Under the provision for bungalows there will be an excess, but I have put up papers before Government—I think they have just arrived—to show how those excesses on sub-heads are proposed to be met by corresponding savings and I maintain, Sir, that we must have this give and take between sub-heads ; otherwise we can never carry out this project successfully. The honourable the Deputy President has made a definite statement that he has knowledge that the Superintending Engineer's bungalow at Sukkur has cost between Rs. 61,000 and Rs. 70,000. Sir, another honourable member of this House repeated the statement to the House that he had brought to my notice that Rs. 85,000 has been spent on that bungalow. But such is not the case. I think the House would like to hear the latest information. The sanctioned estimate for the Superintending Engineer's bungalow is Rs. 43,606.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : Not 35,000 ?

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON : Rs. 35,000 is the project estimate. The estimate is for Rs. 43,606, and the electrical connections, sanitary fittings, water supply arrangements, come to Rs. 6,350. We have to develop the area, and therefore this item is rather large. In Karachi it will not be so much because we have to make only short connections. Now, I wired to the Superintending Engineer in charge, as I have an idea that the honourable the Deputy President's figures have been arrived at from the figures of the contractor's agent.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : I can assure the honourable member that my figure has not been arrived at from the contractor's information.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON : I should be grateful if he would give me the figures and their source without giving out the name of the person. However, I wired to the Superintending Engineer to know what was the actual cost to date, if the bungalow had been paid for ; if not, what was the anticipated total cost. He has wired back to me—his wire is dated 24th of last month—as follows :

“Your wire twenty-third. Final expenditure my bungalow, excluding extra claims by Tata will equal revised estimated cost as per estimates. Tata's claims mostly absurd. Total about 16% estimated cost. Stop Items I consider admissible amount to less than 2 per cent. of the estimated cost and would give excess to that amount.”

The Superintending Engineer's opinion is that there is the probability of an excess, if we admit certain claims of the contractor, of 2 per cent. on Rs. 47,000. By the greatest stretch of the imagination that cannot be more than Rs. 1,000. As I said, I do not like to enter into a discussion on a matter that may have to go before Government for decision. I do not want to discuss the contractor's claims just now. I have seen these claims, and I think the Superintending Engineer's estimate of them is pretty near the mark. Therefore, the bungalow will cost us Rs. 48,200 against the Rs. 47,000 sanctioned. I am glad we have come down from the Rs. 85,000 and even below the minimum limit fixed by the honourable the Deputy President of Rs. 61,000. I hope he will be able to show me the figures.

I would like to inform the honourable members of this House, Sir, that this question of bungalows was most carefully considered, before we embarked on this expenditure. It was decided that the plans should be shown to the housing committee, and their approval obtained. I see opposite to me at least two members of the housing committee, elected members of this House, who examined these plans, and, Sir, I am very pleased to say that they congratulated us upon having produced plans and estimates which they considered extremely economical. There are two members here now who saw those plans. I think I cannot be charged with extravagance in the initial stages. I did not want to take up the time of the House over this matter, but the Deputy President's criticisms were stringent and to the point, and I think, by having dealt with them rather fully, I have satisfied the House. There are a few other points which overlap which I do not think I need take the time of the House to answer.

I would now like to come to the question raised by the honourable member from Bombay, and that is the coal contract, which he calls the coal contract scandal. I went into this in very great detail with the Finance Committee, which met on the 16th of last month. I gave them very great details, and I think I was able to satisfy them that my action was absolutely justifiable, and I will give a few details to the House now, and I trust that they will come to the same conclusion. The whole thing is rather a long document. If the House so desires I will give it in full.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member cannot read the whole of that document, because it is not before the House.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON: Those are my notes, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member can give expression to those sentiments in the course of his speech.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON: The honourable member for Bombay first of all questions why the matter was ever referred to the Chief Controller of Stores. In the present case, as most of the House know, there are two main kinds of fuel in use in the world at the present time: these are crude oil and coal. Before deciding whether I should go in for the use of coal or oil for the machinery connected with the Barrage, I had to find out the prices of these two kinds of fuel. I had been informed that we might get favourable terms if we went in for an eight-year contract for coal, and that for oil it was not worth while going in for more than a three years contract. Having learnt that from very good business men I wrote to the Chief Controller of Stores, and asked him whether he was in a position to get into touch with a large number of coal owners and coal supply contractors. I might have been able to get into touch with 15, or even with the advice of the honourable member for Bombay, 5 more. I went to the Chief Controller of Stores, and he was able to get into touch with some thing like 92 to 100 possible tenderers. I might here mention to the House that his services were given absolutely gratis. I asked him as a special favour to assist me in this matter, and he consented to assist me. He said he would be pleased to do so by calling for tenders, but he left the placing of the contracts to the officers who had the power to deal with them. A contract was called for, and there were two special clauses in the contract,—similar clauses appear in Bombay millowners' contracts also—one was that the contractor had to keep stocks of coal at Karachi and to supply our demands from time to time from that stock, otherwise he was liable to a very severe penalty. The stock that we expected him to keep was a three-months' supply. I should like the House to understand that it was necessary to have a stock of three-months' supply because it was absolutely vital that we should not run short of coal to run our dragline excavators, etc., once they started. Once they start, we have got to work these machines, day and night by three shifts on each machine. And, Sir, an hour's stoppage would mean over Rs. 50 per machine straight away. It was, Sir, likely if we had no stocks of coal at Karachi, that not only would our machinery be liable to a cessation of work, but we would have to depôt that coal ourselves by transporting it from the other side of India. Therefore, I insisted upon a local supply being kept in Karachi where we could watch the supply and I insisted on a three-months' stock being kept. And further, Sir, I considered it was in the interest of the work and of the taxpayer in general that these conditions should be enforced, because all the storage losses are borne by the contractors. The risks, fire risks, loss in transport up to Karachi, etc., were to be borne entirely by the contractors. Out of these tenders, there were 8 tenders received for oil—we invited tenders for oil and coal—and 65 tenders for coal; total 73 tenders. It did not take us long to see that for general purposes coal was cheaper to use than oil. We have reduced our requirements for the current year. The contract was placed for the period September 1924 to September 1925. We found that we were likely to require 22,000 tons against 60,000 odd tons that we had invited tenders for, which the honourable member for Bombay spoke about. On receipt of these tenders we found that only 8 firms were prepared to carry stocks. We received colliery rates, the rates at collieries varying from Rs. 3-12-0 to Rs. 10-4-0 per ton. But not one of the rest of the tenderers was prepared to give us delivery at Karachi. They said "Strike out these clauses; make your own arrangements for testing at the collieries and for carrying the stocks to Karachi and to keep stocks at Karachi". They were not prepared to bear any losses which might have to be incurred in transit and storage. One firm, Sir, the Calcutta Coal Combine, gave a fairly favourable tender; but again they were not prepared to give delivery in Karachi. They said they would have to charge 12 annas or so extra for interest on their money and possibly one rupee extra for the risks that they would run. I have given all this in very great detail because I know the House is interested. Messrs. Cowasji & Sons of Karachi gave us a tender of Rs. 25 free on rail, Karachi, for Transvaal whitbank "A" quality coal, which is a very excellent grade of coal, as all businessmen here who have to buy coal know. The next best tender was the Calcutta Coal Combine's tender, which was Rs. 28-8-0; it was for Indian first class coal; Rs. 28-8-0 free on rail, Karachi; that is, they took no risk with regard to storage and would keep no stocks at Karachi. If we add another 12 annas plus 12 annas it would mount up to Rs. 30 nearly against the Rs. 25 that we have accepted.

Well, Sir, if the honourable House have been following the evidence given before the Coal Committee, they will have noted that one of the great complaints against the Bengal coal industry has been the lack of guarantee in quality. In these tenders we were given the calorific value of coal which was not at all satisfactory. In one or two cases only—for instance, in the case of the Calcutta Coal Combine—the calorific value of coal compared favourably with that of the coal for which the tender was accepted. Sir, one member of an Indian firm came all the way to Karachi to see me; unfortunately, he came two days after the tender had been accepted. I gave him a very long hearing. He came to me with a figure slightly above Messrs. Cowasji & Sons' figure, but it could not be considered as a tender as his firm had already tendered. He gave his rates, he said in his personal capacity; but, as all businessmen know, we cannot look at it in that way. I asked him whether it was possible for him to give me a guarantee that the coal would arrive at Karachi as may be required by us from time to time, and he said he could not do so. I asked another firm, Messrs. Cowasji & Sons, whether they would be prepared to give a guarantee if we switched over to Indian coal even now. But they said they could give absolutely no guarantee whatever, and that we would have to make our own arrangements for testing quality at the collieries. One gentleman told me he had been very badly bitten on a previous occasion, that calorific values were definitely stated and the coal had arrived at Karachi, but on arrival it was found that it was not up to the stipulated specifications and he was very severely taken to task by the different shipping companies in Karachi. He got wireless messages all the way to Suez complaining of the quality of the coal, and he had to cancel his Indian coal contract purely because it was not to be delivered up to quality and the firm—a leading firm in Calcutta—would not guarantee him quality at destination. They would guarantee on paper, but not in actual practice, and he then decided to send samples from his heaps of coal for analysis, and the analysis that he received corresponded in no way with the coal Calcutta had agreed to supply.

Well, Sir, having had that information before me, I decided that we must get an absolute reliable guarantee. The guarantee that was given by Messrs. Cowasji and Sons was that the coal would be of proper specifications, and that if it was not up to the specifications, I could reject it and they would pay damages. As I have pointed out, Sir, the Transvaal coal has cost us Rs. 25 a ton delivered on rails, Karachi; that is to say, every wagon will be properly loaded and we pay for the actual weight of the coal in the wagon. In Calcutta, as honourable members may know, we have often to pay for wagons filled to a load line. I have given the House sufficient information to show the difference between the actual rates received. The best was Rs. 25 and the next best was that of the Calcutta Coal Combine, and their figures shows an excess of Rs. 3-8-0 over and above the figure of the tender that we accepted. But they would not agree to my two conditions. They would have to add probably 12 annas for keeping a supply in a depôt at Karachi and perhaps another 12 annas for loss, and that means roughly an extra Rs. 5. By a Rs. 5 difference on 22,000 tons we would stand to lose well over a lakh of rupees, had I not placed that contract where I did. Well, Sir, I was guided in this matter by the decision or the promise given in this House by Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, who was then the Honourable Member in charge of the General Department. Members of this House asked him whether we would always buy in the cheapest market and he answered that we would always buy in the cheapest market without fear or favour, provided we got the required quality, and on that decision and undertaking given by the Honourable the General Member I accepted this tender, and by accepting this tender I saved for these works Rs. 1,10,000 on the 22,000 tons we would require for this year, and were we to have some 60,000 tons of coal next year as we may, we should save about Rs. 3 lakhs on the next year's supply. I may inform the House that the tender only runs for one year. We tried to sound the market on an eight-year supply and we found it would not suit us to have so long a contract.

And further, Sir, there has been a lot of adverse criticism of the Chief Controller of Stores, an officer whose services we have found extremely useful in putting us in the cheapest market. I would like to explain that it was stated by him that he would not recommend a long term contract, because it was held that Indian coal may have a better chance during next year if the question of freights which was then under review came to a favourable decision. It was on that advice received and purely in the interests of this work that I placed this contract. And I trust the House will agree that the action I took was purely in the interests of this House, in the interests of the ratepayers of the presidency as a whole, and of the Sindhi ratepayers in particular.

(After recess.)

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): Sir, I rise to support the motion. It is somewhat unfortunate, Sir, that the honourable member, the Chief Engineer, Sukkur Barrage, should have postponed making his remarks till a very late stage. I remember, Sir, your making a suggestion this time last year, that, as far as possible, members of Government should come out after two or three members from the non-official benches had spoken. I do not know, Sir, why this rule is not strictly adhered to by Government benches. It has this convenience, that it enables the non-official benches to know the Government case at an early stage and arrange their speeches accordingly. The Chief Engineer has spoken late and it deprives the non-official benches of the advantage that some members have, who understand this subject better than most of us do, but who have already had their say, and it is left to others to reply to the criticisms made by the official benches.

There is one point, however, to which I would invite the attention of the Honourable Member in charge, and that is that according to the report written for the Sukkur Barrage project in the year 1922, the details of annual expenditure on this project of irrigation are as follows:—

| | Rs. |
|--------------------------------------|-------------|
| Preliminary | 85,78,294 |
| First year | 1,68,14,558 |
| Second year (namely the budget year) | 1,48,66,124 |
| Total .. | 4,02,58,976 |

Now, according to the figures given of the amounts already spent, we find that according to the accounts for the year 1923-24 this project already absorbed during that year Rs. 37,37,000; further, according to the revised estimates for the current year, 1,41 lakhs have already been spent, and now for the coming year 3,31 lakhs are budgeted. If we total up these items we come to the figure of 5,09,00,000 and odd. That means roughly speaking about Rs. 1,07,00,000 more than the figures mentioned in the report. In these circumstances, I want to know from the Honourable Member in charge why he cannot agree to a cut of 33 lakhs which has been moved.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: I move a closure, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I accept it.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): Sir, the honourable the Commissioner for the Southern Division stated that in quoting the opinion of engineers against the scheme I was not consistent, for I stated in the first part of my speech that I was not against this project. I did state in the first part of my speech that I was not against this project itself, but my position is not inconsistent, for I feel that it is absolutely necessary, if Sind is to be saved from the possibility of utter ruin, that the project should be recast, or at any rate an independent committee should be appointed to examine it. I am not entitled to go further into that point: so I will not elaborate it further. All I would like to say, however, is that it is possible, especially in view of the practical remarks of my honourable friend from Larkana, to eliminate some of the canals on the Right Bank. For example, six crores of rupees.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member is again going into the whole scheme. I have repeatedly ruled against it.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI : Then, Sir, with regard to the Chief Engineer's remarks that there will always be some differences between the original estimates and actual cost of construction, I must point out, that there ought to be some limit. I know something about these canal projects and buildings, and I can say that it is only up to a certain extent that the estimates and the actuals must vary. But here, according to the original project the Superintending Engineer's bungalow at Sukkur was estimated to cost only Rs. 35,000 but it was revised to Rs. 43,000 and is now going up to Rs. 48,000. We have been told that the contractor will not be allowed to have his extras in accordance with the claim he has put forward. In any case there is a difference of Rs. 13,000 over a total estimate of 35,000.

Now, turning to the works, we were told that two members of this House examined the plans and estimates of the bungalow for the Chief Engineer. I doubt whether laymen, however closely they may examine, would be able to decide whether the rates are low.

Coming to the question of the coal contract, the Chief Engineer did not tell us whether he consulted the Honourable the General Member with regard to it. It is a question of policy and the question is whether this House would not have consented to pay two or three rupees more per ton if the tender of an Indian firm had been accepted. We understand from the evidence given before the Coal Committee, that Indian coal is superior to South African coal. We have got a highly paid staff of engineers and store-keepers and it was up to them when the Indian coal arrived, to have tested the quality of the coal. We would be prepared to spend some more money.

I therefore put my motion before the House.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : Sir, the Chief Engineer has explained the several points that have been raised in the debate. My honourable friend Mr. Jayakar complained that the Chief Engineer should have addressed the House earlier than he did. If the Chief Engineer had spoken earlier, the honourable member opposite will realise that as he has only one opportunity of speaking on this motion he would not have been able to reply to any technical objections that might have been raised by subsequent speakers. I do not desire to go in detail into the objections that have been raised and merely repeat what has already been stated by my honourable friend the Chief Engineer. I will take one or two important points.

[Mr. Cowasji Jehangir]

My honourable friend Mr. Bhutto complained that there was extravagance, and economy could be effected by restricting the scope of the project as land in his district was already cultivated up to 80 per cent. Yesterday he informed the House that he could cultivate only one-third of his land. The honourable member Mr. Shinde made the suggestion that honourable members from this House should be invited to visit the Barrage. The proposal is a good one and Government will give it serious consideration. It may not be easy to arrange for a large number of honourable members to go right from Bombay to Sukkur; but we shall consider the matter and inform the House later on.

The honourable member Mr. Pahalajani says that he has heard that the Superintending Engineer's bungalow is to cost Rs. 61,000, while the project estimate is Rs. 35,000; and he wants an explanation. I think an explanation is due to him. It is perfectly true that the project estimate was Rs. 35,000. My honourable friend the Chief Engineer has explained what a project estimate really is. I had the privilege of reading out yesterday the opinion of the Consulting Engineer to the Government of India who also explained what project estimates are. Estimates for these bungalows were obtained, and during my first visit to Sukkur I examined all the plans for the Sukkur Township. From the facts placed before me I considered that the superintending engineer's bungalow could not cost less than Rs. 43,000 without electric lighting and supply. Government sanctioned these estimates. These plans and estimates were subsequently placed before the Housing Committee of this honourable House and I may inform the House that the Committee approved of the plans and estimates and considered that the accommodation provided was not extravagant. But to that it has been said that after all the members of the committee are laymen. That argument was advanced by the honourable mover of this motion. But I would take the liberty of reminding the members of this honourable House that if that argument is to stand good, then all committees of this House on subjects of this sort are not of much value. Government attach the greatest value to the opinion of a committee of this House. I would like honourable members to attach the same amount of value which the Government attach to the opinions of a committee of this House.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI: The Chief Engineer never said that he consulted all the members of the Housing Committee.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON: I said that I consulted the members of the Housing Committee of whom three are present here to-day.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: There is not the slightest doubt that the honourable member said that members of this Committee were laymen. But I will take the liberty of reminding my honourable friend opposite that there are one or two members of the Housing Committee who understand plans and estimates, and what accommodation is necessary even much better than himself. I refer especially to one of my honourable friends whom I see sitting opposite me as I have experience of his knowledge in building matters.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : Is he a Sindh member ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangir : No, he is a Bombay member. It is my honourable friend sitting opposite, the honourable member from Thana, Mr. Pradhan ; he has experience ; he has seen the plans and gone into figures and in my humble opinion he does understand building estimates and he gives exceedingly good advice on such matters. Well, Sir, that is neither here nor there. I only mention this in reply to my honourable friend opposite. Now, Sir, these plans and estimates were placed before the Housing Committee and were passed. I have seen these houses, and this particular house when it was nearly completed. I was informed that some part of the work had not been carried out by the contractors to the satisfaction of the engineers and that they had been ordered to do some part of the work over again. I also remember that the contractor had some complaints. I went over the house very carefully, and I have no doubt that our engineers would not complain of the work unless it was really unsatisfactory. We are now informed that the house has been completed according to the estimates and that if the contractor's claims are taken into consideration the engineers are of opinion that they should be allowed two per cent. more, that is about one thousand rupees on the estimates. Now, Sir, the next question to answer is why were these estimates more than the project estimates. The project estimates are calculated by square feet and they are kacha estimates to enable Government, the Secretary of State and this House to come to a conclusion whether the project should be sanctioned or not, and, as Sir Frederic Gebbie explained in his report, these project estimates cannot be relied on, that Government must have pucca estimates before them for every part of the project, and I will take the opportunity of explaining a little later what precautions Government have taken.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : If the honourable member will permit I will ask a question. Are we to understand that the estimate of 18 crores is also rough estimate ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangir : The whole estimate of 18 crores is the project estimate, but I am just coming to the point and replying to my honourable friend Mr. Jayakar's question. My honourable friend opposite, I mean the leader of the Swaraj party, has pointed out to us that according to the project estimate we should have asked for one crore less than we are asking for to-day ; that is his allegation, and he wants me to explain that. A part of the explanation was given by the Chief Engineer for the Lloyd Barrage. He explained, and I will repeat it, that since the project report was drawn up it was found that it would be to the advantage of the works to use drag-line excavators, and he has stated that it was necessary to purchase them immediately and that the extra expenditure so incurred is budgetted for next year which will cause a saving in subsequent years. Another point that I would like to explain is that the price of machinery is actually a little higher to-day than provided for in the project estimates and that was not an unknown factor when our project report was sent to the Secretary of State.

[Mr. Cowasji Jehangir]

The Secretary of State remarked that he was of opinion that the estimates specially for machinery and steel works were too low and therefore he added a round sum of about 2½ crores to the estimate. (Honourable Members : Oh, oh.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Honourable members do not seem to be satisfied with the discussion.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : Mr. President, I repeat that the project was sent to the Secretary of State in 1920 and he was of opinion that the estimates were too low, and he therefore added a round figure of 2,50 lakhs to the estimates and brought them up to about 18½ crores. The original estimates stood at about 16 crores as provided by the Public Works Department. The estimates were drawn up at a time when the price of machinery was lower than when they were submitted to the Secretary of State. Therefore after close examination he added 2½ crores and made it 18½. That is a fact well-known to the Deputy President.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : On a point of information. Is this additional 1 crore which is provided for the budget year, part of the 2½ crores ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : No, I have stated already that part of the 1 crore is on account of this machinery which we are buying immediately and which according to the project report we would not have bought. But provision was made for labour in subsequent years ; but since we are buying labour-saving apparatus immediately there will be less provision for labour and other things in subsequent years. The fact is that the balance is for extra cost which is provided for by the Secretary of State in this 2,55 lakhs. My honourable friend the Deputy President ought to have known the fact and explained it, because I presume that my honourable friend (Mr. Jayakar) got these figures from the Deputy President. Now, Sir, that explains this rise. I must say, Sir, a very pertinent suggestion was made by one of the honourable members opposite, that the House should see that the project estimates are not exceeded. That is the crux of the question, and that is exactly what Government are trying to do and the orders are that if the detailed estimates show an excess over the project figure they should be submitted to Government immediately, and that work should not be taken in hand without the sanction of Government. If project figures are exceeded, they have to be submitted to Government for close examination. That is the procedure. Therefore, in no part of this work can the estimates be increased without the sanction of Government. That, Sir, is the ordinary principle followed in the Public Works Department.

I do not think there is anything else that requires further explanation.

An Honourable MEMBER : Only voting.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : If that is the desire of honourable members, I would resume my seat.

Tellers for the Noes: Mr. L. S. HUDSON and Mr. F. CLAYTON.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, before you proceed to the next item of the business, I should like to draw your attention to an incident that has happened here. There is one honourable member of this House—I will not name him—whom I saw for the first time in this House—I was shaking hands with him and congratulating him. He began pulling me by force, but before I could resist him another member suddenly used force in the opposite direction. It required considerable effort to get rid of him. I submit this is a very unedifying and undignified conduct on the part of honourable members. I hope, Sir, that you will indicate that it is a very reprehensible conduct for honourable members to behave in this way in their zeal for canvassing votes.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have expressed very strong views in the past against any undue influence in the free exercise of the right of vote of honourable members. Instead of ordinary persuasion—and canvassing cannot be stopped—it appears that a certain amount of physical force is being employed. I should particularly like the Honourable the Home Member to take a note of it that.....

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I hope, Sir, it will not be necessary to introduce the police in this assembly.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Yes, because if physical force is used, perhaps that might be necessary. Humour aside, I earnestly trust that no honourable member will interfere with any other honourable member in the free exercise of his right of voting on all questions coming before the House.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA: Might I make a suggestion? I found at the Geneva Conference what is done is this: All are seated in their places and then the Secretary reads the names, some say "Aye" and some say "No"; so that no interference whatever takes place. It is a very commendable practice, I think, and, if adopted here, it would save any such unedifying and undignified scene in this House as the one that took place a little while ago.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That will be considered in the light of our Standing Orders.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: Sir, I now ask for a total demand, under this head, of Rs. 2,87,30,300.

Question proposed.

Mr. HOOSEINBHOY A. LALLJEE (Bombay City): Sir, I rise to oppose the whole grant and my reason is, Sir, that I find from one transaction of the coal contract that the department is not being carried on as it ought to be. The Chief Engineer stated that tenders were invited for the supply of coal in the first instance before even the machinery was purchased and that there was no guarantee given for the Bengal coal. I find, Sir, from the records of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, which consumes about 25,000 tons of coal, that these are supplied by Indian firms and all Bengal coal, and all the suppliers guarantee not only the calorific value of the coal, but also guarantee the supply of coal of uniform quality. I also find, Sir, that in January 1925 no less than 17 tenders were received. Then, further on, we find, so late as on the 14th February the same thing. Sir, if this is the condition under which this department is working, I do not know whether we should continue the department in its present state. We were told that the evidence before the Coal Committee was that Bengal coal was not of such a good quality as African coal. I have got in my hand a report, in which it is stated in a few words :

"In 1923 the Bombay Municipality consumed African coal, but during 1924, best Bengal was used and the results were highly satisfactory so that we expect to see the latter coal accepted for the 1925-26 contract. It is sometimes assumed that all cargoes of South African coal received in Bombay are consistently good : it is not the case and much of that received is certainly below the typical analysis submitted by the vendor."

Sir, it is clearly shown that South African coal cannot be relied upon. Then, Sir, in this very report we have got the evidence of Mr. Cameron, M.I.M.E., M.I.E.E., M.R.S.I., Mechanical Engineer with the Bombay Municipality. Sir, I may be allowed to state the purport of his evidence, He clearly states that Bengal coal is superior to African coal and that Bengal coal gives the same calorific value as South African coal consumed in Bombay, or even a little better calorific value. He speaks from personal experience, and he being a mechanical engineer of high standing. I think, Sir, the Chief Engineer in charge of these works will not deny that it is an expert evidence and can be relied upon. Sir, I do not also understand why the Controller of Stores should have been consulted when we have got under Government a Mechanical Engineer.

Then, we were told that two conditions were laid down, namely that three months' stock should be kept at Karachi, and that quality must be guaranteed. Where was the necessity of laying down that three months stock should be at Karachi? Everybody who is a business man knows that we have always in Bombay 50,000 tons lying in the docks, and I know as a matter of fact that a large quantity, not less than 20,000 tons, is always at the Karachi pier. The requirements of the Barrage is only 5,000 tons in three months. In India to be afraid of coal scarcity and to think that there will be a loss in working due to shortage of coal is a wonderful thing. In India you can get coal within a week or a fortnight. When we have large stocks in all the docks, why should we be afraid of shortage of coal? Then, Sir, from the tenders we have received for the municipality I find that the rates for Bengal coal with the same calorific value is Rs. 2 cheaper per ton than those for African coal.

In this matter, Sir, there is one thing I do not understand, and that is they invite tenders for the supply of coal and then go in for machinery. We never invite tenders for the supply of coal first. What we as business men do is to ascertain the rates of coal and then purchase machinery ; and after we have purchased the machinery and after it is ready for work it is that tenders are invited for the supply of coal. Therefore, Sir, I say that the whole thing is unbusinesslike and therefore the grant should not be allowed. Besides, this matter is not at all quite clear to my mind. My suspicion is that the South African coal has been given preference to Indian coal. The citizens of this province must certainly protest against this. Many of our brethren are in South Africa ; and probably the majority of Indians living in South Africa are from Bombay, and we know how they are treated there. With these few words I oppose the whole grant.

Mr. G. I. PATEL (Ahmedabad Millowners' Association) : Sir, I rise to oppose this grant on two main points. The first is an all round increased expenditure for machinery, and the second is the orders placed for foreign coal. As regards machinery the Honourable the General Member has explained that the amounts estimated in the original estimates had to be increased by the Secretary of State roundly. From my experience I may say that prices of machinery have been going down since 1920, and therefore there can be no reason why any additional expenditure should have been incurred over the original estimates. On the other hand, I find reasonable grounds for reducing the estimates and expenditure. There is no necessity of asking for further grants towards machinery, because the amounts originally estimated were themselves overestimates, and naturally there ought to be a very great decrease under that head in view of the fact that the prices have decreased from 25 to 40 per cent. in different cases.

As regards the coal affair, my friend the Honourable the General Member has already explained the facts. But I would like to point out to the Honourable the General Member, that in consideration of the fact that there are six crores worth of Indian collieries lying idle in Bengal, the people expect that as an Indian Member of Government he must feel that Bengal coal deserves some protection at his hands. As regards these tenders, we were told that tenderers for Bengal coal were not accepted on the ground that the tenders did not agree to certain conditions particularly to that of having to take back the coal in case it was rejected. But, Sir, we must remember that the case of coal is quite peculiar. Anything but coal can be taken back. The price of coal per ton is only Rs. 7 but the freight is Rs. 15 per ton. How can we expect a man, who buys coal at Rs. 7 per ton with a small margin of profit, say rupee one per ton, and pays a freight of Rs. 15 per ton to agree to take it back at further cost in loading and transit? This must have been the condition which debarred Indian contractors from coming forward to offer a tender. But in spite of these difficulties we find that people did give tenders. There are ways and ways in doing this. And even when tenders were received there was a way for favouritism to be shown to certain collieries managed or owned by Europeans. Then, Sir, we were told that Bengal coal was inferior. I may state from personal experience Sir, that there is certain kind of coal in Bengal which is far superior to this South African coal. If he purchases coal of 15 or 17 seams or first class Bagdigi or Lodhna coal he will get better results than those obtained from South African coal, provided the purchaser is unprejudiced and the man who burns the coal gives him correct and honest results.

Even if as a last alternative Government paid 5 to 10 per cent. more for Bengal coal nobody would object on the ground of national sentiment. But I maintain that there was no such necessity in this particular case. I may point out to the Honourable the General Member that if he selects better coal, if he selects Bagdigi and such other coal, and if he asks for tenders on usual term contracts, he is sure to get coal from Bengal, i. e., India, which is superior in burning to South African coal or coal imported from England.

(The Honourable Mr. Cowasji Jehangir rose in his seat.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: There is only a general reply. They merely oppose it and you reply to it.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON: With regard to the motion of the honourable member for Bombay.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I want the procedure to be clearly understood by honourable members. The new procedure that has developed recently is different from the procedure that existed before, and therefore there is some misapprehension on the point. Originally Government members while asking for demands contented themselves by merely moving for them without making any speech. They are now occupying considerable time in making elaborate speeches in asking the House for a grant. There is nothing to prevent them from doing so. They are perfectly entitled to exercise this right in asking for a demand. After all the motions for reduction or omission are disposed of, the final demand is made on which there can be no motion either for reduction or for omission. But, that motion has to be put to the vote of the House, and it is open to any honourable member to oppose the whole demand and make a speech giving reasons why he thinks that the whole grant should be disallowed. The motion now before the House is the one moved by the Honourable the General Member and he will be entitled to reply on the whole debate.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON: Sir, the honourable member for Bombay who just now spoke said that I had stated that there was no Indian coal equal in quality to the Transvaal coal. A reference to the official report will show that I never said anything of that sort. What I said was that there were Indian coals as good as or even better than the Transvaal coal, but my point was that I could not get any guarantee as to the quality of coal to be delivered at Karachi. Up to the 15th September 1924, of all the tenders that were received, there was not a single one which gave the guarantee to supply coal to our specification for delivery at Karachi. After we received all the tenders, when we considered whether it would not be possible to get Indian coal with guarantee, I made enquiries of the Karachi contractor who has now taken this contract. He said that, although he would not legally bind himself, he would consent to supply Indian coal. He gave a rate and I do not think I am entitled to disclose that rate, it being confidential. He gave me a rate with which I was satisfied. I was prepared to recommend it to Government, but he refused to give any guarantee either with regard to the quality of coal or rate of the delivery by rail. The absence of any guarantee might mean keeping the machinery and the works establishment idle. This contractor gave to me as his bitter experience that he had been badly let down before by Bengal coal merchants and "once bitten twice shy".

Mr. G. I. PATEL: I would like to be enlightened as to what the honourable member means by "absence of guarantee".

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON : In this case it was a question of what is known as ' first class mixture ' coal. There were certain mixtures stated by different tenderers, but there was no guarantee that we would get the mixture of the sort we wanted. We were asked to accept the liability to bring the coal to Karachi from the colliery. This particular contractor stated that he would not be prepared to take that coal for test to Karachi and he would accept no liability for the rejection of that coal, if it was not up to specification. The specification we wanted was stated in terms of maximum of ash content and minimum of moisture. This guarantee was not forthcoming. An honourable member, Mr. Adwani, stated that there was an offer to deliver the coal at Karachi free of freight charges. If we find that the coal delivered is not to our specification, then we have no liability to take back the rejected coal. We cannot accept for our special machinery a totally inferior coal. It is not a matter whether there is a reduction in price of one or two rupees. We have got to turn out a definite amount of work with our machines. If we are not able to do so, we will be incurring a heavy loss.

I can assure honourable members that I considered this question from an economic point of view, and entered into this contract settlement which was purely a matter of cold business. I have already pointed out that we would have incurred a loss of a lakh of rupees by accepting Indian coal this year ; by simple ratio the loss will mount up to Rs. 25 lakhs or more on our works in a few years. I have been asked to study economy in all matters of this kind. I can assure honourable members that I have studied economy and now my action is questioned.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN (Ahmedabad District) : Sir, the question is not whether it is Transvaal coal or any other coal, but it is a question of national honour. India cannot afford to purchase a pie worth of goods from South Africa.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I wish that the honourable member does not go into politics.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN : Bengal coal, it has been admitted by a great authority, is equal in quality to Transvaal coal. If it is desired that Bengal coal should be purchased, it can be made possible to purchase Bengal coal only. Therefore, I trust that the Honourable the General Member will consider the question and see that Bengal coal is purchased in future.

If the question of freight stands in the way of purchasing Indian coal, it would be easy for the Bombay Government to approach the Government of India, who control the railways, to give a rebate. South African merchants are able to sell South African coal cheaper because they get a rebate on railway freight in their country. They are given a rebate of Rs. 4 in the form of railway freight by their Government. They are given assistance in the form of reduction in the railway freight and therefore they are able to under-sell. They sell their coal at cheaper rate. Therefore it would be very easy for the Bombay Government to save railway freight by seeking the assistance of the Government of India. That would be the right procedure and that would be the right way in which Indian industry could be encouraged. Here coal is bought from foreign markets while Indian collieries are closing down. The Honourable the General Member will, I hope, take a note from this and will understand what the spirit of the House is as far as this particular matter is concerned and will try to amend the mistake and will not allow that mistake to occur in future.

Mr. HOOSENALLY M. RAHIMTOOLA (Bombay City): Mr. President, I am astonished to hear from the honourable member opposite (Mr. Harrison) that up to September 1924 he could not get any guarantee as to quality for Bengal coal. Sir, the Bombay Municipality for the last 2 years has been buying Bengal coal and they get guarantee for quality. Last year in March the Bombay Municipality contracted to purchase Bengal coal and this year when the contract came before the Standing Committee the Municipal Commissioner and the engineer have testified that they were quite satisfied with the quality of coal supplied by Bengal. The Municipal Commissioner explained that the quality supplied was superior to South-African coal. I do not, therefore, understand why Government cannot get guarantee for Bengal coal and why we should not get Indian coal.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): Sir, it seems to me a very strange way of inviting tenders and putting the Indian industry at a disadvantage. The proper thing was to estimate requirements for six months or a year and to ask the competing firms to supply coal during a certain period of time and not to impose the condition that certain quantities of coal should always remain at Karachi.

The other point is that tenders for coal are always invited with reference to particular seams. I understand from my honourable friend, representing the Ahmedabad Millowners' Association, that they always invite coal on the basis of particular seams and not on the basis of one mixture and another. There are well-known mines in Bengal and tenders are invited on the basis of seams, and not by confusing matters by mention mixtures and thus place Indian contractors at a disadvantage. There ought to be a straight way of inviting tenders.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South): Sir, the only point that struck me is this, that we expect a statement from the Honourable the General Member as regards the future policy of this department. Never mind what has happened. We do not want to go into it. We only want an assurance that so far as the future is concerned the claims of Indian industry will be looked after and that such a mistake will not occur again. I was surprised that he did not make here a passing reference to this important matter. I do not find fault with the Chief Engineer for consulting the Controller. That is probably necessary. But what I want to know is whether the Honourable the General Member was consulted, and if not why was he not consulted on the point whereas a gentleman outside the department was consulted. We want an assurance in the open House that so far as the future policy is concerned whenever crores of Indian money are involved, not only Indian material but Indian talent and Indian labour will be employed. Of course when there is no possibility of getting Indian labour and Indian material there is no question. But we want that assurance on this day and I hope that the policy will be adhered to.

Mr. NOOR MAHOMED (Hyderabad District): Sir, may I take the liberty of addressing the House for a few minutes? There was a development scheme in Sind in connection with the Jamrao canal and we know the result of the development has been that the entire position in Sind is changed; and at present it is Punjab in Sind. I am afraid the policy that is being continued now will entirely change the face of Sind. Sind will no longer be Sind and the Sukkur Barrage instead of doing good to Sind and the presidency will do harm, and I am sorry to say that this aspect of the question has not yet been paid attention to, so far, by the Honourable the General Member. We say, Sir, that so far as the development question is concerned there is the problem of the Jamrao canal before us. If the Honourable the General Member has seen the canal, he will know what I mean. Again the entire Barrage scheme has been entrusted to one officer, the Chief Engineer. In his hand lies entirely the power of spending huge sums of money; and that also without any control. This is such an unheard of thing and this House will do well to insist on the curtailment of the powers of the Chief Engineer. There should be absolutely strong control over the Chief Engineer in Sind. I have got every respect for his character and his capacity but this work is of such an enormous character that there should be a very strict limit to his powers. Therefore the House will be well advised to exercise very strong control over those who are in charge of this scheme and unless that is done I do not see much chance for this scheme bearing any fruit within its estimated cost.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): I am sorry, Sir, that this debate has gone on wrong lines. But whatever that may be, it has made it clear, and I hope the Government responsible for this bungle will realize, that on certain questions involving the self-respect of the country this House feels very keenly. I feel, Sir, that there has been a bungle. I did not interpose up to this time in the debate because I wanted to know the facts. What this House wants to know is whether any satisfactory explanation can be forthcoming. If there is no satisfactory explanation, I will warn the Government that this side of the House will vote for the reduction of this grant. What this House wants to know is why such a large power was left in the hands of a couple of European officials, the Chief Engineer and the Stores Controller, who is absolutely outside the control of this House. My honourable friend from Bombay (South) has put a very pertinent question which I hope the Honourable the General Member will answer straight and satisfactorily. Where did he come in in the determination of this question? Did he at all apply his mind to this question, or did he leave it into the hands of the two European officers, the Chief Engineer and the Controller? May I say to the Honourable the General Member what is the good of having an Indian gentleman at the top of this department, if he, on a question of policy as here, involving the deepest self-respect of the people, is going to leave the entire question in the hands of two European officials, who naturally, not being Indians by birth, do not see eye to eye with us? I do not wish to speak with any disrespect of my honourable friend, but I cannot overlook the facts as they stand. It is impossible for an English official to feel on this question as I feel, for example, or as my friends feel on this side. I certainly think that the Honourable the General Member ought to feel, and I am sure he does feel, very keenly, the contempt with which we have been treated by South Africa. I will not go into the political aspect of this question, Sir, having regard to your ruling.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I want to be clearly understood. I did not rule against it. What I meant was that it would be better to avoid it as far as possible.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: Thank you, Sir. When the whole country is seething—I hope I am not using a strong expression—with condemnation, seething with embittered feelings at the way in which Indians have been treated by South Africa, here is a department presided over by an Indian Member that has ordered 22,000 tons of coal from that country which, if we had the power, we would not touch with a pair of tongs. How does he justify this bungle? He may say that it was done by his subordinate officer, and that officer in his turn refers to a third person outside our control. These two people have managed this bungle between them. A question was asked in the Legislative Assembly, and there Sir Frederick Whyte interfered and said that this question could be agitated in the Bombay Legislative Council. I want therefore a clean answer to this question. I would not be sorry if even another hour is taken up on this debate, because, if there is any matter on which we will shed our last drop of blood, it is our relations with that God-forsaken country called South Africa. What is the Honourable the General Member's explanation? I want to know categorically from him, and I shall ask my party to vote for the entire rejection of this grant, knowing the responsibility of my position, unless the Honourable the General Member will straight away tell us where he came in in the determination of this question. Did he apply his mind to the question, or did he leave it entirely to these two gentlemen to be disposed of in any way they liked, who ex hypothesi could not see eye to eye with us, not being Indians? There is a meaning, I may warn my honourable friend the General Member, in the policy of Government that there should be two Indian members of the Executive Council. What is the object of that? It is that the Indian point of view may be understood by Government. The Government desire that these two men should tell the Government what the Indian point of view is. I may tell my honourable friends opposite that this is the basis of the disposition under which my two honourable friends opposite sit with Government. But if they are not going to respect the Indian point of view in these important matters, then I must say in all seriousness, that they had better vacate their office. There is no meaning in having them there as Indians. In that case, I would prefer to have an Englishman who, by his knowledge and experience of these matters, probably is superior to them purely as an administrative agent. But where lies their superiority? It lies in the fact that, being Indians, they understand the Indian point of view better. If they are not going to give the Government the benefit of this circumstance, I certainly will say that they have no business to be there at all. I therefore want to know on behalf of the opposition where the Indian member came in in this bungle. Sir, I do not know the technicalities of this question, but I feel that highly rigorous conditions were imposed by the Chief Engineer, rigorous in the sense that perhaps applying them to a young Indian industry not so well established as the coal industry in South Africa, they were rigorous. When dealing with a nascent, indigenous industry like the Bengal coal industry, I do submit, that they were rigorous conditions. I do not wish to go into details, but I certainly do want to enunciate this principle from this side of the House that, when dealing with Indian industries, British officials like Mr. Harrison must put themselves into the position of Indians, and consider what an Indian would have done if he were there. Mr. Harrison may say that he went on the bare principle of commercial benefit. The House, I am sure, will not be satisfied with that explanation. His whole point of view is wrong. The right point of view is that at some cost—I hope the House will agree with me—at some cost, or, as we call it in political parlance, at some sacrifice, attractions ought to be held out to a young industry like the Bengal coal industry. On the relative merits of the coal I will not speak, because there is the record which has just been read out by my honourable friend for Bombay (South) and my Mahomedan friends from Bombay; that, taking it ton for ton, Indian coal is superior to South African coal. We have another circumstance to which the representative of the Ahmedabad Millowners' Association has referred, that the railways contrive to fix their freight in such a killing manner, that it costs more to take coal to Karachi from here than it costs for South African coal to be taken to Karachi from South Africa. I know, Sir, that South Africa is a self-governing country, and I may say that if Mr. Harrison had been in South Africa or any other self-governing country and behaved in the way in which he has done, I do not think I will be indulging in any exaggeration were I to say that public opinion would have compelled him to resign office. We have not got the power to do that to-day, but I must warn the honourable member the Chief Engineer that this House will regard such conduct on his part in future with the greatest severity and condemnation. Now, Sir, I am waiting to hear the Honourable the General Member give us a straightforward reply to my inquiries.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : Mr. President, I am very glad of this opportunity of explaining the position a little further, and I may inform my honourable friends opposite that neither that side nor this side of the House has a monopoly of patriotism. I will clearly state that I first heard of this contract after it was entered into, and that was due to the power delegated to the Chief Engineer of making certain contracts up to certain amounts of money.

An Honourable MEMBER: Withdraw them.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: I wish only to explain that certain powers have been delegated to all Chief Engineers of entering into contracts up to a certain amount, and therefore, quite rightly, the Chief Engineer for the Lloyd Barrage entered into this contract upon his own responsibility. I do not say that in self-defence; I do not desire to take advantage of that in any way. I am quite prepared to take the responsibility which the House wishes to place upon my shoulders. I have stated the position as asked for by my honourable friend opposite. When I first heard of this contract, I wrote to the Chief Engineer for the circumstances under which it was placed. After having had a report from him, I asked the Chief Engineer to immediately make enquiries whether we could not change the contract and replace it by one for Bengal coal; and I had a very long and comprehensive report from the Chief Engineer on the subject, which report was placed before the Finance Committee. I will give briefly the most important factors in that report and in this contract. In the first place, what led the Chief Engineer to place this contract for Transvaal coal was that for one year's supply it cost a little over a lakh less than the best Bengal tender. In the opinion of some honourable members opposite it may be that such factors should not have come in the way of patronising Bengal coal, but the fact remains that one of the factors that induced the Chief Engineer to place this contract for South African coal was the economy of Rs. 1 lakh. The second factor was the question of quality, and when I asked the Chief Engineer to report as to whether this contract could not be changed, and whether the contractor who had offered us Transvaal coal would not supply us with Bengal coal instead, the reply was very clear and distinct. It was that none of these colliery owners and none of the agents supplying Bengal coal would guarantee that the quality specified in the tender would be delivered at Karachi, nor would they allow us to test the quality at Karachi.

An Honourable MEMBER: Was it verified?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: It is in the contract. Then I discussed this question with the Chief Engineer personally, and went into certain details. I wanted to know what quality was absolutely necessary. Well, we have got to work these dragline excavators and these dragline excavators require a certain quality of coal and if they have not that quality of coal, they will stop working.

An Honourable MEMBER: What quality?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Specified quality mentioned in the tenders.

An Honourable MEMBER : We want to know what is that specified quality.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON : 12,000 Thermo British Units is the minimum efficiency required for coal.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : The point was that there is Bengal coal of this quality. But they would not guarantee to give it to us in Sind. They said " If you want to test the quality, you must test it at the colliery head, and once it has left the colliery head and is brought to Karachi, the coal is yours, not ours," with the result that if we had these 20,000 tons of Bengal coal and if our dragline excavators ceased to operate on account of the poor quality of the coal supplied, we would not only lose by the dragline excavators ceasing to operate, but these thousands of tons of coal would be on our hands and we should have to dispose of them. Well, Sir, I hesitated considerably as to what to do under those circumstances. It was a question of spending more money and running all these risks that I have mentioned, and I decided that the matter should be immediately placed before the Finance Committee.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : When was it placed before the Finance Committee?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : On the 16th of February. Now, Sir, I do not wish to divulge what took place in the Finance Committee, but there was a certain amount of difference of opinion in that committee, and some honourable members thought that we should not run the risks that undoubtedly we would run if we took Bengal coal, and ultimately I thought that it was best to leave this contract alone for one year. There was nothing else to be done. I was quite prepared to say that, if this House sanctioned it, we should spend a lakh more but the great obstacle that came in my way was the stopping of the works. It was not a question of losing one lakh ; it was a question of losing lakhs of rupees. If these dragline excavators cease to operate, the loss would be so enormous that I could not take upon myself the responsibility for such a loss. The risk was so great. I again pressed the Chief Engineer to state whether the tenderers refused to guarantee the quality and delivery at Karachi and I have got it in writing from him and he got them to say in writing that they refuse to guarantee. Now, Sir, under those circumstances.....

Mr. G. I. PATEL : Every contract is for delivery at the pit's mouth. Nobody gives a guarantee for delivery elsewhere.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : We have just heard, Sir, some honourable members saying that guarantees are given ; here the honourable member says a guarantee is never given ! If the quality was much lower than that specified, they might have cut off say 8 annas or so from the price, but the coal would have been ours, and we could never have found it out (that the quality was lower) until the dragline excavators actually ceased to operate. I could not see my way to cancel the contract for this coal immediately and go in for Bengal coal, because I found that the proposition was a little more dangerous than mere money ; it was a question of the stopping of the work.

Now, Sir, what is to happen in the future ? In future there is no doubt that we shall go in for Bengal coal, but I would ask my honourable friends to consider one point, namely that a Coal Committee has been appointed to find out why there is not enough demand for Bengal coal. The point is that these collieries will not give us consistent quality and regular supplies, and therefore, for work which is so important as this is—it is not merely running the boilers of mills—the result is that the loss per hour is enormous if our machinery ceases to work. Therefore, we must have guarantee of quality and guarantee of delivery and if after this the collieries will give us this guarantee—and I trust they will see their way to do so—there is no doubt that we shall buy Bengal coal, and we shall buy Bengal coal if it is even at a little loss to the Lloyd Barrage.

Now, Sir, as to freight. What kills the Bengal coal, as far as the Lloyd Barrage is concerned, is the freight and we propose to write to the Government of India that if they desire to encourage Bengal coal, they must give us some concession in freight, and it is for the Government of India to decide whether they will help us to encourage Bengal coal. It is not much use appointing committees unless along with us the Government of India will show their bona fides in the matter of encouraging Bengal coal by giving us a little concession in this matter, and I undertake to say that if the Government of India will help us a little, there will be no question that we will go in for Bengal coal. Therefore, I assure the House that we shall make every endeavour, as we have done in the past, as we have done in this case, to use Bengal coal.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir, I ask for a grant of Rs. 40,000 under 52-A for Forest Capital Outlay, Forest (Transferred). I refer to page 250 of the White Book.

Question proposed.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Sir, I rise not seriously to object to this item, but to obtain details of what has not been given either in the White Book or the Blue Book. Therefore, I rise to object to it on that ground.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir, this Rs. 40,000 is meant for two important forest roads, one in the north of Thana and the other in the Nasik district. Both are very important roads necessary for the exploitation of the forests there and to work the coupes in the neighbourhood. The road in the north of Thana is extremely necessary for the making of the valuable coupes in the neighbourhood workable, and the other road is a road which is an outlet to the road from the Nasik range down the west to bring the valuable timber to market on the west coast. Both these roads have been sanctioned and certain amounts have already been spent. This is the amount asked for for the coming year. It is only a portion of the entire amount sanctioned.

Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, I move for a grant of Rs. 3,40,000 for Expenditure in England, (Civil Estimates, pages 256 and 257).

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The question is :

That a grant of Rs. 3,40,000 be made under the head Expenditure in England, High Commissioner (Transferred).

Mr. R. G. SOMAN (Satara District) : Sir, I move :

Omit the provision of Rs. 12,000 made for Registration (Stores).

Sir, this sum of Rs. 12,000 is demanded as value of stores to be imported from England in respect of the Registration Department. This sum of Rs. 12,000 appears to be intended to be spent on the photo-copying system that has recently been introduced in this presidency since the year 1921.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir, I rise to a point of explanation. Before the honourable member proceeds with his speech, I may explain that this sum of Rs. 12,000, as the honourable member has just stated, refers to chemicals which are indented from Home

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable Minister will have a chance of explaining it as soon as the omission is moved.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : I wanted, if possible, to save the time of the House in one respect.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I will allow the Honourable Minister to make any explanation in regard to the point which the honourable mover has made, but I cannot allow him now to make a speech in support of the grant.

Mr. R. G. SOMAN : This system of photo-copying was originally introduced as an experimental measure, and we find that it has been in force only in three places up to this time. I had put a question during this session asking for figures of expenditure incurred by the department on this system in the matter of erecting buildings and sheds for carrying on this photo-copying work and also of the expenses incurred by the department on machinery and chemicals. That question appears in the third list of Questions and Answers presented in this session, and according to the reply given by the Honourable the Minister, we find that since the year 1921 to 1923 on machinery and chemicals

Mr. D. B. ADWANI : I rise to a point of order, Sir. The Honourable Minister has made a demand only for Rs. 3,40,000 under Civil Works at page 257. This sum of Rs. 12,000 refers to Registration and does not apparently form part of the present demand.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Mr. Wiles told me that it does.

Mr. G. WILES : Yes, Sir. All Transferred items are included on the demand made by the Honourable Minister. The list given in pages 256-257 of the Estimates shows all items under Reserved and Transferred. All Transferred items contained in those pages have been taken out, and a consolidated demand is made for all of them. A demand for all the Reserved items will be made later.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : May I draw the honourable the Finance Secretary's attention to item 34, demands for grants, where there is a sum of Rs. 7,000 shown under Transferred ?

Mr. G. WILES : That is the demand for expenditure by the Secretary of State. The present demand is for all Transferred items under the High Commissioner.

Mr. R. G. SOMAN : Sir, I was referring to the reply given by the Honourable the Minister to my question put in this session, and in that reply of his we find that the expenditure on machinery and chemicals from 1921—23 was Rs. 20,393 ; 1923-24 Rs. 11,600 ; 1924-25 (according to the revised estimate) Rs. 17,000 ; and in the coming year 1925-26, Rs. 12,000. With regard to buildings, during the first two years Rs. 9,605 were spent ; in 1923-24, Rs. 10,000. Besides this, some amount has been spent under exchange. Rs. 4,000 in 1923-24 ; Rs. 6,000 in 1924-25 and Rs. 4,000 are estimated for 1925-26. So these will give us an idea as to what the total expenditure has been on this photo-copying system since its introduction. We find from the White Book, that the figures for Stores are : 1923-24, Rs. 8,877 ; 1924-25 (revised estimate), Rs. 16,000 ; and 1925-26, Rs. 12,000. So that up to this time Rs. 40,000 to Rs. 50,000 has been spent for this project of introducing the photo-copying system in this presidency only on machinery & chemicals. The Director of Information in a press note issued on the 28th of August 1924 gave us to understand that this system was likely to be extended throughout the whole of this presidency, and there being certain legal objections with regard to tendering these copies in evidence the law was intended to be amended. The Director of Information also says that there is considerable saving in staff of the Registration Department on account of the introduction of this system. If we want to know what the considerable amount of saving spoken of by the Director of Information is, we shall have to look to the Blue Book which gives the amounts which were required for district charges. At page 50 of the Blue Book, we find that in the year 1923-24 Rs. 6,25,000 were required for district charges. Then in 1924-25 they budgeted for Rs. 6,95,000, and the revised estimate was Rs. 6,46,000 and in the budget for the ensuing year Rs. 6,86,000 have been provided for. So, if we look into all these figures we find that the figure in the ensuing year's budget is only less by Rs. 9,000 than the amount budgeted in the current year. So, we find that there are no considerable savings as has been tried to be made out by the Director of Information in his press note. We find in the remarks column under the head Registration on page 50 of the Blue Book that the saving in this year is due mainly to retrenchment in the establishments in consequence of photo-copying. This is stated to be one of the reasons for the reduction in the establishment charges in the revised estimate of the current year. But what we actually find is that in spite of this saving Rs. 6,86,000 has been again budgeted for the ensuing year. Even the department itself is not sure as to whether there would be savings in the ensuing year on account of the introduction of the photo-copying system. As regards this new system the officers of Government are not prepared to say that it still continues to be experimental as will be found from the remarks of the Director of Information in his press note as well as from the remarks of the Home Secretary at the last October session of the Legislative Council in respect of a supplementary grant asked by the Honourable Minister for Rs. 9,700 which will be seen on page 583 of the Council Debates of the last October session. These members of this House will find that the Home Secretary says in the second paragraph of his speech on the actual merits of the photo-copying system :

“On the actual merits of the photo-copying system, I think there can be no two opinions.”

So, they have taken it for granted that this system has been successful and it ought to be extended to the whole presidency. Now, if we look to the complaints of the public of the Satara, Sholapur and Poona districts who are mainly affected by it, we will find that the people do not like this new system of registration copies. Their objections are that the copy taken out by this new system is very small in size. This would be apparent from the discussion at the last session. The letters are so small that it entails undue strain on the eyes, as even a man having a normally good sight would not be able to read without the aid of a magnifying glass, not to speak of a man like myself suffering from short sight who would not be able to read a single word. Even this aspect of the question was dealt with by the Home Secretary on the 20th of October. What he says in his speech is :

“Possibly, the reproductions that are being made may need to be made on a larger scale with a very slight modification of the methods of enlargement. I am not quite sure whether at present we are using all the modern methods in photography such as panchromatic plates and discriminative colour screens which form the most valuable aid for the preservation of all the features of a document.”

He also admits that copies are too small. Then again there is a difficulty with regard to the preservation of these copies. There is also a doubt as to whether these photo-copies would not fade after a certain period; but this matter is of course connected with the science of photography, with which I am not acquainted. I shall content myself with saying that even Government officers are not yet sure about the durability of these copies for a long time. Some say that it will last for 20 years; some officers say that these copies are very small and that they ought to be larger. One fact is clear that this system is still defective. Notwithstanding this expression of opinion by this House at the last session of the Legislative Council, Government persist in continuing the system and desire to extend it to the whole of the presidency. Now they have asked for a grant of Rs. 12,000 for the purchase of stores from England for the photo-copying system. I submit that this is a demand made against public opinion; and the Government are flouting public opinion in asking this demand. Therefore, no non-official member of this House should be a party to grant this demand. I submit that this part of the House should vote against this demand.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir, just by way of information I should like to know whether the honourable members would like to discuss the question of this system of photo-copying at this stage or they would like to postpone it till the general demand for Registration is made. If they postpone the general discussion of the system to that occasion I would promise to keep over this item till then. If they decide that it should not be postponed then I would be willing to dispose of this Rs. 12,000 now.

Honourable MEMBERS : The question should be discussed now.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The question is not whether the House desires it, but under the procedure that has been laid down, the question of policy will be discussed on the main question of Registration. Here the question is whether the House is going to grant the twelve thousand rupees. If the House grants it on the merits of the case, then the Honourable Minister will regulate his actions on the decision of the general question. But if the House rejects it and the Registration grant is allowed then the Honourable Minister can ask for it again. On this question honourable members must decide on merits: they cannot go into the question of the merits of the system. If there is a motion for a total reduction then that question will be discussed then.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir, that is exactly what I wanted to know. The spirit in which the question is intended to be discussed is really a discussion which should properly be taken up when the general demand is made; whereas this is merely an item out of it for indenting certain chemicals from home.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am not sure whether the proper procedure will not be for the Honourable Minister to move that the consideration of this item be postponed to a given date later on during this session.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : I am quite willing to do that.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I beg to point out that the Honourable Minister for Excise has made a demand of Rs. 3,40,000 and not a separate demand for photo-zinco materials. So the question is whether the grant of Rs. 3,40,000 should be rejected. There is no question of rejecting Rs. 12,000.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : We have been rejecting part of a total demand.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Sir, the whole demand for Rs. 3,40,000 will have to be postponed to another day. Suppose we disallow Rs. 12,000 now, then the Honourable Minister can only demand Rs. 3,40,000 minus Rs. 12,000. Now, if the discussion is postponed till another day, the whole demand cannot be asked until this question is decided. Therefore the postponement of this matter is the postponement of the whole grant.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : If I may make myself still further clear, I did not ask for the postponement of the Rs. 12,000 out of the whole demand. I asked honourable members whether the House would be willing to discuss the question later on.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I have told the honourable member that I cannot allow a discussion of policy on this partial grant. It is for Government to decide what procedure they desire to adopt.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI : So far as I understand these items which have been given here, they will not appear again in the general demand .

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Sir, as I understand the position, it is this, that the Honourable Minister is offering not to use this Rs. 12,000 if on the discussion of the general policy when 9, Registration is discussed, the photo-zinco process is done away with by the Council.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is in the hands of the House.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : But I understand you to rule, Sir, that on this particular item you would not allow any discussion on the general policy of photo-zinco copying. In that case it will be impossible to argue this point on its merits, because if the Rs. 12,000 is to be allowed at all it is to be allowed on the understanding that the photo-zinco copying is to be continued. How can the House or the Honourable Minister discuss this matter unless the whole question is allowed to be discussed ? That is the difficulty.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The difficulty is created by the procedure adopted, namely, instead of taking the budget in the usual order, in which case that item would have come first, Government have decided to take it in the reverse order. This item would have ordinarily come after that question had been disposed of. The difficulty is due to the manner the Budget is placed before the House.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I would suggest the simplest plan would be for the mover, if he will trust the Honourable Minister's assurance, to withdraw his motion at present and fight the question out when we get to Registration. If he is not prepared to accept the assurance of the Honourable Minister, then let us discuss the whole question of photo-copying system now on the merits.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am quite in favour of the House accepting the assurance of the Honourable Minister that if this grant is sanctioned not a pie of it will be spent if the system is rejected on the general discussion.

Mr. R. G. SOMAN : The House also would have been willing to do so but for the fact that the Government has flouted public opinion expressed in regard to the supplementary grant.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City) : Sir, the first item of general reduction under the Registration department stands in my name and it relates to the reduction of Rs. 30,000. I will speak in favour of that reduction and the photo-copying system will be one of the main grounds on which I shall propose the reduction. But I really fail to see how the system itself will be a topic to be voted upon by the House.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Surely the honourable member realizes that when we are discussing the budget we do not discuss the particular policy, but the grant provided for carrying out that policy, and the House, when it rejects the provision asked for by Government, declares that they do not want that policy.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR: There is no specific item demanded for carrying out this policy.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is not there a lump sum reduction?

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR: The first such item stands in my name; then there is also the second and the third. So there are only three general reductions, on page 11.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I understand that it is the desire of the House to deal with the question whether the system should be continued or not on the present motion. Is that the general wish of the House? (Honourable Members: Yes.) Very well, as a special case I will allow it. But there will be another difficulty because in this case the reply will be with the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: I think, Sir, there is a ruling that any Minister can reply in regard to a transferred department.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Will the Honourable Minister point out to me where that ruling is? Let him give me his authority, and I will consider it.

Mr. N. R. GUNJAL (Poona District), (Addressed the House in Marathi): Sir, the system of photo-copying documents has been in force in the three districts of Poona, Satara and Sholapur. The people of those places have made strong complaints about the unsatisfactoriness of the system. I would ask Government whether any attention has been paid to those complaints. I would also like to bring to the notice of the House that a discussion has been going on in various vernacular newspapers about the system and its drawbacks, and I hope Government and the House will take it into their consideration. The unfortunate part of it is that if Government starts any unjust or unsatisfactory measure in regard to the administration, the poor cultivators have to suffer for it, and in the present instance, it is the cultivators who will suffer most on account of this system. How the photo-copying system is unsatisfactory can be readily seen from the copies of the documents given to the parties concerned by the registration offices. Honourable members will probably remember that when a grant for this system was being discussed in Poona, a copy of a document for Rs. 50,000 was circulated amongst honourable members, and they will also remember that the copy did not contain the signatures of the parties to the document. I should like to bring to the notice of the House that ever since the system was started in these three districts the people have been bitterly complaining about it, and it has been pointed out by the honourable member for Satara (Mr. Soman) how unjust the system is. I therefore hope that all parties in this House will join in throwing out this grant, with the object of impressing upon Government that the photo-copying system is not acceptable to the people of the districts where it is now in use.

Mr. V. A. SURVE (Ratnagiri District) (Addressed the House in Marathi): Mr. President, before deciding on the continuance of the photo-copying system, it is necessary for us to consider how far it is agreeable to the agriculturists. The copies of documents which are prepared by the photo-copying system are undecipherable after six months. The result will be that the agriculturists will not have in their hands any proof of what agreements they have entered into and with whom, with the result that they will suffer heavily. The chief point to consider is not the convenience of the registration offices but the convenience of the people who have to register documents there. The persistent efforts of Government to perpetuate the system, are in my opinion, not in the right direction. Owing to the size of the copies, they are untraceable after some time, and even if they can be traced, they are undecipherable or unreadable. It will not be right for this House to sanction the grant without taking into consideration all these factors.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: Mr. President, the honourable member Mr. Soman made it a point that Government has flouted public opinion. You will bear me out, Sir, that the question was referred to in this House before only as an off-shoot. I could then see that some of the honourable members and not a large number of them—because only a few spoke on the question—did speak against the system. But from that I was not, nor were Government, in a position to understand that that was the public opinion or that was the decision arrived at against the system. Therefore, Government cannot be accused of having flouted public opinion, and having continued a system which had been disallowed. As a matter of fact, as I said, on the last occasion in Poona, the system has been sanctioned by this very honourable House. It has been working under their sanction, and until that sanction is withdrawn, the department is perfectly right in working it, and providing for it. Similarly, this amount of Rs. 12,000 has been provided for, because, if the system is to continue for a day, it has to continue on the strength of chemicals; and this is the provision for it. If the House, after due deliberation, comes to the conclusion that it should be discontinued it would then be for Government to consider whether they should act according to the advice of the House.

There is another point which I should like to answer before I enter into the merits. I should like to point out that there is absolutely no intention on the part of Government, and there can be none whatsoever, to perpetuate the system, and this House would be misjudging the intentions of Government if it were alleged that Government was forcing this system on the country. If Government were carrying it on, they were doing so according to the wishes of this honourable

House, and because they find that it is in the best interests of the people generally. Government by themselves, as a body, as a Government, have absolutely no interest in carrying on this system.

Now, to come to the merits of the system, I find from the records of this honourable House, the speeches made and the discussions held, that the question was raised in 1923, when my honourable friend the Revenue Member was in charge of the subject as Minister. He has already explained the advantages of the system. Dr. Paranjpye, who was one of the Ministers then, has also explained them; and I may repeat some of the advantages of the system even to-day. This House has to dispassionately consider as to whether the advantages outweigh the few disadvantages which may be attached to the system for the present, so far as it has progressed, or vice versa. If the House is convinced that the advantages are pre-eminently in the best interests of the people, then it would be the bounden duty of this House to sanction and foster the system rather than stop it and nip it in the bud. The hand copying system, the old system, is still being pursued in the larger portion of this presidency, and the new photo-copying system is applied only to a few talukas, so far. The old system is one which is well known to every one here; under which documents are copied out by hand by an individual called the registration clerk. Those documents are often challenged in courts on more than one ground; and the members of this House, who are acquainted with the legal profession and know what happens in courts, will bear me out in this respect. Forgeries are daily committed, and signatures are denied, interpolations are attempted and a number of other things are possible under the hand copying system, because it is easy for any man, if he wishes to play out of that document, to deny that that was his signature, or allege that a certain word was or was not there in the document. Even the individual who is employed as the registration clerk does the work as a piece of drudgery, and after all gets through only a few documents during the year. Now, Sir, the hand copy is easily disfigured by a drop of water and its words obliterated; if the copy is destroyed by fire, as happened in Ahmedabad some time ago, or otherwise lost, the situation so created cannot be remedied and the disadvantages are many and great. Now, the new system does away with all these disadvantages. It gives in the photo the very facsimile of the signature, which can never be denied. It is besides a mistake on the part of the honourable members to think that water, the sun or duration affects the photo-copy. It has been tested under water, under the rays of the sun, and it has survived all tests. Though, Sir, the copies are certainly small—my honourable friend there is right that they cannot be read out easily unless the magnifying glass is used—bigger copies can be had. Each document is given in three copies. One can be stored in one place and another in another place, and a third in a third place. So, if one copy is destroyed, there are two more copies that could be had. It leaves absolutely no opportunity to commit forgery. I would point out to my honourable friends who spoke in Marathi, that if the system is really to the advantage of any, it is to the advantage of our ignorant masses. The old system throws difficulties more in the way of agriculturists than anybody else.

Now, Sir, to cut the discussion short, I would come to another question, and that is the economic side of the question. Is it not a fact, Sir, if I may be permitted to point out, that in spite of our long discussions in the ardent advocacy of retrenchment in this honourable House, we are often led away, and are apt to forget that we become inconsistent at times when certain interests come to be safeguarded? In fact, here I may plainly mention that I understood from some of the speeches made at Poona by some of the honourable members in the Council that men were thrown out of employment and that their case was pitiable. That is perfectly true. The new system would throw a certain number of men out of employment, but that is a sort of cry which is raised when any new system has been brought into existence. I suppose, when the trains were introduced in this country, there was a big hue and cry that thousands of people would be thrown out of employment; when the trams came into existence, there was the same cry; I suppose when the motor cars came into existence, the same cry was raised again. But the Almighty takes care of us all, and people are not left uncared for by Him. The many advantages which accrue recoil ultimately to the best interests of the people. On the point of economy, let me point out, Sir, that in the few corners we have introduced this system we have been able to save about Rs. 40,000, and if it is introduced in more directions and generally in the Presidency, there is every hope—and I can say it with confidence—that over a lakh of rupees would be saved to the presidency in the expenditure of the department. But if the House reverts back to the old system, the saving of Rs. 40,000 would be lost, and further an expenditure of about Rs. 65,000 would perhaps have to be incurred in re-instating the old system, the various details of which I have in my hand, which I can place before the House.

I would, therefore, urge that looked at from every point of view, the system has advantages, and distinct advantages, over the old system. The House should not be guided by the interests of individuals and sacrifice the interests—the best interests—of the people at large whom we all represent. I would, therefore, request honourable members to consider the question dispassionately and allow the system to proceed.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I should like, Sir, to make a few remarks on this subject because it is a subject which very closely affects the administration of justice. It is very important that accurate copies should be made of important documents.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is the Honourable the Leader of the House likely to take long?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Yes, Sir; I have a good deal to say on the subject.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Then, I think, as it is nearly 7 o'clock now, we had better adjourn. The Council is now adjourned to 2 p.m. to-morrow, Friday, the 6th March 1925.

(Discussion on demands for grants resumed.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Demands for grants.

Question again proposed :

"Omit the provision of Rs. 12,000 made for Registration (stores)."

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Mr. President, I rose last night to make some remarks on this question of photo-copying from the point of view of the administration of justice. Now, Sir, I am conservative enough myself to fully sympathise with those of the old school who prefer the old days when there was sufficient leisure to get all the copying done by hand, with no question of hurry or time to interfere with the process. It was moreover a convenient arrangement under which all the copying, whether in administrative, judicial or registration offices, was done by clerks taken on for the purpose, a great many of them temporarily, on small but fairly remunerative fees, as it offered opportunities for testing promising young men recommended to us for trial for permanent posts as they fell vacant by trusted sheristadars or head clerks. These were taken on as part of the temporary establishment and were known as "umedwars." When a post fell vacant there were always at hand some of these promising young men ready to step into the breach, and that was the usual method of recruiting the permanent staff of the offices, without any trouble to the officers in charge of the office. Well, Sir, the old days have gone by, and we now have to face a very much busier world, when we have got more work to get through and less time to do it than we used to have formerly. Therefore, Sir, it seems to me it is not possible for us to give the go-by to mechanical improvements which have been introduced in all other countries in the world. There was the same objection raised to the introduction of typewriters. But I think it is fully recognised now, Sir, that no decent office can do without a regular typewriting establishment. The typewriters mean that instead of having to prepare by manual labour each one of six or seven copies, all are prepared by one process. It not only saves time, but it ensures accuracy and relieves the eye-sight of some of us like my honourable friend opposite who mentioned yesterday that he found difficulty in reading documents. It relieves our eye-sight by presenting to us very much plainer and easier documents to read. So, Sir, typewriting, though it was objected to at first, has been introduced and has come to stay. And I think it is realised now that though it is a quicker process requiring less manual labour, it has not really been to the detriment of any honest workers who have elsewhere found other means of suitable employment. Now, Sir, photo-copying is another instance of a mechanical means for ensuring accuracy and also economy by saving labour. The process is a somewhat new one in this country, and has been viewed with some suspicion by members of the old school who like myself would like to hark back to the pleasant days of old when we had more leisure and time for our duties. But, Sir, we cannot stand still here while all the other countries in the world are progressing. We must move forward and progress with them, even in this small matter of substituting for the slow and uncertain manual copying of the documents the more accurate and speedy copying by the photographer. I do not think that any member of this House who will really approach this question with due regard to his responsibility to his constituency for economy in all our departments, would feel himself justified in voting against a further trial of this new system of photo-copying now recommended to this House.

It has been suggested that the system is not perfect. I believe that may very well be so. But surely that is only an argument in favour of continuing it and perfecting it. The argument which was urged was that the present copies are unduly small, that we who have grown old in our work cannot read them as easily as the full sized copy. Well, I believe the reply to that is, that there is no real difficulty in enlarging these copies so that they can be perfectly easily legible to any one even with eye-sight which is not of the best. I will leave that part to my honourable friend the Home Secretary who will explain it in detail and show some samples of larger photo-copies. Nor, Sir, when we are able to produce these photo-copies of a sufficiently large size for practical purposes, then I submit, Sir, that there are very great advantages in this kind of copying over the old manual handwriting. In the first place, Sir, no manual handwriting can possibly reproduce the original document exactly as it was. It is quite impossible by the means of manual handwriting to reproduce the alterations and the particular forms of letters and words as they exist in the original document. It is quite impossible by manual handwriting to reproduce the exact signatures of the executors of the document and of the witnesses. Now, Sir, any member of this House who has either been a pleader or a judge will recognise that the very greatest importance is attached to having in our hands the actual facsimile of the document about which there is dispute. Time after time the question arises as to interpolations in the document. Without, Sir, actually examining the document it is impossible to come to any accurate judgment as to whether there has been an interpolation or whether there has been any alteration in the letters as originally written. The ordinary manual handwriting copy only makes a cross at the disputed point, and in the margin opposite that cross notes: "Here there has been an alteration of the following words, or the following words have been substituted." Well, that is very little use to a pleader or a judge who wants to test the plea that this alteration has been forged. If you have the actual document before you you can trace the actual letters; you can see the marks of the pen which has gone over the old letter and has converted it into a new one, and you can ordinarily come to a conclusion without any doubt whatever whether it has been a forgery or not. Now, Sir, all those marks are accurately represented in your photo-copy. If the original by some unfortunate accident, or possibly for some malign purpose, has been withheld or destroyed, you can see for yourself, you can see whether there has been any alteration, and you can say whether the document was or was not altered after it had been executed. Similarly when any question arises as to the signature of the executant, if you have your photo-copy you can have direct evidence of the signature of the executant even if the document has been withheld, destroyed or lost. From the point of view of administration of justice it seems to me an important matter to be in the position to produce always an exact copy of documents in dispute before the court. I suppose no pleader has ever had a disputed document to deal with without very carefully scrutinising the original if possible by submitting it to examination under a microscope, by holding it up to the light and by comparing it with other signatures and writing. It is the practice of most judges, certainly it was my own practice, whenever there was any question as to any document, to insist upon the disputed document being placed before me and a full explanation given of the alleged addition, alteration or insertion and where the signature was in dispute a comparison with other writings. I submit, Sir, without such scrutiny it is very difficult to decide a question of this kind in a court. I do not wish to weary the House further with this aspect of the question, but I do submit that this new process is a security against additions and alterations and false signatures and other tamperings with documents. It is a security against forgeries and therefore it is our duty to provide this sum required for it in the interest of the general public.

Then, Sir, another objection was raised and it was suggested that the photo-copy is not as durable as a hand-made copy. I think this is a misapprehension. I have been assured that a photo-copy is very much more lasting and indelible than the ordinary copy made by hand in ink. In the ordinary copy the writer writes with his pen and ink on the surface of the paper and it is not very difficult for an expert to remove the ink from the top of the surface of the paper with a sharp pen-knife and leave very little trace behind of his malicious work. It is also much easier for damp to damage the surface of the paper below the writing and make it impossible to read the purport of the document. I am informed in the case of photo-copying, the copy becomes part of the fibre of the paper and the copy cannot be altered by just scraping away the top, because you will only come to the further reproduction of the marks below the surface. So that as regards the durability there is not very much argument against the new process. In any case there is of course this that even if the copy is defaced it is simple to produce several copies by the photo-copying process for permanent record.

[Sir, lastly, I would refer once more to the question of economy. It is undoubtedly an economy to produce a large number of copies by the photo-copying process rather than have these copies laboriously made over and over again by manual labour. I submit, Sir, that the economic question is one which ought to appeal to all members of this House who have been urging upon us the necessity of retrenchment in all departments. I submit that this economy, though for the time being detrimental to manual copyists will in the end do them no harm as they will find other and perhaps more profitable walks of life. Some of them will be required for this new process and will be retained. Those that are not required will find employment in other walks of life. Where new processes have been introduced this has been the universal experience. This argument as to unemployment is exactly the same that was urged many years ago when machinery was introduced at home for the first time in the mills. We know that even serious riots occurred and valuable machinery was destroyed and it was urged that everyone would be ruined by the introduction of machinery. But the result has been that instead of increasing unemployment the introduction of machinery has in the end resulted in very great increase of employment of work-people all over the world. Look at the extra amount of labour that has been demanded here after the introduction of machinery in Bombay. There ought to be no doubt in the minds of honourable members on this question that we ought to progress with the progress of other nations, and not to be kept back by the old argument of manual labour against machinery. There is reasonable room for both in this matter just as there is ample room in this country for the hand-loom alongside the machinery in the mills. Where there is progress there will be no lack of employment for those who have to turn their energies in new directions necessitated by progress. I submit, therefore, this item ought to be unanimously sanctioned by this House.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City) : Sir, I agree with the opinion expressed by the previous speaker that our presidency should advance with the progress of the world and that wherever an opportunity occurs we should prefer machinery to manual labour. But that is only one aspect of the case. I submit, there are also other considerations which should guide the deliberations of this House especially in view of the fact that it is a question which concerns more the illiterate masses than the literate classes. I would request the House to pay particular attention to this question as it primarily affects the interests of the illiterate agriculturists in Maharashtra. What are, Sir, the defects that are shown in the old process? The first defect that is pointed out is that by the old process of hand-copying there is the greatest likelihood of forgeries being committed in respect of original documents and their copies. It would have been far better if the Honourable the Home Member had furnished the House with statistics in this matter. I have been practising as a pleader for the last 15 years at the Poona bar, and in the course of my practice I have come across nearly two thousand documents and copies of documents of various sorts. But I have hardly met with even two cases of forgeries. It has been urged that there could be a forgery of every kind in respect of the original documents. But it is an argument that does not hold water in the realities of actual life.

Then secondly, it is suggested that if the original document is lost or destroyed, the poor executant thereof is practically at the mercy of the person in whose favour the document is executed. I could say, Sir, that under the old system it was necessary to have the document copied in the book kept in the registry for that purpose and in case the original document was destroyed or lost, a copy of it, an exact replica of the original document, was easily available.

It is also said that if the registration office is burnt down, then along with it there goes away all record as regards the registered documents, the result of which is that the title to property is made most insecure. In this behalf I will make a suggestion for the serious consideration of the House. The Honourable the Home Member must be aware of the fact that in civil suits the plaintiffs are required to furnish true copies of the plaints to the defendants. It is legally obligatory upon the plaintiffs to do so. If a slight alteration be effected in the Registration Act to the effect that a person who comes to register a document ought to furnish two or three copies of that document to the registration officer, and such copies are preserved in different places, then the danger pointed out as above could easily be avoided.

Then there are two or three other minor points advanced against the old system which are unconvincing.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : On a point of explanation, Sir, may I ask what would be the delay and cost to have two or three copies under the hand-copying system.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : I shall deal later on with the question of cost after pointing out the defects inherent in the old system; the Honourable the Home Member has expatiated upon the so-called advantages of the new system, and the first advantage is stated to be the cheapness of the new system. In this connection I would certainly join issue with those honourable members who say that the photo-copies are cheaper than the hand-made copies. This side of the House can never be convinced with merely vague statements, that the new system is more economical than the old one. I wish that the Honourable the Minister in charge of the department had given us the actual figures in this behalf. Instead of the vague remark made at page 50 of the Blue Book, namely that the decrease in the current year's revised estimates is due mainly to saving in establishment charges in consequence of the extension of photography, etc., it would have been far better if a comparative table of expenditure under the old and the new system had been given by him. As a matter of fact we find that instead of the figures showing any decrease in the expenditure on the registration department, it shows an increase of 60 thousand rupees. In the year 1923-24 while 6 lakhs 25 thousand were spent over this department in the current year 6 lakhs and 88 thousand rupees are proposed to be spent. Taking the figures as they stand in the Blue Book one cannot say that there has been any economy effected in the expenditure over this department.

Then the next point that is put forth in favour of the photo system is the permanency of the photo-copies. I do not propose to go into the scientific aspect of the question, namely, whether a hand-made copy by its very nature is bound to be less permanent than a photo-copy. But this much I can say that I have seen documents written by hand in the tenth and eleventh centuries, and I found them to be as clear and legible and permanent as the documents written in more recent times ; not only this but I have also found that photo copies of some of the documents taken only recently have absolutely faded away. These are the facts that have come to my notice ; and if we look at the question from a layman's point of view, we cannot be convinced as to the durability and permanence of the photo-copies of documents.

Then, as regards the third advantage, namely that on account of photo-copying there is the certainty of getting spare copies of the documents and of keeping them in separate places, so that if any one of the registration offices is unfortunately burnt down, there is another registration office containing a photo-copy of the document. Now it is from this point of view that at the outset of my remarks I spoke of the spare copies and referred to the copies of the plaints which the plaintiffs are required to supply to the defendants. If it be made compulsory under the law upon the executant or the person in whose favour the document is passed to supply the registrar's office with two or three copies of the document presented for registration, I think that the difficulty could be easily obviated. The advantages of the photo-copying system pointed out by the Honourable the Home Member and by the Honourable the Minister in charge are really of a doubtful nature. As against them, there are certain definite disadvantages of the new system which the parties concerned are made to labour under. The first of them is that the size of the copies is very small. These copies are of card size, and they are so small that it is well-nigh impossible for any person having a normal eye-sight to read them. At the time of the October session in Poona I had brought with me some specimens of the photo-copies, and I had challenged several honourable members of the House to read them. Sir, in truth, it is impossible for a person of normal eye-sight to read them. It is said that the card size may be enlarged into any size. Here, I would really like to put a question to the Honourable Member in charge of the Revenue Department, who interrupted me some time back, as to what would be the cost of enlarging such card-sized photo-copies to the ordinary foolscap size ? If he would supply me with the figures in this respect, then certainly I shall be able to convince the House that the two or three copies prepared by manual labour will be far cheaper than the copies that will be prepared by means of the photo-copying system. We oftentimes find—and to my mind, that is a very serious disadvantage so far as the photo-copying system is concerned—that the signature of the executant and the signatures of the attesting witnesses do not appear in the photograph. Not only that, but at times even some of the paragraphs in the document do not appear at all. I have seen several documents in which the signature of the executant and the signatures of the attesting witnesses have not appeared in the copies. I know of a case which I lost on account of this defect in the photo-copy. I lost it because the signatures not being there I could not prove the document. I do not see why a person should lose his case on account of such a defective document. That is a very serious defect which the photo-copying system is subject to, and if we find that on account of the absence of the executant's signature or the signatures of the attestors a document becomes useless, then certainly it is a system which every reasonable man should be slow to countenance.

There is also a further disadvantage, and that has got an entirely economic aspect. To some extent, I agree with the sentiments expressed by the Honourable the Home Member so far as this aspect is concerned. But there is also one circumstance that we have got to take into consideration, and it is that if really the photo-copying system possesses all the advantages which the Government credits it with, then why is it that in England this system is not in vogue. It is only in some minor states of the United States of America that this system is practised, and I would certainly like to have the information from the honourable member the Home Secretary, as to whether this system is in vogue in England.....

Mr. A. MONTGOMERIE: I could give the honourable member the information at once. It is not in vogue in England, because the system of registration is not in vogue in England. The only places where there is a system of registration are Middlesex and I think the West Riding of Yorkshire, but there too only an abstract of the documents is taken. There is no such system of registration in England at all. That, I think, meets the honourable member's point.

An Honourable MEMBER: We have not been able to hear a word of the Home Secretary's remarks.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member was inaudible.

Mr. A. MONTGOMERIE: The photo-copying system is not in use in England for registration purposes for the simple reason that there is no system of registration in England, except in Middlesex and the West Riding of Yorkshire, I think, where abstracts of documents are taken. There is nothing in England in the nature of the registration offices in vogue in India under the Registration Act.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR: What about those parts which the honourable member excepted?

Mr. A. MONTGOMERIE: Only abstracts are taken there.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : Sir, I was speaking of the economic aspect of this question, and it is really one which should be seriously considered by the House. In reply to a question put by the honourable member for Satara, which we find in the fourth list of questions, it was stated that on account of the introduction of the photo-copying system in some parts of Satara, 10 clerks have been cashiered away ; and after referring to the time during which they served the Government and the date on which they were asked to leave the service, I find that 7 out of 10 clerks were of more than 15 years' standing in the service. That you will find in a statement which is given in reply to a question put by the honourable member, Mr. Soman. Sir, in these days, when there is the cry of unemployment of the middle classes, if this system, which for more reasons than one cannot be preferred to the old system, results in the dismissal of 10 clerks, only when two or three talukas of a district are concerned, the question naturally arises, what will be the effect if the system is extended to the whole of the presidency. Over and above that, there is also the question, namely, if this system is made applicable to the whole of the presidency, what will be the extent of the trade which this presidency will have necessarily to make with foreign countries in photo materials ? What I mean to say is, to supply the wants of a few talukas only there is a demand made of Rs. 12,000. If the photo-copying system is brought into operation in the whole presidency, the Government will have to order foreign goods to the extent of lakhs of rupees. Is it something that should be encouraged, and encouraged after clearly seeing that it will absurdly make the middle class unemployment problem more complex and delicate ? I submit that in these days it is positively dangerous to adopt any system which will encourage not any indigenous industry but the industry of some foreign country. The right economic policy of every presidency should be to make it self-contained and self-sustained. If the House accepts this economic principle—a principle which has been accepted in all countries, and which is considered to be one of the main principles of the national system of economics—then its only attitude should be to discard this system, inasmuch as it would encourage foreign trade and not indigenous trade. In every country if the adoption of any system is likely to encourage foreign trade, that system is at once rejected. If for the above reasons the House considers that this system is abnormal and extraordinary in nature, in that it will involve this presidency in foreign trade to the extent of lakhs of rupees, then the House should set its seal of disapproval upon it by its rejection. With these remarks I request the House to support the motion under discussion.

Mr. G. A. THOMAS : Mr. President, so much has been said not only in the course of the present debate, but on various previous occasions, about the photo-copying system that I am not going to occupy much of the time of the House in covering the old ground. I wish, however, to make a brief reference to the figures on page 50 of the Blue Book which have been alluded to by the honourable member for Satara district who moved this motion and the honourable member for Poona city who has just spoken. It is a fact that the total expenditure, Accounts 1923-24, was 6,75 ; in the following year, that is to say the current year, the budget estimate was 7,42 ; and the revised estimate was 7,06. Well, now, the reason why we have been able to reduce the budget estimate of 7,42 to the revised estimate of 7,06 is that we have been extending this photo-copying experiment into wider areas than before. Now, for next year, that is to say, in the present budget, the figure goes up from 7,06 to 7,44 and it is argued therefrom that the photo-copying process does not give us any economy, that the cost of the department is still rising. Well, that is an error. The cost of the department is rising simply and solely because so long as we maintain these large number of clerks in the department we have to go on paying incremental salaries to them and the difference between 7,06 and 7,44 is almost entirely made up by these incremental salaries. There was a complaint by the last speaker that we have not given figures to show what is the actual saving which has resulted already from the introduction of this experiment. The actual saving is as follows :

Reduction of permanent staff in the present year of grace is Rs. 32,000 in value ; on temporary staff there is a saving of about Rs. 30,000 ; and there is a saving in travelling allowances and incidental contingencies, etc., of about Rs. 10,000. That means a total retrenchment of about Rs. 72,000. As against that, we have to place, of course, the cost of the photo-copying process. That amounts to Rs. 24,500, of which Rs. 19,000 is represented by stores and about Rs. 4,500 by the pay of the cameramen.

Mr. R. G. SOMAN : On a point of information, in how many offices is the saving of Rs. 32,000, to which the honourable member refers, made ?

Mr. G. A. THOMAS : I do not remember, but it includes the Satara district, Sholapur district, Poona district, Bombay Suburban district, and Bombay city. I forget the exact figures. (After a pause) : It is in 15 places. I say the present cost of the establishment for the photo-copying system is Rs. 24,500, Rs. 19,000 of which is represented by stores. Rs. 7,000 is under 9, Registration, Rs. 4,000 of which is for exchange and Rs. 3,000 of which is for customs duty. Now, the difference between Rs. 72,000 and Rs. 24,000 is Rs. 48,000. So the House may take it as a fact, an indisputable fact, that we are at present saving about Rs. 48,000 a year by this experiment, and if and when the experiment is extended to the whole of the Presidency, we estimate that our total gain will be about Rs. 1,40,000 or Rs. 1,50,000.

Now, rather an interesting point, which I would submit for the Chair's ruling, arises out of this motion for omission of the Rs. 12,000 to be spent in England for stores. If we are going to omit this Rs. 12,000, it means we are going to discontinue the photo-copying process. That means we have to bring back a very large number of those clerks who have been dismissed but for reinstating whom there is no budget provision. What, then, is going to happen? If we are going to discontinue the photo-copying process and we are unable to reinstate those clerks for lack of budget money, we shall have no copyists to make copies for the public. The public will ask for copies.

An Honourable MEMBER: Ask for a budget provision.

Mr. G. A. THOMAS: It is contrary to the rules governing this House for any motion to be moved for the increase of a budget provision and I submit, Sir, that the motion we are at present discussing for the omission of Rs. 12,000 is equivalent to a motion for increasing the budget provision under 9, Registration, by a very much larger amount. That is to say, the mover of this motion aims at obtaining, by indirect means, what he cannot obtain by direct means. I understand, Sir, that it is contrary to the procedure of this House. Am I correct?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: As an argument it is quite good; but as a point of order, there is nothing in it.

Mr. G. A. THOMAS: The fact is that we have no provision of Rs. 48,000 which we will require for reinstating these clerks who have been dismissed and I suggest, therefore, that a great responsibility rests upon this House. It may mean that in certain areas, in Bombay city, for instance, people would not be able to obtain copies of documents.

As far as I have been able to follow the arguments made by the various speakers, the chief objections to this photo-copying process are, first, the smallness of the copies; secondly, that they are not durable; and thirdly, the dismissal of clerks which is involved. As regards the smallness of copies, I sympathise very much with that complaint. In my opinion, these copies by their very smallness are most offensive to one's sight and I haven't myself a strong enough sight to read them easily. But as the Honourable the Leader of the House has pointed out, it is perfectly easy—and I may add at no great further expense—to produce larger copies. The honourable the Home Secretary, who tells me he is an expert in the science of photography, will show you a few large copies which he has taken. As regards the permanence, the Honourable the Home Member has informed the House that copies taken with this photo-copying process are more permanent than the hand-copied ones, and I would just like to read two or three lines from an editorial of the "Times of India" of the last week, in which it was said:

"Nearly a century of experience has shown that for permanency of appearance and simplicity of production, this ferro-prussiate blue print process is unique. In ordinary copying by hand the iron in the ink merely remains on the surface of the paper and can be removed by certain re-agents and, as is generally known, rapidly fades when exposed to light. But in the blue print process the iron actually becomes part and parcel of the fabric of the paper, and hence can be declared almost indestructible until the paper itself is destroyed Even should the blue prints grow faint by prolonged exposure to light, the original intensity can be recovered by a period of retention in the dark."

I do not know many honourable members are students of the advertising columns of the "Times of India." But those who are may possibly have noticed an advertisement appearing in the issue of the 20th or

[Mr. G. A. Thomas]

21st February put in by the Kodak Company, whose reputation is well established all over the world, it is a very short notice which runs as follows :

“Kodak, Limited, Bombay, have to announce that they have installed a Photostat Copying Machine and are now able to make photographic copies of :
 Shop and Engineering drawings ;
 Architects and Builders plans ;
 Manuscripts and Book pages, etc. ;
 Records, Documents and Deeds ;
 Reports, Accounts, Letters and Statements ;
 These copies are quickly and cheaply prepared and are quite permanent.”

This shows that this experiment we have introduced for the Deccan years is not merely a fad of an eccentric official of Government but is a sound commercial proposition and I hope this House will regard it as such.

MOULVI RAFTUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : I rise, Sir, to oppose the reduction and to support the grant. My honourable friend and my learned brother in law, Mr. Bhopatkar—(Mr. D. R. Patil : Your brother-in-law ?) (Laughter)—supported the motion with some arguments, but I find those arguments are neither sound in law nor useful in practice. Sir, it was only yesterday that my learned friend the leader of the Swaraj party took the Indian members of the Government to task for not applying their minds to certain things in their departments, like the coal contract, and he was angered that they had left them to their European officers. Now, I find, Sir, that almost all the Indian members of the Government have applied their minds closely to this question, and I also find that the European officer who is responsible for introducing it, Mr. Anderson, has done it for the benefit of this country. Sir, a great deal has been said of the agriculturists of the Deccan in this connection. Well, Sir, my learned friend will excuse me if I say that I do not think that the agriculturists of the Deccan will suffer a bit. On the contrary, I am strongly of the opinion that the so-called agriculturists, whose interests are so much trotted out here, will benefit by it, because this is a question of improvement, of economy of progress, of civilization and my honourable friend (Mr. Bhopatkar) has asked what country has adopted this system. He said that England and other European countries do not employ this method. Well, this argument is not always good, but I will give him the example of a country which is using it with great profit. It is Egypt. In Egypt, this process is in use. As everybody knows the Arabic character is the most difficult and the most intricate to transcribe, and in Egypt the process of photo-copying those documents is a very great success. If it is a great success in an Oriental country like Egypt, I do not see why it should not be a success in our own country.

Sir, it has been pointed out that the copies are too small, but as the Honourable the Leader of the House has pointed out—and he has been supported by the honourable member Mr. Thomas—this is a question of perfection of the machinery. If we do not give a trial to the machinery, if we refuse to continue the further trial of this system, how can we expect further improvement in this matter ?

[Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmad]

Now, my honourable friend Mr. Bhopatkar says that it will benefit the indigenous industry of England. I fail to see any argument in that, Sir. Science has to develop in India, and for the development of science in India certain materials have to be bought from Europe or America. That does not necessarily mean that our object is to benefit the indigenous industry of those countries. We shall in time be able to produce those materials here, and we shall utilise them for science in this country. To stop all progress in this country because we have to buy certain commodities from other countries, is the greatest imprudence. I therefore think, Sir, that there is no reasonable argument except this—that I must say as a lawyer—that some of our clerks and umedwars will suffer and must suffer. But the solicitors' clerks and the lawyers' kar-kuns are not the only individuals in the country whose interest we have to guard. As science advances some people will have to be displaced, but that is for our progress. I fail to see where America or European countries come in. For these reasons, Sir, I oppose the motion.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Mr. President, as I was responsible for the introduction of this system in 1921, I think, Sir, it would be permissible for me to try to meet some of the objections that have from time to time been raised to this process and that have again been repeated to-day. Sir, I cannot do better than refer to some statements that I made giving the facts and figures which my honourable friend from Poona demanded, even though I have to refer to a speech made by myself. It has been contended that from all parts there are great many complaints with regard to this photo-copying process. Now, I hold a report from the Inspector-General of Registration which says that since the debate that took place in this Council in March 1923, so far as the mofussil offices are concerned, no complaints have been received. That, Sir, will give you some idea as to how popular or unpopular this system is in the mofussil and what weight we must attach to the objections that are mentioned here. That is borne out more or less by the fact that during the period from the 25th of April 1921, when this system was first introduced, to the end of June 1922, a little more than a year, 9,132 documents were photographed, and out of these only 108 had to be returned as unfit for reproduction, not because there were any mistakes in photography, but because the documents themselves were not amenable to the process of photography. This shows that more than 98 per cent. of the documents that were presented for photography were amenable to the process and excellent copies were made from them. The same percentage, Sir, I understand, continues to the present day, after two years of further experience and after 15,000 documents have been photographed. The system has been gradually extended. It was first introduced in the Haveli taluka, and at the present moment there are so many as fifteen places where photo-copying takes place, and Bombay, which presents a large number of these documents, is included in that number of fifteen. The reason why the 1·2 per cent. of the documents had to be returned was not because photography was to blame, but because those documents were written either in violet or green ink, or were folded in such a manner that the creases made it impossible for the photographs to be properly reproduced. That does not mean that those documents are useless : it only means that they have to be hand copied in the old fashion. I am further given to understand that as experience is gained even the green and violet inks will also yield to photography. In any case the public are being fully informed that green and violet inks should be avoided, and if they do so, we shall get all the documents properly photographed. The Honourable Minister says that the public are already avoiding these inks under the instructions that have been issued. This reminds me of the interesting information given by my honourable friend from Poona with regard to legibility of documents written in the 10th or 11th century. I have seen even older documents. Whether they are readable or not, depends upon the kind of paper that was used and the quality of ink that was used. If the present-day inferior quality of paper and of ink were used for the documents, I do not think the life of those documents would be a century of months. The ordinary Indian black ink is amenable to photography and there is no hardship in asking cultivators to use the ink to which they are accustomed.

There remains now the question of the advantages of this new process and I cannot do better than quote what I stated in March 1923. "As regards the question of cost, a little saving is of no consequence if people are not prepared to accept this system." I wish honourable members to understand that it is from the same view point I wish them to determine to-day the suitability or otherwise of this system purely on a consideration of its merits. Then I said :

"The great advantage is that you get three copies instead of one, that you can store them at different places and that you have certain safeguard against the copies being destroyed. Take the case of hand copying and the damage done in 1919 in Ahmedabad. With the hand copy you get only one copy of the document ; it is liable to be destroyed by fire or some other calamity, and in Ahmedabad all those documents were actually destroyed and thus the only evidence of transactions was lost. Here, by this process you get three copies, two of them you can preserve and they occupy a space less than two-thirds of the hand-written documents. What is more, you can get an absolutely faithful impression of the document, of all the curves of the handwriting and even of thumb marks. Moreover you do away with the natural danger of mistakes being made in hand copying as well as in comparing these documents, and to my mind it seems an extraordinary pity that some three hundred or four hundred of our people should spend all their lives in doing nothing but copying these documents, serving on a pittance on a scale of wages against which I have received constant complaints."

This brings us on to another point which was raised by my honourable friend for Poona. He says that a disaster will overtake the establishment. I have every sympathy with the establishment. I would however like honourable members to remember that the majority of these clerks who may suffer are not on the permanent staff but only temporary men who are taken from time to time when the rush of work for registration demands it. The Inspector General of Registration in a statement which he has prepared says that if the photo-copying is to be abandoned if the Council discards the system he will have to ask for a temporary establishment which will cost Rs. 27,000 and for a permanent establishment which will cost Rs. 28,200. From this it will be seen that though the amounts are equal the temporary men far outnumber the permanent staff and it is scarcely legitimate to reject an improvement because temporary establishment may be affected. I think that the question of unemployment of the temporary establishment should not weigh very much with the Council.

There remains another question of helping a foreign country by the purchase of various materials and chemicals which cannot be produced in this country. This system has been introduced in 15 talukas including Bombay and the demand is made for the purchase of stores worth Rs. 12,000 and I believe some more talukas will come in during the course of next year where this system will be introduced. The whole of these talukas is going to cost Rs. 12,000 and it is not difficult for honourable members to calculate the cost for the whole presidency, bearing in mind that Bombay producing the largest number of documents is also included, I do not think that the estimate of several lakhs of rupees made by my honourable friend for Poona can therefore be correct. For these reasons I would venture to ask honourable members to allow this system to go on. It costs less to cultivators; it means three times less cost if the honourable member, Mr. Bhopatkar's suggestion of three hand copies is accepted. Further, the cultivator will get three copies instead of the one he gets at present at a higher cost, and which, as has been pointed out by the Honourable the Home Member are practically indestructible. For these advantages, the Council will be well-advised in voting for this demand.

Mr. N. E. NAVLE: 4 annas a copy?

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, last time when this item had come before us in the October session as a supplementary grant I had opposed it because the manner in which it was placed before the House was not proper. At that time I had said that I did not find any fault with the scientific aspect of the system. Even to-day I say that if the scientific aspect of the question is to be looked at, it is certainly far superior to the ordinary hand-copying process. It has various advantages. First of all, if the original document is lost and the transactions are to be proved by handwritten document, then it becomes very difficult to find out if there is to be any fraud or forgery. But in the case of a photo which is an exact reproduction of the original document the chance of fraud or forgery is altogether eliminated. Another point is that a document written with ordinary ink having iron in it does not impregnate the fibres of the paper itself as the scientists say. If ordinary handwritten paper is subjected to chemical action it can be washed out, but under the photo system even if the paper is subjected to that treatment by employing further chemical process, what is washed out can be reproduced, because the fibers of the paper are impregnated under the action of the rays of the sun. So, scientifically it is certainly far superior to the ordinary system of copying documents by writing them by manual labour. Another advantage is that it is a great saviour of time. Suppose a document is there extending over 20 pages and you have to copy it each time, then each reproduction takes two or three hours ; but under the photo process what happens is that one glass is prepared and you have to put the paper under it and expose it to the sun and in five or ten minutes you can have a fresh copy. This ordinarily would require three hours for one copy under the hand-copying system and three copies would require nine hours. But under the photo-copying system this can be done in half an hour. It would save time and labour.

The honourable member for Satara was using one big word and that word was "machinery" employed in photo-copying system. That word machinery is a very big word and it creates pictures of similar heavy machines and rotary machines which are perhaps used in a press. I have visited the photo-copying press in Poona on behalf of the non-Brahmin party to examine the process, and I can tell honourable members that the only machinery that is in use there is nothing but a large piece of glass and one lens. That is the only important part of this whole system. There is no camera. The glasses are fixed in the wall of a dark room and in front of it there are screens on which the documents are hung up and behind the lens in the dark room there is another frame, on which the glass on which the image is taken is placed. This is the part of the whole machinery. The image of the document outside is taken on the glass which is inside. Now you may perhaps be under the mistake that the glasses may become useless. But that is not so. This is what is called the wet process ; that is when you have taken the impression on the glass and produced copies from them, those glasses can be washed quite clean and re-used. Therefore the only expensive item in this whole system is the chemicals that are used and the paper. There is every likelihood of these chemicals, as the chemical industry advances, being obtainable in India. Whether it is possible to have paper in India I am not able to say. But looking at this point one has to admit that the great impression which is created in the mind by some words is not actually to be found when one goes and sees things there. Therefore one can say that the system has many merits and perhaps in the interests of economy and progress it will be far better if we continue this process for a little more time until we come to a final decision.

Now, what are the defects ? The defects are that some people do not like the size of the copies. It is very small. I have got the report of the Registration Department for the year 1922 in which a sample of the photo paper is given. This is the size of one page. It is certainly very small, but it is perfectly legible. I admit at the same time that the size is so small that people do not like to have it. Now Government comes forward and says if you do not want small size we can give you big size. Then the question of economy arises. At five annas a page Government can give us a small size but if Government give us a full size of a foolscap, I maintain that the system will not prove as economical as Government represent it to us. Therefore at present we cannot definitely say that there is really economy to the public at large, because with this size the public is in disfavour. If we want larger size the cost becomes prohibitive. Therefore one has to find out whether one should allow Government to proceed in their own way.

Another difficulty is about throwing out the men that are in actual employment of the Registration Department. The Honourable the Revenue Member has told us that some of these men who are thrown out of employment are re-employed. I have brought one case to the notice of the Inspector-General of a man who was actually thrown out of work, but in his case unfortunately though he had better claims, his claims were ignored and another man was given preference in this temporary vacancy. I mentioned the fact to him and he was not much moved. So the idea of throwing these men out of employment must be looked into. There are real grievances. We are passing through very hard times. We must at the same time remember that India is a country where the human element is in abundance. You cannot introduce these time-saving devices simply to throw out of employment people who are already employed. You are thereby increasing and magnifying the hardship from which people are already suffering. If you want that people should not be thrown out of employment all at once, it is for you to introduce this system gradually so that the people who are actually in employment will not feel the harshness of the measure.

Another point I have to mention is that Government have proceeded far in advance of the wishes of this House. I may refer to the Government Resolution No. 528A of 26th January, by which Government have already sanctioned that this process should be gradually extended throughout the presidency. I say that the Registration Department is a transferred subject, and if the people have a grievance about the system, then, without consulting the people, without giving an opportunity to the representatives of the people to place the views of the public in this House, why is this particular process thrust upon them? Certainly, Government ought not to have passed that order, without obtaining the sanction of this House. Registration is a transferred department, and the popular element in this House must ventilate what the popular view is. For these reasons, I say that we have proceeded so far in the adoption of this process that we cannot now retreat from it, and it will be our duty to grant the item before this House, but we must do it only on one condition, namely that this system is not extended in its scope, that is, it is not made applicable to any other areas than those where it is actually worked to-day, for some time more; after a year or two, when more experience will have accumulated, when we can examine the prejudices and the merits of this system with a cool and temperate head, then perhaps Government can obtain the sanction of this House and make it applicable to the whole presidency. But, without the consent of the representatives of the people I request Government not to go on in this fashion. If the Honourable Minister in charge gives us an undertaking that, during the course of this year, he will not introduce this system in any further talukas, I think I shall be very happy to support the demand that he has made.

Mr. ABDUL LATIF HAJI HAZRAT KHAN: Sir, I move for a closure.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I accept the closure and call upon the honourable mover to reply.

Mr. R. G. SOMAN (Satara District): Mr. President, I shall not be long in my remarks, because what I find is that honourable members of this House have discussed the question from both points of view. The honourable Government members have said that it is still an experimental measure and it requires further trial. Some of the non-official members, it appears, have been dazzled by the scientific aspect of the question—that the copies produced by the photo-copying system are much better and more durable, that the impression enters into the fibres of the paper, and so on. But, so far as the copies are concerned, we must first of all look to the economic side of the question, and then to the other questions, as to whether the system can be improved in any way so far as the scientific side of the question is concerned, and whether the copies should be of a larger size. The last is a point on which Government members have expressed themselves favourably. But so far as the full size copy is concerned, I have heard from some of my honourable friends that even at present there are orders that if full size copies are required by any applicant, they should be supplied at a higher cost. If that is so, then certainly the full size copy would require something more to be paid for by the applicant, and he will be saddled with greater cost in the matter of such a copy. But, so far as the ordinary economic side of this question is concerned, the Government officers as well as my non-official friends are forgetting one fact, and I hope that the Honourable Minister will make it clear in his reply. I should like to know whether, when the copies are sent to the applicants, the postal charges are included in the copying fees, or whether they are over and above the copying charges; and if we take into account the postal charges, then certainly, so far as I am informed, the charges will be much higher. If we take into account this circumstance, then I submit that the photo-copies that are now supplied are, so far as I am aware, not certainly cheaper than the hand-written copies, and I expect the Honourable Minister to explain to the non-official side of this House by giving statistics, as to what amounts have been spent in postal charges. The non-official members will understand the process if I give one illustration of one registration office. If a document is presented in the registration office at Satara—I take the instance of Satara—it has to be sent from Satara to Poona for being photo-copied. Then of course, the copy has again to be sent to the Satara office for preservation there in the sub-registrar's office, and one copy has to be sent to the taluka office. When the applicant applies for a copy, the Poona office has to be written to, the copy is prepared there, and that copy has to be sent from Poona to Satara, from where it is posted to the address of the applicant. So this postal charge, in addition to the copying fees, is included in the charge to be recovered from the applicant. That is my information; but I am speaking subject to correction. If the Honourable Minister gives us any statistics to show that it is not so, I shall accept it. But I submit that to my mind the charges are more than the ordinary copying charges.

Then, I was surprised to hear the remark of the Honourable the Revenue Member when he said that there were no complaints since the year 1922, and he says this from the report of the Inspector-General of Registration. Who is to complain? The sub-registrars are to complain, they are to complain to their superior officers? I submit that they would never do that, if we look to the ordinary course of human conduct. A subordinate complaining to the superior officer that the system should not be introduced is a thing that would never happen. But, so far as the Honourable the Revenue Member is concerned, he has found it out from the non-official members of this House. On several occasions when the question arose in this House, he has found that the non-official side of this House was opposed to the introduction of this system, and still he has the boldness to say that there are no complaints raised by the public. I am simply surprised at this statement of the Honourable the Revenue Member. So far as the other aspects of the question are concerned, they have been discussed by both sides of the House, and I do not wish to take more time, but I have to state only one more circumstance.

The Honourable the Revenue Member put a question to my honourable friend from Poona as to what would be the cost of any more copies, if they were supplied to the executants. So far as this system of additional copy to the executant is concerned, he must be aware that it was in vogue up to some time ago, and it is only now that it has been discontinued. So, I submit Government should not have any objection to the suggestion of the honourable member from Poona in this respect.

It was stated that two per cent. of the documents were not amenable to the system of photo-copying, and that was on account of the different kind of ink that was used. Now, look at the ordinary experience; look at this question from the viewpoint of a practical man. If a man goes to the sub-registrar's office, he is asked to have the document written in a particular kind of ink. If that ink is not at hand, then he is asked to get it from the bazar, and he is sent back once, twice, thrice. That I know from personal experience having had occasion to move among persons who have got to execute documents in the registration office, and it is not under the instructions issued by Government that the people have to use special inks, but, if I may say so, it is under the direct or indirect compulsion of the registering officers that the people have to do that. And that again adds to the cost. Perhaps it may again be a monopoly in favour of some English firm preparing these special inks. If people do not use those special inks the firms from Europe or England cannot monopolise. As some honourable member said, there would be a day when chemicals would be prepared in India and every one would be proud of that day, but, so far as the present circumstances are concerned, it is favouritism which is being shown to the foreign firms by introducing this system and by indenting cameras, special inks, chemicals and all these special things, and the costs are being saddled on the poor ryots of this Presidency.

With these remarks I appeal to the non-official members of this House to vote for this motion of omission and reject the demand that is made for Rs. 12,000.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Which Minister or Member is to reply, Sir ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Yesterday a question was raised and as it is a very important point of procedure, I should like to explain what the procedure is according to the Standing Orders. When a general demand is made by one Member of Government, it is as far as I can judge for the mere purpose of enabling honourable members to move motions for reduction or omission. It becomes side-tracked for the time being till the question has been examined in detail and all the motions on that general demand have been disposed of. Then, the motion for the actual demand is submitted afresh; and voted upon. The preliminary motion that is made for a demand is a motion merely to enable the House to deal with all the motions of which notice has been received for omissions or reductions ; otherwise the fundamental principle that no negative motions could be allowed would apply. If the original motion was held to be proposing an actual demand for that amount then the motion for omission would be a direct negative. Therefore, the procedure laid down is that the original motion is placed before the House for the purposes of enabling honourable members to deal with motions for omissions or reductions. The motion before the House on each occasion is that particular proposal for the purpose either of reducing a grant or for omitting it. That being the real procedure, I hold that Chapter V, 9, applies, clause (3) of which says :

“ The mover of a motion,”—in this case the honourable member Mr. Soman—“ but not the mover of an amendment other than an amendment of a Bill or of the Standing Orders, may speak a second time on the conclusion of the debate by way of reply ”—because it is a direct motion and not an amendment on which the honourable mover is allowed the right of reply. The Standing Order continues to lay down : “ and if such motion is moved by a non-official Member, ” as is the case at present, “ the Member of the Government in charge of the Department concerned shall have the right of speaking after the mover has replied whether such Member of Government has previously spoken in the debate or not.” That clearly applies, and, therefore, that Member of Government who is in charge is entitled to reply.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir, as already pointed out, much has been said on the subject on both sides of the House and I need not take much time over the question. I should however like to refer to just a few points which have been raised and which need answering. The honourable member Mr. Bhopatkar pointed out, Sir, as an instance and asked : What would happen if the original document were lost? He thought that the simple remedy was that a copy under the old system could be applied for and a copy could be got from the registration office. Now, my reply to that is this, that no doubt, under the old system if the original document were lost or burnt, as documents were burnt at Ahmedabad and other places, you certainly could get a copy from the registration office, but then supposing after having got the copy from the registration office the executor of the document denied his signature, what would happen in that case? In the case of the photo, the exact facsimile of the signature is there and no attempt at denying the signature could be made at all. Then, the other argument which the honourable member made was that during his long practice at the bar he found only a few documents—if I remember right, he said only two—in which an attempt at forgery was made. I am afraid, Sir, the experience of other members who have practised at the bar is not the same, nor of the honourable Judges presiding over courts. I am not exaggerating but I think in every case a judge has to decide, possibly out of the large number of documents he has got to deal with in it, there may be at least one, the originality of which is challenged. Well, Sir, there was another argument that was used by the honourable member that he had seen documents of centuries old and they were preserved. Those were documents specially prepared, I suppose, in the old regime, as *firman*s or sanads of inams or certain rare documents—and not documents from the registry office where hundreds of documents have to be prepared, and had the system been in vogue in the old days, I am afraid the documents so given out would not have really existed for centuries.

Well, Sir, many of the points have been answered and I would simply submit one thing that the old debate on this question was a full debate and the matter was considered; and there were only ten votes against the system and 50 votes in favour of it. Sir, this honourable House has to decide the question once for all after weighing the pros and cons of the question and in doing so we have to represent the interests of the general public and not of individuals, who may suffer in some instances. The experiment has been tried, it has been found successful, it is cheaper, its advantages are greater than its disadvantages and it is bound to improve as we get along. I therefore ask the House not to support the motion for rejection of Rs. 12,000 as is proposed by the mover.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN:
 Sir, I move for a grant of Rs. 3,40,000 (for expenditure in England under the control of the High Commissioner, in relation to the transferred departments).

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: Sir, may I bring it to your notice that there are other motions under this head?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Those are against the Reserved items, and they will be put when the Reserved demand is made. There is, however, one motion for reducing the total amount to 9 lakhs, from the honourable member Mr. Nariman. I wanted to say something about it if that honourable member had been present. But he is absent, and I have therefore called upon the Honourable Minister to move for the total demand against which there are no more motions of reduction or omission. The motion has been made and I ask the House to vote on it.

Question put and agreed to.

(After recess.)

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Sir, I beg to move item No. 35 of demands :

“ That a grant of Rs. 5,90,000 be made for expenditure through High Commissioner.”

The details are to be found in the White Book, pages 256 to 258.

Question proposed.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh District) : Sir, I move :

When I gave notice of this motion I had before my eyes only the revised estimate of Rs. 70,000 for 1924-25. I did not see then the amount provided for the purchase of stationery in India. Now I find that even after the reduction that I have proposed the remaining amount will be quite sufficient. My honourable friend Mr. Soman is not moving his motion for omitting the whole provision, otherwise it will have been also justified.

There are no particulars given of stores to be purchased. We do not know what kind of stationery and stores are being purchased in England. The note given on page 98 of the Blue Book is certainly disappointing. There it is stated :

“ The current year's revised and next year's budget show a decrease over the sanctioned estimate for the current year ”

What the House would like to know is why the budgetted expenditure of 3 lakhs is in excess of the revised estimate for the current year by 2 lakhs and odd. That is the point on which explanation is necessary. Government are telling us that budgetted provision is less than the amount which was provided for 1924-25. If we look to the provisions on page 234 of the White Book for the purchase of stationery stores, you will find 8 lakhs have been provided for the purchase of stationery and stores in India. If we add 3 lakhs to that provision we get 11 lakhs for the purchase of stationery and stores. During the current year only Rs. 7,41,000 have been spent for stationery and stores. Therefore, Sir, if we reduce this amount by 2 lakhs still there will be in the hands of the Government 9 lakhs to be spent on stationery in India and in England. I think my reduction is very moderate and justifiable. I therefore move that the provision be reduced by 2 lakhs.

Mr. C. W. A. TURNER : Sir, the honourable member has asked why the amount of 3 lakhs has been provided for 1925-26 as against Rs. 70,000 under the revised estimate for the current year. He also went on to point out that there is a provision of 11 lakhs and odd for the next year as against Rs. 7,41,000 under the revised estimate for the current year. I hope I can satisfy him on these points. Before the year 1924, most of the departments and the district officers used to purchase their stationery stores locally and this system was stopped and a new system was introduced in 1923-24 whereby the Superintendent of Government Stationery and Printing purchased stores and supplied them to all departments and district officers. I may also explain to the House why this new system has been introduced. It was found on enquiry that a saving of about 25 per cent. on the purchase of stores could be effected by this system. It is only in pursuance of the policy of economy insisted upon by this honourable House that this system has been introduced. When this system was started the Superintendent had considerable stocks in the Central Offices and was able to meet the requirements of stationery for Government offices for 1923-24 and also he actually spent Rs. 70,000 for 1924-25 because he had a large stock on hand. During the next year he will not be able to carry on without additional stores and he estimates that the expenditure in England will be something like 3 lakhs. As the system is new it is not possible for him exactly to estimate the amount he would require. But the House may rest assured that money will not be spent unless it is absolutely necessary. Further these stores cannot be obtained in India at all. I shall just enumerate the articles that are to be purchased in England :

- Roneo Stencils, Roneo Ink and all other Roneo accessories.
- Straw Boards for binding purposes.
- All drawing materials.
- Typewriter Ribbons and carbon papers.
- Drawing instruments.
- Stationery stores.
- Perro type process papers, and perro pushing papers on long cloth.
- Drawing papers and pencils.
- All colours for drawing.
- Blue and red pencils.
- Drawing brushes.
- Erasers.
- Gloy.
- Drawing Boards and Instruments.

There is also another point. If this item is reduced as proposed by the honourable member the only alternative will be to revert to the old system of local purchases and for that too sufficient provision has not been made under contract grants which have been very heavily reduced. I am afraid the cut proposed is drastic and will seriously affect these items.

I should like to say that this item of 3 lakhs customs duty has to be provided for under orders of the Government of India. This will be refunded and will have to be used for the redemption of debt. These stores include printing stores also.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh District) : Sir, I have not been able to follow the honourable member closely but I understood him to say that the supply which the Government had in stock was sufficient for 1923-24 and 1924-25. We see that they spent Rs. 10,54,000 for 1923-24 and Rs. 7,41,000 for the current year. In all during these two years they spent Rs. 17,95,000, that is about 18 lakhs. If 18 lakhs were sufficient for stationery for the last two years, stationery for 9 lakhs would be quite sufficient for the Government during the coming year, one lakh for stores to be purchased in England and 8 lakhs in India.

I understood the honourable member to say that some machinery was to be purchased. The description of the machinery is given on page 223 of the Blue Book. And the machinery is worth merely Rs. 16,000. I think it does not make much difference, and the House should remember that this provision is in addition to the provision of Rs. 1,60,000 for contract contingencies and purchase of raw materials for Government stores which will be found on pages 237 to 243 of the White Book. So this fact may be borne in mind that this 9 lakhs is in addition to the Rs. 1,32,000 which has been budgeted for, and I think my proposal will be carried by the House.

Mr. C. W. A. TURNER : The honourable member said Rs. 45,000 for Rs. 23,000 ; that is a mistake. That is a new item. The lowest amount for articles.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I cannot allow a speech after the reply of the honourable mover. Will the Honourable the Finance Member reply ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : It is the department of the Honourable the General Member. I am merely asking for a demand for all the departments.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : Mr. President, if my honourable friend the mover will look at the figures on page 258 of the White Book he will see that we budgeted for Rs. 2,86,661 in 1923-24. At the end of that year, as the Secretary, General Department, has explained a new system was introduced, viz., that the Superintendent of Stationery and Printing had to buy stores for the whole of the Presidency. Before that, each district officer bought his own stores and there was a separate provision for each district officer. Therefore you see next year we budgeted Rs. 4,37,000, a much higher figure than 2 lakhs 86 thousand. This demand included all demands of district officers and we pointed out on that occasion that the small amounts throughout the budget were all eliminated, and combined and put in this grant of Rs. 4,37,000. There was retrenchment carried out in the stationery department ; all stores were first issued to officers before any new stock was bought. In consonance with that policy the superintendent found that it was not necessary in the current year to order out more than Rs. 70,000 worth of stores from the High Commissioner as shown by the revised figure. Next year we are asking for 3 lakhs but less than what we asked for originally in 1924-25. As honourable members know, the Government of India have now ordered that the local Government should pay duty on all imported stores and they have promised at present to refund that duty but they have ordered all local governments to use the refunds for redemption of debt. So it cannot be shown in this budget. Therefore the figure of 3 lakhs is a proper comparison with Rs. 4,37,000. This department supplies all the wants of all the other departments.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : I wanted to bring to the notice of the Honourable the General Member that there is a sum of Rs. 500 mentioned on page 24 for customs duty on imported stores under contingencies.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : That is for the Commissioner in Sind. It is a very small item. It is for the Commissioner in

[Mr. Cowasji Jehangir]

Sind. The Secretary, General Department, has explained what sort of goods we order out through the High Commissioner. They are things that are not manufactured in this country, and the Superintendent of Printing who has done exceptionally well and whose services I am sorry to say we might have to lose has taken considerable pains to see that everything that is bought for these departments is strictly confined to things manufactured in this country wherever it is possible to do so. I have nothing further to add. I have shown that we are asking for less than we did when the new system was decided upon, and all this is for effecting economy.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : This amount of Rs. 63,000, customs duties, at page 237 of the White Book, is not for Sind. It is not included in 2 lakhs.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : The demand is a non-voted item ; it is included in the 3 lakhs. The duty is included in the 3 lakhs.

Question put and lost.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Sir, I ask for a total demand of Rs. 5,90,000.

Question proposed.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City) : Sir, I beg to oppose the whole of this demand because I desire a definite and clear statement of policy to be made with regard to the purchase of these stores. This is a very important question, a question of policy with regard to the purchase of stores. Some time ago there was a debate in the House of Commons and some members of that House seemed to be under the impression and they gave expression to the view, that because England advanced some loans to India or that the capitalists of England subscribe to loans in India, that on that account England had claim for preferential treatment in the matter of purchase of stores and other machinery. Sir, we on this side of the House take emphatic objection to this view. We rather hold that capital for the loans that are raised in India should be raised in India, in the shape of rupee loans. However that is a different question altogether. The point which I now wish to make is that we want a clear and definite statement of policy. We desire to know whether tenders for these stores and machinery are open tenders and that no preferential treatment will be given to any particular country.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Sir, I may assure the House that the purchases will be made through the High Commissioner. As this House is very well aware, the office was held up to a short time ago by Sir Dadiba Dalal of this city and is now held by Sir Atul Chatterjee of Calcutta, and we have every confidence that both have done and will do their best in the interests of this country. The High Commissioner has absolute discretion to buy in the cheapest market and the best possible materials available.

Question put and demand granted.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I beg to move for a demand of Rs. 7,000 for expenditure in England through the Secretary of State.

Question put and demand granted.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Sir, I ask for a sum of Rs. 18,000, demand No. 33, for expenditure in England through the Secretary of State.

Question put and demand granted.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Mr. President, I move for a grant of Rs. 11,000 under 51A, Miscellaneous adjustments between Central and Provincial Governments. This refers to the item on page 249.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : There are no amendments to the demand. The Honourable Minister need not go into details.

Question put and demand granted.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, I move for a grant of Rs. 27,41,000.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South) : Sir, I beg to move :
 "Reduce to Rs. 6,00,000 item No. 212, budget page 224."

Sir, this is a grant to local boards for public purposes. There used to be an imperial grant of Rs. 7 lakhs, and I do not know for what reasons the Imperial Government has stopped the grant. Sir, up to now, they could get on with a reduced grant. The reason shown for the reduced grant, which is distributed by the Commissioners of the Divisions, is that there was financial stringency. If it was financial stringency in the past, I think the financial stringency is more acute for the budget under review than in the previous years, and hence, Sir, I propose to reduce the grant from Rs. 7,42,000 to Rs. 6 lakhs, which I think will serve the purpose.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, we used to have, during the pre-Reform days, a recurring grant of Rs. 7 lakhs for communications or for objects other than education for the local boards. After the provincialisation of the finances, as the honourable House knows, our sources of revenue are now quite separate from those of the Central Government. Therefore, the Central Government has stopped all the recurring and non-recurring grants which they used to make to us. That is the explanation for the Central Government not giving us any grant after the provincialisation of the finances.

I thought, Sir, that I had deserved well of this House for pressing on the Honourable the Finance Member the needs of the local boards for various purposes and for communications which are purely in the interest of the people in spite of the financial situation. I am simply amazed to see that when I have tried my best and succeeded in getting more money for the local boards, for which they have been clamouring for a number of years, there is a motion for a cut in the expenditure. If the House does not like it, the Honourable the Finance Member will thank them, and I will be put in an awkward position as it will seem that I have not represented the views of the people properly.

Rao SahebD. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, I oppose the motion. I am rather surprised that the honourable member from Bombay (Dr. Dadachanji) who has been silent up to now should come down upon the local boards, by proposing a reduction in the grants to the local boards, for communications, dispensaries and other things, as has been stated by the Honourable Minister, the grant had been curtailed by the Government, and we have been clamouring both in this Council and outside the Council, and in various conferences to restore the original amount. After all, the Honourable Minister has found his way to do it, and when he has come forward with this grant, I fail to see why my honourable friend from Bombay should oppose this grant. In fact, he knows very well that the local boards are practically starved. They have no funds, of their own, because the people are poor. They are not rich like the Bombay people. They cannot bear any additional taxation. Under these circumstances, they rely upon Government, to whom the people in the districts are contributing most of their revenue, and it is but fair that this grant is given to them.

Mr. D. R. PATIL (East Khandesh District): Sir, I strongly oppose the motion of my honourable friend from Bombay (Dr. Dadachanji). He is a member of the Bombay Corporation, and he has no experience of district local boards. I would request him to buy some land in the mofussil and become a member of the district local board. I think he will then fully realise the value of those grants which are given by Government to the district local boards.

The THAKOR of KERWADA (Gujarat Sardars and Inamdars): Sir, I find some difficulty in finding words strong enough to oppose the motion, when Government have come forward so liberally to benefit the people living in the district local board areas. It is all very well for honourable members from Bombay, living luxuriously in palatial buildings to think that they are doing a service to the country by making reductions of this character, but I can tell the honourable mover that if he comes outside to the mofussil and sees the hardships that the people are put to, I think he will realise that he is doing a disservice to the people. Therefore, I strongly oppose the motion.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City South): Sir, my object in moving this reduction in the grant was to know the reason why the imperial grant of Rs. 7 lakhs had been stopped by the Government of India. The Honourable Minister has stated that several grants have been stopped by the Imperial Government, and it is left to the provincial Government to manage these affairs. That is one explanation. But my honourable friend from East Khandesh (Mr. Patil) says that I should become a member of the district local board. In reply, I should like to tell him that I do not like to become a member of any district local board, because the way in which they manage their business is disgraceful. I ask for leave of the House to withdraw my motion.

Question put and leave granted.

Mr. N. E. NAVLE: Sir, is the word disgraceful parliamentary?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: He did not apply it to any member.

Mr. N. E. NAVLE: He named the member for East Khandesh.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: He did not apply it to anybody.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City South): I beg to move, Sir:

"That the grant of Rs. 15,000 under item 213, page 225 of the Budget, be reduced to Rs. 10,000."

This is, Sir, under the provisions of Chapter II of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1923. This is the first head in the accounts of the Bombay Government. Sir, this is a lump grant only, so why not reduce it? We have also provided—the municipality and the Improvement Trust—a small sum for the purpose, but a big sum is not required. It is not mentioned here on what basis this lump sum is calculated. It is a lump grant. It can be readily reduced.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: The demand is only for Rs. 15,000, Sir, and it is for the purpose of paying compensation to workmen who may be injured and for awards that may be made against Government. If the awards are less, we shall spend less; if they are more, we shall spend more. We cannot go against the orders of a court because the authority who makes the award is for all practical purposes a judge and his awards must be honoured and respected. It is only a question of putting some reasonable amount in the budget; our putting in 10 lakhs and spending only 10 thousand wouldn't make any difference.

Question put and lost.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, I move for a total demand of Rs. 27,41,000.

Question put and demand granted.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Sir, I move for a grant of Rs. 15,65,000 under 47, Miscellaneous. The items are shown on page 243 of the White Book.

Question put and demand granted.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Sir, I rise to make a demand for Rs. 17,68,000 under Head 46, Stationery and Printing.

Question proposed.

Mr. S. S. DEV: Sir, I wish to support the next motion for omission of 2 lakhs from the total demand and therefore do not move mine.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Sir, I beg to move

"That a total cut of 2 lakhs be given to this grant on page 234 of the Stationery grant."

Now, it will be necessary, Sir, to go into the details of the different items that are given here and unless a satisfactory explanation is forthcoming for the considerable increases that have taken place in the expenditure, the House cannot sanction this grant.

The summary of estimates for this year appears on page 234 to start with and on page 236 details of certain branches are given. The total for the ensuing year is Rs. 18, 29,000 against the revised estimate of the year

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

1924-25 of Rs. 14,24,000 : accounts of 1923-24 also show the actuals spent during that year as Rs. 15,77,345, leaving, therefore, a clear difference of 2½ lakhs as increase of expenditure between the actuals of 1923-24 and the budget estimate of 1925-26. Now, we had expected certain definite reasons to be given in the Blue Book for such a considerable increase in this small department like Stationery. But they have not been so given and we have therefore to look to the details that are given on pages 237, 238, 240 and 241 of the White Book. Now, turning first to the Superintendent, we had last year budget estimate of 1924-25 amounting to Rs. 16,800 against actuals of 1923-24 of Rs 15,781 ; no revised estimate figures of 1924-25 are given. I am very sorry that this sort of book-keeping has been adopted this year in many places which is very perplexing. They have got a grant for a Superintendent, for a permanent officer, whose pay is not changed except by way of increment, and that grant is Rs. 19,800—an increase of Rs. 3,000 in one year. It would mean that one officer who remains the same would have an increase of Rs 250 per month when his pay is shown as Rs. 800-60-1,400 ! Then, Sir, turning to the next item lower down, they have got under "Pay of Establishment" 22 clerks—18 clerks last year, an increase to 22 clerks in the present year without any reason being given—at varying rates of pay from Rs. 70 to Rs. 190. Additions to menial establishment again, Rs. 2,933. Customs duties on imported stores, Rs. 63,000. This is an item of customs duties which are intended to be refunded to us by the Government of India. Therefore this item has to be excluded out of our calculation. Proceeding further to the next page, we have a sudden increase of Rs. 2,000, from Rs. 10,938 to Rs. 12,438, against office establishment. Against the composing establishment all of a sudden we have an increase of Rs. 4,000 from Rs. 25,173 to Rs. 29,208. Proceeding further we arrive at page 239, where there is an item of compositors on piece-work, under Government Central Press, Bombay, Rs. 1,35,000. This system of piece-work, Sir, is a system which ought to be discouraged as much as possible. On page 238 we have an enormous composing establishment, 12 foremen, 68 examiners and readers, 51 pressmen, and it does not seem fair that Rs. 1,35,000 should be spent upon composing on piece-work. Then, again, if you turn to the allowances, there is a big item under a new denomination which requires to be explained to the House. We have heard of travelling allowances, overtime allowances, house rent allowances, but we have not yet heard of dearness allowance. Is it a form of compensatory allowance which is at present given in Bombay and Poona ? Dearness allowance is, I think, a new term in the dictionary of the Secretariat : I have not seen it before in any one of the budgets introduced. This is an item of Rs. 30,000. (An honourable Member : Is it for the clerical establishment ?) It comes under "Allowances and honoraria, etc., Government Central Press". I go back to the revised estimates for this year and the accounts of 1923-24, but I find no such item there. This Rs. 30,000 is therefore a new item introduced in the Stationery and Printing department, without any reason whatever and without any previous sanction of this Council, and it is a votable item. I do not think, Sir, that this new item of Rs. 30,000 was ever placed before the Finance Committee, and I do not think it has received the sanction of the Finance Committee. I do not know whether the Honourable the Finance Member himself considered this item of Rs. 30,000, whether it has been introduced under the administrative orders of Government without the sanction of the Legislative Council or what other circumstances. Then, Sir, I come to rent, rates and taxes, which seemed to be zero for the last two years, and are now Rs. 4,000 in the budget. Then, purchase of raw materials, in which the actuals for 1923-24 was 14,858, has now risen to Rs. 20,000, the budget estimate for the last year being Rs. 16,000. We do not know what the actual revised estimate is. But next year it is proposed to provide Rs. 20,000, instead of the actuals of 1923-24, Rs. 14,858. Lighting charges have risen from 18,548 in 1923-24 to Rs. 23,000 in the budget, an increase of Rs. 5,000. Dearness allowance occurs again on page 240, and piece-work compositors again figure in the Commissioner's Press. There is a further sum on page 242 against dearness allowance, Rs. 6,533. I respectfully submit, Sir, that there is no reason whatever shown why this Stationery Department should have all of a sudden an increase of 4 lakhs of rupees during one year. I will put it to the House whether it is necessary to increase expenditure under an establishment, which remains the same, by the introduction of certain items and allowances, to the tune of 4 lakhs. My submission is that two lakhs will be enough and I am sure if the Honourable Member in charge applies his mind to these cases, there will be no difficulty for him in accepting this cut and reducing the budget grant from Rs. 18,29,000 to Rs. 16,89,000.

Question proposed.

Mr. S. S. DEV (West Khandesh District): Sir, I may be allowed to support this reduction. There is a general tendency in the budget to exaggerate and to put up the estimates at a higher figure, and that tendency is more apparent in this department. I find proof of this tendency from 1923-24 down to the budgetary year. You will note, Sir, that in 1923-24, the budget for stationery and printing was for 21 lakhs, the revised estimates were 17 lakhs, but the actual accounts were only 15 lakhs. During the current year the budget estimate was for 17 lakhs, and the revised estimate is 14 lakhs. Therefore, I take it that in the next year's budget there must be a margin for at least a clear cut of 2 lakhs. I could have supported a cut of 4 lakhs, but I thought there would be no room left for the other side to oppose a cut of only 2 lakhs and so I refrained from moving the motion of a cut of 3 lakhs which stood in my name. There is in this department a clear tendency to put the estimates at a higher figure, and you will see, Sir, that there is undoubtedly a scope for a cut of 2 lakhs.

I have also noticed in this department some unnecessary expenditure and waste going on. Only recently one instance has come to light and there may be many more which have escaped our notice. An instance of it was furnished the other day when this small book was placed on our table. The book is entitled "Bombay Legislative Council, 1925". It is certainly a handsome book. As I have some interest in a printing press at Dhulia, I have decided to take this book with me as a sample of good printing and good binding. It is so neatly bound and the printing is so elegant. But I maintain that this is certainly an unnecessary expenditure. The book gives life sketches of the honourable members of this House. What is curious is that these sketches are said to be furnished by the members themselves. But, Sir, we know the honourable members better by the part they take in the debates in this Council and by the lobbies they go to to record their votes, than from this book. Take for instance the name of the honourable member, Mr. Bunter. His life sketch consists of three words. We could well have afforded not to know it. We have come to know him much better than the description given of him in this book

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I find, Sir, that the page about the honourable member, Mr. Dev, is blank. It is regrettable that there is no information about the honourable member.

Mr. S. S. DEV: Certainly, it is bound to be so. It is said, Sir, that this is an imitation of a parliamentary practice. I maintain, Sir, that it is premature to imitate such parliamentary practices. There can be no comparison between M. L. C.'s and M. P.'s. We are too small and insignificant people. We have absolutely no control over the transactions of Government. It may tickle but we don't deserve such notices so as to justify any expenditure over them. Let Government therefore refrain from this expenditure. At any rate, there is sufficient room for a cut of 2 lakhs in this department, as the budget has shown, and I therefore most heartily support this motion.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): Sir, I have only one remark to make, and that has reference to what the honourable member the Deputy President said about the system of piece work for the compositors. I have received complaints with regard to the system in Karachi, and there is a lot of discontent among the compositors in the Commissioner's Press, and the matter calls for enquiry. There is discontent because the compositors in Karachi are receiving far less than they do in Bombay, and because the system is inequitable. I cannot go into the details, because I have not studied the matter, but the matter calls for careful enquiry.

Mr. D. R. PATIL (East Khandesh District): Mr. President, I concur with what my honourable friend has said so far as this grant is concerned. From the White Book we can see that the budget estimate for 1924-25 was Rs. 17,72,000 but the revised estimate is only Rs. 14,24,000. From this we can naturally infer that the figures were estimated higher than the actuals. Therefore, on the principle of economy, I hope Government will be pleased to reduce this amount by a reasonable cut.

Mr. C. W. A. TURNER: Mr. President, the honourable member the Deputy President made certain comments on certain items and he asked for certain explanations. I will endeavour to do my best to give him the explanation he requires.

[Mr. C. W. A. Turner]

The Honourable the Deputy President referred to page 238 of the White Book and said that there is an increase in the provision for the three assistant managers during the coming year. This increase is due to the increments to which those officers are entitled under the time-scale. The same argument applies to the item of Rs. 25,000 which has been increased to Rs. 29,000 for the next year. Then he referred to the question of engaging temporary compositors and said that it was an unfair system and unnecessary when we have got a large permanent staff. I must point out to the House that in the Central Press, the superintendent has to meet extraordinary demands, especially during the budget time and during the sessions of this House. The work has to be done at high speed and the only way to do it is by appointing temporary staff. I hope the House will admit that unless the work is done at high speed it cannot be finished.

I should like to reply to the arguments advanced by my honourable friend Mr. Adwani. He asked why a higher rate is paid to the staff in the Government Central Press than in the Commissioner in Sind's Press. There has never been pressure of work in the Commissioner in Sind's press comparable to what frequently happens in the Government Central Press. It is only fair therefore that you should pay a higher scale to the staff in the Government Central Press when you work them at high pressure.

I am really surprised that the honourable member the Deputy President had not taken the trouble to refer to last year's White Book with regard to dearness allowance. There he will find that a provision of Rs. 44,000 is made for dearness allowance. I am afraid through mistake in the Accountant General's office it has been omitted in this year's White Book. This dearness allowance was started at the time when the pay of all establishments in view of the rise in the cost of living was revised. The Superintendent of Government Printing and Stationery instead of revising the pay according to the rate which was given in all Government offices in Bombay gave relief to the staff by introducing a system of dearness allowance which was calculated on the current prices of articles. Last year it was Rs. 44,000 calculated on a basis of a 15 per cent. rise in prices. For the ensuing year the provision has been dropped to Rs. 30,000, because there is a reduction in the percentage rise of prices from 15 to 10. The actual provision is less than that of last year by Rs. 14,000. If the prices still go down in the current year, next year we will find a still further reduction in the provisions. In the interest of economy this allowance is retained.

As regards rates and taxes, owing to the absence of a proper building of our own, we have got to locate our extensive book depot in a bungalow in Poona and we have got to pay the rent for it.

With regard to stationery materials, I have already pointed out that the Superintendent had large stocks which have now run short. He has got to provide for a greater demand than he anticipated in his past year's charges.

[Mr. C. W. A. Turner]

As regards the lighting it has increased from Rs. 18,000 to Rs. 25,000 and Government cannot control this expenditure. The rates are fixed by the electric supply companies and they are according to the rates charged to the public. In this respect Government and the general public are in the same boat.

That concludes the special items on which the honourable member the Deputy President wanted explanation. As regards the dearness allowance in the High Court Press and Yeravda Press, I have already explained the nature of the allowance and I think it is only fair that we should give these people a living wage, when the prices are high.

Mr. G. WILES: Sir, I wish to say one word with regard to this department on behalf of the Finance Department. If there is any department of which we have reason to be proud for the saving it has effected it is the Stationery Department. The Superintendent, who, unfortunately, is leaving us shortly, has saved lakhs to Government by his efforts for economy. The reduction in expenditure which you find in past budgets by about 3 lakhs is directly due to the Superintendent's effort. By the introduction of the new system of central distribution we have effected a saving of lakhs and we are now going back again to the figure at which the estimates stood three years ago. Mr. Coombs has during the last year or two been distributing stationery to all departments throughout the presidency from the Central Depot. But we cannot go on supplying from the same store for ever. The old store from which Mr. Coombs has been distributing has now to be replenished in order to enable us to continue the work of economy in this department, which we have been carrying on during the last three years.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Eastern Sind): Sir, I am not prepared to withdraw my motion, because all the explanations given have turned out to be wrong. The honourable member the Finance Secretary has been unable to give the saving effected in this department. We would have been very thankful to him if he had explained to us and indicated on the Budget the directions in which this economy has been effected. We have nothing before us to show that the stationery store is being replenished and that a special amount is needed for that. Therefore I submit that so far as this amount is concerned, beyond that fact that the honourable members on behalf of Government have verbally stated, we have no evidence on record to show that the policy of economy is being followed in this department. When the General Secretary told us that dearness allowance for the last year was Rs. 44,000 and Rs. 33,000 this year, I turned to the revised estimate to see the figures but I found the columns blank. The total expenditure for this year is given, under all heads where expenditure has been incurred if any, though details may be blank. I find in the budget estimate that under the head of allowances and honoraria there is a provision of Rs. 46,360 for the year including Rs. 30,000 under discussion; but the figure given in the revised budget estimate is Rs. 21,000 only. Rs. 2,000 can by no means include

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

Rs. 44,000 said to be spent on dearness allowance. Then Sir, we are told that the dearness allowance has been in existence throughout, but we find it nowhere even in the accounts of 1923-24, which shows the actual amount spent. Dearness allowance is not shown in the actuals of 1923-24 nor is it shown at all in the revised estimates. Therefore the totals based on their absence should be manifestly wrong, a fact which we cannot assume on the mere word of the Secretaries. I have reason therefore to suppose that, in spite of the explanations of the General Secretary, that this item should not exist. From the figures placed before us we find a great deal of difference in the totals of 1923-24, 1924-25 and 1925-26. There should not be any difference in the totals I have given on page 234 of the White Book. Even if we accept that the Accountant General has by mistake omitted to enter those columns, the Finance Department must have taken all care to see that the correct estimates and expenditure of the previous year are entered. Under the circumstances it is not fair to attribute this mistake to the Accountant General. I request the honourable member to effect reasonable reduction in the expenditure of this department. Another explanation of the General Secretary will not appeal to anybody. It is with reference to the increase of Rs. 3,000 in the pay of the Superintendent. There is only one on Rs. 800—60—1,400. Last year's budget was Rs. 16,800 and it is raised to Rs. 19,800. If it is the usual increment of Rs. 60 it cannot amount to Rs. 3,000 per year which means a promotion of 250 per month, it is not an increment. It cannot be. One officer cannot have an incremental promotion of Rs. 3,000 in one year. If it is an increase of 60 in the pay, there will be a rise of 720 only per year. I refuse to accept the explanation. The honourable member in charge ought to tell me how Rs. 3,000 could be increased in one year. In view of these figures still unexplained I maintain that the department is capable of reducing its expenditure.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: Sir, I realise how my honourable friend has been somewhat misled about the provision for Rs. 30,000 for dearness allowance and he was perfectly justified in his remarks. It was the fault of the Accountant General and it so happened that I was misled too, and had to send for the Superintendent from Poona to come and explain, and it was not till he referred me to the budget of 1923 in last year's White Book, that I was convinced and here is the last year's budget, "dearness allowance Rs. 44,050" and I put that figure in pencil on that very day on my White Book. Well, Sir, as regards the reason of putting dearness allowance in the budget, it was done in the interests of economy, and it was suggested by the Superintendent of Printing. He thought that instead of putting up the salaries as has been done in all other departments he would put them up by a percentage less than in the other departments and also provide for this dearness allowance, so that there could be some elasticity about it. This is the only department in which this has been allowed. The result is that we budgetted for Rs. 44,050 and paid that in the current year, but we are budgetting for 30 thousand for next year. The Deputy President has also referred to the Superintendent's pay which is at Rs. 19,800 having risen from Rs. 17,000. It is merely through oversight that the General Secretary forgot to explain that item. The explanation is that we did raise the pay of the Superintendent as a special case in consideration of the economies effected, but I am sorry to say that he will not be in Bombay to claim this higher pay as the Government of India have taken him on Rs. 2,000 a month. Therefore, this budget item will be reduced when his successor is appointed.

Now, Sir, I will just refer to one more point before I conclude because the General Secretary has not referred to it. The Deputy President referred to another increase; he said that last year we budgetted for 18 clerks whose pay was Rs. 17,392 and it has risen to Rs. 25,786. That is perfectly correct, but a little lower down he failed to see that we had budgetted for Rs. 5,000 more for 8 clerks which are omitted for next year. That is the explanation. It is only shifted from one part to another part of the budget. As to economy, what I would point out to the House is.....

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Those are book entries.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: They have been combined. I would point out that for Stores reserved, in 1922-23 the figure is Rs. 6,11,000, the revised figure for 1924-25 is Rs. 4,12,000, a saving of 2 lakhs. That is the saving that the Finance Secretary referred to. I have nothing further to say. I am very glad to have the corroboration of the Secretary of the Finance Department that they have been thoroughly satisfied with the working of this department.

Question put and lost.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Sir, I ask now for a grant of Rs. 17,68,000 for Stationery and Printing.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Sir, I move for a grant of Rs. 57,17,000 for Superannuation Allowances and Pensions. The items are shown on pages 96-97 of the Blue Book.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Sir, I beg to ask for a grant of Rs. 53,60,000 for Famine Relief and Insurance.

I was asked by several honourable members to explain the general policy of famine relief and of the famine insurance fund during the general discussion. It was not possible to do so at that time. It would have taken too long. I should like to ask the House and yourself, Sir, whether it would be desirable that I explain that now or whether I should explain that on the two motions of which notice has been given. I am entirely in the hands of the House, and I shall do exactly as they please.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the amount of Rs. 42,39,000, for other expenditure in the Civil Department on Famine Relief, be reduced to Rs. 42,00,000.

[Dr. K. E. Dadachanji]

Sir, on page 95 of the Blue Book, in paragraph 180, entry No. (5) reads "Other expenditure in the Civil Department on Famine Relief". No explanation is given how this other expenditure comes to Rs. 42,00,000. It is nowhere accounted for, and no explanation is given. I should like to hear from the Honourable the Revenue Member an explanation as regards this item, and also about the general policy as regards famine relief that is being pursued by this Government.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: May I explain the policy at once, Sir, so that I shall have the benefit of the suggestions of my honourable friends opposite?

It is perfectly true that in the year 1925-26 it is proposed to put down Rs. 42 lakhs and odd, the sum mentioned by my honourable friend opposite, into the famine relief fund. That has been done with a purpose, and I shall explain why it is that this large sum is put there. Under the Devolution Rules, the Government of Bombay, like several other provincial Governments who have to lay aside smaller amounts is bound to lay aside every year Rs. 63,60,000 for the purposes of famine relief or for accumulating a famine insurance fund, until that fund reaches a total of Rs. 4 crores. There are certain provisions in these Devolution Rules which determine in what manner this sum is to be expended, if there is a balance after defraying the expenditure on direct famine relief. It is unnecessary to go into the details of these rules at the present moment, but if any honourable member raises any question about that during the course of the discussion, I shall be very pleased to give replies. So that, the intention is that we should go on building up this fund until it reaches a total of Rs. 4 crores, which fund will continue to receive interest, and from the interest as well as the capital we can spend moneys on direct famine relief, and also on the construction of preventive famine works. To understand the situation fully and to understand the exact point which the honourable mover has made, it will be desirable to know what has been the disposition of this Rs. 63,60,000 which, under the rules, we are every year bound to set aside. In the year 1921-22 we made a direct expenditure on famine relief of Rs. 27,27,000 and we transferred to the head 55-Irrigation Rs. 40,84,000. In 1922-23 we spent Rs. 2,79,000 on direct relief and carried Rs. 60,81,000 to Famine Reserve 43-B. In 1923-24 we spent Rs. 3,92,000 on direct relief, took Rs. 30,00,000 for 55-Irrigation and took Rs. 29,68,000 to 43-B Famine Reserve. In 1924-25 we spent Rs. 23,60,000 on direct relief and transferred Rs. 10,00,000 to 14-Interest, which represents the interest charges on the Lloyd Barrage, and carried Rs. 30,00,000 to 43-B Reserve.

You will see, therefore, Sir, that during two years, at all events, we have spent no less than 70 lakhs of rupees on 55-Irrigation out of the Famine Fund. We are also committed to paying Rs. 10,00,000 a year for 20 years, I believe, towards the cost of interest on the Sukkur Barrage. There is, therefore, left ordinarily only Rs. 53,60,000 to be spent both on direct relief as well as preventive famine works. Now,

[Mr. C. V. Mehta]

Government propose that in the very first instance, at any rate, the Famine Relief Fund—43-B, Reserve—should be built up until it gets in the first instance to a total of at least 2 crores of rupees. I would like to invite attention of the honourable members to the fact that this sum of 2 crores has not been arrived at by any precise mathematical calculation, but is only a rough estimate of what may be required to be spent in the case of a very severe year of famine like 1899-1900 or 1918-19. I think the Honourable the Finance Member has told you in his opening speech that in the very worst years of famine like 1896-97 and the following two or three years together no less a sum than 7 crores was required to be spent on direct famine expenditure. Therefore, the Council will realise that 2 crores is not a sum too big for the purpose and that, indeed, it is desirable to build it up even till it rises to the extent of 4 crores. That is the reason why nothing, besides 10 lakhs to the Sukkur Barrage, is proposed to be expended on any other large irrigation schemes as was done in the year 1921-22 and the year 1923-24.

I will now come, Sir, to the general question of the policy which this Government are contemplating in the method of famine relief both direct and indirect. In the first place, I would like to refer to the change which we have made in the Famine Relief Code which was revised only very recently and which ought to be ready for publication in a short time. I will refer to only one important departure in the revision of that Code, which, as honourable members are aware, extends over many pages and contains very many sections. This is contained in section 55 of the revised Famine Code and I think it would be advisable if I read out what the revised section says :

"The following rules shall be observed in the management of district local board and municipal scarcity works :—

(a) They shall be conducted departmentally by the District Local Board or Municipal staffs, subject to the general rules.

(b) In case a District Local Board or Municipality has insufficient funds available to finance a useful scarcity work, which it is anxious to undertake, Government may advance the funds required, the amount advanced being made payable by instalments at a rate of interest at 2 per cent. below the rate at which the Government of Bombay may be raising loans at the time plus 4 per cent. sinking fund.

(c) When the cost of a District Local Board or Municipal scarcity work is higher than it would have been if undertaken in normal times owing to the employment of inefficient labour and weakly persons, or the payment of wages, at a higher rate owing to an abnormal rise in the prices of staple food-grains due to a scarcity or famine, the District Local Board or the Municipality shall be entitled to claim a grant from Government to cover the difference between the cost of the work calculated at normal rates and the cost actually incurred... which shall be debited to the head "43, Famine Relief."

I quote this, Sir, because it is an important departure from the present practice and the intention of Government is to utilise moneys from this fund, both departmentally and through municipal and local agencies, in carrying out works of permanent utility, instead of using them on purely famine relief works for the purpose of finding employment only. In the past there have been occasions when it was necessary that such works should be opened. Happily that time has now gone and we propose to ask local bodies to use their own agencies for carrying out these works of permanent utility a programme for which will be prepared beforehand for each district and with the assistance which will be given out of the Famine Relief Fund under the revised Code.

