarterly statements of financial position are published in the "Bombay Government Gazette".

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay

Karachi and Calcutta, Barua sailing at Galle Tutinoria, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26.

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,

Advocate

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes:

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents:—

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance:—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital (Paid up) ... Rs. 71,21,05
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,57

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

SAFELY RELY

ON

AMRUTANJAN BALM

FOR THE CURE OF

Colds, Cough, Headaches, Rheumatism, Swellings and all other kinds of Aches and Pains.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

**&

MADRAS.

(REGD.)

LOW IN PRICE
HIGH IN EFFICACY

THE ATANK
NIGRAH PILLS

to cure constipation, brain-fag, etc.

Rupee One ( 32 pills ).

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY,

JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies'
Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. s. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single Copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed),

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8 (Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10 (Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,
THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,
Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

LATEST BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

Hardens Rapidly giving Standard 28 days Concrete strength at 4 days.

DISTRIBUTORS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED,

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

FLIT ADVERTISEMENT FILM No. 5.

BRITISH MOVIE-TONE NEWS VOL. 2 No. 81.

LOVE AMONG MILLIONAIRES

10 Reels, featuring

CLARA BOW, MITZI GREEN, STUART IRWIN, STANLEY SMITH AND SKEETS GALLAGHER.

A Paramount All Talking, Singing and Dancing Picture.

HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY

1 Reel, United Artists Featurette.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News Vol. 2 No. 6.

MUSEUM

1 Reel

TOBBY THE PEEP

R. K. O. Cartoon.

BETRAYAL

8 Reels, featuring

EMIL JANNINGS, ESTHER RALSTON AND GARY COOPER

A Paramount Sound Picture.

GOLD SPECIALIST

2 Reels

W. C. FIELDS

R. K. O. Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

FLIT ADVERTISEMENT FILM No. 4.

BELLE OF THE NIGHT

2 Reels, A Paramount Talking Picture.

HALF SHOT AT SUNRISE

10 Reels, featuring

BERT WHEELER, ROBER WOOLSEY AND DOROTHY LEE

R. K. O. Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

NO SHOWS.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XII.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1931

No. 49

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Export of Monkeys.	The National Liberal Federation.
The Fergusson College Shooting Incident.	R. T. Conference Delegates.
Burma under Sir Charles Innes.	Export of Monkeys.
Lord Reading.	Untouchability Problem.
The Electorates Impasse.	Liberal Judaism.
The Way Out.	Proselytising Missions.
The National Flag.	"Fallen Angels."
Working of Sardar Act.	World's Youth in Council.
Separation of Sindh.	Ram Rajya.
	News and Views.

NOTES.

Export of Monkeys:—Mrs. Margaret Cousins has rendered a public service in calling attention to the export of monkeys from India to America in conditions of extreme cruelty. The scandal, it is nothing less, calls for prompt protest by religious and humanitarian associations and individuals of whom there are many in the country. If the export of monkeys and birds cannot be stopped, it should be possible at least to ensure that they are transported under humaner conditions. Mrs. Cousins says that the monkeys are intended for the laboratories of vivisectionists and for the supply of monkey glands for the new medical fashion connected with thyroid glands. Nothing so conclusively establishes the decadence of Western civilization than the transplantation of monkey glands in elderly men and women in the hope of making them young again. The Anglo-Indian Press when it had nothing more exciting used to pillory Indian papers for publishing advertisements of aphrodisiacs by Yunnan and Ayurvedic physicians. But under the scientific-seeming name of "rejuvenation", numerous laboratories and experts are engaged in Christian countries in torturing thousands of dumb animals to minister to the same morbid craving, and their achievements and products are widely advertised and are considered quite respectable. We hope and trust that this abomination will not be allowed to establish itself in Indian soil.

The Fergusson College Shooting Incident:—The attempt of a student of the Fergusson College to shoot Sir Ernest Hotson during his visit to the institution some days ago, has been condemned by the whole country and all parties in the most emphatic manner. The student was arrested on the spot and proceedings against him are pending before the Poona Magistrate's Court. This attempt is the first of its kind in Poona since the murder of Mr. Rand during the plague time more than thirty years ago, which shows that the city has been having a clean record. No such incident happened ever before in the Fergusson College during the fifty years of its existence. The fuss made over it in the Anglo-Indian and a section of the English press is, therefore, absolutely unintelligible. Impelled evidently by this press campaign, Mr. Abercrombie, who represents the Bombay Chamber of Commerce put a string of questions in the Legislative Council, bearing on the outrage, ending up with the suggestion that Government should institute an inquiry into the state of affairs prevailing at the College. The Government in reply made a statement which was marked by fairness, moderation and sobriety. Referring to the crowd which gathered round his Excellency's car when he was about to return home. Mr. Thomas, the Home Member, said that while section of it jeered, a large number of the students were crowding round out of either curiosity or concern for the Governor. Indian leaders are quite alive to their serious responsibility and injudicious intervention by outsiders, however well-meant, is more likely to embarrass than to help them in their efforts to keep the Presidency immune against infection by anarchic bacilli. Mr. Abercrombie's remark that the incident showed that the Principal of the College was incompetent to deal with the matter, is as gratuitous as it is offensive. The Minister, Mr. Raffiuddin Ahmed, showed less than his usual spirit in rebuking that uncalled for censure.

Burma under Sir Charles Innes:—The Burma rebellion or agrarian rising, whichever one may like to call the series of murders, arson and dacoities that have been going on there for several months past, shows no sign of abatement. On the contrary, it has spread to a district which has been hitherto out of the zone of trouble. Lord Willingdon has promulgated his first Ordinance under which the Executive is given extensive powers, so extensive in fact that the Province is virtually placed under martial law. By a curious coincidence this rising has synchronised with the announcement of the decision tentatively put forward by a Committee of the Round Table Conference to separate Burma from British India. The Governor of Burma, Sir Charles Innes, has been the most ardent advocate of this proposal and he had chosen as Burma's delegates to the Round Table Conference men on whose support he could count. He himself attended the Conference in an advisory capacity and was mainly instrumental in rushing the Committee into a view favourable to separation. It has now become plain that a considerable body of Burmese opinion is opposed to this idea. Troops are being sent to Burma from India to put down the rising. Sir Charles Innes continues to be Governor. Perhaps it is thought that he should himself clean up the mess he has made of the administration of a province which had ceased to be remembered as a troublesome charge, when he became its Governor. But at what cost?

Lord Reading:—Many people in India would have rubbed their eyes when they read in Thursday's paper that the late Viceroy, Lord Reading, was to remarry a lady who is designated as one who has been his "Chief of Staff" since his return from India. "She has" Reuter has found out, "looked after his political and business interests and has taken a specially active part in his work in connection with the Round Table Conference." When Lord Reading declared himself converted to the idea of responsibility at the centre at the last session of the Conference, it was generally thought that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru's eloquence had achieved the miracle. Sir Tej must now share the credit for it with Miss Stella Charnaud, now the Marchioness of Reading. Lord Reading is seventy-one which is not ordinarily regarded as a marriageable age even in England. In India we have been much exercised regarding the means whereby old gentlemen may be prevented from marrying young girls. That objection may not arise in the new Lady Reading's case. But such distinctions are apt to be lost sight of and the ex-Viceroy's example may turn the fancy of our octogenarians to thoughts of love.

The Electorates Impasse:—The Working Committee of the National Congress as well as the Liberal Federation have declared themselves uncompromisingly in favour of joint electorates. The Moslem Leaguers, on the other hand, have made it equally plain that they must and will have separate electorates and nothing but them. The result is a deadlock with possibilities of a repetition of the rowdyism witnessed on Monday, when the Nationalists had called a meeting in Jinnah Hall. Is there no way out? While we quite appreciate the Nationalists' preference for joint electorates, we cannot make a fetish of them. You may take a horse to the water, but you cannot make him drink if he does not want to. Similarly, if Muslims prefer to vote by themselves, joint electorates cannot prevent them from doing so. They may form a caucus and practice satyagraha, violent and non-violent, against any Muslim who goes against its mandate. We have, therefore, repeatedly suggested that Muslims should be allowed to have separate electorates till they, like the Sikhs, are convinced by their own experience of its utter futility that it is a mill-stone round the necks of capable men and a life-belt to the incompetent. When seats are to be reserved, the difference between joint and separate electorates dwindles to less than nothing.

The Way Out:—Apart from the weightages which are not involved in the principle of separate electorates, the real objection to the latter is that they compel Mussalmans who have ceased to believe in communal politics and, indeed, profoundly dislike them, still to vote in and be voted for communal electorates against their deepest convictions. Maulana Shaukat Ali and Sir Mahomed Shaffi who sincerely believe in communal electorates, are entitled to have them, but why force Syed Sir Ali Imam and Dr. Ansari who detest them to slave in the same galley?

The true and equitable line to adopt, therefore, is to give freedom to Muslim Nationalists to emancipate themselves from their intolerable plight. This may be done without interfering with the freedom of the separatists to have separate electorates. When electoral rolls are being prepared or revised, Muslims who wish to vote in separate electorates may be enrolled separately and the rest included in the general electorates. This will obviate the anomaly of compelling all Mussalmans, irrespective of their political convictions, to go into the communal pen. It will also be a true test of the trend of opinion in the community.

The National Flag:—The Committee appointed by the Working Committee of the National Congress to recommend the best design for a national flag, drew up a business-like report. It recommends that the flag should be of a single colour except for the colour of the device. The saffron or kesari colour was suggested for the flag, and blue for the charkha at the left top corner. This appeared to us to be a good suggestion. The charkha, to our mind, is too utilitarian—it leaves nothing to the imagination—to be displayed on a flag. But in course of time it will come to be symbolised by a Chakra which, besides its ancient associations, typifies progress as a wheel can never stand still. The Working Committee however, has over-ruled its sub-committee and decided to retain the present tawdry tri-coloured one with a single change, namely, the substitution of saffron for red. This is open to all the objections so well stated in the Flag Committee's report.

Working of Sarda Act:—"It is regrettable to note," writes the Tribune, Lahore, "that in many Provinces the provisions of the Sarda Act are not being enforced, because the authorities are reluctant to displease the malefactors and their sympathisers. For the same reason, the few cases which have actually been instituted under the Act have either been dropped or have resulted in the award of ridiculously low sentences to the accused. The latest case of this kind is reported from Hyderabad (Sind), in which the offending bridegroom and his father were fined Rs. 20, while the priest was fined Rs. 10 only. There can be no better way of reducing the Act to a farce than such sentences." There is much force in these remarks of our contemporary. It was desirable to go slow in the beginning but the Act has been in existence, if not in force, for over two years, and it is high time that it is enforced like other laws.

Separation of Sind:—A deputation of Sind Hindus waited on the Viceroy at Simla to appraise his Excellency of their opposition to its contemplated separation from Bombay Presidency, and are reported to have met with a sympathetic reception. Our considered view on the question is that the present position of Sind is intolerable and, unless Bombay is prepared to take immediate steps, by accelerating communications by land, sea and air, and by all other means to bring it into as close and direct relations with the Provincial Government as Gujarat and Maharashtra, she has no right to play the dog in the manger and prevent Sind from seeking her own salvation either by separation or union with other provinces.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,
BOMBAY, AUGUST 8, 1931.

THE NATIONAL LIBERAL FEDERATION.

There was at one time some doubt as to whether a session of the National Liberal Federation would be held this year. Now that it is over, there can be no doubt that it has materially helped to show that there is substantial agreement on fundamental points between the Right and Left wings of the Indian political movement. The choice of Mr. Chintamani to preside at this session was the happiest that could have been made. Its significance was appreciated by Mahatma Gandhi who in excusing himself on account of pressing work from attending the Federation, stated that he would otherwise have wished to be present to hear Mr. Chintamani's inaugural address. Mrs. Sarojini Naidu attended and sat next to the President on the opening day. Mr. Chintamani's address, as was expected, was a clear and convincing statement of the position reached by the Round Table Conference in London and the main lines on which the further proposals of the Liberals on the principal outstanding issues should be framed. Mr. Chintamani analysed the scheme tentatively outlined at the Conference for the future Federal Government, and showed that it failed to satisfy the demands of the Indian people. It was so framed as to make the Executive practically irremovable. "Whether the motion (of no confidence) relates to a federal subject or to one exclusively affecting British India," said Mr. Chintamani, "the Executive will be able to dig itself in with the support of the votes of the nominated members of the States." The Marquis of Zetland observed in a paper read before the East India Association in London in May last, that the creation of a Legislature "which will be more in harmony with the executive than any legislature formed as at present is likely to be," was the only possible way of preventing deadlocks between the two bodies; and that, in his view, a Federal Legislature, formed on the lines proposed at the Round Table Conference was likely to be a much more stable body than the existing Assembly, since it would contain powerful elements whose very real interest it will be to avoid constant clashes between the Legislature and the Executive. This can be called "constitutional reform" only in a Pickwickian sense. Constitutions exist to control exercise of authority. What the Marquis wants done is for the Executive to control the Legislature. The head must be made to fit the cap! As the President of the Liberal Federation tersely put it: "If you call this responsible Government for which India has been struggling, well, we do not mean the same thing." Mr. Chintamani's criticisms and the resolution unanimously passed by the Liberal Federation with reference to this question, must convince Lord Zetland that even the most moderate opinion in this country does not approve of this way of ensuring a stable Central Government. Within the last few weeks there has been a growing opinion which the President voiced when he declared that, if Federation is only to be had on the Sankey Committee's terms, "I shall far prefer to wait for true federation in a more propitious time and go forward with my demand for responsible government for British India which is the core and kernel of the whole of the national movement." The Federation voted unanimously a resolution favouring the vesting of residual powers at the Federal centre.

The resolutions of the Federation on Defence and Safeguards closely follow the President's searching criticisms of the proposals in the Sankey Scheme relating to them. The resolution on Defence qualifies the powers to be reserved in two directions, namely, that the non-votable expenditure should be revised every five years, that even this should be open to debate in the Legislature, that any expenditure in excess of the sum should be incurred only with the sanction of the Legislature and that a definite scheme for the rapid Indianisation of the Defence Force should be immediately propounded—rather a weak word that!—and that a Minister should be responsible for the provision of facilities of training army officers within the prescribed period. The resolution of the Federation on the safeguards proposed by the Sankey Committee, is equally insistent about the necessity of limiting them to the strictest minimum. On the subject of Trading Rights, the Federation wanted it to be made clear that the future Government of India would have complete freedom to take measures to promote basic trades and industries. This has reference to the British claim for equality of trading rights about which Mr. Chintamani remarked: "I do not care much for the talk about equality and reciprocity, for the conditions are not equal. Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji used to speak of the absurdity of talking of free trade or fair competition between a giant and a pigmy. And only about six weeks ago Professor Laski wrote that freedom of contract only begins where equality of bargaining exists." We cannot help thinking that the resolution of the Federation inadequately conveys the force and purport of these apt observations. It has been said in England that Indian opinion on fiscal matters takes its cue from interested Indian capitalists. Mr. Chintamani dealt trenchantly with this allegation, and his remarks faithfully reflect Indian opinion. "I am not," he said "a partizan of capitalists whether of Bombay or London. Both have much to answer for, and to neither does the man in the street look up for altruistic concepts of financial policy. But I am free to confess that as between the capitalists of the City of London who exercise so much unseen power through the Secretary of State who is the master of the Governor-General in Council, and the capitalists of Bombay, I would every time prefer the latter who are my countrymen, whose fortune and fate are indissolubly linked with the Motherland." Sir Victor Sassoon's recent statement about his contemplated move to Shanghai because of the troubled conditions in this country, is an illuminating instance of the difference between the British and the Indian capitalist. The Federation, with a wholly unnecessary protestation of its horror of repudiation, endorsed the Congress demand to have the financial obligations to Britain examined by an independent agency.

On the question of separate electorates for Muslims, the Federation broke away from its leaders and would not countenance them in any shape or form. Sir Chimanlal Setalvad moved the Subject Committee's resolution in which provision was made, if joint electorates were not agreed to, to let separate electorates continue for a term of years after which they should automatically lapse. The President in his address had indicated two alternatives: either to allow separate electorates to return just the numerical proportion to which a minority community may lay a legitimate claim, with liberty to contest joint electorates, for a period of ten years after which they will expire automatically; or to allow them to return one-half of the allotted number of representatives in the first election under the new constitution, one-fourth in the second and none thereafter as there should be no communal electorates left. The Federation in its public session resolved that separate electorates should be done away with and that there should be joint electorates with reservation of seats for minorities. We suppose that reservation is to be made only if a minority wants it. Surely, the Federation did not intend that even where, as in the case of Parsis, no reservation is desired, it should be inflicted on a minority. But the Federation accepted the principle of weightages, only stipulating that the position of all important minorities should be equitably considered in determining them. Mr. Chintamani does not seem to favour weightages and the Working Committee of the National Congress dropped them out of its scheme and Nationalist Muslims have accepted the omission. In our opinion, weightages are a greater evil than separate electorates, and we cannot help thinking that Rao Bahadur Kale and Mr. V. N. Chandavarkar who moved the amendment to Sir Chimanlal's resolution, had their attention fixed on the part of it relating to electorates to the exclusion of that relating to weightages. Except for a perfunctory resolution about the amelioration of the condition of the depressed classes the Federation left social questions severely alone. The absence of any reference to Prohibition in the presidential address and among the resolutions passed by the Federation, reflects seriously on the Liberal party as a party with an outlook beyond the political exigencies of the fleeting moment. A political party which has no social outlook has no future. The National Congress under Mahatma Gandhi's leadership has this but its dogmas about the Charkha, Civil Disobedience and implicit obedience to a hierarchy of large and small dictators, repel a large number who are attracted by its social programme. An evolutionary party with a social and spiritual as well as a political outlook will, no doubt, come into being in course of time.

R. T. CONFERENCE DELEGATES.

The revised lists of members to the Minorities Committee of the Round Table Conference and to the Conference itself were published this week. Two ruling Princes of two smaller States, Korea and Sarila and Dewan Bahadur T. Raghaviah, President of the Council of Regency in the South Indian State of Pudukotta which recently came into unpleasant prominence, have been added to the States' delegation. Among the new members from British India, there will be general satisfaction at finding the names of Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, Sir Syed Ali Imam and Dr. S. K. Datta, who have also been assigned to the Minorities Committee. Of Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, it is not necessary to say much. She will naturally become the leader of the Indian Women's delegation of three, herself included, and thus make its voice effective in the counsels of the Conference. Mrs. Sarojini Naidu is the one person in the whole of India who can pull up Maulana Shaukat Ali in the midst of his most raging periods. Invited to support a resolution against the custom of Purdah at the National Social Conference held in Madras four years ago, the Maulana drifted into an almost personal attack on the Moslem lady who proposed the resolution for venturing to condemn an institution which had been observed by women who were mothers of heroes including himself. The audience was amazed. But rescue was at hand. Mrs. Sarojini Naidu who was on the platform sharply called out: "Shaukat, shut up, this is not your Khilafat Committee." And to the surprise of all, the Maulana meekly obeyed. For all his blood-thirsty metaphors the Big Brother will not knowingly hurt a fly. We are gled that he too will be in the Conference, as at heart he is as much for peace as any one else.

Syed Sir Ali Imam is the most towering personality among Muslim leaders at the present time. He was one of the deputation which waited on Lord Minto demanding special representation for Indian Muslims in the legislature and other statutory bodies. The late Maulana Muhomed Ali who was also one of the deputation in his address as President of the National Congress held at Cocanada, said that it was all "a command performance." Whatever it might have been, it started the "hare"—Lord Morley's famous phrase to Lord Minto—which took a course which neither Lord Minto nor the deputation itself had contemplated. Within five years, as he told the Nationalist Muslims at Lucknow a few months ago, Sir Ali Imam realised that separate electorates were a mistake and that they were likely to do harm to the best interests of the country and the community. But at that time his voice was that of one crying in the wilderness. In twenty years a great change has come over Mahomedan opinion, and the Muslim intelligentsia, especially the younger men and women, have definitely turned against separate electorates. The growing strength of the Muslim Nationalist party can be gauged from the fact that its opponents can think of no better means of stemming the rising tide than the hooligan violence which broke up its meeting in Bombay on Monday. As Prime Minister of His Exalted Highness the Nizam, Sir Ali Imam during his brief tenure left his impress on the administration. The solid body of Muslim opinion in his own province of Bihar is behind him, as shown by the long list, filling several columns of the Indian Nation of Patna, of signatories who expressed their adherence to the policy of the Muslim Nationalists. Indeed, the harmonious relations between Hindus and Muslims in Bihar in all these troublous years have really been a marvel, and they have been largely due to the example of leaders like Syed Sir Ali Imam. We should not be taken to mean that all Sir Ali Imam's views will merit approval. We should like to know more of the attitude he is likely to take on the crucial question of residual powers. Disappointment is felt at the non-appearance of the name of Dr. M. A. Ansari in the list of new delegates. The Prime Minister has nominated three men from the Separatists' camp to the Minorities Committee and it would have been but fair if he had named at least two from the Nationalists. Dr. Ansari is not a politician by choice. As Mahatma Gandhi recently wrote, he loves his profession and it is a real sacrifice to him to tear himself away from it to attend to political engagements. It is men of this type who add weight and dignity to politics more than men who are happy to wallow all their lives in that long series of second best. We think it is a great mistake not to have included his name in the new list. At the same time, we cannot wholly blame the Viceroy or the Prime Minister for the omission. Dr. Ansari is the leader of Nationalist Muslims but he is also an ex-President of the National Congress and one of its permanent Cabinet Ministers. It was open to Congress to send him to the Round Table Conference as its own choice, and the Prime Minister might have taken the view that since Congress wished Mahatma Gandhi to be its sole representative, it was not for him to impose upon it a second in the face of its declared intention. The cases of Mrs. Sarojini Naidu and Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya are somewhat different. The former was recommended by the All-India Women's Conference as their delegate, and Panditjee is the acknowledged leader of Hindu orthodoxy. Even now, if Mahatma Gandhi insists that he must have Dr. Ansari with him, the Prime Minister is most unlikely to refuse.

A special word of praise is due to the Prime Minister or to the Viceroy, whichever of them first thought of him, for the nomination of Dr. S. K. Datta in place of the late Mr. K. T. Paul to represent the Indian Christian community. These two men have done more than any other of their generation to bring about the fast-progressing rapprochement of the Indian Christian with the parent community. That the heavy load of suspicion and prejudice which lay like a barrier between them, has been put out of the way, is largely the achievement of these two men. The inspiration for the Indian Christian Nationalists who are assuming a place of leadership in Indian public life, came from them. Paul's method was one of gentle persuasion whereas Datta believes in saying what he feels as he feels it. The Times of India describes him as a member of the Legislative Assembly "where he proved a bitter speaker." No wonder he was not re-nominated. Nominating authorities prefer people who are adept in paying subtle compliments in the guise of stern criticism and who are useful in seducing their trusting elected colleagues from the path of duty to their constituencies. Dr. Datta is not the man to stoop to these levels. Nationalism with him is a glowing passion. Narrow sectarianism, political communalism, he hates with a consuming hatred. Nothing speaks so much for the sterling good sense and patriotism of Indian Christians than that they have cheerfully accepted the leadership of men like Paul, Datta, and the group of able and zealous men associated with them, although by doing so it might seem that they are sacrificing a present tangible good for a problematic prospective one. Dr. Datta in the Minorities Committee and in the Conference will be a staunch upholder of Indian nationalism as the true solvent of caste and communal differences, opening the way to a free flow of ideas and the establishment of social and spiritual contacts between the sects and creeds congregated in this land.

We regret that not even a single representative of the people of the States has found a place in the list. In leaning so heavily on the Princes the Prime Minister and the Viceroy seem to have no fear that these may in the not very long run prove a broken reed.

EXPORT OF MONKEYS.*

A DREADFUL TRADE.

(BY MRS. MARGARET E. COUSINS.)

Circumstances have brought me into direct contact with a harrowing aspect of India's export trade which needs to be brought to the notice of the Indian people so that public action may be taken thereof which will put an end to untold cruelty and suffering.

Various reasons caused me to choose a cargo ship of a reputable American firm on which to travel direct to New York. It caters comfortably for about a dozen passengers. When I joined the ship at Colombo in the last days of May I found two young men among my fellow passengers. Conversation at dinner the first night brought to light the fact that a large number of monkeys and small birds had been dying daily on the ship between Calcutta and Colombo. I found that part of the cargo was a consignment (in charge of one of these Indian young men) of over 300 monkeys and 5,000 pretty small birds. There had also been two tiger cubs and a full-sized Hanuman monkey but these had died the previous day. The consignment had been sent by a dealer in animals in Karachi who had secured the capture of 500 monkeys from the jungle country near Lucknow. During their transit to the dock in Calcutta two of the crated carts got broken and about 200 of the monkeys escaped.

The sufferings of the remaining 300 must have been terrible during a heavy storm encountered between Calcutta and Ceylon. Each monkey is allotted only one cubic foot of space. Eighteen are put in each crate cage. Over fifty died partly owing to sea-sickness, partly to lack of their usual food and enough fresh air. Two thousand five hundred of the little birds also died. Their conditions were somewhat improved at Colombo and the mortality rate has decreased but when I saw them the cruelty of huddling these innocent little wild creatures together in practical darkness for almost two months wrung my heart. I learnt that there is a regular traffic in monkeys between India and America and that sometimes the conditions of their transit are worse than even what I saw personally. On one trip 87 monkeys died in one day in the scorching heat of the Red Sea. Action has been successfully taken in certain instances against the dealers by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to animals because of unhygienic conditions connected with the consignments at docks. But while such export trade is allowed there cannot but be intense suffering inflicted on these wild, tropical creatures.

* Mrs. Margaret E. Cousins is the International Representative of the Women's Indian Association. She is at present in America where her address is C/o Thomas Cook & Son, 585, Fifth Avenue, New York, U. S. A.

This however is but one aspect of the case. The monkeys go through all this suffering only to meet a worse fate. They have been bought by the New York dealer as victims for the laboratories of vivisectors and for the supply of monkey glands for the new medical fashion connected with thyroid glands.

Will India allow the tribe of Hanuman to be so exploited and tortured to put money into the pockets of a few callous or unthinking businessmen? Do Indian men and women want this murderous traffic to stain the good name of non-violent, "ahimsa" India?

A law which will make the export of such creatures illegal is the only method of preventing the continuance of these cruelties. All India applauded when Her Royal Highness the Maharani of Travancore passed a law prohibiting the sacrifice of animals in any temples of her State. Will not some one thoroughly investigate into this heartless sacrifice of monkeys and singing birds on the altars of commerce and secure its abolition?

I appeal to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, I appeal to some devotee of the Hindu religion which acknowledges with gratitude the help of Hanuman and his monkey tribe to Rama and Sita. I appeal to the All India Women's Conference, and to Women's Societies, I appeal to humane-spirited members of the Legislative Assembly, and the Legislative Councils, and I appeal to the gentle, kindly public, all to combine and work to secure the passing of a new Law which will prohibit the export of monkeys and birds for commercial purposes, because of the cruel suffering it unavoidably inflicts on them.

Indian Students to Europe and America:— Arrangements are made to receive Indian students going to Europe or America through Europe at the time of landing at Marseilles, Genoa and Venice. Students should communicate with Mr. P. D. Ranganandhan, who is in charge of these centres and whose head-quarters are 115 La Canebiere, Marseilles, France. Mention may be made of the International Institute of India to facilitate correspondence. The arrangements to help students landing at these ports continue from August 1 to October 15.

UNTOUCHABILITY PROBLEM.

(BY SWAMI ISWARANANDA OF RAMAKRISHNA MISSION.)

(Concluded from the last issue.)

As regards taking food from the hands of un-touchables, the same rule of cleanliness applies. A man with clean body and clothes is no more un-touchable. Food that is washed clean of dust, hair &c. cooked in clean vessels, in a clean place, by a clean man and served in clean plates, in a clean place, is free from Nimittdosha or external impurities according to Shastras, and can be taken by all. If the giver is not positively known to the receiver as a vulgar and morally degenerate man, and if the food is given with care and attention and due reverence and regard for the guest, there is no Ashrayadosha (moral defect of the giver) with regard to his food for any who is not a Yogi.

What about those engaged in dirty professions? They are un-touchables only when they are actually at their work and until they have not bathed and changed their clothes. Even the scavenger becomes touchable and sociable when he has taken a clean bath and put on fresh clothes.

No one is low because of his profession. One of the fundamental principles of Varnashramadharma is that the dharma of every one is equal to that of every one else. So long as any profession is useful and conducive to the welfare of society, that profession is worthy of respect as any other. Every community by its profession is worshipping the Viratapurusha as manifested in society and so the dharma of cleaning latrines is as sacred as that of Vedic study and teaching or governing the Kingdom. The bucket and the broom in the hands of the scavenger is as holy to him as the Vilwa and Gauges water to the Priest in the temple. Therefore there is no high and low in the professions or duties. Each is great in his own dharma. According to Varnashramadharma no superiority or inferiority of caste is contemplated. Division into different groups was merely meant for efficient discharge of professions through hereditary skill and is not due to any fundamental superiority or inferiority in birth or profession. If, actually as a matter of fact, the ideas of high and low have arisen it is because of difference in Sanskaras and acharas and this difference can be made up by education and culture. And it is not necessary that one should change his profession, to improve in sanskaras or acharas. "Each one even by sticking to one's own profession and worshipping the Lord with it, can attain to the highest perfection" says Bhagwan Krishna in the Gita. Thus the scavenger may remain scavenger in profession and yet will become and be recognised and respected as Brahman by the practice of "control of mind and senses, austerity and cleanliness, forbearance, guilelessness, learning, self-knowledge and faith which are the natural duties of a Brahmana." These qualities as declared by Bhagwan Krishna are not 'Yonijam,' but "Swabhavajam" and can be acquired by any one with effort.

Exclusive privileges are no part of Varnashramadharma. Every individual and every community including the chandala has equal right for Dharma, Artha, Kama, and Moksha and for all the scriptures and Sanskaras. If in the past special privileges have been claimed and preserved by the higher castes and similar aspirations have been put down in the lower castes, it was due to the foolish short-sightedness of those who worked the system and not the fault of the scheme itself. These privileges have nothing to do with Varnashramadharma as ideally conceived and planned by the Rishis and will form no part of it in future. The mistake did not lie in the division of society into different groups for special functions, but in refusing equality of opportunities and rights to all the groups. What will remain in future will be the Varnashramadharma without privileges in which every group will have equal rights and full opportunities for the attainment of the fourfold purusharthas.