This brings me, Sir, to the actual measures of famine relief which are required in the present times. I am happy, Sir, to be able to say that the work of famine relief now-a-days has ceased to be the heavy direct expenditure which was a feature of the famines of 1896 and 1897. Through the net-work of railways and through the improvement of communications, which enable grain to be poured into stricken tracts at a very short notice and, I think even more important, through the experience which people have now learnt of meeting the shock of famine, it is not required in these days to give direct famine relief on the same large measure or to open famine relief works purely for the purpose of finding casual employment on relief wages, which used to be, in those days, 2 annas per day. The experience gained during the last ten or fifteen years leads one to believe that this direct famine relief is not called for to the same extent as was the case in the past, and that it is now more or less confined to the provision of fodder the prices of which soar to intolerable heights for the relief of cattle and of direct assistance required for the infirm and the old, and the inferior village servants who, owing to the nature of their work, are unable to emigrate. Government consider, therefore, that the direct form of famine relief should, in the first place, take the shape of fodder reserves—fodder reserves of kadbi as well as of grass—and I believe that honourable members will agree with Government that the very best form of relief which can now be given, under the present day circumstances, is the saving of the cattle which are the most cherished possession of the agriculturists and on which the cultivation, when the new rains come, so largely depends. Government in the past have already started schemes for the storage of grass at Dohad and Godhra in the Panch Mahals at Nawapur in the Khandesh district, and at Palghar somewhat further south. By experience we have found that the grass that has been stored at these places is not much relished in the Deccan or in the Southern Division, and that the cattle in these parts are more accustomed to eating kadbi on which they thrive, whereas on grass they are only able to keep body and soul together and not to be in a fit condition to carry on cultivation when the monsoon arrives. (Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmad: What about the prickly-pear?) That of course has been tried. In times of extreme scarcity it is of considerable value and when such scarcity occurs prickly-pear is utilised for the purpose of fodder. But neither prickly-pear nor grass gives the same sustenance which kadbi gives. (Kadbi is supposed to be about 2½ times the value of grass in nutritive value or more and it is capable of being transported if it is baled and shredded as we are attempting to do at Karajgi in the current year.) I may say that I myself arrived at that conclusion after personal investigation in Satara. Having come to that conclusion we tried to see in what manner it was best that we should store the kadbi, at what time it should be stored and in what places. I held a conference with several non-official gentlemen,

[Mr. C. V. Mehta]

representative of the various tracts which are liable to suffer from famine. I had the Director of Agriculture find out for me the places where surplus kadbi is available. We also examined whether the storage of kadbi through co-operative means would not be an excellent method of fodder storage, and we came to the conclusion that all the means that are at the disposal of Government and of the public should be utilised in order to store the surplus kadbi which in good years is available and which sometimes in some places even goes to waste. There is a reason why people do not stock this kadbi themselves in very large quantities on account of the fear of incendiarism. I do not say they do not stock it: on the contrary the fact that people are used to stocking it in several parts gives every hope of success to this idea of stocking on a large scale through Government agency in order that it may not only be used in the locality where it is held but also transported and carried to tracts where there is no surplus. For instance in the Satara district, where famine occurs but too frequently, but where there is no surplus of kadbi which can be stocked, it will have to be imported from other districts. Similarly in Poona there is no very large surplus of kadbi, and it is proposed that the stock that is going to be created at Ahmednagar should also serve certain talukas of the Poona district. I entered into negotiations with several non-official members and as a result of conferences we proposed to stock kadbi to the extent of 5 crores of lbs. in the district of Ahmednagar alone. I do not say we propose; I advisedly use the past tense "we proposed", because the shortage of the late rains has unfortunately affected our plans considerably and the scheme can only be put into operation when kadbi is plentiful and prices cheap. Well, we started with the idea of stocking 5 crores of lbs. of kadbi in Ahmednagar through the agency of the district local board. I am sorry to say that owing to the unfavourably late rains, it will not be possible to work up to that full amount of 5 crores of lbs., nor will it be possible as I understood it only yesterday, to purchase kadbi at the rate which we fixed for the district local board, namely Rs. 15 per thousand lbs. I may state that we may have to pay a somewhat higher rate. I may also state that even at the higher rate it is desirable that this kadbi should be stored. The arrangement with the district local board is that Government will advance a sum of 7½ lakhs of rupees which will cover the cost as well as the stocking in a particular way, covering with corrugated iron sheets, etc., the whole amount to be within Rs. 15 per 1,000 lbs., Government to give this loan without any interest and whatever profit the district local board may make on the scheme to be laid aside by the district local board in their own funds for the specific purpose of famine relief. I am sure this is going to give them a profit, and that profit is not going to Government, but is to be maintained by the district local boards for the purposes of direct famine relief. Similarly in Belgaum, Sholapur and Bijapur and Dharwar these stocks are to be held. I do not think it is necessary at the present moment to give the House the details of what we propose to do in these four districts. I need only mention that the storage is going to be distributed, in many villages in each district in order to minimise as far as possible the risk of loss by fire. (An Honourable Member: What about Satara?) Well, Satara has got no surplus stock and must therefore depend upon being able to get whatever is available from the stores that will be made at these other places. We propose to store in such a way that railway transport will be easily possible. An experiment of the cost which we will have to incur in the shredding as well as the baling of kadbi is being carried on at present at Karajgi by Government. When we find out what that cost is, we shall be in a position to see how far it may be transported to places like Satara.

There are other ways of dealing with this storage of kadbi. You can shed or bale it or you can chaff it. But chaffing can only be resorted to in the time of famine at the places where the store exists, and I propose to lay aside a certain sum of money from the famine fund for the purchase of chaffing machines which would be available to the cultivators whenever scarcity occurs in the places where these stores are kept. By cutting up the thick hard ends we should save 30 per cent. of the Kadbi which is now wasted as cattle cannot eat it. In Sholapur we are working departmentally through the collector with the advice of an advisory committee of well known people who are interested in agriculture. In Belgaum we are trying to see whether contractors will not be available to do this storage, so that Government may be relieved of all risk. In Bijapur it is going to be done entirely departmentally. (An Honourable Member: What about Khandesh?) Khandesh does not require any kadbi storage. I will come to the case of Khandesh presently. From our experience of these various methods we shall be able to find out what is the best to be done in the interests of the public and whether private enterprise will not like to come forward to do this work when they see the profits that are derivable from it. With regard to Gujarat, we propose to have grass storage done in various places. We propose in the first place to increase the storage at Dohad in the Panch Mahals where grass is available. In the second place in Kaira also we are considering whether contracts cannot be entered into by which the contractors, will be liable to supply a large part of the grass they get from the 'Kurans' and 'bids' to Government in famine times at certain fixed rates. In Ahmedabad district a contract has already been entered into by which the contractor takes all the liability and supplies to Government at a certain fixed rate. Other negotiations are in progress. With regard to Khandesh grass is available there in any quantity, but it is at a distance and it is not very easily brought to the doors of cultivators.

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI: On account of the raised rates.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Certainly not. In Khandesh the condition is that people near forest areas are quite willing to send their cattle to forests during famine times. This is the best form of protection they can get. This ought to be sufficient with proper facilities.

An Honourable MEMBER: With regard to water supply?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: We are going to do something. I am going to deal with it. If water facilities were made available and cattle can easily go to forests, a specific storage of grass will not be necessary. Storage means money and interest. If we can make use of the forests and supply water facilities I think we can be said to have done all that is required. The Forest Department has been asked to provide water supply in the forests to be financed partly from the famine fund and partly from the grant of the Forest Department. I do not think it will cost very much and whatever money is required can be found from the Famine Fund. The existing stores of grass total 350 lakhs of pounds. In Gujarat alone if our negotiations are successful the store will be more than double this figure. With 5 crores of lbs. in Ahmednagar and proportionate amounts in the other districts of the Central and Southern Divisions which I have mentioned above, the Council will realise how extensive is the scheme which we have put before ourselves especially when it is remembered that kadbi is $2\frac{1}{2}$ times as nutritious as grass. In years of famine prices rise four-fold and they are known to go up as much as Rs. 60. If we are able to prevent them from rising more than double, enormous sums will be saved to the cultivator and yet this large scheme is undertaken not to supplant but to supplement private effort and by no means to interfere with the ordinary trade movement of hay. If we calculate only 10lbs. per day per head of cattle for 4 months during scarcity, we can only provide for 8,000 cattle for every crore of lbs. of fodder. We can thus hope to provide for only a certain small proportion and these must be the most useful animals. I consider that we have taken sufficient precautions to eliminate the risk of fire as far as possible. If Providence favours us I believe that the scheme instead of costing anything to the Famine Fund will in the end give a profit, and that although a portion of the fund will thus be locked up it does not mean that the money is lost. On the contrary I believe that it will be more than repaid with interest. I have now dealt with the storage of fodder and of grass throughout the presidency. I think this is the first step we should take in regard to direct famine relief.

I now come to another important measure which should be taken on a large scale by Government and the people. I refer to the provision of water which I consider to be the best means of relieving the necessities of the people and giving them the necessary resources to face the shock of famine. In the debate which took place in August last I dealt with the question of sinking wells and of giving assistance to people for sinking wells. I explained how small a proportion of the cultivable area is likely to be protected by large irrigation schemes and how in certain parts of the presidency the natural facilities do not exist for large irrigation schemes. It might surprise people to know that the area irrigated by wells even in the Deccan considerably exceeds the area protected by canal irrigation. I have got the figures here but I do not think it necessary to go into the details. The one fact that remains for the consideration of the House is that if we are to do anything to give the necessary support to the people, you must go in for a large and intensive programme of well sinking. What are Government doing in this direction? I will not refer to the resolution that was passed by the Council at the last session, and to the manner in which the honourable members opposite threw out the liberal proposal of Government assistance that was then adumbrated. I regretted it very much and I may say several members opposite also shared my view. But I do not think Government will be deterred by the mere fact that the hand offered for co-operation and assistance was not accepted by the honourable members opposite. It is necessary to expand well irrigation in the interest of cultivators. Sir, (the impediment in the way of cultivators taking advantage of even the present takkavi rules is the great danger of failure of well sinking and that the danger is very great the honourable member for Ahmedabad may not be aware of. Cultivators have often spent thousands of rupees on a well which in the end proved a failure, wiping out perhaps all their resources. In this respect Gujarat stands on a more favourable footing. We have found that the boring activities of Government in Gujarat and North Thana have given most satisfactory results. Over 90 per cent. of the bores have been successful whereas in the Central and Southern Divisions the failures are many. We propose to help the cultivator to sink his well by means of preliminary machines and even earlier than that by water divining for which purpose we have engaged a diviner recently. I may mention at once that the rates for boring will have to undergo a certain amount of change in favour of the cultivator because we are able now to meet the loss that will accrue from the famine fund. The whole of the expenditure on boring and all the loss that I mentioned is now transferred to the famine fund instead of being debited to the head of agriculture the burden of which I used to bear when I was Minister. This liberalisation will, therefore, enable the cultivators when unsuccessful to be relieved of practically the whole cost. It is impossible to estimate what the cost to Government may be of an intensive programme of well boring, because of the many uncertain factors. Water-finding machines are also in use and there is provision in the budget for purchasing some more. We have received an application from a gentleman who did very good work both for the agricultural department and for private parties in Sholapur and various other parts of the presidency, and who has got the gift of divining where underground water exists. We have employed this gentleman at present in Ahmednagar for 2 months to test his powers of divination, and I feel confident that from the papers which I have read and from the discussion which I have had with this gentleman and from the scientific manner in which he treated this subject before the meeting of the Institute of Engineers, I have reason to believe that we shall succeed in this venture, and I think if we do succeed, it will be a very great gain indeed.

An Honourable MEMBER: What is his name?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. METHA: Major Pockson. He is at present employed in Ahmednagar, the worst famine area. The new rates of boring will be published and I have already told the House that the assistance Government propose to give is very liberal. With these reduced rates of boring we shall receive, we hope, a good many demands from cultivators for well sinking. (Tagavi loans will be given and interest as well as capital will only be recovered in the case of successful wells and in the case of unsuccessful ones not only the whole of the interest but a good portion of the capital will also be remitted by Government.) This gentleman on the receipt of applications from cultivators through the collector will go and examine the various sites where wells are wanted. He then makes a sort of chart definitely pointing out the spot where wells should be sunk and whether wells which are in disuse can be repaired, or deepened and brought into use. We propose then to put the boring machines to work at once and if water is found, then the cultivator can at once proceed to build his well with tagai from Government where required. We propose to spend 2 lakhs of rupees on the purchase of 56 new boring machines to add to our present stock of only 27. Some of them are made locally, some of them will have to be imported, and I daresay that honourable members of this Council who raised some objection this morning to the importation of chemicals will not raise a similar objection to the importation of these machines. This expansion must be accompanied by the training of qualified foremen. Having got the necessary number of machines we hope that the progress of well sinking will go on very rapidly and I believe that if honourable members opposite realize, that this is the best way of meeting famine relief, they will help Government whole-heartedly in advertising it among cultivators as the best means of providing full time employment that everybody recognises the cultivator must have. There is nothing better than the provision of a perennial supply of water either by means of canals or wells in order to occupy the full time of the cultivator. The search for suitable subsidiary industries to occupy the spare time of the ryot has been long and difficult, and while I recognise that no efforts in that direction must be relaxed to strengthen the resources of the people, I venture to suggest well irrigation as of most valuable assistance in the solution of this great problem, for after all the best industry for agriculturists is agriculture itself. I must add in passing that the supply of manure will have to be considered in conjunction with a vast increase in irrigation.

The well programme is also meant to supply drinking water in all the villages in the presidency.) We propose that there should be a programme to be worked up to say in the next 7 or 8 years by which every village in each district must have its well to supply drinking water. The honourable member from Ratnagiri made an impassioned speech during the general discussion on the budget, pointing out the extraordinarily small amount of money that is provided in the budget for the supply of drinking water in village sites. I think I must tell the Council that it is somewhat doubtful whether under a strict interpretation of the rules the famine fund can be used for the purpose of drinking water supply in tracts which are not ordinarily liable to famine. It might, however, be a case of seeing how the rules can be made to fit the circumstances, for I believe myself that the inhabitant of every village has a claim upon the famine fund, so that his very first necessity of life, namely, water is supplied in sufficient quantity both in the cold weather and in the hot weather. In the current year we have put in for the repairs of tanks which are to supply drinking water as well as irrigation water a sum of 70 thousand rupees. This sum is larger than was ever provided before by more than 4 times. It will be found on page 63 item 15, other expenditure financed from ordinary revenue. You will see, Sir, that the accounts for the year 1923-24 shows only 16 thousand for this purpose and if honourable members will turn to the White Book, they will find in previous years the amounts provided under this head had been very small indeed. We have asked the commissioners to spend much larger sums this year and to see that the tanks are properly repaired. I would like to refer to the provision of tanks for drinking water purposes in the northern parts of Gujarat. I am happy to be able to say, Sir, that the "Sourashtra water fund" have spent about 30 thousand rupees from private collections for the improvement of water supply in the villages of Dhanduka taluka. I have visited this God-forsaken tract myself and I am convinced that Government must give all possible assistance especially when the people have helped themselves by collecting this comparatively large sum of money from private resources. I hope that the work of the improvement of tanks in the Bhal area will be taken up by the district local board as early as possible and a considerable amount of repair work will be done in the current year when labour is available. The original intention was that work should be spread over a period of 5 years, but I shall be quite willing to provide funds for pushing on the work during the next year or two. There are other means of providing water than wells, viz., small irrigation works which can be divided into two parts. They are the bandharas, bunds on streams, and tanks in certain favourable localities. Honourable members are aware that in the hilly tracts of the Deccan, particularly in the Satara and in the Nasik districts, an excellent system of pat bandharas has long been in existence, for which we are indebted to rulers before the British time. It is probable that the most favourable sites for the purposes of pat bandharas have already been made use of in the days of Maratha rule. But it is conceivable that investigation may show other sites which may still be made use of, on account of the largely extended area brought under the plough during the last 60 or 70 years. I propose that an investigation should be made, and that wherever possible pat bandharas should be encouraged, and those that have fallen into disuse examined with a view to their flowing again. This is possible only of course in the hilly tracts where natural conditions permit it.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR: Can it not be done in the Poona district?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Wherever the natural conditions permit it. I do not think it is the intention of Government to leave out any district from the beneficence of this measure. The money is contributed by the whole province ; it is kept aside as a famine insurance fund ; it is to be used for the people, and in a way which I am sure they will approve, for famine relief as well as for famine prevention. Sir, when I was Minister of Agriculture, I was sometimes presented with this difficulty on behalf of the cultivators, both cultivators individually and collectively in co-operative societies. They came to me with schemes for the bunding up of certain small streams which did not flow perennially, which were sparse of water, but which by means of bunding may be able to keep a sufficient supply to help rabi cultivation in the cold weather. I found it extremely difficult to advise because I had not sufficient technical expert advice at my disposal, and the funds being limited, I was not in a position to employ new staff. Fortunately, through the means of the famine fund, we were able to appoint what we call a land development officer whose particular business would be to examine such schemes wherever they were placed before him and to give the technical assurance that the schemes were likely to be successful, and with that assurance I am hopeful that the various co-operative banks in the presidency and particularly the provincial bank in Bombay would be prepared to advance the necessary funds to the cultivators on long term loans. That officer has only been appointed some few months ago, and he is at present working in the Poona District, a district which I understand my honourable friend Mr. Bhopatkar particularly favours. But I have now come to the conclusion that if we want to make wide impression upon this problem at an early period, it will be necessary to utilize the advising expert agencies in the various districts and not to restrict ourselves to one officer alone. Indeed, it will be impossible for any one officer to cover more than a very small part of each district in two or three years and I do not think it fair that other districts should be made to wait. I therefore consider that the best plan would be for the people to send their schemes of either small bunds or of tanks through the local officers to the Collector who will, in his turn, take the advice of the Executive Engineer of the district and give the necessary assurance which the cultivators want, and then, either by means of co-operative funds or through Government tagai loans, the cultivators will be placed in a position to carry out the works. There is a difference of opinion, Sir, as to protective value of these small schemes of bunding as well as tanks, as compared with large schemes of canal irrigation. It is claimed for canal irrigation that it gives a perennial supply of water, and it is likely to benefit a larger number of people. I myself am somewhat doubtful of this point of view, and I feel that the very least that we can do is to make a proper investigation and of course there are many parts which cannot be reached by canals.

Mr. S. S. DEV : What are the agencies for investigation ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : The Public Works Department agency that I mentioned, in each district. We cannot have a better agency than that or an agency that is more widespread or one which will be able to give more immediate attention to the schemes that may be put forward by the cultivators. I feel that it is essential that Government should examine these small schemes of irrigation, with a view to see for every lakh of rupees how many acres of land are benefited and how many persons are benefited as compared with the huge amounts necessary for canal irrigation. Cultivators tilling their own land have come to me direct without outside intervention, talking to me about their schemes and prepared to contribute towards the cost if the returns were satisfactory and from their enthusiasm for these small schemes, I feel that it is necessary that Government should examine in the first instance and should provide moneys out of the famine insurance fund to undertake these small schemes.

There remains the question of tanks, and I think I must warn honourable members that it is not advisable to build too large hopes on the success of tanks. Apart from their unremunerative character which can be seen from the administration reports of the Public Works Department even in the case of tanks which were built at a very much lower cost than would have to be incurred now. Their value is doubtful as direct sources of irrigation in times of scarcity. It is quite conceivable, however, that these tanks may be of use in raising the sub-soil water round about and in improving the level of water in the wells which has probably gone down on account of the shortage of rain during the last 20 to 25 years. An officer, a district deputy collector, has been appointed to look after the fodder storage scheme in Ahmednagar and at the same time to examine the question of these tanks, with the assistance of the chairman of the district local board—a gentleman whom we all know, Rao Bahadur Chitale, who has taken very considerable interest in the matter.

An Honourable MEMBER: What is the name of the district deputy collector?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Mr. Hulyal. He has been placed on special duty. A word with regard to the disposal of the Famine Insurance Fund for these small irrigation works. The question must be approached with considerable discrimination for while on the one hand certain badly affected villages may not be able to produce remunerative schemes but must not therefore be neglected, on the other hand the scope of these operations must be widened to benefit as many people as possible and in order to do that remunerative schemes be given a certain amount of preference; otherwise the Fund would be soon exhausted without the steady expansion of preventive measures which a turnover alone can give. Cases will therefore have to be considered on their merits, and, as I have said before, people are willing to contribute either towards the capital cost or by yearly payments. I am afraid, Sir, I have been overlong in this matter, but I believe, Sir, the importance of the subject demands a long explanation, and I do want now the honourable members opposite to let me have their suggestions and their criticisms as freely and frankly as possible. I wish them to tell me whether they approve of the Famine Insurance Fund being used on the various projects I have mentioned and to be used in the manner I have indicated.

Mr. N. E. NAVLE (Ahmednagar District): Sir, I want a little explanation from the honourable member. Who are the persons who are put in charge of famine fodder and kadba storage, and who are the persons who are asked to serve on those committees, if there are any committees in charge of this storage? Are any members who are representatives of the agriculturists taken on those committees? Is Government aware that there was a scandal with regard to kadba storage in Ahmednagar two or three years ago, and what steps have Government taken to prevent any such scandals in the future?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I think it would be convenient if the Honourable the Revenue Member makes a note of all the points which different honourable members may make and then, at the end, gives a reply to all those points.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Yes; I will do so, Sir.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA (Ahmedabad District): Sir, first of all, I would say something as regards famine fodder fund. Debt loans are given to Lloyd Barrage out of Famine Insurance Fund. I want to ask the Honourable the Revenue Member whether they are to be recovered, because I understand that the Lloyd Barrage scheme is a productive one and if for the space of 20 years these 10 lakhs are diverted towards that scheme, it would come to two crores of rupees, plus interest on all loans. Then, I have very great doubts about the success of the Lloyd Barrage as a productive work. Now, when the Honourable the Revenue Member spoke about this kadbi and storage of kadbi and subsequent selling of it, even in famine times realising some profit out of it, my heart was taken out of my body.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: I would just like to say a word, Sir, about this point now, in order to remove any misapprehension in this matter. I think I should have mentioned it in my speech. It is impossible to sell it (the grass) at the price at which it was stored. It would only mean that a few people would get the benefit. We have to sell it gradually so as to keep the market down.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA: That is, even if there is a subsequent loss, Government will not, I think, mind it.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: No; that is it.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA: Then, my only consideration is about this small canal irrigation and small tanks. My opinion about this matter is that it is useless waste of money, because these are not continually flowing canals. They are dried up for the rest of the season. They depend on rain water and in famine times there is absolutely no rain water. So at the time of the great urgency—that is in famine emergency—these works fail on which you have spent so much capital expenditure. The great desiderata must be the increase of sub-soil water and utilisation of it.

[Mr. H. D. Saheba]

Therefore, I had moved a resolution in the last year, in the July session, that the cultivators might be encouraged by foregoing a little bit of interest to sink wells and that loss of interest may be debited to this famine fund, then it would be a great help to the cultivators. At present, Sir, my experience about this matter is that cultivators are hard put to it in sinking of wells by taking takavi loans because the rate of interest is considerable, sums of money are returnable every year plus interest; the cost of cultivation from the well water does not give them any large margin for the repaying of the debt. Therefore, if Government will think of foregoing this interest and debiting it to the famine fund, then many cultivators will be encouraged in sinking of wells, and when I said that the owners of unsuccessful wells might be charged for the sums they have taken, my proposition was a great gain to the cultivators because they would think twice before asking for a loan to sink wells in any area where sub-soil water is not to be found or where wells will fail. They will think twice before taking loans. But why in the case of those areas where sub-soil water exists should you not encourage cultivators to sink wells; you are relieved of the anxiety as regards famine in those areas? Therefore, my proposition was a very good one, both in the interests of the cultivators and in the interests of Government. But though it was passed by a very large majority of the House—I think it was a majority of 20 members—still that resolution is flouted. The next day after the resolution was passed I think some question was asked as regards boring machines, and it was elicited that scale of the boring expenses had been increased. I therefore request the honourable member to consider this: that after all the loss on boring charges Government must debit to this fund.

And one other thing. All these borings are useful only when there is a well in existence. Therefore the great necessity is of wells. There are three kinds of wells, artesian, sub-artesian and tube wells. A tube well is not good for irrigation purposes where irrigation has to be done by motes. Artesian well is out of consideration because its cost is prohibitive and the sub-artesian well remains in the field; but it presumes a well in existence for boring purposes. Government should therefore first of all encourage the sinking of wells, and if the present rules do not permit of Government granting tagavi free of interest or at a smaller rate of interest, then those rules should go. I hope the Honourable the Revenue Member will now be inclined to consider favourably my resolution passed in July last.

The THAKOR of KERWADA (Gujarat Sardars and Inamdars): Mr. President, coming as I do from one of the parts of the northern districts of Gujarat to which the Honourable Member has referred in his speech I must, on behalf of the people of those parts, offer my hearty thanks to him for proposing to follow such comprehensive famine policy as he has outlined for the benefit of the dumb masses. This policy, with some modifications and alterations, will remove some of the great hardships which they are suffering. Sir, for the last twelve years I have been president of the taluka local board of Wagra. That portion of the district which runs parallel to the sea coast is in the same position as the Bhal track of the district of Ahmedabad. The hardship that those people are suffering it is very difficult for me to describe. Sir, in those villages people do not get even water for most part of the year after the monsoon is over, and particularly in lean years. They dig a small well in a tank bed and one member of each family has to keep a watch at the well throughout the night guarding the well in which water slowly accumulates during the night. And with all that the water they get is only just enough for their purpose. I further welcome the scheme for storage of grass and fodder. The scarcity of grass and fodder is very acute in Ahmedabad and Gujarat, and particularly in the sea coast villages. People have money, but they do not get grass. I would only suggest one thing, and that is that Government should give tagavi liberally for digging wells in these places and not charge interest. So far as the district local boards are concerned, the Broach District Local Board has made an arrangement with Major Pockson to find sweet water in the Wagra taluka and he is coming there in the month of April and we trust that he will meet with success.

Then, Sir, there is one more point I should like to refer to. In the years of scarcity great difficulty is felt in the transportation of fodder for want of good roads connecting one district from another. My district like many other districts in the Northern Division is suffering for want of communications. The honourable member Mr. Pratt will bear me out in this matter. These communications should be improved, so that in times of scarcity people may be able to carry fodder from one place to another easily and thus save their cattle from the clutches of death.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: Mr. President, I wish to bring to the notice of the Honourable Member in charge of the Revenue Department two things. I find that boring machines for sinking wells are useful to the agriculturists, but the number of boring machines is very inadequate and Government is not able to meet the demands of the agriculturists. So I think the Honourable Member should increase the number of those machines. Another thing is, when I went to Belgaum I saw a contrivance known as the water finder. That is very useful to the agriculturists. It indicates whether there is water on a certain spot or not, and that contrivance is also found very useful to the agriculturists. I understand that their number is very few, only two. So, I would request Government to increase the number of these machines also for the use of the agriculturists.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The House will now adjourn till 2 o'clock on Saturday, the 7th March 1925.

Saturday, the 7th March 1925.

The Council re-assembled at the Town Hall, Bombay, at 2 p.m., on Saturday, the 7th March 1925, the Honourable the President, Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., presiding.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Order, order. Questions.

SIND ALLOWANCE FOR PRIMARY TEACHERS.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they are aware that according to Press Note No. 560, dated the 3rd December 1923, primary teachers in Sind are entitled to the Sind allowance ?

(b) Is it a fact that the Director of Public Instruction has issued orders to the effect that teachers who were not permanent on, or were appointed after, the 1st July 1923 should not get this allowance ?

(c) If so, do Government intend to take any action in this connection ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: (a), (b) and (c) The Sind allowance is admissible only to those teachers who were permanent on 30th June 1923, and whose pay has been fixed according to the scales laid down in the memorandum accompanying the Press Note (vide paragraph 1 of the memorandum). It is not admissible to teachers appointed on or after 1st July 1923. The question of taking action in the matter does not therefore arise.

COMPENSATORY ALLOWANCE : SUBORDINATE OFFICERS IN BOMBAY, POONA, THANA AND KARACHI.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): Will Government be pleased to state whether they intend to grant compensatory allowance to subordinate officers, i.e., non-gazetted ministerial and non-ministerial officers in the several departments of Government in Bombay, Poona, Thana and Karachi, and, if so, when are the orders to that effect likely to be issued ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: The honourable member is referred to the answer given to his next question.

COMPENSATORY OR PROVINCIAL ALLOWANCE TO NON-GAZETTED MINISTERIAL OFFICERS AND SERVANTS.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they intend to give compensatory allowance to the non-gazetted ministerial officers and menial servants serving at Bombay, Karachi, Poona and Salsette ?

(b) If so, when and at what rate ?

(c) Will it be given retrospective effect as in the case of gazetted officers under Government Resolution No. 2837 dated 5th December 1923, Finance Department ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: The question of giving allowances to those officers and establishments which do not already receive adequate allowances, or have not had their pay revised, is still under the consideration of Government.

The granting of allowances to menial servants is not under consideration.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR: May I know why the granting of allowance to menial servants has not been taken into consideration ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: For the reason that those menial servants have had their pay revised, and the pay is now considered sufficient to attract such servants and give them a living wage.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN: May I know approximately the time when the Government will come to a decision with regard to the giving of allowances to those officers and establishments which do not already receive adequate allowances, or have not had their pay revised ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: It is a difficult and intricate question and I cannot give the honourable member a definite answer.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN: I don't want a definite reply: only approximate time.

An Honourable MEMBER: When was their pay revised ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: At different times from 1919 onwards.

Mr. D. R. PATIL: What is the maximum and minimum pay of the menial servants ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: I want notice of that question.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN THE PRESIDENCY.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): Will Government be pleased to state whether they have noticed the growing unemployment in the Presidency, and what steps they have taken or propose to take in the matter ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Government have not so far received any reports indicating that unemployment exists to an extent requiring official interference.

Government's Famine Relief Code provides for the automatic relief of unemployment in time of scarcity in the mofussil. But recent experience has shown that bad seasons send far fewer persons on to relief works than formerly and there is at the present time a scarcity of agricultural labour.

Government are not aware that at present any unemployment exists among the working classes in Bombay City and as regards the middle classes reference is invited to the reply which will shortly be given to the honourable member nominated for Bombay City.

VISHRAMBAG BUILDINGS, POONA.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City) : Has the attention of Government been drawn to the fact that the ordinary amenities and conveniences of life are lacking in the Vishrambag Buildings in the City of Poona ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : A reference is requested to the reply given to a similar* question last Sessions.

NEW ENGLISH SCHOOL AT BHALOD.

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI (East Khandesh District) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many Anglo-Vernacular schools in East Khandesh had unqualified teachers on their staff at the time of their recognition ?

(b) Why the recognition of the New English School at Bhalod in East Khandesh has been withheld ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : (a) The information is not available.

(b) The New English School at Bhalod has now been recognised provisionally for this year and the next.

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI : Will the Honourable Member please direct enquiries to be made to ascertain the number of unqualified teachers in the Anglo-vernacular schools at the time of recognition.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Every school is examined before recognition by the deputy educational inspector and an enquiry can be made then.

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI : Will the result of the enquiry be made known to the House ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : When it is received.

GRIEVANCES REGARDING GRAZING FEES IN EAST KHANDESH.

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI (East Khandesh District) : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the number of applications submitted to the sub-divisional forest officer and the Collector of East Khandesh in connection with grazing fees and grievances arising therefrom ?

(b) If so, have Government taken any steps in the matter ? If so, what action has been taken ?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : (a) and (b) The Collector received 15 applications during 1924 for reduction of grazing fees, one for free grazing on account of drought, and one for refund of grazing fee, charged for cattle en route to the Indore State territory. Out of the above 15 cases, the penal rates were reduced in two cases and in one case the rate was reduced to normal and in the remaining 12 cases the penal rates were confirmed on account of serious cattle trespass or failure on the part of villagers to help in the extinction of fires that occurred in the forests. The application for free grazing on account of drought was rejected as it was found on enquiry that the grievances were not real, and as the supposed signatory disavowed sending it. As regards the application for the refund of grazing fees charged for cattle en route to the Indore territory, it was rejected, as it was found on enquiry that the cattle grazed in the British territory. The Divisional Forest Officer received 18 applications against the levy of penal rates, in all of which the penal rates were ordered either on account of serious cattle trespass or failure to give assistance in the case of extinction of fire and the penal rates were therefore confirmed except in two cases in which they were reversed.

TRANSFER OF TALATIS IN EAST KHANDESH.

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI (East Khandesh District): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the number of talatis in East Khandesh who have been at present appointed for villages including their own native place?

(b) For how many years they have been posted in their native places?

(c) From how many villages applications for the transfer of the talati have been received by the Collector of East Khandesh during the last two years?

(d) How many talatis have been transferred on account of such applications?

(e) Whether one of the grounds urged in these applications was that the talatis had been in their own villages for more than five years?

(f) Were any inquiries made in connection with these applications?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Information has been called for.

GRANT OF LANDS TO GOVERNMENT SERVANTS AND OTHERS AFTER THE WAR.

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI (East Khandesh District): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the total number of acres of land granted since the end of the war to Government servants including military servants and private persons in this presidency, giving the number of acres given to each person, his name, caste, kind of service rendered by him and the villages and talukas in which the lands are situate?

(b) How many acres out of such lands were pasture land?

(c) Have Government made any provision for the villages whose pasture lands have been thus disposed of?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Information has been called for.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I desire to read the answer to question No. 11 by the honourable member Mr. Bole, because I have referred the honourable member for Poona City (Mr. Bhopatkar) to the reply to that question.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Will the Honourable Member please wait till the questions are disposed of. The honourable member Mr. Bole may come in the meantime. If he does not come, then I will try to arrange that the honourable member is able to do so.

SALARY OF PRIMARY TEACHERS.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Will Government be pleased to state—

(1) whether they intend to add the annual increments in the salary of primary teachers to the datum line every year from 1925?

(2) If the reply to the above be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state what action they propose to take in case the local authorities refuse to bear the ever increasing salaries of teachers after the schools are transferred to them?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: (1) No.

(2) The question will be considered if and when the occasion arises.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Will Government be pleased to state in what proportion they are prepared to bear the burden of the expenses on account of increased salary to primary teachers?

Mr. V. N. JOG: Under what section of the Watan Act was this notice issued?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: I may explain to the honourable member that it is perfectly true that the deputy collector issued this notice under section 58 of the Watan Act. He was wrong in doing so. The Commissioner has reported that the notice should have issued under section 45 (e) of the Watan Act.

Sardar G. N. MUJUMDAR: Is it an offence on the part of a watan-dar to lend his plot of land or house to any body for the purposes of conference or meetings of any kind?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : (a) No irrigation schemes has been considered in connection with the Tungabhadra river. Investigations regarding irrigation schemes in connection with the Malaprabha and Vardha rivers were made in 1897 and 1911 respectively. They were abandoned in the case of Malaprabha river as likely to lead to small benefit and financial return against very heavy expenditure and in the case of the Vardha river because of the difficulty in finding a suitable site for a weir and of the submersion of much land in Mysore territory.

(b) No. Scarcity of water occurs in some villages of the Nargund petha and Ron taluka and consequently grant-in-aid to the extent of the amounts noted below have been sanctioned by Government for the improvement of water supply : —

(1) Rs. 15,000 for repairs to the tank at Nargund.

(ii) (a) Rs. 2, 596-5-0.

(b) Rs. 3,722 and Rs. 574-15-2.

(b) A competent officer capable of maintaining the discipline and tone of the school is specially selected. His rank is that of Superintendent of Police.

(c) A special allowance of Rs. 100 a month plus time-scale pay as Superintendent of Police.

(d) It is usual for him to deliver lectures as occasion may require but lectures are not specially prescribed for the Principal.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : My queries in part (d) of the question are not fully answered. What was the number actually delivered by the principal during the year 1924 ? That question has not been answered.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I must refer the honourable member to the answer to (d) as printed.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : In view of the answer given in (d), may I know why the charge has not been given to the district superintendent of police, Nasik ? Why is the district police superintendent not kept in charge of the school in view of the answer in (d) ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Because the district superintendent of police is busily engaged in maintaining law and order in the large district of Nasik.

(a) whether the Government of India have consulted the Government of Bombay with regard to the proposed amendment of the Court Fees Act ?

(b) if so, have the Bombay Government considered this question ?
 (c) if so, have they submitted their views and opinions thereon to the Government of India ?

(d) If so, will a copy of the same be placed on the Council table ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : (a), (b) and (c) Yes.

(d) This Government is precluded by rules from publishing its communications with the Government of India.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD, : Mr. Honavar is 30 years of age and belongs to the Bandi caste of non-Brahmin Hindus.

PLAYING OF MUSIC ON PUBLIC ROADS IN KARWAR.

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that, when in October 1922, the honorary Secretaries of the local Congress Committee of Karwar applied for permission for playing music along with the procession in connection with the visit of Mr. Gangadharrao Deshpande and Mr. Majali of Belgaum to that place, the said permission was refused without any reasons being assigned by the then town magistrate of Karwar ?

(b) Is it a fact that the procession was held without music and that no disturbance to public peace and tranquillity was caused thereby ?

(c) If so, will Government be pleased to state what was the object in not allowing music to be played on the above occasion ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : (a) and (b) In the affirmative.

(c) It is presumed a breach of the peace was apprehended by the Town Magistrate.

TRANSPORT OF TIMBER.

* Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether in Kanara or in any other place in the presidency any of the following kinds of work have been done or undertaken by them for transporting timber from the forests to depôts :

1. Extension of railway.
2. Improvement of waterways.
3. Construction of slides and flumes.
4. Organisation and installation of mechanical road transport.

(b) If so, will they be pleased to state—

(i) the place where they were undertaken :

* This question was asked at the meeting held in October 1924, when an ad interim reply was given.

(ii) the date of commencement and completion of such works in each case and the amount of money expended on such works ;

(iii) whether they are still existing and serving the purpose for which they were constructed ?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: (a) and (b) Yes.

1. Extension of Railway.

(i) A railway was constructed from Alnawar to Dandeli in Kanara, N. D.

(ii) The work was commenced in January 1917 and the line opened to traffic in February 1919; the capital expenditure on the work up to the end of March 1924 is Rs. 8,86,819-0-10.

(iii) The railway line is still in existence and it is serving the purpose for which it was constructed.

No other extension of railway has been undertaken. Projects for a light feeder railway between Potoli and Dandeli in N. D., Kanara, and a 2' 6" gauge railway from Jharia to Pimpri in the Surat Dangs have been investigated and worked out.

The construction of the former was undertaken in the year 1922; but the project was not continued as the Madras and Southern Maratha Railway gave notice of their intention to stop from 1925 onwards their demand for wood fuel for the supply of which mainly the project was undertaken. The expenditure amounted to Rs. 1,89,411. There has been no expenditure on the second mentioned railway.

2. Improvement of Waterways.

In 1917-18, the Kaneri River was improved for floating logs and this proved most successful. The amount spent was Rs. 8,744. Floating in this river is still being carried on.

3. Construction of Slides.

Three slides have been constructed and worked in Gund, West Kanara Division, with great success.

A.—Jogle Slide.

(i) In the middle of compartment XI-10 in Kanara, W. D.

(ii) Originally constructed by Mr. V. A. Coelho, Forest Contractor, at his expense in about 1903 or 1904. Rs. 150 were spent by Government for repairs in 1908-09 and Rs. 14 in 1909-10.

(iii) Still existing, but not used at present as work is not going on that side. It will be used when compartments XI-10, X-19, 20 and 21 are worked.

B.—Old Hologadda Slide in Kanara, W. D.

(i) At north end of compartment XI-6.

| Year. | Amount. Rs. a. p. | |
|---------|----------------------|---|
| 1912-13 | .. 110- 5-0 | (ii) Started in 1909-10 and completed in 1910-11 at a total cost of Rs. 2,701. The marginally noted expenditure was incurred for repairs in Northern Division, Kanara, and a further expenditure of Rs. 1,130-6-0 was incurred in W. D., Kanara, in 1916-17 on transfer of the Gund Range to that Division for blasting rocks which were damaging the logs. |
| 1913-14 | .. 55-10-9 | |
| 1914-15 | .. 138-10-6 | |
| 1915-16 | .. 448-15-0 | |
| 1916-17 | .. 15- 5-0 | |
| Total | | 766-14-3 |

(iii) Now out of use. It was worked for about 10 years. As continuous sliding exposed a large rock which damaged the logs, this slide was abandoned in favour of the present Hologadda Slide.

C.—The present Hologadda Slide in Kanara, W. D.

- (i) About a furlong south of B (the old slide).
- (ii) Constructed in 1917-18 at a cost of Rs. 1,551-8-0. Special repairs, i.e., paving with jamba blocks—were executed in 1921-22 at a cost of Rs. 914-10-0.
- (iii) Still in use and working satisfactorily.

4. Mechanical Transport.

(a) A start in this branch has been made in North Kanara Division. One Steam Tractor and Trailer has been purchased and worked for one working season, 1923-24. The cost of the outfit was Rs. 21,750. The work of this branch is being continued and is very successful.

(b) (i) A Fowler traction Engine was used for transport of timber from Gobral to Tavargatti in the Southern Circle.

(ii) The engine was purchased in July 1912 and it worked till the end of March 1913. The engine could not be continued on transport work as the ordinary Public Works Department road from Travargatti to Gobral, an 8½ mile run, broke up very badly under pressure of it and was quite unfit for further work of this nature. The engine is therefore used for working a saw mill.

The price of the machinery was Rs. 24,698, and other expenses amounted to Rs. 3,304-10-6.

(iii) The machine is at present working in the Dandeli Mill for sawing timber.

(c) A Fowler road train was purchased in 1913-14 at a cost of Rs. 31,014 for the better transport of timber in the Dangs. Owing to the unsuitability of the roads in the Dangs, its use for this purpose had to be discontinued after its first trip. The engine is now being used in a saw mill.

REALISATION OF LAND REVENUE IN KANARA.

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District): Will Government be pleased to state—

- (a) whether they have called for any report as regards the extent and manner of the use of major and minor coercive processes in Kanara by the district administration in realising the land revenue during the year 1922-23 ?

(b) If so, will they be pleased to lay the whole correspondence on the question on the Council table ?

(c) Was the application of such processes made with the sanction of Government ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA.

(a) No.

(b) and (c) Does not arise.

Mr. M. D. KARKI : Did not Government notice that severe coercive measures were taken in realising land revenue in the 1922-23. Did it not come to the notice of Government ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : I am afraid it did not come to the notice of Government.

Mr. M. D. KARKI : Is it not a fact that Kanara was singled out in that year in respect of this matter ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : No ; I don't think so.

MALNAD IMPROVEMENT SCHEME.

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether their attention has been drawn to the scheme known as Malnad Improvement Scheme introduced by the Government of Mysore, the various provisions of which were set out by the District Deputy Collector, Sirsi Division, Kanara, in his report on the revenue administration of his Division for the year 1919-20 (vide extracts of his report quoted in the Land Revenue Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency for the year 1919-20) ?

(b) If so, have they made any enquiry into the said scheme, and if so, what has been the result of the enquiry ? Will they be pleased to place on the Council table any literature dealing with the said scheme that they may be in possession of ?

(c) Do Government intend to take any action in this connection, besides what is referred to by the said District Deputy Collector in his report abovementioned ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : (a) Yes.

(b) No regular enquiry was made ; the District Deputy Collector, Sirsi Division, in his Land Revenue Administration Report for 1920-21, wrote as follows :—

(1) " It is understood that the Malnad Improvement Scheme of the Mysore State which attracted and took away some of the cultivators from Honavar and Siddapur talukas to that State in previous years has not proved a success and is not being worked with enthusiasm. "

(2) " grants of lands are being made in this (Kanara) district to bona fide self-cultivators on very liberal terms, namely, waste lands fit to grow rice and ragi are given free of occupancy price and free of assessment for two years and at reduced assessment for a further term of three years, and abandoned betelnut gardens which cannot be maintained as garden and are fit for rice cultivation are given out on similar concessions at tari rates. In localities where there are no sources of potable water-supply within easy reach wells are dug out and constructed at Government expense."

(c) No.

FOREST PASTURE AND FODDER RESERVE.

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District): Will Government be pleased to state:—

(a) Whether there are forest pastures and fodder reserves either in Kanara or elsewhere in the Presidency?

(b) If so, the places or localities where they exist together with the names, acreage and the average annual income of each of them?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: (a) and (b) The total area of forest pastures and fodder reserves in each district is given in form No. 51-D. appended to the Annual Administration Report of the Forest Department for the year 1922-23 to which the attention of the honourable member is invited. The collection of the other information asked for by the honourable member would require an undue amount of time and labour. Government therefore regret they cannot undertake it.

AREA AVAILABLE FOR GRAZING OF CATTLE.

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District): Will Government be pleased to state the quantity of pasture land available for grazing of cattle in this Presidency?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: The area of land open to grazing of all animals is 3,104 square miles and to all animals except browsers is 9,181 square miles.

Mr. M. D. KARKI: Is this "9,181 square miles" inclusive or exclusive of the forests?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: I think it is exclusive of the forests.

FODDER CROP OR GRASS AREA IN THE PRESIDENCY.

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the area of land on which fodder crops are grown by the people in this province and the average quantity of fodder crops grown per acre;

(b) whether they have found it necessary to encourage the growing of more fodder crops;

(c) if so, what steps have they taken in the matter?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: (a) Attention of the honourable member is invited to the latest Season and Crop Report of the Presidency.

(b) No.

(c) Does not arise.

SLAUGHTER OF BOVINE CATTLE.

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the number of slaughter houses in the Presidency and the names of places where they are situated?

(b) the exact number (or in the absence of exact number, fairly approximate number) of bovine cattle classified according to their kinds that are annually slaughtered for food and hide in each of the said slaughter houses?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Information is being obtained.

DEFICIENCY OF LIVE-STOCK AND AGRICULTURE.

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) What is the existing number of cattle and the area of arable lands under cultivation both in Kanara and the presidency?

(b) What is the present extent of arable lands lying idle and classed as "culturable waste" and "current fallows" respectively in Kanara and in the Presidency?

(c) Whether they are aware that the cultivation of land in this Presidency is seriously handicapped by the great deficiency of live-stock?

(d) Whether they are aware that arable lands are lying idle on account of deficiency of cattle?

(e) If the reply to clauses (c) and (d) is in the affirmative, whether any steps have been taken by Government to increase and improve the live-stock in the Presidency; if so, what are they?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: (a) and (b) The attention of the honourable member is invited to Tables VIII and II in the Season and Crop Reports for the years 1919-20 and 1922-23 respectively.

(c) No.

(d) No.

(e) Does not arise. The attention of the honourable member is however invited to the report of the Committee appointed to consider the question of improvement of the breeds of cattle in this Presidency and to the Resolution of Government issued on it, which will give an idea of the steps taken in the direction indicated by the honourable member.

MILK PRODUCTION.

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) whether any figures are available showing the total production of milk in the province and the quantity of milk available per head of the population?

(b) If so, what is the production and the quantity per head in the Kanara District and in the Presidency?

(c) Have any, if so what, steps been taken to increase the supply of milk in the presidency ?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : (a) No.

(b) Does not arise.

(c) The only feasible step that can be taken is to improve the milking qualities of the animals. This is being done by giving out breeding bulls from Government cattle farms. Government are also ready to give reasonable facilities to bona fide dairying concerns started for the supply of milk to the public.

LAND REVENUE DEFAULTERS IN KANARA IN 1922-23.

*Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District) : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the total number of kabjedars who were defaulters in respect of land revenue in the district of Kanara in the year 1922-23, and whether it is a fact that notices of demand were not issued in all the cases of 3,116 defaulting kabjedars (vide Revenue Administration Report for 1922-23, page 94) on whom the one-fourth fine was inflicted but were issued only in 699 cases ? If so, what are the reasons therefor ?

(b) Are there any special orders issued by Government or by the Divisional Commissioner to the district administration in Kanara to the effect that arrears of land revenue recoverable in any year should be fully recovered with the help of coercive processes, if necessary, before the close of that year, so as to leave no arrears for the next year ?

(c) Have Government ascertained why so many cases of default occurred in that year in Kanara ? If so, what has been the result of the inquiry ?

The Honourable Mr. O. V. MEHTA : (a) The number of defaulters of land revenue, as defined in section 147, Land Revenue Code, was 3,116 during the year 1922-23. Notices of demand were issued only in 699 cases under the usual practice of issuing them only to absentee kabjedars. In the case of others the practice is to give a general warning that one-fourth fine is leviable which is considered sufficient.

(b) During 1922-23 all Commissioners were asked to make special efforts for the collection of the land revenue due during that year.

(c) The number of cases of default was not unusual. In the previous years, no record was kept of all cases in which land revenue was not paid by the appointed date inasmuch as levy of one-fourth penalty or the adoption of a compulsory process was deferred for some time with the result that large arrears were left to be recovered till late in the year. The general warning regarding levy of one-fourth fine enabled prompt collections of land revenue throughout the District.

* This question was asked at the meeting held in October 1924, when an ad interim reply was given.

WATER SUPPLY AT DAKOR.

Mr. LALJI NARANJI (Indian Merchants' Chamber): (a) Are Government aware that Dakor, which is an important place of pilgrimage in Gujarat, is exposed to the danger of epidemics spreading there owing to great inadequacy of water supply?

(b) Have Government had any representation from the municipality of Dakor in connection with inadequacy of water supply there?

(c) If the reply to (b) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state what steps they have taken till now to relieve this source of danger to public health in Dakor?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c) The Dakor municipality requested in 1924 for supply of water to supplement the water in the Gomti tank and Government have sanctioned a supply of about 20 millions cubic feet of water either from the Wangroli or the Matewal tank at the rate of Rs. 2 per 1,000 cubic feet. No other representation from the municipality in the matter has been received.

Mr. G. I. PATEL: May I know what arrangements are proposed to be made by Government for the supply of drinking water at least?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: The honourable member should know that it is the primary concern of the local body. When local bodies apply for assistance, we give them grants-in-aid.

Mr. G. I. PATEL: Just a few minutes ago the Honourable Minister in replying to my honourable friend Rao Saheb Desai stated that the matter of giving grant for water supply at Dakor would be considered. How is the present reply of the Honourable Minister consistent with the reply given a few minutes ago?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: If the local body won't apply for a grant, we cannot take independent action.

Rao. Saheb D. P. DESAI: Dakor being a small village, they may not be able to do anything in the matter and depend on Government to construct the tank.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: If the local bodies do not apply for a grant, it means they are not anxious to have water.

INCONVENIENCE OF KAPADVANJ COURT FOR LITIGANTS FROM HARSOL.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Will Government be pleased to state whether they are aware of the inconvenience caused to the people of Harsol, in the Prantij taluka, by reason of their having to go for civil litigation all the way to Kapadvanj (in the Kaira district) instead of to Ahmedabad, which is nearer and more convenient?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Representations in the matter are under the consideration of Government.

REMOVAL OF LIQUOR SHOP OPENED AT KAPASIA.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA on behalf of Mr. G. K. MAVALANKAR (Ahmedabad City): Will Government be pleased to state whether any undertaking has been given by the Collector of Ahmedabad to the local Khoja community to the effect that the new foreign liquor shop opened at Kapasia Bazaar just opposite the Agakhan Khoja Khana would be removed within a particular time? If so, will Government be pleased to state within what date the said liquor shop will be removed?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: No undertaking of the nature referred to has been given by the Collector of Ahmedabad to the local Khoja community. Orders have however been issued by Government prohibiting the use of the present premises in Kapasia Bazaar as a liquor shop from 1st April 1925.

MURDERS IN AHMEDABAD.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA on behalf of Mr. G. K. MAVALANKAR (Ahmedabad City): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) how many murders inspired by pecuniary motives took place in Raipur A division of Ahmedabad city during the years 1921 to 1924 and in how many of them were the culprits detected and duly punished;

(b) the names of the sub-inspectors of Police during the period in the said division;

(c) whether the Government have taken any special steps to prevent the recurrence of such crimes, and if so, what steps have they taken?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: (a) There were two, both undetected, in 1924.

(b) The Sub-Inspector in charge at the time was Mr. S. K. Karanjawala.

(c) The Criminal Investigation Department was called in to help the investigation in one but not in the other. No other special steps have been taken.

NUMBER OF TODDY SHOPS CLOSED.

Dr. M. M. MEHTA (Surat City): Will Government be pleased to state how many toddy shops were closed in the Surat district during the years 1922, 1923 and 1924 respectively?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: The honourable member is referred to Appendix D to the Excise Administration Reports for the years 1921-22, 1922-23 and 1923-24. Since 1st August 1924 the number of toddy shops in the Surat district has been reduced by 5.

DAKOR PILGRIM CESS.

Mr. W. S. MUKADAM (Panch Mahals District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that Mahomedans and Jains are exempted from the pilgrim cess of Dakor of Kaira district?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state why Arya Samajists are not exempted from the Dakor pilgrim cess like Mahomedans and Jains ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN :
The information is being obtained.

NON-PAYMENT OF MUNICIPAL SCHOOL TEACHERS BY GHOGHA MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. W. S. MUKADAM (Panch Mahals District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the municipality of Ghogha made no payment to the teachers of the municipal schools for several months after October 1923 ?

(b) If so, for how many months were their salaries withheld ?

(c) if it is a fact, will the Government be pleased to state the reasons for such action ?

The information is being obtained.

FORCED DOMESTIC WORK BY WATANDAR MAHARS.

Mr. R. S. NEKALJAY: Will Government be pleased to state whether they are aware that watandar mahars are often required to do domestic work for their superior officers ? If so, do Government intend to take any action in this connection ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : The alleged practice is of very rare occurrence. Where it does occur, it is found to be based on long traditions. Government do not consider it necessary to take any action. If any individual case is brought to the notice of the Collector he will take the necessary steps for giving redress.

Mr. W. S. MUKADAM : Will Government be pleased to state whether they consider this sort of forced domestic labour is a breach of section 374 of the Indian Penal Code ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Will the honourable member kindly enlighten me what is section 374 of the Indian Penal Code ?

Mr. W. S. MUKADAM : Forced labour.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : I am afraid I cannot give any legal opinion. I have stated the facts.

INCOME TAX AND EXCISE DUTY COLLECTED FROM MILLS AND FACTORIES IN BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.

Mr. G. I. PATEL (Ahmedabad Millowners' Association): Will Government be pleased to state the respective amounts of income-tax and cotton excise duty realised from the mills and factories of this presidency during the years 1922, 1923 and 1924, respectively ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Statistics of realizations from cotton excise duty during the years 1921-22, 1922-23 and 1923-24 will be found in the Reports on the Sea-borne Trade and Customs Administration of the Bombay presidency for these years. As regards income-tax collections the honourable member is referred to the Honourable the Finance Member.

Mr. G. I. PATEL: May I bring to your notice, Sir, that when a similar question was asked on a previous occasion, reply was given by two members of Government separately. I have addressed my question to the Government as a body.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have already explained that under the rules questions have to be asked of individual members of Government.

STATISTICS OF INCOME TAX REALISED FROM MILLS AND FACTORIES.

Mr. G. I. PATEL (Ahmedabad Millowners' Association): Will Government be pleased to state the respective amounts of the income tax and cotton excise duty realised from the mills and factories of this Presidency during the years 1922, 1923 and 1924, respectively?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: As income tax is a Central subject, the honourable member is referred to the Government of India.

Mr. G. I. PATEL: In view of the provision of Rs. 3 lakhs on account of the contribution from the Central Government towards the cost of revenue establishment employed on income-tax work, were Government entitled to give such a reply to this question?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: We are not committed to reply, Sir.

COST OF SUBORDINATE INDIAN SERVICES IN BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.

Mr. G. I. PATEL (Ahmedabad Millowners' Association): Will Government be pleased to state—

(i) the total cost of the subordinate Indian Services (Indian Services as defined in the Civil Service Regulations) for our presidency?

(ii) the amount so far accumulated to meet the charges of pensions of such services?

(iii) the annual average expenditure incurred during the last 25 years out of the same amount.

(iv) the surplus or deficit, if any, at the end of each year from the year 1900 to 1924, left after meeting the annual expenses.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: (i) Attention is invited to Civil Budget Estimate for 1924-25 which gives the estimated cost of all subordinate services for the year 1924-25 as well as actual cost for 1922-23.

(ii), (iii) and (iv) No permanent fund for the grant of pensions is maintained by Government. The annual charge is met from the lump provision made in the budget estimates every year which is based on past actuals.

Mr. G. I. PATEL : May I know if there is any surplus of the so-called lump provision so far collected ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : There is no surplus, Sir.

EXPENDITURE ON ANDHERI-CHEMBUR RAILWAY.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN (Thana and Bombay Suburban Districts) :
(a) Will Government be pleased to state the estimated cost of laying the Andheri-Chembur line ?

(b) How much expenditure has been already incurred ?

(c) What return do Government expect from this outlay ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : (a) Rs. 37,61,318.

(b) Rs. 35,23,992.

(c) The earnings to be derived from the working of the tramway service, which, it is hoped to commence early in 1925, will not, it is expected, do much more than cover the working expenses of such a service for the first few years.

It was never anticipated that the line would prove a paying proposition until the areas served became fully developed, and it has, therefore, from the first, been treated as a losing scheme, the interest on the cost of construction being met from the Rs. 4 lakhs per annum set apart out of the cotton cess to cover such schemes.

A special railway betterment charge per square yard on all land sold in areas served by the line is being levied and credited to the construction account which will in time reduce the capital liability to the extent that such sales are effected.

As net earnings and sales of land increase, the demand on the cotton cess will diminish.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN : May I know if at the time the cotton cess was levied, it was intended to draw from the proceeds of that cess to meet the loss on this railway ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : It was for development.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN : When this cess was levied, was it not meant for meeting the loss in rent charges for housing labour ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : A large percentage of it was for housing labour, but not all.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN : Was this scheme undertaken with open eyes that it would be a losing concern ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : Government undertook it with their eyes open that in the beginning it would be a losing concern.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN : It has been stated in the answer that it was anticipated that it would be a losing concern.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: Please read the reply further.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN: I have read the whole reply.

BENCH MAGISTRATES, PALGHAR.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN (Thana and Bombay Suburban Districts):

(a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they intend to appoint a bench of honorary magistrates at Palghar?

(b) Are not the present stipendiary magistrates and the Chinchani bench able to cope with the work?

(c) Has there been any demand from the public for such a bench?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: (a) and (c) The replies are in the negative.

(b) The reply is in the affirmative.

SUBORDINATE ENGINEERING SERVICE.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN (Nasik District): With reference to my question regarding the formation of the subordinate engineering service and the reply given thereto (vide Council Debates, Volume XI, Part II, page 40), will the Honourable the General Member be pleased to state whether orders have been issued on the question of the formation of the service, and if so, to place them on the table?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: Orders have not issued as the question is still under consideration.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN: May I know why there has been this inordinately long delay in this matter?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: I am afraid I cannot explain.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN: It was under consideration even last year about this time. (No reply.)

INTEREST ON PROVINCIAL BALANCE.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN (Nasik District): With reference to my question regarding interest on provincial balance and the reply given thereto (vide Council Debates, Volume XI, Part II, page 42), will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state at what decision the Government of India have arrived on the general question of giving to Provincial Governments interest on their balances?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: It is understood that the Secretary of State's sanction is awaited to the proposals made by the Government of India.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I should like to know why the Honourable Minister in charge, Local Self-Government, has not replied, as the question has not been asked generally of Government ?

We have a general scheme for the protection of the suburban district which I think was discussed on the supplementary grants not very long ago, and I think we gave the details of the scheme then. Mr. PUNJABHAI THAKERSI: I mean both.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: In the case of the Law College the recommendations are made by the High Court and not by the principal, and the professors appointed are from the persons recommended; and in the case of the Science Institute generally the recommendations are made by the Director of Public Instruction.

Mr. PUNJABHAI THAKERSI: Were any of these appointments made on communal considerations? If so, have Government sacrificed better qualifications to communal considerations?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: No, not on communal considerations. It is only with a view to efficiency.

down by them in their unanimous resolution No. 8, dated the 2nd October 1923, saying that Government were not likely to take over the Local Fund Madressah unless the board agreed to hand it over unconditionally and free of charge?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state why they are unable to agree with the resolution passed by the said board?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: (a) Yes; but the District Local Board was told in addition, that Government would try (a) to retain such of the present teachers as are efficient, (b) to appoint suitable Mahomedan teachers whenever possible in the future, (c) to admit Mahomedan boys to the Madressah usually in preference to Hindu boys and (d) to consider the Board's suggestion regarding the existing holidays. It was intended to convey that Government could not agree to the conditions as they were laid down by the Board.

(b) The conditions referred to as they stood were obviously unacceptable by Government as they were unreasonably narrow and strict. The Board has since agreed to relax these conditions and Government have lately decided to accept, with certain modifications, the revised conditions subsequently proposed by the Board.

Mr. MAHOMED AYUB SHAH MAHOMED KHUHRO: Is it not a fact that in reply to a supplementary question put in October last the Honourable Minister had expressed that he would convert this Madressah into a high school and would make provision in the budget of 1925-26?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Yes.

Mr. MAHOMED AYUB SHAH MAHOMED KHUHRO: Then, why no money has been provided in the budget?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Money has been provided in the budget.

Mr. MAHOMED AYUB SHAH MAHOMED KHUHRO: Are Government aware that it is the only district that has no high school in the whole presidency?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Yes.

Mr. MAHOMED AYUB SHAH MAHOMED KHUHRO: Then why do they give different treatment to this Thar and Parkar district alone? Is it an institution which has not equal educational facilities?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: We are soon going to give it a high school.

Mr. MAHOMED AYUB SHAH MAHOMED KHUHRO: Are you going to provide money in a supplementary grant, at least for the sixth standard this year?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Yes, I will try to do so, but it rests with the Council to sanction the amount.

Mr. MAHOMED AYUB SHAH MAHOMED KHUHRO: Is not the Honourable Minister prepared to make a definite statement that he is going to provide this money in this year's budget definitely?

(e) Is it a fact that the local board was informed in 1923 that the question of a grant to the dispensary would be considered by Government?

(f) Is it a fact that the Surgeon General has recently unfavourably considered the application of the board for a grant, and if so, will Government be pleased to place on the Council table the correspondence in this respect?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: (a) (b) and (c) Yes.

(d) The requisite provision for a grant has been proposed in the budget estimates for 1925-26, and order sanctioning it will be issued if it is passed by the Legislative Council.

(e) The local board was so informed in 1921.

(f) Government regret that they cannot make any statement or place any correspondence on the Council table.

Mr. R. G. SOMAN: Why is it that Government cannot make a statement as to whether the Surgeon-General favourably or unfavourably considered the application?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: It will amount to placing the whole correspondence on the table.

Mr. W. S. MUKADAM: May I know the reason why it is not placed on the table?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Because it is official.

Mr. W. S. MUKADAM : Is it official or confidential ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : It is official.

TEACHERS' UNION.

Mr. S. K. BOLE : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) whether they are aware of the 22nd resolution passed at the 5th session of the conference of the East Khandesh Backward Class Teachers' Union held at Jalgaon on the 26th October 1924 in connection with the order No. 2356, dated the 8th October 1924, regarding the teacher Mr. Shripatrao Raoji Marathe ; and

(b) if so, what steps Government have taken in the matter ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : (a) Yes.

(b) The resolution was returned for submission through the chief local and controlling authorities.

THE UNEMPLOYMENT OF CLERICAL POPULATION IN THE CITY OF BOMBAY.

Mr. S. K. BOLE : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) whether they are aware of the grave situation caused by unemployment among the clerical population in the City of Bombay ; and

(b) what steps Government propose to take in the matter ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Government are aware that there has been for some time past considerable discussion in the newspapers on unemployment among the middle classes in Bombay City.

Government are not yet however in possession of reliable statistical data. The Labour Office recently attempted to ascertain the extent of this unemployment and reference is invited to the article on the subject appearing in the February issue of the Labour Gazette. It will be seen therefrom that the number of returns (115) obtained is too small to indicate the total number of the unemployed. But the analysis of the returns received shows considerable periods of unemployment and an influx of clerical hands from South India.

Government are informed further that a private gentleman has founded an Employment Bureau but that there were last month only 87 names on his registers representing unemployed persons of the clerical class.

The Labour Office is devoting further attention to this matter and is being asked to report whether any official action in this connection is needed.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : Has Government prepared any definite scheme to solve this problem of unemployment ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : The last sentence of my answer is the reply to the honourable member's question.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : Has the Government prepared any scheme as they have prepared for vagrants ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I presume the honourable member wants to know whether any scheme has been prepared for deporting unemployed hands back to their homes in South India.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : Has the Government any scheme in contemplation similar to the one that is existing for the relief of unemployed Europeans in the City ? They are taken to the work house.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : There is no such scheme. European vagrants are kept in the work house and if they do not get work, they are sent back home to England.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : A vagrant, a man who has got less than Rs. 10 on his person, is taken to the work house and facilities are given to him to secure employment.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : No.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : Under the Vagrancy Act ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : No.

" TRUCK ACT."

Mr. S. K. BOLE : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) whether they are aware of the Truck Act in Britain ; and

(b) whether they propose to introduce a measure here on those lines ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : (a) In the affirmative.

(b) In the negative.

Mr. S. K. BOLE : Is the Act intended to control the high-handed way in which the fines are inflicted on the workers ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I am not very familiar myself with the Act, but I do not think that that is the purpose of the Act. I believe it is to prevent payment of wages in kind instead of in money.

WHIPPING IN JAILS.

1. Mr. HOOSEINBHOY A. LALLJEE (Bombay City) : Will Government be pleased to state whether they have abolished the punishment of whipping in the jails of this presidency ? If not, do they intend to move in that direction.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : The reply is in the negative.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE INDIAN JAIL COMMISSION.

Mr. HOOSEINBHOY A. LALLJEE (Bombay City): Will Government be pleased to lay on the Council table a statement regarding the action taken up to now by them in connection with the several recommendations of the Indian Jail Commission?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: The honourable member is referred to the reply given to the honourable member for Nasik District on this subject at the budget session of last year.

ABOLITION OF DIVISIONAL COMMISSIONERSHIPS.

Mr. HOOSEINBHOY A. LALLJEE (Bombay City): Will Government be pleased to state whether they have had any correspondence either with the Government of India or the Secretary of State for India in connection with the proposed abolition of Divisional Commissionerships? If so, will they be pleased to lay it on the table?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Government have had correspondence on the subject with the Government of India. They regret that such correspondence cannot be laid on the table.

Mr. HOOSEINBHOY A. LALLJEE: Are there any rules which lay down the kinds of correspondences which can be made public?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Yes.

Mr. HOOSEINBHOY A. LALLJEE: May we know what those rules are? Are they printed?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: The rules are not printed for the use of honourable members.

RESIDENTIAL ACCOMMODATION FOR GOVERNMENT SERVANTS IN BOMBAY.

Mr. HOOSEINBHOY A. LALLJEE (Bombay City): Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that there are many vacant plots of Government land in Bombay? Do they intend to build on these plots to provide residential accommodation for Government servants? If not, are they prepared to lease those plots at moderate rent to private landlords with a view to provide buildings at reasonable rents?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: The information has been called for.

INCOME TAX REVENUE: ALLOCATION OF SHARE.

Mr. HOOSEINBHOY A. LALLJEE (Bombay City): Will Government be pleased to lay on the Council table the correspondence that has taken place between the Government of Bombay and the Government of India in connection with the claim of this Presidency to get proper and reasonable share of the income tax revenue?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Attention of the honourable member is invited to No. 9 of the Bombay Legislative Council Rules. Government are not prepared to lay the correspondence in question on the Council table.

(Discussion on demands for grants resumed.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Demands for grants.
Question again proposed.

That the amount of Rs. 42,39,000 for other expenditure in Civil Department on Famine Relief be reduced to Rs. 42,00,000.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI (Ahmednagar District) : Sir, I am thankful to the honourable member for Bombay for giving me an opportunity of saying what I have to say with regard to the famine policy of this Government. I am also grateful to the Honourable the Revenue Member for having enunciated at length his policy on the famine insurance fund.

Sir, since the financial re-adjustment contemplated by the Government of India Act of 1919, the Devolution Rules have made it necessary that each provincial Government should reserve every year an assignment for the famine insurance fund. The Government of India were aware that the Bombay presidency is a presidency which is most affected by famine. I see, Sir, from Schedule IV that the share of assignment reserved for the Bombay Government is the largest of all the nine provincial Governments, and that provision, I submit, is most salutary and essential for the development of this presidency. The administration of the famine fund and the laying down of a sound famine policy is, in my humble opinion, absolutely vital to the interests of the large agricultural masses of this presidency, and I congratulate the Honourable the Revenue Member for having given his best attention to the consideration of such a policy.

Mr. President, before examining one by one the various suggestions made by the Honourable the Revenue Member, I say that I am surprised to find that this decision of allocating Rs. 10 lakhs every year out of the famine insurance fund for the purpose of the interest charges on the Sukkur Barrage was reached. To my mind, Sir, it was an unfair decision. It appears to have been taken after the Reformed Councils came into existence. The Sukkur Barrage is a big productive work, and as such it has been properly undertaken out of the loans. But it was not fair, I submit, to commit the famine insurance fund for the payment of Rs. 10 lakhs every year for 20 years, on account of the interest on the capital invested in the Sukkur Barrage. It takes away yearly one-sixth of the famine fund.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I hope the honourable member is aware that the Council has sanctioned it.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : I am not aware of it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The whole scheme was submitted to the Council, and it was approved of by the Council on the basis of this contribution of Rs. 10 lakhs every year.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : Whatever it is, I submit the decision of the Council will have to be reconsidered in a future sitting of the House, as I think that decision is rather unfortunate. Whatever it is, coming to the policy enunciated by the Honourable the Revenue Member as to the administration of the famine fund, I shall examine his scheme according as he stated it.

The Honourable the Revenue Member first dealt with the question of the provision of fodder for the cattle in this presidency. I may state here that the question of fodder supply in this presidency is a very difficult one, and it requires to be approached in the most responsible and careful fashion. There was a committee appointed by this House, I suppose in the year 1922, for inquiry into the question of the protection of cattle. That committee has tried to deal with this question, but I submit that its decision as regards fodder supply did not appear to me to be satisfactory, because it was not a committee which was appointed solely for this purpose. It was a committee which was appointed for the purpose of examining the condition of the cattle and their breeding in this presidency. I submit that the problems connected with fodder supply are so vast and intricate that a special committee to deal with this problem ought to have been appointed by Government, because there are many questions with regard to fodder supply which would, I think, defy any sound financier. The question, mainly, is the production of fodder itself, because we know that the grass which is supplied by the Forest Department is not sufficiently nutritive. Then again, prickly-pear which is at times used by the authorities in times of famine is also not sufficiently nutritive, and therefore the question of producing proper Kadbi and of distributing it in the presidency arises. It is a very important question, and in this connection I would like to suggest to the Honourable the Revenue Member that he should take advantage of the introduction of the canals in the Deccan. I have already suggested to him in a private conference which I had with him that if we utilise these canals in the Deccan, namely, the Godavari Canal, the Pravara Canal and the Nira Canal for the production of fodder, it would go a long way towards the solution of the problem. Under the irrigation rules it is compulsory for every cultivator who grows sugarcane to grow one-third rabi. If the irrigation rules are amended, and if it is made compulsory that out of this rabi half of the crop should be jowari, I am sure a large amount of fodder will be available from all these irrigation areas, and that would solve the problem of producing kadbi permanently, in the interest of this presidency. There is again the question of railway freight. It is very difficult in various districts to have this fodder at cheap rates. The problem of transport is a very difficult problem; the railway authorities several times do not give concession rates, and on that account it is very difficult to get cheap fodder in those districts where it is required. For all these reasons, Sir, the question of production and transport of fodder requires very careful investigation and I hope that in order to consider this question the Honourable the Revenue Member will appoint, if necessary, a special committee. I am glad, Sir, to find that the Revenue Member has given a special concession to my district this year because my district is one of those districts which are principally affected on account of the scarcity of fodder, and he has been pleased to extend a grant of 8 lakhs during the current year for the supply of fodder. I am very thankful to him, Sir, for that. So far as it goes, this arrangement is quite all right, but this problem of fodder supply will have to be handled more carefully, especially in connection with the distribution of it in times of famine, because, as my honourable friend from Ahmedabad, Mr. Saheba said, it is not desirable in connection with the fodder problem to make any profit out of these transactions. We ought to be able to supply fodder at cost price to the cultivators. The district local boards should not be encouraged to make any profit out of these transactions and fodder should be supplied only to such people as have cattle useful for cultivation. We ought not to go on carrying these operations on the pinjrapole principle. Fodder should not be supplied for cattle not useful for cultivation. These pinjrapole principles are not intended for Government. Philanthropic people may spend their money on those principles, but we have to be careful in distributing fodder only for such cattle as are absolutely useful for the purpose of agriculture and we must also make sure that we do distribute the fodder properly to bona fide agriculturists who will have to maintain cattle useful for agriculture and it should only be supplied on production of satisfactory evidence that it will be used for cattle useful for agriculture and the district local boards also ought to distribute it without making any profit. The district local boards or the local bodies should not at all be encouraged to make profit out of these transactions.

Then, Sir, I come to the question of wells. My honourable friend from Ahmedabad, Mr. Saheba, was very keen about the sinking of wells and he deprecated the introduction of small irrigation works. It appears to me that he is not cognisant of the conditions of the Deccan. He is talking from the point of view of Gujarat alone. I may tell him that in the Deccan, especially in the four districts of Poona, Sholapur, Satara and Ahmednagar, the problem of sinking wells will not be at all a successful problem, because on our side the water level has gone so deep that whatever amount is spent, the sinking of wells will not be successful unless we make efforts to raise the level of sub-soil water. Therefore, the first step to be taken is to raise the sub-soil water level, which can only be done by introducing small irrigation works. This problem of small irrigation works is a vital problem to the Deccan and you have got to introduce these small irrigation works, if you want to preserve the agriculturists, if you want to make the programme of sinking wells a successful programme. It is not a problem to be thrown out as useless as my honourable friend from Ahmedabad, Mr. Saheba, suggested. In the Deccan there are, fortunately, valleys which are absolutely suitable for the maintenance of these tanks. Then again, there are old tanks of pre-British days which can be repaired and maintained and the water-supply can be improved. Then again, Sir, we have got bands (बाँद) or bunds of pre-British days which can be repaired and made use of; so that the problem of small irrigation works in order to raise the level of the sub-soil water and also in times of famine for providing water for rabi and kharif crops is very vital, so far as the Deccan districts are concerned. I therefore think that this programme of small irrigation works will have to be given priority, so far as the Deccan is concerned, over the programme of wells or well-sinking. It is only when the small tanks and small bunds are maintained that your wells will be useful in the Deccan. Therefore, I appeal to the Honourable the Revenue Member to give as much attention as he can to the maintaining and constructing of these small irrigation canals and tanks in the Deccan.

Then if he wants to go on with the programme seriously he will have to consider the question of agency. The Honourable the Revenue Member suggested that the work would be entrusted to the Public Works Department and would be got done by him through the Collector. I submit, Sir, that if Government are to be serious in this programme of utilising famine insurance fund for these irrigation works, then we must for each district appoint a special sub-divisional officer whose business it will be to entertain applications from the people for the construction and maintenance of these small tanks and bunds. I will just quote one instance of my own district. After a private conference which I had with the Honourable the Revenue Member, I went to my constituency and suggested to them that they should give applications for small irrigation works. I got applications from them and forwarded them to the district deputy collector (the officer on special duty) Mr. Haliyal and these applications have been returned to me because that officer has not got an expert agency competent to undertake a survey; so that you have got to maintain in every district where you want an experiment made, a sub-divisional officer whose special duty it will be to entertain these applications. Then again, you have got to issue special instructions to the Collector. The Collector's agency is a very efficient agency no doubt. The civilian, Sir, is a very efficient officer, no doubt; but he has no initiative. You have got to get the work done by him. The initiative has to be taken by somebody else and the work got done by the Collector, because I know that all the applications I referred to were sent to the Collector and most of them were returned. Therefore, before you entrust the work to the Collector, you must associate non-official bodies like the district local boards with the Collector. It is no use simply enunciating a principle, enunciating a programme, and then entrusting it to a body which is efficient but lifeless. You have got to entrust it to a non-official agency or associate non-official agency with the official. If you do that, then and then alone the programme of these works will be successful. The Honourable the Revenue Member, Sir, put the question of the small irrigation works before the House in rather a peculiar manner. He says it is doubtful whether the small irrigation works will be successful and experts differ whether small irrigation works or big irrigation works would be more beneficial. I submit it is a wrong way of putting things. We want both big as well as small irrigation works. Big irrigation schemes have got to be financed from loans; small irrigation schemes could be financed from the famine insurance fund. On the big irrigation schemes we should expect a reasonable interest by way of return; on schemes which are financed from the famine insurance fund we should not expect any substantial return. If the agriculturist's lot is improved as a result of such works that alone ought to be considered sufficient remuneration, so far as the programme of small irrigation works is concerned. I hope the Honourable the Revenue Member will keep before himself the ideal that throughout this Presidency every acre of land which is fit for cultivation or which can be made fit for cultivation should be brought under successful cultivation. I mean to say, excepting that area which is necessarily required to be reserved for forests, all the area must be brought under successful cultivation. That should be the ideal, and if that ideal is achieved, Sir, in the course of a few years, our land revenue will be ensured, our agriculturists will enjoy prosperity which itself will repay the Government and the finances of this Presidency.

These are some of the suggestions, Sir, which I wish to make to the Honourable the Revenue Member in connection with the policy which he has enunciated about the administration of the famine fund. The Honourable the Revenue Member will make his name immortal in this presidency if he carries out a successful famine policy. Because this presidency is most affected by famine, and the policy he has undertaken is a policy which favourably affects the interests of the masses. We all know that the Honourable the Revenue Member is not technically responsible to this House as he is an Executive Councillor, but we know that he regards himself responsible to this legislature. I hope he will make for himself a lasting name by enunciating and carrying out a sound policy with regard to the famine insurance fund.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN (Ahmedabad District): Sir, the Famine Insurance Fund during the last four years has accumulated to 1,48 lakhs and now it is not necessary to pile up this fund still further. This sum of 1,48 lakhs if not touched, may amount to 4 crores within the course of another 20 years. Now, we know that 10 lakhs of this fund is devoted to paying interest on the Sukkur Barrage loan for twenty years. Why should not the balance of the fund also be utilised for the purpose of getting through small irrigation schemes for relieving distress in other parts of the presidency for the same period of time? Instead of piling up this fund as in a miser's hoard—which may be of no use when great difficulty arises—it would be better to utilise it in such a way as to prevent difficulties in bad times. Now, there are three kinds of famine, food famine, water famine and fodder famine. The worst famine is that of water. There are certain unfortunate tracts in this presidency that have not sufficient water to drink. If they sink a well they will get salt water. The only place where they can get water is their village tanks which have been in existence from time immemorial. Unfortunately, some of these tanks also have silted up. In some parts, for example, Bhal tract in Ahmedabad district to which reference was made by the Honourable the Revenue Member and to which he has himself paid a special visit, nature is harsh to the residing population. In those places there is no other way of supplying them with water, which is the first necessity of life, except by repairing these tanks. The Honourable Member Mr. C. V. Mehta visited those unfortunate places. He has seen young boys of ten years going one mile to fetch water, while their parents had gone to the fields. These young boys, who ought to be in school, have to go for the purpose of fetching water from a river one mile distant, and sometimes even the river may get dried up. Consequently, the repair of village tanks must be included in the works that are to be taken up with the help of the Famine Insurance Fund.

[Mr. J. C. Swaminarayan]

I have also one other suggestion to give to the Honourable the Revenue Member, and that is as regards the fodder reserves. One scheme that was advocated by him was that of having Government stores, and the other was that of Government getting the work done by contractors. I have received various complaints, Sir, from one place where this work is being done by contractors. In Modasa mahal of Ahmedabad zilla the work has been given to a contractor, and the contractor is required to give 15 or 20 lakhs of lbs. of grass in bad times to the cultivators. But unfortunately when the bad times come the cultivators do not get the amount of fodder necessary to feed their cattle. The contract was for five years at first, and though there have been complaints against the system, the contract has been extended to another period of five years. Therefore, in making such contracts the greatest possible care has to be taken. Instead of relieving the distress it may increase it. If the Government meadows are kept in the hands of Government, when famine stares us in the face they can be thrown open to the people for purposes of grazing; but if the meadows are given away to a private individual, that private individual with the help of local Government officials will profiteer out of it and the poor people will be put to greater distress.

Sir, with these few words, I would strongly urge on Government the necessity of utilising these 40 lakhs every year for the purpose of taking preventive measures in different parts of the presidency and thus saving the people from famine, which is one of the vital problems of this presidency.

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI (East Khandesh District): Sir, we have had an opportunity of hearing a very long speech concerning the famine policy of Government, and we are very much thankful to the member in charge of that policy for the very high hopes he has held before us in connection therewith. Before he resumed his seat he invited suggestions from members of this side of the House, and in response to that invitation I wish to make a few. Yesterday, the honourable member drew before us a very beautiful and attractive picture of the policy; it was so attractive that we could not but applaud him when he concluded. But when we test the policy with actual facts we find a great distance between his ambition and his efforts. I wish to substantiate my statement by one or two illustrations. The most prominent of them is in connection with his fodder policy. Now, we learned from the Honourable Member that there is a desire on the part of Government to store fodder in districts where there is no grass or fodder available. It is a very good policy when looked at from the standpoint of the agriculturist and by the adoption of this policy those districts which are oftentimes subjected to the attacks of famine will be benefitted, and the agriculturists in those districts will be enabled to protect themselves from the attacks of famine. But that does not mean that in other districts which are not declared as famine stricken districts, a different policy should be adopted. Now, Sir, I may refer to the specific instance of my own district, East Khandesh. I wish to lay before this House that, although Government cherish a very genuine desire to bring redress to the agriculturists in famine stricken districts, they are acting otherwise in other districts, for instance, in East Khandesh. Sir, yesterday it was stated by the Honourable Member in charge that it was their resolute intention to sell fodder even at the rate of Rs. 15 per 1,000, lbs., in order to keep down the fodder market. That is a very honest desire and if realised it will bring substantial good to the agriculturists classes. But should not the same consideration that is extended to famine districts be extended to those districts which are not so affected by famine? Should not Government pursue the same desire to keep down the fodder market in other districts? With great disappointment we find that in East Khandesh, Government are adopting forest policy which instead of keeping down the fodder market will tend to keep it always very high. Now, Government has adopted recently the auction system of kurans. Last time the income realized from these auctions of kurans was Rs. 58,000 but on account of the change of policy of Government, Government have realised Rs. 1,49,000 on that account and the result of this system has been that it has kept the grass market always tight. The quantity the agriculturist used to get for the original price two years ago has to be purchased by them for a much higher price.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. METHA: May I ask if the honouable member will enlighten me as to the price the contractor realises? Does he charge market price or anything less?

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI: He does charge market price but when all kurans are auctioned then there will be competition among the sellers, because they make a common cause and keep the prices uniform and if all kurans are auctioned in this way, there will be no other source left to bring grass from and the price will remain high.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. METHA: Have they not always been auctioned like that?

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI: No, this system has been adopted recently for the last two or three years. Now, the same is the case with all the kurans. We find this even in the case of grass depôts in mountain ranges. Only recently four depôts in Chopada taluka have been auctioned and a cart load of grass which was available for 8 annas as permit fee is now available at the cost of 2 rupees. That is because the contractors who purchase these depôts demand 2 rupees as fee. Thus the agriculturists suffer on account of this forest system. These two circumstances have so much discouraged the agriculturists in East Khandesh that they are forced to ask for the discontinuance of this system to avoid calamity.

[Mr. L. S. Chaudhari]

Before this system was adopted, the agriculturists were tempted to store more grass to meet the effects of famine.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : May I know if the honourable member is talking of grass in forest ?

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI : No, Sir, I am referring to the grass which is available in the vicinity of the forest villages, and I am talking of the auctioning of such kurans which are quite in the vicinity of the forest villages in the centre of East Khandesh district. Also on account of the raising of the rates of grazing fee we have been forced to keep our cattle at home. When the rates of grazing fees were low we were able to send our cattle to the forest ranges, they used to stop there for three or four months and on account of this facility we used to save large quantities of fodder which we could with advantage utilise in the next year. But now, on account of these enhanced rates of grazing fees we are forced to keep our cattle at home and we are forced to utilize that fodder which we have been utilizing for famine purposes. I do not want to touch any more points regarding the famine policy of Government, except a few.

Now, I will deal with the water supply which has been referred to by the Honourable Member in charge yesterday. He told us and the honourable member for West Khandesh, Mr. Dev, has brought this fact to the notice of the House that there is great scarcity of water in the Satpura mountain range and the Honourable Member in charge has assured us that it will be removed. It is a very old difficulty in the way of agriculturists. Why was it not removed up till now ? What we see is that such things are now done by Government when they are not done by others. I can substantiate this statement by reference to a particular instance. In this year's budget of the district local board of East Khandesh a provision was requested to be made by the range forest officer for Rs. 2,000 for improving water supply in the Satpura Range. I am a member of the district local board and I refused the grant because the whole income goes to Government and not a single pie comes to the district local board. When the district local board refused to comply with the request Government took up the work and the difficulty will now be removed. The same will be the policy adopted in the case of boring machines. Much has been said of irrigation works and much has also been said of Government help. Government is said to be helping the agriculturist by affording sufficient supply of boring machines. Looking to the extent of the Central Division which consists of six big districts, the meagre supply of boring machines is next to nothing. The day before yesterday I asked a question of the Honourable Minister in charge of Forests as to the number of boring machines. He answered that there were three machines. But what is their condition ? One is to lie permanently in the Poona Agricultural College and the other two are not in good order. One of them is a hand machine and now I learn that it has been sent to Poona for being converted into a power machine. So Government are giving high hopes for the improvement of famine policy to be adopted, but as a matter of fact Government is not actually taking on their head the responsibility of making an adequate provision in that direction. As regards these boring machines I would like to say something more. In one of the villages which lie in the vicinity of Jalgaon, the number of wells in that village is 500 and on account of the low level of water it has become very difficult for the agriculturists to carry on their profession of sowing vegetables and these wells have been reduced to a position of empty cylinders. This boring experiment was attempted to be worked in one well by one agriculturist there. He was forced to pay half the charges required for the experiment though the boring operation was a failure. No doubt after that experience Government have come to this conclusion in the case of experimental boring at least that the charges should be borne by Government and not by the man whose well is experimented upon. It is a happy circumstance to learn, and if Government will undertake to bear the whole expenditure of experimental boring, I think there will be a great scope for this propaganda being spread amongst the agricultural classes very rapidly and I take it upon myself as a member of the district local board and of the district agricultural association that not only three but thirty boring machines will be insufficient to meet the demand of well-boring from the East Khandesh district.

Much has been said by my honourable friend from Ahmednagar that canal irrigation should be given preference to well irrigation. But that is a selfish policy. Where nature has provided resources Government have tapped all the sources in those districts, but wherever these facilities are not available as in East Khandesh I think Government should undertake this boring machine campaign very vigorously.

Before concluding, I wish to refer to one instance of the pats. The Honourable Member in charge stated yesterday that he is going to tap all sources of pat system, but why should he not take into his head to improve the condition of the pats already existing in the East Khandesh district? Are not questions asked in this session why these pats are not improved? Is it not possible for agriculturists to get water from the pats which are already in existence? Before concluding, I wish to suggest to the Honourable Member in charge that if he sincerely desires to bring improvement in the lot of agriculturists he should adopt this policy from the bottom of his heart and not from the tip of his tongue.

Mr. L. J. MOUNTFORD: Sir, after the exhaustive treatment with which the Honourable Member in charge has dealt with this subject I have very little to add on the question of measures that are necessary for meeting the famine or rather the scarcity years with which this presidency has been afflicted. We have several districts in the Central Division which are subject to frequent attacks of scarcity. I allude to the eastern portions of the Deccan, especially Ahmednagar and Sholapur. One honourable member has stated that the greatest scarcity we have to fear is the scarcity of water. I agree with him but we have little to fear from actual famine in the present day as in the days of old, when we had poor communications and when people had not acquired the travel habit. In these days scarcity is not necessarily due to lack of water but to rainfall coming too early in large volume and then after a long break coming down in over-whelming torrents in such a way as to be too late for kharif crop or too early for the rabi crop. One who has studied the history of famine in this country will be well aware of the conditions in 1878 after the terrible famine of 1877 when the rain fell copiously but too early to be of any use to the cultivator and, although it was exceptionally copious, another bad year resulted. Therefore, honourable members are quite right in saying that we must do our best to concentrate our attention on small irrigation works so as to impound every drop of this unseasonable rain so as to utilise the water for future crops in the manner in which the Honourable Member in charge has already described. Assuming therefore that there would be a famine due to scarcity of seasonable rain, you can at least get water for your animals by such measures. Then the next question that arises in time of scarcity is that you have to take adequate measures to provide fodder for the animals. The honourable member for Nagar will remember that in 1919 there was severe scarcity in his district, and an intense campaign of fodder relief was started ; many prickly-pear camps were opened where over 14,000 cattle were fed through the energy and enterprise of Mr. Beyts. This brings me on by way of parenthesis for a moment to a remark made by another honourable member that we could store and use prickly-pear as fodder for cattle. Prickly-pear is not really a food, it is mainly useful in providing bulk without which digestion cannot take place : it is a fibrous matter containing over 90 per cent. water and possessing nutritive qualities only to a small degree. In Ahmadnagar prickly-pear was mixed with cotton-seed, lentil husk and oil-cake and fed to the animals. By itself prickly-pear has not got sufficient nourishment to keep cattle alive. This scheme was carried on in Ahmednagar with success but prickly-pear as a source of fodder has to undergo a great deal of preparation and the spines must be absolutely eliminated because this species of prickly-pear is not the same as is found in the United States. There is a spineless variety of prickly-pear in the United States in Mexico and in Spain which has got no thorns. Unfortunately attempts to propagate that variety which exists in small quantities in this country were not successful. As soon as the Collector started his nurseries, the cattle owners got over the fence and stole the young plants. The prickly-pear that is found in this country requires excessive treatment before it can be stored as fodder and an experiment in this direction was only successful through the zeal and enterprise of the Collector. We cannot depend on such sporadic individual effort. Now, the real solution is to come back to kadbi. One honourable member asked why we should not cut and preserve grass which is easily available in our forests. It is perfectly true that we have in our forests sufficient grass to feed our cattle. But the cattle of the Deccan are not fond of forest grass. In the year 1912 and 1906, both the Dhond and Jeur depôts in the Poona and Sholapur districts were unable to dispose of the stocks of grass as the Deccan ryots refused to buy them because their cattle would not eat it. So, there is only one way in which you can deal with the fodder question and that is by providing kadbi, and therefore we are now asking you to provide us with sufficient money for storing kadbi which is the only way to solve the problem of providing fodder for cattle during scarcity years. The honourable member for Khandesh suggested that grass kurans could be thrown open to cattle to provide grass for fodder. I do not know whether he refers to forest kurans or not, but in scarcity years we do throw open the forest kurans. There is much to be said for the argument that if Government supplies fodder, the agriculturist will have little inducement to grow fodder himself. But the intention of Government is not to take upon itself the responsibility of feeding his cattle except to a small extent, and the necessity of providing fodder for the cattle of the agriculturist will still remain and he must still do his best to provide all the fodder he can from his fields in his own interest.

To go back to Khandesh, in 1912, a committee was appointed to consider how far charitable famine relief should be given to the people of this presidency. In their report they quote a statement from the Commissioner, C. D., which is pertinent to the question of fodder scarcity in Khandesh. It is as follows :

"Although the previous season had been an excellent one and though the stock of fodder ought to have been sufficient for 18 months, the ryots of East Khandesh petitioned the Collector stating that the cattle were dying and the Collector thereupon threw the forest open. . . . It seems to me that the concession of this sort is nothing more than pandering to the avarice of the people. The ryots of East Khandesh are perhaps the wealthiest in India : They have a magnificent soil and a certain rainfall, and they can and ought to grow fodder crops sufficient to ensure their having in reserve a stock to carry them over a possible bad year. Instead of this, in their greed for money they had sown so much cotton that three weeks' delay in the advent of the rain reduced them to absolute distress."

The point I want to labour is that it is impossible for Government to take the sole responsibility for feeding the cattle of agriculturists. What it will do is to provide fodder in those districts where it is essential in order to protect the cattle of the agriculturists. Elsewhere the cultivator should grow his own fodder and reserve his surplus in years of plenty for use in years of scarcity. They can do much. In a good year in Sholapur you will see the agriculturist stores his fodder in small heaps, called Depans. He covers this kadbi over with clods of earth and you can see these mounds all over his fields. But it is not possible for the agriculturist to stock all the fodder that is necessary to meet a year of scarcity on account of the danger of theft and especially on account of danger of fire. In the fine soils of the Walwa taluka of the Satara district we get in good years the finest jowari crops and there the ryot is used to store large stacks of kadbi. In one season there were countless fires (1912) and rick firing there, as elsewhere, is an obstacle to any storage on a large scale. If he has an enemy he is entirely at his mercy. If one match is thrown, his year's labour is dissipated in smoke in five minutes. There again we come back to kadbi which is the only salvation, when it is stored by government agency, so that it can be free from theft and kept under proper protection.

[Mr. L. J. Mountford]

There have been many interesting suggestions made by honourable members as regards water supply. The honourable member for Ahmednagar desires that everything should be done in order to avail ourselves of the water supply that comes down from the various nallas and ponds, rivers and distributaries. The system of bandharas and pats is a very old one. Bandharas are what we call dharans in the Konkan and are used even in that locality where there is a fair amount of rainfall. A bandhara is merely a dam across a small stream, rivulet, or nalla from which a small canal takes off, called a pat, and in the Khanapur taluka of the Satara district we have hundreds of such pats and bandharas. There is no doubt that much might be done to improve the conditions of these nallas. I am not aware of the circumstances alluded to by one honourable member under which the Collector refused to take any further action on an application for bandharas. I would be very glad indeed to investigate that, but I would point out that most of these small nallas where single pats can be thrown out on small bandharas have already been worked. For, this is a practice which has been going on for hundreds of years. But it is when we come to the larger nallas with a larger bandhara, which would give us possibly a better pat or canal, that we cannot possibly investigate such a scheme, which would serve several people and no doubt benefit them, unless we have some expert who can go into the matter. It is quite possible that, in the case which the honourable member referred to, the Collector was powerless, because it was doubtful whether the money could be sunk in such a project with a fair chance of success. It is hoped that we shall be able, out of this fund, to pay for the services of experts who can be used for such investigation, and I would like to see several such officers engaged in order that we may, to the best of our ability, develop the resources of the country in so far as we can tap these nallas where the waters at present are going to waste. But I would like honourable members to understand that you cannot do very much in a district where there is no water. We have been told by the honourable member from Ahmednagar, perfectly truly, that the subsoil water is extremely low in Ahmednagar. That is indeed so, and it is a grave question whether, by sinking wells in a district where we have no artesian formation, we shall be able to tap water at such a depth that the bullocks could work the mhot. You all know that you cannot work a mhot much deeper than 50 feet, and that is going to a very great depth indeed; whereas, I think, in many parts of Ahmednagar we shall have to go even deeper. That is exactly where our water finder comes in. He will find those localities where the water is at a convenient depth from the surface. Major Pogson does not merely find out where the water is, but he will calculate what amount of water there is and at what depth it is. Therefore, the use of the human water finder is the only solution in a district like Ahmednagar where our water supply is so low that we can only, with profit, tap those areas for wells where by chance we have the water nearer the surface. But I do not want honourable members to think that this water finding is confined to one individual alone. I talked the matter over with Mr. Strutton in Sholapur, and he told me of an extremely good water finder. Water finders are common in every country in the world, and we want to get those who are really genuine water finders who can assist us, and who are not the quacks that one so often meets running round the villages. Once we have this water finder to give us water, we shall start boring. Now, one honourable member said that it is no good boring unless you sink a well. He has said that that applies to places where there is an artesian or sub-artesian formation. That is perfectly true, but in most parts of the Deccan we have no artesian formation as in Gujarat. But the well will be sunk, and if it is successful, it has got to be paid for and the lucky owner has got to pay for it; if not successful, Government is going to help him as far as possible. In Africa, I may say, Government bores for the farmer, often to a depth of 1,800 feet—they have an artesian formation—and only charges him if the bore is successful. No doubt Government will be prepared to treat the unfortunate owner as lightly as possible if the well is unsuccessful. Everyone who has gone into the district sees the very large number of disused wells which have been sunk and abandoned, because they have not struck water. We want to save the ryot the enormous expenditure that will fall upon him and disappointment by the sinking of wells which do not come to fruition. As regards the question.....

[Mr. L. J. Mountford]

The DEPUTY PRESIDENT : Is the honourable member likely to take long ?

Mr. L. J. MOUNTFORD : I will end as soon as I possibly can.

The DEPUTY PRESIDENT : I have no objection to his continuing, but it is 4 o'clock.

Mr. L. J. MOUNTFORD : The honourable member Mr. Bole told us that the boring machines are very few. That is a matter which can be remedied very easily by accepting this grant, which will enable us to increase the number of boring machines.

As regards drinking water, we have heard here stories of little children going one mile for their water. I am afraid that did not affect me very much, because I come from the Southern Division in which there is the district of Bijapur, where I find that the people in the north of the Ghataprabha have to go six miles to get water. In order to fill a bullock cart with water they have to perform a journey of six miles and back and the bullock cart conveys three copper pots. I ask you to consider what is the condition of those people in the Bilgi peta who have no water at all, or the villages north of the Ghataprabha who have to go six miles to get their water. There again, it shows how necessary it is that we should have funds at our disposal to fight famine and to increase the resisting power of the people by supplying them with good water. Where then so much could be done, I trust this House will vote liberal expenditure on measures to render more secure the position of the ryot. Anything to make the lot of the ryot easier should be welcomed by this House, and I am sure that measures which are intended for this purpose will meet with the strong approval of all members who are present here to-day. Anything we can do to increase the resisting power of the ryot against years of scarcity must conduce to the benefit of the presidency.

(After recess.)

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District) : Sir, I venture to make a few suggestions to the honourable member in charge about famine grant and shall first start with his policy of fodder storage. I really thank him for what he has done as regards this matter. My suggestion, however, is that he need not overdo what he has done, because the storage of local kadbi in the district itself by the district local board may raise the cost in that district for the year, and, after all, the agency of the district local board is very costly, because if I take only 4 lakhs, provided this year, it means 50 lakhs of bundles to be counted, gathered and stored, and will require to be weighed, and all that will require a very big staff and the staff will have to be paid for. I do not know, in the absence of any other figures, what the district local board of Ahmednager is going to do. But, so far as I can see, it is going to bale this fodder also. If not, it is all right; so this policy of local kadbi fodder should be so handled that it may not raise the price in the area to the level of famine prices. This brings me to the question whether the forest fodder grass is to be continued or not. From what the Honourable the Revenue Member has stated, I am afraid he is going to do away with the forest grass altogether. I do admit that Navapur grass is of inferior quality and rather costly to the cultivators, but we cannot, in the present circumstances, afford to do away with this grass.....

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Not until other grass is available.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : At the same time, he should take precaution to see that the grass at Navapur is improved, as the quality of the grass there can be improved, it should be done. The rainfall there is 15 to 20 inches, which will help him to do this and so he should try to change the kind of that grass. Now, if instead of the boards, he can substitute the agency either of co-operative societies or villages themselves, I think every village should be given this grant without interest and every village should be called upon to store its own grass fodder, and I believe this costly agency of district local board can be avoided and the district local board can be freed from the risk and responsibility. Again the honourable member's trouble about the high cost of grass, of course, is due to one factor and that is the Government of India, and I should request the Government and specially the honourable member in charge of famine operations that he should write to the Government of India that for famine grass at least, if not for other grass, the railway rates should be lowered and it should be allowed to be carried from one district to another or in the same district at a far cheaper rate than at present. At present the cost of transport is so much enhanced that it is more than the cost of the grass itself. So the Government of India should be pressed or rather this Government should sit upon the Government of India to give this concession so far as famine grass is concerned, and unless that is done, I do not think that this mere storage of hadbi will meet the entire needs. There must be grass to supply the deficiency. I really regret, Sir, that the honourable member cannot see his way to spending famine fund for water-supply. If the rules are stretched a little, just as they have done in the case of the circuit house at Ahmedabad and for granting that amount of 10 lakhs annually to the Sukkur Barrage, then I think he can bring the water famine within the scope of this famine grant, and I quite agree with the honourable member for Ahmedabad who just spoke that 42 lakhs should not be taken to reserve, but some expenditure should be incurred for the water-supply of villages from that 42 lakhs of rupees. In any case, I do not think this Council would take any objection if some expenditure is incurred from this grant for village water-supply. In my own district local board I had a survey made and I found that unless the district local board was prepared to spend Rs. 1,75,000, the problem of water-supply of the villages could not be solved, and all the members of Government know that the district local boards are quite unable without Government help to spend such a large amount. So the Honourable the Revenue Member should take the earliest opportunity of spending some amount from this 42 lakhs towards meeting the water-supply in villages. Practically a large number of wells require deepening and boring. Boring alone cannot do. That should be accompanied by deepening of the wells. Deepening of the wells is quite essential to get to the water level which has gone lower. So a substantial amount should be reserved from this amount for water-supply of the villages. Unfortunately, I am sorry the honourable member could not see his way to put that resolution into effect—the resolution that this House passed which my honourable friend from Ahmedabad (Mr. Saheba) moved regarding giving free grants to people who sink wells. If that were done, I think much of the expenditure would have been saved, and if he reconsiders that suggestion and if he sets apart from famine grant some amount to meet interest charges or to meet any loss from bringing that resolution into effect, even then there would be in the end a great saving to Government.

Another thing that requires to be still more looked into is that interest charges on tagavi loans are very heavy. Government need not make any profit on tagavi transactions and I do not think that they should charge high rates of interest; they should charge only the rates at which they themselves borrow. If all these things are brought into effect, I think famine conditions would be somewhat alleviated.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI: I move a closure, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I accept it.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South): Mr President, we must all be grateful to the Honourable the Revenue Member for his lucid exposition of the famine policy of the Government of Bombay. We did not know the inner working of Government as regards the famine policy, but after this exposition of the policy we know that Government are doing all that they can do under the circumstances. He has lucidly explained their policy as regards storage of fodder, grass, kadbi, boring of wells and various other things required in connection with relief of famine.

Mr. President, the Honourable the Revenue Member has asked the House to give whatever suggestions they wanted to give in this connection regarding their districts, but most of the suggestions made by several honourable members, I submit, are not constructive ones. As regards perennial canals and small irrigation works such as irrigation wells, my opinion is that perennial canals are suited to certain districts only and wells are suited for certain other districts. This is the opinion of the Irrigation Commission, who were of opinion that in certain famine stricken districts large canals cannot be introduced. In those districts, Sir, we have to follow a different policy. To give you an instance. In the Nasik district we have certain rivers, which if bunded will give water for the use of cattle and for human beings. Last year we made a kutchha bundhara in the valley of the river Valdi at a cost of Rs. 2,000 to Rs. 3,000 which was raised from local subscriptions. That bundhara raised the level of the sub-soil water in the surrounding places and the wells there were filled with water. Why not Government get such works done at a small cost of Rs. 2,000 to Rs. 3,000? That will give water to the depressed classes and to the cattle. Take for instance the Takli village in Nasik district. There the Godavari water is running to waste. There is that old Mahratta work there. There are high rocks, and we can dam the river up to a considerable height and we can turn it into as big a lake as Vihar lake of Bombay municipality. For this a surveyor was taken by us, and it was estimated that with an expenditure of Rs. 20,000 we could provide water. Then, in certain districts, there are perennial springs especially in Western Ghats. We can turn them into channels and weirs and they will flow throughout the year. These are things which the Honourable the Revenue Member should take into consideration.

As regards the famine stricken areas, we know that Ahmednagar, Sholapur, Satara, certain parts of Poona and Bijapur are always affected by famine. We know these are the areas, and we can devise means and measures to avoid great hardship to the poor people. Mr. President, I know that a report was made by one Government officer who was especially appointed for this purpose some years ago. And recently after that report, another expert, Mr. Ali Akbar, was appointed and he surveyed the famine stricken areas, made huge estimates and plans, but they are all pigeon-holed in the Government Secretariat and still do not see the light of day. Government can look them up if available and they can be brought to serve our purpose. They are all lying idle at present.

Then, Sir, there is another point, and that is as regards our statutory reserve of 63 lakhs for famine insurance. We have to reserve 63 lakhs every year until we build up a reserve of four crores. Now, we have not got such virulent types of famine as we had in the seventies and eighties known as Chhaparia famine. We have not now to face the horrors of such famines. What with our net work of railways and what with our small irrigation works the horrors of those old famines are gone. Now, whenever there is a bad year of famine, we have only to spend from 20 to 25 lakhs of rupees. On the other hand, we have now 63 lakhs in our hands. We can utilise it for various small protective works and in giving liberal loans to the agriculturists. If they want the money for sinking wells we must give them half the grant free if they carry out the works according to our direction, and they should thus be encouraged to dig wells.

With these remarks, Mr President, I beg to withdraw the motion, now that the policy is declared.

Question put and leave granted.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Does the honourable member Dr. Dadachanji wish to move the next item.*

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI: I do not wish to move it, because it relates to the same subject, viz., the boring of wells. The honourable member has explained his policy about the wells.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Sir, I ask for a grant of Rs. 53,60,000 for Famine Relief—Reserved (Famine Relief and Insurance).

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, I move:

That a grant of Rs. 1,68,53,000 for Civil Works, partly transferred and partly reserved be made,

This grant, as shown on page 5 of the Provincial Civil Works Budget Estimate, is composed of the following items: Rs. 1,00,8,000 for 41, Civil Works proper; Rs. 14,15,000 for establishment under 60, Civil Works; Rs. 98,800 for tools and plant; and the rest for establishment charges and tools and plant for Irrigation, Deccan Irrigation, Sind Irrigation, Sukkur Barrage, etc. Sir, many enquiries have been made from me, and quite rightly, why under 41, Civil Works out of revenue a larger amount has been budgeted than in the current year, and my attention has been drawn to the figures for establishments, Rs. 34,40,000 shown under 41, Civil Works, and Rs. 14,10,000 under 60, Civil Works. I think these are quite legitimate enquiries and it is my duty to satisfy the House that these figures are illusory and that there has really been no increased expenditure on establishments, under 41, Civil Works. As regards the budgetting of establishments, this year an innovation has been introduced, by which certain percentages for establishments are budgeted against 60, Civil Works, Irrigation, and the residue has been debited to 41, Civil Works, and I will presently show this House that there is absolutely no increase of expenditure under 41, Civil *Reduce to Rs. 98,000—Item 201—Measures for the improvement of water-supply through boring wells—(a) Recurring expenditure Rs. 1,08,380 (Budget p. 222).

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

Works. There is no manipulation of figures, but this is merely the result of the new system. If honourable members bear with me for a short time, I will show them that there is absolutely no increase in my establishment. I will first refer honourable members to page 5 of my Civil Works budget, 41, Provincial. If honourable members look at the various amounts for establishment for irrigation, they will see that the amounts that have been put down for irrigation only are about 44 lakhs. I will then request the House to refer to page 41 of the same book, that is Provincial Civil Works budget estimate 1925-26. Honourable members of this House are aware that my department deals with roads and buildings, and the specialist officers. Now for simplifying the accounts, I will take the whole of the Secretariat department. The Secretariat does the work not only of the roads and buildings branches of the Public Works Department but of all the irrigation works in the Presidency Proper, in Sind as well as of the Sukkur Barrage. But for simplifying the account, I say, put the amount that is provided for the whole of the Secretariat at Rs. 3,55,000. Then come the specialist officers, electrical engineer, consulting architect, mechanical engineer to Government, establishment for Public Works Department, Central Stores Workshop at Dapuri, Superintending Engineers, Northern, Central and Southern divisions.

Now, if honourable members add them up, the total comes to Rs. 34,81,000. See page 41, that is, the last page. The whole total comes to Rs. 34,81,900. If honourable members compare this with the present year's budget estimates which are shown side by side, they will see that in spite of the time scale increments, the establishment in the roads and buildings branch department of the Civil Works has been reduced. I will not dilate on that point, but I want to explain the amount that has been budgeted for establishment for roads and buildings, that is, Rs. 34,81,900.

Now, I will take honourable members a step further and refer them to the Irrigation head on the same page; if honourable members like I will take each item the details of which.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Will it not be better to go into details when each cut is proposed? The Honourable Minister will have the right of reply on each motion.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Now if they add up the irrigation establishment charges at page 41, the amount that is budgetted for irrigation is much less than the actual expenditure. Therefore it is illusory; the increased expenditure that is shown under 41, Civil Works, is the result of the new system that has been followed. Now, Sir, I will show the honourable House that I had been followed. Now, Sir, I will show the honourable House that I had conferences with my superintending engineers and I asked them to reduce their establishment charges and I must say to their credit that all the three divisions have reduced their establishment charges in spite of the time scale increments. If honourable members take the establishment charges for the Secretariat, the specialist officers and for the three divisions, and compare them with the estimates of the present year, they will see that expenditure on establishments in the roads and buildings branch of the Public Works Department has been reduced to the extent of Rs. 77,000. Sir, I have also heard complaints that the percentage charges for the execution of the works are very heavy. But honourable members should bear in mind that the Secretariat establishment does not do supervision work only for the roads and buildings branch of the Public Works Department but for other branches as well. There is the Secretary for irrigation, the Under Secretary and the large establishment under them. This establishment also does the additional work of the Sukkur Barrage. In all fairness, therefore, the roads and buildings branch ought to bear only one-third or at most one-half of the total establishment charges. If we deduct half of the establishment charges from the roads and buildings branch and also deduct the establishment charges for the specialist officers who do not help in building or repairing roads.....

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : May I know, Sir, what is the actual amount the Honourable Minister requires for his establishment.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : If we consider that the establishments costing from 23 to 24 lakhs are for works done all over the presidency, for the Military Department and for the local bodies, etc., to the extent of about two crores of rupees it will be seen that the percentage of establishment charges is not more than 13 or 14 per cent. Therefore, the roads and buildings branch of the P. W. D. is the cheapest agency for the construction of works.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD : Do you charge the Military when you work for them ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Yes ; we do.

Now, Sir, the grant I ask this Council to sanction for Civil Works proper is Rs. 1,68,53,000. Out of this amount, 68 lakhs are for both Irrigation and Civil Works, as I said in the beginning. Out of the balance of one crore, we are spending 50 lakhs on repairs to our communications and buildings. The value of these assets is from 72 to 73 crores. If we do not keep these assets in good repair, it will be a loss to us. What is the percentage of expenditure on the value of our assets ? It is very small considering that there has been an insistent demand from the other side to keep our communications and roads in good order.

Referring to the illusory figure of 34 lakhs, which I have already explained, I should further like to inform the House that we will spend 14 lakhs on works in progress and new works. We will spend 7 lakhs on communications which are in the interests of the people. Then there is an amount of 11 lakhs for discretionary grants. Out of this amount, we will give grants to the heads of the various departments about 24 in number, such as the Police, Irrigation, Medical, Commissioners, etc., to be spent on minor works. We have during the last few years been receiving demands to the extent of 18 to 19 lakhs. But we have not been able to meet all these demands, and we have budgetted only 11 lakhs. Then, there are certain grants to local bodies. We do work for the local bodies and according to the P. W. D. Code we charge 24 per cent. for establishment and tools. But the local bodies have been complaining that they cannot afford to pay so much, and therefore we pay 12½ per cent. out of this 24 per cent. as refund to the local bodies. This amount is shown as a grant-in-aid to the local bodies.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: I want to know how much the Honourable Minister, wants for his 60 and 41, Civil Works. Does he want 34 plus 14, that is, 48 lakhs for his departments.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: That is included in the total demand of one crore and sixty-eight lakhs I have moved.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI: Does the honourable member include in his demand the establishment for the Sukkur Barrage?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have already explained to the House that the demand is made for the purpose of allowing honourable members to move the motions for omission or reduction and the honourable member in charge will reply on those motions.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: The demand, item No. 26, Civil Works is shown as transferred. The Sukkur Barrage is not transferred.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is a misprint. Rs. 1,15,73,000 is transferred and Rs. 52,77,000 is reserved.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I move:

"Omit item No. 195 (page 219 of the Budget)—Increase in the cadre of accountants—Rs. 7,000."

The ultimate annual recurring expenditure on this head is shown as Rs. 32,000. In the remarks it is stated:

"The Accountant General has proposed to establish a self-contained cadre of accountants for this Department by providing for the usual leave and training reserves. The introduction of a self-contained cadre will involve the addition of 10 men on Rs. 80-10-250—²⁰/₅ 270 and the abolition of four posts of Apprentice Accountants."

I move this objection for the purpose of bringing to the notice of the Government the difficulties that exist in the case of the accountants. In the Public Works Department, the establishment of accountants is the only one which is not under the Honourable Minister in charge. According to the information conveyed to me by the Secretary, Public Works Department, last July, the accountants' establishment is entirely under the control of the Government of India. The result of this duality of charge—that is to say the accountants of the Public Works Department directly under the Government of India and the rest of the establishment under the Honourable Minister, a member of this Council—has introduced a confusion which is producing a great discontent in the cadre and in the whole service. I want to know exactly what is intended to be done by this arrangement which involves an expenditure of Rs. 32,000. While the pay of the whole of the clerical establishment has been revised and extra pay has been given to them, while the clerks under the accountants are classed with the rest of the clerks and receive their pay and promotion accordingly, rising up to Rs. 150, the accountant continues as he is. The revision of pay given to the clerks does not affect the accountant and he still continues in his grade of Rs. 80 to Rs. 100. On account of this, an anomaly is created,—the clerk of the accountant getting more pay than the accountant. This anomaly was specially brought to the notice of the Secretary, Public Works Department, on the last occasion by me. He admitted the anomaly, but expressed inability to interfere in this matter, because it was the concern of the Government of India. I want to know specially whether the Government of India has handed over the appointments of the accountants to the Bombay Government, and whether the Bombay Government is providing for a new cadre for them on the same lines as for the rest of the clerical establishment, and whether the anomalies have been removed, and how matters stand so far as the accountants are concerned. If that is not being done, I do not see why this item of Rs. 32,000 should be sanctioned, in the face of the accumulated grievances of that establishment, with all the anomalies created in the very body of the Executive Engineers' establishment. Therefore, I would request the Honourable Minister or whoever is in charge, to give some satisfactory explanation with regard to this item.

Question proposed.

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI: Sir, the present item in the budget has been introduced at the instance of the Auditor-General, who has pointed out to the Accountant General that the Public Works Department Accounts Code requires that the cadre of accountants should be self-contained, and consequently the Accountant General has come to this Government to ask for the provision of 10 extra men that he wants to make the cadre self-contained. The accountants are under the establishment of the Accountant General and as the Deputy President remarked that officer is under the control of the Government of India, but the accountants work directly under the orders of the Executive Engineer, and are attached to their offices; hence provision for their salaries is made in the Provincial Civil Works Budget, which consequently comes under the purview of this Council. The sanctioned cadre of accountants is 55, which includes 50 accountants and 5 senior accountants. Of the 50, 11 are temporary accountants. The Accountant General has pointed out that in order to make his cadre of accountants a self-contained one, we shall have to provide for leave reserves and training at the rate sanctioned for his office with regard to the other parts of his establishment, that is at 17 per cent. of the existing cadre. Seventeen per cent. of 55 is 10. He asks this Government to allow him to employ 10 more hands, and to increase the present establishment of 55 to 65. The result of that will be that when any of the accountants goes on leave, he will not have to employ temporary hands, as he now does. At present he has no leave reserve, and consequently, he has to employ men in place of those who on leave. This will involve an additional expenditure of Rs. 21,000 for 10 men at an average rate of Rs. 175. The scale of pay of accountants given in the Blue Book is Rs. 80 rising to Rs. 270; calculating at an average rate of Rs. 175 the extra cost for 10 men for 11 months would come to Rs. 21,000. But he does not want the whole of this amount. Part of it, Rs. 10,100 has been separately provided for at page 41 of the 41, Civil Works Budget against "leave allowances for accountants"; a further sum of Rs. 4,000 is included for 4 apprentice accountants in the lump sum provision of Rs. 99,100 under "revision of pay of establishment" in the same budget. He therefore only wants the difference which comes to Rs. 7,000, and that is the amount he asks the honourable House to sanction for the next year. The four apprentice accountants will be dispensed with. The Accountant General is under the Government of India. The accountants work directly under the Executive Engineers, and therefore come under this Government, and that is the reason why these items are provided for in the budget. This provision of 10 extra accountants would bring about an ultimate recurring expenditure of Rs. 32,000, which would be for 10 men at the maximum rate of Rs. 270. For the next year, the provision is only for Rs. 7,000.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, as no satisfactory answer has been given to my objection, I do not think I would be justified in withdrawing my motion. My whole point is this. There is the Executive Engineer's office, the Divisional and District offices, in which one portion of the establishment is entirely under the Honourable Minister.

The accounts branch of that establishment of the same executive engineer is under the Accountant General, that is to say, under the Government of India. The executive engineer recommends to this Government an improvement of the prospects of the whole establishment. This Government sanctions the improvement of the prospects of the clerical establishment of the executive engineer but point-blank refuses to do anything for the accounts branch, which is a part and parcel of the same office. They referred the matter to the Government of India. Mr. Griffiths told me, that they had written to the Government of India to improve the prospects of the accountants and to bring them on the same level with the clerical establishment. The Government of India refused. The accountants are then left in exactly the same deplorable position as they have been in, with the anomaly added to it, that an accountant gets less than his own clerk in some cases. Representations have been made to the Government of Bombay on that account. The anomalies do exist. The honourable member the Chief Secretary, P. W. D. admitted to me that there is that anomaly in some cases. Now, in spite of these anomalies existing, the Accountant General, instead of improving the prospects of these servants of the engineering department, wishes a cadre of 17 more on the same prospects of discontent to be added and wishes to perpetuate that discontent thereby. My submission to this House is that this House should compel the Government of India, through the Bombay Government, which is managing the whole establishment to employ a grant like this, of Rs. 21,000 in satisfying the legitimate aspirations of the cadre that already exists, instead of spending it upon an additional cadre of 17. I therefore object to the provision of Rs. 21,000 every year for the purpose of providing 17 more men when the cadre itself is, according to the standards laid down by this Government for other clerical establishment, low paid and there is discontent in the service. That is my contention and that contention has not been replied to. I therefore submit to the House that until that is done, this item should be held in abeyance.

The Honourable Khan Bahandar SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, I have not heard from the honourable the Deputy President anything about the merits of the case. All along, he has been arguing about the difficulties under which these people work and saying that we should raise their salaries, and because we have not raised their salaries, he does not want that we should be given this grant. I do not think the honourable the Deputy President can ask this House to raise the salaries of any particular individuals under the Government of India Act. Moreover, Sir, these accountants all over India are under the control of the Government of India as this is a central subject. If the anomaly which the honourable the Deputy President pointed out exists, it does not affect this presidency only; it affects all other presidencies as well. However, the question of keeping the accountants in the Bombay Presidency—and also the accountants of other presidencies similarly—under the control of the local Governments is under the consideration of Government of India; and when we become their sole masters we will do everything in our power for them. But at present what the honourable member asks us to remedy is not in our hands. I hope therefore the honourable House will sanction this grant.

Question put and lost.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I should like to ask honourable members what is their view as regards the manner these items are to be taken up by the House. There are in the total grant of Rs. 1,68 lakhs certain items which are transferred, certain items which are reserved and certain items which contain provision for both transferred and reserved. The way in which the motions for reduction and omission have been printed put them in the order in which the items appear in the budget; whether they are transferred or reserved, no distinction is made. I have got a separate list of motions which shows transferred and reserved items separately, and those which are both transferred and reserved. If honourable members desire that we should take the transferred first, then the reserved, and then the transferred and reserved, we will follow that procedure. If they desire that the motions as printed should be taken in that order it can be done. In the latter case I will be glad, if the House so desires, to intimate to what category each item belongs. I should like to know what are the wishes of the honourable House.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : I think the second course is better, according to the printed list.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Yes, I think that is better, especially as honourable members prepare their study or criticism of the motions in the order in which they appear on the printed paper.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Very well ; I will then intimate to the House on each occasion whether the item proposed to be omitted or reduced belongs to transferred, or reserved, or jointly to both.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : I rise to a point of order, Sir. The demand here is made under 41, Civil Works : all the establishment is brought under that head, 41, Provincial Civil Works, for 1925-26. Provincial Civil Works, 41, is a transferred subject—the whole of it. If the establishments are brought under that,—as soon as they are brought under that head 41, Civil Works,—they all become transferred. How can there be any difference ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It is for Government to explain that point. It can hardly be called a point of order. The honourable House is entitled to move reductions or omissions in regard to both transferred and reserved establishments. The only difference is that in the case of reserved the grants can be restored.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : That is exactly my position. If it is brought under 41, we can rule out any item without any fear of restoration. We have absolute right to cut it off if the head is made 41, Civil Works.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is so under the Act, and I should like Government to explain what they have got to say about it.

Mr. G. WILES : Sir, I think I might make clear in the first instance the difference between a budget statement and a demand. They do not always coincide. The items which come properly, by the Devolution Rules, under 41, Civil Works, are shown in our Civil Works Budget at page 231. That is the transferred portion of the demand which is now being made. That comes to Rs. 1,17 lakhs. That is the transferred department. The whole of that is entirely distinct from the rest of the demand which is now being made. For purposes of accounting it is necessary that we should ask for all establishments together, and we have added in this demand (which we call partly transferred and partly reserved) certain establishments which belong to reserved. We are not introducing any new procedure. The difficulty has come to light only during this present session, because we came to the conclusion that we ought to follow, as far as we could, I think it is rule 26 of the rules of business of this House that, "as far as possible demands for transferred and reserved should be put separately...." It has never been the practice hitherto to separate these demands, but we have done our best in this session to differentiate them. It is not possible to differentiate Public Works establishments. If the House likes I am quite prepared to give a detailed explanation of the reasons for showing all these establishments under one head. The demand for 1,68 lakhs which we are now making for account purposes under the Honourable Minister includes 52 lakhs for reserved establishment. This is done for convenience of account keeping. If the House wishes to know why it is essential, I am prepared to explain it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The position would be cleared if you explain why these demands are made by a Minister who administers the transferred subjects. The financial position under the Reform scheme is that there are certain items which are non-votable and they are not placed before the House; they are stated in the budget, but being non-votable the House has no control over them. All the superior services are practically non-votable, and though they may be serving under the Ministers their salaries and emoluments are not subject to the vote of this House. Then, there are "reserved" subjects and "transferred" subjects not "reserved" services and "transferred" services. The reserved subjects are given in charge of the Governor in Council and the transferred subjects are in charge of the Governor acting with the Minister. The Public Works Department represents a transferred subject, and with the exception of the salaries and emoluments of officers on the non-votable list, serving in that department every item that is included in the demand as for Excise and Education, is votable. In these circumstances, how is it that Public Works, which is a transferred subject, can contain such a big item as 52 lakhs which is reserved. I can quite understand that there would be many items which are non-votable. If the amount comes under a reserved head, it ought to come under the department of one of the honourable Members of the Executive Council. That is the issue that the Honourable the Deputy President has raised, and for which an explanation is needed.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: On a point of information, Sir. What is this 52 lakhs reserved? Are they all salaries or do they contain anything besides salaries?

Mr. G. WILES: The actual figures are: Total demand, 1,68 lakhs; 1,15 lakhs relates to transferred items, 52 lakhs relates to reserved items; and out of that 52 lakhs reserved, Rs. 43,69,000 are for establishments, and the balance for tools and plant.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I make a suggestion, which will give Government and Mr. Wiles time to consider and place before the House the details of the 52 lakhs which is said to be reserved? Will it not be better if the Honourable Minister asks in the first instance a grant for 1,15 lakhs, so that the motions for omissions or reductions can be proceeded with on that basis, and if it is decided that the balance of 52 lakhs is also to be asked for by the Honourable Minister it can be done as a separate demand? The business before the House will be greatly facilitated by this procedure. When asking for the 52 lakhs Government can give all the information that the House requires regarding that item.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI: Sir, the demand under transferred is stated to be 1,15 lakhs. But on page 231 of the White Book which the Honourable the Finance Secretary quoted, we find under 41, Civil Works the total voted demand comes only to Rs. 1,04,67,000.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Mr. President, perhaps honourable members have not noticed the figures that are shown on page 5 of the preliminary issue of the Provincial Civil Works Budget Estimate. I think they will find all the figures that are in dispute shown there in some detail. That shows that under 41, Civil Works there is Rs. 1,00,58,000 (transferred); then under 60, Civil Works, establishment Rs. 14,15,800 and tools and plant Rs. 98,800 (transferred); then you have XIII-Irrigation, etc., establishment Rs. 7,57,700 and tools and plant Rs. 53,000; 15, other Revenue expenditure, establishment Rs. 5,47,020 and tools and plant Rs. 38,180; 55, Construction of Irrigation Works, etc., establishment Rs. 30,64,100 and tools and plant Rs. 8,17,400. That makes up the total of Rs. 1,68,50,000 which is the demand moved by the Honourable Minister.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Honourable the Finance Member will see that the whole amount of Rs. 1,68,50,000 is shown as "transferred" on page 5. The whole difficulty is how 52 lakhs of this could be "reserved".

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: I think there has been a misprint. I think those figures commencing XIII-Irrigation should be shown as "reserved".

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The whole item is shown as transferred not only in this, but in the printed papers everywhere. I am subsequently told that 52 lakhs are reserved. I think the best plan is to leave the reserved portion out of the present demand, and move for the total demand for the transferred department only. Then the demand for the reserved portion may be moved separately, and when moving that Government can give the House all the information they desire. We will deal with the demand proposed for the reserved departments separately.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Well, this is the system. We were told to ask in this manner by the Auditor General who is the final arbiter of the manner in which the accounts are to be kept. And the immediate purpose is to enable the accounts to be kept together for establishments which are partly used under the Honourable the Minister on transferred subjects and partly under the Honourable Member for Irrigation. Many of these officers are transferable. Sometimes they are in one branch and sometimes in another branch, and the whole matter is so intricate and linked up one branch with another that it is exceedingly difficult to deal with them separately.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I draw your attention to rule 26 to which reference has been made which says:

"Demands affecting reserved and transferred subjects shall, so far as may be possible, be kept distinct," and that is what I am suggesting. You have got distinct figures for reserved and transferred: why not put the demands separately?

Mr. G. WILES : Sir, in order to understand this it will be necessary to explain the system of accounts. If the House will turn to Public Works Department Budget page 41, Civil Works, they will see the whole establishment of engineers and clerks is put down there in detail; some of them belong partly to transferred and partly to reserved. Sometimes establishment employed in the reserved side does also some work of the transferred side. For instance the Irrigation Establishment is not entirely distinct in some districts, but also deals with roads and buildings. In order to be able to distribute the total cost at the end of the year pro rata over all the works, we have to show them under one demand. The detailed cost of all establishments is shown, as I have said, on page 41. But in order to show in the budget the approximate amount which is likely to be debited at the end of the year under heads XIII, 15 and so on, the cost of establishment charges has been shown as 21½ per cent. of the estimated cost of the works. These sums are transferred to the major heads concerned. The estimated cost of Sukkur Barrage is shown in detail and the whole establishment is transferred to head 55. That is an exception to the rule. The reason is that the Sukkur Barrage is self-contained and we can consequently transfer to the major head 55 exactly the estimated cost. We do not know what the cost of establishment will be under 15, and the other major heads. That we shall find only when we get the detail of the works which have been carried out by the establishment. At the end of the year the Accountant General works out the detailed pro rata cost of establishments which have been employed on transferred and reserved works respectively; and that distribution is shown in the Public Works Department accounts at the end of the year. We do not know at present what the establishment will cost to each department. But for the purpose of the budget we consider that the establishment cost will be 21½ per cent. of the estimated cost of the works and this detailed distribution is shown at page 41 at the bottom. That sum we have transferred to the detailed heads, the major heads, XIII, 15, 55, and 60.

It is obvious that if we make separate demands now on the basis of the 21½ per cent. for the transferred and reserved establishments, we shall not be in a position at the end of the year to enable the Accountant General to make the pro rata distribution. There must be one demand in order that the Accountant General may transfer the pro rata cost over the various works. I hope I have made myself clear.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : What has the honourable member the Deputy President to say ?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Sir, my difficulty has not yet been answered. We want to know whether the Honourable Minister is making the demand both for the Honourable Member in charge of Irrigation and himself—52 lakhs for Irrigation and 1,15 lakhs for Civil Works in the Honourable Minister's charge. That is the question. If he is not doing so, then the whole amount of 1,68 lakhs is under the absolute control of this House. The very heading on page 5 shows : Statement showing the total demand to be voted by the Legislative Council. If according to this, the whole amount is transferred I would only like to be satisfied as to whether the total demand of 168 lakhs which the Honourable Minister is moving is under the absolute vote of this House.

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Mr. President, I appreciate what the honourable the Deputy President wishes to do. He wishes to be certain that if the House passes an adverse vote with regard to any item Government may not have the power to restore it. Well, Sir, we know roughly what the proportion between the reserved and the transferred should be and I think we would be able to distribute it among all the departments and fulfil any vote of this House that might be adverse to any particular grant. After the vote is given we will be able to allocate how much of that particular item could be treated as reserved or as transferred. We could do it only roughly, because these are estimates in advance. I undertake that Government would do its best to give effect to any adverse vote that might be passed by this House.

So far as the technical point is concerned under rule 26 of the Bombay Legislative Council Rules:

“ . . . the Finance Member may in his discretion include in one demand grants proposed for two or more departments, or make a demand in respect of expenditure, such as Famine Relief and Insurance and Interest, which cannot readily be classified under particular Departments.”

We are doing our very best to deal with the intricate matter in this particular case. As the Finance Secretary has already pointed out it is not possible to avoid combining these grants under one head. I think it will be possible to give effect to the vote of the House.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Only the Finance Member can do it.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I suggest, Sir, that the Honourable the Finance Member holds the hand of the Honourable the Minister of the Public Works Department, and that they together make a joint demand. If there are any cuts they will divide the cuts between themselves; and the exact proportion can be ascertained subsequently.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The difficulty will arise only with regard to lump sum cuts. As regards individual cuts, the Government can, when the cut is under consideration, inform the House whether it is transferred or reserved. That information is available. I have got it and I will be glad to mention it to the House if so desired immediately after the motion is proposed. The difficulty is with regard to lump sum cuts which must affect both reserved and transferred. When proposals for such cuts come up, I hope the Honourable the Finance Member in accordance with the assurance he has given will put the House in possession of all the facts. In the meantime let us proceed with the items as they stand in print. I take it that that is the wish of the House. In regard to individual cuts it is perfectly clear from the information supplied by Government, which relate to transferred and which to reserved departments. They are of course entitled to move for omissions or reductions whether the demand asked for is reserved or transferred.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN (Thana and Bombay Suburban Districts): Sir, I beg to move :

"That item No. 198 on page 22 of the Blue Book provision of Rs. 1,12,680 for additional establishment for creation of two temporary districts in the Deccan Irrigation Division be omitted."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is reserved.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN: This demand is made for the creation of two temporary divisions with regard to the irrigation works that are going on in the Deccan. They propose to split up the Poona Irrigation district into two districts, one comprising the Nira Left Bank Canal and the other Mutha Canal and Matoba tank, etc., and the two irrigation districts of Nasik, Ahmednagar and Khandesh into three irrigation districts, comprising the Nasik, the Khandesh and the Ahmednagar Irrigation districts. We are told that these two new divisions are sought to be created, because there is too much work for the executive engineers of the Poona Irrigation and Pravara Canals districts. Obviously these two districts are going to be created as a permanent measure and that is exactly what I was told in the Finance Committee when I brought it to the notice of the chairman of that committee. Here it is shown under non-recurring expenditure. Recurring column is shown as nil and only non-recurring expenditure is shown. I have found time after time that these so-called temporary establishments become permanently temporary. It is like the thin end of the wedge; we are asked to sanction for a few months, and then the expenditure is never brought before this Council for its sanction. These temporary establishments become thus permanent. If in fact these two executive engineers are overworked and the irrigation works are going to continue, these two districts that are going to be created are not going to be abolished. On page 41 of the preliminary budget estimate of the Public Works Department, honourable members will find that the establishment charges of the Superintending Engineer, Deccan Division, for 1924-25 are shown as Rs. 11,59,500. For the year 1925-26 the expenditure on this establishment is put down as Rs. 13,11,200. This shows that for the next year there is an excess of Rs. 1,57,700. Why is this excess required and where is it required? Government do not even give an idea as to why nearly Rs. 39,000 more is required this year. If there is going to be a revision of pay, then as regards that there is a lump sum provision of Rs. 99,100. The expenditure on Deccan Irrigation works is swelling up like anything every year. My submission to this honourable House is that expenditure which is shown as temporary is never abolished, because a man who is in the habit of finding some relief and assistance for his work gets into that habit and is never willing to abolish the temporary staff. They will never consent to the abolition of these two new districts.

I also want an explanation with regard to Rs. 39,000 for which there is no explanation given either in the Blue Book or White Book.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh) : Sir, there is a similar motion standing in my name which is motion No. 619 and I beg to support the motion that has been moved by my honourable friend from Thana. The note which he has read from the Blue Book is not at all explicit. We do not know how many executive engineers and assistant engineers are being employed on that work. At page 31 of the preliminary issue the provision has been entered into as lump provision and I raise a technical objection that there is a new scheme to be created. I think under the Standing Order all possible material ought to be provided to the honourable House. I refer, Sir, to Standing Order XI, 1-A :—

“When the demands made in accordance with Rule 26 or 31 relate to any new scheme of revision of scale of pay or allowances or creation of a new appointment, all material details of such scheme or revision shall be supplied to all members as early as possible.”

My contention is that we do not know how the officers are going to be employed, and as all the materials have not been supplied, I think the demand is vitiated and I demand your ruling on the point.

The point is that all the material facts relating to this scheme have not been supplied to the House and unless that is done under Standing Order XI, 1-A, they cannot ask for a demand of Rs. 1,10,000 in a lump provision as they have done.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I should like to know what Government have got to say about it. Under Standing Order XI, 1-A, it is clearly provided that when the demands made in accordance with rule 26 or 31 relate to any new scheme or revision of scale of pay or allowances or creation of a new appointment all material details of such scheme or revision shall be supplied to all members as early as possible. Has it been supplied even up to now ? That is the question.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : Sir, if the House will listen to me and then if they consider that because a part of the provision has been sanctioned by the House on a former occasion that they should give me a hearing.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I will give you an opportunity of explaining the point of order.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : I cannot answer that.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Certainly, you can go into details to point out to the House how the House is in possession of all the information.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : Sir, the point is that in the present instance I am not going to ask Rs. 1,12,000. We do not propose to create a new district in Khandesh. We propose to divide the Poona Irrigation district into two and therefore the grant for Rs. 1,12,680 shown as non-recurring may be reduced to Rs. 62,730. I do not want to press for the whole grant.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : That is not the point. The point is whether you have supplied all the information to the House.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : The point is the new district is required for carrying out the Nira Valley Development project.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I understood the Honourable the General Member to say that the House is possessed of the details and that they may make use of them. That would be perfectly relevant in answer to the point of order raised.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : I am just mentioning it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Yes.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : The House will remember that at the last budget session they were pleased to pass the Nira Valley Development project. It went to the Secretary of State, and it is only lately that we have received the sanction of the Secretary of State to the project. This district is required partly for the work of the Nira Valley Development project. That is in short my explanation. Of course, if the House does not like it, I will not persist, but will bring in a demand for a supplementary grant, if you, Sir, and the House desires it, but it will put this project back for a short time which, I am certain, the House would be reluctant to do. They have already sanctioned the project. I regret that the details are not there, for which I apologise, but I am prepared to give the details just now. If you rule, Sir, I will withdraw it now, and bring it again, but I must say that we may have to delay that important work in the Deccan for a few months.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable Member had better withdraw the item.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : I am willing to do it, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable the General member wishes to withdraw the item, and therefore the best thing is to accept the motion.

Question put and carried.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : Sir, the motion which stands in my name is :

“Reduce to Rs. 15,000—construction of stables, coach houses, motor sheds, store rooms and syces' quarters at Government House, Karachi, Rs. 29,000.”

I understand that my honourable friend Mr. Adwani is moving for the deletion of this item. My motion is only for a reduction, and therefore I do not wish to move it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The ordinary procedure is that the motion for the total deletion of the item should be taken up first. If the total deletion is carried, then the motion to reduce the item could not be moved.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City) : Mr. President, I beg to move :

“Omit the amount of Rs. 29,000 for construction of stables, coach houses, motor sheds, store rooms and syces' quarters at Government House, Karachi.”

[Mr. D. B. Adwani]

Sir, it is obvious that in a lean year like this, we should do away with all items which are not absolutely necessary. I am quite certain that, with their consummate skill and ability, the members of the Public Works Department can support this building for another year more, if it is actually about to fall down, and thus help the horses, the carriages and the motor cars and what not of the Commissioner in Sind to be safely housed. And the Commissioner in Sind can get the building repaired out of his discretionary grant for a year.

Question proposed.

Mr. L. J. MOUNTFORD : Sir, I am afraid I cannot quite agree with the honourable member who has just spoken, who considers these works unnecessary and can be postponed for one year more, as I myself had the misfortune on my arrival as Commissioner in Sind of having to place my motor car in this shed, the result of which I will describe later. I cannot agree with the honourable member also because a very large sum of this amount is going towards providing quarters for the peons, and we must admit that the peon has a right to have some roof over his head as any one else has, and I have found the peons' quarters there for a long time kept out of their proper share of repairs, possibly because the money was not forthcoming. The roof is in a terrible state and is a mass of patch work, and the sides are protected by tatties owing to the constant efforts of the peons trying to improve the quarters. The honourable member can see that any day if he walks in to the Commissioner's compound. A large portion of the amount is to be spent upon the servants' quarters, some Rs. 8,060 apart from the money required for the motor shed, stables, etc. Again, these buildings must be repaired some time or other, and it is better to have something that will last rather than resort to patch work from time to time. If the buildings are not properly repaired, they must eventually fall down. The roof is sagging, the tiles are coming off, and in the case of high winds the dust blows in and the buildings will not be fit for human habitation. As regards my own motor car, when I arrived in Sind, I naturally asked where I should put my car, and I was told I had to put it in a curious structure half a stable and half a shed. I put it there, and it was not very long before the screen was broken, something probably having fallen on it through the roof or of the roof. Any way, the screen was broken. Sometime afterwards, owing to the fact that we could not prevent anything coming in to attack the car either through the floor, or through the broken windows or through the open roof—we could not possibly stuff up all the openings—my car was attacked by a kind of woolly caterpillar which ate up all the horsehair of my cushions and I had to incur a large expense in replacing the stuffing inside my cushions. All went well for some time, but when I got my car back at Belgaum, I found that these Karachi animals had again consumed the horsehair stuffing of the cushions in the car and that I had not completely destroyed them and I had to restuff my cushions all over again. Another reason for these improvements is that the buildings have a mud floor, and when the rain came down, it was in an intolerable mess. These are only the private personal troubles of a poor Commissioner. We will leave those out. Let us take the troubles of the unfortunate peons when the rains come down. You do get rains on occasions in Karachi, and the peons are not able to live in their quarters at all, as the rain falls on the floor through the roof, and causes large puddles for them to sit in. Surely, it is time that we put these buildings in a proper state of repair, otherwise the whole buildings will come down which would cost a large sum to rebuild. I can assure honourable members that this expenditure is absolutely necessary, and I doubt very much if we can wait for one year more. It is open to any honourable member to go and inspect those buildings himself, but if I were myself there I would never allow them to go inside and stand under the roof, otherwise the numbers of this honourable House might be diminished. I therefore trust this House will not allow this motion of reduction.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South): Sir, I am really glad to hear that the honourable members on the other side have some solicitude for the unfortunate peons. What I cannot understand is that this is perhaps the sixth or seventh Government building wherein we find that the upper storeys and the roofs are not in order. I really do not know whether it is not high time to consult some eminent expert on this very important point, because it is not endangering unfortunate peons or clerks but it is endangering practically things which are much more valuable even than the lives of the peons. We heard also of the destruction by white ants. I thought that the destruction was confined to the Government press in Bombay.

I find, Sir, that the white ants destruction is spreading all over the presidency and it has penetrated even to Karachi and I do not know to what other place.

Now, Sir, so far as this building is concerned, particularly when we have been sanctioning or have to sanction thousands of rupees for buildings, for higher officers I do not think we ought to grudge a few thousands for the poor peons. I therefore hope, Sir, that the honourable mover of this motion is moved by the appeal of the honourable member (Mr. L. J. Mountford) on the other side, that his is really a solicitude for the peons and not anxiety for the car. I would ask my honourable friend to consider whether he should press his motion for omission, or withdraw it.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): Sir, in view of the pathetic description of the troubles of the poor Commissioner in Sind which we have just listened to, I think I should withdraw my motion.

Question put and leave granted.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khanesdh District): I beg to move, Sir,

That the provision for Discretionary Grants be reduced by Rs. 5,25,700.

I find, Sir, that the provision which has been shown in this small book "Preliminary Issue" is Rs. 11,25,700, but in the White Book the amount has been shown to be 11 lakhs. I do not know to what this difference is due. I hope that this difference will be explained by the Honourable Member in charge. Another difficulty is that there are no revised estimates given of these discretionary grants for the current year as well as for the year 1923-24. It has, therefore, been very difficult to see whether the demand which has been made is really justifiable or not. Now I do not understand what these discretionary grants are. Whether they are for original works or repairs, I do not know. Whether they are for foreseen or unforeseen works, that also we do not know. If it is a provision for works which are foreseen, provision ought to have been made under repairs; if it is a provision for works which are unforeseen, I think that such a demand cannot be made under the Standing Orders. That is a technical objection which I raise, and I think, Sir, if this provision is made for unforeseen works, then the proper procedure for Government is to come to this House for a supplementary grant or an additional grant.

Now, Sir, there is one thing which ought to be considered in this connection and that is that the House has made a provision of 15 lakhs as a reserve to the Honourable the Finance Member under 47 Miscellaneous. When we have that reserve and if any money is required for purposes which are unforeseen, this reserve with the Finance Member could be well utilised. Then also, Sir, under 41 Civil Works, there is a provision of 1 lakh on page 4 for reserve with Government in the Finance Department. I therefore do not see why a provision of Rs. 11,25,700 is at all necessary. Sir, I am not at all willing to give a blank cheque to the officers who are mentioned in this Preliminary Issue. It has been said by the Honourable Minister for civil works that for small works estimates could not be prepared.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : I said they are prepared.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : Well, Sir, if they are prepared, the Honourable Minister ought to know whether the provision demanded is for repairs or for original works. If it is for original works, he could have increased the amount which he has asked for original works; if it is for repairs then he ought to have increased the demand for repairs. If he does not want it for original work or for repairs, I think he cannot legitimately ask for the amount under this head. It has been said that the small items could not be shown in the book, but I find that items to the extent of even Rs. 70 have been shown in this White Book, page 6. Repairs even to the extent of Rs. 70 have been shown; also for amounts of Rs. 200 and Rs. 300 have been shown. So, Sir, if Members of Government or Ministers are able to show details of Rs. 70 in the White Book, I do not think discretionary grants are at all necessary and therefore I propose the reduction that I moved.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Which figures is the Honourable member referring to ?

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: I am referring to Public Works Department Budget Estimate—15.—Other Revenue Expenditure financed from Ordinary Revenues.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: That is for Irrigation.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: It may be for Irrigation; but you have shown details even for small items. If estimates were ready with you, it would have been possible for you to show them. Therefore, I think my demand is quite moderate and the amount of discretionary grants should be reduced by Rs. 5,25,700.

Question proposed.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): Mr. President, in speaking in support of the motion, I must say that this matter seems very mysterious. On turning to page 14 of the book you find that details of 11 lakhs are given and under the head of "Discretionary Grants" one finds several officers mentioned with very big amounts against their names. To take only one instance, the Commissioner in Sind is mentioned and against his name, under the heading "Works not commenced", one finds Rs. 1,90,000, i.e., nearly 2 lakhs. I should like to know what that amount means. It comes under the heading "Works not commenced." Does it mean he keeps 2 lakhs in his hands in order to start works which are not known at this date, so that he can come to this House at a subsequent date and say that the works are already in progress and the sanction of this House is wanted to further expenditure? What is this money wanted for? A big amount like 2 lakhs to be kept in the hands of the Commissioner in Sind for works not commenced. I think the House is entitled to a very satisfactory explanation as to why these big amounts are placed in the hands of these officers.

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI: Sir, provision for these discretionary grants is not being made for the first time in this year's budget. We find they are made year after year. So I really do not see why honourable members think this is an innovation this year. These grants are placed at the discretion of heads of departments for financing works of the nature of minor original works, that is, works costing under Rs. 10,000 each.

When they find the necessity for works of this nature the heads of departments get the plans and estimates prepared and get the work done by the Public Works Department. Such plans and estimates must be prepared by the Executive Engineer of the district and administrative approval by the head of the department, who has to finance it from his discretionary grant, has to be given before the works are undertaken. After administrative approval has been received these estimates are technically sanctioned by the competent authority, who is usually the Superintending Engineer of the division. In most cases the sanction of the superintending engineer is enough, but there are certain cases for which Government sanction is required. Small works, for instance, small drains, culverts and causeways, small additions or improvements to existing buildings, etc., which are not specifically provided for in our budget are usually financed from the discretionary grants of the officers with whom these amounts are placed. During the period of war many such works had been deferred for want of money, and the officers have been making very heavy demands on us from time to time with regard to these grants. The Commissioner in Sind, for instance, to whom it is proposed to give Rs. 1,90,000 has actually demanded Rs. 5,00,000 for the next year. The Superintending Engineers have been making much heavier demands than we have been able to give them in the next year's budget.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : On a point of information, Sir. May I know why the figures of the revised estimates of 1924-25 are not shown? What is shown is only a total of 10 lakhs under the budget estimate for 1924-25.

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI : It is not usual to do so ; the amounts for 1925-26 are all for new works ; they are not for works in progress.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA : How much of this demand will be left in the hands of these officers at the end of this year ?

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI : If they do not spend the full amount given to them in the budget year, the amount lapses.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA : How much has been spent by each officer ?

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI : We cannot say. When the year is out we can say.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : Last year how much has been spent ?

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI : Possibly the whole.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Why is it not shown in columns 6 and 7 on page 15 (Provincial Civil Works Budget Estimate) ?

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI : They do not spend it on exactly the same works. These works which are provided for for the next year are entirely different from those they have in hand this year.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : We do not go by the works ; we go by the amounts left in each officer's hand. Whatever he has spent ought to have been shown in columns 6 and 7.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I should like to explain columns 6 and 7. This is a general form which applies to works generally and not merely to discretionary grants. If you see columns 6 and 7 with regard to special works it does show against each work what was actually spent in 1923-24 and the probable amount in 1924-25. I gather those columns are not really intended to apply to discretionary grants, so that details of the actual works executed have not to be given.

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI : Sir, as I was explaining, there are many useful works on which these grants are expended. I will read out a few of the works actually carried out.

|---|-------|
| Improvement to Pasarni ghat on Surul-Mahableshwar | Rs. |
| road | 2,500 |

[Mr. K. S. Framji]

| | Rs. |
|---|-------|
| Protecting foundations, raising and widening embankment of nallas 99 and 102 of Mahad-Pandharpur road | 2,000 |
| Constructing a post mortem room in the Civil Hospital, Alibag | 2,147 |
| Making certain additions and alterations to the Mental Hospital, Ahmedabad | 3,871 |
| Renewing the roof of the female barrack at the Karachi prison | 4,125 |
| Constructing quarters for the compounders at Bijapur prison | 2,661 |
| Construction of a temporary laboratory building at the Karwar High School | 6,854 |
| Providing railing to the high bank on the north approach of Panjhra Bridge at Dhulia | 1,000 |

Either the executive engineer himself initiates the improvements and furnishes the necessary estimates, or the officer in whose charge the buildings are asks the executive engineer to furnish the necessary estimates. The estimates are furnished and sanctioned and then the works are undertaken by the department. I think I have sufficiently explained to the House that these grants are necessary, and we cannot foresee what improvements or works may be required. And the amounts provided, as I said, are much below the actual amounts demanded. The total amount demanded by the officers is Rs. 18,85,000, against which we have given only Rs. 11,25,000.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: My point remains unanswered, Sir. My objection is that we have no actuals to go by. We should have been given the actuals for 1923-24. Surely these officers must have spent some amount in that year. If those amounts had been shown this House would have been guided by those figures in the determination of the question whether Rs. 11,25,000 is necessary or not. I do not agree with the view of the Honourable the Home Member that columns 6 and 7 are not intended for such amounts.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I suggest to the honourable member that instead of asking for information every time it would be better if he brought out all these points in the course of the speech which he is entitled to make?

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: I raised the point, so that the honourable member might have a chance of answering it.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I support the motion of my honourable friend Mr. Joshi on various grounds. I think, Sir, it is our good fortune that the budget for the Public Works Department which used to be rushed through and guillotined during the previous years has now come under the consideration of the Council in detail. The manner of expending these funds without any consideration by this Council has at least been exposed to the view of the Honourable the

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

Finance Member. We look up to him to take care of the way in which this money has in the past been spent. Now, Sir, I have complete faith in the present Honourable the Finance Member and I give him greater credit for vigilance than honourable members on the other side. Therefore, I am appealing more to the Honourable the Finance Member than to any other. Out of these discretionary grants a sum of Rs. 75,700 is reserved with Government and another sum of Rs. 1,00,000 is reserve with the Finance Department. So that, Government, apart from the Commissioners and other officers, have with themselves a grant of nearly two lakhs in their hands for the purpose of spending in that direction. I hope this sum of Rs. 1,75,700 is not for spending on Government House. I hope the Honourable the Finance Member does not only take these grants for Government House and unforeseen charges. I take it that the Finance Member also takes care of this amount which he takes for unforeseen works, not in his department because he has no necessity to build, but for other departments. My chief objection to allowing this huge grant of Rs. 11,25,000 is this: that this House should not confer upon the lower officers greater responsibility than lies on the Honourable the Finance Member himself. The Honourable the Finance Member has in his possession, outside the double lock of the Government of India a sum of 15 lakhs of rupees—9 lakhs for the transferred departments and 6 lakhs for the reserved departments—out of which to meet unforeseen expenditure. The Honourable the Finance Member cannot, however, spend a pie out of that, and he does not spend a pie out of that, except with the previous consent of the Finance Committee first and of this House next. The Honourable the Finance Member himself is tied down in spending this 15 lakhs. When we put such a restriction on the Honourable the Finance Member in the spending of a sum of 15 lakhs, I object in principle to distributing 11 lakhs of rupees nearly an equal amount, to the officers under Government, and giving them a blank cheque to spend the grants as they like, without taking the sanction either of Government or of the Council. These officers are given unlimited power over these grants: they have not got to get the sanction of the Finance Committee or of Government itself. What is the result of this state of affairs? On page 4, Sir, of the Provincial Civil Works Budget Estimate, you will see the details of expenditure for previous years (the actuals of 1923-24, the budget estimate of 1924-25 and the revised estimate of 1924-25) are given with regard to all the other items, but that with regard to this item of discretionary grants those details are not given. When the honourable member (Mr. Jayakar) asked for these details, the answer given to him by the Honourable the Secretary to the Public Works Department, was that Government had not received the accounts from the several officers, and therefore Government could not show therein the revised estimates for 1924-25. Well, I strongly demur to that statement. Government must have received ten months' details. Revised estimate means ten months' actuals and two months' probable expenditure. Therefore, Sir, Government ought to be in a position to give the amounts that have been actually spent by the Commissioners and other officers in ten months. Then, Sir, so far as the actuals for 1923-24 are concerned, they have not even the semblance of reason for not giving them. They actually spent all the amounts up to April 1924 and the bills are before the Government. If they are not they should give them back. Has Government told us that out of the discretionary grant of 1923-24 how much the several officers have spent, or whether the Honourable the Finance Member proposes to give a blank cheque to any officer without any account? Is the Honourable the Finance Member, is the Government in the Public Works Department, prepared to ask this House to sanction 11 lakhs, to give a blank cheque to these officers without calling for bills or accounts. No accounts are given and the Council has to sanction this amount without incurring any responsibility, without asking for accounts, without even putting limitations upon the several officers, as much limitation as it is open for this Council to put upon our Finance Member. I leave it to the Council whether they will be exercising a fair discretion in allowing this demand. I put it on a broad principle, when this House is possessed of the power of the purse, whether this grant without any discretion should be sanctioned in the way that it has been done. If they want any money for any unforeseen expenses there is the Honourable the Finance Member who has got within his control 9 lakhs of rupees for the Ministers for unforeseen expenditure, for other departments he has got 6 lakhs of rupees. Surely last year and the year before last the Honourable the Finance Member has not spent more than 6 lakhs or more than 10 lakhs, not more than half the amount that remains in his possession. The rest goes to the balance. Is the Honourable the Finance Member, who, with the responsibility of accounting to the Council, is so constrained to see that he does not spend more than necessary and is very careful in scrutinising every scheme that comes before this House, prepared to give unlimited authority to these officers to spend without any account?

I therefore submit that this Council should grant this motion of 5 lakhs or that the honourable member himself should see his way to allow this 5 lakhs, so that greater care may be taken in future in sanctioning these amounts.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: The point of order I raised is that the grant cannot be asked for under the Standing Order which I referred to.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: This is not a new item. It is a renewal of last year's item. It is not an unforeseen item. The motion is quite in order.

Mr. F. G. PRATT: Mr. President, I will talk about the portion of this discretionary grant which I have to administer. I have heard the honourable the Deputy President talk of the unlimited sums which are lavished upon commissioners to be spent at their sweet will. 'Unlimited sums' was the expression used 'to be expended without any control practically as they please'. I would like to say what the facts are about my discretionary grant. The discretionary grant which was placed at my disposal was Rs. 47,000; this year it goes down to Rs. 40,000.

Now, I will try and explain what are the objects upon which that money is spent. Probably it would not be out of place if I state a word or two about the rationale of this discretionary grant. There are various minor needs which are to be met by minor expenditure of minor amounts, and it is desirable that time and trouble should not be wasted of this House in considering these comparatively trivial detailed administrative needs. It is desirable that time and trouble should not be wasted in correspondence from the district officers and commissioners up to the Secretariat minuting on and noting, and trouble should not be wasted when there are certain administrative needs to be met. What are those urgent administrative needs on a minor scale? What I understand by my discretionary grant is my minor works grant. The commissioner of a division is in control of a very large number of offices, court houses, kacheries, mamlatdars' kacheries, resident magistrates' court houses, all these building and appurtenances to these public buildings where public business is carried on. These buildings require constant attention, renewal, expansion in accordance with the growing needs of the administration. There are all sorts of things that have to be done. There may be a bad cut in the floor of a Mamlatdar's kacheri which is insanitary for the clerks to sit on in rain, very uncomfortable kutchra low ground for which it is desirable that stone floor should be substituted, and old record room which is infested by white ants has to be made white-ant proof by stone floor to be substituted for kutchra floor; then another, there may be ceilings which are bad kutchra ceilings and through which dirt and dust is constantly thrown upon the clerks; all these works have to be attended to in these office buildings, these ceilings have often to be repaired, have to be made pucca and strong wooden ceilings. Then again there is another long waiting list. I have very often heard claims made in this House for provision for waiting rooms for the public who have to transact business in these kacheries. These waiting rooms cannot be provided without expenditure of money. I would sanction such expenditure only after going through the plans and estimates carefully out of this minor works grant. Then we find it necessary and desirable that our clerks who are crowded very often in ill-ventilated and dark rooms should be given good ventilated rooms not only in the interest of public business but also in the interest of their own health. Then these are the objects upon which this grant is spent.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD : On durbars ?

Mr. F. G. PRATT : Not on champagne, or altar, or pan.

One Honourable MEMBER : On Commissioner's bungalows ?

Mr. F. G. PRATT : Not on Commissioner's bungalows.

No money is spent without administrative approval coupled with detailed plans and estimates. If there are no plans and estimates submitted before, I would not even care to look into any demand for minor works. Then, though a small but still a very necessary item is the provision of latrines for the benefit of the public, over the discussion of which the Council would not like to waste its time. This demand is too valuable to be brushed aside ; and this will have to be paid out of the minor works grant. The estimates for these minor works are audited by the Accountant General. Because it is called discretionary grant, it does not mean that the money is spent without discretion. It is carefully considered whether a particular thing is needed or not.

[Mr. F. G. Pratt]

Mr. S. S. DEV : How much has the honourable member spent during this year ?

Mr. F. G. PRATT : Out of my discretionary grant, I would not allow more than Rs. 200 or Rs. 300 to lapse.

I have been reminded by my honourable friend to my left about one of the most crying and urgent demands which are being pressed upon me and my honourable friend by the officers under our control—some decent modern standard of efficiency in such matters as furniture in the mamlatdars' and even Collectors' offices. These officers have to go on tours and carry records with them and it is necessary that they should also have despatch boxes. Even a Collector bitterly complained to me that he had not enough despatch boxes to carry about his records. In the mamlatdars' offices.....

An Honourable MEMBER : Three legged chairs and broken tables.

Mr. F. G. PRATT : Yes ; as the honourable member says the mamlatdars' offices are miserably equipped. We must have this money for giving material equipment in order to give this presidency a decent administration.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : On a point of information, Sir. Before the honourable member resumes his seat, I wish to know how much he has spent out of this grant approximately for 1924-25.

Mr. F. G. PRATT : I think about Rs. 46,541.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : That figure might have been entered in columns 6 and 7.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, the actuals for 1923-24 can be had and estimates can of course be made for 1924-25 up to the coming 31st of March. I never intended to suggest that they could not. All I said was that these columns have probably not been filled in because they were intended primarily for the entries dealing with specific works. There is no reason why these figures which are probably available in the Secretariat should not have been entered. I believe my honourable friend to my right (The Finance Member) will see that they are entered in future. This discussion shows, Sir, the wisdom this year of turning the budget upside down and beginning from the bottom and going up to the top. The object was to enable honourable members to look into the details which in previous years were not looked into for want of time. This has been effected.

[Sir Maurice Hayward]

I would like to add a word or two to what has fallen from the Commissioner as to the nature of these grants. There are a great many small items required in the districts for all the departments not only for the Revenue Department but for the Judicial Department, for the Police Department, for the Jails Department. They are petty minor items many of them costing a few hundred rupees, some of them going up to Rs. 5,000 and some to Rs. 10,000. Now, with regard to petty items costing Rs. 300 or Rs. 400, nobody here, certainly no businessman, would think that they should be placed in detail before this honourable House. The question is where the line is to be drawn. Some discretion must be given—such discretion is given to agents by business firms and to the subordinate officials to spend money on minor items. The system here is to give discretion up to Rs. 10,000. I understand that there is a distinction between sums up to Rs. 5,000 and sums up to Rs. 10,000. With regard to sums up to Rs. 5,000, the procedure, I understand, is that plans and estimates have to be prepared by the local engineer and if they are approved by the Superintending Engineer, the scheme has finally to be approved by the Commissioner or particular officer entrusted with this discretionary grant. Then the work is carried out and the details of the actual expenditure are entered in the accounts and submitted in due course to regular audit. It is not necessary for these items to be reported in detail to the Secretariat and placed either before the Honourable Minister or Member for the formal approval of Government. The reason is that it is desirable to get these small works done as quick as possible, and save the time of hard-worked officers. I do not suppose that honourable members of this House would require the Honourable Ministers and Members of Government to go into all the details of every petty work required to be done in the districts.

With regard to works above Rs. 5,000, the procedure is rather stricter and these works have to be reported to Government and approved administratively by Government. No work over Rs. 5,000 up to Rs. 10,000 can be begun without the administrative approval of Government. Such works are sent up and administratively approved, and all the discretion left to the Commissioners, the Inspector General of Prisons and the Inspector General of Police is to decide which of those approved works shall be given the money required for their execution. So that, even in small works there is the check of the audit of accounts, and in the larger works there is the preliminary check even of the administrative approval of Government. I do not think, Sir, I need add to the detailed list given by my honourable friend the Commissioner of the Northern Division. The discretionary grant provides for all sorts of useful things. It provides amongst other things chairs for pleaders to sit on when they have sat out the old ones.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : We do not get any.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : My honourable friend says that he does not get any ; I think he is perhaps right. It provides for tables, and so on, record shelves, and other miscellaneous items, repairs to roofs and so forth. Those are all small items, and I do not think that we ought to lay down a rule that such items require to be considered in detail by this honourable House.

[Sir Maurice Hayward]

Mr. D. B. ADWANI : Are chairs and tables considered to be part of Civil Works ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I am told there is a technical distinction between a contingency and civil work. I understand anything which you can move is a contingency, but if it is fixed on the floor it is a work.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : I have nothing to say in reply.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, I will say only one word. The honourable member the Deputy-President complained that it is a blank cheque. But the official benches have clearly shown that it is not so, and I hope the Council will vote against the motion.

(Discussion on demands for grants resumed.)

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I move:

"That the provision of Rs. 50,00,000 provided for repairs in the present budget be reduced by Rs. 2,00,000."

On page 4 of the Provincial Civil Works, Public Works Department budget, we find that the actuals of 1923-24 are 48,83; the budget estimate for 1924-25 is 48 lacs; the revised estimate for 1924-25, that is to say, the probable expenditure, is 47,79; and this time the budget estimate for 1925-26 is taken to be Rs. 2,21 more than the actual expenditure of the previous year. Now, Sir, if the honourable members turn to page 3 of the same book, which is the detailed estimate arrived at of the civil works of the province of Bombay, we find that the budget estimate of receipts for the rents of buildings of the P.W.D. is about Rs. 3,56,000. That is to say, the income arising out of the rents of buildings in the possession of the P.W.D. is about Rs. 3,56,000 only. The budget estimate for 1925-26 is Rs. 4,09,000. The total revenue that is expected out of all buildings in the possession of different departments and in the possession of different people is only Rs. 4,75,000. The actuals of the last year were—revised estimate—Rs. 48,372 and Rs. 3,72,000, that is to say, about Rs. 4,15,000 arising out of all the buildings in the possession of the Government. This certainly.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Do you mean that in this the residential courts and so forth are all included? We do not charge interest for courts.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: I was just going to say, before I was interrupted, that these are the incomes that arise out of the public buildings that are in the possession—the actual income that arises from all the buildings in the possession—of the P. W. D. Herein, Sir, is mentioned: the rents of electric installations, rents of water supply and sanitary installations, ferry receipts, tolls on roads, recoveries of expenditure, miscellaneous. Then, in the Civil Department: rents of buildings, rents of electric installations, rents of water supply and sanitary installations, ferry receipts, tolls on roads, recoveries of expenditure, miscellaneous, all these items are shown.

Now, Sir, it will be said by the Honourable Minister in charge—and it has been said a number of times before—that the Government possesses buildings worth about 10 or 12 crores of rupees and therefore it is necessary to spend about half a crore of rupees on repairs on buildings and roads. I strongly object to this kind of argument always being advanced that because the Government possesses buildings worth some crores of rupees—the income arising out of which is only Rs. 4,75,000—not even 5 lakhs—the extraordinary expenditure of half a crore of rupees should be kept apart for the purpose of repairs to those buildings. It will be said that they include roads also. But at the same time I may bring to the notice of the Honourable Minister sitting here as he does—in this distant city of Bombay—that this job work of roads is done by the P.W.D. and he is well aware that a road which would ordinarily, if in private possession, cost about Rs. 1,000 would certainly cost far more than Rs. 15,000 as is done under the present system when it is done by the P.W.D. I mean this unlimited expenditure on roads and the repairs of buildings, of which there is no regular account kept, and in which money is diverted in so many directions, is a matter in which considerable care and serious circumspection is necessary by the Honourable Minister and by the heads of the department. The P. W. D. sets apart $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the value for repairs of public buildings every year whether they require repairs or not. Now, is $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. actually required to be spent? That is the question. If on that calculation that $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. ought to be reserved on repairs and roads of buildings, this large amount is kept apart, then the engineers always have the tendency to spend this amount, whether the repairs are required or not, and money is diverted in many other directions. This is one of those items where considerable care is necessary, and yet, Sir, last year we find that out of the 48 lakhs that were provided for, 47,79 thousand is expected to be spent. Two months remain, perhaps less would be spent. But even according to the revised estimate, Rs. 47,79 thousand is required to be spent.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN :
What is the difference ?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : The difference is 2 lakhs. Rs. 50,00,000 minus Rs. 47,79,000. What I propose is that 50 lakhs reduced to 48 lakhs, that is a reduction of 2 lakhs, a very reasonable demand in view of the figures that are there.

Question proposed.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District) : Mr. President, I support the motion. The Honourable Minister, in spite of the vote of this House to reduce the tolls, appears to be actually increasing the number of tolls. From a total revenue of Rs. 7,84,000 it has now increased to Rs. 8,06,000. At the same time he has been gradually reducing the rents on buildings, and that will be made clear from the fact that the revenue from rents was Rs. 4,65,000 in the year 1923-24.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : What have tolls to do with the present motion ?

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : I will come to that, Sir. The revenue from rents has been practically decreasing. Now that we are increasing the number of buildings every year, I do not see why we should not get an increased revenue from rents and meet the increased expenditure. On the other hand, we find that the amount on repairs has increased from Rs. 47,79,000 to Rs. 50,00,000, that is an increase of 2 lakhs. I do not see why within one year we should increase the repair charges on roads and buildings to that extent. Even if we take $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. the increase does not come to such a high figure. So, on that ground also the provision for repairs should be reduced by 2 lakhs of rupees.

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI : Sir, the honourable member the Deputy President remarked that he does not think that the provision of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. made for repairs to buildings is actually being spent. I cannot say what authority he has for this statement, but I can assure him that all expenditure according to estimates is being watched by the Accountant General, and if the expenditure in any case is in excess on any residential buildings, he draws attention to it, and consequently we have got to raise the rents of such residential buildings by revising the percentage provision for current and special repairs in the rent statements.

As for the remark that a large amount is being spent on buildings, I may state that out of these 50 lakhs about 3 lakhs goes to residential buildings, 8 lakhs to non-residential buildings for which we get no return of rent, and the rest towards the repairs of roads (both current and special repairs).

Another honourable member made a remark that instead of reducing the number of tolls Government have increased it, and in support of that statement he directed attention to the increase in the revenue from tolls. I may point out, Sir, that the increase in revenue is not due to the increase in the number of tolls but it is due to the higher realisations.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I ruled the honourable member out of order on that reference. No reply can, therefore, be allowed on that point.

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI : The budget provision on account of repairs is nearly the same amount every year, and where the budget shows small variations that is due to the extra demands made by the officers. For the next year the officers had asked for 59 lakhs, and we have budgetted only for 50 lakhs. The roads had been stinted owing to financial stringency both during the war and sometime thereafter. As honourable members know, the roads are now subject to heavy motor traffic, and we cannot keep them up to the required standard without spending more money. I feel, Sir, the amount we have asked, namely 50 lakhs, is very moderate, and I do not think it should be reduced. Complaints have been made.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Sir, I have only one word to say. After 1919 there has been no financial stringency, and I may remind the honourable the Secretary to the Public Works Department that ever since 1921, when this new Council came into existence, not only have the Public Works Department amounts not been reduced, but this 41, Civil Works has escaped our examination. I do not think the amount provided for this department has ever been reduced by this Council. I think, therefore, this amount of 50 lakhs of rupees for repairs to roads is extremely large and can easily bear a reduction of two lakhs.

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : In the first place, Sir, I must correct certain mis statements that have been made by the Honourable the Deputy President. He made the Council believe that we are wasting 50 lakhs of rupees on roads and buildings which are giving us an income of only 14 lakhs [Mr. B. G. Pahalajani : I said Rs. 4,75,000.] Yes, only an income of Rs. 4,75,000. But, Sir, we have to remember that this income of Rs. 4,75,000 is from residential quarters only. Now, we do not charge any rent for police buildings, court houses, kutcheris, etc., property worth crores of rupees, not only 10 to 12 crores, as the honourable member the Deputy President stated but over 70 crores of rupees. We do not spend all these 50 lakhs on repairs to buildings. The honourable member from Karachi should understand that we have to carry out repairs to roads and communications throughout the whole presidency. Therefore, Sir, the statement of the honourable the Deputy President that we are spending 50 lakhs over property which gives an income of only 4½ lakhs is not correct, because we do not charge any rent for several offices and other buildings over which we have spent crores of rupees. Whatever income we get is derived from residential quarters. Therefore, we cannot confine ourselves to the fact that we are getting only an income of 4½ lakhs. We must take into consideration the large number of other properties, including communications, from which we do not get any return.

Now, Sir, the honourable member the Deputy President asked why we should spend 2 lakhs more this year. If honourable members look at the actuals of 1923-24, they will find that we spent 49 lakhs of rupees that year. We did not give them the same amount for the current year, as we thought we might pull on with the smaller amount of 48 lakhs. There still remain two months more, and I believe every pie of that provision will be spent. We have now demands from all parts of the presidency for more money for repairs to roads. I will cite one instance, that of the Southern Division. Owing to heavy demands from that division, we have increased the provision for the coming year by Rs. 1,20,000. Sind is not really getting very much. We have given to that province only Rs. 2,00,000 more next year. The honourable the Deputy President complains that we are spending 40 or 50 lakhs. But we are spending this sum in compliance with demands from various parts of the presidency. Though we received a demand for nearly 59 lakhs we have provided only 50 lakhs, that is, only two lakhs more than the current year. If we do not spend this sum next year, as the honourable member the Secretary pointed out, we will have to spend much more the following year. If we want to maintain our property in good order, this is the least we must spend. I trust, therefore, the House will reject this motion.

Question put and lost.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh District): Sir, I move:

"That the item provincial expenditure, III Establishment (P. W. D. E. page 4) be reduced by Rs. 10,00,000."

The figures have been presented to us in such a fashion that we find it very difficult to understand what is the real provision which is necessary for the establishment under the control of the Honourable Minister. He tried to explain that the demands which he made are not really demands for the works under his control. But he has not made it clear what his establishment charges are and what the establishment charges are under the control of the Irrigation Member. The provision made for 1924-25 is Rs. 30,87,400. Then the provision for works was Rs. 76,22,000. I get this figure by adding the figures for repairs which are 50 lakhs. The original works were 14 lakhs and the discretionary grants were 11 lakhs. All this comes to Rs. 76,22,000. In order to complete the works costing Rs. 76,22,000, the establishment charge to the extent of Rs. 30,87,000 has been demanded from this House. If we look into the figures for the year 1922-23, it will be seen that in that year the establishment charges were Rs. 20,14,000 and the work done in that year cost Rs. 81,87,000. In 1923-24, the establishment charges were Rs. 15,09,000 while works done in that year amounted to Rs. 72,01,000. In the year 1924-25, the establishment charges came up to Rs. 24,59,000, while the works done amounted to Rs. 70,49,000. In the coming year the works amount to Rs. 76,22,000 and for this work they want establishment for Rs. 30,87,000. That is to say for every Rs. 2 of work done they want Re. 1 for establishment. This is exorbitant demand and should not be granted by this House.

In this connexion I wish to point out to the House the administration of the Civil Works department is so lucrative that no such costly pay is necessary for the establishment. I mean to suggest that, if advertised, many people will be forthcoming to accept the posts in this department such as sub-divisional officers, executive engineers, etc., on an honorary basis. The works are so lucrative that no pay is necessary. This fact is known at any rate to many of the honourable members coming from mofussil. If this fact is taken into consideration, I beg to suggest that establishment charges amounting to Rs. 30,87,000 on works costing Rs. 76,22,000 should not be allowed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I notice that the honourable member the Deputy President has a similar motion, and the honourable members Messrs. Shivdasani and Shinde propose to reduce the amount by Rs. 5,00,000. It is desirable to have the whole discussion on this motion. If those honourable members wish to press for smaller reductions. Their motions will be put to the vote after full discussion has taken place on this motion.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): The difficulty arising out of the present method of presentation of figures will remain the same until by the end of next year this way of book-keeping is changed. The figures as they stand require considerable explanation from the Honourable Member in charge of the Public Works Department, the Honourable Minister and the honourable member the Secretary to that department. Last year the establishment charges are shown as Rs. 25,25,000 and the budget estimate for 1924-25 under the same head is shown as Rs. 15,84,000. In explaining to the House, the day before yesterday, the Honourable Minister said that for the 7 branches under his control, that is, the two Secretariat establishments, the Electrical Engineer to Government, the Consulting Architect to Government, the Mechanical Engineer to Government, Dapuri Workshop, the three Superintending Engineers for the Northern, Southern and Central Divisions (Roads and Buildings Branch) the establishment charges are Rs. 34,81,000 against the last year's figure of Rs. 35,59,000. If this statement is correct, it would require considerable explanation to satisfy this House how 21 and 25 lakhs shown in the actuals and last year's budget came to be shown in place of 34 lakhs. Therefore, I should like to know whether the amount of Rs. 25 lakhs shown on page 4 on account of revised budget estimate for 1924-25 for establishment represents the expenditure of the 7 departments under the Honourable Minister or whether it does not. If it does not, where did the other Rs. 10 lakhs out of the 35 lakhs he said his department cost last year, go? He spent on these seven departments last year Rs. 35,06,000, and in the revised budget estimate it is shown as 21 and 25, that is to say, 14 and 10 lakhs less than the actual expenditure on the seven departments that are under him. This House must insist upon understanding whether this 25, 25 which appears on page 4, and 21 lakhs the budget provision for 1924, is the actual expenditure or whether 14 and 10 have disappeared elsewhere in some other part of the budget. That has to be accounted for. It does not occur here, and we are anxious to know whether 25 is the actual expenditure or 25 is only a partial expenditure of his department. The objection, therefore, has been mainly raised on the assumption that 34,40 exceeds the last year's budget estimate figure by 14 lakhs. Again, in connection with this figure it will be necessary to draw the attention of the House and the Honourable Minister to another figure on page 5, and that is provincial civil works from loan, that is, works under the same department but financed from loan. The expenditure on the loan works is shown as 85 and establishment is shown as 14,15 lakhs, separate. The total establishment, therefore, that is shown under Civil Works subordinate to the Honourable Minister is 48 lakhs and odd. He makes a demand of Rs. 49 lakhs, after which he says that 34,8 represents the expenditure on the 7 departments less than during the last year. Then certainly those very departments, the Secretariat, the Engineers and all those departments who do loan works or carry on buildings out of loan are exactly the same officers, and it is the same establishment that does the other work. Then, why should 14,15 be again further debited when an additional sum of Rs. 15 lakhs is already debited to the establishment? I also therefore support, unless a satisfactory explanation is forthcoming, the motion moved by the honourable member Mr. Joshi.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN :
Sir, I should like to explain first the present year's budget referred to by the honourable member the Deputy President. He said that for this year we had budgetted 21 lakhs out of revenue for establishment.

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

If he will refer to the loan works, he will find that there are 14 lakhs provided. In all it comes to Rs. 35 lakhs odd. Actually, my establishment, according to the accounts that are kept by the Accountant General has cost Rs. 35,02,000 this year. For the satisfaction of the Deputy President and this House, I would refer them to the budget of 1924-25 where 14 lakhs 23 thousand was charged to loan works and 21 out of revenue. We are not spending more than 35 lakhs. Now, for the ensuing year, he says we are spending 34 lakhs out of revenue and 14 lakhs out of loan, or 48 lakhs in all. This is the result of the new system that we have adopted, I understand, from Madras. According to this system, the irrigation establishment is also shown under 41, Civil Works, and the principle is that a certain percentage should be charged to Irrigation and the rest to Civil Works. Hence, this inflated figure of 34 lakhs. Now, if honourable members look at page 5, they will see that for Irrigation only, deducting Tools and Plant, 44 lakhs have been budgetted. Taking away tools and plant, if honourable members add up the rest of the figures, the total will come to Rs. 44 lakhs. As regards the actual establishment which is employed under Irrigation, if honourable members refer to page 41 of the same budget, they will see that 13 lakhs are for Deccan Irrigation and 1 lakh 64 thousand for the Chief Engineer in Sind, and there are also amounts of 8 lakhs 77 thousand and 7 lakhs 26 thousand and 26 lakhs for Sukkur Barrage. The total will come approximately to 56 lakhs. That means a difference of 12 lakhs. That appears under this 48 lakhs. I cannot give the exact figures till the Accountant General has settled the full details.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: You have taken 14 instead of 12.

Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Now, Sir, I have accounted for the inflated figure of 12 lakhs in my budget. Now, I must make it very clear to the House that the total establishment next year will cost me about 34 lakhs 81 thousand, 12 lakhs will go to Irrigation, and the balance will come approximately to 35 lakhs. To this 35 lakhs, we have to add the Lee Commission's portion, which will come to over 1 lakh. These 12 lakhs are for Irrigation Department, but, according to the new system, are debited to 41, Civil Works. I have shown the honourable House that 44 lakhs are budgetted for irrigation though the actual establishment is nearly 56 lakhs, that means a difference of 12 lakhs. The Honourable the Finance Member has actually given me these 12 lakhs. The current year's demand was Rs. 1,02,00,000, and my ensuing year's demand is 1,17,00,000. This includes 12 lakhs for Irrigation establishment, 2 lakhs more for repairs and 1 lakh more for the reserve department. The total comes to 117.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: What is the approximate.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. The honourable member will have the right of reply.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: This is according to the new system. Approximately, it comes to 36 lakhs—34 lakhs 81 thousand for establishment. If honourable members look at the current year's budget, when the residue was not entered under 41, Civil Works, they will see that the actual demand for irrigation was much greater. So this is due to the system only, and the Honourable the Finance Member has compensated me for this by giving me 12 lakhs more as explained above.

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI: Sir, I should like to point out that at page 41 of the Public Works Budget the total establishment charges for the whole Public Works Department are shown to be 1 crore, 1 lakh and 47 thousand, which includes about 28 lakhs 57 thousand for the Lloyd Barrage. The corresponding figure for the current year is 1 crore, 7 lakhs 8 thousand. So that actually there is a reduction of 5 lakhs and 60 thousand. According to the distribution shown at the bottom of that page there would appear to be an increase in one major head and a reduction in another, but that is mainly on account of the new system. There is a reduction of 5 lakhs and 6,000 rupees on the whole. The Lloyd Barrage shows a reduction of about 9 lakhs. So the remaining 3 lakhs are to be accounted for, part of that is due to the provision of nearly Rs. 2 lakhs on account of the Lee Commission's recommendation and the remaining about a lakh of rupees is due to an increase in the establishment charges of the Deccan Irrigation Division which has however now disappeared owing to the item for two new districts having been withdrawn by the Honourable the General Member for the present. There is no increase, therefore, on the whole of the Public Works Department Establishment while as regards the Roads and Buildings branch items (6, 7 and 8 on page 41 of the 41, Civil Works Budget) the establishment budgetted for 1925-26 is less than that of current year by Rs. 47,400. Further I understood the honourable member Mr. Joshi to say that the establishment charge compared to the expenditure of works is in the ratio of one rupee to two rupees. That is not so, Sir. If the honourable member comes and discusses with me I could show him detailed figures to satisfy him that for every five rupees spent on works the establishment charges are one rupee; in other words the expenditure on establishment is about 20 per cent. that on works, and in the Roads and Buildings branch it is about 15 or 16 per cent.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: I have not been able to follow the honourable member.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I cannot help it.

Mr. K. S. FRAMJI: The honourable member has stated that, the expenditure on works is only 76 lakhs of rupees but that, Sir, is for only the works budgetted for in the 41, Civil Works. There are several other heads under which works are carried out by the Roads and Buildings branch such as works of contributions and grants-in-aid, central Government works, military works, and all works provided for in the 60, Civil Works budgetted. All these go up to a very high figure, approximately 1 crore 66 lakhs against which the establishment was accounted for in the next year's budget is only 32 lakhs even if we include half the Secretariat establishment and other charges common to both the Roads and Buildings and Irrigation establishments. I shall be quite willing to give details to convince the honourable member of these figures.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh District): Sir, I have not been able to follow quite closely the remarks of the honourable member the Secretary to Government, Public Works Department. But I understood the Honourable Minister to say that the provision for establishment is really 34 lakhs 40 thousand, plus 2 lakhs for the Lee Commission's recommendations. So he does not deny that the establishment which is really necessary for this department is 34 lakhs 40 thousand. It is clear also that the works to be carried on this year come to 76 lakhs and odd. Therefore so much establishment is not necessary.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, I have made it very clear to the House that this 34 lakhs is shown in my budget because of the new system, and for the new system the Honourable the Finance Member has compensated me by giving me 12 lakhs more on the ensuing year. The honourable member's statement that the establishment under 41, Civil Works, does work to the extent of 76 lakhs is not correct. But this establishment does the work of 76 lakhs out of the revenue and 69 lakhs out of the capital, that is over a crore of rupees. If we deduct the charges for establishment, specialist officers and the secretariat, because the Secretariat does not go into the mofussil and prepare roads and bungalows, the charge will come to hardly 13 to 14 per cent.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: Is it permissible, Sir, to tack on to these transferred departments the expenditure which is made for the reserved departments? This confusion has arisen because both transferred and reserved figures are tacked together.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: I have shown that to the honourable member yesterday and to-day.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: I want the exact figure for the Honourable Minister's department.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: It will be found at page 41. For simplifying the accounts, the whole of the Secretariat is under me. Then there are the electrical engineer to Government, the consulting architect to Government, mechanical engineer to Government, the Dapuri Workshops, and superintending engineers of the three divisions of the Presidency Proper.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: It comes to 35 lakhs 50 thousand rupees.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: It comes to 34,81,000. I have reduced the present year's establishment charges by 77,000. I am in fact spending on the establishments less, instead of more. If honourable members will refer to the figures of the current year, they will find that in the ensuing year I am spending less on the establishments, and I therefore hope this House will throw out this motion.

Question put and lost.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South): I beg to move, Sir

That the Public Works Establishment—Mechanical Engineer to Government—Pay of one Temporary Engineer—Rs. 2,400—be omitted.

Of course, in this matter in the last debate when a cut out of a total amount of 10 lakhs was suggested, it was made clear that one of the posts which were not needed by the Government was that of the Mechanical Engineer to Government. In the general discussion on the budget I had pointed out, Sir, how the amount of establishments in the budget is swollen. This Mechanical Engineers's post, I find, for nearly three or four years was done away with. There was no Mechanical Engineer in the year 1923-24.....

Mr. G. WILES: I rise to a point of order, Sir. Are we discussing the Mechanical Engineer's pay?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The motion as it stands on the agenda is "Omit Part III—Public Works Establishment—Mechanical Engineer to Government—Pay of one Temporary Engineer, Rs. 2,400."

Mr. G. WILES: He is discussing the Mechanical Engineer's post.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: I would like to say a word, Sir, before you decide the point of order. I may mention that all these motions are moved as regards the votable items of the whole of the establishment of the Mechanical Engineer. That is the indirect way of showing our objection to or attacking the post of the Mechanical Engineer to Government, and therefore these motions are being moved. There is only one non-votable item in this, namely, the pay of the Mechanical Engineer, which is omitted from the scope of our motions for reduction or omission, just as in the case of the Industries Department.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member wishes to cut the pay of one temporary engineer which is votable, Rs. 2,400.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN: All the votable items in the demand; because I understand the pay of the Mechanical Engineer is non-votable and I cannot touch it directly. The only item that is votable is the temporary engineer and other establishment, and if I want to remove the Mechanical Engineer to Government.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member has no right of removing any non-votable appointment. He can certainly disallow the establishment if he likes.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN: That is why I have given notice of motions in item 608 which refers to the pay of temporary establishment, and items 609 and so forth, which are all votable items, and I did not quite follow the honourable members on the other side who raised the point of order. But so far as this appointment of Mechanical Engineer is concerned, if I could go directly for that appointment, I could have given notice asking for the omission of his salary altogether. But

[Mr. K. F. Nariman]

I find that I cannot touch it, and that I must go in a circuitous way of cutting his travelling allowance, his establishment, and so on. Sir, the Bombay Government could do without this officer for several years, and I find that the Retrenchment Committee's report also says that this officer and this establishment are not necessary. This is what the Retrenchment Committee's report says :

"A fourth specialist post, viz., that of Mechanical Engineer to Government was formerly in existence and has not been formally abolished. In case the revival of this post is contemplated we would here record our opinion that it is unnecessary. We are aware of very little work performed by such an officer during the last 10 years while he existed and the abolition of this post was recommended by the Public Works Department Reorganization Committee."

So here is, Sir, the considered report not only of the Retrenchment Committee, but also of the Public Works Department Reorganization Committee, which says that this post is not necessary and we have actual experience for the last three or four years, when that post was not in existence, that the Public Works Department went on as well or as badly as before. Now, this year, Sir, when there is a deficit shown by the Honourable the Finance Member, it is very strange that this post should have been revived....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : May I correct that statement, Sir ? That is not correct. He has been there for the last three years since 1923.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : To be more accurate, I should have said that the post is sought to be revived, because I find from the records, Sir, that there was no provision made for the Mechanical Engineer, but he was transferred and given charge of Dapuri Workshops. He was not the Mechanical Engineer. Now that Dapuri Workshops is sought to be transferred and the post is sought to be recreated for him, and it is again being revived, and the work to be done by him is only to the extent of Rs. 1,000 ! The provision made for him in the Public Works Department book shows that the work to be done by him is to the extent of Rs. 1,000.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : May I correct a misstatement, Sir, again ? Sir, it is not a fact that we are creating this new post or that we have revived it. He has been with us with the sanction of this House since 1923-24 as our Mechanical Engineer. Last year also this House sanctioned his appointment at the budget time. This year also he is shown in our estimates.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is, surely, the Honourable Minister's explanation which he can give in the course of his reply ? He has got the right of two speeches.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : The Honourable Minister seems to show, Sir, his usual impatience. As I say, I find in the Retrenchment Committee's report it is very distinctly stated the post is unnecessary, and that a revival was contemplated. They say that they are "aware of very little work performed by such an officer during the last 10 years while he existed and the abolition of this post was recommended by the Public Works Department Reorganization Committee". So there is no disputing the point that there are two committees who have asked for the abolition of this post, and there is also no disputing the point that the Government of Bombay could do without a Mechanical Engineer. Why is he sought to be thrust upon us again this year, when there is a deficit shown by the Honourable the Finance Member? I also find on page 17 amongst the works allotted the total works to be done by this Mechanical Engineer come to about Rs 1,000. The establishment is to cost about Rs. 38,000 and the work to be done is to the extent of Rs. 1,000! Looking at all these circumstances and considering the financial stress through which we are passing, I think we could very well do without this post.

[Mr. K. F. Nariman]

Question Proposed.

Mr. A. MONTGOMERIE: Sir, I would oppose this indirect attack on the Mechanical Engineer. We are told that he does nothing and is entirely useless. I do not know what grounds the honourable member has for that statement. All I can say is that there is one single contract in one department alone, namely, the Nasik Jail, which is a large contract, costing this Government about Rs. 25 lakhs, I think, on which the Mechanical Engineer was consulted by the Home Department on the subject of the iron work required for gates, etc., and I am assured by the honourable the Secretary, Public Works Department, the Mechanical Engineer by the economies effected by his improved designs and by doing the work at Dapuri is saving Government rather more than the whole of his pay for a year. He has also been devoting himself for a certain amount of time to working up mechanical improvements in our jail factories, and with his knowledge of these technical matters, machinery for manufacture, etc., he has proved of very great help to us in reorganising industries in jails and also in enabling us to provide useful work for our prisoners. Last year when the same indirect attack was made on this post, I invited honourable members to see the workshops at Dapuri and see young Indians being trained to a standard of accuracy which has never before been achieved in mechanical work in this country. I know some honourable members took advantage of that offer before offering criticisms, but I do not know if the honourable mover of this motion also went and saw what the work was before he made any remarks about it.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South): Mr President, I said I did not wish to bring in the merits or the demerits of the particular gentleman concerned: I said I attacked the post in the abstract. But unfortunately the honourable the Home Secretary has introduced the question of merit, and I am compelled now to state so far as this side of the House is concerned, from our point of view, what his demerits are. Those honourable members of the House who come from Gujarat especially from Ahmedabad, are aware of a serious bungling of this officer. I do not know what he was called then, but the gentleman was the same. We are all aware how without the sanction of the municipality of Ahmedabad a particular pumping machine was ordered out by this officer from England from a particular firm of manufacturers for over three lakhs of rupees. I am told the Ahmedabad municipality refused to accept it and said that it was not wanted and that they had never ordered it out. That machine was lying in the Bombay docks for several years, neither the Government nor the municipality taking possession of it. Ultimately the bungling was got through. The municipality was suspended, and a managing committee was appointed, and the managing committee were persuaded somehow or other to accept the machine. There are certain other instances also, as for example in the case of Dhulia and Khandesh, where machinery which were not required by the municipality have been tacked on to the municipality by this very officer, and the municipality have protested. And he has been responsible for several unpleasant relations between the local bodies and Government purely on this point of his trying to force a particular kind of machinery on a particular local body. I am sorry, Sir, I have been forced to bring on this matter. I did not want to do it in the beginning. The fact that this post has been in abeyance has not been disputed. Between 1919 and 1923 the post of Mechanical Engineer to Government was in abeyance, and Mr. Thiselton-Dyer was attached to the Industries Department.....

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : On a point of order Sir. Will you permit a reply to this matter which is now being raised for the first time ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable Minister has the right of reply.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, it would be convenient for the honourable the Secretary to reply to all this.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable Minister ought to be aware of the facts of the case. Government should be fully equipped with the facts: they ought not to rely on Secretaries.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : The point, Sir, is the new matter. I think there was a ruling that in a reply, an honourable member should not bring in an entirely new matter.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The position is this. The merits of the officer were not gone into in the original speech. They were brought forward by the honourable member the Home Secretary in his speech. In his reply the honourable member is pointing out what he regards as his demerits. That is in accordance with the procedure that is being followed.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : I do not know, Sir, if the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code ought to be introduced. This is a new matter.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Will the honourable member continue his speech ?

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : Between 1920 and 1923 the post of Mechanical Engineer to Government was in abeyance and Mr. Thiselton-Dyer was attached to the Industries Department. That statement made by me is correct. Between 1919 and 1923 this post was in abeyance and it is sought to be revived now. I hope Sir, considering our financial circumstances, the House will consider it apart from any other question as a question of economy and refuse to revive this post.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, before I come to the Mechanical Engineer, I will dispose of the statement of my honourable friend from Bombay that the Mechanical Engineer ordered the Ahmedabad municipal pumping machine without the orders of the municipality. That is not a correct statement. As a matter of fact, the plans and estimates were sent in by the municipality, and then the orders were issued. Further, Sir, that question was discussed in this House sometime back, and this House did not find fault with the Mechanical Engineer.

Then my honourable friend made another point. He said that this post was kept in abeyance. That is quite correct. We did so because we thought that if we could do without him we might not revive his office. But we have pumping machines belonging to Government and to the local bodies worth over a crore of rupees. During the three years this post was in abeyance, all that machinery went without inspection and overhauling, and we had to communicate with some private firms to carry out that work. We get many demands from municipalities for the inspection of their machinery which inspection we give them gratis. The terms that the private firms gave us for this work came to much more than the Mechanical Engineer's salary. Therefore, this post was revived with the sanction of this honourable House. For three years, it was in abeyance, but since two years it has been revived.

I would like to give the House some idea of the nature of the work of the Mechanical Engineer. He inspects and overhauls machinery of Government and local bodies of the value of a crore of rupees. Honourable members of this House know that we have big drainage and water pumping machines. If he finds they require repair, he sends them to the Dapuri workshops. He also makes the new parts required, which if ordered from outside will cost a good deal. The honourable member the Home Secretary has told the honourable House that he even designs certain appliances, and those appliances in one department alone have resulted in an actual saving of Rs. 50,000. He also designs sluices for the Irrigation Department. In addition to this inspection of the machinery of Government and of the local bodies, he trains our Indian graduates on the mechanical side.....

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD : Is there any class ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : There are apprentices under him, and we give them Rs. 70 a month and Re. 1 a day. One of these men has actually been appointed a temporary engineer. The whole country is crying for the Indianisation of the services. How are we going to give effect to it? How are we to Indianise the mechanical branch of the services, if we do not train our men? A graduate has now been trained and the time is not far off when the present incumbent will go away and this man will be appointed in his place. The workshop at Dapuri has now become a self-supporting concern. We are training in the workshop about 40 young men on the mechanical side. Besides, we give them primary education as well. We give them also certain wages.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: On a point of information, Sir. The honourable member for Bombay told us that this mechanical engineer ordered some engine for the Ahmedabad municipality which did not work properly and that it had to be replaced by another engine.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: We say we want technical education for our children, and here is a department which gives that form of education. After their training here, these men will go out into the world and earn their living. This department therefore not only helps towards Indianisation in the mechanical branch of the service, but also giving technical education to our boys. In this workshop, we make parts of machinery and plant. This House has been insisting that we should not purchase foreign stores. Here is a department which obviates the purchase of foreign stores.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Is it not a fact.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Does the Honourable Minister allow him to interrupt?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: I do not.

To sum up, the Mechanical Engineer inspects our machinery worth a crore of rupees. He makes designs for us. He helps towards the Indianisation of service in the mechanical branch. He gives technical education to our boys and makes certain portions of the presidency at least self-supporting without seeking for certain articles from outside. We are now making a saving on our Dapuri workshop as we have taken the Agricultural Department workshop to Dapuri and thereby are saving Rs. 30,000. If all these cries for Indianisation, for making India self-contained, and giving our boys technical education are genuine, this item must be passed by the House. If not, I would say that all these are mere lip professions.

Question put and lost.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South): Sir, I formally move:

"That the provision of Rs. 3,048, pay of temporary establishment to the mechanical engineer to Government be omitted."

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Is it not a fact that the loss sustained by the municipality of Ahmedabad was made good by Government? Because of the inefficiency of the man, the provincial Government had to pay to the municipality a sum of at least Rs. 5,000 or so?

Mr. G. I. PATEL: I would request the Honourable Minister to explain whether it is not a fact that on account of the inefficiency of the mechanical engineer a type of machine was selected for the Ahmedabad municipality which consumed coal of Rs. 30,000 more annually than another type of machine which would have saved this Rs. 30,000 in extra running cost and whether it is not a fact that the Ahmedabad municipality will be permanently now sustaining a loss from Rs. 25,000 to Rs. 30,000 every year on account of the consumption of coal on this engine, because the quantity of water that has to be pumped up is not in proportion to the capacity of the heavy engine? Whether all this is not due to the inefficiency of the mechanical engineer whose salary is not under discussion before the House?

[Mr. G. I. Patel]

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, this matter with regard to the loss sustained by the Ahmedabad municipality came up for discussion when a supplementary grant was asked by Government to compensate the municipality. As that was a supplementary grant the principle could not be discussed. The objection to the grant proceeded from me.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. I have been considering this question during the time the debate has been going on. I think I cannot allow the repetition of the same point under a different head. This point was first debated on the first motion. The House has decided that issue. A subsequent motion cannot re-open the same attack on the same officer and all that can be urged on it is the economy proposed. If the procedure that is being followed is allowed honourable members can give half a dozen motions in regard to one single appointment and discuss it under each motion. I do not think it is right. I therefore hold that in regard to subsequent motions, the fact of the proposed economy should alone be discussed. If honourable members have got to say anything with regard to any particular officer that ought to be said on the first motion.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: In view of your ruling, Sir, I have nothing more to add to what I have already stated which gives the whole information.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN: I have nothing more to say.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Honourable Minister in charge for reply.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: I have nothing more to say.

Question put and lost.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South): Sir, the motion which I wish to move is:

"Omit Part II—Public Works Establishment—Special Officers; pay of workshop manager Rs. 12,600."

Sir, this is in regard to the Dapuri Workshop. We have heard enough about it in the previous year. The Honourable Minister has made a statement that the workshop was not worked at a loss. I find from the auditor's report.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : I said this year.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable Minister can explain that in his reply. He himself objects to interruptions of this kind.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : Sir, I have read the report of the auditor for 1922-23, which is the latest report that has been placed in our hands. There is no later report and if there is one, I do not know why it has not been placed in the hands of honourable members on this side of the House. That report illustrates very clearly the persistency of the Government in running this workshop year after year, even though it results in a loss. In the year 1916-17 the loss was Rs. 16,447 ; in 1917-18 it was Rs. 24,209 ; in 1918-19 Rs. 4,465 ; in 1919-20 Rs. 47,177 ; in 1920-21 Rs. 35,000 and in 1921-22 Rs. 48,000. Commencing with a loss of Rs. 16,000 in 1916-17, the workshop has continued losing further and further until it cost Government a loss of Rs. 48,000 in 1921-22. I cannot understand the pertinacity of Government in running this workshop year after year without any prospects of making any gain, but with every prospect of increasing the loss, looking at the results of the last five years. Now, the Honourable Minister comes forward and says that the current year's accounts show that there will be no loss. That is not enough. I do not think it is quite satisfactory, on the strength of that, to come and ask this House for a large recurring grant for establishment to continue the workshop, and say that although the workshop has worked during the last five years at a loss, the last one being an amount of Rs. 48,000, this year we hope to manage it in such a way that there will be no loss.

Sir, the point is whether this institution is necessary. I say it is not. It is not only not necessary, but I think honourable members on this side will bear me out that this institution has caused great inconvenience to the department itself. This workshop was started at Dapuri, and instructions were issued to the department that they should send to this workshop for repairs all the machinery that they may have to get repaired from all parts of the province, and I am informed perhaps it is an exaggeration that if a steam roller goes wrong in Karachi, it has to be sent down all the way from Karachi to Dapuri, because the instructions are to that effect. But I think it is absurd to ask that a repair which could be done locally at a small expense should be entrusted to the Dapuri workshop, so that the machinery would have to be sent all the way to Dapuri and back. Leaving aside the instance of Karachi, let us take a place like Ahmednagar. Now, it would surely cause damage and loss to the machinery to send it all the way from that place to Dapuri and back.

But, looking to all the circumstances, since the Honourable Minister has now stated that he has managed it in such a way that for the last year there is not going to be a loss, and if he gives the assurance to this House that since the management has come personally into his hands this loss will not recur, I think this side of the House may be a little generous and allow him a trial for one year more, so that we can see whether he can give us any results this year or not. Particularly, as the authority is in his hands, I do not wish it to be said that sufficient trial was not given to him to work the institution. I would like a definite statement from him that he would personally see to this affair and see that no further losses occur, and if there are any losses, he will come forward with a proposal to abolish this workshop.

Question proposed.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : Sir, I have heard so much about this institution from the Honourable Minister that I am surprised that the public is not kept aware of its usefulness. Most of the honourable members seem to be entirely ignorant.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : I invited them to inspect it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Let the honourable member continue with his remarks without interruptions.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD : I am supporting the Honourable Minister, because if this institution is a kind of school for preparing Indians for higher posts in the Engineering Department, I think it is of very great use, but we know so little about it, and I do not know whose fault it is. I would therefore request the Honourable Minister to let us have all the information about it, whether it is a workshop, a technical school, or whether it is something like an Engineering College. On all these points, I should like to know more from him.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA (Ahmedabad District) : Sir, if the Dapuri workshop is to have a manager on Rs. 1,000, it cannot be run economically. There are many bigger workshops in other parts of the presidency, but they do not pay their managers Rs. 1,000. Government have appointed a Mechanical Engineer on Rs. 2,150 per mensem and there is also a temporary assistant engineer. Why is it necessary to have a workshop manager in addition ? No commercial institution of such a kind would have all these three officers. I think the Mechanical Engineer and the assistant engineer are more than sufficient.

Mr. G. WILES : Sir, I want to say a few words on this subject from the Finance Department point of view. I have taken an interest in this institution since I have been in the Finance Department, and have visited it at various times and investigated its activities from the financial point of view, and in the debate this time last year I gave my impressions of the institution from the financial point of view, and I foreshadowed that the Honourable Minister might, in the course of the year, be able to tell the House that the institution was no longer working at a loss. At my instance among others, a suggestion was made during the last meeting in Poona that we should invite members of the House to undertake an investigation into this establishment and a personally conducted party of honourable members of this House was taken to Dapuri. I do not know how many honourable members took advantage of the invitation, but I think about 25 members actually visited the place. They were shown the accounts and the young men working there, and I understood they were satisfied with all that they saw. If they are not, it is up to them to tell us in what respect they are not. I believe businessmen were included in the guests who were invited, and some have told me personally that they were thoroughly satisfied with what they saw. Personally, and I think I can speak on behalf of the Accountant General who made a personal investigation and suggested a different method of keeping the accounts, I may say that we were thoroughly satisfied with the work being done at this shop. It is now a very useful institution to Government. It is more than paying its way. Even if it could not show that it was making both sides of the account meet, I would still say that this institution at Dapuri was worth maintaining. But as a matter of fact it is not actually costing money to Government at the present day, and I think it is only fair that as representative of the Finance Department I should say that we are satisfied with the Honourable Minister's statement of the case.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): This workshop, Sir, is a small one consisting of four or five lathes and to keep such highly paid officers in that workshop is I think extravagance. The charge that the workshop makes to the local bodies for the repairs of their machines, etc., is very heavy. At one time we sent our road roller worth five or six thousand for repairs to this workshop. Only one wheel of that roller was to be repaired and the charge made by the workshop was 47 hundred rupees. If the district local boards have to pay such heavy charge then such highly paid officers are not required in this workshop. And I submit that these officers should be informed at least that they should not charge such high charges for the repairs of local boards' machines.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Mr. President, I should like to say a few words because I intervened last year in a similar debate and stated what I knew from personal observation of this most useful workshop at Dapuri. It is not a fact that it does only small repairs, unless my honourable friend who has just spoken considered it a small repair to make a wheel of a steam-roller. That is I think a very heavy repair. It is not a repair that can be effected in an ordinary workshop. I am surprised at my honourable friend's remarks, and I think if he had visited the Dapuri workshop himself—I do not really feel he can have done that—he would not have said that it is one of those small workshops. [Rao Saheb D. P. Desai intimated he had not visited it, but Mr. H. D. Saheba intimated he had.] Then I hope he will corroborate my statement that it is by no means a small workshop, but that it includes many valuable lathes for turning metals and that it has its own foundry. It makes its own castings among other things castings as big as broken parts of steam-rollers which cannot be made in an ordinary workshop. I inspected this workshop myself before the last debate on this question, and I wish to add that the results of this inspection were so satisfactory that it seemed to me possible that this workshop might undertake some of the large contracts which we had in view in relation to the new central jail at Nasik road. I put the matter under enquiry not by myself but by experts who were able to give me expert advice on the matter, and they reported that this workshop would save a great deal of money in the purchase of iron barred doors and windows required for the new jail. I made these inquiries because previous experience of locally made iron doors in other jail work has been far from satisfactory. They cost a great deal of money and produced very poor results. These inquiries however proved eminently satisfactory and it was found possible to place at the Dapuri workshop a very large order for these new iron barred doors required for the new central jail at Nasik road. That contract is now being undertaken. It is going to be very profitable to us in the jail department as it will save us a very large sum upon the new jail and at the same time it will provide continuous work for the men employed in the Dapuri workshop including a great number of those young Indians who are in training as mechanical engineers.

I would also like to mention one other matter in which this workshop is doing exceedingly useful work for the Home Department and that is in the reorganizing of the jail manufactures. If honourable members will refer to the previous debates upon this question of jail manufactures, they will see that the question of our making more money on our jail manufactures was one which was pressed upon us by this honourable House.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA : What has all that to do with the question of the manager of the workshop ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The importance of the workshop is shown to justify the pay of the manager.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Quite so, Sir, it is impossible to give large contracts to a workshop which has not got a workshop manager. How can you give a large contract of iron barred doors which have to be carefully made unless there is a very good workshop manager ? Unless you have a workshop manager who is well-trained, how can you get his help to reorganise your jail manufactures ? How can you get expert advice as to what is the best means and best machinery to be substituted for the labour of the prisoners in the jail, best machinery which is not merely effective economically but best suited in its reformatory nature to teach prisoners an honest trade so that they may be able to earn their livelihood upon release in their after life. In these matters the advice tendered to us by the officer of this workshop is extremely valuable and we hope to proceed on that advice so as to be able to improve very much the system of labour in our jails both economically and educationally with a view to reform the many prisoners who have to be confined in our jails.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON : Sir, it may interest honourable members of the House to know that in the years between 1914 and 1919 it was necessary to purchase a very large number of penstock gates for the Godavari and Pravara canals. Years previous to that I have had to order a very large number of penstock gates from the Director General of Stores and most of these were of standard pattern and should have been obtainable in India. I therefore asked firms in India to tender.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I do not know whether that has anything to do with the pay of the manager of this workshop.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON : I submit it has, Sir, as I will show. I bought Indian made gates for those canals and I leave it for honourable members to go and see those gates on these canals. They were useful but most discreditably finished off. The workshop at Dapuri is specially meant to teach young Indians to finish articles properly and this is a very important point from the engineering point of view. I took the opportunity of showing some patterns of the casts we require to the mechanical engineer to Government and I asked him whether it would not be possible for the Dapuri workshop to do something better than that and he explained to me that they were able to make very excellent patterns, of course through the interest taken by the manager who is drawing twelve thousand rupees, and this Dapuri workshop is now able to turn out excellent irrigation channel gates and it should be possible for us when we place our large orders for the Sukkur Barrage to go to Dapuri for the smaller types of channel gates.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, I will say a few words only. I have already told the House that the Mechanical Engineer does the inspection of machinery all over. As regards advertising, I have invited honourable members of this House to visit this workshop, and after that I brought out a leaflet about the Dapuri workshop as well as about the work of these officers, and it was placed on the table of the House, I think on the first day of the session. Now, Sir, honourable members have heard that this institution is very useful. The honourable member the Finance Secretary has assured the House that by this workshop we are making a saving of thirty thousand rupees which we used to spend on agricultural workshop, and in future the electrical engineer's workshop will also be attached to this workshop. I assure the House that I will go carefully into this matter myself and I trust that the honourable House will not hear any more complaints about the Dapuri workshops.

Question put and lost.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City) : I move, Sir :

"The omission of Part III—Public Works Establishment—Pay of Engineers: Sind allowance—Rs. 1,200 (P. W. D. Estimates, page 39)."

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : I rise to a point of order. I am afraid this is not in order as the Sind allowance is non-voted.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Has it been shown as non-votable ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : By mistake it is shown as voted. But it is for an officer whose pay is non-voted, and under the rules it is, therefore, non-voted.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : Sir, for one superintending engineer that is shown there there is Sind allowance of Rs. 100. That is the rate. You will find that on page 39. But it relates to the entry of the superintending engineers which appears on page 38. If you begin there, you find "4 Superintending Engineers Rs. 88,800" italics, that is to say, they are non-voted. Then 1 Superintending Engineer, Rs. 22,200, votable. This Sind allowance is Rs. 1,200 at the rate of Rs. 100 a month, and therefore, this Sind allowance relates only to one votable superintending engineer and therefore it cannot relate to a non-votable item.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : Mr. President, the facts as related by the honourable the Deputy President, up to a certain point are correct. There is no Sind allowance for the superintending engineer whose pay is votable. This Sind allowance of Rs. 1,200 is for the superintending engineer for the Barrage Circle, and that superintending engineer is an Imperial officer. There is a superintending engineer whose salary is votable, but this Sind allowance does not apply to him. He has no Sind allowance.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI : I wish to say, Sir, that allowance is not salary.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is according to the decision already arrived at. The power vests in the authority which has exercised it and has declared these allowances as non-voted. There is only one remark I should like to make, and it is that during the course of the debate so many mistakes have been found in the budget that Government will have to take note of the fact. It would save much time of the House if adequate care is taken in putting the budget in such a form before the House that it would obviate the raising of the points which we have had to deal with.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : It is a printers' mistake, I am told, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It may be ; but the printers' proofs are submitted for approval.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : I understand, Sir, for an allowance to be non-votable, it should be decided by His Excellency the Governor.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : I may tell the honourable House that His Excellency has decided that all allowances attached to posts which are held by Imperial Officers are non-votable.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City) : Sir, I move :

"Omit in Part III—Public Works Establishment—Pay of Engineers: Duty Allowance—Rs. 2,400."

I propose this for the reason that I cannot at all understand why these officers should get any duty allowance. We know very well, Sir, that we are spending lakhs of rupees on building bungalows for these officers, we are housing them, and after these officers are housed, I cannot understand why there should be any duty allowance. They are working under the same conditions as the other members of the Public Works Department. You will find on page 38 duty allowance for the Chief Engineer Rs 600, but I have not moved the deletion of that; I have only moved the deletion of this present item, because I think that if it is carried, Government will take it that this House does not approve of any duty allowance. I have taken only one item and suggested that it should be deleted.

Question proposed.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN (Ahmedabad District): Sir, I do not know how duty allowance is to be given to officers for performing their duty. They are given the pay for doing their duty. Therefore, the duty allowance is indefensible on any ground. So the duty allowance must be stopped.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA (Ahmedabad District): My honourable friends do not seem to understand it, Sir. The pay is drawn for pleasure and the duty allowance is drawn for doing duty.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: Mr. President, this duty allowance is not given only to officers of the barrage. It is given to all assistant engineers who are attached to administrative offices in Karachi. The same duty allowance is given to the assistant engineer who happens to be attached to the Chief Engineer's office and to the offices of Superintending Engineers of the right and left bank canals. In the same way this duty allowance is given to assistant engineers attached to the Chief Engineer and the Superintending Engineers on the Lloyd Barrage.

Well, Sir, I can give you the reasons why this duty allowance is given to these officers. The Chief Engineers and the Superintending Engineers have a personal assistant who is an assistant engineer from the provincial service, and very responsible duties fall upon this officer. It is not often that these assistant engineers are anxious to come into the office of the Superintending or Chief Engineer, as the work they have to perform is harder, more responsible and for longer hours, and I presume in the past it was found difficult to recruit officers as personal assistants and therefore some extra remuneration had to be given and this duty allowance was therefore instituted.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA: By whom?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I deprecate these interruptions. The honourable member will have his chance of speaking on the motion.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: As I said they have to work longer hours and have harder work, more responsibility. This duty allowance is for the five assistant engineers shown on page 38.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): I am not convinced, Sir, after giving very careful consideration to the information given. These assistant engineers and others will all get their bungalows, they will be properly housed and they will work on exactly the same conditions as the other members of the Public Works Department, and there is absolutely no reason whatever for giving them any extra allowance. Now, Sir, if you see what allowances they are getting—Sind allowance, barrage allowance, compensatory allowance, travelling allowance—I think this duty allowance would appear to be absolutely indefensible.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Mr. President, they do not get Sind allowance when they are in Karachi. They are not the only officers who get this duty allowance: it is given to all assistant engineers in the Public Works Department and not only to those on the barrage, as my honourable friend Mr. Adwani seems to imagine, or as he just now stated. It is nothing new; it has been going on for years for this class of officers. They are of the Bombay provincial service.

Question put and lost.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): Sir, I beg to move:

Omit sum of Rs 8,339 provision for barrage allowance made under Part III, Public Works Establishment—Superintending Engineers.

I hope, Sir, the Honourable the General Member will not be able to say that this allowance also refers only to assistant engineers. I think the giving of this allowance is preposterous. These officers get their bungalows; they get the other allowances, Sind allowance, compensatory allowance and travelling allowance; and I think no more allowance in the shape of barrage allowance should be given to them.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Mr. President, the principles of this barrage allowance were discussed, I believe, at the last budget session of this honourable House. I have an impression they were discussed and they were passed by the honourable House. (Mr. B. G. Pahalajani: They were never discussed.) I will give the honourable members the principles of this allowance and how it came to be sanctioned. It is for the special nature of the work, the arduous conditions in which it has to be performed and for the contented and loyal service which will be rendered to Government on the Lloyd Barrage. I will just point out my own experience and explain how it was that Government came to sanction it. It was very difficult to get our officers to leave this presidency—and I specially refer to our Indian officers—and go to Sind to serve on the Lloyd Barrage project. If they did go—and they had to go if they were ordered—they were naturally discontented. When they joined the service they never thought that they would have to serve 10 or 12 years in Sind at a stretch. They were quite prepared to go to Sind for two or three years, as all officers have to go who join the Public Works Department, but they clearly stated, and I think rightly, that Government should not expect them to serve on one construction project for ten to twelve years, and in the case of many of them at the end of their service in the Public Works Department. They also placed before Government their own difficulties. They had their wives and children in the presidency proper, and on account of the very hot climate of Sind it was necessary to leave them in the presidency proper, but most of all they considered it was essential to leave their children here on account of the education that they were receiving in the presidency proper which would be interrupted if they were taken to Sind. They also pointed out that on a project of the importance of the Lloyd Barrage, the responsibilities of officers were greater than if they were serving in ordinary administrative posts.

[Mr. Cowasji Jehangir]

They would have to work longer hours and they would have to bear responsibilities which Government had placed upon their shoulders for more than two years' time at a stretch. If an officer is put on construction work he is generally relieved in two or three years and put on to ordinary administrative duty. But here it was essential that once our officers went to the barrage project, they should be prepared to stay there either as long as they remained in service or as long as the work continued on the barrage. We cannot afford to have officers on this huge project only for two or three years; to let them gain all the experience of work on a big project and then let them go to administrative posts, and let others come in to begin all over again to learn their work. Continuity of service was essential to the success of that great project, and in order to get continuity of service, and in order to keep our officers satisfied, Government ultimately came to the conclusion after very serious consideration that this barrage allowance should be granted. Mr. President, for myself, I can tell the honourable House that I considered this question for two months before I consented to it. It is only after I went to Sind and heard the officers themselves from their own lips—officers, both European and Indian—that I decided that a case had been made out. I do not desire to go into individual cases, but I would like to inform the honourable House of the difficulties that had to be overcome. Some of our officers when they were ordered to go to the Sukkur Barrage were not at all pleased, but I firmly told them that no excuse would be received or accepted and orders had to be carried out. I must say to their credit that they immediately obeyed. I had to speak rather firmly in one or two cases, and to the credit of our Indian officers, but let me say that they did obey those orders. But they asked me to consider their case, and I promised that I would. Now, I heard their case from their own lips when I went to Sind. I think this allowance is justified, and it is entirely in the interests of this huge work that we are undertaking. We desire that our Indian officers as well as our European officers should remain on this work from the day it is begun to the day it is ended. And if we expect them to remain in Sind and remain on construction work for ten whole years, I think they are justified in asking Government to give them an extra allowance. I will again repeat that our officers are not kept on construction work for more than three years. They are transferred for administrative work after three years or so. In this case they were given to understand that they would not be allowed to leave the construction and return to the presidency proper, and considering the responsibility they have undertaken Government have decided to give this allowance.

MOULVI RAFI UDDIN AHMAD (Central Division): Sir, the Honourable the General Member is one of the ablest debaters in this House. His arguments are generally satisfactory. But I am sorry to say that on this occasion his speech was so unconvincing that it entirely failed to satisfy me. I dare say many of the honourable members on this side of the House entertain the same view. I was very much surprised to hear him state that in order to keep these officers contented and loyal the Government have to give them this allowance. It struck me as a curious way of looking at things and I was surprised at his curious mentality. He further said that he gave them orders to go and they without hesitating loyally obeyed and he therefore recommended to provide them with this allowance. This is not the way things should be managed. It is not the way to maintain discipline. My honourable friend Mr. Baptista said the other day that the members of the Civil Service were good administrators but bad statesmen. Here I may say that our Indian members are neither good statesmen nor good administrators. The honourable member should have laid it down as a matter of duty that they should go there. They are not obliging him. It was their duty. I am getting a little bit confused in the matter of allowances. The other day fifty-two allowances were enumerated. The honourable member said that he considered for two months and that after two months he yielded. My own view of the matter is that he had to yield to the demands of the European portion of the staff and when once he yielded to the European staff he had to give allowance to the Indian staff also. This is a very bad example and all the Indian members of this Council should put a stop to it. I do not say that when allowances are given to Europeans they should not be given to Indian portion of the staff. What I say is that in the interest of economy such allowances should not be given to any. We were told that Lord Clive gave these allowances in the interest of economy ; but Lord Clive gave these allowances, because the civilians then engaged were carrying on private trade of their own and he stopped that by allowances. The officers are now getting fat salaries and if we are to pay any allowances in addition, it would be an intolerable situation. I do not say that poor paid men should not get some allowance ; but officers of Government getting high salaries which are given nowhere else in the world should not get these allowances. If the Honourable Members of Government yield to such demands, it would encourage them to ask for more. It would be a sop to Cerberus. With these remarks I support the motion.

The THAKOR OF KERWADA (Gujarat Sardars and Inamdars) :
Sir, I am not acquainted with the conditions prevailing in Sind ; but I share the view of the honourable member Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmad that the reasons given by the Honourable the General Member are not convincing. If this extra allowance is justified on the ground of hard work for officers in Sind, then on the same analogy I should consider that the Honourable Members and Ministers and Secretaries of departments who undergo very great strain during Council sessions must also claim such allowances. It seems to me that as a matter of duty they must go to Sind. They must have nothing else to say but to obey the orders of Government, once they accept the service, and no extra allowance is necessary for these officers. With these remarks I support the motion.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): Sir, the amount is a small one, but the question is one of principle. I must also say that I am not in the least convinced with the arguments of the Honourable the General Member. He says some of the engineers were transferred from the presidency. How many have been so transferred has not been stated.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is it not the honourable member Mr. Adwani that moved the motion?

Mr. D. B. ADWANI: Yes; Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I was looking about as to whether there were any more honourable members desirous of speaking on this motion. I will call upon the honourable member to reply, in due course.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON: Sir, one very important point has been overlooked by honourable members who criticised this allowance. The Honourable Member in charge has pointed out that the main object was to get these officers to consent to remain during the whole period of construction. Sind was attached to the Bombay Presidency after many of the services were formed. Rightly or wrongly Sind has been looked upon by many, especially Indians living in the presidency proper, as a sort of penal settlement. Well, Sir, we have got to appoint officers to Sind. There is no question that it is a great hardship to those who have to serve in Sind. It has been the habit, and most of the officers think it rightly so, that after three years of service in Sind they should be allowed to go back to the presidency proper and that principle may be all right in a running district. But I for one have to face the problem of trying to get officers to stay on to see the work completed. I think the House will realise this most important point. Apart from this, it is not a very large item. There may be a principle involved. That is the principle I am defending, that is, we should try and keep officers on this work in Sind. If we give them some allowances, they are justified in accepting them to stay on for long periods. We hope that these officers will remain more contented and will not try to get back to the presidency proper; but I will point out to the honourable members of this House an example of the transfers that have taken place in the past. Take the instance of the Ghar Canals district. That district has been in existence for something over 30 years, and during that period there have been 32 transfers of Executive Engineers, a large majority of which were not necessary in the interest of Government, but due to sickness or on account of senior officers who had been for a long time in Sind being able to get a transfer to the presidency proper. It is fairly easy to carry on the policy of a running district, but it is impossible to carry out large works if we are having continuous changes of officers. I can assure this House that with my experience of over 18 years of construction works in this presidency that it is most harmful to the works if frequent transfers are allowed to take place, and I submit, Sir, that we cannot prevent them from taking place if we find that officers are more or less forced to remain away from their homes for very long periods as we expect them to be in the present case. I trust the House will look at it from that point of view. If we can get this continuous service, I feel sure that every anna of these allowances will be more than made good by the efficiency that will obtain on this great work.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Mr. President, I should just like to add one word. A thing like the barrage allowance, for which the Honourable Mr. Cowasji Jehangir is taking the responsibility, is not sanctioned except with the consent of the whole Government, and this matter was very thoroughly considered before the Finance Department gave their consent. We came to the conclusion that in the interests of this Government and in the interests of the people it was absolutely necessary that we should keep the same staff of officers continuously on this duty in Sind. Now, Sir, if officers are not satisfied with the particular duty which they are performing, it is not at all an easy matter to keep them on that work. It is all very well to talk about officers being compelled to obey orders. Of course, they do obey orders. At the same time, those orders have frequently to be obeyed in circumstances of very considerable difficulty and strain, and if an officer thinks that he is being very badly treated, it is very easy for him to put up a very good case for his transfer. Take an officer in the north of Sind and the extremely arduous climate that he has to deal with there. When he gets a continuous and long bout of fever, he can very easily get a medical certificate that it is necessary for his health that he should be transferred to the Deccan, or to the sea breezes of Bombay, or some other similar spot. But if he is receiving this allowance, and if he has consented willingly to undertake this work without taking leave or without obtaining a transfer, he will stick to his duty in spite of fever or in spite of family separations or other difficulties, for which he might very reasonably plead a transfer. Then, again, there are the leave rules which are necessary for the staff. A man who feels that he is being badly treated will make the utmost use of these leave rules to get away. If he feels that he is being well treated, well paid and given a definite job to do in return for that pay, he will frequently abandon his right to leave and stay on at his particular job until he finishes it. That is the purpose of those words which the honourable member Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmad treated so lightly and humourously. The words are not 'loyal service'. I think the Moulvi's memory misled him. It is 'contented service'. There is no question of disloyalty in the staff whatsoever. It is a question of inducing the men, in the face of severe hardship and strain to continue on the job, because the conditions in the north of Sind and the desert areas in which this canal is to be constructed are conditions so arduous to the human constitution that very few members of this House have ever had experience of. I therefore say to this House that this barrage allowance is a good investment of the moneys of this presidency.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): Mr. President, whenever we oppose the granting of these allowances, we are told that they are in the interest of the people of this presidency. When the Honourable the Finance Member described the conditions of life in Sind, I thought he was describing the desert of Sahara. As a matter of fact, Sind is not such a desert country. Most of these canals of the Lloyd Barrage canals will pass through cultivated parts of the country, tracts which are partly cultivated and partly uncultivated; and, especially after these officers have been housed, as they will shortly be housed, I submit they will be working under the same conditions as other members of the Public Works Department in Sind, and no worse at all. I must also say, Sir, that this is the first time that I have heard it said before this House that Sind is considered to be a penal settlement. I have always been under the impression that officers like to serve in Sind. There is another very important point that has not been made out by any honourable member, and that is that many of these officers who have been transferred to the Sukkur Barrage works, have gone there on promotion, and that, I think, is sufficient compensation to them.

I must say that it is rather unfortunate that I am able to oppose the grant of this allowance to only the Indian officers in whose case it is made votable, while the portion that is intended for the Imperial Service officers is made non-votable. But, as I said at the outset of my speech, it is only on principle that I have opposed the inclusion of this grant in the budget.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh District): Sir, I rise to a point of order. I find on page 39 that last year's allowance was Rs. 21,690 and the whole of it was votable. This year, out of that amount Rs. 9,000 have been made non-votable. My point is whether it is permissible for Government to change this allowance into a non-votable allowance this year, and if it is permissible for Government to do it, whether it is not necessary that the House should be informed on what date, by what order, a part of this allowance has been made non-votable.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: There has been no change in the orders since the last year.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member Mr. Joshi says that in the budget estimate for 1924-25 the amount was shown as votable, because it was not printed in italics, but a distinction has been made this year, and a part of it is in italics and the other part in ordinary type. There is no point of order in it.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: The whole amount ought to have been shown as voted.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It cannot be a point of order. The honourable member merely wants to know when the orders making these allowances payable to Imperial service officers non-votable by the requisite legal authority were issued. That is really asking for information.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Mr. President, I will give that information just now.

[Mr. Cawasji Jehangir]

Sir, my friend, Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmad talked about discipline. I wish he had also drawn the attention of the House, in the eloquent way in which he always addresses us, to the question of justice to our officers. Discipline and justice go together. If public servants make out a good case whether it be to Government or to this honourable House, surely this House or the Government ought to judge the question on its merits. I have given my honourable friend the reasons that led Government to grant this Lloyd Barrage allowance. He turned round and said that perhaps I would not have consented even after two months' consideration, had it not been for the English officers in the service. Now, Sir, that was an insinuation that it was sanctioned by Government because English officers were concerned and that if there had been only Indian officers, sanction would not have been given. I do not think that it is a very just imputation because it is absolutely incorrect. The largest portion of this allowance goes to Indian officers and only the smaller portion of the total goes to English officers. But let me assure this House that it was more in the interest of Indian officers that Government did it than in the interest of the English officers; it is because Government desire that Indian officers should work on the barrage from start to finish, that they should get experience in construction work. It is these arguments that weighed with Government in sanctioning this barrage allowance. It is very easy to talk of the officers of Government being made to serve wherever they are ordered. But let my honourable friend put himself in the position of a Mahomedan officer of Government and let him be transferred to Sind and told that for ten whole years he will not be relieved from his post but that he must remain there because he is a servant of Government and that he must spend part of his income to keep two establishments, one for himself in Sind and the other for his wife and children in the presidency proper and then let us see what he could say in justification of a little extra pay for remaining in Sind for ten years of his service. We have got to judge these circumstances by placing ourselves in the position of our officers and think what we would do and feel. It is justice that we ask for, and because we feel that it was just and fair that these men who are appointed and ordered to work in Sind for ten years, which no Government servant is at present bound to do under the rules,—should get an extra allowance.

Mr. President, I would like to make a distinction between construction work and administration work. There is a great difference. I have nothing further to say and I hope and trust that honourable members will feel that this barrage allowance is justified in the interests of all concerned, both this House and Government and our officials, both Indian and European.

As to the question of voted and non-voted items, I can assure my honourable friend that no new rules have come in force since this barrage allowance was granted. All rules that govern allowances govern this allowance. Whatever is voted in allowances, all over the presidency remains the same. As to the italics it may be a mistake but I won't blame the press until I am quite sure. Last year it may have referred to another body of servants, and this year to another; that may be the explanation but unless I am certain I do not think I can say that it is a mistake of the press.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh District): Sir, I have got the final issue of the budget of last year, and it is shown there that it is voted.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Government has a right to do that and I cannot allow this kind of discussion. It may be a misprint. We have had plenty of them.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: Is it not fair to this House that we ought to know when these orders as to votable and non-votable were passed. If the orders have not been passed, Government is not entitled to....

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: The order regarding allowances was passed in 1921.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: In that case I beg to bring to your attention....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Honourable the General Member has replied and I cannot allow any further discussion. It is not a point of order.

Question put and lost.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I beg to move:

'Reduce by Rs. 1,08,000—provision for Chief Engineer in Sind and Indus River Gauging District Rs. 1,64,000 (P. W. D. C. E., page 41).'

Sir, this is a matter on which questions have been put and unsatisfactory answers given, and therefore this is a matter on which we want a definite statement of the intention of Government from the Honourable the General Member. This is, Sir, the elimination of the office establishment of the Chief Engineer in Sind which includes the Indus River Gauging District. It is a part of his establishment. This occurs at page 32 of 41 Civil Estimates which begins as Indus River Gauging District and which is totalled up at page 33.

When the retrenchment committee was appointed in 1921, it took evidence of the superintending engineers for the presidency and of Sind. It took the evidence of our then colleague, Mr. Proes, who was Secretary to the Government of Bombay, P. W. D.; before him were placed all the facts and figures that were necessary to come to a definite decision. Apart from that, Sir, apart from the facts that were placed before the retrenchment committee by the Government itself, apart from the facts that were placed by the witnesses who were all government servants, all superintending engineers, no private man, Sir, was called, all government servants of that rank, we then got by interpellation from the Government to tell this Council the duties of the Chief Engineer in Sind. Before 1917 there was no chief engineer in Sind. Before 1917 there were only 2 superintending engineers for the Right bank and for the Left, exactly in the same way as we have had superintending engineers in the rest of the presidency.

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

The superintending engineers are the co-ordinating authorities in the three parts of this presidency. The superintending engineers were the co-ordinating authorities in Sind on either side of the bank, a direct indication that the Government, so far as the work of the public works department is concerned, upto 1917 saw no justification for producing or planting another co-ordinating authority, the chief engineer, over the superintending engineers who were directly responsible to the Government, as the superintending engineers of the three divisions in the presidency proper are. In 1917 Dr. Summers who had just begun to take interest in the starting of the barrage, was the superintending engineer; his services were required to be retained further, and this appointment was specially created in 1917 in order to fit in Dr. Summers as Chief Engineer. Mr. Wright and others succeeded him afterwards. Mr. Griffith succeeded him afterwards. But, so far as the origin of this was concerned, Dr. Summers' services had to be retained and unlike the other parts of the presidency, the post of Chief Engineer had to be created for Sind. Then, Sir, when the Chief Engineer had been created, it became necessary to decide what his duties were and the interpellation asked in this connection brought in the information that the amount of the establishment—the cost of the establishment—was now Rs. 91,000. Now it is one lakh. The duties of the Chief Engineer that were placed before us were: to receive correspondences from both the Superintending Engineers,—of the right and the left bank canals—and one of the biggest duties that he had to perform was to transfer overseers and sub-overseers—not assistant engineers, as that had to be done by the Government—but overseers and sub-overseers from one bank to another! The Superintending Engineers were not given the extraordinary power of transferring men from one bank to another, and that power was added to the Chief Engineer. I am saying this from the answer that was placed before the Council by interpellation. Then the amount of correspondence that passed in his office was also commented upon. The correspondence was not even half—not even one-third—that passed through the Superintending Engineers. Another function that was given to him was to sanction contracts a little more than the Superintending Engineers had power to sanction. In other divisions that power was retained by the Government.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : What was the amount ?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : Five lakhs.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : You are wrong.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : I am not wrong. Now, Sir, after the Chief Engineer was created, these were the functions that were given to him and then a new district had to be created and an executive engineer was placed in charge of river gauging district, a function which was at one time done by an assistant engineer. A separate executive engineer means a separate establishment, it means an accountant, and so forth, and all the establishment had to be created, the duty of that executive engineer being the duty of the recording of the gauge readings of the river from time to time. The Superintending Engineer, Mr. Vartak, of Sind was called here as a witness. Reports were received from the Superintending Engineer of the other side and the whole matter was placed before Mr. Proes as a witness, and Mr. Proes, with all the evidence which he had in his own record which he was prepared to produce before this committee, gave a definite statement as to the desirability of its retention. This having been done, another interpellation was asked from the Honourable the General Member whether the opinion of the honourable the Chief Secretary, P. W. D. (Mr. Proes) had been considered in passing orders on the Retrenchment Committee's report. The answer that was given to this Council was "Yes; that was the personal opinion of Mr. Proes". I am afraid this could not be taken as a personal opinion. But we were told that the opinions which Mr. Proes had given, especially about the reduction in divisions in Sind, was his personal opinion. A supplementary question was asked, and the answer was exactly the same; again, as in the Chief Secretary, Mr. Proes, was not a part and parcel of the Government. You have got the definite recommendation based on the evidence of Government's own engineers, based on the evidence of its own secretary, and the orders that have been passed.....

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: What was the opinion given by the Secretary on this question?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: That it was not wanted.

Now, the recommendations were placed by the Retrenchment Committee before Government and they were for taking away four districts or divisions, and taking away the river gauging district, that is to say, five in all—a saving, therefore, of 2 lakhs in Sind by the P.W.D. alone. None of these divisions has been done away with, and I place it before the Council that this House should insist upon the exact carrying out, so far as the retrenchment in this department is concerned, of the recommendation which was based not merely on the Retrenchment Committee's own opinion, but upon the opinion of Government's own officers, which included the Superintending Engineer's official reports and their own Secretary, P.W.D.'s opinion; the only reason given, against its acceptance was administrative inconvenience, because the two Superintending Engineers have no time to look after the work of the Chief Engineer and they are already overworked. The time of the Superintending Engineer is wholly taken up by the management of the inundation canals and their maintenance and silt clearance, and, above all, the disposal of applications in connection with water! They have little time to devote to the higher study of their canals and the Chief Engineer has been able to do all this and to prevent any falling off in revenue! This is the reason which is given, which perhaps up to 1917 did not exist! After 1917 Government rose to realise all this, which never had been done before, and it is on these scanty and unsatisfactory grounds that the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee has been thrown out.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON: Sir, the honourable member the Deputy President has, I think, brought this criticism before the House on purely what he considers commercial grounds. I think he is looking for a quid pro quo and wants to strike a sort of balance sheet that on say one lakh and odd thousand rupees we might propose to spend, if it is to be considered good business, we might expect two lakhs on the revenue side. But, Sir, I would like the honourable member and other honourable members of this House to consider the question of scientific progress. Sir, it was only recently that the head of the United States Reclamation Service, which corresponds with our Public Works Irrigation Service in India, visited me at Karachi. He was doing a world's tour, and I can assure the House that he was thunderstruck at the small amount of establishment in Sind on the conservation of the river Indus and the general or higher technical administration of a province of the size of Egypt. That officer gave me figures—and I roughly noted them down at the time—that for every one rupee we spent in Sind on that higher administration something like Rs. 14 was spent in America. That officer would not believe me that the staff which I enumerated to him was the only staff we have for looking after some 600 miles of the river; for higher technical administration of a province, as I say, very much greater than the whole of the irrigated area of America and greater than Egypt.

Sir, I have been able to see the inner side of the work of the Chief Engineer in Sind. It is not my work, but I have been able to see some of it. Eighteen months or two years ago that officer submitted a report to Government on the conditions of the river Indus and the effects of the Punjab withdrawals on Sind as a whole and our withdrawals combined with the Punjab withdrawals on Lower Sind. As a technical officer, I can state that that report was worth to this province, many, many lakhs of rupees.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI: How long ago was that report made?

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON: About eighteen months ago. That report, Sir, was a masterly review of the conditions that we have got to study to protect our interests in the large province of Sind. And, Sir, I trust the House will not take a parochial view of this great question. We have got a province there, Sir, that is—I have to repeat it almost ad nauseam—as great as the well-known country which we read of almost everyday in the newspapers, that is, Egypt. We think greatly of Egypt when we read about that country in the papers, but the word 'Sind' we do not often come across when we read the newspapers. This is an office which is costing us less than £7,000; in America it would have cost £100,000. I submit this is a pretty cheap agency to safeguard our interests, to safeguard the province of Sind, by making surveys and studying the river Indus, and to co-ordinate the work of two other administrative officers, which despite what the honourable the Deputy President said, cannot sufficiently be co-ordinated without this officer. I think, Sir, that I can show to the members of this honourable House that they would be making a very great mistake if they were to remove an officer in this position and his staff. The Chief Engineer in Sind has not only to co-ordinate the work of the two superintending engineers serving under him and of his executive engineers, but he has also to study the river Indus. As I have just informed the House, that officer, as read out by the honourable member the Deputy President, has also got to deal with the higher technical consideration of matters in Sind so far as pertains to irrigation. Sir, I would like to stress the point that what was considered good enough in the past cannot be considered good enough in these days of progress. By keeping a very large staff of officers in America the river Mississippi is conserved to such a high degree that our conservation in Sind must be considered almost farcical. We do our best with the money at our disposal and with the establishment at our disposal. But there is much work to be done, and if we abolish the Chief Engineer in Sind—the officer who has to pay attention to these matters—we will simply go back instead of progress. This American—I may inform the House I had a long conversation with him—is one of the world's well-known experts in irrigation, and he thought that it was absolutely extraordinary that we were tackling a problem of 500 to 600 miles of one of the biggest rivers with an establishment that is costing one-fourteenth of what it costs them in America.

The THAKOR of KERWADA (Gujarat Sardars and Inamdars) : Sir, will the honourable member the Secretary kindly inform the House whether the irrigation projects in Sind can be favourably compared with those of Egypt and the Mississippi in regard to their productive capacity.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City) : Sir, the honourable member the Chief Engineer just now told us that they spend on the conservation of the Mississippi and other rivers in America 14 times what we are spending in Sind. Well, if it costs us one-fourteenth of what it costs them in America, it is at the same time likely that we are getting only one-hundredth part of the work that they turn out in America. However, that seems to be absolutely beside the point. The question is not about the such of the whole establishment but whether we require a Chief Engineer in Sind, and on this point, I must say that the Retrenchment Committee after going into the question very thoroughly, after taking the evidence of Public Works Department officers, came to the conclusion that the Chief Engineer in Sind is not required. The present Chief Engineer in Sind, Mr. Vartak, I am told, himself gave evidence when he was superintending engineer, that the post of Chief Engineer was not required. What further evidence than that is required ? The chief point we have to remember is that the two Superintending Engineers are very highly paid officials, and one of them can very easily take up the work of observing the Indus and submit reports regarding it. In former years there used to be one superintending engineer for the right bank and one superintending engineer for the left bank. But when the question of the Lloyd Barrage came up, some investigations had to take place in connection with that project, and therefore, for the first time, a separate chief engineer for Sind was appointed, in order that he might become the post office for the two superintending engineers and also do the investigation work for the Lloyd Barrage. Now that this investigation work is over and we have a separate Chief Engineer for the Lloyd Barrage, no ground at all can be advanced for the retention of the Chief Engineer in Sind. The Lloyd Barrage Chief Engineer can very well do the investigation which is trotted out so forcibly as necessary for the future of Sind and for the welfare of its people. He can very well do it, or, if he cannot, one of the superintending engineers can do it. As a matter of fact that used to be the case before. For the matter of that one of the superintending engineers can be made the Chief Engineer, and we can thus do away with one of these two posts. That is to say, instead of having three we should have only two officers, and both these administrative officers can correspond direct with the Secretariat, as other superintending engineers are doing, and their work can thus be co-ordinated.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Mr. President, this is a far more important subject than would appear to be understood from the two speeches we have heard. Sir, the future of Sind depends entirely upon the river Indus. The future and the present interests of Sind are all linked up with the river Indus. Now, Sir, this river Indus derives its waters from the Himalayas and from the rainfall that falls in the Punjab. We have not got the sole claim upon the waters of that river. The people of the Punjab are very willing to take up the surplus waters of the river Indus. They put forward claims to have the first call upon that water, and it is of the utmost importance that their claims which are supported by scientific enquiries of a very elaborate and intricate character should be examined and watched not once or twice in the period of a year, but almost from day to day, in order that we may have a case ready at any time to meet the designs of the Punjab upon our water. This is a matter that affects the very life of the people of Sind. There is at present in the Punjab a great agitation for a new scheme which they call the Thal Project. The Government of Bombay have, on behalf of the people of Sind, protested against any advance whatever being made with that project for the reason that if that project goes through it will take out from the river Indus water to irrigate two millions acres of land in the upper reaches of the river. Now, Sir, if that water is taken from the Indus in the critical months of April and May, when the water first begins to rise, it will postpone the agricultural season in Sind by something between 7 and 21 days. If that water is taken out again at the end of the season in September, it will mean that sufficient water will not flow down the Indus at the critical period for 21 days. The agricultural season in Sind will be shortened at either end with disastrous results to all lands which are not protected by the Sukkur Barrage.

Now, Sir, there is a great deal of agitation in favour of this project which means very great wealth to a considerable number of zamindars and speculators in the Punjab. These interested gentlemen have employed or are employing men of good scientific attainments to put forward arguments which are very difficult to meet. I have no special scientific knowledge to understand these arguments, but to the lay mind they are entirely unsound and it is certain that they are directed against the welfare of Sind. We require some officer with a competent staff in Sind to watch and meet the claims and arguments of these people in the Punjab. We do not require an officer to perform the duties which the honourable member, the Deputy President, no doubt humorously, mentioned such as transferring an official from one bank of the river to the other.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: It was given by Government and not by me.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: If so, I regret that such an answer should have been given by Government.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: I am very sorry for the Government.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Even if this officer had no administrative duty at all, I still consider that his employment is required to give advice on the vast problems that concern the province of Sind.

Now Sir, this province of Sind has got the river Indus running through it 400 miles in a straight line and with various curves covering a course of 600 miles. The river is continually changing its course eating away a bank now on one side, now on another, bringing disaster to the people residing near the river channel. It requires constant watching to foresee the direction the river is likely to take at any given time. This question cannot be mixed with the detail routine work of the superintending engineer who has got hundreds of miles of canal in his charge. The Indus River Gauging District is a district which contains a staff of men whose duty it is to make accurate, intricate mathematical calculations regarding the force of the current and the direction that it is likely to take at any moment, to give advice that a particular angle of the river is being threatened and that it is necessary to throw up new embankments or to strengthen the existing embankments. Without much advice the State may be compelled to spend lakhs of rupees on embankments unnecessarily, or may be induced to throw up embankments at a point which is likely to be eaten away and washed into the river in the next season or two. It is very difficult for honourable members who have not seen the violence of the river Indus to realise what the river is capable of. I have known it shift its course from 2 to 4 miles in two days; once it was threatening the main line of railway running from Karachi to Lahore. We spent an anxious time for weeks bringing massive stones from the neighbouring hills and flinging them into the current with the result that suddenly it changed its course. That was 15 years ago, when I was collector there. At one moment when the river was within 5 feet of the railway line, we thought it was absolutely hopeless. The river flung across to the opposite bank and left a sandbank three miles in width where there had been a deep and raging torrent, and attacked the opposite side of the river 10 miles away. That is the vast force of this river that we seek to control through the skill of our engineers. I can assure this House that it is a most economic investment of money if we can engage men of scientific training and good intellect to help us to protect the people of Sind against the ravages and disasters that this river can bring and to protect the people of Sind against the deep designs of persons who try to steal the waters from them for the benefit of the Punjab.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I carefully listened to the speech of the Honourable the Finance Member. I think he described the Chief Engineer and his staff that were on the spot of erosion at Sukkur when he was Collector there 15 years ago. I myself belong to the same district and to the same place where the Honourable the Finance Member was the Collector. I can assure the honourable member as well as the honourable House that the Chief Engineer did nothing to stop the erosion at Sukkur and that, even if the Chief Engineer had not been there, the Executive Engineer would have done his duty and saved the country. Even the Superintending Engineer was not there. So far as the Chief Engineer was concerned, the Honourable the Finance Member was telling us that the whole 600 miles of the Indus river had to be kept in perfect order and without the Chief Engineer the river would run amock and damage the whole of Sind. Another very serious argument advanced was that some people in the Punjab were designing to steal the water of the Indus which flows into the heart of Sind and that in order to prevent them from doing so the Chief Engineer was necessary. I am rather amused by this argument. These are mere emotional pleas towards making the members of the Council to sanction the grant, but I do not think they are arguments appealing to reason. Now, in 1917 the river Indus existed there; it existed there long before 1917, and it existed there even before the advent of the British Government. Formerly, there were two Superintending Engineers there; one of them was designated the Chief Engineer and the other the Superintending Engineer; they existed there long before the Chief Engineer came into existence in 1917. Then, the Punjab irrigation works are much older than the irrigation works of Sind, and they have been in existence as long as, if not much longer than, the irrigation works of Sind, and yet there was no necessity of a Chief Engineer felt. The Honourable the Finance Member has not given us any of the functions of the Chief Engineer, neither did the Chief Engineer for the Barrage, who has no personal interest in this matter but who was advocating the cause of a brother officer of his in Sind, give us any statement of the exact duties which the Chief Engineer does. The only answer that was given to us by the Chief Engineer was the instance of the American expert who, without going through the length and breadth of Sind, by simply looking at the map of the barrage advised on this matter, without knowing the density of the population, without knowing the irrigation, or without knowing anything about the plantations on the river, and that advice this House is required to accept as genuine advice.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON: May I rise to inform the Deputy President that that officer had taken the opportunity of going on a cruise along the river before he came to see me and he stayed for five days in Sukkur, and he did get information about the density of population and cultivation, etc. ?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : During the American invasion of Bombay, the Americans are able to write books on India by a two days' tour, and if the Chief Engineer informs me that a five days' cruise along the river Indus and a stay of five days at Sukkur—a rocky district where the river flows but there is no cultivation—was what the advice was based on, I may advise the Chief Engineer that he might as well not have quoted that instance at all. I would place the American expert in the same category as the American travellers that from day to day write books upon India. Now, so far as the work is concerned, I take my stand not upon the evidence of the Chief Engineer for the Barrage who has not served as Chief Engineer, not on his support in the cause of a brother Chief Engineer, not on the evidence of the Revenue Commissioner, but I take my stand on the evidence that has been tendered before the Retrenchment Committee by the officers of the Irrigation Department in Sind. I would bring to the notice of the House that Mr. Vartak, who is now Chief Engineer and who has been Chief Engineer twice before, gave evidence before the Retrenchment Committee, and his evidence is to the effect that if arrangements can be made for the work of river gauging, the Chief Engineer's appointment is not necessary. Nor, Sir, river gauging is part and parcel of the barrage work. It ought to be, if it is not already so, part and parcel of the barrage because the barrage cannot be a possibility until an eye is kept on the river gauges. Therefore, it should be part and parcel of the duties of the barrage authorities, and it could be easily transferred to them. If that is done, I do not think there is any necessity for a Chief Engineer in Sind.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : Mr. President, I cannot speak on this question with the experience of either the Chief Engineer or the Finance Member, and therefore, any opinion I give on a question of this sort, honourable members will take for what it is worth. I do not profess to be an authority of any sort on this question. I rely on the information and guidance of members who have been connected with irrigation all their lives, and who have known Sind for more years than most honourable members of this House. At any rate, Sir, there is one aspect of the case which has struck me within the last year or two, which I would like to place before this honourable House. I have had to read many reports from the Chief Engineer in Sind, and most of these reports dealt with suggestions as to how to improve one or another of the irrigational systems of Sind. Very few of those reports dealt with administrative matters either of the Right or of the Left Bank. We have got irrigational systems in Sind of which we can well be proud and which, as my honourable friend the Finance Member said, mean life or death to Sind. Surely it is worth while having a man who has the time to look further than the two administrative officers who have, after all, got to confine their attention to administrative matters, and who can look about him and can see where the weak points are in the huge irrigational systems in Sind. It is for him to tour and see which system is not working as it should, and draw the attention of the Superintending Engineer to it. It is for him to see that the Superintending Engineer reports, and then report to Government his own opinion on the weak points in any of these big systems. As far as I can see, most of the reports that have been sent to Government by the Chief Engineer have been confined to such questions. Now, take the question of the big floods that we had last year. I shall have to move for a supplementary grant of many lakhs of rupees in that connection. The proposals came from the two Superintending Engineers, and suppose that they had been sent to Government direct by the Superintending Engineers. Would I have been able to come with the confidence that I now can to this House and ask them to grant these lakhs of rupees, if I had not the advice of the man on the spot, who could judge independently? He is not concerned with the one or the other administrative district. He is independent of both, and he can judge for himself whether these demands are justified or not. They run to lakhs of rupees. It was the Chief Engineer in Sind with whom I went through all these demands. I asked him and relied upon his judgment and advice which is after all for this honourable House. After all, it is this House which will grant the money. I asked him for his advice and judgment whether the demands made upon us were justified. After all, the Superintending Engineers are to administer the huge divisions that they have got under their charge. They have got a number of executive engineers under them. They confine their attention to their divisions and cannot look at the question from the broad point of view which a man can, who has the whole of Sind irrigation under him. After all, on this huge undertaking we require an independent man resident in Sind to advise us. When we are spending lakhs of rupees, when we are going in for works costing crores of money, surely, would it not be a penny wise and pound foolish policy to retrench this one officer, after what has fallen from the Honourable the Finance Member? We have got to remember that in the Punjab we have got a powerful rival and the Punjab has chief engineers as well as ourselves. We have constantly to communicate on scientific and technical questions with the Government of India, and it is absolutely necessary that this Government should have at their disposal the services of a man whose work is not entirely of an administrative character and who can spare time to think and use his brains in the interests of the province of Sind. If you over-burden the superintending engineer, you go back to the old system of making him also a chief engineer. He cannot administer his whole division and also put his services at the disposal of Government as he ought to do.

Mr. President, I have come to the conclusion that this money is well spent. As to the report of the Retrenchment Committee my honourable friend the Deputy President in his opening remarks tried to convey the idea that the Secretary to Government had given evidence that the chief engineer was not necessary. He did give evidence that an executive engineer could be retrenched in another part. I do not remember having read in the evidence of the then secretary to Government that the chief engineer was not necessary, and it would now be very interesting to know the views of the present chief engineer in Sind. I know that he has got quite enough work to do.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : Is Government going to call for it.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : It makes a difference when the man is chief engineer in Sind. All I say is that I trust Mr. Vartak and I feel confident that if he felt that money was being wasted he would be the first man to inform Government that his post should be retrenched. I feel that Mr. Vartak has quite enough work to do at present and that if the chief engineer's post is retrenched an amount of this important work would remain undone to the detriment of the province of Sind.

Question put and lost.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Sir, I beg to move :

Reduce by Rs. 75,000—Provision for superintending engineer, Indus Right Bank Division—Rs. 8,77,600 (P. W. D. C. E. page 41).

I won't take much time over this item. It is of the same kind as the last. There are about eight or nine executive engineers on one side and eight or nine on the other, and the Retrenchment Committee went into this question fully, not only taking the opinions of the officers but even the mileage of the jurisdictions over which the canals run. They went minutely into the establishment of each of these executive engineers, and besides that they had the chief engineer Mr. Vartak's report on one side, they had before them also the report of the superintending engineer, Left Bank, both of them submitted through the chief engineer Mr. Shoubridge. After having considered this report and evidence on both sides, they came to the conclusion that the elimination of two of the districts on either side could be fairly done away with, on the strength of mileage shown and their duties. That was the opinion of the superintending engineers on both sides and that was placed before Government in the report of the Retrenchment Committee. I put it to the Council and to the Honourable the General Member himself that so far as this Council is concerned Government paid no attention to this portion of the Retrenchment Committee's report, and though they may succeed in defeating this motion, I think that should be no satisfaction at all to the Honourable the General Member himself, and if it is no satisfaction he need not rely upon the vote of the Council, because we know Sind better and also the officers whose distinct opinion is recorded, opinion of heads of departments in Sind is before Government in the proceedings of the Retrenchment Committee, that is the opinion of their own chief secretary before whom the mileages of different canals were kept; if all that information is given on the records of the Government, what is the use of Government giving us flimsy excuses in the orders on the Retrenchment Committee's report that due consideration has been given to the situation. I know on a division the matter might be lost, but I cannot desist from stating that the reasons given in their order on the report of the Retrenchment Committee are flimsy and are not worthy of any consideration by this House. The Government has not applied their mind seriously to that question raised in the statement and to the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee. Government has not taken into consideration the opinion of their own chief engineer. They have not even sufficient courtesy to go into the records of the Retrenchment Committee and I say that the orders on this report are so flimsy that I can challenge the Honourable the General Member now to tell me if he has read those papers. Therefore whatever the result may be when the question of reducing expenditure and retrenchment arises either at the discussion of the budget or at other times, we are told long stories of the necessities of certain engineers. Here is an instance in which there is nobody neither the member of Government who represents the services of Sind, nor even the superintending engineers, nor even the Chief Secretary to Government, who was prepared to defend this Sind establishment and I therefore place it again before the Council and the Honourable the General Member that even though to-day he may have the vote of the Council against me these are matters which require careful scrutiny and one day these matters must come before the Council to be adjudicated upon.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Sir, I desire to enter a strong protest against the speech of my honourable friend. He has not placed the facts before this Council correctly. He led this Council to believe that the report of the retrenchment committee was not studied by Government, that Government acted against the advice of their officers, and that they desired to throw away money notwithstanding the advice given by their expert officers that the money would be saved. The impression that my honourable friend the Deputy President tried to create, is far from the truth. The truth is that the Secretary to Government who was a roads and buildings officer when asked whether these divisions could not be amalgamated said "yes". The chief engineer strongly protested when his opinion was asked on the point. The Secretary to Government, Irrigation Branch, strongly protested when his opinion was asked and they said that it would ruin the administration of the Jamrao Canal, and indeed Mr. President, there are some honourable members of this House who have their lands on the Jamrao Canal and perhaps it would be of interest to know whether they think that the whole of the Jamrao Canal, northern and southern districts could be administered by one executive engineer. I have been told that that cannot be done efficiently, that we should suffer not only in efficiency, but in revenue and the interests of the zamindars would suffer considerably if we tried to retrench in this direction. It was on the strong advice of the chief engineer in Sind that Government, with great regret, could not carry out the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee. Now, Sir, to come to the honourable House and give the impression that Government refused in spite of the advice of the chief engineer in Sind is not a correct statement of the facts. The chief engineer in Sind strongly protested against the suggestion and we were told that it was impracticable. We were told,—and I will repeat it—that we were jeopardising the efficiency of the Jamrao Canal if we tried any such experiment. These are the arguments on which my honourable friend asks honourable members to cut out Rs. 75,000 from the establishment of the Right Bank Division. As a matter of fact, the Jamrao canal is not on the right bank but on the left bank.

Well, Sir, I have nothing further to add. All that I have to say is that Government have studied the Retrenchment Committee's report very carefully and, wherever they could accept it, have done so, but only where they felt that a recommendation would affect the interests of the people themselves—the zamindars—and of Government, they with regret declined to carry out any recommendation.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): I believe, Sir, that the Honourable the General Member is grieved at my statement, but I am not prepared to withdraw one single word that I have uttered, because from the statement he has now made I am still more convinced that the Government has not given due weight and consideration to the evidence, apart from the Retrenchment Committee's report to the evidence that was before the Government and the evidence that was before the Retrenchment Committee. I did not mention Jamrao canal in my speech before—I should have perhaps referred to it then—but if he wishes to know something about it, I will only give him one little clue. The Executive Engineer of the Begari canal has a mileage of 715 miles and an area of 2,269 square miles under his control. The North Jamrao Canal Engineer has a mileage of only 354 miles and an area of 743 square miles. Southern Jamrao Canal Engineer has a mileage of 345 miles with a square area of 831 miles to manage. The Executive Engineer, Shikarpur Canal, commands an area of 45,128 square miles and a length of 618 miles. Now, Sir, it is not that the Southern Jamrao and the Northern Jamrao were not one before. They were under one Engineer. For some years they were placed under two engineers. Subsequently, it is curious to observe how, on an order which contains no reasons whatsoever, because I have read that Government Resolution, it was broken into two with a length of 349 miles and 354 miles against the length of 700 and 800 miles in the case of others. Now, were not the facts before the Honourable the General Member, when he passed these orders, which are contained in the fourth column of the Retrenchment Committee Report? Am I not justified in saying that Government passed orders without reading or referring to the facts and figures which were before the committee? And am I still to understand that the Retrenchment Committee made a definite statement that two of the districts in each city can be done away with, without full consideration and investigating all the evidence before them? Am I to understand that the Engineer attached to the Bombay Government, whom they consulted was a greater authority than the immediate authority of the Superintending Engineer who was in charge? Am I to understand that Mr. Vartak, who only three months before that had acted as Chief Engineer in Sind, and who knew both places, was a man whose opinion was not worthy of consideration of the Government and that it could be set aside, that the whole of the report of the Retrenchment Committee on this point should be set aside, because there was a single reason against it, namely, "administrative reason"? These are matters

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

Sir, which require serious consideration and I charge Government, make a deliberate charge against Government, of not having gone into the facts of the case, of not having gone into the evidence which was placed before the Retrenchment Committee and which was placed before Government themselves by their own officers, and not having gone into the figures that were placed before the Retrenchment Committee by Mr. Maxwell, who acted in a most fair manner as the Secretary of the Retrenchment Committee. I therefore, whatever the result of this matter or motion may be, still lay before the Honourable the General Member the feeling of dissatisfaction with the way in which this matter of the Retrenchment Committee's recommendation has been treated. If the House does not support me to-day, I would little mind, but I must state and must state emphatically that if not this Council there must come a Council that will see that due respect is given to the Retrenchment Committee. When a Secretary of Mr. Maxwell's impartiality and Mr. Maxwell's fairness was attached to the Retrenchment Committee, when he had collected all these figures, the distances, the mileage, the number of distributaries (of the rivers), all possible details, when he placed all these figures before the Retrenchment Committee, and when the Retrenchment Committee unanimously came to the conclusion that four divisions in Sind and one division in the Presidency should be done away with, am I to understand, Sir, that the Government continue to treat with contempt such a recommendation? If the opinion of their own servants, responsible servants, given in writing, and the evidence or statements made by them before the Retrenchment Committee, if all this is to be treated with contempt by Government, let it be. But I think the time is coming when that opinion of its own officers and the opinion of the Retrenchment Committee will be listened to.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Mr. President, my honourable friend has compared two canals, but he forgot to tell this honourable House that the two canals were totally different. One is an old inundation canal and the other is a modern perennial canal, and let me tell this honourable House that in the Punjab there would have been four executive engineers instead of the two we have got.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD: How do you know?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: From acreage; from areas. And, Sir, there can be no comparison between the Jamrao canal and the Ghar canal. What is the use, therefore, of quoting figures before the honourable House when there is no comparison between the two?

Now, Sir, my honourable friend returned to the charge that we acted against the advice of our own officers. I can tell this honourable House that it is absolutely incorrect. The Chief Engineer in Sind told us most distinctly that we ran considerable risk if we carried out the suggestion, and that is borne out by what I have heard from perfectly impartial people on the Jamrao itself. I went over the Jamrao myself and perfectly impartial people told me that it was not possible to retrench this officer, that their interests would suffer, and suffer most seriously, if Government tried anything of this sort. I cannot say more than this. Sir, it is no use....(An Honourable Member: What about Mr. Maxwell?) Mr. Maxwell was secretary of the committee. He was ordered to collect figures and he put them up before the committee. Who was Mr. Maxwell? He was secretary; he was probably ordered to collect the figures for certain canals; and most probably he took the figures for Ghar canal and Jamrao canal. I do not know whether he selected them himself, or it came from the brain of my honourable friend (Mr. B. G. Pahalajani). At any rate he compared two canals which are totally different. That alone shatters the case, and I have nothing further to say.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Sir, I beg to move :

Reduce by Rs. 60,000 provision for Superintending Engineer, Indus Left Bank Division, Rs. 7,18,800 (P. W. D., Civil Estimates, page 41).

The Honourable the General Member claimed a division in connection with the last motion : the Honourable the President has announced it. But I move this reduction although it is exactly on all fours with the one that has been rejected. I do not want this House to discuss this, and I request them not to have a discussion. But I must have from the Honourable the General Member a further statement whether he still considers that there is no possibility of reduction in the Left Bank Division also, or whether this question of retrenchment is a closed book for ever.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : Sir, in this House nothing is a closed book for ever. Wherever retrenchment can be effected, it will be effected. If next year, notwithstanding the decision we have come to, we feel that we were wrong, we will not hesitate to tell the House that we committed a mistake and that we correct ourselves now. When we feel we are wrong, I shall be the first person to come forward and tell the House that I made a mistake.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Sir, I have nothing to add to what I have already stated. I am not prepared to withdraw this motion. I still say that this is a matter which requires the consideration of the Honourable General Member. If he does not pay sufficient consideration to this matter, I will repeat this motion year after year until I succeed.

Question put and lost.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN : Sir, I move :

“That the total demand, C. E., page 231, be reduced by 10 lakhs.”

This is a deficit year.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Which works the honourable member wants to omit ?

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN : Say for instance the work in connection with re-construction of the Account Office in the Surat Castle, the construction of a new Mahalkari's kacheri in Satara, construction of stables, coach houses, motor sheds, store-rooms and syces' quarters at Government House, Karachi, conversion of two blocks of buildings in the rear of the new palace, Satara, into record rooms for the district court and so on where works have not been commenced. All these new items can be dropped in this year which is a deficit year. At least a saving of 10 lakhs can be effected. I want further to bring to the notice of the Government that the prices of building materials have gone down and this expenditure need not be incurred now. At least 10 per cent. of the demand, that is, 10 lakhs, can be saved.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI (Ahmednagar District) : Sir, I rise to support the motion which has been moved by my honourable friend Mr. Swaminarayan. While supporting the motion I should like to refer to the expenditure on the establishment on the Deccan Irrigation.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : That was included in the demand for 168 lakhs and is not included in this demand now before the House.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : It is very strange. Out of that 168 lakhs, 52 lakhs was for irrigation. That was what the honourable member Mr. Wiles explained.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Will the honourable member Mr. Wiles please explain the point again ?

Mr. G. WILES : Sir, we are not dealing with the motion for 168 lakhs. The motion of the honourable member Mr. Swaminarayan relates to the total demand Civil Estimate page 231. There the honourable member will find a total votable demand for 100 lakhs. That does not include any establishment for irrigation.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Page 231 of the Civil Estimates clearly shows the amount to be Rs. 1,00,58,000. Surely, the honourable member can proceed. The facts are quite obvious.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : Does the Finance Secretary (Mr. Wiles) mean to say that this demand does not include anything.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I have already drawn the attention of the honourable member to the fact that on page 231 the total transferred provision is Rs. 1,00,58,000, and out of this a cut is proposed.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : Therefore, I submit that I am entitled to address the House on the question of Deccan Irrigation.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member is entitled to address the House on all details which represent the sum of Rs. 1,00,58,000.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : I find, Sir, from page 58, XIII Irrigation, Navigation, Embankments and Drainage.....(Interruption). The Honourable the President has ruled.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The list of works is on page 231, and the honourable member can speak on any one or more of those works. I notice that the honourable member has also given notice of a similar reduction of 10 lakhs, and he must have considered this before he gave notice of that motion.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : The Honourable Minister for Civil Works has made the whole demand for Irrigation as well as for Roads and Buildings, and it is on that question....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I have drawn the honourable member's attention to the whole list of works which are comprised in this demand.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : I want a ruling from the Chair whether I am entitled to address the House on the question of Deccan Irrigation. If the Chair rules that I am not entitled to do so, I shall not proceed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Will the honourable member point out to me where Deccan Irrigation occurs on page 231 ?

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : There is an amount of Rs. 33,52,000 which includes establishment ; that is on page 231. If this establishment includes the establishment for irrigation works, I would be entitled to address the House, not otherwise.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : On the question of the establishment ?

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : Yes, Sir. Because I wish to raise that question, I wish to know from the Honourable Minister or the Honourable the General Member whether the irrigation establishment is included within this Rs. 36 lakhs.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Mr. Wiles says " no."

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : I do not know when we are to address on the question of Deccan Irrigation.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : All the details are given in the book. He cannot now ask other people to enlighten him on the point.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : I bow to your ruling, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It is not a ruling; it is a fact.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : They are misleading, because.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I cannot tell him all that. I have tried to be patient with the honourable member. I have repeatedly told him that he can speak on any item on page 231. That is before the honourable member, and he can address the House on any one of those items.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : I will submit to the ruling of the Chair.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It is not a question of ruling, it is a question of fact.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City) : Sir, when we were discussing 60, Civil Works and 55, Navigation, Embankments and Drainage, we wanted to criticise the establishment under these items, but we were told very definitely that the establishment for these works can be criticised under 41, Civil Works, because, for the first time, on account of some mysterious accounts change, these establishments had been brought under 41, Civil Works. There can be no doubt that the honourable member Mr. Swaminarayan wanted to reduce from the whole total demand under 41, Civil Works, whatever that may be, and for the moment, when he put down the proposal, he did not know that the Finance Department had mysteriously brought about this change. Therefore, I think it is only fair and reasonable, when we were prevented from discussing establishments at the time that 60 and 55, were being considered, that we should now be permitted to discuss the establishments under those items. The Sukkur Barrage is entirely a different matter, but I think we ought to be allowed to speak about the establishment under the heads 60 and 55, especially when we were prevented from doing so when we wanted, because we were told that we could discuss them when the establishment under 41 Civil Works was being discussed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : May I just point out to honourable members that on page 23 they have been informed that the total demand of Rs. 1,68,53,000 will be asked for. If any honourable member had given notice of a total lump sum reduction out of that amount he would be perfectly entitled to deal with the whole subject under the rulings which have been repeatedly given. But no honourable member seems to have given notice of a lump sum reduction out of the total demand. Each member seems to have taken part of the whole sum of Rs. 1,68,00,000, and suggested a lump sum reduction in that part ; all the motions are for lump sum reductions out of the Rs. 1,04,00,000 or Rs. 1,17,00,000. There is not a single motion as far as I can see, which calls for a reduction of the total demand. If there was such a motion, they would be perfectly entitled to discuss it in full. On the motions of which they have given notice they can discuss all the items comprised in the total amount which they wish to reduce. I cannot help it if honourable members have not given notice.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : May I just say a few words? We have been discussing for some time now establishments under irrigation. My honourable friend the Deputy President moved a motion regarding the Right Bank, the Left Bank, and the Chief Engineer, which appears on the same page. If the honourable member Mr. Saptarshi will look at page 30—the demand that has been moved under 41—he will find Deccan Irrigation coming in there. If he had moved any one of those reductions or the total demand which he will find on page 41, and just as my honourable friend the Deputy President moved his motion, then he could have touched the subject of Deccan Irrigation. If he will look at page 41, just as my honourable friend the Deputy President picked out three of those heads, had he given notice of a similar motion, he could have discussed Deccan Irrigation staff and establishments. Unfortunately the figure which he picked out was for the department under my honourable friend the Minister.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI : The mistake has arisen because the statements have been put in such a misleading manner.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I quite appreciate it, and sympathise with the honourable member, but I have got to regulate the procedure according to the rules, and I can only allow honourable members to address the House on the motions that are before them.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI : I am going to make a general remark, and that is that the establishment on the Public Works Department in this presidency is excessive. The honourable member the P. W. D. Secretary told us some time ago that the cost of this establishment works out at 20 per cent., that is to say, for Rs. 5 spent over works, Re. 1 is spent on the establishment. That statement was made in this House.

Now, Sir, I have totalled up the estimated cost of all the works budgetted for under 60, 55, 41, 15 and XIII, and I find that it comes to 2 crores and 40 lakhs of rupees nearly. This includes all the works that are to be carried out by the Public Works Department with the exception of the barrage because it is a special work. I have taken all the works under 60, 55, 41, 15 and XIII. They amount to 2 crores 40 lakhs. But if you see the establishment on page 41, Civil Works, it is 101 lakhs 47 thousand, out of which only 27 lakhs and odd is for the barrage. The balance comes to 74 lakhs odd. This works out to 30 per cent. cost of the establishment. This seems to me, to be a very high percentage on the cost of the works that are to be carried out in this presidency. Therefore there is reason to suppose that a reduction of 10 lakhs on the works as well as the establishment is very reasonable indeed.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, if the Honourable Minister would refer to page 231 of the White Book he will find that in 1923-24 the expenditure on establishment was 15 lakhs and now it has risen to 33 lakhs while the total expenditure has arisen from 97 lakhs to 1 crore 17 lakhs. So while the total expenditure has not even doubled, the expenditure on establishment has more than doubled, and he will find it quite easy to curtail from the establishment and bring it in the same proportion as before and it is not a difficult job at all. Referring generally to the manner in which the specialist officers do their duty it is necessary that he may start by doing away with the consulting architect; as he is non-voted we cannot do that but he can. This consulting architect according to my view is putting up simply eye-sores, if one looks at the buildings that he has constructed. Look at the Royal Institute of Science, the Gateway of India, the General Post Office: they are not in keeping with the surrounding buildings and so do not look well. A layman like myself can form an opinion that they are bad designs. While we are spending lakhs of rupees on such huge buildings we must have some sense of proportion and when we are spending on scientific experts such huge amounts for their salaries we must subject them to a high test, and if you cannot find good people you can go to the mofussil for that matter and engage mistries from the mofussil. They do these things better. [Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmad: Mistries?] Yes, I have seen the works designed and constructed by mistries and they are better than those done by these highly paid architects. Many times preference was given to the plans prepared by our ordinary mistries drawing Rs. 50 and over to those prepared by engineers.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, once in support of this I may bring to the Honourable Minister's notice the standard of establishment laid by the public works department officers themselves before the retrenchment committee. I have got it here. They are the recommendations of the committee again based on the evidence of some superintending and executive engineers, none except the superintending engineer and chief secretary to Government, and the recommendation is that reduction by 30 per cent. of sub-divisions in the presidency, reduction by 35 per cent. of sub-divisions in Sind, producing a saving of 2 lakhs 99 thousand 9, in the Presidency and 90 thousand in Sind. Now as to the officers of the public works department, almost every one of them was of opinion that legitimate expenditure for establishment should be between 17 and 20 per cent. The expenditure calculated in 1922, came to much: higher figure and the rate of the statement made by the secretary, public works department, I still contend that the expenditure exceeds 25 per cent. of the establishment. The recommendations of the retrenchment committee were made on actual figures and actual amounts spent, and the recommendation is, Sir, that thirty per cent. in the presidency and twenty-five in Sind can be done away with. The orders of Government on these recommendations are :

[Mr. B. G. Pab. Tuesd

"As the existing sub-divisions are large in area no further reduction is possible without seriously impairing management of works. The chief engineer in Sind is absolutely necessary for proper supervision work."

Then there is a further sweeping declaration which I need not quote. In the presidency out of 2 lakhs 44 one-third has been removed. Then in Sind out of 90 thousand, 4 thousand 9 hundred has been removed and I may as well inform the Honourable Minister that so far as the presidency is concerned, in his own department after the retrenchment committee's report he has reinstated three big appointments in the Sanitary Department and the consulting surveyor's department. He can easily find that these appointments are included in the 35 lakhs for special departments, 117 of which you are seeking a reduction includes the expert department, the electrical engineer, the consulting engineer, according to the figure shown by the honourable member at page 44 and these relate to all departments. And then I may remind the Honourable Minister that though this reduction was made in 1922, yet three of the appointments have been put back in the budget after 1922, they are higher appointments and therefore I will request the Honourable Minister in exactly the same way as I requested the Honourable the General Member to have retrenchment wherever it is possible in the public waste department and that if they put their shoulder to the wheel and if they listen to the reports which are on paper, recording a very good case, and not look to the grandiloquent reports of their subordinates, there is considerable possibility of saving over the establishments in the public works department.

MOULVI RAFI UDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : Sir, I was considerably confused and it is very difficult for a layman like myself to make up my mind. But when the honourable member Rao Saheb D.P. Desai thinks that mistries are better than the best engineers I cannot accept such a proposition. The honourable member, the Deputy President, is always harping upon his subject of retrenchment and he has nothing but the report of that committee in his brains and he has not convinced me with his arguments.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN (Ahmedabad District) : Money, Sir, is thrown away. Last year in the revised estimate Government made a pro rata reduction in the expenditure of the department of their own accord. This year they have not done so. Therefore, it is desirable that they of their own accord should work out the expenditure and make suitable reduction of their own accord. What I propose would be much less than what they should reduce out of 41, Civil Works, and if revenue is going to be wasted like this, nobody knows where we will be able to make any recovery to meet the deficit in the budget. Obviously it is desirable that the Honourable Minister should himself make a reasonable reduction in his demand. Ten lakhs is very reasonable.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, I thought there was an end to the misstatements of my honourable friend the Deputy President. But I find that his misstatements are endless. Just now he complained that after once reducing the establishment for the Consulting Surveyor and the Sanitary Engineer, I have again restored them. But I would refer the honourable House to the whole book of 41, Civil Works, and they will find that the Consulting Surveyor and the Sanitary Engineer do not appear there at all. It deals with different specialist officers. I remember that the Retrenchment Committee made a recommendation for the reduction of the establishment to the extent of a lakh of rupees or so in regard to the Consulting Architect, and I faithfully carried out that recommendation. If the honourable members refer to the budget they will see that the budget estimate for 1924-25 was Rs. 2,09,000 and for the ensuing year it has been reduced to Rs. 1,38,600.

Then, Sir, coming to my honourable friend who talked about the mistries, I do not think he could have been serious or that the House will take him seriously. So I do not think any word is necessary in reply to his argument.

My honourable friend from Karachi complained about the percentage charges. If we take the percentage on roads and buildings it is as clear as anything, and I can convince the House by facts and figures, that they do not cost us more than 14 or 15 per cent.

As regards the total reduction, the honourable mover asks the House to stultify itself. Now, this demand is composed of 50 lakhs for repairs, which was fully discussed, and the motion for reduction was thrown out by this House. Then there were a number of motions for reduction of provision for new works. There was also a motion for reduction of 25 lakhs by the Deputy President.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : I did not move it.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : That means that the honourable member, the Deputy President, did not feel that he had a good case in regard to it. Then several items have been passed, and I know that this House is always jealous of its own decisions, and I am sure they will not stultify themselves and will refuse to vote for the motion for reduction.

Question put to and lost.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Council will now adjourn to 2 p.m. to-morrow, Tuesday, the 10th March 1925.

Tuesday, the 10th March 1925.

The Council re-assembled at the Town Hall, Bombay, at 2 p.m., on Tuesday, the 10th March 1925, the Honourable the President, Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA, K.C.S.I., O.I.E., presiding.

WOODS, Mr. E. E.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. I have received three applications for my consent to ask for leave for moving an adjournment motion to consider the report of the Reforms Enquiry Committee; the first is from the honourable member Mr. Nariman, the second from the honourable member Mr. R. G. Pradhan, and the third from the honourable member Mr. Jayakar. I should like to know which honourable member wishes to move the adjournment motion as three cannot obviously do so. I will give my consent if these honourable members agree as to who should move it.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN: Sir, as the leader of the Swaraj party has already given notice of the motion, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN: I am willing to withdraw my motion in favour of Mr. Jayakar.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Then, I will call upon Mr. Jayakar to ask the House for leave to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, "the highly unsatisfactory nature of the majority report of the Reforms Enquiry Committee".

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): Sir, I beg to ask the leave of this House to make a motion for the adjournment of the business of the Council for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, to call the attention of the House to the highly unsatisfactory nature of the majority report of the Reforms Enquiry Committee.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Does any honourable member object. (After a pause.) As no honourable member objects, the leave is granted, and the motion will be taken up at 4 o'clock. The House will adjourn for tea at half-past three.

Demands for grants.

(Discussion on demands for grants resumed.)

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I beg to move

Reduce by Rs. 10,38,200 provision for Barrage establishment (Rs. 28,86,300) shown on page 3, P. W. D. Civil Estimates.

I wish to confine my remarks to the reduction of the barrage establishment for which motions have been given by another honourable member from Sind, Mr. Khuhro. It is in order to have a discussion of this matter and in order to know the intentions of Government in this matter once for all, that I rise to move the reduction of this grant. The establishment for the barrage forms a part of the project that was framed by this Government, submitted to the Government of India and sanctioned by the Secretary of State for India in 1920. The project estimates were prepared by the executive engineer Mr. Musto and subsequently checked and controlled—these are the words “checked and controlled”—by the Chief Engineer, Sind, Mr. (now Sir) Frederick Gebbie. The Government of India in sending the compilation to the Secretary of State for India made a special mention of this. On page 2 of their despatch they state :

“Mr. Gebbie, C.I.E., Chief Engineer, Bombay, and formerly Chief Engineer, Sind, has throughout most ably controlled the preparation of the project in its engineering aspects. Finally, Mr. A. A. Musto, Executive Engineer, who has been responsible for the detailed preparation of the project, has shown an ability and capacity for work which cannot be too highly commended. He has dealt in great detail with all points arising in connection with the project and has, we consider, fully justified his selection for this important duty.”

This is the statement with which the Government of India sent the papers to the Secretary of State. The facts and figures prepared by Mr. Musto under the able guidance and control of Sir Frederick Gebbie, who was the Secretary of the Public Works Department here in Bombay, were sent to the Secretary of State for India, and those facts and figures contain 15,81 lakhs, not 16,07 lakhs that was found in the estimates prepared by Mr. Musto, and the Government of India further recommended that additional provision of 2,55 lakhs should be made in the estimates against the rise in prices of plant and steel in England during the next nine or ten years. This margin of 2,55 lakhs was for the rise in price of steel and plant in England : it had nothing to do with any increase under establishment. The original estimates framed by Mr. Musto, in which establishment and every conceivable thing were put in, were for 16,07 lakhs. It was an estimate made purposely liberal enough and it had to be curtailed afterwards to 15,81 lakhs. I am taking my stand upon this estimate prepared by Mr. Musto under the able control and check which I expect from Sir Frederick Gebbie, who was then Secretary of the Public Works Department. Now, these estimates were sanctioned by the Secretary of State for India in June 1923 ; when this Council sanctioned the scheme unanimously it had before it the figures both about establishment and about plant, as also about other things necessary for the Barrage. The figure, placed before this honourable House by the Honourable the General Member, Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, were 18,36 lakhs. It was on those figures that the House was induced to sanction the estimates. They were led to sanction the estimates on the figures placed before them preparatory to the meeting. Those figures form part of the 5th volume. The establishment figures are shown separately. The establishment during the preliminary year was Rs. 4,21,000 ; during the first year, Rs. 15,10,336 ; second year Rs. 19,10,336 ; third year, which will be the next year, Rs. 29,18,336. So that according to the estimate.....

Mr. C. S. O. HARRISON : We are asking money for the next year. The preliminary year was the first year ; this is the first construction year for which we are asking money. I may point out to the honourable member that we have had budget sanctioned for the preliminary year and this budget is for the first construction year 1925-26.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Perhaps that will bring me to the first year, which is going to end by 31st March 1925. I am also moving in the same lines. The year that will end by March 1926 is the second year of the project.

We shall have to proceed on the original estimates on the strength of which the Council sanctioned the works. In July 1923, the Government of Bombay in the Public Works Department issued a resolution, according to which the administrative staff required was three superintending engineers and one chief engineer. This resolution was issued by the whole Government sitting including the present Honourable Finance Member. After this resolution was issued, I find no other Government Resolution. What we have got is that in the very first year 1923-24, the Government employs one Chief Engineer and five superintending engineers with establishment in proportion with a number of executive engineers and temporary engineers. In the present year we have got an increased number of 13 executive engineers and 50 temporary engineers in the budget. I now put it to you, Sir, whether it is fair that, after placing these estimates before the Council, after the Council has sanctioned those estimates and after the Government have actually fixed the staff as one chief engineer and three superintending engineers, Government should come before the Council and ask them for a demand of 28 lakhs for the establishment charges when the amount provided for in the original estimate is only 19 lakhs. I therefore request the Council to exercise proper control even at the initial stages of the scheme so that we may not be landed in the same difficulties as those of the Bombay Development, where the original estimate of 9 to 10 crores has increased to 27 crores. If the Council desires that the estimate of the Sukkur Barrage also should be allowed to go from 18 to 40 crores, then they are welcome to sanction any amount the Government demands. But when the barrage was first sanctioned the honourable the Chief Engineer who was then the important speaker distinctly gave the House to understand that these estimates would not be exceeded. They are mere words of encouragement which are forgotten as years roll on. He assured the Council in the following words. With regard to possible fears felt by other engineers, he said :

"We have no such tricky conditions in Sind. Rock, which, as I have said, is one of our enemies, may cost us ten times as much as earth and we do not meet with it in Sind. In Sind we have no rock or unknown and greatly varying conditions to face when excavating canals. We have also in the Deccan other causes that lead to excesses over estimates, such as heavy rainfall and unexpected floods. I speak feelingly as I have myself had this experience of excesses by heavy rainfall falling when we least expected it. It is not so in Sind. There is practically no rainfall in Sind."

Coming to the Sukkur Barrage estimate, he said :

"We feel satisfied after some study and then we begin to see further difficulties and we have to re-study it again. I claim, Sir, that the engineers who framed the designs and estimates of this great work have exhaustively considered every problem that human mind can possibly conceive as likely to arise during construction. Years of thought have been expended and I claim that we have before us an estimate as carefully and as soundly prepared as that of any of the great engineering works that have been undertaken by man. I ask you, Sir, and the House to accept as safe the estimates for the barrage and canals."

That was the estimate prepared by Sir F. Gebbie, Mr. Musto and the honourable member the Chief Engineer himself. The Council must compel Government to stick to those figures. Year after year we have been told that more establishment is necessary and the charges are going up and yet we are consoled that at the end of 12 years the total estimate will not be exceeded. I know the honourable the Chief Engineer will refer to the note of Sir F. Gebbie, and I reserve my remarks with regard to that till my turn for the reply comes.

But so far, Sir, as his own binding is concerned, his own care of the estimate is concerned, we find a strong commitment, a definite commitment in the letter that was addressed to the Secretary of State for India by this Government through the Government of India, and we proceed, Sir, now in the way in which the establishment is working in the barrage. What do you find in the barrage? There are already five executive engineers working there and a sixth is going to be appointed. We have a number of executive engineers, and assistant engineers, and upper subordinates are few, and if you go to the spot you will find that all the estimates are taken and lot of other work is done by the assistant engineers; and executive engineers are doing the very duties which assistants could safely do; and the superintending engineers are simply checking the estimates prepared by the executive engineers. That is all the work they have to do. The work that any trained executive engineer would have done is done by the superintending engineers. In this connexion I wish to bring to the notice of this Council that the opinion of Sir F. Gebbie on that point has to be taken with considerable importance because, while preparing these estimates which were placed before the Council he had occasion to go—that fact is mentioned in the Government of Bombay's despatches—into all this. With full knowledge of the requirements of Sind and the barrage the sanction to the estimates was given. He knew Punjab as well as Sind. Both Sir F. Gebbie and Mr. Musto prepared the estimates for the establishment with full knowledge. Therefore I submit that looking to the estimates prepared, looking to the report of Sir Gebbie, according to which only three superintending engineers were required there is no reason to increase the establishment this year whatever work it may be. Therefore, I submit that this House will give a cut of 10 lakhs to the 28 lakhs that has been brought for sanction before this Council.

Question proposed.

Mr. L. J. MOUNTFORD: Sir, I must admit that I am somewhat surprised at the character of this discussion. We have tabled here many motions to reduce expenditure on the Sukkur Barrage and I find Sind members suggesting cuts which however they have not pressed, cuts of 45 and 47 lakhs, and I find the honourable member for Western Sind, Non-Mahomedan rural area, now proposing to cut down the establishment of the Sukkur Barrage by over 10 lakhs.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Sir, I rise to a point of order. The honourable member, the Commissioner, C. D., is referring to the cuts of 45 lakhs and 47 lakhs which have already been disposed of.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: They were on the agenda paper and the honourable member the Commissioner, C. D., is simply making a passing reference to them.

Mr. L. J. MOUNTFORD: Now the honourable member for Western Sind, non-Mahomedan rural area, has proposed a cut in the establishment of the Sukkur Barrage of over 10 lakhs. The establishment required to carry out expert work of this kind must, I consider, Sir, be left to the expert as long as he keeps within the sanctioned estimates. I think we might say by way of simile that if he were to require 5 yoke of oxen to plough a deep furrow through a very heavy soil in a given time he should be allowed to use five yoke of oxen. I remember once on tour while passing through Karad in the Satara district I saw a ploughman using ten oxen to his plough and it struck me that possibly he would be able to plough just as well with four yoke of oxen. I was not a ploughman any more than my honourable friend is an engineer, but suppose I went to the man and discussed the necessity of the ten oxen that he was using for the plough in the very heavy black soil of the village of Umbraj: He would have told me he wanted five yoke of oxen to do his job. Supposing I had said to him, I knowing nothing about the necessity of this particular soil that what he really wanted is four yoke of oxen, what would have been his reply? He would have said assuming he was polite and did not make the obvious rejoinder, that if you reduce the number of my oxen, not only shall I be driving a less deep furrow, than I am driving at present, but it will take me much longer to do my job and my field will not be thoroughly ploughed, and possibly some of the oxen may strain themselves and I shall suffer a heavy loss and shall have to buy a new lot of cattle. Therefore I appeal to this House on the same lines not to cut down the cattle that the Chief Engineer, Sukkur Barrage, thinks necessary to drive his very heavy furrow that he has been directed by the House to plough, this heavy furrow which he has undertaken to finish within a certain time, which he has been told to plough as deep and as early as possible with every foresight and care.

Now, the reduction of over 10 lakhs as proposed will of course mean delay if not serious hindrance of the work on the Sukkur Barrage. It will be really a very serious cut. It is not a nominal figure which is proposed when an honourable member desires to draw attention to some error in policy. It is a serious cut which will have only one result, namely, hampering of this great work, one of the biggest works of its time in the world and one on which depends the future destinies of the province of Sind. Besides this Barrage, there are very great works now projected in the Punjab which when completed affect the flow of the Indus to a great extent especially when the river is falling. Here I ask the attention of my honourable friend from Kaira to the fact that it is not when the river is flowing fully that we feel the effect, but at a time when the river level is falling that we feel any reduction in our level very acutely, and if these Punjab works are completed as they surely will be, and we have no Sukkur Barrage, we shall lose four annas of our supply of water, and the level will fall until Zemindars will not be able to raise the magnificent crops which we expect the barrage to supply. The Zemindars of Sind have still in their recollection the disastrous inundation of 1923, when the river level kept low. We all know how in August 1923 their crops were saved in a most providential manner by a most timely though a most rare rainfall, which gave them 2 inches for Upper Sind and thereby just saved their rice crop. These are facts, Sir, however, which we cannot always look upon as likely to be repeated. Rain does not often fall in Sind. Therefore, the canals must be provided with ample water, except in your very biggest years, and these big years, as you know, have not been of frequent occurrence.

Now, if a policy is objected to, it is usual to propose a nominal cut of, say, Rs. 100 or Rs. 1,000 and so on. That is the custom in the other place to which an honourable member alluded, namely, in the Mother of Parliaments. I do think, Sir, that a paralysing cut like Rs. 10 lakhs and odd, merely for the purpose of objecting to a policy, would never have been supported in any House of representatives either in Europe or in the United States of America. Therefore, assuming that this House is noted for its wisdom, sobriety and commonsense, honourable members can come to only one conclusion, and that is that the honourable member for Western Sind desires to destroy and annihilate the Sukkur Barrage.

Now, let us consider how this work proceeded. First of all, at a special session of this Council in June 1923 you decided that the Sukkur Barrage was absolutely essential for the good of the province of Sind and, incidentally, for this Presidency. Remember that the Punjab draws its main revenue from irrigation. You have got a vast mine of wealth in Sind which you can tap by the Barrage, and as you will gain by it—you members from Sind and those whom you represent here, so will the whole Presidency, so will all India, nay, so will all the world gain by such a mighty scheme as this which will bring 6½ million (6,529,705) acres under cultivation. For this great scheme the engineers are called upon to carry out the work. The details have been worked out, and revised and revised again over a very long period of time. They were not worked out with ill-considered haste; they were worked out with due deliberation and care, and the Chief Engineer was then directed to propose the establishment to Government with which it would be necessary to carry out this great work. His proposal was then duly scrutinised and finally decided upon. But the establishment which the Chief Engineer has asked has been condemned already by the highest authority in India on irrigation as not being adequate. That highest authority on irrigation is Sir Frederick Gebbie, and if the honourable member for Karachi will bear with me for a while, he said:

"If the necessary additional establishment is provided all the plans and estimates should be completed and sanctioned during the next hot weather and construction should be in full progress by the beginning of October."

He goes further and says:

"The Rohri Canal is in the most advanced stage and the completion of estimates is now being delayed for want of establishment."

I do not want Sir, to take the time of the House any longer on the question of establishment. There is no doubt that Sir Frederick Gebbie considers that unless the fullest staff is provided we shall not be able to keep up our scheduled time. And supposing we do not keep our scheduled time, what will be our loss year after year? We should lose tens of lakhs of rupees, apart from the fact that the zemindar would lose the magnificent crop which he will get from these canals. Meanwhile a bad year like 1918 or like 1923 might supervene. If that happens you would go on your knees and pray Government to double or treble or even quadruple your staff. Therefore rather do everything you can to accelerate the progress of these works, put in the adequate staff to finish them in time. I should say to this House—and I say so in all seriousness—that the mandate that they should give to the Chief Engineer should be rather to increase the establishment and to try and complete the barrage a year or even two years earlier and to tell him: “If necessary, double your present establishment if that is essential and we will vote the money gladly, we will vote the money willingly”. We want to get on with this work, which would be impossible if year after year the establishment is criticised, is cut down, and the necessary funds are not voted. The issue is very plain: Do you or do you not want the barrage as quickly as possible? There would be only one answer to that. Such a procedure as to cut down the establishment which the experts say is necessary has no parallel outside India. There the custom is to go carefully through the account of costs and to give a free hand to the engineer within the cost that it has been decided will be necessary, in order to carry out the project that the House has once accepted. The cost of the establishment that is now budgetted is considered by the Chief Engineer to be necessary. That is a matter wholly and solely for expert opinion and it is for you to see that it is supplied. We are told by honourable members that the barrage is necessary. Well, then, let us get on with it. Let us see that the required number of officers are given. As regards the officers who have to work there, it is quite possible for officers to work overtime for a period. It is not possible to work overtime for many years. It spells breakdown; it also spells unsatisfactory work. Each man on the establishment must have a full time job, but not more than a full time job, and in Upper Sind we cannot strain a man to breaking point. It is possible, in the first beginning, while work on the various sections is being planned and all establishment is being collected, that the full amount of work cannot immediately be worked up to, until the whole machine is running in full swing. In a big machine the wheels begin to turn slowly, then faster as it slowly gathers way and then finally at full revolutions and full power. If the same thing occurs in the case of this big machine, it is not to be wondered at. The officers have to learn their work and, having learned it, they must settle down to their work in Sind with the knowledge they have gained, for if they leave other officers must come along and learn the work all over again and slow down the wheels of this gigantic machine while they gain the experience, which will enable them to work the machine once more with full power.

My advice to the House is not to do anything which will hinder the smooth working of this machine. The establishment that the Chief Engineer considers necessary for the working of this machine has been held by the most experienced authority on irrigation in India as being inadequate. It is not excessive. Those honourable members who vote for this motion of reduction are voting against the Sukkur Barrage. They are declaring that they are against the execution of this work. They are destroying the province of Sind, and I would urge the honourable member (Mr. Pahalajani) therefore to withdraw his motion. If anything in the policy or the appointments is, in his opinion, open to criticism—and all sincere and just criticism will be welcomed cordially—then the real way, the only recognised constitutional procedure is to propose a nominal cut to draw attention to the grievance. It is not fair, it is not just, it is not consistent to approve of the Sukkur Barrage on the one hand, and, on the other, to vote for a cut which will make the execution of this mighty work impossible.

[Mr. L. J. Mountford]

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON: Sir, the Deputy President sets himself up as a champion of economy in all directions. But, Sir, it seems to me that he wants to usurp the position of others. From the speeches which he has made here, it would appear that he was almost the only member in this House who wanted to occupy the position of the guardian of the public purse. But, Sir, I would like him to give some credit to others for their efforts. I think he has on the contrary, throughout his speech, done all he can to discredit the efforts that I have so far made to establish economy in this great work which I have been ordered to supervise. Well, Sir, I resent that as a personal matter, and I deny that as a matter of truth.

The Deputy President has made out in the preliminary part of his speech that the barrage sanctioned estimates provided for a certain sum of money each year for establishment. I thought I had made it very plain a few days ago, when the question of the works was raised, and when I described what an estimate was in the eyes of Government and in the eyes of ordinary commonsense men of this world. I pointed out that an officer is put on to work up an estimate and he then has to make a programme which, to the best of his ability, he considers possible to carry out. He then works out the cost of the different heads under the scheme, and finally he comes to his financial forecast. It is necessary for him to try and approximate expenditure for each year of the project to arrive at a sum which he can set off against incoming revenues when the project becomes revenue earning. This is exactly what is being done in this project. But, Sir, the Deputy President touches on the matter again, which I am surprised at, in view of what I said about the subject before. It is very simple for anybody to see that these annual figures were not matters of detailed calculation in the project report. We have for the first year Rs. 21 lakhs; for the second year Rs. 15,21,336—please watch these 336; in the third year Rs. 19,10,336; and in the fourth year Rs. 29,18,336. This estimate has been worked up so accurately to the last rupee on establishment. I submit, Sir, that it is absolutely evident that certain figures divided by a certain number of years give the common figure of 336 right through. It is pretty obvious how those figures were arrived at. They occur, I think, in one or two more years. I am speaking from memory, but these are not the detailed calculations for each year. Having been entrusted with this scheme, I have planned out what is to be done during the current year and during next year. In the beginning of this scheme, as the Commissioner, Central Division, has just stated, we have to start a gigantic machine. I was wrong in the first year in the total amount of money I required, I was wrong in the second year. The balance not required has been returned to Government; it has been in no way squandered. The honourable member, the Deputy President, raised this question last year, and he said that after hearing the words that fell from my lips he was prepared to withdraw his motion for reduction. The point was, Sir, that I had estimated for a certain figure; I found that that figure was unnecessary.....

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Sir, is it in order for the honourable member to disclose in this House any private conversations that I might have had with him? I have not the slightest objection to his doing so, but I shall have to disclose conversations as well.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON: This is on the records of this House. I informed this House that I had made an over-estimate—I think it was 26 lakhs—in the first year, and that I had returned to Government Rs. 11 lakhs out of the 26 lakhs, as I found that the establishment was not required according to the requirements of the work. It is not a question of a private conversation; it was raised in this House, and on the strength of that statement, I think the Deputy President informed the House that he would withdraw his motion for reduction. Last year I admitted that I had over-estimated my requirements. We are but human, and I had to start a gigantic machine going, but each year as we go on, we know nearer and nearer what our figures are going to be. If you will glance through the budget, you will see that had I really proposed this extravagance that has been laid upon me by the Deputy President, the figure would not have been Rs. 28 lakhs that has been provided for the next budget, but something like Rs. 45 lakhs, because last year we asked for Rs. 38 lakhs, and the project has to go on expanding. I found that I was able to return Rs. 20 lakhs to Government, and Rs. 20 lakhs have been returned unspent. I have worked out this year my requirements, and they are nearer to what the possibilities are going to be, because each year as we go along, we get more experience of actuals.

I now come to the next point. The Deputy President, I submit, Sir, has—I hope not directly—misled this House. He has referred to a Government Resolution as having been passed in July last by Government. In that Resolution he says Government considered the matter and sanctioned only one Chief Engineer and three Superintending Engineers, and he gave the circles which were in their charge. I should like to inform the House that those were never placed before this House nor sanctioned by Government in the form read out by the Deputy President. I have before me the Resolution. It is dated 11th July and its number is S. 50-I of 1923. In that Resolution there is sanction for one Chief Engineer and six superintending engineers, and every detail of those charges is given in full in this Resolution which has been misquoted by the Deputy President to this House. Notes have been taken and the G. R. has been misquoted, and he has pointed out that there have been three superintending engineers sanctioned. There have been six sanctioned but only five have been appointed. I wrote in to Government, and pointed out that I did not think it was necessary to appoint the sixth at present, as I wanted to see how the works would progress, and delayed the appointment of the sixth until the necessities of the work demanded such an appointment. Government agreed to my proposal, and at the present moment five out of the six superintending engineers that were sanctioned are now at work. I would like the House to bear this point in mind, because I consider it a direct misleading statement which was made by the Deputy President.

The Deputy President then went back to the records of this House and referred to the debate of June 1923. He read out to the House a part of the speech that I had made in which I expressed my hopes as regards the safety of these estimates. I stand here now, Sir, and repeat that I still have those hopes. I have had nearly 2 years' opportunities since that time to look into the estimates, and I am more satisfied now than I was then that we have every hope of carrying out this great scheme within the sanctioned amount. I do not withdraw one word of what I uttered in 1923, and I repeat that with my subsequent experience I substantiate it.

The Honourable the Deputy President further says that the superintending engineers have no work. He practically accuses the Chief Engineer of having misled Government to appoint unnecessary superintending engineers, and he says that the superintending engineers sit down and do what we call computing work; simply check the estimates prepared by the executive and assistant engineers. These were his very words: "The superintending engineers are simply doing the checking of estimates." Sir, I deny that statement. It is not true and it is highly misleading. The superintending engineers have a very great amount of work to look to. They are responsible to me, as I am responsible to Government and this House, for the accurate working out of the technical details of this work. The superintending engineers are not mere computers. We can get computers to carry out the arithmetical checking of estimates for Rs. 60 or Rs. 100. The superintending engineers certainly have to scrutinise the estimates; they have to scrutinise them and see that the executive engineers have not been extravagant. I submit, Sir, that that statement of the honourable the Deputy President is not true, and his other remarks are directly misleading.

Sir, the Deputy President has forestalled what comparisons we are likely to make as regards the Sukkur Barrage and the Sutlej Valley projects, and rightly so, because he knows, and I feel absolutely certain that he knows, that if we have to compare the establishment on the Sukkur Barrage with any other we are bound to look to a neighbouring province which has almost exactly the same conditions. The point that the Deputy President did not state is what the Punjab, a neighbouring province, has in the way of establishment. I should like to inform the House that for a project which is two-thirds or three-quarters of our project, they have, I learn, an establishment of nine superintending engineers, of which seven are already appointed, and I understand the eighth is to be appointed this next month, that is nine against our six, or rather against our five. (An Honourable Member: Would you like to have nine?). I do not consider it necessary. I have worked out to the best of my ability that six will be sufficient. If I find I am wrong I shall have to go to Government and say I was wrong. But, Sir, if I am extravagant the Chief Engineer of the Punjab has committed a much graver crime than I have, but his province does not seem to reject his demands and cast him to the wolves: he receives the support of the Punjab Council when he goes before it for his grants, and there is no question raised that his establishment should be cut down. In fact I understand that they may be increasing it very soon. I have asked for a total of 29 executive engineers, who will be in charge of divisions and a thirtieth is my personal assistant. Against these 29 executive engineers we have appointed 17 so far and there are still 12 vacancies left against the number of divisions sanctioned by Government and these 12 vacancies will, I can assure this House, not be filled until there are imperative demands that they shall be filled. That is the situation so far as I can see.

The honourable member the Deputy President tries to bring in Sir Frederick Gebbie, and he stated that because Sir Frederick was an officer concerned with the project his report must cloak us in order to save his face. Sir Frederick was asked to make a final report on leaving India, and he consequently came and saw how this work was being carried out. Sir Frederick Gebbie went into all the details; he was for a fortnight with me. He asked me to call some of the officers and he met some superintending and executive engineers. I may inform the House that an executive engineer, an Indian, told Sir Frederick Gebbie that he 'could not stick it'—those were the very words. He told him "I have too much work here; I want to go back to the presidency." He was asked why and he said that he was working at very great stress, that he had to consider piles of estimates. With regard to the question of further establishment, I have issued strict orders that in all cases of increase in establishments a case has to be made out by the officer first of all requiring that establishment, this has to be checked by his superior officers, and checked by the superintending engineer. In every single instance a case has to be made out and the establishment required can only be engaged if that case is made out to my satisfaction and I sanction it. These are the facts which I wish to place before this honourable House.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): I do not know, Sir, whether the honourable member the Commissioner studied the condition of the cultivator while he was travelling in the steamer Jhelum while in Sind or in some other part of the country. But when he began to dogmatise as an expert on the lines we should adopt in this matter of establishment, I was rather surprised. The honourable the Chief Engineer told us that during the current year, if I understood him right, he would save 20 lakhs from the establishment charges. If that is so, the honourable the Deputy President is not asking for too much in wishing him to cut down 10 lakhs in advance. Instead of retrenching 20 lakhs at the end of the year it would be more graceful if the Chief Engineer retrenched 10 lakhs in advance.

Turning now, Sir, to the merits of the case, I find that out of the total provision of 2,83 lakhs for works, 1,30 lakhs is for tools and plant, which leaves about 1,50 lakhs for the works proper. That means about 30 lakhs for each superintending engineer, which seems to me to be a very small amount of work to be done by a superintending engineer in one year. We must remember the fact that in the original estimates, as pointed out by the Honourable the Deputy President, only provision for three Superintending Engineers was made for the second year. These estimates were prepared by engineers and a definite provision for so many engineers was made; the provision was not a lump sum one, stated by the honourable the Chief Engineer. We will therefore oppose this grant.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, my feeling when the honourable member the Commissioner spoke was one of amusement. Unfortunately, I had studied the figures, and he had not. I do not understand whether it is the theory of the honourable member the Commissioner that it is not the duty of this House to glance over the figures that are presented to us by the honourable member the Chief Engineer of the barrage, but accept them as absolutely correct. It appears that according to his opinion any interference with those figures will be the ruin of the barrage. But, Sir, the one answer that I expected has not been forthcoming, and that is an answer to my question whether the framers of the estimates that were placed before this House when they gave their sanction to the scheme were not correct. The honourable member the Chief Engineer has not answered that question. Those estimates had been made minutely by men of the capacity of Mr. Musto, who has got commendation at the hands of the Government of India, and of Sir Frederick Gebbie, who is taken as an authority at present and was taken as an authority even before. Those two officers prepared those estimates and they gave us definitely what the scheme would cost year after year. Are they experts or not? Or are they as ignorant as myself. I say these estimates were prepared with considerable care and this is apparent from the fact that each of these volumes contains the number of superintending engineers, the executive engineers, the assistant engineers, the number of clerks, the number of superintendents of offices that will be required for this work—including even the Bhistis and peons. They relate to Barrage proper. All the five volumes are to be found in the library and each of which gives the number of all sorts of officials required for the works. With meticulous care these estimates had been prepared. Are we to be told now that the present Chief Engineer is a greater expert than any of them in estimating the requirements of the works? I never based my proposal for reduction on my opinion but on the opinion of those experts. Sir Frederick Gebbie says in the last portion of his letter :

“There will be excesses under certain heads but these will be more than covered by savings under other heads except in the case of ‘steel work’ ‘machinery’ ‘tools and plant’ and ‘establishment’ for the barrage itself. The excesses on the first three are well within the special provision of 255 lakhs made by the Government of India and I think the cost of establishment has been over-estimated in the detailed estimate now under preparation. The cost of establishment has been taken as a percentage of the cost of ‘works’ and as the latter has gone up, owing to the increased price of steel machinery, etc., the cost of establishment has gone up correspondingly, but because the cost of, say, a dredger is twice what it was originally estimated to be it does not follow that the cost of the establishment required to run it will also be doubled. If an estimate is made of the establishment which will actually be required, I think it will be found that this charge can be reduced considerably.....”

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON : It was a revised recapitulation submitted to Government. It was purely on a percentage basis.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : That was a percentage basis. Then the real estimate was not placed before the House, and the real figures were not placed before the House? Sir, at the present moment we are to be guided and should be guided by the opinion of the experts, who have worked out in detail the whole estimate. If the honourable the Chief Engineer reads the letter from which I just now quoted he will find it stated there that at the initial stage the number of superintending engineers required would be three and not five. I was not making a wrong statement and if the honourable member the Chief Engineer refers to paragraph 14 he will find that my statement is correct. Now, the work has not passed the preliminary stage. When he said that he handed back to Government 20 lakhs of rupees, I referred to the figures to find out the amount referred to by him. I find in the last year's estimate, the amount demanded was 35 lakhs and what was returned was only 9 lakhs. That was the figure that was given to us yesterday by the honourable member the Secretary, P. W. D.

Mr. C. S. C. HARRISON : The figure referred to by the honourable member the Deputy President was the return up to September last. The figure I quoted was received 6 days ago. The honourable member can take it from me that I am speaking the truth.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : I certainly trust the honourable member and trust the figures placed by the Honourable the Finance Member. If the honourable member the Chief Engineer had returned 20 lakhs for the last year, then it will be very easy for him to return 10 lakhs in the coming year. If we are to understand that in future the figures that are placed before the Council for the carrying through of any scheme are not to be depended upon and they are only mere eye-wash, we do not know what that future will bring in its train. Every year the honourable member the Commissioner for the Southern Division is warning us that we will be ruining the barrage and hindering its smooth working. I wish to point out to him that it is the function of this Council to compel Government to stick to the figures given by experts who investigated into the details of the whole work the results of which are contained in these five volumes.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: You said, Sir, that the debate ought to be over by 3-30, but I think that I will not be able to finish my remarks by that time:

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Honourable the General Member has referred to the suggestion I made to him, and it is therefore desirable to point out that under the time allotted for the discussion of the budget, it is laid down by the rules that not more than two days will be allowed for the discussion of one demand. The discussion on this demand started at 4-54 on Saturday and the two days will be up at 4-54 to-day. In consequence of the adjournment motion the House will adjourn at 3-30, and the question will arise when do those two days expire. I therefore appealed to the honourable member that as this is the last item under this demand, and the honourable mover was replying, it would be very desirable if the Honourable the General Member, when he rises to reply, to be brief, so that the House could proceed to vote before adjournment at 3-30. This would avoid the difficulty of considering whether the discussion of this item could be prolonged till to-morrow and the one hour and 24 minutes that will remain could be allowed then. That was the reason why I appealed to the Honourable the General Member to bear that fact in mind, when he gets up to reply.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: I only say, Sir, that this is the 12 years' estimate and Government propose to finish it in 12 years and it is by these estimates that the Government ought to rise or fall.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Sir, it was very kind of you to have warned me that I would have a very short time to reply to the accusations made by my honourable friend the Deputy President, but I had hoped that you would have warned the Deputy President also.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I stated the facts for the benefit of the whole House.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Now, Sir, never before in this House have I heard a responsible honourable member get up and quote a resolution passed by government; tell us what that resolution contained and give us its specific terms, and when the resolution is produced find that it is exactly contrary to what the honourable member informed the House.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Sir, may I be allowed to correct myself.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: I cannot allow that interruption. Every honourable member who is present is a witness to the fact that the honourable member the Deputy President got up and quoted a resolution of July 1924 and informed this House that under that resolution government had decided to appoint three superintending engineers and he found in the budget that they were appointing five or six. That was the statement made. I can state that the resolution was settled in the time of my predecessor, but sanctioned after I joined Government. The resolution clearly states the staff that is to be engaged. The honourable member now states that he meant three superintending engineers for the preliminary work. He distinctly said that we are not carrying out the resolution, and I will ask the house whether they will tolerate an honourable member mis-quoting a resolution to the extent done on the present occasion. Never in my experience have I found an honourable member so mis-quoting a resolution in order to mislead the House.