Dharma or duty is the basic idea of Varnashramadharma and not privileges. In the past it was the special function of the Brahmana to educate the Samaj in social, ethical and spiritual culture. All glory to him, for he was the pioneer in the spread of Aryan civilization and missionary labours to all the Avarnas of the past, most of whom he brought within the Chaturvarnyam and raised many communities into the Brahmana Varna. He was the teacher, the thinker, the leader of the Samaj. The duty of the Brahmanas was to Brahmanise others. Today by a combination of fortunate circumstances the Avarnas are awake and are becoming conscious of the greatness of the traditional Vaidikadharma and are demanding their birth-right. Those who have eyes, will see in the agitation for removal of un-touchability, not, as some frightened people think, a repudiation or negation of Varnashramadharma, but a growing appreciation of its worth, a sign of increasing faith in it. Now is the time for the Brahmana, the guardian of Hindu culture to come forward, take them by the hand and open the treasury of Hindu culture to them and earn their eternal love and gratitude and regain their lost position—not to command, but to serve the Lord in these people.

O, ye, Narayana, casting off this hypnotism, arise, awake and manifest the divine within. Know and believe you are touchable and behave accordingly. Say not you are impure, for is not Sri Parameswara within you? When He, the highest Lord of all the worlds is in your heart, how can you be low? Say not you are weak, say not you are helpless, for, the Almighty One, the All-merciful, is at your back. Within you is lodged the glorious Atman, the ever-pure, the ever-awake, the ever-free, the omnipresent, the omni-scient, the omni-potent, the all-conquering one. Thou art That. Therefore, be not afraid, be not ashamed, walk erect and be bold. Say, "I am the Atman, all perfections are in me, all powers are in me, all these I will manifest in time. None shall look down upon me, none can keep me back, to none am I inferior; none shall I look down upon, none shall I keep back, to none am I superior, for the same Atman is in all. Salutations unto the Paramatman, who is the intelligent witness in the heart of the Brahmana, the Kshatriya, the Vaisya, the Sudra, the Chandala and of all beings."

"Thus seeing the Lord the same everywhere, he, the sage, does not hurt the self by the self and so goes to the highest goal."—Hari Om Tat Sat.

LIBERAL JUDAISM.*

(BY A LIBERAL JEW.)

(Concluded from the last issue.)

Furthermore, I believe the time has come for Liberal Judaism to take a more positive attitude toward Jesus. True it is that some of our teachers have already made a place for Jesus in the pantheon of Jewish prophets; but to the masses of even Liberal Jews, Jesus represents merely the central figure of Christianity, the man-God, the negation of Jewish monotheism. My orthodox brethren to whom for so many centuries the name of the Nazarene meant only oppression, pyre and pogrom, naturally have found in him the very antithesis of all that Judaism stands for; so much of misery has been visited upon them through the centuries in the name of Jesus. So far as the orthodox Christian conception of Jesus is concerned, they are right. We can never accept that; nor will we ever be able to accept it. But now, when Liberal Christianity has discarded the theology of Paul and seems wandering without aim in search of a new attitude toward Jesus, I feel the time has come for Liberal Judaism to declare: We have something to say to you concerning Jesus of Nazareth. We gave him to the world. He is hewn from the same rock whence we came. Come, you who are wandering and heavy-laden, let us seek together the redemptive influence of his teaching.

This does not mean, my friend, that we give him a pre-emiuent place among the prophets, except so far as his influence is concerned. There, of course, he stands supreme, without a peer. Jesus, more than any other single personality, has moulded the destiny of our western world. He is among the great of all times.

But the spirit of Liberal Judaism declines to accord primacy to any single human personality. For us, every great spirit of all times and among all peoples has contributed to the sum total of truth. To God alone belongs the whole. To us "the broken arc"; to Him "the perfect round."

Perhaps Christianity is right in its emphasis upon the humanity of Jesus. It may be that the masses of men need this projection in him of the highest and the best that man knows or can conceive, to discipline and hallow their lives. The God of the Jews, as the ancients said, is vague and intangible; hard to know, harder to love. Men and women need a God who is nearer to them, a human God. That may be the secret of Jesus' power over minds and hearts of men. But Judaism can offer that to you. Nor can we "redeem you from hell"—wherever and whatever that Judaism is no gilt-edged bond redeemable at death!

Yet we have a great deal in common with Liberal Christianity. Liberal Christians have cast on board the whole orthodox reason for the life and death of Jesus; they deny the divinity of Jesus; they emphasize the social message of religion; they stand officially for tolerance and equality and mutual respect. We go with them in their protest in the name of an evolving truth; in their valiant defence of the right of the individual soul to its Maker free and uninhibited; in their vehement denial that the whole truth is the possession of one exclusive group. But we part company with Liberal Christianity in the position it gives to Jesus of Nazareth. It elevates the Nazarene to a position of supreme importance. The Jew was so jealous to preserve the awful unity and holiness of God unchallenged, that even the founder of the faith, Moses, lies in an unknown grave in the wilderness for fear, said the rabbis, that men and women would make a pilgrimage there and worship him. I do not even to Moses, founder of the nation, round which the whole structure of Jewish tradition and history is built, was this position given. It does not mean that we deny the work of Jesus! It does not mean that we reject the beauty of his teachings; it does not mean that we disregard the thrilling appeal of his life as the generations have idealized it; it does not mean that we refuse him a place among the greatest of our prophets. But it does mean that we as Jews refuse to put him in a position that even by inference may challenge the unity of the God-head! For as no personality however god-like may be allowed to jeopardize this unity. And all the love the Christian gives to Jesus, the Jew gives to God.

Liberal Judaism makes no demand upon the intelligence that it shall cease to operate in the life of man. It does not demand that the mind be divided into two parts; one labelled Religion and the other Science; with no connection or relation between the twain. Liberal Judaism regards reason as one of the instruments through which the eternal spirit reveals itself to man. It is the great corrector which increasingly destroys superstition and error. Liberal Judaism declares: We accept all that authoritative science has to offer and if it contradicts a cherished truth long held then that truth. "When the half-gods go, the Gods arrive."

You say, my friend, that you want to belong somewhere.

I cannot tell you that Judaism is absolute truth. I do not believe it is. I can say only that so far as I am concerned, it is truth, the highest truth.

* Reprinted from the Unity of Chicago.

know. And I do not urge you to accept it. I cannot urge you to accept it. We never ask anyone to join us. Indeed we are reluctant to receive others into our communion; not because of any pride or vainglory and not because we think we are better than anyone else; but simply because to be a Jew means heartache and frustration and hurt and sacrifice. Yet to me, to be a Jew means the achievement of that inner unity and harmony of life which are but a reflection of the higher unity and harmony we call God.

Religion to me is not complicated and fraught with weighty questions which must be answered for one's rest and peace of soul. Men must learn to distinguish between the religious idea which seems to abide in human hearts, and the religious institution which is transient.

Religion to me means to grow in depth and strength and sympathy; to gain in manhood and power and usefulness; emotions steadied to a still deep rhythm; love for people and for beauty grown more tender, more sure, more undoubting and more perfect. One's disgust and impatience with weakness and failure of all kinds changed to a charity large enough and understanding, deep enough to make us want to help instead of run away; and teach instead of scold; one's sense of values simplified so that with an unerring sureness we know our own and hold it and are not afraid. To feel that every experience has its worth, that life may be successful in one's self even though outwardly useless. And then to have been humbled by the dependence of a fellowman on you. To have faced life's problems with all the strength that was in you, with a prayer in your heart, for guidance and a Te Deum when the imminent danger was over. To say to life: Life, I cannot understand you. Often I see no reason or justice in things. But life, I accept you—all that you have to offer me, for I believe in that Truth and Beauty and Goodness which are God!

Religious institutions are but the feeble attempts of the sons of the men to give expression to this idea. And behind all your creeds and all your rituals and all your ceremonies there is this desire of man to relate himself to the ultimate source of life, to give expression to the inextinguishable longings of his heart; to find his place in this miracle we call existence. The religious idea is much more important than the religious institution. All too often the institution, with its formalities and its creeds makes itself more important than the idea which gave it birth. When this happens both idea and institution become decadent.

Christianity and Judaism are but the creation of groups of men called Christians and Jews, heart-breaking attempts to come to grips with things, faltering efforts to understand reality. Behind both of these faiths there is the longing of Christian and Jew to know God. And you and I, whether we be labelled Christian or Jew, hold these ideals in common and, holding them, have fellowship with the greatest saints and dreamers of all time.

PROSELYTISING MISSIONS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have read with interest the articles that appeared during the month of May on the subject of Proselytising Missions and also what Mr. Gandhi had to say on it in Young India. As usual my reply has to be late from such a distance but I hope you will not mind that. I wonder just what you mean by your objection to proselytising. Of course it is easy enough to find out what the dictionary says about the meaning of the word. But at times people have a different meaning in mind from that found in the dictionary. If by proselytising is meant simply causing a person to change his name and outward allegiance to any faith or religion, a mere matter of adding numbers to one's own religion, then I quite agree to your contention that it is all wrong. (This is what we mean by proselytising. Ed.) But if by it you mean conversion that comes from conviction and faith as a result of what one considers to be new and better knowledge of truth based on information, then certainly such action as leads to it is justified and even the highest duty of all who believe they have a higher truth to share, and I must object to your contention. Let the Hindu try to convince the Christian and the Christian the Hindu by witnessing to the knowledge they have and the experience based on it. (Nobody has the least objection to this. Ed.) If truth is coupled with love it is bound to make itself known, to share with others. That Jesus came for the world, had a gospel for the whole world, and sent His disciples to make it known to all men is so plainly written in scripture that for a careful reader it is impossible to question it.

Indian Christians who oppose missions for making converts (as mentioned here and there in your journal) would seem to renounce their own conversion for they criticise missionaries for that which caused it. [They know where the shoe pinches. While the foreign missionary converts, the task of assimilating the converts is laid on Indian Christians. Ed. I. S. R.] If they are sorry for what they did, or their fathers did, when they accepted the Christian religion, then your Hindu Shuddhi movement leaves them the way open to return to the Hindu fold. Why shall we object when people act according to their convictions. We expect the same from you. I am sure that the above is not true with the majority of Indian Christians, certainly not with all those whose conversion has been real.

Muhammedanism is a religion as much foreign to India as is Christianity, yet you call it Indian because it is very strong. (We call neither Mahomedanism nor Christianity foreign, but while the former is not propagated by foreign missions, the latter is. Ed.) And it is a missionary religion with more missionary propaganda through literature than Christians have. There is historical evidence that Christianity was strong in South and Central India long before the birth of Muhammed. (Syrian Christianity was and is not a proselytising Church. Ed.).

As for Social Reform: the more Hindus and Muslims do in that respect the less remains for Christians to do, and we welcome all you do. This would naturally not be our attitude if we were just out to make converts through improper means. The best and most admirable way to oppose institutional missionary work such as medical work, orphanage, care of the blind, lepers and widows, industrial institution etc., is for Hindus to take care of that kind of work themselves. (This is largely the duty of the State and that is why we want Swaraj. Ed.) We do not even mind if you do it in opposition to us as long as the work is done. We only do such work where no one else does it. But it would seem unreasonable for Hindus to complain as long as they are either unable or unwilling to share and bear the burdens while multitudes are in need of it. Is it right to desire that rather millions should live and die in misery than that people of a different religion should be allowed to help them while preaching their religion? And if Hindus believe that one religion is as good as any other then they would seem to have nothing to lose through a change of religion. (We think our correspondent is as good as the best of us, but it does not follow that we should wish to be Americanized. Ed.) Christ claims to have the possession of the whole truth and complete authority, moreover, Christ insists that faith in Him is the only means of obtaining salvation for all who hear His gospel and that his gospel is the only means of grace wherein we find God's desire to save all men. The love and spirit of Christ who died to save us from sin would explain the desire of Christians to make converts. It is the very duty of all Christians to witness to the experience of salvation they had through Christ in order to share this with others. You will agree that it would not be right for a doctor who had discovered a remedy for a malicious disease and verified its ability to effect a cure in his own life when he was attacked, to keep this a secret for himself while multitudes are suffering. [Have Christian Europe and America proved on themselves the creative value of Christianity? Has the old challenge "Physician, heal thyself," lost all its force for them? Ed.] No more is it then right for Christians to keep their precious spiritual experiences of salvation to themselves, nor could they do it if they tried. Love has to share by means of love. This is our position with regard to mission work. Now Hindus are at liberty to doubt our sincerity but if they do they cannot expect to be taken seriously themselves.

Gray Eagle, Minn.,
U. S. A.,
June 26, 1931.

H. A. FEISERBEND.

[We are obliged to hold over for want of space the other half of this letter for the next issue. Ed., I. S. R.]

"FALLEN ANGELS."

The Editor, Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

As your correspondent, Mr. Arthur Young whose article on "Fallen Angels" has appeared in your issue of the 1st August 1931, seems to be labouring under some misunderstanding I crave the hospitality of your columns to remove it.

I entirely agree with your correspondent when he says "Ejected from one home, these unfortunate women, do not leave the city. They simply scatter. If it were possible to stop prostitution in this way it would have stopped long ago." The Bombay Vigilance Association has been advocating these views and whenever such cases are referred to us we refuse to interfere with them. Because the removal of these prostitutes from one place will be a gain to the residents of that locality, but it will be a nuisance to those in whose neighbourhood they will go to stay and where people, perhaps, will be less educated and less able to protect themselves. But if they violate decency, create disorder, if neighbours are scandalized then it will be necessary to take cognizance of such acts. The mere act of prostitution is not an offence. The intervention of the law is conditioned not on the act itself, but on certain conditions or results which make it something more than an affair involving two participants.

Your correspondent further says "It never can be stopped, either in this way or another way, until we change human nature, and I hardly think we can do that." We all know the weakness of human nature but it may be made better or worse by opinion, inhibition, suggestion or example. Besides, a considerable volume of prostitution and of the demand for prostitution is the product of conditions that, however difficult the task, are within limits socially controllable.

Regarding the conditions in Calcutta, I shall leave that point to those who have personal knowledge of it. But here in Bombay we are trying to attack the traffic and not the prostitutes who are in many cases mere victims. We want to punish all third parties, brothel-keepers, exploiters, landlords who let their houses to brothel-keepers, exploiters i. e., any who fatten on defenceless women.

As for 'the safeguards of our homes' it is an imaginary fear. More than twenty eight countries in the world have no system of licensed houses or tolerated areas and have adopted the policy of abolition—abolition of regulation and not the abolition of prostitution. But none of them complains that their 'homes' are in danger. On the other hand there is ample evidence that since the adoption of the policy of abolition conditions are improved beyond expectation.

One might incidentally ask whether your correspondent sincerely suggests that there should be certain women in every community who must be available to supply an inevitable demand of some men. And is it in this way only that the virgin and respectable women can be safe to live amongst us? Perhaps he would also suggest whose daughters should be so assigned for this purpose. If this is his proposal, it logically follows that he would not object to his own women folk engaging in such a business.

As I mentioned above we do not blame prostitutes, because they are, after all victims of circumstances. We sympathise with them. There are several rescue homes including one conducted by the Bombay Vigilance Association in Bombay, who interest themselves in the rehabilitation of women who show a desire to give up prostitution. Thus those who wish to live a better life have a chance to do so, and every right-minded citizen will put his best efforts to that end.

Morland Road,
Byculla, Bombay. }

Yours etc.,
P. G. NAIK.

WORLD'S YOUTH IN COUNSEL.

A correspondent writes :

Two Assemblies of the youth of all the nations met yesterday in Toronto, Canada, for the first day of a week's conference. These separate Assemblies of young men and boys bring together in Toronto the younger element of the World Conference of the Y. M. C. A. which is to meet in full session next week in Cleveland, Ohio. The Young Men's Assembly, for the ages 18 to 25, is meeting in the Convocation Hall of the University of Toronto, with groups gathering in various colleges; while the Boys' Assembly, for older boys and workers among boys is meeting in the Central Technical School, ten minutes walk from the University grounds. The formal opening of the Assemblies occurred on Monday night, with an impressive roll-call of the nations. The 300 older boys, who are living together in international units and having their meals in the University dining-hall, met yesterday in groups in the classrooms of the school to discuss the place of the older boy in the life of the Association. In the recreation hour that followed, they witnessed an exhibition of boys' hobbies throughout the world, including woodwork, camping, games, music, handicraft, etc. At a later hour the young men and senior workers among boys met in 'seminars' under expert leadership, for the study of modern trends of thought in psychology, science and religion, in their bearing upon the work of the Association. The two Assemblies will continue in daily session until Sunday, after which the whole delegation will migrate to Cleveland to take part in the 20th World Conference of the Y. M. C. A. which meets there next week.

The boy delegates from overseas, some of whom arrived ahead of time, are being royally entertained by the boys of America, and have been welcome visitors at boys' camps and Associations throughout the country. The Indian delegation at Toronto includes six older boys and youths, besides seniors who are engaged in work among boys. There is much admiration in America for the linguistic powers of some of the boy delegates from the continent of Europe from Czechoslovakia, Italy, Bulgaria, Hungary, Rumania, Russia. Great ingenuity has been employed by the boys of America, and by their comrades in other lands, to raise the funds required for bringing these delegates half-way round the world to meet together in Toronto. Perhaps the oldest example of grim determination was that of a German boy delegate, who tells that he worked three months as a grave digger in order to earn 200 marks towards the cost of his trip to America. Happily he did not dig himself in, and he is now in Toronto with the others, enjoying the eager life of this parliament of youth.

RAM RAJYA.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.
Sir,

In the latest issue of the I. S. Reformer dated August 1st, 1931 the reader will find the following remarks made by Mr. George Joseph as regards Congress attitude towards religions.

"Mr. Sri Prakasa in his reply suggested that the amendment was all right and that he did not expect any difficulty in its being accepted. But he was mistaken, and I was not. The truth is that he is a Cambridge man, and modern-minded, while the Congress and its committees are dominated by Gandhiji and his disciples who accept the ideal of Ramarajyam, the rule of the ideal Hindu King. So my cause was lost."

In this connection I would like to invite the reader's attention to the following extract taken from Young India dated 19th September 1929.

"Using the word Ramaraj in a ~~Musalm~~ State (It was Bhopal State—M. S.) and for an audience which had a very large number of Musalmans in it he (i. e. Gandhiji) immediately said: "I warn my Musalman friends against misunderstanding me in my use of the words "Ramaraj." By Ramaraj I do not mean Hindu Raj. I mean by Rama Raj Divine Raj, the Kingdom of God. For me Rama and Rahim are one and the same deity. I acknowledge no other God but the one God of truth and righteousness. Whether Rama of my imagination ever lived or not on this earth, the ancient ideal of Ramaraj is undoubtedly one of true democracy in which the meanest citizen could be sure of swift justice without an elaborate and costly procedure. Even the dog is described by the Post to have received justice under Ramaraj."

Further comment is, I think, not necessary.

2nd August 1931. }

Yours etc.
M. S.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Sarda Act:—The first conviction of the father of the bride-groom and bride in Calcutta under the Sarda Act took place on 29th July, when the Chief Presidency Magistrate sentenced Gangadas Lakhani and Kanhoilal Mull to five days' simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 250 each, in default one month's simple imprisonment. Mull gave her daughter of about nine in marriage to Lakhani's son, aged 18. The accused pleaded guilty. The magistrate directed that the accused be treated as "A" class prisoners and be conveyed to the jail in a separate conveyance and not in the prison van.

Orissa Women's Conference—The All-Orissa Women's Conference will be held at Balasore on the 2nd and 3rd August with Mrs. Kuntalakumeri Devi in the chair. This will be the first sitting of the conference. In addition to the women of Orissa proper those belonging to the Feudatory States have intimated their willingness to attend it. A volunteer corps is being trained in this connection.

ADVERTISEMENTS

Scientific Series
Edited by SHRI YOGENDRA
FOUNDER OF YOGA INSTITUTES IN INDIA AND AMERICA

For the health of your body and mind, read the only authentic encyclopedic work upon practical Yoga scientifically explained. Fully illustrated. Volume Rs. 10.

His series are of exceptional practical, academic and scientific interest—Free Press.

Get acquainted with his most valuable series on practical Yoga—Mercury.

A scholar who has successfully met the challenge of clinical and laboratory tests—Daily Mail.

POST BOX 481, BOMBAY.

"MY EXPERIENCE AS LEGISLATOR"

BY

DR. MRS. S. MUTHULAKSHMI REDDY,

M. B. & C. M.

Ex-Deputy President, Legislative Council, Madras.

PRICE Rs. 2/-

Can be had from the Manager,

The Indian Social Reformer.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions: Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription.	Inland	...	Rs. 2-3-0	V.P.P.
"	Foreign	...	" 2-8-0	Post free.
"	Single Copy	...	0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a

HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT

with us and earn 3½% interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDRA.

Branches: {

CALCUTTA.

AHMEDABAD.

POONA.

SURAT.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS:

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustee business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwaraka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratna Bhalil Dalibhai Amin B.A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alambic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)
 Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.)

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 8 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-8-26.

G. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramall (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondalcha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Satara ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Kalol ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nashik).
Belapur ( " " ).	Satana ( " " ).
Ahmednagar ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Parola (District East Khandesh).	Kalwan ( " " ).
Akunj (District Solapur).	Bhiwandi (District Thana).
Virangam (District Ahmedabad).	Paighar ( " " ).

DIRECTORS:

Sir Chunilal V. Mehta, K.C.S.L.,	Madhowjee D. Thackersey, Esqr.,
Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt.,	Principal M. L. Tannan,
V. V. Garud, Esqr.,	Dewan Bahadur A. U. Malji.
G. K. Devadhar, Esqr.,	Rai Bahadur Pritamdas,
G. B. Trivedi, Esqr.,	Dewan Bahadur S. V. Mensinkal,
Rao Saheb V. O. Jadav.,	V. L. Mehta, Esqr.,
D. V. Gokhale, Esqr.,
R. N. Rajadnya, Esqr.,

SHARE CAPITAL:—

(Fully Paid) ... .. Rs. 12,96,900

1. DEPOSITS fixed for one year and shorter or longer periods are accepted. Rates and other particulars may be ascertained from the undersigned.

2. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened for Co-operative Societies and individuals. Interest is allowed at 2½ per cent. on daily balance not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000.

3. SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS are accepted and interest paid at 3½ per cent. on minimum monthly balances. Rules may be obtained from the undersigned.

4. THE BANK has issued Five Years Cash Certificates yielding 5½ per cent. per annum. The Bank has also arranged for the issue of Ten Tolas Gold bars. Particulars on application.

5. Drafts are issued on district and other towns on terms to be ascertained on application.

6. The Bank finances only registered Co-operative Societies in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency.

7. Accounts are audited quarterly by a firm of Incorporated Accountants and yearly by a Special Auditing Quarterly statements of financial position are published in the "Bombay Government Gazette".

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay

Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling

at Galle Tuticorin, Colombo and other

coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,
10-12-26. Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Mesari Kuteeram,
INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A-175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,055
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

SAFELY RELY

ON

AMRUTANJAN BALM

FOR THE CURE OF

Colds, Cough, Headaches, Rheumatism, Swellings and all other kinds of Aches and Pains.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

(REGD.)

IT IS YOURS
LOW IN PRICE
HIGH IN EFFICACY

THE ATANK
NIGRAH PILLS

to cure constipation, brain-fag, etc.

Rupee One ( 32 pills ).

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY,

JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch :-

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. s. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single Copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed),

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.
 PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.
 FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
 STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8	(Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	Rs. 10	(Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper, thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

CHÂR MINÂR

BRAND

PORTLAND CEMENT.

LATEST BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

Hardens Rapidly giving Standard 28 days Concrete strength at 4 days.

DISTRIBUTORS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. B. H. (The Nizam's Dominions)

ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan

RASHID KHODADAD & CO
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

FLIT ADVERTISEMENT FILM No. 6.

BRITISH MOVIE-TONE NEWS VOL. 2 No. 82.

PARIS

10 Reels, featuring

IRENE BORDINI, AND JACK BUCHANAN

A First National Vitaphone All Talking, Singing and Dancing with Technicolour Scenes.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News Vol. 2 No. 7.

BROWN SUGAR

7 Reels, featuring

CONSTANCE CARPENTER, HELEN HAYE AND EYE MOORE.

Twinekenham Production.

ADAM'S EYE

2 Reels, featuring

JOHNNY ARTHUR AND FRANCES LEE

A Paramount Talking Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

FLIT ADVERTISEMENT FILM No. 5.

VAGABOND LOVER

8 Reels, featuring

'RUDY VALEE, SALLY BLANE, MARIE DRESSLER AND CHARLES SELTON.'

R. K. O. Picture.

ROYAL PAIR

2 Reels

PAT ROONEY FAMILY

Universal Comedy.

MY WIFE'S BIRTHDAY

2 Reels

SALLY WARD

Paramount Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

NO CINEMA SHOWS.

THE

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, PORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0

Vol. XII,

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, AUGUST 15, 1931

No. 50

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Mahatma Gandhi and the Round Table Conference.	"The Right to Convert."
Discriminating Against Indian Commerce.	The Hindu Mahasabha.
Mr. M. A. Jinnah.	Gopal Krishna Devadhar.
The National Liberal Federation and Prohibition.	Mr. Devadhar's Sixtieth Birthday.
Export of Monkeys.	Hindu Mahasabha.
Caste and Kingship.	Lady Dorabji Tata, C. B. E.
	Cruelty of the Monkey Trade.
	Proselytising Missions.
	News and Views.

NOTES.

Mahatma Gandhi and the Round Table Conference:—The Working Committee of the National Congress has been in continual session in Bombay for about ten days, awaiting the outcome of some correspondence between Mahatma Gandhi and the Bombay Government relating to the interpretation of the Delhi Truce Pact. The attitude of the Bombay Government being considered unsatisfactory, an appeal was made to the Viceroy whose reply was received on Thursday. The Working Committee set to work at once the same evening and decided to withdraw the representation of the Congress at the Round Table Conference. Mahatma Gandhi, its sole representative, has announced that he has with much regret and reluctance accepted the decision of the Committee and is not going to London with the other Federal Committee members on Saturday. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, although they were nominated independently of the Congress delegation, have also cancelled their passages in sympathy with the Working Committee. The great hopes raised by the prospect of Mahatma's participation in the Conference, cannot now be realised unless there are fresh developments and there will be deep disappointment in many quarters. Lord Irwin will feel it keenly, and his political opponents will rejoice at his discomfiture. The interest in the further proceedings of the Conference in London will be greatly diminished. Neither Government nor Mahatma Gandhi has been fit to publish the correspondence which has led to the break-down; but if even this is done, it will be vain to apportion blame or praise at this stage when no good can come out of it. Mahatma Gandhi in India and out of the Conference may, after all, prove to be a more potent influence in shaping the course of the Conference than in London and as a participant. One thing is plain. The method of deciding the future constitution of India by a Conference in London, has failed. It is best to acknowledge the fact, and wind up the ensuing session as expeditiously as possible. The next session, if there is to be one, should be held in India. But we doubt if there is need to hold any more Conferences. The main issues have been discussed threadbare. The Sankey scheme of Federation has not met with approval, and the prevailing opinion is that British India should develop on her own lines, leaving the question of the States for future consideration. The Princes out of the way, the minorities, or more properly the Hindu-Muslim question, can receive more attention. The Working Committee's decision may thus prove a blessing.

Discriminating Against Indian Commerce:—The Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce met last week in Bombay and decided that Sir Purshottamdas Thakurdas, who had been invited to the Round Table Conference as its representative, should not attend as a protest against the omission of two other names of prominent commercial men which it had recommended, Mr. G. D. Birla and Mr. Jamal Mahomed. The European commercial community has been given six representatives and the allotment of a single seat to Indian Commerce has aroused great resentment. Sir Purshottamdas, in compliance with the resolution, has cancelled his passage. The following telegram was sent to the Viceroy by the President, Mr. Jamal Mahomed: "At a meeting of the Committee of the Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry held to-day the correspondence between Lord Irwin and Lalaji Sri Ram, the then President of the Federation was reviewed. The Committee noted with regret that no reply has yet been received to the telegram dated Madras August 6. In view of the failure of the Government to nominate all the three persons agreed upon, the Committee has no option but to come to the decision that they must instruct their nominee not to proceed to the Round Table Conference unless agreed representation is given. If any agreement is arrived at the Round Table Conference in the absence of the representatives of the Federation such an agreement will not be binding on the Indian mercantile community."

Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—In the course of a visit to Allahabad, Mr. M. A. Jinnah addressed the University students on two occasions. In one of them he claimed with truth that he never sought popularity. Not many years ago, a Muslim conference in Bombay over which he presided, was broken up by a conservative group which objected to a clean-shaven man taking a prominent part in a Mussalman gathering. Many other men who aspired to leadership would have got over this popular disqualification by the easy means of giving up shaving. But Mr. Jinnah is not made that way. In small things as in great he has not allowed his course to be determined by others' opinion, and he has actually compelled the Muslims of India reluctantly to acknowledge him as their most capable leader. Amidst the welter of flabby indecision one sees on all sides, it is refreshing to light upon a man who knows his own mind and is not afraid to speak or act upon it in the face of opposition. This quality in Mr. Jinnah has always earned our respect, though we know others who seem to regard it in a different light. We are, therefore, surprised to read his views on the vexed question of electorates, as expressed in his Allahabad speeches. We are relying on the reports in the Leader. Mr. Jinnah prefers joint electorates, and feels sure that his co-religionists will find out their mistake after one or two elections. On this reasoning, he deprecated making a fetish of this question and pleaded for letting the Muslims who are enamoured of separate electorates to please themselves. This has been our own view which is all right for one more or less in the position of "a watchman on his lonely tower." But it is not so for Mr. Jinnah. For he is a leader, and the duty of a leader is to lead. It is related that during the French Revolution, a rather disconsolate individual was following at the tail end of a long procession waving a flag. Some one asked him what that flag was for. "Don't you know," he replied, "I am their leader?" Mr. Jinnah is the last man one would expect to be a leader of this type. We suggest in all friendliness that, with his views on the question, his place is by the side of Dr. Ansari in the Muslim Nationalist party.

The National Liberal Federation and Prohibition:—Referring to our criticism of the failure to pass a resolution at the last Liberal Federation, the Dnyanodaya in this week's issue gives an astonishing account of how it came about. It was not, it appears, due to inadvertence. The facts, as stated by our contemporary, are these. The Editor of the Dnyanodaya, Mr. Edwards, an indefatigable worker for the reform, joined the Reception Committee of the Federation chiefly with a view to secure the right to send a resolution which he had drafted through the Federation to the Round Table Conference advocating Prohibition. He communicated his intention to the Secretaries and received a reply from them saying that the resolution would be placed before the Subjects Committee and urging Mr. Edwards to attend. Unfortunately, he was not able to come to Bombay, but Professor V. K. Joag took it up and wanted it to be attached to the resolution on Trading Rights. This was properly disallowed by the President. The matter was again brought before the Committee separately. The voting resulted in a tie and the President gave his casting vote against it. A subsequent effort to bring the resolution before the open Conference was negatived by Mr. Chintamani who nevertheless stated that the Federation 'was not opposed to Prohibition.'

We are not inclined to be grateful for this mercy. Whatever his personal views may be, the President was clearly wrong in preventing the Federation from discussing a social question of great gravity now agitating the country from one end to the other.

Export of Monkeys:—Referring to Mrs. Margaret Cousin's article in last week's Reformer on the export of monkeys from India to America, the Times of India wrote on Tuesday: "Three or four years ago monkeys used to be exported in large numbers from Bombay to rejuvenate senile Americans. But Bombay has a more tender conscience than Calcutta. Thanks to agitation by certain newspapers, the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and other imaginative people, monkey dealers are now required to cage animals so roomily that it is no longer profitable to export them by the shipload." This, it appears, is not correct. On Thursday, the Times published a letter from Mr. Ward throwing further light on the cruelty practised on monkeys during their transportation from Karachi to Bombay in pursuance of this trade. It is reprinted elsewhere. It would be interesting to know whether the Karachi firm which does this business is Indian or foreign. Our contemporary was also informed by Messrs. Lione Edwards, the shipping agents who arrange for the transport of monkeys, that they have received no complaints from the consignees of the heavy mortality complained of among these unfortunate animals. This is easily explained by the prices at which monkeys are bought here and sold in foreign countries, which provide margin enough to cover the loss of 80 per cent of these living goods in transit. We hope some member of the Legislative Assembly or Council of State will at the ensuing session ask Government for further information on the frightful facts relating to this abominable trade.

Caste And Kingship:—A statement has been published relating to certain negotiations between the Maharaja of Patiala, who is the premier Sikh ruling Prince and the Central body of the Sikh community. It is alleged therein that the Maharaja undertook to perform certain penitential acts in token of his allegiance to his community, some of them involving a certain amount of personal humiliation. The statement has been called forth by another in which His Highness gave his own version. The details of this controversy are not of general interest. Our purpose in referring to it is to bring out the peculiar position of an Indian ruler. He is an autocrat in the sphere of administration, but he is also a member of a caste, subject to the discipline of the caste in social and religious matters. So long as this system existed in its integrity, the autocracy of Hindu rulers was practically controlled by public opinion exercised through their respective castes. This wholesome check has now largely disappeared, and with its disappearance the public opinion of their people has ceased to have any influence on the conduct, private as well as public, of Princes.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, AUGUST 16, 1931.

"THE RIGHT TO CONVERT."

We reproduced from the Catholic Leader in the Reformer of 8th August a letter from Mr. George Joseph calling attention to the omission of the "right to convert" from the Fundamental Rights formulated by the Working Committee of the National Congress. Bishop Palmer, late of Bombay, also noted it in a letter on the Rev. W. Paton's paper on Christian missions read at the East Indian Association in London on the 5th June. The Dnyanodaya commenting on it says it would be "an intolerable invasion" of religious liberty not to allow this "right" freely. The All-India Congress Committee which met last week has not seen fit to modify the resolution of the Working Committee. No one who approaches the question with an open mind, can see anything to blame in the Committee's action or omission in this respect. While it is the indefeasible right of every man to profess any religion or no religion as he likes, "the right to convert" another, is not a fundamental right. There is, we believe, on the British statute-book a law which makes it an offence to induce a man to change his religion even by gentle persuasion. The law is not enforced, but should a large number of Hindu or Muslim missions invade Britain, establish schools and hospitals, and carry on proselytising propaganda in the country-side, the old statute would be promptly put into force. Such institutions, we may be sure, will get no grants from Mr. Snowden or any British Chancellor of the Exchequer. Then, we are told of the "freedom" allowed in the United States. This is about the most astounding instance offered as an analogy. The States do not, it is true, forbid religious propaganda, but they keep their doors tightly shut against all but white men all of whom profess Christianity in some form or other. On the American analogy India would be entitled to exclude all Europeans from the country. We wonder if those who cite America as an example would prefer this course. That she may not be strong enough to enforce the ban, is another matter. The Greek Church, the Jews and the Parsis do not claim the "right to convert" as a fundamental right of religious freedom. Until the recent Revolution, under the Catholic monarchy of Spain not merely propaganda but even the public profession of any religion other than the Roman Catholic one, was prohibited by law. Mr. George Joseph must read up the history of his own Church before he thinks of advising others. Islam admits converts but as it does not concede the "right to convert" to non-Mussalmans, it does not obviously regard it as a fundamental right of citizenship. Under Islamic law, non-Muslim subjects were allowed to profess their religion on the payment of a tax. But they were not allowed to carry on a propaganda to convert Muslims to their own faiths.

And what precisely does this "right" connote? In discussing this question Missionary apologists usually make out that every proselyte has as a matter of course gone through the process of internal conversion and that no one is "converted" who has not experienced this inward change, or at any rate, that such conversions are few and unusual. In a paper read before the East India Association, London, a few months ago, the Rev. W. Paton observed: "I take proselytism to be that kind of activity that counts numbers only, that values the increase of adherents beyond the real change in heart and in society, and that is consequently not too scrupulous as to the methods to be employed. I hope that that mind and temper will never become characteristic of the missionary movement, and I am very certain that it is not so today." We underline the last sentence to show that that is the general view of missionary proselytising endeavour generally presented in the course of arguments in its defence. That this view is not correct was shown by an incident in his own experience narrated by Mr. Strickland who was, we believe, connected with the Co-operative movement in an official capacity in this country. He recollected, he said, a little group of sweepers in a northern town who were organized in a co-operative society for the restriction of extravagance and the inculcation of thrift, and it was found by one of his staff that they were not succeeding in those objects. He called upon his inspector to make a special enquiry, and found that the reason was this: that they had become Christians, and were celebrating with perhaps small expenditure all the Christian festivals, and they were at the same time maintaining and celebrating with the same expenditure as before all the festivals belonging to their previous faith. This reminds us of the observation of the Superintendent of the last Bombay Census (1921) the late Mr. L. A. Sedgwick. "It is well-known," he wrote, "that these Christian Kolis combine the worship of idols with the worship of the Christian Trinity, figures of Hindu godlings being kept behind the altar, and covered with a cloth when a priest comes to celebrate mass. As Dr. (Archbishop) Goodier says—'though we call them Christians, one has to give a very broad definition in order to include them'."

It may be said that this is past history, that missionaries nowadays hold a different view. We gladly acknowledge that thoughtful missionaries are beginning to look at the matter in the right perspective. We quoted a fortnight back from the Rev. W. M. Ryburn's book "The Methods of the Master" his emphatic opinion that mass conversions are totally opposed to the teachings of Jesus. The Guardian, the well known Christian weekly of Calcutta, in its issue of August 6, is equally opposed to mass conversions. "We have had a good deal of experience of mass movement work in different parts of India", it observes in an editorial "and we very much doubt the truth of this statement (that mass movements towards Christianity provide the best method of christianising the people of India). Mass movements have added more problems to the Indian church than almost anything else and we agree with the Indian Social Reformer that they are a source of weakness rather than of strength. The mass movements are proselytism carried to an extreme. We hope that missionary organisations in this country will think a good many times before they give their approval to the principle that the mass movement is the right policy for Christian work in India. A mass movement is nothing but mass proselytisation and is always shallow and superficial in its characteristics." We welcome such frank avowals and we repeat that no reasonable man can object to religious teaching or preaching by men whose sole purpose is to impart to others spiritual truths which they have realised in their own lives.

But this view is not as yet accepted by the generality of missionaries. We reprint elsewhere a strong plea for mass movements from the current number of the Baptist Missionary Review. The Rev. W. Scopes writing in the South Indian United States Herald, quotes Dr. Pickett as declaring unhesitatingly that, "mass movements are India's natural line of approach to Christ, asserting that motives for coming over in mass movement areas are found to be not less worthy than those in cases of individual conversion." Mr. Scopes argues that as God created men not as solitary units, but as members of families, communities, castes, villages, towns and countries, the Missionary should convert men not as individuals but in the mass. Mr. Scopes' theory of creation is in accord neither with Genesis nor with the conclusions of sociology. That is, however, by the way. The point to be noted both in the comments of the Baptist Missionary Review and of Mr. Scopes, is that they do not consider the inner process essential to conversion or, at least they regard it as of subsidiary importance. The Review, in fact, scoffs at this view. "We hear," it says, "of such work in parts of Arabia where, if there be a convert, there is the well-grounded fear that, sooner or later, his life will be forfeited." In India, of course, there is no such fear, and never has been and so the right thing to do is to bring as many as possible, as quickly as possible in your net in the hope that ultimately some few may prove a valuable acquisition to the missionary feast! The Review unabashedly avows that some of the converts made sixty-five years ago in the Telugu country, with which it is particularly concerned, "still exemplify Christianity near its lowest terms." Between the Baptist Missionary Review and Dr. Pickett, on the one side, and Mr. Ryburn and the Guardian on the other, there is a wide gulf, which cannot be overlooked, however anxious Indian nationalist leaders may be to avoid raising controversies not immediately relevant to their political programme. For our part, we feel that the right adjustment of relations between India and the West on the spiritual plane is of far more urgency and is, in fact, indispensable to similar adjustment on the economic and political spheres. That is why we have been devoting a large amount of space to exploration from all standpoints of the problems arising from organised proselytism by foreign missions.

THE HINDU MAHASABHA.

Mr. Vijiaraghava Charya's presidential address to the thirteenth session of the Hindu Mahasabha held at Akola is marked by characteristic directness of thought and expression. The interval between his selection and the date of the meeting was short. Every day during that short time brought fresh developments which made the task of finding a suitable starting-point none too easy. Another difficulty which must have weighed with him is that of reconciling Mahatma Gandhi's policy with the Moonje school. The only wise course in such circumstances was for one to state his own convictions without reference to what others might have thought or said. And that is what Mr. Vijiaraghava Charya has done. Owing to its air of complete detachment, the criticisms and suggestions in the address of the Federation scheme outlined by the Sankey Committee may strike some people as academic. But the conclusions which Mr. Vijiaraghava Charya draws, are practically identical with those expressed in the address to the Liberal Federation by Mr. Chintamani with his intimate touch with the discussions in and around the Round Table Conference. Mr. Vijiaraghava Charya contemptuously flings aside the idea of Federation and asks for an honest unitary Government for British India. Mr. Chintamani, after exploring the illusory character of the proposed pseudo-federation, suggested that we get on with our old problem of self-Government for British India. On the question of safeguards, Mr. Vijiaraghava is,

MR. DEVADHAR'S SIXTIETH BIRTHDAY.

We take the following from the appeal to which we refer in our leading article :

But if Mr. Devadhar's name goes down to posterity it will be, in our opinion, mainly through the Poona Seva Sadan, which has firmly established his reputation as a Social Worker of a very high rank. The services that he has rendered to the cause of the uplift of Indian womanhood indisputably top the services, mentioned in the fore-going paragraphs. Soon after he decided to devote his life to the service of Mother India, and while distributing famine-relief in Northern India, he recognized the absolute and imperative necessity of securing a band of capable women social workers, who would work shoulder to shoulder with men in any philanthropic and humanitarian undertaking. He found that there was a great paucity of such workers among the female population of the country, due no doubt to the lack of proper and adequate educational facilities for women. He, therefore, conceived the noble idea of starting the Poona Seva Sadan, where women would be trained for social work of varied kinds by affording them the necessary facilities. Fortunately for the cause and the country, Mr. Devadhar was able to secure active and ready co-operation of a band of ladies, headed by the late Mrs. Ramabaisahib Ranade, who were equally interested in the uplift of their illiterate sisters. Thus the Seva Sadan came to be started in 1909; and from the small, very small beginning made in that year with about a dozen women students, receiving only elementary education, the institution has to-day expanded into a huge organization catering for the educational needs of over 1600 women and girls scattered over a wide area of the Presidency and even outside it. The work carried on by the Society is of a cosmopolitan nature; and hundreds of women have been turned out by the Society's Institutions as qualified lady doctors, nurses, midwives, trained teachers, etc. etc., who have been doing responsible work in the spread of medical relief and literacy both in urban as well as rural areas. In short, Mr. Devadhar's activities in his particular field have revolutionized the condition of women in India; and it is only in the fitness of things that his services at the Seva Sadan should top the list.

Such is the nature of the services Mr. Devadhar has rendered to India in general and this Presidency in particular. These services are so varied that there is hardly any domain within human suffering that has not claimed his attention. His services have also been recognized by Government by awarding him Kaiser-i-Hind Gold Medal and conferring on him the honour of C. I. E. It, therefore, behoves the general public to recognize—and recognize adequately and in a befitting manner—his services. We of the Seva Sadan, therefore, propose to take steps in this direction, with the active co-operation of bodies like (a) The Servants of India Society, (b) The Co-operative Societies,

(c) The Bombay Presidency Baby and Health Week Association, (d) The Deccan Agricultural Association, etc. Fortunately for us a splendid and appropriate opportunity has presented itself on the 21st of August 1931, when he completes his sixtieth year and enters the sixty-first. We have decided to celebrate the Day with due eclat and a programme for the same will shortly be drawn up. The principal items in the programme will, however, be (a) offering prayers to God Almighty for a further long lease of life to Mr. Devadhar, coupled with full bodily and mental vigour, so that he may be enabled to continue his beneficial activities without abatement, and (b) presenting him with a purse in recognition of his past services. True, a social worker of his high calibre hardly needs any incentive or out-side prompting for continuance of his work. Never-the-less, the public has got to discharge its duty.

We, therefore, approach you as one of the numerous admirers of Mr. Devadhar's life-long work, with a sanguine hope for liberal monetary help towards the Purse-Fund we have started, in order that it may be a decent presentation. We venture to point out that the Jubilee Day is fast approaching and the interval left for the collection is very, very brief. We, therefore, solicit an immediate response to this Appeal—an appeal, we feel confident, that will not fail to achieve its object.

All remittances should kindly be sent to—"The Secretaries, Devadhar Diamond Jubilee Purse Fund, Poona Seva Sadan Society, Poona City."

Hoping to be excused for the trouble and thanking you in anticipation,

The Poona Seva Sadan }
Society, Poona No. 2. }
3rd August, 1931. }

We remain,
Yours sincerely,

Rao Bahadur Hanumant-ram Ramnath.	Her Highness Ranisaheb of Sangli.
Anant Vinayak Patvardhan.	Dowager Ranisaheb of Jamkhandi.
Shridhar Ganesh Vaze.	Dowager Ranisaheb of Jath.
Vaikuntha L. Mehta.	Dr. V. C. Gokhale.
S. L. Apte.	Dr. N. L. Ranade.
Sardar R. J. Potnis.	Mrs. Janakibai Bhat.
Shrimant R. S. Purandare.	Mrs. Yamunabai Bhat.
Dr. H. V. Tilak.	Mrs. Saralabai Naik.
Miss Dwarkabai Bhat.	Mrs. Tarabai Patwardhan.

Non-Hindu as Trustee of Hindu Temple:—An interesting point was raised before the Hindu Religious Endowment Board Commissioners, Messrs. K. Sitarama Reddi and M. Sambandha Mudaliar, whether a non-Hindu could be the trustee of a Hindu temple. Mr. Foulkes District Board President, Madras, was the ex-officio trustee of Sundararaja Peramal Temple, Sivaganga. A petition was filed before the Board under Section 84 of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act to decide the question whether it was an excepted or a non-excepted temple. The petition was heard by the two Commissioners. During the hearing of the petition the question was raised whether Mr. Foulkes, being a non-Hindu could be the trustee of the temple. The matter was then referred to the full board and it decided that the temple was an excepted one and that a non-Hindu could be a trustee.

HINDU MAHASABHA.

In the course of his welcome speech at the 13th session of the Hindu Mahasabha, held at Akola (Berar) Rao Bahadur R. V. Mahajani said :

The function of our conference is of a twofold character. In the first place we have to adjust our relations with other communities in India on a proper footing, and secondly, we have to organise our own community so that on account of greater solidarity which is the result of organisation, it may be in a position to shoulder the responsibilities of working the future Swaraj constitution in co-operation with other communities in India. As the constitution of India is at present in the melting pot we as Hindus should naturally feel anxious to see that our community, while not losing sight of the national point of view, does not fail to occupy a position in the future constitution worthy of our culture and environments as compared to other communities in the Aryavarta.

The second function of the Hindu Mahasabha, viz., the organisation of the community, is even more important than the first one which has been discussed so far. Sangathan of the Hindu society are divided into various castes and creeds is no easy matter. To achieve this aim constant efforts ought to be made to bring out the factors common to all Hindus. Religious and social functions should be organised in which all the component parts of the Hindu community can take part on equal terms. Distinctions and inequalities should be done away with as far as possible. What is most important of all is that every Hindu should be made to feel that his secular and spiritual interests are better secured by his remaining in the Hindu community than by his leaving it. The Hindus must now leave the policy of drift and must make deliberate and sustained efforts to organise the Hindu community throughout India by creating a network of well trained young men to undertake this task.

The tension between the Hindus and Mahomedans has considerably increased since the introduction of the Reforms. The memorandum on the working of the reformed Government in our province, which has been submitted by our Government, shows that there were only 10 riots of a communal nature from the year 1889 to 1920 while there were as many as 33 from 1920 to 1928.

Referring to the question of removal of untouchability, the Chairman asked : " If our Vedic Dharma was once so liberal in its treatment towards even foreigners does it become us who are always proud to call ourselves as the worthy successors of old Rishis, to discard our unfortunate brethren and to dole out to them such a treatment as would make it intolerable for them to remain any longer in the fold of the Hindu community? It is for this reason that I would specially urge upon all the so-called orthodox members of the Hindu community to open the doors of their heart and to give a fair treatment to their brethren."

Speaking on Shudhi, he said, that Shudhi was indispensable for proper sangathan. If the community is to be properly organised, means must be found to re-admit in its fold members, who have been weaned away from it by force, fraud or ignorance. Not only that but if any one outside the fold of Hindu religion conscientiously wants to accept this religion for his secular or spiritual up-lift the way should not be barred to him. This is not altogether a new idea, as may be seen from the existence of Vratyastom, a religious ceremony in vogue in ancient times to admit outsiders to Hinduism.

LADY DORABJI TATA, C.B.E.

A public meeting in memory of the late Lady (Dorabji) Tata, C.B.E., was held at Caxton Hall, London, on Monday, the 20th July, at 5 p.m. Among the convenors of the meeting were the Right Hon'ble the Marchioness of Aberdeen, and a large number of prominent British and Indians.

The meeting was under the Chairmanship of the Right Hon'ble the Marchioness of Aberdeen who, opening the proceedings said: I account this a great honour to have been asked to preside at this meeting by those who loved that bright and brilliant being whose personality we are met together to commemorate. It is hard to believe that we can no longer look for that gracious presence amongst us, so full of vitality and attraction, whose every movement was instinct with dignity and rhythm and whose serene lack of selfconsciousness of her beauty added to her charm. Her entry into any assembly, clad in those graceful garments of harmonious hues which she knew so well how to blend, and which seemed to be part of her very self, always brought distinction to any gathering, and that first impression was heightened when she took part in the discussion in her rich, full voice, ever speaking to the point and showing the mastery of one who had thought out the subject of her remarks.

It is only during the last few years that she became an active force within the International Council of Women, but her influence was very marked from the outset, and the thoroughness with which she entered into its diversified activities and the ardour with which she followed its ideals, permeated by the principle of the Golden Rule being the necessary rule of life for nations as well as for individuals, made all her colleagues feel that in her we had an asset on which we could confidently rely in the future development of our movement.

And if her loss is irreparable to the International Council of Women, still more must the sense of desolation be felt by the youthful National Council of Women in India with which she has been so much identified from its very inception. She was the Chairman of a small Committee of Indian women to whom was entrusted the mission of deciding a few years ago whether the time was ripe for forming a National Council of Women in India, and if so, what constitution should be adopted in order to enable it to become truly representative of all races and classes of religions, however modest might be its beginning. The report that Lady Tata presented was definitely in favour of making a start, and was accompanied with recommendations for a constitution the outline of which was afterwards adopted and developed at an assembly of the Council of Women in India. Lady Tata has been the Chairman of the Executive of that Council, presiding over its meetings in India, and representing it as the leader of a delegation of Indian women at our international meetings at Geneva, London, Vienna and elsewhere, with satisfaction to all.

Her deep sympathies with the aspirations of her country-women, together with the love and confidence which she inspired in all with whom she worked, makes her withdrawal from our midst at the present anxious and difficult time a very sore trial, and it will be a hard task for the Indian National Council and their President, Her Highness the Maharani of Baroda, to find someone to replace her. But she has laid a sure foundation, and her memory will ever be enshrined in the hearts of her fellow workers of all nations. Great as were her intellectual endowments, it was her power of inspiring personal affection wherever she went that constituted her supreme gift. In the letters which I am receiving from all parts of the world there is always the same note: "I loved her from the first day I met her." She was one of those women who do all the good they can without thinking of any personal reward. To have made this impression on women of such different types and races is very significant, and is a great tribute to her beautiful character and to her gifts of head and heart. Thereby she has made an abiding contribution to our work, and she leaves a name which will ever be cherished and honoured. I dare not trust myself to speak of what her loss means to myself.

I am blessed in wonderful international friendships which fill my life with joy and strength, but Lady Tata held a place apart in my heart, and I thank God for her friendship. And Lord Aberdeen desires to add his respectful and devoted homage to the memory of this beautiful and splendid woman.

But I know that the outstanding thought which over-shadows all others to-day is our deep sympathy for the sorely bereaved husband in his loneliness. He makes me think of the husband who built the Taj Mahal at Agra, as he pays the beloved companion of his life such beautiful tributes and tells of her selflessness, of her devotion to the interests of others, and how, when ill and suffering herself, she could not spare herself if there was suffering or sorrow which she could alleviate. We dare not intrude in his sacred sorrow, but we can assure him that he has our most heartfelt sympathy and that we realise the debt of gratitude we owe to him for the support he always gave to his dear wife in her labours for the good of others in all her public duties and international work.

Sir Leslie Wilson moved the following resolution: "The friends and admirers of the late Lady Dorabji Tata, C.B.E., in public meeting assembled desire to express their heartfelt sorrow at her untimely death in the midst of her manifold activities in the interests of India both in that country and in England. They wish to place on record that her amiable qualities had won the affection and esteem of all who had come into contact with her either socially or in the wider sphere of her public services, especially in the cause of the uplift and welfare of India's womanhood which has suffered an irreparable loss by her death." He said that he had had the privilege of making Lady Tata's acquaintance before going to India, and during his five years' service as Governor of Bombay he had seen a great deal of her work. He had frequently met her personally, and could testify to some of the many spheres of activity in which she had taken part. They were there to mourn a great personality. One of Lady Dorabji Tata's many wonderful characteristics was her intense love of life and the determination which she always had to get everything possible out of life, not for herself, but for the benefit of everyone who was in need of help. He was sure the one thing she had always desired in her all too short life was to leave the world a little better because she had been in it. She brought into everything that she undertook courage and perseverance. It was impossible for him to give a history of all the splendid work which had been done by Lady Tata. Almost her first public appearance was the very successful organisation of the Industrial Section of the Bombay Exhibition, 1905. From that time until her death there was hardly a moment in which she was not actively engaged in good works of all descriptions. For her splendid work during the war, His Majesty the King had awarded her the C.B.E. Her work would always be a permanent memorial to her name.

Several speakers supported the resolution which was carried by all present standing.

CRUELTY OF THE MONKEY TRADE.

Mr. W. G. Ward writes in the Times of India:

Reading your article in Current Topics this morning on the subject of cruelty to monkeys in transit, I would like to recount an experience I had whilst travelling from Bombay to Indore on 13th of July last.

I had crossed the Tapti Ferry, and while leaving the river bed I saw a motor van loaded with monkeys, and attracted by the noise they were making I stopped to look at them. What I saw nearly made me sick. The van body was built in three shelves and the flooring of each of the upper shelves was nothing more than iron bars across. The monkeys were so numerous on each shelf that it would have been impossible to count them, but I should think in all there must have been at least three to four hundred of all sizes. Even babies were trying to cling to their mothers. This was almost impossible for them, as when a monkey wanted to move its position, it had to climb over the others. I saw several babies fall through the bars to the compartments below, from where it would not be possible for such small ones to get up again.

The stench was terrible; it had been raining previously and the sun was drying up the mess. The monkeys on the two upper shelves were messing on to the ones below, and the state these were in is hard to imagine, but I can assure you it was pitiful to watch. One poor animal was in a very terrible state, and appeared to be dying with its inside protruding from its rectum.

The feeding arrangements appeared to be almost entirely overlooked. A round-bottomed basin had been put inside which, of course, was empty of either food or water, but was filthy with mess, and the driver said he had no more food till he got to a town.

The driver, a Mahomedan, approached me and showed me a telegram instructing him to reach Bombay urgently, to catch a steamer leaving the next day. He said he had been waiting to cross since early morning but no one would ferry his van across. He said they were demanding Rs. 20 (the proper fare being Rs. 2). He was offering Rs. 10. (I offered this amount on his behalf, but could get no response). I then gave him a note to the Public Works Department officer at Shinval, six miles back, asking that officer to help him, also asking that officer to let me know what happened. But I have not heard from him.

The driver informed me that he was regularly running between Agra and Bombay with loads of monkeys, his average time on the journey being five days. I do not know what kind of treatment these animals had suffered prior to being loaded for this trip, nor what happens on board the steamer; but to be cooped up in this manner for five days and under these conditions, I consider cruelty in its worst form. Why could not proper shelves have been built which would have been water-tight and constructed so that the filth could not affect those below? And why should so many be allowed in so small a space? Monkeys will fight, as these were doing on all sides, and those which had been bitten were festering from their wounds which were covered with filth and flies.

I sincerely hope you will take this matter up with the authorities concerned to prevent this awful suffering to dumb creatures who have done nobody harm.

It is inevitable, I suppose, that this trade must go on but at least it should be supervised, and the journey made as comfortable as possible for these helpless creatures.

The Times of India wrote with reference to this letter as follows: "A letter published on another page to-day describing the cruelties suffered by monkeys on their way to Bombay suggests that we were wrong in saying that monkeys are no longer exported in large numbers from Bombay. The explanation is this. Practically the whole of the export trade in monkeys—and it is a considerably profitable one—is in the hands of a Karachi merchant who collects monkeys from all parts of the country and usually ships them from Karachi and Calcutta to Hamburg and New York. But as the railways refuse to take monkeys as freight between March and July, and as there are no proper roads to Karachi, the merchant in question finds it most convenient during these months to send his monkeys by lorry to Bombay, where, they are shipped for abroad.

As for Mrs. Cousin's allegation that the monkeys suffer cruelty while at sea, Messrs. Lionel Edwards, who are agents in Bombay and Karachi for many of the ships which carry consignments of monkeys to Hamburg, say that the cages in which the monkeys travel have been approved by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Moreover they do not receive any complaints from the dealers of high mortality among consignments of monkeys, which they would if many died during the voyage. What seems necessary, then, is for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to investigate the charges made in Mr. Ward's letter of the cruelties endured by monkeys during the journey by road to Bombay. They sound appalling.

Monkeys bound for the United States are used mainly in rejuvenation and vivisection experiments in Chicago and New York, while those bound for Hamburg go to the manager of a large zoo who is always purchasing monkeys in large numbers. He keeps some for himself and sells the rest to other zoos and circus proprietors. Monkeys are bought in India for two or three rupees each and sold abroad for ten or more rupees each. So there is money in all this; and the tighter the monkeys can be squeezed together in transit the more money there is to be made.

PROSELYTISING MISSIONS.

(Concluded from the last issue.)

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.
Sir,

That unselfish service is the chief religious duty is the contention of Mahatma Gandhi, was the same of Vivekananda and is the teaching of Jesus Christ also. Therefore, where we see physical, mental and spiritual need we have to help. Or while we are performing acts of charity for the material and physical needs would we be right from our point of view in refusing to give what we consider the greatest spiritual gifts? We do not want people to become Christians for the sake of material help and would be glad if all those who are Christians for no other reason, Christians only in name, would get out of the fold and hence help to purify it. We have enough of that sort of Christians in the West.

It is open to non-Christians to judge Christians by their lives of unselfish love (by their fruits we shall know them). A great truth one has found, a joy and peace one claims to have experienced, is known, revealed and proved by the fact that one desires to share it with others. No doubt you have good reason to criticise wherever you have seen that acts of charity were used only to get outward allegiance to Christianity without real spiritual conversion, change of heart. We do not mind individual criticism be it ever so severe, but we object to generalizations and surely have the same right to do so as you have to object to the generalizations by Miss Mayo in 'Mother India.'

We are glad to see the great social reform movement going on in India. That makes our burden easier and gives us more time for preaching work. As long as the need is there, however, it forces us to works of charity and as Christians we must witness for Christ in and with whatever work we do. We long for the day when Indian church will be able to take care of itself. Already India has some independent and self-supporting churches, and some older than Muhammedanism in India.

Since Hindus have accepted shuddhi since the movement to abolish caste, purdah and other social barriers, the only offence Christians have caused through opposition to Hindu customs and prejudices would seem to have been eliminated. And since many leading Hindus admire Christ and love the Sermon on the Mount this spirit of opposition to missions revealed in your paper is hard to understand, especially in view of the fact that Indian Christians have become real patriots and that Hindus and Muslims carry on mission work unhindered for their religion in the leading cities of the U. S. A. I know of instances where orthodox Hindus have even delivered addresses in Christian churches. As far as I know Hindus in America are at liberty to use every kind of charitable, humanitarian and social agency as Christians consider that truth need not be defended by force. All that the Government would object to would be activities that would be contrary to the law of the land (with perfect religious liberty) and harmful to the physical and material well-being of society. I suppose Hindus would not want to be less fair and broadminded than Americans. If Hindus think they have anything to teach us which we have not got then it is their duty to do it. There are plenty of people in America who never tried the practice of the gospel of Christ and do not care to practice it because they prefer the riches and lust of this world. Let other religions try where the religion of Christ has been rejected for any religion is better than practical or actual atheism and un-Christian or anti-Christian Christianity. I am sorry that in India there are still well-meaning folks who confuse religion with politics. Wherever religion became a national or political affair it has deteriorated. A religion with a claim to truth should be international and interracial. As for Christianity, the East has more claim to it than the West because it came from the East. And Western nations would be better if they would follow the teachings of Christ more conscientiously. It is no fault of Christ if people do not follow Him.