Engin.

[Mr. Cowasji Jehangir]

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : Sir, on a personal explanation—

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : I cannot allow an interruption—

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I cannot exclude a personal explanation when a serious charge is made against the statement of an honourable member.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : I distinctly said, Sir, at the commencement that in the preliminary investigation that was the sanction. I read the last words.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : The Deputy President said nothing of the sort. Now Mr. President a great point has been made of the project estimates, and the Deputy President said that the chief engineer had not explained them. I do not know how any honourable member can explain the position more clearly. He went into the details, gave figures and he also informed this House that when they trusted Government and budgetted for an establishment of 38 lakhs last year, Government spent exactly what was necessary and refunded the balance. We cannot exactly calculate what work can be done because the work depends upon so many factors ; it depends upon machinery that has to be imported, it depends upon many other factors ; if those calculations turn out to be wrong much less establishment will be employed. But if all goes well and if we can work according to our programme, the chief engineer has calculated that he will require this establishment.

The one point I would like honourable members to really consider is whether they want Government to do the work as quickly as possible, and whether when they budget for a certain amount the House should call for an explanation why that amount is not spent ; because, what does it show ? that the work has not progressed as quickly as was anticipated. That is what Government call upon their officers to explain. Unless Government received a satisfactory answer to such questions they call upon the chief engineer to explain why he budgetted for 38 lakhs and spent only 18 lakhs. The explanation submitted to Government was satisfactory. Factors arose over which he had no control. The honourable member the Deputy President wants to-day to reduce the grant by 10 lakhs. Does the Deputy President mean to say that the chief engineer and Government are deliberately asking this House for 10 lakhs extra, knowing that they will not spend it ? We hope to spend it, we hope to be able to employ this establishment, we hope the work will progress. If new factors arise and the work does not progress, we are prepared to give this House an explanation as to why the work did not progress as was anticipated. I would just remind this House that one of the engineers—Mr. Musto—who worked out the project report is still employed under Government, I will refer also to the other engineer Mr. Gebbie, now Sir Frederic Gebbie. He also was responsible for this project. We have got the opinion of Sir Frederic, we have printed and placed it on the table of the House, I have quoted it once, it was quoted by the honourable member the Commissioner, Central Division, when he said that if you do not give more establishment the work won't progress. His one complaint is that we have economised in the establishment. The chief engineer did it at the request of Government. The consulting engineer went into what the executive engineers were doing. He asked them what staff they were engaging and he came to that deliberate conclusion that more staff was required. Notwithstanding this what does the Deputy President say. He says it is special pleading. I am not a lawyer but there are many honourable members who are lawyers, and I know that when they cannot meet an argument they call it special pleading. Mr. Musto is also responsible for the barrage establishment. He is still the Superintending Engineer for the Barrage Circle. I do not wish to occupy the time of the House any more, but I do hope that this honourable House will trust Government as they did last year, and we shall do our best to see that not a rupee is spent unnecessarily. And may I, Sir, since an attack, a more or less veiled attack, has been made upon the chief engineer, take this opportunity of expressing the confidence Government have in the chief engineer. They feel confident, from what they have seen personally, that as far as the expenditure on the barrage is concerned, he has done and he is doing his very best, because he has got a thorough grip over the whole department, and I feel confident that if he errs at all, he will err on the side of practising more economy than it is wise rather than on the side of extravagance. But I repeat that the honourable House need not be afraid of extravagance, and we hope that we shall not exceed the project estimates. We have got a fair margin, and we feel confident that, when the work is over, we shall be able to show that our total estimates are not exceeded.

Motion to reduce productive provision under II Establishment (Rs. 28,86,300) by Rs. 10,38,200 was put to the vote and declared lost.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : I ask for a division.

(The division bell was then rung and honourable members who were not in the hall at the time came in.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Order, order. In order that all the honourable members who have arrived for the division may know the position, I should like to inform them that the motion before the House is that of the honourable member the Deputy President, who desires that the total provision for establishment on the Sukkur Barrage, namely, Rs. 28,86,300, should be reduced by Rs. 10,38,200. In order to save the time of the Council, I propose on this occasion to take the division in a different manner, namely, I will ask honourable members who are in favour of the motion to rise in their seats, and after counting them, I will call upon those who are against the motion to do the same.

Engu.

[The President]

The result indicated that 30 members were in favour of the motion and 40 against it. The motion was accordingly declared lost.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, I now move that a total demand of Rs. 1,67,40,320 be granted.

Question put and carried.

(After recess.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Order, order. I call upon the honourable the leader of the Swaraj party to move his motion for adjournment. I should like.....

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Before the motion is moved, Sir, I should like to explain briefly our position in the matter. I think it is due in courtesy to my honourable friend opposite. I desire, Sir, to explain at the outset the position of the official benches in this matter. We desire in no way to hinder a full discussion of this important subject by all non-official members and parties in this House. But at the same time it is not possible for us officially to intervene. Perhaps, Sir, it is hardly necessary, as our opinions have been printed in full in the appendices to the report. It would be improper for us, Sir, at this stage to offer further opinions unsolicited on a report by a committee appointed not by us but by the Government of India, to report not to us but to the Government of India, on matters not within our own jurisdiction but within that of the Government of India and of the Secretary of State.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Before I call upon the honourable member to move the motion for adjournment, I should like to draw the attention of the honourable House once again to the fact that under the Standing Orders a time limit of 15 minutes is imposed for every speaker.

As the discussion must conclude at 6 o'clock it is my intention to restrict every speaker to 15 minutes. I hope each honourable member who addresses the House will try not to take the full 15 minutes, in order to enable a larger number of speakers to address the House.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University) : Mr. President, I rise to move the adjournment of this House in order to direct its attention to a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the extremely unsatisfactory nature of the recommendations made in the majority report of the Reforms Committee. Having regard to the short time at my disposal, I shall be very brief in my remarks. I do hope, however, that my brevity will not detract in any way from the importance of the question before us. I feel that the merits of this question are so obvious that I need not make a long speech in order to make them apparent to my honourable friends.

[Mr. M. R. Jayakar]

Sir, the report has been out for the last 24 hours. During that interval I have had the chance of discussing it with many members of this House and the people outside. I have, however, not found many persons who have much to say in support of the recommendations of the majority. I shall briefly submit for the acceptance of this House a few tests by which we can judge of the merits of these recommendations, and I have no doubt that, judged by any of these tests, the recommendations of the majority will be found deplorably deficient and inadequate. We may ask ourselves, "do these recommendations advance the popular cause? Do they give more control to the legislatures over the power or finances of the executive Government? Do these recommendations confer more power upon the Ministers as regards their own departments or the services which administer them." And fourthly, the most important of all such tests, we may ask the question, do these recommendations in any way advance the cause of provincial autonomy by obliterating the artificial distinction between the Transferred and Reserved Departments? Do they bring about a greater approximation between these two departments, with the view that eventually this mischievous distinction may be absolutely obliterated. Take any of these three or four tests which an ordinary layman, not necessarily a politician, will apply towards the consideration of these recommendations, and I venture to say that these recommendations will be found hopelessly unsatisfactory. I shall avoid the use of strong expressions, because it is my purpose not only to appeal to the Swaraj party, but to all the non-official benches. I therefore recognise the responsibility of presenting my case in as moderate, persuasive and non-controversial a manner as I can command on this occasion. If I had to address a House consisting of the members of my party only, I would have perhaps proceeded to use much stronger expressions than I propose to do in the course of my speech. I know the limitations of my task, that I have to take with me non-official members who do not belong to my school of thought, but whose co-operation I desire to have in this debate. I shall therefore be restrained in my temper and language and make the theme as non-controversial as possible. What is it that the majority of the committee recommend? First of all, if we turn to the pages of the report, which some of us have had the chance of reading—I hope, Sir, you are counting time from five minutes past four.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member will not get more than 15 minutes.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: I will not trespass even by one minute upon your indulgence. There is no good case which cannot be presented within 15 minutes. I have a right and just case, and 15 minutes are in no way inadequate for its presentation.

As I was saying, we may take the pages of this report, and glance through them as I have had the chance of doing. Time after time, one feels, Sir, that the one solicitude which the majority of the committee had in view—if the opposite benches will permit me to say so without any unpleasantness—for the power, prestige and emoluments of the "steel frame,"

[Mr. M. R. Jayakar]

That is the first thing that strikes one throughout the report. They begin by stating what is axiomatic and what no responsible politician has ever denied so far as I am aware—viz., the necessity of a contented Civil Service. Whoever denied that necessity? But the question depends on what “contentment” means, and what are the limits of such contentment. That the majority do not lay down. On what principles the contentment of the services is to be served, and their greed and ambitions regulated, or their position reconciled with advancing popular rights; we do not find any trace of a solution of these questions. I find further that the majority go on to make what is a highly partisan statement, that unjust criticisms have been levelled at the Civil Service, and, that it has suffered great annoyance. I will take the liberty of saying, Sir, that those members of the Civil Service who joined the majority forgot for the moment that they were serving there, not as advocates of the Civil Service, paid out of the public funds to protect the honour and prestige of the Civil Service, but were there in the committee, for the moment, as judges between the conflicting claims of the popular cause and the executive Government. But the enthusiasm of their advocacy for the Civil Service knows no bounds, and they have gone further and opined that much of this criticism is introduced out of a race bias, which is to be condemned. Sir, I feel that such language is out of place in a report claiming to proceed from an impartial commission charged with the solemn duty of holding the balance even between the Civil Service on the one hand and popular rights on the other? I may say, Sir, that I regard this as a flagrant instance of partisanship, and deserving of severe condemnation.

Now, coming to the transfer of subjects from the Reserved Departments to the Ministers, I say, the result is very disappointing. The House will vouch what expectations this Reforms Committee caused when it was appointed. Of course, men like me, belonging to the Swaraj party, knew what was coming on. We therefore refused to participate in the functions of this committee—either to become members of this committee, or to give it any assistance. Many of my friends, however, e.g., my honourable friend from Nasik who will follow me in a few minutes, gave the committee every co-operation. Some of them worked on this committee, others went and gave evidence before it, in order to help the committee to arrive at a proper decision. But what do the majority of the committee find? What subjects do they propose to transfer? People expected that excepting “law and order”—that much abused duality that perplexes politicians—the other subjects would be recommended for transfer, at least in a province like Bombay. But what do they suggest should be transferred? First of all, they begin by an expression of opinion which, I will take the liberty of calling, pontifical. They say that any transfer of subjects is open to great difficulties, because the relative fields of taxation and legislation will have to be determined between the Central and the Provincial Governments. May I ask if the Devolution Rules and other rules of a similar nature have not already attempted this? Is it an impossible task, or even beyond the scope of our ingenuity and wisdom? It will have to be done some day, and the sooner it is done, the better. Then they say that the Central Government will have to employ its own agents to administer and enforce its decrees, but are not the Government of India already doing it, e.g., in the case of the income tax? All these heavy and sombre pontifical statements are merely for frightening people and creating difficulties. And I can warn my honourable friends that the majority report surrounds the transference of power with so many difficulties that unless the popular voice asserts itself and protests are sent up from place to place, my fear is that there will be no further transfer of any important subject for a long time to come. I am told that His Excellency the Viceroy has his view corresponding with the minority. I do hope it is true. I will go further and say that if the views maintained in the majority report prevail at Westminster, then there is no hope, for British connection in this country and it is only a question of time, how soon India will be lost to the British Empire.

Then, Sir, coming to the transfer—I do not wish to excite the humour of my honourable friends—but the position is nothing short of burlesque. What do they transfer? They again begin by another pontifical statement; that transfers should be made without disturbing the balance of the constitution and without affecting the basis upon which stable government depends. I thought, on reading this quintessence of sapience, that we were coming to something like transferring the police or an equally important matter, which would affect the liberties of the people. But what do they transfer after this wise preface? “Boilers and gas” (Laughter), “Fisheries” and “Forests”. My honourable friend opposite who is in charge of Forests will, I am sure, join me, in sympathy. “Fisheries,”—i.e., catching fish. The ministers are worthy of nothing better, say the majority! “Housing of Labour”—is this to stir up trouble between capital and labour? “Land acquisition”, but again caution, “consult the local governments and then act”. “Provincial Law Reports”—what a revolutionary topic—but even there consult the High Court first. “Stationery and Stores”—what a magnificent responsibility. Even there, caution, for imported stationery and stores, “consult the Secretary of State before taking any incautious step.” And lastly, “Provincial Government Presses”, which my honourable friend (the General Member) manages at present,—examine the question before taking any incautious step. I have now exhausted the whole list of recommendations about transfer. That is all we get. More gas, more boilers, more fish catching, etc. India is fit for nothing better in the opinion of the majority. A whole mountain was in labour.... I will not proceed to quote the whole proverb.

But this is not all. The House will not omit to notice that there are some retrograde suggestions in the majority report. What do they say? “The presidents of the legislative bodies should be immune from High Court jurisdiction”. My attention inevitably turns to Bengal, and I will say that the committee were too much obsessed by the experience of Bengal. To talk in these days of curtailing the jurisdiction of the High Courts in any direction is moonshine. The presidents may not be touched by the High Courts. And why not? I know, Sir, that so long as you are presiding over our deliberations, there is not much risk in this Council, but I cannot say whether your successor will be equally sagacious and wise. It is absurd to think of depriving the High Courts of their jurisdiction over the presidents of legislative bodies. Then, the Secretary of State's control is to be slackened, but not simultaneously with any increase of the legislature's control. I can quite understand that. But legislative control is in no way to be enlarged and yet the Secretary of State's control is to be slackened. In what? In "Indian subjects". I challenge any of my honourable friends opposite to define what are "Indian subjects". Everything is "Indian" which goes on in India. Can we conceive of non-Indian subjects in India? To remove ambiguity, we will want a definition clause, as the lawyers require an interpretation clause, as to what are Indian subjects. Then the Governor's control over Ministers is to be made strict and definite, and he is to be permitted to interfere with the decrees of my honourable friends opposite, the Ministers, if they choose to be obstructive or refractory, on the spacious plea of preventing "unfair discrimination between classes and interests" and protecting "minorities". What clever devices are these to usurp power and authority! What splendid phrase mongering! "Protection of minorities" indeed;—another name for "divide and misrule"! Further, if the reserved departments require interference with transferred departments the Governor can interfere. And lastly for the sake of "the interests of the members of the permanent services" the pet topic of the British Government in India. Everywhere it is the one absorbing hallucination, the permanent services. The majority go on further to state—and I want honourable members to note this—I will quote the exact words "we agree that the services should be protected in the exercise of their functions and in the enjoyment of their recognised rights and privileges." They began with the services and end with the services. It is the one refrain of the dismal song. I therefore, Sir, take the liberty of saying that this report, on which so much public money has been spent, so much public energy wasted, on which so many good men have served, is intended primarily to give greater power to the Civil Service. It does not at all lay the foundations of popular rule, even in this province. Having regard to the advanced nature of our presidency, I had expected better treatment, at least from our own Government. But it is surprising, Sir, that the Bombay Government themselves in a somewhat unfortunate moment opine that provincial autonomy is a "drastic" experiment. Mark the adjective, Sir. Are my honourable friends opposite not aware that as late as 1918, 1919, an amiable Governor of this province was prepared to recommend that immediate provincial autonomy should be given to this province? Have my honourable friends in the Government forgotten that? I must, however, take this opportunity of congratulating the Indian members of the Government on the courageous way in which they presented the case for provincial autonomy. May I hope that in the struggle for popular right, the same attitude of courage and frankness will characterise their demeanour in future. But the other members of the Government in their wisdom say that our electorates are not ready. They say :

[Mr. M. R. Jayakar]

"The electorate has yet to learn the importance of returning representatives with a real sense of political responsibility for the welfare of the various peoples of this presidency."

They go on to add that until this lesson is learned by the electorates, the present arrangement should be continued. I ask my honourable friends who are responsible for this wise caution, how we are going to learn that lesson by continuing the present farce? Every one realises what this House is. As we have sat here from day to day, one thing has become more and more obvious, viz., the absolute impossibility of making any important advance towards progress. I am sure that this has been realised by my honourable friends opposite as much as on this side. I am convinced that all our work here is pure waste of labour so far as actual progress is concerned, except perhaps that we gradually build up an "opposition" worthy of the name. Hence, I am surprised to see that some members of Government desire a continuance of this present arrangement, under which an official bloc, a communal bloc, an opposition bloc and an obstructive bloc, are all huddled up together, causing a babel of noises, but no progress. My official friends desire to continue the torture, until the electorate learn to send representatives with a real sense of political responsibility. But how will the electorate learn wisdom from this farce? I should have thought, Sir, that in the interests of good government every one wished that this arrangement should terminate as early as possible, and should not continue one minute longer than necessary. But the wise Government of Bombay desire that the present arrangement should continue, apparently because they hope that we would exhaust ourselves by our mutual jealousies, quarrels and recriminations, and thereby postpone the day of our real freedom. With these words, I ask my honourable friends to pass this motion.

Question proposed.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN (Nasik District): Sir, I rise to support the motion for adjournment, and fully associate myself with the sentiment of condemnation, which has been given expression to by the leader of Swaraj party, of the majority report of the Reforms Enquiry Committee. He rightly said that I was one of those who co-operated with the Reforms Enquiry Committee and tendered evidence before that committee. But when I tendered evidence I never expected that the labours of that committee would be as satisfactory as some of us had hoped. My hope entirely lay in the struggle which I hoped the minority, Sir Taj Bahadur Sapru and his colleagues, would make in vindication of our demand for further constitutional advance. Most of the honourable members must have closely watched the proceedings of the Reforms Enquiry Committee and the non-official evidence must have been read by all honourable members of this House. The non-official evidence that was tendered before that committee was almost unanimous in favour of a system of provincial government approximating to full provincial responsible government. If I were to express in terms of the greatest common measure the evidence presented before the committee, I may say that that evidence strongly urged the transfer of all departments except law and order.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD : Why except ?

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN : When we turn to the recommendations of the committee we find that the majority report is not only strongly opposed to the establishment of full responsible government but also opposed to the transfer of such subjects as land revenue. With regard to land revenue, as honourable members must have noticed, it lays down the principle that it should not be transferred so long as law and order is not transferred. The Montagu-Chelmsford report recommended that land revenue should be transferred when the franchise is broadened and when the masses are sufficiently represented in the local legislatures. In other words, that report contemplated the possibility of land revenue being transferred before law and order was transferred. But this committee was not satisfied with the recommendations made in the Montagu-Chelmsford report and it goes further and says that land revenue should be transferred only when law and order can be transferred. Can anybody deny that it is a reactionary proposal ? This is one example of the various reactionary proposals which the majority report contains. I will not tire the patience of the House by referring to all the proposals but when I consider those recommendations I am reminded of the language used by the Honourable the Finance Member in this House a few days ago, and to repeat it. The majority of the Reforms Enquiry Committee "have seen not, have heard not, they have steeled their heart". I am almost tempted to say that they have drugged their conscience. Does Government seriously think, or if our voice reaches the British Parliament and the British democracy, do they seriously think that our political hunger can in any way be satisfied with the petty suggestions that the majority of the committee have made ? Our political hunger has grown and it cannot be satisfied till full responsible government is established. It is impossible that our agitation will cease, and our parties will co-operate with Government in carrying on the administration, until and unless in the near future full responsible government is established. In that way alone can our political aspiration be satisfied. But the majority of the Reforms Enquiry Committee have flouted public opinion and public sentiment and have contented themselves with making these petty recommendations. Let me assure Government that the committee are wrong in thinking that the political problem of India can be solved by such petty recommendations. The time has come when the problem must be courageously faced. Instead of making these petty recommendations, which are not worth the paper on which they are printed and which should be thrown into the waste paper basket, the problem of the political future of India should have been faced in a statesmanlike spirit, in such a way as to satisfy our political hunger for full responsible government. I do hope that the protest we are making here against the recommendations of the majority of the committee will receive the attention which it deserves. Let us all strengthen the hands of the minority. They have clearly expressed the popular point of view from which this question should be approached. Let us strengthen their hands; and I sincerely hope that the British Parliament and the Secretary of State will accept the minority report and thereby, make the path of co-operation between the Government and the people smoother.

MOULVI RAFI UDDIN AHMAD (Central Division): Mr. President, I must congratulate the honourable leader of the Swaraj party for his very non-controversial speech and the indignant protest he has made with regard to the majority report. Sir, I carefully listened to him but I never heard a single sentence from his lips with regard to the minority report. Is he satisfied with the minority report.....

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: It is outside the terms of my motion.

MOULVI RAFI UDDIN AHMAD: It may be so, still one would like to know whether the honourable member or his party is or is not satisfied with the report of the minority to find out the nature of their demand. So far as I am concerned, I will say that mere tinkering of the machinery either by way of the majority or minority report will not do. I do say that self-government must come and is bound to come. I may mention in passing that it does not lie in the mouth of the party which wants to destroy all reforms, which considers it a proud day when the diarchy comes to an end, to pass remarks about the machinery of reforms and say that this majority report is unsatisfactory.

I rather sympathise with the speech of the honourable member Mr. Pradhan who, we all know, is ploughing his lonely furrow of liberalism in this Council. Sir, with regard to further growth of the constitution I say that we must all combine and face the great difficulties in the way. It must depend upon the members of this Council and all parties here to come forward to unite in order to prepare themselves for an advance. I must say there are many difficulties in the way. But if we all unite, I do not think it will take long for the Government of India to grant the concession we ask for. But mere tinkering of the machinery will not do. I do associate myself with my honourable friend on my right in congratulating the honourable Indian members of the Executive Council on the manner in which they have come forward to express their opinion. If we want to attain full autonomy, the great difficulty in our way is the absence of unity among Hindus and Mahomedans. We must take steps to bring about a pact between the Hindus and Mahomedans adjusting their differences; then is the time for asking for full autonomy. Therefore, while sympathising with the honourable member the leader of the Swaraj party and while sympathising with my honourable friend Mr. Pradhan, I do say that the mere tinkering of the machinery will alone not do.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, after going through this document which was issued yesterday the impression that is created upon the mind of the reader is one of dissatisfaction. Sir, there are various grounds why one should be dissatisfied. Take for instance the Meston award. Every one in this House knows how serious the wrong under which we are suffering is. On account of the great loss suffered by us in the income tax revenue we have been crippled in our resources. We cannot make further progress. We feel the need of revenue, and still the majority is, I may say, quite callous about the iniquities of that award. What do they say? They say:

"We consider also that it is probable that an adequate revision will have to await a considerable improvement in the finances of the central government and that therefore the settlement should be revised as soon as favourable opportunity occurs."

Sir, what are the implications of this statement? They admit that the settlement is not what it should be. But simply in order that the Government of India may not suffer, they say when suitable opportunity offers then only let an opportunity be taken. I say that if severe injustice is being suffered by many of the presidencies, is it not right that this Reforms Inquiry Committee should have come forward and stated that the first thing that the Government ought to do is to bring about an equitable settlement whereby even the central revenues as well as the provincial revenues will not suffer and the provincial governments will be entitled to carry on their programme of progress unhampered. In this respect I think the minority report is far more sympathetic and far more just. What does the minority say? They say:

"In any case we are firmly of the opinion that as early as possible an opportunity should be taken to put provincial finances on a sound footing without which we think the development of provinces must continue to be retarded."

Sir, in this you will find that the minority report is far more sensible and sympathetic than the majority report.

Then, turning to the transferred and reserved heads what do we find. We find that the progress made by this report is almost no progress. The suggested transfer of the heads will really add no more to the responsibility of the popular side of this House and it does not even meet the demand made by the representatives of this presidency who had gone there to give evidence. I must explain my own view. I was for a limited diarchy. I did not want, I was not satisfied with, diarchy as a transitional stage. I was quite aware that diarchy is not what we require. I was aware of the state of affairs and the feelings between the communities, and therefore with the reservation of law and justice and finances I was for transferring all other subjects from the reserved to the transferred head. But, Sir, though that was my position, even this very modest demand was not conceded. Our presidency is in a very unique position. We are very advanced, and in the Bombay Presidency the people I can see, are certainly quite capable of managing their affairs—of course the communal feeling will have to be taken into account—but barring that I can say even to-day that the people themselves are quite competent to manage their own affairs, and therefore if we can come to a certain understanding between all the communities, and if provisional autonomy is given to Bombay to-day no much harm will ensue. Therefore, the recommendation even on this point both by the majority and the minority is certainly very unsatisfactory and I hope that the Government of India will not pay any attention to it.

[Mr. A. N. Surve]

Then coming to the position of Ministers themselves, Sir, under section 52 the Ministers are mere advisers and the Governor is to take up their advice if there is no sufficient cause to depart from it. As to that I say that the Ministers should be given more power than they actually enjoy under the present wording of the section. Because if the Ministers are exposed to an adverse vote or say a vote of censure on the part of the non-official side then they are placed in a very false position. Because we know that the Governor has the option of overruling their suggestion, and therefore they are to be very cautious in making their recommendations and at the same time the non-official benches are always ready to find fault with the Ministers. This is a very anomalous position and it is but necessary that more power ought to be given to the Ministers.

Then lastly the terms of reference given to this committee were very narrow and were not wide enough to include any valuable suggestion. I have just stated that our presidency has several grievances, for instance, the Meston award and the ministerial responsibility and other points. Therefore it is but necessary that the Government of India should recommend that India should not be kept waiting till 1929, but that a royal commission should be issued with powers to re-examine these questions and suggest remedies. With these words I support the motion.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Sir, I rise to support the motion on behalf of the non-Brahmin party. Sir, the majority report of the Muddiman Reforms Inquiry Committee has failed to satisfy any school of political thought in this country. It was not a few alterations in the rules or changes in the procedure of the Government of India Act that was expected in this country from this committee.

The country has been expressing unequivocally its dissatisfaction with the existing provisions of the Government of India Act. When the reforms were first announced about five years ago, they were accepted by some and rejected by others. But, Sir, even those who accepted the reforms expressed their intention to the effect that the country should work out the reforms and should simultaneously agitate to obtain more reforms and in this spirit the reforms were worked out in India in the first three years. Then, the agitation for more reforms took a more defined shape, and that led to the appointment of the Muddiman Committee.

Sir, the majority has, by its report, deeply dissatisfied all the parties in India. The majority has not recommended or suggested any improvement in the position or the power of the Ministers. There is not to be any improvement in the present political condition of the country. They have not suggested any further transference of power to the people. There is no recommendation in the report for the abolition of the transferred and the reserved departments. Sir, the popular demand was for the grant of full provincial autonomy. The people demanded insistently that full responsible government should be established in this country. Instead of satisfying the aspirations of the people of India, the majority have made a farce of concessions in such paltry matters as fisheries, printing, etc. Instead of correcting the most inequitable Meston award, the majority has indulged in a pious desire that the provincial contributions should be gradually wiped out as financial circumstances would permit. Sir, this is a most unsatisfactory state of affairs. The pace of the political progress in this country is not in any way intended to be accelerated by the majority report. The political position of this country is not to be raised at all by the adoption of the views of the majority of this committee.

This Presidency is the most advanced of all the presidencies in India. It is politically the most advanced province, it is industrially the most advanced province, in the whole of India, and I shall not be wrong if I say that India came to be regarded as one of the eight industrial countries in the world on account of the industrial development which this province has built up. So every one at least in this Presidency expected that the Reforms Inquiry Committee would at least recommend the grant of full provincial autonomy for this Presidency. Sir, as the majority report has failed to satisfy the aspirations of Indians of any school of political thought in this country, I join wholeheartedly in the indignant protest made by the honourable member the leader of the Swaraj party against the majority report. Though I entirely differ from him with regard to his views as to the necessity of communal representation....

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: I never said a word about communal representation.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI: Of course, he has not expressly said so, but....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member has got to accept the contradiction of the honourable leader of the Swaraj party.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI: All right, Sir, I now understand and accept that he did not mean that the necessity of communal representation does not exist.

In conclusion, I have to say, Sir, that the reforms were intended only to serve a transitional period and I submit to this House that that transitional period is fast disappearing and has almost disappeared. I may say that it has already passed away. And so the reforms which were intended and meant to be in force only for the transitional period should now give place to further reforms and a further advance—a notable advance—must be made in the form of grant of provincial autonomy to provinces and in the form of grant of full responsible Government to the whole country.

With these words, I say again that I join in the indignant protest made by the honourable leader of the Swaraj party against the majority report of the Muddiman Reforms Inquiry Committee.

Mr. D. R. PATIL (East Khandesh District): Sir, the Reforms Inquiry Committee's majority report is a very sad document to read. The Committee has consumed nearly Rs. 44,000 out of the public funds and we expected a lot of reforms from that committee. But what did we get?

[Mr. D. R. Patil]

If we read the reforms suggested by that committee, we find nothing but disappointment. Sir, the whole attitude of the majority report seems to prolong the life of dyarchy. We know the working of this dyarchy. We know, in this House when we discuss votable and non-votable items, all the difficulties of this dyarchy. We are often told "you can't touch these items or those items because they were non-votable". So, unless we get the death of this dyarchy, I do not think we will be able to do much good to the people whom we have come here to represent. Sir, it is a matter of great gratification to me that the Indian Members of the Bombay Government were frank enough to opine that full autonomy should be immediately given to the provincial Governments—to the provinces. If we look to the various opinions given before the Reforms Inquiry Committee, we find that the majority or almost all Indians are in favour of provincial autonomy. However, I can quote one instance, of Sir B. C. Mahtab Bahadur of Burdwan. I was very much surprised to read his views about dyarchy. What does he say? He says "The realisation of full responsible Government must eventually be gradual in India and so no sane person can claim otherwise." I do not know whether he has got the monopoly of sanity. Mr. President, one of the grounds for not allowing more reforms is that there are communal differences. Sir, communal differences are bound to exist till the end of the world, I can assure the House, and if that was so, were the Government going to postpone the granting of the reforms till the end of the world. We shall settle our communal differences, but let us in the meantime be united in asking for more reforms which we urgently want. Now, Sir, I take the case of land revenue. That is a reserved subject. Agriculturists give a lot of income by way of land revenue to the Government. So, unless and until that subject is made a transferred subject and Government make it a point that a substantial portion of the land revenue is spent for the amelioration of the agriculturists, how can the lot of the agriculturists be improved? The whole difficulty arises on account of the nasty dyarchy.

Now, Sir, I like to quote the instance of one Governor in Council, of the United Provinces. He is a European gentleman. What does he say? He says "Dyarchy is a cumbrous, complex and confusing system having no logical basis". Here is a Governor of one province who says dyarchy is a very bad system, and besides we have got sad experience of dyarchy in this very House. So unless and until this dyarchy is ended, I do not think that we shall be able to do any real good to the people for whom we have come here.

Rao Sahab D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Mr. President, I find that the report of the Muddiman Committee is rather disappointing. We in Bombay had expected that complete provincial autonomy would be given to us, especially because, as the leader of the Swaraj party stated, the Governor of Bombay in 1919 recommended provincial autonomy for this presidency. Unfortunately, even in the year 1925 we are not considered fit to enjoy full provincial autonomy. But the Reforms Committee, while not recommending provincial autonomy, recommends some subjects for transfer for this presidency, and among them I find boilers and gas. These are the only two matters of any importance which we are considered fit to manage. It is a direct insult to this House that, after all, these two matters are to be transferred to this side of the House, and if those subjects were transferred, I personally would consider it a disgrace and not accept such a transfer at all. We require provincial autonomy, not merely to enjoy powers, but to adjust the administration of the country to the actual condition of the people, and for that purpose, if for nothing else, provincial autonomy is absolutely necessary. Again, dyarchy, as has been so well stated by other members, has proved quite a failure; and my experience for the last four years has taught me that it is a failure. If we consider the position of our Ministers, who are supposed to be responsible to this House, who on this side of the House will say that these Ministers are really responsible to this House? The Ministers are not responsible to this House, but they are, if I may use the term, a sort of decoy ducks, that is, ducks specially engaged to decoy members from this side of the House to the other side. Here, recommendation 20(b) proves that. The Secretary.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member does not seem to know the constitutional procedure in regard to Ministers and legislatures.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: So far as I can understand it, I take it in this light, that Government appoint from amongst our number some two or three as Ministers, in the hope that some members at least on this side will agree with the Government.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member does not seem to know the principles of constitutional government.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Again, Sir, the point that I made that in all cases of difference with their Secretaries, the Ministers' Secretaries had direct access to the Governor has been referred to in the recommendations of the Committee, and that principle has been perpetuated in the Muddiman Committee's recommendation No. 20(b). It is at present in force, and it is going to be perpetuated. My honourable friend from East Khandesh (Mr. D. R. Patil) stated that at least land revenue should be a transferred subject. In this connection, I must say that if land revenue is transferred, then I should think that much of the agrarian troubles to which this presidency is subject will be removed. In short I should think the sooner all the subjects are transferred in the case of this Presidency the better.

Mr. LALJI NARANJI (Indian Merchants' Chamber): Sir, the hopes and expectations of people other than ourselves always end in disappointment. We will be able to find the causes of this when we begin to analyse the origin of the British in India. The origin lies in the greed and the self-interest of certain British classes in India. I am saying this from one of the reports that I read in the past papers of England, where it is said that India is acquired by the ambition and self-interest not of Great Britain, but of certain British citizens and British classes; and that the whole structure of law, economics, finance and racial association in India is a monument to the greed and arrogance of the dominant race. Sir, the British Empire comprises one-fourth of the human race and out of that one-fourth one half is India. System by which India is held and governed as part of the Empire has nothing in common with the system prevailing in the group of free self determined Dominions. At present, the main question in world politics has become the relation of the people of America and Europe with those of Asia and Africa. The future of the British Empire as a model of the world state and its foundation depends on their being able to find out solution of this problem and on the treatment that is given to India, and to the place assigned to her in the assembly of empire. Now, when I said that hopes and expectations from others always end in disappointment, I was referring to those other interests which cause Great Britain to predominate their British interests in India at the sacrifice of the interests of this country. In this connection I would only refer to the statements made by two big personages, whose financial interests in this country are very great. One of those personages has declared in very clear terms, in business language and not in the language political or diplomatic, that “There were laudable aspirations on the part of the educated classes in India for a greater share in the government of the country, and though these might be met in course of time, he felt perfectly certain that nothing would ever be allowed to interfere with the supremacy of the British Raj in India.”

He concluded he had no fear as to the future of Britain's great dependency. Now, it is said on several occasions that India is treated as a partner in the Empire. Is there any intention of treating India as a partner, when the intentions are so clearly stated in the manner I have just mentioned? Another commercial magnate of Britain, in the House of Commons on March 3rd whose interests in India are very large, says in distinct commercial language: “We do not intend to get out of India, but intend to govern”. Now, Sir, with this definite policy, can you ever expect to get anything unless you help yourself? The only remedy, I believe, is that this country ought to help itself, and not depend on the reports of such committees, appointed by interests which are entirely and diametrically against us. With these words, I support the motion.

Mr. G. I. PATEL (Ahmedabad Millowners' Association): Sir, the report which is being discussed has to be viewed from two standpoints. The first is, what advantages we have derived under the present constitution, and secondly what further instalments are being offered to us in the majority report of the Reforms Committee. I think the honourable members of this House, from their experience so far gained have learnt that, under the present constitution, we have very limited powers, so far as the whole Government is concerned. The division of powers on the executive side and on the side of the Ministers is, on the very face of it, quite unsatisfactory. Secondly, the finances which are distributed according to the present constitution are quite inadequate to enable the demands made by the nation to be met. Looking from the view-point of the distribution of powers and the distribution of subjects, we find that, under the present constitution, we are unable to do anything when any popular rights are concerned. Now, the offer that has been made to us by the majority report is that there will be some transfer of some subjects from the executive side to the Ministerial side, and one of the subjects mentioned is one with which I am connected, namely, "boilers". I am very proud to say that we are now going to be transferred from the executive to the Ministerial side! The subjects like smoke- nuisance and gas, and boilers are to be discussed with Ministers and not with Executive Councillors. This instalment is to be now advanced, but it does not make up more than a camouflage of further powers. What do we find now so far as the resolutions of this House are concerned? Those resolutions of this House which are satisfactory from the point of view of Government are acted upon, but those which are not considered so are merely filed. The majority of the departments are reserved and certain departments only are transferred. But the finances of the transferred departments are placed in such a position that if progress has to be made the Ministers have to come forward with proposals for new taxes, and if non-official members refuse to raise those taxes, the blame is laid on the Ministers and non-officials. Sir, this is a clever manœuvre to get new taxes imposed upon the people on the plea of doing good to the general public through the Ministers. While the majority report recommends the transfer of boilers and gas and certain other minor subjects, it also recommends more restrictions on the present powers of the Ministers. So in toto, we find that instead of having a recommendation for the transfer of more powers, there is on the contrary a recommendation for greater restriction on the present powers also. Our present powers are only five per cent. of the whole field of constitutional Government and instead of our present powers being increased from 5 to 6 or 7 per cent. they are going to be curtailed to rather 3 per cent. Sir, this is the unfortunate position in which we are placed, and therefore to discuss the matter further will mean greater disappointment. In these circumstances I support the motion which has been moved by my honourable friend.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South): Sir, I was really disappointed when the Honourable the Leader of the House announced that Government are decided not to participate in the debate. I do not know whether any amount of persuasion or provocation will change their minds, because we want to know whether they still adhere to what they state in the report which they submitted to the committee, or whether they keep an open mind to feel convinced by the arguments advanced by this side of the House. During the last debate on the adjournment motion I was watching the whole proceedings as an amused spectator and did not participate in the debate. It was very amusing to find the honourable members of this Government finding fault with many honourable members of the Bengal Government, and I found the honourable members of the Madras Government blaming the members of this Government as great believers in the game of bluff. I find out that the Muddiman's muddle can be summed up in the well-known saying that it is a case of the pot calling the kettle black. To our mind the whole system is such that we cannot say that this Government or that Government is better, or this department or that department is at fault. As the honourable member for Poona has stated to us, it is not a case of tinkering with the machinery here and there. As he has already pointed out the Swaraj party did not touch the original reforms with a pair of tongs, and we will not touch even this report with a pair of tongs except with the object of destroying it by putting it in the fire. The very object of my standing here to-day and giving notice of this adjournment is not with a view to criticise either the majority report or the minority report, but to strongly protest against the statement made by this Government and submitted before the Reforms Committee which has been published for this country as well as for this honourable House. Although the authentic report of that statement is not before this honourable House, we find that statement published in the papers. The printed official report is not available in Bombay, but it is published in the papers.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member can only deal with what is published in the report itself.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN: It is published in the report, and this is the statement to which I take serious objection:

"The electorate has yet to learn the importance of returning representatives with a real sense of political responsibility for the welfare of the various peoples of this presidency. It will be practically impossible to proceed with further instalments until this lesson has been learnt."

There are many objectionable passages in that statement, but I am only pointing out one. You, Sir, have been very keen in maintaining the prestige and dignity of the whole House and of the individual members of this House. Whenever an insinuation is made by an honourable member on any side against another honourable member, then you at once call him to order and make him withdraw it. But here, Sir, is a wholesale and outrageous insult not only to the whole electorate but to all the honourable members of this House. It is stated, Sir, that we are here without any political responsibility and we are here without any solicitude for the welfare of the people, and until we learn that lesson we are not fit for any further progress and advance. That is written in black and white by the Government of Bombay and submitted to the Reforms Enquiry Committee. And the object, as I say, of my standing here, is to enter a most emphatic protest against a statement of that nature and to say at once that the want of political responsibility is on the other side, not on this side, of the House. If the honourable members who drafted this report had one-tenth of the responsibility to this country as they have to their own country, I am sure all the clamour in this country and all the need for repressive legislation will disappear. To charge honourable members on this side that we come without any political responsibility and without any regard for the welfare of the electorate or the people, is, I am sorry to say, a piece of arrogance which I do not think this part of the house will suffer without protest. Again, Sir, I may say that it is adding insult to injury. Our stand has all along been that if the rulers wish to state that they are the conquerors of the country and they want to rule over us, we have no objection to their saying so, but what we object to is their adding insult to that injury. Always, when we clamour for liberty, they put forward that we are not fit for Swaraj, because we have no political responsibility and we have no solicitude for the welfare of the people, and therefore the intervention of the foreign rule is necessary. That is what we object to. I do not think that anywhere else in the civilised world we have heard of instalments of political liberty for a nation. We have instalments of various other things; we have instalments of money decrees and we have instalments of liabilities. But whoever heard in the political emancipation of a nation of instalments of liberty? This is the first time we have heard that freedom is to be given in dribblets and instalments to one nation by another nation ruling 6,000 miles away. We are said to pass through a transitory stage. I say either we should be absolute slaves or we should be absolute free men. There is absolutely no middle course. This Reform Scheme, as it is put forward, is certainly the most clever political illusion that was ever invented by a statesman to put off giving liberty to the three hundred millions of this country. The real issue is side-tracked. The people are told that they are given more and more liberty, whereas in reality they are given nothing. This is but pure slavery and pure repression. I hope this House will stand as one man and say with me that to say that we have no sense of political responsibility is to make an irresponsible statement. I hope the House will protest against the charge laid that we have no concern for the welfare of the people. I do not wish to go into the details of the report, the majority report or the minority report. From the very beginning I have thought that this is not the way to gain political freedom. No amount of committees or commissions will give freedom to this country. It is quite natural. They have enjoyed for 150 years a position of power in this country, and we can understand that they will be most reluctant to part with that position. But let them say so. Do not let them throw the responsibility on this side of the House and say we are not fit.

With these words, I hope the House will take this opportunity of entering its emphatic protest against the statements of the Bombay Government.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I had not intended to take part in this debate, but at the same time I felt that I should not let go the occasion without expressing my opinion, which is, that this motion need not have been brought before this House. I do not oppose it because it does not lie in me to oppose it; but I do not sympathise with the expression of indignation against the majority of that committee for having come to that conclusion. The feeling of the people of this presidency and members of this Council ought to be one of amusement rather than of indignation, because never did I believe, nor many of the members on this side of the House—even the most optimistic like the honourable member, Mr. Pradhan—that anything would come out of this committee for extending the rights and privileges of the non-official side of the representative assemblies. The very terms of reference were against any such enquiry. The very examination and cross-examination of the witnesses indicated the attitude of the majority of the committee in the matter. Further, Sir, this country, this presidency, was fully prepared to receive the report which is now issued and which makes no advance, months before it came out. No honourable member on this side of this House had even a shadow of doubt that the report of the committee would be otherwise. We knew what would be the result. Therefore it is useless to express our indignation at a thing which we already expected. Though unwillingly I join the honourable member, I differ from him in that that he wants to express our feeling of indignation. Indignation is not the proper term. We must pity ourselves for the expectation and not worry ourselves for having got nothing until 1929. This report will naturally not appeal to any self-respecting Indian who loves his motherland. As the nature of the report was forestalled by every one, I do not think this Council should have gone to the extent of expressing indignation. It is not necessary that we should have taken this measure to express our feeling to higher authorities. This opinion of ours has been expressed not only in the public press, not only by the witnesses that appeared before this committee, not only by the members of the Swaraj party in and outside the Council in their utterances, but by the members of that committee itself, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and his colleagues who made no secret of their opinions as members of that committee. Under these circumstances, while I reluctantly join my honourable friend, in supporting the motion I must express the view that this need not have been brought before this House on the sole ground of our self-respect to express our feeling of indignation which should on the contrary be one of amusement.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): Sir, I have not much to say in reply except to thank the several honourable members of this House who have so well supported, with their convincing speeches, my motion for adjournment. While thanking them I must not, speaking for myself, omit to thank also the Government for the delicacy, which I fully appreciate, under which they have refrained from taking any hostile part in the debate on this motion. We have our quarrels with the Government; but, speaking for myself, I must say that so long as I have the lead of my party, it will not be found failing in courtesy on occasions when it is deserved. Let me convey to the Government my personal appreciation of their delicacy on this occasion.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I am obliged to the honourable member.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : With regard to one or two remarks which my honourable friend Mr. Rafiudin Ahmad made that we Swarajists had come to the Council to destroy diarchy, and that being our express object here, we ought not to waste our time in expressing our resentment with the report, I ask my honourable friend whether he too has not come here to end diarchy. I ask any honourable member whether he desires to prolong this experiment, under which we are habitually and perennially divided one against another. Who has not come here to destroy this system of strife and discord ? All have come here to end this miserable and farcical experiment under which our sympathies are divided, our interests are divided, our purse is divided ; in fact everything is divided. What has been the history of this House during the last year ? Every one who takes a dispassionate view of our position in this House—and I have had opportunities of discussing this matter with many members, even on the other side of the House, whose names I am not going to mention now—is of opinion that this experiment should be ended as soon as possible.

My honourable friend the Deputy President, who has for once differed from me, says that we should not express indignation but should feel amused over this miserable report. My answer is : Are we to be amused at a cost of Rs. 44,000, which amount, according to my honourable friend from Khandesh, represents the costs of this committee ? I am not sure whether his figure is correct, if so, I for one refuse to be amused at a cost of Rs. 44,000. I ask whether there is any member here who desires to be amused at such a cost ! I think that the feeling of every rational man should be one of resentment, because so much money, time and energy have been mis-spent. Did the country waste all this labour in order to get more boilers and gas ? Is there not already enough "gas" on this side of the House ?

There is one very important sentiment which was given expression to by my honourable friend for Khandesh (Mr. Patil). That is the true key note to a solution of all communal difficulties and I am very glad that he made that statement with all the courage he possesses. My honourable friend said that communal quarrels cannot end, that we have our communal quarrels, which will continue to the end of the world, and he went on further to say—a very true statement—but when we have power and responsibility, we shall settle these quarrels inter se, by sitting round a table and adjusting our differences. I give my entire allegiance to that sentiment. When we have power we shall settle these quarrels amongst ourselves—Brahmins and non-Brahmins, Moslems and Hindus,—but for wresting power from the hands of a powerful executive—I will not use the much abused word bureaucracy—a powerful executive, whose functions and privileges, and emoluments also, are safeguarded by this report ; I say that as against this strong executive, this side of the House ought not to know of any division at all. Ours is a united fight for power and control and when the power comes and has to be distributed, as I have no doubt it will be in course of time, we will sit down and settle all our quarrels and proportions of privileges. Such a time has not yet come. So in our struggle to get for the people more privileges, we recognize in this House only one party, against the executive. A party on this side of the House and another party opposite, which is trying to keep as much power to themselves as possible. We have no third party in this House, and therefore I say, Sir, that I am extremely grateful to the honourable members who have supported my motion. My object in bringing forward this motion was to give an opportunity to the House which they never had up to now. The honourable member the Deputy President says what is the good of this motion. Mr. Jinnah's opinions were known, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru's opinions were known, everybody's opinions were known; but may I say, with all the respect to his views, the opinions of this House were not known. This House had never a chance of expressing any opinion upon the doings of this committee, and as some of us this morning read the proceedings of this committee, we found that many of the statements were blood curdling. They sent up the heat of my blood by a few degrees. Some of the evidence that was given before the committee was so provoking that I was longing to have this chance when we, the non-official members of this House, could frankly tell Government what we felt about this miserable affair. Sir, may I take this opportunity of pointing out to the Bombay Government that they are hopelessly out of date in their views and opinions. At this date, they are even opposed to the appointment of a Royal Commission. The country has been divided. Some people like me say a round table conference is the only thing necessary. Various men like those who served on the committee say: "no, a Royal Commission will suffice"; but our Bombay Government, which takes the credit to itself of being the Government of the most advanced province in this country, is even opposed to a Royal Commission. They say even the stage has not yet been reached for a Royal Commission! While some of us are basking in noon-day sunshine, the Bombay Government blink their eyes and refuse to believe that even the dawn has come. And therefore I wanted this House to have an opportunity of telling the Bombay Government that they are lagging hopelessly behind popular sentiment in this matter. I do not wish to express myself more strongly, because I do not think strong expressions are needed where the cause is just. But I take this opportunity of telling the Bombay Government that we were extremely disappointed at their views. To say that the time has not yet come even for a Royal Proclamation is a bit like Rip Van Winkle! I must therefore warn the Government that if they wish to retain the respect to which they think they are entitled of the ordinary man in the street, they must advance a great deal more rapidly than they have shown an inclination of doing. I think that the object of my motion will be served if we convey, by means of this motion, to the Government of Bombay and through them to the Government of India, the united opinion of this House that they must progress more rapidly than they think of doing if India is not to be lost to the Empire.

Question put and carried.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Sir, I may convey to you a request made by great many honourable members for meeting from the day after to-morrow at 1 o'clock till the budget demands are over. That will save us three hours that we have lost.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I should like to know what are the wishes of the House in regard to the suggestion made by the honourable member the Deputy President.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I am sorry, Sir, we cannot agree to that. We have other very important duties which have been massing up during the long meetings here and it is very difficult to get through our work. I hope you will, Sir, maintain the rule of 2 o'clock.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I need not remind honourable members of the precedent of last year when an adjournment motion was moved. The House desired that we should meet a little earlier in the early part of the consideration of demands for grants, and after much consultation the consensus of opinion was in favour of meeting at 1-30 instead of at 2 o'clock and this was done. In these matters the discretion rests with me, but I do not wish to exercise it unless there is a consensus of opinion in favour of a change. I should therefore like to know what the views of honourable members are as regards the time of meeting. I am perfectly agreeable to meet at 1 or even earlier, if the House asks me to call the meeting at such time, but as I have repeatedly said I will not change the hour of meeting if there is even a fair minority against such change.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I think, Sir, it is very undesirable that we should alter the hours of our meetings. We have already made our arrangements, we have many meetings in the morning up to 1-30 and even up to a quarter to two. I have to meet many people and all the secretaries are fully employed, besides the long council meetings to be attended here. I therefore submit, Sir, in the interests of the public, we ought not to meet earlier than 2 o'clock.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : Will my request to meet at 1-30 meet the wishes of the Government? I do not think the Honourable the Leader of the House will object to that.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I don't think I can accept that, either. It is really a serious matter in the public interests that work should be further stopped even for that half hour.

Mr. V. A. GRANTHAM : I do not think, Sir, we can meet earlier than 2 o'clock especially after a holiday.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I have already said that in these matters I will not be and cannot be bound by the views of the majority, because once the timings are fixed, consensus of opinion alone will make me change. I will ask all those honourable members who wish to meet earlier than 2 o'clock to please rise in their seats. (34 members rose.) I will now ask those honourable members who wish to meet at 2 o'clock, to please rise in their seats. (31 members rose.) I am afraid, in these circumstances, the House must meet at 2 o'clock on Thursday.

The Council is now adjourned to 2 o'clock on Thursday the 12th March 1925.

(Discussion on demands for grants resumed.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Demands for Grants.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Mr. President, I rise to move for a grant of Rs. 4,09,000. It stands as item No. 25 in the Schedule of Demands, Civil Works—Reserved.

Question put and demand granted.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, I move for a demand of Rs. 13,000 under 37, Miscellaneous Departments (Transferred).

Question put and demand granted.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Mr. President, I ask for a demand of Rs. 4,39,000 for Miscellaneous Departments—Reserved, No. 23 on the list.

Question put and demand granted.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Mr. President, I move that a grant of Rs. 99,000 be made for the Industries Department. I have to make a short statement.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: As the Honourable Minister likes; I have no objection.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, last year the Director of Industries had to be taken out, and, as there was no Director, the various activities of the department were distributed among some other departments. But Government have now come to the decision that the Industries Department ought to be reconstituted, and also, at the same time, developed, and therefore Government is making a demand of Rs. 99,000 for this department. The activities of the department at present are the various weaving schools and demonstrations and the potteries section in the School of Art and some other activities. As I informed the Council on a previous occasion, Government want to introduce legislation for giving monetary help to small industries, and, I may submit to the Council later on a scheme for the development of fisheries. There was a Fisheries Development Department formerly but that department was carried on with the idea that Western methods might succeed in Eastern waters. That experiment was not a success. Now, we want to experiment again, but with our own methods. The Presidency of Madras has succeeded in improving their fisheries with the advice of Sir Frederick Nicholson, they started a Fisheries Department, and in that way encouraged fish manure, fish guano and fish oil industries and all these industries have been developed to some extent.

[Mr. B. V. Jadhav]

The conditions in the Bombay Presidency, especially on the western coast are nearly the same as those on the coast of Malabar, and it is expected that if those methods are taught to our fishermen, then some good might come out of it. I do not propose that we should go into a very large expenditure for a start, but expenditure of a few thousands will, I think, in the beginning give a very good start. I need not take the time of the Council in a long description of what is intended to be done. Every new scheme that is intended to be undertaken will first be submitted to this House, and when it is approved, Government will go in for it. I therefore make a total demand of Rs. 99,000 for the Industries Department.

Question proposed.

Mr. S. S. DEV (West Khandesh District): Mr. President, I move :

"That the whole demand of Rs. 99,000 for the Industries Department be omitted."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That cannot be allowed; it is a negative motion. After all the items have been disposed of, the Honourable Minister will move for the total demand, and then the honourable member can oppose it.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South): Mr. President, I beg to move :

"That the total demand of Rs. 99,000 for the Industries Department be reduced to Rs. 98,000."

If we peruse last year's budget discussions on the subject, we find that there was

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Before the honourable member proceeds, I should like to know what the intentions of the honourable member Mr. Dev are. He has given notice of a reduction of the demand by Re. 1, which really amounts to a vote of censure.

Mr. S. S. DEV: I had no idea of bringing a vote of censure.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member wants to reduce the demand by Re. 1. What is his object? The motion to reduce the demand by Rs. 1,000 is practically on the same basis as the reduction of Re. 1. I cannot allow two discussions on the same item. If, after the honourable member (Mr. Nariman) moves his motion and the House discusses all the merits of the department on that motion, the honourable member Mr. Dev still desires to press for his motion, it will have merely to be put to vote. There cannot be two discussions.

Mr. S. S. DEV: I won't move my motion, Sir.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN: Sir, I move for a reduction of Rs. 1,000 from the total demand, and I may frankly state at once that my intention in moving this motion is not to bring exactly a vote of censure on the Honourable Minister in connection with the department, but in order to bring to light several irregularities and in a way to protest against them, and the manner in which this department has been worked. I may say that there are some honourable members on this side who believe that the department is worked so hopelessly that it is not possible to improve it at all. I believe that was the idea of my honourable friend Mr. Dev when he moved for the total rejection of it. I do not want to go to that extent, particularly this year. Because, we find, Sir, that although, year after year, this department has been the one department in the transferred side which is criticised by the non-official members, if you look at the criticism of previous years you will find that they have all been directed not at the department itself, the industries department, which in the ordinary circumstances would be a useful department, a department which ought to receive the support of this House, but at the method and manner in which this department has been worked all through. First and foremost the complaint of this side of the House has been particularly against the personnel of the establishment of the department. The criticism last year was against the idea of having a highly paid European at the head of a department of Indian industries. It was considered that it was ridiculous to have a high salaried foreigner, no matter who he was, at the head of a department which should particularly be in the hands of an Indian, because we feel, however sympathising a European officer is, he cannot see eye to eye with an Indian. So far as this department is concerned, it is just the department which should be entirely in the hands of Indians. In order to make it popular among the public of this presidency, this department should be worked by a sort of non-official agency helped and financed by Government. That would be the proper way. Because, very often we find that occasions arise wherein the head of this department, if he is a European, has to work against the commercial interests of his own country, in order to promote the industrial interests of India. Very often occasions arise, when the director of industries, if he is a European, has to work, in the discharge of his duty, against the commercial interests of his own country. Very often, I have known instances in the working of this department for the last two years, wherein the encouragement of a certain scheme by this department would have meant a death-blow to certain British industries which have been developed. Therefore we cannot expect a European at the head of this department to work wholeheartedly, to work it in such manner as will satisfy the non-official benches. It was for that reason that we feel that it should be in the hands of an Indian. So far as that demand is concerned, the Honourable Minister has literally and partially conceded it. The European director has been removed and the department has been placed formally in the hands of an Indian gentleman. But in the beginning I understood him to say that he wanted to revive the department and bring it back to its original state. I hope they will not revive the post of director, or, if they do so, they will not put a European at the head of that department. What I wish to impress on the House is, it is but natural that when interests are likely to clash between the European community and the Indian community, the Indian is likely to work more satisfactorily from the non-official point of view, than the European. (An honourable member from the Government benches: No : no.)

[Mr. K. F. Nariman]

[Mr. K. F. Nariman]

But apart from that, Sir, the very manner in which the department is worked is very unsatisfactory. I should say the real director of industries for the whole of this presidency and for the whole of India even, is Mahatma Gandhi. If they want to follow him so far as the economic and industrial point of view is concerned,—leave aside his politics—and they work the department through an Indian, so far as the popular side is concerned they will support Government. So far as that is concerned, I should urge, apart from the humour of it, that they should seriously consider, apart from the politics of the question, first and foremost the development of cottage industries looking at the economic side of it. Mahatma Gandhi has placed before the country his facts and figures, and if Government really wish to benefit the country and attract the sympathy of this side of the House, they should begin from the bottom and encourage cottage industries. Where is that encouragement in this department? The encouragement given to cottage industries is almost insignificant and not worth mentioning, although that is the first industry that should be developed. It would relieve the economic pressure on the starving masses of this country. The first thing to begin is the development of cottage industries if the intention of Government is bona fide. But where is that? Instead of that, they begin first with other commercial enterprises in which other local firms have already started, and in which further Government enterprise would mean a sort of commercial rivalry, and an unfair kind of rivalry it will be when a mighty Government with all its powers and wealth start an industry in which other local private firms have made a start. It will be more or less starting a rival firm against another firm, I am referring to the Tar and potteries industries which have been developed to a certain extent in this country, and which will undoubtedly be successful ultimately. If Government enter into rivalry with them now, it will mean not encouragement but discouragement to private enterprise.

Another point which I wish to urge is this : that so far as the European head was concerned, the director has been made into a superintendent. It is only a change in name. The post is retained and the duties are retained, and the responsibilities are retained. Only the salary is lessened and the staff will be much less. The name is changed into superintendent of industries. Now, Sir, next to the superintendent we find an "assistant to the director". The director is done away with, but why is the assistant to the director retained? The head of the department is called the superintendent of industries. What is the use of a mere change in the name? The whole work, responsibilities and duties of the director are retained. Simply because a pledge was given to this honourable House that the post of director will be done away with, literally that promise has been kept. But I say, Sir, that that promise has not been kept in the spirit. They have only changed the name from director to superintendent. That makes no difference. The criticism was directed not against the name of the head; the criticism was directed against the method and manner in which the industries department was worked. But so far as that is concerned that has continued to remain in the same old position. Therefore that criticism has been wasted. Therefore, I hope, Sir, that on this debate the criticism won't concentrate on the name of the head of the department, whether he should be called superintendent or director, or whether the salary should be Rs. 2,500 or Rs. 950, but on the whole method and manner of the working of this department. I hope it will be demanded that the method and manner of working of this department should be changed, and that real encouragement should be given to cottage industries.

I shall point out, Sir, an instance which goes to show that this department has been working with the object of encouraging foreign industries than with the object of encouraging indigenous industries. We know that not very far from our city at Ambernath some foreigners have started a match factory. Now, according to the Industrial Commission it was laid down that whenever an industry is started in this presidency at least three-fourths of the capital should be subscribed locally either in the city or in the province. I do not remember the exact proportion; it was three-fourths or some substantial portion. Now, I understand that this factory has been started to compete with an indigenous industry, and its capital has been subscribed in Britain and the whole factory is worked entirely by foreigners. This factory is competing against all the indigenous match factories which Indians are trying to establish. In a place like this it is the duty of the Government in the Industries Department to come to the rescue of the indigenous industry and not to allow foreign industry to encroach upon the indigenous industries of this nature. But we see nothing of that sort. What we really see is the encouragement of foreign industry at the cost of the local Government. In this case I should like to know from the Honourable Minister in charge of this department why the recommendations of the Industrial Commission have not been given effect to with regard to this industry?

Another point I wish to bring to the notice of this House is this. I shall give an instance where an indigenous industry is not allowed to prosper when it is anticipated that it will kill some foreign industry. I was told that sometime back Mr. Mackenzie Wallace introduced a system of biscuit making in this presidency out of some indigenous material grown in this presidency. I was told that material was sent to England and it was found that a biscuit industry with that material would be successful. If it had been introduced it would not have been necessary to import foreign biscuits at heavy prices and it would have given a new phase to the economic feature of this country. But no encouragement was given to that new venture in spite of the fact that it was recommended by an eminent European. Instances like these go to show that this department is opposed to the formation of any indigenous industry. Till the Industries Department shows some tangible progress of its work year after year it is impossible to expect any support to that department from this side of the House. I hope the criticism on this debate will be centered on the manner and method of this department so that it will impress on the department the necessity of improving the economic condition of this country.

Mr. S. S. DEV (West Khandesh) : Sir, I support this motion on three grounds. In the first place, the sum provided is ridiculously too small to meet the requirements of the presidency. A presidency, with a revenue of 16 crores, to spend a paltry sum of Rs. 99,000 on industries looks ridiculous. It was this time last year my honourable friend Moulvi Rafiuddin described this department as a mere mockery, and advocated that it be abolished. Secondly, even this small sum of Rs. 99,000 is not spent on any useful purposes. This money is mainly spent on two purposes. I shall take the first item of expenditure.

We have got one superintendent drawing a salary of Rs. 1,145 a month to supervise only four weaving schools and seven demonstrations and nothing more. The whole budget of this department in the Blue Book covers a span and is confined to two pages only—224 and 225 of this White Book. For the potteries department we have a separate superintendent. You will find him on page 159 of the White Book. So, the only duty of the superintendent of the weaving department is to supervise four weaving schools and seven demonstrations ! You all probably know what these demonstrations are like. Each demonstrator carries two handlooms with him from place to place. On one handloom he works and on the other he employs a weaver to work. This is what is called a demonstration. For supervising four weaving schools and seven demonstrations, the superintendent is paid Rs. 1,145. Is not this a sheer waste of money, I ask ? This waste becomes more clear when we come to the potteries department. It is really very wonderful that our Industries Department should spend any sum over pottery demonstration. If you go over pages 159 and 224-25 of the White Book, you will find that Government propose to spend Rs. 37,151 on potteries. It is a mere waste. Government must know that Talegaon Paisa Fund Factory has made pottery a success. Pottery then has passed the stage of mere demonstration. I do not therefore see the necessity of spending any sum over pottery demonstration. To spend Rs. 36,000 year after year is a mere waste. It is now for the Honourable Minister to see whether this waste at least can be stopped. Next for fisheries they propose to spend Rs. 1,500 and for rounding Rs. 500 are added as if Rs. 1,500 is not a round figure. We can in this way round the department by adding Rs. 1,000 more and instead of 99,000 have a full lakh to waste on so-called industries. What a grand sum for our presidency to spend on industries ? Honourable members on Government benches have been quoting figures from foreign countries. Will any of them tell us whether England and America, France and Germany spend so much as 99,000 on industries, as we do ! Those countries may well anticipate that we would soon beat them in industries with our big expenditure of Rs. 99,000 a year !

Lastly, Sir, it is absolutely hopeless that we shall make any progress in industries under this Government. So long as this department is not run entirely in conformity with the wishes of the people, and so long as the Minister is not free to formulate his own schemes and carry them out, it is hopeless to expect any real progress in this department. In the last October session of this Council, the Secretary, Mr. Thomas, announced to the House :

“ I may also inform the House what the Honourable Minister was perhaps too modest to say himself, that he has recently asked for a scheme to be prepared for the revival of the department under an Indian Director. ” (Vol. XIII, page 569, dated 20th October 1924.)

The Minister undertakes here, I may bring this to the notice of the honourable member who preceded me, to have an Indian director. I want the Minister to formulate a grand scheme on the lines suggested by that famous committee of Sir M. Visweshwaraiah. I do not hope to have any substantial scheme of industrial education. We shall not have industrial education because Government consider that it would be a curse to turn out men who cannot obtain employment. We shall have no trained men because we have no industries to employ them and we shall have no industries because we have no trained men. And I assure you, Sir, we shall have neither because we have this benign Government to save our country from the curse of industrial education. We must congratulate the Government upon saving the country from this curse. Let England be cursed, who with her population of 4 crores gives vocational education to 8 lakhs of students every year. According to that proportion, this presidency with its population of two crores should give similar education to at least 14 lakhs of students. But we hardly give such education to 2,000 students ! And mark, we have made all this progress in hundred years of British rule. That means that our progress industrially in a century is 200th part of that of England. By rule of three, you can see, Sir, that it will take at least 20 thousand years for us to come up to the standard of England in regard to industrial education ! Long live the British Empire ! But then you may ask, have not Government been doing anything for us ? Yes, they have been doing much. During the last forty years, every third or fourth year, we had either a commission or a committee or a survey or an officer appointed to tour and investigate. Their investigation is not complete and may not be complete till the Doomsday ! I request the Honourable Minister not to waste any more time over these shams, but straight off formulate a scheme on the lines suggested by the Minority Report of the last committee and at once put it into practice. I can assure him that if he makes such a serious effort, the whole non-official side of the House will stand by him and he will surely earn the blessings of the generations to come.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District) : Sir, from 7 lakhs that were allotted we have come to Rs. 99,000 for the ensuing year. That is a very sad climb down. I do not know, Sir, where the other six lakhs have gone. I thought that the whole amount of six lakhs would be spent in developing the industries for which this Council had been asking the then Minister to spend. But unfortunately, Sir, all these six lakhs of rupees have been diverted somewhere, I do not know where.

[Rao Saheb D. P. Desai]

The honourable mover has touched the question of small industries, that is, cottage industries. Now it is perhaps a shame to this Government and disgrace that they have not even made a rough survey of these cottage industries and other small industries. I must admit that there appeared a small item (but subsequently deleted) in the list placed before the finance committee for the survey of small industries, but unfortunately it was proposed to be placed in such hands that the members of that committee would not like to insist upon it and thus entrust this survey to the particular gentleman concerned. I think that a man who is really an adept in the question of industries and crafts should be entrusted with the regular survey of all our cottage industries and if that is done there is no harm in spending 7 lakhs of rupees. (An Honourable Member: What is the name of the gentleman?) Mr. Hoggarth was proposed to be put there, an officer who does not possess any knowledge of survey but only possesses a certificate entitling him to teach a third class drawing school.

Now as regards the sum of Rs. 36,000 to which reference was made by the honourable member from Khandesh, I visited these pottery works and I found that there are only five students undergoing training; we are spending Rs. 36,000 a year over this department, and this is too much. If the Honourable Minister wants to prepare some men for the purpose of training let him give scholarships to some students and let them be sent to learn these things in the private concerns which have come into existence as stated by one of the honourable members who preceded me. I would request, Sir, that this Rs. 36,000 may be diverted towards some really useful industrial work, and that could be done only after proper survey of the industries by a competent expert and not by every day experts that you find in Government employ. The previous Council cut down good many items out of the 7 lakhs; but at that time our attention was directed to the item for fisheries, potteries, etc., and we then did not think that that was a proper method of working the industries department and we wanted therefore the progress of Government in that direction to be checked, and so the former Council put a check on this sort of thing. We do not want this fishery undertaking because our fishermen are all right so far as they go, but there are other industries for which some expenditure should be made.

As regards the School of Art, so far as the craft work which is taught there is concerned it requires to be further developed because it is the best of small industries and the amount that can be saved from the potteries may be diverted towards enlarging the scope of the crafts and artisan classes in the School of Art.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, I am very much obliged to the honourable members who have given their advice to me on these questions and their constructive criticism will help me much. But I think I ought to explain what the real circumstances are.

This time last year, Sir, the European director's salary was not voted and Government undertook to employ him to do other work and they have literally and in spirit kept their promise, and the European director is not charged to the industries department. There was an assistant of his, Mr. Bharucha, a very capable man and a good mechanical engineer and a man who has taken part in advising on industrial works in this presidency. He was a professor in the College of Engineering, and has been doing very good work since he was taken over to this department and I can say with confidence that he has been assisting industrial concerns in his official capacity ever since he was taken up. I think the honourable member from Satara will bear me out, because I am told that he has derived great benefit from the advice of Mr. Bharucha. Mr. Bharucha is not as a matter of fact engaged in simply supervising the work of the four weaving establishments and the six demonstrators as was stated here. I am sorry that the White Book does not give the exact catalogue of the work that Mr. Bharucha does; and the meagre establishment that is placed under him at present gives one the idea that he is supervising the work of these and nothing else. But as a matter of fact he has to carry on another branch of the department which is answering inquiries. I do not find fault with the criticism but I want to supply more information and to show that Mr. Bharucha is not engaged on demonstration and supervising the work of the demonstrations only; but that he has to give replies to a large number of questions asked by various industries, and he has to give them advice wherever it is sought, from Karachi in Sind to Satara and Belgaum in the south. Mr. Bharucha has to visit industrial concerns to give them advice and the value of his work is amply testified by numerous letters from the proprietors of these industrial concerns expressing gratitude to Government for sparing the services of Mr. Bharucha and the valuable advice he was able to give them. So, as a matter of fact the director of industries has not to supervise the work of the few demonstrators that are placed under him but that he has to give advice to many industrial concerns in this presidency. I may assure the House that the title 'Superintendent' is not exactly what it ought to be, and I think the department should have a Director and he will be henceforth—he has been as a matter of fact—styled accordingly.

I may offer a few remarks and point out a few facts about the Ambernath match factory. This department has from the first at heart the advancement of the match-making industry in this presidency. There are about three or four factories in this presidency and I think these factories are doing well. There is a factory at Ahmedabad; there is another factory at Karad; there is one at Belgaum, and so forth. They met latterly with a very severe competition from foreign articles, and when the Government of India imposed a high duty on foreign matches, the foreigners managed to evade that duty by importing splint and other match box materials, which coming under raw materials, were allowed free of duty or at a very low customs duty. The Department of Industries, Bombay, raised a protest, brought the fact to the notice of the Government of India, and the Government of India was induced to charge a heavy duty on splints and veneers for box-making. When the foreigners found that their splints and other articles were equally taxed, they have now taken to the method of importing the logs and are making their splints here, and that is the origin of the Ambernath match factory

[Mr. B. V. Jadhav]

The department of industries has also raised a protest against this and brought the facts to the notice of the Government of India, and I think it depends upon the Government of India to help the indigenous industries by their customs regulations. But at the same time, it must be borne in mind that this factory at Ambernath imports only logs from outside and turns out splints and everything else in this country. Our indigenous match factories, that is, those at Ahmedabad and other places use indigenous wood and this factory at Ambernath uses logs brought in from Europe. This factory is worked by foreign capital, but I do not think the powers of the Industries Department are such as to prevent foreign capital from coming into India. It is an Imperial question and it will rest with the Government of India as to what measures to take.

An Honourable MEMBER: Is it British capital?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I do not know; perhaps it is British.

An Honourable MEMBER: No; I think it is Swedish.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Whether it is Swedish or British, it is just the same; it is foreign capital.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD: Is it?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Yes; I think so.

As to the meagre amount spent on industrial education, I have to plead also the same excuse, that is, the actual amount spent on industrial education is shown under different heads and not under this demand. As a matter of fact, the School of Art or Reay Workshops spend a large amount of money in industrial education, but that is shown under education. In the same way, the grant made to the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute is also shown under another head. The engineering colleges in Poona and Karachi also give a sort of industrial education and they are not shown under this demand. The amount spent on industrial education, therefore, is not Rs. 45,000 as is supposed but it is much bigger; but this method of showing only Rs. 45,000 under the Industries Department has led to this misunderstanding.

It is very unfortunate, indeed, that the expenditure on this department which was at one time 7 lakhs has now dwindled down to 1 lakh and I hope, with the help of this Council, the expenditure will rise and that it will even exceed the original amount of 7 lakhs in days to come.

An Honourable MEMBER: It will depend on yourself and the Honourable the Finance Member.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: But the amount spent will be with the sanction and with the advice of this House.

I do not think I need add anything more. The suggestions made by the various speakers are very helpful and I may assure the House that Government is also as anxious as the House itself for furthering Indian industries and encouraging them. As I told you, the best encouragement that is required in this part of the country is expert advice and, at the same time, some of the smaller industries require financial aid. If these two are provided, this presidency is bound to make a rapid progress. As for the home industries, that has not escaped the attention of Government. Home industries are very important no doubt and they will be encouraged. Government had employed Mr. Hoggarth to make enquiries, but I think that was about three or four years ago. I do not know what he has been able to do. He has been asked to submit a report, but he has not yet done so. When that report is received, Government will give their best attention to the suggestions that are made. As regards the qualifications of Mr. Hoggarth, I need say nothing. He has been in the service of this Government for a long time and he is an officer of the Indian Educational Service. At the same time, I may say that he has been doing very good work in visiting drawing schools and helping them in his own way.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Is he the same gentleman who is inspector in the Arts School ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : No ; not in the Arts School. He is Inspector of Drawing Schools outside—not in Bombay city.

So, Sir, I think with this explanation the honourable mover will see that it is good to withdraw his motion.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : Sir, my honourable friend Mr. Dev referred to my remarks last year when I characterised this department as a mockery. I think this department has not proceeded much further than mockery even now.

Sir, I was sorry to hear my honourable friend Mr. Dev state that as long as the bureaucracy exists, the Industries Department would not prosper. I say he is entirely wrong. Why is the Minister there ? What is his business ? Is he to act merely as an agent with regard to industrial concerns ? If there was any difference of opinion why did he not report to us that he wanted more money and that his colleagues would not give it to him ? I believe, Sir, that a capable Minister can make his department as important as he chooses to do. It is useless to find fault with the bureaucracy. Ninety-eight thousand rupees in an industrial province like Bombay for Industries ! Are we not ashamed to see that this small sum is given for Industries ? Is it worth having ? Sir, the Minister now says that he forgot to put into the White Book some other works of the Director. What is this explanation ? It is merely childish. What we want is, that he should come forward and say that the Government would not give the necessary amount to him, and the Council would certainly grant it. I never heard a single word from the Honourable Minister as to his industrial work, what members of the Council he consulted, and how many meetings he held in connection with this Industries Department. It seems to me that his heart is not in the work. We have got our Indian Ministers for the purpose of introducing Indian ideas, encouraging Indian aspirations, and indianising the whole administration. What is the use of blaming the bureaucracy ? We have not advanced one bit. On the other hand, as my honourable friend Mr. Dev remarked, from Rs. 7 lakhs the provision has come down to

[Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmad]

Rs. 98,000. I think it would be better if the whole thing was abolished. It was the duty of the Honourable Minister to see that proper provision was made. Last year, when this question was being discussed, the Honourable Minister was a new man, as he had held office for three months. Now, he has had at his disposal a whole year, and he cannot show us any better result. He says that he forgot to put in certain things in the White Book.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I did not forget to do that.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD: I am not satisfied with his explanation. I think, Sir, that the department has been totally neglected. I think it is the fault of the members of the Council that they do not hold the Minister responsible for progress in this direction.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): Mr. President, I rise to support the motion of my honourable friend from Bombay, South (Mr. Nariman). I do not want to interpose in the quarrel between the bureaucracy and the Ministers, as we are not very much concerned with it, but I rise to ask the Honourable Minister one question. I was expecting some reference from the Honourable Minister to that question in the course of his remarks, but I was disappointed. I should like to ask, what are the intentions of Government with regard to the Technical and Industrial Education Committee's Report. We had a committee appointed by our predecessors in this Council, an important committee appointed under Dr. Paranjpye's inspiration. Its president was no less a person than Sir M. Visvesvaraya, a man trained to western methods, with a complete knowledge of the industrial situation of this province. Government have had that report before them for more than a year. I tabled a question on the subject during the last session, to which a laconic answer was given that Government would not turn to this report until the claims of primary education had been satisfied. That means till doomsday. I suppose the claims of primary education are not going to be satisfied for a long time yet. Is it the intention of Government that all this time this report should lie on the musty shelves of the Secretariat, and the Minister would not take any action on that report?

I was surprised to hear the Honourable Minister say that the one difficulty in this Industries Department is that he does not get expert advice. Only five minutes ago he was pleased to say this. He has got this expert advice on technical education. I do not know what he means by "experts". "Expert" reputations in India are made easily by Anglo-Indians, just as easily as fortunes are made by them in India. But, Sir M. Visvesvaraya is a real expert of commerce and I want to know what the Minister is going to do with this "expert" report of Sir M. Visvesvaraya. I want to know this on behalf of the honourable members on this side, and I do hope the Honourable Minister will satisfy our curiosity as to what are the immediate intentions of Government in this matter.

Mr. HOUSENBHOY A. LALLJEE (Bombay City): Sir, I was really surprised with the explanation that was given by the Honourable

[Mr. Hooseinbhoj A. Lalljee]

Minister with regard to the Industrial Department. But I did not expect that he knew so little about one matter, and that is in regard to the match industry. Sir, from the facts that the Honourable Minister put forward regarding the match industry it is clear that he is not aware of the A. B. C. of what is going on in our presidency with regard to the match industry. The import duty levied by Government on foreign matches is not 13 per cent., but 150 per cent. It was about two years ago that the Indian match manufacturing concerns started works with Japanese experts; they have factories in the interior of the Bombay Presidency, and there are no less than five factories between Bombay and Thana at present, employing nearly 3,600 workmen. Now, Sir, these people started with the help of Japanese experts; I am one of them, and we got most of the material from outside India, but we have been working the factories with Indian labour. As soon as we found that certain of the chemicals could be had in India, we used them. Then we started using our own wood. In this connection, I am sorry to state—it may be a fact—that when we wrote to the Forest Department about the wood for match manufacture, we received a reply that in the Bombay Presidency we could not get sufficient match wood of the quality required for match manufacture from our forests. Then we thought of having logs from outside, and getting the necessary machinery to get our workmen to do the splitting. The industry is going on for the last six months very successfully, and no less than 3,000 more men have been employed in turning out match splinters from the logs.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: From which place are the logs being imported?

Mr. HOOSEINBHOJ A. LALLJEE: From Siberia. We tried to get some wood from upper India and from Bengal, but the railway freight is very exorbitant. In fact, the railway freight from upper India to Bombay is much more than the steamer freight from Siberia via Japan to Bombay. This is the state of affairs.

Now, Sir, something has been said about the Ambernath factory. May I inform the Honourable Minister that Bombay requires 200 cases of matches every day? The Ambernath factory is able to produce hardly 30 cases a day. The reason why one factory has been established at Ambernath (Bombay), one at Karachi, and one at Calcutta is evident; and shortly, one more factory will be established near Rangoon. What is the object? Not to supply India with matches, but to compete with the Indian industry. The Ambernath people are a syndicate of Americans, and they have been offering the Indian manufacturers lakhs of rupees in order to stop their works. Very handsome sums are being offered to them to buy over their factories. The reason of this is that the American syndicate have taken over most of the concerns in other parts of the world including Swedish factories and they have guaranteed to them to pay handsome dividends, 7 to 9 per cent. They have been trying to make a corner of the match industry of the world and they want the match manufacturing industry to be their monopoly. They went to Japan, but they did not succeed there, but they have succeeded in China. In India, they have not succeeded up to now, and they have therefore started their own factories, their object being to sell matches at fairly lower rates and kill the Indian match industry. This has been our representation to the Government of India, and I am prepared to prove it if the Honourable Minister wants, by facts and figures. Furthermore, this American syndicate have gone to the extent at present of cornering one of the chemicals necessary in match manufacture. Formerly, we used to get this chemical from Belgium and Germany. But for the last two months we have found that it cannot be had from any country in the world. This American syndicate is a very rich concern, with a capital of £2 crores, which has recently been increased by £40,00,000 from England, and they have been able to get a monopoly of a great portion of the world of match factories as well as of this chemical. All the manufacturers of this chemical whom we approached, have referred us to these people. May I ask what relief the Honourable Minister is able to give to us ?

If such is the ignorance of the Honourable Minister, then I am sorry. As a merchant, I do think that this department should really be overhauled and some radical changes must be made before we can pass any item of expenditure for the department. Therefore as a protest against the work of the department, I support the motion.

Mr. G. I. PATEL (Ahmedabad Millowners' Association): Sir, I regret to see the Honourable Minister's ignorance in the matter of industries, from the explanation he has put before this House. I hope the Honourable Minister does not need to be reminded that India is not a country but a continent from the standpoint of the production of raw materials. If he takes in his hand a list of the exports and imports of India, he will find that hundreds of articles are sent out of India in the form of raw materials and hundreds of articles are imported into India as manufactured products out of the same raw materials. This is where the industrial skill enters into this field. When this country is producing millions and millions worth of raw materials which foreign countries like England, Japan and America buy at cheap rates, manufacture several things out of the same materials and send them back to this country, after paying freight, insurance and the middleman's charges, it is a matter of great regret that only a small sum of Rs. 90,000 has been reserved for the support of the industrial development of this presidency. I believe that the Honourable Minister is aware of the fact that the industries of this presidency pay about 10 crores of rupees in the form of various taxes. If out of the receipt of this 10 crores the Honourable Minister spares only 5 or 6 per cent. that is 40 or 50 lakhs of rupees, in order to support indigenous industries and cottage industries, as Japan has done, I think Government will be benefited from the return which they will derive from those very industries, and at the same time the members of the industrial community, the labourers and the agricultural classes and everybody else, will also be benefited.

[Mr. G. I. Patel]

The Honourable Minister referred to Mr. Barucha. I have some experience of Mr. Barucha, and I have found him a very intelligent, nice and amiable gentleman. But what was the work that the Honourable Minister had assigned to him? He was asked to take some samples of print and colours and made to roam from one industrial place to another in order to show them to us. Is this the sort of work to be assigned to an industrial expert of his type? He was asked to take samples of certain cloth printed in coloured flowers and other designs. The province that was assigned to Mr. Barucha was a narrow one. A man of his intelligence ought to have been given more important work by the industrial department: he ought to have been asked to study the industrial problems of this country and suggest means of initiating and helping the industrial concerns in this presidency.

Then, I may draw the attention of the Honourable Minister to another fact, namely that there are several things which are imported and consumed in this country, but which can very well be manufactured cheaply here. We import our china clay, when there are mines in this country wherefrom china clay could be raised. In such cases no assistance is given by the industrial department. Then we get our shuttles, leather goods, bobbins, magnesia, oils, ropes, tin stuffs, healds, reeds, etc., from foreign countries; but all these can be manufactured in India provided help is given to start such industries. Further I may draw the attention of the Honourable Minister to various herbs which are being exported from this country, out of which several medicines are prepared and imported at heavy prices into India. Now, that is a field in which the industrial department can render useful help to indigenous industries. Then, there is manganese, which is exported out of India in thousands of tons, and there are several mines in India waiting to be developed. When an Indian gentleman wanted a license to explore for mines of manganese there was a block somewhere from the Government side and he had to waste some thousands and yet wait and wait.....

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: What is the name of the gentleman?

Mr. G. I. PATEL: I have given the name and details to the Honourable Mr. Dehlavi. So that is the difficulty. Whenever there is a gentleman coming forward with some scheme of industrial development there is some block from the other side and no assistance is provided for him. The man has to go somewhere and find out a European partner in name only and to get him to address the Government in which case Government orders would be issued. This is the inner condition of the industries department and the scheme of industrial development in this country.

As regards the engineering colleges and other technical institutes, to which the Honourable Minister has made some reference, I may say that he has been good enough to look after the R. C. Institute at Ahmedabad. But at the same time I must state from my personal experience that the progress is stationary and the Institute itself requires to be put on a twentieth century basis, and not kept running on nineteenth century lines as is now the case.

Now, I may remind the Honourable Member of what Japan has done in the matter of cottage industries. I was myself in Japan, and I found that in every poor family each member of the family was working on something, and all the members of the family were wage-earners. Hence the textile industry in this country is suffering in another form, because in Japan the wages are thus very low : they import our raw materials, manufacture them there, and export the manufactured goods to this country to compete with our goods and dump the markets. If therefore the Honourable Minister directs his attention to what Japan has done, he will find scope for various cottage industries in this country.

Then, take the potteries department. If an enterprising man comes forward and establishes the industry there is some clog or trouble compelling the man to give up his enterprise : unfair competition is started. Then if the Honourable Minister studies the mineral and vegetable wealth of India, he will find scope for development in thousands of ways.

Finally, I come to the match industry. I can assure the Honourable Minister that the progress of the match industry in India, and particularly in Ahmedabad is not on the lines he suggested. I know from personal knowledge that the indigenous match factories there had very great difficulty in getting concession from the railway companies. The concession was given by the railway companies to certain other companies and not to these indigenous manufacturers. Then when the indigenous company was going to put up a big fight the same concession that was given to other companies was granted to it. I may tell him that these factories are not in a position to prosper as the shareholders desire. In regard to the factory to be started at Ambernath, I may say that it has come to my knowledge that it is to be managed by Swedish manufacturers who have got special skill in this line and that the share capital has been subscribed in England. The factory is to be built here in India to compete with the Indian factories. This means no support to the indigenous industry, and support to the outside industry at the cost of the former. They are trying to monopolise the industry all over the world.

Therefore, Sir, I would request the Honourable Minister to find not Rs. 90,000 but Rs. 50,00,000 to develop the industrial wealth of this country.

An Honourable MEMBER : I move a closure, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I accept the closure.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South) : Sir, the honourable member who has just sat down has performed for me the task of giving an exhaustive reply, and I do not think there is any need now to take up the time of the Council. The only reason why Japan is successful and India is not is a plain and simple one : Japan is self-governing and India is not. All the efforts made by honourable members on this side have failed because India is not self-governing. We will succeed when we get the government in our own hands ; but so long as we do not get it, we can only be content with criticising.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I do not think I need take much of the time of this House after my first speech. I plead guilty to the charge that I do not know the number of factories in this presidency for the simple reason that I am not in charge of the factories department. That department is under the charge of the Honourable the General Member.

The honourable member Mr. Lalljee has given useful information about the match industry, but there is a great obstacle in the way of developing this industry. The difficulty is with regard to railway freight and forest concessions. The wood suitable for this industry is not plentiful. It may be found in plenty in the Himalayas. Unless logs of wood useful for match industry are available in large quantity at cheap rate, India will have to suffer from keen competition with other parts of the world like Siberia.

As regards the work which Mr. Bharucha has been doing it has been well described by my honourable friend from Ahmedabad. He will soon be put in charge of the department and I can assure honourable members that he will not go from shop to shop showing samples of prints. With regard to China clay, shuttles and antimony I can only say that if enterprising gentlemen come forward, Government will be only too glad to give all assistance that will be proper in the particular circumstance. But the Government cannot undertake to start any industry themselves. If enterprising gentlemen come forward it will be the duty of the Government to help their enterprise.

Turning now to the question of the recommendations made by the Visweswarayya committee, I wish to bring to the notice of this House that they are under the consideration of Government ; and Government have not yet formulated any definite scheme on those recommendations. At the same time I may assure the House that the suggestions made in the minority report of that committee, especially the suggestions made by Dewan Bahadur Godbole in the form of a list of measures which ought to be taken in hand at once, have been engaging the attention of Government. Government are carrying out one by one the suggestions made there. The development of the Engineering College, Poona, the Victoria Jubilee Institute and the Science Institute, Bombay, are engaging the attention of Government. As an earnest, this House will find that provision has been made in the budget for the development of these institutions which give scientific and technical education. I again repeat that, these schemes will be taken up one after another. Government regret that they cannot find it possible to take up all the schemes together. But they have decided to take the schemes one after another.

Question put and lost.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I beg to move :

“That a total grant of Rs. 99,000 be sanctioned.”

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir I beg to move :

“That a grant of Rs. 24,48,000 be made under 34, Agriculture.”

In view of the few amendments which have been proposed for reduction under this head, I should like to make a statement to explain to the House the activities of this department very briefly, in the hope that honourable members who have given notices of motions for reduction may consider whether it would not be advisable to withdraw those motions.

Sir, the activities of this department can be divided under three heads: research, propaganda and agricultural development. Taking the last first, the best testimony I can produce before this Honourable House of the success and the usefulness achieved by the Agricultural College, Poona, is that students from all parts of India, from Ceylon down to Bengal and Burma come to it for agricultural education. Further we have not only drawn students from all parts of India but we have drawn to the college about 33 per cent. of the students from the agricultural population of this presidency, and it is hoped that that number will increase every year. This 33 per cent. has been drawn from all the agricultural communities in this presidency. In addition to this college we have at present vernacular agricultural schools in different parts of this presidency, and agricultural bias schools started by the Educational Department. We are doing useful work by spreading agricultural education through these schools.

Coming to the research activities of the department, which is the most important branch of agriculture, I should like to point out to the House that it has been doing very useful work in the direction of improving the staple of cotton. I am glad to be able to announce to the House the success which has attended the experiments in connection with cotton. This experiment is concentrated in five important centres of the presidency where cotton has improved a good deal. They are Dharwar, Dhulia, Surat, Viramgam and Mirpurkhas. To give this House an idea of the importance of this work, I may mention that in the Dharwar tract the improved strain of Kumpta cotton, which is now being sown on an area of 75,000 acres, gives a net gain to the cultivator of Rs. 5, roughly speaking, per acre. The other variety which has been tried in the American Dharwar known as Gadag No. 1 which is I think still more successful in the way of giving better income to the cultivator. About 65 thousand acres come under that variety, and give a net profit of about Rs. 13 per acre to the cultivator.

Sir, similarly experiments have been made in improving the quality of rice, jwari and wheat in various other centres such as Larkana, Jakobabad, Karjat and Ratnagiri and in other parts of the presidency. Attention of the department has also been devoted to the question of manure and ploughs; and I think eleven thousand improved ploughs have been introduced in the Dharwar area. Similarly other implements as tractors and other improved implements, in connection with agriculture, are being tried and pushed on wherever they are suitable.

In the horticultural branch of this department useful experiments have been made in the matter of preserving fruit juice, or drying fruit and for the benefit of the agriculturist. Similarly the live-stock question is an important question, and centres have been established where, in cattle farms, experiments are being made in the matter of improving the breed of cattle. These centres are: Karachi, in Ahmedabad at Charodi, Bankipore in Dharwar. With the same object in view the scheme of premium bulls is popularised and the breed is improving. In this connection we are also utilising independent institutions such as the Gorakshans by encouraging them to help us in improving the breed of the cattle. Sir, these Gorakshans are Pandharpur, Mulund and Kandivli where useful work is expected in the future and every year. Then we have the divisional agricultural boards and the taluka associations through which we carry on most of the propaganda work and bring home to the cultivator the results achieved by the Agricultural Department. Sir, every attempt made in this connection has proved useful to the country so far, and I might say that we have before us a very wide field of work in which a great deal more might be achieved. The demand that I am making, Sir, on behalf of agriculture, is really not adequate to the various needs of the country. But under our present financial circumstances it is a pity that a greater demand cannot be asked for. Here, Sir, I may enlighten the House that, at the suggestion of His Excellency himself, a programme of extensive work and intensive activity in these nation building departments was taken up some months back, and we the Ministers sat together, formulated our individual programmes, and we thought we would be able to take a good step forward this year also. But unfortunately the financial circumstances did not permit us to do so although we were heartily assisted by the Honourable the Finance Member, and his able Secretary. However, I hope and trust that this House will not grudge the little amount I ask on behalf, and in the best interests, of the agricultural and co-operative activities.

Question proposed.

Mr. S. S. DEV (West Khandesh District): Sir, I move:

Reduce the votable portion by Rs. 50,000—Total demand of Rs.28,19,000 (C.E. page 200).

The only thing I wish to say in connection with this department is that I find from reference to the Blue Book as well as the White Book that during the current year our estimate for agricultural education was one lakh and 80 thousand, and the revised estimates were one lakh 98 thousand; whereas for the next year we are going to provide only one lakh and 71 thousand rupees, that is, nine thousand rupees less than the budgeted sum for the current year or 27 thousand rupees less than the revised estimates. Is this provision satisfactory, I ask? In this connection I may bring to the notice of this House one deplorable fact, namely that although it is true and admitted on all hands that ours is an agricultural presidency, yet it is very surprising to note that throughout the presidency we have only six agricultural schools, which give agricultural education to about 148 boys only. In a country in which about 80 or 85 per cent. of the people are agriculturists, we give agricultural education to 148 boys and in six schools, spread throughout the presidency with a population of two crores! I maintain that if our agricultural education is also not a farce like industrial education and if it is to be a success, every taluka in the presidency must have at least one agricultural school maintained by Government. At any rate, it is very sad to find that in the next year Government is going to reduce the expenditure for agricultural education. Page 202 of the White Book is a very delightful sight. On that page you will find a phalanx of officers. I shall not read that phalanx to you if you would kindly open the Book at page 202. So we must have a phalanx of officers, even if we cut expenditure on education. It is curious details under agricultural education are not given. I believe the details as they were shown last year ought to have been shown this year also. There is only the foot-note "Provision has been made under a new subhead agricultural education" at page 209, but I do not find any such new subhead, wherein all the details of agricultural education are given. Why are not these details shown? What is there in them to be ashamed of? The world has by now come to know that we spend more on officers than on the objects for which those officers are maintained. So those details of agricultural education ought not to have been withheld. Whatever that may be, this is clear enough that during the next year we provide a budget for agricultural education by about Rs. 9,000 less and you will admit, Sir, that it is a sad feature of the budget for the next year.

Question proposed.

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI (East Khandesh District): Sir, I concur fully with the honourable member Mr. Dev in certain observations he made, but nevertheless I oppose him with these remarks, Sir. While going through the pages of the White Book, I happened to read that one lakh and odd has been provided for agricultural education. Then I began to compare that item with the item provided in the last year and the year previous to the last year. In the year 1923-24 Rs. 2,03,037 was actually spent for agricultural education; the budget estimate for 1924-25 was Rs. 1,80,000, while the revised estimate went up to Rs. 1,98,000. Now Government, this year, have made a provision of Rs. 1,71,000. This means that Government are going to spend Rs. 27,000 less on the spread of agricultural education this year. Sir, are we to understand by this provision that Government think that agricultural education in this presidency has reached its zenith, or are we to understand by this that Government think that by the spread of agricultural education among the cultivating classes there will be no substantial advantage to the material and moral prosperity of the presidency? Sir, the population of our presidency approaches nearly two crores. Out of this population 80 per cent. solely depend upon agricultural profession and for this vast mass of the population, namely, 80 per cent. of the whole, a scanty provision of Rs. 1,71,000 has been made for imparting agricultural education, and there are only six schools, as has been just told by my honourable friend (Mr. Dev), for imparting that education. Sir, this provision of Rs. 1,71,000 is vastly disproportionate to the requirements of the presidency. It is this profession of agriculture that brings the greater portion of our State revenue and for this reason this profession requires to be supported liberally, while Government has extended a miser's hand to the development of the education of this profession. This profession is the main support of the administrative machinery of our presidency and, therefore, Government ought to have liberally supported the expansion of the agricultural education in the presidency.

Now this leads me to the propaganda and research work of the Agricultural Department. Government is very keen and anxious to carry the results of the research department to the very door of the agriculturist and for this purpose Government have used two sorts of agencies. One of them is the staff engaged by the Government and the other is the formation of agricultural associations. No doubt the staff engaged by Government has been doing its own duty, but Government has found that even this present staff is not sufficient to carry the results of the research work to the doors of the agriculturists and, therefore, a new provision has been made in item 181 on page 214 of the Blue Book, and there Government has clearly stated that because the present staff is too meagre to carry the research work and inventions to the door of the agriculturists, therefore this scanty or inadequate staff requires to be increased. If the Government fully knows that the present staff engaged on propaganda work is too meagre, why should not Government make a liberal provision for that and do away with the difficulty in that direction ?

Sir, with regard to the other agency,—the formation of agricultural associations—I have got a very sad story to be narrated about that. I, from my own experience, say that this agency is far superior to impart agricultural education among the peasantry classes than the present staff of Government itself. Now, the work of this agency chiefly depends upon the zeal and efforts of the honorary workers. Sir, if the honorary workers are not encouraged by way of liberal donations to the associations, how will the work be carried on in the districts and in the different talukas of the districts ? There are five agricultural associations in my district alone, out of which two are prominent. One of them is at Pachora and the other at Jalgaon. The work of both these associations has been appreciated by the higher authorities of the department. Not only that, but the work of the Jalgaon association was appreciated by the then Director of Agriculture, Dr. Mann, who was Director of Agriculture until a few months ago, and on account of the excellent work which was shown by my association, that association had been recommended to Government for the grant of a subsidy of Rs. 2,000 and the application of the association with strong recommendations of the divisional board was forwarded to the Government. But to my great disappointment, I got a letter only to-day from my fieldman that Government is not willing to grant a subsidy of Rs. 2,000. As a matter of fact, we had undertaken an expensive programme in anticipation of this subsidy of Rs. 2,000. But only recently we have heard from Government that we were not going to get that amount and that we were to get only Rs. 1,000. If we are to be discouraged in this way, who will undertake such honorary work and how will this work be carried to the nooks and corners of the districts? Therefore, the Honourable Minister should take a very pointed note to help this propaganda work and to make very liberal help to these associations. In the White Book there is a provision of Rs. 10,000 to be given to the Central Co-operative Institute for the formation of supervising unions and in the remarks column Government has clearly stated that the initial difficulty with such associations is that of funds. Now, if that is the case in the case of a well-organized institution like the Central Co-operative Institute, then much more, therefore, is it necessary for these agricultural associations to be helped. There are certain associations who have got their own funds, but now-a-days they want this initial help very absolutely, and if they will not be helped by handsome subsidies, I doubt whether they will be able to continue their existence. I would quote one instance, of the Chopda Association. That association had got a little fund of its own. That association carried on its propaganda work by engaging a fieldman. But when the last pie of the fund, that they had, was exhausted, they had to discharge the fieldman and the work of the association came to a standstill. If these institutions which, as I have pointed out, are the best agency for carrying on the propaganda work of the Agricultural Department are starved in this way, I do not think, howsoever good the intentions of Government may be to carry on this propaganda work, that it will ever be fulfilled at all. I would, therefore, request the Honourable the Finance Member that he should put sufficient money into the hands of the Honourable Minister in charge of the department, so that at least these poor associations will not be starved, and there will be no occasion for honourable members like myself to bewail on the situation to which these associations have been reduced. I may here be allowed to record with emphasis that otherwise the work which has been set afoot by the great effort of the then Minister in charge of Agriculture (the Honourable Mr. C. V. Mehta) will come to standstill. As a matter of fact, these associations have done a good deal, and any effort on the part of Government will not have achieved that much success which has been achieved in this field by the agency of these associations.

Sir, these thoughts lead me to make some observations regarding the model farm at Jalgaon. We are all very thankful to Government to have a model farm of this type in the centre of the district itself. It is a model farm, but it is not a model farm in every sense of the word. No doubt, that farm has rendered valuable services to the agriculturists in East Khandesh. It has impressed on the minds of the agriculturists the utility of manuring and the utility of good seed, and the importance of carrying on agricultural operations in time. Also that model farm is carrying on this agricultural propaganda by holding annual shows in the premises of this model farm. But, Sir, now it is reduced to the position of a good seed supplying depôt, and it is not in a position to hold the title of a model farm. I do not wish that it should be stopped, but it should be turned into a farm, which will be a farm of economy or which will be a farm of income. This farm has got 200 acres of the best deep black soil in the district ; it is well fenced, and it is well consolidated. It is worked under proper supervision, and all the agricultural operations are carried on on modern lines. And yet, it is not in a position to show a net income of at least Rs. 15,000. Any agriculturist having all these resources at his disposal must have necessarily shown a net income of not less than Rs. 15,000. I therefore request the Honourable Minister in charge that he should pay attention to this fact, and the model farm which we fortunately have in East Khandesh should be turned into a farm which will be a farm of economy and income.

Now, I shall make a few observations for the enlightenment of the House regarding the checking or destruction of disease and pests of various crops. It has been officially estimated that the damage caused to the crops by jowar smuts and borer and the damage caused to cotton by wilt and the bollworm, is about 20 to 30 per cent. of the total annual yield. If the loss is turned to money value, I think it is a loss of several crores to the wealth of this presidency. If these enemies of crops are driven out, I think more material and moral prosperity will be brought to the peasantry of this presidency. No doubt by the activities of the Research Department some inventions have been made, so that at least the jowari crop has been protected from the ravages of the disease, but I am sorry that the ravages on the cotton crop by wilt and the bollworm have not been prevented. As a matter of fact, the East Khandesh district is a cotton producing district, and is a great victim to these two diseases ; and if by the activities of the Research Department, these two enemies to the cotton crop are driven out, I think the wealth of the East Khandesh district will be increased by several lakhs.

The biggest enemy which contributes to the destruction of crops largely is the wild pig. Sir, it is easy to drive out all the other enemies of crops, but this enemy, the wild pig is difficult to be driven out. Government had appointed one committee ; that committee had gone into various aspects of the subject, and they came to definite conclusions. The committee has suggested two or three methods, one by killing these wild pigs by poisoning, and the other by shooting. But, Sir, the experiment of killing pigs by the poisoning system has been found to be very dangerous because the system requires the pre-existence of village societies, otherwise this work of spreading flour balls mixed with poison in the tracts where the wild pigs reside before sunrise, and of picking up these balls after sunset will be impossible ; and as these village societies are not in existence there, that system seems to have been abandoned. It is so dangerous that the ball which is meant for killing pig will rather destroy cattle from the village, and from that standpoint too this system of pig killing by poisoning is dangerous, and that has, I think, been very wisely abandoned. Government have made liberal provision this year for the operations of shooting parties. But I may tell this House my apprehension in the matter that, even assuming that the hunting party undertakes operations in a particular locality in any district the pigs will conceal themselves in the valleys as long the operations of the party are going on, and as soon as the party turns its back upon the locality, the pigs will come and ravage the fields. The district of East Khandesh is bordered by the Saptura range on the north, the Ajanta ghats on the south, the river Tapti runs through the heart and there are various forest places in the centre of the district. These natural aspects of the district provide a very strong resort to the wild pigs, and therefore, with all the good intentions of Government, these shooting parties will not be of any help in destroying wild pigs. Therefore, I would request the Honourable Minister in charge of this department to introduce the third method, which was recommended by Dr. Mann who, I suppose, was one of the members of the committee. He suggested that, instead of these two methods, property protection licenses should be issued on a liberal scale, and I was very glad to hear from the Honourable Minister in charge when he replied to a question asked by some honourable member from the Southern Division that such property protection licenses are given on a liberal scale. That was my impression, but I have got a very sad experience of this matter. As the president of the taluka development association, I recommended one application of an agriculturist, who is an enthusiastic member of the association, for a property protection license. The application was strongly recommended by the Deputy Director of Agriculture, Central Division, Mr. Patil, but the result was that the application was refused with the remark that the wishes of the applicant could not be complied with. If we are to be encouraged in this House only to be disappointed outside the House, I think this propaganda work will not be carried on and the pigs will never be destroyed at all. Sir, the wild pig is a very shrewd animal by instinct. If they find one of them killed, the whole herd will go and take shelter in the valleys adjoining, and as soon as the hunting party turns its back to the locality, they will come in numbers and destroy the fields. Therefore, I request the Honourable Minister that he should issue orders to the Collectors of the different districts immediately, so that we shall have no occasion next year to repeat the same sad story here. In East Khandesh nearly half of the cultivable area is brought under groundnut cultivation, and it is absolutely necessary, in the interest of the district, that such property protection licenses should be issued on a liberal scale.

Next, Sir, I have to make a few remarks about the veterinary staff. It may be efficient for the ordinary purposes and needs of daily life, but it is not efficient, or rather, it is insufficient to meet the demands when there is any outbreak of any epidemic. There was an epidemic of a cattle disease in East Khandesh. As a layman, I do not know the technicalities of this disease, but we call it in our language cholera to animal, and on account of this disease and on account of the want of efficient and timely help to the agriculturist, the district has been deprived of cattle worth Rs. 2 lakhs. The town of Jalgaon alone has been deprived of cattle worth Rs. 5,000, and I have heard that in the village of Manurabad 12 to 14 milch buffaloes died in a short a period of three days. Sir, I therefore bring this fact to the notice of the House. Though the number may not be increased there should be adequate provision made to save the cattle from the attacks of such epidemics. This loss of two lakhs of rupees is too much for the peasantry of East Khandesh to bear.

Before concluding I want to say one thing, and that is about the teaching of rural economy in the agricultural college. One professor, I do not know his name, but I think it was Mr. Gokhale, paid a visit to the model farm at Jalgaon, and while at Jalgaon he visited our association. There he put some questions to the secretary of our association, all of which were directed to the inquiry about the income side of the agriculturists in East Khandesh. I was present there and I asked him what was the object of his enquiry. He told me that the object of his enquiry was to teach rural economy to the students. Thereupon I told him that if his object was to give lessons to the agricultural college students on rural economy, he ought also to put questions about the expenditure side of agriculture in East Khandesh. But he replied that that did not concern him. Sir, if rural economy is to be taught, it should be taught in the right way. If only the income side of the agriculturists is shown to the students, wrong notions of agricultural income will be given to the students of the agricultural college, and the impressions created in their young brains would not be removed. I therefore point out to the Honourable Minister in charge that if this is the way in which rural economy is taught in the agricultural college, I think orders should be issued that that education should not be given in that defective way in which, as I understand from the conversation I had with the professor at Jalgaon, it is being given.

(After recess.)

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District): Sir, I wish to say a few words on behalf of my constituency. I fully associate myself with what has been said by the honourable member Mr. Chaudhari for Khandesh. I only want to add a few remarks to what he said. He said that immense loss is caused to the crops in his district by pigs. Besides the pigs, elephants, monkeys and other forest animals do immense harm to agriculture in my district. The crop protection committee has estimated that Rs. 7,50,000 is lost to the agriculturists on account of ravages by pigs. It is not a small amount if we compare it with the amount of assessment that the whole district pays. The total amount of assessment for the whole district is between 10 and 11 lakhs, while the damage caused by wild pigs is 7½ lakhs. The exact amount of the loss caused by elephants, monkeys and other wild animals is not known. The Minister for Forests the other day pointed out that destruction of monkeys in the district of Kanara is against the sentiments of the people. But I will point out to him that at the last District Co-operative Conference held at Kumta a resolution was moved and passed by the conference that a society should be formed for the purpose of hunting down the monkeys. This shows what the feelings of the people are as regards the destruction of monkeys. As regards the damages by wild elephants, Government have already given a reply that the damage is immense—I cannot quote the figure, but it was in reply to one of my questions. The Crop Protection Committee have recommended that gun licenses should be freely and liberally issued to forest villages for the protection of crops, but that has not been acted upon. I have pointed out in the course of my budget speech this year that the question is becoming a burning one in my district and that it should receive the attention of Government soon. This year a provision has been made for the destruction of wild pigs, but that is not at all sufficient. In addition to that, provision should have been made also for the destruction of elephants, monkeys and other forest animals. The best way to have the destruction done is by making provision for prizes for people who destroy the animals. Government should encourage people to destroy the animals by giving them small rewards. If that is done, it would be very beneficial to the people of the district, and the destruction would be completed in a short time without resort to the process of poisoning and other remedies.

As regards agricultural farms we have also a farm in my own district. The remarks made by my honourable friend (Mr. Chaudhari) may be taken to apply more or less to that farm also. With these words, Sir, I resume my seat.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, a reference was made to the insufficiency of veterinary assistant surgeons for the purpose of dealing with outbreaks of epidemics amongst cattle. Honourable members of this House are aware that it is a primary duty of local bodies to maintain veterinary dispensaries. However, Government have been assisting them considerably in this direction. Whenever a local body opens a new dispensary, Government gives it gratis the services of a veterinary assistant surgeon. Government also gives local bodies grants for the maintenance of the veterinary hospitals and for the purpose of constructing buildings. That is the position. Whenever any local body has come forward, Government has been ready to give them all this assistance. But I am sorry to say the local bodies do not come forward in the matter. Honourable members will see that amongst the new items there are demands for grants-in-aid for the construction of veterinary dispensaries, for the expansion of the cadre of veterinary assistants and for the revision of the grants for the maintenance of veterinary dispensaries. When Government receive requests from local bodies for additional grants for their dispensaries, Government have given them such grants. I am sorry to observe that under 34, Agriculture, the first two motions for reduction relate to these items. I hope the House will bear in mind that they are putting the Honourable Minister in charge in an awkward position by proposing such reductions. When a report is received of an epidemic among cattle, Government concentrate all their efforts in that direction. They do not leave the work to the assistant veterinary surgeon alone, but they send their inspectors and other staff to deal with the epidemic. From the provisions that have been made in this connection, they will find among others a provision for the purchase of serum for inoculating cattle against contagious diseases. That being the position, if honourable members move the local bodies to ask for help to open dispensaries, Government will be prepared to give such help.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA (Ahmedabad District): Sir, after the speech of my honourable friend I have very little to say. We spend a very large amount on this research work and yet the results remain only with the department itself. It does not percolate to the masses in whose benefit these researches are being carried. The leaflets are issued in English and I do not know of any agriculturist who is so ignorant of his vernacular as to be able to read English. The expenditure would have been more usefully incurred, if more leaflets were printed in the vernaculars. This presidency is frequently subjected to famine and the research should be carried on in the direction of finding out drought resisting crops and educating the people with regard to the cultivation of dry crops. For this purpose demonstrations in dry crop cultivation should be given in every taluka and preferably in every village, because if demonstrations are given in taluka headquarters, only some agriculturists take advantage of them. Therefore if this work is entrusted to agricultural associations with liberal grants so that they may be able to employ an agricultural graduate as their secretary then it will be easy to spread the useful results of research work in rural areas. Therefore my request to the Honourable Minister for Agriculture is to give more liberal donations to agricultural associations so that the results of the research work may be carried to the masses in the districts.

One more point that I wish to bring to the notice of the Honourable Minister in charge is that people at present find it difficult to find out the right officer for clearing any of their doubts or for getting the information they require. It would be advisable if the Honourable Minister notifies that such and such officer should be approached for such and such thing, so that without undue delay and correspondence, the inquiries may be made directly.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): Sir, I rise in order to express my views with regard to this department. I fully associate myself with the complaints made by the previous speakers as regards the meagre expenditure that is being incurred on this department. Calculating the revenue derived from this department, and the sum proposed to be spent I find that Government propose to spend only 4.5 per cent. over this department. That is an indication of the fact that the Government have not yet recognised and realized that agriculture is the key industry of this province.

Now, coming to the various activities of this department, I fail to see that any activity of this department is directed towards enquiring into the indebtedness of the agricultural classes. A question had been put regarding this point, but the Government replied that the trouble and time taken by such an enquiry into the economic condition of the agriculturists will not be commensurate with the benefit to be derived therefrom. I feel that without such an enquiry, it will be really impossible to effect any improvement in the condition of the agriculturists.

[Mr. L. B. Bhopatkar]

There is one thing to which I wish to draw the pointed attention of the Honourable Minister. The Deccan is going dry day by day. The expert opinion is that from year to year there has been and will be an appreciable decrease in the rainfall, and the decrease will continue till Maharashtra will be reduced to the position of the Sahara desert. I do not pretend to say one way or the other in regard to the expert opinion expressed as above, but this much I can say that during the last few years the rainfall in the presidency has not been the same as it used to be in olden times. I think that the Agricultural Department should investigate into the matter and should direct its attention towards the question of finding out the methods of conserving so far as possible the rainfall which the presidency gets each year. In this connection I may draw the attention of the Government to the experiments that have been successfully made in this respect in some parts of America. In some parts of America there is rainfall only in alternate years. And the rainfall of one year is conserved in such a way that it will be useful for the crops of the next year. I suggest that an attempt should be made in this direction in order to spread the knowledge among the agricultural classes as to how to utilise the little rainfall that they might get and how to preserve the moisture in the soil so as to enable them to nourish the crops of the next year. It is also noticeable that no serious attempt seems to have been made by the agricultural department for the diffusion of the requisite agricultural knowledge. I do not wish to cover the ground that has already been covered by the previous speakers in this behalf, but I do say that in spite of the long roll of the highly paid officers in this department, no serious attempts seem to have been made for the spread of that kind of knowledge among the agriculturists which would enable them to improve the quality of the soil and the crops grown therein at a minimum cost. I should like to make one suggestion in this connection to the Honourable Minister in charge of the department of agriculture and also to the Honourable Minister in charge of the education department, namely that inasmuch as education is to be handed over to the local boards in the immediate future, they should by mutual arrangement so alter and modify the text-books to be prescribed for the primary schools as to give the boys therein a considerably good idea as to the recent improvements in agriculture. My next suggestion is in regard to the breeding of the cattle. The Honourable Minister has stated that attempts have been made and some experiments have also been undertaken with a view to improve the breed of cattle. I do not know whether these improvements are in regard to the bullocks or whether they are also in regard to the milch cows; but in this connection I may draw his attention to the experiments that have been successfully made in America to improve the breed of milch cows, and the honourable members of this House might perhaps have read the accounts of the prize milch cows in America, which gave about forty thousand pounds of milk in a year including the dry period. The activities of the department should therefore be at least partially devoted to the improvement of the milch cows, and if honest efforts are made in that direction, I am sure that the agricultural department will be able to bring into existence such milch cattle as will be able to give, though not 40 thousand pounds per year at least approximately that quantity. These are the suggestions that I would like to make to the agricultural department in general and to the Honourable Minister in particular. Then the last suggestion that I wish to make is that whatever attempts may have been made to improve the staple food and specially the staple food of Maharashtra, I should say that it is one of the bounden duties of the agricultural department to improve first the nutritious elements in the staple food of the country. I do not feel from the information that I have gathered that there has been effected sufficient improvement in the nutritious elements of either the jwari or wheat or other staple food. The agricultural department should, therefore, also take into consideration its obligation to the presidency in this respect. Lastly, I hope that the Honourable Minister will seriously consider all the suggestions made above and will next year be able to show to this House a good record of the work done by him during the year.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, I support the motion. I agree with the previous speakers that in the agricultural department we are spending much less than we ought to. In fact when we entered the Council we spent about 30 lakhs and now we are spending 28 lakhs. Instead of progressing we are going back. That is not fair in a Ministerial department. The other day a remark was made that the transferred departments are starved and the reserved departments get more than enough. From this it is now clear that both the industries and the agricultural departments have been spending less than when we first entered this hall. Like the previous speakers I was also much disturbed with the host of Imperial officers. I say, Sir, that if any department deserved to be under the complete control of the Minister, it is the agricultural department. Even if there are European officers employed in that department, those officers should be under the control of the Minister. (An Honourable Member: They are.) They are not under the control of the Minister. Under the statute they are under the control of the Secretary of State. You cannot dismiss them if they go wrong. The salaries are also so high that in this poor country such large amounts of salaries to these officers in this department appear to be quite unnecessary, so their salaries also require to be lowered in many cases, especially as the result of their work is not quite satisfactory. Take for example the agricultural chemist. We have been maintaining this agricultural chemist for so many years, and what is he doing there? He is chiefly analysing water. Besides this work of analysing water he ought to perform many other duties. He should examine the composition of various manures, and he should find out the exact manure suited for a particular soil and crop, but he has not been doing all these, and even if he does it, he does it in an off-hand manner. So far as I have read the bulletins I have been wholly disappointed. While America is turning out one half and even one bale per acre, we are turning out only 80 pounds per acre. What does that show? With this 80 pounds per acre in competition with America how can we make profits? The same is the case as regards the other crops. The same is the case with wheat. It cannot pay us to grow wheat at the same price at which America sells it to England, and that price is as it were being forced on us, and that is the result why Indian cultivators are always in debt and are always impoverished, and live from hand to mouth. All this is due to one fact and one fact alone and that is the want of knowledge of agricultural economics. Nobody, whether he be a commercial magnate or a graduate of the university, knows agricultural or rural economics. We are taught in colleges economics that holds good so far as trade and industries are concerned, but so far as the agricultural industry is concerned we are completely kept in ignorance. While the agricultural colleges in foreign countries have chairs of agricultural economics, in our country, which is mainly agricultural out of policy, no chair for agricultural economics has been started. We want to know where we stand, where we and our lands stand at present. Prima facie, I have reason to believe that like the agriculturist himself his lands are also poor. They are poor, quite worn out, and they have to be rebuilt and organized under modern conditions. We want to know how that can be done. We believe that we grow more than Rs. 15 worth of produce and we get Rs. 13 or less for it. That is my knowledge about the exchange problem and I want to find out from competent authorities whether my knowledge is correct or not. That is what we want to know. I moved this very question—which is at the very root of all agricultural problems, namely, ignorance of rural economics—in the meeting of the Board of Agriculture that was held some two years back and suggested the creation of a chair of rural economics. But, unfortunately, I find that nothing appears to have been done in the matter. The sooner you do something, the better for the country. Take only one instance of my own district. If I grow two maunds more per acre, and I can assure you from my knowledge of agriculture that it is not impossible to grow two maunds more per acre, we can set that much of extra wealth in motion which will enable the presidency to have 100 new factories with a capital of one lakh each, that would be the result if the basic industry of your country is improved, and that could be done with more confidence, if the agriculturists are fully in possession of the knowledge that is required for the purpose. Another fact that I might perhaps mention for my honourable friend the Revenue Member is; we want to know what effect the land revenue has on the agricultural operations. Prima facie, I believe that land revenue depresses the prices of agricultural produce when the hapta or instalment time comes. When the time of paying instalments by the agriculturist comes, at a cheaper rate the produce is taken from us and that produce is sold to a foreign firm and naturally these foreign countries send their manufactured articles here with which we cannot compete. I have purposely made enquiries about the prices of our produce in London and Bombay, and, Sir, I find many times that the prices are actually cheaper in

[Rao Saheb D. P. Desai]

London than they are in Bombay! The produce we grow is cheaper in London and dearer in Bombay! What does that show? And how can any industry prosper in such circumstances? I see no reason, and I request my honourable friend the Member for Land Revenue just to look at this aspect and take it into consideration, and setting all other considerations aside he should take the opportunity of giving that protection which is necessary for the agriculturists. Government have given recently some protection to the mill and other industries, which are owned by about 2 or 3 per cent. of our countrymen, while they are not prepared to give that protection to the agricultural industry which is owned by 80 per cent. of our countrymen. The Agricultural Department has failed even in minor matters. Take, for instance, the recent frost. The effect of it could be prevented by spending about two pice per acre. They are preventing in England and other cold countries, and here the crops are lost on account of frost! There is permanent loss to the extent of crores of rupees to the country. I do not know whether our agricultural experts are able or not to predict these frosts, but in fact, in America and other places frosts are predicted at least some time before they come, and then proper measures are taken.....

Mr. F. G. PRATT: What measures? I understand the honourable member to say that frost is prevented in other countries. If so, I would very much like to know how.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Not the frost itself. Frost as a divine calamity cannot be prevented, but the effect on cultivation can be prevented. That can be done only by smoke. That is a simple thing which I am sorry the agricultural experts do not know about and do not go into. If anybody were to study agricultural economics, he would at once see that frost could be prevented by having small fires. It is quite as easy as anything, but no agricultural officer, though he may be drawing Rs. 2,000 or Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 700, has ever approached the question in the true spirit that it deserves. Of course, my only regret in this connection, Sir, is that Government being tardy first of all begins by not accepting or ignoring what is stated in this House on this side, but sooner or later after some mistakes they come to reason. And I do believe that Government does come to reason and sets matters right, just as in the Development Department we have found Government coming to reason. Though the faults of this scheme and its effect were predicted on this side—they were so predicted nearly four years back—no notice was taken of it.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: How did you know?

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: From my own experience and information. When this question of frosts is touched I venture to suggest that if the agricultural overseers were simply supplied with the special instrument—what that instrument is I do not know,—and if these overseers were kept in touch with the agricultural associations, perhaps associations themselves would move in the matter. But, unfortunately, whenever this Government does anything, it does it in a half-hearted fashion.

[Rao Saheb D. P. Desai]

We have started agricultural associations which require to be encouraged. Now, what do we find? Only Rs. 25,000 are provided for agricultural associations. That is a very small amount and deserves to be increased.

My honourable friend from Poona has touched upon the question of dry farming. Again, I say, Sir, that in the United States they get fine crops with only 7 inches rainfall. Here with 7 inches of rainfall we are having famine, famine operations and fodder storage, and all that. Is there any officer, any one officer among these officers drawing Rs. 1,700 and Rs. 600 and so forth from the national purse, who has taken charge of that matter? (Government Benches: Yes, yes.)

Of course, one may say that, but I do not see that any resolution or any bulletin has been issued by any of the officers up till now. The only point is that what is an academical question here, is an accomplished fact in other countries. What is in actual operation there is here simply an academical question, and I do not know whether any active or real steps have been taken by Government in that direction. Even when that question was touched, I could just see that it was done in an off-hand manner, but I am glad to learn now that Government have seriously taken that question into their hands and they have already appointed a man or sent a man to study the conditions there—I do not know which—but they have moved in the matter, and so far I do congratulate Government for taking this step. But when it is actually ready to be put in proper operation, you have to make the agriculturist just fit to receive those suggestions. If the agriculturist is living from hand to mouth—I say this specially to the Honourable the Revenue Member—in this country, you can never hope to put all those things into actual operation in this country, because I know that it is a costly operation as a lot of intercultural work has to be done by costly and rather heavy implements, which would require a team of very good bullocks, which would require some intelligence on the part of the agriculturist, and which would require enough capital with the agriculturist. And it is the want of capital that has contributed in a large measure to starve the agriculturist. You have first of all damaged his credit with the outside world by various legislations such as the Land Revenue Code and the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act. Otherwise, how is it that, with the best of securities behind him, that of landed property, he cannot get any advance of money at a rate of interest less than 20 to 40 per cent.? What does it show? He cannot get any money outside, and Government will not let him have money at a lower rate of interest than 8 per cent. which is a Marwadi rate of interest. It is a shame to them for having suppressed the village agriculturist's credit with the outside world, and, then standing in the shoes of the money-lender, willing to make profit out of transactions with the agriculturists. I thought that, and I still think that, as Government has brought them into this pass, Government would at least be kind enough to give them money not at a cheap rate of interest, but practically without interest, but unfortunately Government have not come forward to do so. By the bye, I say that with that view, and with that view alone, I had tabled certain amendments in the Co-operative Societies' Bill. Those amendments could not be moved, because His Excellency's permission was not to be had. His Excellency always goes on the advice of the Ministers. Under the statute, he is supposed to act on the advice of Ministers. Why should the Ministers give His Excellency wholly wrong advice? Why should the Minister not disclose to His Excellency the true state of the agriculturist? That is my charge against the Minister. If the Minister is still wise enough, I hope he will allow me to, or himself, if he be willing to, put those clauses into the Co-operative Societies' Bill. If those clauses are introduced, I think much of the difficulty of the agriculturists will vanish and co-operation will again expand in this country. At present, it is a sort of spoonfeeding affair. That is, a few gentlemen of the Co-operative Department or the Agricultural Department go to the villages, catch hold of a few villagers and ask them to form themselves into a co-operative society, and out of regard for them a society is brought into existence but they fail to convince the agriculturists; and I think the agriculturists are right. How can they attract cheap capital under the peculiar circumstances of their condition and the land tenure? Again the whole co-operative movement in this presidency is based on such non-co-operative principles that it is but natural that the agriculturist cannot understand it and as stated above, out of some regard for some other people, those agriculturists form themselves into a society, and those societies live in poverty at present, for those societies.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I know how long the honourable member is still going to take?

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I shall now conclude, Sir. For these co-operative societies, I had requested the Honourable Minister to do something in the way of Government help but that money is denied to him. Where should he go for money now? Government talk of introducing dry farming. How are they to do it, if the cultivator has no money? (An Honourable Member from the Government Benches: We have introduced it.) You have introduced it? You may introduce it in a village or two, but I do not know of any agricultural officer or overseer in my district having ever bothered himself about that affair.

I would again just request the honourable member to state where he got the figures from about the net proceeds per acre. I am glad that he has not referred to Surat; it is doubtful whether it is being worked at a profit there, but so far as Dharwar and Kumta and the other places are concerned, to which he has referred, I fail to understand from which budgets of the agriculturists he has culled out those profits. Personally, I am of opinion that to have so much profit out of that seed is doubtful. With these remarks, I support the motion.

An Honourable MEMBER: Sir, I move for a closure.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: (Rose).

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am very much inclined to accept the closure.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Just as you please, Sir.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : The honourable member (Mr. Mehta) may be allowed to make some answer to the points, Sir.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Just as you please, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : We have got a lot of work to go through. I will therefore accept the closure and call upon the honourable mover to reply.

Mr. S. S. DEV (West Khandesh District) : Sir, so many suggestions and recommendations have been made, and so many complaints and accusations have been showered on the head of the Honourable Minister that I think my purpose has been amply served. I simply wanted to give an occasion to criticise the department. That purpose has been fully served. I do not wish to hear any half-hearted explanations from the Honourable Minister given simply with the object of whitewashing the department. I am persuaded to give him one year more to submit satisfactory explanations. I would therefore withdraw my motion.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : If there is one dissenting voice it will prevent your withdrawing your motion. I do not think it is quite fair to withdraw at this stage. Government have the right of reply, and the honourable member may withdraw his motion after the reply is given.

Mr. S. S. DEV : Very well, Sir.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir, I am grateful to the honourable member who has moved this amendment, because it has given an opportunity to a number of members in this honourable House to discuss the question, throw light on it, and bring forward for the consideration of Government all the needs of the people, and the defects of the department. There is no doubt, and I need hardly assure honourable members, that all these suggestions made by them here will receive the best consideration of Government. And I can give no better proof of the best intentions of Government than by stating the real fact, that it was at the initiation of His Excellency himself that an ambitious programme was about to be prepared, which was very sympathetically supported by the Honourable the Finance Member, but Government could in the end only ask for a grant, which could be asked in our present financial circumstances. But the activities of the department are not at a standstill. Every effort will be made to meet all those points which have been made out by the honourable members, and the progress that the department needs will be made as circumstances permit.

There are several points which have been made, but I shall allude very briefly to the salient and important ones. The department has a number of officers both European and Indian who are very sincerely and deeply interested in every branch of the department and every interest of the agriculturists, and they are doing their utmost to meet the needs of the province. It is alleged that this department is officered by a large number of men. But a careful examination will show that every man is in his proper place, and that each and every officer is necessary to solve the many problems which are connected with the department. If however I find that it is possible to dispense with the services of any, Government will not be tardy in seeing that any burden of that kind is removed from the department. But the one important mission of the department is to carry the information that the department collects with such pains and trouble to the doors of the agriculturist so that he may benefit by them. We have this year provided as much as could be provided for, for research and propaganda work. The chair of economics, which has been alluded to, is already under the consideration of Government and it is possible that I may have to approach the honourable House for a supplementary demand on that account.

A lot has been said about wild pigs. Government have done, are doing, and are going to do a good deal in that direction. A large amount has been asked for that in addition to what is provided for in the current year. Every effort is being made to see that the pig pest is done away with. But honourable members will bear in mind pigs are after all pigs, and we shall have to meet the difficulty as best as we can. The honourable House need not however remain under the hope that Government will be able to give a wonderful record of their work in that respect next year. Every effort will be made to see that the pig pest diminishes.

Now, coming to the subject of preserving the moisture of the soil, so that better results in produce can be shown, the honourable member Mr. Bhopatkar stated that he feared that the Deccan might go dry in course of time. The Honourable the Finance Member in his opening speech has already pointed out that there is an officer busily engaged in the neighbourhood of Poona, examining how moisture could be preserved, and how the producing capacity of the soil could be increased. When the results of his investigations are known Government will consider whether that activity should be developed.

Then there are so many other questions raised, and if I were to deal with them all, it would take too much time of the honourable House. I have pointed out to honourable members that in every one of the directions they have pointed out Government are doing their best. There is just one point I should like to touch upon, and that is the capacity of cows to give better and larger quantity of milk. That is also being attended to. Effort is being made in every direction to see that cows in this presidency produce more milk than they are doing.

As to an enquiry into the indebtedness of agriculturists, that question is being considered. It is a huge question. It is an all-India question, and is being considered everywhere in India; and in due time I hope honourable members will find that something tangible is done in this presidency also.

The various cuts and amendments that were proposed have been withdrawn. I think and so does the House now, that the money provided for this department is really not enough for the needs of the department. It is therefore a source of satisfaction to me that the motions have been withdrawn. That provides a sufficient answer to the other speakers who moved for cuts.

The last speaker, the honourable member from Kaira has pointed out a number of things, but one wonderful thing he pointed out was that the mist which ruined crops could be avoided by expending two pies. Well, if that is so, I shall take care and request the Director of Agriculture on his behalf to spend the few pies during the next year, and see if that method is of any real value.

The figures I have quoted regarding the benefits accruing to agriculturists in Dharwar on account of the introduction of improved cottons are figures to be relied upon. They are reliable figures. The two varieties of cotton which are being grown in Dharwar really give a good profit to the agriculturists.

Sir, as I said, if every little point that has been raised were to be answered it would be taking too much time of the honourable House. It will suffice if I conclude by saying that Government are doing their utmost to meet the needs and interests of the agricultural population of the country.

Mr. S. S. DEV : Sir, I may be allowed to withdraw the motion.

Question put and leave granted.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir, I move for the grant of the total demand of Rs. 24,48,000 for Agriculture and Civil Veterinary Services (Transferred).

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I beg to move for a grant of Rs. 26,00,000 for Public Health (Transferred).

Question proposed.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (Eastern Sind) : Sir, I beg to move :

"That the detailed head 33a Public Health Laboratory for Sind Rs. 30,000 be omitted."

I want this item to be omitted firstly on the ground that the laboratory is turning out very small amount of work. If we see further down on page 186 we will find a provision of Rs. 2,000 made for the health laboratory in Poona. My honourable friend for Poona has tabled a question with regard to this laboratory for Sind and has asked for the return of work turned out by this laboratory. I am sorry no information has yet been given with regard to this question. My information is that the laboratory at Karachi is not turning out as much work as the one in Poona and that the laboratory at Poona is turning ten times more work than that at Karachi. Still while a provision of Rs. 32,000 is made for the Poona laboratory, Rs. 30,000 is demanded for the Karachi laboratory.

The second ground is that I am told there is another laboratory at Karachi, which is a chemical analyser's laboratory. I am told that this laboratory in addition to its usual work is also doing the work which this public health laboratory is expected to do. I am told that this Chemical Analyser's laboratory is more efficient. On these grounds I consider that this laboratory should not be maintained.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, in 1916, the Director of Public Health submitted a comprehensive scheme for the bacteriological and chemical examination of drinking water in the presidency including Sind. The scheme could not be given effect to for want of funds. In 1919 Government, however, sanctioned the opening of the laboratory in Karachi. The continuance of the laboratory was in the beginning sanctioned from year to year. As the laboratory has been doing useful work, its continuance has been sanctioned as an independent institution until experience under the proposed Adulteration of Foodstuffs Act has been gained. When that Act comes into force in Karachi, the officer in charge of this laboratory will become the public health analyser under the Act, which will only be workable if there are laboratories of the kind to deal with samples. The local bodies in Sind have been advised to take advantage of the laboratory instead of starting laboratories of their own. The Karachi municipality gives an annual grant of Rs. 1,200 to the laboratory and in course of time other local bodies will be induced to take advantage of this laboratory and perhaps they too will contribute towards the maintenance of this laboratory. The work done at the laboratory is of a varied nature. A daily bacteriological and chemical examination of the Karachi water supply is carried out throughout the year. Samples of water are also received regularly for examination from several towns and places in Sind. Similarly samples of food as well as pathological specimens are also examined. In 1923 an outbreak of Ankylostomiasa (hook-worm) amongst the sewage-farm workmen was investigated at the laboratory. Investigations were also made of intestinal protozoa connected with fevers in Sind. In short, examination is carried out of various miscellaneous matters which it would be quite difficult to send down to the Bombay Bacteriological Laboratory, as the latter is too far distant to be of any use. The need of a laboratory is therefore much felt in a province like Sind.

As to the objections raised by my honourable friend the mover of this motion that the laboratory in Poona is turning out much better work than the one at Karachi, I think I shall have to compare the figures. It does not mean thereby that the laboratory at Karachi is not wanted. As a matter of fact it is doing good work and useful work, because it is utilized by many municipalities for testing water. Water analysis and other bacteriological work is of very great importance. When the Adulteration of Foods Act comes into force, which will soon be the case, this laboratory will be of very great importance because unless there is such a laboratory, the samples of food cannot be analysed and the Act cannot be worked in the province of Sind. As a matter of fact, I do not think there is another laboratory in Karachi; but even if there be one.....

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: Is the Honourable Minister sure?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: So far as I know, I do not think there is another. Even if there is one, this will be necessary, because the chemical laboratory will not take up work from local bodies. This laboratory is intended to assist local bodies as well as private persons.

[Mr. B. V. Jadhav]

If it is not doing the necessary amount of work, it will require looking into. I promise the House to look into the question and do the needful. But I think this laboratory is necessary and that the motion should be rejected.

Dr. M. M. MEHTA (Surat City) : Sir, I support the motion that has been moved by my honourable friend Mr. Joshi. My purpose in doing so is to elicit further information from the Honourable Minister in charge on the subject. It has been stated that this laboratory is an additional one in Sind. If there is already one laboratory there I do not think that another laboratory should be opened there. I find in the budget that provision has been made for two chemical examiners but the account shows provision for one only. I know that there already exists one chemical examiner in Bombay and I don't find in the Blue Book any mention of Karachi. If the latter is correct I should certainly advise my friend to withdraw the motion. But I do not understand how there can be two chemical examiners ; if one of them is meant for Karachi, it altogether makes a different case for supporting my honourable friend Mr. Joshi's motion. So this requires some explanation. And if the explanation is satisfactory that there is only one chemical examination at Bombay and none at Karachi, then this new item is justified. But if the explanation is not satisfactory I will support the motion for omission.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : Mr. President, I do not know how my honourable friend from Khandesh, Mr. Joshi, has got this information from Sind. (Mr. P. G. Joshi : From my friends there.) It is a very great distance from East Khandesh to Sind and I think that my honourable friend is rather misinformed. The laboratory at Karachi is really speaking in its infancy. But if in Poona the laboratory is doing good work or turns out ten times better work than the laboratory at Karachi, the argument would cut both ways. Because it would suggest that in order to enable the Karachi Laboratory to do better work, more funds should be provided. Sir, in a matter like this which is essentially for the benefit of the people, I do not think that the House would be justified in passing this motion. The House may certainly give further instruction to the Minister for improving the laboratory there and getting the worth of the money. I will therefore oppose the motion and I hope it will be rejected.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : I rise, Sir, to support the motion and with reasons too. Nor do I think that the Honourable Minister himself is very serious about it. He had to explain and therefore he had to deliver a written speech for that purpose. He explained the continuance of it, but I respectfully submit to the House that on page 189 public health laboratory is shown as temporary. It is headed by the word " temporary ". It is stated there, one officer in charge (a member of the bacteriological department), etc., and the whole provision is made 30,000. So, Sir, this temporary department has been started as the Honourable Minister says since 1919, then it is high time either to make up his mind that it should cease to be temporary and if he has not made up his mind whether it should cease to be temporary, and if for the five years that it has been in existence there is no reason to consider its existence as a permanent department, I do not think that there is any further necessity for the existence of that laboratory at Karachi. I think the Honourable Minister, if he inquires, will find that there is a chemical analyser at Karachi, a separate department where all the blood specimens or instruments or clothes which form the subject-matter of criminal cases are sent for examination. It is not the public health laboratory to which these are sent in Karachi and therefore there is, to the best of my information which the Minister is in a position to contradict if he can, a chemical laboratory there and the chemical analyser who can do the little work that this laboratory has to do there. Now, even the Honourable Minister while justifying the existence of this laboratory could only find one small justification and that was that specimens of water are at present being received from Karachi and nothing further. Sir, daily 365 specimens are being received from Karachi and the other municipalities are also expected to send, but that they have not yet begun to send them. Sukkur has not as yet sent any, nor do the other municipalities need to send any, nor have they the desire to pay money, because this laboratory won't do the work without payment nor will the other municipalities or local bodies care to send specimens with money to Karachi. If they do, Sir, then there will be the amounts that our municipalities will contribute towards its up-keep which the municipalities in Sind are in no financial position to do, and no Government can compel to maintain out of their own funds a laboratory of this kind only for the purpose of analysing water, to determine what? I will tell you what is required is chlorinated water, which is available in almost every municipality of Sind, water purified with alum and chlorine which no municipality ever cares to get done because it is not necessary. Then the laboratory has to say what is the percentage of bacilli of this little insect in the water. A certain amount of bacilli is allowed. It is good for the health of the town and for the health of the water itself, but beyond that per square inch is considered inadvisable. That is the whole function that this laboratory might do for any municipality but no municipality is anxious to do it, and I may tell the Honourable Minister that he need not expect the municipalities to support it, at least the Sukkur municipality will refuse to do that. Now if all these facts exist, I may also inform the Honourable Minister, he must have got them himself, that this specimen analysis for 12 months amounts to about 1,000 altogether, I can be excused the mistake of dot or two dots, compared with the Poona laboratory, the health laboratory which does about 12 to 13 times as much. I do not think that at any distant time Sind will contribute, even after the Adulteration of Foodstuffs Act is passed, any larger number of specimens for analysis. It would be very interesting if the Honourable Minister had told us how many specimens of adulterated articles specially ghee have been submitted at any time to the laboratory at Karachi. It will be interesting to know whether adulterated articles have even been submitted to the Karachi health laboratory, specimens which under the law so far as ghee is concerned can be submitted to it because there is section 142 of the Municipal Act. But I do not think that more than five or six for the last three or four years have been submitted to this laboratory: and if a laboratory is to be kept simply for the purpose of making the municipalities or expecting the municipalities to send specimens which hereafter may come into force under the Act, if it is to be kept only for about one thousand specimens to be analysed every year which means 3 a day, half an hour's work, because each specimen won't take more than an hour, if the Honourable Minister thinks that this expenditure of Rs. 30,000 is justified by these figures which I think he must have on his record, then the House will say nothing. If this is the justification I think the Honourable Minister may as well remove the whole establishment under the word temporary because he is not satisfied that it should cease to be temporary.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh District): Sir, my honourable friend from Poona (Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmad) wants to know how I possess the information regarding the laboratory which is situated at Karachi. I may surprise him by telling him, Sir, that I have spent five years myself at Karachi and I have several friends at Karachi, and therefore I am very much interested in matters which particularly relate to Karachi. The Honourable Minister by this time knows that there is a chemical analyser's laboratory at Karachi. When that fact is there and reports have also been issued to members of this House, regarding the chemical analyser's laboratory, the question is whether this public health laboratory should be maintained in addition to that laboratory. Sir, no reply has been given to my remarks that even the Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay is not in favour of maintaining this laboratory, and I am also told that even the Commissioner in Sind is of opinion that this laboratory should not be maintained. In the face of all these things, I think that this chemical analyser's laboratory should alone be maintained and my motion to omit this item of Rs. 30,000, which is provided for public health laboratory at Karachi should be passed.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, I now learn that there is a chemical analyser's laboratory, which works for Government and does not take private work or work of local bodies. So a laboratory for both these purposes is necessary. As for the question of my honourable friend whether the Surgeon General has made a report about the abolition of the public health laboratory, I can only say that that report has not yet come to me and I know nothing about it. But I assure the House that I do not want to have two laboratories in one and the same place and I shall try to reduce the establishment as much as possible. The House will admit the necessity of a public health laboratory in these days. The Poona laboratory, for instance, is doing very good work and nobody will propose its abolition, and when the Adulteration of Foodstuffs Act comes into force, the existence of such a laboratory will be essential. It may also be pointed out that the municipality of Ahmedabad has been urging upon Government the starting of such a laboratory in that city and has offered to pay half the cost. This shows the necessity of such a laboratory. I assure the House that the whole amount provided in the budget will not be spent and I shall try to save money as much as possible and to reduce the expenditure and also to reduce the staff if possible.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh District): In view of the explanation and the assurance given by the Honourable Minister, I would like, Sir, to withdraw the motion.

Question put and leave granted.

Mr. S. S. DEV (West Khandesh District): Sir, I move that the votable portion of expenditure on Public Health be reduced by four lakhs.

My reason for making this motion is apparent from the White Book, page 186. The accounts for the year 1923-24 show the amount to be Rs. 19 lakhs and odd; the budget for the current year is Rs 24 lakhs and odd; and now for the next year we are going to provide Rs. 29,60,000 for this department of Public Health. So every year we are rapidly increasing our expenditure. Of all the departments of Government I believe this department will stand foremost in its top-heaviness. If you turn over pages 186 to 199 of the White Book and go over all the officers and their salaries, you will find that there is one officer in this department who carries over Rs. 3,000 that is more than the Director and is called the Medical Research Officer. It was at one time thought that this was a new officer, but it transpired that his designation had been changed and he had been transferred from one sub-head to another. Perhaps this is an officer over the head of the Director of Public Health, who only draws Rs. 2,400 and the Medical Research Officer carries Rs. 3,000. This looks as if it were a department of officers. There are four officers who carry more than Rs. 2,000 a month, about thirteen officers who draw up Rs. 1,000 or thereabouts, and sixteen officers drawing less than Rs. 1,000, omitting of course the Superintendents and Assistant Superintendents and Inspectors and others. Of the total expenditure of Rs. 29 lakhs which has been provided, about Rs. 13 lakhs, that is to say, about half the amount is carried by the officers and their staff. Probably of this Rs. 13 lakhs a greater portion is carried by the officers themselves and the rest by the staff. Rs. 9 lakhs only are reserved for grants and Rs. 4 or Rs. 5 lakhs for miscellaneous works. And what is the work that these three dozens of officers are doing? Of the work that these officers do we have a good sample in the latest report of the Public Health Department, which is for the year 1923 and not for 1924, although we are in the year 1925. I hope to show you, Sir, from this report, that this Director and these Assistant Directors of Public Health have really very little work to do. The same cannot be said of the superintendents of laboratories, but of the Director and his Assistant Directors this annual report for the year 1923 gives a very poor account. For instance, I refer to the work done by the assistant directors in the year under report and I would draw your attention to page 40 of that report, and I will ask the Honourable Minister whether this is really a satisfactory state of things, whether this is really sufficient work for an assistant director to do. I will not read the whole of it, I will simply read the relevant portion believing that the Honourable Minister in charge of the department is in possession of all these facts. Here is a brief summary of the advice given by Assistant Directors in sanitary matters.

"Amalner and Malegaon:—Public latrines for males and females were provided; Bhusawal, Faizapur, Dhulia and Hubli—constructed new gutters; Nandurbar—constructed one open drain 600 ft. in length; Igatpuri—constructed a new drain at a cost of Rs. 2,185 and conducted a rat campaign at a cost of Rs. 454; Bandra—repaired the dumping ground for sullage on the creek at Bunderwadi and laid a cast-iron pipe drain at a cost of Rs. 1,811 to discharge sullage below ebb-tide level. A one-ton motor vehicle for removal of the town sweepings was purchased."

All this to the credit of the Assistant Director of Public Health.

"Matheran—Some latrines in the catchment area of Lake Charlotte were reconstructed Belgaum—acquired land for trenching night-soil on the Nasik system."

All to his credit.

"Gokak, Saundatti, Bail-Hongal, Haveri, Bijapur and Bagalkot—removed prickly pear."

What a heavy work for an Assistant Director to direct and advise?

"Guledgud, Karwar and Anand—purchased sanitary implements. Kapadvanj, Mehmedabad and Tatta—made improvements to wells. Nadiad—spent Rs. 231-7-7 in constructing 6 blocks of latrines."

And so on and so on. This is the work that stands to the credit of these Assistant Directors of Health. Is that sufficient work I ask. Why entertain so many officers if there is not sufficient work for all? This is with regard to municipal towns. Coming to Sanitary Committees' Areas we find that the Assistant Directors of Health visited 38 Sanitary Committees' Areas and gave them advice. I give you, Sir, a few examples of the work done by these bodies upon that advice.

"The Nampur Committee sterilized wells with potassium permanganate, Pimpalgaon Baswant and Mahim constructed gutters. Goregaon removed silt from the wells. Birvadi paved streets. Mahar arranged to get a well bored. Soapir, Khahi, Rahu, Khorewah, Samro and Khipro made improvements to wells. Bhiria provided 15 houses with cess-pools."

It may excite your laughter, but this is the work that stands to the credit of these officers. Here is a department which I emphatically maintain is very topheavy. Next to this department perhaps comes the Agricultural Department, but of all the departments under Government this is a department which is really an eyesore to me because of its unnecessary highly paid officers. I have counted all the officers, and I have counted the salaries that they get and looking to the petty work that they do or have to do, I submit that the Honourable Minister in charge may see his way to cut down half the number of these officers.

Mr. F. G. PRATT: Sir, the objections raised by my honourable friend opposite remind me of the objections which I have met with in the course of my municipal experience to the appointment of public health officers in urban areas. I could tell this House of a municipal area, with a population of 40,000, which seriously came to the conclusion that the appointment of a competent and qualified health officer would be a useless extravagance. Well, Sir, I can only say that the readiness to expend money on purposes connected with public health is a very fair index of the intelligence and civilisation of the responsible authorities. Now, the argument put forward in that municipal area was : " What do we want with a 400, or 500 or 600 rupees health officer ? Look round our streets, look at the conditions of our purlieus and the outlying fields surrounding this town : let us economise, let us do without a health officer ; let us employ instead of a health officer a staff of Bhangis ". That was the argument. They said " The proper health officers for our community, for our town are the Bhangis ; those are the people whom we should go in for ; do not let us have high paid officers." That is typical of the backward and unintelligent attitude in respect of these matters. People who argue like that do not understand that it is not enough to have executive hands for public health administration, but it is also necessary to have trained, qualified and expert brains, and those you cannot buy at the salaries which will enable you to increase your staff of Bhangis or sweepers.

Now, Sir, my honourable friend opposite created a great deal of amusement by reading a list of the works which were performed by the sanitary committees. These sanitary committees exist in small villages, and their funds are limited.

Mr. S. S. DEV : On a point of correction, Sir. I did not merely read the list of works done by the sanitary committees, but I read the list of works undertaken by the committees at the advice given by the assistant directors of public health.

Mr. F. G. PRATT : I heard my honourable friend read out a long list of works constructed by these sanitary committees, including such humourous items as latrines, urinals and things of that kind, and he said that the credit for these works is to be given to the assistant directors of public health. The credit of these works is to be given to the sanitary committees. They very likely could not pay for anything more important than that. I have not the smallest doubt that the assistant directors of public health give local sanitary committees a great deal of advice which does not fructify, because such advice will not fructify unless it is given to people who are intelligent enough and civilised enough to put it into practice. It is no use throwing seed upon barren ground. We hope that these assistant directors of public health will sometimes throw their seed, fruitful advice, upon ground where it will take root and grow up into something really useful, but in any case the blame does not lie at their door if their advice is not translated into action by the sanitary committees. The honourable member invites us to believe that these assistant directors of public health are perfectly useless consumers of high salaries, who give no benefit to the district in which they work. I entirely contradict that from my own experience. In some of the newly constituted district boards, an interesting step in advance has been taken of the appointment of public health committee. and I hold in my hand here a very interesting account of a long meeting and discussion between the public health committee of the district of

[Mr. F. G. Pratt]

Broach and the assistant director of public health. The president of that district local board is a member of this House, though I do not see him in his place at this moment--I refer to the Thakorsaheb of Kerwada—and it was quite clear from the account of those proceedings that the public health committee of that district saw their way very clearly and looked forward with some hope and confidence to making a good deal of use of the expert knowledge and advice of the assistant director of public health. The committee brought to the notice of the assistant director of public health the fact that for some untraceable reasons the population of some Hindu villages was decreasing, and it was highly desirable and necessary that the reasons for this must be traced out. The assistant director of public health promised to work out the problem, and the public health committee promised to give him all assistance in furnishing him with the data necessary for the solution of the problem. Then again the question was discussed of the extreme congestion which so often prevails in villages, owing to the fact that the cultivated land presses right up to the edge of the old village site. The village population goes on increasing and increasing, and consequently the houses become very seriously overcrowded. The population suffers in various ways, owing to that overcrowding. Not only are the houses overcrowded and the people suffer from tuberculosis and all the diseases which overcrowding and lack of ventilation produce, but even the streets are overcrowded. There is no proper provision for such necessities as play grounds, no open spaces. Children have to play their games on the streets in and out of the heels of cattle, for which there have been no communal cattle stands provided. There are not one but twenty different ways in which improvements could be introduced in a village at a matter of small cost, provided you bring to bear upon the problems of that village the trained and expert intelligence of a sympathetic officer as the assistant director of public health who will meet people and discuss with them their needs and wants.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Who meets them ?

Mr. F. G. PRATT: The assistant director of public health, about whom I was talking just now. He met the district board public health department.

Then, Sir, is it fair to contend that the director of public health is useless, when we compare, for instance, the present condition of the pilgrim town of Pandharpur with the conditions which used to prevail in that town ten or fifteen years ago, when it was a public danger not only to the whole of Maharashtra but even to distant Calcutta, on account of the wholesale dissemination of epidemic disease which used to proceed from that centre owing to the absence of that expert intelligence of superior officers, which my honourable friend opposite reprehends? I venture to suggest to him that for the sum of money which we pay for the services of that assistant health officer he might have employed an army of 200 sweepers, but the work done would not have had the same result.

[Mr. F. G. Pratt]

Another fact. I wish to tell the House of a most interesting and important investigation conducted largely at the instance of one of my Northern Division Collectors, who for years past has taken a keen and much more than an amateur interest in the great and urgent problem of malarial prevention. He has worked up that problem in many, at least in three, different districts. He saw the terrible conditions that prevailed during the monsoon months of the year in that outpost of civilization in the Northern Division, which is known as the Dangs forest area. He saw how practically the whole of that population—not only the villagers, but everybody, the villagers and the officials up to the collector and the political agent themselves—were victims and martyrs to the severe type of epidemic malaria which prevails in that tract. The efficiency of labour is reduced by probably 60, 70 or 80 per cent. owing to the prevalence of malaria. Well, Sir, the assistant director of public health went into the Dangs, and with the assistance of local officers thoroughly familiar with the conditions, he made a thorough investigation of the problem. It might perhaps interest the Council to be told that incautiously he started by taking blood tests from the children in the villages. He had to give that up, because it was very likely that if he had continued to do that, the Bhils in the Dangs might have burned his tent and slain him, thinking that his operations were to cover some sinister plan for human sacrifice, for taking the children and sacrificing their lives. So he had to tackle the problem in a different way. He contented himself with spleen investigation. Well, the result of his work was that we have got now a report which I hope may prove of interest to India as a whole and go a step in advance towards the solution of the urgent problem of malarial epidemic in rural India, a problem which in other Eastern countries—I am thinking of the Federated Malay States—has been carried very much further towards solution than probably most members of this House would consider it to be possible.