Let us be fair, have mutual respect and share each other's experiences instead of opposing each other.

With all good wishes for India's political, social and religious future.

Grey Engle, Minn, }
U. S. A., }
June 26, 1934. }

H. A. FEINBAND.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Congress working Committee and the R. T. C.—The following resolution was passed by the Working Committee after four hours' discussion on the Viceroy's reply to Gandhiji's letter on Thursday in Bombay: "The Working Committee has carefully considered the correspondence exchanged between the Central Government and the various Provincial Governments on the one hand and Mahatma Gandhi on the other upon matters arising out of the Delhi settlement and has also considered the statement made by Mahatma Gandhi describing the events that led to the correspondence. The Committee notes with regret that there have been in its opinion repeated and in some cases serious breaches by Provincial Governments of the conditions of the Delhi settlement. A stage was reached when failing satisfaction Mahatma Gandhi has asked, with the approval of the Working Committee, for the appointment of an impartial tribunal to investigate into the allegations of breaches and to interpret the terms of the settlement. Such requests have now been refused even in matters affecting the vital interests of the peasantry. The Committee has therefore been obliged reluctantly to come to the conclusion that consistently with the terms of the settlement and National interest, the Congress cannot and should not be represented at the Round Table Conference."

Sir Aurel Stein's Find:—The well-known archaeologist Sir Aurel Stein reports that during his recent travels he discovered a stupa in the neighbourhood of Gilgit cantonment and a well preserved wooden box containing manuscripts of Sanskrit texts written on oblong leaves of birchbark of Indian potli type. In many of them the writing is of the type of Brahmi script familiar from the manuscript remains excavated at the ruined Buddhist sites of Chinese Turkistan. Others show an early form of Brahmi writing, known in Kashmir as Sharada and once prevailing all through the hill tracts in the extreme north-west of India. Paleographic indications in the case of the former manuscripts suggest that some may date back to the sixth century, A. D., if not earlier. Of special interest is a potli written in Central Asian Brahmi on paper. The use of this material distinctly indicates that this manuscript was written in eastern Turkistan. The complete clearing of the stupa of three smaller ones adjoining and as yet unopened, awaits arrangements by Kashmir Durbar.

Bengal Hindu Conference:—Presiding over the Sixth Session of the Bengal Provincial Hindu Conference in Bardwan, on 18th July 1931, Maharaja Sris Chandra Nandy, M.L.C., of Kasimbazar said that in these difficult days those who had been stirring up communal poison were objects of national shame and that it was the duty of every educated Hindu and Mussalman to see that the mischief-mongers who exploited the ignorance of helpless masses merely for the sake of it found no place in society. The present communal trouble, he believed, was merely a passing phase. Referring to the electorate problem the Maharaja said that the demand for separate electorates and reservation of seats in the legislatures clearly went counter to Indian nationalism and that such claims, if supported, would not only witness a reverse for Indian nationalism but would permanently prove the death-knell to a united self-governing British Empire. India belonged neither to Hindus nor to Mussalmans; it belonged to Indians alone. The realisation of this noble ideal of nationalism alone could see the end of all talks of communal problem.

ADVERTISEMENTS

Scientific Series

Edited by SHRI YOGENDRA
FOUNDER OF YOGA INSTITUTES IN INDIA AND AMERICA

Study the secret technique of the Yoga practices, without the aid of a teacher, for the health of your body, mind and soul, from this only authentic and encyclopedic work. Fully Illustrated. Rs. 10.

"An excellent work that is thoroughly scientific in its treatment and practical in its scope"—Bombay Chronicle. "His most valuable series on practical Yoga"—Mercury. "Are of exceptionally practical, academic and scientific interest"—Free Press. "A challenge of clinical and laboratory tests that almost reads like propositions in algebra or geometry"—Daily Mail. "It forms a very interesting and instructive study"—Q. M. S. Journal. "Deserves special attention and admiration for it represents a great field of personal training secretly taught in India."—The Times.

OF ALL BOOK-SELLERS.

Write POST BOX 481, BOMBAY.

"MY EXPERIENCE AS LEGISLATOR."

BY

DR. MRS. S. MUTHULAKSHMI REDDY,

M. B. & C. M.

Ex-Deputy President, Legislative Council, Madras.

PRICE Rs. 2/-

Can be had from the Manager,

The Indian Social Reformer.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-3-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,

11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of

OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDBA.

Branches: CALCUTTA.

AMMEDABAD.

POONA.

SURAT.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	" 1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	" 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for shorter period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Alshana, Dabhol, Surat, Pottlad, Patan, Amreli, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadl, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

JAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	Rs. 60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).

Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).

Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.

Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)

R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Nalb Dewan, Baroda.

Raj Ratna Bhallal Dajibhai Amin B. A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda.)

Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)

Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)

Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.

Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.)

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-5-26.

C. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

—101—

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulia (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondoloha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Sindkheda ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Satara ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Kalol ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Belapur ( " " ).	Satana ( " " ).
Ahmednagar ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Parola (District East Khandesh).	Kaiwan ( " " ).
Akinj (District Solapur).	Bhiwandi (District Thana).
Virangam (District Ahmednagar).	Paiguar ( " " ).

DIRECTORS:

Sir Chunilal V. Mehta, K.C.S.L.,

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt.,

V. V. Garud, Esqr.,

G. K. Devadhar, Esqr.,

G. B. Trivedi, Esqr.,

Rao Saheb V. C. Jadav.,

D. V. Gokhale, Esqr.,

R. N. Rajadnya, Esqr.,

Madhowjee D. Thackersey,

Esqr.,

Principal M. L. Tannan,

Dewan Bahadur A. U. Malji.

Rai Bahadur Pritamdas,

Dewan Bahadur S. V.

Mensinkal,

V. L. Mehta, Esqr.,

SHARE CAPITAL:—

(Fully Paid) ... .. Rs. 12,95,900

1. DEPOSITS fixed for one year and shorter or longer periods are accepted. Rates and other particulars may be ascertained from the undersigned.

2. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened for Co-operative Societies and individuals. Interest is allowed at 2½ per cent. on daily balance not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000.

3. SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS are accepted and interest paid at 3½ per cent. on minimum monthly balance. Rules may be obtained from the undersigned.

4. THE BANK has issued Five Years Cash Certificates yielding 5½ per cent. per annum. The Bank has also arranged for the issue of Ten Tolas Gold bars. Particulars on application.

5. Drafts are issued on district and other towns on terms to be ascertained on application.

6. The Bank finances only registered Co-operative Societies in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency.

7. Accounts are audited quarterly by a firm of Incorporated Accountants and yearly by a Special Government Auditor. Quarterly statements of financial position are published in the "Bombay Government Gazette".

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay

Karachi and Calcutta, Barua calling at Galle, Taticquin, Colombo and other coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORABJEE & Co.,

Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,

10-12-26,

Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate,
TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA
and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,
'INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :—

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTO
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital ( Paid up ) ... Rs. 71,21,05
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,57

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

(REGD.)

BOMBAY

&

MADRAS.

SAFELY RELY

ON

AMRUTANJANI BALM

FOR THE CURE OF

Colds, Cough, Headaches, Rheumatism, Swellings and all other kinds of Aches and Pains.

AMRUTANJANI DEPOT.

LOW IN PRICE
HIGH IN EFFICACY

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS

to cure constipation, brain-fag, etc.

Rupee One ( 32 pills ).

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY,

JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch:—

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATTIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. s. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

" " Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single Copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8	(Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10	(Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931:—"We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931:—"May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931:—"I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to:—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

LATEST BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

Hardens Rapidly giving Standard 28 days Concrete strength at 4 days.

DISTRIBUTORS:—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. R. H. The Nizam's Dominions:

ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan:

RASHID KHODADAD & CO
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

FLIT ADVERTISEMENT FILM No. 7.

BRITISH MOVIE TONE NEWS VOL. 2 No. 83.

FOLLOW THRU'

10 Reels, featuring

NANSY CARROLL AND CHARLES ROGERS

A Paramount All Talking, Singing and Dancing Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News Vol. 2 No. 8.

LYON'S MAIL

8 Reels, featuring

SIR JOHN MARTIN HARVEY AND BEN WEBSTER

Twickenham Production.

GIERSBORA SISTERS

1 Reel, Paramount Sound Novelty.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

COCOANUTS

10 Reels, featuring

OSCAR SHAW, MARY EATON AND FOUR MARX BROTHERS,

A Paramount Picture.

DOMESTIC TROUBLE

2 Reels.

SOFT COKE ADYT. FILM.

} (from 15th to 17th)

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m. Sun. 10 a. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

NO CINEMA SHOWS.

[Sun: 16th a Play "KON SARAS" to be performed by BHARAT SEVA SAMAJ from 3 to 8 p. m.

THE

INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XII.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, AUGUST 22, 1931

No. 51

"I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard."
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

The Buddhist Renaissance. Buddhism and Women's Status. Confusion in Hindu Law. Mr. Paton on Missions. The Political Situation. Liquor Traffic and Hindu Temples. Congress and Conference. The Muslim Demand. Buddhism and Modern India.	The Place of Christian Missions in the New India. Dr. S. K. Datta. Temples and Toddy Tapping. Liberal Judaism. Mr. Jinnah's Fourteen Points. The Maharaja of Patiala and the Sikhs. In Defence of Mass Conversions. News and Views.
--	--

NOTES.

The Buddhist Renaissance:—The Mahabodhi for August is an exceptionally interesting number. It contains a scholarly and suggestive address delivered by Mr. M. Hara, Consul for Japan in Calcutta, on the introduction of Indian religion and culture in Japan 1200 years ago. Mr. Hara says that Japan is now the international centre from which the influence of Buddhism is steadily radiating to Europe and America. It also prints the thoughtful address of the Vice-President, Mr. S. C. Mookerjee, from which we reprint a passage this week. He holds that Buddhism furnishes the key to India's present-day national and international position. "As between the Hindu and the Buddhist," he observes, "they are like the two hands of Mother India, the cultural blood flowing in them being derived from the same Aryan fountain. They are both our own home-made products like our home-spun, Khaddar-cloth or like two cultural shields made in our national armoury for our self-preservation from being engulfed by foreign cults and foreign ideals." The Mahabodhi announces that the veteran Buddhist organiser, Anagarika Dharmapala, was ordained as a Bhikku last month at Saranath near Benares where Buddha preached his first Sermon and where a great Vihara is nearing completion and will be opened in November, mainly owing to the exertions of Sri Devamitta Dhammapala, as the new Bhikku will henceforth be known.

Buddhism And Women's Status:—The Mahabodhi takes us severely to task for a paragraph in the Reformer of the 13th June in which we deprecated an exaggerated statement regarding the attitude of Buddhism to women's status. A similar claim has been often made for Christianity. We pointed out that while both the great Teachers accorded spiritual equality to women neither of them concerned himself with their position in the social system. In fact, St. Paul's conception of women's status was no wise higher than that of the later Hindu commentators whose works have been unquestioningly accepted as authoritative by British Indian Courts influenced, no doubt, by their own Pauline preconceptions. The Bhagavad-Gita proclaimed a religion which was open to all persons irrespective of sex or caste and Gautama Buddha in admitting them, with some reluctance, to his Sangha, did the same thing. The position of women in the family and in society remained unaffected by Buddhism whose principal feature was the establishment of the monastic system as the best means of cultivating the religious life. The Mahabodhi asks us to compare the position of women in Buddhist countries with their position in India. Except for the pardah which is not an indigenous institution, the position, so far as we have been able to gather from books, is not essentially different. Indeed, the matriarchal system of Malabar, one of the strongholds of Hinduism, shows that the Hindu religion as such is not bound up with any particular type of family life. Indian women have ruled kingdoms, and John Stuart Mill, from his long experience of the Political Department at the India Office, formed the opinion that they were some of the best Indian rulers, and that most of them were Hindu princesses. Such a custom as the shaving of widows' heads, was clearly taken over from the example of Buddhist and Jain nuns—an institution unknown to Hinduism.

Confusion in Hindu Law:—The existing confusion in the Hindu law, which will become worse if the idea of absolute autonomy for provinces is carried out, is painfully illustrated by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Deoria, in the United Provinces, in a case where the validity of the marriage of a Brahmin with a Kshattriya woman was the main issue. The Judge found himself confronted by conflicting judgments of High Courts, Bombay and Madras holding anuloma marriages, that is, of men of higher with women of less high castes, valid according to Hindu law, while the Allahabad High Court held they were not. Deoria being under the jurisdiction of the Allahabad High Court, the Judge had reluctantly to follow its decision. In the result, the plea of the man who repudiated the validity of his marriage and, therefore, the wife's claim for maintenance on this blackguardly ground was upheld and the woman today is perhaps destitute! Counsel for the plaintiff, says the report which is printed in the news column, made a passionate appeal to the Court to be liberal. Unfortunately, however, the Court's liberality, pleaded the Judge, cannot exceed that of the law, and it was not open to him to fly in the face of what was laid down in the Allahabad judgment. The only way of getting over the Allahabad ban, is, we suppose, to get a reversal of it by the same High Court. If this is not done the matter must be taken to the Privy Council whose decision is binding on all Courts in India. But this Council is an erratic body where questions of Hindu law are concerned, and it is as likely as not that it may uphold the Allahabad and upset the Bombay and Madras judgments, in which case even these two Presidencies will be deprived of their more liberal legal regimen. Why should not some influential member of the Legislative Assembly introduce a Bill to do away with restrictions on marriage and incidentally the nowadays meaningless distinction between anuloma and pratiloma marriages? It is desirable that some member other than Sir Hari Singh Gour should take up this duty, as there seems to be a strong prejudice against Sir Hari Singh as a social legislator among Hindus.

Mr. Paton on Missions:—We publish in this issue the first half of a paper which the Rev. William Paton, Secretary of the International Missionary Council, read at a meeting of the East India Association in London on the 9th June. The Marquess of Lothian presided. Mr. Srinivasa Sastry who spoke in the discussion which followed, said of it that the paper was marked by great broad-mindedness and toleration. He admired the whole spirit of the paper, and endorsed nearly all the remarks of Mr. Paton even on the controversial issues which he had touched. Mr. Sastri went on to say that he knew Mahatma Gandhi's views on the subject very well. It was wrong to suppose, he added, that when Mahatmajī got political power he was going to advise his followers to prevent proselytization. What Mahatma meant was not that he would prohibit proselytising by law, but that he would continue to regard it as morally wrong. This attitude Mr. Paton characterised as "sardonic", although he himself said the same in his paper when he observed: "Any of us who are Christians would deeply regret to see Christian Englishmen becoming Muslims, but I hope we should think it also wrong that the Muslim evangelist should be forbidden." In a self-governing country with a democratic constitution what the people hold to be morally wrong is apt sooner or later to find its way on to the statute-book. Sometimes, while the statute is kept clean, administrative action does all that is needed. You may not forbid the Muslim evangelist by law but the Passport Officer may reject him as an undesirable alien. Indians are yet unsophisticated in such matters but they too will soon learn the tricks of the trade.

The Political Situation:—We have set forth in a leading article our view of the decision of the Working Committee of the National Congress to go back on its idea of sending a delegation to the Round Table Conference. After communicating the decision to the Prime Minister, the Viceroy left Simla for Calcutta. What happened next is not known, but the Home Member, Sir James Creer, followed Lord Willingdon in hot haste, and apparently persuaded His Excellency that his presence was more necessary in Simla than at Calcutta. The Viceroy who was to have remained in Calcutta till the end of the month, suddenly took train back to Simla. Meanwhile, Mahatma Gandhi issued a statement giving summaries of his several charges of breaches of the Truce. Many of these were covered by the correspondence published earlier in the week by the Government of India. If the publication of the correspondence did not impede reconsideration on the part both of Government and Mahatmajī, we do not see why the latter's statement should. The Anglo-Indian Press is more anxious to maintain the prestige of Government than the responsible heads of Government who have realised what exactly its value is. The fact is that our Anglo-Indian contemporaries have so long shone in the reflected light of an artificial prestige, that they cannot see without it. We too value prestige which is a great means of economising effort, but it is prestige which rests on the solid foundations of right and justice. If, as we trust, the further negotiations enable the Congress delegation to attend the Conference, we should be glad if the question of sending Mahatmajī alone, is reconsidered. Really the one-man delegation is a fiction. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Mrs. Sarojini Naidu are nominally independent delegates, but really, as their prompt withdrawal with Mahatma Gandhi unmistakably showed, they are of that delegation every whit as much as Mahatmajī. That being the plain truth of the matter, there should be no difficulty in associating Dr. Ansari and one or two others with Mahatmajī as delegates of the Congress. The position now is very different from what it was last week, and clearly calls for reconsideration of this question.

Liquor Traffic And Hindu Temples:—The letter which we print to-day from Mr. C. Rajagopalacharya will be read with astonishment and indignation all over the country. Two of the most important Hindu temples—one a Shīva and the other a Vishnu temple—in Madras City have, contrary to the precepts of the Hindu religion, rented the cocoanut trees in their lands to toddy-tappers. A crowded public meeting was held in the premises of one of these temples to protest against this public scandal. Messrs. Rajagopalacharya and Satyamurthi denounced the conduct of the Trustees of the Temple in scathing terms. We trust public opinion, now that it has been aroused to this monstrous practice, will compel the Trustees to cancel the leases. Mr. Rajagopalacharya mentioned several examples of persons and institutions who have at much sacrifice voluntarily foregone the income from the liquor trade. The Theosophical Society at Adyar has a large number of cocoanut trees but they have never been let for toddy-tapping. The Hindu and Swadeshmitran newspapers have given up a large income from liquor advertisements. The Reformer, we may add, has never accepted liquor and tobacco advertisements, and this not as a sacrifice but as a part of its policy. Mr. Rajagopalacharya rightly contrasted the conduct of the Trustees in refusing admission to antyajās and letting the trees to be tapped for toddy. We do not think that the Trustees have been knowingly guilty of this outrage on the Shastras and the Agamas, but evil is wrought by want of thought as well as by want of heart.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, AUGUST 22, 1931.

CONGRESS AND CONFERENCE.

The correspondence between Mahatma Gandhi and the Provincial and Indian Governments which led up to his deciding not to attend the Round Table Conference, has been published. It covers a period of several weeks beginning from March. The Gandhi Irwin Pact was published in the first week of that month, and the complaints of breaches of it are thus practically coeval with it. The first of these complaints were about interference with peaceful picketing of liquor shops in Madras. Mahatma Gandhi passed these on to the Government of India and asked for an enquiry into them. Then there were certain matters relating to the collection of land revenue in the United Provinces which Mahatmaji brought to the notice of the Government of those provinces. It was, however, complaints of coercion in the collection of land revenue, over and above the sum agreed upon at Bardoli and other places in Gujarat, which brought matters to a head. The Government of Bombay to whom Mahatmaji applied in the first instance, rather went out of their way to lay down as a general proposition that it was for Government officials to decide how much a ryot was able to pay under the terms of the Irwin-Gandhi pact while Mahatmaji contended that he and his agents who had assisted in the collection of the agreed sum, should have their say in the matter. On referring this point to the Government of India, Mahatma Gandhi received a reply which he understood to support the Bombay Government's claim, and the Working Committee thereupon decided that there should be no representative of the Congress at the Round Table Conference.

On the merits of the complaints, we have no hesitation in believing that most of them are well-founded. Mr. Rajagopalachari is a very careful and conscientious man and when he reports breaches of the agreement in regard to picketing in Madras, there are sure to have been such breaches. The Leader of Allahabad, which has itself strongly criticised the action of the United Provinces Government in several cases, is inclined to think that all the complaints made in those Provinces, cannot be said to be wholly free from the taint of political bias. As for Gujarat, Mr. Vallabhai Patel compelled the Bombay Government a few years ago to accept substantially his view that the original Bardoli Settlement was excessive having been based on data which, he proved to the satisfaction of two English officers of the Civil Service, were absolutely wrong. On the present occasion Mahatma Gandhi himself has been on the spot and that makes assurance doubly sure. His view that the amounts collected from the Gujarat ryots in excess of their estimated capacity to pay, were collected under coercion, cannot be met by quibbling about the term 'coercion.' On their merits, therefore, Mahatmaji's grounds of complaint are unassailable.

What is the official explanation of them? In many of the cases it is that the matters complained of were not breaches of the Pact but were incidents arising from the application of the ordinary law. In a few cases they are admitted to be mistakes. In passing, attention may be called to the difference between the attitude of the Madras and Bombay Governments and that of the other provincial governments, as an object-lesson for advocates of absolute provincial autonomy with residual powers vested in the provinces. Lord Curzon resented the total disregard of the Government of India by Bombay and Madras and actually sent up to the Secretary of State proposals to bring them more within the control of the Central Government, which did not meet with approval. The Act of 1919 has somewhat changed the legal position, but the old tradition survives. In the present instance, these two Governments just acknowledged the Gandhi-Irwin arrangement but took little pains to show that it entailed on them any special responsibility. It must also be said that the terms of the Pact—except the one in regard to Salt which was specific and of breaches of which there are no complaints—left a good deal to the discretion of local Governments and executive officers, and did not insist on their exercising that discretion in consultation with Congress leaders.

Writing of the Pact in the Reformer of March 7, we said: "The position will be what it was before the Civil Disobedience movement began except for the psychological effect of the conflict during the last twelve months." That position was full of defects and both the Civil Disobedience movement and the Round Table Conference were intended to remove them. The former was suspended in order to give the latter a fair chance. The purpose of the Round Table Conference is to devise a system of government which would make abuses of all kinds, irrespective of the Pact, permanently impossible in the future. The present complaints were additional arguments which the Congress delegation might and should have urged in furtherance of that purpose. They were, therefore, reasons for strengthening and not for withdrawing the delegation. To generalise from the action of the Bombay and even the Indian Government is wrong, because the Round Table Conference is called solely with the purpose of setting up a responsible system in their place. The withdrawal of the Congress delegation on the ground that officials in several places have failed to observe the spirit of the Delhi Pact, strikes us as sacrificing the means of achieving a permanent reform to the feeling of annoyance—perfectly legitimate in the circumstances—at a temporary discomfiture. We have from the first deprecated the idea of sending Mahatmaji as the sole Congress delegate, and recent events have strengthened us in that opinion. That, however, does not affect our view of the Working Committee's decision on the present occasion.

There is another point of view which deserves mention. The Congress, it has been repeatedly said of late, claims to represent the whole country, including those who do not belong to it. On this hypothesis, it should have regard in its more important decisions for their probable effects on others working to the same end. The position of the other delegates to the Round Table Conference, some of whom had laboured earnestly to bring the Congress into it, has been materially affected by this eleventh hour decision for which they were entirely unprepared. It would have been but fair if they had been placed in possession of all the facts now disclosed and left to make their choice as to whether they will attend or not attend the Conference. It may be that some of the more important among them would have notified Government of their approval of the Congress decision, as did Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Mrs. Sarojini Naidu. They might have even succeeded in getting the Government of Bombay to take back their offending sentence but for which it would seem Congress was prepared to condone all the previous breaches of the Pact.

Apart from and in addition to the reasons stated above, there is another which cannot fail to strike every student of the Bhagavad Gita. Numerous commentaries have been written on the Gita down to this day. If we may venture to add a very brief one of ours, it is that Sri Krishna, knowing that hesitation and indecision are the besetting sins of his co-religionists, taught them, with all the emphasis at his command including a Transfiguration, that the whole duty of man may be summed up as the duty of not allowing anything external to deflect one from the course which he has marked out for himself acting on his free and independent judgment. "Be not of a doubtful mind," said Jesus. The Gita is even more emphatic. "The doubting self," it avers, "has neither this world, nor the next, nor happiness." One of the lessons to be learnt from the Gita, is that it is never good to allow circumstances to determine one's course at the eleventh hour. If it was thought good to attend the Conference, the Government of Bombay's gaucherie is not a good reason to desist from doing so. The Working Committee should have also considered the probable effect of its decision on those who do not subscribe to its creed of Ahimsa.

THE MUSLIM DEMAND.

The fourteen points of the Muslim demand have become legendary and our readers, like ourselves, would wish to refresh their memory about its contents. We, therefore, reproduce this week from an appendix in the Simon Commission's Report the text of the Delhi resolution enunciating them. They have been popularly known as Mr. Jinnah's fourteen points and may be cited as such. Mr. Jinnah's "fourteen points" have unfortunate associations which have prevented their being considered purely on their merits. In the first place, the phrase recalls the melancholy history of President Wilson's fourteen points which killed his central purpose of making the world safe for democracy and, incidentally, him also. The Treaty of Versailles in which these points were supposed to be embodied is now regarded even by the statesmen of the Allied and Associated Powers as imposing impossible burdens and by students of international politics as iniquitously crushing in its incidence on Germany. Mr. Jinnah might have chosen a less ill-omened title for his points. Not only the name, but even the origin of these points is not calculated to inspire confidence. The country woke up one fine morning to find that the fourteen points had sprung, like Minerva fully armed, from the heads of some gentlemen who had met in conference at Delhi. No explanation regarding the process or reasoning which led to their formulation was vouchsafed to the public. Then, again, the pragmatic tone of the whole statement, and particularly of the fourteenth point which, by the way, is really no point but merely a declaration that Indian Mussulmans will not accept any constitution "by whomsoever proposed or devised" which does not conform to the remaining thirteen clauses, does not predispose others to approach it in the spirit of give and take. One has only to think what the consequence will be if every community similarly set up its fourteen points, and declared it will not accept any constitution which did not embody them, to realise the unhelpfulness of the Jinnah method.

Two of the thirteen substantive points, stand out as open to exception on principle. One is that of weightages in Muslim representation. This is directly contrary to the promise of the Queen's Proclamation that none shall be favoured on account of his religious belief. To weight the franchise for one community is, of course, to favour that community above others. If, however, such weightage is accorded with the willing consent of the other communities, it will not infringe this principle or promise. This consent, so far as we can see, is not forthcoming. The Working Committee of the National Congress, with the assent, if not at the instance, of Muslim nationalists, has dropped the point altogether. We are told that the Hindus in the Frontier Province have been given a heavy weightage. In our opinion, this too is wrong, if it is given without the willing consent of the overwhelming Muslim majority in that province. The strongest objection to weightages is that, unless they actually raise minorities to an equality with the majority or, in other words, reduce majorities to the level of the smallest minority, they are worse than useless for the purpose for which they are intended. If weightages are nevertheless considered essential, the way of securing them is not by holding a pistol to the heads of those at whose cost they have to be provided.

The formation of a federal government with residual powers vested in the federating provinces, is on a different plane altogether. This is what is contemplated by the first clause of the Delhi manifesto and the result of giving effect to it, will be the dissolution of India into a chaos of conflicting States and provinces within a few years of so-called federation. We are glad to see, therefore, that in his speeches in Allahabad, Mr. Jinnah spoke of the Sankey scheme as a Chinese puzzle set to Indians by the British Government. "It was" he said, "the setting up of an all-India Federation as a condition precedent to the grant of responsibilities at the centre. He was not against a real, genuine all-India Federation and they all desired nothing better than that India should be one unit, one nation, one state, one government, so that it could be a mighty country. But when they came to face the practical issues they found that it was one of the most difficult things. To begin with, how could there be a real, genuine federation between autocracy and democracy? They had, therefore, got to explore a great deal and he could only hope that they would succeed." Quite so. The Delhi declaration, when it put federation in the forefront, had evidently in view British Indian provinces only. It is, however, now agreed on all hands—Mr. Jinnah also said so in an interview published in the Bombay Chronicle on Wednesday—that the question of residual powers is not a communal issue, and that it should be settled on purely constitutional considerations in the best interests of the country.

There is one important consideration in regard to this question which should not be overlooked. All Indian communities are organising themselves on an all-India footing. The autonomous provinces and States will be face to face with powerful all-India organisations whenever a communal issue is raised, and the tendency is for all issues to become communal ones. The case of Kashmir is very much in point. On the merits of the agitation against that State, we can say nothing useful. But our contention is that the possibility of every Province and State having to face such a contingency, without a strong Central Government to back it, should be borne in mind when the question of the apportionment of powers between the Federal and federating units is considered.

BUDDHISM AND MODERN INDIA.*

(BY MR. S. C. MOOKERJEE.)

The internal malady of the Brahmanic Hindu fold is that its ignorant and superstitious women's world is dominated by half educated Brahman priests fortified with the show of religious love whose force is seen chiefly at the time of marriage or funeral celebrations. They cannot touch or influence the growing intellect of our young men and girls who are more and more and in increasing numbers having good school education or University education. Hindu educated youths, save and except that they philosophically go through marriage and funeral ceremonies are at heart wholly on the brink of atheism or agnosticism without any high moral or spiritual or religious ideal held out before them as a part of their training and education from their childhood, their ignorant mothers' blind faith making very little influence upon them. This must make a great deal of difference in the formation of character in our young men and women. Altogether along the line Brahmanic Hindu India has failed in the upbringing of its youths and so has the Calcutta University and all the affiliated colleges and schools thereunder in this matter.

In America apart from Christianity the youths are made to salute their National flag. In England they have their King and country and National flag apart from their state religion of Christianity. In Japan apart from Buddhism and Shintoism they have also their King and country and their National flag. These are some of the present day methods adopted by advanced civilised countries for keeping alive the fire of patriotism in the bosom of the young.

Thanks to Mahatma Gandhi the neglect of Brahmanic India in the formation of character in our youths is being amply rectified in the fervour for sacrifice and service in the cause of our national uplift and our National flag too has come to the front a great deal of late. But these have come with the jerk of a revolt without the foundation for them having been properly laid. Therein lies its weakness, as the fervour for sacrifice and service may disappear with the disappearance of the cause of the revolt or the disappearance of Mahatma Gandhi who focuses unto himself that spirit of sacrifice and service, from the youths of this country in the political field.

My object in offering this friendly analysis of the weakness of the present day Brahmanic armour in Hindu India is to humbly invite deep thinking in the minds of the leaders of the Hindu Society whether or not the time has come for that Brahmanic armour to be taken off to meet the exigencies of our National crisis and to make the Hindu Society put on once more its own home-spun armour of Lord Buddha, namely, Buddhism which in India did service in unfurling the flag of "Ahimsa," ceasing from cruelty, together with the motto "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity" for purposes of Nation Building long before the world had heard of those ideas from the French Revolution.

* Reprinted from the Maabodhi for August.