Sir, I do not think I have much to add in defence of these officers whom my honourable friend describes as incubuses. I hope the House will decide by its vote which of the two types of health officers they prefer, whether they prefer the health officer on Rs. 12 or Rs. 15, the humble sweeper, or whether they prefer to have an admixture of brains together with the humble executive capacity of the lower ranks of the department.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University) : Sir, I rise to defend that barbarism which regards these highly paid officers as octopuses absolutely useless for the country. I hold the view, Sir, that the issue which has been raised by the honourable member for Khandesh is a simple one and should not be confused with the levity which the honourable Commissioner for the Northern Division has imported into this debate. The plain issue is this. Here you find half the amount provided in the budget spent on the salaries of a few highly paid officers. The issue which the honourable member has raised is clear and it has to be answered straight and not treated with ridicule by doubting the intelligence and the civilization of those who hold the contrary view, as the honourable the

[Mr. M. R. Jayakar]

Commissioner for the Northern Division has done. Having regard to the comparatively simple problems of our village sanitation and public health, the Minister of Education owes an explanation to this House why half the salaries are spent on these useless octopuses which spread their tentacles over the poor people of the country. That issue has to be judged on its merits without importing motives or doubting the intelligence and civilisation of those, who, like myself, are barbarous enough to imagine that these people are absolutely unnecessary in the districts. Sir, their existence has been defended on the ground that they are "experts." We know how expert reputations are made in India, especially by those who come from outside the country. Do we not know of the "expert" bungling in Poona in drainage some years ago, from which the people of Poona are still suffering? Do we not know of the "expert" advisers of the Bombay Improvement Trust, from which people suffered for long? Do we not know of the "expert" activity of the Development Department of which we hear so much in this Council? Whenever the word 'expert' is used in my hearing, I get very suspicious especially if the expert comes from outside. I have learned to understand the word 'expert' in the language of Anglo-India, as a subjantevala, a man who understands everything. All those varied topics from the educational portfolio to gutters, these "experts" are supposed to know. I therefore want to put it to the Minister for Education a very plain question—some honourable members may doubt about my intelligence, civilization and culture for putting that question—Why are these officers necessary, having regard to the simple way in which our villagers live? I certainly hold the view, and I congratulate that municipality, to which the honourable the Commissioner for the Northern Division referred, for holding the view that twenty bhangis are far more useful to the countryside than one highly paid officer! I certainly belong to that class of people who believe that a bhangi is more useful to a village than a highly paid officer who poses as an expert. Where is the occasion for this expert knowledge in the villages? I can understand a very highly evolved organisation in an advanced European country where problems arise of health and sanitation which require expert knowledge and expert consideration. I have seen such communities myself, miles and miles removed from India. May I know why so much ridicule should be poured on us who believe that our village life is so simple and our problems are so free from complexity that we do not want these highly paid experts at all?

Mr. F. G. PRATT: What is the mortality in rural areas?

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: I am not concerned with the mortality. I am doubting the wisdom of employing in villages these experts and paying them half the amount of the whole cost of the department. The issue is plain and simple. I know that there are questions for which experts are wanted. I have seen their use. I shall give one instance: I am not talking without my book. In the Pandharpur fair and in other similar big melas experts are very useful. But may I know, how many occasions arose during the last year when these experts were found necessary? May I appeal to the Honourable Minister for Education to state categorically, within the whole of the last year, how many occasions arose when these experts were required to give expert advice? What does the word 'expert' mean? What are his duties and how often is he called on to act as an expert to the simple village folk? I have no doubt that we shall considerably soften our opposition if the Honourable Minister will give, without indulging in levity and ridicule, a straight answer to my plain question. It is somewhat amusing to find one highly paid officer justifying the necessity of another highly paid officer. But I do want the Honourable Minister to state on how many days during the year these officers devote themselves to give the people expert advice and on how many days they have to do the work which an ordinary officer can as well do. If, on a review of a year's work, I am satisfied and my honourable friends are satisfied that the normal life of these people, I would not say abnormal, is spent in giving expert advice which the community needs, I will withdraw my opposition. In short what we want to know is how far this department is justified in permanently maintaining such highly paid officers. I am sorry that the Honourable the Commissioner, Northern Division, thought it right to indulge in ridicule, and I will take the liberty of saying that if the spirit of his unfortunate speech indicates the temper of these officers who work in our villages, then I see no hope for them. I ask whether these officers sympathetically inquire into the difficulties of the village people and go about offering their aid and advice, after placing themselves on the same pedestal as the people themselves? I consider that it is their duty to go about, doing their work in quiet sympathy, inducing the people gradually to understand their point of view and not to claim to stand on a superior pedestal of civilisation, intelligence or culture as the Commissioner, Northern Division, does. I therefore want to get from the Honourable Minister an answer to this simple question as to how far these people possess expert knowledge, and how far that expert knowledge was found necessary or useful during the last year, and how far it was kept within the means of those people on whom these officers have been thrust. These are simple questions and I hope the Honourable Minister will answer them without equivocation.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I thank the honourable member the Commissioner, Northern Division, for having excited by his speech a mentality of opposition, a mentality born of self-respect in every member on this side of the House which he values most. I thank the honourable member for having openly made the allegation that many municipalities are uncivilised and I thank him for styling himself as belonging to one of the civilised nations of the world. If the honourable member the Commissioner wants instances to be quoted where municipalities have eschewed and rejected health officers and replaced them by sanitary inspectors, I will give him an instance from my own experience, because I am the president of one myself. There are other municipalities, besides, which have done so. With the concurrence of a civilised I.C.S. collector, and with the concurrence of a more civilised I.C.S. commissioner, for both of whom I have great regard, I have done away with this officer. As regards the assistant directors of public health I regret there has been no information before this House for the last 3 years. An enquiry was held as regards the work performed by these officers. An assistant director of public health came to give evidence. The Director of Public Health was asked to give in detail the duties of these officers. Surgeon General Jennings who commands the respect of Indians and Europeans alike gave us the list of duties of the officers. I shall give you the opinion of the Surgeon General who is responsible for the health of the people of the whole presidency. He was of opinion that a separate health department was unnecessary for this presidency, and that it should be placed under the Surgeon General.

One of the great duties of the assistant director of public health is to prepare statistics of births and deaths in this presidency. The collection of the same statistics is then repeated again in the office of the Director of Public Health—a duplicate process. This was admitted by the Health Department. In the examination the assistant director told us that the other work they have to do was to tour round the country. I shall give an instance as to how they tour, how they inspect and how they do their work. I give the instance of Sukkur. In the company of the chief officer of the local authority, he walks round the town. They tour round the place in half a day and then go away. That is the great work they do in a municipal area. I challenge any Commissioner on the other side of the House to show me a single report where the assistant director has suggested the means and methods of removing congestion in towns that the honourable Commissioner talked so much of.

The prevention of the epidemics or presence at the time of epidemics at two or three fairs in all these three divisions of the presidency is another function : there are only four fairs held, in all, at three or four places in the presidency, apart from Sind. If, for the purpose of these three or four fairs, not exceeding six in the whole presidency, four directors of public health are necessary to advise the local bodies, I submit that the appointment is unjustified. There ought to be a proper sense of proportion, not on paper as the honourable member the Commissioner, Northern Division, read, not to the uncivilised and boorish people as he styled we are, to whom this special advice and the lecture from the Commissioner, Northern Division, was addressed, I say not on paper, but in practice. Let us find and analyse the duties that these officers have to perform. And I will refer to the evidence of the assistant directors themselves and also to the evidence of the Director of Public Health, Colonel Murphy, who is the officer in charge of the Public Health Department, and also to the evidence of the Surgeon General Jennings ; against the evidence of these officers as regards the duties of the assistant directors of public health, let the commissioners and collectors come forward and defend their existence.

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

The Public Health Department does not consist of only one department. It consists of the laboratory establishment, it consists of the local vaccination department, it consists of the Sanitary Engineer's department and also the Consulting Surveyor to the Government of Bombay. There is no doubt whatever that these departments are top-heavy. I read only this morning the opinion of the Honourable Members of Government, the Revenue and Irrigation Members before the Muddiman Committee and nothing struck me so well on the question as their opinion expressed in writing that members on the non-official side object to the top-heaviness of the department; as they cannot effectively join to do away with the top-heaviness of the department, they unite otherwise. What do we find in this department?

The growth of the non-votable expenditure of this department is worthy of note. We know we are helpless, we are crying in the wilderness when we express an opinion, but, Sir, it is for the Honourable Minister if he wants to be strong and answerable to this side of the House, and not answerable to the Government of which he forms a part, I say, if he looks into these matters he will find that the increase, the percentage of increase has been certainly far more than it is desirable. Consulting Surveyor to Government, in 1923-24 accounts, 93,000 voted, non-voted 30,000, that is to say, 33 per cent. or 30 per cent. is the non-voted expenditure. In the revised budget estimate it is in the proportion of 90,000 to 38,000. You will see the proportion in which it rises. It was 93 to 30 in the revised budget, that is to say actuals, it is 90 to 38. Then in the present year's budget it is 107 to 47. That is to say, a rise between 92-93 of 17,000 against a rise of 9,000 only in the votable items. The figures are clear, while the votable expenditure has risen from 93 to 103, the non-votable expenditure has risen from 31 to 47. The figures speak for themselves. Of course the Honourable Minister in charge cannot put his foot down upon the increase in the non-votable items. He is helpless if the Finance Member does not care to assist the Council: we can say nothing: the figures are there. These are items with which we can do nothing. But proceeding further and coming to the Sanitary Engineer and his staff, I am not fighting with the details, there is considerable increase. But let us see the figures given at page 193 of the White Book. Against non-voted 78 there are voted 2,30. Then, Sir, the revised budget estimate 2,73 voted, 1,07 non-voted. From 78 there is an increase to 1,07, increase of 29 thousands in one year. Then in the new year so far as votable items are concerned we have an increase of 10 thousands only from 2,73 to 2,83: the non-votable figure is a rise to 1,40 from 1,07: a rise of 33 non-voted against the rise of 10 in the voted. Can there be, Sir, a greater evidence of top-heaviness in this department? With such a top-heaviness can these departments, absorbing more in the non-votable items, be called nation-building? They cannot be nation-building, simply because they are under the charge of a Minister.

Then, Sir, looking down into the establishment of the Director of Public Health, we find 1,08 non-votable and 2,93 votable. Imagine, Sir, if the Honourable Minister finds himself absolutely helpless in controlling this rise in the non-votable items, if we find that we are helpless in controlling, what is the answer that we can get from the Honourable Minister. If they permit it, if the elected representatives permit it, let them do it, but these figures, if the Finance Member's budget is correct, are non-votable and if they are non-votable then I submit that this House though powerless can put it before the Honourable Ministers to assert themselves. If they cannot, then let them come to this House for assistance and this House will rise, every one of us will rise, to assist them in their policy, provided it is a policy of cutting down expenditure, not in name because it is a nation-building department but because cutting down of expenditure is necessary.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, as the honourable member the Deputy President has referred to some of the departments that are under my charge, I should like to reply to his arguments. Sir, the Deputy President ought to have frankly admitted that in this House no other member has so loyally carried out the recommendations for retrenchment. Taking the Sanitary Engineer's staff, if the House refer to the budget of 1922-23, they will find that the total expenditure was Rs. 4,82,000 and I have actually reduced it to the tune of nearly one lakh. This year we have budgetted in spite of the time scale Rs. 4,23,000 which includes Rs. 25,000 as customs duty. Take away that, and the honourable House will find that there has been absolutely no increase at all. Besides, the honourable House should know that the Sanitary Engineer's staff includes so many other officers. It is not only confined to the sanitary staff. We have the Sanitary Engineer. Then, we have under him one district officer. We have also another officer, the boring engineer and his assistants, and the useful work they are doing is known to this Council from the leaflet issued by me showing the work done by the boring engineer. Then there is an executive engineer in charge of the Poona drainage. He is an Indian gentleman whom we have appointed on the recommendation and with the approval of the Poona municipality. Then, we have the Poona water works engineer and his establishment. In fact, the money that we spend from the grant for the Sanitary Engineer for the executive engineer, Poona water works, and his establishment, will be recouped from the Poona water works and the amount that will be spent on the establishment of the Poona drainage engineer and his establishment will also be recovered in the same way.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : May I know where that revenue is from Poona ? I do not see it anywhere.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : I am sorry, Sir ; I thought the honourable the Deputy President had given up making misstatements, but it seems to be chronic with him.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : I am sorry that that statement should be made. Unfortunately, the honourable member seems to be getting into the habit of making such statements. I must protest against this, and I wanted to come to you (the President) also when the Honourable

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

Mr. Cowasji Jehangir made such a statement, and if any statement is again made, then I think such a statement is absolutely unjustifiable and ought not to be made, unless they are able to show by facts and figures that I am wrong.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: As to my statement, Mr. President, I was perfectly correct. The honourable member did make a mis-statement, a deliberate mis-statement, and said certain things he ought not to have said, and I had to correct him.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: How does the honourable member know that he did it deliberately, that he made a deliberate mis-statement?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: Yes, that is right; I withdraw the word "deliberate". I hope it was not deliberate. But he made mis-statements and I corrected them.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: I think, Sir, that the honourable member the Deputy President has forgotten the fact that Rs. 25,000 as customs duty in the ensuing budget is nonvotable.

Now, Sir, coming to the Consulting Surveyor, we are employing the same staff which we employed when the Retrenchment Committee was sitting, and the Retrenchment Committee went into all the work that this staff was doing, and even the Retrenchment Committee, whose recommendations the honourable member the Deputy President and I consider to be the last word of wisdom, did not cut down a single rupee on the establishment of the Consulting Surveyor. The establishment was there then, and it is the same now. Only Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 2,000 might have been increased owing to the increments due to the time-scale. But as regards the good work that the Consulting Surveyor and his subordinates are doing, I need not take the time of this Council, because I merely wanted to give you an idea. Most of the establishment charges are recovered from the local bodies for whom we do the town-planning or acquisition work. There is a great demand for such work from the Ahmedabad municipality and we have a special officer there. He has prepared their town-planning scheme under which lands worth several lakhs of rupees—if I mistake not, 50 lakhs of rupees—will be acquired by our specialist officers and the establishment under that officer will be charged to the local body. In fact, Sir, as regards the Consulting Surveyor, even the Retrenchment Committee have approved of his establishment, and we have the same establishment now.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, I am very sorry that extraneous matters have been imported into the debate on this occasion which have aroused feelings which are not creditable to any one and which I do not think make us much wiser on the points involved. This department of Public Health, Sir, consists of a number of sub-departments and that leads to a great deal of confusion and misunderstanding. There is the Public Health Department proper under a Director of Public Health, under whom are the deputy directors of public health.

[Mr. B. V. Jadhav]

There are certain laboratories. There is the vaccine laboratory of Belgaum, and under this heading "Public Health" come the water works and drainage schemes of various towns and cities, and also the water supply of villages, and Sanitary Engineer's department and the town-planning establishments, and so on. The grouping together of all these activities under one head causes a good deal of confusion even to those who have to deal with them all the year round, and there is no wonder if it is somewhat confounding to those who have to look at these figures for a few weeks only. I would draw your attention, Sir, to page 86 of the Blue Book, and there you will find that the expenditure on Public Health Establishment is Rs. 10,28,000; grants for public health purposes, Rs. 9,75,000; expenses in connection with Bubonic plague, Rs. 1,23,000; Bacteriological Laboratories, Rs. 2,14,000; Pasteur Institutes, Rs. 23,000; Works, Rs. 5,63,000; Exchange Rs. 34,000. In all, Rs. 29,60,000. The expenditure in England is Rs. 1,01,000. Grand total, therefore, comes to Rs. 30,61,000.

So it will be seen, Sir, that although the demand appears to be a very big one, it contains various items of very great importance not only to the village communities, but also to the town population. Grants for public health purposes—Rs. 9,75,000—are, I think, absolutely necessary and no member on either side of the House will raise any objection to that. And, Sir, I may also draw your attention to the new items in this book which, unfortunately for me, were not discussed piecemeal. Had they been dealt with piecemeal, I could have shown how necessary they were and were wanted in the interests of the people. Then there are works costing Rs. 5,63,000, and there is establishment of Rs. 10,28,000. All this establishment, I again say, does not belong properly to the Public Health Department, as understood by some of the members of this House, that is the Director of Public Health and the Deputy Directors of Public Health. I can assure the House that the question of abolishing some of the posts in the Public Health Department has been engaging the attention of Government. I know that the Retrenchment Committee have made certain recommendations, and Government will, in proper time accept some of them. (An Honourable Member: In proper time?) But I may also add that the sanitation of the villages and the towns is not what it ought to be. A great deal is required to be done, and for that purpose there is a necessity of persons looking after these things. Government desire that the district local boards should entertain district health officers for each district, and for that purpose have offered to contribute two-thirds of the salaries of these officers and the establishment under them. It is a matter for regret that no district local board so far has come forward to start this very necessary establishment.

An Honourable MEMBER: Why not?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member will have his opportunity of speaking. The Honourable Minister has not replied.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : It is not for me to say why, but it appears that they object to the payment of one-third of the expenditure.

Sir, it is said that this Department of Public Health is topheavy. In the circumstances of the case, there is no escape from that. It has to carry on various activities for which specially qualified men are required. Take into consideration the Bacteriological Laboratory in Bombay. Very highly paid officers are required—I am rather afraid to use the word experts, because it is likely to be misunderstood,—but highly qualified officers are required to carry on the investigation and researches at the Bacteriological Laboratory. It is no wonder then that persons drawing a salary of Rs. 2,500 and even Rs. 3,000 are required to be employed. Then there is the vaccine laboratory at Belgaum which also ought to be kept under the supervision of a highly paid officer. Then there are laboratories in different centres, and there is the Sanitary Engineer. And all these high paid officers are required to be maintained. So, under the peculiar circumstances this department cannot avoid the charge of being topheavy.

Much has been said about the utility of the work of the deputy directors of health, and, Sir, I do not want to plead guilty to the charge that I am shirking to place before the House all that I know. As at present employed, many of the deputy directors of public health cannot be said to be doing enough work for the salaries they get. A good deal of re-organisation will be required. When the department was first started, and the deputy directors of public health were appointed, it was under contemplation to appoint district health officers, and to have these divisional officers to look after them. But the district officers have not come, and these officers, the deputy directors of public health, have to do the work for the division. I have not got any personal knowledge of what work they are doing, but I took the first opportunity of accompanying one of these and have seen with my own eyes.....

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : As a Minister ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : . . . as a Minister the work one of them has been doing in the pilgrim centre at Pandharpur. Pandharpur is a centre which draws pilgrims from all the presidencies in this country. Actually I saw there a contingent of about 200 Madrasis. There are people from Gujarat, there are people from Rajputana, and there are people from Maharashtra, the Karnatak and the Konkan who flock to Pandharpur during certain times of the year, and, as has been described, every three years in every four years, there was cholera at Pandharpur,—of a very serious type, which was disseminated far and wide, and the approach of the pilgrimage days were much feared by authorities of every district for fear that cholera might spread. The attempts of the various local bodies to stop infection were unavailing, but at last, Sir, the Public Health Department has been successful in maturing a system of prevention of cholera, and the system has been working for the last four years with a good deal of success. Every palkhi that goes to Pandharpur is watched on the road, is accompanied by a medical officer, all suspicious cases of cholera are segregated, and in that way infection is prevented from being carried to the chief centre at Pandharpur. Then great precaution is taken to supply good potable water to about 2 lakhs of pilgrims who collect together on the stream at Wakri, where the stream is generally dry or with very insufficient dirty water, and which in the olden days was one of the centres of infection. But that place, Wakri, has now become a health centre, and on the last two or three occasions there were not even a dozen cases of cholera on any of the pilgrimage days, whereas previously there were hundreds and hundreds of cases at that place. Great care is also taken of the water supply at Pandharpur, and every precaution is taken that enough supply should be kept, so that none of the pilgrims should have any occasion to go to the river and take bad water from there. The river water is in that season a prolific centre of disease. In this way cholera has almost been banished from Pandharpur, and the same good work is carried on at Jejuri, at Shingnapur and in many other places. I have also heard that very good work is being done also at Dakore. (An Honourable Member: No.) I am very sorry to hear that. I shall make enquiries and see that it is done.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Will the Honourable Minister take a long time to finish his speech?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: About 10 minutes, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Minister has his right of reply.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I shall then conclude,

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Council is adjourned to 2 p.m. to-morrow, Friday, the 13th March 1925.

Friday, 13th March 1925.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN :

For information regarding town planning schemes in the Bombay Suburban District the Honourable Member is referred to the Honourable the General Member.

(f) The information is contained in the accompanying statement.

(g) Information is not available.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : Will the Honourable Minister state when the scheme Poona No. 1 will be completed ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : I cannot give the exact date. That is being considered.

Mr. G. I. PATEL : As regards Ahmedabad, may I know when each of these schemes is likely to be completed ?

* Vide Appendix 58.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHIAKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : I cannot say.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : May I know if the scheme Poona No. 1 is going to be completed ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Of course, it will be.

FERRY AND DAM IN THE ULHASA RIVER IN THE THANA DISTRICT.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City) : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) what amount they have received up to now as income from the ferry on the Ulhasa river, and what they have spent on the construction of the dam ;

(b) whether it is a fact that a large quantity of water is discharged from the dam at night and that this causes hardship and danger to men and animals ;

(c) whether it is a fact that the discharge of water from the dam and the consequent inundation of the river has considerably affected vehicular and other traffic in that part of the district ;

(d) whether they have made any enquiries into the grievances of the people in connection with this dam ;

(e) if so, will they be pleased to state the result of such enquiry ;

APPOINTMENT OF BRAHMINS AND NON-BRAHMINS IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City) : Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that by the orders passed in Government Resolution, Finance Department, No. 2610, dated 17th September 1923, Brahmans will be excluded from clerical appointments till the number of non-Brahmans in any particular department equals that of Brahmins ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : The answer is in the negative. Attention is invited to the recent press note on the subject which has been distributed to Honourable Members,

Mr. R. D. SHINDE: Are Government aware that the number of Brahmias in the Government services, especially in the Central and Southern divisions, is out of all proportion to their numerical strength?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I think the statistics from which the reply can be judged have already been placed on the table.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA: Out of proportion to their intellectual strength?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I said nothing about the proportion. I merely said all the information from which the reply could be judged have been placed on the table.

TEACHERS IN ENGLISH CLASSES ATTACHED TO PRIMARY SCHOOLS.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): (a) Will Government be pleased to state the reasons which induced them to issue G. R., E. D., No. 605, dated 1st September 1923, in regard to teachers in English classes attached to selected primary schools in supersession of G. R., E. D., No. 2103 of 14th June 1919 and G. R., E. D., No. 605 of 12th June 1922?

(b) What provision is made regarding the pay and prospects of teachers who accepted the employment relying upon the G. R.'s. of 1919 and 1922?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: (a) In view of the impending transfer of the primary schools to district local boards under the Bombay Primary Education Act, 1923, orders had to be passed for the transfer of the English classes attached to these schools to the district local boards concerned, in due course. The classes are for secondary education and not primary. The District Local Boards cannot therefore be compelled under the provisions of the Bombay Primary Education Act to accept the transfer of the teachers of these classes along with the teachers of primary schools. The Boards had therefore to be allowed to exercise their choice in this matter.

(b) The opening of these classes was an experimental measure on a small scale and the teachers for them were employed temporarily. The teachers engaged on a temporary basis must stand their chance of being employed by the District Local Board concerned or of being relieved from service. It has already been directed that if any teacher be a permanent servant of Government at the time of transfer of the classes to District Local Boards he should revert to his service under Government in the event of not being employed by the Board.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR: It is stated "It has already been directed that if any teacher be a permanent servant of Government at the time of transfer of the classes to district local boards he should revert to his service under Government in the event of not being employed by the board." Will the Honourable Minister please explain where he is to be reverted if he does not hold a permanent appointment under Government?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: If he holds a permanent appointment Government will take him back: if he does not hold one, then Government cannot help him.

RESERVATION OF LAND UNDER THE SUKKUR BARRAGE FOR FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) whether any foreign corporations or capitalists have applied to them for the reservation of land coming under the Sukkur Barrage scheme ;

(b) whether it is a fact that a corporation called "The Empire Cotton Growing Corporation" has applied for lands there on an extensive scale for growing cotton ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: (a) and (b) No such applications as are referred to in the question have been received.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR: Have any other applications been received ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: I will ask for notice of that question. I think some enquiries have been received.

CLERICAL ESTABLISHMENT OF THE KALYAN MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: Will Government be pleased to furnish the number of persons of Maratha and allied castes holding any clerical or higher appointments carrying a monthly salary of Rs. 30 or upwards in the office of the Kalyan Municipality ?

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI (East Khandesh District): Will Government be pleased to state whether it is the intention of Government to adopt a policy of granting gun-licenses to cultivators who apply for them for the protection of their crops from wild pigs and other wild animals?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Government's policy is as stated by the honourable member. District Magistrates have full discretion to grant such licenses in all proper cases under the rules under the Arms Act.

(3) No one was deputed.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: What did Government do with the money that was voted by this House.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: It was spent for the purpose for which it was voted. Last year the Council was opposed to spending on the exhibition and therefore Government could not spend anything Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Under whose directions it was spent?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Under the directions of the officer employed for that purpose.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Who was that officer?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I think Mr. Bell was managing it.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Did Mr. Bell go to England?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I presume, not.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Then, who was in charge of that in England?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Mr. Asly. Am I to understand that the honourable member is in favour of the exhibition now?

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I am not in favour of the exhibition. I wanted to make sure that the Council was right in refusing the grant since this Government has deputed none.

Mr. W. S. MUKADAM: May I know by whom that officer was appointed?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: The Government of Bombay.

(b) Since 1919-20 the revenue derived by Government from duty on the manufacture of the Company has fallen in consequence of the imports from foreign countries which were suspended during the War.

(c) to (e) A scheme for the supply of water at Dakor was worked out in the rough and sent to the Municipality for approval in June 1922. The source fixed upon was a well known as the Temple well and not a tank or reservoir requiring provision in storage for evaporation and absorption. The annual burden for this piped water supply with a distribution service through stand posts including capital and working charges amounted to Rs. 8,600. The Municipality expressed itself unwilling to undertake the scheme considering it to be beyond its means. Since then the Municipality again raised the question of a scheme based upon the Mahi river as a source of supply but it was informed that this proposal would prove too costly. It has been proved by means of trial bores that an artesian or semi-artesian supply is not available in sufficient quantity. The attention of the honourable member is also invited to the reply given to his question on 7th March 1925.

Mr. G. I. PATEL : Are Government aware that for the last two years funds are being raised in connection with seasonal water supply from charity shows ?

the effect that in view of the fact that Government had decided ultimately to remove the shop from the present locality the Jamat had no objection to its temporary continuance in the present premises for some time longer in order to save the licensee from heavy loss. (d) If the answer to (c) above is in the negative, has the attention of the Government been drawn to the statement made in the opening paragraph describing the Honourable Sir Maurice Hayward's statement, in the copies sent by the Director of Information to members of the Legislative Council, viz., that the statement is presented "on behalf of the Bombay Government"?

(e) If so, is that statement made by the Director of Information on the authority of the Government, or on his own account?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: (a) to (e) Attention is invited to my letter of the 24th December 1924 which was published in the Press. A copy* is laid on the Table.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN: May I invite the honourable member's attention to the fact that the letter which has been placed on the table does not give any reply to my question (e)?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I am awaiting for a definite question from the honourable member.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: In appendix 63—that is, the honourable member's letter to the editors of the "Times of India" and "Bombay Chronicle"—I see the word "Government" used there. Does that word "Government" include the Ministers or not?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I see the words "Secretary to Government". The word "Government" there would include all the Members of Government.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I would like to know whether Ministers are included.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: In the expression "Secretary to Government"?

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN: Is it constitutional on the part of a Member of Government to send a communication independently, on his own responsibility, without consulting Government or failing to place that communication before the whole Government?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I shall be glad if the honourable member will put his question rather shorter. I did not quite catch his question.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN: Did the honourable member in submitting the statement independently act constitutionally?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: He did.

* Vide Appendix 63.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : Whose mistake was that ? whether of the Director of Information or of the honourable member who submitted the whole evidence in the name of the Bombay Government as stated in the press note ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I shall be glad if the honourable member would point out the exact words he refers to.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : I am sorry I have not got the press note with me. But in the press note it was clearly stated that the evidence was submitted in the name of the Bombay Government or something like that. I speak subject to correction, and that is why I put this question.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN : Have Government taken any steps to correct the mistake made by the Director of Information ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I should think that my letter was sufficiently plain and corrected any misunderstanding that might have arisen. A copy of the letter was forwarded to the Government of India.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Is it permissible for Members of Government to enter into acute controversies of this character without the permission of the Governor in Council ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : It is open to a Member of Government to make statements of fact with the permission of the Governor.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN : Was the statement made officially or in his private capacity ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : In his capacity as Home Member.

Mr. HOOSENALLY M. RAHIMTOOLA : Why are the Judges of the High Court not mentioned in the list ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I do not think it was realised that the honour of being entered in that list was intended for them by the honourable member.

Mr. HOOSENALLY M. RAHIMTOOLA : Why are the Official Assignee and the Official Receiver not mentioned in the list ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : The Official Assignee is paid by fees and not by salary, and the Official Receiver is similarly paid by fees and not by salary, to the best of my recollection.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Is the Official Assignee still paid by fees and not by salary ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I believe so, subject to a certain limit.

Mr. HOOSENALLY M. RAHIMTOOLA : Have Government noticed that out of the 26 posts, only two are held by Mahomedans ?

* Vide Appendix 64.

‡ For reply see next question.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Government have noticed it.

(b) Whether this procedure was departed from in the case of Nana Mitha, Talati of Sunvali, Taluka Olpad, who was suspended on 27th February 1922 and dismissed on 10th July 1922 on a charge of bribery and corruption, after a departmental inquiry and, if so, what were the special reasons for departing from this procedure in this case ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : (a) (b) and (c) The accompanying statement* derived from the Census Report gives the required information.

(d) Separate figures of average earning of a man in each of the Industries are not available. There are ten peripatetic weaving demonstrations and eight weaving schools opened and managed by the Department of Industries in various parts of the Presidency, and some more schools and demonstrations are now being organised and opened in Gujarat. There is also one peripatetic demonstration going on in dyeing and calico printing. The aims and objects of these demonstrations and schools are to solve the difficulties of the cottage workers and introduce improved methods and appliances amongst them with a view to increase their production and quality of manufacture.

A demonstration factory to introduce the improved method of manufacturing casein from separated mill was opened and maintained by the Department of Industries in Gujarat for some years. A demonstration in the art of designing and manufacturing potteries (tea-pots, vases, jars, etc.) has been opened in Sir J. J. School of Art, Bombay. A demonstration factory for the extraction of fish oil was also opened and maintained by the Department of Industries at Karwar. Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN : Will the Honourable Minister consult the Commissioner, Mr. Pratt ?

No rules for the recovery of the cost of repairing boundary marks through Government agency have been framed under Section 123 of the Land Revenue Code. But in order that cultivators may have an incentive to repair their own boundary marks Government had approved in the year 1909 the recovery of charges for such work at penal rates. FEEDER RAILWAY PROJECTS.

The THAKOR OF KERWADA (Gujarat Sardars and Inamdars): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether any action has been taken by them in connection with the feeder railway projects proposed by the district local board, Broach?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the stages which the four different projects submitted by the Broach district local board have reached?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: (a) and (b) Proposals for the following four railway lines, in order of urgency, were submitted by the District Local Board, Broach, for the consideration of Government:—

(i) Luwara-Dehej-Wagra-Samni-Miyagam Railway.

(ii) Jambusar-Kavi Railway.

(iii) Ankleshwar-Hansot-Sahol Railway.

(iv) Broach-Shukaltirth-Jhanor-Koral Railway.

(i) Luwara-Dehej-Wagra-Samni-Miyagam Railway.—To enable the Government of Bombay to examine the proposals submitted by the District Local Board, Broach, for the construction and financing of this project and to decide whether a scheme was feasible or not a reliable estimate of the present cost of construction and traffic prospects of the line was considered necessary. The Railway Board were accordingly requested to arrange with the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company to carry out a detailed survey of the proposed railway. The Railway Board sanctioned the carrying out of the engineering and traffic surveys of the line by the agency of the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company. The detailed survey has been carried out and the results of it are awaited.

(ii) Jambusar-Kavi Railway.—It has been decided that the present railway should form part of the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company's undertaking. A detailed survey of the line was carried out by the B. B. & C. I. Railway and a project report and estimate were forwarded by the Railway Board for the information of Government. The alignment, waterways, level crossings proposed for the railway were approved by Government and the Railway Board were requested last year to make the requisite arrangements to provide the necessary funds for its construction during the current year. The receipt of a further communication from the Railway Board is awaited.

(iii) Ankleshwar-Hansot-Sahol Railway.—The Railway Board were requested to ask the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company to examine the traffic prospects of the line. The traffic survey of the line was accordingly sanctioned by the Railway Board to be carried out by the agency of the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company. The Agent did not consider it advisable to carry out a detailed survey of the line since the results obtained from a traffic survey held out little hope of a suitable return being obtained on the outlay. He intimated that the question had been referred to his Home Board whose views in the matter would be reported to Government in due course. Subsequently, the Agent intimated that the Railway Board, to whom the matter had been referred by him, stated that no further action in the matter need be taken for the present.

(iv) Broach-Shukaltirth-Jhanor-Koral Railway.—The Railway Board were requested to carry out the traffic prospects of the railway and if not the whole of the project at least the Broach-Shukaltirth section. The Railway Board accordingly sanctioned the carrying out of a traffic survey by the agency of the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company of the Broach-Shukaltirth Railway. The results of the survey are awaited.

No further action can however be taken on the projects (i), (iii) and (iv) until the proposals which the Government of India have put forward in connection with the financing of feeder railways have been accepted by the Secretary of State and the necessary legislation enabling District Local Boards to give guarantees to make up the loss in working has been passed.

SUPPLY OF GOVERNMENT GAZETTES TO NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. HOOSEINALLY M. RAHIMTOOLA on behalf of HAJI ABDULLAH HAROON (Karachi City): In view of the declared policy of Government to supply the Gazettes (i.e., the Bombay Government Gazette and the Sind Official Gazette) to those newspapers only whose circulation is over 1,000 (vide last lines of footnote on page 526 of Bombay Legislative Council Debates, Vol. XIII), and in view of the statement made by Government (vide Appendix No. 43-A of Vol. XIII) that one or the other Government Gazette is supplied, free of cost, among others, to the Sind Observer, Karachi; the Sind Sudhar, Karachi; the Sindvasi, Hyderabad (Sind); and the Al-haq, Sukkur; and in view of further statement of Government (vide Appendix 46-A of Vol. XIII) that the circulation of the four above-mentioned newspapers is only 850, 850, 500 and 450 respectively, i.e., much less than 1,000, in each case, will Government be pleased to state why copies of the Government Gazette are supplied to the said newspapers free of cost ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: Enquiries are being made.

REPRESENTATION RE: PROVINCIAL CONTRIBUTION.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Mr. President, have I your permission to mention the question of the representation of the Legislative Council of Bombay to the Government of India regarding their financial proposals ? This Council passed a motion on the 2nd of March and we have prepared a statement to be sent to the Government of India, and we would like to know whether this statement meets with the approval of the House before we send it up. It is very urgent that it should be sent at once in order that it may be in the hands of the Government of India on Monday morning, for the discussion will take place next Wednesday. I should therefore like to know whether the House would accord its approval immediately to this despatch or whether they would like to have some time to consider it. The latest period at which it could be despatched in time to reach Delhi is to-morrow afternoon.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I should like to know what the wishes of the House are. The statement is being circulated now. To-morrow is the last day for demands for grants and it is my intention to call the meeting at 12, because at 5 o'clock all the remaining items on the agenda in regard to the budget will have to be put to the vote. It is open to honourable members to arrange with the Honourable the Finance Member whether they would consider this representation to-day.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Sir, it might be done immediately after tea.

(Discussion on Demands for Grants resumed).

Question again proposed :—

“Reduce the votable portion by four lakhs—Total demand of Rs. 29,60,000—Public Health (Civil Estimate page 186).”

Dr. M. B. VELKAR (Bombay City, South): Sir, I rise to support the motion moved by my honourable friend from West Khandesh, and in supporting it I want to submit to this House that in spite of whatever may have been stated by the honourable member, the Commissioner, Northern Division, about the ignorance and uncivilized condition of the masses of this country this House remains unconvinced as to the utility of spending a huge sum of money on giving fat salaries to the assistant directors of public health. To my mind if this money will be spent in inducing young men full of public spirit and the spirit of self-sacrifice to take up the work of village sanitation, the money will be well spent. For instance, if we appoint young men who have passed matric or men who have graduated recently on monthly salary of 50 or 60 rupees, men selected for this special service, I believe they would be organising this work of village sanitation in a most efficient manner. They will serve a twofold purpose. While they will be carrying on this work of village sanitation hand in hand with giving tuition in public hygiene, they will also form village co-operative societies and teach the people handicrafts and other cottage industries and will be able to organize other rural industries and all the masses will thus be benefitted by this sort of work. In this connection, I would like to bring to the notice of this Council the great work that is being carried on by Mr. Thakkar of the Servants of India Society among the Bhils and Dharalas of the talukas of Panch Mahals and Surat, a population of something like one lakh. Among them this work is carried on efficiently with the help of self-sacrificing young men. There ten or twelve centres are formed and a man who is an expert in this sort of work is appointed head and some ten young men specially chosen for this purpose for their public spirit are given under him to carry on this work. Now there not only the work of sanitation and education is carried on but they are also forming there co-operative societies and also organising cottage industries. Therefore, instead of spending huge sums of money in giving fat salaries to these officers, if you appoint young men to do this work you will duly open a field of work for them and this question of village sanitation will be solved.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: May I mention to the House, Sir, that this statement is marked confidential and it is desirable that it should not be communicated to the press at this moment?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am sure honourable members will recognise the importance of keeping this statement strictly confidential for the reason that any premature publication may injure the cause for which the House stands. I take it that honourable members will go over it and try to give their considered opinion immediately after tea.

Dr. M. M. MEHTA (Surat City): Sir, I support the motion moved by my honourable friend from East Khandesh, Mr. Dev. There is already tabled a motion in my name in connection with this item and therefore I think it is my duty to express my views on the subject. As my honourable friend from Bombay City (South) Dr. Velkar said, instead of paying huge salaries to these assistant directors of public health, it will be better to employ more men of equal, if not better qualification, for the same amount. The duties of these assistant directors of public health are : one assistant director of public health has got a very large division to manage, and it is impossible for him to move in all the thousands of villages in his division and it is impossible for him to give real help to the people of the rural areas of the Presidency. As regards the qualifications I think the Indian gentlemen who may be appointed will not be less qualified than these gentlemen.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : They are also Indians. The assistant directors of public health are all Indians.

Dr. M. M. MEHTA : I know it, Sir. For one assistant director of public health on Rs. 1,000 we can get two graduates of the Bombay University with equal and often better qualifications. The duties of the assistant director of public health can very well be performed by those gentlemen. Again, Sir, their duties are mostly confined to collection of statistics, inspection of vaccination and advisory. The collection of statistics is more or less done by the department which in turn gets necessary information from other departments. As to the advisory functions the scope is very limited looking to the financial conditions of villages ; and if at all such advice is necessary, the civil surgeon of the district is much nearer for it. Therefore for this work also the appointments in question are superfluous.

The honourable member for Khandesh has already quoted examples of the nature of the work done by these assistant directors of public health. I shall add one more example. I quote from the report of the Director of Public Health. The port health officer once reported that a case of influenza was detected on a ship. This information was officially communicated to the Public Health Department. The offices of the latter department simply transmitted this information to the mamlatdars of the districts concerned. This shows conclusively that the nature of the work of these officials is more or less of a post office character for which such a heavy expenditure is not justified. It is no fault of these officers that their usefulness is not made fully available to the needy public. These officers cannot do the duties assigned to them efficiently, firstly because their jurisdiction extends over a wide area and secondly because their pay is very inadequate for the same. The pay of the assistant director of public health is Rs. 1,000. Being a superior officer in the division he has to live in a particular style and has therefore to incur heavy expenditure. Therefore, he gets discontented. A member of the B. M. S. is equally or perhaps more competent for this sort of work if he has qualified in Hygiene, and services of such men can very well be utilised. With better prospects, these latter gentlemen will remain content and work more efficiently as they are doing now. The honourable member the Commissioner for the Northern Division stated that we should have experts. But, Sir, we know how in India experts can be easily manufactured. Once a port health officer was appointed as an expert in midwifery; an ophthalmic surgeon was appointed Sanitary Commissioner to the Government of Bombay; and a deputy sanitary commissioner was appointed as Surgeon General to the Government of Bombay. These are the experts we are asked to depend upon. Many of the posts of the assistant directors of public health are at present held by gentlemen who failed to pass a higher examination of the Bombay University but were rich enough to go to England and get the D.P.H. diploma; and they are posted over the heads of the best graduates of the Bombay University.

The honourable member the Commissioner, Northern Division, put a question to the honourable member the leader of the Swaraj party as to what was the mortality in villages. He was under the impression, if I understood him right, that if these experts were not employed the figures of mortality would rise in the villages. I may point out to him that already the mortality in the rural areas is less than in the urban area of the presidency. This has been so for several years and nobody took any note of it. But it was left to a lay committee of Broach to bring to light this serious condition. Then, Sir, as to the malaria question referred to by the honourable member the Commissioner, Northern Division, I understand he was referring to the Collector of Surat, Mr. Macmillan's activities in this connection. I am of opinion, Sir, that such serious problems need not be allowed to be handled by amateur civilians; that would be mere waste of public money and sometimes may cause disastrous results. The problem of malaria cannot be tackled like that. It is a huge problem and it is no use wasting money over the solution of that problem by appointing a few high salaried men who cannot go over the wide area under their jurisdiction without adequate menial staff. Therefore, I say, Sir, that we should appoint a larger number of officers on a lower salary instead of a few highly paid ones. And we can get men with good university qualifications on a lower salary and that will be a saving to the department and it will also give more benefit to the people of the rural areas of the presidency. We can also get the assistant surgeons in the district hospitals to advise the non-officials in the villages and if that is done the districts will get better and speedier advice. Therefore, I support the motion of the honourable member Mr. Dev.

THE THAKOR OF KERWADA (Gujarat Sardars and Inamdars): Mr. President, I rise to make one or two observations on the question. Unfortunately, when the question was being discussed yesterday, I was not present, but I hear the honourable the Commissioner for the Northern Division made some reference to the health committee appointed by the Broach district local board to look after the health of the people. I also gather that the honourable the Commissioner said something not very pleasant about the intelligence and civilisation of Indians. I most strongly deprecate any reference of that kind. Coming to the subject proper, I may state that the Brouch district board has appointed a committee to go round and visit different villages and arrange lectures and lantern slide shows, and thus explain to the ignorant people how they should take care of their health and protect themselves against infectious diseases. In this committee we have got certain doctors who have volunteered their services, and I think in course of time they will turn out useful work. They have only just begun. They have ample scope for work especially in places where big fairs are held and thousands of people gather from all parts of the country. It is from those places that infectious diseases are spread all over the country. Therefore, greater care should be taken by people who go to those places.

I am not here to bolster up the case of the director of public health but I would like to place before the House the facts as I find them. I could not visit place myself owing to sickness in my family, but I sent the chief officer of the district local board, who made a thorough investigation of the place regarding its water-supply, birth and death rate epidemics, extension of the village site, etc. He suggested the erection of model villages. The local board are contemplating to select two villages to be treated as model villages for the experiment according to the suggestions made by the deputy health officer, Mr. Pinto.

I personally refuse to judge the question from a racial standpoint. To-day there is an unanimity of opinion that the infant mortality in this country is much heavier than it is in the other civilised countries of the world. So, this matter has to be investigated. Whether it is an expert appointed by the Government or selected and approved by this House, the appointment of an expert is absolutely necessary to investigate into this vital question. As the village population is increasing and as there will be more chances for infant mortality, such an expert to advise the people and help the village panchayats wherever they have been formed will be absolutely essential, and most welcome.

An Honourable MEMBER: I move the closure.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I accept the closure.

Mr. S. S. DEV: Sir, when I heard the speech of the honourable member the Commissioner for the Northern Division, I simply wondered. I could then realise why the honourable member for Surat was persistent in giving notice of a resolution to abolish the posts of Commissioners. I simply contended that the department of Public Health was a top-heavy department and that there were officers in it more than necessary, some of the officers had not sufficient work and so I proposed that they might be removed. But the honourable member the Commissioner could not understand me. When I said that any assistant director of public health was not necessary, I never meant that in his stead a bhangi should be substituted. I never thought that immediately after the assistant director comes the bhangi in rank. I thought that there might be many more officials between the assistant director and the bhangi. When I maintained that there were more assistant directors than necessary, I could not see how a bhangi arose on the horizon of the Commissioner's mind. If the honourable member for Surat moves a resolution that the posts of Commissionerships should be abolished would it mean that the pattaiwallas should be substituted in the places of Commissioners? Do pattaiwallas come next in rank to the Commissioners? The speech of the honourable member the Commissioner for the Northern Division was absolutely irrelevant. I could not see what was the temptation for him to introduce the bhangi in this debate.

Apart from his speech, even the Honourable Minister in charge had to admit in his first speech that there was not sufficient work of these officers: and secondly, he admitted that the department was topheavy, although he believed that it was bound to be under the circumstances. The expenditure over this department for the current year is Rs. 24,00,000 and we are going to budget 5 lakhs more for the next year. As the cut of 4 lakhs which I have proposed is not heavy, I hope the House will carry it.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, I think the honourable mover of this motion is again pressing the point to which I have already given a reply. The department of Public Health is really made up of a number of activities under different Ministers. The department under the Director of Public Health is in my charge and I am responsible for it. The department of water-supply and sanitary engineering is under the control of my honourable friend the Minister for Local Self-Government. Besides these, there are the bacteriological and other laboratories. So, I submit the amount of 29 lakhs cannot bear a cut of 4 lakhs, simply for the reason that the deputy directors of health are shown to be not doing adequate work. A large portion of the amount budgetted for is for grants to local bodies; and if this House insists upon a cut of 4 lakhs, I am sure these grants will have to be heavily reduced in proportion. As a matter of fact, the amount spent upon the director and his deputies is not so large as is supposed to be by certain honourable members. Therefore, I wish to bring to the notice of this House that this department cannot bear such a severe cut as 4 lakhs.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD: Then what cut can it bear?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: That is another thing. The present cut is rather too severe.

I am very much obliged to my honourable friends Dr. Velkar and Dr. M. M. Mehta for the views they have expressed from a sanitary and hygienic point of view that sanitary work in the villages is essential. I very much appreciate the suggestion of the honourable member Dr. Velkar that village organisers should be employed to look after sanitation and education in rural areas. It would be a proud day for this country when a large number of self-sacrificing people will come forward to undertake the work on a salary of Rs. 60 a month. I know there are enthusiastic workers mainly among the missionary people, among the Sadhus who are given to religious practices and who are self-sacrificing. Such persons in actual life can be found in very small numbers. The honourable member has quoted the instance of the Salvation Army.....

Dr. M. B. VELKAR : I mentioned the name of Mr. Thakkar of the Servants of India Society.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : I have great admiration for him, but I am sorry to say that he has not got a sufficiently numerous following. He will not be able to offer any large number of persons who will undertake such service at a sacrifice.

Now, I turn to the suggestions of the honourable member Dr. Mehta. He wants to appoint two persons in place of one. In other words, he admits the necessity of doing this work and insists that it should be done on a larger scale. I therefore submit that the fact that these deputy directors of health are necessary has been admitted by my honourable friend Dr. Mehta.

What I wanted to bring to the notice of the House is that these deputy directors of public health are doing a certain amount of work. It cannot be said that they are fully worked under the present circumstances, and it must be conceded that their work has not been of very great importance to the village population because their number is so small. Government desire that every district should have a health officer and when every district is provided with health officers, these deputy directors can be withdrawn. I have already brought to the notice of the House the special work that has been done in connection with the checking of epidemics at pilgrim centres and other places and in that way the work of these officers is praiseworthy. I therefore hope that this House will reject this motion.

Question put and lost.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Sir, I move :

Reduce one lakh from the total demand under 33, Public Health.

After the statement made by the Honourable Minister that a cut of 4 lakhs would be rather too heavy—that was the expression he used—I think it is but fair to expect that a cut of one lakh would suffice, and also after the very clear admission on the part of the Minister in his words that it cannot be said that the assistant directors of public health are fully worked, it is but fair that the number of assistant directors, etc., ought to be reduced. And the third point that I would place before the Honourable Minister is that, if he looks to the several duties of the Director and the assistant directors of public health and the Medical Department, and if he cares to go into the statements on this point by the Surgeon-General himself, he would be able to cut one lakh without any difficulty. Out of this one lakh about Rs. 30,000 could be saved by the abolition of the Karachi laboratory and it is only a question of Rs. 70,000 which I think he will be able to save further. Especially as he considers 4 lakhs too heavy, I have proposed a reduction of only 1 lakh.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I have explained the position and I am glad to find that the honourable member the Deputy President recognises it. As for the appointment of the Director of Public Health, the matter is under the consideration of Government and I can assure the House that I shall devote my best attention to the necessary economies in that direction. And also about the curtailment that can be made in the laboratory at Karachi, I have also promised this House that I shall see how much money can be saved from that source. So the House may rely upon me and not insist upon this cut this time.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Sir, in view of the statement made by the Honourable Minister and in view of my expectation that before July next we will know certain facts about this cut, I beg permission to withdraw my motion.

Question put and leave granted.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : I ask, Sir, now for a total demand of Rs. 26,00,000 for 33, Public Health.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : I beg to propose a total grant of Rs. 41,13,000 for 32, Medical.

Question proposed.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South) : Sir, I beg to move :

That the provision of Rs. 16,000 in item 150 (Blue Book) for orthopædic appliances to hospitals be reduced to Rs. 10,000 only.

Sir, we know that the post of Orthopædic expert was created last year and now he requires appliances. According to my enquiry, Rs. 10,000 will do for this purpose. Therefore, I propose a reduction of the grant to Rs. 10,000. For the reasons I have given already, I move that the grant be reduced from Rs. 16,000 to Rs. 10,000.

Question proposed.

Dr. M. M. MEHTA (Surat City) : Sir, it is stated that this officer is an expert in Orthopædics. I doubt very much whether he is an expert. All these things are imported from England, while they could be manufactured in India. There are several indigenous firms in India who manufacture these articles. Secondly, Sir, people in the mofussil do not make much use of these things. Perhaps, in Bombay proper, people make use of these things fully, but in the mofussil it is not a very great problem. It may be a great problem in Bombay, but then, one officer like this is absolutely useless and inadequate if meant for Bombay proper. In the mofussil the officers in charge of the hospital—the sub-assistant surgeons—are properly trained men and they know these things very much better. On the top of these officers, to appoint a so-called expert, who is not a real expert, is simply humiliating. I therefore propose that this item for this department be deleted.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, this post of orthopædic expert was sanctioned last year and this House has recognised that it is useful to engage his services. He has done very good work during the late war and there he has gained experience in making orthopædic appliances. In the hospitals in Bombay he gives advice for splints and other things ; and these are not ordered from England as the honourable member from Surat supposes, but they are made here by N. Powell and other firms. During the last year he has been doing very good work and the medical authorities of the various hospitals in Bombay speak highly about him, and it is now found necessary to supply splints and other appliances according to his specifications to the various patients in the hospitals here as well as in other hospitals. It is, therefore, necessary that this amount of Rs. 16,000 be sanctioned. If the House thinks that it can be reduced by Rs. 6,000 as the honourable member Dr. Dadachanji proposes, then I leave this matter entirely in the hands of the House. If the grant is reduced by Rs. 6,000 only, Rs. 10,000 will be available for this sort of work and in the hospitals of Bombay there are many cases of injuries in the treatment of which these splints are absolutely necessary, and the reduced grant may not enable the department to supply the demands of all. But if the House wants this cut of Rs. 6,000 I leave the matter entirely in the hands of the House.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South) : Sir, it is very good of the honourable Minister to say frankly that he can do with Rs. 10,000. My information is that Rs. 10,000 will be quite sufficient. It is better to have a little more experience, and I think Rs. 10,000 is quite sufficient, considering that this is a deficit budget.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I have nothing to say in reply.

Question put and carried.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South) : Sir, I move :

“ Reduce to Rs. 75,000, quinquennial revision of grant-in-aid to dispensaries and other medical institutions, Rs. 90,000.”

Sir, my reasons for moving this reduction are that this is only a quinquennial revision of the grants to dispensaries, etc. The first revision was made in 1915. After that, they made a revision in 1920-21, but this was not availed of, and it lapsed. Now Government want to revise it again. In these days of a deficit budget, I hope Rs. 75,000 will be enough for the year, because it is put down in the remarks column that the exact sum required will require scrutiny, and they proceed to say in the remarks column that only a lump amount of Rs. 90,000 will be necessary. I therefore think it would be as well to provide Rs. 75,000 in a deficit budget.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, the grants-in-aid to mofussil municipalities are very inadequate, and complaints have been received from the various taluka towns and other places for an increase in the contributions. As a matter of fact, the grants made to certain dispensaries do not even cover the charges for medicines that are required to be paid by the district local boards and municipalities. Therefore, it has been found absolutely necessary to increase those grants. Now, I want to impress upon this House that this grant of Rs. 90,000 is intended for municipalities and district local boards for an increase in their grants, and if the House thinks that these municipalities and district local boards do not deserve any increase at all, then I leave the matter to the House. It is for them to decide.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN (Ahmedabad District): Sir, I oppose the motion. It is necessary to revise the grants-in-aid to municipalities and other bodies for dispensaries. The dispensaries are a great burden on the municipalities, and they always clamour for more money. Unless Government give more grants, the municipalities will be obliged to close their dispensaries. This item of Rs. 90,000 is not enough, and if it could be increased, it would be all right; but we cannot do it, so at least there must be no reduction.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I rise to oppose this motion, but at the same time, I am glad that this opposition from the other side has been brought to the notice of the Honourable Minister, not for the purpose of carrying the item one way or the other, but for the purpose of enabling the non-official side to call upon the Honourable Minister to declare his policy so far as grants to the local bodies are concerned. I may inform this House that up to this time the policy of the Government so far as the grants to municipalities and local boards are concerned, for medical relief, has been an unsettled one. Before the salaries of the sub-assistant surgeons were revised, there were certain grants given to these local bodies, and a certain proportion of the grants was for the pay of the medical officers. Now, without the consent of the local bodies, the salaries of the sub-assistant surgeons have been revised; their maximum which was formerly Rs. 100 has now been revised to Rs. 230.

Mr. S. S. DEV: I rise to a point of order, and I hope the Deputy President will excuse me. The motion before the House is for the reduction of a particular item, and I want to know whether the Deputy President can discuss the whole policy on such a motion.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: He knows he cannot do so.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: I am not at all discussing the whole policy, Sir. In opposing my honourable friend Dr. Dadachanji's motion, I only wanted an expression of opinion whether this grant of Rs. 90,000 which is only a lump provision, was going to be distributed to the dispensaries according to certain rules, or whether it was going to be distributed according to the whims of a particular Secretary to Government. It is, therefore, that I am glad that objection has been raised to this provision, and I would request the Honourable Minister to tell us whether there are any definite rules by which this amount of Rs. 90,000 is going to be distributed among the local bodies.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South): Sir, I see that the general impression in the House is that this amount of Rs. 90,000 for grants-in-aid to local bodies for dispensaries is required. I therefore beg permission to withdraw my motion.

Question put and leave granted.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South): Sir, I beg to move:

"Omit the item of Rs. 3,932, for creation of a post of Assistant to the Dean, Grant Medical College."

[Dr. K. E. Dadachanji]

Sir, this provision is for the creation of a new post of Assistant to the Dean at the Grant Medical College. It is mentioned in the remarks against the item that the Dean has a lot of work to do. But, on enquiry, I find that he has got three clerks under him. That being the case, why should we create another post under him, in these days of financial stringency? I therefore propose that the item be omitted.

Question proposed.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I rise to join in the protest against the grant of this item, and I think the Honourable Minister will be well advised in accepting the motion. The facts are as they have been placed before the House by the honourable mover. The Dean has under him three clerks, and this House would be glad to know what the administrative duties of the Dean are in the College. Apart from the teaching work, I think the rest of the work is done by the three clerks, and I cannot understand why the Dean requires an assistant under him in the form of a M.B., B.S. man, as the proposal indicates. This is a new appointment, and I think the Council must put its foot down upon the creation of new appointments, because once these appointments are created, we can never afterwards set them aside.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, at present the Dean is Capt. Bhatia, and he has to do the work of a professor as well. He is a full time officer, and in addition to his other duties as professor in the College, he has also to do the duty of the Dean. The number of students in the Medical College has increased very much lately, and as provision has been made for clinical tuition in the Gokuldas Tejpal Hospital, the number of admissions will be increased in after years. So the work is on the increase. There are 300 resident students at present and there is a big college to carry on and the higher duties of the Dean often take much of his time. If he is not given the assistance that is asked for here, he will have to spend an hour or two of his time every day in simply initialling routine papers and so much of his valuable time will be lost, and I think that is a very great matter for consideration. If this personal assistant is given, the routine work will be thrown on him and the Dean will be free to devote his attention to the other important matters.

The Grant Medical College requires a good deal of looking after and for the new college which the municipality is starting they have also appointed a full time officer. So I think this appointment of a personal assistant to the Dean is necessary.

I may however tell this House that on account of the deficit budget Government may have to take into consideration the various cuts and this department of medicine may also have to bear its proportionate cut and Government will have to see where to economise and where not to economise, and it would be advisable on the part of this House to leave the matter entirely to us. It does not mean that when these grants are sanctioned each and every pie of it will be spent. I fear that Government will not be in a position to afford to spend so much on this item.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South) : Sir, the Honourable Minister himself says that he is indifferent whether the cut is made or not, because he says that owing to the deficit budget Government will take into consideration the various cuts proposed in the different departments, and perhaps this will be one of them. And in that connection I think his hands will be strengthened by the opinion of this Council.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I think the appointment is necessary and it will not be advisable for this House to insist upon this cut.

Question put and lost.

Dr. M. M. MEHTA (Surat City) : Sir, I move :

Omit total provision for Technical Adviser for Orthopædics Rs. 23,340,

Sir, in spite of the assurances of the Honourable Minister, I hold that this post is absolutely unnecessary. I do not see any reason for this additional appointment when the officer is not an expert and has less qualifications than the highly qualified officers in charge of the medical college and hospitals. I therefore move for the omission of this item.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, this item of Rs. 23,340 which is proposed to be omitted is made up of pay of officers—orthopædic mechanic, Rs. 6,000, leave allowance Rs. 1,060 ; Contingencies—Appliances, Rs. 16,000 ; postage and telegraph charges, Rs. 50 ; telephone charges Rs. 225, for rounding Rs. 5, total Rs. 23,340. Out of this a sum of Rs. 6,000 has already been cut. So, now, there remains only Rs. 17,340. As this House, Sir, by a majority have sanctioned the appointment of this officer and as the work done by him during the last 12 months has been found very useful, the Surgeon-General recommends that he should be retained. I need not bring before this House the same arguments that I placed before it last time as to the necessity of his appointment. Rs. 7,060 are required to be sanctioned and also Rs. 10,000 for appliances, etc. I therefore oppose the omission of this item.

Dr. M. M. MEHTA : I have nothing more to add in reply.

Question put and lost.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western 'Sind) Sir, I move.

Reduce by Re. 1 total demand under Medical (Civil Estimates page 166.).

Sir, having given up all the items this is the item on which there are certain adverse remarks against the Medical Department that I want to bring to the notice of this Council and the Honourable Minister. I need not trouble the House with a long list of grievances. I can bring them directly to the attention of the Honourable Minister. But one matter especially which I want to bring to the notice of this House is the last resolution carried by this Council as regards the cancellation of fees to doctors practising in either civil hospitals or in the local board dispensaries or hospitals even for surgical operations and attendance. That was a resolution that was passed by this Council last time. That resolution was passed by an overwhelming majority. The Honourable Minister knew full well that the trend of non-official opinion on that point, except some members for Bombay City proper, was unanimous in condemning the orders of the Surgeon-General on the question of these fees. After that very distinct declaration of a certain policy to be adopted on that point by the Honourable Minister, I agree that a committee had to be appointed to sit in judgment over the very express and definite opinion of this Council, a committee to whose constitution I objected then. I objected when I was offered to be on the committee, I object now when I stand before this Council. Now, Sir, on principle alone to start with the appointment of a committee over the deliberate opinion expressed by this House after a full and complete discussion of a resolution is to say the least unprecedented—at least it ought not to have been, and I think the Minister could have paid that respect to the opinion of the non-official side. Then, Sir, if it had been a question of taking evidence, collecting statistics or examining witnesses and cross-examining them, the appointment of a committee might be justified by the Honourable Minister. But the committee that was appointed received communications from the two medical unions, of Sind and Bombay, whose members are doctors engaged in private practice. Their opinions could have been obtained by the Honourable Minister through his department without having recourse to a committee. The committee also received the opinions of the presidents of local boards and municipalities; and those opinions too could have been easily obtained by the Minister through his department. The committee did not take any evidence; they resolved not to take evidence. Therefore I respectfully submit to this Council that the appointment of the committee was uncalled for and unjustified under the circumstances.

Not only was there no necessity for the appointment of a committee, but I go further and say that the constitution of that committee was also not one which would appeal to the non-official side of this Council. It consists of the Surgeon-General. I have very great respect for the Surgeon-General personally, but when his own order was under discussion it was hardly fair to appoint him as a judge in his own case. Proceeding further, the next member of the committee was a civil surgeon nominated by the Surgeon-General himself, that is to say, a subordinate of the officer whose order was under appeal. I am surprised that the officer whose order was under investigation should have been not only a member of the committee which conducted that investigation, but should also have nominated a subordinate of his on that committee. Then, Sir, the third was the president of the Bombay Medical Union, an union which is made up of almost all doctors that practise in Bombay city. Another member was a representative of the Sind Medical Union whose interests do not ordinarily agree with the interests of the poorer classes for whose benefit that resolution was moved. That resolution referred to local board dispensaries, municipal dispensaries, civil hospitals, etc., in fact, to all places wherever medicines were given and operations performed under Government control. Out of the eight members of the committee, four were these. The chairman had the casting vote. So far as these four were concerned, there was no doubt whatever that it was a committee which was, not to use a stronger word, a packed one. Then, Sir, the fifth member was the honourable member Mr. A. N. Surve. I have very great respect for Mr. Surve, but I respectfully submitted to the Honourable Minister through the secretary that Mr. Surve belonged to the city of Bombay and could not have that realisation of our rural difficulties that must arise in the course of the investigation. Then the other members were Dr. Mansuri and myself. I refused to serve and Mr. Adwani was placed there. There was also Rao Bahadur Chitale, who was my colleague in the last Council. And being my colleague I was acquainted with the tendencies that he represented so far as fees for local board hospitals were concerned. And I gave a definite statement in my letter that knowing his tendencies already it was not fair to put him along with the other four who were of the same mind, on the committee.

Therefore, Sir, both on the ground of principle, that this Council cannot allow a committee to sit in judgment over its resolutions, or to set aside or interfere with its resolutions, and on the ground of personnel of the committee, I object to the appointment of this committee. The personnel of the committee should have been carefully scrutinised by the Honourable Minister himself, as he is responsible to this House for its constitution. It is a committee which has to determine a matter which is of general importance to the whole of this presidency, which affects the nook and corner of the whole presidency. Now, Sir, instead of this packed committee, it was better to have no committee at all. I do not want to pre-judge the conclusions of the committee, but so far as the procedure is concerned, I think it is an objectionable one, and I want to draw the attention of this House to this practice, so that we may determine once for all as to the advisability of such practice.

Question proposed.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, the honourable member for Sukkur having drawn me into the controversy it has become my duty to make my position quite clear. He will remember that I was one of those who voted with him for that resolution. It is always necessary that one should not come to decisions on hearing one side of the question only. At that time all the material that was before the House was the Surgeon-General's rules, and having considered that as harsh on the agriculturist I went to the length of voting with the honourable member for Sukkur. But I had kept an open mind and after making further enquiries I came to the conclusion that the other side must have also a fair hearing. When the Surgeon-General wrote to me enquiring whether I could serve on the committee I very willingly gave him my consent. After going through all the papers that were submitted for my consideration I came to the conclusion that there was much truth on the other side of the question also. Because we had come to a certain decision at one time, therefore we should stick to that decision and consider them as unalterable as the laws of the Persians and the Medes, is a doctrine to which I shall never subscribe. If material that was not before me when I formed my opinion on the previous occasion is placed before me later, it becomes my duty to revise my judgment.

[Mr. A. N. Surve]

The second point is, the honourable member for Sukkur has challenged the committee as a packed one, and in proof of that he stated that Mr. Surve knows nothing about the mofussil conditions. Well, I quite admit that I am a Bombay man, but that does not preclude me from acquiring information and basing a decision on the information that is placed before the committee. Therefore, simply because a man happens to be living in a city, he should never serve on a committee is a dangerous proposition to lay down. Perhaps the honourable member does not know that there are some members who take a deep interest in questions not concerning their own interests. In that way, though I belong to the Bombay City, I take very great interest in two neighbouring districts and I always visit those districts and go into details of any matters brought to my notice by the inhabitants.

The next point raised was that the Surgeon-General was not the proper person, because he is the accused, to sit in judgment over that point. I would like to point out to the honourable member that it is a purely administrative matter and has to be examined from an administrative point of view. In such committees the chairman must of necessity be a man who is conversant with all the details of the question that is under investigation. If the Surgeon-General is not the person to be appointed as chairman, I do not know whether a stranger is to be appointed in that place.

As the matter is under the consideration of the committee, at this moment I am not going to say anything about the nature of the report that will be coming out. But, I am very sorry that the honourable member for Sukkur should have referred to the capacity of a man, simply because he is living in a city. We go to serve on committees with an open mind to find out the truth and not for the purpose of supporting our hobbies. I think the step taken by Government is the only sensible step that could be taken and I am sure it will have the support of every sensible man in this House.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, I am afraid the honourable member the Deputy President has imported a large amount of prejudice against the poor servants of this House. I am very solicitous and very careful about the good opinion of this House and I do always realise that I stand here on the support and good-will of the members of this House. I shall try to exculpate myself from the serious charges that have been brought against me by the honourable member the Deputy President.

The resolution moved by him and approved by the House was:

“That in view of the very harsh nature of the Surgeon-General's draft rules as regards the fees and charges to be levied from indoor and out-door patients for attendance and operations at dispensaries and hospitals this Council recommends to Government to rescind the orders passed by them since August 1923 accepting such rules.”

The resolution asked that the orders passed by Government since 1923 should be rescinded. At that time, Sir, in the course of the debate, the then General Secretary, Mr. Thomas, brought to the notice of the Council:

[Mr. B. V. Jadhav]

" I am afraid that passionate devotion to accurate detail with which he has so often captivated both sides of the House failed him for once. For the orders referred to by him did nothing more than approve a draft notice which with one small modification nearly recapitulated rules which had been in existence for nearly 7 years. I have a certain quasiparental interest in these rules for although I was not the author of their being, I acted towards them in the capacity of a midwife and ushered them into the light of day on the 4th January 1917."

These orders were passed before the date mentioned by the honourable member the Deputy President in his resolution. After that resolution Government ordered to rescind all orders passed since August 1923. As the rules were made by an order passed in 1917, this resolution did not apply to them. In the course of the debate, I had to bring to the notice of the Council that the acceptance of the resolution by Government would not mean anything, and would not be of much use :

" As has been pointed out by the General Secretary there were no new orders passed and new rules framed by Government but to ask the Surgeon-General to issue orders that the whole rules should be placed on the notice-board so that people entering the hospitals may know what the rules are."

Still, I assure the House that the acceptance of the resolution will not be of any use and will not give relief to the patients that go to the hospitals and dispensaries. I then promised to the House to appoint a committee in order to take steps to see what sort of relief was necessary and should be given. It was not asked by the resolution. The committee has been appointed and it has worked. It would have finished its labours long ago and the new rules would have been framed even before this time, had it not been for the Deputy President himself who, when requested to serve on that committee, refused to do so. Another member had to be found in his place and the honourable member Mr. Adwani was good enough to accept a place on that committee and he has been trying to give his best advice to that committee. The honourable member the Deputy President even refused to give evidence before that committee. It pleased him to do so and I do not find fault with him for that.

I want to bring to the notice of the House that Government sees the necessity to reduce the fees and revise the rules. The honourable member the Deputy President thinks that all fees in the hospitals and dispensaries should be abolished. Is that so ?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : Yes ; except in the case of rich people.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Is it because they are rich ? He does not say that medicines and treatment should be given free of charge but says that the scale should be lowered. There is an independent medical profession which requires encouragement, and it has always been a complaint that graduates of medicine confine themselves to big cities and towns and do not go down to district and taluka towns. Later, they are going down to district and taluka towns where there are either civil hospitals or dispensaries carried on by municipalities or district local boards. If free medical aid is to be given in these dispensaries and civil hospitals, then these private medical men who have gone there will be faced with a serious competition. That will not be in the interest of the people themselves. People want medical help on a larger scale and the medical help which is available in Government civil hospitals and dispensaries is not adequate. Complaints have been received that facilities for medical relief should be increased and in order to do that the independent medical profession should be encouraged to go to the district and taluka centres and settle there. If fees are totally abolished it will be a deathblow to the rising of the independent medical profession. Therefore it will not be in the interest of the people themselves to abolish all fees.

(After recess.)

Representation re Provincial Contribution.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. The procedure to be followed will be the usual one, namely, the Honourable the Finance Member will move that the Council do approve of the representation* which has been circulated amongst honourable members. I will then ask whether any honourable member wishes to address the House—I hope there will not be long speeches—and then I will put it to the vote. If carried it will be sent on behalf of this Council.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Sir, I move that this representation be now considered by the House. I may mention that several proposals for slight verbal emendations have been made to me by certain honourable members and I shall make such changes as are still possible in the draft in accordance with those verbal emendations. But the matter is so urgent now that this must be printed off and despatched without delay and I hope the changes which the House will insist upon will be confined to very few verbal amendments. I move, Sir, that this Council recommends to Government to forward this representation to the Government of India.

Question proposed.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN (Nasik District): Sir, I wish to offer a few remarks upon this representation. Honourable members of the House will see that this is a representation to be sent to the Government of India not on behalf of the Government of Bombay, but on behalf of the Legislative Council of Bombay. We, members of the Legislative Council, feel very strongly that one evil consequence of the Meston Settlement has been that the development of the transferred departments has been very seriously arrested. If there is any one point on which we feel more keenly than another, it is this, that, at all events, the Meston Settlement is a factor, a very important factor, in the unsatisfactory progress, progress.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I draw the honourable member's attention to the fact that a considerable time allotted for the budget has already been taken up by adjournment motions and that the question of the Meston Settlement has already been debated at full length? I ask him, therefore, to consider—of course, the honourable member is quite in order, I am not ruling him out of order—whether such elaborate discussion of the Meston Settlement is desirable on the present occasion.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN: I don't intend to dwell at length, Sir, on the Meston Settlement, but having made my point clear, the specific suggestion that I wish to offer is this : In this representation a paragraph should be added dealing with the consequential effects of the Meston Settlement upon the transferred departments, and I would strongly suggest that it should be added after paragraph 18 and before paragraph 19 ; so that the point upon which we feel strongly will be made clear, as it ought to be made clear, in this representation, which, as I have said, we are sending not on behalf of the Government of Bombay, but on behalf of the Legislative Council.

* Vide Appendix C.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities) : Sir, I rise to show our indignation against the Central Government for having meted out unjust and undignified treatment to this presidency so far as the Meston Settlement is concerned. Sir, this Presidency pays a great part of the revenue in the form of income tax and the Central Government has entirely disregarded this province in preference to their other pet children—the other provinces. Sir, when this Meston Settlement was settled, many points were not taken into consideration, such as the needs of a province, the revenue it paid, and so many other things. But I would not like to detain this House longer since we have got other urgent business of this House and I commend this motion to the entire support of this House.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : Mr. President, I will be very brief. I have read the representation once, even twice, and very carefully too. I do not think that any more suggestion can be usefully made for addition. I am much struck by the moderation and sobriety of the representation as I think it might have been stronger. But the Honourable the Finance Member, who knows the pulse of this House and knows the pulse of the Government of India, has drafted the representation in a manner in which it should be drafted. I heartily support the motion.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North) : Sir, I do not wish to strike a discordant note, but the document appears to me to be very colourless. The privations that we have been suffering from are not at all given the due prominence that they deserve. The Honourable the Finance Member was kind enough to show the representation to me last evening and I have submitted my views to him. But he represents to me that those points cannot be included now as the representation has to be sent by this evening. So I do not insist that our views should be placed there. But I certainly must insist that, if such documents are again at any time to be sent in the name of the Council, it is but proper that the members of the Council are given due opportunity of expressing their views. At present, under this protest, I support the petition that is going to be sent.

Mr. LALJI NARANJI (Indian Merchants' Chamber) : Sir, this document of representation is so ably prepared by the Honourable the Finance Member that I do not want to go into details, except as to paragraph 20, which includes matters which are, I believe, not really relevant in the representation that we are making to the Government of India. They might go against us in this respect that we are suggesting to them certain other alternatives by which this province can get further money. That is on page 7, paragraph 20. I agree with the first three sentences in the paragraph, but the following sentences, I think, should be deleted :

"There are federal as well as state income taxes and the rates of the tax differ in different states. In Canada, where the income tax is federal, the provinces are allowed to tax Corporations. In the United States there are both federal and state income taxes. The war tax on profits and income in Switzerland was levied on the cantons who retained a share of the proceeds and paid the balance into the Federal treasury."

I want, Sir, that these sentences must be deleted, and I hope that the Honourable the Finance Member will agree with me, because we will be suggesting to the Government of India that this province may also impose a federal tax like the income tax, which is already existing. There is also another federal tax that is suggested, and therefore I hope that the Honourable the Finance Member will agree to my suggestion.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): Sir, on behalf of the Swaraj party, I just want to state my position. I do not want to stand in the way of this representation going to the Government of India, especially as it is in accord with a resolution of this Council. By the courtesy of the Honourable the Finance Member, I had a chance of looking over this representation and he has also made a few alterations which I suggested. I do not object therefore to the representation going to the Government of India, but I do frankly say that I do not have any confidence that the Government of India will accede to the suggestion made in this representation. This is not the first time that representations on this question have been sent from this House to the Government of India. The House will remember that some time ago, this Council unanimously resolved against the Meston Settlement. What came out of it? Nothing. If the Honourable the Finance Member and other honourable members desire that this representation should go in the name of the Legislative Council, I have no objection, but I do think that we must not merely wait for our representation to be granted. We must adopt sterner measures. I do not want to place before this House for its acceptance the political philosophy of the Swaraj party, but I do hope that the Bombay Government will realise that making these representations alone will avail them nothing. Other provinces have not been content with merely sending representations, but they have refused to contribute their share to the Imperial exchequer, or tax their people more. Unless the people and the Government make a stern determination in this direction, and convey that determination to the Government of India, I do not think this excellently worded but colourless representation will have any effect. However, that is a matter for the Government of Bombay to decide. With these words, I accord my approval to this representation.

Mr. F. CLAYTON (Karachi Chamber of Commerce): Sir, I rise to express my complete approval of the statement which it is proposed to submit to the Government of India, expressing the views of the Bombay Council on the question of the annual contribution from this presidency to the Government of India. It appears to me that the statement fully proves an injustice has been done to Bombay and, through the reductions proposed to be granted to other provinces, is being continued. The statement shows our position and contention so plainly that in my opinion the Government of India must in equity decide upon a reconsideration of the question, and I feel sure, in the case of Bombay, a revision. I recommend that the statement as submitted be approved by this Council.

Mr. V. A. GRANTHAM (Bombay Chamber of Commerce): Sir, I should like to express my approval of the representation. I do not propose to speak at any length on the matter, but only to say that I entirely agree with it.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Sir, I take it then that this representation, with slight emendations may go forth as the deliberate and considered voice of this Council. I shall have much pleasure in meeting the suggestion made by the honourable member Mr. Lalji Naranji and omitting those sentences which, in his opinion, are dangerous as raising the spectre of a provincial income tax. However, I do not think it is a new suggestion to the Government of India, and I do not think we are putting into their minds anything that has not been there before. Nevertheless, I recognise that a suggestion that this House would consider a provincial income tax, would be a misrepresentation of the present feeling of this House. I shall be very glad to omit those words. For the rest, Sir, we have taken note of the views expressed by the honourable leader of the Swaraj party. I certainly cannot commit the Bombay Government to join the cry of non-co-operation. We have greater faith in the understanding and statesmanship of the Government of India, and we trust that this representation may be effective.

Question

"That this Council recommends to Government that the representation prepared be forwarded to the Government of India" put and carried unanimously.

(Discussion on Demands for Grants resumed.)

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, I have shown that the Bombay Government have not only not disregarded the resolution of this House passed last year, but that they have carried it out not only in the letter, but the Government have made up their mind to carry that resolution even in its spirit. The spirit of that resolution was that the burden upon the poorer subjects for medical treatment in hospitals and dispensaries should be lightened, and that the independent medical profession also should not be killed. The honourable member, the Deputy President, in his opening remarks, has conceded the point that very rich persons ought to be obliged to pay something, and the intentions of Government are also the same. I may point out that the deliberations of the committee appointed have not yet finished, but that they have reached certain conclusions, which I may with the courtesy of the Surgeon-General place before this House for their information. The committee is still sitting, and will probably conclude its work to-morrow. The general trend of the recommendations of the committee is as follows:

The income limit below which all patients are treated free to be raised. The maximum daily charges for in-patients to be considerably reduced. The fees for operations to be lowered. Full time Government medical officers not to participate in fees taken. That was one of the serious grievances, and naturally led to many abuses. So Government are taking a very strong step in that direction. Full time Government medical officers not to participate in fees taken. All emergent cases to be treated free in the out-patients department, whether well-to-do or not. Income limit below which all persons are treated free in hospitals and dispensaries to be considerably raised. I may, therefore, assure this House that there was never any intention on the part of Government to flout the resolution of this Council, but that Government have been very solicitous to bring that resolution into operation, and to give considerable relief to the poorer classes of people. When the deliberations of the committee are over, and its report has been submitted to Government, I may assure the House that very serious consideration will be given to it, and the resolution that will be brought out by Government will, it is trusted, meet with the approval of this House.

Dr. M. B. VELKAR (Bombay City, South): Sir, I rise to support the motion moved by my honourable friend Mr. Pahalajani. In supporting it, apart from the question of general efficiency, I want to draw the pointed attention of the House to a matter which is known to the people of this presidency for the last two or three years, and which has agitated the public mind a great deal, namely, the Karachi Civil Hospital scandal. Here charges of extortion and misappropriation have been laid against an officer in the position of the Civil Surgeon of Karachi. The charges are something like this: That poor people who ought to have been charged no fees at all under the rules had been forced to pay money in the Karachi Civil Hospital to the Civil Surgeon, Lieut.-Colonel Stephen, that well-to-do patients who ought to have been charged fees according to the scale laid down in the hospital rules had been compelled to pay sums much in excess of those mentioned in the scale, that Government which ought to have got all the fees before 1921 and a certain percentage after 1921 of the fees so charged for operations performed within the hospital on non-nursing home patients had not been credited with its due and that the public had thus a legitimate grievance against the hospital authorities. These, Sir, are grave and serious charges and the matter has been.....

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Sir, I rise to a point of order. Is the honourable member in order in attacking particular officers while discussing the whole policy on this motion.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The motion before the House, which is for the reduction of one rupee is a motion of censure, and the honourable member therefore is in order in discussing the whole question of policy.

Dr. M. B. VELKAR: By bringing this question before this House I want a reply from the Honourable Minister in charge to the question whether the hospitals that are in the presidency are or are not intended for giving medical relief to the suffering poor or they are meant to be institutions for the enrichment of medical officers. That is the question, and that is why I have referred to these particular instances. These are very serious charges, Sir, that are laid against a person who occupies the position of the Civil Surgeon of Karachi in the Civil Hospital. I will just bring it to the notice of the House that this matter has been before this Council by interpellations for the last two or three years and last year I had submitted a resolution to this House to bring this matter before this House, but unfortunately we could not reach that particular resolution.

Now just for the information of the House I will read one or two affidavits that have been produced by Dr. Mulchand in a booklet form which has been in the hands of every honourable member of this House. In this particular document I find affidavits of different persons from whom money has been extorted, but I will only bring to the notice of the House one such affidavit by one Mr. Mulchand Tolaram. Here he tells us that his friend one Mulchand, a Bhatya, was admitted in the Civil Hospital and that there he learnt that a photo of his leg had been taken.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I rise to a point of order. Is it in order for the honourable member to attack a particular officer when he is merely discussing the administration of that department ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I think under the ruling of the late Sir Narayan Chandavarkar individual officers of the department for which a grant is asked can be criticised though no criticism of any individual officer of any other department can be allowed.

Dr. M. B. VELKAR : Sir, I cannot help bringing in the name of the particular persons against whom serious charges have been made and here in the affidavit of one Mulchand who was in the hospital, something like Rs. 300 were first taken and then while the case was being treated Colonel Stephen said that he will have to take another photo examination and another fee will have to be given which had certainly to be paid. Then there is another instance of Colonel Stephen according to his own admission having taken fee from Mrs. Camberalli, and the Government resolution on that particular point says that Lieut.-Colonel Stephen had no right to accept a fee from a patient in the hospital. I therefore want to know from the Honourable Minister what he has done with regard to this particular thing.

Now, Sir, my point is that Indian Ministers are certainly expected to keep a great check over the foreign element that we meet with in each department at its head.

In the J. J. Hospital scandal, Dr. Paranjpye was charged for showing weakness and for not coming to the help of the people and in that case there was an instance of how the Ministers are dominated by their secretaries, and not the ministers dominating their secretaries, as is pointed out by Sir Chimanlal Setalvad in his evidence before the Muddiman Committee.

In this particular case which I am quoting I would request the Honourable Minister to set this grievance right by instituting a public inquiry by a non-official committee of this House which can go into this affair.

[Dr. M. B. Velkar]

So far, this particular affair has only been inquired into, as I find from the book in my hand, by the Surgeon-General who did not call all the witnesses or even the complainant but simply took a statement from Colonel Stephen, the man who was the accused. The Surgeon-General did not call all the witnesses but simply on the strength of certain statements made by Colonel Stephen, he submitted a report to Government and Government were satisfied that no such charges were proved. Therefore, I say the proper procedure would be to appoint a committee of inquiry consisting of the members of this House.

Then, Sir, I would take this opportunity to say a word regarding the medical needs of the villages. We find that this year a provision has been made to afford relief to villages and an amount of Rs. 3,000 has been budgetted for that purpose this year. Considering the enormity of the problem I think this is a meagre sum because according to Government there are something like 26,000 villages in the presidency and to start with the village medical system a grant of Rs. 3,000 is merely a meagre provision. I want to know from the Honourable Minister in charge what he has decided about giving medical aid to all the villages in the presidency. I want to bring to the notice of the Honourable Minister that in Madras they have gone ahead in this matter. They have got a definite system and they have decided to open 3,000 dispensaries in the course of 5 years. They will have during the first year opened 300 dispensaries. I would therefore ask the Honourable Minister if he has taken a definite stand on this particular point. In this connection I would like to bring to the notice of the House the medical aid given by the Baroda Government. As I have pointed out last year there are four districts and 40 talukas in Baroda and the Baroda Government have decided to have a hospital for every district town and one dispensary within a radius of five miles in the village area. Then so far as the scheme of medical relief is concerned, I do not know what encouragement is given to the Ayurvedic and Unani systems of medicine. There are so many *vaid*s and hakims and I know that there is a great mass of people in the country who have faith in these *vaid*s and hakims and who would prefer death rather than be treated by allopathic physicians, and therefore I do not know why we should not take advantage of the presence of these *vaid*s and hakims in the villages and give them a start by encouraging them to work out these particular systems of medicine. The Madras Government, for instance, have got a scheme to encourage this system of medicine. They have started a medical college there, and they are giving a great deal of help in that way to the indigenous systems of medicine. I hope the Honourable Minister will give due consideration to all that I have said. With these words I support the motion of my honourable friend from Sukkur.

Mr. R. G. SOMAN (Satara District): Sir, my honourable friend Dr. Velkar has pressed the Karachi scandal on the attention of Government, in connection with the motion moved by the honourable member, the Deputy President, with a view to bring before the Government the enormity of the sums that are extorted by medical practitioners by way of fees from poor patients. My honourable friend in the end of his speech referred to the necessity of encouraging the indigenous systems of medicine, and gave out as his opinion that the majority of the villagers have greater faith in the indigenous systems of medicine than in the allopathic system. Not only medical practitioners of the standing of Dr. Velkar are giving out this opinion, but honourable members of this House, if they refer to page 45 of the report submitted by a committee appointed by the Madras Government to go into the indigenous systems of medicine, will find that a member of that committee Mr. A. T. Palmer has said in his report :—

“At the same time the fact remains that the indigenous medicines are cheap and very efficacious in many of the ordinary diseases, and, what is more, are very popular especially in the villages. It is, therefore, but right that the Government should give some helping hand for the encouragement of the indigenous system of medicine seeing that it serves a good proportion of the population.”

That is the opinion of Mr. A. T. Palmer, a member of a committee which toured round in the whole of India and particularly in the presidency of Madras. It is on the recommendation of this committee that the Madras Government have established an Ayurvedic and Unani College for teaching the indigenous systems of medicine. If honourable members turn to to-day's list of questions and answers, they will find the scheme of the Madras Government in their letter to this Government given in appendix 67. Sir, from this it will be quite apparent that the principal thing to which the medical department of this province should pay attention is the popularization of the chief indigenous systems of medicine and the training of young persons as *vaid*s and *hakim*s so that medical relief might be taken nearer home to the village population. The indigenous system is certainly cheaper. The department has already expressed its intention by a recent press note to make medical relief available to the village population, but they propose to give that relief only by the allopathic system. The department will do well to at once take in hand the popularisation of the indigenous systems of medicine, and if they do that they will be able to give medical relief at less cost to the State. That is the suggestion I wish to make to the Honourable Minister in charge of the Medical Department. I am thankful to the Honourable Minister for having placed before the House the correspondence with the Madras Government, as this shows his inclination towards the popularization of the indigenous systems of medicine. At the same time, however, I find that certain high officers of Government, such as the Surgeon-General and others, are not still favourable to extend a helping hand to the indigenous systems of medicine, and they even go the length of saying that school teachers who have undergone 2½ months' training in the allopathic system would be more useful than *vaid*s and *hakim*s who have undergone training for years and years. I submit that these opinions of the advocates of the Western system of medicine should not weigh with the members of this House and particularly with an Indian Minister, who, it appears, is inclined to favour the indigenous systems of medicine. I may also submit that even the grievances mentioned by the honourable member the Deputy President about the extortion of heavy fees will easily be remedied by adopting my suggestion and by helping the indigenous systems. With these remarks, Sir, I conclude.

Mr. C. W. A. TURNER : Sir, I rise to draw the very careful attention of the honourable members of the House to item 159 on page 208 of the Blue Book. That is a small item of Rs. 5,000, which is intended as the first step towards the expenditure which will be involved in the scheme of medical relief for the city of Bombay. Honourable members may remember that recently a press note was published laying down the details of the scheme. In this short note in the Blue Book full information has not been given, but only a summary. But honourable members will have in mind the details which have already been given in the press note. It may however be desirable to remind honourable members about the details of the scheme. The scheme entails a provision of more than 800 beds in the city of Bombay: it means the reconstruction and the re-organisation of the Government hospitals, and the J. J. Hospital; and it means the construction of new hospitals in the mill areas and on the Worli side. The total expenditure involved is 72 lakhs of rupees. It will be seen from this note that it is proposed to raise as much money as possible by public subscription and Government or the municipality undertake to subscribe a rupee for every rupee so subscribed. Therefore if the whole scheme costing 72 lakhs is to be completed and the public come forward with subscriptions to meet their share of the whole scheme the financial liability on the Government of Bombay can easily be calculated by honourable members. I may add that the Bombay Municipality has given its approval to the scheme and is willing to take its share. The Bombay Government was also willing to take its share on the assumption that the money bills submitted to this House would be passed. Although the money bills have not been passed, the Government of Bombay still support this item of Rs. 5,000 and they still support the scheme. But I must point out that without money the scheme is not likely to fructify.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : Mr. President, it is not my intention to support the motion, but I rise to ask for information. I must in the beginning say that I cannot sympathise with severe attacks made on individual officers of Government. The practice should be for the House to leave those matters to the executive. The House should only take action in very severe scandals of a very widespread kind. Sir, with regard to the indigenous system of medicine I am a very great supporter of that system. But I do not think the time has yet come when hakims can be appointed in place of qualified doctors. You may appoint nim hakims, which means half doctors or quacks. In serious cases to suggest the appointment of hakims in place of qualified medical men is to fail to realise one's responsibility with regard to human life. The time may come later for hakims, but the first step towards it is to establish indigenous colleges of medicine both Ayurvedic and Unani. The degrees to them must be given not by committees or municipalities—because we know how these are secured and I am strongly against it—but by qualified people. Sir, I think that some of these quacks should be prosecuted for practising medicine, the result of which is to ruin the life of the patient instead of curing his disease. With due respect to my honourable friend Mr. Soman, I would suggest to him that it is not a right thing to ask the Honourable Minister to appoint hakims and vaids in villages at present as they are merely agents of the Angel of Death.

I rise to speak on this occasion because I strongly supported this motion when it was last brought forward. On that occasion, the Honourable Minister had told us that the total income derived to the State from this source of fees in hospitals and dispensaries was Rs. 90,000. I had therefore strongly emphasised the point that, in view of the smallness of the amount compared with lakhs and crores we spend, it would not be right to charge poor people who resort to dispensaries for treatment. I had also emphasised the point that the Council would be prepared to forego this small amount if the Government adopted the policy of giving medicine free to poor people. I had also mentioned that in the pre-British Governments the practice was to give poor people free medicine. No reply was given to these points that were raised. I am strongly in favour of the view that Government should carry out the resolutions of this House. Although they may be mere recommendations at present, the Honourable Ministers should consider them as orders in the shape of recommendations. I was rather surprised to see that the Honourable Minister, instead of taking direct action as suggested by the resolution, had appointed a committee. I think that the remarks addressed by the honourable member the Deputy President against the personnel of that committee are not altogether without substance. I do not think it is right to appoint such a committee, because the Honourable Minister himself could have disposed of it. If there had been any insuperable difficulties he could have come forward before this Council and said: "I have given only partial effect as I could not give full effect to the resolution, as there are insuperable difficulties in the way. I place myself at the disposal of the House". The House would have supported him. But I do not like this procedure, because it will set a precedent in the case of other resolutions that may be passed by this House on future occasions. If these resolutions are to be white-washed like that, I think the House will lose its dignity and its importance. Therefore I would like the Honourable Minister to let me know what objections there were for foregoing the petty income of Rs. 90,000 from this source. The Honourable Minister explained to us that certain classes of people would be charged fees. For that we may be thankful to him; but I think it would be wise to carry out the wishes of the House and the wishes of the country and receive the blessings of the people who will be able to get free medical relief.

There is one more grievance and that is with regard to the Grant Medical College. Honourable members were complaining with regard to certain actions of the college authorities. I want to know whether they have been removed. There is no desire on the part of the House to hinder any action the Honourable Minister might take. Only let him apply his mind to particular defects.

[Moulvi Rafuiddin Ahmad]

It is a well-known fact that committees are not appointed for solving any question but for shelving it. That is creating suspicions in the minds of some honourable members. Not a single member who had strongly opposed this item has found place upon the committee. Therefore, I think that the suspicion that has been given expression to has much foundation. I do not sympathise with my honourable friend the Deputy President in insisting upon a vote of censure, because I think this is not such an important matter as to be dealt with by a vote of censure. I will still ask the Honourable Minister to answer the points that I have now placed before him. If the explanations are satisfactory, I will oppose the motion.

Mr. R. D. SHINDE (Nasik District): Sir, I submit that this motion of a bludgeon character which has been moved by the honourable member the Deputy President has been moved by him on one of the most flimsy grounds. I expected to hear from the honourable member the Deputy President a long list of sins of commissions and omissions against the Honourable Minister for Education, but the only matter about which he complained was the resolution he moved last time, to which the Honourable Minister has given a very satisfactory explanation. It will be seen that the resolution as passed by the House was really extremely ineffective to do the thing which the honourable the Deputy President wanted to do. From the explanation of the Honourable Minister for Education, the very thing which the honourable the Deputy President wanted to do, namely, the lowering of the fees or an inquiry into that question, has been undertaken by the Honourable Minister and a forecast of the decisions of the committee has been already placed before the House.

As regards the packing of the committee, my honourable friend to my right has already given a satisfactory explanation. In discussing motions of this character, Sir, we have to take into account also the achievements which the Honourable Minister has made. I think in fairness to him we must congratulate him upon the two recent appointments he has made—I mean the appointment of an Indian member of the I.M.S. as the Dean of the Grant Medical College. For the first time in its history of this presidency an Indian has been appointed to this post. I also refer to the recent appointment of the acting Surgeon-General to which also an Indian member of the I. M. S. has been appointed. I think that these two achievements are very great, and the honourable House will, I think, congratulate the Honourable the Education Minister on putting up the claims of Indians and getting Indian members appointed to these most important administrative posts in the Medical Department. My honourable friend the nominated member from Bombay says they are non-Brahmins. I say they are not. One is a Brahmir and one is a Gujarathi. With this explanation, Sir, I think the honourable House instead of passing this vote of non-confidence will reject it unanimously.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI (Ahmednagar District): I am sorry, Sir, I do not see my honourable friend from Poona, Moulvi Rafiuddin, in this House at this time. He advised us that it is not a salutary policy for this House to attack an individual officer. I am referring to the Karachi Hospital scandal, to which my honourable friend Dr. Velkar has referred. I expected, Sir, when the General Department Secretary Mr. Turner rose to address the House that he would refer to this scandal and offer some explanation to this House on behalf of Government. We should know what the position of Government is in this important matter. The Medical Department is a transferred department. It is a department presided over by a Minister who is fully responsible to this House. Therefore, the servants of the Medical Department, whatsoever their salaries may be and howsoever responsible and important posts they may be holding are fully responsible to this House, and I submit, Sir, that the allegations which are made against this officer are really of a very serious kind. The first allegation is....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Before the honourable member proceeds, as he is now discoursing upon the same subject against which the Honourable the Leader of the House has raised a point of order, I will proceed to give my ruling. The point of order was first dealt with in March 1921. The Honourable Sir George Curtis, who was then the Leader of the House, raised the point of order as follows:

"Mr. President, I rise to ask for your ruling on an important point of order, arising out of Rule No. 32. In the course of the debate on Saturday afternoon, when the efficacy of certain apparatus invented by a certain officer of the Medical Department was under discussion, one honourable member referred to the case of an officer of another department"—this was the phraseology of which I had some impression—"who, he said had invented a machine, the use of which he had encouraged in that department. I am on purpose, avoiding names. I wish to request the favour of your ruling as to whether it is in order for a member when discussing the omission or reduction of one budget grant in connection with which the efficiency of a certain officer is in issue, or may be in issue, to support his arguments by references to the efficiency or inefficiency of an officer in another department. As you, Sir, will understand, I represent a very large body of Government servants, and I ask for your ruling for their protection. If it is ordered that any member of this House, in discussing one budget grant, may refer to the efficiency or inefficiency of public servants, whose pay is debited to other budget heads, it is clear that extensive opportunities for breaking reputations become available."

The ruling goes further than that, and I will now read the ruling which the Honourable Sir Narayan Chandavarkar gave:

"With reference to the point of order which has been raised, and on which I am asked to give a ruling, I need hardly remind the Council that the other day, during the course of the debate on the budget relating to the C. I. D., I drew the attention of the House to the practice which has prevailed from olden times down to now in the Houses of Parliament, and I also stated that that practice ought to be followed here, that I was going to insist upon it and enforce it. When the grant with reference to the C. I. D. was being voted upon, one honourable member, in speaking on one of the items, referred to certain individuals by name, and made some reflections upon individual members of that department. Honourable members will remember that I got up then and stated that it is contrary to parliamentary practice,—and it is contrary to parliamentary practice because it is contrary to fairplay and reasonableness of debate for any honourable member to take advantage of the debate upon the budget or upon any other question, for the purpose of attacking any person, and especially one who is in the service of His Majesty. Censures are not allowed on the well known principle that when a subject is under debate, it is contrary to principles to allow the debate to drift into lines which amount to a censure upon any individual officer. If any honourable member wishes to ask the House to censure any officer, he must raise a debate upon it by a distinct resolution, either by way of a substantive motion or by way of amendment. The rule is given in May's Parliamentary Practice. After pointing out that the conduct of the Sovereign, the heir-apparent to the Throne, the Viceroy, the Governor and such other high officials will not be allowed to be debated, it is said for the same reason no charge of a personal character can be raised save upon a direct and substantive motion to that effect, because, if in the course of a debate upon the budget or upon any cognate subject, anything is said by way of censure on an individual officer, that individual officer has a right to reply to meet or to repel the charge. He can only reply through the members of Government, and the members of Government ought to have distinct notice of such a motion, because they have to reply to a charge brought against an officer who is not present in the Council. Now, after I had laid down the rule on those lines, the other day, one honourable member did not observe my ruling and made reflections upon the C. I. D. I confess I ought to have at once got up and asked him to respect the ruling of the Chair. But I did not do it, because I thought that some honourable member, bearing in mind my ruling, would rise to a point of order. Honourable members will, I hope, sympathise with the Chair because if the person occupying the Chair rises from time to time, and tries to defend any member of the Government, he is liable to be suspected of defending the Government. I had laid down the rule, and I thought some member of Government or any other honourable member would draw my attention to it and ask me to enforce it, but with reference to that I have already taken steps. When an insinuation was made against a certain officer on Saturday by one honourable member, I expected some member of Government to rise and draw my attention to it, but soon after that reflection was made, the member of Government concerned got up and explained it, and there the matter dropped. Now that the point of order had been distinctly raised I beg of the honourable members to bear my ruling in mind. I shall strictly enforce it, and not merely with reference to Government Officials but with reference to every person who is not in the Council to defend himself. It will be my duty to defend them by calling to order any honourable member who makes such charges of a personal character."

Then, there is another ruling in Vol. VIII, page 916, about budget demand—Reduction of a demand must be of a substantial and not a trifling amount, unless moved as a vote of censure.

"The Honourable the PRESIDENT: There is notice of a motion by the honourable member (nominated) from Satara, Mr. Jadhav, for reduction of one rupee from the total demand. The reduction of a grant or item must be of a substantial and not of a trifling amount (May, page 483), unless the reduction is moved as a vote of censure on the Department for some wrong action or inaction, in which case a nominal amount such as one rupee would be in order. Therefore, this motion would be out of order. As no motions for reduction have been moved, I propose the total demand."

Honourable members will observe that the present motion is for the reduction of one rupee. The next ruling also bears on the point; it is in Volume VIII, pages 868-869. It says:

"If an officer's pay is brought upon the vote, both his official conduct and the question of the amount can be discussed by the Council with regard to that item."

Honourable members will observe that the rulings give clear indications in regard to the following points:

Honourable members cannot attack individual officers personally on a budget demand. The ruling goes further and says that you cannot attack in that way not only individual officers but any person who is not present in the House. Secondly, if the pay of the officer is included in the demand you can criticise him both in regard to his official work as well as in regard to his emoluments. Both these cases do not apply to the present case. I have got a large number of other rulings, which clearly show that, while honourable members are entitled on these debates to severely criticise the department under discussion and all its officers generally, they cannot pick out one individual officer and apply to him any criticism of the kind which has been applied on the present occasion. I must therefore rule that the honourable member Dr. Velkar's remarks as affecting personally the Civil Surgeon of Karachi were out of order.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : I will not refer to that particular officer.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member can make general remarks as regards the officers of the department ; that would be perfectly in order.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : I will only say that in relation to the administration of the Karachi Civil Hospital and in relation to the officers who were concerned with the management of that hospital, certain allegations were made, and I understand, Sir, that the late Minister, Dr. Paranjpye, had issued certain orders to appoint a committee of enquiry into the conduct of these officers. We expected, after the nomination of the present Minister that the enquiry would be pursued. The public expect that the management and the administration of the transferred departments should be above suspicion. The representatives of the people have been looking to this House to see that the transferred departments at least are managed in such a way that their administration is absolutely honest and above suspicion. The poor people have a right to be treated free in the hospital. They have also a right to expect that no money will be extorted from them. Then again, the people who can afford to pay have a right to expect that they will have to pay only proper fees, and not be subjected to extortion. If such allegations are made against officers in general, it is the duty of the Honourable Minister who presides over the department to make enquiry into the matter, and not merely depend on the enquiry made by the departmental head, which enquiry was not a judicial enquiry and was not a proper enquiry in the sense that the statements of those persons who were responsible for the allegation were not taken down, and the statements of the witnesses in the case were not recorded. Only ex-parte enquiries were made, and Government should not rest content with those enquiries. I hope the honourable Minister will make a satisfactory statement, and convince the House that he will make all possible enquiries, and appoint a committee of this House to go into this matter.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Mr. President, while giving my meed of praise to the Honourable Minister in charge for the appointment of two Indians in the highest places under his command, and while acknowledging with gratitude those efforts which this side of the House expected him to continue, I could not but propose this cut, in order to have a discussion upon the policy in those particulars in which it requires considerable improvement. And, certainly, I for one, being the proposer of the original resolution as regards the non-charging of fees in hospitals, could not rest content without getting an explanation from the Government upon a policy which, I think, many on this side disapprove.

Sir, I am not going to repeat one word of what I have said, but I must state that I have not the slightest intention of making any allegation or any deprecatory remarks against my honourable friend Mr. A. N. Surve,

[Mr. B. G. Phalajani]

so far as his part in the committee is concerned. The House knows and he knows that I have very great respect for him, that I have great respect for his knowledge even of the mofussil. But I only proposed to the Secretary of the General Department that any gentleman from the mofussil, who is in direct touch with the people, would be more suitable, as one of the three—five being on one side—members of the committee, and a little more useful in that committee. And, certainly, I would beg of the honourable members of the Government, I would beg of them most emphatically, that if they want to charge me or charge any member of the non-official side with having made any representation, and that in writing, or if they wish to charge any non-official member with any statement which he has made, let the whole of that statement be read out to the Council in order to remove misunderstanding. I would once more point out to the Honourable Member in charge that, if he wanted to carry conviction to this House that I refused to give evidence before the Surgeon-General on his asking me to do so, and that I refused to be a member of the committee, he should remember that I did so in the form of a letter, which this House was entitled to know the contents of. When informing this House that I refused to be a member of the committee, it would have been a far fairer way of prejudicing the House against any other brother member to give at the same time to the House the reasons on which the refusal was based. I must also state, Sir that I refused to give evidence before the Surgeon-General in response to his invitation, because I knew that the committee by a majority had decided that no evidence was going to be recorded. But apart from that, I wrote to the Surgeon-General at the very commencement that I could not allow myself to be estopped. The Honourable Minister himself is a pleader, and knows the meaning of estop. I did not want to be estopped by acquiescing to a committee against which I sent my objections in writing. That committee is a fact and the report of that committee is coming. I am not prepared to reply to any argument of the Honourable Minister except with the words that that committee need not have been appointed. The point was very simple. The point was whether fees should be done away with and the next point was, if not, to what extent. The Minister himself as the executive head, the Surgeon-General as the head of the Medical Department and the General Secretary as in charge of all the arrangements of the department and as one who is qualified to express an opinion on this point, with all these officers and the report of the medical union before them, the Minister could have easily come to a definite understanding and conclusion as regards the abolition of fees if he wanted to abolish them instead of taking shelter behind a committee consisting of four men interested in concocting the resolution—with due deference to their position,—the Surgeon-General with four members of that denomination and the honourable member from Ahmednagar whose tendencies were well known before to the members of Government, I am making that statement in writing, to have a majority of that kind with the full knowledge of what decision that majority would give, I say it was unfair to this House—I do not in any way challenge the possibility of its coming to a different conclusion for any of these members, but odds are against it, and that is why I have objected to serve on the committee. I, Sir, would have easily done this were it not for the attack on the administration of the civil hospital at Karachi, and as that attack on the civil hospital of Karachi has as yet to be explained by the Honourable Minister to-day, I cannot withdraw until that answer is forthcoming and therefore I say, Sir, that the matter requires further elucidation.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, I am sorry I was not explicit enough when I spoke of the resolution that was passed last year by this House, and there is misunderstanding still lurking in the minds of honourable members. The resolution that was passed here did not directly ask for the abolition of the fees and Government wanted to be just to both the sides. Government wanted to protect the poor from the exactions of the officers of the department as well as to see that in the interests of the subjects the independent medical profession was not killed. The total abolition of fees in every case would, Sir, amount to the killing of the independent medical profession, because they will have very serious competitors in the shape of the Government hospitals and municipal dispensaries. That will not be in the interests of the general public as the independent medical profession ought to rise and grow. It is necessary, Sir, to give help to the poor free of charge, and Government is going to substantially increase the limit of the income of patients who go to such hospitals and dispensaries and in that way a large number of poor people will be entitled to get treatment in hospitals free. I do not think I need take more time of the House on this point.

An honourable member from Bombay asked me to answer a simple question. Are hospitals for the enrichment of medical officers? Government never intended that hospitals should be for the enrichment of medical officers. Government have been giving adequate salaries to the officers that are serving in the medical as well as other departments, and at the same time Government will never connive at any illegal gains.

Some criticism was passed about the scheme to provide medical relief to villages. It was a tentative measure and only last year this House sanctioned the scheme and allotted a sum of money and if the small amount that has been proposed is passed this year for the scheme, Government will be prepared to carry it on. As has been explained in the press note another scheme is in contemplation, but that will be a little bit more expensive and until the finances of this presidency improve, Government is sorry that they cannot place that scheme before this House for its acceptance.

As to the small matter of Rs. 5,000 placed before this House by the honourable member, the General Secretary, I beg leave of this House to say a few words: Medical relief in the city of Bombay is very inadequate and the number of beds in proportion to the total population is very meagre when compared to the number of beds provided in other large cities in India and outside. It is the poor people, Sir, who suffer most for want of adequate hospital accommodation, and therefore in the interests of the labouring classes and the poor people in general an expansion of the medical facilities is required. The attention of His Excellency the Governor has been drawn to this want and he has taken this subject under his special care. As it is in the interest of the general public, Government is confident that this House will support the scheme. It might be urged that it is for the city of Bombay alone to provide it and doubts might be raised as to why the general taxpayer should be taxed in support of hospital accommodation in the city. But the persons that come to this city for earning their bread are not the permanent residents of Bombay, as they always keep their connection with the mofussil and whenever they get ill, they generally return home and carry disease and infection there. A proper and timely treatment in the hospitals in Bombay in such cases will relieve the mofussil of many centres of infection and also will be very useful to them in other ways. Government have an intention of taxing big cities for such facilities and when occasion arises I am quite confident that this House will come to the help of Government in furthering medical aid to the poor and the needy. A scheme has been drafted in which the co-operation of the municipal corporation of Bombay and also of the charitably disposed persons has been invited. It is proposed that Government and the municipality should between themselves subscribe as much as would be subscribed by the liberal-minded persons and I have placed before this House the name of a great philanthropist, Mr. Wadia, who has subscribed 16 lakhs of rupees for constructing a maternity hospital of 120 beds, 60 out of which will be reserved for the mill population. It is a very splendid offer, Sir, and Government think that it ought to be accepted and in order to have the consent and the sanction of this House for this expenditure a little item of Rs. 5,000 was placed for acceptance by this House. As no objection was raised to that item Government is very thankful to this House for their silent acceptance of this scheme and Government with great confidence will go forward in this work of expanding hospital accommodation by the help of the municipality and by the help of the philanthropists for which this city is very well-known.

I think I ought to say a few words about a very regrettable affair which has been given vent to in this hall,—I mean the Karachi hospital scandal. I need not refer in detail to that incident, because the enquiry and the orders passed, which were so much criticised here, were I think, if my memory does not fail me, events which happened when I was not in office. I do not think any further explanation is required. It is a very sad affair indeed, but as the officer in that case is going to retire very shortly—within two weeks I think—and now I learn he has already left India, I think an enquiry will not be of any use.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA: I wish him bon voyage.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I am very much obliged to my kaka for wishing him bon voyage.

As for the Ayurvedic and Unani systems of medicine, I myself have a very high opinion about the utility of these systems, but in these days regular education in these systems has become a very rare thing, and persons have been cropping up here, there and everywhere, styling themselves vaid panchanans or anything else and posing as the most learned in these sciences. There is a saying in Marathi that when you are quite unfit to gain your livelihood even by begging, you have simply to turn yourself into a physician and you can easily earn your bread. According to that saying, Sir, many persons who are unfit for anything else are posing as Ayurvedic physicians, and they are plying their trade especially in out of the way places, with the consequence that the mortality in those places is rather high. There are very efficient Ayurvedic physicians no doubt, and they are keeping up the reputation of their profession, and their learning and lore ought not to be lost to the society, and every effort ought to be made to preserve that ancient art of medicine. But the freedom which is now enjoyed by the so-called Ayurvedic physicians has created a sort of prejudice against the whole profession and the people do not know whom to trust and whom to go to. And therefore the systematic attempts of intelligent persons like those of Satara who have been conducting at great sacrifice, for the last four or five years, an institution in which Ayurvedic and allopathic medical science is taught, to selected youths and to whom certificates of proficiency are granted are to be encouraged on all sides, and that was the reason why when a graduate from that institution was employed by the district local board of Satara and placed in charge of the dispensary at Vaduj, Government thought it best to give their contribution to such an institution. If other district local boards or municipalities will start similar dispensaries and give medical relief through competent persons to the poor, I hope this Council will back me up when I ask for a grant for those institutions also.

An honourable MEMBER : Why not an Ayurvedic college ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am glad that honourable members are not yet satisfied with the length of the speech.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : As for the starting of an Ayurvedic college, Government are not yet satisfied that a sufficient number of students will come forward. A want has to be created and brought to the notice of Government before a large amount of public money can be spent on such a college. When the public or charitable institutions like the institution at Satara are started in many centres and Government see that there is a demand for such sort of training, then I do not think Government will be lagging behind in starting an institution of their own. We are watching with very great interest the efforts of the sister presidency of Madras, and if we find that they are forging ahead and that they are doing very good work and that the facilities afforded for Ayurvedic training are taken advantage of by a large number of students, this Government will not lag behind but will come forward to start a college of their own. But the want of such an institution ought to be proved first before any step can be taken in that direction. I again say that institutions like the one at Satara ought to be started in different centres, and graduates turned out of such institutions should gain the confidence of the people, and then a real want for such Ayurvedic and Unani institutions will be proved. We are ready to help. And for that purpose I have been watching with very great interest the attempt that is made at the National Medical College, Bombay. I paid a visit to it and saw that they were doing something in imparting instruction in Ayurvedic medicine, and I shall be very glad when they show that they are actually succeeding. I want to give an instance of how Government are trying to give their help in the same cause. In the Public Health Department, a laboratory is maintained at Parel, where Indian drugs are tested and experiments are made to find out what use can be made of them. As a result of the research there, two drugs have been found. The plantologist promises to find a cheap substitute for santonin, an expensive drug used for intestinal worms, derived from Pallas. Another drug from Indra Jao is likely to prove a useful specific for dysentery. Indian drugs are cheap and effective, and Government are trying in their own way to find out which of these drugs will be useful in important diseases and can be used economically in place of very highly priced foreign remedies.

As for the grievances of the Grant Medical College, I have been from the very first interesting myself in that college. I have not paid any visit to any arts colleges but I have made two visits to the Grant Medical College.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: As a private person?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I appeal to honourable members not to interrupt the Honourable Minister.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: He wants to be interrupted.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I am sorry my honourable friend Rao Saheb Desai has misunderstood me. I do not want to be interrupted. The visits were paid as Minister of Education. On the whole the college is going on very well and so far as I know the relations between the students and the staff are very cordial and I do not think there is any friction at present.

I want to bring to the notice of this House what the attitude of the Government is with regard to medical aid in general and certain institutions in particular. Government are very desirous to cheapen medical aid and to make it free for poor people. Government is very desirous of encouraging medical education not only in the medical colleges, not only in the allopathic system, but also in the Ayurvedic and Unani systems of medicine. The attitude of Government is not hostile to any of those other systems and I think there will be no misunderstanding on that point.....

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI: Is Government going to open a medical school in the Southern Division?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: The opening of a medical school in the Southern Division will depend on the financial situation. If finances permit, the matter will be taken into consideration.

I trust that the honourable member the Deputy President will withdraw his motion.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Sir, in view of the request made by the Honourable Minister and in view of the explanation of the policy he wishes to follow, to elicit which I have brought this motion, I withdraw the motion.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw the motion?

An Honourable MEMBER: No.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The leave is not granted. I put the motion to the vote.

Question put and lost.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I move:

"That a grant of Rs 41,07,000 for medical services be sanctioned."

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: Sir, I move:

"That a grant of Rs. 7,000 for medical services (reserved) be sanctioned."

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I move, Sir:

"That a grant of Rs. 1,15,70,000 for Education be sanctioned."

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I move:

"That item No. 140 (Budget page 202) provision of Rs. 5,000 for the encouragement of vernacular literature be omitted."

This item of Rs. 5,000 is the provision for encouragement of vernacular literature. This magnificent sum of Rs. 5,000 has been provided for that purpose. I emphasise the word 'magnificent', because the present Honourable Minister has belied all my expectations and the expectations of his predecessor. His predecessor informed us, when non-co-operation and national education was agitating the public mind, that he wanted to provide a lakh of rupees for the purpose of encouraging vernacular literature on more efficient lines and on more national basis. That was the resolve of the present Honourable Minister's predecessor, Dr. Paranjpye. When I found a provision of Rs. 5,000 for the first time in the budget after four years, my feelings were not of satisfaction or pleasure at the provision made but entire indignation. I took it as an attempt to put a slight on the non-official side of this Council by making a small provision of Rs. 5,000 for the encouragement of vernacular literature in four different divisions: Sind, Gujarat, Central Division and Southern Division. I put it to the Honourable Minister whether it is worth while to provide this Rs. 5,000 and insult us in this way. Let him take back this amount. If he is serious, let him give us a lakh. What is the good of giving Rs. 1,200 to each division? In deference to the respectability of the authors that come forward, in deference to the respect of this Council and in deference to the cause of vernacular literature of this country, let him withdraw this item. It is with a view to protest against the smallness of the amount, in order to raise an emphatic protest against this paltry provision, and to request him to insert a more respectable figure, that I have brought forward this motion.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I do admit that the amount provided is very meagre ; but a beginning has to be made. If we encourage original authors, not mere translators, to bring out original works, a beginning will have been made and the next year a larger amount will be necessary. I may say that we have to encourage literature not in four languages, as has been pointed out by the honourable member, but in five, as Urdu also has to be counted. On an average Rs. 1,000 will remain for each language. I think one or two books from each vernacular may be found worthy of encouragement. It had been the practice up to this time to get books written in English first and they were offered for translation in different languages. The result was not on the whole very satisfactory because these translations did not convey to the readers what the actual intention of the writers was. That system is now changed and offers are made to write books in original, and if this experiment succeeds, I shall be very happy to come to this House for a larger amount.

I do hope that this House will sanction this small amount.

MOULVI RAFI UDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : Mr. President, the Honourable Minister is very unhappy in his phraseology. "Provision for the encouragement of vernacular literature"—that is not the proper expression. The note says : "for the production of sound and instructive literature in the vernacular, a non-recurring provision of Rs. 5,000 was made in the current year for the preparation of three series of readers of an elementary type in three different groups of subjects, viz. : (1) agriculture, etc., (2) administration, etc., and (3) domestic science". Now, Sir, in elementary subjects and readers what literature can you expect? Is this encouragement of literature? There are text-book committees. Recently Government had appointed a text-book committee for preparing readers in Urdu. That committee has prepared some readers. Do you want that kind of books? Do you want readers for your Government schools?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : No.

MOULVI RAFI UDDIN AHMAD : No; then for what purpose are these readers in elementary subjects?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : For the general public.

MOULVI RAFI UDDIN AHMAD : Then, your own readers for which you appoint your text-book committees, what are they for? What I want to point out is that this is altogether a misnomer and I think this use of money should not be encouraged. About five years ago the Government of Bombay gave Rs. 1,000 for each of the languages, for good books written by private authors for the general public. That I can understand. Government had also given a certain amount of encouragement by means of money contributions to certain literary societies in Gujarati or in Marathi. I do not remember that Government has ever given any such encouragement to Urdu literary societies, but these were the societies to which Government used to give subscriptions. But that system, I understand, has been given up.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : That is a different thing altogether.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD : The honourable member referred to a previous system by which the translations of English authors were allowed in certain vernaculars. But that, Sir, went on for nearly 100 years. It was Major Candy who obtained enormous sums from Government for the encouragement of Marathi literature by translating into Marathi from books in English, because in those days Marathi literature did not exist and he wanted to produce Marathi literature, and those who have read the history of the Deccan College, where he was appointed by Government, will bear me out. The Marathi literature was encouraged by Major Candy himself at Government expense. Hundreds of rupees were spent for that. Gujarati literature also received some amount of money, but never Urdu literature. Merely for the sake of lip-sympathy the Honourable Minister says Urdu also is to be included in his present scheme. I think it is a mockery. I should rather sympathise with my honourable friend the Deputy President who says that this sum which is provided is much too small. But I am not a man who would refuse anything. I would rather ask the Honourable Minister to devote this money for writing original good books either in Marathi or in Gujarati or some other language written by some scholars. But I do not like that this Rs. 5,000 should be spent in preparing readers. There are readers now which are being prepared by the text-book committees and others. I think, Sir, that the whole object of spending Rs. 5,000 in such matters is defeated. The object is defeated because the Honourable Minister's speech is inconsistent with the remarks in the Blue Book. I would request him to spend this money for original books, but not for the sake of merely encouraging elementary readers. I do not oppose the grant, but I would request him to spend this money for some other better purpose.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : I have little to say, Sir, in reply. I have nothing to say except that the very suggestion made by the Honourable Minister is not to the credit of the commonsense of this House.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I would refer honourable members to page 230 of the Blue Book, where an explanation of this item is given.

"Government have had under consideration for some time past the question of encouraging the production of vernacular literature suitable for the self-education of those people who know the vernacular only or whose knowledge of English is very slight. In the European languages there is a large number of suitable books written with this object in view and these afford everybody a chance of self-education"

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Does the Honourable Minister think all this marvel is going to be achieved within Rs. 5,000 ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : No, Sir. But a beginning will be made.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : In how many years ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I simply refer honourable members to page 230 of the Blue Book. The so-called readers are for the people in villages who cannot read English. It is one of the means of dealing with illiteracy and for this purpose these books have to be written in simple language. I think, therefore, that this little grant as an experiment should be allowed.

Question put and lost.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District) : Sir, I beg to move :

“That the provision of Rs 13,71,000 be reduced by Rs 12,00,000—Civil Estimate, page 146—provision under E—Inspection.”

Under the provisions of the Primary Education Act, the schools are going to be transferred to the control of the local authorities, that is to the district local boards and to the city and town municipalities. Under the rules framed under that Act, these local authorities are obliged to appoint their own administrative officers and their own supervisors to administer and control the schools under their jurisdiction. Under these circumstances, it appears to me, Sir, that so much money as is provided in the budget estimates for inspection is not required by Government for the inspection of schools, because the present inspecting staff will be relieved to a great extent of the duty of inspecting the primary schools, that duty being thrown on to the shoulders of the local authorities. So, on this broad ground, Sir, I beg to submit that this amount should be reduced by Rs. 12 lakhs.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, the total grant for general inspection is Rs. 13,71,000, and the motion is to reduce it by Rs. 12 lakhs; which will leave only Rs. 1,71,000 for inspection. As a matter of fact, the reduction in the expenditure by the transfer of vernacular schools to local authorities will not be as large as the honourable member supposes. The Director, the Divisional Inspectors, and many of the deputy educational inspectors cannot be reduced at all, because English education will remain with Government, and only vernacular education will be transferred. The district local boards will have to make ample provision for the purpose of carrying on the work of inspection. Government expect that the present deputy educational inspectors and the assistant deputy educational inspectors will be taken over by the district local boards and the educational authorities in municipalities but even in that case Government will have to provide money for their pay and for other expenses, and I do not expect any saving under inspection on that account. If Government are not called upon to pay these officers directly under this head, some provision will have to be made by supplementary grants, by transfer from one head to another, and Government will have to provide for larger grants to municipalities and local boards for carrying on the inspection and administrative work of those educational bodies that will be created under the new Act. I therefore say that the grant of Rs. 13,71,000 is necessary.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI : In view of the explanation given by the Honourable Minister, I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

Question put and leave refused.

Motion put and lost.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District) : Sir, I beg to move :

“ Reduce by one Rupee—provision for payment in support of Municipal schools—Rs. 16,97,076 ”

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Does the honourable member wish to move this as a vote of censure ?

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI : No, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Then he cannot move a reduction of one rupee. He can do so only if he wishes it to be a vote of censure.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI : Then, I am not going to move it, Sir.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh District) : Sir, I beg to move :

“ Reduce by Rs. 1,00,000 total votable demand under Education, Rs. 1,95,67,000.”

I am moving this reduction not with the view of bringing a vote of censure against the Minister, but with the view that the House should get an opportunity

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Before the honourable member proceeds, I should like to point out that there is another motion to reduce the demand by Rs. 10 lakhs by the honourable member Mr. Kampli.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI : I am not going to move it.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : I am bringing this motion not with the view of passing a vote of censure, but with the view that this House should get an opportunity

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am sorry to interrupt the honourable member, but there is another motion (No. 479) to reduce the total votable demand by Rs. 2,67,500 by the honourable member Mr. Dev.

Mr. S. S. DEV : I do not wish to move it.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : Sir, my object in moving this reduction was to get an opportunity of ventilating some of the grievances and to get an opportunity of criticising the educational policy of the Government. I am not going to be long.

I want to touch only on two points. The first point is that the educational policy of Government in respect of compulsory education is very disappointing. I think, Sir, that it is not going to be successful, because it is financially impossible. We all know that education in the districts has been transferred to the district local boards, and the district local boards have to bear one-third of the expenditure, the remaining two-thirds to be given to the district local boards by the Government. The district local boards will not be in a position to provide for this expenditure, unless they levy local rates, and I think, Sir, that the rates will never be popular, and no district local boards will be coming forward to take in hand the scheme of compulsory education as framed by Government. I therefore think that this scheme is only an eye-wash, and thrown at the faces of the honourable members, so that they should not clamour for compulsory education. The net result of the scheme will be that it will not concentrate any attention on increasing the number of schools. At present we find that in two-thirds of the villages of the presidency there is no school, and if we concentrate all our attention on this scheme which, as I say, is not going to be successful and is financially impossible, I think that no increase in the schools will be possible for some years to come.

The next point is in regard to the grievances of the primary teachers. I feel very strongly on this point. I am myself the son of a primary teacher. I have served as a primary teacher, and I know their difficulties, and I know the privations which they suffer. Honourable members are aware that a committee has been appointed on this question, but the report has not yet been published. The matter has been shelved, and the primary teachers are still in distress, which is very detrimental and prejudicial to the education of our boys. With these words, I move that the total demand be reduced by Rs. 1 lakh.

Question proposed.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): Sir, in this connection, I wish to make some suggestions to the Honourable Minister for Education. After referring to pages 163-164 of the Blue Book, I find that a sum of over Rs. 2 lakhs has been reserved for scholarships to be given to the backward classes. It would have been far better if the backward classes had been divided into the backward and the depressed classes. I do not know what part of the said sum will be allotted for scholarships to be given to the students of the depressed classes; and if the Honourable Minister will lay before the House a scheme in regard to the granting of scholarships to the depressed classes, certainly the House will be deeply obliged to him.

The second suggestion that I wish to make is that he should take immediate steps to establish boarding houses for the depressed classes in all the divisions excepting the Central Division. There is a boarding house for the children of the depressed classes at Poona, and it is very satisfactory to note that that boarding house is patronised by the students from the depressed classes. If similar boarding houses for the depressed classes are established in the Northern and Southern Divisions and in the province of Sind, then certainly the depressed classes will begin to take kindly to education. The third suggestion that I wish to make is that just as the Government now have published their scheme of appointing persons from the backward classes to the different posts of clerks and other posts, in the same way the Honourable Minister for Education at least, as I consider him to be one of the greatest champions of the depressed classes, and as I desire that he should justify his reputation, I would suggest that he should soon publish a scheme of reserving some posts of peons in the schools within his jurisdiction. The population of the depressed classes, when compared with the population of the Marathas and the allied castes, stands in the proportion of 1 to 2. So, whenever occasion arises to appoint peons in the Educational Department—I do not go up to clerks and higher offices—but whenever occasion arises to appoint peons in the schools or other departments which are under the control of the Honourable the Minister—he should divide the appointments in the proportion of 1 to 2 between the depressed classes on the one side and the backward classes on the other.

There is one more suggestion which I have to make in regard to the industrial and technical schools. I looked up both the books that have been supplied to me and I hardly got any clue to understand the nature of the committee on the introduction of industrial and technical schools, the time when it was brought into existence and the functions that have been relegated to it. If he just informs us as to the nature and functions of this committee, certainly the House will feel itself to be under his great obligations.

The last suggestion that I wish to make is—and I shall be very frank in this behalf—that there is a growing feeling amongst the servants of the educational department drafted from the upper classes that their posts are most insecure. As a consequence, there is not that feeling of satisfaction and security which is absolutely necessary in order to get efficient work from the servants. There may or may not be reasons justifying this feeling but none the less the feeling is there and we should shut our eyes to that feeling. I would really like to ascertain either from the Honourable Minister for Education or from his Secretary as to whether the Educational Department is aware of this feeling on the part of the servants from the upper classes, and whether they have taken any steps to check it in time. Personally, I am very glad that the backward classes have begun to assert their rights. Even though I belong to that class which is most abused, I am very glad that the backward classes have come to recognise their proper place in the sphere of Government service. But I think that as a Brahmin I may legitimately claim that the interests of the servants from the upper classes who are already engaged do not suffer in the least. Whatever the future arrangements regarding appointments may be, I think that it is only just and proper that the servants from the upper classes already in service should not directly or indirectly be touched in the least. With these remarks, Sir, I support the cut.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, it is with some reluctance that I rise to speak on this subject. Personally I am of opinion that it is not right to have a general discussion like this, unless it is intended as a vote of censure. It is not right to take up the time of the Council in the general discussion. I have myself given notice of a motion which would amount to a vote of censure upon the Minister of Education, but my Swarajist friends tell me that it will be quite unedifying on the part of a kaka to censure his putani. Therefore, Sir, I have resolved not to do so. But I shall use this occasion to call attention to one or two points. I am told the Minister of Education is a great champion of the depressed classes but I see that he has deprived the depressed classes of Rs. 10,000 which figured in the last budget. Again, I am told that he is a great champion of the backward classes, but I see that he has deprived the backward classes of Rs. 96,000 which figured in the last budget. This is a funny kind of a champion. It reminds me of the Irish method of promotion.

Now, Sir, I fancy I have got a very strong case against him for a vote of censure but as I am not going to move it, I shall not take up the time of the House but I shall only call his attention to one point here. Last year my Mahomedan friends asked him how many clerks there were in the Director's office, and he said there were two and he congratulated the Mahomedans that they had two, whereas the backward classes had not even one. Of course, we all know that a single swallow does not make a summer, but perhaps two do. I should like my Mahomedan friends not to confine their vision to two clerks in the Director's office or in any other office but to aspire to fill the office of the Minister of Education. What is the good of making a Mahomedan Minister of Excise? It is a haram department, and not the proper department for a Moslem. A Parsi would be the proper man to be in charge of the Excise Department, for the Parsis have got the practical monopoly of the liquor trade. I think there ought to be a transfer of the departments. Excise ought to be under Mr. Cowasji and Education under the present Minister of Excise. Now, Sir, as my friends, the Swarajists, are very anxious to propitiate my honourable friend I trust the Minister of Education will co-operate with them and thereby lead on to responsive co-operation sooner or later. Last year, Mr. Bhopatkar asked him to irrigate the minds of children by promoting education. I will now ask him not to irritate the Swarajists by repudiating the kindness of the Swarajists who have gone so far as to ask me not to move a vote of censure. I hope the Minister will appreciate that fact and he will not denounce the Brahmins but will make friends with them, because it is after all a Brahmin who has been a greatest champion of primary education, namely, the late Mr. Gokhale. There is no one here except, perhaps, yourself, Sir, who can be compared with that great champion of primary education.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: Don't forget us.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA: Oh, yes, Mr. Bole, of course (Loud laughter). These Boles are wonderful fellows.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): Sir, I do hope the Honourable the Minister for Education will realise the full significance of the remarks of my honourable friend Mr. Baptista. On occasions, I have heard him say these words in the lobby, which I shall take this opportunity of stating publicly, "Anything is better than going into the same lobby with the Swarajists!" I do hope that he will realise that the Swaraj party, which he has lost no opportunity of vilifying and against which he has worked on every occasion, has stood to-day between him and his condemnation. I do hope he will realise this and will keep that realisation in his mind, during the whole time that he is the Minister of Education. He has lost no opportunity of vilifying and calling names to my party, and that party to-day has saved his reputation and has induced Mr. Baptista not to move the vote of censure. I have often said, not only in this House but outside, that my party will stand for his protection, because we believe that in that impotent office one man is as good as another. Not that we have any love for the methods of the Minister of Education, but we know that circumstanced as he is, he could not have done better. We hold the view, Sir, that our minister is in bad company. I was told the other day, Sir, that in our Government there are "Ministers" and "Bureaucrats". I make no distinction between a Minister and a bureaucrat. A man is known by the company he keeps, and this adage I think, Sir, is more true in political companionship than elsewhere. That is the reason why the Swaraj party to-day has held the restraining hand. Even up to this evening till 4 o'clock, we were most anxiously considering whether we should throw our weight against the Honourable Minister for Education and join Mr. Baptista, or remain neutral, and ultimately we decided, and I think, very wisely, to give the Honourable Minister for Education all the protection we could, by our neutrality. And I do hope that by his future behaviour at the time of divisions, he will show that he deserves that protection. I do hope, Sir, that he will imitate the comparative aloofness of his associates, for which I do congratulate them; I trust that he will follow their dignified example, and not demean the office to which he has been called, by acting as if he was a paid whip of the Government, specially hired for canvassing votes.

Now, I come to the merits of this question. I do want to call the attention of this House to a piece of vandalism which has been perpetrated by my honourable friend's department—I call it deliberately vandalism—and that is, a resolution recently issued by his department abolishing what is called freehand drawing. I do not want to weary my honourable friends with a long speech. They all know what "freehand" drawing means. It is copying from a flat pattern, the kind of drawing for excellence in which India has been noted for several centuries. Go to any caves of India, Ajanta, Ellora or elsewhere, and we find ornamental patterns, which are the admiration of the entire world. People from America and other distant countries come and learn the art. Just as I have seen in the Vatican gallery, and many other galleries in Europe like Milan, students coming from miles and miles away to copy the masters, similarly students have come from long distances, to copy the pattern drawing for which India has developed a tradition and a reputation. Yet, in spite of centuries of such inherited talent and culture in this particular department of art, it was left to the Vandal department of my honourable friend the Minister for Education, to pass a resolution by which this traditional method of drawing is abolished altogether from the intermediate art examination. My honourable friends will necessarily ask how was this resolution arrived at and after consulting whom. I hold in my hand a reply to a question which was asked in this House a few days ago. My honourable friend the Minister of Education was asked "Whether it is true that such a resolution has been passed." He says "Yes". The question proceeded—"Will you put on the table the orders issued in this connection by your department?" Answer—I ask my honourable friends to note this with particular attention—"Government regret they cannot place on the table the orders issued by them in this matter." "Why," we asked further. This time it is not the stock answer "because they were treated as confidential"—a word we have almost learned to abhor on this side of the House. This time, it is another excuse because the orders were "intended only for the information and guidance of the officers". Can my honourable friends imagine anything like this secrecy in the Education Department? Here is an order of this far-reaching consequence. A style of drawing which has been perfected in India for several centuries is abolished by one stroke of the pen, and the Minister of Education, who depends on our votes in this House, is unwilling even to disclose the order abolishing the art. The heavens would not have fallen if this order had been disclosed. Am I then wrong in saying that my honourable friend has joined the bureaucracy and is in bad company. How aptly he inherits their peculiarity and imitates their answers. The question proceeds:—"Will the Government be pleased to state whether the Principal, School of Art, Bombay, was consulted in this matter?" I may mention here to my honourable friend opposite, that by a very fortunate accident he has got in the local School of Art a principal, I know him personally, who is one of those few men who occasionally by a fortunate coincidence gravitate to this country. Generally, our principals and others who are at the head of institutions, owing to the peculiar atmosphere of this country, lose all inspiration, initiative, sympathy and goodwill: they become rigid machines of red-tape, who follow the rule of "law and order" in their departments. But fortunately for our School of Art, it has got at its head a man who has ideas, imagination, sympathy and insight into the art and culture of the people of this country. My honourable friends must have read his work. "The Women of Ajanta", a work full of inspiration: they must have also read his articles on Indian art in the British Empire Review. If my honourable friend the Minister of Education is himself ignorant of art, here is one guide on whose inspiration and imagination he can personally repose confidence. But, curiously enough, this one man, who is, by a fortunate accident, at the head of the Art School is not consulted. Perhaps, my honourable friend has consulted his Director of Public Instruction. If so, may I know when the Director of Public Instruction became an art connoisseur? Your ruling, Sir, is that we may not discuss here the individual merits of officers. I bow to that ruling. Hence I will not make any personal remarks. But may I know from my honourable friend when his Director of Public Instruction became an authority on matters of art? That my honourable friend without consulting the Principal of the Art School should have ventured to abolish freehand drawing on the mere recommendation of the Director of Public Instruction, is a piece of vandalism for which this House will not easily excuse him. Further when we go, and ask him "Will you kindly place on the table the opinion of the Principal of the Art School, or the reasons why it was not taken?" He gives the answer—the usual bureaucratic answer—“No. Government regret that a copy of the principal's opinion cannot be placed on the table for the reasons given in reply above”. I am asking, Sir, whether it is my honourable friend's intention to allow this vandalism to continue. I understand a little of art and I know what I am talking about; I am speaking of things to which I have devoted a part of my life. I warn my honourable friend that deep down in his department petty jealousies are going on; jealousies which are ruining the initiative and inspiration of the art department, over which he rules and which is responsible for the guidance and training of the youth of this country in art and culture. May I venture to hope that the next time when he finds such matters coming up before him, he will informally consult some men in Bombay, who will, I am sure, give voluntary advice without charging any fees for their trouble. Will he note that there is a society in Bombay called the Art Society of India, a non-official body of artists—perhaps the Honourable the Home Member knows of it—where the young artists of this town congregate and run an occasional exhibition of high class art? I have gone to that institution more than half a dozen times. I can tell my honourable friend that he will utilise his time very usefully if he goes and sees what that society is. He will be interested to learn that that society has passed a resolution condemning the abolition of freehand. The Principal of the Art School is against it. Several other art authorities have expressed condemnatory opinions challenging the wisdom of his decision. Yet my honourable friend sticks to his departmental decision and refuses to allow this side of the House to have any inspection of the correspondence and opinions relating to this order. That mysterious department, over which the Honourable the Home Member presides, I mean the Criminal Investigation Department, may have some justification for privacy. If my honourable friend the Home Member were to tell me that, in the interest of security, law and order, his department requires some sort of privacy, I can understand it (hear, hear), though, if I were in charge of it, I would certainly never encourage the feeling beyond a limit; but in the position in which a foreign Government is placed, he may perhaps be justified. But to talk of secrecy in the department of art and culture is a claim to which I will not easily submit. These secretive methods are of the honourable members sitting opposite, and their contagion my honourable friend has caught by a year's association with their rule. May I tell him that if he wants this House to respect him and if he wishes the Swaraj party to stand between him and his downfall, I trust that we will soon have the pleasure of hearing from him that the resolution abolishing freehand has been cancelled.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The House will now adjourn till 12 noon to-morrow, Saturday the 14th March 1925. Under the Rules and Standing Orders the debate on the budget closes at 5 o'clock to-morrow. In order to enable honourable members to get their full five hours I am calling the meeting on the 12th day at 12 noon. There will be half an hour's interval at 2-30 p.m.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. From the remarks which the honourable the leader of the Swaraj Party made yesterday, in speaking on the motion before the House, I find that there is some misapprehension in regard to the ruling I gave yesterday on the issue whether individual officers of Government could be criticised on a general motion. I would draw the attention of honourable members to the following ruling, which will make the position perfectly clear:

Sardar V. N. Mutalik wanted to propose a reduction of the total Revenue demand by Rs. 1 lakh, and he said:

"In bringing this motion my object is to put before the House and Government briefly my views about the grievances in connection with this Department."

Then the Honourable the President interrupted him and said as follows:

"If the mere object of the honourable member is to bring to the notice of Government any grievance, then he can do it without moving any motion for reduction of the total demands....."

That is to say, he can oppose the total demand. Further:

"...but the grievance should relate generally to the whole Department and the demand in respect of it. If, on the other hand, he thinks the total demand is excessive, he can move its reduction by such amount as he thinks proper. The honourable member's motion now is 'reduce by Rs. 1 lakh'. That rather conveys the notion that he thinks the total demand is excessive, and not that he has any particular grievance in the nature of maladministration on the part of the department concerned to place before the Council by way of censure on that department or any of its officers. Well, what has the honourable member to say to that?"

Then there was some discussion, and this was what the President finally ruled:

"You may call attention to the grievances, but I hope the House understands that on a motion for any reduction of the demand for grant for a department, the mover must ask for reduction on relevant grounds, such as that the amount demanded is in excess of the requirements of the public service, or that there has been some act of maladministration on the part of the department or any of its officers. But the mover cannot refer to any large or general question of policy affecting the department or to any grievance arising out of such policy, for which the Government through its Member in charge as distinct from the department is primarily responsible, if it is intended to propose a vote of censure on Government by a motion for reduction unless the salary of the Member of Government who is responsible for that department is votable and is on the votes."

Honourable members will clearly realise that the ruling is that on a vote of censure, honourable members are entitled to criticise the department, and to point out the maladministration of that department in any direction or in regard to any of its officers. But what is barred is that no honourable member will be allowed to level any personal attack against an individual officer. Honourable members are perfectly entitled to address the House on the maladministration of the department or any of its officers, but no personal attack on an individual officer will be permitted.

Mr. A. W. W. Mackie made the prescribed oath of allegiance to His Majesty the King Emperor, and took his seat in the Council.

(Discussion on Demands for Grants resumed.)

Question again proposed :

"Reduce by Rs. 1,00,000—total votable demand—Rs. 1,95,67,000."

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I want to bring to your notice that there were certain remarks made by the leader of the Swaraj party yesterday, to which I shall have to refer in my speech, and I would, therefore, prefer to defer my speech.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable Minister can content himself by making a final reply, when he will have ample opportunity of meeting all the criticism passed against his department. I do not see why on the last day he should make two speeches. Of course, the Honourable Minister is entitled to do so, but it would perhaps be preferable if he deals exhaustively with all the points raised in his final reply.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : I shall have to say a few words now, and I shall reserve the rest of my remarks for my final reply.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Minister can proceed ; he is in possession of the House.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, this is a motion for the reduction of a sum of Rs. 1 lakh, and in a grant of Rs. 1,95,00,000 a cut of Rs. 1 lakh is just like a flea-bite, and I would have gladly accepted it had it been a case of mere economy. This House is aware that this is a deficit year, and if Government do not decide to draw upon the balances, then Government will have to ask for a proportionate reduction of expenditure in all the departments, and the share of the Education Department will be considerably more than a lakh of rupees. However, Sir, this motion has been moved and in the spirit in which some of the speeches are made, and the way in which the honourable member from Bombay City, Mr. Baptista Kaka, made his speech showed that this motion may be looked upon as a vote of censure. (Honourable Members : "No, No.") I am very glad of the assurance of the House.....

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : I made it perfectly clear in moving my motion that I did not move it as a vote of censure, but to criticise the policy and to ventilate grievances.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : I am very glad of the assurance from the other side of the House, and I am sorry I was rather misled by some of the expressions and words that fell from the lips of the honourable member for Bombay City. He said that he had a very good case against me and that, but for the intervention of the leader of the Swaraj party, he would have been very glad to move it. I am sorry, Sir, that this is the last day, and the honourable member has no time to move it. In justification of myself I must say that I am not afraid of such motions. (Honourable Members : Hear, hear). My conscience tells me that I am not a failure, and that when my administration comes to be reviewed in the proper light as it ought to be reviewed I shall find that the majority of the votes of the House will be on my side. I had last year the pleasure of meeting such a motion, and although the leader of the Swaraj party gave his mandate that no division should be asked for, one of the over-enthusiastic members of that party called for a division, and the House knows the result of that division. The relative strength of the parties during the last twelve months has not, I am glad to say, improved for the opposition, and I am quite sure that the administration of the transferred departments has been such as generally to meet with the approval of the House.

I have to offer my very grateful thanks to the leader of the Swaraj party for the good opinion he holds about me. We have been friends of a very long standing. We have understood each other very well and we have been respecting each other very well and I am glad to anticipate that these relations will remain friendly to the last. He holds such a high opinion about me that he thinks that any failings that are to be found in my administration are not due to any inherent defect in myself but are due to my evil surroundings. I am at a loss to know, Sir, whether to take this as a compliment or otherwise. (Honourable Members: As you like.) Sir, I am not unaccustomed to such remarks. Our literature is full of it. The story of Krishna is full of it. Whenever a complaint was taken to Yashoda (Krishna's mother) she always excused her darling son that his being so bad was due to evil company and our fond Indian mothers are always accustomed to excuse the evil deeds of their children by consoling themselves that they are misled by evil company. When I had the honour of serving the late Maharajah of Kolhapur and his administration was not much relished amongst the advanced communities, whenever anything bad was said against his administration, the justifiers of the Prince, who was styled the Protector of the Brahmins and the Cow, always said that the Maharajah was all right but he was in very bad company, and I may bring to your notice that my humble self was one of the prominent members of that bad company. Sir, I took it at that time as a compliment. I never thought that I was a very bad man, in spite of the scurrilous and unjustifiable remarks that were published in the vernacular press of Kolhapur and outside, and that all the so-called evil things were due to my wicked advice. But then, as a matter of fact, I took it as a compliment and I think my friends on this side here (pointing to the Government benches) will not take the allegation of the leader of the Swaraj party as anything but a compliment. Sir, let me bring one thing to the notice of this House that, with all the evil influences, I am known to be sometimes rather as a wayward child and many a time do what will not please them. You know, Sir, from the report that has been circulated here, my opinion on the reforms was not exactly what the official side held. I have given my opinion and it is under print that the Ministers on this side voted for complete provincial autonomy (Hear, hear). If the evil influences of the official benches could not seduce me in that one particular from what I considered to be for the good of my country, then I think I may assure the opposition benches that I may be credited with some sense to use the little bit of intelligence that is left in me and not to be guided by evil influences. If I have done anything bad, I am responsible for that. I do not want to hide myself behind any excuse of the evil influences of my surroundings.

Some remarks were made, Sir, about the politics of the non-Brahmin party, to which I have the honour to belong. There was a time, not a very distant one, when the non-Brahmin party politics were simply ridiculed and pooh-poohed. It was said that the non-Brahmins were a set of people who were instigated by some interested persons to create a quarrel in a harmonious and peaceful family. As long as the non-Brahmins and their friends the Mussalmans.....

Mr. H. B. SHIVDASANI: Is this in order?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Honourable Minister is replying to the criticism that has been levelled against his department and himself personally.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I was saying, Sir, that as long as the non-Brahmins and their friends the Mussalmans did not know their rights and their own importance, and allowed the advanced communities in the Deccan to pose as their leaders and do in their name what they liked, so long there was peace and harmony. But as soon as there was a little awakening and people began to look for themselves and began to claim rights for themselves, then this split was attributed not to any inherent defect in the social system but to the instigations of evil advisers. But, Sir, those days are gone. The non-Brahmin politics are in these days better understood. I have simply to make a statement, Sir, that the non-Brahmins are as honest as the members of other parties are, that they are actuated by the same high motives by which the members of other parties are actuated, that the non-Brahmins want to see their country advance, and that they place the welfare of the country first and all other considerations afterwards. They do not subscribe to the policy of direct action. They do not subscribe to the policy of the Swaraj party of causing obstruction. But they believe in the forces of co-operation and they are ready to co-operate with Government or with any other party if that co-operation is likely to lead to the advancement of the country. In all cases in which they find that the advancement of the country as a whole will be retarded by a certain policy they are not slow to come forward to oppose it.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: I rise to a point of order, Sir. The policy of the non-Brahmins is not the issue and could not be relevant in this discussion. The policy of the Minister is the issue.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have already pointed out that in the course of the debate criticism was levelled against the non-Brahmin party and the Honourable Minister is replying to that criticism. I cannot help remarking, however, that this is the last day of the budget discussion and such an elaborate essay on party politics is hardly appropriate on the present occasion.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I will not be long, Sir, on this point. But I am sorry to say that a pointed reference was made in the debate to party politics.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Therefore, I say a reply could be given briefly, but it is not necessary that an elaborate justification of the whole non-Brahmin party policy and activities need be gone into on the present occasion.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Well, Sir, I shall be as brief as possible and will finish my remarks as quickly as possible. But I say, Sir, that the non-Brahmin party as a whole has voted many a time against Government on such occasions when they thought by their voting against Government they would serve the interests of the masses. The non-Brahmin party has generally been taunted as being place hunters.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : That charge was never made in my speech to which the honourable member is replying. I understand, Sir, you have given a ruling on a point of order raised by some honourable member that my remarks related to the non-Brahmin party. Well, Sir, that ruling was given in my absence, but I must bow to it. I must, however, say, on a point of personal explanation, that I never said anything about the non-Brahmin party or their policy.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : About the policy ?

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : I merely spoke about the policy of the Minister.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I understand, Sir, the honourable member distinctly claimed that he was not only the leader of the Swaraj party, but of all the parties in the House.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I do not see that that arises. I do not remember that the leader of the Swaraj party ever claimed that he was a leader of all the parties in the House.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : I will frankly say that I have no ambitions in that direction at all.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : He is sometimes called the leader of the opposition in accordance with parliamentary practice : when there are more than two parties in the House of Commons, the leader of that party which commands the largest number of members in the House next to Government is called the leader of the opposition.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I understood him distinctly to say that there were only two parties, one was the party of the opposition, which was his own, and the other was the party of the executive Government.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : I never said that. The use of the expression "leader of the opposition" with reference to me began with my honourable friend himself this time last year.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I understood the honourable member distinctly to say that he took the Honourable Minister under the protection of his wing, and he took him under the protection of his party.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I do not think he ever said that, as far as I remember.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : He distinctly said he took him under the protection of his wing.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : I never used that expression.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable the Leader of the House has to accept the contradiction.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I accept it fully, Sir. I am glad to hear that the honourable member the leader of the Swaraj party did not intend anything of the sort.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : I have the report of my speech in my hand : I am just going through it to find out whether I used any such expression.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : I am very sorry that the debate has been drifting into other channels, but this drifting I am not responsible for. I am very sorry to say that the non-Brahmin party is many a time misunderstood, and I hope to be given sufficient time to explain the position. But the time, Sir, is very limited and the clock is running against me, and I think I ought to be brief. I may simply say, Sir, that the non-Brahmin party is described as the ministerial party, because it allows its members to accept ministerial offices and to co-operate with Government in such matters in which co-operation is desirable. But this, it appears, does not appeal to those whose policy has been opposition pure and simple.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable Minister is simply repeating the same thing over and over again. I will not allow such repetitions especially on this day.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Then, Sir, without alluding to anything else, I would turn to the points that have been raised in the debate about the administration. The charge has been laid against me that I have perpetrated a piece of vandalism, by passing an order discontinuing free-hand drawing in the drawing classes in the presidency. There are generally always two sides to every question, and had it not been for the official etiquette of regarding current correspondence as confidential papers and not publishing them unnecessarily, I would have been very glad to place the whole correspondence on the table of this House. And if a demand is made in that respect, then I shall place the matter before Government, and I hope to be able to induce Government to place that correspondence in possession of the House. It will be found, Sir, that Government have given their best thought to the question. The subject of drawing is taught in the schools, middle and high schools, not to produce artists, because that is the duty and the business of the School of Art established in Bombay, but for a different purpose. In the opinion of the officers of Government that purpose would be served better not by copying out what is called free drawing, but by drawing from nature, from objects and from models. But now I find that the whole agitation that has been set on foot is engineered from a certain quarter. It is a very regrettable fact that in the department there are mutual jealousies, and one side wants to predominate over the other, and that has led to the agitation that is being carried on. I also notice, Sir, that a good deal of Indian opinion is in favour of the retention of free-hand drawing. In the matter of the curriculum of Indian schools, Sir, the opinion of Indian experts ought to prevail, and since this matter was brought to my notice by the memorials quoted by my honourable friend I have called for the papers, and I may promise the House that I shall again go through them and reconsider the whole position. As I have just now stated to the House, I think it is my duty to pay more attention to Indian opinion in matters of Indian education. We have to encourage and foster Indian ideals and to see how Indian talent can be encouraged, and for that purpose I think it but right that the matter should again be taken into consideration. I think that will suffice for the present on this question.

I do not think, Sir, I have to say much about the suggestion of the honourable member from Khandesh. He criticised the present policy of Government of handing over primary education to district local boards as financially impossible. Khandesh is reputed to be one of the richest districts, and if Khandesh finds that it is not in a position to finance the primary education, not to the extent of the whole amount but only to one-third

Mr. S. S. DEV : I did not say that.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : I correct myself and say the honourable member for East Khandesh (Mr. P. G. Joshi). The district local boards are very eager to have the control and direction of primary education in their hands. (The Thakor of Kerwada : Are they ?). I think, as far as Maharashtra is concerned, and as far as my meagre knowledge goes of the districts I have travelled in, I know that the district local boards are eager to have the direction of primary education in their hands. (Mr. P. G. Joshi : But financed by Government). It is a very good position in which one would be pleased to be. One would be very glad if the whole money is paid to him by another and he is asked to manage. If an individual is not willing to put his hand into his pocket and bring out something, I do not think it will lie in his mouth to say that he should be empowered to spend others' money. The district local boards will have to levy rates no doubt. If they raise only one-third of the additional expenditure, Government is bound to give the remaining two-thirds. In order to remove any injustice to the poorer districts which in the long run will not be able to finance the scheme, Government have taken the powers by inserting certain words in the Primary Education Act to increase the grants beyond the statutory limit of two-thirds. I may assure the House that whenever it is brought to the notice of the Government that a district has tried its best to levy rates and that it will not be possible to finance the scheme further from the resources of the particular district local board, Government will be glad to come to the assistance of such poorer districts and give larger contributions. In this connexion every precaution has been taken and no amendment of the Act is necessary for that purpose.

[Mr. B. V. Jadhav]

Another question was raised about the sum of Rs. 2,00,000 provided in the budget for scholarships to backward communities. It was asked what portion of that sum of two lakhs would be spared for the encouragement of education among the depressed classes. According to the announcement made to the House last year, the number of scholarships is determined by the number of population. For every 50,000 population there is one set of scholarship. My answer to that question, therefore is that the depressed classes will get their due share out of this provision in proportion to their numbers.

Another honourable member suggested the opening of hostels for the students of the depressed classes. Government themselves have been conducting one already and when funds permit they will open other hostels. In the meantime Government have provided liberal scholarships for the students of the depressed classes and it is expected that, for some years at all events it will be difficult to find competent students to take advantage of the full number of scholarships provided. These scholars may be kept together under one roof with very little additional cost.

I am very much obliged to the honourable member for Poona for making a very valuable suggestion to reserve some posts of peons for the members of the depressed classes. I must plead guilty to the charge that I have forgotten the depressed classes in respect of reserving the posts of peons for them. I may bring to the notice of the honourable gentleman that Government leave all these matters to the officers concerned and in the Educational Department the Government have got for themselves the question of making appointments to the B.E.S. and I.E.S. only. So, the honourable gentleman has to apply to other quarters for giving effect to his valuable suggestion.

Mr. H. B. SHIVDASANI : Government could lay down the policy.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Government, of course, can lay down the policy. In the first place I would ask the honourable member whether he himself in his private capacity employs any member of the depressed classes.

An explanation was asked with regard to the provision of Rs. 20,000 which is provided for the committee of technical education. Without going into any elaborate details on this matter, I should like briefly to inform the House that this committee carries on examinations and inspection of the industrial and technical classes and particularly the examination and supervision of the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute.

Much capital was sought to be made by an honourable gentleman about the position of subordinates in the Educational Department. With great seriousness the honourable gentleman announced to the House the fear of a large number of subordinates in the educational service who felt that their position was very insecure. I do not remember that Government have during the last 14 months dismissed any servant either in the B. E. S. or I. E. S. I do not remember any case in which a servant has been reduced except one. I do not know what proofs the honourable gentleman has got for making such an assertion about the fear and insecurity of subordinates in the department. I can bring forward some witnesses who will vouch for the feeling of security they feel now. I am quoting the instance of the deputy educational inspector of Kolaba who would say that he feels more secure under the regime of a non-Brahmin Minister than under the regime of any one else. Questions and answers in this House are sometimes used to elicit information or to expose the action of certain parties. I may bring to the notice of this honourable House that a question was asked in this House by the honourable member for Bombay City, North :

"Will Government be pleased to state what new appointments have been made since January 1924 in the Government Law School, Bombay, and the Science Institute, Bombay?"

The reply was :

"(a) The following gentlemen have been appointed professors of Government Law School, Bombay : Pandurang"

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Why should the Honourable Minister read all the names ? What is the relevancy ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : I want to show what the insinuation was and what the facts were.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable Minister need not read out all the names for that purpose.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : The insinuation was that the non-Brahmin Minister was very partial to the non-Brahmin community ; and he was entertaining non-Brahmins for the new appointments. The names here mentioned are well-known names and I do not want to say anything about that. In the case of the non-gazetted appointments of the Royal Institute of Science, since the date referred to in the question, the names given in the list are these : The posts of assistant lecturerships for chemistry and physics have been given to Mahrattas. I may point out, Sir, that this Mr. Jadhav who has been appointed assistant lecturer in chemistry

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Has any criticism been made on that point during the present debate ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : The honourable member from Poona said that some servants of the upper classes were feeling a sense of insecurity

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That does not mean new appointments. No specific charge has been made as regards that matter. The Honourable Minister is going on for a considerable time on this, the last day of budget grants, and surely he must have some appreciation of the insufficiency of time on this day.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : I am sorry, Sir, that I have to take a great portion of the time of the House but I must explain . . .

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : So long as the Honourable Minister is relevant I cannot stop him.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : A direct charge was made that posts were looked upon as very insecure in the services and I have to show that the new appointments that are made.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That does not mean insecurity of the existing appointments.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : As I have explained, the existing incumbents are not.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That would be relevant, but new appointments cannot come in.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : I am sorry, Sir, I have to take considerable time of the House. I will only say that had there been more time at my disposal.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable Minister has another right of reply.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Then I shall resume my seat.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN (Ahmedabad District) : Sir, the question about local bodies is a serious one. Up till now the local boards have been paying only 10 or 11 per cent. out of the whole amount that is spent for education for local board schools, while Government are spending the remaining 89 or 90 per cent.; and when the new Act comes into operation Government propose to give only 66 per cent. and at the same time they want district local boards to incur additional expenditure on inspection staff; that is to say, the position just now is that the district local boards have to pay the teachers and then they have to pay the new inspecting staff also. Therefore they will have to provide for one-third of the expenditure while they have just now been providing for one-seventh of the whole amount. That means that the bargain is to be favourable to Government and to the detriment of the finances of the district local boards. I can give the illustration of my own district local board. We spend Rs. 3,50,000 for education and Rs. 3,00,000 is given as a grant by Government. Now what would happen after the transfer of education to the local boards? Even without the addition of a single school the expenditure will increase, that is to say, out of 3 lakhs 30 thousand, (A voice from Government benches: It is not correct) according to the new rules Government will supply only 1 lakh 23 thousand while the district local board will be out of pocket to that extent. And at the same time expenditure will be increased, because the district local boards will have to employ the inspecting staff as inspection will have to be done by them. That is to say the position of the district local boards, even if they do not increase their expenditure on education, will be much worse after taking over charge of the schools.

There is another important point which I wish to bring to the notice of the Honourable Minister. At page 161 of the White Book last year a grant of Rs. 10,000 was provided as grant-in-aid to industrial schools, while this year nothing is provided. Last year a grant of Rs. 2,620 was provided for educational defectives, nothing is provided on that account this year. I do not know why these industrial schools for the defectives have been neglected during the current year. Perhaps there may be some satisfactory explanation forthcoming from the Honourable Minister and I shall be very glad to hear it.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, I support the motion. As regards the question of handing over primary education to the district local boards, I must freely admit that I myself see the impossibility of taking over charge of the local board schools from Government, especially as the datum line in this matter which has been arrived at by the officers of Government has been arrived at in such a manner that in future it will be really hard to conduct even the existing schools when they are handed over to the district local boards by Government. For example, for the last six or seven years Government are not spending the required amount towards the repairs of the school buildings. They are not replacing the existing furniture, they are not supplying the necessary books and maps and such other things as are used in teaching boys, while in the new revised rules it has been stated that all the local boards will be compelled to provide all these things, and not only that but that they will be compelled to keep the school houses in repair. Most of the school houses are already out of repair, and some of them, I am sorry to say, are practically crumbling down and I will not be surprised if accidents happen to some of them and children are injured in consequence of such a neglect. I have been informed about this gross neglect on the part of the educational officers. Under these circumstances I think no district local board with a due sense of responsibility will take charge of such administration.

Then coming to the question of free-hand drawing in the elementary and secondary schools, I will say that Indian opinion on the subject was right and I am thankful to the Honourable Minister for saying that he will reconsider the whole question. Our Indian art is of special value from the point of view of bold curves and lines and you will never find such lines and curves in any other art and that is in my humble view the chief merit of the Indian Art. The free-hand drawing trains the hand to acquire this, and so it does require to be preserved and not abolished. As regards the remarks passed against the leader of the Swaraj party I may say that I was in the know and can state that the Honourable Minister has greatly misunderstood him. Had that party undertaken what it did last year I do not know whether that party would not have succeeded. And that party was conscious of their position and strength and it is for this reason that I say that the decision arrived at by that party was due not to any other consideration but to the consideration for the Honourable Minister himself and it was very unfair on the part of the Honourable Minister to have passed such remarks about the honourable member the leader of the Swaraj party.

The honourable member the leader of the Swaraj party has stated about the evil surroundings. Now, is it not a fact, Sir? Let the Honourable Minister examine his own mind. He did not produce the correspondence in response to a question put from this side of the House asking him to do so, when the Executive Council and even the Military Secretary who are not so responsible to this House did produce some correspondence on another subject. And when a Member of that Executive Council in fairness produces such correspondence as affects Government House, I cannot understand why a Minister in charge of a transferred subject should not do the same in regard to an ordinary matter. That itself proves that there must be something behind the scenes which must be guiding the Minister and preventing him from doing what is desired by this side of the House.

Again, take another instance. Take the Muddiman Reforms Committee's report. Out of seven, only the report of the two Members of the Government prevails as Government's report and the report of the five members is considered to be a minute of dissent! What does that show? That the majority of the members.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: What has that got to do with the Education portfolio? Honourable members do not seem to be content with the extent of discussion which has been going on for twelve days.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Sir, I will not now take up further time of the Council.

Mr. NOOR MAHOMED (Hyderabad District): Sir, the Honourable Minister was speaking rather vehemently about the last year's division on a vote of censure that was proposed. I am very sorry to say that at that time certain things were promised to be done by the Honourable Minister. A year has passed, but many of those things have not been done. I know the Minister is in office because the Mussalmans of Sind particularly, had got very bitter experience of the previous Ministry of Education and we supported the present Minister in charge of education because we had got absolutely bitter experience of the previous Ministry. During the last Education Minister's time we Mahomedans had many grievances in regard to our educational needs and we expected some improvement during the present Minister's time. But, Sir, a year has passed and though the present Education Minister has done one or two things for which I am thankful to him, I am really sorry to say that he has done nothing substantial to promote the education of the Sind Mahomedans. What significant thing has he done, I ask, for the promotion of Mahomedan education in Sind? He said he cannot build hostels for the backward communities because he has got no funds. But I will give an instance of a building lying vacant at Hyderabad. I know it is not mostly his fault. I know some of his subordinate officials are responsible for it. But he has not got a sufficient grip over the whole department in these matters. Can we not, therefore, rightly accuse him of not having gone into the matter himself as fully and as exhaustively as he ought to have done?

Then, Sir, I said last year grants were needed for certain boarding houses. The Sind Mahomedans were running after him in this corner, in that corner, and in every corner. I do not like to go into corners, but I cannot help going into corners owing to the circumstances (Laughter). But, Sir, you will be surprised to learn that in spite of our doing all this, we did not succeed in getting the Minister to give us the grants. But those people who simply go through his subordinates—subordinate officials—do succeed in their efforts, namely, in getting grants. I am very sorry, Sir, that he should betray us who are his friends and not his foes, as we stand by him.

Mr. H. B. SHIVDASANI (Surat District): Sir, I rise to criticise one particular action of the Honourable Minister. In the budget session of last year a committee was appointed to consider the question of the revision of the pay of primary teachers. That committee held two or three meetings, the last of which was held in October 1924. Now it was expected that the report of the committee would be published at the latest before the end of December 1924, and though I myself and the honourable member from Thana wrote and asked for the draft report being sent to us, and even spoke orally to the Honourable Minister, the report was not sent to us for our signature. Now, I find that the report has been sent to us only a few days back, and even then the report is incomplete and not in the form approved by the committee. The result will be that the report will not be published till the present budget session is over. Moreover, there will be one more complication. The schools are to be handed over to the local boards from 1st April 1925 and Government will come forward and say that the expenditure due to the revision of the pay of teachers is new expenditure and that the local boards must find one-third of this additional expenditure. This is nothing short of a dodge and I say it even amounts to trickery, and it does not become a Government like the Bombay Government to have recourse to these tricks to do the primary teachers out of their well-deserved increase in pay. If the money is not forthcoming or if Government does not want to give anything to the primary teachers, an announcement to that effect must be made in a straightforward manner, and not by delaying the report, and having recourse to such dodges. The report does not cover even half a sheet and yet the Secretary has taken five full months to draft a report—a report which would not take more than five minutes to draft. I have to emphasise one more point. The schools are going to be handed over to local boards and several knotty points are sure to arise. The teachers are on time-scale of pay and will get their increments in due course. Will the expenditure resulting from this be considered new expenditure one-third of which will have to be provided by the local boards? Several of the schools are undermanned. Is the expenditure necessary for bringing the teachers in schools upto their full strength going to be regarded as new expenditure one-third of which has to be provided by the local boards? Several schools were closed owing to non-co-operation but now the people are demanding that the schools be brought back. Is the expenditure required for restoring these new schools going to be regarded as new expenditure, one-third of which has to be found by the local boards? Unless all these questions are satisfactorily settled, most of the local boards are not willing to take the schools under their administration and control. I may inform you, Sir, that the district local board, Surat, have passed a resolution in which they have clearly stated three or four demands which must be settled before the local board will agree to take over the schools and their teachers. What is more is that the local boards are supposed to take possession of the schools from the 1st of April next, and yet I find that Government have done nothing so far to define all those things which will lead to a number of disputes later on. When the provision for the inspecting staff was proposed to be reduced by 12 lakhs, the Honourable Minister told us that the entire amount provided for the inspecting staff will be required as grants to be made to the local boards for the maintenance of their inspecting staff. But I hope that the Honourable Minister will not make the giving of these grants conditional on their agreeing to take over each and every member of the present inspecting staff on his present pay. It is possible that the local boards may have very serious objections to taking over some particular members of the present inspecting staff. So, I hope that the Honourable Minister will give his early attention first to the question of the revision of the pay of primary teachers, and secondly, to the several questions outstanding between him and the district local boards as regards the taking over of the schools by the local boards.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division): Sir, I had no desire to make any lengthened remarks on the present occasion, but certainly what fell from the lips of the Honourable the Education Minister has compelled me to stand and speak out my mind. Sir, as the whole House knows, there is no greater advocate of communal representation than myself. But as the honourable member occupies his position for communal reasons, we do not want to see him in any way acting in a manner which is not suitable to his position. Sir, everybody knows that the position of the present Ministry is not the same as the position of the Ministry three years ago. The Ministry suffered when my honourable friend the Revenue Member went to the reserved side. The quality of debate is also falling. We want our Ministers to be, if not first class, at least effective debaters. The poor kind of debate that we notice among the front Government Benches so far as Ministers are concerned is very disappointing. The Honourable Minister is not able to inspire confidence in any party. My honourable friend, Mr. Noor Mahomed, has just now complained of the Minister's indifference to Mahomedan education in Sind. I have also a similar complaint to make. Sir, some time ago we, the honourable Mahomedan members of this House, presented a representation to the Secretary to Government, Educational Department, (Mr. Thomas) which, we were told, would receive early attention. The Honourable Khan Bahadur Ghulam Hussain was the president of the committee that drew up the representation and he himself forwarded it. We have heard nothing about it. We have heard nothing about it, not a single word, in the speech of the Honourable Minister. Before the honourable member became our Minister, we had in the Central Division a Mahomedan Zilla deputy educational inspector, but since he took charge of office, that officer has vanished. So, instead of receiving from him a just, not to speak of a favourable treatment, our position is gone down. When we support our ministers we want them to be just to all communities. When the Minister of Education was a Brahmin, the present Minister himself was frequently complaining about his prejudices and the non-Brahmins were not satisfied with his administration. When the Minister is a non-Brahmin, the Brahmins are complaining, they are not satisfied and it is sad that we Mahomedans are also complaining about him. He has not inspired sufficient confidence into this part of the House in his administration. The Honourable Minister of Education, by virtue of his departmental position, should be the Leader of the House. At any rate, the Education Minister should be the Prime Minister; he ought to be the ablest man in the House. What do we find? We find that the administration has suffered during his regime. I wish to be impartial; I have always voted according to my conscience, sometimes with the Swaraj party and sometimes with the Government. The whole House knows that. I do not belong to the Swaraj party, I do not agree with their creed, but there have been occasions when I sided with them. They, therefore, cannot accuse me of being partial. What I do maintain is that as far as the administration of the Educational Department is concerned, it has not progressed during the time of the present Minister. What I would like to point out is that he should pay more attention to the wants of all the communities. The Mahomedan community is suffering a great deal for want of education. If there is one thing more than another that we do desire it is help in education. There is hardly a single Mahomedan member that has spoken who has not complained about the Education Minister. If we, the friends of the Honourable Minister, are treated in this way, I leave you to imagine how his enemies are treated. Personally, I am not against him, and I should like to support him, but how can we do so? The worst enemy of the honourable gentleman is himself. We want our Ministers to lead us, to give us guidance, to give us original ideas, to form parties. (An Honourable Member: To form parties?) Certainly. Why not? We belong to a certain party. (Honourable Members: To the Ministerial party?) What harm is there? A Ministerial party should be formed, but they are not capable of doing it. The difficulty is that the leaders cannot lead; my point is that if communities are to be represented in Government service and on the front Government Bench, they must be able, competent, and impartial men, men who would be admired, and not men who would be despised by this House. That is my complaint. My honourable friend on my right said that the Honourable Minister was in exceedingly bad company. I do say it is exceedingly good company. I believe in the stuff of the man, independently of the company. You, Sir, were also in that company. What did you do? You moulded them, you influenced them, you brought them round to your view, but you did not temporise. Much depends upon the personality and capability of the man, not upon mere office.

[Moulvi Rafuiddin Ahmad]

I maintain, Sir, that the prestige of the present Ministry is nil. I would therefore request the Honourable Member, for the sake of his reputation and the reputation of his community—because we, Sir, belong to martial races, and the Marathas and Mahomedans are heirs to the military and administrative virtues of our forefathers—to do better than he is doing at present. Martial we were but we should also come forward and show that we are also equally intellectual, and can hold our own against the members of the Executive Government. The honourable member Rao Saheb Desai said that Mr. Jadhav was being continually led by his secretaries. I do not understand how it can be otherwise. The members of the Civil Service are the most intellectual people, and Englishmen are always admirers of genius, and they always like to have fairplay. How can they have respect for people who are not their equals in intellect? A Scotchman told me that, if you want an English man to respect you, beat him down intellectually. I am sure the members of the Indian Civil Service require Indian co-operation, but co-operation of strong and not of weak persons, of strong parties and not of weak parties. The administration should be conducted by people who are really able to administer. In all parliamentary assemblies there is always a duel between the leading members of the Government and the opposition. Our Ministers should be in a position to lead in debate, and should be able to hold their own against the leaders of the Swaraj party. The leaders of the Swaraj party have not come from heaven. They are men all the same. My honourable friend to my right belongs to the Bombay Bar where our people hold their own against him in the High Court. Why should not the same thing be done here? I want the Honourable Ministers to improve themselves and then they will enjoy the respect of the House.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, the last speaker has introduced some communal considerations, and he has complained that Mahomedan education has suffered; he has referred also to the appointment of the deputy educational inspector. As to that, I have only one point to make. He will find that actually the total number of Mahomedans in this presidency is 19 per cent. and I think he will be surprised to know that the Mahomedan teachers are actually in service to the extent of 39 per cent. Really, therefore, they have no claim, if we are to judge by figures, to demand anything more than 20 per cent. Still, what do we find? We find that out of 2,603 teachers in local boards and municipalities, 1,033, or 39·5 per cent. are Mahomedans. That is one point.

Then another point. The honourable member for Bombay (North) stated yesterday that the Minister for Education should be a Mahomedan. I really do not know how far he was serious and how far he was light-hearted. I have the greatest admiration for him. I have always found that whenever he makes a statement he is very careful to examine its soundness. But unfortunately I found him napping yesterday. I am sorry he is not here now. He will see that the percentage of literacy among Mahomedans is 4, among intermediate caste Hindus 3, and among backward Hindus 1. This will show that the need of the intermediate caste Hindus is certainly more pressing than that of the Mahomedans. I shall be very glad even if all the three Ministers are Mahomedans. But at the same time when it is going to be a democracy the rights of other parties must be respected very strictly.

Then the other point is about the remark made by the honourable member representing the Bombay University. He very kindly came forward and assured this House that it was through the intervention of his party that the downfall of the Minister was prevented. Sir, I say that kind of statement is very objectionable. It hurts the feelings of other non-Brahmins in this House. The implication of what he said is this: the Education Minister is undeserving of the office he holds. If that is so, I will just request him to state whether he is not guilty of continuing a fraudulent policy. He is here in the interest of the public funds. If an undeserving man is holding office and drawing a large sum of money every month, it is his duty and the duty of every member of this House to oust that man and see that the public money is not wasted. I very humbly submit to him that we non-Brahmins do not require any patronising favours, whether it be from Government or from any other party. We do not want the patronising airs of the donors here. We know that we are the poorest of the poor. We know that what is ours by right is denied to us. Though we stand in this position we will be the last persons to tell anybody "You deprive another man of his just share and give that share to us to compensate for the injury". What we are saying is "Give us only what is ours: do not give us anything more than what is our due." So, if the honourable House thinks that an undeserving person is occupying the Ministership of Education, I request this House to do away with him and stop the waste of public money.

Then, the other point raised was about free-hand drawing. The honourable member for Bombay University was at one time the principal of a school, and he knows its administrative branch. If a specialist comes and says to him that physical culture is a very good thing, and therefore he should give three hours every day for physical culture, would he as an administrator concede the demand of that specialist? The Director of Public Instruction, I admit, is not an artist, and he may not be an art connoisseur, but all the same the administrative function is vested in him and he has to co-ordinate all things pertaining to that. There are many classes and schools in Bombay where any student who requires to learn free-hand drawing can go and learn. Government schools are, however, institutions where education has to be given to the largest number at the smallest public expense. And if it is found that owing to change of circumstances, free-hand drawing cannot be retained in the curriculum I do not think that is a sufficient ground to pass a vote of censure on the Education Minister.

Sir, I do not think I need take more of the time of the Council. I can tell the honourable member representing the Swaraj party that the non-Brahmins are capable of taking care of themselves. He has been complaining that we do not join his party in their deliberations....

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : I have not said a word about it.

Mr. A. N. SURVE : I do not want to be interrupted.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The House seems to be in a peculiar mood to-day.

Mr. A. N. SURVE : I can only say on this point that we are capable of taking care of ourselves. We always find that whenever we co-operate with intellectual persons we always suffer. Therefore, whenever it is a question of co-operation, when we find that we are guided rightly and our interests and the safety of the masses are not in danger, we shall co-operate with any party, let it be the Swaraj party or any other party. But in other respects, we will rely on our own instincts and we will be guided by our own counsel.

Mr. MAHOMED AYUB SHAH MAHOMED KHUHRO (Larkana District) : Sir, I would like to say a few words in this connection about Mahomedan Education in Sind. Sir, the education of Mahomedans is very backward when compared with that of non-Brahmans. The figures that are shown in the Director's report cannot be considered to be accurate. The figures that were shown by the Sind Mahomedan Educational Conference in Hyderabad clearly prove that only 72 Mahomedans are receiving higher education against about 1,000 Hindus, and in secondary education there are only 1,600 Mahomedan students as against about 10,000 Hindu students. This is in spite of the population of Mahomedans being 73 or 74 per cent. of the total population of Sind.

Sir, we asked last year that more facilities should be given to Mahomedans, but nothing has been done so far. I must remind the Honourable Minister that last year when a vote of censure was moved, the whole block of the Mahomedan members of Sind jointly supported him on the understanding that he would give better facilities for Mahomedan education in Sind. Sir, it is the duty of Government to provide more facilities to Mahomedans of Sind, in particular. There is only one High School for Mahomedans, the Sind Madressah, and that gets only Rs. 39,000 as a grant from Government. Representations have been made by Sind Mahomedans that this high school should be made an arts college and the grant should be considerably increased, but nothing has been done so far. Last year we put this point very clearly before the Honourable Minister, and we got an assurance from many Government members, including the honourable member Mr. Mountford himself, who was the Commissioner of Sind, that more money will be provided for this school. He (Mr. Mountford) had strongly recommended also to Government that the grant be increased, but the Honourable Minister has turned a deaf ear to it so far. We earnestly request and urge the Honourable Minister to help this institution as this is the central institution of the Sind Mahomedans and it has proved very useful and has turned out many students well educated. It is now high time that it should be improved and made an arts college for Mussalmans, that is, two years' course of arts should be added to it. May I hope that the Honourable Minister will take an early opportunity to oblige the Mahomedan public of Sind by doing the needful for this institution.

[Mr. Mahomed Ayub Shah Mahomed Khuhro]

Then as regards Mirpur Khas Madressah, it has been suggested by the district local board of Thar and Parkar that it should be taken over by Government, as they are not able to maintain it. The Honourable Minister for Education gave an assurance last year that it would be taken over by Government. In reply to a question last year the Honourable Minister stated further that it would be converted into a high school in the year 1925-26. But still the school remains where it was with only 5 classes. The districts of Thar and Parkar and Jacobabad consist of a very large proportion of Mahomedan population and the educational facilities for this vast Mahomedan population are very poor, in spite of the fact that it has been recognised by Government that it is necessary to afford ample facilities for Mahomedan education. These are the only two districts in the whole Presidency that have not got a high school so far as I remember. Sir, we had hoped that the Honourable Minister being a member of the backward community would help the Mahomedan community which is more backward than his community in education. But nothing has been done so far and we are no better than we were under the regime of his predecessor. The Honourable Minister has not come up to our expectations. The honourable member the leader of the Swaraj party said yesterday that they had stood between the vote of censure and the Minister and the Swaraj party had persuaded the honourable member Mr. Baptista not to move it. But, Sir, the fact is that the Sind members were ready to support the Honourable Minister even before the Swaraj party could think of it. So the credit is due to us. In spite of all this the Honourable Minister has not deemed it fit to give the educational facilities that we need so very badly. The figures that I have given in order to show the backward state of the Mahomedan community in Sind are quite correct and the Government may call for figures from the authorities concerned for verification. It is not the fault of Mahomedans in Sind that they are backward in education but they have lagged behind educationally because there is absolute dearth of facilities for education of their children. After finishing the primary education in the district local board and municipal schools, boys return home, because the parents do not like the idea of parting from their young children who have to go thirty or forty miles away from their homes, when they are hardly 11 or 12 years of age, if they want higher education in a high school, or a college, and it is really hard to send a young boy so far away where there is nobody to look after him. This is the main reason why the Mahomedans of Sind have lagged behind in education. So I would appeal to the Honourable Minister to consider the proposal of opening Anglo-Vernacular schools in all fairly well populated villages in each taluka of Sind just for the convenience of the mofussil boys and to raise the Sind Madressah into an arts college as soon as possible. Then these two districts of Jacobabad and Thar and Parkar must have one high school each, just as other districts have got. The members of our sister community, that is Hindus, have advanced so much in education because they are mostly inhabitants of towns and cities in Sind where their population is 70 and 80 per cent. and they have got every educational facility in these big towns and municipalities while the bulk of Mahomedan population in Sind is in the mofussil where as I have said, there are no institutions for teaching them English.

As regards the proportion of Mahomedans in the Educational Department there are very few Mahomedans occupying higher posts. So long as the present condition continues there will be no impetus for Mahomedan education. Out of so many head masters of high schools there is only one Mahomedan occupying the post and that also in Naushawro which has been recently made a high school and was a Madressah before. As regards the number of teachers it is very low in proportion to the strength of population. There are less than 10 per cent. Mahomedans in the posts of deputy and assistant deputy educational inspectors. Besides, up to now no Mahomedan deputy educational inspector has been given selection grade. Is not an injustice done to poor Mahomedans who are serving in this department? I must warn Government that Mahomedans will not like to enter this department where there are no adequate prospects for them, unless Government provides special attractions for deserving Mahomedan recruits still, i.e., direct recruitment on high posts just as is being done in Revenue or Police Departments.

These are matters which ought to engage the serious attention of the Honourable Minister. I hope he will prove as sympathetic towards Mahomedans as he has proved himself to the non-Brahmins, because the condition of both these communities is alike.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I am but a bad bureaucrat and am hardly entitled to give any opinion on so highly refined and technical a subject as free-hand drawing. But, as my honourable friend has appealed to my better instincts in another capacity upon this vandalism of abolishing free-hand drawing, I feel bound to state what really I know about it as President of the Bombay Art Society.

I am not an expert in the matter of drawing and painting, but I do know this : that copying from the flat, by which I understand free-hand drawing, has long ago been discounted in western countries, where latterly very much more emphasis has been laid upon the importance of drawing from life. Education in drawing when I was at school was usually free-hand drawing : we were given drawings on the flat and we were told to copy them. I understand that the modern idea is to put the student opposite some real existing objects—may be a box or table or any study you like from real life—and he is told to represent what he sees on his paper. Sometimes as a beginner he is told to draw the objects while he sees them before him. Sometimes he is encouraged to draw them from memory. He is given these objects to look at for quite a brief time—a few seconds or minutes—then these objects are removed and he is told to draw what he remembers. I believe that that method has been generally accepted in recent times. I speak not as an expert but believe this is generally accepted now as the better method of training young artists. I do not wish to say anything more about this subject as it is a highly technical question. But it seems to me that the abolition of free-hand drawing hardly merits the use of so grave a word as vandalism ; nor does it appear to me to form so large a part of the duties of the Minister of Education as to form a proper subject of a vote of censure on the administration of the Educational Department. Any way, Sir, it is not free-hand drawing but rather studies from life which are most encouraged and welcomed at the exhibitions of the Bombay Art Society.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh District) : Sir, I never expected the debate on this reduction of one lakh of rupees to take this bitter turn. Sir, I have made it perfectly clear that this motion of reduction is not a vote of censure. The Honourable the Leader of the House as well as the honourable member the leader of the non-Brahmin party, Mr. Surve, seem to think that this is a vote of censure, but I beg to correct that impression, and I beg to state that it is not a vote of censure, because the difference between a vote of censure and motion of reduction is that, if a vote of censure is passed, we expect the Honourable Minister to resign, and I for one as the Honourable Minister knows it, would not move a vote of censure against the present Minister. The way in which this elaborate discussion has proceeded regarding the policy of the non-Brahmin Minister will lead one to think that the British have retired from the House leaving the field to the non-Brahmins and Mahomedans to gain supremacy and fight the battle, but we cannot ignore the fact that the British are still here, and I for one deprecate the line of the discussion on which it has proceeded, and would like that all the parties should unite and give a united front to the bureaucracy.

Now, Sir, even after the explanation of the Honourable Minister, I still hold that the policy of introducing compulsory primary education will never be a success. The district local boards are really keen on introducing the scheme no doubt, but they are keen on it provided the scheme is financed by Government entirely. So far as my district is concerned, East Khandesh, the district local board have increased the land rates by half an anna, but now as the new elections have taken place and majority of the non-Brahmins have come in the district local boards, I am positive that it will be their first duty to see that this increase of rates by half an anna is done away with (Mr. R. D. Shinde : Question) no it is not a question, but I am positive about it, because I know the feeling in my district, I know the feeling of the agriculturists in my district. They are very much disappointed about this increase and I am sure that the first duty of the non-Brahmin people who have come into the district local boards will be to do away with this half anna increased cess and to demonstrate to Government their utter inability to accept the proposal. With these words I hope the House will carry this motion for reduction.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I need not take much time of this House. And I shall confine myself to answering a few criticisms that were offered in the course of the debate. The honourable member from Ahmedabad has made out a case against Government that under the new Act Government not only want to increase the burden of the district local boards but at the same time they want to lighten the responsibility they have been bearing up to this time. I am sorry to say, Sir, that the honourable member has not understood the sections properly. In the Act itself it is provided, Sir, that the burden of expenditure on education that is at present borne by Government will be maintained, and the proportion of one-third to two-thirds will be applicable only to the additional expenditure that will be incurred by the board in expanding primary education under the District Local Boards Act. So in the case of the district local board of Ahmedabad which has spent Rs. 50,000 on education while the remaining 3 lakhs are paid by Government, I may assure the honourable member that not a pie out of that three lakhs will be saved by Government. The whole amount of three lakhs will be handed over year after year to the district local board as a datum line and over and above that datum line, the expenditure that is required for the expansion of education will be shared by Government in the proportion of 2 to 1. I have also to explain that the little omissions he pointed out from the White Book are rather due to oversight on his part to refer to certain papers that were placed before the Council. The grants for the industrial schools, the Victoria Jubilee Technical School and normal classes is merged in the ordinary grant for normal technical and other classes. The excess over the current year's grant is thus merged. Government is conscious that larger amounts are required for technical schools and for industrial schools and for education of vocational training, and I think this House may rest assured that no saving has been effected in that respect.

I do not think, Sir, that much need be said about what has fallen from the honourable member from Kaira. He thinks that the datum line is very low. It is a matter for accounts and if the honourable member and his local board will convince the department that a larger amount ought to be taken as the datum line, the department will be only glad to acknowledge their mistake and give a larger amount. It is a simple matter of accounts.

Then, Sir, I have to say something about the criticisms that have been offered by the honourable Mahomedan members of this House. I am pleased to see, Sir, the Mahomedans are so very keen about education and about the rapid expansion of education among their community. I am disappointed in the apathy that is generally shown by the backward and intermediate communities of the Central and Southern Divisions; compared to them the Mahomedans are far keener and have done much better than their compeers of the Hindu backward community. I shall just point out the policy of this Government in respect of Mahomedan education and beg to place before this House the fact that the criticism that was levelled against me was due more to the neglect of my department in advertising their work. I am very sorry that the department is not advertising what they have been doing. We shall have to be more careful in future and take the earliest opportunity of informing our friends that Government is not only not negligent to promote Mahomedan interests, but on the whole that the Government have been more careful about affording facilities for Mahomedan education than they have been in the case of other communities, including the backward and intermediate classes.

An Honourable MEMBER : Why this partiality ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : My honourable friend asks me : Why this partiality ? The only reply is that the Mahomedans carry on more agitation.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD : I do not think so.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Well, I shall quote some figures to convince my honourable friend the Moulvi saheb. As a matter of fact, if the pages of the Director of Public Instruction's report are turned, it will be found that the number of Mahomedan teachers in the Urdu schools is very large. Urdu schools are wholly manned by Mahomedan teachers and at the same time vernacular schools have got a large percentage of Mahomedan teachers. The exact figures are given in that report. For encouragement of primary education and supply of more Urdu teachers, Government have been maintaining two central schools exclusively for Mahomedans, and this year provision has been made for two more schools. This is a provision made only for the Mahomedans and no other community has ever been given this concession.

An Honourable MEMBER : What about the depressed classes ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : There is only one for the depressed classes for students attending high schools.

Then, with respect to scholarships in high schools, the press note issued in August 1924 will show that for every 15,000 of Mahomedan population one set of scholarship has been provided throughout the presidency. But in the case of the intermediate classes and the backward communities one set for every 50,000 of the population has been provided. In that respect, Sir, the Mahomedans are treated more than three times more favourably, and still the Mahomedans are complaining that their interests are neglected. The third year training class has been abolished in all the training schools but has been specially conducted for training Mahomedan teachers in Urdu, and yet I am pained to see that Mahomedans are charging me with neglecting their interests.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD : Why was the third year class kept for the Mahomedans ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : At the request of the Mahomedans.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD : Is that so ?

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Yes. As for Sind, my honourable friends will admit that a lady has been appointed for aiding and encouraging education among Mahomedan girls. With regard to the Hyderabad boarding house, I may inform the House that the order for handing over the building has been passed and my honourable friends know that. They have not yet taken possession of it. They think that the rooms that will be handed over to them will not suffice for their purpose, that the accommodation will be inadequate, and I have promised them to look into that question and to try my best to see what can be done. So in that respect, too, Government has not been neglectful. Government have issued their orders. But everything cannot be done from headquarters : It is the local officers who have to see how these orders are to be brought into effect, and if the local officers are not sufficiently sympathetic, then I think my honourable friends, the Sind members, are alert enough to bring their apathy to the notice of the Director of Public Instruction and, if necessary, of the Minister, and I may assure them that we are not neglecting their interests. I do not remember, Sir, that we have gone back on our promise at any time, or that I gave them any promises when they came to meet me and promised to do some things and simply forgot them until they came again to remind me of the promises I had made. As for a high school at Mirpurkhas, provision has been made for taking its control under Government and I have promised them that the 6th standard will be opened this year in that school. It is to be raised to the position of a high school no doubt, but a high school can be developed gradually, and when the 6th standard is added this year, I think the 7th standard can automatically be added next year and it will be a full high school. As for giving more grants to the Sind Madressah, the matter is under the consideration of Government. The Madressah is getting a regular grant under the Grant-in-aid Code, and if a strong case is made out for a special grant under the Grant-in-aid Code, Government will not be remiss in considering it carefully and sympathetically. The high school is doing very good work no doubt and deserves encouragement.

As for the number of Mahomedan teachers in the province of Sind, I must admit that they are suffering a great injustice in that respect. Provision is being made for appointing more deputy educational inspectors, and when the control of primary education is handed over to the district local boards, which in the ordinary course will have a Mahomedan majority, I think the president and the members of the school boards of the district local boards will be able to give more encouragement to Mahomedan education, because they know the facts and they will be in a position to decide how to accomplish it. Government on their part are ready and willing to give them every assistance and facility.

During the last year, Sir, certain resolutions were taken and the policy of the department had come under criticism of this House, but on the whole I may flatter myself that no serious defects have been pointed out. A good deal of complaint has been made about the Primary Education Act which was passed by this House and also about the rules made under it. No human effort is ever perfect and no piece of legislation or any body of rules is to be looked upon as final. It is for the district local boards to take over the management, to work the Act and the rules, and to see whether they are unworkable and find where amendment is necessary.

[Mr. B. V. Jadhav]

Government do not say that the rules that are framed and the Act that is passed are the best of their kind, and do not bear any correction or amendment. Government will be only too glad to meet the district local boards half way in improving the administration of vernacular education by the district local boards. Government do recognise the difficulties under which vernacular education lies. The education in five different languages is managed under a system which is the same for all districts and for all provinces, although there are vast differences in the ideals and civilisation and manners of the various communities residing in the various districts. If the district local boards will take over the management of the schools, they will be able to develop vernacular education according to their own ideals. With regard to the question of text-books, it may be said that they may be changed and better ones introduced by the district local boards themselves. The only condition is that the department's sanction for these books is to be taken. I may, in this connection, bring to the notice of the House that two text-books prepared by the National University of Gujarat have been sanctioned by the department for use in the vernacular schools. The department does not look to the persons who prepare the text-books, but to the subjectmatter of books themselves, and if there is nothing objectionable in it, the department is willing to allow their use. Great latitude has been provided for in the Act in this respect, and it is hoped that by this freedom, better authors will come forward to write books, and in this way vernacular literature will be encouraged.

As for the policy of Government, I may point out one thing. The friction that was experienced between the department and the national schools has wholly disappeared, and I think ere long the two branches will work harmoniously and in union. I do not think I need take up the time of the House any longer.

I stand here on the goodwill of the House, and the goodwill of this House I claim on the strength of my deeds. If the House thinks that I myself and my colleagues have not done well, and have betrayed our trust, we are ready to lay down our office. (Honourable Members: Hear, hear). We are here, Sir, to serve our country (Honourable Members: Hear, hear), and the advancement of the country as a whole is our goal. There may be differences of opinion. One person may think that a particular line of action will lead to the goal earlier than other methods, but at the same time, I am ready to acknowledge that every one of us here is actuated by the same motive, is actuated by honest motives for the advancement of the country. Differences there will be, differences there are, and differences there must be; without differences society cannot stand. I therefore leave my case in the hands of this House.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI (East Khandesh District): Sir, in view of the sympathy shown by the honourable member towards national aspirations, and as my object to criticise the policy of the department and to ventilate grievances has been sufficiently served, I beg leave of the House to withdraw my motion.

Question put and leave granted.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I beg to move for a grant of Rs. 1,95,70,000 for Education.

Question put and demand granted.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I move for a grant of Rs. 6,84,000 for European Education (reserved).

Question proposed.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : Sir, I beg to move the motion that stands in my name, namely :—

“Reduce by Rs. 5,000 special provision for further building grant to Bishop's High School, Poona, Rs. 25,000.”

Sir, I propose this reduction for the very simple reason that according to the rules in this behalf I am told that the Bishop's High School, Poona, will not be entitled to a sum of more than Rs. 20,000.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I accept the reduction, in accordance with the statement I made in the Finance Committee.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I now move for the reduced grant of Rs. 6,79,000.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South) : Mr. President, I rise to oppose this total grant ; not that I do not desire education for that particular community ; I should rather wish for more and more education in that community, so that our conditions may also improve. But I want to protest against what I consider to be the ill-treatment of the Honourable Minister in charge of Education. I stated in the general discussion last time that when Education is a subject in charge of an Indian Minister under the Reforms Act, I could not understand why the Honourable Minister could not be trusted with the education of Europeans in this presidency. I do not know if the position is the same in all other provinces. If it is, it shows the very sorry state of the Indian gentleman selected by the Government themselves.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I rise to a point of order. Is the honourable member in order in discussing whether this should be reserved or transferred.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It is reserved under the Government of India Act.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : Yes, Sir, but.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : What I was pointing out was that European Education is reserved under the Devolution Rules under the Government of India Act. It is not a question of distrusting the Minister, but it is provided by law that it shall be reserved.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : I understand that the authors of that law are some Government, against whom I protest. My protest goes to the very root of the formation.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It is so under the Government of India Act and the rules made thereunder.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : I can still find a way out. If the Honourable the Home Member says that it is not due to any distrust, why should it not have been in charge of an Indian Member of the Executive Council ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member ought to know that the distribution of reserved portfolios among the different members of the Governor's Executive Council is exclusively vested in the Governor himself.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : Sir, my only object was to protest either against the Devolution Rules or against the unequal distribution....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member cannot protest against the Act.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : I have already protested, and I have nothing more to say.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The question is :

That a provision of Rs. 6,79,000 be made for European Education, Education (Reserved).

Those in favour will say "Aye"; those against "No." (After a pause.) I find the Noes have it. If honourable members will not be sufficiently vocal, I cannot help it.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I call for a division, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The tellers are Mr. Nariman and Mr. Kothari for the Noes, and Mr. Woods and Mr. Montgomerie for the Ayes.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : I suggest, Sir, that it should be put again, in order to save time.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It is suggested that I should take a division by asking honourable members to get up in their seats.

Those in favour of the motion will rise in their seats. (A large number of honourable members rose in their seats.) Those against will now rise. (No honourable member rose.) None is to be seen. I am very glad to find that wiser counsels have prevailed with those honourable members who shouted "No" with such vigour.

Motion carried.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I beg to move :

That a provision of Rs. 77,000 be made for Scientific Departments (Transferred).

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Sir, I beg to move :

That a provision of Rs. 21,000 be made for Ports and Pilotage (Reserved).

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I beg to move :

That a provision of Rs. 1,62,20,000 be made for Police (Reserved).

Question proposed.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South) : Sir, I beg to move :

Reduce by Rs. 50,000—Detailed Head 26A—City Police—Pay of 47 Sergeants—Rs. 1,21,168 (Civil Estimate, page 119).

[Mr. K. F. Nariman]

Now, Sir, ever since I joined this honourable House, I have raised a protest against the invidious treatment which has been held out to the Indian members of the police, not only in this city, but all over the presidency. I began my protest by putting various interpellations in the Council, and I got several replies which went to show that in all other departments as well as in this department there has been a sort of preferential treatment based on the same hypothesis or theory against which we have been protesting, namely, the white man's supremacy. But in no other department is the invidiousness more apparent than in the Police Department in this city and in this presidency. The present motion refers to the sergeants in the city police only, but I find from the White Book the same distinction is made all over the presidency including the railways, the B. B. & C. I. Railway and the G. I. P. Railway and I have given notice of reductions in all places where there is such a distinction. Now, I rise to clear up this matter once for all. During the last budget discussion I drew the attention of the Honourable the Home Member to this inequity, which has been existing for a long time and causing just discontent amongst the Indian members of the force, and I expected, Sir, from the manner in which the replies were given—they appeared to me to be sympathetic—that at the earliest opportunity that inequity would be sought to be removed. I am really disappointed to find, Sir, that instead of making an attempt, even a beginning, to remove that inequity they have sought to perpetuate it for at least one year more. I think we ought not to have it any further if this House desires to do justice to their own countrymen. I may tell you clearly that so far as the iniquitous treatment between the two is concerned, I can understand it if it is on the question of merit. On their own admission, which I can prove from the reports, they are equally satisfied with the duties discharged by the Indian members as well as the European members of the staff. I can nowhere find in any of the reports, even an allegation or suggestion, that the Indians in the police staff are not fit or are not as fit as Europeans. If the differentiation is not based either on the question of merit or education or capacity, then we have to base it on the crime of colour. Simply because these gentlemen are sons of the soil, they are treated in a different manner from those who have been imported from a foreign land.

So far as education and merit are concerned, I can make it clear to the honourable House, if it has not already known it, that the Indian is required to pass at least the Matriculation examination. Then he has to undergo training for three years in the Nasik police training school at the sacrifice of time and labour and keeping himself away from his family for three years. If he passes his examination then he is appointed in the last grade and started on a salary of Rs. 125, so far as the city is concerned and in the mofussil on a salary of Rs. 80. What is the position of these lucky sergeants? Without any University qualification, most of them are recruited from ex-soldiers from the war. No qualification whatever, no training, no sacrifice of time or labour in the training school at Nasik or any other place. They are started on a salary of Rs. 200 with an annual increment of Rs. 5 up to Rs. 250, while in the case of the Indian staff his maximum salary is only Rs. 200. I have already stated that so far as the duties are concerned, the sub-inspector discharges the same duties as the sergeant and his responsibility is as heavy as that of a sergeant. So far as the qualification is concerned the Indians have better qualifications than the sergeants. In spite of this the distinction is allowed to exist. If it is merely a question of monetary loss, it would not affect so much. What is worse is the humiliation, the loss of self-respect. It is not only a humiliation on the members of the staff but it is a humiliation on their countrymen. It is a question of the rights and privileges of the citizens of this country. The result of this is that all their future prospects are blocked. Whenever there is a next vacancy, say the post of a deputy inspector or inspector, the vacancy is filled by the sergeant; because he draws a higher salary he is considered fit for that post. These sub-inspectors are to rot on Rs. 125 for years. These sergeants are promoted to post of inspectors, superintendents and so on. I have made a careful search of the Civil List and you will find there that in all the higher posts the white element is preponderating, superseding the Indian element, because they argue that the sergeants are started on a higher salary, and therefore they are entitled to promotion. Out of the total number of 38 inspectors, you will find that there are only 3 or 4 Indians. If Indians are considered fit to occupy posts like that of presidency magistrates and chief presidency magistrates and executive councillors and what not, why these poor gentlemen are not considered fit to be in charge of police stations? Out of 6 superintendents there is only one Indian. I ask the Honourable the Home Member to declare whether if this gentleman has been appointed as an experiment to a high post in an important division of the city, he has not proved his efficiency and whether the experiment has not been successful. If he has proved himself efficient and if the experiment has proved successful, why should you bring men from the lower grades for these posts, superseding the Indians? I have not a good word to say about the police as a whole; but when we have to make a distinction between one man and another, we have to say that one is worse than another. Therefore by comparison, if one Indian superintendent has discharged his duties more justly, why should you not throw open the door to the other Indian members of the police staff....

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Is the honourable member referring to Rao Bahadur Tawade.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : I see his name is Mr. Tawade.

If the Honourable the Home Member agrees, we agree that the experiment so far as this gentleman is concerned has been successful, why not give chances to other Indians also? I can say from what little knowledge I have of him that further experiment will equally prove successful.

From my point of view, an Indian officer is more fitted and better qualified for the policing of the city population than the other gentlemen, because these gentlemen have got to deal with the illiterate Indian population. Most of the population in the north of the city are illiterate. Unfortunately these sergeants are not conversant with the language of the people with whom they have got to deal. Because he is not in a position to take down the complaint himself, he has to employ a havildar to translate to him the complaint. A muddle is created. While the complainant says one thing, the sergeant takes down quite a different thing. When these complainants come into court, they protest that they never said anything of that sort. So, no question of language or population with whom they have to deal is taken into consideration except the fact that they belong to the ruling nation, and I find no other justification for this differential treatment except that of the colour bar. When we are fighting for the rights and privileges of our countrymen in the colonies, I think it is our duty first to fight for equality in our city, in our province, in our country, before we clamour for the rights and privileges of our countrymen elsewhere. As we are at present, with what face can we fight for the rights and privileges of our countrymen outside? So far as this matter is concerned, it affects the non-Brahmins, the Mahomedans particularly. It does not affect a single gentleman of my community. It is only a question of principle. I hope the House will pass this motion.

Mr. A. MONTGOMERIE: Sir, I rise to oppose the motion. The honourable member who moved this motion referred to what he called the crime of colour. I think the colour he has referred to is the colour of the red herring he has drawn across the trail. I think there is no doubt whatever that the honourable member knows as we do, as well as the rest of the House knows why there is a difference between the pay of sub-inspectors and the pay of sergeants. It is based not on racial grounds, not on any ground about the ruling caste or anything of that sort, but simply on economic grounds. It is necessary to have in a force like the Bombay police force a considerable number of men who are accustomed to deal with Europeans, and who are men who have received proper training in the army. We have found that the best men we get for the purpose are ex-sergeants of the British army, men who are accustomed to deal with Europeans, men who are accustomed to handling a trained mass of men, men who are already made for us when they come to us; the least we can get them on is this Rs. 200 a month. Most of them, a very large number of them, come to us as already married. They could not live on anything less. We pay them the minimum that we can pay them in order to obtain their services. I have no objection whatever to seeing the pay of the sub-inspectors raised to the same amount, no objection in the world. In fact I will be quite prepared if the Finance Department would look at it for a moment. (An Honourable Member: Increase it). Increase it? I will certainly if the Council desires to give us a further grant in order to increase the pay of all sub-inspectors in the Bombay Presidency and I will be glad to do it. If the Council will give me the promise I will bring in the next Council a supplementary vote to increase the pay of the sub-inspectors of police. If I am assured that honourable members will pass that vote I will bring it up. (After a pause.) But I gather from the silence that the Council is not quite prepared to give me that grant for the increase of the pay of the whole police force. The point is that the pay has been fixed purely on an economic basis and not on racial basis at all. The honourable mover of this amendment said that this difference, this higher rate of pay, was used for determining future promotion. I entirely deny that. Promotion to the grade of deputy inspector or inspector is not based on the pay that a man was getting before promotion. If the honourable member were to look at the Bombay Civil List which gives the list of police inspectors in Bombay City, I think he will find that at the bottom of that list, (they are all on time scale) he will find in the lower rolls of that list an increasing predominance of Indian officers among the rank of inspectors who will in course of time rise to fill the post of superintendents. The honourable mover is aware that where we are satisfied with Indian officers we appoint them as superintendents. He said we had only one, but as a matter of fact we have two, the second of them, the senior one, is a gentleman of his own community. We are so very satisfied with that superintendent that on a recent vacancy in the post of deputy commissioner, he was put in to act as deputy commissioner in a highly responsible post. Unless the intention of the honourable member who moved this motion was to put the matter on a purely racial basis, I cannot see what his intentions can be. I do not think anybody will deny that these sergeants in Bombay, specially in the control of traffic, in the handling of masses of men when an occasion arises to deal with riotous mobs, are useful, necessary servants of the public. We pay them the least that they can live on. Their pay is not an extravagant pay. We find that we can get sub-inspectors on a lower rate of pay. Many of the sub-inspectors who are direct recruits are on the whole younger men than these sergeants. These sergeants who have put in a considerable time in the army, and some of them, many of them, are married in India. Their expenses are necessarily higher than those of younger men joining directly or even than those of the recruits from the lower subordinate ranks who have been promoted. I therefore strongly oppose this reduction.

An Honourable MEMBER: What about the knowledge of vernacular ?

Mr. A. MONTGOMERIE: I think you will find quite a number of police officers in the Bombay force who speak vernacular with considerable fluency. It is certainly true that there are difficulties about the vernacular, but we try to get men who do know something of the vernacular of the country. Most of them have spent some time in the country and picked up some part in the vernacular. I admit that this is the difficulty but at the same time their special qualifications do serve a particular purpose, and they form a very good element indeed in the force, and they are particularly useful in outbreaks of real trouble.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities) : Sir, I have followed with keen interest the speeches of my honourable friend Mr. Nariman and the honourable member Mr. Montgomerie, the

[Khan Saheb A. M. Mansuri]

Home Secretary. However, I feel that the real grievance does exist so far as the sub-inspectors and deputy inspectors of Indian police are concerned. They have been long in the service and whenever they are due for promotion, some European sergeant who has recently entered the service and has not even got the least training is put over their head. Sir, without any injustice to the sergeants I should say that they are also a deserving class of officers, but at the same time we are born sons of India and we must look to our own countrymen. Sir, there are enough instances where the claims of these deputy inspectors and sub-inspectors are set aside and they have been passed over although they rightly deserved promotion. But at the same time it would not be denied even by this House that we ourselves are responsible in helping Government in this act of injustice because whenever an occasion offers we do not stand up to the occasion, we do not stand by the side of our countrymen. When there is a riot, we try to put more trust in the sergeants than in our own countrymen. I think this is one of our own weaknesses and we are responsible for it but now time has come when Government should look into this matter.

(After recess.)

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : Mr. President, I want to say a very few words respecting this motion. Personally I do not like, Sir, that motions of this kind which embitter racial feelings should be emphasized and discussed in this House. But, Sir, we as representatives of the people naturally cannot approve of anything which would go totally against the interests of Indians. Personally I do feel that these sergeants are doing very useful work for the city of Bombay. I do not deny that. I go further and say that human nature and Indian nature being as it is, I think that the presence of these people no doubt carries some weight with the masses. But in order that this matter should not be based merely on racial prejudice and feeling, I make, Sir, a suggestion to the Honourable the Home Member and that is this : The only point upon which the honourable mover feels very strongly and makes others feel strongly is that the sergeants are a species by themselves. I would request the Home Member to make one Indian at least a sergeant, put one Indian at least in the rank of the sergeants, so that it could not be said that it was reserved for Europeans. The honourable member the Home Secretary defends the sergeants upon two grounds, upon grounds of economy and upon the second ground that the sergeants have a military training. I would request him that an Indian military officer of some experience recommended by a General or some military officers, who possesses the necessary military qualifications, should be entered as a sergeant, so that there should be no ground for us to resent racial inferiority involved in the exclusive composition of that body. If this suggestion, Sir, is accepted, it will take away the sting of the opposition. It may be that later on, if one is found useful, some more may be taken, but in order to take away the sting from the opposition, I would respectfully request the Honourable the Home Member to allow such a concession. With this expression of feeling and suggestion, Sir, I conclude my speech.

Mr. HOOSEINBHOY A. LALLJEE (Bombay City) : I must say, Sir, that the case that has been put forward by my honourable friend, Mr. Nariman, with regard to the Indian inspectors and sub-inspectors has been very fairly and justly placed. I will, Sir, not say that the pay of the sergeants is big, because I do feel, Sir, that as these gentlemen come down from England and are married officers, this pay of Rs. 200 is not large. But the question is, Sir, whether we are in a position to give them such a pay. We have been told by the Home Secretary that he is willing to pay the Indian sub-inspectors the same pay as he is paying to the sergeants, but this House should provide the funds. Well, Sir, for my part I should consider that the pay that is being given to Indian sub-inspectors who serve in this city is really low. The cost of living in this city has gone up and I do feel that their pay ought to be increased. But the question is where to get the money from ?

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : From the reserve.

Mr. HOOSEINBHOY A. LALLJEE : I myself feel that the Government can effect economy in the various departments and if they do so, I am sure, Sir, that they will be able to find a little more money for the Indian sub-inspectors. I am glad, Sir, that the Home Secretary has admitted, and rightly admitted, that the sub-inspectors are capable and able to do their work satisfactorily, and I do admit, Sir, that the sergeants at present in the police grade and especially police officers that have been introduced into our city at present are much more civil than those whom we had before. I do feel, Sir, that this is the result of the military training or at least due to the fact that the Government have been more careful with regard to the treatment of Indians. Whatever it may be, Sir, my whole object in standing up is that the pay of the Indian sub-inspectors must be increased for their services in this city and that the Government must be able to find out, from the large funds at their disposal, money for increments to these people.

Sir, I do not agree with the views of my honourable friend from Poona (Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmed) when he says that the Indians may be styled as "Sergeants". As far as I have studied the question, the duty of the sub-inspector and that of the sergeant is one and the same, only the European gentleman is called the sergeant and the Indian gentleman is called the sub-inspector, and in fact I do not see that there is any dispute among them with regard to this name. Then, with regard to the suggestion that retired Indian military men should be recruited as sergeants, I say, Sir, that this is impracticable and not a wise step. A retired officer would certainly be above 50 or 55 and we cannot recruit an old officer for this kind of work. I do say that the sub-inspectors, knowing the conditions of the people, the customs of the people and the language of the people, would be and are likely to be more successful officers than the gentlemen from England, as far as police stations are concerned, and it would be really in the interest of the city and of the people that these sub-inspectors are placed in charge of police stations. I am really glad that Indian gentlemen have been given positions of superintendents and deputy commissioner, and I am also glad that the Home Secretary has frankly stated that they have deserved their promotion, and I do feel that such promotion ought to be given. If Government are not able to find funds for paying more to the Indian sub-inspectors who really deserve a little more pay in consideration of the hard economic conditions, then I should suggest to the Honourable the Home Member that he should reduce or stop recruiting from England, and the little saving which could be effected thereby should be paid to the sub-inspectors. He need not reduce the pay of the sergeants, as Rs. 200 is not a good salary for a man with a family, and therefore, in the interest of efficiency and fair play I should ask the Honourable the Home Member to decide to give something more to the Indian sub-inspectors from the reserves at the disposal of Government, or to curtail the recruiting of the sergeants and give that little saving to the Indian sub-inspectors. There is no use in keeping these people unsatisfied, and I do hope that the Honourable the Home Member will make his position clear in this respect.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR : Sir, I rise to oppose the amendment moved by my honourable friend from Bombay (South) for the reduction of the grant by Rs. 50,000. The grounds that he has put before this House are that these sergeants should be put on the same level as regards pay with the Indian sub-inspectors. We have heard times out of mind (Mr. B. G. Pahalajani: Times out of number), I repeat, times out of mind from the honourable member for Bombay city, the mover of this amendment, that he did not like to see a large number of people in the city unemployed, and here now he is coming forward to move a motion for the reduction of the salaries of the sergeants. Sir, his grounds are that these salaries should be on the same basis as the salaries of the sub-inspectors. The first question I should like to put to the honourable member is whether the pay that is given to a police sergeant is more than what he deserves. If that is so, then his amendment would be quite in order. But as long as he has not been able to prove that the start that is given to a police sergeant is more than what he deserves, than the honourable mover of the amendment has no grounds to complain.

Coming to the question of the salaries of the sub-inspectors, my honourable friend must understand that these sub-inspectors are chosen from among those who have passed the matriculation examination, and they receive training for three years in the Nasik Training College. May I know from the honourable mover of this motion what is the starting salary of a matriculate in Bombay? I should put it at the modest figure of Rs. 60. Does he get in three years cent. per cent. promotion to Rs. 125, so that the honourable member could protest against the salary of the sub-inspector being fixed at Rs. 125 as being too low, because his qualifications are that he is a matriculate and then he gets three years' training in the Nasik Training College? In fact he gets a start of Rs. 125 at once, and that means a decent living wage. I should be certainly happy if the salaries of these sub-inspectors are increased, and if any resolution to that effect is brought forward by my honourable friend who has moved this motion, I shall be the first person to support it.

Now, the question is this: we all know that in the city of Bombay there have been very many motor accidents, and as such many of us had found fault in the past with the police for bad regulation of traffic. I know it for certain that ever since the appointments of sergeants at dangerous corners of the streets in Bombay for the regulation of traffic, the number of motor accidents is reduced. That is a fact which cannot be denied by the honourable mover of the amendment.

Then, Sir, coming to the question of the good work that the sergeants have done,—it is a bit superior to the work of the sub-inspectors, and I am not afraid to say so—I should like to refer to the question of the hawker nuisance. The honourable mover knows for certain that it was at the desire of the Bombay Corporation that all the hawkers in the city are licensed. (An Honourable Member: They are not.) If the honourable member is not aware of it, I am rather sorry. With regard to the question of hawker nuisance, certain areas or limits in the public streets have been allotted to these hawkers, and thereby much of the nuisance and obstruction in narrow streets, like that of Bhuleshwar, has been removed. What did we find in the old days, for instance, in a street like Bhuleshwar?

Mr. HOOSEINBHOY A. LALLJEE: I rise to a point of order, Sir. What has the municipal licensing of hawkers got to do with the present question?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: What relevancy has that to the present question, unless the honourable member's contention is that this hawker nuisance could not have been removed by Indian sub-inspectors, but it was removed by European sergeants? If that is his argument, it would be relevant. Otherwise, what has the present question to do with the municipal licensing of hawkers?

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: My submission is this: the question of the salaries of the sergeants and the sub-inspectors has been raised, and a comparison.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Does the honourable member want to make a comparison, and contend that the nuisance would not have been removed by the Indian sub-inspectors, but that it has been removed by the sergeants?

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: That is what I was driving at.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Then say so; come to it direct.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: I cannot come to it all of a sudden. If I am interrupted, it is not my fault. I was not allowed even to complete my sentence. I do repeat that the work of sergeants in the matter of traffic regulation and the removal of the hawker nuisance in the city of Bombay has been better than before, when it was in charge of sub-inspectors in certain parts of the city.

[Mr. V. A. Dabholkar]

Take, again, the question of labour strikes. I hope that I shall be supported by the nominated member representing Labour from Bombay when I say that in the matter of labour strikes, these sergeants have been very useful, and they have been doing their work far more courageously than sub-inspectors. Even some of the honourable members who have supported the motion have admitted that on account of the military training that the sergeants receive, they have been doing better work. That itself is proof of what I have said and the comparison I have made.

Some anxiety was shown by the honourable mover of the amendment that the salaries of the sub-inspectors should also be increased, and they should be put on an equal basis with that of the sergeants. I think Government has not ignored the rights of Indians. The facts are before us. They show that superintendents have of late been appointed from among Indians, and an Indian has been appointed as deputy commissioner of police. As such, whenever there are any occasions for Government to promote Indians to higher appointments, I am quite sure Government will not fail to consider their claims. Not only that, but if this House would vote a large sum of money to increase the salary of sub-inspectors, I think Government would be the first to accept that resolution, and thereby my honourable friend the mover of the amendment will be fully satisfied. Under these circumstances, I oppose the amendment of the honourable mover.

Mr. HOOSEINALLY M. RAHIMTOOLA (Bombay City): Mr. President, so far as I understand, the nature of the work done by the sub-inspectors and the sergeants is the same. Therefore, in my opinion, the question is whether the sergeants do better and more efficient work than the sub-inspectors. If they do not, and if the work done by the sub-inspectors is quite as good as the work done by the sergeants, then, there is no necessity of maintaining the sergeants on a higher pay, and in the interest of economy and retrenchment it would be better to do away gradually with the higher paid sergeants and to replace them by Indian sub-inspectors.

Mr. G. I. PATEL (Ahmedabad Millowners' Association): Sir, I put certain questions in regard to the differences between the pay of sergeants and sub-inspectors in the last session of the Council, and from the replies which I received I have reasons to believe that there is great inequality. The sub-inspector at the end of his whole career gets less pay than what a sergeant is given at the very beginning of his career. As regards prospects also, from my personal knowledge and enquiry I understand that there is difference in equality. A sub-inspector with longer service is not promoted to a particular post to which a sergeant with shorter service is promoted. It is this difference which creates a feeling of dissatisfaction among the sub-inspectors. I shall be glad to hear from the Honourable the Home Member if these distinctions have been wiped out or corrected since he gave replies to my questions.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Mr. President, I should like to intervene at this stage and state briefly what is the position with regard to the superior grades of the Bombay city police force. I think then we shall be in a better position to discuss the whole matter.

I must emphasize the fact that we are now discussing the Bombay city police force : we are not discussing the police force either of the city of Poona or of the city of Ahmedabād. We are discussing, Sir, the Bombay city police force; and I think it necessary to make that distinction, because the conditions in Bombay are very different in many respects from the conditions in the mofussil. It is conceded that in big towns like Poona and Ahmedabad, we have conditions somewhat similar to those in Bombay. But the differences which make it necessary for us to have a special city police force here are not so great in Poona and Ahmedabad as they are in Bombay. I suppose, Sir, it will be quite unnecessary for me to remind honourable members that this is a large city, continually increasing from day to day, with a very large industrial population, a great many millhands and a great many labourers in the various departments which are carrying on their developments in Bombay; that we have here a very large and important harbour with very extensive docks, employing very large quantities of labour brought from all parts not only of this country but of the world; that we have a large cosmopolitan population which includes not only Indians from all parts of India, but men from outside—it includes Arabs, Pathans and various European nationalities, who require rather particular treatment when their particular energies run counter to those of the police. It is therefore necessary, Sir, for this large city to maintain very special police force to deal with the peculiar problems which arise from day to day in Bombay. We have, apart from what I have indicated, the difficulty of dealing with those whom I might call predatory tribes who have caused so much loss in recent times in the city of Bombay, the difficulties of a city with a very large traffic which necessitates very constant control at all the important quarters of the town. We have also various other duties thrown upon the police in the city of Bombay which are not comparable to the duties which devolve on a policeman in the mofussil or in places outside this great city of Bombay.

Now, Sir, the superior staff which we have for controlling the very large police force, which I think totals some 4,000 men, consists of the Commissioner of Police, 4 deputy commissioners of police; under them a staff of superintendents; under them inspectors; under them deputy inspectors; and under them a class of sergeants who are Europeans and a class of sub-inspectors who are Indians, the classes of Europeans and Indians being on the same footing. The one are called sergeants, because that is the term usually applied to European policemen; the other are called sub-inspectors, because that is the term which is usually applied to Indian policemen. Now, Sir, we have in the past few years made every endeavour to give a fair proportion of these superior appointments to our Indian police officers, and I should like here to acknowledge the great services which have been rendered to this city by the Indian police officers in these superior posts. We have, as has already been pointed out, only recently appointed an Indian to act as one of the deputy commissioners of police. We have at present two Indians who are in the grade of superintendents of police. One of them mentioned by the honourable mover, I believe, is doing very excellent work in his particular division. Superintendents are the officers who are in charge of what are called divisions. The city is divided into divisions and each division is divided up into police stations. The police stations are in charge of inspectors who work with the help of deputy inspectors, sergeants, sub-inspectors and a strong force of police constables. Now, out of the inspectors I understand that there are about half Indians. I have not the exact figures, but I have got the Civil List here and on glancing through that I am told the numbers are 15 Indians out of the 37. That is a large proportion; it is not quite half, but it is getting on. That shows that we are making progress in enlisting, or rather in promoting Indians to the very responsible posts of inspectors, that is officers in charge of police stations and other important departments. Then, under the inspector at a police station there is usually a deputy inspector—I think in some police stations there are two deputy inspectors. Unfortunately the deputy inspectors are not shown in this green book, so that I cannot give you the exact figures. I have not got them here, but I know that the deputy inspectorships were opened only a few years ago to promoted sub-inspectors, and that a proportion of these deputy inspectors are now promoted Indian sub-inspectors. The deputy inspectors are recruited from the grades next below them, namely the Indian sub-inspectors and the European sergeants. And we endeavour to recruit as many Indians as we find really suitable for the responsibilities of the post of deputy inspector. Below the deputy inspectors, as I have already said, come the separate grades of sergeants and sub-inspectors. Now, this particular vote refers to 47 sergeants shown in the general executive force of the city of Bombay. There are besides these, other sergeants in charge of other departments, such as conveyancing, motor licensing, traffic control and so forth. Altogether we have 58 sergeants. I believe the honourable mover has not missed any of these in the motions he has put in for reduction. I think his industry has noted down with unerring finger every item in which the term “sergeant” appears in the White Book. I think we can trust him not to have missed any one of them. Altogether there are 47 sergeants in the executive force and 11 elsewhere in the city of Bombay making altogether 58. Against these 58 sergeants, you have got on the other hand 73 inspectors. You have therefore already got a larger number of Indians particularly in this grade. In this grade, under the principal item under discussion, the number of sub-inspectors is 59; but there are other sub-inspectors employed in the other departments. There are altogether 73 sub-inspectors, that is to say, you have 58 sergeants and 73 sub-inspectors in this particular grade. You have already a larger number of Indians than you have Europeans in this particular grade of the Bombay City Police Force. I am glad that the question of the employment of officers in this particular grade has not been run on racial lines but purely on one of economy and efficiency, because I feel that is the only line upon which a question of this sort can properly be discussed as it involves the question of the maintenance of law and order in this great city.

Let us now consider what are the reasons for which we require European sergeants to work for our police. I have already alluded to the particular circumstances of this large city. This city has got a cosmopolitan population which requires particular treatment. In this connection there are, as every member here is aware, particular duties for which these sergeants are particularly fitted. They are moreover not uneducated men as has been suggested. It is true that they have not passed the matriculation examination; but I submit they have gone through a training which is very much more effective for the particular work that has to be performed by the police. The training of a British sergeant now-a-days is a training which any man may be proud to undergo. I suppose honourable members here do not know the training in the army. It is not restricted merely to physical exercise and drill, but there are schools in which the soldiers are educated. They have to pass examinations and they are regularly trained intellectually for their various duties. Modern warfare requires a very much higher degree of intellectual education than was ever given to any soldier before. The training given to British soldiers now-a-days is very valuable and of a very rigorous kind, and that training eminently fits them for the duties which ordinarily fall upon policemen. From the point of view of training, I do not think anything can be said to the detriment of their training as compared with the training of young sub-inspectors. In fact these sergeants are specially selected men who have served with good character and efficiency for long periods in the army. They are selected men, whereas the young sub-inspector is a man newly recruited who has to learn his work from the beginning. The sergeant suffers, it is true, from the handicap of not being so familiar with the Indian languages as Indian sub-inspectors, but he is a man who has been in this country sufficiently long to obtain a passable knowledge of the vernaculars sufficient to carry him through the duties, which fall upon him. The duties which are required of him are in some respects different from those of ordinary sub-inspectors. Whereas the ordinary sub-inspector would devote his time more to the investigation and unravelling of crime, the European sergeant has to deal with matters of rather a rougher nature. He has in fact to undertake a larger part of the rough and tumble of the policeman's life. That a policeman's life in this big city is a life of rough and tumble, I suppose no one in this House is prepared to deny—certainly no one who remembers the riots which have unfortunately from time to time defaced this great city. I submit, Sir, that it is most important that we should have in Bombay a portion of our superior staff trained in military science so as to be able to deal effectively with tumults or riots. It is most important that we should have these sergeants who are accustomed to face the music and will do it and will not hesitate to take the responsibility, which may be necessary to quell tumults and riots and prevent their spread to the other parts of the town and prevent the resulting loss of property and misery to the population of this city. On these sergeants falls the larger portion of the responsibility of protecting us during times of riots. These are the officers also who were particularly useful when we had to deal with such gentlemen as Arabs or Pathans or other gentlemen of that class of whom there were so many in this city. I am glad to say that their numbers have been very largely decreased by the drastic action taken, not many months ago, by our police. I suppose everybody here remembers the round up of Pathans and the number of these gentlemen who were politely requested to return to their homes in the north. Then, apart from this question of maintaining law and order and protecting the valuable property and lives of our citizens, there are other more peaceful duties for which they are particularly fitted. There is foremost the question of traffic control. That, Sir, is a peculiarly difficult business. I suppose anybody who has lived many days in Bombay can realise the difficulty of controlling this vehicular traffic which has so much increased during the last few years in Bombay, and I think they will also agree with me that the control of that traffic has very materially improved in the last few years, and I think great credit is due to the particular traffic department. I may mention here for the information of honourable members that we have formed a special traffic department for this particular purpose, and that officers have been sent home to England to specially learn the business of traffic control which is so well known to the police in London. It is essential that you should have these European sergeants to efficiently control the traffic and prevent street accidents in Bombay. I have dealt now with the question of retaining them in the interests of efficiency in these particular matters, and I hope honourable members will have followed me so far and will have agreed with me that it is necessary. It is also necessary in the interests of the general efficiency of this large police force that we should have a certain number of European sergeants. It is a large police force which now numbers nearly four thousand men, their duties include the disciplining of this large force and no one is better qualified to discipline a large body of men like this than the British sergeants who have been accustomed to the discipline of a British regiment.

I now turn, Sir, from the question of efficiency to the question of economy and it has been objected by several honourable members that we are not as economical in this matter as we should be. While on the other hand, Sir, some honourable members have accused us of not spending so much money as we ought to on these same grades of officers; some have asked us why our sergeants' pay is so much, others have asked us why sub-inspectors are paid so little. It is rather difficult for me therefore, Sir, to satisfy all sides of the House. But with regard to the pay of these officers I will first give figures. Then we shall be in a position to talk about it. I begin with the pay of inspectors, the officers in charge of the police station. The pay of an inspector is Rs. 300 rising by Rs. 10 to Rs. 400 a month. Now that pay is given whether the inspector is a European or whether he is an Indian. There is no difference. That is considered to be the pay which is required to obtain the necessary officer for this very responsible post of charge of a police station. Then deputy inspectors, who are also equally European and Indian, get Rs. 275 a month. That is Rs. 25 less than an inspector and that again has been thought to be necessary in order to secure a man of the proper stamp for a deputy inspector, a man who might at any moment be called upon in the absence of the inspector to take charge of the police station. Then we have the grade below of sergeants and sub-inspectors. The sergeants of police are paid Rs. 200 rising by Rs. 5 to Rs. 250, while the sub-inspectors are paid Rs. 125 rising by Rs. 5 to Rs. 200. So there is, Sir, a difference between the pay of the sergeant and the pay of the sub-inspector. I have already referred to the fact, Sir, that the sergeants are generally men who have undergone a longer training than sub-inspectors. So that, quite apart from the question whether European or Indian should be paid the same, it is justifiable for me to argue that it is necessary to pay a higher trained man a higher salary than a man who is a recruit. For a sub-inspector who is newly recruited has to put in 18 months training at the cost of the State before he is a fully qualified sub-inspector. I think, Sir, that from the economic point of view it is a perfectly justifiable argument that the latter is a young man learning his work and therefore should not be paid so much as the other man who is a man who is practically already trained. Then, Sir, there is this other economical question which was referred to by the honourable member the Home Secretary and that is that you cannot get a British sergeant for a less pay. You won't get the selected men who have done good work as British soldiers to serve and remain out of their country on a lesser scale than Rs. 200 to Rs. 250. If you reduce it, you will not get the same kind of men, they will go home and seek for better employment there. If you want to get selected British sergeants you have to pay them a reasonable wage and that wage has been found by experience to be not less than Rs. 200 rising to Rs. 250 (An Honourable Member: What about house rent). The police get no house rent. They are all provided with free quarters, both Europeans and Indians. They get no house rent. They get free quarters. We have now, I am glad to say, built quarters for nearly all our police men. Where we have not got quarters, the Commissioner is allowed a capitation grant at so much per officer, out of which he has to find and pay for quarters for them. The capitation grant is paid to the Commissioner of Police, who has to find suitable quarters for these officers. Sometimes he will have to pay rather more for one officer in an important locality and on the other he will save in another locality where accommodation is rather cheaper. But none of these officers get any cash paid to them on account of their quarters.

Now then, Sir, let us examine further the pay which is fixed for the sub-inspector. If this House thinks that the pay is too low and if we are advised by our experts who are acquainted with recruitment that it is not sufficient to produce right men by recruitment, then we shall most certainly consider the matter, and we shall bring in a recommendation to this House for increasing this pay, and I trust that if we do so after full inquiry and being satisfied that it is necessary, that the increased pay will be passed and the money provided by this House. But, Sir, let us look at the position. The sub-inspectors in Bombay are given Rs. 125 rising by Rs. 5 to Rs. 200. Now sub-inspectors in the district, in the mofussil, get Rs. 75 rising to Rs. 160.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : Sir, I move a closure. The Honourable Leader of the House has spoken for 25 minutes.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I cannot accept the closure at this stage.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Of course, if the honourable mover has heard enough to make him withdraw his motion, I have nothing more to say.

An Honourable MEMBER : Do you accept the closure ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I will accept the withdrawal of the motion. If the motion is going to be withdrawn, Sir, the closure may be accepted ; I have no objection to it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I have not accepted the closure ; will the Honourable the Leader of the House go on with his speech ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I was dealing with this question of the pay of the sub-inspector, because it has been recommended in some quarters of the House that it should be increased. I merely want to place the facts before the honourable members. I should like to hear their opinions. In the districts, the sub-inspector is paid Rs. 75 rising to Rs. 160. Here in Bombay, he is paid Rs. 125 rising to Rs. 200. I believe that clerks in the Secretariat, first-class honours men, who are taken on in the Secretariat, start, I understand, on Rs. 120, and they get no free quarters. Now, Sir, if we get first class honours men on Rs. 120 to come and serve in our Secretariat without getting free quarters, are we to say that we are paying the sub-inspectors too little, when we start them on Rs. 125—Rs. 5 over your honours men—and we also give them free quarters ? Sir, I am not at all averse to give these men more pay if it is really thought necessary, because they do very valuable work and I recognise that the life of a clerk in the Secretariat is a much more peaceful one than that of a sub-inspector. I recognise that there are strong reasons for giving a different rate of pay to the sub-inspectors. I merely mention these things, so that honourable members may consider whether the rates of pay are really reasonable or not. There they are. If there is a decided opinion that they should be raised, then I should be the last to oppose any such increase if any extra money is voted by the honourable House.

Sir, after what I have said about the special necessities of the special police force of the city and my remarks on the scales of pay allotted to them, I hope that this motion will now be withdrawn by the honourable mover.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South) : I was waiting, Sir, very patiently for all these 30 minutes to find if I could get any argument from the Honourable the Home Member's speech in opposition to my contention or in support of his case. Although he has spoken for nearly 30 minutes, Sir, I may frankly state I have not come across a single argument whereon he could urge this House to oppose my motion or to accept his suggestion. I have not disputed—if I get an opportunity later I will speak on the efficiency or inefficiency of the police force—I have not disputed either the efficiency or the necessity or the utility of the existing sergeants, although as a matter of fact, from the exaggerated picture which the Honourable the Home Member has drawn, of this city without the force of these sergeants, I do not know what would be the fate of this city if we had not these sergeants. It would seem we would be entirely at the mercy of the Pathans and robbers, and so forth ! I would ask the Honourable the Home Member since when this system of sergeants was started in this country. I think for centuries we had better peace, better security, so far as life and property is concerned, without the institution of the sergeants. The institution is of recent growth and we have done without that all these years. They are useful in their own way ; so are the sub-inspectors. What I was waiting to see was whether the Honourable the Home Member maintained or stated openly that sub-inspectors were not efficient enough, were not good enough, were not deserving of the salary for which I am asking. That he does not maintain. He winds up by saying that " I am the first man to admit the efficiency of the Indian force in the police ", that they are equally efficient. He also gives instances where the Indian officers were deserving men, that they have discharged their duties very creditably, and so on. All along his arguments have been in support of my contention. The Home Member has given the different grades rising from the Deputy Commissioner and down to the sub-inspectors. We shall on a reference to these figures find that in all the ranks, the salaries of the Indians and Europeans are the same. If an Indian happens to be lucky enough to go up to the post of Deputy Commissioner, he gets the same salary as a European would get. If an Indian sub-inspector happens to be lucky enough to be promoted to the rank of an inspector, he gets the same salary as the European inspector would get. It is only when we come down to the grade of sergeants—whether we call them sergeants or sub-inspectors, it is only a difference in name, they are doing exactly the same duties—that you see this difference in pay. Why should this difference be maintained in one cadre ? I could understand a policy that all through the police force, the Indians should get less than the Europeans, no matter what the post. But to make such a difference only in one cadre or in one grade alone, which is more invidious and which they feel much more than otherwise, is a thing which I cannot understand.

Now, coming to the Home Secretary, he said something about the red herring. I did not quite follow, because his voice was too low. But I think it is a case of jaundice. It is not the case of a red herring or a red rag to a bull on this side of the House ; it is the case of jaundice on the other side, if they will not see plain facts. There have been known instances where sub-inspectors have been superseded. I have also worked out these points and worked up this question, and I find a number of instances where sub-inspectors have rotted since the year 1910, 1912, and 1914 onwards as sub-inspectors, whereas the sergeants who joined so late as 1919-20 have gone up to the grade of deputy inspectors and inspectors. If the Honourable the Home Member will not object, and if you, Sir, rule that names may be given, I will mention the names.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member can make a general statement. If it is contradicted, I will allow him to give the details.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN: I have got in my hands a brief list which shows that since 1912 there have been three sub-inspectors who are still sub-inspectors, one joined in 1910, one joined in 1911, one joined in 1914, and so on. Now let us look at the other list, how the European gentlemen have fared. Five or six European gentlemen who joined in 1919 within these two or three years have risen to the rank of deputy superintendents or inspectors. One gentleman joined in 1919 and one joined in 1922. That is the way in which these promotions are managed. As I say, I am prepared to give the details if the figures are challenged. The natural argument goes that a gentleman with a salary of Rs. 200 is entitled to a promotion before a gentleman with a salary on Rs. 125.

Now, coming to the point of education, I do not say university education qualifies a gentleman for police service in the city. We have got instances where even very highly educated men are wanting in good manners. I do not say that education alone will make good officers in police. But when you are giving them a special training, between the sergeant who has qualified himself for war service or active service and a gentleman who has qualified himself for civil service in the city, I do maintain that the second man would be more suitable for service for civil population. I do not say the sub-inspector would be qualified in the field service, but for the policing of a civil population I certainly say that a gentleman who has been trained up with a normal education—university education—would be better than a gentleman without any educational qualification at all. The instance has been given of riots and abnormal times. But even there, I maintain that if an Indian sub-inspector or any Indian officer goes into the crowd which is infuriated and tries to explain the position, he may be able to put down the disturbance sooner and better, without any casualties, than a sergeant with his experience of war would be able to do. I do not wish to give here instances of what the results have been when a sergeant is on the scene of such troubles. Personally, I think a sub-inspector, by means of persuasion, may be able to get better results than a sergeant by means of force; the sergeant often makes matters worse, and from a little disturbance it becomes a riot.

I must say, Sir, that I was very much surprised and shocked and pained that even on a question of equality of treatment to Indians, I find at least one Indian gentleman who has the courage of his convictions in opposing this motion. I could understand the attitude of the honourable gentlemen on the other side. There is one position which they have taken up, and they have got to maintain it, but I really cannot understand the attitude of an Indian gentleman who can have the hardihood to oppose my motion when I am fighting for rights of equality for his own countrymen. I am glad that there was only one such honourable member, and I hope that in voting, as a matter of principle, there will not be even one member who would not allow this principle to stand that so far as treatment in this country is concerned, there shall be equality of treatment to Europeans and Indians alike.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Mr. President, I am sorry there was not even one single argument which the honourable member would admit as being intelligible. I did my best to make them intelligible to him ; I am sorry I have entirely failed. The honourable member is entirely beyond my powers of persuasion. I will not, therefore, say very much more. But I do not know what the honourable member was referring to when he said that for centuries we have got on in this city very well without any European sergeants. I suppose he goes back to the year 1660 or so, when Bombay was just beginning to rise from the little fishing village it was into a town of some importance. I do not suppose in those early days there was any such thing as a police force. In fact, Sir, the police force was not then invented ; it was only introduced very much later into England. So that, Sir, comparison from a state existing two to three centuries ago seems to me to be a very poor comparison and a very insulting one to the present magnificent city of Bombay.

I understand that the honourable member would be pleased to do without any British sergeants at all in the police force in Bombay. He would be glad if there were none at all. He does not even admit that a single one is necessary for the adequate protection of life and property in this city. Well, Sir, if honourable members opposite agree with that, let them vote out this sum altogether ; get rid of all the sergeants, get rid of the European Superintendents and all European officers. I submit however that we shall then receive very piteous petitions regarding such things as the Pathan menace, tumults and riots, seriously prejudicing the present prosperity and further progress of this great city.

I could not follow exactly the figures which the honourable member quoted from his paper of supersessions, nor would it be possible for me to go into the merits at such short notice. I do not know where he got his figures from. I do however maintain that the questions of promotion are gone into upon their merits and that in no case is a deserving Indian officer superseded by a European sergeant. I submit, Sir, that our Commissioner is very careful to see that justice is done to all ranks of this large police force. It would be quite impossible to control so large a force of 4,000 men, a force more in number than our battalions of troops, unless the head of that force was strictly just in his treatment of the men. I submit, Sir, that our present Commissioner of Police is essentially just in the treatment of his men, and he has, I am perfectly satisfied, the absolute confidence of all men of the force, both European and Indian.

[Sir Maurice Hayward]

I submit, Sir, that the honourable mover has not made out any case for interfering with the constitution of our police in this great city. I submit, Sir, that it is essential that we should continue to maintain a police force of the nature that we now maintain, if we are to give due protection to life and property in the city of Bombay.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : As a matter of personal explanation, may I say, Sir, that it is sought to be made out that I have moved for the total abolition of the sergeants, and the Honourable the Home Member has been arguing the motion from that point ? My motion is only for a reduction.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am going to put it to the House.

Mr. R. G. SOMAN (Satara District) : Sir, I beg to move :

Reduce by Rs. 7,000 the item of Rs. 12,050 provided for Secret Service Money (Civil Estimates, page 142).

Honourable members of this House will find from the White Book that in the coming year Rs. 12,050 has been budgetted. In the current year the provision is Rs. 11,500, and the account for 1923-24 is Rs. 2,350. It appears to me that this secret service money is a sort of demoralising bribe to be paid to the informants, and it is on that account mainly that I object to this amount being increased in any way. If it had not been retained in the budget at all, I would have been very glad ; but now that it has been budgetted I only move for a reduction of Rs. 7,000 from the item.

Question proposed.

Mr. A. MONTGOMERIE : Sir, I rise to oppose this motion for reduction, on the ground that so long as some men are rogues and so long as the police are called on to protect the public against criminals, so long they must resort to the methods which the honourable member deprecates. It may be, Sir, very distasteful, and I have no doubt very often it is distasteful, to the police to have to induce one rogue by offers of money to tell them what he knows about some other rogue. But unless some proper provision for that purpose is made in the budget, the work of the police will be practically paralysed. The honourable member said that he would like to see it entirely omitted from the budget. I dare say that there are budgets of many States in which no provision is made for secret service money, but I am perfectly sure that in those States the money which is paid for secret service appears in the budget under some other head. It may be shown as milk for the Royal household, or travelling allowance, or it may be anything else. But no police could possibly carry on without it. We require the money for paying informers. Informers have to be dealt with. If the honourable member were to lose a large amount of his property, I do not think he will be particularly annoyed with the police if they discover his property for him by means of the expenditure of a little secret service money. There are all sorts of occasions on which it is absolutely necessary for the police to make enquiries involving expenditure which must be kept absolutely secret, and some provision must be made for that. I therefore suggest, Sir, that this provision is absolutely necessary and should be retained.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City) : Sir, I have listened very carefully to the remarks passed by the honourable member the Home Secretary, and I may say that they have not convinced me about the necessity of this provision. I think the honourable member the Home Secretary missed the point that has been urged by the honourable mover, namely, that out of Rs. 12,050 he wants to effect only a saving of Rs. 7,000. The honourable mover has not moved for the total omission of this item : he only wants a reduction of Rs. 7,000. From the figures that appear on page 144 of the White Book we find that the amount spent on secret service in 1923-24 was only Rs. 2,350 and for the year 1924-25 the figure jumped to Rs. 11,000, which is five times the amount spent during 1923-24. The honourable member the Home Secretary has not given us any reason for this sudden leap in the expenditure. He has not shown why the expenditure mounted up from Rs. 2,000 to Rs. 11,000 during the space of one year. We want to know whether the whole of this amount was spent on the detection of ordinary crime or for engaging secret agents in connection with the political agitation. There is a suspicion on this side of the House that most of this money must have been spent on suppressing political agitation. If he gives us an idea as to the purpose for which the budgetted money was spent during the current year, the House will be in a position to determine whether the sum demanded for the next year is to be granted or not.

Mr. R. G. SOMAN (Satara District) : Sir, the honourable member the Home Secretary stated that this sum is required for setting one rogue against another. As my honourable friend from Poona pointed out there is a suspicion on this side of the House that the secret service money is mainly intended to engage agents to work against political agitators. The honourable member the Home Secretary has given us no idea as to the purpose for which this money will be spent. Even the instances he has given are not appropriate objects on which this money should be spent. Honourable members of this House may have heard of this secret service in connection with the agitation that is going on in Bengal. In view of the fact that the non-co-operation movement is not so much in vogue as it was said to be in 1921-22 and 1923-24, when the money that was spent was only Rs. 2,350, this House will not be convinced by any argument to sanction five or six times the amount that was spent in 1923-24 on secret service.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University) : On a point of information, I just want to ask my honourable friend opposite whether it is possible for him to inform this House as to how much of this amount was spent on political spies and how much on the detection of crimes of the nature stated by the honourable member the Home Secretary.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Mr. President, I am surprised that this small sum should have received the honour of attention of the honourable members of this House. The sum spent in 1923-24 was Rs. 2,350, which is not a very large sum. The estimate for the current year was Rs. 11,500 and for the coming year it is Rs. 12,050. The estimate is not for the city of Bombay only but it includes the presidency proper and Sind. I am afraid I could not give the details required by my honourable friend opposite, even if I knew them. If I did, the money would cease to be secret service money.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : I want only the amount.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I cannot give the amounts, because I do not know them. But it would not be possible to spend much out of this Rs. 2,350 on political agitators. I entirely agree that political agitation in the past years has been very small and that fact is reflected in the actuals for 1923-24. The whole of the amount provided for that year must have been spent in ordinary investigation of crimes, in cases of burglaries, theft, dacoities, fraud and cases of that sort. I think that the small figure for 1923-24 shows further that due economy is exercised in the expenditure of this money. An estimate has to be made because the expenditure necessarily varies very much from year to year owing to variations in crimes. It is quite impossible to say at the beginning of the year whether there are going to be serious offences in which it will be necessary to spend money in order to get information which will lead to the detection of the offenders and the recovery, in cases of offences against property, of the property. The figures given are the estimates by the various departments which have been accepted on the past actuals including not only 1923-24 but previous years. Of course, if we are fortunate and if there are no serious offences requiring expenditure from this grant then the expenditure will not be made and there will be a corresponding saving. This item of Rs. 12,050 should be left as accepted by the Accountant General on the estimates of the responsible departments.

The cases on which we have had to spend money in the past are such as the dacoities which occurred in Kaira and Gujarat. We have to spend a great deal to get information in regard to such outbreaks. Other cases are frauds where money has to be spent in order to get information leading to the detection of the frauds and the recovery of the misappropriated property. Others are like the recent conspiracy to kidnap—I will not refer to it in detail, because it is practically sub judice—which caused so much stir and excitement in Bombay. In these and other cases it is necessary to spend considerable sums in order to obtain information which will lead to the detection of the offenders. I should therefore recommend to the House to leave this small sum as it is and trust that, if it is not necessary to spend it, economies as in 1923-24 so also in the year 1925-26 will be exercised by the responsible departments.

Question put and lost.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South): Sir, I beg to move:

Reduce by Rs. 10 lakhs—total demand under Police (Budget page 76).

I know, Sir, that it is at the fag end of the last day for the demands for grants that this item has come to be moved, and it will not therefore be possible for me to carry this motion to a division, but even in this short time which is available to discuss the policy of such an important department as the police department the House might avail itself of the opportunity, and I will therefore lay before the House what we consider to be the legitimate grievances and irregularities with regard to this important department. During the last debate on the reduction of the salaries of sergeants we were given a very vivid picture by the Honourable the Home Member about the so called efficiency and perfection of the police. Of course, the Honourable the Home Member on that occasion spoke only about the city police force, but I take it, Sir, his remarks applied equally to the whole police force in the presidency. Now, Sir, I may frankly admit that my experience so far as the police force is concerned is confined only to the city of Bombay, but I take it that so far as the police force is concerned it is the same all over, whether in this city or province or any part of this country, and therefore the criticisms which commonly apply to the city police force will necessarily apply to the whole force in the province. First and foremost I wish to ask the honourable members on the other side whether, notwithstanding an increase in the force, and notwithstanding the exaggerated picture of the efficiency and perfection of the police that we have had in the last debate, the safety and security of the citizens, the lives of the citizens or their property are not neglected in any appreciable manner within the last three or four years. That is the real point at issue : the crux of the whole question. Considering the circumstances in this very city I would say, and say with a certain amount of regret that so far as personal safety and security are concerned it certainly has not improved in any appreciable degree. The position is just as bad and as insecure as it was during the last three or four years. In the budget discussion last year I said that in the Northern part of the city there is neither British Raj nor Police Raj, but Pathan Raj. The only difference that I could see is that so far as this year is concerned that kind of Raj is not now confined to the Northern part of the city but has spread all over the city. The most recent incident, if I may be permitted to refer to it as giving a vivid illustration of the insecurity of the Bombay City, a vivid illustration of the protection given to the citizens is the incident called the 'Malabar Hill outrage' which has unhinged not only this city or province but the whole country, the most shocking outrage in which the life of a useful young citizen has been lost. Sir, it is not in a dark part of Parel or Dadar or Mahim. It is not in a bye-way or a lane ; almost shortly after sunset, a few yards from the Commissioner's bungalow—the Commissioner of Police is the protector of the citizens of this City—not very far from Government House, a few minutes after sunset, we have the life of a valuable promising young citizen chopped off like that of a gutter rat in the streets of Bombay and not a policeman or a sergeant or a sub-inspector or even a constable could prevent it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I should like to draw the honourable member's attention to the fact that that case is sub judice, that as soon as police inquiry is completed it will come before a magistrate and probably will go to the Sessions Court, and I cannot allow any discussion with regard to a case which is sub judice.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : I am quite aware of that, Sir, and knowing that, I do not wish to refer to the merits or demerits.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Whether the police was in default or not in this case will be investigated in the course of the trial when it comes up. I do not think the honourable member can attack the police on this vote in regard to a case which is sub judice. You can deal with the police in any other way you like.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : Very well, Sir. Apart from the particular case, I will refer to the general instances which have occurred in the city. As I said whereas the danger was confined at the time of the last budget discussion to one part of the city, now it has spread all over the city.

[Mr. K. F. Nariman]

I do not wish to give this or that instance, but the citizens of this city are aware and no fresh facts are needed which are merely shocking, that even in broad daylight citizens' lives have been chopped off, their properties looted and their houses trespassed and broken into, and if you look at the police report you will find that nearly five thousand cognizable crimes have not yet been detected in spite of the large force of well trained European sergeants in the force. This is a very very edifying record. I would ask honourable members who have voted for the retention of this vote to read this report. My honourable friend the nominated member from Bombay City South gave a vivid description of how those sergeants have to go on detecting hawkers, troubling the citizens and arresting a great number of crippled beggars wandering about the streets interfering with the traffic in the city. I do not know what other crimes besides these the sergeants of the city police are engaged in preventing and detecting. I admit that these sergeants are very competent in arresting a number of hawkers and molesting them—long live the sergeants—and that they are also very competent in detecting very effectively blind and crippled beggars who could not move. These are very creditable actions for the appreciation of which the sergeants ought to be very thankful to my honourable friend.

Now coming to vehicular traffic and motor accidents, if you study this record you will find that this year there have been about 15 more accidents than the last year. Now, is the real and only function of the police to look after the hawkers and crippled beggars and the direction of street traffic? Is that the real function for which they are to be rewarded? I submit, Sir, that is not the real test of the police force. The real test is the safety and security of citizens and the safety and security of persons and property. In that, Sir, I maintain that inefficiency—I won't call it efficiency—inefficiency is maintained to the same standard.

MOULVI RAFI UDDIN AHMED : I rise to a point of order. The honourable member moves a motion for the reduction of 10 lakhs. According to the rules, he ought to justify it and point out where 10 lakhs ought to be cut, but, as far as the sergeants are concerned, we had already a motion and we disposed of it and is the honourable gentleman to take time now only about the sergeants ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am afraid on a motion of a general cut there is considerable latitude in regard to the discussion as regards the whole police. The honourable member can deal with the whole policy underlying protection and the various measures adopted by Government for purposes of protection. Rulings have been given so frequently on the subject that I need not dilate upon them. This is a general discussion on the whole police force.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : I am thankful, Sir, for the little indulgence. The House is always thankful, Sir, for these little indulgences from the Chair—with a view to give fair opportunities to all sides—and appreciates them very much. I am reading, Sir, now from the Commissioner's report quite within the purview of the present criticism. Page 18 of the Commissioner's report contains the following :

“Warnings to Editors, etc.—During the year, under the orders of Government, warnings were given to 20 editors, proprietors, publishers or press-keepers for non-compliance with the requirements of the law relating to presses, books and newspapers.”

That is another important function of the police, Sir. Giving warnings to editors, to help the Government to stop agitation not by having prosecutions in courts of law, but having the Commissioner of Police to send for these unfortunate timid gentlemen and to warn them. Twenty unfortunate editors, proprietors and publishers of newspapers, etc., were sent for and warned! I ask the honourable House whether this is a legitimate activity of the police. I could understand the activity of the police if the editors had transgressed the bounds of law or published anything seditious. Certainly it is the duty of the Government to prosecute them openly and in the courts of law. But is it the duty of the Police Commissioner secretly to send for them and warn them? These are the functions which we find, Sir, in the report. Similarly, I take it that in all the districts, in the mofussil, these are the activities of the police, and the real functions of the police, namely, protection of property and protection of life, are therefore naturally disregarded because they are busy with work which is not ordinarily the function of the police force.

Another point that I find, Sir, is that on one occasion the Honourable the Home Member himself visited a police station in this city. I remember an instance and mention it to show how things come to light and how things are arranged. On one occasion when I happened to be at a police station, I found that in the police station everything was being arranged to make it appear up-to-date, even the under-trial prisoners were made to appear to have been well-fed, well-clad and so on. I was informed that the Chhota Governorsab was going to visit, hence all those preparations. I waited in a corner and soon after saw the Honourable the Home Member step into the police station in right earnest and he inspected. He came, he saw, he conquered. After that, if we come and complain in this House about the unsatisfactory state of affairs in the police stations, the Honourable the Home Member will be ready to tell us : “I personally visited the place; I can say from personal experience there is no truth in this complaint, the police stations are as good as Government Houses, if not better; and the prisoners are all properly fed and looked after.” I say, Sir, that is not the way to look at our complaints. If you really want to know the truth about the police stations, how things are carried on there, if the Home Member really wants to know the inner working of it, let him go to a police station even as a complainant if not as an accused but not as a Home Member, with all things prepared, all the requisite preparations made to receive him. That is not the way he will know the real truth about the police station. I still suggest, if he could manage to conceal his identity, he should on a particular day or a particular night visit a police station and see for himself whether the complaints of the public with regard to some of the police stations are true or not. I know some instances where people actually dread a police officer next only to the Pathan or a robber. Very often people prefer to suffer loss of property rather than complain about it to a police station, because, in addition to the loss of property there is loss of valuable time and a lot of worry. I say, Sir, if the Honourable the Home Member really desires to know the inner working of a police station, I should certainly advise him to visit incognito and not after giving full opportunity and previous warning to the gentlemen at the police station. I do not wish to take up the time of the House and therefore conclude.

Question proposed.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, I am going to refer to the grievances of the people of the district of Kolaba in respect of the notification issued by that District Magistrate in reference to issuing licenses for music. Sir, the matter that I am going to bring to the notice of this House is a very fine instance of red tape carried to a very great extent. There is also some element of misunderstanding. How small misunderstandings lead to tragic consequences is very well illustrated by the case that I am going to narrate. Sir, in that happy district of Kolaba, up to the 9th of September 1924 it appears that there were no rules whatsoever—rules, I mean, of a written nature—in existence, and one fine morning the District Superintendent of Police discovers this very serious error and approaches the Collector, and both put their heads together and one notification is issued out. That notification referred to the whole district and it was a conglomeration of rules, good, bad and indifferent. About the rules, I may just point out one instance. No funeral was to be taken out without obtaining the permission from the police authority and the men had to apply for the license two days before the event occurred. That means that the rule if literally followed, would make the people keep their dead in the house for two days if they wanted music or the man had to give two days' notice that he would die, (Laughter). However, that is not the rule now; it has been changed. The rule was actually in the notification issued on the 9th of September. Then there was no exception made for leading religious processions. The president of the Pen municipality went out of his way, and drew the attention of the District Magistrate of Kolaba that the rules which were brought into force all at once were very harsh, and he should reconsider them. To the president they appeared so very harsh that they could be enforced only in times of martial law. That is the word which is the root cause of the whole misunderstanding. The president had not the slightest idea of casting reflections upon anybody, but the District Magistrate considered that a slight was cast on him, and he at once writes a letter to the president "Instead of writing to me officially, why did you not write to me demi-officially?". Here the ceremony and red tape began. Then ensued a good deal of correspondence, and both parties began to maintain that they were right. First of all, the Collector in his letter of the 7th says that the proclamation adds nothing new to the existing rules. That is the sentence I have taken out from the letter written by the Collector to the president of the municipality. Its implication is quite plain. It says that it adds nothing new to the existing rules. Then the president says "Please furnish me with a copy of the rules to which you refer". Then the Collector says "The new rules are an attempt to make clear the existing position and practice which had not been inadvertently regularised by regular rules". That means that till that date there were absolutely no rules whatever in the district of Kolaba, and when the president of the municipality brought it to the notice of the District Magistrate, he tried to explain it away somehow. First of all, the Collector was under the impression that there were rules and he wanted to do nothing more than codify them. When the president scrutinises the matter, it comes to this that there were no rules, but he was referring to practice. Here you will see how the whole trouble originated. Then came the point of honour and recrimination. The Collector came to be under the misapprehension that the president had with some ulterior motives concealed from the knowledge of the municipality the letters which he had written to the president of the municipality. As a matter of fact, the letter was written by the Collector of Kolaba from his headquarters town, namely, Alibag, on the 7th, and in the ordinary course that letter reached the president on the 10th, and the municipal meeting was held on the 8th of December. Please note these dates. The Collector writes the letter on the 7th, it was received by the president on the 10th, and the municipal meeting was held on the 8th and yet, the Collector, under some misapprehension, charges the president of the municipality with deliberately withholding the correspondence from the knowledge of the members of the municipality, and his object was to create agitation. Of course, the president of that municipality appears to be a very spirited gentleman, and there was exchange of amenities. I will not take this House through all those amenities. But I must bring to the notice of the House the attitude and temper of the municipality. He says in his letter of the 15th "Let us forget and forgive the past, and strive to do good to the people with whole-hearted co-operation with one another". That is his attitude.

Now, let me draw the attention of this House to the form of the notification. I have in my hand the notification of the 9th, and you will see that this notification has at its foot the signature of the District Superintendent of Police. That shows that the whole thing was drafted by the District Superintendent of Police, and at the end you have the stamp "Approved" and signed, . . . "District Magistrate, Kolaba." Now, it will be seen that the first form of this notification contained some harsh rules, but by mutual exchange of opinions, the rules have been undergoing changes very often. The changes are all marked in the papers I have in my possession. But what I want to draw the attention of the House to is the fact that even if Government, in its administrative capacity, has to issue a notification, it has to pass through several stages. First of all, it must publish the draft notification in the Government Gazette. It must call for opinions of the public, and then those rules must be republished, and then only they come into force. Here you will see that an officer of the district issues the orders. No opinions are called for, and no public body is consulted. Events have shown that the notification contained several very harsh rules, and yet that notification was brought into operation all at once, by pasting the rules on the chavdi of every town. Then, let me draw attention to the fact that at first rules were applicable to the whole district, but now they are applied to towns within the municipality. You will see what was the scope of the rules in the beginning, and to what narrow limits they have been dwindled down in the course of exchange of opinions.

Now, let me bring to notice one small point, as to how Government officers are not actually in the know. People inquired of the Director of Information whether these rules are in force, and that gentleman told them that those rules were not at all in force. I have got the letter of the Director in my hand, but I do not want to go through it. Therefore, the people there enquired of the sub-inspector of police on the spot whether the rules were in force, and he told them that they were in force, and they would have to obey them. Then came several complications: people enquired whether they would have to obtain permission for their religious processions, and they were told, 'yes.' Up to that time, no permission of whatever nature was required for religious processions, and to-day, by this innovation, they are all at once called upon to submit to the police notification. So, the people feel that they have a grievance: if any of the privileges which the people have been enjoying are to be retrenched, they should be retrenched at least with the consent of the people.

Now, I am speaking of only two rules that are in the notification as it stands to-day. I do not want to waste the time of the Council.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Before the House adjourns I should like to draw the attention of honourable members to the occurrence of a mistake in the division which was recently taken. These mistakes are becoming so common that I must appeal to the tellers to be a little more careful in the manner in which they submit their report. The report shows that Mr. Punjabhai Thakersi has voted on both sides of the House. I call upon Mr. Punjabhai to state whether he voted for the Ayes or for the Noes.

Mr. PUNJABHAI THAKERSI : I voted for the Ayes.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Then the result will be modified. Correct records have to be kept. The motion will be noted as having been negatived, 26 votes for the Ayes and 49 instead of 50 for the Noes.

Mr. LALJI NARANJI : Sir, I wish to make a request that this House should meet on the 17th instant at 12 noon and adjourn at 3, to attend the ceremony of opening the Cattle Breeding Farm at Kandivli. It is a Government day and I have requested the Honourable the Home Member who raises no objection to it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member Mr. Lalji Naranji desires that as a special case the House should meet at 12 noon on Tuesday the 17th instant and adjourn at 3 p.m. in order to enable honourable members to go to the function to which they have been invited. It is a Government day. Though I do not very much like the idea of changing the hours of meeting, I have repeatedly stated that if there was a consensus of opinion in the House I would accept it as far as possible. I should therefore like to know what the wishes of the House are, whether they desire to meet on Tuesday from 2 to 7 as usual, or whether they wish to comply with the honourable member's request to meet at 12 noon and adjourn at 3.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I have no objection to raise on behalf of the official benches, if that is the general wish of the House.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Sir, I wish only to speak on behalf of the Swaraj party, because my honourable friend opposite (the Honourable Sir Maurice Hayward) will be very angry if I claim to speak on behalf of the non-official benches as a whole. Speaking on behalf of the Swaraj party, I say that we have no objection.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The decision must largely remain with the House, and I will ask those honourable members who are in favour of meeting at 12 and adjourning at 3 on the 17th instant to rise in their seats. (A large number of honourable members stood up.) The condition I have laid down is satisfied. The House will meet at 12 noon on Tuesday the 17th instant and adjourn at 3 o'clock.

We shall now adjourn till 2 o'clock on Monday, the 16th March 1925.

Monday, the 16th March 1925.

The Council re-assembled at the Town Hall, Bombay, at 2 p.m. on Monday, the 16th March 1925, the Honourable the President, Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., presiding.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. Swearing in of new members.

The following members made the prescribed oath of allegiance to the Crown and took their seats:

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Government Bills. Further consideration of the Court-fees Bill.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: It will be remembered that the Court-fees Bill was introduced into the Council some days ago. Government propose to withdraw that bill and postpone its consideration for the present.

 BILL No. I OF 1925. A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND THE BOMBAY RENT (WAR RESTRICTIONS)
ACT, 1918, AND THE BOMBAY RENT
(WAR RESTRICTIONS No. 2)
ACT, 1918.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Bill No. I of 1925.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: Mr. President, I rise to move the first reading of *Bill No. I of 1925, [A Bill further to amend the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, 1918, and the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions No. 2) Act, 1918].

The honourable House is aware that certain provisions of this bill lapsed on the 31st August 1924 and that the whole bill will lapse on the 31st of December 1925. Government, after mature consideration, have come to the conclusion that the Acts should be extended by 3 years only for residential purposes and for a certain class of premises. They feel that the labouring and the lower middle classes should continue to live in controlled premises for another three years. But they see no reason to extend the Act for the better classes. In my humble opinion there is only one issue that has to be considered by the House to-day, namely, whether this Act should be extended or not; and if they come to the conclusion that this Act should be extended, I presume they will desire to appoint a select committee to consider the provisions of this bill. The select committee will then have to consider whether the bill should extend to all residential premises or to only a certain class. They will also have to consider whether the landlord is justified in asking for any increase in rent. Therefore, Mr. President, as far as I can see, the only issue which just now arises is whether the Act should be extended or not. The other provisions will naturally be considered very carefully in the select committee and the select committee's report will be before this honourable House, I trust at the next session of the Council.

I think the easiest method of procedure will be to take certain clauses, to explain them and to give the reasons that have led Government to include them in this bill. Clause 2 of the Act provides that all tenements the rents of which on the 1st January 1916 were Rs. 50 or less in Karachi or Rs. 85 or less in Bombay, its suburbs, and Poona should continue to be controlled. I am sure this honourable House would like to know the reasons which led Government to decide on their limits of Rs. 85 and Rs. 50. The figure 85 was the rent on the 1st January of 1916 and on account of the amendment of the Act in 1923, that figure to-day is Rs. 102. Therefore, in Bombay, its suburbs and Poona all tenements up to Rs. 102 will remain under control. In Karachi, all tenements up to Rs. 57½ will remain under control. Now, Sir, there are three material factors which this honourable House, or at any rate, the select committee will have to consider most carefully before they come to any conclusion.

*Vide Appendix E.

The first factor they will have to consider is whether there has been any decrease in rents within the last year or two and if so in what class of tenements and to what extent. Secondly, they will have to consider whether there have been any vacancies in the city of Bombay and in Karachi and if so in what class of tenements and to what extent; and thirdly they will have to consider the amount of residential accommodation constructed in the cities concerned, since the Act was introduced in 1918. I do not propose to weary this House with a large number of figures and statistics, but I have chosen just a few to give an idea to this honourable House why these figures of 102 and 57½ have been provided in this bill as the limit for control. Honourable members who have taken an interest in this question will realise that it is no easy matter to get absolutely accurate figures for the whole of Bombay. Figures dealing with particular selected areas in each ward and prepared from a very careful examination of individual streets are a much better test to get at the truth. My figures have been obtained from all the resources that Government have at their command; but do not come from any analysis of the figures of the whole of Bombay. It is impossible to obtain them, but they come from selected areas in every ward of the city, and a very large number of tenements have been examined to obtain these figures. Mr. President from the facts and figures obtained by Government, they find that for premises rented at Rs. 300 and above, there has been a decrease in rents and they think it is by about 50 per cent. For tenements between Rs. 100 and Rs. 300, there is about a 25 per cent. decrease, while for tenements under Rs. 100 rent to-day, they have come to the conclusion that there has been no decrease, after examination of such facts as were available. It is possible that honourable members opposite may be able to point to exceptions within their knowledge. I could also point to a certain number of exceptions to the figures that I have given, but, after all, these exceptions prove the rule, and we cannot be led away by a few exceptions. These figures that I have given you are after a close examination of certain records that were at the disposal of Government.

Then, Sir, coming to vacancies, to put it very shortly, we have found that for premises above Rs. 100 rent, the vacancies are about 12·40 per cent., while for tenements the rents of which are below Rs. 100, the vacancies are 3·03 per cent. This is generally the result of an examination of a large number of tenements.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR : Sir, may I rise to a point of order ? My submission is that, as the bill is defective, it is out of order. I should first like to point out that in the preamble to this bill it is stated :

“Whereas it is expedient further to amend the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, 1918, and the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions No. 2) Act, 1918, in manner hereinafter appearing ;”

Sir, this Act of 1918 has been amended twice, and that fact has not been included in this preamble. It was amended in 1923 and 1924. When this Act was amended in the year 1924, the preamble of the bill was as follows :

“Whereas it is expedient to extend the period of operation of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, 1918, and the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions No. 2) Act, 1918, as amended by the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Amendment Act, 1923 as regards dwelling-houses in the Municipal district and Cantonment of Karachi....”

So, the preamble clearly shows that the bill was amended in the year 1923. But the present bill which is being introduced by the Honourable the General Member has a preamble, which says :

“Whereas it is expedient further to amend the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, 1918, and the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions No. 2) Act, 1918....”

That shows that we are discussing a bill to amend an Act the provisions of which do not exist, because there have been two amendments to that Act. I will take some time to show authorities that when a bill to amend an Act is brought before the House, all the amendments which have been made in the Act should be shown in the preamble of the bill which has not been done in the present case by the Honourable the General Member. Now, in the Act of 1918, there was no schedule, there was only the question of 10 per cent. increase dealt with. In the Act of 1918 there were some other words instead of “the percentage shown in the schedule hereto”. The schedule was introduced when the Act was amended in 1923, and in the Act of 1924 that schedule was touched. There was no schedule attached to the Act of 1918 which the Honourable the General Member now wants to amend. Furthermore, in clause 2 of the bill, it is stated “In sub-section (4) of section 1 of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, 1918”. If that is so, the original Act was to be in force during the continuance “during the present war and for such period thereafter, not being less than 6 months and not exceeding two years”. If 1918 is brought up, as has been brought up in this bill, then my submission is that the bill is out of order. Furthermore, in the statement of objects and reasons it is stated that the bill deals with both the original Acts of 1918, but it is not stated that it deals with the Act as amended by the Acts of 1923 and 1924. I do not understand what the bill means. The bill deals with both the original Acts of 1918, whereby it follows that the Act of 1918 means Act No. VII and Act No. II. So, if the word ‘further’ is put before the words “to amend the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, 1918” in the preamble of the bill under discussion, then the Acts of 1923 and 1924 must also be mentioned, because in the statement of objects and reasons it is stated, as I pointed out, that the bill deals with both the original Acts of 1918.

[Mr. V. A. Dabholkar]

Sir, I have raised this point of order now, because, after the Honourable the General Member has resumed his seat, I may not be allowed to do so. I want to show the authorities which will prove that where a bill to amend an Act is brought forward for discussion before the House, all the previous amendments of the Act should be included in that bill. I will take some time to show that authority, and then, Sir, you can give your ruling.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I do not wish to prejudice the issue, if the honourable member wishes to produce any authority in support of his contention. I will give him a little time to produce his authority, and then I will consider his point of order.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: I should have thought that the honourable member would have had his authority ready.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am prepared to make some allowance.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: I will proceed, Sir, and await your decision. I was just explaining, when my honourable friend interrupted me, that the vacancies for tenements with rents above Rs. 100 are about 12·40 per cent., while the vacancies for tenements with rents below Rs. 100 are 3·03 per cent. Further, Sir, the third factor I mentioned that this House should consider is the amount of residential accommodation constructed since the passing of the Act of 1918. We find, Sir, that for one room tenements something like 376,878 square yards of accommodation has been provided between the years 1918-19 and 1923-24. (Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmad: Provided where?) In the city of Bombay. For two room tenements 160,345 square yards of accommodation has been provided, for bigger than two room tenements 418,192 square yards, while servants' accommodation provided is about 24,236 square yards.

I put all these facts before this House to enable them to come to a fair and equitable conclusion in this matter. (Mr. G. B. Pradhan: What about Salsette?) I have not got any figures about Salsette at present. Now, Sir, we find that for three room tenements the average rent in the city of Bombay—I will come to Karachi later on—in the city of Bombay the average rent for three room tenements is about 60 rupees, while the maximum rent is 100 rupees, and therefore if this bill is accepted all three room tenements, practically every three room tenement will remain under control, 66 per cent. of the population of Bombay, live in one room tenements, 14 per cent. live in two room tenements and 8 per cent. live in three room tenements, that is to say 88 per cent. of the population of this city will continue to live in controlled premises if these limits are accepted; 88 per cent. of the population of Bombay, Sir, it is a well known fact that in Bombay many wage-earners have to pay something like 20 per cent. of their earnings for residential accommodation. Let us take 25 per cent. to be on the safe side. That means that wage-earners of Rs. 400 per month will continue to live in controlled premises. The object of Government is to protect the labouring classes and the lower middle classes. As I have said before they see no reason to continue to protect the better classes and I contend, Mr. President, that this bill does give that protection to the labouring and to the lower middle classes; for it protects wage-earners up to Rs. 400 a month.

Then for Karachi we find that the maximum rent for a three room tenement is 50 rupees. I will remind this House that the limit under the bill is 57½ rupees. About 58 per cent. of the population in Karachi live in one room tenements, 23 per cent. live in two room tenements, 7 per cent. live in three room tenements; and by a pure coincidence we also get the figure of 88 per cent. of the population protected under this bill for Karachi. (Moulvi Rafiuddin Ahmad: What about Poona?) I will deal with that later on. Now, Sir, I think I have justified the inclusion in this bill of these two limits of 85 and 50. Now, Sir, there are a few more words included in this clause which require explanation and those are; "In respect of any premises used wholly or principally" which have been added. The object is to properly define residential premises. As this House is aware non-residential premises are not included in this bill and there is nothing in.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am allowing the honourable member Mr. Dabholkar to interrupt the honourable mover because it is a point of order and if it is allowed then there will be no further discussion.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: Sir, I am going to point out a paragraph to you from "Legislative Methods and Forms" by Sir Courtenay Ilbert. There it is said:

"An amending Bill which has to refer to some half dozen previous enactments on the same subject can hardly be simple in form or easy to understand. But if the task of consolidating Acts is neglected or deferred, this is the form which many amending Bills must inevitably assume."

What I find in this case is that the task of embodying all the amendments is neglected and my proof is Bombay Rent Act III of 1924. There they have put all amending bills of 1923 and so on, while there has been a gross neglect in drafting this bill as well as some matters are deferred, and this is the form which many amending bills must inevitably assume: Then it is stated here:

"And Parliament is not likely to make effective progress with consolidation unless it devises some standing machinery for the purpose, delegates the task to a Committee or some similar body, and accepts reasonable assurance from competent and responsible authorities that the work of that body is properly done."

My submission is that the work of that body is not properly done because consolidating Acts have been neglected and deferred and not put in the Acts of 1923 and 1924.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have considered the point which the honourable member Mr. Dabholkar has raised and I am thankful to him for having brought it to my notice before the meeting began. I am sure honourable members will agree with me in thinking that the authority on which the honourable member relies does not apply to this case. I will read out to the honourable House the whole paragraph in which the quotation which he read out appears :

“Complaint is often made that a modern Bill is too technical to be intelligible. For one cause of unintelligibility, the complexity of modern administration is to a great extent responsible. It is easier to understand or mend a spindle than the machinery of a cotton mill. But there is another obstacle in the way of drawing Acts in a simple form, which is removable, and which it rests with the legislature to remove.”

In the first place I should like to point out that this is not a quotation of any parliamentary procedure. It is merely the expression of views on drafting in order to provide greater facilities in the consideration of bills by the House. It is the view of an eminent jurist who desires to secure simplification in drafting legislation for the benefit of honourable members. So far as parliamentary procedure is concerned the authority quoted is not of any help. The object is merely to suggest the drafting of Acts in a better form to help the legislature. Then the quotation goes on :

This is a grievance he makes and suggests that some easier method should be found which would simplify the drafting of amendments. I cannot help remarking that this is exactly what the Government appear to have done in this case. Instead of quoting the several amendments which were made to the Act subsequent to the year 1918, they have simplified the matter by stating that the present bill represents further amendments of the Acts. The word “further” used by them instead of quoting the various amendments which have been subsequently made seems to comply with the suggestion made by the authority quoted and goes against the contention put forward by the honourable member.

There is another point to which I should like to draw attention, and that is, that, as I have repeatedly pointed out to this House, purely technical objections do not much appeal to me. The objection raised by the honourable member is merely a technical one. Honourable members are fully aware of the whole history of the Rent Act. The public have taken very good care to keep them fully informed in regard to the details of this measure, and therefore it cannot be urged that the House is unaware of all the amendments that have taken place in this measure.

The honourable member has quoted no authority to show that the mere non-insertion of all the subsequent amendments of the Act in the preamble should invalidate the motion ; nor has he shown that the word “further” is not adequate for the honourable members to understand the measure and to consider it. For all these reasons, I rule that the bill is quite in order.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I should like to mention in further support of your ruling that there is definite legal provision in your favour. It is provided by section 29 of the General Clauses Act, Bombay, that in any Bombay Act any enactment may be cited by reference to the short title or the number and the year thereof.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: Well, Sir, I was explaining the insertion of the words "wholly or principally" in clause 2 of the bill. That has been done in order to give a clearer definition of the words "residential tenements" and to obviate in future any tenant trying to convert business premises into a residential one by putting in a cot, a table or a chair.

Sir, I will now come to clause 4 of the bill. Honourable members will recollect that there was a considerable amount of feeling in this city because certain tenants took advantage of the legislation of 1918 and began to profiteer. This was recognised by this honourable House in 1923, when my predecessor moved an amending bill to prevent such profiteering. But unfortunately the amendment had not the desired effect and last year I had to move another amendment to try and give effect to the wishes of this honourable House. But in amending sub-clause 3 of clause 9 of the bill we retained the provision that if any tenant had sublet his premises before 1922 he could do so and profiteer with impunity. The attention of Government has now been drawn to the fact that profiteering still continues and advantage is taken of these words "before the 21st day of August 1922". For myself I can see no reason why a tenant who sublet his premises before 1922 should be allowed to profiteer while a tenant who sublet after 1922 is stopped from doing so. Sir, we therefore propose to delete the words "after the 21st day of August 1922" from sub-clause (3) of section 9. We also provide that a tenant should not be allowed to profiteer by letting any part of his tenement. It might be contended that the Act as it stands now will allow a tenant to profiteer provided he does not let the whole of his tenements. To make that perfectly clear we have inserted the words "or any part thereof" after the word "premises".

Then, Sir, it has been found necessary to add two more sub-clauses to section 9. The first one provides that if a tenant is in possession of a tenement, because he is an employee, and as such has come into possession, he should no longer continue in possession if he either leaves the service of his employer or is dismissed. Well, Sir, as this honourable House is aware, private individuals, companies and public bodies have constructed tenements for their employees. There is no reason why an employee should continue to live in those tenements if he chooses to leave the services of the employer who has provided him with those tenements or if he is dismissed. This new clause provides that when a tenant obtains accommodation by virtue of his employment, he shall not continue to occupy the premises after leaving his employment and will thus not deprive the new employee of residential accommodation.

The next provision is one which pertains to the Municipal Act. Under the Municipal Act, the Commissioner can give notice to a landlord to compel his tenants to vacate, if in the opinion of the Commissioner the building is unsafe and unsound and there is a danger to life and property. At present, although the Municipal Commissioner serves this notice on landlords, the tenants can delay vacating those dangerous premises at the risk of their lives and property. I do not think any honourable member desires that a tenant should continue to live in unsafe and dangerous premises at the risk of his life and property. We hope to provide by the sub-clause facilities whereby the Municipal Commissioner and the landlord can make the tenant vacate such premises.

Now, Sir, I come to the schedule where increases in rent are provided. Mr. President, it is a well known fact that wages have gone up, the cost of materials has gone up, and consequently the cost of repairs has gone up. I do not think any honourable member will contend that a landlord should not have an increase in the earning capacity of his property. The point for consideration is what that increase should be. That will be for the select committee to consider. But the main principle I do not think can be objected to by anybody in this honourable House. Therefore, Government came to the conclusion that if this Act was to be extended, the owners of properties which will remain under control, should have some increase of rent. In the original Act of 1918, the basic rent was the rent on the 1st January 1916, plus an increase of 10 per cent. In 1923 that 10 per cent. increase was substituted by an increase of 15 per cent. for premises the rents of which were from Re. 1 to Rs. 50, and by 20 per cent. for premises yielding rents from Rs. 50 to Rs. 85. This Act provides that for the first year of the extension, that is for the year 1926, for premises under Rs. 50 there should be an increase of 15 per cent. on the basic rent, that is an increase of 15 per cent. on the rent that prevailed on the 1st January 1916. In the second year, that is, in 1927 there should be an increase of 10 per cent. on the basic rent, that is, 10 per cent. on the rent that prevailed on the 1st of January 1916—an increase not on the total but on the basic rent. And in the third year there should also be an increase of 10 per cent. on the basic rent. For tenements between Rs. 50 and Rs. 85 the bill provides that there should be an increase of 20 per cent. in the first year on the basic rent, a 10 per cent. increase in the second year, and a third increase of 10 per cent. in the third year, all increases to be calculated on the basic rent, that is, rent that prevailed on the 1st January 1916. The simplest way of explaining the effect of these increases would be to give a specific instance of each. Suppose we have a case of a tenement with a rental of Rs. 50. If the rental was Rs. 50 on the 1st January 1916, it rose to Rs. 57½ in 1923 on account of the amendment of the Act in that year. It will rise to Rs. 65 on the 1st January 1926; it will rise to Rs. 70 on the 1st January 1927; it will rise to Rs. 75 on 1st January 1928. Now, take the case of a tenement with a rental of Rs. 85. If the rental was Rs. 85 in January 1916, it rose to Rs. 102 in 1923, and will rise to Rs. 119 in 1926, to Rs. 127½ in 1927, and to Rs. 136 in 1928.

Personally, I do not consider that these increases are in any way liberal. I consider the landlord deserves these increases if the tenements are to be under control for the next three years. It will be a question for the select committee to consider whether these are too high or too low, and the honourable House will have the benefit of the select committee's advice at the next session.

There is only one more point that I will explain with regard to the second Act. All these amendments will be embodied in both Acts, but there is one extra amendment in the second Act—the small premises Act. It has been found that in certain one-room tenements the tenants lock their doors, leave the country, pay no rent, and still remain in possession. I do not think any honourable member opposite will contend that a tenant should be allowed to do that any longer. He locks his door, he leaves the city and he pays no rent, and the landlord's remedy is really one which is a hardship to him. This bill proposes that if the tenant has locked the tenement and has paid no rent then after three months the Rent Controller should be authorised to break open the tenement—it will practically be always a one-room tenement—and give possession to the landlord. That is the only extra provision in Act VII of 1918. Now, Sir, I have nothing further to add to what I have said. I feel confident that all impartial critics of this bill will come to the conclusion that this measure is a fair and equitable one. I am not attaching any weight to the opinions of honourable members in this House or people outside this House who look at this question either entirely from the landlord's or entirely from the tenant's point of view. They are justified in their own opinion, and I have no complaint against one side or the other. But I appeal to this honourable House to consider this measure impartially, neither from the point of view of the tenants nor of the landlords, but from the point of view of those who are the most deserving of protection, I mean the labouring classes and the lower middle classes.

Question proposed that the bill be read a first time.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South): Sir.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I notice that the honourable member has given notice of amendments of principle on the first reading of this bill. I have considered these amendments and they appear to me to be beyond the scope of the measure which is now under the consideration of the House. I should like to know what the honourable member or any other honourable member has got to say in regard to this point which has been brought to my notice and which is governed by Standing Order 8 of Chapter V, which says that an amendment must be relevant to and within the scope of the motion to which it is proposed. The object of the bill is to extend further protection to residential buildings and the honourable member wishes to extend the scope by applying it to non-residential buildings. I should like any honourable member to point out how that can be in order, in view of the Standing Order to which I have drawn attention.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN: My submission, Sir, is that the principle of this bill is to extend protection to the tenements and I would point out that the original Act as framed in 1918 and subsequently amended remained in force up to August 1924 and the principle of the Act was protection of the tenements, whether residential or non-residential. But the question is one of details as regards the arrangement of the sections, whether the protection should extend to particular class of premises and to what extent it should extend. But my submission,

[Mr. K. F. Nariman]

Sir, is that the principle is the protection to the tenements and that principle has been enunciated and maintained all through up till August 1924, when the period of that protection expired. It was part of the original Act to give protection to non-residential premises up to the period of August 1924, after which that protection expired under that legislation. This amendment only seeks to revive the protection which was in the original Act, and I may further state, Sir, that I had received notice or intimation from the Government that the amendment I proposed required the sanction of the Governor General, and I immediately applied to the Governor General for the said sanction. I am glad to state, Sir, that for once the department responsible was very quick, and within a period of about eight days sanction has been given to me to move this amendment. I will just read the letters, Sir :

"With reference to your notice to the Secretary to the Legislative Council of the Governor of Bombay on the above subject, I am directed by the Governor in Council to inform you that the amendments require the previous sanction of the Governor General as the Bill relates to the central subject 'Civil Law—including laws regarding property'."

This was a letter from the Bombay Government. On the very same day I applied to the Government of India for the necessary sanction, and got the following reply :

"With reference to your letter dated 1st March 1925 to the Secretary to the Government of India, Legislative Department, I am directed by the Governor General in Council to convey to you the Governor General's sanction to move the amendments which you propose to the clauses of the Bombay Rent Act."

Now, Sir, my submission is that if this amendment were beyond the scope of the bill, beyond the scope of the principle of the bill, the Government of India before granting the sanction would have considered that point and refused the sanction on that ground. I submit, Sir, that the Governor General in Council has granted me the sanction after consideration of the bill and has not raised this point. I do not know by whom this point has been raised that it is not within the scope of the bill. If it had been considered by the Government of India that this was not within the scope of the bill, they would have refused sanction. I have got the sanction from the highest authority, which goes to show that the highest legal authority has considered the point and after considering that this is within the scope of the bill has granted me sanction. I submit that if this amendment is considered to be out of order, and if the object of the bill is protection to tenements, then this principle would not apply to a considerable number of tenements in the city. My submission is that it is within the scope of the bill and all provisions of the Standing Orders have been complied with. The sanction of the Government of India has been obtained. The very fact that it has been included in the agenda which has been circulated to members goes to show that the authorities responsible for including it in the agenda have considered the question and put it for consideration by this House. Considering all this, I hope this will not be ruled out of order on any technical ground.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN (Thana and Bombay Suburban Districts):
Sir, what I find is that my honourable friend's amendments are amendments to certain clauses of the bill. With regard to these amendments relating to clauses 2 and 6, it has been stated that it can be moved at the second reading. The amendments are :

[Mr. G. B. Pradhan]

"In Section 2 of the said Bill delete the words 'Used wholly or principally as a dwelling house', after the words 'any premises'."

"In Section 6 of the said Bill delete the words 'Used wholly or principally as a dwelling house', after the words 'any premises'."

In Standing Order IX, Chapter VIII on page 88 of Volume II it is stated :

"When a motion has been agreed to by the Council that a Bill be read a second time, the President shall submit the Bill to the Council clause by clause. The President shall call the number of each clause separately, and, when the amendments relating to it have been dealt with, shall put the question 'that this clause or (as the case may be) this clause as amended, stand part of the Bill'."

So, the honourable member wishes to amend two clauses of the bill which has now been put forward. This is not an amendment of principle. The original Act, of course, is there, and when I come to discuss the general Act, I will put forward my objections. Here, my honourable friend wishes to delete certain words from certain clauses in order to extend this Act. That is not amending the principle of the Act. This is only amending certain clauses of the bill. So, I submit, this amendment, at any rate at this stage, is not in order.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL: Sir, I only wish to refer to the contention of my honourable friend (Mr. Nariman) that, because he has received the sanction of the Government of India, his amendments are within the scope of the bill. The sanction of the Government of India is entirely a different question. The Government of India only consider whether the Indian legislature is affected or not: they do not go into the details as to whether any particular amendment is within the scope or outside the scope of a bill. That has to be decided by the Honourable the President. While the honourable member has got over the obstacle with regard to the sanction of the Government of India, he has not got over another obstacle, namely, whether his amendments are either within or outside the scope of the bill.

As regards the argument of the honourable member Mr. G. B. Pradhan whether the amendments relate to principle or detail, this too is entirely distinct from the question whether the amendments are within the scope of the bill or not.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member relied on various points in contending that his amendments are in order. The first point that the honourable member makes is that the bill is for the purpose of protecting the tenements. That would be so if the protection to one part of such tenements which are separately dealt with in the amending Acts had not ceased to operate. The honourable member claims that all the tenements are uniform in the matter of protection. That is not borne out by facts. The Acts passed by this legislature clearly make a distinction between two different classes of tenements and the last Act which was amended in 1923, clearly provided that, while the protection to one class of these tenements was to be extended up to the 31st August 1924, the protection to the other class of tenements was to extend up to 31st December 1925. That clearly shows the distinction that was made by the legislature between two distinct classes of tenements. The operation of the protection to non-residential premises ended in August 1924. In July 1924, one honourable member brought forward a bill for extending protection only to that part which referred to non-residential tenements. This further proves the distinction made. Honourable members will remember that I intimated that it was my intention that as time available was so short, I would suspend the Standing Orders and allow the honourable member to move for the first reading, if leave was granted to him to introduce the bill. The House refused to grant him leave and the bill dropped. As a result of this deliberate decision of the House protection to non-residential premises ceased to operate and this part of the tenements passed out of the provisions of the Rent Acts. The only part that remained operative forms the subject matter of the present bill, which proposes to extend the period of protection from 31st December 1925 to 31st December 1928. That is the bill before the House and that is the only subject which the House can now discuss.

There is one further point which the honourable member made and that has been conclusively answered by the honourable member the Remembrancer of Legal Affairs. The honourable member said that he received intimation that the previous sanction of the Governor General would be necessary if he wanted to move his amendment, that he forthwith applied for such sanction, and obtained it within a week. I should like him to realise that the sanction that the Governor General gives is in regard to the subject matter as being fit and appropriate for legislation in the provincial Legislative Council. It cannot be expected that the Governor General should go into the merits as to whether a particular amendment or a particular piece of legislation was in order or otherwise, having regard to the Standing Orders and the Rules applying to each provincial legislature. The question for decision, under our Standing Orders, is as to whether the present amendment is within the scope of, and relevant to, the measure which is now before the House. I am clearly of opinion that, for reasons which I have given, the amendments are outside the scope of the bill, and are not relevant to the measure that is before the House. In order however to remove all possibility of doubt on a question on which there is so much public feeling, I should like to draw attention to the opinion of the Advocate General on the subject, so that no honourable member may feel that the ruling I have given has not been fully considered. The opinion of the Advocate General is as follows :—

“ I am of opinion that the amendment proposed by Mr. Nariman is not within the scope of the Bill No. I of 1925. The Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Acts of 1918 as they now stand deal with dwelling houses only. The object of Bill No. I of 1925 is to extend the protection of the Acts for three years in the case of certain residential apartments. The proposed amendment is not relevant to the subject matter of the bill and is outside its scope.”

[The Honourable the President]

Honourable members will realise that I have given the most careful consideration to all the aspects of this question, and I must, in the circumstances, rule this amendment out of order.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA : May I make some observations, Sir, which have not been considered by your ruling ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I think I have considered the question in all its aspects. I invited honourable members to give expression to their views, when I stated the point definitely and in clear terms. I do not wish to encourage the practice of honourable members speaking after the Chair has actually given its ruling.

Further consideration of the motion for the first reading of the Bill further to amend the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, 1918, and the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions No. 2) Act, 1918, will now be resumed.

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN (Thana and Bombay Suburban Districts) : Mr. President, I rise to make a few observations as regards the principle of this bill, and also as regards certain clauses in the bill which have been put forward. In the first place, the preamble of the original Act is :

"Whereas it is expedient to restrict, in connection with the present war, the increase of rent ;"

So the original Act was passed to restrict the increase of rent in connection with the present war. We know that this Act is an invasion upon property rights. It violates the principles of political economy. But when a great danger like the late War exists, and it affects the whole society, then emergency measures have to be adopted, and the original Act was passed, as the preamble clearly shows, in connection with the War. It says "in connection with the present War". Now, I ask, where is that "present War" ? That "present" has merged into the, "past" ; there is no war. At the time when this Act was passed, it was stated that the Act of 1918 was to be in force during the continuance of the War and for such period thereafter, not being less than six months and not exceeding two years, as the Governor in Council may by notification direct. So the Act was automatically to cease, to go out of existence two years after the close of the War. It was extended once ; it was extended again ; it was amended by another Act. And now, this is the third or fourth time that the Act is sought to be extended. The preamble is not going to be amended, it is going to remain the same. It is the principal Act of 1918 that is going to be amended in the matter of two or three sections relating to the increase of rent and increase of the period of duration.

When the Honourable the General Member, in the course of his speech, gave certain figures, he had before him merely the figures relating to the island of Bombay. I put a pertinent question to him, as this Act is going to be applied to the whole of Salsette island also, whether he had got any figures as regards the vacancies and as regards the rents in Salsette. He admitted that he had not collected any. He said that he was bringing forward the bill for the purpose of protecting the poorer classes and also the middle classes, but not the middle classes of the upper order. If that is so, he ought to have told the House as to what are the rents which are prevalent in the island of Salsette for such classes. He has not cared to consider that. Now, if we compare the rent which is prevailing in the island of Bombay with that which is prevailing in the island of Salsette, we find that if Rs. 100 is the figure prevalent in Bombay, it certainly is not more than 33 in the mofussil.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : In the mofussil ?

Mr. G. B. PRADHAN : Yes, that is my mofussil, the island of Salsette all round. Baudra and Andheri apart, in all other places, you cannot take the same standard which you take in Bombay for comparing rents. You have made a distinction between Bombay and Karachi, but you have not cared to make a distinction between Bombay and Salsette island. You have not cared to ascertain how many vacancies there are in those places, and how many new buildings have come into existence.

The real grievance, Sir, is as regards Act VII of 1918. That Act shows a sort of distrust in the civil courts. They say that there shall be a rent controller. Even if there is a new building, which has been recently built at a heavy cost, then the rent of those small premises will be fixed not by the civil court, as under the principal Act, but by the rent controller. If the person concerned is dissatisfied with the award of the controller of rents, then what is the remedy of that man ? There is a list prepared of persons who are to be consulted, and by rotation as far as possible, two members are picked out who sit with the controller, and the case is settled according to the decision of the majority. That means that if one of those two members gives his opinion according to the opinion of the controller, then there is an end of the whole matter. If all the three have got different opinions, then the opinion of the controller prevails. So, I say, why allow that Act to remain on the statute book at all ?

If you really have the interest of the labouring classes at heart, you are by this Act discouraging people from building small premises in the mofussil. Supposing I invest to-morrow Rs. 50,000 in building small premises, as matters stand at present, it is not I as the owner of the premises that has got the right of fixing the rent, but some person from the revenue office, some officer who is called the rent controller. That gentleman does not take into consideration what I have spent, and what is the economic return which I ought to get. He fixes the rent arbitrarily and says "Rs. 3, Rs. 4, or Rs. 5 is all that you will get for the room". He does not take into consideration what I ordinarily ought to get, what I have spent, what will be the recurring charges, what will be the charges for keeping the building in ordinary repair, and things of that sort. And then, his decision is final ; it is not even open to appeal in a civil court. So, I ask, what is the propriety of allowing that second Act to remain upon the statute book ? That second Act is absolutely useless. Not only is it absolutely useless, but it has actually barred people from building small tenements. When the object of the bill is that poor people ought to be protected and that there should come into existence small premises in the island of Bombay as well as the island of Salsette, here, by this second Act, people are actually barred from building, because it is not for them to fix the rents even for new premises as in the first Act. In the first Act, at any rate, if the premises are new, the landlord can make his own terms.

Then according to the second Act if the premises are small premises the rent of which is Rs. 20 or less then it is the controller who has to fix the rent without any consideration whatever whether the premises are old or new. Any tenant goes to the controller and if the tenant makes a complaint the controller has to fix the rent, and against that order there is only one appeal allowed and that is to the controller and to the persons of his own choice, because the members of the committee are selected by the controller. Then when Government were not satisfied with these conditions alone they put down certain penal clauses that even if a tenant is willing to pay to the landlord something more than the rent fixed by the controller, the Government come upon the landlord and say you are liable to be prosecuted and fined with a fine of Rs. 1,000 for the first offence. In section 7 (1), it is stated :

"Whoever knowingly receives whether directly or indirectly on account of the rent of any small premises of which the standard rent has been fixed any sum in excess of such rent shall on conviction by a magistrate be punishable, in the case of a first offence, with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or, in the case of a second or subsequent offence in regard to the same or any other small premises of which the standard rent has been fixed, with fine which may extend to two thousand rupees."

Then section 8 says :

"Whoever, without the previous written consent of the controller or save for the purposes of effecting repairs or complying with any municipal requisition wilfully disturbs any easement annexed to any small premises the standard rent of which has been fixed or removes, destroys or renders unserviceable anything provided for permanent use therewith or discontinues any supply or service comprised in such rent shall be punishable in the case of a first offence, with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or, in the case of a second or subsequent offence in regard to the same or any other small premises of which the standard rent has been fixed, with fine which may extend to two thousand rupees."

Then section 9 provides that the rent which is paid in excess is also liable to be recovered. So the contract act is to be obliterated, the law of demand and supply is to be wiped out and people are not to spend and not to build even though that is a step which is advantageous in the interests of the community.

So my first submission to the Honourable the General Member is that the second Act, namely, Act VII of 1918, ought to go. It has no purpose to remain on the statute book. Even as regards the first Act what I have got to say is that you cannot apply the considerations which apply to Bombay to the mofussil. You ought to make inquiries as to what are the vacancies, what is the highest rent paid by people whom you want to protect; you give us the figures showing 88 per cent. of the people are living in rooms which pay one hundred rupees as maximum rent. But if that is the standard by which you are judging then you are mistaken because you ought to apply a different standard to Salsette Island.

[Mr. G. B. Pradhan]

Then what I find is that the honourable member when he drafted this bill also forgot that there are municipalities in Salsette Island which are governed by the District Municipal Act, and that they have got such a power vested in them as laid down under section 119 of the Act. They do issue notices as regards ruinous buildings. So though he says the notice issued by the Municipal Commissioner, Bombay, is binding, what about the notice by the municipalities? So that is the second mistake.

Then the next point is that he has not also taken into consideration the way in which it hampers the municipalities. What I have noticed is that this Rent Act in the mofussil, that is in places like Thana, has been applied with the same strictness with which it is applied in the Bombay Island and the result is that it is restricting the expanding capacity of the municipalities which cannot get increase of revenues. We cannot expand our resources because the Rent Act is applied. The landlords say we are taking the same rent and so how can we pay increased taxes. As the total rental is based upon the house-tax assessed, this Rent Act hampers the mofussil municipalities in the expansion of their revenues and that is a factor which has to be taken into consideration.

Now, my submission, Mr. President, is that, as a matter of fact, I am against this measure because there are several necessities of life for which you have not introduced any measure. You are introducing this measure because you think that poor people and people of limited means should have a roof over their heads and that they should not be turned out by landlords. There was a similar control as regards corn and other things in war times. There are several necessities of life which every man requires. If it is proposed that superfluous wealth of the wealthy people of Bombay should be distributed amongst their poor fellow citizens it would be styled as a robbery or dacoity with a vengeance. This Act is a sort of extortion no doubt but then it is justified on the ground that the landlords are blood-thirsty people and that they and other rich people are spending lakhs of rupees on luxury, while so many poor people are going with one meal and merely rags to cover their nudity. So these poor people are to be protected. If that is so, let there be a protection to business premises also. It is a hardship for one class of people for the protection of the other. But then if you are going to continue this measure at all try this experiment only for one year more. Why do you want it for three years? After trying it for one year more if you think that there is still a necessity for it then extend the period by a couple of years more. You already see that the measure was introduced as a war measure. It was promised that it would disappear two years after the close of the war. The war is now a thing of the past. Of course there may be some other things somewhere else, such as the dispute on the Rhine-land, etc., but here at any rate the war is a past thing. The measure had already been extended for three years. Now after that period of three years what we notice is that things are adjusting themselves. The law of supply and demand is coming into operation. If this is so then try the measure for one year, and if there is a necessity then try it for another year more, but there is no case made out why this should be brought into operation for a period of three years. If this measure is to continue, why apply it to residential premises only and why not to business premises, and if this is to be on the statute book I say that it ought to apply to business premises also because the higher the rent the merchant pays the higher he charges for the commodity he sells. If that is so I would agree with my honourable friend Mr. Nariman and would say then if you are protecting residential quarters protect business people also. There is no reason why you should only protect people so far as their residential premises are concerned and not protect them as regards their business premises. So my request to the Honourable the General Member is that in the first place this measure is an encroachment upon the property rights. It is a sort of a socialistic measure and that it is a sort of extortion, but if this measure is deemed to be a necessity, then this measure ought to apply not only to residential premises but also to business premises, because there is no sense in removing it from the business premises because they now pay higher rent and that that rent is not paid by the merchant from his own pocket but that it is charged on the consumers.

Then, this measure ought not to be extended at once by three years. Then, surely the same standard that would apply to the Bombay Island cannot apply to the Salsette Island and yet I find that my honourable friend before putting forward this measure has not collected the statistics for the Salsette Island. Then, as regards Act VII of 1918, I say that it does not protect the poor, but on the contrary it actually comes in the way of new premises coming into existence. Lastly, I think that the privileges extended to the Municipal Commissioner as regards unsafe and dangerous buildings should be extended also to the mofussil municipalities. With these few remarks I resume my seat.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN (Ahmedabad District): Sir, I differ from the honourable member for Thana. I hold that it is absolutely necessary that Government should come forward to protect the interests of the poor tenants. I am only sorry they have not gone far enough. The honourable member who preceded me stated that the Act should be extended only for one year. I would say that it should be extended for five years, because the conditions that exist are not likely to change in such a short space of time as three years. There is one important fact that has to be remembered as regards the law of demand and supply that is brought forward. That is, in some particular cases, whatever the increase in price, still the article will be sold. Take the case of wheat. People will buy it whatever the increase in its price. There was an argument brought forward by the Honourable the Finance Member in the Legislative Assembly, that though the third class fares were increased more passengers travelled, while the result of increasing the first and second class fares was a decrease in the number of first and second class passengers, and therefore there should be a decrease in first and second class fares and not in third class fares. But he forgot one fact, and that is that there was no alternative for the third class passengers. They had to travel even when the fares were increased. Similarly here also, just consider the case of tenants who are paying Rs. 15 or Rs. 16. Supposing their rent is increased to Rs. 25 or Rs. 30 there will be one of the two alternatives before them; either they should pay the enhanced rent and starve or they must leave Bombay. Take the instance of a man who gets Rs. 50 and pays a rent of Rs. 15. If the rent of Rs. 15 is suddenly raised to Rs. 25, what will be the result? The man will have either to leave Bombay and go to his native place or, if he decides to reside in Bombay, lead a miserable life. There is a limit beyond which small rents cannot be increased. I am very sorry that the percentages of increase that have been granted under the new schedule are very abnormal, and I think that when the bill goes to the select committee, the select committee should lower this percentage. I shall give the illustration of a man who has to pay Rs. 15. He will have to pay Rs. 7-8-0 automatically. In fact the increase given is on the side of landlords rather than on the side of the poor tenants. It would be a revolutionary increase. So many people will be hard pressed and will not be able to spend enough on the absolute necessity of life, namely, food, and there will be bad nourishment. My honourable friend Mr. Nariman had intended to extend this Act to non-residential premises also, but unfortunately he could not do so on account of your ruling....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member does not realise that he did not want to extend protection but to re-impose it. It is not an extension that the honourable member wanted; he wanted to re-enact a law which did not exist. The honourable member surely realises the difference between extension and re-imposition.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN: Six months after, it is possible for that point to be brought up again.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Bring a separate bill.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN: It will be brought forward in course of time.

My honourable friend from Thana said that if the bill is to be extended it must be extended for non-residential as well as residential buildings. I hope this defect in the bill will be removed in due course of time. I think that protection to tenants of non-residential buildings is also essential. If honourable members will look at the rents paid by the municipality for their schools, they will find that the rents paid are exorbitant. On account of the disappearance of the Act regarding business premises, the landlords have demanded increases of 100, 200 or 250 per cent. in rents. I have got a list here to show this. Just now the greed of the landlords is so much that it would be impossible for the people to live in Bombay unless some sort of protection is given to them by legislation and I am very glad that Government have come forward with this legislation. I hope that it will be possible in the select committee to make the provisions less rigorous and decrease the percentages of increase shown in the schedule so as to give proper protection to the poor tenants. I am in favour of giving protection even to buildings yielding rent as high as Rs. 100 or Rs. 125. But all these details can be thought over when the bill is sent to the select committee. I most heartily approve of the principle of the bill and I hope this House will pass its first reading.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): Sir, on behalf of the Swaraj party I rise to support the first reading of this bill. It is very rarely that the Swaraj party gets the chance of supporting a Government measure, and we have to congratulate ourselves that on this occasion we can support the amending bill wholeheartedly. This is no time for me to pronounce an opinion as regards the merits of the several sections. The Government are merely asking that the bill should go before the select committee. Whether the line ought to be drawn at Rs. 85 as my honourable friend Mr. Cowasji has done, or at a higher level, is a matter which I am sure the select committee will go into carefully, and when we have the bill once more before us in the July session we shall have the benefit of the opinion of the select committee. But the difficulty at present is with reference to some of the objections that have been pointed out (one of which at least is extremely important) by the honourable member from Thana. I do not agree with him that this Act is purely a measure of spoliation. I suppose we are proceeding on the principle of the greatest good of the greatest number, and as long as this principle is kept in view, many theories and rules of economics have got to go by the board. But there is one point which he made, and I hope my honourable friend opposite (the Honourable the General Member) realises that, and that is that the sections relating to powers given to the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay as regards the vacating of premises unsafe for human habitation will have to be extended to district municipalities also. I have no doubt my honourable friend opposite realises that. With these words, Sir, I have great pleasure in supporting the bill.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Sir, I rise to support the first reading of the bill. No doubt the hardships of the tenants are great. But I have no doubt that this House also realises that the hardships of the poor landlords are not very small. Other professions like law and medicine are not controlled, and I do not see any reason why landlords should be controlled, though since the removal of the restriction on business premises there have been instances where rents have been increased by 100 to 500 per cent. In order to put a stop to this, I think Government have intervened at the proper time.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, I do not suppose any one here is going to oppose the first reading of this bill. But the Honourable the General Member had stated that he was going to produce a bill that would satisfy everybody. He conveyed the impression, so far as I am concerned, that he had carefully considered the provisions of his projected bill, had discussed the matter with landlords as well as tenants and had arrived at some conclusions that would be acceptable to all concerned. So far as I can see, he has done nothing of this kind. He has apparently drawn upon his self-confidence and hoped to please everybody. He forgot what the nurse taught him in the nursery that the man who tries to please everybody pleases none.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : I say I want to do what is fair and just.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA : My honourable friend draws upon his vanity now. What is fair and just, we shall decide presently. But my contention is that he should not have ventured to make that statement without having previously consulted landlords and tenants and not relied on his over-confidence that he would be able to please everybody. He has told us plainly that he wants to look at this matter neither from the point of view of the landlord nor from the point of view of the tenant. Neither the landlord, nor the tenant ! Now, I should like to know who is this fellow who is neither a landlord nor a tenant ? My own research leads me to conclude that the man who is neither a landlord nor a tenant is the money-lender. Sir, so far as the money-lender is concerned, he does not care two brass farthings for the landlord or the tenant. All he cares for is the margin of security for the money that he lends. If the rent goes up, he increases the margin proportionately. Therefore, it is this anxious money-lender who is really intervening as a third party. Now, I am not one of those who always look down upon the money-lenders and denounce them. They perform a useful function in the society and some of them are really benefactors of society. My honourable friend Mr. Cowasji is associated with some of these benefactors. We all know that his father is one of the biggest money-lenders in Bombay. (Laughter.) But my grievance is that my honourable friend professes in words to look at it from the point of view of the poor and those who are suffering, but in fact he does not. If he wanted us to look at it from the point of view of the poor, the first thing he should have done was to include the non-residential premises in his bill, because the shop-keepers charge higher prices for the grain and other material they sell to pay the increased rent and for this reason the extra rent really comes eventually out of the pockets of the consumers, the poor people. The largest number of the consumers are really poor, for whom he feels in words, but in deeds the feeling is nowhere.

There is another principle that is involved in the bill ; whereby he would exclude buildings which are partially residential and partially non-residential. Premises which are exclusively non-residential, go out ; but there is another point, namely, he is going to apply the provisions to those premises which are partly residential and partly non-residential. So that, in a sense non-residential buildings are under the scope of the bill. He wants to exclude even those buildings which are partly non-residential, not exclusively non-residential, from the protection of this bill. That is his whole object in the changes he has proposed. Non-residential buildings can easily be converted into partly residential and partly non-residential by having residential rooms in those buildings, and that is a point which I want to press upon your attention. I hope that point will be taken into consideration in the select committee, and this aspect of the question will have to be looked into with a view to consider whether they will give us an opportunity to amend the bill so as to include under the protection even wholly non-residential premises. That is a point which I should like to press on the select committee.

As regards the several increases in rent that are proposed in this bill, I would rather not have this protection. Who ever dreams that the landlord would increase rents by 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. every year as the Honourable the General Member proposes to do by this bill? I think it is only the grasping landlord that would do so and he deserves to be burnt in effigy. It is not a mere matter of principle, it is a matter of detail. I hope the select committee will take all this into consideration and will bring in a bill which will please at least the tenants, because, so far as the landlords are concerned, they can protect themselves.