I do honestly believe that in this great national crisis of ours it is necessary, nay, incumbent upon the Brahmanic Hindu India to show social advancement on its part to the satisfaction of that International world which is in sympathy with India's aspirations for political advancement and of which our renowned national poet and philosopher Dr. Rabindra Nath Tagore may be regarded as a fully equipped representative. You may take it as an axiomatic truth that unless the Hindu social institutions are broad-based, uprooting the dividing walls of the caste system, the political advancement which we seek cannot but be ephemeral or may not be realised at all if we fail to move along the high road as indicated by the time spirit in answering the national call for change, at the sacrifice of even of our lives if necessary.

Brahmanic Hindu India cannot be left isolated to wallow in its own mire. In the "Swarajist India" or in the "United States of Federated India," whichever we are likely to get, Hindu India being numerically the strongest and therefore the senior-most partner has to see to its internal cohesion as well as to its land frontiers being left unmolested on the West and the East. To keep all quiet on the western front—you have got to be absolutely tolerant towards the Musalmans in the Buddhistic sense by placating them in every way educationally and economically, in the spirit of sacrifice it may be. If you do not want internal conflagration you must be bold enough to carry out Mahatma Ganihi's injunction as regards the abolishing of "non-touchability." That must be a thing of the past in India. On the East if you are a follower of the Buddha you will be recognised as a brother in all the Buddhistic countries in Asia where your Brahmanic Hinduism with any of its Gods and Goddesses has not had a foothold of recognition.

So I beg that you do seriously consider the matter of making a friendly move towards adopting Lord Buddha as your ideal national Teacher, Guide and Friend in shaping and moulding your rigid social institutions in such a way as to make the weak and divided Hindu India into a solid and united nation, yet in no way losing your ancient Aryan culture and tradition. In this effort you will have the heartiest co-operation and sympathy of the Buddhistic world as from the cultural standpoint—the Hindu and the Buddhist have sprung from the same Aryan mother whereas both the Moslem and the Christian cultures are derived from the Semitic School and are therefore wholly antagonistic to us.

THE PLACE OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN THE NEW INDIA.*

BY THE REV. W. PATON.

The title of this paper may seem to beg at least one important question. To some the words "new India" suggest an over-emphasis on temporary and superficial elements in the life of India; they consider that in everything that matters India is still the old India. I do not share this view, but I must begin somewhere and assume something. Therefore, without staying to attempt any exposition of the points, I will assert that changes of a profound and far-reaching character have come over India and are yet not nearly spent; that they affect not only the outer integument of life, but also its inner spirit; and that the national consciousness, so strongly shown in political affairs, extends into every part of national life.

These facts are, I think, familiar to us all; we only differ as to the depth and seriousness we attribute to them. But we do not so often observe the acute tension which is set up in many minds by the nationalist movement in thought. It is a tension between two emotions; on the one hand an impatience of foreign influence and authority, on the other a steadily increasing sense of a world standard of values; on the one hand Swadeshi, Indian things for Indian men, on the other a sensitiveness to world criticism of social custom. Those who jeer at young India, because it wants Parliaments and in the same breath denounces the West from which Parliaments come, are wasting their time, for that contradiction is of the essence of the problem, ethical, social, and religious, that Indians have to solve.

Of the foreign influences that have invaded India I suppose no one would deny that Christian missions have been among the chief. In mere bulk they are a considerable fact; their schools and colleges, hospitals and dispensaries, workshops, welfare centres, and co-operative societies amount to a really great contribution to the welfare of India. Yet this is perhaps the least important aspect of them; their importance to the historian of India will be found in the realm of ideas. The much-vaunted Macaulay had really less to do with the beginnings of English education in India than the Scottish missionary Duff; it has even been said, though an English audience cannot be expected to believe it, that to write the lives of three eminent Scottish missionaries would be to write the history of modern Indian education. As to religion, a standard book such as the late J. N. Farquhar's Modern Religious Movements in India shows to demonstration that the teachings of Christianity have exercised a deep influence on the religions of India themselves, apart from their direct influence on those who have embraced the Christian faith.

* Paper read at the East India Association, London, on the 9th June. Mr. Paton is Secretary of the International Missionary Council.

Moreover, it is surely true that the Christian missionary enterprise has received much help and support from the established Government of India. I do not forget the neutrality of Government; not a few officials who have themselves been devoted Christians have, in the expressive American phrase, "leaned over backwards" in the effort to preserve their rigid official neutrality. Nevertheless, almost every mission in India knows of help given in securing suitable land for building, or in steering through applications for educational grants, or in personal counsel when difficulties arise, which would not have been given if Government had been, broadly speaking, other than friendly. Nor is this true only of British officials. The attitude of Indian Ministers has on the whole been most friendly, and I can think of several cases in the last year or two where quite remarkably generous grants have been voted to building schemes of Christian colleges by the popularly elected Legislative Councils. So much has this been the case that one is tempted to feel, when one compares the Indian situation with that in Turkey, or China, or even Japan, that in India we have been spoiled. Mr. Arthur Mayhew in his brilliant book The Education of India holds that missions have allowed themselves insensibly to accommodate their work and standards in education to those of Government, and that the result has been a loss of initiative. However that may be, it is at least plain that under the regime that has existed during the last hundred years Christian missions have not been able to complain of any unfriendliness on the part of the established authority of the country.

MR. GANDHI'S STATEMENT.

What does the future hold? What sort of changes are likely to come about? What should be the disposition of missionary authorities towards them? The question has been forced into prominence by the recent and widely quoted remarks of Mr. Gandhi. I quote from the corrected version given in Young India for April 28:

"If instead of confining themselves purely to humanitarian work such as education, medical services to the poor, and the like, they (the missionaries) would use these activities of theirs for the purpose of proselytizing, I would certainly like them to withdraw. Every nation considers its own faith to be as good as that of any other. Certainly the great faiths held by the people of India are adequate for her people. India stands in no need of conversion from one faith to another."

He goes on to amplify these remarks. Why should he change his religion because a doctor who professes another religion has cured him of a disease? Why should he have Christianity thrust on him in a missionary educational institution? He is not against true conversion, but religion is a matter of the heart. "If a man has a living faith in him, it spreads its aroma like the rose its scent." Clearly he means that spiritual conversion should take place within the bounds, so to speak, of a man's own faith, for he goes on to say that India's great faiths are all-sufficing for her. All faiths are equally dear to their adherents and all are imperfect.

Those who are familiar with Mr. Gandhi's utterances find nothing here that is different from what he has been steadily saying for many years. Any thought that he is uttering a threat to use compulsion to exclude missionaries from a self-governing India is, I think, hardly to be got out of the language used, and he has recently made things clear by the somewhat sardonic remark that he is sure that missionaries will go on proselytizing in ways that he does not approve in a Swaraj India just as they do now! But while he does not go further than to express a personal judgment and hope, a definite demand that the future Constitution of India should forbid proselytism has been made by Mr. K. Natarajan, the editor of the Indian Social Reformer and a lifelong warrior in the cause of social righteousness.

"The conception of sovereignty in a monarchy is not a wholly secular one, and there must be something in the conditions attaching to it to indicate a spiritual contact between the Sovereign and the subject. It is against the immemorial tradition of India to impose a disability on any religion. We cannot ask that the King of the Indian Dominion should not profess the Christian faith. But we think India may, and should, ask that the Coronation oath should contain a solemn undertaking on the part of the Sovereign to be the Protector of the ancient religious faiths of this country. The present principle of religious neutrality must be replaced by a principle of active and appreciative protection. The most important consequence of the change will be that organized religious proselytism having for its purpose the seduction of His Majesty's subjects from their ancestral faiths will be barred, as the King, being the Protector of all religions, cannot let one of them wage war against another."*

In the issue of his paper for May 2, Mr. Natarajan concludes an attack on "proselytizing missions" by the statement that a national Indian Government, "while according perfect freedom to everyone to worship God according to his conscience or custom, will not tolerate insidious ways of undermining another's faith under cover of relieving him of malaria or toothache."

CHALLENGE TO MISSIONS.

It is worth while to look at these statements, for the men who make them, whether they speak for many or for few, are of a character and seriousness not to be disregarded. There are two different points made. There is the challenge to missionary methods, to the use of the school or college or hospital. There is the deeper denial of the right to ask another to change his religion. Let us look at these two things separately.

* Indian Social Reformer, How Can India be a Dominion? March 29, 1930.

I do not at all wish to pose as one who regards all that missions have ever done as beyond criticism. There is a very great deal of self-criticism inside the missionary movement; I would go so far as to say that missionaries are more willing to submit their methods to rigorous criticism and to conceive of radical departures in policy than are most religious leaders here at home. We have made plenty of mistakes, and we have again and again admitted them in the most public ways. But I hold that the view of missionary work in education and medicine, given in the extracts I have quoted, is utterly grotesque and misleading.

I know a good many missionary doctors, but I have never met one who was guilty of the curious non sequitur involved in the demand that because he has healed a man of a disease the man should become a Christian. That really is not the inner logic of the matter. A missionary doctor is a doctor who has a missionary vocation. The medium through which he can best express the ideals of love and service that inspire him is the art of healing, and that he tries to practise with such professional thoroughness and resources as may be within his power. Lately the representative body of the missionary doctors in India has gone out of its way to deny the view that medical skill is to be used as a sort of evangelistic bait; for them their medical service is a part of the expression in act of the spirit of their Master. Of course, they hope that their witness will be heeded, and they will offer teaching to those who will receive it, but the idea that a mission hospital exists to take a propagandist advantage of the sick and suffering would not, I am confident, survive intimate acquaintance with any average mission hospital. After all, it is not without significance that it is on the fanatical North-West Frontier that some of the most famous medical mission work has been done.

Another point which has occurred to me in this connection is the rapidly growing interest taken by medical missionaries in preventive medicine. A little reflection is enough to show that people whose whole object was the securing of adherents at any price would not concern themselves with preventive medicine, but with the more emotional results to be sought inside the hospital.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION.

Or take the schools and colleges. I have already hinted that it may perhaps be urged as a charge against the missionary colleges that they have been too little Christian, and that the mighty machine of which they have become part has grown too strong for them. It is scarcely possible to say with fairness that they have subordinated real education to the recruiting zeal of the propagandist. Here, again, the idea that education is a kind of bait held out to ensnare the guileless youth in the propagandist's net is repudiated in every missionary gathering where it is mentioned, and it is never mentioned except to be repudiated, as a false theory held much more, I fear by some supporters of missions than by those who do the work. No keen teacher could ever treat his teaching office so cheaply as that.

The missionary schools offer what they believe to be a Christian education; they may often fail to reach their own standard, but what they set out to do is to provide, by corporate life and by teaching, an initiation into the Christian view of life, and by that I mean a view of history and science and philosophy and of the social life of man which finds the deepest truth of them all in the mind and will of God. As to freedom and compulsion, it is perhaps rather a debating point to say that no one need come to a Christian school unless he wants to come. I would rather point to the fact that missionary opinion, though not unanimously, does now largely support the idea of the conscience clause, and still more to the extraordinary affection inspired in generations of pupils by the greatest missionary educationists. If a man like William Miller was a name to conjure with all over South India, we may be quite certain that his Christianity was not so narrowly controversial as some would have us believe.

From another angle one may see the real work of Christian education in India. It is, I think, generally admitted that in the training of village primary teachers such institutions as the well-known one at Moga in the Punjab have done invaluable pioneering service. They have adapted the methods worked out by educational science in the West to the needs of the backward classes in India, and have offered a contribution of the highest value to the solution of the great educational problem of India, which is not merely that of the multiplication of schools but also of discovering something which is effective enough and simple enough to be worth multiplying in the villages.

(To be concluded.)

DR. S. K. DATTA.

The appointment by H. E. the Viceroy of Dr. S. K. Datta to represent the Christian community at the Round Table Conference, and on the Minorities Sub-Committee, marks a notable succession in the public service rendered by Y. M. C. A. leaders in India. Like his predecessor the late Mr. K. T. Paul, whose place he is taking at the Round Table Conference, Dr. Datta has for many years been intimately connected with the Y. M. C. A., having served as General Secretary of the National Council of the Y. M. C. A. of India, Burma and Ceylon, and latterly for a number of years as a member of World's Committee of the Y. M. C. A., in Geneva. He was also at one time Vice-Chairman of the National Christian Council of India.

A graduate of Edinburgh University, Dr. Datta was, during his student days, an active worker in the British Student Christian Movement. As professor of biology in the Forman Christian College Lahore, he interested himself in the work of the Y. M. C. A. in that city, and on the outbreak of war in Europe, he volunteered for service in the Y. M. C. A. with the Indian troops in France, where he served as general secretary in charge until the end of war. In 1921 he was nominated by the Viceroy to serve on a commission, under the Chairmanship of Lord Lytton, which investigated the conditions of Indian students attending the Universities in Great Britain. In 1923, on the invitation of the Australian Y. M. C. A. Dr. Datta visited Australia and New Zealand, and was instrumental in starting Y. M. C. A. work among Indian immigrants in the Fiji Islands. In 1924 he was nominated by the Viceroy to represent the Indian Christian community on the Legislative Assembly for the whole of India, in which capacity he served from 1924 to 1926. In the Assembly he devoted himself specially to special questions such as the control of the traffic in opium and liquor, and the raising of the marriage age, and his speeches were acknowledged to be among the most weighty in the Assembly. At the Unity Conference in 1924, summoned on the occasion of Mr. Gandhi's fast to deal with the problem of rioting between Hindus and Mohammedans, Dr. Datta was one of the two Christians who, at Mr. Gandhi's request, were invited to attend. In 1929 he was one of the delegates at the Pan-Pacific Conference held at Honolulu under the auspices of the Institute of Pacific Relations. On that occasion he visited China and Japan, and as a result of his studies and observations he has a book in the press entitled "Asiatic Asia."

TEMPLES AND TODDY TAPPING.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

The Religious Endowments Board of Madras issued a circular last year advising all trustees of temples within its jurisdiction to stop the letting of cocoanut trees belonging to the temples for making fermented liquor. It was a fine step in the cause of prohibition. But under the Act constituting this Board, the temples in the city of Madras are saved from the jurisdiction of the Board, in consequence of the jurisdiction of the old Supreme Court. The great temples of Sri Parthasarathi in Triplicane and of Kapaliwara in Mylapore have cocoanut gardens which the trustees have been letting for toddy tapping. There is now a public agitation against this and meetings have been held to put pressure on the trustees to stop the practice.

Madras, }
17th August 1931. } C. RAJAGOPALACHARYA.

[We comment on this letter in an editorial note. Ed., I. S. R.]

LIBERAL JUDAISM.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I am interested in the writing of "a Liberal Jew", but I think he misunderstands Fosdick. I feel quite sure that what Fosdick means by "the religion about Jesus" is the knowledge of the facts concerning Christ's life and teaching, and that by "the religion of Jesus" he means the experience that Jesus had of the love of God. If we feel as Christ felt toward God and toward our fellows, then we know the religion of Jesus.

Azamgarh, U. P., }
18th August 1931. }

Yours etc.,
J. H. ALLEN.

MR. JINNAH'S FOURTEEN POINTS.

RESOLUTION OF THE ALL-INDIA MUSLIM CONFERENCE,
DELHI, 1ST JANUARY, 1929.

"Whereas, in view of India's vast extent and its ethnological, linguistic, administrative and geographical divisions, the only form of Government suitable to Indian conditions is a federal system with complete autonomy and residuary powers vested in the constituent States, the Central Government having control only of such matters of common interest as may be specifically entrusted to it by the constitution ;

"And whereas it is essential that no Bill, resolution, motion or amendment regarding inter-communal matters be moved, discussed or passed by any legislature, central or provincial, if a three-fourth majority of the members of either the Hindu or the Muslim community affected thereby in that legislature oppose the introduction, discussion or passing of such Bill, resolution, motion or amendment ;

"And whereas the right of Moslems to elect their representatives on the various Indian Legislatures through separate electorates is now the law of the land and Muslims cannot be deprived of that right without their consent ;

"And whereas in the conditions existing at present in India and so long as those conditions continue to exist, representation in various Legislatures and other statutory self-governing bodies of Muslims through their own separate electorates is essential in order to bring into existence a really representative democratic Government ;

"And whereas as long as Musalmans are not satisfied that their rights and interests are adequately safeguarded in the constitution, they will in no way consent to the establishment of joint electorates, whether with or without conditions ;

"And whereas, for the purposes aforesaid, it is essential that Musalmans should have their due share in the central and provincial cabinets ;

"And whereas it is essential that representation of Musalmans in the various legislatures and other statutory self-governing bodies should be based on a plan whereby the Muslim majority in those provinces where Musalmans constitute a majority of population shall in no way be affected and in the provinces in which Musalmans constitute a minority they shall have a representation in no case less than that enjoyed by them under the existing law ;

‘ And whereas representative Muslim gatherings in all provinces in India have unanimously resolved that with a view to provide adequate safeguards for the protection of Muslim interests in India as a whole, Musalmans should have the right of 33 per cent. representation in the Central Legislature and this Conference entirely endorses that demand ;

“ And whereas on ethnological, linguistic, geographical and administrative grounds the province of Sindh has no affinity whatever with the rest of the Bombay Presidency and its unconditional constitution into a separate province, possessing its own separate legislative and administrative machinery on the same lines as in other provinces of India is essential in the interests of its people, the Hindu minority in Sindh being given adequate and effective representation in excess of their proportion in the population, as may be given to Musalmans in provinces in which they constitute a minority of population ;

“ And whereas the introduction of constitutional reforms in the N. W. F. Province and Baluchistan along such lines as may be adopted in other provinces of India is essential not only in the interests of those provinces but also of the constitutional advance of India as a whole, the Hindu minorities in those provinces being given adequate and effective representation in excess of their proportion in population, as is given to the Muslim community in provinces in which it constitutes a minority of the population ;

“ And whereas it is essential in the interests of Indian administration that provision should be made in the constitution giving Muslims their adequate share along with other Indians in all the States and on all statutory self-governing bodies, having due regard to the requirements of efficiency ;

“ And whereas, having regard to the political conditions obtaining in India it is essential that the Constitution should embody adequate safeguards for protection and promotion of Muslim education, languages, religion, personal law and Muslim charitable institution, and for their due share in grants-in-aid ;

“ And whereas, it is essential that the constitution should provide that no change in the Indian constitution shall after its inauguration, be made by the Central Legislature except with the concurrence of all the States constituting the Indian federation ;

“ This-Conference emphatically declares that no constitution by whomsoever proposed or devised, will be acceptable to Indian Musalmans unless it conforms with the principles embodied in this resolution.”

THE MAHARAJA OF PATIALA AND THE SIKHS.*

Master Tara Singh, President, Central Sikh League, has made the following statement to the Press :

“ I was hesitating to disclose the negotiations which were carried on by Patiala with the Shiromani Akali Dal through me for the last two years or more. I thought I might not be morally justified in disclosing the negotiations confidentially carried on, but the Maharaja of Patiala's incorrect and distorted version, as published in the Press, has relieved me of any such moral binding. So I briefly narrate the story below :

“ More than two years ago Patiala arranged through S. Bhag Singh and Jathedar Teja Singh of Gurdaspur, to have a discussion with me over the settlement of Patiala with the Panth. I agreed and S. Raghbir Singh, Inspector General of Patiala Police, accompanied by S. Prithipal Singh of Bhagowal came to my residence one night and we had a talk. A few days after I had come out of jail in February last, S. Sant Singh, Superintendent C. I. D., Punjab, sent a gentleman to me asking me to effect some settlement with Patiala. I replied that I was prepared for a suitable settlement, but I did not like it to be done through a Punjab C. I. D. officer. I know S. Sant Singh disliked this reply of mine. Sardar Raghbir Singh saw me several times and I told him that several messengers were coming to me and I did not know whom to trust. The latter told me that S. Prithipal Singh was his trusted messenger. S. Prithipal Singh was with S. Raghbir Singh and Nawab Liaqat Hayat Khan even at the time when both of them came to Amritsar to have a talk with me in a small garden near the Khalsa College.

About a month ago S. Prithipal Singh came to me and told me that he was urgently summoned from Mussoorie to help Patiala in arriving at a settlement with the Panth. I told him that I could not be a party to such protracted negotiations, as various incorrect rumours were spreading.

On his questioning I repeated my previous conditions saying that there could be no settlement, unless the Maharaja agreed to stand in presence of Garu Granth Sahib, to beg pardon for his past conduct and to solemnly promise to marry Tikka Sahib and other princesses in Sikh families.

A few days ago I went to Simla in connection with the Guradwara Act amendments. S. Prithipal Singh, who met me there, told me that the Maharaja had agreed to my conditions and was prepared to clean the shoes of the Sikh congregation, if the latter imposed this “ tankhah ” or religious punishment. He asked me to see Nawab Liaqat Hayat Khan, but I refused. He later told me that the Maharaja was anxious to arrive at a settlement on the 19th July, when there was to be a settlement regarding the internal dissensions of the community. I agreed and we arranged that the representatives of the Shiromani Akali Dal should meet at Simla on the 19th. I wanted S. Prithipal Singh to confirm this settlement. He went to Chail and telegraphed to me at Amritsar :

* The editorial note in the last issue on “ Caste and Kingship ” was based on this statement.

“Everything all right. Reaching Amritsar 17th.”

After further confirmation, we reached Simla and at the first meeting, at which I was present, Nawab Liaquat Hayat Khan said that the Maharaja had never agreed to my conditions. It was agreed to arrive at a settlement even then. It was suggested on behalf of Patiala, that the Maharaja be recognised as the leader of the Panth. This was flatly refused and the negotiations broke on this point alone. At night S. Raghbir Singh again came to us in the Punjab Hotel and told us that the Maharaja would not insist on being recognised as leader. Thereupon written and detailed terms were given to S. Raghbir Singh. The latter said that the Maharaja might not agree to definitely promise to contract marriages in Sikh families in future and the Maharaja might hesitate to clean the shoes of the Sangat. But no regular reply was received from Patiala after that.

In order to clear the misunderstanding which might have been created by the Patiala version, I must say that there has never been the least difference between S. Kharak Singh and myself on any point connected with Patiala. Further, Patiala has been negotiating with me for the last year and during the past few months Patiala was showing extraordinary anxiety. Arrangements for settlement were made only with the Shiromani Akali Dal, and the S. A. D. had invited Giani Sher Singh and others to be present on the occasion.”

IN DEFENCE OF MASS CONVERSIONS.*

The following editorial appears in the Baptist Missionary Review, (Cuttack) for July :

If frequent warning can prevent it, missionaries are in no danger of worshipping mere numbers. Some most patient and devoted Gospel work has always had to be carried on with few believers or none, amid masses of people indifferent or hostile to Gospel claims. We hear of such work in parts of Arabia where, if there be a convert, there is the well-grounded fear that sooner or later his life will be forfeited. The early years of many missions in India saw these conditions of unfruitfulness fully illustrated. In some limited fields, though long worked for the Kingdom, there never has been gathered a body of Christian believers large enough to make possible the normal operation of the forces for indigenous social progress. A few scores or hundreds of believers persisting for decades with little expansion of numbers, especially if the social atmosphere be burdened by the influence of many foreign missionaries and foreign religious institutions, will hardly fail to become an exotic community.

* A reference was made to this extract in the leading article last week. It was to have appeared in the last issue but had to be held over for want of space.

Mass movements, whatever their disadvantages and however neglected or underdeveloped, escape this evil. They continue in relation with their environment and their social progress, such as it is, may be supposed to be normal. Some powerful missions rejoice that they never had a mass-movement. We may admit at once that the rapid coming of great numbers presents problems not met where ingathering is gradual. But we say God be praised for large numbers who move toward Christ from deepest superstition and degradation, against all aspersions proving the reality of their faith by dogged persistence and rapid expansion. Praise God for the obstacles His grace has enabled them to overcome. Praise God for the progress they have made, for the influence they have already exerted on the mass of the people around them, for the humble leadership they have gained in things of righteousness and truth, for the Divinely granted ministries of helpfulness to those who once despised them, for their Christian testimony backed by the miracle of their changed lives, destined soon to make further masses of people wise unto salvation! Praise God for mass-movements!

A short item in the news department of this issue records a fact of significance in the Christian history of the Telugu country. The news item tells that, with the close of the touring season in April of this year, the American Baptist Telugu Mission attained to a baptized church membership of 100,000. “Starting with the baptism of the first Madiga convert, Yerraguntla Perayya, in 1866, the winning and training of such a body of believers in a short sixty-five years is a major miracle of Divine grace. Some of them still exemplify Christianity near its lowest terms; many show a good degree of progress; and there is now emerging a group whose intellectual and moral qualities enable them to take places of leadership in the professions, especially in the higher ranks of the teaching profession, and in public life. On the whole, they have made adequate response to the opportunities afforded by the life of modern India and by the continuous though limited help and inspiration reaching them through America.”

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Satyagraha at Puri Temple:—The Secretary of Patitapavan Mission, Berhampore, Ganjam, sends us the following: “It has been resolved by the Patitapavan Mission in a meeting held under the Presidency of S. Jayamangal Rath, Editor of Sankai, that a Satyagraha of the so-called untouchables for the right of Temple entry will be organised at the Puri Jagannath Temple during the Congress week. Mr. Sakint Gurusulu has been authorised to make all the necessary arrangements. It will first write to the Raja of Puri and make consultation with Mahatma Gandhi and other leaders on the question.

Conflicting Decisions on Annulment Marriage:—An interesting judgment was recently delivered by Mr. Tara Nath Chatterjee, additional Munsif, Deoria, in a case in which one Musammatt Shyamraji claimed maintenance from one Jadu Pandey on the allegation that Jadu had ceased to maintain her although she was his wife. Jadu resisted the suit upon the grounds that the plaintiff was not his wife and that she was leading an unchaste life. The following are extracts from the judgment:—“Although Musammal Bhyamraji describes herself as a Brahmin, it is abundantly clear from the evidence on the record that she is a Kshatriya. It remains to be seen if the marriage of a Brahmin male with a Kshatriya female is permissible and if such a marriage confers upon the female the status of a wife. The Bombay High Court has held in 46 Bombay 871 that a marriage between a male of a higher caste and a female of a lower caste is valid. It would appear from Gopalchandra Sarkar Sastri's Hindu Law that sages recognise marriage between a woman of an inferior caste and a man of a superior caste. But contrary to this, our High Court has held in 28 All. 458 that a marriage between a Brahmin and a Kshatriya is not lawful. The learned counsel for the plaintiff made a passionate appeal to the court to be liberal. Unfortunately, however, the court's liberality cannot exceed that of the law. It is not open to this court to fly in the face of what has been laid down in 28 All. 458.”

ADVERTISEMENTS

Yoga Scientific Series

Edited by SHRI YOGENDRA
FOUNDER OF YOGA INSTITUTES IN INDIA AND AMERICA

Study the secret technique of the Yoga practices, without the aid of a teacher, for the health of your body, mind and soul, from this only authentic and encyclopedic work. Fully illustrated. Rs. 10.

“An excellent work that is thoroughly scientific in its treatment and practical in its scope”—Bombay Chronicle. “His most valuable series on practical Yoga”—Mercury. “Are of exceptionally practical, academic and scientific interest”—Free Press. “A challenge of clinical and laboratory tests that almost reads like propositions in algebra or geometry”—Daily Mail. “It forms a very interesting and instructive study”—Q. M. S. Journal. “Deserves special attention and admiration for it represents a great field of personal training secretly taught in India.”—The Times.

OF ALL BOOK-SELLERS.

Write POST BOX 481, BOMBAY.

“MY EXPERIENCE AS LEGISLATOR.”

BY

DR. MRS. S. MUTHULAKSHMI REDDY,

M. B. & C. M.

Ex-Deputy President, Legislative Council, Madras.

PRICE Rs. 2/-

Can be had from the Manager,

The Indian Social Reformer.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
“ Foreign ... „ 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE Central Bank of India Ltd.

SAVINGS BANK.

Money saved wisely in these days brings Happiness and when spent unwisely, it brings overwhelming debts, worry, distress and unhappiness.

Make therefore a regular saving by opening a
HOME SAVINGS SAFE ACCOUNT

with us and earn 3½% interest on Daily Balances.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT.

Before hiring a Safe in any of the Safe Deposit Vaults of Bombay, you are requested to visit our SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT, and you will decide in our favour as others have done.

S. N. POCHKHANAWALA,
Managing Director.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act
VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDRA.

Branches: CALCUTTA.
AHMEDABAD.
POONA.
SURAT.

Capital Subscribed	...	...	Rs. 2,00,00,000
Capital Called up	...	...	1,00,00,000
Reserve Fund	...	...	92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

“Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application.” The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.

(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mohasna, Dabhol, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amrell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadl, Dwarka, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
 Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent-Ahmedabad).
 Bhaskarrao Vitthaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
 Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharsis Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
 R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Nalb Dewan, Baroda.
 Raj Ratan Bhalla Dajibhai Amin B. A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alembic Chemical Works, Baroda).
 Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
 Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)
 Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
 Mr. N. M. Muzumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.)

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of Stock at moderate charges particulars of which may be learnt on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on Savings Bank accounts and Savings Bank Deposit accounts have been reduced at 8½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st September 1926. Rules on application.

8-5-26.

O. E. RANDLE, General Manager.

THE GUARDIAN

A CHRISTIAN WEEKLY

DEALING WITH SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, POLITICAL, AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Published Weekly. Price 2 Annas.

Annual Subscription: Inland, Rs. 6/-

Foreign, 10s. Post free.

Subscriptions and all other communications should be addressed to—

THE MANAGER,

The Guardian,

33/1, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulla (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondaicha ( " " ).
Islampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Sindheda ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Satara ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Shirata ( " " ).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Kalol ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nashik).
Belapur ( " " ).	Satana ( " " ).
Ahmednagar ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Parola (District East Khandesh).	Kaiwan ( " " ).
Akluj (District Solapur).	Bhiwandi (District Thana).
Virangam (District Ahmedabad).	Paighar ( " " ).

DIRECTORS:

Sir Chunilal V. Mehta, K.C.S.I.,	Madhowjee D. Thackersey, Esqr.,
Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt.,	Principal M. L. Tannan,
V. V. Garud, Esqr.,	Dewan Bahadur A. U. Malji.
G. K. Devadhar, Esqr.,	Rai Bahadur Pritamdas,
G. B. Trivedi, Esqr.,	Dewan Bahadur S. V. Mensinkai,
Rao Saheb V. C. Jadav,	V. L. Mehta, Esqr.,
D. V. Gokhale, Esqr.,
R. N. Rajadnya, Esqr.,

SHARE CAPITAL:—

(Fully Paid) ... .. Rs. 12,96,900

1. DEPOSITS fixed for one year and shorter or longer periods are accepted. Rates and other particulars may be ascertained from the undersigned.
2. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened for Co-operative Societies and individuals. Interest is allowed at 2½ per cent. on daily balance not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000.
3. SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS are accepted and interest paid at 3½ per cent. on minimum monthly balance. Rules may be obtained from the undersigned.
4. THE BANK has issued Five Years Cash Certificates yielding 5½ per cent. per annum. The Bank has also arranged for the issue of Ten Tolas Gold bars. Particulars on application.
5. Drafts are issued on district and other towns on terms to be ascertained on application.
6. The Bank finances only registered Co-operative Societies in the Bombay Presidency, on the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency.
7. Accounts are audited quarterly by a firm of Incorporated Accountants and yearly by a Special Government Auditor. Quarterly statements of financial position are published in the "Bombay Government Gazette".

VAIKUNTH L. MEHTA,

Managing Director.

THE SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED.

Fortnightly sailings between Bombay
 Karachi and Calcutta, Burma calling
 at Galle, Tuticorin, Colombo and other
 coast ports according to demand.

For Freight and other particulars apply to

NAROTTAM MORARJEE & Co.,
 Agents.

Sudama House, 31, Sprott Road, Ballard Estate,
 10-12-26. Bombay.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs. ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes :

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents :-

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A-175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
- Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited,

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance :—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital (Paid up) ... Rs. 71,21,055

Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office :- Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

SAFELY RELY

ON

AMRUTANJAN BALM

FOR THE CURE OF

Colds, Cough, Headaches, Rheumatism, Swellings and all other kinds of Aches and Pains.

AMRUTANJAN DEPOT.

BOMBAY

**&

MADRAS.

(REGD.)

IT IS YOURS

LOW IN PRICE
HIGH IN EFFICACY

THE ATANK NIGRAH PILLS

to cure constipation, brain-fag, etc.

Rupee One ( 32 pills ).

ATANK NIGRAH PHARMACY,

JAMNAGAR, (KATHIAWAR.)

Bombay Branch :-

KALBADEVI ROAD.

The Indian Ladies' Magazine.

Edited solely in the interests of the Women of India, by Mrs. K. SATHIANADHAN, M.A., Dindigul.

Rs. s. p.

Subscription (including postage).

Inland ... 5 0 0

Foreign ... 5 8 0

Single Copy ... 0 8 0

(Subscribers and contributions urgently needed).

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

[ Begun in 1890. ]

A NON-PARTY NON-SECTARIAN ENGLISH WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

FORTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

STANDS FOR ALL-ROUND PROGRESS.

Subscription Rates.

Inland	...	...	...	...	Rs. 7-8	(Post Free).
Foreign	...	...	...	...	Rs. 10	(Post Free).

Single copies of the current month, if available, can be had at 2 annas, current year 4 annas and copies more than a year old 6 annas each, exclusive of postage.

The Editor of a journal writes from Singapore under date the 20th January 1931 :—" We greatly appreciate your kindness in exchanging the Indian Social Reformer with our.....and very much enjoy the articles in your magazine."

An English reader writes under date the 13th January 1931 :—" May I also say how much we and many English friends who wish to understand affairs in India are for the continued high tone of your paper, its justice, wisdom and broad-mindedness. We, who love India, greatly appreciate your paper."

An American reader writes under date the 2nd January 1931 :—" I am enjoying very much your presentation of Indian questions these days."

An American Lady writes under date March 12, 1931: I want to express my appreciation of the fine poise of the paper thru these trying months. I depend on it very largely for accurate information as well as mighty interesting reading. Best of success attend you.

For Advertisement rates, please apply to :—

THE MANAGER,

THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER,

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road,

Fort, BOMBAY.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

The Finest Portland Cement obtainable in India. In use on the Principal Railways in Southern India, Government and other important works.

BRAND
PORTLAND CEMENT.

LATEST BRITISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

Hardens Rapidly giving Standard 28 days Concrete strength at 4 days.

DISTRIBUTORS :—

Madras Presidency & Mysore

BEST & CO., LTD.,
MADRAS.

H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions :

ALLADIN & SONS,
SECUNDERABAD.

The Deccan :

RASHID KHODADAD & CO
1331, West Street, Camp, POONA.

The Shahabad Cement Company, Ltd.

"BOMBAY HOUSE",

BOMBAY.

24, BRUCE STREET,
FORT.

MADAN THEATRES, LIMITED.

Present at

THE EXCELSIOR THEATRE

FLIT ADVERTISEMENT FILM No. 8.

BRITISH MOVIE-TONE NEWS VOL. 2 No. 84.

LADIES OF LEISURE

10 Reels, featuring

BARBARA STANWYCK, LOWELL SHERMAN, RALPH GRAVES

AND

MARIE PREVOST

A Columbia All Talking, Picture.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE EMPIRE THEATRE

Paramount Sound News Vol. 2 No. 9.

BRACELETS

6 Reels, featuring

BERT COOTE, D. A. CLERK SMITH AND JOYCE KENNEDY

Twickenham Production.

ENTER THE QUEEN

4 Reels, featuring

RICHARD COOPER AND HERBERT MUNDIN

Fox Film Co.'s Production.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 P. M.

EMPRESS CINEMA

Flit Advertisement Film No. 7.

PEARL FISHERS

1 Reel, (I hear as in a Dream)

A Paramount Song.

TOL'ABLE DAVID

8 Reels, featuring,

RICHARD CROMWELL AND NOAH BEERY

A Columbia Picture.

FATAL FORCEPS

2 Reels, featuring,—FORD STERLING, BERT KOAH, WILL RING

A Paramount Christy Comedy.

Time:—4, 6-30, and 10 p. m.

THE ROYAL OPERA HOUSE

NO CINEMA SHOWS.

THE INDIAN * SOCIAL * REFORMER

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Office:—NAVSARI CHAMBERS, OUTRAM ROAD, FORT.

Editor:—K. NATARAJAN.

Annual Subscription (Inland) Rs. 7-8-0 (Foreign) Rs. 10-0-0.

Vol. XLI.

BOMBAY—SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1931

No. 52

" I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice; I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch—And I will be heard." WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON in the Liberator.

CONTENTS.

Reconstitution of the British Cabinet. Its Effect on Indian Reform. The Government Statement. The Bombay Prarthana Samaj. Civil Servants' Salaries in Japan, Ourselves. " The Right of Conversion," Buddha and Conversion.	The Place of Christian Missions in the New India. Women's Work for Men. Bengal Hindu Sabha Relief Fund. Mr. Joseph Agsin. Non-British Missions in India. News and Views.
--	---

NOTES.

Reconstitution of the British Cabinet :—
 The Labour Government of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald has fallen and has been replaced by what has been called a National Government with himself as Prime Minister. The event is without a precedent in English history. Sir Robert Peel by his conversion to Cobden's Free Trade doctrine and Mr. Gladstone by his adoption of Home Rule for Ireland, broke their parties but there was no question of their becoming the head of a Government which depended almost wholly for support in Parliament to the Opposition party. What has happened in the present case is that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald has left his Party to become the nominal leader of the two Opposition parties. His position is a tragic one and no statesman would have agreed to put himself in it except from overwhelming considerations of public policy. From a purely personal point of view, Mr. Macdonald would have been far happier leading his own party in Opposition than facing it from the Government bench. If he could not conscientiously oppose a Conservative Government in the present conditions, it may be asked, why did he not retire from politics instead of carrying his sword to the anti-Labour ranks. The reason is said to be that, in that case, there would have had to be a General Election which, according to Mr. Baldwin, would be disastrous at this juncture. Mr. Snowden, who remains Chancellor of the Exchequer, has explained that British credit was shaken abroad and the sole object of the present combination is to restore it. When that is done, it is said, the parties will resume their normal positions. This is impossible. The British constitution has broken down and the present arrangement is the precursor of radical changes in it. Mr. Ramsay Macdonald not long ago made a declaration in Parliament, which was endorsed by the leaders of the other political parties, that Britain was prepared to make sacrifices to maintain the financial credit of India under any new reforms. One hardly thought at the time that British credit itself will have to be maintained by what to all intents and purposes is a suspension of the British Constitution.

Its Effect on Indian Reform :—The Prime Minister has stated that the reconstitution of the British Cabinet will make no difference in the Indian policy represented by the Round Table Conference. Such a declaration was superfluous. The Labour Government was not following any policy of its own at the Conference. In the cabled report of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's concluding speech at the Conference, there was a sentence which we do not find in the official report since issued in pamphlet form. In it, he had said that he himself had been prepared for responsible Government for British India alone, but in deference to the wish of the representatives of the other British parties, of British India and the Princes, he had accepted the Federal idea. Even if the present Cabinet change had not occurred, the course of reform would have been largely influenced by the views of the other British political party leaders. While in that case their influence would have been indirect and irresponsible, under the new conditions it will be both direct and responsible. This, of course, is not to be regretted. The bulk of the Labour Party from the Opposition benches can also exert a salutary influence in upholding Indian nationalist claims against the excessive caution of the National Cabinet. Mr. Winston Churchill and his party of disgruntled Anglo-Indians, will have now to face the combined opposition of a Cabinet of all the British political parties. On the whole, therefore, the change is not only not to be regretted but rather to be welcomed from the Indian stand-point. At the same time, there can be no doubt that the official attitude towards Indian nationalism will not be the same ardent, open-hearted thing as when Mr. Wedgwood Benn was at the India office. Sir Samuel Hoare, who is now the Secretary of State, is more likely to view it as Hamlet his father's ghost: "Thou comest in such a questionable shape, I will speak to thee." It is amusing to see the Times of India which used to laugh at Padgett M. P. who pretended to a personal knowledge of India on the strength of a three months' trip, claiming it for Sir Samuel because he "flew" to India and back in about a week. Lord Irwin would have been more to the liking of India at the India Office, but he has been too recently the Viceroy, and Lord Willingdon at Delhi will be reduced to a nonentity, if his immediate predecessor continued to direct policy from London. Lord Irwin's influence too will not be the less effective for its being given in an advisory capacity. Mahatma Gandhi also has settled his differences with Government by a visit to Simla and is sailing today to London. We earnestly hope that he will bring back a satisfactory settlement which will start the country on a new era of peace and prosperity.

The Government Statement:—Government have issued in the form of an extraordinary edition of the Gazette of India the complaints of the non-observance of the Pact made by Mahatma Gandhi and the replies of the Provincial Governments thereto. Apart from the merit of the explanations given, we are struck by the general desire evinced by the Governments concerned to carry out the Pact, though in their interpretation of its terms, as might be expected, their chief concern is to cause as little dislocation as possible in the routine of administration. This, carried too far, is indistinguishable from a desire to evade the Pact. Generally speaking, it may be said that the keenness about fulfilling its terms is greatest in the highest officials and progressively declines as it filters down the ranks of the services. Now that the whole question has been settled between the Viceroy and Mahatma Gandhi, it is unnecessary to go into the details of complaints and answers. But it is interesting to see that the Gandhi-Irwin Pact as published contained only the broad lines of the understanding between them, while actually it seems to have covered many individual cases. For instance, one of the complaints was that two Deputy Collectors about whom there was an understanding between Lord Irwin on the one hand and Mr. Gandhi on the other, that they should not ask to be reinstated but should apply for and be given pensions, did not get the pensions. The Bombay Government reply that the understanding was that the Government of India should address the local Government on their behalf and that was done. It was made clear that the matter was within the discretion of the local Government who were unable to do anything for the persons concerned as they had not earned a pension under the rules. Their posts, moreover, had been permanently filled. It would be interesting to know whether the two Deputy Collectors got pensions or not, though the question is hardly one to weigh against constitutional reform. Another of the complaints is rather curious. It is that some boys and girls in Ahmedabad were rusticated from Government schools for having taken part in the civil disobedience movement, one of whose items was to withdraw children from schools. Government explain how the order of rustication came to be issued and that orders have been issued to withdraw it. There are a few cases in which the Local Governments seem to be labouring under a sense of injured prestige, but the general tone is one of conciliation.

The Bombay Prarthana Samaj:—Like all forward-looking bodies the Bombay Prarthana Samaj has amongst its members men and women holding a diversity of opinions on many burning questions of the day. As a rule, these differences do not disturb the harmonious functioning of the Samaj as a religious body. But recently an incident occurred which, chiefly owing to some one having prematurely rushed into print, caused a ripple on the normally placid surface of the Samaj. Dr. G. Y. Chitnis, the eager and earnest young missionary of the Samaj, had disagreed in some points with the Managing Committee and when these were still pending, he was arrested by the Police on a charge of harbouring the alleged Mr. M. N. Roy who is being tried for waging war against the King by a Magistrate in Upper India. Dr. Chitnis was released on a small bail and the case against him has since been withdrawn. By an unhappy coincidence, just at this juncture the Managing Committee decided, in view of its differences with Dr. Chitnis, that he should be relieved of the duties of its missionary. This naturally led some of the members to call a special meeting of the general body to consider the propriety of the Committee coming to a decision when Dr. Chitnis was in trouble. Mr. B. B. Korgamkar, the President of the Samaj, presided, and Mr. G. B. Trivedi made a statement on behalf of the Managing Committee. Dr. Chitnis in an extremely good tempered speech acknowledged that his differences with the Committee made its action inevitable and that, so far as he was concerned, he had no complaint against it. This attitude was very creditable to him, and we hope that ways will be found to smooth over the differences between Dr. Chitnis and the senior members who have a high appreciation of his zeal and enthusiasm for social and religious matters. It will be recalled in this connection that Babu Krishna Kumar Mitra, the saintly leader of the Sadaraa Brahma Samaj of Calcutta, was deported during the anti-Partition agitation. We reprint in our news columns the observations of the Indian Messenger, the organ of that Samaj, on the question whether the Brahma Samaj should take part in politics. It quotes the reply of Pandit Shivnath Sastry, the veteran Brahma missionary, to some who put him the question. Pandit Sastry's reply was, "Can a disciple of Rammoan fear to take part in political activities?" Of course, a religious body should not assume a partisan attitude but should try to lift politics to a spiritual level.

Civil Servants' Salaries in Japan:—Comparisons have been instituted between salaries paid to civil servants in India and in Japan. It is, therefore, interesting to learn from the current number of the "Industrial and Labour Information" published by the International Labour office of the League of Nations that the actual earnings of a Japanese Civil Servant consist of a nominal salary plus a bonus which amounts to three or four times as much, the rate of it varying in different departments. The Japanese Prime Minister, Mr. Wakatsuki, made a statement in May announcing a reduction of salaries of all civil and military officers drawing nominal salaries of more than 100 yen a month. In it he said that when modern progress and social betterment are taken into consideration, there was no doubt that the present salaries of civil servants were far from adequate to their needs, but in view of the decline in the earnings of the nation at large, resulting from the economic depression, and the reductions which had been made in the salaries of local officials, it would be unfair if the salaries of Government officials were not reduced.

Ourselves:—With this issue the Indian Social Reformer closes its forty-first year. The next issue will be the first of volume forty-two. The index for the current volume will be issued shortly and subscribers who want it will please write to the Manager as usual.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, AUGUST 29, 1931.

"THE RIGHT OF CONVERSION."

In the leading article on "the Right to Convert" in the Reformer of the 15th instant, it was said: "There is, we believe, on the British Statute-book a law which makes it an offence to induce a man to change his religion even by gentle persuasion." The Dnyanodaya doubts if there is such a law. "If there is (which we doubt) on the British statute-book a law (such as that referred to) though the Reformer only 'believes' there is and does not quote the law," it writes, "then it should be abrogated." For the satisfaction of our contemporary, we quote our authority. The Law Commissioners who drafted the Indian Penal Code, explaining why they thought it necessary to insist on "deliberate intention" in section 298, relating to wounding religious feelings in the Indian Code, observed:

"In England an attempt to convert any one from the religion of the country by the most gentle and dispassionate address, is by law an offence; to attempt the same thing by contemptuous or vituperative language is an offence which would be severely punished in practice. But the reason is that conversion is not recognized as a legitimate object. The law assumes the truth of Christianity. But it is manifest that the law and the Legislature of this country cannot assume the truth of any religion. And, as free discussion, or in other words, attempts at conversion, is the best criterion of the truth of anything, the truth or falsehood of which is not already assumed by law to be beyond controversy, it seems to follow that a bona fide attempt to convert ought not in this country to be treated as a crime, even though the intention to convert be an intention to do so by wounding the religious feelings of the person addressed. We apprehend it is almost impossible to convert a sincere or ardent votary of any faith without wounding his religious feelings in the early stages of the process. And if that be so, and if it is admitted that attempts at conversion from one faith to another ought not to be punished in British India, then the wounding the religious feelings ought not to be punished when the wound is inflicted with that legitimate object."

We take the quotation from Sir Hari Singh Gour's "Penal Law of India" where it is reproduced in the author's explanatory notes on Section 288 of the Indian Penal Code. We would call the attention of the Dnyanodaya to the sentence which we have italicised. It unequivocally states that in Britain "conversion is not recognized to be a legitimate object." The "right to convert" so authoritatively demanded in India not only does not exist in Britain but the exercise of any such "right", "even by the most gentle and dispassionate address," is liable to punishment. The Dnyanodaya should try to get the British law repealed before it asks India to concede "the right to convert,"

The passage quoted above from the Report of the Law Commissioners may also be commended to the attention of the leaders of the National Congress. They have decided that the policy of the future Swaraj Government should be one of religious neutrality. The Law Commissioners give as their reason for adopting that policy that the Legislature in India cannot assume the truth of any religion as the British Legislature has assumed the truth of Christianity. The Indian Legislature, therefore, should let all the religions carry on propaganda against each other in order to decide which of them is true. This might have been true of the Indian Legislature in the middle of the last century when it consisted of only English members. It is not true to-day and it will be even less true when India has a responsible Swaraj Government. The members of the Legislature will be mostly men and women who believe in the truth of Hinduism, Buddhism, Islam, Christianity, Zoroastrianism, or Judaism, not to mention the modern reforming sects such as the Arya and the Brahma Samajas. For it to profess religious neutrality on the ground that it cannot assume the truth of any religion would be grotesquely untrue. It must, on the contrary, assume the truth of all the religions, and assure them all of its protection, as, indeed, the British Government has done in theory. Queen Victoria in her Proclamation declared:

"Firmly relying ourselves on the truth of Christianity, and acknowledging with gratitude the solace of religion, we disclaim alike the right and the desire to impose our convictions on any of our subjects. We declare it to be our royal will and pleasure that none be in any wise favoured, none molested or disquieted, by reason of their religious faith or observances, but that all shall alike enjoy the equal protection of the law; and we do strictly charge and enjoin all those who may be in authority under us that they abstain from all interference with the religious belief or worship of any of our subjects on pain of our highest displeasure."

It is difficult to reconcile the "equal protection of the law" assured to all subjects in the Proclamation with the view of the Law Commissioners that all the religions must be left to establish by vilifying each other which of them is true, that is, the most expert in that art.

The last clause of the Proclamation threatens with the royal displeasure all those in authority who do not abstain from interference with the religious belief of Indian subjects. This seems to be quite incompatible with the Government licensing foreign missions to carry on proselytising propaganda among the King's Indian subjects. But this is just what is being done. The current number of the National Christian Council Review publishes some interesting correspondence which has passed between the Rev. W. Paton and the Government of India on the position of non-British missionaries in of salvation." This, the speaker said, was also applicable to Buddhist monasticism which was probably the pattern on which early Christianity shaped its own. This was very different from the Christian Missionary organizations which were modelled on the lines of the Civil Service with salaries, allowances, leave and furlough, pensions and so on, and their sole purpose is to baptise as many Hindus as possible every year. Mr. Natarajan said that this was as much opposed to Buddha's ideas as to Jesus Christ's, between whom there was a close parallel in many matters. The main difference was that while Jesus in the early part of his ministry performed miracles, Buddha throughout set his face strongly against them. Mr. Natarajan concluded by saying that, in his opinion, the foreign Christian Missions as at present conducted, were incompatible with the policy of equality of religions and a State which adopted this policy could not permit them. He quoted a passage from one of his articles in the Reformer in which it was urged that the Sovereign should in his Coronation oath pledge himself to give equal protection to all religions. Dr. Nair and Messrs K. A. Padhye, Muchchala and Santoke expressed their agreement with Mr. Natarajan.

DR. A. L. NAIR'S SPEECH.

Many Brahmins and ascetics used to go to Lord Buddha and say, 'we do not know what to believe.' Thereupon the Lord Buddha said: "It is proper and very natural that doubts should arise in you, blind belief is to be rejected."

"Do not judge by hearsay nor by tradition nor on assertion, nor on the authority of so-called sacred writings nor by logical deduction nor by long accustomed opinions and conceptions."

"Not to judge according to appearances, nor believe anything because an ascetic or teacher has said it, but when you yourselves are convinced."

"But when you perceive these things are right, these things are unobjectionable, these things when done produce weal and happiness for us and others; then adopt them and act accordingly." Lord Buddha even said that one should emancipate oneself from his doctrine, when it is not needed any more to reach the goal, that is, when the goal is reached.

In every country and in every religion miracles play a large part. But as Buddhism demands reflection and knowledge it does not rely on miracles. The Lord specially forbade his disciples to perform so-called miracles.

When on a certain occasion some of Lord Buddha's disciples asked him for permission to perform a miracle in order to convert certain persons who wanted to see one in order to be convinced of the superiority of the Buddha's Doctrine, he said: "Prestidigitators can also perform such miracles. The greatest of miracles is conversion by conviction."

The toleration which Buddhism has maintained to the present day is a wonder. During the last 2500 years not a single person has been converted by force nor has a drop of blood been spilt for the propagation of the Doctrine of the Great Master. And yet Buddhism is a missionary religion and one-third of the population of the world are following this religion. It spread rapidly over all Central and Eastern Asia, and modified the customs of people like the Mongols and Tartars.

MR. K. A. PADHYE'S SPEECH.

Mr. K. A. Padhye, Secretary of the Society, while thanking the learned lecturer, said that conversion was unknown to Buddhism. The doctrines of Brotherhood and universal love on which Lord Buddha laid great stress, negated the idea of conversion. Buddha did not arrogate to himself the title of Prophet. In fact he never claimed infallibility. He exhorted his disciples and audience that they should not take his words as Gospel Truth because they emanated from him. He advised his followers and his listeners to investigate Truth for themselves and to shape their character according to the Noble Eightfold Path. He succeeded in converting people to his view on account of his noble character and to his having prescribed his tenets in the languages spoken by the masses. Love of mankind which is the same as Brotherhood militates against the principle of conversion. Buddhism does not recognize the distinction between man and man and does not encourage the principle of superiority of one person over another.

MR. MUCHCHALA'S SPEECH.

We are really highly indebted to Mr. Natarajan for his interesting discourse. Mr. Natarajan has put us a question: "What is the attitude of the Society towards 'conversion.'" What attitude Buddha will take in the matter? I think the answer to the question is this very hall. Here there are members of the Society belonging to different religions. There are Moslems, Hindus, Parsees, Christians, etc. This Society has not converted anybody and it does not intend to. It has tried to put forward before the public teachings of Buddha. Buddhism is not a religion if religion means dogmas. Many Hindu friends take me as a Hindu, very many Muslims know me as a staunch Muslim. The President of the Society takes me as a Buddhist and once a Bishop in Bombay told me "You are a true Christian." I said to him "Alright Sir." But when he said "That is not enough. You must take Baptism; till then whatever good you do, will not be counted." "even is I fulfil all the commandments of Christ" I asked. "Yes, even then," was the reply. I said "Father, then my namaskar to your Christianity." I quote this just to show the attitude of Buddha towards conversion. "Conversion" and "Buddhism" are like the north and south poles to each other. To my mind there is no conversion in Buddhism. Buddha has said "Blood and Tears know no difference" and he says "Even if you do not believe in me and follow the Eightfold Noble Path that will be enough."

A writer has explained the corruption of "Religion" and society, I do not remember his name but he says, "Religion, Society and Nature; these are the three struggles of mankind. These three struggles are at the same time his three needs; it is necessary for him to have a faith, hence the temple; it is necessary for him to create, hence the city; it is necessary for him to live, hence the plough and the ship. But these three solutions comprise three conflicts. The mysterious difficulty of life springs from all the three. Man strives with obstacles under the form of superstition, under the form of prejudice, and under the form of the elements. A triple fatality weighs upon us—the fatality of dogmas, the fatality of laws, the fatality of matter. With these three fatalities that envelop mankind is mingled the inward fatality, the highest fatality—the human heart."

Buddha never taught by dogmatism, but by pointing out such principles as all might verify for themselves and even to-day Buddhists do the same, for they recognise no right in any man to force his views upon another. In the absence of any orthodoxy or "authority" it never occurs to a Buddhist to persecute his neighbour for holding a different point of view.

And if what the Masters—let it be Buddha, Christ or Mahommed—taught be true, and one believes it so, it is one's duty to proclaim it, but there one's duty ends. To "convert" another by changing his beliefs is foolishness, for so long as his philosophy is a matter of belief it can be changed by a still more plausible variety, while he who knows the truth of certain principles no longer needs them to be pointed out. There remains the type which seeks to know but has not heard the message of the Master.

What should be the attitude of the State towards "conversion"? I think the State should follow the footsteps of Great Asoka and Akbar. If this policy is followed there will be no strife and suffering created in the name of religion.

MR. K. K. SUNTOKE.

Let me, Sir, make my humble contribution to the discussion that has taken place to-day on the important subject of Lord Buddha and conversion. I agree that Lord Buddha's achievement did not involve any propaganda of conversion, but in accordance with his principles of humility and meekness, he left it to those who heard his sermons to follow or reject his advice as to the paths to be adopted for attaining salvation and escaping the wheel of recurring life and death. Nothing else could have been expected from a great personage like him. How similar is this to the celebrated preamble to the Treasurer's sermon as recorded in the Gathas: "O ye who come from far and near, listen unto my words. If your reason commends them to you, follow them, otherwise reject them?" From my study of history I say that a respectful and reverential attitude towards other faiths and religious beliefs has been the special characteristic of the Aryan Race, and this cultural aspect of the Race has blossomed forth, I am glad and proud to say, in two brilliant flowers on Indian soil. The first is the Great Asoka who with the mighty power that he wielded never attempted, after he had drunk of the true spirit of Buddha's teaching, to force it upon others, either his own subjects or weaker States of his time, but in all humility communicated the teachings of Buddha to them with sweet persuasiveness only, as his rock-edicts containing his letters to the King of far-off Antioch testify. The second is the great Akbar. You will find throughout that noble period of his reign which he devoted amidst even the cares and worries of his mighty empire to the discussion and study of the different religions of the world, an appreciative and dignified position of reverence to all, as promulgating the eternal verities of life. Mr. Suntoke explained that he regarded Akbar as the culmination of this genius of the Iranian Race, because the Moghal dynasty sprang from one of those scions of the Iranian ruling family that were scattered in different directions after the overthrow of the Zoroastrian Sassanian Empire in about 645 A.C. and who migrated towards Central Asia and Afghanistan. You have only to look to the Persian writings of the Moghal Emperors, the Persian names that they cherished and the Persian traditions that they exemplified in the days of their Administrative glory, to be satisfied that this characteristic ran in their blood and only lay dormant through about nine centuries of life of neglect and penury that followed the destruction of that Empire, duly to develop and shine forth, not on Iranian, but, as I am so proud to acknowledge on Indian soil, under conditions that were found favourable to its manifestation.

The grand achievement, therefore, that stands out in the History of our Aryan Race of which Hindus and Parsees are but the two branches that bifurcated near Caucasus into Persia and India, and have by a strange order of Providence met again in India, is a recognition of the truth that the different religions are but so many apparently divergent paths leading all to but one place, the House of God, which is situated neither at Jerusalem nor at Benares nor anywhere exclusively.

Mr. Suntoke went on to ask:

"Whence then did this claim of a right to proselytize arise—whence the cry now raised that the right to proselytize and convert others to your faith is an essential function of the exercise of your religion, and to be deprived of it is tantamount to a refusal to allow you to profess it?" He replied: "You will find that this has emanated only from the claim put up by different Semitic races one after another that they alone were the chosen people of God, and that He had vouchsafed His true religion to them only. The Jews set it up for the first time, but their numbers were so small that they did not think of forcing it on the rest of the World. They were hustled out of this claim, even by persecution by their religious heirs, the Christians, and it has been attempted to be wrested from their hands by Islam, the religious heir to both, and this strange competition as to whether the Cross or the Crescent makes the largest number of conversions in the year, is still going on in our time. When you reflect what mighty oceans of human blood have been made to flow owing to this religious rivalry you will be inclined to say in the words of Milton that it was the mortal taste of this forbidden fruit—religious arrogance—that in a way has brought death into the world, and so many of our woes.

In ancient Persia also as in ancient India and Modern Hindu India religious persecution has been unknown; it came on for the first time in Persia with the dethronement of Zoroastrianism by Islam. But in the words of the Ancient Hindu Rishis, we find in history the vindication of one of the great eternal verities of life. Satya Meva Jayate—Truth prevails for all time and falsehood destroys itself, as witnessed by the repudiation of the Jews' claim by the Christians, and of the Christians by the Moslems.

THE PLACE OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN THE NEW INDIA.*

BY THE REV. W. PATON.

(Concluded from the last issue.)

Or, again, take the varied forms of rural service. When I was in India last winter I found in several places what are being called "rural reconstruction units" under the ægis of missions. A unit is a convenient group of contiguous villages, through which a coherent and systematic range of activities is carried on, through the bank and the hospital, the school and the home and the church. The end of it all is to seek to build up a genuinely rural Christian society, in which the virtue of the country-side is made more and not less characteristic.

Now, in all this there is a perfectly unambiguous Christian aim, and with that I shall deal in a moment. But it is a fair reply to the challenge I quoted earlier in this paper if I can show that the object of missionary work is not merely to gain adherents but to do something real with and for them; that it is not the mere gathering of numbers but the transformation of life that counts; and that the skill of the doctor or the teacher and the economist is used not as craft and guile but as a part of the good gift of God whereby we may honour Him and make Him known.

THE TRUTH EVANGELISM.

This takes us, I think, into the heart of this matter of proselytism. It is a word loosely used, but its meaning ought not to be in doubt. Jesus Christ condemned proselytism when he spoke of those who compassed sea and land to make one proselyte and then made him more a child of hell than themselves. I take proselytism to be that kind of activity that counts numbers only, that values the increase of adherents beyond the real change in heart and in society, and that is consequently not too scrupulous as to the methods to be employed. I hope that that mind and temper will never become characteristic of the missionary movement, and I am very certain that it is not so to-day.