Then, there is usual talk of poor landlords. I think my honourable friend Mr. Surve (from Bombay) has got some statistics about these landlords. I suppose he did not know that these so-called poor landlords are both owners of the premises and tenants themselves. They live in these premises and a great majority of these do not give the premises for rent. We also hear of vacant houses. You will find that many of the houses which are called empty houses are really only nominally houses. They are huts and according to the census it is only in rare cases that houses of bricks remain unoccupied, except the new ones. I do not deny that among the new ones there are houses which are not occupied. But they are vacant because the rent is high. The high rent makes them unavailable. High rents cause vacancies. High rents mean overcrowding and overcrowding means disease and death. If my honourable friend were really anxious to protect the poor people from disease and death, he would have brought in a bill on the lines of the original bill of 1918. On the grounds I have stated, I think that any further extension in the increase of rents is very objectionable and should not be allowed.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: Mr. President, I rise to oppose the bill. I agree partially with my honourable friend from Thana (Mr. G. B. Pradhan) and totally differ from the honourable member who preceded me. Sir, the first question I should like to put to the Honourable the General Member is on what grounds he fixed that the limit should be at Rs. 85; he has kept no statistics before this House to show how he has come to control or to give protection to the rent payers to the extent of Rs. 100 and why this protection is necessary for them. In the whole of his speech which I tried to closely follow, the Honourable the General Member has not laid down on what grounds he has been bringing this bill to give protection to the rent payers paying Rs. 100 a rent. Sir, this Council has not forgotten that when budget grants were being discussed on the question of housing at Worli, the Honourable the General Member said that from one point alone the administration of the estates was becoming a difficult task and that Government had to curtail their scheme. If the administration of the estates was becoming a difficult task to Government, with the General Member at its head, and so many other high officers in the department, then why is he making the administration of the property of the individual landlords more difficult by having some restrictions on their liberty? Sir, furthermore, when the question of allowances to Indian officers working on the Sukkur Barrage was being discussed, he had given a piece of advice to this House that the honourable members should put themselves in the position of the Indian officers and consider whether they deserved extra allowances on account of the two establishments they had to keep as far as their families were concerned. Sir, this advice of my honourable friend is quite admirable. But may I know from him whether in framing this bill he has put himself in the position of a landlord, that he is now coming forward with the bill without knowing the difficulties of the landlord? From that, I can conclude that words are cheap and deeds only counted. Mr. President, this Council is aware why the Development Directorate was opened. The Development Directorate was opened for removing the congestion in the city. I do not wish that the department should be closed, but now the time will come to have some of the activities of the Development Department curtailed. The Honourable the General Member means to say by his argument that no protection is required over a rental of Rs. 100 as there is more supply than demand. He has suggested that whatever activities they are now carrying on for the reclamation of the Back Bay are for people who can afford to pay more than Rs. 100 who do not require protection; and so the activities of reclaiming that land should either be stopped or curtailed and that whatever reclamation they have taken up on hand should be completed and the rest of the money should be diverted to the construction of more tenements. The other day, while discussing the budget grants, thanks to the Director of Development, he supplied me with certain figures. The number of rooms completed or nearing completion is 16,880. I take it on a rough calculation at the rate of Rs. 1,500 per room for construction, the whole outlay on the 16,000 tenements is Rs. 2,53,20,000. The interest at the rate of 6 per cent. on this outlay will be Rs. 15,19,200. I understand that out of these 16,000 tenements 6,000 are occupied and 720 tenements which are nearing completion have not yet been handed over. So, nearly more than half of these tenements are vacant and we are losing something like Rs. 1,68,000 taking the rent of a room to be Rs. 13. The Honourable the General Member throws the whole blame on the Bombay corporation for these tenements lying vacant, because the census supplied by it was wrong.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangir : I never said so.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR : I have got the official speech in my hand.

Then the Honourable General Member said that because population was much less than the figure supplied by the Corporation, 50,000 tenements were not necessary and therefore they had stopped.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : That is the wrong end of the stick.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR : I shall show that I am not at the wrong end of the stick. The fact is that the Honourable the General Member has stated that there was no necessity of building any more tenements. Is it right? I should like to read to the House what the Honourable the General Member said in 1923 when the single room tenements of the Development Department were not occupied.

"There are yet others who think this is all a mistake and say that there is no demand and that we must not further proceed with the housing programme at all. But as honourable members will remember single tenement housing scheme was introduced by Government at the insistent request of the public of Bombay, of the labouring classes of Bombay and above all of the Bombay Municipal corporation of which the honourable member opposite (Dr. K. E. Dadachanji) is a prominent member who now thinks that the housing programme is all a mistake...."

The Honourable Sir Chimanlal proceeds to say :

"The chawls have only been recently constructed and they will fill in in course of time and we have not yet gathered sufficient experience to come to a conclusion of the character now suggested by the honourable member. Further in this connexion it must be remembered when it is said that these chawls are not filling in and people are not going in there, what is forgotten, namely...."

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : Who said that?

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR : The Honourable Member's predecessor. I hope the Honourable the General Member will closely follow these words :

"The real reason why these chawls are not filling in rapidly is the existence of the Rent Act."

Further on he says :

"As long as the Rent Act is in force and the labouring classes are able to stick to their old habitations insanitary though they may be and overcrowded though they may be and for which they pay four or three rupees rent it is very difficult to invite them with any prospect of success to come into the Development Department's chawls and to pay Rs. 10, although we give them much more sanitary buildings."

Here the Honourable the General Member says in the year 1923 that unless the Rent Act is removed these chawls will not be occupied. Still the present Honourable the General Member wants the extension of the Rent Act till 1928.

At one time it was declared that the Bombay city was of dirt and death and that in order to provide sanitary buildings to the labouring classes and remove the congestion the Development Department was opened. If that is a fact I do not understand how by extending the Rent Act they are going to relieve the congestion and get the labouring classes removed to sanitary buildings. Furthermore, the Honourable the General Member stated that on account of the want of quick means of communication the Development chawls at Worli could not be filled in. Here I do not agree with the Honourable the General Member. Even before the operation of the Development Department began, there were so many people living in Worli in insanitary buildings. I wish to recall to the mind of the Honourable the General Member the days of plague from 1896 to 1910. At that time many people on account of fear of death migrated to Salsette and other places, in spite of the fact that there were then no fast means of transit. It was a simple question of the circumstances under which people were placed. So also, if the protection of the Rent Act is not given and if landlords increase the rents, people will be compelled to go and occupy sanitary buildings built by the Development Department.

What I find in this bill is that Government are giving all sorts of facilities to public bodies like the Improvement Trust by excluding them from the operation of this Act, while landlords and private individuals have been brought under its clutches. Sir, I may be permitted to read from the land manager's report to show how Government are supporting public bodies who are the biggest of the landlords.

The land manager says :

"On account of the existence of the Rent Act the position of the tenants is such that they can baffle their landlords notwithstanding the latter's vigilance and precautionary measures. They even defy the landlords and subject them to innumerable and insurmountable difficulties in the way of collection of their dues. Usually, no tenant pays his dues in advance as provided for in the conditions of Board's tenancies, and no action can be taken in the Court to enforce this proviso, as the tenant cannot be dragged there until he falls into arrears of at least two months' rents. The tenants knowing this and our helpless position fully well, have made it a point never to pay rent till they are full 3 months in arrears, and that too only for one month, invariably being in arrears for two months. Issue of Distress Warrants on the goods of the tenants is out of question under the existing rules of the Small Causes Court, which prohibit attachment of apparels, utensils, bedding and all the necessaries of life, and these are mainly the possessions of our tenants. The service of notices to vacate means immediate and absolute cessation of payments of any rents. By the time they vacate, which is never the case except abscondance, without filing ejectment suits, there is very heavy accumulation of arrears to be ultimately written off. The process of filing suits, and getting through the ordeals of the Court and of obtaining consequent decree for vacation, take up months, and all this time, the Board's arrears of rent swell up like anything. On filing suits for recovery of Board's dues, the decision of the Courts is invariably payment by small instalments, which are even less than a month's dues, and which are never paid by the tenants. On failure to pay the instalments, a fresh decree has to be obtained against him, but by the time this decree becomes mature, the tenant becomes scarce by leaving the Board's premises and the Board's dues unpaid at the same time. All this increases the Court costs without any advantageous result to the Board. It is generally not possible for this office rent collectors to trace out these absconded tenants and if they attempt to do so they have to leave their current work aside and generally fail in tracing out the defaulters."

I am glad to see here to-day one of the trustees of the Bombay Improvement Trust (Mr. Brander). At that time, Mr. Brander, the Collector of Bombay, suggested that in view of the land manager's report that there were large arrears of rent on account of the operation of the Rent Act, the Board should ask Government to exempt the Improvement Trust from the operation of the Rent Act. If all these facilities are given to public bodies, my question to the Honourable the General Member is why those facilities are denied to the landlords. The other day, in the interest of the landlords, the leader of the Swaraj party took up and championed the cause of the landlords in voting against the increase in the stamp duty, but I then voted in favour of the increase on the stamp duty.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: As a personal explanation, I never took up the cause of the landlord and voted against the increase in stamp duty. That is my honourable friend's interpretation of my conduct.

[Mr. V. A. Dabholkar]

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: The fact remains that the leader of the Swaraj party voted against.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member cannot attribute motives to him.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: I am not doing so; I am pointing out the good service that he did to the cause of the landlords, that he championed the cause of the landlords because he did not want any more stamp duty to be levied on the landlords. I say that the landlords of Bombay would not have grudged to pay the increase in the stamp duty of Rs. 40 lakhs, because the amount would have been utilised for nation-building departments like Education, Sanitation, etc. What do we landlords want? We want the leader of the Swaraj party and all those who voted for the landlords in the matter of the increase in the stamp duty to uphold the cause of the landlords on the present occasion.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: Again, on a point of correction, our attitude was that we were opposed to any fresh taxation.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member cannot keep on arguing like that.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: All right, Sir. I say.....

Mr. J. BAPTISTA: On a point of order, is an honourable member who is a nominee of Government entitled to oppose Government?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am sorry the honourable member has raised that issue, because I take it that every member of this Council, whether he finds his seat by nomination or election, is here to do his duty to the best of his lights.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: I was going to give the same reply to my honourable friend. But to resume the discussion, the Bombay landlords would have been willing to pay Rs. 40 lakhs for increased stamp duty but this scourge of the landlords, the Rent Act, they want to be removed.

Now, Sir, what is the position of a landlord? It was stated by my honourable friend from Thana that the Rent Act was intended to remain in force only during the war, but at present there is no war. But now the war is one between landlords and tenants, by Government extending the Rent Act.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is the honourable member going to be very long?

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: I may take some more time, Sir.

(After recess.)

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: To resume the discussion, I should like to point out that there are two strong opponents to the landlords. The first is the Government, because we have heard from the Honourable the General Member that the administration of properties is a difficult task, and as such he would not risk any more Government money in building any more tenements. The second are the representatives of the tenants under Rs. 10 franchise for elections. In this House, there is little possibility of getting any protection for the minority landlords. I should like to point out to this House something as regards the buildings put up by the landlords in Bombay. I will take my own instance at Kalbadevi.

At Kalbadevi I have just completed a chawl of single-room tenements, each room being 20 feet by 10 feet, and I am getting Rs. 20 for each for a month. This property of mine is further away from the main road at Kalbadevi. But other properties of mine which have been built so far back as 1914, with all the latest sanitary conveniences, fetch me for a double room 10 feet by 40 feet only Rs. 20. If the rents in the new building at Kalbadevi were very high, would the tenants have agreed to pay Rs. 20 for a single room, and if they pay that rent for a single room, why should Government by means of the Rent Act insist that the landlords shall not get more than Rs. 20 for a double room 10 feet by 40 feet? According to the present rate of the rents that are paid by the tenants, a double room must fetch Rs. 40, but it has been prevented by the Rent Act. Then, Sir, the Honourable the General Member must understand that there are 15,000 landlords in Bombay. Out of that number, 7,000 are widows and those who have got an annual income of Rs. 350. That comes to Rs. 35 per mensem. The honourable member from Bombay North said that these landlords who have an income of Rs. 350 per annum occupy a part of the house. I quite agree with him, and I would add that they have to carry on their maintenance by whatever they can get in the shape of rent from the other part of the house. Sir, the same standard of living that is applied to the tenants must also be applied to the landlords. It was stated that the average cost of living has gone up for the tenants. If that is so, then my honourable friend the General Member must agree with me that the cost of living has gone up for the landlords also.

An Honourable MEMBER: They can afford to bear the increased cost of living.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: Whether they can afford or not, I will come to that later.

Then, Sir, I do not understand why the Honourable the General Member should come forward with a bill extending the Act to three years. Why does he want the period to be pinned down to three years? Could we not have it for one year? After one year, if the circumstances are not changed, the Honourable the General Member is welcome to extend it still further. Why does he want this Council to be pinned down to three years? The predecessor of the present General Member said that the Rent Act should go out of existence after December 1925. That gentleman is not here now. But the present General Member has come out with a different policy and a different understanding, and wants to extend the Act for another period of three years. After he lays down his office, there may be a third General Member who may want to extend still further for another period of three years. So, by the change of General Members every five years, the interests of the landlords are jeopardized.

[Mr. V. A. Dobholkar]

My honourable friend from Ahmedabad stated that the State must intervene in order to protect the poorer people. I quite agree that the State should intervene to protect the poor. But we are not building tenements for poor tenants. If Government think that the poor must be protected in this way, why has Government stopped its policy of building any more tenements? The Government want to extend the Rent Act and throw the whole responsibility of providing tenements for the poorer classes on the shoulders of the landlords.

Then, my honourable friend from Bombay, North (Mr. Baptista), stated that the Honourable the General Member was neither for the landlords nor for the tenants, but he was for helping the money-lender. I say that my honourable friend is absolutely wrong. Let me point out that money-lenders are not coming forward to-day to advance money on landed property. In this connection, I should like to refer to the remarks of my honourable friend on my right, who in 1922, on the question of capital, said that it had become very difficult for the owners of property in Bombay to have their properties mortgaged. If that was the supposition of my honourable friend on my right in 1922, I should like to say that now things are getting worse. The financial stringency is being felt all over the country, and on account of the Rent Act, the prices of properties have gone down, and nobody likes to advance money on landed property, because the owners are not the real owners of the property, but on account of the Rent Act, the tenants are the owners. Under these circumstances, Sir, I think that it would not be advisable in the interests of the landlords that this bill should be sent to a select committee and as such I oppose the first reading of the bill and I hope that the Council will also oppose it.

MOULVI RAFI UDDIN AHMAD (Central Division): Mr. President, I have heard the stern and unbending champion of the landlords and I dare say I will soon hear the idolised champion of the tenants, but in this matter Government has adopted an even course, the course which would appeal to most reasonable people. In a most clear and lucid language of which the Honourable the General Member is a master, he has placed before us the material for us to judge the merits of the case. I dare say all people will not be satisfied with the measures that have been proposed for the protection of landlords, and all will not be satisfied with the provisions made for the tenants, but that goes to prove that with regard to this bill Government have adopted an even course. If there are any defects they will be removed by the select committee and the proper time for discussing those defects is the second reading.

An appeal has been made in the press to Mahomedan members of this Council to come forward and take the cause of the tenants, but the Mahomedan members of this Council will do their duty according to their conscience. They are not opposed to tenants because many of them are tenants, and they are not opposed to the landlords because they are landlords also, but here in this matter our position is quite clear. A large number of our people have come from the mofussil and settled as tenants in this place, and in the interests of the honourable members of this Council I may say that we find it exceedingly difficult to go and enjoy the hospitality of any of our tenant friends here because they are not in a position to lodge them. They say they could give us a dinner but that they are not in a position to give us a night's lodging for want of space. That is the difficulty of the lower middle classes in this city.

There are only two sound objections raised to this bill. One is that the bill is not necessary because there is no more a state of war. But Sir, I assure this House that the after-math of the war is really more disastrous than the period of the war. As far as monetary stringency is concerned, people find themselves more in monetary troubles now than in the war. Therefore the argument is out of question. Then the second objection is that it ought to have been reserved for one year and not for three years. One year in my opinion is too short a time. We find taking into consideration the state of Europe as well as the state of India that this monetary stringency is not likely to go in one year but supposing by some miracle prosperity comes to the lower middle classes and the working classes, surely an amendment can be made to the bill in the other way. I therefore say that the bill rightly fixes 3 years duration. If trade and industry are revived in a shorter time then it is possible for the Honourable the General Member or any other member to bring in an amending bill. But as it is the bill is sound and in my opinion the House ought to support this measure.

Mr. R. S. NEKALJAY : Sir, I am here, another Government nominee, who unfortunately is not a landlord like my honourable friend Mr. Dabholkar, otherwise I would surely oppose the bill. Sir, my honourable friend Mr. Dabholkar does not understand the difficulties of the poor people. He thinks that all people in the city are rolling in wealth like him. Sir, I myself was a tenant in one of the chawls and the sufferings of the people living in chawls are better known to those who live in the chawls and not to those who live in mansions on the Chowpati sea-side like my honourable friend Mr. Dabholkar. He says that the living of landlords class has gone up, but to my mind there must be some reason for this and I understand it is due to their increased luxury and such other things and it is not due to the retention of the Rent Act or anything of that kind. Sir, I congratulate the Honourable the General Member for bringing this bill before this House and I hope the House will pass the first reading of this bill.

Mr. N. R. GUNJAL (Poona District): (Addressed the House in Marathi) Sir, I congratulate the Honourable Member in charge for bringing in this bill which is for the benefit of the poor people. Since we have been in this House as elected or nominated members for the last one year I find this is the only occasion on which we see my honourable friend the honourable member Mr. Dabholkar opposing a Government measure which affects the interests of the poor people.

Mr. R. D. SHINDE : Sir, I rise to a point of order. The honourable member says that the honourable member Mr. Dabholkar is opposing a measure affecting public interest.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is not unparliamentary. That is his opinion.

Mr. N. R. GUNJAL : Really speaking people who know what is the state of the poor and lower middle classes at present in Bombay so far as residential quarters are concerned, will not object to this measure and it is regrettable to find honourable members objecting to this measure which has been brought by Government for the benefit of the poor. With these words I support the first reading of the bill.

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN (Nasik District) : Sir, I come from a district to which the bill does not apply, and it may be argued that I have no locus standi in this particular matter. But in these days people are so quickly misunderstood and misrepresented that I am afraid that my attitude regarding this bill may be misunderstood if I prefer to remain silent and give a silent vote. Sir, I feel not the slightest hesitation in confessing that my sympathies are entirely on the side of the poor and the middle class which perhaps has been the hardest hit since the Great War broke out. An argument has been raised against this bill by my honourable friend the member for Thana that there is no war now and consequently there is no necessity for this measure. I regret I am unable to agree with my honourable friend, though by the bye I congratulate him upon the courage of conviction which he has shown in this particular matter by giving expression to his views though they may not be acceptable to the general public. Sir, I cannot say that the bill goes far enough. I entirely agree with the view which has been expressed by some honourable members that this particular bill leans more on the side of the landlords than on the side of the tenants. I fully realise the difficulties of the Government, and I can quite conceive how difficult it must be to the Honourable Member and his legal experts to frame a piece of legislation on a difficult and contentious question like this which would satisfy both the tenants and the landlords. I am not therefore at all surprised that this bill does not come up to the level so far as the point of view of the tenants is concerned. But all the same I do appeal to the Honourable the General Member and those members who will be elected to serve on the select committee to see to it that in the select committee the bill is so improved that the hardships of the poor and the hardships of the middle classes, particularly the lower middle classes to which I have referred, will be fully and sympathetically considered and that the improvements in the bill will be not in the interest of the landlords but entirely in the interests of the poor tenants. Sir, I own to a feeling that Governments, not excepting the Bombay Government, are peculiarly susceptible to the influences of the rich and the wealthy, and I should not be surprised if as this bill passes through its various stages, influences are brought to bear upon the Government in order that the bill may be so amended as to make it more acceptable to the landlords than to the tenants. But I do sincerely hope, that the Honourable the General Member who is in charge of this bill will take every care to resist any such influences that may be brought to bear upon him, and that this bill will be improved so as to give full satisfaction to the millions of tenants and the millions of poor people who are living in this city. With these words I fully support the first reading of the bill.

Mr. E. E. WOODS : Sir, a great deal is made of the fact, to a certain extent inside the House, and to a greater extent outside, that the Rent Act is purely a war measure to remedy certain conditions created by the War, and now that the war is over, these special conditions have ceased to exist and consequently there is no need for any further extension of this Act.

The advocates of this argument know as well as any one else that this is neither a correct nor a reasonably true statement of fact. They and their landlord friends are perfectly aware that many and the most important of these special conditions created by the war have not only not passed away, but some at least of these conditions have come to stay. We in Bombay to-day are not the only ones to suffer from this unfortunate circumstance. Calcutta for instance has found it necessary to extend its corresponding Act for a further period of three years commencing from May of last year. To travel a little further afield, we all know that the English Rent Restriction Act has recently been extended up to June 1928 with full control, and for a further period of two years with partial control. I mention this to show that the peculiar and unfortunate events set up by the War have not ceased to exist, but are, on the contrary, in a great measure present with us here to-day. It therefore becomes an imperative necessity to extend our Act as well. We shall not only be in good company by so doing, but we shall also be doing the correct thing as well.

My next point is, that although wages have been increased to compensate to some extent for the increased cost of living generally, yet it must be borne in mind that in the ultimate result so far as the betterment of the individual is concerned, his present prospects in terms of Rs. as. ps. when considered and compared with his position before the period when abnormal prices and increased costs to himself set in, are not only no better than before, but in the majority of cases considerably worse. The increase of pay demanded by workers in the various fields of labour was for the purpose of meeting the extraordinary rise in this matter of living, rents included, but in no case did this increased wage make up entirely for the changed economic conditions which workers found themselves faced with. The result is that in spite of the palliative measures adopted to remedy, to some extent at least, the abnormal conditions of living, the workers in the different degrees and strata of society as met with in Bombay have found themselves pecuniarily in a worse position than before these war conditions prevailed, and if the restrictive rent measures are not now continued, the added burden will be great and spread over a very extended area. Hundreds of schools for boys and girls, private dispensaries, nursing homes and many like institutions, all of them situated in rented premises, will be gravely affected among others, as rents will be suddenly and enormously increased and the burden will fall disastrously on the public generally, and will act with peculiar oppressiveness on the poor and middle classes. I have shown that the public, and it is particularly these classes I have in mind, are unable to bear the burden as the purchasing power of the rupee has shrunk to one-half its former and pre-war value, and this again reacts on landlords and thus the extra profits of the latter have also naturally declined.

Then again, Sir, the stagnancy of trade and business generally is a fact which cannot be denied and reacts on all. Thus we find that many dwelling places, chawls, shops, etc., are untenanted for the simple reason that the people as a whole are poorer to-day on account of the dearness of living than they were before. This quality of poorness, I would impress upon the House, is the chief, if not the only reason why comparatively speaking, so many premises are untenanted to-day.

To briefly recapitulate and summarise my argument, I have in the first place shown, that the special conditions created by the war have not passed away and hence the benefits of the Rent Act should be continued.

Secondly, that we are not alone in demanding an extension. Our neighbours in Calcutta have had a further extension of their Rent Act for a period of three years from now, and the British Government have not only seen the absolute need and justice for a continuance of the protective provisions of their Rent Restriction Act in the United Kingdom for a period extending up to 1930, but they have also brought about a decrease of 15 per cent. in their standard rent as well.

Thirdly, the increased wages given to workers to compensate them for the increased cost of living do not by any means entirely remedy this evil, though they might have to a certain extent a palliative value.

And lastly, I would submit, Sir, that the present stagnancy of trade and business to-day conduce further towards these adverse conditions and only make the lot of those who are not landlords but merely tenants considerably worse, and thus by their poverty react on the landlords and help to keep many of their premises both business and residential unoccupied.

Without any desire to particularly vaticinate, I am of opinion, and in this I expect others will agree, that these conditions will be gravely accentuated in the near future.

Now, Sir, I come to the amending bill that is before us and I am afraid that it will not be found very satisfactory. It is not generally realised what a large fund of humour the Honourable the General Member is possessed of. Personally, I am inclined to think that in seeking a temporary respite from the cares of office, the Honourable Member found change in the craze which is now more or less epidemic in Bombay, and in trying to find the correspondence between, say "Greed", and another word of eight letters commencing with "L", he became so obsessed with the idea, that he worked out his schedules with a plentiful addition of high percentages in favour of the landlord. The principle of any restrictive rent measure is the control and keeping down of rents, and not as proposed in the bill now before us, where the control is in practical sense rendered next to useless, and its benefits curtailed and made nugatory by the very large and exorbitant increase of rentals conceded to the landlords. I trust, however, that this House will see that a more equitable arrangement is arrived at before the bill comes up again.

I should like to make myself clear that in stating what I have, there is no intention of overlooking the just claims of our friends the landlords. I use this term with pleasure, as I am aware of a number of these gentlemen who (apart from other issues in this connection) have shown by their attitude on this question of rents, a large-hearted and sympathetic interest on behalf of their tenants, and their conduct throughout has been for good. These people, I agree, should be protected against unscrupulous tenants who either do not pay their rents regularly, or who, when subletting their premises, profiteer themselves. But I still maintain after making all these allowances, the principle embodied in the restrictive measure, is the control and keeping down of rents where it affects the poor and particularly the middle classes, as these latter from the circumstances of the case and which can easily be proved, deserve a greater degree of consideration.

In conclusion, I would like to deal with an argument advanced by the advocates of landlordism—an argument put forward presumably on account of its apparent strength as being based on a theory of Political Science,—the theory of Individualism, which I may, however, remind them received its knell over half a century ago. The argument runs somewhat on these lines : The Rent Act represents an illegal and despotic attack on the liberty of the individual regarding his landed property, and his absolute right in dealing with it under all circumstances and in any way he chooses. My reply, Sir, is that it is not so. It is merely a restraint laid on the abuse of such rights, liberties and license and for grave reasons of common welfare. Such restriction has operated in the past, and is being insisted on by all responsible Governments to-day ; and so long as we have a body of level-headed members in this Council and a General Member as at present, who will neither be afraid of, nor coerced by, capitalistic influences, however strong they be, I feel that the need and protection of poor and middle class tenants may safely be left to them.

With these remarks, Sir, coupled with the hope that the bill will receive the necessary consideration, I support its first reading.

Mr. R. D. SHINDE (Nasik District) : Sir, I support the first reading of this bill. I am sure, Sir, that nobody will dispute the statement made by the honourable member for Thana (Mr. G. B. Pradhan) that the Rent Act is an infringement of the property rights of the individual. But, Sir, he will agree with me that the State has a right to restrict individual liberty, either of person or of property, when it is necessary in the interest of society. The Rent Act, Sir, is the outcome of abnormal conditions of the war and the honourable member for Thana district is of the opinion that those abnormal conditions have subsided. But, Sir, it is not correct. In my view we are still under the shadow of the great war. Those abnormal times have not improved to such an extent as the honourable member for Thana thinks they have. Sir, we must provide some protection for some time to the small tenants; otherwise they will be at the tender mercies of the landlords. Sir, in concluding, I must thank the members of the Swaraj party for helping this time the cause of the tenants and they will, by this action, add to the laurels which they have already achieved.

Dr. M. B. VELKAR (Bombay City, South): Sir, while my honourable friend the nominated member—I mean Mr. Dabholkar—was speaking, I was all the time wondering why he was opposing this measure, because to my mind, if at all anything, this bill can be styled a landlord and capitalist measure. Look at the statement of objects and reasons of this particular bill. Here it is said: “It is equitable that the landlords should receive an adequate return for their capital, taking into consideration the changes that have taken place in the economic conditions since the Acts were passed”, and then further it is said: “and provision has therefore been made for a sliding scale of increases which will enable the landlords to secure a total increase of rent, ranging from 20 per cent. to 60 per cent. beyond the above mentioned standard rent.” Here, you find in this particular bill a provision has been made for a sliding scale of increase. By this bill it is proposed to give protection only up to Rs. 85 but there is this sliding scale of increase and above that there is no protection and the whole Act is repealed. Thus this House will be convinced that under this bill the protection is sought to be given only to the landlords and not to the tenants. It appears from the provisions of the bill that the presumption of the Government is that income of the tenants will increase every year. The provisions allow a sliding scale of increase in the rents on the presumption that the tenants also will get an increase in their income. It is a well-known fact that there is a trade depression and the problem of unemployment is becoming so acute that it requires an early solution. Under these circumstances I do not understand why a sliding scale of increase in the rent should be allowed to the landlords. The main reason for the protection that ought to be given to the tenants by this bill is that the prices have not gone down. What is the real situation? The economic distress is still there and, as has been pointed out by my honourable friend Mr. Woods, the value of the rupee has gone down by half. If therefore any protection is to be given it ought to be given to the tenants, without any sliding scale of increase in rents of the landlords as is sought to be done under this bill.

As regards the non-residential premises after the measure this House passed at the last sessions the state of affairs as it exists at present has been well described by my honourable friend Mr. Swaminarayan. The moment the protection with regard to non-residential premises ceased to operate the greedy landlords mercilessly increased the rent by 200 and 300 per cent. They have thereby betrayed their trust and shown themselves incapable of exercising any discretion with regard to rent, the moment they are allowed liberty.

Now, the bill will be referred to the select committee and I hope that it will emerge out of it in such a form as to give satisfaction to all parties.

Mr. V. A. SURVE (Ratnagiri District): (Addressed the House in Marathi): Sir, I beg to support the first reading of the bill. In doing so, I wish to say a few words in justification of this measure. I had lived in Bombay for 17 years. I can say from my experience that the landlords' only purpose is to extort as much rent as possible without any regard to the capacity of the tenants to pay or the facilities they give to them. As regards the facility afforded to tenants with regard to water-supply and lighting, the less said the better. There would be one water tap for a number of tenants living in the same flat. If the landlord is told to put another tap, he would turn a deaf ear to it but on the first of every month with unerring precision he would stand before the tenants for rent. To make the condition worse, there would arise some dispute with regard to the water tax and the municipal people would cut off water supply. As regards lighting arrangements it is in no way better than water supply.

Under the provisions of the Act, a sliding scale of rise in rent is allowed to landlords. Suppose a man with an income of Rs. 300 or so keeps a block of rooms for Rs. 85. If the protection is removed with regard to dwelling house beyond Rs. 85 and above, and if the landlord in his usual merciless manner increases the rent by 100 per cent. or so, the question is whether the tenant will be able to pay that rent.

Formerly the Tata Company used to receive a sum of Rs. 30 to Rs. 35 for a 50 square foot piece of land for quarrying purposes; that has now increased to Rs. 775. Similarly, the land of the honourable member Mr. Dabholkar, formerly used to fetch a rent of Rs. 20 to Rs. 25 for quarrying rights, but the rent has now been increased to Rs. 300 to Rs. 400. The quarrymen thus suffer greatly.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR: I rise to a point of order. We are discussing the Rent Act and not the rents for quarrying rights.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member is talking about rents for quarrying rights. That has nothing to do with the present motion.

Mr. V. A. SURVE: Therefore, the present bill will have to be suitably amended in the select committee. I only desired to bring to the notice of the Council the facts which I have mentioned. I support the first reading of the bill, and hope that the House will also support it.

Dr. COSMAS FERNANDEZ: Sir, I have listened to the speeches of several honourable members, but I heard nobody referring to section 9, sub-section (3) which is sought to be amended by this amending bill. It says that in future nobody will be allowed to sublet any part of their premises. I think this provision will work very adversely upon the middle classes. There are a number of people who cannot afford to live in a house for which they have to pay a rent of Rs. 50 to Rs. 75. If they cannot get any other accommodation, they have to go into such houses, and the only way in which they can afford to do that is by subletting a part of the premises to their friends. That is the only way in which they can manage to get some accommodation; otherwise, they would not be able to get any accommodation at all. I think these are very genuine cases, and in the majority of such cases no profit is made.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Order, order. Newspaper reading is not permitted.

Dr. COSMAS FERNANDEZ : I see that this provision has been put in to prevent people from profiteering, but I think if this could be confined to those premises which are included in this bill with rents up to Rs. 85, then there would be little chance of people profiteering, and even that could be prevented by making certain alterations in this section in the select committee. I think it is highly necessary that subletting of part of the premises ought to be allowed. As I say, there are hundreds of instances where people cannot get the accommodation which they need, and they resort to this out of sheer necessity. I hope the select committee will take this point into consideration and put it right.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South) : Sir, I am very sorry that when some of us here were trying to give expression to the voice of the masses in connection with this measure, the Honourable the General Member was not here to listen to that voice. But I hope that the speech that the honourable member has just made which represents the feeling of the masses, not from what he has heard but from what he has felt, will be conveyed to the Honourable the General Member and will give him some idea of the hardships of the labouring classes residing in the northern part of the city, who require protection. Another point which has struck this House is that, with the exception of one honourable member who represents the landlords of the city, there is not one on either side of the House who has opposed the first reading of this bill. I know, Sir, that the honourable member from Thana has criticised it, but as far as I could understand, he is supporting the first reading of the bill. I do not know if, after further consideration, the honourable member who represents the landlords of Bombay will continue his opposition or think it right to withdraw it. But, Sir, I am here to protest, and to protest rather earnestly, that the Honourable the General Member, who had given a pledge to this House during the last session in Poona, has not redeemed that pledge. The honourable member openly stated that he was going to bring in a measure which would satisfy both the landlords and the tenants of this city. That was the clear, definite statement made by the honourable member at the Poona session, and I ask this House to consider whether he has fulfilled that pledge or redeemed his promise and has brought in a measure which has been satisfactory both to the landlords as well as to the tenants. Even on that occasion in Poona, I was apprehensive, and I raised the point before I withdrew my measure, and I wanted to have an idea as to what sort of bill he would bring in, which would satisfy both the landlords and the tenants, because it struck every one in the House on that occasion that it would be impossible for the Honourable the General Member to bring in a measure that would satisfy both the parties; he must make a choice between the landlords and the tenants. In a measure of this nature, which is likely to affect the rights of one party and to increase the interests of the other party, it would be impossible for any human being to bring in any measure that would satisfy both the landlords and the tenants. The honourable member from Bombay has rightly put it that the result has been that he has not only not satisfied the landlords, but he has also irritated the tenants. But I really do not understand how the honourable member representing the interests of the landlords could oppose this measure. Could any Government be more generous to the capitalist or the landlord classes of this city than the Honourable the General Member has been in introducing this measure? I should have expected the honourable nominated member from Bombay to have stood up and congratulated the Honourable the General Member and thanked him on behalf of the capitalists and landlords of the city for having come to their rescue. Instead of that, I find he has adopted rather an ungrateful attitude, which does not acknowledge the indulgence and generosity that has been shown to them.

Now, Sir, I must also protest that, when the Honourable the General Member said that he was going to bring in a measure that would satisfy the tenants, he leaves out of this bill non-residential premises, leaves out of the protection that is to be given the greater part of the tenements of the city. I would ask him to inform this House if he has made enquiries with all the staff at his disposal and out of those enquiries come to learn as to what is the percentage of tenements which have been occupied for non-residential purposes, show many petty shops there are, how many petty offices there are, how many schools there are, how many dispensaries there are, which are going to be affected by the removal of this restriction. If he has made such enquiries, he must have found that a very large percentage of the tenements are used as business premises, and if all control is to be removed so far as that class of tenements is concerned, how can he seriously and honestly maintain that he has fulfilled the pledge of bringing a measure for the protection of tenants as a whole? That promise has not been fulfilled, and the present bill is only an attempt to fulfil it in a faulty way.

Sir, I think it is the misfortune of the masses that this part of the department has fallen into the hands of a gentleman who has never been a tenant all his life. It is a misfortune I say, Sir, not for him, but it is a misfortune for the masses. He cannot feel, as the honourable member on my left feels, the pinches and hardships of the tenants, till he undergoes a tenant's hardships himself. Has he ever in his life been so unfortunate as to be compelled to run from door to door looking for business premises or residential quarters? Has he ever been worried by a landlord with notices of ejection, and suits for recovery of rent? Never. How can he then appreciate the hardships of the tenants and the difficulties of the masses, difficulties which have been so well represented by the honourable member on my left? I say that is a misfortune. If this department had been in charge of one of those honourable members who had gone through the hardships which tenants have to undergo, and been worried by greedy landlords, then certainly he would have stood up and said "I have felt the pinch myself and I feel for the poor tenant". As it is, relying upon red tape and the reports that he gets from his staff, as he himself has admitted, how can the Honourable the General Member appreciate the feelings of the tenants? It is impossible for him to feel as the tenants do. Therefore coming from the class of landlords, it is but natural that the measure which he has produced must be of the type which we have got before us. I say, Sir, where is the protection for the tenant? I have been looking from section to section, from corner to corner. I say the necessity of giving protection to non-residential premises is far greater than the necessity for giving protection to the residential premises. The law of supply and demand, as stated by my honourable friend from Thana, is governed by entirely different considerations. The Honourable the General Member has forgotten that small traders have to stick to one locality where they have commenced their business and to them to remove their shops from that particular locality means ruination of their business, and I can produce facts and figures to show that a great number of petty traders have left this city and gone out of Bombay because their landlords would not allow them to continue their business in their old premises unless they paid enhanced rents. (An Honourable Member: That is not true). I am glad that a challenge has been given. I have got facts and figures to show that for a shop rented for Rs. 12, Rs. 75 have been demanded. For a shop rented for Rs. 20, Rs. 80 have been demanded. At the public meeting held for the tenants, a Parsi widow came and stated that for a place for which she had been paying Rs. 25 rent, and where she was providing meals to boarders, was served with a notice of Rs. 150. Now just imagine from a poor lady making about Rs. 40 or 50 after working from early morning till night the landlord wants Rs. 150 as monthly rent. Instead of making any profit the poor widow has to incur a debt of Rs. 80 a month for remaining in these premises. The lady almost shed tears while describing her condition and the landlords present there were so much moved in the matter that they persuaded her landlord not to eject her. That was not, Sir, the only one instance. There are many instances of this kind. If the Honourable the General Member likes to inquire he will find that there are five thousand ejection suits in the Small Causes Court, and if the Honourable the General Member really wants to help the tenants, he really ought to go into all these cases. Now if, in these five thousand cases affecting thousands of tenants, all of them are to be ejected from their shops, their business premises, what are they to do? Are they to go begging or stealing for their livelihood or to put an end to their miserable existence? What are they to do if the landlords will not have mercy on them and if Government is not going to help them? I put it to this House that this is not an exaggerated picture. It is a picture supplied on the records of a British Court of Law. The staff of the Court of Small Causes has really been overburdened with work because they are working night and day as they cannot cope with the work in connection with these ejection suits. I ask Government the Ma Bap what are these poor traders to do? Are they to throw themselves into the sea if you are not going to protect them? The responsibility is very great and the Honourable the General Member has not realised his responsibility. I do not know what disaster it would lead to. Some landlords are simply waiting for the decision of this House. And I assure you that as soon as they find that this control has been removed so far as non-residential premises are concerned, not only ten thousand but fifty thousand suits will come to the Small Causes Court for ejection, and then the position of these poor traders will be simply worse and they shall only have to go and beg or steal. Many of them have already left the city because they cannot pay heavy rents. I do not want to weary the House with facts and figures, but I have got with me here exact figures and names of shop-keepers from whom 200 and 300 per cent. more rent has been demanded by their landlords, and suits have been filed against tenants. The honourable member has stated that there is particularly one measure which has been rigid, namely the power given to the landlord to open the premises if the rent is in arrears for three months and if the tenant is out of the premises. Why has he not considered the case of a bona fide tenant going out of the premises for bona fide purposes and not being able to return within three months, and for some reason not being able to pay rent? In that case is his house to be taken possession without notice? Truly this is the position when a measure is taken without considering the change of circumstances. This measure has been adopted from the British measures on the same subject but in that measure there are general safeguards provided. Under the present measure if a tenant goes out locking up his place and remains away for three months that justifies the controller to break open his lock and take possession of the property so that if that unfortunate tenant returns a day later than three months he has simply to go into the streets of Bombay and his premises are taken possession of by whom we do not understand. This provision was not in the previous bill but it has been newly introduced. It would have been far better if the interests of the tenants had been left to the tender mercies of the landlords than to Government.

Then again there is another provision which gives the municipal authorities the power of ejection. If the honourable member is aware there is already a provision in the Municipal Act to the effect that whenever the premises are required for the purpose of municipal purposes, the tenant can be ejected in 24 hours but there is also a proviso to the effect that provided that the landlord gives an undertaking that after the completion of that repair the tenant will be restored to his premises. That safeguard again has been removed in the present measure. The Rent Act is said not to affect those premises which the Municipal Act considers to be in a ruinous condition. It is another instance how tenants' interests are being looked after by Government. I submit that this Act does require complete overhauling in the select committee because as the honourable member from Thana has put it the effect of this measure will be far reaching, and it will affect the health of the baby for whom the Honourable the General Member is so anxious. He was an active member in the Baby Week having various measures for the protection of babies. If he wants the babies to be protected let him give good houses for their parents to live. It is not the lectures and tamashas at the Cowasji Jehanjir Hall that is going to protect the babies. I will only point out one or two instances how this measure affects not only the health of the babies but the health of all the citizens. Every day milkmen who are prosecuted for selling adulterated milk, openly tell the magistrates "what are we to do, our landlords are charging exorbitant rents and in order to pay them we have to sell our milk adulterated with water". Now this is the milk which is given to your babies. (Laughter.) It is not a matter to be laughed at. These are actual facts which are happening. Similarly all the commodities like ghee, milk and all other things which are required for human consumption have to be sold by petty traders at a higher price to pay higher rents and it is thus that the life of the citizen is affected. That does not affect, of course, the Honourable the General Member because he is quite secure with his pure milk and pure ghee, but if you look to the general conditions of the city you will find that this measure is really required more for the business than for the residential premises and since that protection to the business premises is not given in this measure I must say that the solemn pledge given to this House has not been redeemed and therefore I enter my emphatic protest against this bill being carried through.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, if it would console my honourable friend to my right (Mr. V. A. Dabholkar), I might tell him that on the theoretical aspects of this question, the views I entertained in 1922 I entertain even to-day. If he would invite me to consider this bill on merely theoretical principles, I could assure him that I would join him in doing short work of this bill. Sir, what has this bill done? It has divided the whole population of Bombay into two classes, landlords and tenants, and has set them at loggerheads, and it has introduced artificiality and inequality. A man occupying 100 square feet in an old building is made to pay Rs. 10: another man occupying 100 square feet in a new building has to pay Rs. 20 or Rs. 25. If the State is to protect, it must protect all, and not only a few. Then, look at the revenues of the Bombay municipality. Only two years ago the general taxation was somewhere about 9·78 per cent.: to-day it is standing at 11½ per cent. Why was this increase made? Because the municipal revenue had suffered, and therefore in order to increase it the expedient adopted was to increase the general taxes. But even with that increase the revenues have remained stagnant. And as the municipal revenues have fallen low amenities to the public are denied, several curtailments in expenditure have been made, and unemployment has been going on. This is what the Rent Act and its perpetuation has accomplished. Therefore, looking only from a theoretical basis, I do not think that there would be anybody in this House who would defend the principles of the bill. But our actions in life are not all guided solely by theory. We are very often compelled to look to the expediency of a measure.

The honourable member sitting to my right has very pertinently argued that the General Member has not supplied him with any statistics. I do not know since when he developed this love for statistics, but if he wants them I can give them to him. I will present to him the December issue of the Labour Gazette. In that there is an article under the heading "Standard of Living of the Indian Middle Classes in Bombay City". Several-family budgets have been examined, and the results are that the middle classes whose incomes are below Rs. 100 have at the end of the month a minus balance of Rs. 3, that is they are compelled to spend Rs. 3 more than what they actually earn. This presupposes that the man is in employment. But if the man is not in employment—and at present we hear too much of unemployment—what will be the case? In that case, in order to maintain himself he will have to spend Rs. 103 by going to a Marwadi. If any figures are necessary, I think this one figure will quite suffice. The article also gives figures relating to the middle classes getting an income of Rs. 100 to Rs. 200, and in their case also we find that the balance at the end of the month is a minus one and not a plus one. So, all those people who belong to the middle classes and reside in Bombay, even assuming they are all in employment, find themselves in debt. Then, we have to bear in mind that the men belonging to the middle classes, whose income is Rs. 100 or below, pay 17 per cent. of their income as rent. The honourable members occupying the opposite benches, I think, have to pay only 10 per cent. of their salaries as rent. I think this one fact alone will convince the House that it is absolutely necessary to extend the duration of the Rent Act.

I can give another reason also. So far as the labouring classes are concerned, Government have come forward to their rescue in a partial measure. In a very short time there will be 16,000 single room tenements so that the labouring classes will have at least some place to dwell in. So far as those who dwell in flats are concerned, private enterprise is coming to their rescue. May I ask the champions of landlords who is to take care of those persons who belong to the middle classes over whose head the dagger of unemployment is hanging to-day? Are we not supposed to make certain provisions for those people who belong to the middle classes? I think the Honourable the General Member deserves the thanks of the needy people for bringing forward this bill.

I would say in view of the figures I have quoted the limit of Rs. 85 which he has placed requires reconsideration. (The Honourable Mr. Cowasji Jehangir: It is Rs. 102). That point may be gone into in the select committee, and I shall not take more of the time of the House on that point.

The next point that was raised by the honourable member sitting to my right (Mr. Dabholkar) was his enquiry why the Rent Act should be extended to three years and not only one year. I give him a reply to that question. I am sure he is a member of the Bombay municipal corporation. He knows the meeting that was held on the 5th of May

[Mr. A. N. Surve]

1924. May I just refresh his memory and enquire if a resolution to the following effect was not passed: "That this Corporation requests the Bombay Government to adopt early legislation for the purpose of extending the present Rent Act for three years more from the date of the expiry in view of the fact that the causes which brought the Rent Act into existence have not yet disappeared"? So, if the municipal corporation which both in theory and practice, represents the public of Bombay, if a local body representing the views of the public of Bombay, makes a demand in the name of the public that the Rent Act should be extended for three years, is it not the duty of Government to act upon that recommendation? He has also stated.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is it necessary that the honourable member should reply to each and every point which may have been made by the only member who opposed the first reading?

Mr. A. N. SURVE: On the whole, I say that the House should unreservedly support the first reading of the bill, though it has some defects which may be looked into in the select committee. Therefore, I support the first reading.

Mr. D. R. PATIL (East Khandesh District): Sir, I rise to support the first reading of this bill. As regards the principle of this bill, there is only one gentleman, our honourable friend Mr. Dabholkar, who opposes the principle. We have heard the discussion over this bill and we find some interesting matters. The first matter is that a nominated member differed from a nominated member; and the second point is that an independent member, namely, Mr. Pradhan from Nasik, differed from Mr. Pradhan from Thana, who is also an independent member; and the third point is, Mr. President, that all the members of the Swaraj party, non-Brahmin members as well as Mahomedans, are all one so far as the principle of this bill is concerned. Now, Sir, I would remind my honourable friend Mr. Dabholkar of one Hindu notion. And what is that notion? The Hindu notion is that if you do meritorious or charitable deeds in your previous birth, you are happy in this birth, and you can become a rich man. I can very easily say, Sir, that Mr. Dabholkar must have done some meritorious acts in his previous birth, as he is rich in his present birth. I heartily wish that he should become a rich man again in his next birth by doing charitable acts in this birth.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Where is the necessity of going into all this?

Mr. D. R. PATIL: The point is this, Mr. President, that I wish him to be charitable towards the poor tenants in this birth, so that he may become a richer man in his next birth.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Does it necessarily mean that if he does not do charitable acts during this birth, that he will not become a rich man in the next birth?

Mr. D. R. PATIL: Yes, the Hindu notion means that, Mr. President. I request my honourable friend Mr. Dabholkar to consider this Hindu notion and I hope that he will withdraw his opposition and support this bill which necessarily protects the interests of the poor tenants.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA (Ahmedabad District): Mr. President, I oppose clause 4. It requires a great deal of thought. This clause looks very simple, but it would act as a lever to terrorise work-people in times of strikes. I have got some experience of the labour movement and, therefore, I say, Sir, that when there is a strike, the millowner would say: "Your services are terminated and therefore you cannot live in the chawls provided by me". It will prejudicially affect the condition of the labourers, and will reduce them from the position of labourers to slaves. That is the only point to which I would draw the attention of the select committee.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Mr. President, when introducing this bill, I correctly said there was only one issue before us and that was whether the Act should be extended or not, and I can see from the speeches made that, with the exception of one honourable member, all are in favour of extending the Act and that they will accept the appointment of a select committee which I shall have the honour of moving within a very short time.

My honourable friend from Thana spoke about Salsette and thought that the limit for Bombay was too high for Salsette. We shall certainly examine that in the select committee and Government will be prepared to accept any amendment in the bill that may be fair and equitable for the whole of Salsette, including his town of Thana, and he may rest assured that we shall do the landlords of Thana no injustice. We shall meet them and meet my honourable friend Mr. Pradhan, who happens to be, I believe, the chairman of the municipality, in any proposal which is just and equitable. Mr. President, the only member who opposed the first reading of this bill complained that the policy of Government changed and shifted with a change of members. I do not think he was quite correct in the constitutional position that he tried to explain. It is the Government as a whole who decided this question and it is Government as a whole who place this legislation before the House, and it has nothing to do with the personal views of any individual Member of Government. He only takes the responsibility for steering the bill through in this honourable House on behalf of Government. He quoted at great length my predecessor, Mr. President, but I did not understand the point he was trying to make. I really do not know what he was quoting and what he was trying to argue, and I believe most of the honourable members here are in the same position. (Honourable Members: Yes, yes).

Now, Sir, there has been a considerable amount of criticism that although this bill is meant to control rents the increase provided for in this bill frustrates that object. May I point out that the very fact that this bill is moved in this House and that Government desire to control the rent of certain premises is quite clear evidence of our bona fides, and that if this bill had not been moved and if legislation is not passed, and if there is no control at all over one-room, two-room, and three-room tenements, the landlords, according to the tenants, would put up the rents by 100 per cent. This bill will prevent them from doing so. It is here where the control comes in. (One Honourable Member : Partial). It provides for reasonable rise in rent. Some of my honourable friends opposite think that if there is no control the rents will rise by 200 per cent. and 300 per cent. I do not believe so, but this bill provides what Government consider a reasonable and equitable rise in rent.

Now, coming to my honourable friend, the champion of the tenants ; he has levelled a charge against me that I have not kept my pledge. I may remind this honourable House that Government promised to introduce a bill which they hoped would be satisfactory both to the landlords and the tenants. Let me first remind this honourable House the circumstances under which I made that statement. The honourable member moved a bill for extending the Rent Act for residential premises and it was so badly drafted that you, Mr. President, did not know whether to rule it in order or not and you were arguing the question whether....

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : I had no secretary to help me.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : I am very sorry to hear that he is incapable of drafting a simple bill. He is a lawyer. He is a well-known lawyer....

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Is it in order, Sir ?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : I wish the honourable member, the Leader of the Swaraj party, would keep his own members in order and not complain when I begin to answer.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Is it in order to enter into personalities ?

Mr. J. BAPTISTA : Is the Honourable the General Member in order to say that the President was unable to rule one way or the other and was confounded ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I did not understand him to say so. Otherwise I would have called him to order.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA : He said so.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : It is not correct, Sir. My honourable friend the leader of the Swaraj party rises to a point of order that I enter into personalities. When honourable members on the other side indulge in personalities, does he ever rise to a point of order on those occasions ? I wish, Sir, he would really lead the Swaraj party.

Coming back to the point which I was arguing, a discussion was going on between yourself and the honourable member Mr. Nariman as to how his bill could be in order. At that stage, Sir, to cut short discussion, I announced that Government proposed to bring in a bill and expressed the hope that it would meet with the approval of both landlords and tenants. Let me remind the honourable House that the bill the honourable member Mr. Nariman was moving then did not include non-residential premises but it only included residential premises. The bill to amend the Rent Act with regard to non-residential premises had already been negatived by this honourable House. So, when the Government proposed to bring in a bill which would meet with the approval of landlords and tenants it could only be with regard to residential premises. The honourable member Mr. Nariman's bill did not contain any clause which related to non-residential premises.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : Sir, I want to explain the matter. In that bill I could not include non-residential premises, because just before that Mr. Addyman's bill on the same subject was not allowed to be introduced. According to your ruling that within six months the same subject should not be brought again, I could not bring the same amendment.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That explanation does not meet the point the Honourable the General Member is making. The Honourable the General Member was attacked and I gave full latitude to the honourable member to criticise the Honourable the General Member with regard to the non-inclusion of non-residential tenements in this bill. So far as the facts are concerned the Honourable the General Member is correct.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : Thank you, Sir.

I said that Government would bring forward a bill and I hoped that it would meet with the acceptance of impartial landlords and tenants. I never expected that it would meet with the approval of people who look at everything that Government does with a jaundiced eye. I never expected to get any support from my honourable friend Mr. Nariman. It is not his creed ; it is not his principle. He is out to obstruct. Naturally when he wants to support a measure brought by Government, he has to kick against it, and he has got to make out a case against it. That is all that the honourable member Mr. Nariman was doing.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I believe the honourable member does not mean that he was making out a case against his own conviction.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR : His convictions were in favour of Government ; but he does not want to support the measure because it is brought by Government.

The honourable member then wanted the Government to choose between landlords and tenants. Government refuse to side with any party, either labour or capital or landlord or tenants. It is not for Government to side with any party. It is the duty of the Government to hold the scales even. The Government have tried their best to do so. We cannot do better than what we have done now. Let the select committee improve upon it. My honourable friend enquired whether the Government would take sides even in the select committee. If he thinks so he is very much mistaken. That may be the policy and tactics of my honourable friend ; but the Government cannot. Government have got a sense of responsibility. They have to answer both the landlords and tenants, both inside and outside the House. They propose to pursue that policy here as well as in the select committee. If my honourable friend believes that he is going to get any unfair preference for tenants he is very much mistaken.

Without taking any more time of the House, I will move for the select committee as soon as the first reading of the bill is carried.

Bill read a first time.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: I beg to move that the bill be referred to a select committee consisting of 17 members to report by the middle of July, 8 to form the quorum.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA: Can I move an amendment that the report should be submitted by the end of June next?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Such an amendment would be in order.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA: I move, Sir.

"That the report be made by the end of June."

That is the only alteration I have to suggest.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Amendment proposed "That the bill be referred to a select committee consisting of 17 members, 8 to form a quorum, the committee to report by the 30th of June". Both the amendment and the original motion are before the House.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Sir, my objection is this, that Karachi is interested in this bill, and all the members from Sind have left Bombay already, and they are not inclined to return to Bombay again so soon as to enable us to report before the end of June. You must see to the convenience of honourable members who live far away from Bombay. If they had been present in the House and if they could have served on the committee, we could have had meetings of the committee to-morrow and the day after. As it is we can have only one meeting to get matters straight, but we cannot proceed with this bill until members from Karachi are in a position to be present. I hope the House will trust the select committee to do the work as quickly as possible, and we will try to bring the report of the select committee out before the July session. I hope the honourable member will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA: Sir, I ask for leave of the House to withdraw my amendment.

Question put and leave granted.

Original motion put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Sir, I beg now to propose that the committee should consist of the following persons:

Mr. J. Addyman.

Mr. D. B. Adwani.

Mr. J. Baptista.

Mr. L. B. Bhopatkar.

Mr. V. A. Grantham.
 Mr. Hooseinbhoy A. Lalljee.
 Mr. Hoosenally M. Rahimtoola.
 Mr. K. F. Nariman.
 Mr. M. S. Khuhro.
 Mr. R. D. Shinde.
 Mr. G. B. Pradhan.
 Mr. A. N. Surve.
 *Mr. P. E. Percival.
 Mr. R. H. A. Delves.
 Mr. C. W. A. Turner.
 Mr. V. A. Dabholkar.
 The Member in charge.

Mr. C. M. SAPTARSHI : Sir, I wish to suggest one more name.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member cannot suggest any more names, because these are the 17 names proposed and the motion just now carried by the House was that the select committee shall consist of 17 members. It is perfectly open to the honourable member to suggest another name in place of any one of those that are included in the list, and then the amendment would be quite in order. But he cannot suggest an additional name.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : Sir, my name can be taken out.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member should move an amendment that in place of a certain name another member should be substituted.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : I can arrange that, Sir. What other member does the House desire to be on the select committee ? (An Honourable Member : Dr. Velkar). Very well, Sir. I shall be very pleased to add Dr. Velkar's name, by leaving out that of the Legal Remembrancer. The Legal Remembrancer can assist the committee without being a member, and so we will substitute the name of Dr. Velkar.

Motion as amended put and carried.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Supplementary Grants.

Supplementary grant of Rs. 24,645, by reappropriation from 5, Land Revenue to 22, General Administration, for contingent expenditure on treasuries.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Sir, I beg to move that a sum of Rs. 24,645 be transferred from 5, Land Revenue to 22, General Administration. Sir, the circumstances under which this transfer is asked for have been fully explained in the note that is before honourable members. It is merely a book entry, and I hope the Council will agree to it.

Question put and carried.

Supplementary grant of Rs. 28,800 by reappropriation from non-voted to voted under 24, Administration of Justice, for pay of Registrar, High Court, Appellate Side.

*Dr. M. B. Velkar's name was subsequently added by leaving out that of Mr. P. E. Percival.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I move for the transfer of Rs. 28,800 from non-voted to voted under 24, Administration of Justice. It is a formal transfer.

Question put and carried.

Supplementary grant of Rs. 90,211 by reappropriation from 47, Miscellaneous to 6, Excise, for payment to Messrs. Boyce D. Cowasji and Company.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir, I move for a grant of Rs. 90,211, to be reappropriated from 47, Miscellaneous to 6, Excise.

Question proposed.

Mr. S. S. DEV (West Khandesh District) : Sir, the matter does not appear to me to be as simple as the two motions just disposed off. A certain rate was agreed upon between the contractors and the Government ; it was Rs. 1-1-0 per gallon. Then the contractors made a representation to Government that the rate should be Rs. 1-11-0 per proof gallon, but Government declined to grant the contractors' request. Then the company of contractors made a further representation to Government, putting forward three or four grounds of complaint, and Government, on a reconsideration of the whole question and after consulting the Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, came to the conclusion that it was advisable to concede the company's requests in certain respects. I doubt the wisdom of this course. Here, it is stated that Government thought it advisable to grant the company's request. But I think, Sir, the question is not whether it is advisable or otherwise to pay the company more. The question is not whether it is just whether the company is entitled to this large amount proposed. The amount is fairly large, namely, Rs. 90,211 and if Government have a strong case and would succeed if the matter was taken to court, I do not think it is advisable to hush up in such a manner. Unless the House is assured that it is not only advisable but also just to pay the contractors more and unless the House is informed why there had been a difference of opinion between those two sets of officers, I do not think the House will see its way to grant this demand. Either the first set of officers who advised to pay at the rate of Re. 1-1-0 bungled or the second set of officers who advised the payment at the rate of Rs. 1-11-0 per gallon. Who bungled and why ? The question does not appear simple to me as it is sought to be made out and the House will be justified in asking for a satisfactory explanation before it sanctions such a big sum.

Mr. H. H. NARIELVALA (Broach District) : I want to know from the Honourable Minister in charge whether the refund of this character was made to other contractors at the time of picketing. Such a refund was not made, so far as my knowledge goes, and I want to know why the Honourable Minister at this juncture has come with this supplementary grant.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir, the note on the question is so exhaustive that I need hardly enter into the circumstances which led to this compromise between the company and the Government. The simple facts are that on the advice of the excise department and the commissioner Government considered that

[Mr. A M K Dehlavi]

Messrs. Boyce Cowasji and Co. were wrong in demanding one rupee and one anna per gallon for the stock in hand which they had to take over from Government when Carew and Co.'s contract ended. Later on, it appeared from the contract and from the notice that was issued calling for tenders that there was a possibility of a misunderstanding between Boyce and Co. and the Commissioner of Excise and his department, as the documents admitted of both interpretations. It was also thought possible that if the matter proceeded to court the decision might be against one or the other, and Government was therefore advised that a compromise was the best way out of it. In short Government on whole came to the conclusion that the 90,000 rupees was not only the best compromise, but, looking to the understanding under which Boyce and Co. entered into the contract, was also fair and just.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Sir, I beg to move:

The sum of Rs. 31,181 be transferred from head 47, Miscellaneous to 22, General Administration, for expenditure on account of village police in the Ratnagiri District during the year 1924-25.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHANGIR: Sir, I beg to move:

The sum of Rs. 4,16,000 be transferred from 47, Miscellaneous (reserved with finance department) to Irrigation, Extensions and Improvements to the protective bund lines and canals in Sind to make good the damage caused thereto by the abnormally high inundation of 1924.

Now, Sir, honourable members will have noticed from the statement placed before them that Government intended to ask for Rs. 5,34,000 but, Sir, this statement was first prepared and sent to Bombay for the finance committee in December last. Since then we have been again revising the list to see what economies can be effected. This expenditure is for the floods that took place in Sind. We tried to see what further retrenchment would be effected, and the Chief Engineer finally reported that he could save another 75,000 rupees. Originally he stated that he wanted Rs. 9,17,600. It was agreed to allow him that amount by utilising savings to the extent of Rs. 3,83,600 which were effected from other expenditure in Deccan and Sind to meet this sudden expenditure and thus our demand would have been Rs. 5,34,000 but now the Chief Engineer reports that he could do with less expenditure. We also found that we can scrape together another 43,000 from the other parts of the presidency and Sind. Therefore the total demand now will be Rs. 4,16,000, that is, Rs. 5,34,000, — 1,18,000, which leaves 4,16,000. The details, Mr. President, are given in the annexure.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Sir, I rise to move:

That the sum of Rs. 3,50,353 be transferred from General Administration to the expenditure of Rs. 2,80,448, 22, General Administration, and to the expenditure of Rs. 24,905, 47, Miscellaneous.

This is a distribution to all the departments of Government of a lump sum that was budgetted for under one head only.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Sir, I beg to move :

That the sum of 31,160 be transferred from 47, Miscellaneous to 26, Police, and 34, Agriculture.

This is, Sir, in continuation of my last demand.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, I beg to move :

That the sum of Rs. 23,673 be transferred from 26, Police to 41, Civil Works.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, I beg to move :

That a sum of Rs. 6,00,000 be transferred from balances to 60, Civil Works.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I beg to move :

That the sum of Rs. 75,000 be transferred from anticipated savings to 31, Education.

Question put and carried.

Supplementary demand of Rs. 5,000, for grant to Girl Guides Association.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I make a demand of Rs. 5,000 to increase the grant of Rs. 1,81,55,512 already made for Education.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I do not quite follow the way these demands are printed. You have got to show from what item to what item the transfer is to be made. Cannot the Honourable Minister for Education follow the form adopted by other departments ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Sir, it is a transfer of Rs. 5,000 from the non-voted to the voted head under Education.

Question put

That a sum of Rs. 5,000 be granted by way of transfer from non-voted grant expenditure under the head 31, Education, to voted grant under Education and carried.

Expenditure for demarcation of disputed boundaries between the British Government and the Baroda territories, Rs. 22,000, by transfer from 5, Land Revenue to 47, Miscellaneous.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Sir, I ask for a sum of Rs. 22,000 by way of transfer from 5, Land Revenue to 47, Miscellaneous.

Question put and carried.

Excess grant for superannuation allowances and pensions, Rs. 6,87,000.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Sir, I rise to ask for an excess grant of Rs. 6,87,000 under the head 45, Superannuation Allowances and Pensions.

Question put and carried.

Supplementary demand for cost of training forest probationers, Rs. 51,114.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Sir, I ask for a grant of Rs. 51,114 under 51-A, Miscellaneous Adjustments between the Central and Provincial Governments.

Question put and carried.

Expenditure in England—Secretary of State, Rs. 18,000.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Sir, I ask for a grant of Rs. 18,000 to meet the excess expenditure in England by the Secretary of State. It is proposed to meet this expenditure by re-appropriation from our balances.

Question proposed.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN : I do not understand what the expenditure was in England and why was it incurred on account of the Bombay Stock Exchange Enquiry Committee.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : As regards the Bombay Stock Exchange Enquiry Committee, it is a payment to the chairman of the committee who came from England. He has received some part of his remuneration in England.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Sir, we ought to have more particulars about this. The statement is very laconic. It does not explain what payment was made under each head.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : You mean you want the details for the three items (leave salaries, Privy Council appeal expenses, and Stock Exchange Committee) separately ?

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Yes, Sir. The House ought to have further information as to what was this expenditure about. There is nothing about it at all.

Mr. G. WILES : Sir, I was not expecting that further details of this small item than have been given would be called for. The Secretary of State has to meet among other things expenses in connection with the appeals taken before the Privy Council. It is an obligatory expenditure which has to be met by the Secretary of State for India.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : It is bad enough that we have blindly to sanction expenditure made by the Secretary of State. But let us have the consolation of knowing what we are paying for. Where is the urgency for this now ?

Mr. G. WILES : The urgency is that it must be approved by the honourable House before the 31st of March. I will in the meantime see that full information is placed on the table.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : We may take it to-morrow.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I do not know whether the House will meet to-morrow.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Mr. President, I shall be very glad to ascertain what these items are, and satisfy the honourable members in the matter. We have not the information before us now, but we will enquire in two days and give a statement to the House.

An Honourable MEMBER : In the meanwhile what will happen to this item ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : It may be dealt with after the figures are supplied.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I take it, that even though it is a non-official day, the House will have no objection to it.

[The President]

That closes Government business. The difficulty arises as regards to-morrow. The House decided, in the expectation that there would be Government business to-morrow, to meet between 12 and 3, and on that understanding several honourable members have taken an engagement to-morrow afternoon.....

Honourable MEMBERS : Holiday.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : If the House wants a holiday, I have not the least objection to it.

The House will adjourn till 2 o'clock on Wednesday, the 18th March 1925.

Wednesday, the 18th March 1925.

The Council re-assembled at the Town Hall, Bombay, at 2 p.m. on Wednesday, the 18th March 1925, the Honourable the President, Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., presiding.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: The University of Bombay has not recognised the Diploma Examination of the Rajkumar College, Rajkot, as equivalent to its Matriculation Examination particularly because a classical language does not form a necessary part of that examination.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: (a) No. All Government roads except the recently provincialized ones which are nothing better than cart tracks, are maintained in good condition and the latter too are being improved so far as funds permit.

(b) With the exception of Broach and Kaira districts, the link of which is interrupted by the Mahi river and Baroda territory and Kaira and Panch Mahals, which have a Kacha connection recently provincialized and which is being improved, all the other districts are fairly well inter-connected by good roads the link of which is interrupted only by the Narbada near Broach and the Watrak, during the rains only, near Kaira.

(d) If the reply to (c) is in the negative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons why despite the report of the pilgrim committee in 1917 and in spite of the fact that a pilgrim centre is liable to outbursts of epidemics of water supply be inadequate no action has been taken?

Supplementary Estimates.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Mr. President, at the close of the day before yesterday I was asked to give details with regard to supplementary estimate no. 14 of the supplementary estimates. The sum there asked for is Rs. 18,000, and I was asked to what particular heads this expenditure is due. I find that Rs. 7,000 includes expenditure on leave allowances of certain military officers who are paid through the Secretary of State and not through the High Commissioner. Rs. 3,000 are due to the legal expenses of a suit brought by N. R. Wadia against the Government of Bombay. In that particular suit we had purchased land on behalf of the municipality of Bombay and this expenditure will be recovered from the municipality of Bombay. And as to Rs. 4,000 on account of expenditure on account of the Bombay Stock Exchange Committee, some of the officers were paid in England.

Question put and carried.

BILL No. XXII OF 1924. A BILL TO AMEND THE BOMBAY DISTRICT POLICE ACT, 1890.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North) : Mr. President, under Standing Order IV, 4, I move that the second reading of Bill No. XXII of 1924, a bill further to amend the Bombay District Police Act, 1890, be adjourned till the next session.

Mr. President, if you will kindly give me permission I shall give a brief explanatory statement for moving this motion. The circumstances under which I bring this motion are as follows :

[Mr. A. N. Surve]

On the amendment moved by the Honourable the Leader of the House on the 22nd October 1924 this bill was referred to a select committee for report within two months. A notice was sent in Bombay that a meeting of the select committee would be held on the 17th December but it was subsequently cancelled and another meeting was called again on the 19th December. But on that date the finance committee held its meeting and consequently the meeting of the select committee could not be held. Eventually a meeting of the select committee was held for the first time on the 20th January when we discussed the bill. On the 17th February the Secretary to the Legislative Council sent a draft of the report to me for signature, but in my opinion it did not correctly represent what happened in the select committee. I therefore brought that fact to his notice and also wrote a letter to the Honourable the Leader of the House urging upon him the desirability of meeting again. I am glad to say that he has kindly consented to hold another meeting on some day in April next.

Under these circumstances, I request the House to extend the time to enable the select committee to submit its report, and pending its submission to adjourn the consideration of this bill till the next session.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I think a definite date ought to be fixed for the submission of the report of the select committee.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: I move, Sir, that the time for submission of the report by the select committee be extended up to 15th June, 1925.

Question put and carried.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I should like to suggest that the name of Mr. P. E. Percival be substituted for the name of Mr. N. J. Wadia, because Mr. P. E. Percival is now the Legal Secretary while Mr. Wadia has ceased to be a member of this Council.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member cannot move several motions on one item. It would have been easy to bring in all the changes under one motion.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I thought this was a separate matter, because that motion related to the extension of time for the submission of the report by the select committee, while this related to the change in the personnel of the select committee.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: All the changes can be brought under one motion.

Question put that Mr. P. E. Percival's name be substituted for that of Mr. N. J. Wadia as one of the members of the select committee on Bill No. XXII of 1924, and carried.

BILL NO. XXVI OF 1924 (A BILL TO ALTER THE CONSTITUTION AND TO WIDEN THE POWERS OF MUNICIPALITIES.)

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): Sir, I beg to move that Bill*
 No. XXVI of 1924 (A Bill to alter the constitution and to widen the powers of municipalities) be read First reading.
 a first time.

This bill will affect the interests of 156 district municipal boards, and is intended to confer larger powers on about 2,700,000 of people who are living in the municipal areas. Before I go to the exposition of the various clauses of my bill, I would like to speak in very brief terms about the progress that has been made in local self-government so far as this presidency is concerned.

The local self-government was started in this presidency in the year 1850, though it was started in Bengal in 1843. I do not propose to give this House a detailed information about the various attempts made by the Government of India in order to extend the scope of local self-government. I will only allude to the memorable resolution on local self-government issued by the Government of India in 1882. The Government of India issued the said resolution in order to enlarge the scope of and confer wider privileges on the municipalities in India. The Government of Bombay adopted a reactionary attitude in regard to that resolution, and they set their face against any expansion of local self-government. It was only out of deference to the wishes of the Government of India that they brought before the Council in 1884 two bills which were extremely inadequate. From 1884 right up to 1901 no serious attempt was made by the Government of Bombay for putting local self-government on a broad basis, and for bringing it to such a level as to satisfy the natural aspirations of the people. It was only in the year 1901, that the law regarding the district municipalities was embodied in the Bombay Act III of 1901, and even that measure was undertaken at the instance of the Government of India. The Government of Bombay did not deem it proper to frame the Bombay Act III of 1901 in such a way as to meet the requirements of the people. This Act was in operation for 12 years. The Government of India again asked the Bombay Government whether they were ready and willing to extend the basis of local self-government in this presidency. Then it was Lord Willingdon's Government. They gave a reply in October 1913 to the Government of India to say that in this presidency local bodies were not sufficiently advanced to deserve an elective majority. Till 1913, the major municipalities such as Poona, Ahmedabad, Surat had not an elective majority on their boards. In this connexion I submit, Sir, that if even after 60 years of local self-government the people of this presidency were found incompetent to have a larger measure of local self-government, either the people must have been exceptionally undeserving of such rights or there must have been something rotten so far as the Bombay Government was concerned. But it seems, Sir, that what at times human agency cannot accomplish, divine agency does accomplish ; and it was owing to the divine interposition so to say that the whole angle of vision of the Government of India in regard to the problem of local self-government, though not of the Bombay Government, came to be changed by the great War. In 1915 the Government of India issued a fresh resolution No. 50/77 of 28th April 1915 on local self-government. In that resolution the Government of India distinctly stated that they were unhesitatingly in favour of a general policy of further progress, that the aim to be steadily pursued was abstention from interference in detail and increased reliance on the non-official element in local bodies. The concluding paragraph of that resolution is as follows :

* Vide Appendix F.

“ In conclusion, the Governor-General in Council hopes that this declaration of policy may lead to steady and sound progress without hampering local Governments and administrations, or unduly fettering local self-Government. It is designed to mark a definite advance in devolution and political education. His Excellency in Council trusts that it will be interpreted in the spirit in which it is framed a spirit of prudent boldness, calculating risks but not afraid to take them in the cause of progress.”

In spite of such explicit instructions from the Government of India the Government of Bombay refused to move in the matter, and to free local self-government from their trammels. But it seems, Sir, that with the reverses which the allied arms sustained on the fields of France and Flanders, a still greater awakening came to pass not only over Great Britain but also over India, and as a consequence in 1917 the Secretary of State came down here, and, in consultation with the Viceroy, issued a report about the political situation in India and the changes that were required in the constitution of the Indian and provincial Governments. The House very well knows that the whole report of the Secretary of State for India and the Viceroy is based upon four great principles, the first of which is that “ there should be, as far as possible, complete popular control in local bodies and the largest possible independence for them of outside control ”. Even though the report recommended, in a sense, a complete devolution of power to the local bodies, still the Bombay Government failed to act upon that recommendation, and did not effect the requisite changes in the District Municipal Act. In this connection, I might mention one circumstance that, when the Bombay Government refused to move in the matter, in spite of the resolution of the Government of India and the recommendation made in the Montford Report, a conference of all the municipalities was held at Poona in July 1917, under the presidency of Mr. V. J. Patel. It was a very largely attended conference, and was started under the auspices of the then Governor, Lord Willingdon, and in the speech which was made by His Excellency he stated :

“ You are probably all aware that my Government is at the present moment engaged in trying to work out a comprehensive scheme of local self-government, which is to include all governments from village panchayats to district municipalities. I am glad to see Mr. Martin here, who is the special officer appointed to work out the scheme, and who has worked with the greatest zeal and energy in connection with this matter ”.

[Mr. L. B. Bhopatkar]

I do not know whether Mr. Martin actually formulated a scheme in regard to the various aspects of local self-government; but this much I can say that, till the year 1920, no serious attempt was made either in the direction of altering the constitution of the municipalities or of widening their powers. The conference, passed a resolution which, for the information of the House, I shall read out. The resolution ran thus :

“ This conference is strongly of opinion that all local bodies should be wholly elected ; that they should have the right to elect their own president subject to the following safeguards :

that there should be communal representation in the case of the Mahomedan community only, and secondly, that with a view to provide for other interests each local Body should frame its rules of election so as to reserve a specified number of seats for the representatives of such interests. Such representatives shall be elected by other members returned by the general body of voters ”.

I find from the printed report of the conference that this resolution was moved by Rao Saheb Harilal Desai who, I learn, was the Deputy President of this House, and it was seconded by the Honourable Mr. Upasani. In spite of this demand made by the representatives of the municipalities in this presidency, no attempt was made to improve the condition of the municipalities. It was only on 24th September 1920 that the Government of Bombay issued their Resolution No. 9693, directing that steps should be taken to enfranchise a larger proportion of the population of each municipal district by reducing the qualifying tax, to increase the proportion of councillors, and to fix the maximum proportion of nominated councillors at one-fifth of the total number of councillors ; and furthermore the Government granted to the municipalities the right of electing their own presidents by a simple majority vote. The resolution is all right, so far as it goes. But the one serious objection that can be advanced against it is that the changes made in the District Municipal Act are under a resolution, which is more or less the outcome of the will and whim of the Government, and that it is not the fruit of the legislative vote. Sir, a resolution often-times goes out of existence with the same secrecy and rapidity with which it comes into existence, and the Government withdraws a resolution with the same facility with which it publishes it. I must frankly confess that the resolution made an advance upon the kind of local self-government that was in existence till the year 1920. But over and above the fundamental objection that could be taken against the resolution the second objection is that the resolution did not go far enough. I will discuss the various aspects of this resolution when I come to the exposition of the clauses of the bill. But for the present I may say.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Is the honourable member likely to take a couple of hours ? The way he is going on creates that impression.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : Sir, the resolution is not something on which those who are interested in the cause of local self-government can safely depend. That is in short the history of local self-government, so far as this presidency is concerned.

The bill that I have moved seeks to modify Act III of 1901 in some of its most important aspects. The first amendment that I propose is in regard to sections 3 and 181 of the Act. Clause (1) of section 3 defines a city municipality thus :

“‘City municipality’ shall mean any municipality which is one of those specified in Schedule E or has been declared under sub-section (1) of section 181 a city municipality, and which has not ceased under sub-section (2) of section 181 to be a city municipality.”

And the sub-section (1) of section 181 says :—

“The Governor in Council may, at any time in respect of any municipal district which contains a population of not less than fifteen thousand inhabitants, declare by notification, the municipality thereof, which shall be specified in the notification, to be a city municipality.”

In other words it means that a municipality will not be a city municipality unless it is included in the Schedule which is attached to the Act or declared to be so under section 181. It is only 14 municipalities which have been included in the Schedule. Furthermore, under section 181 whether a municipality is to be converted into a city municipality or not, or a city municipality will remain a city municipality or not, will depend entirely upon the decision of the Governor in Council. By my first amendment I seek to substitute for the words “is one of those specified in Schedule E” the words “contains within its municipal district a population of not less than fifteen thousand inhabitants”. If this amendment is accepted by the House, then instead of 14 city municipalities we shall have 34 city municipalities, and the distribution of these 34 municipalities will be as follows :—In the Northern Division 11 ; in the Central Division 12 ; in the Southern Division 6 ; and in the province of Sind 5. I think, Sir, that in cities which contain a population of 15,000 and more, public spirit has so far advanced as to supply to the municipal boards a sufficient number of public-spirited and right-minded persons ; and it will be entirely out of tune with the spirit of the times to confine the larger powers and prerogatives of a city municipality only to those cities which are mentioned in Schedule E.

My second amendment is in regard to section 10 of the Act, which runs thus :

“Except as is hereinafter otherwise provided, every such municipality shall consist of
 (a) elected councillors ;
 (b) nominated councillors, if any, that is to say such persons, as from time to time—
 (i) are by name appointed in this behalf, or
 (ii) are executing the functions of any office from time to time notified in this behalf by the Commissioner.”

The amendment which I propose is to insert the words ‘except a city municipality’ after the words ‘every such municipality’. This amendment is of importance because by clause 5 of the bill I propose to make all the city municipalities wholly elective. I propose also to add a new section 10-A, after section 10, in these terms :

“Every city municipality shall consist wholly of elected Councillors.”

I think, Sir, that the time is ripe for making all city municipalities wholly elected, and to confine nomination of one-fifth of the total number of councillors only to such municipalities as cannot be classed as city municipalities.

The next amendment is as regards section 15 of the Act. It is a very simple amendment, and I am sure that the Honourable the Minister in charge will not hesitate to accept it. If the bill that he has framed contains a clause to this effect, then certainly he should have no hesitation in accepting it. The present section 15 is :

"No person may be a councillor, (a) who

(i) having been sentenced by a criminal court to imprisonment or whipping for an offence punishable with imprisonment for a term exceeding six months, or to transportation, such sentence not having been subsequently reversed or quashed, or

(ii) having been dismissed from Government service, such dismissal having been notified in the Bombay Government Gazette, or

(iii) being a pleader whose sanad has been withdrawn by the High Court, or

(iv) having been removed from office under section 16, has not, by an order which the Governor in Council is hereby empowered to make, if he shall think fit in this behalf, been relieved from disqualification arising on account of such sentence, or dismissal, or withdrawal of sanad, or removal from office."

According to my amendment, the period of disqualification will be confined only to five years. I propose to add after the words 'section 16' the words 'and five years not having elapsed from the date of the expiry of such sentence, or of such dismissal, suspension or removal'.

Then, clauses 7 to 13 of the bill embody rather important amendments. These clauses relate to the amendment of section 23, and clause 7 proposes to amend the section in such a way as to ensure that all the municipalities will be presided over by elected presidents.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN
Are they not presided over by elected members now ?

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : That is a right which I concede has been given by the Government resolution referred to above. But it is conferred upon the municipalities by the Act. Clause 9 is most important, and it proposes to debar any salaried servant of the Government from becoming either the president or the vice-president of any municipality.

Sir, this amendment is in consonance with the recommendation of the Decentralization Commission in this behalf. The Decentralization Commission, which submitted its report in the year 1909, made a recommendation in this behalf to this effect :

"Municipal chairmen should be elected non-officials. Government officers should not be allowed to stand for election, and only where any other chairman but a nominated chairman would be impossible should they be allowed a chance."

Clause 9 of my bill is drafted exactly on the lines of the recommendation made by the Royal Commission on Decentralization. Clauses 8, 9, 10 and 11 contain more or less consequential amendments, and I do not desire to take up the time of the House by explaining them.

Clause 13 embodies a necessary amendment to the effect that the non-acceptance of office should be made one more ground for filling up the post of either the president or the vice-president.

Clauses 14 and 17 should be read together, and they embody a very useful and necessary change in sections 41 and 160 of the present Act. Section 160 of the Act lays down the procedure which a local body is expected to follow for the acquisition of land required for any municipal purpose. But in point of fact we find that this procedure is not usually followed. My amendment proposes to make the procedure embodied in section 160 obligatory and compulsory upon the local authorities. There is a growing tendency on the part of several local bodies to move the Government at once and in the first instance under section 41 for the acquisition of land required for any municipal purpose. And curiously enough, the Government do not hesitate in the least to put into operation section 41 and thus bring the owners of land within the clutches of the Land Acquisition Act. I submit, Sir, that it was because I, honestly and conscientiously, thought it to be an oppressive procedure that I have proposed to modify section 160 in such a way as to compel the local authority first to exhaust the procedure that is laid down in section 160, namely, the procedure of arbitration before applying section 41. If land is required, then it should be acquired as far as possible by arbitration, and it is only when the method of arbitration is found to be useless or that the arbitration could not be worked out within the specified period, that the Government should be moved to step in under section 41 and to acquire the land under the Land Acquisition Act. I think it is a very wholesome procedure that is laid down in section 160 and the change that I have proposed is a very salutary one.

Then, the next amendment is in regard to section 56 of the Municipal Act. Section 56, clause (m) is in these terms :

“Municipalities may at their discretion, provide out of the said property and fund, either wholly or partly, with the previous concurrence of the Collector, for any public reception, ceremony, entertainment or exhibition within the municipal district.”

This section has come into prominence since the Secretary of State for India has filed suits against the Poona city municipality. The section as it stands makes the previous concurrence of the Collector a condition precedent for any expenditure on the score of any public ceremony, reception, entertainment and so forth. We find, Sir, that in the whole field of the Municipal Act there is no other provision which is more insulting to the intelligence of elected representatives of the people. To ask a municipality like the Poona city municipality which contains some honourable members of this House on its body to take the previous concurrence of the Collector for a little expenditure to be incurred for the reception of such a personality as Mahatma Gandhi, or Desh Bandhu Das, or Maulana Mahomed Ali is nothing short of a deliberate insult to that body. I think, Sir, that even on the grounds of justice and fair play to make the collective wisdom of 50 municipal councillors subordinate to the individual wisdom of a Collector is something that should not rightfully find any place in any scheme of local self-government. I propose by this amendment to delete the words “with the previous concurrence of the Collector” and to give the municipalities full discretion and liberty to incur expenditure for the purposes mentioned in clause (m) of section 56.

The last amendment is in regard to section 58, and by that amendment I propose that the proviso to section 58 should be deleted. The section is important, and it has also come into prominence owing to the friction that arose some two years back between the Government and some of the major municipalities in the province of Gujarat. The section says that the management, control and administration of every public institution exclusively maintained out of municipal property and funds shall vest in the municipality by which it is maintained, and the proviso says :

“ the extent of the independent authority of any municipality in respect of public education, and their relations with the Government Educational Department shall from time to time be prescribed by the Governor in Council. ”

I propose to delete this clause, because I hold that the attempt on the part of Government to exercise the right of control and supervision over the municipalities when they are not in receipt of any grant-in-aid from the Government is one that should not be countenanced by this House. It is wise to enjoy the tune when you pay the piper ; but to enjoy the tune at the cost of others and with the threat of breaking up the company is nothing short of downright despotism. In the case of such city municipalities to retain this proviso is to disfigure the whole scheme of the District Municipal Act.

With these remarks on the provisions of the Bill, I will now explain briefly some of the points regarding which there is likely to be some misunderstanding. I feel it necessary that I should explain them very clearly to the House. The first point is that in none of the amendments that I have proposed, have I touched the question of communal representation, either directly or indirectly. Whatever my individual views regarding communal representation may be, so far as the amending bill is concerned, I have taken every care to steer clear of that thorny question. So, no one need run with the idea that any amendment or any part of it embodied in my bill touches the question of communal representation either expressly or impliedly.

The second point is—and I am sure that much capital will be made out of it—namely, the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government will fling his own bill in my face, and will endeavour to persuade the House that inasmuch as his bill is going to be introduced in the July session, my bill should be thrown out by the House. But let me tell him that my bill is intended not to supplant his bill but rather to supplement it. I have not only read the lines of his bill but have also read his bill between the lines, and I can confidently say that the one great point of difference between my bill and his bill is that while his bill affects only 30 municipalities out of the total of 156, my bill covers up the entire field of local self-government, that is to say, my bill will broaden the basis of all the municipal boards which are at present 156 in number. If I am right, his bill affects only the major municipalities and he has styled it as the major municipalities' bill. So far as the major municipalities' bill is concerned, I may frankly confess that some of its provisions are progressive in nature (Hear, hear) ; but in regard to other provisions it is practically stationary as for instance, while he wants the element of nomination to stand in the constitution of the municipal boards of the major municipalities, I want to eliminate it altogether therefrom.

The third point that I may refer to is that by extending the scope of local self-government it is not the literate classes that stand to gain. Let me make the position clear on this point. The recent elections held in several parts of the presidency have made it very clear that the illiterate classes or the backward or intermediate classes as they are sometimes styled to be, have begun to take deeper interest in the municipal affairs and as they form an overwhelming majority of the electorate of any municipality they have scored considerably at the polls (Hear, hear). Personally I am extremely glad to note that my Maratha friends have begun to take their proper place in municipal affairs ; and I shall welcome the day when the whole of the municipality like the Poona city municipality will contain an overwhelmingly large number of the backward and intermediate classes, as theirs is the duty and function to assume the reins of administration of such institutions. Let me remind them that by my bill I propose to make the major municipalities absolutely elected. I propose to remove the factor of nomination which exists at present in the case of the major municipalities and to make the major municipalities absolutely elective in nature. In other words, I wish to take the right of nomination from the Government and vest it in the general body of every major municipality. In this connection an objection will be urged, namely, what about the minorities and what about the securing of expert opinion regarding any municipal question ? I think that the resolution passed by the local Self-Government Conference referred to above furnishes a convincing reply thereto. I am told, Sir, that the method of nomination of members by the elected members is followed by the Bombay Corporation. The reservation of seats to safeguard the interests of minorities can be very well effected by one method or the other, and the simplest method is for the elected members to nominate persons to the reserved seats. To explain matters more clearly, the Poona city municipality at present consists of 43 elected and 7 nominated members. According to my amendment the right of nominating the 7 members is to be taken away from the hands of Government and is to be given to the elected members.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN :
The right of nomination is given to the municipalities in my bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Does not the Honourable Minister realize that his interruptions further prolong a very brief speech ?

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : The seven seats are to be reserved for the minorities but the members are to be nominated by the elected members.

The fourth point is that this is not a bill which I have as it were sprung upon the public at large. As soon as leave to introduce it was granted to me, I referred it to all the major and minor municipalities of the presidency for their opinion and over 80 municipalities have expressed their entire approval with the provisions thereof, though only in one matter, the Ahmedabad municipality expressed its disapproval, namely with the provision relating to acquisition of land required for municipal purposes. This clearly shows that there is a wide-spread desire on the part of the municipalities to have larger powers and.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Will the honourable member point out the provision that he has made for the minorities ?

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : It is not a question to be settled by the Act, but by rules under the Act.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Order, order. The honourable member should address the Chair. Surely the honourable member can refer to the Honourable Minister by addressing the Chair.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : Under the Municipal Act the reservation of seats is to be done under rules made by the municipality itself. It can never be done by the Act. It is only the proportion between the elected and nominated councillors that can be provided for in the Act. Take a concrete example. Some seats are reserved in the Poona municipality for Mahomedans. Is there any provision of the Act under which these seats are reserved for Mahomedans ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : The honourable member is.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I cannot allow these interruptions in view of the amount of time that the honourable member has taken. The Honourable Minister will have a right of reply. The honourable member has been addressing the House for about one hour and I cannot overlook the fact that only two days are allotted to go through non-official business which is so bulky in character. I cannot prevent the honourable member continuing, but these interruptions allow him to give further replies and to prolong, as I said, a very brief speech.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : Now, Sir, I will really make it brief, I will only say in conclusion that if there is any provision regarding which any honourable member has got any objection, then surely that provision can be modified in the select committee. I do not expect every honourable member of this House to see eye to eye with me in respect of all the provisions of the bill. Even the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government, with all his expert knowledge of local self-government and expert legal advice which is ever at his command cannot place before the House a bill which will satisfy each and every member of the House. If there is any provision that does not exactly suit the likes or dislikes of any honourable member, it can be modified in the select committee. If any further provisions are necessary to bring out more prominently any of the important points or to safeguard the interests of any community or minority then the select committee will be perfectly at liberty to do so.

With these remarks I request the House to pass the first reading of this bill.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, the honourable mover of this bill accused Government of dilatoriness in amending the existing Municipal Act. But the honourable member knows full well that I prepared a bill to amend the District Municipal

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

Act which was circulated to the municipalities for criticism over three years ago. Only recently I got the opinions of all the municipalities. If Government were to rush through legislation without consulting the local bodies, a cry would be raised in this House that the municipalities have not been consulted. If they circulate the bill for opinion to the municipalities, then Government are accused of dilatoriness and the Minister or Member in charge is attacked for delaying legislation. I had assured the House that I would bring in a bill in a short time. After receiving the opinions of the municipalities, I hurried the Legal Department to get a bill drafted. I requested the permission of Government to bring in my bill this session. I was told by Government that as this was a budget session and further as the bill, being a big one, would take a long time, it would not be possible to move it in this session. Government did not allow me to move it, in the interests of honourable members themselves who might have had to sit for a much longer time. I cannot disobey the orders of Government. As I have been handicapped in this way, the honourable member for Poona wants to steal a march over me. I shall presently show that the provisions of his bill are practically those of my draft bill. I do not know whether he should claim originality for them or looking to the time when my draft bill was circulated to the municipality of which the honourable member for Poona is a member, and the time when his bill was introduced, I have every reason to believe that the provisions of his bill were adopted from my draft bill. I will presently convince the House that this is so.

In clause 2 of my honourable friend's bill, he proposes to make every municipality with a population of 15,000 or more a city municipality. His complaint is that under the law as it stands at present there are only 14 city municipalities. I was also of opinion that we could have a larger number of city municipalities. If the honourable member refers to my draft bill, he will see that I have for the present included 32 municipalities in the category of city municipalities, and the one more municipality which the honourable member wants also to be included is, I believe, the Karachi municipality so as to make the number 33 according to him. That has been excluded from the list in my bill, as a separate bill for the Karachi municipality is to be introduced. I am sure honourable members will agree with me that the principle laid down by the honourable member for making a municipality a city municipality is most arbitrary. In my draft bill I have taken into consideration several factors for a city municipality—its financial position, the capacity of the people to administer the affairs of the municipality, the population and the importance of the city; and not adopted the arbitrary basis of population only. Mere population alone cannot be a correct criterion for a city municipality. The equitable principle is to take into consideration the capacity of the people, the financial position of the municipality concerned.....

MR. P. G. JOSHI: The Honourable Minister is referring to a draft which is not before the House. Is he in order, Sir, in doing so?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: He can only make a passing reference. He cannot make it the main basis of his speech.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI: Is he supporting or opposing the bill?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: He will disclose it at his pleasure.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: My honourable friend lays down an arbitrary principle. The financial position of the municipality is the most important factor to be taken into account. If any municipality with an unsound financial position were made a major municipality under the provisions of this bill, honourable members will agree with me that it would be unfair to make it liable for additional expenditure on the arbitrary basis of population. If we accept the principle laid down by my honourable friend, has he made any provision for financial aid? I know of municipalities, most of the honourable members of this House also know, which have a population of more than 15,000 but whose financial position is not good. Is it fair that the honourable member should saddle such municipalities with additional responsibilities which they cannot discharge on account of their poor financial position? If they cannot discharge those responsibilities, has he suggested any remedy for it? Suppose we accept his arbitrary principle and convert every municipality with a population of 15,000 and more into a city municipality, and give them wider powers and responsibilities. Suppose, owing to the financial position, one of these municipalities cannot perform its duties, what is the remedy? Has the honourable mover provided any remedy? The remedy is, as the law stands at present, to suspend the municipality; but after it is restored, the municipality will be the same again. Or else, the remedy is to dissolve it. The only other alternative will be to abolish it altogether. Therefore, I submit, Sir, that the principle which is enunciated in the bill that every local area with a population of 15,000 and over shall be constituted into a municipality is neither reasonable nor equitable, and I hope the House will not accept it. On the other hand, I think the principle that is laid down in my bill will meet with all the requirements, and the number of major municipalities will be much greater. If any other municipalities care to be classed as major municipalities, they can apply to Government, and we shall be only too happy to classify them as major municipalities.

Now, Sir, under clauses 4 and 5 of the bill the honourable mover proposes to divide the municipalities into two classes, the major or city municipalities and the minor. For the minor municipalities, my honourable friend proposes that there should be a four-fifths elected majority. But this is no innovation on the part of the honourable member. All the honourable members of this House know and the whole presidency knows, that every municipality, except perhaps those at hill stations and in any new cantonment areas in which municipalities have been established recently has a four-fifths elected majority. So, the principle which he wants to enforce is nothing new; it exists already, and every municipality has a four-fifths elected majority. Sir, under my bill also every municipality will have a four-fifths elected majority. This is not a new principle which the honourable member is introducing for the first time.

Another principle which the honourable mover enunciates is that every major or city municipality should be wholly elected, and his criterion for a major municipality is a population of 15,000 and over. Now, I put it to this House whether it is not a very arbitrary provision of a very sweeping character that every municipality which has a population of 15,000 and over should be wholly elected. Are we to judge of the capacity of the people for administration by the mere fact that there are 15,000 of them? Should we not consider their financial position? I know of cities with a population of 8,000 whose financial position is far better than cities with a population of 12,000 and my bill makes provision for them, but not in the way of laying down an arbitrary principle which the honourable mover wants to introduce.

Besides, the honourable member is silent as to commercial representation for the Mahomedans. There is no mention about this important subject. Further, there are the claims of the various minorities to be considered. I can produce before this very House applications from every minority for representation on the municipalities. It is not the fault of any one that these minorities exist. God has made so many minorities in this presidency, with diverse interests and traditions, and we cannot but meet their demands. I think the honourable member should tell them that they should not apply to Government for nomination, and that they should not say that their interests suffer in the hands of the advanced classes. But the honourable House will be surprised to learn—and the honourable member the Commissioner (Mr. Mountford) will bear me out—that during this session of the Council there have been members of the advanced classes hovering about this hall, pestering me for nomination.

An Honourable MEMBER: They are minorities.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: I am afraid the day is not distant when these classes too will ask for special protection of their interests. Now, Sir, we have demands from the Parsis in the mofussil for representation on the municipalities. They are an intelligent class, who take a great deal of interest in the administration of the local bodies. They say that they ought to be given representation; and that as they cannot come in by election, they should be represented by nomination. There are also the Marathas and the depressed classes. The Mahomedans are not satisfied even with the communal representation they have. They say that Government should duly adjust the differences of representation, because by communal representation they do not get more than two or three members on a local body. They say that Government should nominate a larger number of Mahomedans. I appeal to the Mahomedan members of this House to say whether they want communal representation and nomination or not. It is for them now to express their mind, and to declare themselves in this House if they want communal representation. Again, Sir, my honourable friend might protest that communal representation creates differences. But I am convinced that it would do otherwise than perpetuate differences. The present unity is due to the communal representation that the Mahomedans have in the Legislative Council and local bodies. The very lack of representation of Mahomedans and other communities in the local bodies and in the Council is calculated to create a feeling of disappointment and insecurity on their part. It is, on the contrary, the presence of those members that tends to unity and harmony between the various communities. Now, Sir, we are on our way to Swaraj. Is it fair that in the local bodies we should train only certain classes of people? Should not every caste and community be trained in the affairs of local administration? I attach the greatest weight to that training. Most of the publicists in this and other presidencies owe their success to the training they have received in the local bodies. In fact, we are but limbs of one body. If the Mahomedans or the Marathas are not trained, I think we will be doing a great harm to the body politic. But my honourable friend's bill does not say a word about communal representation. The Mahomedans are not satisfied even with communal representation, but they ask, in order to adjust the proportion, for more nomination. Then there are the demands of the backward communities, the Parsis, the Indian Christians and several others. All these have also to be considered.

Now, my friend perhaps thinks that Government nominates a few people in order to have some influence on the local bodies. I assure the House that this is far from the truth. Now, every municipality has a four-fifths elected element, and only one-fifth is nominated. Can that one-fifth in any way influence the four-fifths? Government have reserved to themselves the power of nomination simply out of regard for the minorities. If the minorities do not want Government to have that power, then Government do not care for it (interruption).....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Again, my Mahomedan friends contend that they have been inadequately returned by election, and though they have the right of communal representation, they want more representation, and it is the duty of Government to adjust the differences. Then there is the question of experts who are necessary for the local bodies. There are also gentlemen who have very wide experience of municipal affairs, but who do not care to seek election. I think it is in the interests of the municipalities themselves that such persons should be nominated.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I know if the Honourable Minister is likely to take long?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Yes, Sir.

(After recess.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I should like to take this opportunity of placing on record my warm appreciation of the services which Mr. Sen, the Secretary to the Legislative Council, rendered to this House during the short period he worked in that capacity. I would have taken an earlier opportunity of doing so, but I remained under the impression that as Mr. Sen had gone on leave he might return to this duty. I now find that Mr. Sen is not likely to return to this office, and it is for that reason that I wish to take this opportunity of putting on record my sense of appreciation of the very valuable work which he did during his term of office as Secretary to the Legislative Council. It may be that the outside public and, perhaps, honourable members are not fully conversant with the onerous and responsible duties which fall on the Secretary, but having had to work with him, I can testify to the work which falls upon him and the manner in which Mr. Sen discharged it. (Hear, hear). In addition to the loyal co-operation which I received from him, he was so devoted to work that no detail of the business that came before him was unimportant to him. I found him throughout extremely able, energetic and helpful in the discharge of his duties.

There is, however, one aspect of this question to which I should like to make a reference. Within the time of less than two years that I have been your president, I have had to work with three secretaries of this Council. The work attached to this post is of rather a special character and is not quite analogous to what falls on administrative officers. Although I have found the members whom His Excellency has appointed as Secretaries to be able and quick at picking up the detailed requirements of the work, I cannot help remarking that continuity of service, especially in these special duties, is very desirable, and I trust that such frequent changes will not occur in the future.

In conclusion, I wish once again to express my warm appreciation of the valuable services rendered by Mr. Sen, and I am sure you will all agree with me in thinking that such appreciation is richly deserved.

(Debate on District Municipal Act Amendment Bill resumed.)

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, I have already explained that the first amendment of my honourable friend seeks to constitute every city which has a population of 15,000 into a city municipality, merely because it has so much population. That, Sir, is a very arbitrary provision, because it does not take into consideration other and more important factors, such as magnitude, importance, revenue and financial condition. These city municipalities have to discharge higher duties and responsibilities than minor municipalities, and therefore it is not proper to lay down only a criterion of population. We are already moving in the direction of increasing the number of city municipalities, we have already proposed in our bill to increase the number from 14 to 32 and we have also left room to increase it further.

Then, Sir, to make the city municipalities wholly elected is to introduce another arbitrary principle. Every city municipality is now four-fifths elected, and in some cases we have increased the elected strength to six-sevenths and even eight-ninths. In our bill provision is made by which Government can make any municipality wholly elected. That goes just as far as the proposal of my honourable friend, but, at the same time, leaves room for discretion. Now, my honourable friend stated that Government do not nominate good people. I may remind him that some of the prominent publicists of the country owe their present day eminence to Government nomination. I will cite the instance of my honourable friend Mr. Patel, who is now president of the Corporation. Had he not been nominated as a member of the Bandra municipality by this satanic Government, how could he have been elected to the pre-reform Council as the representative of the municipality and afterwards gone to the Legislative Assembly, where his name is quite familiar? I can cite many other instances.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Honourable Minister need not make a long speech now: he has the right of speaking again in reply.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Then, I will add a few more words only.

Now, Sir, the honourable member wishes to have wholly elected bodies in the mofussil. But even in the Bombay Corporation a proposal to that effect was moved, and the members did not agree to its being wholly elected. This is a premier city and yet that was the case. I think the case of mofussil municipalities is much weaker.

Then, Sir, in clauses 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11, my honourable friend does not introduce any new principle. We have already provided for elected presidents in all municipalities except at hill stations where non-officials cannot be found, and I have already made a provision not only in the Major Municipalities Bill, but even in the District Local Boards Act that the disqualification should disappear after five years. About the acquisition of land by municipalities, my honourable friend himself says that the Ahmedabad municipality does not like his provision. I think if we accept his provision, it will delay acquisition on the part of the municipalities, and I do not think they will like that idea. Further, his provision simply throws the burden on the municipalities to move the court. Under the present procedure, the owner of the land or the municipality may do so. However, we are going to amend the existing Act, and I have made provision in my bill for appeal to the District Court in cases in which the municipality or the owner is not satisfied with the decision of the panchayat.

Finally, clause 15 proposes to do away with Government control over education. Now, primary education in the local bodies is governed by the Primary and Compulsory Education Act, and the honourable member should bring an amendment to that Act and not to the Municipal Act.

So, Sir, I have shown that there is nothing new in the bill. As regards the withdrawal of the previous sanction of the Collector to expenditure on public entertainments, receptions, etc., I have already modified my bill and have withdrawn such previous sanction. I therefore think I have satisfied the Council that no new provision has been introduced by the honourable member, and that all the necessary provisions have already been made in my Major Municipalities Bill.

Mr. D. R. PATIL (East Khandesh District): Mr. President, I beg to move that the consideration of the first reading of the bill for altering the constitution and widening the powers of the municipalities that has been brought forward by my honourable friend Mr. Bhopatkar be postponed to the next session.

Question proposed.

Mr. D. R. PATIL : Mr. President, in the light of the remarks passed by the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government, I think, he is going to bring a fresh bill practically containing all the points that are covered by the bill of the honourable member Mr. Bhopatkar, and so we are in duty bound to give him the credit of bringing such a bill, because through his whole speech we can see the fire of anger which he created by the words to the effect that he spent all the time that he has spent in framing such a bill, and how is it that the honourable member Mr. Bhopatkar is coming forward to take the credit ? I think, Mr. President, he (the Honourable Minister) has got justification for his anger and for his question. I think the honourable member Mr. Bhopatkar also will agree with me in giving credit to the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government and I think he will not be very anxious about getting the credit to himself because the whole object of us (honourable members) here is to do good to the people, and if that good to the people can be secured by a bill that will be brought by Government, I think we should welcome it and not oppose it. In these circumstances, Mr. President, I think the first reading of this bill ought to be postponed till the next session.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR : Can I say a word on a point of explanation ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member can speak on the motion for postponement of the question till the next session.

As no member wishes to address the House, I will put the honourable member Mr. Patil's motion to the vote.

Question put and carried.

A BILL TO ENABLE THE HINDUS OF THE PROVINCE OF SIND TO RESTRICT THEMSELVES TO MONOGAMOUS MARRIAGES.

(Motion for leave to introduce the bill.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I should like once again to bring to the notice of honourable members that when the motion before the House is for leave to introduce a bill, the procedure laid down in the Standing Orders will be strictly followed. Standing Order 1 of chapter VIII reads as follows :—

“If a motion for leave to introduce a Bill is opposed, the President after permitting, if he thinks fit, a brief explanatory statement from the Member who opposes and from the Member who moves the motion, may without further debate put the question thereon” etc.

I will allow the honourable member to make a brief statement in justification for his demand for leave to introduce. Then, if anybody opposes, I will allow him to give his reasons for doing so, and then I will ask the honourable member Mr. Adwani to reply. Then the question will be put to vote.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): It will be generally admitted, Sir, that the object of my bill is a good one. My bill seeks to remove some of the disabilities under which the changing conditions of society place the Hindu woman of Sind. I have confined myself to the province of Sind for the reason that I have no first-hand knowledge of the other parts of the presidency.

It will be seen, Sir, that even in a country like Turkey, despite religious sanction in favour of polygamy, the legislature of that country has insisted on monogamy for its citizens. I realise that we are governed by the ancient Hindu law, but the ancient Hindu law cannot be supposed to have provided for the social requirements, for all time, of a community in whose customs changes are taking place from time to time. All the same, I have tried, as far as possible, to keep myself clear of the controversies of Hindu law and have tried to go along on the lines of least resistance and the proposed legislation is, therefore, based on what I consider to be the prevailing customs in Sind at the present moment; I want to safeguard the social position of the women of Sind, so far at least as the present customs in Sind warrant me to do so. It is probable that some honourable members of this House will say that my bill does not go far enough. At the same time, there will be others who will perhaps say that my bill goes too far. But that is a matter which can easily be settled either at the first reading or at the second reading. At the present moment, Sir, for the purpose of leave to introduce the bill, I think honourable members will agree that the object of my bill is a very good one, and therefore, there should be no objection in granting me leave to introduce this bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Does any honourable member object to leave being granted to introduce the bill? (No member objected). The honourable member has the leave of the House.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI: Sir, I beg to introduce the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The bill is introduced.

A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND THE BOMBAY LAND REVENUE CODE, 1879.

(Motion for leave to introduce the bill.)

Mr. R. D. SHINDE (Nasik District): Sir, I beg leave to introduce a bill further to amend the Bombay Land Revenue Code. My object in giving notice for leave to introduce this bill is to take away from the provision of the Land Revenue Code, section 86, the portion which empowers the revenue authorities to impose penalties to the extent of one-fourth of the total amount. Honourable members will see that under section 86 of the Land Revenue Code the superior holder can on a written application get relief and recover the amount of rent due from the inferior holder and as the law stands at present under section 148 specially for the recovery of arrears of land revenue in some cases the penalty to the extent of one-fourth of the total amount is enforced. My submission is that this provision of penalty works real hardship on agriculturists. You will see, Sir, that with the nominal expense of 8 annas the superior holder can recover the whole amount—it may be one thousand or five thousand—and if the revenue authorities are well disposed to the sawkars or the superior holders they can inflict penalty to the extent of one-fourth of the total amount and give the superior holder what even the civil courts will be very unwilling to give him.

My object in moving this bill is to take away this provision of penalty and I am leaving at present the provision as to the grant of interest. The revenue authorities can grant interest at the usual rate but the only thing that I wish to amend is the provision as regards penalty.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Does any honourable member object to leave being granted to introduce the bill?

Sardar G. N. MUJUMDAR (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): Sir, I rise to oppose the motion for leave to introduce this bill. As far as my experience with regard to the collection of rent or land revenue and recovery of arrears in Inam villages goes, I submit that it would be a great hardship on the inamdars and superior holders if this provision of $\frac{1}{4}$ th fine is done away with. Many tenants are in the habit of prolonging payment and the inamdars and superior holders have got one remedy, namely, the filing of assistance suits. For Government, there are many ways of recovering their arrears, but the inamdars and superior holders have got only one remedy which I have just stated. The tenant is given sufficient time to pay the arrears. He is served with a notice of ten days before the date is fixed for inquiry. If he does not pay the arrears even on the day so fixed, then only the penalty is in some cases imposed upon him. Then again the rules of suspension and remission also go much to help the tenant in the payment of arrears. If this provision for the imposition of fine is taken away, then the tenants or inferior holders will be naturally induced to postpone the payment of rent or arrears indefinitely. Therefore, I strongly oppose the motion for leave to introduce this bill.

Mr. R. D. SHINDE (Nasik District): Sir, in reply I have got only one thing to say that the superior holders, the landlords, are put in a different position from that of any other ordinary creditors. Government give them the facility of having their arrears recovered as arrears of land revenue through the Government authorities. This is a sufficient privilege and the clause which I want to eliminate will remove a serious inconvenience which has been felt so long.

A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND THE BOMBAY TOWN PLANNING ACT, 1915.

(Motion for leave to introduce the bill.)

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): Sir, I beg leave of the House to introduce the bill further to amend the Bombay Town Planning Act, 1915.

Under the existing Act, all sorts of restrictions are put on the rights of persons whose lands happen to be included in a town-planning scheme in order to benefit the local body concerned. Under the present Act, the contribution to be levied by the local authority on each plot is to be calculated on the basis of the market value of such plot "at the date on which such local authority made a declaration of intention to make a Town-planning Scheme", and the market-value of such plot "estimated on the assumption that the Town Planning Scheme has been completed". The owner is to give half of such excess to the local authority towards meeting the costs of the scheme. This is really a great hardship so far as the landlords are concerned.

Secondly, the constitution of the tribunal of arbitration and the powers conferred on it are not in consonance with the spirit in which an arbitration is generally carried out. The constitution of the tribunal is such that it is highly detrimental to the interest of the landlords. It is absolutely necessary in the interests of justice and fairplay that the landlords also should have some representation on the tribunal of arbitration.

Thirdly, so far as the tribunal is concerned, the president of the tribunal is given more powers than the other members thereof. The most surprising feature of this tribunal is that the arbitrator himself, upon whose decision the tribunal is to sit in judgment, is a member of that tribunal. I submit that the Act requires to be amended in this behalf.

One more defect is that at present the proceedings of the tribunal are not subject to any rules or regulations. My amendment is that the proceedings should be governed by the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. As there are large interests involved in town-planning schemes, it is advisable to give a right of appeal against the decision of the tribunal. The above are some of the amendments embodied in my amending bill. I beg of this House to grant me leave to introduce my bill.

Question proposed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Does any honourable member object?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, as this is only a motion for leave to introduce the bill, Government do not propose to oppose it. Thereby it should not be inferred that Government are in favour of it either now or hereafter.

Question put and carried.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR: I beg to introduce the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The bill is introduced.

A BILL TO AMEND SECTION 80 OF THE BOMBAY LOCAL BOARDS ACT.

(Motion for leave to introduce the bill.)

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI (East Khandesh District): Sir, I beg leave of the House to introduce the bill to amend section 80 of the Bombay Local Boards Act.

Sir, section 80 of the Local Boards Act runs as follows:

“In every district the expenditure from the local fund for educational purposes as defined in clauses (d) and (l) of section 50 shall be made by the district local board only or by such authority as may be prescribed in any enactment for the time-being in force, and for this purpose a sum equal to not less than one-third of the revenue described in clauses (b) and (c) of section 75 shall be set apart by the said board for expenditure by it on the said purpose (after deducting the sum or sums described in sub-section (1) of section 79):”

[Mr. L. S. Chaudhari]

Now, Sir, the present bill wants to amend this section which I have just read out. The principal clause of the bill runs as follows :

"In section 80 of the Bombay Local Boards Act of 1923 substitute the words 'Not more than one-fifth' in place of the words 'Not less than one-third'."

The only amendment that is proposed is the substitution of the word "less" for the word "more", and in place of "one-third" the substitution of "one-fifth". It is a very small amendment. Here, it might be asked what is the propriety of introducing this bill at this time, when the Act itself was discussed in this very House a year and a half ago? But, at that time, the whole policy of the Act was under consideration and the effects of section 80 attracted very little attention from the House. I assign three reasons for introducing this bill at the present juncture. First of all, when the Act was discussed, section 80 received very little attention. Secondly, the very fact that the honourable member in charge of Local Self-Government convened meetings of the presidents of local boards twice to consider the adequacy or otherwise of the resources of the district local boards is in itself sufficient proof of the fact that the burden on the local boards should be reduced. Thirdly, the very fact that this House consists of altogether new members shows that they should have an opportunity of recording their views regarding the execution and the effects of section 80.

In order to make out a prima facie case in support of my bill, I shall refer to some statistics in my district.....

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : It is one of the richest districts.

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI : I do not plead on behalf of my district only, but I plead on behalf of all districts. As I have found it difficult to get the money in my district local board for compulsory primary education—and it is supposed to be a rich district—much more difficult would it be for the other district local boards to defray the charges of extra expenditure that will be required for primary education. The total population of my district is 1,075,837. On an average, nearly 15 per cent. of this population ought to be considered as children of school-going age. That comes to nearly.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Do I understand that the honourable member wants to put an additional burden on Government?

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI : No, Sir. I want to request the House to consider the position in which we are at present placed. According to this calculation 70,722 of the total population will be the number of children who will be required to be brought under the execution of this Act. Taking away from this number the present boys of school-going age who are already in school, namely 24,140, we have to make provision for 56,000 and odd children. Now, taking into consideration the total cost required for educating one boy, which is nearly Rs. 15 per head, I think the total expenditure comes to Rs. 10 lakhs. Of course this amount of Rs. 10 lakhs includes the pay of the teachers, their pension allowances, and the maintenance of the supervising staff. In estimating this sum of Rs. 10 lakhs, I have not taken into account the grants which the district local board shall have to make for building school houses. The item of Rs. 10 lakhs does not comprise the complete expenditure. Besides, the question of girls' education is totally excluded from this consideration. Confining myself to the education of boys of school-going age, that is between the ages of 6 and 11, the total extra expenditure for primary education will be Rs. 10 lakhs or something more, because we shall have to make some provision for building grants. Of this extra total expenditure of Rs. 12 lakhs, under the present arrangement, the district local board will have to spend one-third. That comes to about Rs. 4 lakhs. Looking to the sources of revenue of the district local boards, we have been given some 11 heads of revenue, and the power of increasing the local cess to its maximum of 2 annas per rupee. The district local board of East Khandesh have formulated a scheme of expansion of primary education and we have appointed a committee of our board, who have come to the conclusion that at least a sum of Rs. 12 lakhs will be required to meet this extra expenditure. We have increased the local cess by one-half anna, and thereby we have realised Rs. 1,17,000. But even assuming that we increase it to its maximum extent under the power with which we have been invested under the District Local Boards Act, we shall realise at the most Rs. 2,33,000. So, there will be a deficit of Rs. 1,66,000. Whence are we to get this deficit? (An Honourable Member: Tax yourself.) That is the only remedy. But how are we to do it? We have been given 11 heads of revenue under the District Local Boards Act, but all of them are barren items, because we have gone through each of them very carefully, and we find, as was remarked by the honourable member Mr. Trivedi, who was a member of this Council, that the cost of recovering all these revenues under these heads is more than the actual return. Even taking it for granted that we have tried all these heads of revenue, we shall not be in a position to realise the sum of Rs. 1,66,000 to make up the deficit. Under these circumstances, I would request the House that they will grant me leave to introduce this bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The question is that leave be granted to introduce a Bill to amend the Bombay Local Boards Act VI of 1923. Does any honourable member wish to object? (No honourable member objected.) As nobody objects, leave is granted to introduce the bill.

Mr. L. S. CHAUDHARI: I beg to introduce the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The bill is introduced.

A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND THE CATTLE TRESPASS ACT, 1871.

(Motion for leave to introduce the bill.)

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN (Ahmedabad District): Mr. President, I beg to ask for leave of the House to introduce my bill further to amend the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871. In the October session of the Council,

[Mr. J. C. Swaminarayan]

Government introduced a bill to amend the Cattle Trespass Act, the powers under sections 4, 5, 6, 12, 14 and 17 were transferred to village panchayats by the amending Act of 1920. The original Act provides that the village patel is ex-officio pound-keeper. Now, in village panchayats an anomalous position arose, according to which the village patel himself may be the sar-panch, that is to say, the head of the village panchayat, and he would be the servant of the village panchayat at the same time in his capacity as the pound-keeper. To remove that anomaly, Government amended the original Act in the October session. That was passed and became an Act. Now, I want to add a further proviso in the Act, by which similar power will be granted to municipalities. Now, powers under sections 4, 5, 6, 12, 14 and 17 of the Cattle Trespass Act of 1871, have been transferred to various municipalities long ago, but on account of the provision of the village patel as ex-officio pound-keeper in the original Act, there is cause for trouble in some municipalities. The municipalities on the advice of the Government themselves appointed their own pound-keepers, while the ex-officio patel had established his right as pound-keeper by seeking the assistance of the court. Now, an anomaly, corresponding to the anomaly in the village panchayats, arose in this case also. The village patels are councillors of municipalities, and, as ex-officio pound-keepers, they would at the same time become subordinates of the municipalities. Now, the Municipal Act itself provides that a subordinate of the municipality cannot be a municipal councillor. To remove this anomaly, I have brought this bill for investing the municipalities with the powers of appointing their own pound-keepers.

Question put, that leave be granted to introduce the bill, and carried.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN: Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill further to amend the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871, as further amended.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The bill is introduced.

A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND BOMBAY ACT III OF 1874 (BOMBAY HEREDITARY OFFICES ACT).

(Motion for leave to introduce the bill.)

Mr. D. R. PATIL (East Khandesh District): Mr. President, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend Bombay Act III of 1874 (Bombay Hereditary Offices Act), which is known as the Watan Act. I want to effect amendments only in two sections, namely, sections 60 and 61. For the information of the House I shall at the outset read section 60 and show in what way I want to amend that section and why. Section 60 reads as follows:

"When any representative watandar or any deputy or substitute appointed by him is convicted by a Criminal Court not inferior to a court of sessions of any offence in the discharge of his official duties, or of any of the offences specified in the second schedule or of the abetment of any such offence, and such conviction is not subsequently reversed or quashed, the Governor in Council may direct the forfeiture of the whole or of any part of any watan in which he has an interest. Such forfeiture may be either absolute or for such period as the Governor in Council thinks fit."

[Mr. D. R. Patil]

My amendment to section 60 seeks to lay down that the representative watandar should not have his watan forfeited either wholly or in part for the misconduct of a deputy appointed by him. Sir, we know very well that when a representative watandar recommends a deputy, Government does not blindly acquiesce in it. As soon as a deputy is recommended, the Assistant Collector or the Collector sends for the report of the mamlatdar and gets some sort of information from the police, and only when that officer is satisfied that the deputy is a competent man the nomination is accepted. If that is so and, every precaution is taken by Government before the deputy is accepted, I do not see any earthly reason why the responsibility for the misconduct of the deputy should be fastened on the original watandar and his watan should be liable to be forfeited wholly or partly. I beg to suggest that this hardship imposed on the original watandar for the misconduct of the deputy is not proper, and therefore it should be removed.

Now, Sir, I turn to section 61 to which I want to effect an amendment. Section 61 reads as follows :

"All deputies appointed under this Act shall be subject to the same rules in the performance of the duties of their offices, and to the same penalties, except as otherwise provided as the representative watandars themselves are subject to when officiating, and in the case specified in section 58 of this Act, it shall be lawful for Government to direct the forfeiture of the life interest in the watan of the representative watandar entitled to officiate, whether the officiator guilty of misconduct be such representative watandar himself or a deputy appointed by him."

As regards this section also I beg to submit that the hardship which is imposed on the original watandar for the misconduct of the deputy should be removed. The same reasoning which I put forth as regards the amendment of section 60 applies to this section also. Now, I may tell one thing to this honourable House. About three years ago there was a conference of the patils of the whole presidency when His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales visited Poona. In that conference a resolution was passed that the hardships imposed on the watandar for the misconduct of his deputy should be removed, and that resolution was sent to Government for action. I do not know whether Government have received that resolution. Whatever that may be, I can understand, Sir, that according to Western standards of civilization a man who commits an offence should be punished. But I cannot understand why a man should be punished for the fault of another. The whole object of mine in bringing forward the amendments to these two sections is only based on this principle that a man should not be punished for an offence committed not by himself but by another ; A should not be punished for B's misconduct. This is my only object in bringing forward this bill.

Question proposed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Does any honourable member object ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Sir, I only wish to point out that the fact that Government do not oppose the introduction of the bill should not be taken to mean that they approve of its principles.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I think that is clearly understood. It does not bind anybody.

Question put and leave to introduce the bill granted.

Mr. D. R. PATIL : Sir, I beg to introduce the bill further to amend Bombay Act III of 1874.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The bill is introduced.

A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND BOMBAY ACT VIII OF 1867, AN ACT FOR THE REGULATION OF THE VILLAGE POLICE IN THE PRESIDENCY OF BOMBAY.

(Motion for leave to introduce the bill.)

Mr. D. R. PATIL (East Khandesh District) : Sir, I beg leave to introduce a Bill further to amend Bombay Act VIII of 1867, an Act for the Regulation of the Village Police in the Presidency of Bombay. Now Sir, the amendment which I propose is very simple and very reasonable, and I do not think it requires a long speech from me to induce the House to accept it. There are some two sections of Bombay Act VIII of 1867, namely, sections 14 and 15. Under section 14 a police patel, in the case of a petty assault, or abuse, has power to punish the guilty person, and the only punishment is confinement in a chavdi extending to 48 hours. Now, if we look at section 15, we find that even in the case of a theft, an offence more serious than petty assault or abuse, punishment is fine or confinement in a chavdi. The bill proposes to remove this anomaly and proposes to give the police patil an option to impose a fine for petty assault or a abuse.

Question proposed and leave to introduce the bill granted.

Mr. D. R. PATIL : Sir, I beg to introduce the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The bill is introduced.

MOTIONS TO AMEND STANDING ORDERS.

(Report of the select committee on Motions Nos. III to VIII of 1924.)

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I present the report* of the select committee (on Motions Nos. III to VIII of 1924 to amend the Standing Orders.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The report of the select committee is presented.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I move the second reading of the amendments as presented by the select committee, and I do so, Sir, subject to a minute of dissent of mine which raises the question of two of the amendments proposed by the select committee in respect of which unfortunately I found myself opposed to the views of the majority.

*Vide Appendix G.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I do not know whether it would not be better to get the motion moved by one of the members who have signed the majority recommendations.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I said, Sir, I would move the second reading, but I have to point out that I did dissent on two points. I do not wish to raise them now. I should raise them when the clause by clause reading comes up for discussion, but I mention the fact in case you might think, Sir, that it might be more proper for some one else to move the second reading who was so fortunate as not to dissent at all.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I think it would be much preferable if some member from among those who have not made any dissenting minute should propose the second reading. This is not a Government Bill. This assumes the nature of a bill under our rules and Standing Orders. The measure was initiated by non-official members by notices for the amendment of Standing Orders. If it had been a Government bill, the difficulty would have been there, of course, but this is a purely non-official business and I would prefer to ask whether any one of those members who have not made a dissenting minute desires to move the second reading. I think the honourable member Mr. Baptista is one of them.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA (Bombay City, North) : I merely formally take the responsibility of moving the second reading.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member has agreed with all the recommendations of the select committee. That is why I am asking him whether he would move the second reading.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA : I move, Sir, as one of the members of the select committee who has not made a dissenting minute, but.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : If the honourable member does not want to move it, I will ask somebody else to move it. Perhaps the honourable member Mr. Nariman or the honourable member Mr. Surve may like to do so.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North) : Mr. President, I move the second reading of the Standing Orders as recommended by the select committee.

Second reading. Standing Orders read a second time. Question put and agreed to.

Standing Orders, as amended, read clause by clause.

"Chapter IV, Order I : Add.—2 (B) Provided that with the permission of the president a member may move any of the resolutions that stand in his name, whatever their order on the agenda be ; but no such permission shall be given unless 24 hours' notice has been given to the Government Member in charge, if he so desires."

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Mr President, I am sorry that I must oppose this particular amendment. This is the first point on which I was unfortunately not in agreement with the other members (the majority of the members) of the select committee. The effect, Sir, of this amendment is to reduce the notice which is allowed for resolutions from 15 days to 24 hours. It is, Sir, impractical that any resolution should be properly discussed if the notice required is only 24 hours. It is quite impossible for the responsible departments to collect the necessary information to lay the facts before the House and to ensure that the resolution shall be fully and properly discussed if the departments have only 24 hours' notice. The present rule requires 15 days' notice of a resolution and the rules as to priority of resolutions provide that eight days before the sessions there shall be a ballot for priority. The rules further provided that when that priority has been established, the resolution must be moved in that order. The member who has given notice of several resolutions, having put them in the order in which he thinks they should be moved, is bound by that order and is not permitted to alter that order. So that, Sir, under the present rules 8 days before the session notice is given of those resolutions which honourable members wish to move as their first resolution and it therefore gives sufficient time to go into those particular resolutions to obtain the materials for laying the facts before the House for deciding whether the resolutions can be accepted or whether they cannot be accepted, and for putting the whole facts before the House. But, as a matter of fact, the number of resolutions of which notices are given is so very large that the rule which provides 15 days' notice is of little practical effect. So many as 150 or 200 resolutions are very often notified, and it was because there were so many resolutions notified that the subsidiary rule was introduced providing that each member giving notice of several resolutions should decide 8 days before the session which was the particular resolution which he was particularly fond of, and which he wanted to move first, so that notice could be given to the department concerned a reasonable time beforehand, to get the facts relating to that particular resolution. So that, although there was a formal notice of these 200 resolutions 15 days before, it was not of very much practical use to the department. There was a real practical notice by the ballot 8 days before which did enable them to get together materials to place the whole facts before the House. It is now proposed, Sir, that notwithstanding the honourable member having decided which was his pet resolution and so having led the department to collect all the facts for him on that resolution, and notwithstanding that all this has been done, he is to be at liberty at any time subsequently to change his mind and say: No, that first resolution I do not much care about, I do not care about the second, or third or fourth or fifth and sixth, and some honourable members have given us notice of one dozen resolutions, and some one of them may say it is the very last one that I really wanted, and within 24 hours he tells us that the 12th resolution is the one which he wants discussion on, and in 24 hours the department has to give all the information necessary for that resolution. It is not practically possible, Sir, and I think it would not be in the interest of honourable members to pass this amendment as it stands, because it would not enable any of these subsequent resolutions to be properly discussed and argued in this House. I submit, Sir, that the rules ought, therefore, to remain as they are. The rules while giving a formal notice of 15 days give a practical notice of 8 days and even that,

[Sir Maurice Hayward]

[Sir Maurice Hayward]

Sir, is short enough, but they do give a practical notice and it enables us to prepare for these resolutions. Fifteens days, Sir, is the ordinary time in all other assemblies. Fifteen days' notice is the ordinary time in the House of Commons and no one in the House of Commons would be permitted to move any resolution under 15 days' notice. And therefore, Sir, I think it is not only an impracticable proposition, but it is a departure from the procedure recognised in all legislative bodies to reduce notice to 24 hours. I hope, Sir, in view of this explanation of the impracticability of the proposed amendment, and of the departure from all the precedence, that this particular amendment will not be sanctioned by this honourable House.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN (Bombay City, South): Sir, I rise to support the amendment, and I really did not expect the opposition, any serious opposition, that the Honourable the Home Member has put forward to this very modest suggestion and a modest demand. I should have expected, Sir, that moving of resolutions is such a limited privilege, such a scanty privilege, given to the non-official side of the House that anything that removes the restriction and anything that gives a more generous construction to the moving of these resolutions to non-official side would be supported. Now, Sir, so far as the moving of resolutions is concerned, if you consider the privilege how scanty it is, you will see, Sir, that during the last three years the non-official members have hardly got a chance of moving more than one resolution at a time during the whole period. That is the privilege that we are supposed to enjoy, and even in that restricted privilege when we try to remove the obstacles in the way of non-officials, I cannot understand the obstructive policy adopted by the Government benches in retaining these restrictions. The Honourable the Home Member has said that 24 hours are not sufficient for them to be ready with the reply on the part of Government to these resolutions. Now, Sir, if they say that 24 hours are not sufficient they may make it 48 hours or three days, but I cannot understand the reason when they oppose this motion in toto without coming to any reasonable solution. This opposition I say, Sir, is unreasonable. What we ask for is only a reasonable resolution, because in the course of the short experience we have found that we could hardly reach more than two or three resolutions, the time allotted to resolutions being very limited. In the last session at Poona we experienced that the first or second resolutions in the course of time by means of change of circumstances may become superfluous and the second or third may on account of the change of the circumstances become more important. Many circumstances may change after the notice is given, new circumstances may arise, and several things might happen which may necessitate that the first resolution may become superfluous and the third may become more important. But your rules restrict us although the circumstances have changed and from your point of view the second and third resolution would be possible, still your notice is there and you must stick to it. I cannot understand the reasonableness of this opposition. Even the last time we found, the non-official benches found, that a certain resolution set in the name of my honourable friend Dr. Velkar asking for an inquiry into the working of the civil hospital of Karachi was more important than resolution No. 1 which referred to the Lee Commission because the Assembly had passed the Lee Commission resolution, and there was another resolution also tabled, and therefore so far as the non-official side was concerned it was more important, namely, the resolution about the inquiry into the working of the Civil Hospital, Karachi, and from the public point of view we wanted it to be discussed then, but still I found that the Honourable Minister in charge would not budge an inch, he would not consent to that resolution being moved out of its turn. Of course we could understand the reason of his obstruction. It was because he did not want the facts to be brought before us.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member need not go into the details of the resolution. He is not making a speech on that resolution.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN: I am only illustrating the point by showing how my honourable friend Dr. Velkar's resolution was not allowed to be discussed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You can do so without going into minute details.

Mr. G. A. THOMAS: Sir, I rise to a point of order. I see a stranger in the House.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. Strangers are not allowed on the floor of the House.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN: Therefore, I say from various circumstances and points it may happen that the first resolution may lose its importance and the second and the third will become more important. I am given to understand that this obstructive rule has been brought into force very recently, and that it was not in existence during the time of Sir Narayan Chandavarkar. Then, it was left to the honourable member to select the resolution he wanted to move out of the resolutions he had given notice. I do not know of any deliberative body where the choice is not left to the mover as to which resolution he should move: The notice of 15 days is there and the Government benches are supposed to prepare themselves and to be ready with all the business placed on the agenda. Therefore, 24 hours' notice is quite sufficient for them. I therefore hope that this obstruction on the part of the Government will be removed and the reasonable amendment proposed by this side of the House will be accepted.

Mr. V. A. GRANTHAM (Bombay Chamber of Commerce): Sir, the honourable member for Bombay, South, who has just spoken, has said a great deal about the privileges of the House which are lost by the opposition of Government. It might be a privilege to the mover of the resolution to choose which of his resolutions he wishes to move. But it would be no privilege to the other unfortunate members of the House who would have no time to study the subject so as to be in a position to offer properly considered opinions. I am not dealing with this question from the Government point of view, but I am looking at it purely from the point of view of a private member. The honourable member says that even 24 hours' notice would be sufficient. But I would point out that we are here to represent our constituencies and not merely as private members, and surely it would be impossible for us to consult our constituencies and ascertain their opinions within that time. Even in the House of Commons a member has to give proper notice in such matters even though there exists there proper party organization which enables members of the House to deal with matters of this sort ably and intelligently. Here in this House there are a number of scattered parties and units: there is no proper party organization; and consequently we cannot possibly deal with our business as efficiently as is done in the House of Commons. It is quite impossible for an individual member to study properly even at 15 days' notice the whole series of resolutions, that are invariably put forward. I therefore oppose the amendment.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): Sir, I rise to support the amendment which has been accepted by the select committee. I must say that I feel considerably disappointed at the report of the select committee, although I support that report as the only thing that can be done under the circumstances. I do not mind mentioning to the House that I was one of those who gave notice of these amendments. I did so after consulting over 20 members including some members of the last Council, who have had considerable experience of this House and who were of opinion that these amendments were urgent. I can understand the Government opposing these amendments, for the simple reason that they enlarge the liberties and privileges of this House, and may cause a certain amount of inconvenience to the Government. But, I would say, Sir, that Government should not have minded a little inconvenience. Out of the several amendments I suggested, I find that only a few have been allowed by the select committee. I am surprised to find, however that out of these few that have been allowed, the very first one is being strongly opposed by the Government and the Leader of the House.

What does this amendment propose to do? I will illustrate it. Supposing three resolutions stand in my name and at the time when they come to be moved a number of things have occurred during the interval by reason of which my object in moving that resolution has been secured and it becomes unnecessary to move that resolution, then the amendment provides that I may move another resolution standing in my name. The agitation I want to make in this House and the stir I want to create here may have been secured by reason of many incidents which have happened during that interval; I want, under these circumstances, the privilege, after 24 hours' notice, to move another resolution standing in my name, subject to the permission of the President. The Hon'ble Leader of the House stated that it would cause considerable inconvenience to Government. My answer to that is that Government get fifteen days' notice—fifteen days' previous to the commencement of the session. That ought to suffice. The Government departments are so well manned—and we pay the Secretaries such high salaries—that they should be ready with all information within a fortnight's time. Government are claiming to act like a lawyer relying on the plea that the case should not be taken out of its turn as the brief was delivered late. So he has not studied the case and would prefer to adhere to the order in the cause list. Government cannot do so. Government have no excuse of that kind. After a fortnight's notice ending with the commencement of the session they should be ready to go on with any resolution.

Another inconvenience felt by honourable members which I want to avoid by this amendment is this. The number of days for non-official business is very few under our present arrangements. We do not get through even 2 dozen resolutions in the course of the whole year. I do not think I am exaggerating (Some Honourable Members: No, no). Besides it is difficult to catch the ballot. Therefore, the simple device which my party has found very successful is to give notice, in order to catch the ballot successfully, of the same resolution in the name of say about ten people. Our secretary sends notices accordingly, of the same resolution in the name of ten people. All these ten people are not, however, equally competent to speak on the resolution. I shall take, for instance, the case of the resolution on the Lee Commission report. Nearly 6 or 7 members gave notice of the same resolution in order to catch the ballot successfully. If, for instance, that resolution on the Lee Commission comes on the effect of my amendment will be that only that honourable member who has made a special study of the subject and is in consequence competent to speak on the subject will move the resolution and not necessarily the man in whose name that resolution stands. He may pass on to some resolution on which he is competent to speak. Is it not an advantage to the House that by reason of such an arrangement, the most competent man, qualified by reason of his knowledge, and other qualifications will alone move a resolution? Under the present rules, the order of the resolutions is determined not by the relative competence of the nominal mover to speak on the merits of the resolutions, but by the exigencies of the ballot. If the House insists upon retaining the present rules, the result will be that it will force a man to move some resolution which stands in his name but about which he is not an adept, and the obvious disadvantage will be that he will not be able to help the House to form a correct decision by reason of his competent handling of the subject. Are we going to waste the time of the House in this way? Let us suppose that I had given notice of a resolution on Sukkur Barrage. Would the House insist for that reason upon my moving the resolution, or would it prefer that I gave the opportunity to my honourable friends Mr. Adwani or the honourable member the Deputy President who are far more competent to speak on that subject?

The second advantage is this. My honourable friends will bear me out that very often 8 or 10 days pass before these non-official resolutions are reached. During this session, e.g., nearly a month passed before the resolutions were reached. During these intervals a number of things occur which alter the circumstances under which these resolutions are given notice of. Very often debates take place, explanations are given, questions are asked, satisfaction is obtained, and altogether the circumstances change, under which the relative importance of the resolutions also changes. One resolution becomes more important than another, some resolution becomes unnecessary, or the member does not wish to move his resolution, because his object in tabling that resolution has been served in consequence of some explanation and satisfaction which have been obtained during the interval. Surely, the House ought to allow for some kind of provision, under which all these altered circumstances can be taken note of. Otherwise, we will be subjected to one stereotyped rule that he whose name stands over certain resolution must move the same exactly in the order in which they stand. Why make our rules as unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians? This is a matter to be determined entirely by the convenience of the House, and I cannot understand a perfect Government as this Government claims to be, with all their highly paid Secretaries behind them and the Secretariat only within three minutes' drive by a motor car from here, coming forward like an unprepared pleader, and wanting to have longer notice. Is this a court of law where the cases are notified in a particular order and have to be taken up in that order only? That may be all right for a pettifogging lawyer in a court. But why should a Government like the present one which has got all its Secretaries at its beck and call,—those gentlemen whom I see in the second row opposite, who are said to be capable of running any Government in this world—put forward that kind of excuse? Why should Government say “You have given notice that you would move a particular resolution first; we relied on that, and now if you are going to move the fifth resolution first, it will cause us a great deal of inconvenience”? If that is so, why do Government want all this paraphernalia of Secretaries, if they cannot keep ready the necessary information on a resolution, with the notice of a fortnight before the commencement of the Session? I will frankly own that there may be some inconvenience to Government in fact, this side of the House can never claim any privilege without causing some interference with or inconvenience to the other side—but I do submit in all seriousness that, in a matter of this kind, Government ought to take larger views, and not mind some slight inconvenience that may be caused to them.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL: Sir, the Honourable the Leader of the House has explained so fully the difficulties of Government in dealing with resolutions of this character that I do not wish to refer to that point; but I should like to refer to the question of the provisions on this subject in other Legislative Councils and in the Legislative Assembly. The honourable gentleman who moved the amendment referred, I understood, to some other Councils. He said that in some other Councils there was a similar provision. Well, Sir, I have looked up the provisions of all the other Councils on the subject, but I do not find anything of that character in any Council. If he would refer us to any Council where there is a provision of this character, that 24 hours' notice is sufficient, we shall be glad to look it up; but I do not think he will find that in any.....

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : I referred to this Council.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL : I do not understand that either. There was no such provision in our Standing Orders in the beginning, and there have not been any changes on the point since the previous President was in the Chair. The present provision has been in the Standing Orders from the beginning. In this connection, I may refer to the practice in the Legislative Assembly, on which our Rules and Standing Orders have been framed. In the Assembly the rule runs as follows : —

“Not less than seventeen days before each day allotted for the disposal of non-official business, the Secretary will cause to be placed in the Assembly Office a numbered list.”

Two days are then given during which any member who wishes to give or has given notice of a resolution may have his name entered against one number only. That is to say, the ballot takes place 15 days before the date on which the resolution is to be discussed, and the resolutions are selected. Finally, the rule runs as follows : —

“Provided that he shall then and there specify such Bill or Bills or such resolution.”

Therefore, in the Assembly not merely 8 days but 15 days are given, and there is no provision there of any kind to the effect that members can change the order of the resolutions afterwards. Why should this Council allow only one day's notice, while in the Assembly and in the other Councils they have got 15 days' notice? Surely, the burden of proof lies very strongly on the side of those who say that the time should be reduced from 15 days to simply one day.

Then the honourable the Leader of the Swaraj party went on to discuss the cases in courts. He apparently referred to the practice in courts where you find all the cases put down in a certain order. There you do not find that case No. 15 is taken up before case No. 1.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : I said that is all right in a court of law.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL : I would follow the courts in that respect. But the honourable member, I think, has made a mistake in another point, if I may say so. He refers to the fact, if I understood him right, that if one member has put down a resolution, some other member cannot move that resolution instead of the honourable member who has put it down. There has, however, been an amendment of the Standing Orders on that very point passed by the select committee in the report which we are now considering. I may note in passing that Government have accepted a great many of the amendments which were moved; there are one or two points on which Government members have written minutes of dissent, but a number of other points have been accepted, and where the amendments have not been accepted, they were rejected by the select committee. The particular amendment in question runs as follows : —

“Chapter X, Order 5 (2).—If the member when called on is absent any other member authorised by him in writing in this behalf may, with the permission of the President, move the resolution standing in his name. But if no member has been so authorised, or such permission is not granted, the resolution shall be deemed to have been withdrawn.”

So that if some member puts down a resolution, and he is not interested in the subject, he is not obliged to move it. Some other member can move it. That is specially laid down in the rules, and so that objection does not prevail at all.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : The member may remain absent.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL : He has only got to state in writing " I authorise so and so to move the resolution ", and to withdraw from the room.

Coming to another point made by the mover of the amendment, I understood him to say that, supposing there was some objection to the first resolution, or that it had become useless for some reason or other, the member could move his second resolution. Supposing the first resolution had altogether disappeared, the Honourable the President will allow him to move the second resolution.

Mr. K. F. NARIMAN : No.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL : When the first resolution is washed out altogether, the Honourable the President will have to allow the member to move his second resolution. Another point in regard to resolutions is that Government are under no obligation to accept a resolution. If the member who moves the resolution wishes.....

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : I rise to a point of order. The resolutions which are passed by this House are binding on the Government. That is the ruling which Sir Narayan Chandavarkar has given.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : No ruling can be given which is contrary to law.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL : A resolution is a request, a proposal.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : A recommendation.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL : a recommendation to Government. There is no obligation on Government to carry out the resolution. If a resolution comes before the House at only one day's notice, Government can say " We are not able to consider the matter properly, and we cannot carry out the resolution, because it was not properly discussed in the Council. " I therefore urge strongly that this amendment should not be carried.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : Sir, I rise to oppose the amendment, and I do so in the interest of the private members. I may incidentally remark that my honourable friend on my right has administered eloquent flattery, when it suited him, to the opposite benches. Coming to the amendment, supposing there are 30 resolutions moved by the Swaraj party, each member of the party giving notice of the same resolution, they stand the best chance in the ballot and no one else will have an opportunity to move his resolution, as all the time will be taken up by the Swaraj party. A private member who is not a member of any organised party does not stand any chance as it is. In this particular instance, I think my honourable friend the leader of the Swaraj party has enumerated the difficulties of his party and so has let the cat out of the bag. This amendment is in the interest of the Swaraj party. But those who do not belong to the Swaraj party, such as the Mahomedan members, who unfortunately have no party, must oppose the amendment.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA (Bombay City, North): Sir, I think every facility should be afforded to this House, to discharge its duty as the inquest of the nation. That is also what His Excellency the Governor pointed out in his opening speech. Therefore, I think all of us are agreed, or ought to agree, to facilitate matters so far as it is in our province to do so. Now, Sir, this amendment is one of the matters which should facilitate procedure and discussion in this House. I am afraid my honourable friend Mr. Grantham is under the impression that we may be able to spring a surprise upon him. That is not so. No resolution can be taken up except those which are already there for 15 days. Notice must be given of any proposition for 15 days. There is no change in that requirement, but it is only when the 15 days' notice is satisfied that any action can be taken under the proposed amendment, which would enable a member to take it out of its form now forbidden by the Standing Orders. So that, my honourable friend Mr. Grantham cannot be taken by surprise. He will have as ample a time to consult his constituency as the rest of us. The question again is: Will the Government be taken by surprise? They tell us, so far as I understand them to say, that they do not prepare themselves for all the propositions: they only prepare themselves for a few of those that have got priority of order in this hope that others will not be reached. I think I pointed out in the committee that we can by common agreement drop the first and take up the last one, and thus take the Government by surprise even now. And the House will be justified in dropping the first and taking up the last by common agreement if the attitude of Government is merely obstruction. If they mean to be reasonable there is ample protection in the amendment. Nothing can be done without the permission of the President. I should think that that is a sufficient guarantee. The President will not allow anything which would cause surprise or inconvenience to Government. I am surprised that Government do not rely on the sagacity and discretion of the President. I hope, Sir, Government will yield with grace and adopt this proposition.

On the face of it it appears that 24 hours' notice is inadequate; but we were quite ready to accept any amendment prolonging the period of notice to 2, 3 or 4 days. I believe the Honourable the Home Member remembers that. He moved no amendment to that effect. I hope this was not done in order merely to argue that 24 hours is too short a notice. I hope it was not his intention to strengthen his case and weaken ours by merely dwelling upon 24 hours as ignoring our willingness to make it 3 or 4 days.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I have not changed my views, Sir, in the slightest.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA: I did not expect the Honourable the Home Member to change his views considering the Home Member is not at Home but in exile. But he knows we were ready to extend the time and not insist upon 24 hours' notice only. Let him deny that if he can.

[Mr. J. Baptista]

If the President considers that three days' notice is necessary, then he can fix a day for the resolution so as to give three days. Sir, I think on grounds of reasonableness, on the ground that all of us should co-operate to facilitate the business of this House so far as we can,—and we all recognise that the time allotted is quite inadequate for private business,—I think, Sir, that Government ought to accept this with good grace and rely upon the discretion of the President.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I beg to oppose this amendment, on the ground that it will cause a great deal of injustice to the House. The chief complaint is that the House does not get sufficient days for discussion of private business especially resolutions. It is all the more necessary, therefore, that the little time that they get should be usefully spent and for this it is necessary that the large number of members who want to take part in the debate ought to be thoroughly prepared so that they may be ready to put forward the views of their constituents fully. Sir, the honourable member the leader of the Swaraj party has rightly pointed out that during the course of a year in all about 18 or 20 resolutions only were discussed. But if we look at the agenda, it will be found that some members have given notice of 7, 8 or even 12 resolutions for a session, knowing that they would not have the opportunity of moving more than one resolution. It appears, Sir, that some of the honourable members are in the habit of giving notice of a large number of resolutions in order to be able to put in their election manifestoes that they tabled and had an opportunity of moving so many resolutions, that they had asked so many questions.....

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Sir, I rise to a point of order. Is it quite in order to attribute motives to honourable members saying that their object in giving notice of resolutions is to be able to say at the time of the election that they gave notice of so many resolutions ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The point is perfectly clear. "The use of temperate and decorous language is never more desirable than when a member is canvassing the opinions and conduct of his opponents in debate." "The imputation of bad motives, or motives different from those acknowledged" is clearly out of order.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I submit, Sir, it is not a bad motive to look to your electorate. It is a good motive.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The implication is obvious, that members are trying to mislead the electorates by showing more work than they know they have been able to do.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, they are trying to do their duty by the electorate.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : It means that members give notices of resolutions irrespective of their conviction on the merits that they should have the opportunity to move them, but merely with the object of misleading the electorate at the time of elections. That is really a bad motive.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I trust that the Honourable Minister will say that he had no intention of attributing any bad motives.

The Honourable Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I have no intention of making any insinuation of that sort against honourable members. But, Sir, I had to contest an election in 1923, and in that connection I had to read the election manifestoes of a number of past members who had worked for three years in this Council. I can say from the knowledge of those manifestoes that some of them, at all events, had put down the number of resolutions that they had given notice of and the number of questions that they had put. I think that those members who are sending five or even ten resolutions are doing it with some purpose, and from past experience I thought I had some strong grounds to raise this argument. However, I shall not dwell upon that point any further.

I think that if those honourable members who give notice of a number of resolutions will spend some time in considering which of them are of the greatest importance and indicate, then they will have no occasion at the last moment to change their minds. As to the difficulty placed before the House by the honourable member the leader of the Swaraj party, I think it is a great advantage that the party has in being properly organised, and in that way they can take advantage of the present rules and take up the resolutions that they want to move. A number of members of the party can each give notice of the two or three resolutions that they think are the most important, and when one of them gets the first place in the ballot, he can simply say "I move the resolution", and the other member who has really studied the question can deal with the matter in the best way possible, and in that way a vacancy can be created for the second resolution, the third resolution, the fourth resolution, and so on, and the party can probably, under the present rules and without the help of any amendment, determine which of the resolutions they care for. As to the right of reply also, I think the speakers might anticipate and give replies, so that there will be no great disadvantage. So I submit, Sir, to this House that the amendment is not in the best interests of the debate, because the other members will not be ready and even Government members will find it rather difficult to be ready in so short a time as 24 hours because it is very expensive to collect the information for the resolutions which are obviously not coming forward for discussion. At present, when notices of resolutions are received from members, I ask the Secretary to prepare only the first two resolutions and not to prepare the third and subsequent resolutions because in the ordinary course it can never be expected that those resolutions will come up for discussion that session. If 24 hours' notice be prescribed, then the Government will not be ready, and if it is insisted that Government should be ready on each of the 12 or 13 resolutions tabled by an honourable member, then it will be very costly to collect information. At the same time, I may point out, as has already been pointed out by one honourable member, that convenience of other persons who want to take part in the debate also ought to be consulted and even from their point of view there will be a very great inconvenience to them as they will not be ready to take an intelligent part in the debate. The member who wants to propose a resolution may be ready with that resolution, but the others who are asked to take part in the debate at 24 hours' notice will be at a great disadvantage and in that way the discussion in this House will suffer a great deal. I therefore oppose this amendment.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : I move the closure, Sir. (Honourable Members : Closure, closure.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I see several honourable members standing on their legs. Two days are allowed by Government for non-official business. This is the first item on the agenda paper (excluding private bills). I will allow one more speech and then accept the closure.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : I rise to speak because I was a member of the select committee appointed for the consideration of these Standing Orders and also because, Sir, the discussion of Standing Orders follows the procedure of a bill, and I think, Sir, you ruled that in the case of bills no limitation is to be allowed on speeches.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : No limitation on speeches but I have got perfect power to accept the closure at any time I deem fit to do so.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : I only wish to point out, Sir, that this is very much in the nature of a bill and I think discussion will be useful. Sir, I think the facts that have been stated by the honourable the Legal Remembrancer clearly show that the onus of making out a case lies on those who want to make a change in the existing order of things. We are in very good company, Sir, because in all legislative bodies the rule is that 15 days' notice must be given. I think an honourable member said that either in the Council before this or in the pre-reform Council the practice used to be that a member was allowed to choose any resolution he liked. That, Sir, as you very well know, was not the case and the rules were very strictly followed in the pre-reform Council as well as in the last Council.

Sir, the honourable member the leader of the Swaraj party pointed out the real difficulty which his party apparently suffers from. Well, that was before the minds of the members of the select committee, and it has been very completely provided for in the change that is made in Chapter X, Order 5, which Government have accepted. It does not mean that an honourable member has to be outside this House for the whole day or that his vote may not be available when the resolution comes on to vote. He has simply to be absent from this House for a minute or two, and then anybody could move the resolution on his behalf if he were properly authorised. That, I think, Sir, completely takes away the main, indeed the only, reason why the honourable member wanted a change of these rules. I must point out, Sir, honestly that it will be very difficult for the Government to prepare resolutions at 24 hours' notice. It may not be realised that the number of resolutions has sometimes reached 145. In the present sessions there are 128 resolutions. Some of them are duplicates which have to come out. But there are about 100 resolutions moved by the different members of this House in the present sessions, and on one occasion so many as 47 different members gave notice of resolutions. The House has been very impatient about the answers given by the Government benches to questions. They have always complained that the answer "Information is being called for" or "Enquiry is being made" is most unsatisfactory. This morning, for instance, there were several questions to which an answer of this character had to be given. Now, honourable members can realise—it has been explained before—how much time it takes to get the information from the districts and this relates not to any one particular department but to all departments, and it is so difficult to get the information in time for questions being answered even in a long sessions like the budget session. Honourable members can easily realise how much more time must be required for gathering information from the districts on important matters which are the subject of resolutions. I think, Sir, if the House wants both sides of the case properly presented to it, in order that it may come to proper reasoned decision on it, it must allow sufficient time to both the Secretaries and to the Members to prepare the cases and to place all the facts before the House. It is very well, Sir, to say that highly paid Secretaries and highly paid Ministers or Members must be ready to place any information before the House at any notice however short. Well, what is the practice which is insisted on by practised lawyers, eminent lawyers, like my honourable friend opposite (Mr. M. R. Jayakar)? With all the facility which lawyers have of working up a case without ever looking at any papers and without making any preparation beforehand, if these gentlemen claim in the law court to have the order of business strictly adhered to, I think it is only fair to us humbler individuals and to the secretaries to allow them, Sir, the time necessary to place all the facts relative to a case on which the House can come to a reasoned decision....