But there is another view, different both from that, and also from the view of Mr. Gandhi that all religions are in a sense equally true. It is the view which inspires all true evangelism. Let me quote some words from a statement published in 1924 by the National Christian Council of India just after the conference held at Delhi on the subject of "Unity" between the great communities of India, under the shadow of Mr. Gandhi's twenty-one day fast.

"We welcome the clear vindication of the right of every man to follow after religious truth, to practise the worship of God according to his conscience, to witness to that which he believes, and to invite others to share in it. We agree that for the accomplishment of a spiritual task such as conversion no means should be employed save such as are consonant with that end..... We affirm that the Christian motive in the work of evangelism is the overmastering sense of the love of God, having as its objective the bringing of men and women into the fellowship of the society of Jesus Christ, in which they have equal rights with ourselves."

Even in this mixed assembly I think I shall not be misunderstood if I speak quite frankly about this. It is one of the real differences between Hinduism and Christianity that the former has been the religious culture, in infinite variety, of the Hindu people, while the latter is and has always been an international and an evangelizing religion. I cannot do more here than note that fact, but, of course, it is fundamental. Islam is in this respect like Christianity, so in some degree is Buddhism.

Mr. Gandhi displays his profoundly Hindu mind in all that he says on this issue. I do not expect that a loyal Hindu will agree with or approve the zeal of Christians to lead him to share the truth about God and man as they see it, but I hope that they may see that this view can be held in perfect humility. Let me put it very simply by saying that Christian evangelism is concerned with Christ, not with the virtues or superiorities of Christians. If we are right in what we believe about Christ, then who are we that we should keep it to ourselves? It is fruitless to discuss this question unless we face the fact that all down the centuries there has been this religious universalism deep in the heart of Christianity, and I would add that there will always be.

* Paper read at the East India Association, London, on the 9th June. Mr. Paton is Secretary of the International Missionary Council.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM.

Now, we have to ask the question, Will there be in the new India room for this religious impulse to be expressed? I believe that there will. You may dismiss that 1924 Unity Conference at Delhi as having accomplished little, but it was never repudiated, and it agreed unequivocally to the freedom of the individual to practise his own religion, to preach it to others, and to change his faith if he desired. The recent Karachi meeting of the Indian National Congress passed a declaration of rights including an assertion of the freedom of every individual to profess and practise his religion without hindrance. It is hard to see what meaning religious liberty has if there is no liberty to change. I can see no ground for believing that the India of the future will deny the individual his right to religious freedom in the fullest sense.

But we must face also the fact that this right is at least more obvious when it is claimed by Indians in India than when it is claimed by foreigners. Ideally it should not be so. In a settled country like England, immensely sure of itself and long schooled in practical social democracy, we resent any infringement of the fullest freedom. We should, I think, object to any proposal for the compulsory removal of the Muhammadan missions in this country. Any of us who are Christians would deeply regret to see Christian Englishmen becoming Muslims, but I hope we should think it also wrong that the Muslim evangelist should be forbidden.

Still, I think it ought to be admitted that the case for the foreigner is mixed up with other things. When we defend the right of missionary freedom we are defending more than the right to private religious witness. We are defending the right to carry on an organized propaganda through a variety of agencies. It may be argued by a government, as by China today, that the teaching of any religion in the schools is to be avoided, or, as by the Turks, that foreign schools are a denationalizing influence. The grounds on which liberty to carry on religious schools in a foreign country is to be claimed and defended need to be carefully examined. It is worth mentioning that in the Mandates this right is conceded expressly, subject to the necessities of public order. It is, however, plain from the example in the last two years of Persia, China, and Turkey that new governments look jealously at the schools and are particularly afraid of any tendency to use them as instruments of an anti-national or denationalizing culture.

This leads me to what I believe to be the crucial point for future policy. The whole task of missions in India ought to be so intimately bound up with Indian Christianity that the freedom of the one is the freedom of the other, and that there is no feeling in the minds of Indians that the securing of religious freedom for themselves is one thing and the securing of freedom for missionary activity quite another. It may not be known to members of this Association how great have been the developments in this direction during recent years. Everywhere missions are working in the closest co-operation with indigenous churches; responsibilities that used to be held by missionaries are now more and more being held by Indian Christians. There are close parallels all along the line between the action taken in the State and the action taken in the Church.

The method of development naturally differs with the different types of ecclesiastical organization, but everywhere there is a clear recognition that the permanent thing is the Church, not the mission. This is reflected in the fact that the International Missionary Council represents not only the missionary bodies of the West, but also the indigenous Churches of the East and Africa. Indian Christians are not satisfied with the speed at which development is going on, and the Commission over which the Master of Balliol presided, which has just returned from an investigation of the Christian colleges of India, found that great interest was everywhere taken in the closer relating of the colleges to the Church and the diminution of foreignness in control and organization. Popular as the greatest Christian colleges are, the Indian Christians hardly yet feel them to be theirs.

I suggest, then, that the true approach to the problem of missionary freedom in the India of the future is to associate it closely with the religious freedom of Indians. But I do not urge the closer identification of the missions with Indian life and leadership out of merely prudential motive; that would be altogether unworthy of the cause. I must say frankly that against the difficulties and restrictions which might conceivably be brought to missionary work in India of the future, I should set as a gain the removal of the inhibition which the inevitable association of the Christian religion with the foreign regime brings about. Everything foreign will be looked at more fairly in India when once the issue of government is settled. But Christianity ought to be looked at not as something foreign, but as something international or supra-national, able to become truly naturalized in every land.

As I understand the mind of my own Indian Christian friends, they want the fellowship and help of the Church in the West, and we ought to help them to feel that the whole structure of missionary work in India is theirs as well as ours; ours, indeed, only to be theirs. The Indian Church has an immense opportunity in India today. It has through its leaders taken a courageous attitude on communal questions; it has international links as no other community in India has; its educational tradition should enable it to put the scientific mind behind the loving heart in facing the needs of India, and that is what is so sorely needed. The future of Christian missions in India is bound up with the initiative, the vision and the religious devotion of the Indian Church.

WOMEN'S WORK FOR MEN.

(BY BRIGADIER H. PIMM SMITH, SALVATION ARMY).

Not only has the Salvation Army done a great deal for women throughout the world, but it has trained women in turn to do a great deal for others. Naturally, the main realm of women's work in the Army lies amongst women, but there has been a great deal of work done by women for men, and everywhere the Army is at work that is a principle which is recognised and a privilege which is appropriated by Army women.

It may be but in rare cases that women are specially appointed to work amongst men, but it often happens that a wife will find in her husband's appointment some opportunity or other of exercising her kindly and mellowing influence upon the men amongst whom her husband is working, and she learns how to lay hold of such opportunities and how to turn them to good account.

A highly respectable and respected man lost his wife and two children, the trio being struck down with an epidemic within three weeks. Overpowered by sorrow, he went from the graveside to find relief in drink....Four years later he almost crawled to a Salvation Army Institution, so ill that he both longed for and dreaded the oblivion of death. The Officers gave him a bath, clothed him in clean garments, put before him good food, and when he was somewhat restored set him to light work. Gradually his interest in life began to revive, but with it the memory of his sorrow also returned in force, and the deadly drink danger hovered over him again.

He must be saved from it, husband and wife agreed, and the wife laid herself out to do the woman's part. Always, as the tempted man went to his work in the morning, she was somewhere near with a heartening word, and in the evening she had a smiling welcome and kindly enquiry as to how he had fared that day. Her children, too, were interested and eager to help in the uplifting of this lonely and broken-hearted man who was carrying such a burden of sorrow.

These kindly attentions kept him going, and after a while he went voluntarily and poured out his heart to the Officer's wife—the first good woman who, since his own wife's death, had cared for his soul. She led him to the Great Healer, and soon afterwards he was able to leave the Institution and take his place among respectable men again.

This is a single concrete case of how the Army is working to help the needy everywhere. In order that this work may be maintained and extended funds are required. From the 12th to the 19th of September has been set apart as Self Denial Week. Perhaps a Collector will call upon you. Will you kindly hand over a gift? Or, if you prefer, you may please send your donation to Colonel Gnana Dasen (Alfred H. Barnett), The Salvation Army, Morland Road, Byculla, Bombay, S. He will gratefully acknowledge receipt of your gift.

BENGAL HINDU SABHA RELIEF FUND.

AN APPEAL FOR HELP.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Five principal rivers of Bengal viz the Brahmaputra, the Padma, the Dhaleswari, the Atrai and the Meghna are in unprecedented flood. This flood has destroyed the crops of a very wide area covering several thousands of square miles in seven districts and caused indescribable distress to the inhabitants. Immediately prior to the flood there was acute famine in this area and the Hindu Sabha, the Congress and other organisations were doing relief work there. Great hopes were built upon the raising of the next crops, a part of which had been only harvested when this devastating flood appeared and destroyed their homes, their crops and their cattle. Thousands of families are passing nights on the top of their huts (where they still stand), on trees, or rafts and machans, and harrowing details of suffering are daily pouring in. Unless immediate relief is given, thousands will die of starvation. We therefore appeal to the charitable public to come to their help. Any contribution either in money or in kind will be thankfully accepted. All contributions should be sent to Babu Sant Kumar Roy Chowdhury, 9 Williams Lane, Sealdah, Calcutta.

RAMANAND CHATTERJEE,

Chairman.

SANAT KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY,

PADAMRAJ JAIN,

Secretaries,

Bengal Hindu Sabha Relief Committee,

160, Harrison Road, Calcutta.

MR. JOSEPH AGAIN.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I said a short while ago that there was no end to the discussion on the above subject: but I did not then imagine that the beginning of it would be persistently recurrent. I do not mind your chasing me up and down the place. Apparently it is all over my letter to Mr. Sri Prakasa and my quite unrepentant claim that part of the Christian religion consists in converting others to Christianity.

On that proposition I stand, and nothing you have so far said has in the slightest degree shaken me on that. Nor is it matter of surprise. I am a Christian and it is inherently more probable that I know more about Christianity than you who happen to be a Hindu in spite of your habit of reading the Bible.

The point is not whether the "right to convert" is a Fundamental Right or no. The plain question is whether Hindus (who happen (sic) to be in a majority in India) and the Congress (which is their political organisation) will permit Christians to practise their religion if as a matter of cold fact such practice involves the persuasion of non-Christians to embrace Christianity either individually or in numbers. Or will they of salvation." This, the speaker said, was also applicable to Buddhist monasticism which was probably the pattern on which early Christianity shaped its own. This was very different from the Christian Missionary organizations which were modelled on the lines of the Civil Service with salaries, allowances, leave and furlough, pensions and so on, and their sole purpose is to baptise as many Hindus as possible every year. Mr. Natarajan said that this was as much opposed to Buddha's ideas as to Jesus Christ's, between whom there was a close parallel in many matters. The main difference was that while Jesus in the early part of his ministry performed miracles, Buddha throughout set his face strongly against them. Mr. Natarajan concluded by saying that, in his opinion, the foreign Christian Missions as at present conducted, were incompatible with the policy of equality of religions and a State which adopted this policy could not permit them. He quoted a passage from one of his articles in the Reformer in which it was urged that the Sovereign should in his Coronation oath pledge himself to give equal protection to all religions. Dr. Nair and Messrs K. A. Padhye, Muchchala and Suntoke expressed their agreement with Mr. Natarajan.

DR. A. L. NAIR'S SPEECH.

Many Brahmins and ascetics used to go to Lord Buddha and say, 'we do not know what to believe.' Thereupon the Lord Buddha said: "It is proper and very natural that doubts should arise in you, blind belief is to be rejected."

"Do not judge by hearsay nor by tradition nor on assertion, nor on the authority of so-called sacred writings nor by logical deduction nor by long accustomed opinions and conceptions."

"Not to judge according to appearances, nor believe anything because an ascetic or teacher has said it, but when you yourselves are convinced."

"But when you perceive these things are right, these things are unobjectionable, these things when done produce weal and happiness for us and others; then adopt them and act accordingly." Lord Buddha even said that one should emancipate oneself from his doctrine, when it is not needed any more to reach the goal, that is, when the goal is reached.

In every country and in every religion miracles play a large part. But as Buddhism demands reflection and knowledge it does not rely on miracles. The Lord specially forbade his disciples to perform so-called miracles.

When on a certain occasion some of Lord Buddha's disciples asked him for permission to perform a miracle in order to convert certain persons who wanted to see one in order to be convinced of the superiority of the Buddha's Doctrine, he said: "Prestidigitators can also perform such miracles. The greatest of miracles is conversion by conviction."

The toleration which Buddhism has maintained to the present day is a wonder. During the last 2500 years not a single person has been converted by force nor has a drop of blood been spilt for the propagation of the Doctrine of the Great Master. And yet Buddhism is a missionary religion and one-third of the population of the world are following this religion. It spread rapidly over all Central and Eastern Asia, and modified the customs of people like the Mongols and Tartars.

MR. K. A. PADHYE'S SPEECH.

Mr. K. A. Padhye, Secretary of the Society, while thanking the learned lecturer, said that conversion was unknown to Buddhism. The doctrines of Brotherhood and universal love on which Lord Buddha laid great stress, negated the idea of conversion. Buddha did not arrogate to himself the title of Prophet. In fact he never claimed infallibility. He exhorted his disciples and audience that they should not take his words as Gospel Truth because they emanated from him. He advised his followers and his listeners to investigate Truth for themselves and to shape their character according to the Noble Eightfold Path. He succeeded in converting people to his view on account of his noble character and to his having prescribed his tenets in the languages spoken by the masses. Love of mankind which is the same as Brotherhood militates against the principle of conversion. Buddhism does not recognize the distinction between man and man and does not encourage the principle of superiority of one person over another.

MR. MUCHCHALA'S SPEECH.

We are really highly indebted to Mr. Natarajan for his interesting discourse. Mr. Natarajan has put us a question: "What is the attitude of the Society towards 'conversion.' What attitude Buddha will take in the matter? I think the answer to the question is this very hall. Here there are members of the Society belonging to different religions. There are Moslems, Hindus, Parsees, Christians, etc. This Society has not converted anybody and it does not intend to. It has tried to put forward before the public teachings of Buddha. Buddhism is not a religion if religion means dogmas. Many Hindu friends take me as a Hindu, very many Muslims know me as a staunch Muslim. The President of the Society takes me as a Buddhist and once a Bishop in Bombay told me "You are a true Christian." I said to him "Alright Sir." But when he said "That is not enough. You must take Baptism; till then whatever good you do, will not be counted." "even is I fulfil all the commandments of Christ" I asked. "Yes, even then," was the reply. I said "Father, then my namaskar to your Christianity." I quote this just to show the attitude of Buddha towards conversion. "Conversion" and "Buddhism" are like the north and south poles to each other. To my mind there is no conversion in Buddhism. Buddha has said "Blood and Tears know no difference" and he says "Even if you do not believe in me and follow the Eightfold Noble Path that will be enough."

and with the Indian Christian community concerned.

(iv) (a) The Conferences will hold non-British 'recognized' societies responsible for carrying out the provisions of clause (iii).

(b) Any 'recognized' society desiring to send to any part of India missionaries or employees who are not of pure British or American birth will submit to the Conference concerned their names and full particulars, and the Conference will, if satisfied, give the applicant the necessary credentials establishing his identity. If the person in question has already served in India, the Conference will communicate with the National Christian Council, who will arrange direct with the Government of India.

(c) The Conference will also communicate with the National Christian Council in cases in which they are not satisfied that a society, although 'recognized,' is capable of discharging its responsibility under clause (iii).

(d) Every missionary or employee who is not a British subject will furnish himself with a document signed or countersigned by an official of the Conference concerned duly authorized in that behalf.

(v) The Conference of North America will, in regard to missionary societies or persons in the United States, correspond with the British Passport Control Officer, New York, not with His Majesty's Government direct, and will furnish him with the names and particulars of the societies which it recommends for recognition, and the persons to whom it has given credentials. It will be open to the Passport Control Officer to make any further enquiries which he may think desirable. In regard to Canadian Missionary Societies or persons in Canada the Conference will correspond with the Dominion Government.

(vi) In case any question arises between His Majesty's Government and any recognized society or member of such society, His Majesty's Government will address the Conferences, who will use their good offices to regulate the affair and if agreement cannot be arrived at, it will be open to His Majesty's Government to withdraw any facilities, grants, etc., which the society may enjoy, and in the last resort to deport the individual, and to remove the society from the list.

5. Members of any society or organisation not recognized by His Majesty's Government must obtain a permit, as in accordance with Memorandum C, and will be subject to the restrictions therein laid down for such time as His Majesty's Government think fit.

6. His Majesty's Government reserve the right to inspect the schools, etc., of any recognized or other society, and satisfy themselves that the spirit is satisfactory.

7. Nothing in this Memorandum shall exempt foreign recognized societies or their members or employees from the operation of any laws or regulations affecting foreigners in general in India.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Church Finances:—With reference to a recent leading article in the Catholic Leader, writes that paper, calling upon Catholics to support their pastors and institutions more liberally, a correspondent draws our attention to a system obtaining in a local Protestant church. He tells us that a congregation composed of 1,100, including women and children, subscribes Rs. 325 per month towards the maintenance of their church. There is a regular and well-defined method of assessment which is binding on all the members. All those who draw a salary of Rs. 12 and less have to subscribe at the rate of quarter anna per rupee and those whose pay is higher than Rs. 12 half an anna in the rupee. On the basis of this taxation, one gentleman pays Rs. 21-14-0; and a third Rs. 12-0-6. The assessment is calculated not only on regular salaries but on the consolidated incomes of families and individuals, such as allowances, remuneration, private tuition, land income, extra wages, etc. Default in payment carries along with it penalties, and arrears are collected on the occasion of baptisms, marriages and funerals. Our correspondent, continues the Leader, would have Catholics adopt similar methods but we wonder if a regular system requiring a definite sum from each of the faithful on the basis of each one's income will find favour with the clergy, who are reluctant to enforce hard and fast rules, and if it will commend itself to the laity for the circumstances of each family may differ widely: the expenses of one family may be higher than those of another owing to the incidence of family life, children, poor relatives, doctor's bills, etc. If we are not mistaken the common practice in India, if there be any at all, is to rely on the voluntary offerings of the faithful. But voluntary offerings do not always come in so easily, for most people do not realise their obligation to supply the material wants of religious worship. The only alternative seems to be some sort of assessment if it can be successfully enforced.

H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore:—Visit to Mount Kailas: A message from Mysore describes at length the trans-Himalayan pilgrim route which H. H. the Maharaja has covered in reaching what is described as "the most sacred spot on earth", the Mount Kailas, held as such both by the Hindus and the Buddhists alike. The message refers to the arduous nature of the task generally imposed on the pilgrim and says: "The fact that the shrine on Mount Kailas is extraordinarily difficult of access adds to the mystery and to the fascination which it exercises upon the Indian mind. The pilgrim has to circumambulate to the top of the hill, it is said, by prostrating all along the route where there are monasteries and huts for taking rest. There is a tank called Gowri Khand at the top level, the climb to which over the glaciers and avalanches is an arduous task with its unbearably cold and chilly state. Owing to its high altitude, the pilgrim experiences hard breathing owing to rarified air, but when one reaches the Gowri Khand he forgets all the fatigue, such is the beauty of the spot. The distance from Almora to Manasarovara of about 200 miles was made up on foot or on yaks by stages of about 10 miles a day, says the message, which His Highness was able to complete on July 22nd. His Highness has now undertaken the return journey, and from Almora His Highness proceeds to Haridwar to perform the forthcoming Shravana on or about the 25th instant, returning to the capital of Mysore on or about September 1st.

The Brahma Samaj and Politics:—The Indian Messenger writes:—Principal Maitra has done us the honour of appearing in our correspondence columns in our last issue with a few words of good counsel. Advice coming from a person of his age, erudition and experience is always welcome. No doubt, the revered Deshguru, the teacher of many generations of Bengalees, among whom the humble Editor counts himself as one, knows that the Sadharan Brahma Samaj is divided into different political groups, each group claiming its opinion to be represented in the Samaj organ. Recognising the difficulty of the situation created, he must have advised us to avoid politics. With due deference to the esteemed correspondent we submit that while he himself was Editor of this paper for no less than fourteen years, the politics of the time were discussed in these columns. We admit that the situation then was not so very complex as it is now, making it hard for the Editor to represent the Samaj as a whole. He knows better than we do that the Sadharan Brahma Samaj conception of religious life is an all-round life of devotion and activity, of work and worship. Following the founder of the Brahma Samaj whose ideal of an all-round life, including political activity, we claim to have revived, we cannot give up politics altogether. We remember Acharya Sivanath saying to a Brahma gentleman asking him to consider before he accepted the presidentship of the meeting to be held to protest against the deportation of Bengal leaders: "Can a disciple of Rammohun fear to take part in political activities?" With this example before us, we cannot recede, if we are to be true to ourselves. But this does not mean that we should be hard on those with whom we differ. We earnestly ask all those who belong to the Editorial staff and also those who contribute to our columns, to read and ponder over Principal Maitra's letter. You may express yourself strongly in matters political without wounding your friends' feelings who have honest difference of opinion with you in politics. Let us have politics but no bitterness resulting from our unskilful handling of politics in these columns.

ADVERTISEMENTS

"MY EXPERIENCE AS LEGISLATOR."

BY

DR. MRS. S. MUTHULAKSHMI REDDY,

M. B. & C. M.

Ex-Deputy President, Legislative Council, Madras.

PRICE Rs. 2/-

Can be had from the Manager,

The Indian Social Reformer.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 Y.P.P.
 " Foreign ... " 2-3-0 Post free.
 Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
 Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

LIFE INSURANCE TRUST PLAN

THE outright payment of the Insurance money to the widow or children in one lump sum is a great mistake. To apply a real test you would only ask yourself how your wife would invest such a sum NOW without any help whatever from you. The woman who has been "All the Wife and Mother" is ill-equipped to invest and safeguard funds designed to her family's protection for many years.

Therefore take advantage of

OUR INVESTMENT TRUST PLAN.

For further particulars apply to:—

THE SECRETARY,
 CENTRAL BANK EXECUTOR AND
 TRUSTEE Co., Ltd.

THE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

(Established 7th September 1906.)

Incorporated under the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882.

HEAD OFFICE:

ORIENTAL BUILDINGS, BOMBAY.

BULLION EXCHANGE.

(Sheikh Memon Street, Bombay.)

BANDRA.

Branches: CALCUTTA.

AHMEDABAD.

POONA.

SURAT.

Capital Subscribed ... .. Rs. 2,00,00,000
 Capital Called up ... .. " 1,00,00,000
 Reserve Fund ... .. " 92,00,000

London Agents:—The Westminster Bank, Ltd.

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

From 25th December to 25th June interest is allowed at 2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300 to Rs. 1,00,000. From 25th June to 25th December interest is allowed at 2 per cent on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 interest is allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be allowed which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for shorter period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms. Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate rate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
 Manager.

THE BANK OF BARODA, LTD.

Under the patronage of and largely supported by the Government of H. H. the Maharaja of Gaekwar.
(Registered under the Baroda Companies' Act III of 1897).

HEAD OFFICE:—BARODA.

Branches:—Bombay, Ahmedabad, Navsari, Mehsana, Dabhoi, Surat, Petlad, Patan, Amrell, Bhavnagar, Sidhpur, Karjan, Kalol, Kadi, Dwarika, and Port Okha.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED	...	...	...	Rs. 60,00,000
CAPITAL PAID-UP	...	...	...	30,00,000
RESERVE FUND	...	...	...	24,65,000

DIRECTORS:

Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt., C.I.E., (Chairman).
Sheth Durgaprasad Shambhuprasad Laskari (Mill Agent—Ahmedabad).
Bhaskarrao Vithaldas Mehta, Esq. M.A., LL.B.
Maganlal H. Kantavala, Esq., M.A., (Agent, The Maharaja Mills Co. Ltd., Baroda.)
R. B. Govindbhai Hathibhai Desai, Late Naib Dewan, Baroda.
Raj Ratna Bhallal Dajibhai Amin B. A., M. S. C. I., (Managing Agent, Alomble Chemical Works, Baroda).
Sheth Pransukhbhai Mafatlal (Shorrock Mills Ltd., Ahmedabad.)
Mr. Manilal B. Nanavati, B.A., LL.B., M.A., (Penn.)
Director of Commerce and Industries & Labour, Baroda.
Mr. N. M. Musumdar, (Messrs Tata Sons Ltd., Bombay.)

CURRENT DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS.

With effect from the 1st October 1926, interest allowed on daily balances from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,00,000 at the rate of 2½ per cent. from 1st January to 30th June and at 2 per cent. from 1st July to 31st December and on sums over Rs. 1,00,000 by special arrangement. No interest on sums which do not come to Rs. 5 per half year will be allowed.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Received for long or short periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved securities.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its constituents Custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividends and interest thereon; it also undertakes purchase of Government Paper and all descriptions of securities at moderate charges particulars of which may be ascertained on application.

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Deposits received and rates of interest on current accounts and Savings Bank Deposits are as follows:—at 3½ per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively from 1st October 1926. Rules on application.

8-3-26.

O. E.

THE G

Navsari Chambers, Outram Road, Fort,

BOMBAY.

PRICE ANNAS TWO.

PRINTED AT THE BOMBAY VAIBHAV PRESS, BOMBAY 4.

1931.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

HEAD OFFICE:—Apollo Street, Fort, BOMBAY.

BRANCHES.

Baramati (District Poona).	Dhulia (District West Khandesh).
Nira ( " " ).	Dondaicha ( " " ).
Isiampur (District Satara).	Shirpur ( " " ).
Karad ( " " ).	Sindheda ( " " ).
Tasgaon ( " " ).	Nandurbar ( " " ).
Satara ( " " ).	Sakri ( " " ).
Kirloskarwadi ( " " ).	Shahada ( " " ).
Shirala ( " " ).	Dohad (District Panch Mahals).
Kopergaon (District Ahmednagar).	Kalol ( " " ).
Shevgaon ( " " ).	Malegaon (District Nasik).
Belapur ( " " ).	Satana ( " " ).
Ahmednagar ( " " ).	Nandgaon ( " " ).
Parola (District East Khandesh).	Kaiwan ( " " ).
Akluj (District Sholapur).	Bhilwandi (District Thana).
Virangam: (District Ahmednagar).	Paighar ( " " ).

DIRECTORS:

Sir Chunilal V. Mehta, K.C.S.I.,
Sir Lalubhai Samaldas, Kt.,
V. V. Garud, Esqr.,
G. K. Devadhar, Esqr.,
G. B. Trivedi, Esqr.,
Rao Sahab V. C. Jadav,
D. V. Gokhale, Esqr.,
R. N. Rajadnya, Esqr.,
Madhowjee D. Thackersey, Esqr.,
Principal M. L. Tannan,
Dewan Bahadur A. U. Malji,
Rai Bahadur Pritamdas,
Dewan Bahadur S. V. Mensinkal,
V. L. Mehta, Esqr.,

SHARE CAPITAL:—

(Fully Paid) ... .. Rs. 12,96,900

1. DEPOSITS fixed for one year and shorter or longer periods are accepted. Rates and other particulars may be ascertained from the undersigned.

2. CURRENT ACCOUNTS are opened for Co-operative Societies and individuals. Interest is allowed at 2½ per cent. on daily balance not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000.

3. SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS are accepted and interest paid at 3½ per cent. on minimum monthly deposits. Rules may be obtained from the undersigned.

Editor:

K. NATARAJAN.

LADIES LOVE FINE THINGS

Mrs ANNA CHANDI, M.A., B.L.,
Advocate.

TRIVANDRUM.

Writes:

I used your LODHRA and found it a sovereign remedy for all menstrual troubles. Its sweet taste and free diet add to the pleasantness of using it.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST,

OR

Kesari Kuteeram,

INDIAN CHEMISTS & DRUGGISTS,
EGMORE, MADRAS.

Bombay Agents:—

MESSRS. RATILAL BROTHERS,
A 175 DADAR MAIN ROAD,
Dadar, Bombay, 14.

Available at all Chemists

Unskilful handling of politics in these columns.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR FAMILY AND TO
YOUR COUNTRY—INSURE YOUR LIFE
AND ALL YOUR PROPERTY

WITH THE

New India Assurance Company, Limited.

The Leading Indian Insurance Company
transacting all classes of Insurance:—

LIFE, FIRE, MARINE, ACCIDENT, MOTOR
CAR, BAGGAGE, BURGLARY, ALL
RISKS, Etc., Etc.

Our reputation is world-wide and our security
is incontestable.

Capital (Paid up) ... Rs. 71,21,053
Total Funds ... Rs. 1,40,32,571

Prompt settlement of claims

Head Office:—Esplanade Road, Fort, Bombay.

R. J. DUFF,

General Manager.

ADVERTISEMENTS

"MY EXPERIENCE AS LEGISLATOR."

BY

DR. MRS. S. MUTHULAKSHMI REDDY,

M. B. & C. M.

Ex-Deputy President, Legislative Council, Madras.

PRICE Rs. 2/-

Can be had from the Manager,

The Indian Social Reformer.

WOMEN'S OUTLOOK.

The Organ of the Young Women's Christian Association of India, Burma & Ceylon.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Articles on India, on Social, Religious and International conditions. Information about Women's Movements of interest and value to Y. M. C. A. Members, Club Leaders, Teachers and Missionaries.

Subscription. Inland ... Rs. 2-3-0 V.P.P.
" Foreign ... " 2-8-0 Post free.
Single Copy ... 0-3-0

Further Particulars and Sample copies to be had on Application to—

Publications & Publicity Secretary,
11, HARRINGTON MANSIONS,
Harrington Street,
CALCUTTA.

FLY RELY

ON

Branches VIJAN BALM

OF

[Stwellings and all other

Capital Subscribed ... Rs.

Capital Called up ... OT.

Reserve Fund ...

London Agents:—The W. MADRAS.

CURRENT DEPOSIT

From 25th December to 25th
2½ per cent on daily balance Rs. 300
25th June to 25th December interest is allowed on daily balance. On sums exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 allowed by special arrangement. No interest will be which does not amount to Rs. 3 per half year.

FIXED DEPOSITS.

Deposits are received fixed for one year or for short period at rates of interest which can be ascertained on application.

"Savings Bank accounts opened on favourable terms.
Rules on application." The Bank undertakes Executor and Trustees business. Rules may be obtained on application.

The Bank grants accommodation on terms to be arranged against approved security.

LOANS, OVERDRAFTS AND CASH CREDITS.

The Bank undertakes on behalf of its Constituents the safe custody of Shares and Securities and the collection of dividend and interest thereon. It also undertakes the sale and purchase of Government paper and all descriptions of stock at moderate charges, particulars of which may be had on application.

A. G. GRAY,
Manager.

THE
INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

ISSUED EVERY SATURDAY.

Vol. XLI.

September 1930—August 1931.

Editor:

K. NATARAJAN.

Nausari Chambers, Outram Road, Fort,

BOMBAY.

PRICE ANNAS TWO.

PRINTED AT THE BOMBAY VAIBHAV PRESS, BOMBAY 4.

1931.

INDEX

	Page.		Page
A
"A Few Imprisonments and a Few Lathi Charges" ... ..	309	Brahmin Baiting ... ..	691
Acharya's Scheme, Dewan Bahadur ... ..	-2	Brahmins, The Future of the ... ..	66
Adult Education ... ..	153	Brahmo Samaj and the Christian Missions, The ... ..	651
Afghan Neighbour, Our ... ..	743	Brains not Bullets, Use ... ..	221
Agreement, Terms of the ... ..	422	British Cabinet, Reconstruction of the ... ..	821
Agriculture and Technology ... ..	694	British Champions of Indian Women ... ..	310
Agriculture, Mass Production in... ..	406	British Government and the States' People, The ... ..	671
Airship Disaster, The ... ..	85	British Lancer, The Miracle of a ... ..	331
All-Asian Women's Conference ... ..	94, 295, 300	British India and Indian States ... ..	690
All-India Women's Conference ... ..	10	British India, Pulling Down ... ..	692
All-India Women's Education Conference ... ..	310	British Indian Banquet, A Great ... ..	361
"All-India Prohibitionists Association," Plea for an ... ..	221	British Rule, Truth about ... ..	421
Allahabad Agricultural Institute ... ..	591	British Tories and the Indian Conference ... ..	437
American Films ... ..	204	Brotherhood Real in Industry, Making ... ..	124
Amnesty Essential, General ... ..	341	Buddha and Conversion ... ..	824
Andrew's Book, Mr. ... ..	167	Buddha and Women's Status ... ..	640
Anglo-Indian Association ... ..	686	Buddha as the Great Emancipation of Indian Women, Lord ... ..	659
Ansari's Critics, Dr. ... ..	710	Buddha Jayanti ... ..	606
Ansari's Suggestion, Dr. ... ..	550	Buddhism and Modern India ... ..	809
Anti-Caste Dinner ... ..	367	Buddhism and Women's Status ... ..	805
Anti-Indian Propaganda By Missionaries ... ..	390	Buddhism and the Drink Problem ... ..	156
Anti-Untouchability Conference at Ratnagiri, The Bombay Presidency ... ..	447	Buddhism Teaches, What ... ..	616
Army Bars the Way, The ... ..	376	Buddhist Renaissance, The ... ..	805
Arya Young Men's Conference ... ..	620	Bureaucracy, Unsympathetic ... ..	325
Ashamed for Nothing ... ..	662	Burma and India ... ..	501
Atheist Indian Politician, Another ... ..	438	Burma Under Sir Charles Innes ... ..	771
Atheistic Propaganda in America ... ..	750	Burmese Opinion ... ..	502
Attack on the Press, An ... ..	215	C
B
Babar's Statement ... ..	665	Calcutta Murder, The ... ..	230
Babu Ganu ... ..	247	Capital Punishment ... ..	506, 524
Bangles and Kunkum ... ..	150	Case, An unsavoury ... ..	615
Bapu Gandhi ... ..	311	Caste and the Census ... ..	277, 281, 299, 395
Barbour Scholarships for Oriental Women, Levi ... ..	767	Caste and Kingship ... ..	720
Bardoli, Happenings at ... ..	53	Caste Labels and the Coming Census ... ..	137
Basava ... ..	693	Caste System, Mr. Subhas Bose on ... ..	110
Begum Shah Navaz on Indian Womanhood ... ..	414	Caste, The Degradation of ... ..	730
Bengal Hindu Sabha Relief Fund ... ..	829	Catholic Marriages ... ..	86
Better Way, The ... ..	613	Catholic Protestant Amenities ... ..	123
Bhavnagar Investiture, The ... ..	534	Catholic Warrior Princess of India, A ... ..	462
Birkenhead, Lord ... ..	70	Cawnpore Riots ... ..	486
Birth Control, American Churches on ... ..	622	Cawnpore Riots, The... ..	522
Bishop Fisher on his Resignation ... ..	9	Cawnpore Riots, The Cause of ... ..	520, 536
Bishop's Resignation ... ..	2	Census, The ... ..	134, 389
Blind Relief Association, The ... ..	106	Central Responsibility, Muslims and ... ..	615, 616
Booth Tucker, Commissioner ... ..	251	Chambhar Conference, Bombay ... ..	149
Bombay Government Communique ... ..	422	Change of Heart, No ... ..	77
Bombay High Court on Picketing ... ..	78	Chastity and Purity ... ..	614
Bombay Municipal Corporation Incident, The. ... ..	496	Childish Petulance ... ..	486
Bombay Prarthana Samaj, The ... ..	822	China and Her Antiquities ... ..	678
Bombay Social Service League ... ..	381	Chintamani on Sir Malcolm Hailey, Mr. ... ..	438
Bombay To-day and Tomorrow ... ..	118	Chitamber, Bishop J. R. ... ..	294
Bombay University and Women Students ... ..	662	Chitamber on Prohibition, Bishop ... ..	380
Bombay Vigilance Association ... ..	364	Christian Attitude to Satyagraha ... ..	109
Borsad Affair, The... ..	374, 405	"Christian Charity" ... ..	630
Boy Scout Association, India S. S. ... ..	365	Christian Churches in England and the Round Table Conference, The ... ..	286
		Christian Missions ... ..	651

	Page.		Page.
Christian Missions and Proselytism	716, 732	Desperation, Language of	501
Christian Missions and the Conversion of the		Devadhar, Gopal Krishna	794
Heathen	558	Devadhar's Sixtieth Birthday, Mr.	795
Christian Missions in India	586, 602	Divorce	648
Christian Missions in the New India, The		Divorce Among Hindus	615
Place of	810, 827	Dnyanodaya on the Reformer, The	294
Christian Missionary Institutions, Non-Christ-		Dominion Status for India: Now or Never	7
tian Contributions to—I & II	397, 458	Dominion Status, Sir Frederick Sykes on	1
Christian Missionaries Intercede...	165	Drink Problem, Buddhism and the	156
Christian Missionaries' Manifesto, A	171	Drink Traffic in India	5
Christianity and Civil Disobedience	41, 59, 76
Church Missionary Society, Lahore (Panjab),		E
The	555	East and the West, The	362
Church Missionary Society, Lahore, The	636	Economic Condition of India, The	267
Churchill on the Indian Problem, Mr. Win-		Einstein's Acid Test, Professor	133
ston	246	Elections, Bombay	37
Churchill's Latest, Mr.	455	Electorates, Impasse, The	774
Churchill's Speech, Mr.	262	Electricity and Village Industries	38, 153
Civil Servants Salaries in Japan, The	822	English Education, Result of	197
College for Women, A	477	English in India and in England, The	229
Co-operation in Non-Co-operation	232	Essenes, The Passing of the	142
Commendable Example, A	761	European or World Federation, Which?	77
Commercial Crooks	445, 462	Evangeline Booth on Prohibition	763
Commonwealth, the Threefold	663, 679, 695, 713	Excellency the Bishop, His	603
Communal Question, The Hindu Delegates
Attitude to the	246	F
Compensation Come, Where Does	694	Face, My...	408
Concession, Not A	230	Faith and Toleration	7
Conference and Prohibition, the R. T. C.	118	Fallen Angels	765, 782
Congress and After, The	489	Federal Citizens, The Rights of...	350, 363
Congress and Capitalists	453	Federal Scheme, Mr. S. G. Vaze on the	488
Congress and Conference	807	Federation, Mr. Munshi on	613
Congress and Conversion	767	Federation or Confederation?	549
Congress and Hindus...	662	Federation, Sir P. Pattani on	629
Congress and the Agreement, The	454	Federation Versus Confederation	581
Congress and the Depressed Classes	70	Fergusson College Outrage, The	741
Congress and the Round Table Conference	421	Fergusson College Shooting Incident, The	773
Congress and the Workers, The	683	Ferment in Indian States, The	725, 742
Congress Representation at the Round Table,		Field Marshal's Outburst, A	262
Conference	502	Financial Relations between India and Britain	727
Congress Takes Prompt Action	422	First All-Asia Education Conference, The	279
Congress, The Karachi	487	Flag Question, The	438
Congress Working Committee's Decisions	735	Flaunting the Flags	17
Congress Working Committee's Proposals,		Freedom with Safe guards	411
The	726	"From Dependency to Dominion?"	199
Controversy, A Painful	678	Fundamental Rights...	342, 719
"Cowardly and Contemptible"...	283	Future of the Privileged, The	735
Criminal Law Amendment Act, The	200	Future of the Brahmias, The	664
Criminal Law Amendment and the Press,
The	245	G
D		Gandhi, India and Prohibition	271
Dangers Before the Round Table Conference	231	Gandhi-Irwin Agreement, The	421
Dangers of Obedience and other Essays, the	187	Gandhiji's Place in History	57, 74
Datta, Dr. S. K.	812	Gladiator, The Dying	267
Declaration, An Ill-digested	486	God and the Round Table Conference	149
Deplorable Lapse, A...	359, 605	Gokhale on the Minority Problem	238
Depressed Classes and the Police	637	Goodwill, A Plea for...	232
Depressed Classes and the Reforms, The	40	Goodwill Movement, A	366
Depressed Classes Mission Society for India,		Government and Corrupt Practices	390
the	526, 540	Government of India and Repudiation	222
Depressed Classes, Protector of	587	Government of India Scheme	183
		Government Statement, The	822

	Page.		Page.
Government of India's Despatch, The	... 166	Indian Emigration from South Africa	... 523
Graveyard Inscriptions	... 247	Indian Esteem for Princes	... 677
Greater India	... 317, 333	Indian Lady's Impressions of Europe, A	... 460
Greatest Living Men, Ten	... 494	Indian Christians and Nationalism	... 473
Gujerat Hijerat	... 348	Indian National Congress, The 45th	492, 511
H
Hansa Mehta, Mrs.	... 4	Indian Problem, Mr. Winston Churchill on	... 246
Happy New Years, A Way to a	... 351	Indian Reconstruction	... 245
Heaven Sent Leaders...	... 90	Indian Reforms, Its effect on	... 821
Hindi in South India	... 566, 613, 637	Indian Riddle	... 248
Hindu Christian Marriages, Two...	... 399	Indian Riddle, The	... 379
Hindu Delegates' Attitude to the Communal		Indian Situation, An English View of the	... 122
Question, The	... 246	Indian States Peoples' Conference Working
Hindu Idea of Sovereignty, The...	... 630	Committee's Resolutions	... 382
Hindu Law, Confusion In	... 805	Indian Womanhood, Begum Shah Nawaz on	... 414
Hindu Mahasabha, The	... 792, 796	Indian Women and the R. T. C....	... 638
Hindu Mahasabha on Constitutional Reforms.	389	Indian Women, British Champions of	... 310
Hindu Mahilashram	... 766	Indian Women's Demands	... 597
Hindu Social Adjustment	... 503	Indian Women's Movement, Laly Ablul
Hindu Widow Remarriage Movement	... 668	Quadir on	... 477
Hindu Women's Property Rights	... 294	Indian Women's University	... 702
Hindu Women's Rights	... 262	Indians in Africa	... 196
Hinduism, A Swedish View of	... 438	Indians in South Africa	... 296
Hinduism and Christianity	... 440, 495	India's Political Status	... 136
Hinduism in India To-day	... 670	India's Supreme Need	... 133, 170
"Hinduism Invades America"	... 263	Indo-British Settlement of Accounts	... 524
Hinduism? What is	... 474, 490	Inheritance, the Law of	... 329
Hospital Fund, Governor's	... 490	Inopportune Inauguration, An	... 230
Huxley on Religion, Prof.	... 123	Insinuation, Baseless	... 502
Hypochondria, Political	... 582, 619, 747	Inter-Communal Amity	... 665
I
Ideals and Practice	... 277	International Congress of Moral Education	... 93
Illustration, an Unhappy	... 614	International Co-operative Women's Con-
In 1828	... 621	ference,	... 326
"In the Midst of Death"	... 216	Internationalism, A Plea for	... 369
In the Light of the Cross	... 108	Irwin-Gandhi Conversations	... 749
Inconsistent	... 214	Irwin on Indian Affairs, Lord	... 69
India and Britain, Financial Relations		Irwin on Peace Negotiations, Lord	... 163
between	... 727	Irwin, The Tragedy of Lord	... 330
India and British Party Politics	... 469	Irwin's Appeal to the Congress, Lord	... 39
India and England	... 140	Irwin's Disclaimer, Lord	... 45
India and Religious Toleration	... 38	Irwin's Letter, Lord	... 261
India, British Attitude to	... 136	J
India, Freedom of	... 342	Jallianwalla Commemoration	... 154
India in 1960	... 239	Jawharlal Nehru, Pandit	... 118
India, The Reconstruction of	... 72	Jawharlal on the Situation, Pandit	... 101
India Today	... 618	Jayakar-Sapru Negotiations	... 21
India Wants, What	... 69	Jesus Christ and Mahatma Gandhi	... 508
Indian and British Interests	... 485	Jesus Christ, The Character of	... 249
Indian Bishop, Another	... 278	Jesus Christ and the Present Situation in
Indian Bishops	... 361	India	... 510
Indian Christian Marriage Act	... 412	Jesus through Gandhi, To	... 379
Indian Christian Marriage Act, Amendment of	398	Jinnah, Mr. M. A.	... 789
Indian Christian Marriage Act, The	... 88,	Jinnah's Fourteen Points, Mr.	... 813
140, 201, 218, 297, 346, 360		Joseph Agair, Mr.	... 826
Indian Christian Names	... 86	Joseph Baptista, The Late Mr.	... 37
Indian Commerce, Discriminating Against	... 789	Joseph's Last Word, Mr.	... 717
Indian Conference, British Tories and the	... 437	Joseph's Letter, Mr.	... 645
Indian Constitution, The Future of	... 185	Judaism, Liberal	... 762, 780, 813

	Page.		Page.
K
Kallar-Moslem Conflict, The ...	742	Medical Man's Lapse, A ...	607, 766
Karachi Congress ...	470	Methodists and National Movement ...	319
Karachi Congress, On the Eve of the ...	471	Minority Problem, Mr. Gokhale on the ...	238
Karachi Congress, The ...	487	Miraj Sanatorium, The ...	110
Karma, The Cosmic Law ...	105	Missions and the Missionary Spirit ...	557
Kashmir, Social Swaraj in ...	174	Missions, Mr. Paton on ...	801
Keithahn Case ...	2	Missionaries and Missions ...	759
Kemalism, Revolt against ...	277	Missionaries and Non-Christian Endowments ...	605
Kettle and the Pot, The ...	277, 280	Missionaries, Foreign ...	558
Khadi Spurious ...	438	Missionaries in India... ...	217
Kosambi, Prof. Dharmanand ...	118	Missionary's Apologia, A ...	507
Kumarappa, Mr. J. C. ...	405	Modern Creed for the Modern World, A ...	237, 252
L
Lady Dorabjee Tata ...	661, 796	Modi Memorial Volume, Dr. ...	150
Lahore Conspiracy Case, The ...	85	Moonje's Fallacies, Dr. ...	631
Lahore Execution, The ...	485	Monkey Trade, Cruelty of the ...	797
Language Problem, The ...	598, 685	Monkeys, Export of ...	773, 778, 790
Lapse, A Deplorable ...	359	More Haste, Less Speed ...	567
Law Member, The New ...	678	Moraba Kanhoba's Case ...	589
Law Membership, The ...	597	Mother Love, The Logic of ...	681
Liberal Judaism ...	762, 780, 813	Motilal and Ahimsa, Pandit ...	182
Liberal Movement in Religion, The ...	758	Motilal Nehru, Pandit ...	20, 357, 373
Liberal Position, The ...	757	Munshi on Federation, Mr. ...	613
Life Assurance, Some Facts About ...	301	Murder of Bengal Judge, The ...	757
Light that came over the Ocean, The ...	5	Muslim Comment, A ...	582
Liquor Traffic and Hindu Temples ...	806	Muslim Demand, The ...	808
Lord Irwin's Disclaimer ...	89	Muslim Problem, The ...	677
M
Magistrates, Differ, When ...	173, 181	Muslim Scheme, The Nationalist ...	560
Maharaja of Patiala and the Sikhs, The ...	814	Muslims and Central Responsibility ...	615, 646
Maharaja of Patiala's Scheme, The ...	661	Muslims Want Safeguards, Why ...	375, 391
Mahatma and his Motor Car ...	584	Muthulakshmi as Legislator, Dr. ...	293
Mahatma Gandhi ...	69, 437, 598	My Mother ...	76
Mahatma Gandhi, American Interest in ...	623	Mysore Finance ...	629
Mahatma Gandhi and Missions ...	597	N
Mahatma Gandhi and the Round Table Conference ...	613, 789	Naik Act, U. P. ...	390
Mahatma Gandhi attend R. T. C., Should ...	588	National Flag, The ...	575, 134, 566
Mahatma Gandhi on Toleration ...	92	National Liberal Federation and Prohibition, The ...	790
Mahatma Gandhi, Release of ...	341	National Liberal Federation, The ...	742, 775
Mahatma Gandhi's Eleven Points ...	43	Nebulizing God ...	183
Mahatma Gandhi's Speech at Delhi ...	412	Nudity in Law ...	646
Mahatma Gandhi's Statement ...	357	Negotiations, Jayakar-Sapru ...	21
Mahatma Gandhi's Tribute to the Viceroy ...	422	Negotiations, The Peace ...	18
Mahatmaji Go, Should ...	550	Neutrality or Toleration? ...	701
Mahatmaji's Demand for Enquiry ...	374	New Delhi ...	374
Mahatmaji's Reasons ...	614	New Ordinance at Work, The ...	135
Mahomed Ali, Maulana ...	293	New Year, The ...	277
Mahomed Ali, The Late Maulana ...	326	News of the Week. 11, 31, 46, 63, 79, 94, 111, 127, 143, 158, 175, 207, 223, 254, 271, 287, 302, 319, 335, 351, 383, 399, 415, 431, 447, 463, 479, 496, 527, 543, 575, 591, 639, 655, 671, 703, 735, 751, 783, 799, 815, 831.
Mahomedan Nationalist Conference ...	533	Non-Brahmin Peril, The ...	439
Mann Smriti, Abolish ...	367	Non-British Missions in India ...	830
Marriage and the Islamic Law ...	62	Non-Christian Contribution to Christian Missionary Institutions ...	397, 428, 444, 458
Marriage Law Anomaly, A ...	389	Non-violence in Danger ...	3
Marriage Law Reform ...	63, 134, 189
Martandam Scheme, The ...	198
Mass Conversions, In Defence of ...	815
Mass Meeting, Thursday's ...	181
Mass Production in Agriculture... ...	406
Mayo Again, Miss ...	566

	Page.		Page
O
Oberammergau, Impressions of ...	157	Press, The Criminal Law Amendment Act and the ...	241
Of Importance ...	90	Prime Minister's, Speech, The ...	191
Old Fallacy, The ...	214	Prisoners' Food ...	102
Omission, A Strange ...	278	Prisoners in Bombay Jails, Treatment of ...	316
On the Eve of the Round Table Conference ...	119	Prisoners, The Rights of ...	214
Opinion and Conduct ...	267	Prisoners, Treatment of ...	278, 438, 309
Oracular Order, An ...	630	Professional Women and Personal Standards.	760
Ordinance, A District Magistrate's ...	54	Programme for Swaraj, A ...	711
Ordinance at Work, The New ...	135	Prohibition, Evangeline Booth on ...	763
Ordinance, The Unlawful Associations ...	101	Prohibition, Gandhi, India and ...	271
Ourselves... ..	622	Prohibition in America ...	761
Outlook, The ...	358	Prohibition in India ...	681
P
Pacifism, Militant ...	334	Prohibition, The National Liberal Federation and ...	790
Painful Case, A ...	596	Prohibition, The R. T. Conference and ...	118, 124
Palestine Problem, The ...	133	Proselytise or to convert which, To ...	700
Parsi Migration to Persia, Dr. Dhalla against ...	686	Proselytising Hinduism ...	38
Parsis and Persia ...	710	Proselytising Missions ...	551, 678, 781, 798
Paton on Missions, Mr. ...	806	Proselytising Missions and Swaraj ...	469, 630
Pattani on Federation, Sir P. ...	629	Proselytism, Mr. George Joseph on ...	684
Paul, Kanakaryan ...	517	Prospice ...	59
Paul, Mr. K. T. ...	206	Provincial Governments Despatches ...	182
Paul, The Late Mr. K. T. ...	541, 527, 554	Pseudo-Federation, Dangers of ...	757
Peace Negotiations, The ...	18	Psychological Factor, The ...	421
Peace, The Will for ...	329	Punishment, A Degrading ...	17
Persian in India ...	694	Punjab Outrage, The... ..	262
Picketing, Bombay High Court on ...	78	"Purna Swaraj" ...	445
Picketing Liquor Shops ...	61	Purshottamdas Thakurdas on the Political Situation, Sir ...	139
Picketing of Liquor Shops, Peaceful ...	37	R
Pickle, The Late Mr. M. M. ...	106	R. T. C. and the Congress, The ...	302
Pickthalls' Koran ...	357	Race, Exterminating A ...	344
Pilgrimage, Our New Places of ...	253, 268	Ramanand Chatterjee's Address, Mr. ...	645
Pilgrims' Rest at Anuradhapura... ..	139	Ram Rajya ...	783
Pin-Pricks ...	230	Reading, Lord ...	773
Pioneer of Social Reform, A ...	565	Rebuff, A well-merited ...	483
Plea, A Disingenuous ...	2	Rebuilding India ...	202, 220, 233
Police Censorship of the Press ...	172	Reconstruction of India, The ...	72
Police Censured, The ...	149	Reconversion and Remarriage ...	302
Policy, A wrong ...	214	Red Cross, The Junior ...	45
Political Hypochondria ...	582, 619, 747	Reduction in High School and College Fees... ..	765
Political Prisoners Amnesty to: An Essential Condition ...	325	Reforms, The High Court and the ...	213
Political Prisoners, Treatment of ...	253	Reign of Ordinance, The ...	151
Political Situation, The ...	806	Religion and the State ...	647
Poona Daftar ...	542	Religion, Prof. Huxley on ...	123
Poorna Swaraj ...	437	Religion through Business ...	574, 637
Practical Co-operation ...	191, 204	Religion without God ...	117
Precept and Practice... ..	565	Religious Apostacy and Economic Uplift ...	104
Press, An Attack on the ...	215	Religious Ideal of Ram Mohan Roy, The ...	155
Press and the Police, The ...	166	Religious Imperialism ...	537
		Religious Toleration ...	747

INDEX

vii

	Page.		Page.
Repatriates from South Africa ...	328	Seva Samiti, Allahabad, The ...	326
Repatriation from South Africa ...	472	Severe Snub, A ...	358
Repression, The Cost of ...	1	Sex-Disqualification ...	758
Repression, the Futility of ...	344	Sholapur Executions, The ...	309
Repudiation, Government of India and ...	222	Sikhs and Hindus ...	581
Residual Powers ...	582	Simon Commission and Women, The ...	10
Residual Powers, The Question of ...	549	Sin in Ignorance is not to Sin, To ...	430
Residuary Powers ...	726	Sind, The Future of ...	535
Retrench, Where to ...	571	Sind, The Separation of ...	117
Retrenchment and Education ...	630	Sindh, Separation of ...	774
Retrenchment in Government Expenditure ...	566	"Sister India" ...	519
Retrenchment, Pitfalls of ...	635	Six and Half a Dozen ...	661
Revealing Interview, A ...	742	Social Legislation in Federated India ...	646
Revolt against Religion ...	134, 170	Social Reform ...	443
"Right of Conversion", The ...	623	Social Reform, A Pioneer of ...	565
"Right to Convert", The ...	791	Social Sphere, Constructive Work in the ...	152, 205
Round Table Conference ...	85	Social Worker, An Indefatigable ...	760
Round Table Conference and the Congress ...	373	Social Worker, Why I am a ...	639
Round Table Conference and Prohibition, The ...	124	"Socialising Industry" ...	154
Round Table Conference, Congress Representation at the ...	501	Society of Friends and India, The ...	229
Round Table Conference, God and the ...	149	Some Questions ...	182
Round Table Conference, Dangers before the ...	231	South African Visitor observers American Prohibition ...	654
Round Table Conference Delegates ...	777	Spanish Revolution, The ...	517
Round Table Conference in Parliament, The ...	343	State, Religion and the ...	647
Round Table Conference, On the Eve of the ...	110	Swadeshi Movement, The ...	184
Round Table Conference, The ... 4, 17, 54, 165, 168, 197, 327, 331, 310, 725, 745, 748.		Swadeshi, Promotion of ...	453
Round Table Conference, the Christian Churches in England and the ...	286	Swadeshi, Revival of ...	313
Rural India, Light for ...	236	Swaraj, A Programme for ...	711
Rural Reconstruction in India ...	697, 715, 731	Swaraj and Proselytising ...	698
Rural Uplift Conference, The ...	652	Sykes, Sir Frederick ...	518
S
Safeguards, Why Muslims Want—I, II, III ...	375, 391, 407	T
Sarda Act, Evading the ...	598	Tagore's Seventieth Birthday, Post ...	590
Sarda Act, Government and the ...	79	Tari or Beef ...	604
Sarda Act in the Working ...	150	Teaching Children ...	460
Sarda Act, Indian Christians and the ...	126	Technological Movement in Bombay University, The ...	694
Sarda Act Sir C. P. B. and ...	684	Tej Bahadur Sapru, Sir ...	213
Sarda Act, The ...	70, 86	Telemachus, The Story of ...	294
Sarda Act, Working of the ...	774	Temples and Toddy Tapping ...	813
Sassoon, Sir V. ...	748	Temples, Confiscation of ...	695
Satyagrahi, The ...	128	Thakkar's Case, Mr. ...	54
Satyagraha, Practical Implications of 393, 409, 426, 442, 476		Thakkar's Statement, Mr. ...	62
Sayaji Rao III, Maharaja of Baroda ...	599	Thompson as Propagandist, Mr. ...	87
Secret Versus Open Diplomacy ...	378	Thompson Explains, Mr. ...	169
Seeker and Friend ...	377	Threefold Commonwealth, The ... 663, 679, 691, 713
Separation of Burma ...	688	Time Lag, The ...	629
Servants of India Society, Trichinopoly ...	382	Times of India on Proselytising, The ...	709
		Todar Mall and Ram Mohan Roy ...	726
		Tolerance II ...	109

	Page.
	102	Way Out; The	...
	71	Weightage, The Real Evil	...
	92	Welfare of India League	...
	103	Welfare of India League, The	...
	314	"What Then?"	...
	423	When Magistrates Differ	...
		"Who are My Brethren"	...
		Willingdon, Lord	...
	347	Winslow, Welcome to Father	...
	166	Women and Bureaucracy	...
	590	Women, The Simon Commission and
	710	Women in Future Constitution, Status of
	101	Women Prisoners in Germany	...
	341	Women Prisoners, Treatment of...
	761, 779	Women's Christian Temperance Union
		Women's Conference, All-Asian...
		Women's Conference, International Co-oper-
		tive	...
	41	Women's Conference, The All-India
	269	Women's Franchise	...
	261	Women's Franchise and Membership
	518	Councils	...
	634	Women's Franchise, Extension of
	569	Women's Indian Association	...
	733	Women's Movement in Bengal, The Women's Place in the Future Constitution
		India	...
	424,	Women's Rights Under Hindu Law
	520, 538, 552, 573, 584, 601, 617, 633,
	682, 696, 714, 729, 746.
	...	Women's work for Men	...
	634, 650	World's Youth in Counsel	...
	364
	744
	182
	409
		Zimmerman, The Late Rev. Father
		Zoroastrianism, Symbol of	...

Z

	Page.		Page.
Tolerance and Intolerance ...	102	Way Out; The ...	677, 524
Toleration, Faith and ...	71	Weightage, The Real Evil ...	...
Toleration, Mahatma Gandhi on... ..	92	Welfare of India League ...	718
Tragedy of Lord Irwin, The ...	103	Welfare of India League, The ...	709
Tragedy of Section 68 Act XV of 1872, The... ..	314	"What Then?" ...	758
Truth and British Rule ...	423	When Magistrates Differ ...	172
U
Unemployment, League Against ...	347	"Who are My Brethren" ...	264, 284
Unhappy Refusal, An ...	166	Willingdon, Lord ...	278
United States Constitution and the Pro- hibition Amendment, The ...	590	Winslow, Welcome to Father ...	198
"United Front," The ...	710	Women and Bureaucracy ...	278
Unlawful Associations Ordinance, The ...	101	Women, The Simon Commission and ...	10
Unreasoning Invective ...	341	Women in Future Constitution, Status of ...	605
Untouchability Problem ...	761, 779	Women Prisoners in Germany ...	107
V
Vengeance is Mine ; I will Repay , Saith the Lord ...	41	Women Prisoners, Treatment of... ..	262
Viceroy Explains His Policy ...	269	Women's Christian Temperance Union ...	121
Viceroy, The Next ...	261	Women's Conference, All-Asian... ..	94
Viceroy, the Change of ...	518	Women's Conference, International Co-oper- ative ...	125
Viresalingam Pantulu, Rao Bahadar K. ...	634	Women's Conference, The All-India ...	10
Vishnu Parashuram Sastri, Pandit ...	569	Women's Franchise ...	170, 469
Vitamins in Toddy I. II ...	733	Women's Franchise and Membership of Councils ...	120
W
W. C. T. U. National Convention ...	361	Women's Franchise, Extension of ...	117
Wadia Charities, N. M. ...	486	Women's Indian Association ...	92
Waman Shirodkar ...	634, 650	Women's Movement in Bengal, The ...	583
Wanless Tuberculosis Sanatorium ...	364	Women's Place in the Future Constitution of India ...	575
Wanting in Perspective ...	744	Women's Rights Under Hindu Law 424, 494, 504 520, 538, 552, 573, 584, 601, 617, 633, 649, 666 682, 696, 714, 729, 746.	...
Wanton Provocation ...	182	Women's work for Men ...	829
Warfare: Chemical and Electric ...	409	World's Youth in Counsel ...	783
Z
		Zimmerman, The Late Rev. Father ...	374
		Zoroastrianism, Symbol of ...	379