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: On a point of information, I may tell my honourable friend that the lawyers get their briefs delivered the previous night at 11 o'clock.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: I see. I do not know that lawyers take their objection only in those cases where the briefs are delivered to them the previous night.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I think objection is sometimes taken even to adjournments.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: In any case the briefs have been most carefully prepared by solicitors beforehand. Sir, to make out really that hardship occurs under the present system, specific instances and stronger reasons will have to be discovered, for the difficulty which my honourable friends opposite pointed out has been fully met by the amendment which, I am afraid, he has lost sight of or perhaps not read. These amendments have been before the House for a very long time. (An Honourable Member: For a fortnight or more.) As it stands, the amendment is very hard and unfair to honourable members.

[Mr. C. V. Mehta]

One last point that was made by my honourable friend Mr. Baptista who saw no harm in the amendment because it is subject to the discretion of the Honourable the President. How is the President going to be guided? The rule will be there and if 24 hours' notice is given, how is the President to use his discretion? It only gives discretion to the President to give permission or not, not to vary the period of notice. I therefore think, Sir, that in these matters no responsibility should be cast upon the President.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City North) : Sir, I should be permitted to mention the difficulties of the non-official members of this House. In the first place the non-official members are scattered all over the presidency and they are not grouped together within the four walls of the Secretariat. The only time that they come here together is on the day session meets. Another difficulty is that the final agenda never reaches the honourable members at their homes, it is sent only about three days before the session meets. There are many honourable members in the mofussil who get their agenda in the pigeon-holes in the library. So the difficulty is the non-official side never gets any notice whatsoever as to which resolution is going to be moved at what time. That is our difficulty. When we meet here, then we might exchange our views and say that some resolution should be treated as a very important one. Now suppose that resolution stands in the name of the first man who is in the ballot, but there the precedence that he has given to that resolution is say 10th, and there is the 15th man in the ballot who has given the same resolution the first place in his list. Now the difficulty would arise that all the resolutions are moved according to the order placed down in the agenda. The first man cannot move that important resolution though all parties in this House may agree that that resolution should be treated as the most important, he cannot move it because it is the fifteenth, and the man who has given that resolution the precedence, the first place, cannot move it because he may never have the chance of moving in this House, because non-official days are so few, so in that case what would happen is that the resolution which was considered as the most important by all the non-official members may never have an opportunity of being placed before this House.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : May I ask the honourable member if priority cannot be asked for?

Mr. A. N. SURVE : I am coming to that point. So the difficulty would be that the important resolution can never be moved. Now about the priority, you see how many difficulties are placed in our way. Only last time and even in the session preceding to that several applications were made and in order to be fair to all the honourable members the Honourable the President has introduced certain rules, that for priority consent of everybody must be obtained, and several other rules also are there. Everybody may not consent to go through that procedure and even then last time when my honourable friend the honourable member Mr. Dev wanted to have a priority for his resolution it was not granted

[Mr. A. N. Surve]

Therefore the priority will not also come to our aid at times. Now as to the point that is made by Government that it creates great difficulties and that it would set up impossibilities, I think, the picture drawn there is a little over-drawn, because the moment the Secretary of the Council receives the notice of a resolution and if it is admitted by the President a copy is at once sent to Government. That is the ordinary practice of our Legislative Council and Government can there easily have more than 15 days' time and they will not at all be prejudiced if they act upon this principle that the moment a notice has been received from the Secretary of the Legislative Council they begin to collect information on it. As a matter of fact I am informed that Government collects information. I am stating this subject to correction that the moment Government receives notice of any resolution they actually begin to collect information from that day. So naturally Government will never be at a disadvantage just as we are.

Then the third point is that during the first two sessions the schedule which is given here at the end was not in existence. I am stating this, subject to correction, because I had not had the time to test whether what I am stating is quite correct. My idea is that this schedule which is given here was introduced at some later stage and in the second session of the reformed Council there have been instances where honourable members have moved resolutions just according to their own choice. So I think that on the whole if the House accepts the majority report no real hardship will be worked against Government and the non-official side will gain what it would get.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Mr. President, I am indebted to my honourable friend opposite for a very frank admission that the amendment proposed would cause very serious inconvenience to the members of the Secretariat. (Mr. M. R. Jayakar : Some inconvenience.) I have exceeded my brief in saying it was very serious—that it would cause some inconvenience to members of the Secretariat and of the Government. I am sorry that my honourable friend the mover was not able also to recognise this inconvenience. That is from lack of that experience which, Sir, is always so evident in the arguments of the honourable member opposite the leader of the Swaraj party. If he had had more experience, he would have agreed with me that there would be considerable inconvenience to the Secretariat and to the Members of Government. I submit, Sir, that it is plain on the face of it that a mere notice of 24 hours is impracticable. You cannot get your case ready within 24 hours. Even the best lawyer, if he gets his briefs at 11 o'clock at night, finds it difficult to get himself ready with all his cases for appearing in the court on the morrow. I have seen eminent lawyers appearing on the original side and laboriously reading out the whole plaint and the written statements and the issues ! Why ? Because he had practically not seen his brief before and required this process to study the case and to get himself ready.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR : Here the rules require that a fortnight's notice should be given of resolutions.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : That has nothing to do with the efforts of a lawyer. I am speaking from my personal experience as to what actually has occurred in the law courts. When I was on the bench I asked a lawyer once why he wasted time reading the whole plaint and the written statements. I was given a hint that it was the practice and was necessary.

I maintain that 24 hours' notice is impracticable also here. If honourable members want to have their resolutions properly discussed, they must maintain the rule of 14 days' notice, which is the rule not only in this House but in other legislative assemblies, including the House of Commons. My honourable friends who spoke in favour of this motion have overlooked altogether the inconvenience to private members, who have got nothing to do with the satanic Government. It is entirely impossible for private members, even for a well-organised Secretariat it is impossible, to study all the 150 resolutions, to master their contents and consult their constituencies as regards the opinion they have to put before the House. This practice of filing so large a number of resolutions does require this strict rule in order to make it practicable for any resolution to be properly discussed in this House. It is the practice here for each member to file a great many resolutions. I should like to put it to them whether it would not be better to restrict themselves to one or two resolutions, carefully selected and carefully got up, which would then have better prospect of being thoroughly discussed and placed before Government. What is the use of filing an enormous number of resolutions a majority of which could not be discussed even if we sat every day of the year including Sundays and Hindu and Mahomedan holidays? This practice of every member putting in a great number of resolutions is directly contrary to the rules of the House of Commons. There they have the ballot, but a member is not allowed to file a dozen resolutions. He is restricted to one resolution or to one bill.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA : Make such a rule.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : It seems to me that, if there is any difficulty in the present arrangement, it is partly due to the fact that all of us have not yet got that experience which has been obtained elsewhere in the matter of bringing resolutions before deliberative assemblies. I submit that so long as we each want to file a dozen resolutions every session, so long there is bound to be the same difficulty. The real way out of the difficulty would be to exercise rather more care in the selection of resolutions which honourable members want to bring up. If that were done, I submit there would be no reason for complaint on the part of any member of this honourable House. If the number of resolutions is reasonable, it would be perfectly easy for honourable members by arrangement among themselves to get priority for the particular resolution which they thought most important. It would be quite possible to do that as they have been doing under the present rules of this honourable House.

Then, I would briefly refer, Sir, to an argument of the honourable member for Bombay, Mr. Baptista, who said that the responsibility in these matters should be laid on the President. I think that has already been answered by the honourable member to my right. I do not think in a matter of this sort it would be right to increase the responsibilities of the President which are already so heavy. It would be very difficult for him to decide whether a resolution would require only 24 hours or longer time to obtain the necessary information. I think it would be wrong and contrary to the general spirit of these orders to put upon him that responsibility which, under the present rules, is left to the head of the particular department of Government. Where members, moreover, want to move a resolution as a matter of urgency, they have got the remedy of moving the adjournment. If that cannot be done, they can arrange for the resolution to be brought up with the consent of the Member of Government in charge of the particular department. There is no difficulty under the present rules, and I submit that if they are altered they will further seriously interfere with the rights of members who get priority in the ballot. The effect of this amendment will be detrimental to the interests of private members who get priority and it would also be detrimental to public debate which would degenerate into a discussion without any due information. It would deprive the debates of all utility and value and would result in snap divisions which could never weigh with the Ministers or Members of Government. I submit, therefore, that this amendment ought not to be allowed by this House.

MARKET PRICE OF SALT.

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they have authority to control the market price of salt where dealers in salt combine to obtain huge profits ?

(b) Are they aware that market price of salt is always higher in Kanara than in most of the remaining districts of the province ?

(c) If so, what are the reasons for such a higher price in Kanara ?

(d) Have Government done anything up till now to stop profiteering in salt trade ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: (a) No. But Government can use palliatives such as the opening of depôts for distributing cheaper salt should such a contingency arise.

(b) No.

(c) Does not arise.

(d) In the past the mere fact that Government were able to open new works was sufficient to keep down prices to a reasonable level. At the present time the salt market is over-stocked and has slumped.

Mr. M. D. KARKI: May I know whether any enquiries have been made as regards the market price of salt in Kanara ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Yes.

Mr. M. D. KARKI: The statement in the administration report for 1923-24 will clearly show that the rate is higher.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Because that report relates to 1923-24. The honourable member's question was "Are they aware that market price of salt is always higher in Kanara than in most of the remaining districts of the province ?" The answer is that is not so.

Mr. M. D. KARKI : For the years ending 1923-24 the rate is higher.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : It may be so. The information supplied by the Collector of Salt showed that it was high for a number of years, but the price was not always higher.

Mr. M. D. KARKI : Talking of the recent five years ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : I think the information has already been supplied to the honourable member.

Mr. M. D. KARKI : What are the reasons for the high price in Kanara ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : I am afraid I have given the honourable member all the information that I possess.

(b) the rate at which the same quantity of timber of that description was sold at Dandeli depôt in Kanara in those years ?

(c) the description and quantity of timber now remaining with the said firm ;

(d) the sum received from them by Government in each of those years ;

(e) the amount, if any, lying with the said firm ?

Mr. M. D. KARKI (Kanara District) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that forest coupes lying within from two to five furlongs from the town limit of Mundgod are closed for grazing and that the forest coupes which have been kept open for grazing lie close to or between the closed forest coupes ?

(b) Are the closed coupes in any way fenced ?

(c) Is it a fact that the coupes which are open for grazing are overgrown with trees and shrubs and contain little or no fodder for grazing ?

(d) Has any minor forest area been assigned for the cattle of Mundgod for grazing, and if so, what is its total extent and the ratio it bears for every head of cattle of the Mundgod town ?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : Inquiry is being made.

(d) the names of the district or localities where such system or systems prevail?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: Information has been called for.

AUCTION SALE OF LIQUOR SHOPS AT AHMEDABAD.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA on behalf of Mr. G. K. MAVALANKAR (Ahmedabad City): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) Whether it is a fact that at the auctions held at Ahmedabad in 1921, the sales of the Behrampur and Saraspur liquor shops were not confirmed by Government?

(b) If so, for what reason?

(c) Whether it is a fact that when these two shops were re-auctioned they were taken up by Mr. Fanibanda's combination for about one-fifth of the amounts originally offered?

(d) Whether it is a fact that at the liquor shop auctions held at Ahmedabad in 1922 four competitors were debarred from bidding provisionally for that year alone?

(e) If so, what was the reason?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: (a) and (b) The auction of these shops was held on 17th March 1921 and when the amount of the bid reached Rs. 27,500 for the Behrampur shop and Rs. 30,300 for the Saraspur shop, further bids were stopped as the Collector considered that the price offered was reasonable. On the Commissioner of Excise informing the Collector that the auction was unrestricted a notice was issued that the two shops would be re-auctioned.

(c) When the shops were re-auctioned they were taken by Mr. E. R. Fanibanda for Rs. 5,200 and Rs. 5,000 respectively, the reason for the low bids being that the picketing movement had then assumed a serious form and the old licensees thought it better to keep out.

(d) and (e) Yes, because the persons were suspected of acting in collusion with the organizers of the picketing movement.

AUCTION SALE OF EXCISE CONTRACT IN 1922.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA on behalf of Mr. G. K. MAVALANKAR (Ahmedabad City): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) Whether it is a fact that at the time of the auction sale of the liquor licenses for 1922 at Ahmedabad the whole license fee was taken instead of in quarterly instalments and that the auction sale was held only a few days before the commencement of the new year? If so, what are the reasons therefor?

(b) Are they aware that the effect of holding the sales so late was that the competitors of the persons already owning shops had no sufficient time to rent shops?

(c) Is it a fact that the Government officers concerned closed some of the liquor shops? If so, why was this done?

(d) Is it a fact that some names were added to the black list shortly before the auction sale? If so, what are the reasons therefor?

(e) Have Government made any enquiries as to whether any combinations existed subsequent to 1918 among any of the bidders for liquor licenses at Ahmedabad? If so, what has been the result of such enquiry and what action, if any, has been taken thereon?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: (a) In view of the severe picketing movement and the open attempts of non-co-operators to boycott auctions and thereby cause loss of revenue to Government it was considered advisable to order full recovery of the vend fee in respect of all important head-quarter town shops in the Ahmedabad District. It was believed that this would lessen the chances of licensees playing into the hands of picketers or neglecting their shops. The auction was held so late as on 28th March 1922 in order to give the public time to consider the orders regarding the newly introduced ration system and in view of the position created by the picketing movement which was then in full swing.

(b) No.

(c) The Jordon Road country spirit shop was closed in response to the representations made more than once by the residents of the locality for its closure.

(d) Yes. The licensees of the Jordon Road shop were black-listed as they appeared to be in league with the organizers of the picketing movement and had committed a deliberate breach of clause 20 of the shop license by taking unauthorised persons into the business.

(e) The old resident licensees formed themselves into a party to guard their own interests. This dates from the commencement of the newly introduced auction system and continues till the present day. It is not possible to prevent such combinations. In this connection the honourable member is referred to the reply given by Government to the next question.

PREVENTION OF COMBINATIONS IN EXCISE CONTRACTS.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA on behalf of Mr. G. K. MAVALANKAR (Ahmedabad City): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they adhere to the policy enunciated in the Government Press Note No. 15080, dated the 13th December 1917?

(b) If so, are they aware that in the sale of liquor licenses held in Ahmedabad in the year 1918, they were bought by a combination as was admitted by the Honourable Mr. G. Carmichael in this Council?

(c) If so, will Government be pleased to state whether the persons in this combination were put on the black list as regards subsequent auctions?

(d) If not, what are the reasons therefor?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state whether they received any complaints regarding the formation of such combinations during 1923-24?

(f) If so, did they make any inquiry into such combinations and, if so, with what result?

(g) What safeguards do Government propose to place on the "auction system" in order to prevent combinations of this nature?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI: (a) It is presumed that the inquiry relates to the policy regarding the prevention of combinations and the exclusion of bad characters from bidding at auctions. If so, the reply is in the affirmative.

(b) Yes. Fifteen out of the 18 shops were bought by licensees who were related to one another.

(c) and (d). The combination referred to was correctly speaking not a syndicate. The bidders were split up into groups or factions and it was not possible to blacklist such parties.

(e) No complaint appears to have been received in 1923-24 but certain complaints were made in 1922.

(f) Yes, an enquiry was made which showed that 5 out of the 6 shops in Ahmedabad City were held by two individuals who had a joint bank account.

(g) The present orders on the subject are as follows:—

"Where there are two or more shops in effective competition with one another all should not be knocked down to a single bidder or to bidders whom the Collector believes to have combined." In the opinion of Government no further safeguard is required.

(b) if so, do Government intend to take steps to restore the control of the cattle pounds to the municipalities?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: No such orders as have been referred to have been issued by the Commissioner, N. D. The only thing that has been pointed out by him to the municipalities concerned is that under the proviso to section 6 of the Cattle Trespass Act, I of 1871, as it stands at present, the police patel must be the ex-officio keeper of the pounds. The question of amending the proviso is under the consideration of Government.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: It is true that the level of sub-soil-water has gone down in parts of North Gujarat including the Kaira district. The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: An order has been placed in India not for 60,000 but for 22,000 tons of Transvaal coal. The undertaking given and which has been fulfilled and will continue to be fulfilled was that the materials of India should be employed as far as possible—that is subject to comparisons of quality, guarantee and price. In this case not only would the price of Indian article have been more, but neither quality nor guarantee of delivery were assured.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN: Will the honourable member refer to the reply which he has given to a question regarding purchase of coal by the Karachi Port Trust, from which it will be seen that the quotations received for first class Bengal coal were much lower than for the South African coal that was purchased by the Port Trust? The quotations for first class Bengal coal were Rs. 22-8-0 per ton; Rs. 23-4-0 per ton; and Rs. 20-4-0 per ton, while for the African coal the quotations were Rs. 27-3-0 per ton, and so forth.

(b) Chharodi Farm since 1919. Willingdon Farm since 1923.

(c) Selection of a pure type is the first essential in cattle breeding and great advance has been made in selecting animals for the purpose at the Chharodi Farm. Work has just begun on the other farm.

(d) The milk of Indian cattle already contains a high percentage of fat. What is required is the improvement of the milking capacity, early maturity and better development of animals, and attention is at present concentrated on this work.

(e) and (f) As systematic breeding has begun only recently, it is too early to get any results.

(g) The farms are primarily meant for cattle breeding and fodder is raised for the use of the animals maintained on them. Experiments are however in progress.

(h) The Northcote farm occupies 2,150 acres of which 101 acres are under cultivation. The area of the other farm is 800 acres of which 50 are set apart for fodder.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : I asked for exact information and the exact percentage, but instead of that in reply to (d) it is stated that milk of Indian cattle already contains a high percentage of fat. Will the Honourable Minister kindly state what is the exact percentage ?

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : I am afraid I cannot.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : But I had asked the question whether the percentage of butter fat has increased.

The Honourable Mr. A. M. K. DEHLAVI : It has not been ascertained.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : May I know whether the Honourable Minister would be satisfied with such a reply from his subordinate officers ?

(b) What the capital outlay is and what Government's contribution in the expenditure for laying pipes is and what is the annual expenditure of the staff engaged for distributing the water supply at this suburban place?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: (a) Water taken in bulk from the Bombay Municipal mains for supply to Salsette is at present paid for at the rate of four annas per thousand gallons. The Bombay Municipality has, however, intimated that a proposal to increase the rate from four annas to five annas per thousand gallons is under the consideration of the Corporation. Water is supplied to consumers at Santa Cruz at Re. 1 per thousand gallons, fractions of that amount being charged for at eight annas per five hundred gallons or fractions thereof.

(b) The capital outlay on the water supply scheme to Santa Cruz and Juhu to end of January 1925 amounts to Rs. 1,74,573 and the work is still in progress. The total estimated amount is Rs. 2,02,499. The whole work has been financed by Government. Only a small portion of the expenditure is to be charged to the Santa Cruz Town Planning Scheme No. 2, the exact amount of which has not yet been settled. The annual expenditure on the maintenance of the system and the establishment engaged therefore amounts to Rs. 23,220 in addition to interest and depreciation charges and losses by leakage.

MOTIONS TO AMEND STANDING ORDERS.

(Further discussion of motions to amend Standing Orders.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The question is that Chapter IV, Order 6 as amended by the select committee do stand part of the Standing Orders. There are two amendments to it. The first is from Mr. V. A. Dabholkar.

Mr. V. A. DABHOLKAR : Sir, the select committee have proposed that in Standing Order IV, 6, after the word 'meeting' the words 'during voting of demands of the annual budget' be added. My amendment is :

Add at the end of the words 'except during voting of demands of the annual budget' the words 'when half an hour shall be allowed.'

Mr. President, the reason why I move this amendment is, that if no question time is allowed on the days devoted for voting of demands there will be accumulation of questions on other days. Only to-day, Sir, we had three lists to go through. The first list was received 15 minutes before the meeting and the rest were received after the proceedings began. In fact, even as it is, the time allotted is not enough. If no time is allotted during the days for voting of demands, then there will be accumulation of all these questions for the rest of the days, and we shall have no time to go through many of the questions and answers. Under these circumstances, I trust the Council will allow half an hour to be devoted to questions and answers on the days allotted for the voting of demands for grants.

Question proposed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member's proposition is that the time for questions and answers should be limited to half an hour instead of one hour.

Mr. Dev has got another amendment. I think we shall deal with all the amendments together and put them to vote separately.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL : Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The notice of this amendment (Mr. Dev's) was received only three days ago.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am allowed to condone the delay. In view of the fact that the select committee's report has to be circulated to honourable members long before the commencement of the sessions, that the sessions commenced on the 19th February and that the select committee's report was not circulated till the 26th February, I have condoned the delay in this case. At the same time, I should like to invite the attention of honourable members to the fact that if they keep on unduly delaying the sending in of amendments such consideration may not be shown to them on each occasion.

Mr. S. S. DEV : Sir, my amendment is :

For the words 'except during voting of demands of the annual budget' substitute 'except when the budget is dealt with by the Council under Rule 27'.

Sir, under Rule 27 the budget is dealt with in two stages ; namely, a general discussion for three days, and the voting of demands for grants for 12 days. I will explain why I move this amendment by taking as an illustration the present sessions of the Council. We know what actually happened during this session. During the three days of the general discussion we had two lists of questions and during the twelve days of voting of demands for grants we had four lists. The four lists took 3 hours and the two lists took one hour and a half. If during the general discussion we had not those two lists, then $1\frac{1}{2}$ hours would have been saved. That means, at least four more members would have been able to take part in the general discussion. Similarly during the twelve days of voting of demands for grants, we could have saved 3 hours if we had not any lists of questions and answers. There was one more calamity during those twelve days: during the 12 days of voting of demands we had two motions for adjournment, and those two motions took 6 hours. Add to these six hours, the three hours taken by the questions lists, we lost 9 hours, which means the working hours of full two days. Therefore, during this session instead of 12 days we had only 10 days for the voting of demands for grants. If we had had those two days more, we could certainly have finished the Police, the Jails and the Administration of Justice and entered into the Household of the Governor, but having lost two days we lost much useful debate. So, my submission to the House is that during these fifteen days, we should not have questions lists. I would take an early opportunity to move that there should be also no motion for adjournment during these 15 days unless the calamity is so great that if the motion is not brought the world would be drowned.....

[Mr. S. S. Dev]

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member knows that no adjournment motion can be allowed unless at least 30 or more members are in favour of it. If members refuse to give leave for an adjournment motion, no adjournment motion can be moved.

Mr. S. S. DEV: That is true, Sir: My submission for the present is that these 15 days should be considered assacred. Questions and answers can be taken up on other days; during these 15 days there should no questions asked and replies given.

Question proposed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: In order to remove any possibility of misunderstanding I will explain to the House what the amendments are. There are three issues before the House. The first issue is that there should be no time allowed for questions during the twelve days allotted for voting of demands for grants. The second issue is that the one hour now allotted should be reduced to half an hour. And the third is that no question time should be allowed not only during the 12 days of voting of demands for grants, but during the whole of the 15 days of the budget discussion. These are the three issues before the House.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Mr. President, I should like to explain our position with regard to the original amendment as proposed by the select committee. We thought, speaking for the official side, that it was a matter to be left entirely to the non-official benches, and the majority, I think, of the members of the select committee agreed to this rule. But I do, of course, recognise that there is something in the proposal to restrict the questions only to half an hour, because there are a great many questions and it would not be convenient to push them all to the end of the session, and I think it is for the honourable members to consider their own convenience whether it would not be sufficient to reduce the question time during the budget to half an hour instead of an hour, so that we could get through the questions and not put them all together in a block at the end. I suppose the result would be that a good many of them which may be ready for answer would not be answered because there would not be time.

With regard to the suggestion of the honourable member for West Khandesh to extend the rule even to the general discussion of the budget, that again, Sir, is entirely a matter for the members of the House to decide. It does not seem to me to make much difference whether the rule applies to the twelve days for demands or to the three days of the general budget discussion also in addition, fifteen days in all. But I think the important question is whether honourable members are going to deprive themselves of the privilege of asking any questions at all during these days. I am inclined to think it would be advisable to allow some time at least—half an hour every day or something like that. I think it would be unwise to leave the questions altogether till the end of the session.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : Are we to speak on the motion or on the amendments ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I will allow discussion on the motion as well as the amendments to save the time of the Council.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD : Mr. President, I am inclined to think that at least half an hour may be given to us for the disposal of these questions, because some of the questions happen to be urgent and very important, and if all are put together or several grouped together, as they were to-day, it is very inconvenient to ask supplementary questions. Therefore, I support the amendment of my honourable friend behind me.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North) : Sir, the amendment suggested by the honourable the nominated member from Bombay (Mr. Dabholkar) should not, I think, be accepted. The reason is that the budget is a very important item and at that time loss of time would be unpardonable. The second thing I should like to point out is that looking at the meagre size that our present answers to questions are assuming, I think there has hardly been any time, except to-day, when more than one hour was ever required. As a matter of fact, it is common experience now-a-days that we go through our questions and answers sometimes in less than half an hour. If that is the present state of affairs, I really do not see any reason why we should deprive ourselves of the very valuable privilege of discussing the budget grants. If we accept the suggestion of the honourable member, we are practically losing our right (of discussing the grants) and the present circumstances do not call for that thing. On this ground I oppose the amendment that is suggested.

As to the other thing, the second amendment proposed by the honourable member Mr. Dev, it is very valuable. But I think the time at our disposal for general discussion of the budget is only three days and it seldom occurs that we have more than one or two question lists in a week. Therefore, even if on one of those three days we lose about half an hour or an hour—that is the only time that we can lose—I do not think much loss will take place. For these reasons, I think both the amendments should be rejected.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Mr. President, I do not quite understand the honourable mover's position. I think he said that both the amendments should be rejected. That would mean that the rule as presented by the select committee should be passed. That would mean allowing the full hour for questions on the general budget discussion days and no questions at all on the demands for grants days. Well, Sir, as I said before, it is really a question for honourable members to decide for themselves, but I think twelve days or a fortnight is rather a long period for honourable members to deprive themselves altogether of the right of asking questions at all. If the replies to questions are so meagre as my honourable friend thinks, that means not very much time will be wasted under the present rules. I should have thought that it would be more to the interest of honourable members to reserve at least half an hour for questions every day, and I can only say that it must be left to them to consider whether it would be wise to deprive themselves of the whole of their right. I should suggest, therefore, their voting for the amendment of half an hour, if they like, half an hour for the whole budget discussion including the general discussion. As the motion is, they can only vote for half an hour on the demands for grants days, and if they want half an hour also on the general budget discussion days, they can do that by a subsequent amendment of the Standing Order.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I will put the honourable member Mr. Dev's amendment first.

Question put:

That the words "except when the budget is dealt with by the Council under Rule 27" be substituted for the words "except during voting of demands of the annual budget".

House divided (by honourable members rising in their seats), 25 for the Ayes; 34 for the Noes. Motion lost.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I will now put Mr. Dabholkar's amendment to the vote which is to the effect that instead of one hour half an hour be allowed during the voting of demands on the annual budget. It is before the House.

Question put. House divided (by honourable members rising in their seats). Ayes 30; Noes 25. Amendment carried.

Chapter IV, Order 6, as amended, ordered to stand part of the Standing Orders.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): Sir, I beg to move:

"S. O. 7 (3) Omit the words 'and of a Bill with its statement of Objects and Reasons published under rule 18'."

"S. O. 7 (ii) Omit from clause (ii) the word 'not' before 'be sent' and omit 'until leave to introduce the Bill has been obtained'."

My object in moving this amendment is to enable all members to have copies of a bill which is to be introduced in the House. Speaking generally, the honourable members get copies of almost all the papers placed before the House for discussion and decision. It is only the bills that are to be introduced which are not circulated among members. It is absolutely necessary that the members should have copies of such bills : otherwise, it is sure to happen as it happened yesterday when the members had to vote on the motions for introducing the bills, namely, to vote upon them one way or the other without knowing as to what they related. I want all the members to read the bills first and then to vote upon them. The Government may raise the objection on the score of additional expenditure for providing the members with copies of the bills. But I think that the expenditure will be quite inappreciable, considering the return of intelligent voting on the part of honourable members. I, therefore, hope the House will accept my amendment.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL : Mr. President, the first part of the amendment is to omit the words "and of a bill with its statement of objects and reasons published under Rule 18". But Rule 18 refers to Government bills, while the honourable member, I believe, refers to private bills. The wording of that rule refers to Government bills which are published and for which leave to introduce is not asked. I think that the first part of the amendment has been moved under a misapprehension and in any case is not necessary. As regards private bills, assuming that the amendment refers to private bills, we take objection on the ground that it is unnecessary to give the additional work both to the Council Secretary's office and the Press. The practice is that we send round copies of bills after leave has been granted to introduce them. It was only yesterday that a bill was not proceeded with though a motion for leave to introduce it had been received. In regard to that bill the Council office and the Press would have had additional amount of work when there was no need for it at all. As a matter of fact leave to introduce a bill is a preliminary stage, and nobody will object to the grant of such leave unless there are members who take a particular interest in the bill, and who will have studied the subject beforehand. It may perhaps be suggested that it is not very much work to the Legislative Council office ; but I submit there is absolutely no reason for taking that trouble. I should like to draw the attention of the House to a bill of which notice for leave to introduce was given by the honourable member Mr. Rahimtoola. I will not go into the details, but I wish to point out—I think the honourable member will have no objection—that that bill consists of 118 clauses covering over 70 pages. It is in connection with the City Improvement Trust. That bill has not come up in the Council because the sanction of the Government of India has not been obtained. Consequently there is no advantage in printing it now. In such a case, it is no good giving trouble to the Press which is already hard worked. Suppose that the honourable member is able to get the sanction of the Government of India and decides to proceed with the bill, what is the effect ? The effect is that he obtains leave to introduce the bill in July and the bill will actually come up before this Council for real consideration, that is the first reading in October. Now I ask the Council what is the good of printing and sending out the bill in February, when it is not going to come on for real consideration till next October. It would absolutely be disadvantageous to the Council. It would be much better that we should wait till July, and then, if leave to introduce is granted, it will be printed and circulated to honourable members. I submit this is really a matter of convenience, and it will be trouble and expense to the Government and particularly to the Press, and it will really be no advantage to honourable members.

There is one other point, and that is that all these amendments, which are being brought in by the honourable member for Poona, were placed before the select committee, a committee consisting of a majority of non-officials and they were not accepted. The proposals which he is bringing forward now are proposals which have been rejected by the select committee and there is no sufficient reason for accepting the amendments.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA (Bombay City, North): Sir, this is a matter that was considered in committee, and the argument that appealed to me decisively was that leave to introduce a bill should as a matter of convention be invariably allowed. It should not be objected to, and be treated as a mere matter of formality; of course, after leave is granted there is no doubt that the bill would be published and circulated. I am very anxious that we should establish that convention. Such a convention is preferable to imperfect discussion on merits. For this reason, I think it would be wise for us not to insist upon publication. Otherwise, we shall lose the advantage of a convention. It is usual, I understand, even in the House of Commons, to allow the introduction of bills without opposition. I therefore recommend to the Council to adopt what the committee have recommended. We shall then have a valuable convention regarding the introduction of bills and reduce the case to a matter of form.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City): Sir, the Government members did not put before this House one aspect of the question, and that is that, under the present circumstances, a private member is placed under a disability, for the reason that unless a bill is previously published, at least seven days before it is brought before the House, the first reading of the bill cannot be asked for in the House. Therefore, if my honourable friend from Poona's amendment is carried, private member's bills will be placed on the same footing as Government bills, and I think that that is very desirable. Supposing notice is given for leave to introduce a bill, then it will be published more than seven days before the session of the Council begins, as members usually give long notices, and the private member, therefore, will be in a position not only to ask for leave to introduce the bill, but if the leave is granted, he will also be in a position to ask for the first reading at the same time. I think, Sir, that is an advantage which this side of the House would be very desirous of gaining; and it is very necessary.

As for the cost of printing, it is not a very material thing, considering the fact that the Government is printing large quantities of documents,

[Mr. D. B. Adwani]

I think the cost will be more than made up by the convenience that the private members will get in introducing bills.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): Sir, I rise to support the amendment moved by the honourable member from Poona. I have only to appeal to the experience of this House yesterday. I am sure that the experience of my honourable friends has been very much like my own. In the course of yesterday member after member got up to ask for leave to introduce one bill after another, but we were allowed to remain, all the while, in complete ignorance of what the bills were about. While we were asked to give leave for the introduction of certain bills, several of us were in this position that we had not even the text of the bill before us. Is that a satisfactory position for any self-respecting body of men to occupy. It is a ridiculous position, that we are solemnly asked to give leave for the introduction of a bill, while during the whole time that the honourable mover is making his motion, we have not the bill before us, and know nothing about the matter. I felt more than I did before that there ought to be some provision in our rules under which either the member who moves the bill of his own motion and at his own cost or the Government at their cost would lay before us the text of the bill, for the introduction of which we are asked to give leave. The amendment proposed secures this object. My honourable friend Mr. Baptista says that if there is a convention established in this House that leave to introduce bills would be given as a matter of course, then the difficulty will not arise to the same extent to which it is felt now. But is that so? Take the case of the honourable member Mr. Bhopatkar's bill to amend the District Municipal Act. It was fought by members, including the Government members, tooth and nail. The honourable member opposite, the Minister for Local Self-Government expended a lot of energy and argument in opposing the provisions of that bill.

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: That was the first reading of the bill.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: I am thankful for the correction to my honourable friend. I can however imagine several bills of that kind, and I do not think that we have yet established a convention in this House that all bills, whatever their controversial nature, would be allowed to be introduced in this House without opposition. Take the bill of the honourable member Mr. Addyman, to amend the Rent Act; last July we refused leave for the introduction of the bill. What happened to the convention in that case? It was a very important bill, a bill which wanted to secure exemption from increase of rent, and if there was any bill during the last session which was of a most controversial nature and as such should have been allowed to be introduced, it was that bill, but it was opposed and leave was not given. Surely, the House does not want to maintain that the text of such a bill need not be before them. I say, therefore, that until that convention is established, and until the Government benches give us a solemn assurance, in this behalf, because after all, they generally oppose the introduction of these private bills.

Government MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: Generally they do; I say that with my experience of this House. It is generally they that do it, and it is to their interest

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: No.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR: ...because a private bill often encroaches upon their close preserves. I am glad to have an assurance that it is not so, and I will accept it. If it is going to be understood in this House that all private bills will enjoy the courtesy of leave as a matter of course, under an unwritten law or convention, then of course it is not necessary to put Government to the expense of printing these bills at that stage. But if that convention is not going to be established, I certainly think that honourable members ought to have before them, some time before the bill is moved, the text of the bill, so that we shall not be perpetrating the farce of saying 'yes' to the introduction of a bill, of the provisions of which we know nothing at that stage.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Sir, I am in full sympathy with the reasons which led to the speech of my honourable friend opposite. I quite agree that we ought to know what we are voting about; it is inconvenient not to do so. But I should like to point out that that has been taken into consideration by the select committee, and we have provided in the amendment of Chapter VIII, Order 1, for the proper explanation of the bill which any honourable member seeks leave to introduce. At present the rule does not recognise, at all events as fully as the select committee thought it ought to, that the member introducing a bill should have the right to explain it. It rather assumed that he should not talk about it at all, that some one should get up and say "I object" and then he might say a few words about it. The amendment of that rule, I think, will get rid of that difficulty, because it will enable you, Sir, to permit any honourable member moving to introduce a private bill, to give a sufficiently full account of the nature and scope of the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: As a matter of fact, I am allowing that procedure even without the amendment of the Standing Order. The honourable member knows that.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I do, Sir. I believe, Sir, it is your desire that it should be plain in the Standing Orders that your excellent practice was not only good sense, but was the rule approved by this House. I submit, Sir, that if this amendment to Chapter VIII, Rule 1 of the Standing Orders is approved—I hope it will be—that there won't really be any practical difficulty in the matter. It will rest with the honourable member who wants to get leave to introduce the bill, to explain it briefly and in ordinary language which we can all understand, and then I trust, Sir, that the convention will be established of giving permission to introduce any bill which is not on the very face of it an unreasonable and impossible measure. It is the practice of this side of the House not to object to the mere introduction. We recognise that it is due to honourable members to be permitted to introduce any bill which is prima facie not absolutely unreasonable, to introduce it and to put it before the House and let the House vote on it and decide whether they want it or not. At this session introduction of no bill was opposed from this side. There was opposition to one bill which came from the members on the other side. There was no opposition raised from our side. Two honourable members got up merely to explain that it should not be understood by reason of their not having opposed at that stage that later on they might not be obliged to oppose the bill. But we did not raise any opposition in the first instance. That, Sir, is our practice, and I hope it will, in time to come, become the convention not only of this side of the House but of the whole House. I do not think, Sir, that this method of introducing a bill, of giving leave to introduce a bill after a brief explanation of the scope of the measure ought in any way to be considered as a thing which no self-respecting House ought to allow; because I may mention that this is the practice adopted in another place which I do not think can be accused of not being self-respecting. In fact they go rather further than this that after the leave has been given to introduce the bill the honourable member introducing it commits what, but for the convention, would be a fraud on the House by saying "I introduce the bill" and presenting no bill at all but a bit of blank paper. That is the convention, Sir, in the House of Commons. Leave to introduce is regarded as a purely formal matter and when the mover has the formal permission of the House to introduce the bill, he presents to the Clerk at the table a bit of blank paper and says "I hereby introduce the bill". I think therefore there is no real reason why we should support the amendment of my honourable friend from Poona and why we should not accept the decision which was arrived at upon full consideration by the select committee. That, Sir, is dealing with really the second part of his proposal, the proposal with regard to private bills.

With regard to the first part of the proposal, namely, to leave out the words relating to Government bills, I think he was under some misapprehension as also were members of the select committee. We looked into it however and with your assistance, Sir, we came to the conclusion that the first part relates really to Government bills and that it was unnecessary to cut out those words and that it was not necessary to send round a copy to each member. The reason for that is that under rule 18 all Government bills are introduced by publication in the Government Gazette and when they are published in the Government Gazette a copy of the publication is always sent round to all honourable members because all members ought to have a copy before them before the bill is read for the first time. Therefore there is no reason for accepting the amendment proposed by my honourable friend with regard to Government bills. I submit, Sir, therefore that we should be well advised to accept the opinion of the select committee and make no particular rules.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): Sir, in inadvertence that I proposed the first part of my amendment I therefore beg leave to withdraw it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Has the honourable leave of the House to withdraw the first part of his amendment?

Question put and leave granted.

First part of the amendment by leave withdrawn.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR: Sir, with regard to the second part of the amendment I think that until the convention to grant leave for the introduction of a bill is established my amendment becomes absolutely necessary. The House remembers that in the last session my bill regarding the municipal Act was allowed to be introduced by 43 votes as against 41 votes. I may as well refer to the bill that was introduced, yesterday, by the honourable member for Nasik, and the fact was that the official benches did actually vote against it. It means that leave to introduce a bill is not considered by the government as merely a formal matter. Thus till the convention to grant leave to introduce a bill is firmly established it is absolutely necessary to incorporate my amendment in the Standing Order concerned.

The second objection raised is that Government will be put to much expenditure in circulating the bill among the members, and a reference was made to the bill put down on the agenda-paper for introduction by the honourable member, Mr. Hoosenally Rahimtoola. But it is only an exceptional case. If we look to the ordinary bills the expenditure on circulation thereof will be very small.

Then a reference is made to Standing Order VIII, 1, (1) and it is said that now according to the amended Standing Order the honourable member in charge of a bill will be allowed to make an explanatory statement, thus enabling the members to grasp the object and purport of the bill. In this behalf I submit, Sir, that there are certain bills, as for instance the bill that I introduced yesterday, namely, the bill to amend the Town Planning Act, which are of a highly technical nature, and considering the time that is generally allowed for a brief explanation of the bill, it is well-nigh impossible to give the honourable members even a rough idea of the real nature of the bill. So, even though a brief explanation is allowed under the amended Standing Orders, that will not serve the purpose. Taking all things into consideration, I maintain that it is desirable in the interests of new legislation that the honourable members, before they grant the leave to introduce a bill, should have a copy of it supplied to them.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, I oppose the amendment proposed. We must differentiate between Government bills and private bills. In the case of Government bills they come up direct for first reading in the House. In the case of private bills, there is the preliminary stage and at that stage what has really to be decided is whether or withheld. We are now going to establish a matter of course leave should be given to all private going to establish that convention, and if we accept the proposed, then there will be a conflict, because a member who statement of objects and reasons and the text of the bill may the conclusion that it is not advisable to give leave. Therefore to avoid this defeat of the convention which we are going to lay down, I think it is advisable not to accept this amendment.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I do not desire to add anything, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The question is that from Standing Order IV, 7 (3) (ii), omit the word 'not' before 'be sent' and omit 'until leave to introduce the bill has been obtained'. In order that honourable members may clearly appreciate what the amendment is, I will read that part of the Standing Order as it stands at present and as it will read when amended. As it stands it reads:

"(ii) that where notice of a motion for leave to introduce a bill is received, a copy of the bill shall not be sent to each Member until leave to introduce the bill has been obtained."

If the amendment is accepted, the Standing Order will read as follows:

"(ii) that where notice of a motion for leave to introduce a bill is received, a copy of the bill shall be sent to each member."

Question put: House divided (by honourable members rising in their seats). Ayes 22; Noes 32: Amendment lost.

Mr. L. B. BHOPATKAR (Poona City): Sir, I beg to move:

In Chapter VI, standing order 10, of the Standing Orders, substitute the words 'may be taken as notice and shall be answered without further notice at a subsequent meeting of the Council' for the words 'may be put only in the form of a fresh question at a subsequent meeting of the Council.'

Sir, when supplementary questions are put in regard to some main questions, many important matters which are likely to see the light of day, are shut out by the Member or Minister concerned on the plea of notice; and thus oftentimes it becomes very important to have on record the answers to such supplementary questions. It is with a view to obtain information on matters embodied in supplementary questions, and with a view to make it obligatory upon the Government to supply it without the necessity of the member putting fresh questions at a subsequent meeting of the Council, that the amendment has been proposed. It is a very simple amendment, and the object thereof is to convert as it were supplementary questions into fresh questions. This is of very great importance from the point of view of the necessity of putting the public in possession of the necessary information. Many a time, Sir, we find that the matters which come up during the course of the supplementary questions escape the attention of the members concerned; yet I take it to be the duty of the Government to treat such questions as fresh ones and to supply the public with the information thereon. It is from this point of view that I have proposed the amendment, and I hope and trust that the House will accept it.

Motions to amend Standing

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL: Mr. President, I accept this amendment. In this case also, a of the select committee rejected the proposal^s various objections to this proposal. The^d Sir, concerns yourself. It is part of your duty, and decide whether they are in order and whether^c worded and so forth. Well, this proposal which is put before the if accepted, will deprive you of the time that is necessary for scrutinising them. I do not think that without your further scrutiny such questions should be allowed to be admitted.....

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: Is this correct, Sir? When the question is asked, you are on the watch, and you can decide whether it is proper or not. If a supplementary question is not relevant, it will not be allowed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Will the honourable member point out where the President gets the time for consideration between a supplementary question and an immediate answer to it?

Mr. P. G. JOSHI: Sir, we have had occasions to see that supplementary questions which are considered irrelevant are ruled out.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Yes, if the president gets a little time to do so.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL: I might mention, Sir, that the President, as the chairman of the select committee, was in a position to explain the position to the select committee. He is not in the same position to-day, and therefore I think it is only right that his position should be explained by me in this respect. As the Honourable the President has stated there is no time to scrutinise while supplementary questions are being delivered with rapidity. Honourable Members and Ministers are bombarded with questions sometimes from one side, sometimes from another side, without the time for members to ask them correctly or the Honourable the President to check them. I may say that there is no Council or Assembly where there is a rule of this character that when a supplementary question is once put, it should be accepted as notice for a subsequent question.

Another point I would raise is that it is also directly contradictory to another Standing Order. For instance, Standing Order IV, 7 (1), which lays down:

“Every notice required by the Rules or Standing Orders shall be given in writing addressed to the Secretary and shall be left at the Council Office which shall be open for this purpose between the hours of 11 and 5 o'clock” and so forth.

So it is not only contrary to the principle that questions should be examined by the President, but it is directly contradictory to another Standing Order. There is no proposal at present to amend the Standing Order which I have just read, so that we should have two contradictory Standing Orders on the record. These are the main reasons for opposing the amendment proposed. I suggest it would be quite impossible to accept questions which have been made on the spur of the moment and are not really intended to be regular questions. All that the honourable member question and send it to the Secretary's office.

 Council Secretary deals with the question.

Ahmedabad District): Mr. President, the which has been made much of by the honour-mbrancer of Legal Affairs applies also to supplementary questions, and, therefore, if supplementary questions are allowed without notice, then necessarily the questions for which the honourable member in charge requires notice should also be allowed without any fresh notice as it is also a supplementary notice.

Mr. J. BAPTISTA (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, the reason why the procedure recommended by the proposed amendment appealed to me originally was that we should be able to circumvent these rules and Standing Orders which required every question to be scrutinised, before they are allowed. They act as obstacles, and do not really give us full liberty to elicit information. That was really what recommended this procedure to me, but on subsequent consideration I felt that I must not circumvent the rules indirectly: I should get rid of the rules and Standing Orders directly. I therefore cannot vote for the amendment. Personally I cannot see why a person who wants to ask a supplementary question cannot do so immediately in writing. Another difficulty that arises is that if questions are asked on the spur of the moment the reporter may not take it down correctly. There is frequently a great difference between a question as put and the question as taken down—afterwards "Yes" appears as "No" and "No" appears for "Yes". I have often seen that happening even with the best of the reporters that we get here. Therefore, I think the recommendation of the select committee ought to be accepted.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: I have nothing to add. I can only say that we have considered the clause very carefully.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I have nothing to add, Sir.

Question put.

Substitute 'may be taken as notice and shall be answered without further notice at a subsequent meeting of the Council' for 'may be put only in the form of a fresh question at a subsequent meeting of the Council' in Standing Order 10 of Chapter VI, and lost.

(After recess.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The question is that Chapter VIII, Order 1, as amended by the select committee stand part of the Standing Orders.

Mr. S. S. DEV (West Khandesh District): Mr. President, my amendment is:

That in Chapter VIII, Order 1, Sub-rule 1, as recommended by the select committee, omit all the words from 'thereon' onwards and substitute the following:

"and shall request those members who support the motion to rise in their places and if not less than 20 members rise accordingly, the President shall intimate that leave to introduce the Bill is granted, whereupon the member who gave notice of the motion shall forthwith introduce the Bill."

[Mr. S. S. Dev]

I believe that the ground for moving this amendment has been prepared by the discussion we have so far heard from the opposite benches. The opposite benches want to convey that a convention is being formed. I submit that here is the first step towards that convention. If 20 members rise in their places to say that leave to introduce a bill should be granted, it should as a matter of course be granted without any more formality. Therefore, if Government benches are serious in having such a convention, leave to introduce a bill should be merely a matter of form and it should be granted for the mere asking. If any such convention is in its formation, let us help the formation to-day by accepting this amendment that I have put : As soon as leave is asked for, the President should call upon those members who support the motion to rise in their places and if not less than 20 rise in their places, leave should be granted. I hope, the Honourable the Home Member will be pleased to accept this amendment, in view of the assurances that he has so far held out of a convention being formed regarding leave to introduce a bill.

Question proposed.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL : Mr. President, it seems to me that the argument used by my honourable friend from West Khandesh that the previous discussion was a reason in favour of his proposal is incorrect. It was rather the reverse. That is to say, Government have adopted the convention that they will not usually oppose leave to introduce a bill.

It is not merely a question of convenience, but it is contrary to the Government of India Act. Of course I admit in regard to motions for adjournments there is the provision that if a certain number of members stand up, other conditions being satisfactory, the motion is allowed. But this is a case of legislation. It is laid down in the Government of India Act, section 72B (4) :

" All questions in a governor's legislative council shall be determined by a majority of votes of the members present other than the person presiding, who shall, however, have and exercise a casting vote in the case of an equality of votes."

Thus first of all it is doubtful whether an amendment of this sort is legal. This amendment deals with legislation and it is contrary to the Government of India Act which lays down that such questions ought to be decided by a majority of votes. This matter was placed before the select committee, and it is one of the reasons which influenced the select committee in not accepting an amendment of this character.

Another point is that it is proposed that only 20 members should stand up. That the consent of such a small number in a House of over 100 members should be considered sufficient for the consideration of a bill is not in my opinion a sound proposal to make. The honourable member Mr. Bhopatkar has in his amendment proposed 30 members. But we have now the suggestion that the consent of 20 members should be sufficient for the consideration of a bill.

Another point is that this proposal is entirely at variance with the procedure obtaining in other legislative councils in India. With regard to motion for adjournment, we follow the procedure in the Legislative

[Mr. P. E. Percival]

Assembly and the Council of State. But as regards motion for leave to introduce a bill, there is no provision of this character in any of the legislative councils in India, and certainly not in the Legislative Assembly or the Council of State. The provisions in the rules of the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State are exactly the same as those which have been accepted by the select committee here. We should not depart from this procedure unless there is strong reason to do so. There is no strong reason in this case. There is no hardship in the present procedure and therefore the amendment should not be allowed.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division) : Sir, I confess that I have not been convinced by the arguments advanced by the honourable mover of the amendment. I consider this amendment a retrograde one, because it introduces a new principle that 20 members should stand up in their seats and support the mover of the bill. The official benches promise that they will not ordinarily oppose the motion for leave to introduce a bill. In the best interests of the mover himself, it is a very valuable concession to have the support of the Government. I do not think that the Government can go back on the assurance they have given. The matter should be left where it is and the amendment should be withdrawn.

Mr. A. N. SURVE : I have nothing to add.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I should like personally to recapitulate the objections to this rule. As a rule upon its merits, it will be wrong to permit 20 members to insist on having a bill introduced, while the other 91 members do not want it. It seems to me that the ordinary rule should be that it ought to be decided by the majority. Apart from that, there is this convention that ordinarily motions for leave to introduce bills are not opposed. Then again it is doubtful whether such a rule will be intra vires. It seems to me that a similar rule which applies to adjournment motions is entirely different from the rules governing legislation. The rule for the purpose of adjournment motion is simply for the purpose of procedure as to whether the House shall rise to consider a particular resolution, which is in no sense binding on the executive government. Even if passed, it is a resolution to which great weight will be given but it is not a law binding on the executive government. Legislation is absolutely different, because a law passed is absolutely binding on the executive government and this House. The rule with regard to legislation is that it shall be decided by a majority. To move for leave to introduce a bill is the first step in legislation, although it is a formal step. As such, I think on the merits it should be done only with the consent of the majority of the members of the House.

I think, Sir, even if it be passed, it will be your duty to hold that it is ultra vires. There is a distinct provision in the Government of India Act, which has been pointed out by the Secretary to the Legal Department, that in all these matters the decision shall be by the majority. It seems to me that if this rule is passed, it will be directly contrary to the provisions in 72B (4) of the Government of India Act. Therefore it should be rejected.

Mr. S. S. DEV (West Khandesh District) : Sir, although I am not convinced by the arguments advanced against my amendment, I am glad that an assurance has been given that a convention is inaugurated. In view of this assurance I beg leave of the House to withdraw the amendment.

Question put and leave granted.

Chapter VIII, order 1 of the Standing Orders ordered to stand part of the Standing Orders.

Chapter X, 5 (2) "If the member when called on is absent, any other member authorised by him in writing in this behalf may, with the permission of the President, move the resolution standing in his name. But if no member has been so authorised, or such permission is not granted, the resolution shall be deemed to have been withdrawn."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The question is that chapter X, Order 5 (2) as amended by the select committee do stand part of the Standing Orders.

Mr. S. S. DEV : I have got an amendment to that.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Let the honourable member move it.

Mr. S. S. DEV (West Khandesh District) : Sir, the recommendation of the select committee is before the House. In its stead I submit that my amendment may be allowed. My amendment is :

"Substitute the following for the recommendation of the Select Committee :

'If the member when called on is absent, the resolution standing in his name shall be considered to have been withdrawn; provided that the President, in his discretion, may allow another member to move such resolution or may postpone it.'

I may bring to the notice of this House that the only change that I seek to make is that no permission or no authority in writing from the member in whose name any resolution stands should be required. The select committee provides that the member should authorise in writing any other member to move it. I omit that clause in my amendment, and for this reason : I can contemplate a case when a member may be suddenly called away and he may have no time to see any of his friends, and his resolution may be coming up for discussion the next day. In such a case, his resolution would not be moved. The amendment which I have put before the House is not altogether a new amendment; it is copied word for word from the Standing Orders of the Bengal Legislative Council. The Madras Legislative Council has a similar Standing Order. I am told that Central Provinces have a similar provision. So, all these provinces, Bengal, Madras and even the backward province of the Central Provinces have already a Standing Order on the lines of my amendment, and therefore I have reason to think that the Bombay Government will not oppose my amendment. It should not be necessary for a member to give in writing as to who should move his resolution. There is the discretion given to the President. The President is there, and he, in his discretion, may or may not allow anybody else to move it. Therefore, I submit that on this point at any rate Government benches should have no reason to object. This is an amendment which does not deprive

[Mr. S. S. Dev]

Government of any of their rights. The resolution is there and it cannot affect the Government in the least whether A moves it, or, in his absence, B moves it. We don't hope to succeed to-day unless we feel the pulse of the Government. Therefore, I appeal to Government benches to accept my amendment. They cannot really have any objection to the amendment.

Mr. P. E. PERCIVAL: Sir, I am afraid I have not looked up the Standing Orders of Bengal or Madras on this point; I assume that the honourable member is correct in his statement regarding them. However, an amendment in the existing Standing Order has been made by the select committee, and that is what is proposed at present. What has been introduced by the select committee is word for word the same as the provision in the Legislative Assembly. The Standing Orders of the Assembly were made under the guidance of Sir Frederick Whyte, a Member of Parliament, and they are generally followed by the local Councils. The provision is also in accordance with our practice in regard to questions, that is to say, if an honourable member is not authorised in writing, he cannot ask questions on behalf of another member.

Now, what I would like to draw attention to is this, that according to the honourable member's proposal there is to be no authorisation at all. Supposing the honourable member who is absent does not want his resolution to be moved at all, why should it be moved without his knowledge or permission? Now all he has to do is to give it in writing that he desires Mr. so and so to move his resolution for him. Surely, that is not very much of a grievance. As a matter of fact, the amendment that has been made by the select committee is a concession which has been granted and made at the suggestion of non-official members of the select committee. I will just read it out again. It is:

"If the member when called on is absent, any other member authorised by him in writing in this behalf may, with the permission of the President, move the resolution standing in his name. * * *"

I submit that is a very fair and moderate proposal, and there is no reason to change it.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division): Sir, in this matter, I am supporting the honourable member Mr. Dev, because, after all, it is a very small matter. The Honourable the Remembrancer of Legal Affairs says that, if the member who has given notice of a resolution does not want to move it, why should any other person be allowed to move it? But, Sir, resolutions become the property of the Council. As a matter of fact, some resolutions may be urgent and very important, on public grounds; why should they not be moved by some one else? Moreover if the President, in his discretion, thinks that the matter is of public importance and allows somebody else to move it, I do not think it is right that the Government should oppose the amendment. I therefore request that my honourable friend's amendment should be accepted.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University): Sir, I am rather surprised at the opposition of Government to this amendment. In fact, yesterday when this House was considering the amendment of the standing orders permitting a member to move any resolutions standing in his name irrespective of the order in which it appeared on the agenda, I remember the Honourable the Remembrancer of Legal Affairs argued against the amendment saying " A member has to walk out of the Council and somebody else can move the resolution ", and on that ground he appealed to the House that my amendment should be disallowed. Now, when we come to this amendment, providing for the identical point he is raising objections, I submit that the matter is very small, and that Government may as well yield on this point.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Sir, I agree that it is not of very great importance, but this is a rule which was proposed after due consideration by the select committee, and follows the rules in the Legislative Assembly. I think there is some objection to leaving it entirely vague as to whether one member has a right to move another member's resolution or not. It might lead to disputes. Supposing two or three members want to move it, what is the President to do? It puts him in rather an awkward position to decide which of those three should move it in default of some written authority from the owner of the resolution. I do not think it becomes the property of the House until the owner presents it to the House. Till then it is private property. If the member who is absent does not select the person to move his resolution, it might be moved by some one who did not like it, and he might move it merely to make fun of it. It would be much better to leave him to decide whether he wants the resolution to be moved or not. Surely, a little piece of paper with his signature, even if he is suddenly indisposed would not be very difficult, and it would be following the same procedure as is adopted in the case of questions. If a member wants his questions asked by some one else, then he gives notice, I believe, to the Secretary; he gives it in writing that he wants some one else to ask his questions for him. I think it would be more in accordance with our rules if we had a similar rule with regard to motions. If a member wants his motion to be moved by some one else, he should give notice to the Secretary and say that he authorises so and so to move it for him. I think, Sir, on the whole, the House would be better advised to accept the rule as proposed by the select committee.

Mr. S. S. DEV (West Khandesh District): I make the same request in return and emphasise the fact that Bengal, Madras and even the Central Provinces are ahead of us in this respect.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, I think the amendment is unnecessary. There is ample provision made in the amendment of Order 5 (2) of Chapter X made by the select committee. I think it really is giving a concession which would achieve the object in view. Therefore, I oppose the amendment.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: I have nothing to add, Sir.

Question put and lost.

Question put that Standing Order 5 (2) of Chapter X do stand part of the Standing Orders and carried.

Question proposed that Standing Order 12 (1) Chapter X do stand part of the Standing Orders.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Mr. President, I merely oppose a part of it. This is one of the amendments proposed by the select committee with which I have unfortunately found myself not in entire agreement. There are two parts of it. The first part is to renumber our present rule 12 as rule 12 (1). That of course I agree to. I have no objection to that. Then the second part is to add a second clause to be numbered (2). It is printed here in italics, and I have no objection to that part either. But there is a third amendment which proposes to make a change in what will be rule 12 (1). Rule 12 (1) will be :

"When a resolution has been moved in the Council, no resolution or amendment of a resolution raising substantially the same question shall be moved within one year from the date of such motion."

That is the present rule, and the amendment proposed by the select committee is to substitute for the words "one year" the words "six months". So that the rule would then read :

"When a resolution has been moved in the Council no resolution or amendment of a resolution raising substantially the same question shall be moved within six months from the date of the motion."

The amendment proposed is to reduce the period to six months within which a motion once discussed in this House can be brought up to be rediscussed. I think, Sir, on general principles it will be unfortunate to amend the rule in this direction. It would mean that if a resolution is passed by this Council, then it might be thrown out again in six months, or if it were thrown out it might be passed again in six months, and the period of six months is too short a time to allow the Council to change their opinions. When a subject has been fully discussed and voted upon, I think that decision, Sir, ought to last at least for one year. After the lapse of one year as at present provided there will have been time for the members of this Council to think over the matter. Things may have changed and it may be right that the matter should be brought up to be rediscussed. But I think six months is too short a time and that we ought to maintain the present rule of one year.

There is the further objection to allowing one resolution to be brought up over and over again every six months. It would interfere with the right of other members who are not quite so interested in that particular resolution to move their resolutions. If all resolutions whether moved or not can be brought up every six months, that increases the number of resolutions on the agenda and it makes it very difficult for other members who are more interested in other matters to get their resolutions before the House. I think honourable members ought seriously to consider whether they should put this further restriction on their right to move resolutions in this House. I think looking to the great number of resolutions it would be undesirable to put further difficulty in the way of honourable members to bring a particular resolution in this House. The present rule moreover is in accordance with the rules in the other legislatures and it seems to me that no good reason has been given why a special departure should be made from the ordinary rule of one year as at present existing in this House.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division): Sir, I oppose this amendment exactly on opposite grounds. My opposition to it is that six months is too long a time to wait. Why not have it every session? If a resolution is important and urgent then according to the argument of the honourable mover it should be brought as soon as possible before the House, if possible the very next session. If that is not contended then the reasonable thing would be to wait for one year.

The argument of the Honourable Leader of the House I think is very sound, because there are so many resolutions and we do not get time to discuss the resolutions about which we do not know the mind of the House. About a rejected resolution we know the mind of the House and therefore it could wait. On these grounds I oppose this amendment.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, the idea underlying this is that there should not be frequent changes in the resolution of this House, but I say if we accept the six months' limit there would not be frequent changes. Under the existing circumstances, if a resolution is moved say on the 20th of March, then it could be moved again after six months' time some day after the 20th of September, but as our present arrangement stands, we meet about the 25th of September and 15 days' previous notice must be given. Therefore, in actual practice we cannot enforce this six months' limit. The object which the proposer of the amendment has in view is really gained: but suppose we accept his view what happens? Now to-day is the 20th of March. for one year we are not to send in another notice of the same resolution then we cannot move that same resolution for about 18 months, because from the 20th of March to the 20th of March that is 12 months. We can introduce some time after the 20th of March and that would be for the July session. That is waiting for 18 months and not 12 months and that is why we have reduced the 12 to 6 months, and even by refusing that we actually get 12 months.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Sir, I am afraid I cannot follow that last argument; it is beyond me. It seems to me that the reply to that is that it is not a question of notice, but it is only a question of motion. It shall not be moved. It is not a question of giving notice. And as regards the question of the particular time for meetings, the honourable member knows that we are considering that matter and we hope to meet the wishes of all the members of the House as far as we possibly can. We must take the rule as it is. It is a sound rule. It is in force, I believe, in all legislatures: I know it is certainly in force in the Central Provinces, Bihar and Orissa, Madras, the Legislative Assembly, and I think also in the Council of State. I do not think we can do better than follow those legislatures.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The question is :

That Chapter X, order 12 (1) of the Standing Orders, as amended by the select committee, do stand part of the Standing Orders.

Chapter X, order 12 (1) as amended by the select committee reads as follows :

Chapter X, Order 12 (1). The existing Standing Order X, 12, should be numbered X, 12 (1) and the following clause should be added to it :

“(2) When a resolution has been disallowed under the Rules or Standing Orders or has been withdrawn with the leave of the Council, no resolution raising substantially the same question shall be moved during the same session.”

Question put and carried.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The next question is :

That Chapter X, order 12 (2) of the Standing Orders, as amended by the select committee do stand part of the Standing Orders.

Chapter X, order 12 (2) as amended by the select committee reads as follows :

Chapter X, Order 12 (2): Change ‘one year’ into ‘six months.’

Question put and lost.

DISCUSSION OF MATTERS OF GENERAL PUBLIC INTEREST.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The next business is Resolutions.

I should like to draw the attention of honourable members to a letter which has been placed in my hands, and which I will frankly confess has greatly surprised me. Honourable members have been constantly complaining that they do not get a chance of moving resolutions. But here eight or nine of those honourable members who have got the privilege of moving resolutions by being first on the list, do not move them but tell me to give priority to Mr. Bole who is tenth on the list. I do not know why honourable members do this if they are really anxious to avail themselves of the little opportunity they get for moving resolutions both by virtue of the time allotted for private business and by reason of the ballot. This is not a singular instance of the kind. I find that members who profess themselves to be most anxious to get an opportunity of moving resolutions, hand it over to somebody else when they get it. I am not going to grant priority in this case but will call upon every member who stands on the agenda paper before Mr. Bole to say either that there is not sufficient time to discuss the subject or that he does not wish to move it. If Mr. Bole's resolution is reached in this way, I will call upon him to move his resolution.

Mr. P. G. JOSHI : Exactly, Sir. I would like to explain that I did not wish to move my resolution because there was no time.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Honourable members should have waited to see how long the discussion on Standing Orders did take. I will give them the chance by calling upon every member whose name stands before Mr. Bole to move his resolution. They are not bound to do so, but they will have to state that they do not wish to move the resolutions standing in their names. Mr. Shivdasani.

Mr. H. B. SHIVDASANI: I do not wish to move it, because there is not sufficient time. I may mention, Sir, that I signed that letter at 5 p.m., when I saw that there was no time for my resolution.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: But that argument surely does not apply to each and every one of the resolutions. Dr. Dixit.

Dr. M. K. DIXIT: The time is insufficient for my resolution, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Mr. Khuhro is not here. Mr. Joshi does not wish to move. Mr. Jog is not here. Pir Rasulbaksh Shah is not here. Mr. Burter is no longer a member. Mr. Bhutto is not here. Mr. Swaminarayan.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN (Ahmedabad District): Sir, I wish to move the following resolution:

"This Council recommends to the Governor in Council to prohibit fishing in the river Sabarmati near the town of Kasandra, South Daskroi, Ahmedabad District."

Sir, the town of Kasandra is situated on the river Sabarmati. Its population consists of high caste Hindus, Jains, Brahmins, and such other members of the community to whom fishing is most repugnant. In no time has fishing been permitted near that town, but unfortunately some incidents happened and the villagers took the first opportunity of approaching the authorities in all constitutional ways. They applied to the Collector and to the higher authorities, and it was necessary for me to move this resolution here on their behalf. In the meanwhile the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad has given a temporary injunction prohibiting fishing in three aras where water is used by the villagers of Kasandra. This is the notice:

Notice is hereby given that fishing is prohibited over 50 yards at each of the 3 aras where water is used by the villagers of Kasandra in South Daskroi taluka until further orders. Whoever will contravene this order will be punishable under section 39 of the District Police Act.

This order is ad interim until the question is finally decided.

The villagers' efforts have borne fruit so far. The District Magistrate who gave a prohibitory order has given an ad interim order and I hope Government will consider this question and with due regard to the feelings of the people inhabiting that village they will be well advised to accept my resolution, because it is already accepted by the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad. I hope there will be no objection for the Government to accept my resolution. The people who inhabit this village are high class Hindus,—Jains, patidars and so forth—and if fishing is done there, there would be mischief; perhaps some people would not be able to control their temper, and the result would be riots. But fortunately, the people of the village have borne everything with great patience and they have full trust in the liberal-minded statesmanship of the Government which does not interfere in the religious practices of the people. The town is situated there from times immemorial and the inhabitants of the town are living a very peaceful life for a very long period of time. Since this little boon of allowing no fishing near the town is very much desired by them as far as the religious feelings are concerned, they have full hope that the Government will bestow it. Preservation of peace and order is the very thing that Government should desire. And the work has been practically half done. Government would be well advised to accept this resolution, so that a permanent prohibitory order prohibiting fishing near the village may be issued.

Question proposed.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Mr. President, I am not at all sure in the first instance whether this little dispute about fishing in this village of Kasandra could really be properly called a matter of general public interest. I do not know what the population of Kasandra is. Perhaps the honourable mover can tell me.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN : 3,000 houses.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Well, Sir, here you have got a small village of 3,000 houses—that will be about 9,000 or 10,000 people—where there is some dispute as to whether fishing should be allowed in a certain part of the river or whether it ought not, and it seems from the speech of my honourable friend that the dispute in the village was so hot about this matter that it was necessary for the District Magistrate to intervene and he had to issue an injunction pending the necessary settlement of the matter. Possibly it means that they are already going to the civil court. Would the honourable member inform me whether they have as yet gone to the civil court? Has a suit been filed?

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN : They have not gone to the civil court.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Well, I imagine that the first order that the District Magistrate will give would be : “ Now, you people, go off to the civil court and settle your dispute ”. As soon as they do that, I think we cannot discuss the question here in this House. I think, Sir, a petty dispute like this is not a matter that should be brought before this House and the time of this House wasted in this manner. That is a dispute which ought to be settled in the civil court. Personally, I should say they should not even go to the civil court, but they should settle it among themselves. Surely, my honourable friend representing that part of the country, cannot he go and settle it for them and tell them “ What is the use of disputing over these petty matters, whether you should fish 50 yards this side or 50 yards that side ”? Surely, if he really represents them, he could get them to agree to some sort of settlement between themselves and not let the matter be discussed in great detail in this House. It is a matter, Sir, for the civil court and it is not to be decided by this Assembly. We cannot sit here as courts deciding matters which are really for courts. Why, Sir? Fishery rights are very intricate questions, I know, because I have had to try such cases. These are things for the courts to decide, and not for this House. I believe this question was mentioned to me some time ago in July 1924. An application was put in my hands through an honourable member of this House—not through the honourable mover of this resolution, but through the other honourable member sitting there (Mr. Saheba). He told me there was this petty dispute and he put these papers in my hands. I sent them to the local authorities.....

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA : You say this is a petty dispute between the inhabitants of the village.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is a question of fact. Let the Honourable the Home Member conclude and then the honourable member can speak.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Well, Sir, I am sorry if I am not quite correct in saying it was a petty dispute. I did not expect that this resolution would come on to-day and I have not had time to go fully through all the papers again. I would require at least half an hour to read my brief. But that was my recollection, that it was a dispute between some fishermen who claim that they have fishing rights in the neighbourhood of some temples and the owners of those temples,—that the fishermen say they will fish there and the owners of the temples say they ought not to do it.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA : They come from Ahmedabad.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : The fishermen apparently, Sir, are from Ahmedabad. They said they had this right of fishing ever since the time they remembered, since their great grandfathers' time and so on, and the owners of the temples said they must not do it. I sent the application for investigation and report, and I was told in reply that, as a matter of fact the particular part of the river where they fished was not actually in view of the temple—the temple was somewhat away from that point—that the fishermen were fishing there from times immemorial, that the District Magistrate was not prepared to interfere. And on receiving that report I think the honourable member was informed that we did not see our way to interfere in this matter. There seems to have been some later developments with regard to which I have no information. I gather from the honourable mover that since then the dispute has waxed so hot that the District Magistrate has had to intervene and issue an injunction. Is that so ?

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN : It is in the papers.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I understand it was under the Civil Procedure Code. Is that right ?

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN : Under section 39 of the District Police Act.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Then, Sir, this is hardly a question which should be discussed in this House. I think we should allow the ordinary law to proceed.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA (Ahmedabad District) : Mr. President, the only question which the villagers of this village want settled is that these fishermen from Ahmedabad should not come into the river and catch fish before their very eyes. That is the only question. If they fish outside from their sight, there is no objection whatsoever. There is a certain amount of feeling raised when men and women of the town go to fetch water from the river and they see these people catching fish there in their very presence, before their very eyes ; these fishermen come from Ahmedabad, they have no fishing rights whatsoever. They do not allege any right.....

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : We are told they do.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA : They say they will do it simply because the Collector allows it.

There are notice-boards put up by the District Collector that fishing is prohibited. Why should it not be prohibited in this particular area where the fish is caught in the presence of villagers ? It is only a question of the sentiment of the whole village. There are two or three Mahomedan families and they do not catch fish out of respect for the sentiments of the villagers. But these fishermen do not respect the sentiments of the villagers.

An Honourable MEMBER : To what caste do they belong ?

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA : They are Hindus. They belong to the Bhoi caste, a low caste.

It is only these people that give trouble. The thing is that some 50 yards away from the bank there are two temples. The village chaura is there. Everybody has to frequent that place. The District Magistrate has not stopped fishing so far as the ara is concerned. I do not think that there can be any trouble with regard to accepting the limited area of prohibition to fishing.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Under what legal authority can we stop this fishing ?

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA : Under the District Police Act. You have already so many notice-boards as regards the prohibition of fishing round about Ahmedabad in this very river Sabarmati. Therefore, they come from Ahmedabad to Kasandra. They are not allowed to fish in Ahmedabad. Even in tanks in the vicinity of Ahmedabad, there are notice-boards put up prohibiting fishing. I do not understand why this particular place should be singled out for fishing. The river Sabarmati flows by the boundary of this village and the ara is at all times frequented by people and therefore this particular area of the river Sabarmati must be protected.

Mr. A. MONTGOMERIE : Sir, this is not the sort of matter which the House should inquire into. A dispute as to fishing right is not a matter of general public importance. Whatever the honourable member may say, these Bhois (the honourable member says that they belong merely to a low caste—presumably therefore they can be neglected)—do claim to have a right of fishing in this particular place. They say that they have been fishing there from time immemorial. I do not know whether we have any power whatever except under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. I see the District Magistrate has issued an interim order under section 39 of the District Police Act. I am unable to discover under what sub-section of that section of the District Police Act we can prohibit fishing unless perhaps under the sub-section which enables the District Magistrate to set aside places for slaughtering animals. I submit, Sir, it requires some ingenuity to bring in a place on the banks of a river used for fishing under the description of places for slaughtering animals. I find no other legal authority.

The suggestion in the resolution is that the Government should prohibit fishing by an order. If Government take action and prohibit the Bhois from fishing in a place and if the Bhois establish their right to fishing in that place, the result will be that they will sue the Secretary of State. If the inhabitants of the village claim that they have a right to prohibit Bhois from fishing in that place, they can establish it by a civil suit. I think this House will be stultifying itself in interfering in a matter which has to be settled in a court of law.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD (Central Division): Sir, I have very great sympathy with the mover of the resolution so far as the sentimental part of it is concerned. He is contending to establish a religious control over the whole of the river, and prohibit fishing altogether in it. In this connexion he talked of high castes and low castes. I cannot understand how the honourable professor who has subscribed to the creed of abandoning untouchability can talk of such differentiation of castes. The low caste people have as much right as the high caste people. The high caste people have got a sentimental objection, while these low caste Bhois maintain that they have a right to fishing in that place, as they live upon fishing. I think it would be a reactionary step to curtail the liberty of the citizens of that place and prohibit them from fishing. Besides, this is setting a bad precedence in this Council, because others would come begging here. If there is any particular sacred place with a long tradition something may be said in its favour.

Mr. W. S. MUKADAM: Let the honourable member please address the Chair.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMAD: It is not the honourable member's business to direct me.

As the motion is it is undesirable. Its effect will be to encourage other people to come forward with similar pretexts and this House will have every now and then to enter into all these matters. To-morrow I may come to the House with a resolution that no Hindu procession should pass by a Muslim mosque. This is not the place for discussing such matters. We are trying as far as possible to curtail disputes on communal differences between Hindus and Mahomedans; but here there is a dispute among Hindus themselves. I have very great regard for the sentiments of the honourable member, but this is not the place where we can discuss such questions. We do not know anything about the traditional sanctity of the place. It is so easy for some Hindus to have some stones piled up and come and say that there is a small temple of Ganga or Jumna and that therefore outsiders should not be allowed to go there and do any business. It will curtail considerably the liberty of the people. Therefore this resolution should not be passed.

Mr. N. R. GUNJAL (Poona District) (Addressed the House in Marathi): Mr. President, the honourable mover of the resolution says that there is a temple and there is a noticeboard. At Dehu and Alandi, two places of pilgrimage in the Poona district, nobody is allowed to fish, and that has been the time-honoured religious custom there. Descriptions of these two places can be found in Hindu religious scriptures, and there is sufficient proof in those books to show that nobody is allowed to fish there. On one or two occasions there was a breach of the rule as regards fishing in these places, but the case having been taken to the court, fishing was prohibited there. In spite of this, sometimes soldiers and other people come to fish there, and there is always trouble on such occasions. Looking at it from the religious point of view, and seeing that the people who live at places where such temples and places of worship exist are all vegetarians, I think Government should stop fishing at such places. Taking into consideration the sentiments of the people, who are all vegetarians, living near the temples, I think Government should intervene and stop fishing. The request contained in the resolution is that fishing should be prohibited near the town of Kasandra. Those who want to fish in the river may go to the other side and do so. I have seen the position described in the map, and I hope the Council will support the resolution.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN (Ahmedabad District): Sir, there is no fishing right appertaining to any people residing in Kasandra. The town is situated at a distance of 10 miles from Ahmedabad. The bank is 300 or 400 yards long. All that the villagers want is that along the bank fishing may not be resorted to. Fishing has never been practised there. If fishing had been allowed there, the people would have evacuated the place long ago, because it is impossible for them to live there if such things happen in the vicinity. But if fishing is allowed there now, there will be serious trouble. I bring in this resolution on behalf of the villagers, because, otherwise, there will be serious trouble. I explained to them that the proper thing for them to do was to approach the authorities through the proper channel. If the villagers were left to themselves, nobody knows what would have happened. Actually, what happens is this, that the Bhois sometimes go from Ahmedabad to that place. At once the village people gather. The Bhois demand some money, and Rs. 25 or Rs. 40 are paid to them with a request that they should leave the place. On account of their religious sentiments, the village people may pay something in order to make the Bhois leave the place. This is what happens generally. Now, do you wish that a village that is plying its honest and peaceful occupation and that is paying into the coffers of the Government a good deal of revenue should be allowed to be blackmailed in this way for all time to come? How can they live there? Under the protection of the Government, these Bhois go there and they demand money. They say "Give us some money, or we shall fish." I should like to ask Government whether they are getting even a single pie of revenue by allowing these fishermen to go there for the purpose of fishing and exciting the feelings of the local residents of that place. No, not a pie. Sir, Gujarat is full of people who live on vegetarian diet. Almost all the people in Gujarat are vegetarians. Low caste and high caste, almost all of them, with very few exceptions, live on vegetables, and therefore it was found necessary by the Government, in the city of Ahmedabad itself, to put these prohibitory boards at so many places round about Ahmedabad so that the people can understand that in places where they are performing daily worship, fishing has been prohibited round about. Sir, the villagers do not require a great boon from Government. They only require that for 400 yards which form the bank of the river, where they daily bathe and live peacefully, they should not be disturbed by such operations. I think this is a matter in which Government will be very well advised to have this order which has been passed ad interim permanently passed, so that there will be no cause of trouble in future.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Sir, I am sorry that this question should be raised here, because I do not think it is a question we can properly decide in this House. We have not got the necessary facts, and we are not constituted in a manner to arrive at any real decision about this dispute. I agree entirely that the sentimental objections of the villagers ought to be respected, and nothing ought to be allowed to be done to really offend them, but due regard must be had to the rights of other people. The sentimental objections referred to no doubt do exist, and they must be recognised, but, on the other hand, those that hold these sentiments must recognise that there are other people in the world who have their rights and those rights also must be respected. It is the endeavour of the local authorities so to arrange matters between the parties having these differences that the peace, happiness and prosperity of the village may be ensured. I do not think, Sir, it helps the case at all to make assertions that this is a fact or that is a fact, when we have not got the other side before us to say whether they agree that that is so or that is not so. When the assertions are backed by no evidence, no proof whatever, and the other side have not had an opportunity of coming before us to submit what they have to say with their proofs, it is quite impossible for us to give any decision on the precise rights of the matter. The assertions made are that these fishermen cannot possibly have any rights in this particular river, because they live 10 miles off at Ahmedabad. Well, Sir, that may be some evidence against the probability of a right, but it is no evidence conclusive that they have no rights. Ten miles is not a long way for fishermen to go, and if they have been going there and fishing from times immemorial, then it seems to me it would be very difficult....

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN : Such has never happened at any time.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : That again, Sir, is a mere assertion. It may be perfectly true, but the honourable member has not produced before me the proofs. If I were a judge sitting on a bench, I would say "That is your plea; kindly place before me your evidence and I will consider it". So far, we have assertions on the one side that these fishermen have no rights, that they have not exercised them, that they are absolute intruders, and all sorts of evil things about them. But the information which we obtained was to the opposite effect. These are the people who assert that they have rights, and the local authorities who enquired into it even believe, on the facts as they know them and the circumstances, that they really had some rights. Sir it would be impossible for us here to accept this resolution and practically to admit that these other people who are not before us, who have not the chance of putting their claims before us, have no rights at all. I do not think that it would be the desire of the House. I think I should very strongly recommend my honourable friend to withdraw this motion and to leave it to the local authorities. I gather from him that they are already thinking about it, because they passed a temporary injunction presumably to prevent disorder, to prevent breach of the peace. If that injunction is temporary, it indicates, it seems to me, that they are inquiring into it and will endeavour to arrange some settlement between the parties on the spot. He has asked us to make that injunction permanent. Well, we have no authority to make a magisterial order permanent. There is no authority that I know of by which that can be done by the executive government. The matter is apparently under inquiry. There I am sure it will be inquired into sympathetically and rights of all parties will be fully looked into, and that the local authorities will do their best to come to some satisfactory arrangement which will protect the sentiments of the people who may have been affected and do justice to the fishermen who say they have a right to fish in the river. I would earnestly ask the honourable member not to pursue this matter further here, but to rest on the assurance that we will do our best to deal with this matter sympathetically and not to ask us to move in a matter in which we have no authority.

Mr. J. C. SWAMINARAYAN : Sir, with the assurance on behalf of Government that they will give the matter a sympathetic consideration I beg leave to withdraw the resolution.

Question put and leave granted.

Mr. S. K. BOLE : Sir, my resolution runs thus :

"This council recommends to government to increase the scale of salaries of all peons in all Government establishments in the City of Bombay to Rs. 25 rising to Rs. 50 excluding the house allowance."

Sir, I think the resolution does not require any long speech. The case is one of justice and equity. The peons who are working on Government establishments in the City of Bombay get a meagre salary of Rs. 12 per month. It is true that they get some war allowance and house allowance that brings their pay to about Rs. 25 or so. But this sum is not taken into account at the time of pension as their service is regarded as inferior service. What I submit is, that all this amount should be included in their pay and that a lump sum, say of Rs. 25, should be given to them as permanent salary giving them a gradual increase up to Rs. 50, and their service should be regarded as superior service for the purpose of pension. Sir, you have personal experience of how these men are hard-worked. In the city of Bombay even a workman gets more than Rs. 30 per month. I have got here a small list of some private firms who are giving higher salaries to their peons. The Imperial Bank of India gives to its peons a pay from Rs. 40 to 48 ; a naik gets Rs. 50 to 59 ; a havaldar gets Rs. 69. In the Bombay Chamber of Commerce a peon gets Rs. 30 rising to Rs. 41 ; a naik gets Rs. 35 to 48 ; a havaldar gets Rs. 40 to 51. In Cox & Co. a peon gets Rs. 25 to 40 ; a havaldar gets Rs. 35 to 48. Some of these get pensions after 30 years' service. (An Honourable Member: What about pension?) In the case of peons of the Chamber of Commerce pension is allowed. In the case of some others provident fund or gratuity is given. In Volkart Brothers a peon gets Rs. 25 to Rs. 48 ; a naik gets Rs. 35 to 50 ; a havaldar gets Rs. 42 to 60. In Ralli Brothers a peon gets Rs. 40 to 45 ; a havaldar gets Rs. 55. In Continental Colour Company a peon gets Rs. 30 ; a havaldar gets Rs. 40. There are some honourable members here who are managers of big European firms and mills and they will tell this House what their peons are paid. All the peons in these firms and mills get more than what our Government peons get. These peons have to work for more than 12 hours. They have to be at the beck and call of their superior officers. In the case of these peons and clerks it can be said that retrenchment has been effected to a large extent and I do not know whether it is effected in the case of higher officers. Under these circumstances, I think, Sir, when Government have proposed to give additional increments to their highly paid officers, they won't grudge a living wage to these peons who are so low paid. These men are really speaking the supporters of the steel frame of government (hear, hear). They had submitted a petition to Government which had no effect. However I hope that Government will now come forward very graciously to redress this long standing grievance and give these men their due. One of my honourable friends said they get pension, but what is the pension? After putting in honest and hardworked service of 25 to 30 years they get only Rs. 6 per month. Imagine, Sir, the miseries of a man who has to maintain himself, his wife and children in this petty sum of Rs. 6. Sir, the miseries of these poor peons can better be imagined than described, and it is this vivid picture of miseries that has made some of my honourable friends to withdraw their resolutions and give priority to my resolution. This House, Sir, has voted higher salaries to highly paid stipendiary magistrates in the City of Bombay and I hope this House will also pass this resolution by giving their hearty support to it. With these words I place this resolution before this House.

Question proposed.

Mr. D. B. ADWANI (Karachi City) : Sir, the demand of my honourable friend is a very modest one and I trust that Government will accept not only this resolution but that they would be prepared to come forward with a statement that they are going to consider the salaries of all the peons in the whole of the presidency, Bombay as well as Karachi, Ahmedabad and other parts of the presidency.

The demand of my honourable friend is a very modest one, for the reason that Rs. 25 in Bombay will not carry a man very easily. (An Honourable Member : They get house rent). I do not know what the house rent allowance is, but I think it must be a very small sum. The honourable member told us that the peons in Bombay are getting a pension of Rs. 6 ; but so far as my information goes, in the mofussil they get only a pension of Rs. 4. For this amount it would not be possible further to get sufficient flour for themselves, let alone their families. My Honourable friend Mr. Bole is very reasonable in his proposal. As to the other parts of the presidency I would be prepared to move an amendment for including them, but I suppose you will rule me out of order in that respect. I hope Government will come forward and accept this proposal and I will go further and say that they will consider the case of peons in other parts of the presidency as well.

[Mr. D. B. Adwani]

Mr. R. G. PRADHAN (Nasik District) : Sir, I rise to support this resolution. I sincerely hope that Government will be prepared to accept this resolution. I do not think after the two speeches which the House has listened to, it is necessary for me to speak at any length. As I said some days ago my sympathies are entirely with the poor, and the class whose salary is proposed to be raised by this resolution is one which deserves the sympathetic consideration of the Government. They are really a hard worked class. As my honourable friend has said, they are to a very large extent the backbone of the steel frame of the Government. Just, imagine, Sir, what the fate of the highly paid officers will be in the discharge of their daily duties if these servants are not as punctual and as mindful of their duties as they are all to-day. I do not think there is any complaint against this class of Government servants. They are very reliable ; very faithful ; very industrious ; and very hard working. And certainly I for one would not hesitate to characterise a man who refuses to give them this increase in their salaries as brutally heartless. With these words I support the resolution.

Mr. M. R. JAYAKAR (Bombay University) : Sir, I rise to support this resolution. I do not think any words are needed to recommend this resolution to the non-official benches beyond the circumstance that even Mr. Bole has commenced to talk of the "steel" frame. It is a very significant argument, and I do hope it will carry conviction to the members of this House. I do not think any words are needed to recommend this resolution, for this reason : that the Bombay peon is well known to us all. Those who have to do with him know that he is modest, quiet, obedient, almost too cultured to be a peon. Take any specimen of that class one likes—and one sees so many of them standing in front of this House at the present moment—I cannot imagine any servant who keeps to his post like the Bombay peon with a sense of discipline, modesty and an absolute desire to obliterate himself in the midst of his surroundings. I do not think I am presenting to the House any exaggerated picture of the Bombay peon, and I do hope that the members of the steel frame who have to deal with Bombay peons in such large numbers will carry the resolution without any opposition.

Mr. H. D. SAHEBA (Ahmedabad District): Sir, after so much has been said as regards the peons, my only regret is that the honourable member, Mr. Bole, has not included in his resolution the cities of Poona, Karachi and Ahmedabad, where living is as dear as in Bombay. In Poona and Karachi at least they give some compensatory allowances to peons, but in Ahmedabad, where living is dearer, they do not give it. If the honourable member Mr. Bole had included the cities of Poona, Karachi and Ahmedabad, he would have had my full support. Some technicalities of procedure having intervened I cannot move an amendment to include those cities. In the circumstances I say I fully support the honourable member Mr. Bole, and I request Government that in considering this resolution they will also consider the claims of peons in Poona, Karachi and Ahmedabad.

MOULVI RAFIUDDIN AHMED (Central Division): Mr. President, the other day when we were discussing the police budget, the Honourable the Leader of the House said that in case the House was willing to vote money he would be pleased to increase the salaries of the police sub-inspectors. In this case the House is willing to make a grant, and it is now for the honourable the Leader of the House and for the treasury bench to come forward and say that they will accept the resolution. The House will find them the money. It is the duty of the House to come forward and cordially support this motion, because those who stand to benefit by this resolution are a dumb class and have no voice. We are sitting here trying our best to defend the interests of all classes of Government servants especially the interests of high salaried classes. The other day we voted money for European officers as desired by the Lee Commission's report, it is therefore absolutely necessary that this little motion should be accepted by Government for the benefit of half starving peons.

Mr. G. WILES: Sir, if I am compelled to oppose this amiable resolution, it is not from any want of sympathy with this loyal and hardworked body of servants, not because I am one of those 'brutally heartless' officers whom my honourable friend has referred to, nor because I fail to follow the argument of the honourable the leader of the opposition that self-obliteration is a sound reason for increase of pay. We are considering, Sir, the case of a class which provides the lower grade of servants throughout the whole of Bombay, throughout the whole of what I might call the public and private administration of the city. We cannot deal with our peons without affecting the menial staff of all the public bodies, the commercial firms and private houses. Government is only one of many employers, and it would be quite improper for Government to take any action which would have the effect of upsetting the whole domestic economy of the city. Our raising of the pay of peons on the last occasion was made the subject of protest from all public bodies in Bombay, who had to follow suit. It is quite clear that Government cannot possibly take the action which the honourable mover requires them to take, without consultation with and the consent of all other parties who would find themselves affected. I would submit, Sir, that we are up against an economic fact. I am well aware of the way in which the House in dealing with the pay of public servants dislikes the expression 'supply and demand', but on occasions we have to drive the fact home that it is a question of supply and demand. These peons form only a small part, as I have said, of a large class in Bombay, and it would be quite impossible for Government to attempt to raise the general standard of living in this way by paying to this small part more than the market rate of wages. Any such attempt to raise the standard of living of the class by raising the wages of a small part of a large class of workers would be only foredoomed to failure. In saying this I do not want it to be thought that I have no sympathy with this resolution. The contrary is the fact.

It is necessary that I should recapitulate briefly the history of the pay of these servants. It will show, I hope, that Government have not been unmindful of their needs. The last permanent revision of the pay of peons was made in the year 1906, when the rates were fixed from Rs. 10 to Rs. 12 for the peons with a maximum of Rs. 15 for the petty officers. From time to time they were given further allowances on account of the dearness of living as it rose, and house rent. In 1918-19, the pay with allowances was Rs. 16 rising to Rs. 18. In 1920-21 war allowance and house rent allowance were raised, so that the total emoluments of the two grades of peons now amounts to Rs. 27 to Rs. 29 and the emoluments of the petty officer from Rs. 31 to Rs. 32. These emoluments are made up of their original pay plus Rs. 10 temporary allowance and Rs. 7 house allowance. These, I am given to understand from my own enquiry, are the same rates as are paid by the Port Trust, the Municipality and the chief firms and banks in the city. I was taken by surprise by the figures which were given by the honourable mover of the resolution, which differ from those supplied to me. I should like to have them investigated and confirmed by further enquiry.

As the House knows, investigations have been carried out during the past few years in regard to the cost of living among this very class in Bombay. These investigations show that the cost of living per mensem of a Bombay peon rose from about Rs. 14 in the year 1914 to about Rs. 25 in the year 1920. Since then there has been a steady fall and the proportionate figure to-day stands at Rs. 21. These statistics establish the fact that the wages of these menial officers have risen more than the cost of living. We have thus made a considerable advance, and considering the standard of living of the class from which these peons are recruited, it can, I think, be said that the present pay is just. Government have recognised the need of paying a decent minimum wage and they have no intention at present of reducing in any way the additional allowances which the peons draw.

Not long ago, I received a deputation from the peons and listened to their grievances. The chief one of their grievances is undoubtedly the fact that so large a proportion of their pay at present is "provisional allowances". That gave rise to a certain amount of alarm in the minds of the peons that these being "provisional allowances" might be withdrawn by Government. These allowances were made temporary during the war for obvious reasons. We did not know to the cost of living. I am dealing with this question held up because we are waiting for orders from the Government of India have issued their new rules of pension and the Secretary of State has sanctioned them, we hope to deal with this pension question and with this question of the allowance and to get it into pay. The house allowance, of course, was given for a special reason and that must remain fluid in order that we may deal with it according to actual circumstances.

The other chief grievance which they brought to my notice was the smallness of the pension, on which several honourable members have commented. As I have said, in that matter Government is very sympathetic. We realise that the pension given is not adequate, but as I have said, we have not yet the authority to deal with pensions. We are awaiting orders of the Government of India sanctioning the new pension rules which will delegate to local Governments the authority to deal with the question of pensions.

The third grievance was one with which perhaps members of the House will not be so sympathetic. That was the plea of the young men that the old men should be made to retire. Now, the work of a peon is one which can be adequately carried out long after their services are useless for other hard work, and I think it would be very hard for Government to insist on retiring a peon who is still able to carry out his duties adequately. That is possibly one reason why the question of pension or the inadequacy of it has not been more forced on the notice of Government, namely that the men do remain in harness for a much longer period than in any other branch of service.

There are, Sir, in the city of Bombay no less than 1,170 peons. The proposal which the honourable member puts forward will raise their allowances by about 50 per cent. and the annual cost to Government will be no less than two and quarter lakhs. That, I think, rather disposes of what has been called the very "modest suggestion" of the honourable member. It is not a very modest suggestion, as the total cost will show. The indirect cost to Government might, I suggest, be very much more. It would be impossible to stop at the Bombay peon and it might involve the raising of pay throughout all the services not only in Bombay, but in the mofussil. The indirect cost to the city of Bombay, which will be involved owing to consequential increases to servants in Bombay, I have made no attempt to estimate. The pay of these peons, as I said, Sir, is at present from Rs. 2 to Rs. 4 more than the minimum which is suggested by the honourable mover. There is no idea, in dealing with this question, of "grudging a small share of our vast revenues" to these peons. I submit that is an entirely unfortunate way of regarding the question. To introduce on the top of this minimum pay which we are paying, a rising scale up to Rs. 50 is, I submit quite outside practical politics, and for this reason I hope that the House will have no difficulty in rejecting it.

ombay City, North): I must state, Sir, that at the objection taken by Government in this class of servants who excite our sympathy,

I am sorry to see that the statistics of the cost of living of this class have been brought to object the recommendation made by my honourable friend the Director of Labour Office and I became apprehensive were about to be used for the purpose of reducing the

Now, Sir, there is one statement in the speech of the honourable the Finance Secretary which has excited my resentment. It is this: He says the wages of these people are governed by the law of supply and demand. I expected that the Government of Bombay would have set a better example in this respect, and aimed at a humanitarian standard. Humanitarian employers have long come to the conclusion that the standard to be observed in employing servants is that they get a fair, a living wage. It is quite possible under the pressure of competition for government to get peons who are willing to serve on less wages though these may not be a living wage. I would wish the Government of Bombay to look into the question of wages not from the point of view of supply and demand but from the point of view of a fair standard of living upon humanitarian considerations. Any one who is acquainted with the city of Bombay knows full well that the wages they get are below the standard of living. If they had investigated into the matter, as I have done, they will know that most of them are indebted. They have to pay very heavy rates of interest. It is an evident fact that if there is any class of people who live frugally and do not indulge in drink and whose habits are industrious, it is this class of servants. It is a mistake to apply the rule of supply and demand in their case. It was urged that, because in the city private employers pay less, the Government should not pay more. I do not think that the wages paid by Government should be regulated by the approbation or disapprobation of private employers in the city. I strongly recommend the proposal that has been made by my honourable friend Mr. Bole, and I hope it will receive the heartiest support of this House.

I have not heard any one say that these people are getting a living wage. Every one knows that the cost of living in the city has increased greatly since 1906. The statistics of the Labour Office are misleading to a certain extent. If one wants to calculate the percentage of increase in the cost of living, he must go beyond 1914. As President of the Labour Conference held last year in Bombay, I had occasion to draw the attention of the Labour Office to this aspect of the statistics. And the Labour Office inserted a note to correct the misapprehension by making it clear that the statistics were not intended at all to convey the idea that the wages were commensurate with the cost of living and were not meant to show that the wages these people got were sufficient to maintain a fair standard of living, but only to indicate how wages and the cost of living have risen since 1914. But the cost of living is 100 per cent. or more since 1906 as the Government indicate.

I request the Government to do something more than mere expressions of sympathy. Sympathy without wages is not sympathy without sympathy is something tangible. Be this as it may, the Government would utilize the sympathy of the House if they pass this and even though they cannot accept the resolution I hope they will receive it with sympathy and use their authority to give effect to the resolution as far as they can. With my compliments I commend the resolution to the acceptance of the House.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD: Mr. President, I am glad to hear the words of sympathy expressed for this large body of peons. I think that the last statements of the last speaker are important. He recognised the importance of fixing the salary after careful consideration without straightaway fixing it from Rs. 25 to Rs. 50. His sympathy will be very valuable in the enquiries which are in progress with regard to what is really a living wage for this particular class of servants. I do not believe that it is the desire of any honourable member here to go beyond what is really a living wage suitable to these men. As has been pointed out by the Finance Secretary, we are already paying them more than the minimum limit—Rs. 25—suggested in the resolution. They are already receiving in pay and allowances rather more than that. I do not suppose he wants us to go back upon that. If we have to accept any variation in the other limit, we will have so many applications from gentlemen, quite possibly holding honours degrees, that it would be difficult for us to decide whom we should employ. It would probably tend to throw the present class of peons out of work and it would certainly be uneconomical though it might tend to lessen unemployment in the higher classes.

I am speaking here under some difficulty, because I did not anticipate that this resolution, any more than the last one, would be reached. Therefore I did not hesitate to recommend the Honourable the Finance Member who would have ordinarily dealt with this subject and who is unfortunately suffering from indisposition not to be present here to-night. I must apologise therefore if I have not been able to put the case properly because it is not my subject at all. It belongs to the Honourable the Finance Member. I spoke the other day as the Member in charge of the Home Department. I was very sympathetic, it is true, with regard to the pay of the police sub-inspectors and I was quite ready to raise their pay as Home Member. I am now for the moment in charge of another department and I have got to be stricter, look to the other point of view and keep a firm hand on the money-bags, which unfortunately I have not got as Home Member, as they are in the possession of the Honourable the Finance Member.

I think therefore the figures which have been quoted by the Finance Secretary indicate that we have got to be very careful in this matter. We have already got under enquiry the question as to what is to be done

... I suppose all honourable members know that the
... of the war and thereafter. The question under ... the allowances should be turned into pay or how
... not want to raise false hopes in these matters
... governed by reasonable financial considerations.
... regard to pensions. The question of pensions is ... eration, and I think there is a good deal to be said for
... in their pensions, and, personally speaking, I hope that ... some improvement. Rs. 6 is not a princely sum for a man

But I cannot say anything definitely about it, because I that we have not got a free hand in the matter ; we are bound by higher authorities, and until we get leave, we cannot really adequately deal with the matter. I understand that these matters are all under enquiry, and of course they will receive sympathetic treatment.
At the same time, I do not want to raise any false hopes in this body of peons, because we may find it impossible to do all that our sympathetic nature would lead us to do, at all events speaking as representing the Honourable Member of the Finance Department.

I am, Sir, rather reminded in this connection of the case of the diamond pin. I suppose you all know the case of the diamond pin.
I hope none of you have been caught by it. A young man was given a present, you remember, of a diamond pin, and he put it into his tie, and immediately discovered his tie was not up to the pin, and so he had to go and buy a new tie. Though the new tie and the diamond pin looked very nice, his vest was not so nice, so he had to buy a new vest. Then he found that the other articles of his dress were not quite up to standard, and he had to get a new and expensive suit and a nice expensive stick with a gold knob. And then he found that his ordinary method of travelling by tram or 3rd class rail was unsuitable to his improved style in dress, and he had to order a motor car—an expensive one. And so he went on, until he found that the house he was living in was really unsuitable for him, and he went and hired—he did not purchase as he had no money—a palace. The consequence was that he quickly went bankrupt and there was an end of him. So I should like to say that if we give the peons the salary proposed, we shall find that with this smart set of peons we shall have to have the next grade above them rather more expensively dressed and fed and so on, and our clerks will have to appear in rather different costumes from those in which they appear now. We shall have to pay them a good deal more—I suppose we might increase their pay by 50 per cent., which would hardly satisfy them. Then, we should have to go on a little further and would find that the superior officers over the clerks wanted more pay, and a little higher still we should find that the Under Secretaries were not satisfied with their salaries, and soon the officers who do higher work—the Secretaries—would claim to be entitled to a good deal more pay.
I hope the House would not stop there but would also go on to the Members of the Government.

An Honourable MEMBER : Their salaries are non-votable.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : Well, Sir, .. tion strongly supported by this House would no doubt receive in the right quarters. But if we provide for those amounts, spending a good deal more than even this Rs. 2½ lakhs which the amount we would have to spend on the scale laid down in resolution, and I am afraid we should very rapidly become bankrupt. I would suggest that possibly this sudden liberal by the members of this House is partly due to the fact that soon to get that Rs. 22 lakhs—we have all seen it in the newspaper from the Government of India ; but we have not got it yet, and we do not know whether we shall get it. If we get it and our extra 2½ crores for the income tax, then I think we might begin to move in the matter including even the very deserving rise in the salaries of the Members of Government.

An Honourable MEMBER : Which Member of Government ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : The Home Member of course, not to mention my honourable friends on my right.

MOULVI RAFTUDDIN AHMAD : Sir, is this all in order ?

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I ought to apologise,
 Sir, if any of this ought not to appear on the records.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : A little humour cannot be out of place.

The Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I do really wish to suggest something serious, namely, that we are sympathetically considering this matter, but we must be guided by financial considerations.
 We cannot accept the scale laid down here Rs. 25 to Rs. 50, which would run us into a very large expenditure, and would affect all sorts of other grades of our officers, would affect, for instance, the police, and would affect private employers in the city, and would probably lead to a state of affairs which would not really be a practicable position from the financial point of view. I hope that the honourable member will not seriously press the resolution for this particular scale, but will rely upon our doing what we can and will withdraw his motion.

Mr. W. S. MUKADAM : Sir, I move for a closure. .

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I accept the closure, and call upon the mover to reply.

Mr. S. K. BOLE : Sir, there is nothing to reply, but I can say only this much that a sum of Rs. 2 lakhs is only a flea-bite when compared with the increases given to the highly-paid officers as recommended by the Lee Commission. (Honourable Members : Hear, hear.) The opposition of Government shows that they are straining at a gnat whilst swallowing an elephant in the shape of Lee recommendations.
 Sir, the resolution will upset nobody but the Government, because I have already shown by facts and figures that all the commercial offices are paying more than what Government are paying. So, that will upset nobody except the Government, and what I urge on the Government is not to show lip-sympathy but to show practical sympathy.

. K. Bole]

These words, I hope Government will be good enough to accept solution.

Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD : I have nothing further to say, Sir, in reply. The resolution put and carried.

A. C. OWEN : Mr. President, the resolution which I wish to move follows :

"^a This Council recommends to Government that they may be pleased to appoint at an early date a committee to go into the question of

(a) Annual Reports,

(b) Forms and Returns, with a view to reduction in the matter printed in annual reports and the revision or cancellation of forms and returns."

Sir, my sole object in bringing this matter forward is to effect some economy in public expenditure. From the budget we find that heavy expenditure is incurred on printing and stationery. I have endeavoured to get the actual figures, but apparently the expenditure is not kept separate. I think that the sum that is now spent could be reduced, if the investigation I suggest is carried out thoroughly. The presses are not treated as commercial concerns in the accounts and it is not possible to ascertain if they cover their expenditure plus interest and depreciation on plant.

I am aware, Sir, that the Retrenchment Committee submitted a valuable report on the reduction of expenditure but this committee dealt only with posts and allowances and economies in district administration. It did not touch the question of reports, etc., in which I consider there is scope for considerable reduction, for if you reduce the clerical work you can pro tanto reduce the staff.

I know that honourable members receive a large number of Government publications, comprising annual reports on different departments, special committees, etc. Some of these are very interesting and are models of what such reports should be, but on the other hand some are to my mind unnecessarily diffuse and contain masses of figures which can be of little use or interest, except to the head of the department concerned. By all means let that officer have all the details necessary for the proper control of the department, but I submit that it is only necessary to print essential figures for the proper understanding of the report, I do not wish to weary the House with instances. I will only briefly refer to one or two.

Take the triennial report on civil hospitals and dispensaries for the year 1923. It contains 381 pages of half foolscap size; 5 pages of reading matter and 376 pages of figures. Statement B of this report deals with the number of patients treated and extends from page 8 to page 83. Then take statement C which deals with "Diseases". It runs from page 84 to page 223. Then statement G shows the number of surgical operations performed, pages 280 to 307. It gives an amount of details which are hardly of any use to other than members of the medical fraternity. Who wants to know how many men were operated

K. Bole]

These words, I hope Government that all such questions as have solution.

Now I do not wish to weary the Honourable Sir MAURICE Ask Government to take this matter in a favourable reply. rational. on proposed carriage

N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, I rise to oppose this motion. Our reports are really very disappointing. They do not give the information that is really necessary. And another point that I would like to lay stress on is that there is no compulsion on any body to read the reports if he is not so minded. So, the idea of reducing the size of reports is really a very undesirable one. I simply am not against the appointment of a committee but if the only terms are to reduce the size of the reports, then I must say that I oppose it; but if a committee is appointed for increasing the utility of reports and reducing waste, I think I can accept the suggestion that is made. I do not know, Sir, if you will allow me to move an amendment. My amendment would be like this: Omit the word "reduction" and insert instead "with a view to increasing their utility and reducing waste".

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Why prolong the debate at this time?

The Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR: Mr. President, within 10 minutes' time the council will adjourn, but I desire to congratulate the honourable member who moved this resolution on the lucid speech he made and the facts and figures that he has placed before this House. Government desire to assure him that they will endeavour to do more in the matter, but let that not be interpreted to mean that Government have done nothing up to now. I have made these few remarks first which I intended to make last, but I am anxious to show this honourable House what Government have done in the past, what Government are doing and what they propose to do in the future. I cannot allow the remarks of my honourable friend to pass uncontradicted, because they may leave the impression upon the minds of honourable members that Government have practically done nothing. A special officer was appointed to go into the question of revision of forms used in all Government offices in the presidency as well as in Sind. I believe he worked for practically a year and ultimately his recommendations were accepted by Government and considerable economy was effected. Then, the Superintendent of Government Printing and Stationery also went into the question of reduction of these forms and as a result of his recommendations further reductions took place. My honourable friend's complaint that the Retrenchment Committee, although it had gone into the question of establishment, etc., had not gone into this question, was not quite correct. The Secretary of the Retrenchment Committee was specially asked by Government to go into the question with a view to effect economy in the actual printing of forms. That was in 1922, and he made a thorough examination. I believe, Mr. President, you were in the Secretariat at the time when Mr. Maxwell made an examination of all forms and records. He introduced changes of a very useful character, which, not only effected economy, but which also tended to better administration.

Then, Sir, with regard to the curtailment of returns Government has not absolutely neglected the matter. They have paid attention to that also. The Superintendent of Government Printing went into this question and reported, and a large number of reductions were made. Further again, all heads of offices were asked to report on this matter as to what could be left out of the administration reports and other reports, and on the advice given certain returns were reduced in size and others were eliminated. I have got here a formidable list of the reductions effected since 1917. It is interesting to see this list. I have not the time to read out all these reductions, but I will just give my honourable friends opposite an idea of what has been reduced (holding up the list for the inspection of honourable members opposite). The list of forms abolished runs through several foolscap pages. It relates to various departments, the Legal Department, the Home Department, etc. These were all done from 1917 to 1923 as the result of the investigations of the special officer appointed, the Superintendent of Government Printing and Stationery, and finally Mr. Maxwell, who was Secretary of the Retrenchment Committee. Therefore, honourable members opposite will see that Government have done their best to curtail all printed matter.

The honourable mover of the resolution talked about the Government Gazette. Well, there are some things which have to be printed in the Government Gazette. The honourable member for Poona will remember that he insisted on bills being translated in Urdu and published in the Gazette, and Government accepted that recommendation. All these things, after all run into pages and pages. If we come to look back upon why they were printed, we will most probably find it was done either at the express desire of the Council or because it was found necessary at some time or other.

Then he came to the question of Questions and Answers in this House, and he stated that we find so many questions being answered by merely informing the honourable member that the information is being obtained. I think, Sir, you will remember that those questions used not to be included in the list. It was you, Sir, or your predecessor, who thought it was desirable that an honourable member should be informed that his question is receiving the attention of Government, though Government was not able to give the information at the time. The only way of doing that was to print the question of the honourable member and say that his question was receiving the attention of Government. Therefore, although that used not to be included before, it has been included under special instructions.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I point out to the honourable member, that under the Standing Orders those questions which are not replied to during the session for which notice is given lapse, and able members have got to give fresh notice of those questions. In order to save that inconvenience to honourable members that procedure was suggested and has been adopted.

he Honourable Mr. COWASJI JEHangIR : You have given the explanation, Sir. That is why they are included in the list of Questions and Answers.

Well, Sir, Government will be very pleased indeed to go further into this question. We come now to the administration reports. My honourable friend referred to the Medical Department and the long lists of operations included in the report. Now, Sir, I cannot really explain to the House why all those long lists of operations are included. But there must be a good reason for it. Government will go into this, and they will try and find out why these departments want to include all such information, and if the departments agree that all this information is not necessary for the public, then we shall certainly eliminate it. But we cannot undertake to do anything without investigation. I do not think a committee will be of any use. Special officers have been appointed for this purpose, and Government are continuing their policy of retrenchment. If my honourable friend the mover comes to our assistance and gives us the benefit of his advice as to which returns he considers superfluous, I will undertake to make an investigation and effect retrenchment if possible and we shall be very grateful to the honourable member for his advice.

I have nothing further to say, and I hope he will withdraw the resolution on the assurance that I have given.

Mr. A. C. OWEN (European, Presidency) : Sir, I am very glad to hear that Government have already taken action in this matter and I trust they are prepared to continue the good work. On the assurance of the Honourable the General Member that further investigation will be made, I am prepared to withdraw the resolution. As suggested by the Honourable Member, I shall be glad to help Government in any way I can.

Question put and leave granted.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I have now to intimate to the House that I have received a commission from His Excellency directing me to announce that he is pleased to order that the present session of the Legislative Council should be prorogued. Accordingly, by virtue of this commission of His Excellency, I declare this Council prorogued until the date of which due notice shall be given. This Council is now prorogued.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND

The Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay receives considerable subventions from Government for their expenditure on education, hospitals, sanitation and other public purposes. This expenditure is growing rapidly, and in favour of compulsory education will grow still more rapidly. The consequent increase in the demands for assistance from the Government is

In order to enable Government to meet these demands, it is proposed to secure further revenue from those areas which will be brought under the expenditure of the Government of India.

The tax now proposed is in the form of Stamp Duty; it involves no additional expense in collection; it will be paid by people at the most convenient time when the transaction taxed places them in funds, and the incidence is restricted to a small percentage of the price obtained by the transaction.

Esq., I.C.S.,
SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY,
FINANCE DEPARTMENT;

THE SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA,
FINANCE DEPARTMENT.

Subject : Financial Relations—Revision of Meston Settlement.

Sir,

With reference to the financial proposals contained in the Budget of the Government of India, I am directed to communicate to the Government of India a representation of the Legislative Council of Bombay suggesting that the just claims of this Presidency require further consideration.

2. His Excellency the Governor in Council entirely associates himself with this representation, and with the speech of the Finance Member of this Government in the course of the debate in Council on March 2nd.

3. I am to invite attention to the protests against the Meston Settlement which this Government have made to the Government of India from time to time, protests based on evidence and arguments which have been fully set out in the accompanying representation. I am to recall to the Government of India the advice tendered in 1917-18 by Sir W. Meyer, then Finance Member, Sir J. Brunyate, Member of the Council of India and Sir H. F. Howard, subsequently Financial Adviser to the Secretary of State, to the effect that a complete separation of sources of revenue was not adopted in any Federal system and was not practicable.

4. The break down of this system is admitted by the acceptance, upon the protest of the Bombay Government, by the Secretary of State of Devolution Rules 14 (c) and 15. But while the claim of this Presidency to a share in the income tax was admitted, the Rule was so framed as to withhold any substantial relief. The sums collected by the Government of India in the period 1921-22 to 1924-25 and the share received by this Government are shown below :—

5. The Government of Bombay have noted reply of the Honourable the Finance Member (Contd.), very willing to consider the amendment. Consideration of this question will not bro-^Agested reference to the next Conference o- request that an immediate reference of the 1925, to the Taxation Enquiry Committee. I hitherto the Meston Settlement has been merely March 2nd 1921 the eyes of the public, the practical application of the Budget, the has now awakened general interest. The indignation arou-^{tion to the} Legislative Council has begun to appreciate the extent to-^{nt of India} welfare of this Presidency has been endangered, is very great, and I am to urge that the Government of India may be moved to allay this indignation by some measures that will ensure substantial relief at a very early date.

6. The Province of Bombay has reached a stage when the revenue obtained from the rural population will no longer meet the needs of future progress, and the Legislative Council have declared with no uncertain voice that they are adverse to any additional taxation which may fall to any extent on the rural population. It is on this ground that they refused a year ago to extend the enhanced Court Fees which had been introduced in 1922 as a temporary measure. Apart from the tax on betting which the Government of Bombay intend to introduce during the year, the possibilities of new taxation are limited to enhancements under the Stamp Acts, and until some form of death duties can be evolved and extended to the whole of India, Stamp Duties can produce little additional revenue.

7. I am directed further to lay particular stress on that part of the representation which deals with the comparative incidence of taxation in the various Provinces. The per capita taxation (including the land revenue) in this Presidency is considerably higher than in any other part of India ; and this fact has made it peculiarly difficult for this Government to carry even the small measures of taxation left open to local Governments. At the same time the standard of living and the long accepted standards of administration, as evidenced by the comparative tables of expenditure on the various public services, make it impossible for this Presidency to retrench down to the standard of other Provinces, though rigid economy has long been the guiding spirit in all departments.

8. Figures of the retrenchments effected have already been supplied by telegram to the Government of India, but these perforce omit all reference to economies constantly being effected, which though the results are not calculable, have definitely affected the standard of administrative efficiency. The time has now come when the difficulties arising out of the failure to obtain a share of the revenues derived from the great industries of the Province can no longer be concealed by retrenchment

REPRESENTATION OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF

March 14th, 1925.

1. The Legislative Council of Bombay on March 2nd¹⁹²⁵ following resolution :—

The business of the Council be adjourned to call attention to the financial proposals of the Finance Member of the Government of India as they affect this Presidency and to urge upon the Government the necessity of urgently communicating to the Government of India by a proper representation of the Honourable Members of this House the just claims of Bombay to further consideration, having regard to the financial position of this Presidency.

2. The financial proposals in this Budget of the Government of India make no reference to the Bombay Presidency but, in accordance with the Meston Settlement, allot 2·5 crores to grant relief to four Provinces of a portion of their contribution to the Central Exchequer. Moreover, in regard to Bengal, they go outside the Meston Settlement, and grant a total remission of the contribution of 63 lakhs to that Presidency for another three years.

3. We claim that a grave injustice has been done to the Presidency of Bombay through the Meston Settlement. Our case against that settlement is based on two distinct grounds : firstly, that the distribution of surplus revenues assigned to the provinces of India over and above the provincial revenue existing at the time of the reforms was determined in a haphazard manner and bore no relation to the needs of the provinces, to the total taxation derived from those provinces and to the resources then available in those provinces : and secondly, that this haphazard distribution was founded upon the application of federal principles of finance which have not been adopted in any other federal Government in the world.

4. We recognise our responsibility in putting forward so vigorous a criticism of a system of finance which was first suggested in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, accepted by the Meston Committee and endorsed by the Joint Committee of the House of Lords and Commons. We are supported in our present representation by the continuous protests which the Government of Bombay have made from the first consideration of this question in 1918. We feel that these protests have been overruled chiefly on the ground of the grave complexity of the problems raised and the expediency of accepting a definite decision supported by authority. We urge that this decision should now be reconsidered for the reasons :

Firstly, that the decision has already broken down as is admitted by the variations already accepted in rules 15 and 18 (2) of the Devolution Rules.

Secondly, that the premises on which the decision was founded can be demonstrated to be erroneous.

Appendices

anticipations of the Meston Committee can be have been completely falsified by events.

is general statement of our case, we must proceed to a analysis; and firstly with regard to the haphazard dis- e surplus revenues.

the Committee found nine provinces of the Indian Empire the possession of a normal income of 54 crores of rupees. They that on the proposed classification of sources of revenue provinces would receive 76½ crores and would accept the respons- for 4 crores of Imperial expenditure to be transferred to the provinces. The provinces would thus have an additional net increase of 18½ crores. Of this 18½ crores, the Committee allotted 15 crores to the four provinces :

| | Crores. |
|--------------------------|---------|
| Madras | 5·8 |
| United Provinces | 4·0 |
| Punjab | 2·9 |
| Burma | 2·5 |

The other provinces received :

| | |
|---------------------------|-------------|
| Bengal | 1,04 lakhs. |
| Bombay | 92 ” |
| Central Provinces | 52 ” |
| Bihar and Orissa | 51 ” |
| Assam | 42 ” |

It is interesting to note the percentages of the increases of revenue thus allotted to these provinces :

| Province. | Normal income. | Increased income due to Reforms. (Figures are in crores.) | Percentage increase. |
|---------------------------|----------------|--|----------------------|
| Madras | 8·8 | 5·8 | 66 |
| United Provinces | 7·8 | 4·0 | 51 |
| Punjab | 5·8 | 2·9 | 50 |
| Burma | 6·1 | 2·5 | 41 |
| Bengal | 7·1 | 1·0 | 14 |
| Bombay | 10·2 | 0·9 | 9 |
| Bihar and Orissa | 3·3 | 0·5 | 15 |
| Central Provinces | 3·2 | 0·5 | 16 |
| Assam | 1·5 | 0·4 | 27 |

6. Now how does the Meston Report justify this variation in treatment? Paragraph 15 of their Report discusses this question and should be considered in full :

“ It is of importance to realise the nature of this transaction. In the first place it implies no judgment on the merits of previous financial settlements with any province. The increase in revenue comes to the provinces as a windfall, or as a bye-product of a constitutional change. It is not due, as financial settlements have been in the past, to the consideration of the financial needs of individual provinces. It cannot properly be quoted as an admission of financial inequalities or as an act of tardy justice to the provinces that gain by it. from political and not primarily from financial ^{motives} in the desire to secure a greater measure of devol^{possibly} and in the endeavour to draw for this purpose a def were equ partition between local governments and the Gov^{the w} While we consider that a windfall of this nature affo^{nt} for initial contributions by the provinces, it is not surpris^{ll} its application requires some modifications in view of individu^{stances}.

“Secondly, on this basis the system of contributions appears in a less invidious light. The central government in the course of a political reconstruction gives to each of the local governments some, and to some local governments a very considerable, increase of spending power. Finding itself in a deficit as the result of this reconstruction, it withholds from each province a certain proportion of the increased resources which it is intended that the provinces should eventually obtain. The central government does not come in as raiding the hard won surplus of a province; nor ought the central government to be represented, if our proposal be accepted, as the pensioner of the provinces. It can hardly be contended that a province, which has at all events decidedly improved its finances as a result of the change, has valid ground of complaint, if it does not obtain immediately the full increment which it may subsequently realise. In the case of the provinces that gain most, it would hardly be possible for any such province to spend in the first year the whole of its suddenly increased resources; and if it were possible, it would be financially undesirable. We think therefore that this basis affords less scope for controversy and may be accepted as both logical and more equitable than the plan of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report.”

7. It is remarkable that the Committee did not consider themselves called upon to justify so violent a change in the existing revenues on any reasoned grounds. They accepted without qualification the fact that this increase given to certain provinces arose out of political and not primarily financial motives, and then they proceeded to argue in some detail on the justification of withholding from certain provinces a proportion of the increased resources.

8. We are unable to view this question from the same standpoint. The position taken by the Meston Committee has largely governed the direction of subsequent criticisms by provincial governments. Attention has been concentrated, and in our judgment wrongly concentrated, on the amount of provincial resources withheld out of the windfalls; and the great agricultural provinces of Madras, the United Provinces and the Punjab have complained that they have been paying 3·5, 2·4 and 1·75 crores of provincial contributions and have lost sight of the fact that they received windfalls of 66 per cent., 51 per cent. and 50 per cent. over and above their former revenues. The argument has in fact been turned upside down, and the public have been led to believe that Bombay and Bengal with contributions of 56 and 63 lakhs have been favourably treated in comparison with the provinces that pay two or three crores.

Appendices

The Committee did not consider it necessary to allocate 5½ crores to Madras and 4 crores to the United Provinces. In view of the total amount of 18½ crores, the protests of Bombay against its share in the income-tax (on which the Committee has no report in item (d) of their terms of reference) compelled them to depart from the general theory of windfalls, the special case of Bombay finances: and they made the following references

In paragraph 7 they reject the claim of Bombay to a share of the income-tax on the ground that they 'do not apprehend that the richer provinces, such as Bombay, will be seriously handicapped in the administration of their own finances; and they append 'some figures which indicate that several of the provinces, and Bombay in particular, may look for reasonable elasticity which will in most cases be encouraged by judicious capital outlay'.

In these figures they compared the revenue under the proposed individual heads of the year 1912-13 with the year 1920-21 and found that in these eight years Bombay had increased

|-----------------------|---------------|
| its Excise Revenue by | 102 per cent. |
| its General Stamps by | 119 „ |
| its Land Revenue by | 32 „ | and all provincial revenues by 52 per cent.; whereas the increase in other provinces varied from 11 to 35 per cent. It was thus on an assumed annual increase of

| |
|---------------------------------|
| 12½ per cent. in Excise |
| 15 per cent. in General Stamps |
| and 4 per cent. in Land Revenue | that they based their conclusion that Bombay in particular may "look for reasonable elasticity in their revenues apart from income-tax".

10. We append a Note showing how completely the contention of the Committee regarding the elasticity of our revenues has been falsified in fact. We have had the figures of revenue carefully examined, and compared the actual realisations with the expectations of the Meston Committee. We find that the realisations in the four years of the reformed government fell short of the calculations of the Committee by over 9 crores.

The selection of two single years as the basis of important conclusions has vitiated the whole argument. The datum line selected was a year of famine when the land revenue had fallen by a crore and a half. Hence the erroneous conclusion that the land revenue would go on expanding at the rate of about 4 per cent. per annum. An analysis of our land revenue figures for the last twenty-one years shows that it has expanded by 14 per cent. in that period, or less than 1 per cent. per annum. Its capacity for expansion in the future is clearly limited: while it is admitted that this Presidency is more liable to famine than any other part of India.

In the case of Excise the period considered by the Committee included an important change of system from fixed fees to auctions which led to a sudden large increase of revenues which could not possibly be repeated.

The Committee's expectations regarding Stamps were equally erroneous as they were based upon the boom years following the war.

11. Again, the Meston Committee in paragraph 20 state that Bombay "has attained a scale of expenditure far above the Indian average, and the pace of expansion of its revenues is distinctly higher than in any other province. We believe that it could without inconvenience forego the greater part of its new resources at the outset, and help the less fortunate provinces from its own abundant balances. But we hesitate to differentiate it prejudicially from the other richer provinces".

We admit that we have a scale of expenditure far above the Indian average; but if the State in Bombay has conferred greater benefits on the people in the matter of Education, Medical Relief, Roads, Buildings, and such other beneficent activities, it has derived the revenues for this expenditure from its own people. Is it right that we should be penalised on this ground? Is it disputed that an industrial province must necessarily maintain a higher standard of administration than a purely agricultural province?

12. The question of the heavy expenditure of the Government on great commercial and industrial cities is mentioned by the Meston Committee, but with little recognition of its importance. Bombay has two of the principal ports of India on its coast line. But the mercantile and trading population who contribute so handsomely to the revenues of the India Government in Income tax, Super tax, Customs duties and Cotton Excise, and who are the main prop of the Government of India in its loan operations, contribute little to the provincial revenues. The local government has to provide for the education of a large industrial population and to grapple with problems of development and sanitation, medical relief and housing, as well as to maintain law and order in cities and large industrial towns. As an illustration, it may be noted that the expenditure on Police in Bombay City is Rs. 3 per head as against Re. 1 per head in the districts or an increased expenditure of 20 lakhs on Bombay City police alone. This is not a small matter when it is remembered that of the 11 chief towns of India with a population of over 200,000 four are situated in this Presidency.

13. This Presidency is engaged in vast enterprises in the development of the City of Bombay and the development of irrigation in Sind: enterprises which conceived and put in train before the crushing blow of this Award fell upon us, require the provision of some 50 crores of capital. When these works are completed we anticipate that the material progress of the people will be greatly enhanced, trade and industry will flourish and the income-tax revenue will be greatly increased. Is it just that this Presidency should bear the whole risk and responsibility of those enterprises and that the proceeds of the wealth so gained should be diverted to the Central Exchequer? In the City of Bombay we borrow money wherewith to reclaim large areas, to construct buildings and to lay out roads. The industries that flourish therefrom pay their whole contribution to the central government. We remain responsible for the loans and receive no benefit from the industries that we have financed. We submit that this is an anomalous and inequitable arrangement which would not be tolerated in any other Federal system in the world.

14. We now proceed to set forth some detailed figures regarding our income tax payments.

At the time of the Meston Award the income tax in the different provinces was as follows :—

| | | | | | Lakhs. |
|-------------------|----|----|----|-------|--------|
| Madras | .. | .. | .. | .. | 78 |
| Bombay | .. | .. | .. | .. | 245 |
| Bengal | .. | .. | .. | .. | 177 |
| United Provinces | .. | .. | .. | .. | 50 |
| Punjab | .. | .. | .. | .. | 41 |
| Burma | .. | .. | .. | .. | 60 |
| Bihar and Orissa | .. | .. | .. | .. | 20 |
| Central Provinces | .. | .. | .. | .. | 18 |
| Assam | .. | .. | .. | .. | 9 |
| | | | | Total | 698 |

The Income tax, Super tax and Excess profit Duty levied from Bombay in subsequent years is shown in the following statement :—

| (Figures are in lakhs of rupees.) | | | | | |
|-----------------------------------|----------|----------|----------|----------|------------------------|
| | 1920-21. | 1921-22. | 1922-23. | 1923-24. | 1924-25. (revised). |
| Income tax | .. 429 | 481 | 480 | 353 | 255 |
| Super tax | .. 188 | 345 | 308 | 181 | 119 |
| Excess profits duty. | 62 | 11 | 1 | .. | .. |
| Total | .. 679 | 837 | 789 | 534 | 374 |
| Refunds | .. 52 | | | | |
| Net | .. 627 | | | | |

Thus in the five years Bombay has paid in lieu of a levy as anticipated by the Meston Committee of 12½ crores :

| | | | | |
|--------------------|----|----|----|----------------|
| Income tax | .. | .. | .. | 19·98 crores. |
| Super tax | .. | .. | .. | 11·41 .. |
| Excess profit duty | .. | .. | .. | ·75 .. |
| | | | | Total .. 32·14 |

For the years 1920—23 (for which alone figures of all provinces are available) this province with a population of less than 8 per cent. of the total population of British India has contributed not less than 36 per cent. of the income tax and allied taxes of all India.

Appendices

We fully admit that the companies operating in the having their headquarters in Bombay pay income tax an allowance must be made for this fact. But no such deduction alter the essential fact that a far larger proportion of our population live by industry than in any other province or that this presidency several times as much per head in the shape of taxes on income as other province in India.

15. In response to the continuous protests of the Bombay Government, the Secretary of State overruled the Meston Committee's proposal that no share of the income tax should be allotted to any province, and sanctioned a special rule No. 14-C in the Devolution Rules, thereby granting a share "in the growth of revenue derived from income tax collected in the provinces so far as the growth is attributable to an increase in the amount of income assesses". This was a fundamental breach in the system of separate revenues on which the whole Meston Settlement is founded. It is indeed true that Bombay, the protagonist of the struggle for a share in the income tax, gets less under the Devolution Rule 15 than most other provinces, because the datum year 1920-21 was one of exceptional trade and prosperity in Bombay; and as the machinery for the collection of the tax had also been brought to a higher pitch of efficiency in Bombay than in other provinces, the result is that Bombay can never hope to secure any substantial revenue under the existing rule. The share of this province was 13 lakhs for the year 1921-22 and 16½ lakhs for 1922-23, nothing for the last or the current year, and probably nothing next year. But however disappointing the result from the Bombay point of view, the fact remains that this rule represents a complete departure from the theory of the clean cut.

16. The sanctity of the Settlement has thus already been violated. It can no longer be pleaded that its principles are fixed for good or ill.

A further breach was effected when, in August 1923, the Secretary of State sanctioned rule 18 (2) granting a remission to the Government of Bengal of the provincial contribution in the financial years 1922-23; and again in the proposals of the present budget of the Government of India to continue the special remission to the province of Bengal for another three years.

Since the province of Bengal has, like that of Bombay, contributed a very large amount to the central revenues in the shape of income tax, super tax, and excess profit duty in the four years 1921-25, we regard this remission of 2 crores in the past and 2 crores in the coming three years as a partial recognition of the injustice of the Meston Settlement, and we endorse and support this remission. But we fail to recognise any grounds for a differentiation adverse to Bombay and we claim that pending the settlement of our appeal for a revision of the allocation of the sources of revenue, the same relief as has been applied to the Presidency of Bengal may be applied to the Presidency of Bombay by the remission of the existing contribution of Rs. 56 lakhs a year. Such remission can however only be regarded as a provisional remedy and as a small proportion only of our total claim.

Appendices

ment must take into consideration the needs of our province, our contributions both to the revenues as well as the demands on our resources, according to the standards of our administration. Statement in Appendix A compares the per capita contribution of different provinces to the Imperial revenues for the latest year 1922-23, the figures for which are available. The figures for Customs, Salt and Excise have not been included as it is not possible to distribute them by provinces with any approach to accuracy.

If we turn to the provincial revenues obtained by taxation the same difference is manifest from the accompanying statement :

*Provincial taxes * per head of population (1922-23).*

| | Rs. |
|--------------------------|-----|
| Madras | 3·2 |
| Bombay | 6·1 |
| United Provinces | 2·2 |
| Bengal | 1·9 |
| Punjab | 2·5 |
| Burma | 5·0 |

* Comprises Land Revenue Excise, Stamps, Irrigation, Scheduled Taxes and the Surplus of income tax granted to provincial governments.

Without claiming perfect accuracy for these figures, we maintain that they are sufficient to demonstrate the fact that Bombay contributes several times as much per head to the imperial exchequer as other provinces in India. For what it contributes to the provincial revenues it gets a return in the shape of greater amenities of civilized life than the other provinces. But what extra benefits does it enjoy as compared with the other provinces for the disproportionate share of its contributions to the Imperial Government ?

18. Since the Meston Committee were dealing with an increase of provincial resources from 54 crores to 72 crores, or 33 per cent., we claim that each province should have had an equal share in this increase. Bengal, the Central Provinces, Bihar and Orissa and Assam suffer also from this unequal distribution ; but our case is aggravated both by the smaller share that we received and by the heavy toll on our income tax revenues.

The normal revenue of Bombay was then assumed to be ten crores, and our proportionate share would have been 3·34 crores.

The Committee allotted us 92 lakhs only, and we urge that we have been unjustly deprived of 242 lakhs.

Of the sums so allotted forty per cent. only have so far been granted to the Provinces, and on this proportion Bombay should have received 96 lakhs per annum in these four years 1921—25.

We claim therefore that sum of four crores has been wrongly withheld from us ; and that in the future we are entitled on the basis of the just distribution of the surplus revenues dealt with by the Meston Award to additional revenues not less than 242 lakhs per annum.

Appendices

The Government of India have drawn from the State in the four years 1921--25 in Income Tax and Super-taxes 25 crores of rupees.

Are we not justified in asking that a portion of these 25 crores be restored to us? We ask that these two claims be submitted for the adjudication of an impartial tribunal.

19. So far we have dealt with the practical side of the Meston Settlement. We now turn to the theoretical basis. Immediately after the memorable declaration of August 1917, enquiries began as to the best method of financial provision for the autonomous governments then foreshadowed. The principle of entirely separate financial sources of revenue was laid by Sir James Meston (as he then was) and accepted on behalf of the Government of India.

The Local Governments accepted the principle in theory; but even at this early stage the Bombay Government claimed a share in the income tax. In June 1918 appeared the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, and in Chapter VIII we find this principle again enunciated:

“Our first aim has therefore been to find out some means of entirely separating the resources of the central and provincial governments” and again

“If provincial autonomy is to mean anything real, clearly the provinces must not be dependent on the Indian Government for the means of provincial development.”

We desire to draw special attention to these extracts, since the origin of all subsequent trouble is the academic insistence, by the framers of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, on the theory of complete separation.

20. In no country in the world in the history of federal and provincial finance has it been found possible to achieve a clean cut between provincial and central revenues. There is a larger measure of provincial autonomy in the Commonwealth of Australia than in any other British federation. Yet there is no such complete separation of Commonwealth and State finance as is aimed at in India. In Canada, and the United States also there are common sources of State Revenue. The war tax on profits and income in Switzerland was levied on the cantons who retained a share of the proceeds and paid the balance into the Federal treasury. Wherever complete separation has been aimed at, as in India, it is found that subsidies or contributions are required.

21. In conclusion, we desire to lay stress on the fact that Bombay is more highly taxed than any other province in India. Its greater liability to famine demands the maintenance of a balance and a famine fund greater than any other province. We are making every effort to effect retrenchment, balance our budget and maintain necessary reserves. We trust that the Government of India are able to appreciate the necessities of our financial position and will not be misled into the belief that Bombay is in no need of relief.

Appendices

we have fulfilled the conditions laid down by the Finance Member when he spoke on March 1st, 1923, words :

“The provincial governments think, it is said, that they will get more sympathy from the central government and get rid of their provincial contributions quickly if they can show a handsome deficit and appeal to the charity of the central government. I should like to say for my part that the strongest appeal that the provincial governments can make in the matter of provincial contributions is to show themselves worthy of assistance from the central government by strenuous and successful endeavours to make both ends meet for themselves.”

We have constantly insisted on the necessity for economy and retrenchment. We demanded of Government in 1922 a cut of 60 lakhs, which was actually converted into a saving of 70 lakhs; and the permanent savings effected on the advice of our Retrenchment Committee amount annually to over 33 lakhs. We agreed to temporary bills to enhance the Stamp Duties and the Court Fees, and to a permanent Act to tax Entertainments, with the result that we have built up and maintained a balance suitable to our situation. But our future progress is now impeded and we are faced next year with a deficit of nearly half a crore.

The case, therefore, for reference to another Committee of the revision of the Mestor Settlement, seems to us to be unanswerable. In this we are supported by the conclusions both of the majority and the minority reports of the Reforms Enquiry Committee which give additional reasons for early reconsideration.

APPENDIX B.

Note showing that Provincial revenues of the Government of have not expanded as anticipated by the Meston Comf/O.

1. Land Revenue and other heads—

The Meston Committee estimated the percentage growth of L. R. + Irrigation during the period 1912-13—1920-21 at 32 per cent.

The actual revenue under the heads L. R. and Irrigation in 1912-13 was 489 lakhs.

The White Book figure for 1920-21 was 633 lakhs.

The figures from which the Meston Committee calculated the percentage growth are—

- (1) actuals for 1912-13 ;
- (2) budget figures for 1920-21.

Average percentage growth per annum as estimated by the Meston Committee was 4 per cent. of actual revenue for 1912-13, i. e., 19½ lakhs per annum.

In the period 1921-22—1924-25 the Meston Committee anticipated that the revenue under these heads would be as follows :—

| | | | Lakhs. |
|--------------|----|----|------------------------------|
| Basic figure | .. | .. | 489+32 per cent. of 489=645½ |
| 1921-22 | .. | .. | 489+36 per cent. of 489=665 |
| 1922-23 | .. | .. | 489+40 per cent. of 489=684½ |
| 1923-24 | .. | .. | 489+44 per cent. of 489=704 |
| 1924-25 | .. | .. | 489+48 per cent. of 489=723½ |

These estimates must be compared with the actual revenues realized.

| | | | As estimated by basic Meston Committee figures. | Actuals. |
|---------|----|----|--|----------|
| 1921-22 | .. | .. | 665 | 583 |

| 1923-24 | .. | .. | 704 | 562 |
| 1924-25 | .. | .. | 723½ | 577 |

Throughout the period the actual revenue was less than the figures which the Committee erroneously thought would represent the revenue for 1920-21.

The Meston Committee estimated that during the period of four years there would be an increase of 234 lakhs; as a matter of fact there has been a decrease of 60½ lakhs. In the four years 1921—1925 the actual revenues under these heads have amounted to 904 lakhs less than estimated by the Meston Committee.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The object of this Bill is to enhance the Court fees in certain cases for the purpose of increasing the revenue of Government. In enhancing the Court fees the general principle followed is that where fixed fees are prescribed as in Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, the fees should be raised in consequence of the decreased value of money. In the case of ad valorem fees prescribed in Schedule I of the Court Fees Act, an enhancement is made only where experience has shown that the present fees levied are so inadequate that they lead to the abuse of judicial facilities or do not cover the actual cost to Government of the services rendered. The enhancement is effected by clauses 3 and 4 of the Bill which alter the fees in the case of those articles in Schedules I and II of the Court Fees Act in respect of which an enhancement of fee is considered necessary. A few applications have been added to Article 18 of Schedule II of that Act which, it is believed, should properly be brought under that Article as they are on the same footing as applications under paragraph 17 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The table of ad valorem fees is amended where the fee is altered.

2. Clause 2 of the Bill makes certain amendments in section 7 of the Court Fees Act which are based on the recommendation of the High Court and other judicial officers. The amendment in sub-clause (a) calls for no comment. The amendment in sub-clause (b) is intended to provide against under-valuation of the suits mentioned in clause (iv) of section 7 of the Act which exists at present with consequent loss of revenue. Sub-clause (c) amends the proviso to section 7 (v) so that the amounts payable may bear a better approximation to present day values of land.

(Bom III of 1888)

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Acts of 1918 (Bombay Acts II and VII of 1918) were passed with the object of restricting the raising of rent in Bombay and certain other places as, owing to the war, the supply of accommodation had not kept pace with the demand. Bombay Act II of 1918 was the main Act, while Bombay Act VII of 1918 was a subsidiary one dealing with small premises of which the standard rent, without the additional percentage allowed to landlords, did not exceed Rs. 20 a month. The operation of these Acts was subsequently extended by Bombay Act III of 1923 up to the 31st August 1924 in the municipal district and cantonment of Karachi, and in other places in which the Act was in operation up to the 31st December 1925 as regards dwelling-houses, and up to the 31st August 1924 as regards other premises. The Acts ceased to be in operation as regards other premises both in Karachi and elsewhere on the 31st August 1924; but by Bombay Act III of 1924 they were extended in respect of premises used as dwelling-houses in the municipal district and cantonment of Karachi also up to the 31st December 1925. Thus the operation of both Acts will expire in Karachi and elsewhere on the 31st December 1925.

It has, however, been ascertained after careful inquiry that, though there has been a fall in the rent of residential premises with a higher rental, there has been little or no fall in the rent of residential premises

Appendices

In a lower rental, and that the want of accommodation in the case of the latter class of premises is still very keenly felt. It is, therefore, considered necessary to extend the protection of the Acts for three years in the case of residential premises of which the standard rent without additional percentage allowed to landlords does not exceed Rs. 50 in the case of Karachi, and does not exceed Rs. 85 in the case of any other area in which the Act is in operation. At the same time it is equitable that the landlords should receive an adequate return for their capital, taking into consideration the changes that have taken place in the economic conditions since the Acts were passed; and provision has therefore been made for a sliding scale of increases which will enable the landlords to secure a total increase of rent, ranging from 20 per cent. to 60 per cent. beyond the above mentioned standard rent. As indicated above, the operation of the Acts has already expired in the case of non-residential premises, and no change is proposed in respect of such premises. The Bill deals with both the original Acts of 1918.

Notes on specific clauses of the Bill requiring explanation are given below :—

Notes on clauses.

Clauses 2 and 6.—Difficulty has arisen in connection with the words “used as a dwelling-house”; the words “used wholly or principally as a dwelling-house” have therefore been inserted in the Bill.

Clause 3.—As the Act is being extended for a further period of three years, it is equitable that landlords should be allowed a somewhat higher percentage of increase than that allowed by the existing Act. Schedule A is therefore substituted for the present schedule to Bombay Act II of 1918, allowing a percentage up to a maximum of 50 as compared with 33½ in the present Act. It is also equitable to allow landlords a percentage of increase in respect of premises coming under sub-clauses (ii) and (iii) of section 2 (I) (a) of Bombay Act II of 1918 similar to that allowed in respect of premises coming under sub-clause (i) of the said section.

Clause 4 (1).—This clause extends the provisions of section 9 (3) to subleases which took place before 21st August 1922. There is no reason to make an exception in favour of tenants who sublet their premises before 21st August 1922. The words “or any part thereof” have been inserted to deal with an evasion of the provisions of the Act.

Clauses 4 (2).—New section 9 (4) provides that when a tenant obtains accommodation by reason of his being in the employment of his landlord he shall not continue to occupy the premises without the consent of his landlord if his employment terminates. There are cases in which housing accommodation is provided by the employers for their employees and the employee refuses to vacate the premises even after his employment has terminated.

Clause 4 (2) and 8.—Provision has also been made excluding from the protection of the Acts those tenants who occupy premises which are in a ruinous condition or are likely to fall and are a source of danger. Cases have occurred in Bombay City in which tenants in occupation of such premises have refused to vacate them when called upon to do so, and unnecessary delay occurred before they could be ejected by resort to the courts. In the interest of the tenants themselves and of their neighbours it is desirable that in such cases the tenants should be made to vacate the premises immediately, in order to enable the premises to be demolished or put in order, as the case may be.

Clause 7.—Certain petty premises are left by the tenants unoccupied for long periods, no rent being paid. It is desirable that the landlord should have power to open and take possession of such premises.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The Bill is intended to meet the growing public demand to alter the constitution of the Municipalities within the Presidency including the Province of Sind in such a way as to enhance their usefulness and to widen their powers, and by making them more self-reliant and free of official control, to contribute to the growth and advancement of representative institutions in the Presidency including Sind.

Notes on Clauses.

Clause 2.—Under the present Law only 14 Municipalities (as mentioned in Schedule E) throughout the Presidency are denominated as City

Amendments

proposes to extend the scope of such which contain a population of 15,000 or more.

-It is only a consequential amendment.

Clauses 4 and 5.—These Clauses propose to make all City Municipalities wholly elected, and to confine the nomination on the other Municipalities to one-fifth of the whole number of Councillors.

Clause 6.—Under the present Act persons coming within the description given in section 15, sub-section (1) are debarred for ever from being Councillors of a Municipal Board. The Clause seeks to confine the bar only to a period of five years, after the lapse whereof, the bar will cease to exist, and such persons will be fully competent to be Councillors.

Clauses 7 to 13.—These clauses relate to the amendment of section 23 of the present Act. Clause 7 proposes to amend the Act in a way whereby all the Municipalities will be presided over by elected Presidents. Clause 9 proposes to debar any salaried servant of the Government to be either the President or Vice-President of any Municipality. Clauses 8, 10, 11 and 12 are more or less consequential amendments. Clause 13 makes non-acceptance of office as one more ground for filling up the post of either the President or Vice-President.

Clauses 14 and 17.—These Clauses propose to make it obligatory upon the Government to satisfy themselves about any Municipality having complied with the provisions of section 160, before applying the Land Acquisition Act. Clause 17 is aimed at discouraging the growing tendency on the part of the Municipalities to move the Government in the first instance to acquire land together with its appurtenances under the Land Acquisition Act without first endeavouring to exhaust the special procedure provided for by section 160 for this purpose. It makes it incumbent upon a Municipality to move by application the District Court for the purposes of acquisition.

Clause 15.—This Clause is intended to do away with the necessity of securing the previous concurrence of the Collector for the discharge of functions mentioned in sub-section (m) of section 56 of the Act.

Clause 16.—This Clause, by proposing to delete the proviso, intends to make municipalities independent of all official control and supervision in matters educational, when they have decided to maintain all Municipal Educational Institutions exclusively out of Municipal funds.

APPENDIX G.

Report of the Select Committee on Motions Nos III to VIII of 1924 to amend the Standing Orders.

We, the undersigned members of the Select Committee appointed to consider Motions Nos. III to VIII to amend the Standing Orders, have the honour to report as follows :—

Motion No. III : amendments moved by Mr. M. R. Jayakar.

We have considered the amendments proposed by Mr. M. R. Jayakar in Standing Orders—

- IV, 7 (3)
- IV, 7 (3) (ii)
- V, 3
- VI, 10
- VIII, 11 (2) (a)
- VIII, 11 (2) (b)
- X, 12 (First amendment)
- XI, 3

and are of opinion that they are unnecessary and should not be accepted.

We have decided by a majority that the amendment proposed by Mr. Jayakar in Standing Order IV, 1 is necessary and should be made.

We think that the amendments proposed in Standing Order IV, 4 (1) may be accepted with the addition of the words “moved Council” after the words “or of any resolution”.

The amendment proposed in Standing Order IV, 6 is in our opinion necessary and should be accepted.

We consider that some amendment is necessary in Standing Order VIII, 1 (1) but that instead of the amendments proposed by Mr. M. R. Jayakar, the following be substituted for Standing Order VIII, 1 (1) :

“1 (1) On the motion for leave to introduce a Bill the mover may make a brief explanatory statement. If the motion is opposed, the President may permit a brief explanatory statement from the member who opposes and a brief reply from the mover ; he may then without further debate put the question thereon ; if leave to introduce the Bill is granted, the member who gave notice of the motion shall forthwith introduce the Bill.”

We are of opinion that instead of amending Standing Order X, 5 (2) in the manner suggested by Mr. M. R. Jayakar, it should be deleted and the following Standing Order, which is based on Standing Order 61 (2) of the Standing Orders of the Indian Legislative Assembly, should be substituted for it :

X, 5 (2) “If the member when called on is absent, any other member authorised by him in writing in this behalf may, with the permission of the President, move the resolution standing in his name. But if no member has been so authorised, or such permission is not granted, the resolution shall be deemed to have been withdrawn”.

We have decided by a majority that the proposal of Mr. M. R. Jayakar to amend Standing Order X, 12 by adding the words "and decided by a vote of the Council" is unnecessary and should not be accepted. We have also decided by a majority that the existing Standing Order X, 12 should be numbered X, 12 (1) and the following clause should be added to it :

"2. When a resolution has been disallowed under the Rules or Standing Orders or has been withdrawn with the leave of the Council, no resolution raising substantially the same question shall be moved during the same session."

We have decided by a majority that the second amendment proposed by Mr. M. R. Jayakar in Standing Order X, 12, viz., the substitution of the words "six months" for "one year" should be accepted.

Motions Nos. IV, V, VI, VII, and VIII.

We are of opinion that the amendments proposed by Messrs. Pahalajani, Joshi, Bhopatkar and Shivdasani in the above motions are not necessary.

(Minute of dissent by the Honourable Sir Maurice H. W. Hayward, Kt, I.C.S., M.L.C.)

I consider the amendment proposed to Standing Order IV, 1 impracticable. It practically would reduce to 24 hours' notice the fortnight hitherto regarded necessary in this and other Legislatures.

I consider the 2nd amendment proposed to Standing Order X, 12 undesirable and unnecessary. Twelve months is the usual limit in other Legislatures.

I agree with the Honourable Sir MAURICE HAYWARD.

Motion No III.

1. Chapter IV, Order 7 (3).—If the amendment proposed by Mr. P. G. Joshi regarding leave to introduce a Bill is not accepted, then the one proposed by Mr. Jayakar to the above Order becomes absolutely necessary. It is really strange that the members should be asked to note on the question of the leave to introduce a bill without furnishing them with a copy thereof and without giving them sufficient time and opportunity to consider it.

2. Chapter IV, Order 7 (3) (ii).—If the first amendment be accepted, this amendment becomes merely consequential in nature.

3. Chapter VI, Order 10.—Mr. Jayakar's amendment, namely, to substitute "may be taken as notice and shall be answered without further notice at a subsequent meeting of the Council" for "may be put only in the form of a fresh question at a subsequent meeting of the Council", is necessary in view of the growing importance of the power of the House to put supplementary questions, and of the desirability of making it incumbent upon the official benches to answer supplementary questions without further notice in the interest of the public at large.

Motion No. V.

4. Mr. P. G. Joshi's amendment to Order VIII will enable a member to introduce his bill upon his securing 30 members ready and willing to grant leave to introduce it. True it is that it will mean a small expenditure to the Government; but that should count for very little when especially a piece of legislation is concerned. Such a procedure will not mean any encroachment upon the rights of the House, as the House has many opportunities to throw off the Bill, if it is found to be undesirable or inexpedient.

Motion No. VI.

5. My motion was proposed entirely from the view point of the convenience of the members, and with the object of arranging the work.

Please note that I desire to move the above amendments in the House.

(Signed) L. B. BHOPATKAR.

13th February 1925.

(Minute of dissent by Mr. B. G. Pahalajani, M.L.C.)

I cannot agree with the Select Committee's report that it is not necessary to send copy of a private Bill sought to be introduced by a member to all the members of the Council in advance. I do not think it is necessary to put the member seeking to introduce a private Bill to the necessity of printing 110 copies for circulation. It is necessary to send a copy through the Council office.

I, therefore, dissent from the Select Committee's report not to send intimation or copy of the Bill round.

It is worth while to dispense with fresh written notice as regards supplementary questions.

I cannot agree with the proposal not to substitute the words "until 12 months expire", for if the elected members of the Council cannot bring a motion within 12 months, so should not the Government members: the restriction as it stands is one-sided, and my proposed substitution seeks to make it common to all. The provision however cannot apply to consequential amendments in Bills.

While agreeing with the alteration of 1 year into 6 months I am of opinion that "decided by the vote of the Council" should be there; there are cases in which for expediency, or for giving an opportunity to the Government to redress a grievance, a Resolution is moved and withdrawn. There is no reason why it should not be repeated at the next session, 4 months after, and why the proposer should wait for 2 sessions.

In the case of budget objections in Chapter XI, Order 3, I am still of opinion that the option of curtailing notice should be given to the President as in the case of Bills. This difficulty has been felt very often.

Subject.—Estimate for the Dandeli-Potoli Railway.

Sir,

I have the honour to refer you to my No. 961 of 10th instant and to inform you that the financial statements and estimates for the Dandeli-Potoli Railway were prepared as regards rolling stock on the basis of quotations for surplus war stock which was available in a limited quantity. The estimate and statements I took to you personally on 13th instant. The representative of Messrs. Robert Hudson and Co., Light Railway Engineers, met and had an interview with me on 14th instant. The first two items of this rolling stock, viz., 25 double-bogie box type wagons and 6 double bogie platform wagons have already been sold and therefore no longer available. I discussed the question with this Firm's representative and made some suggestions. Accordingly he has made and confirmed certain special offers based on previous quotations, but with some reductions in prices. There are special offers, but the prices are higher than those of the war surplus rolling stock originally selected.

2. As regards the selling price of fuel, the rate is Rs. 12-8-0 per ton for all quantities above a supply of 30,000 tons. Last year's supply being over 40,000 tons, I have assumed, with your approval, a rate of Rs. 12-8-0 per ton after deducting the freight charges for fuel from Dandeli to Alnavar.

3. Revised statements have therefore been prepared and included herewith.

4. Before going into the details of the estimate and revenue calculations, I wish to point out the necessity of very early sanction to the purchase of the rolling stock at present available. It is limited in quantity, and if procured now, will represent a saving of Rs. 27,500 to Government.

Appendices

This therefore is a point which may be regarded as a reason for regards action and unless I get permission to place the orders within a few days the opportunity will be lost. As the result of my interview with Messrs. Robert Hudson's representative, I was able to effect a reduction amounting to Rs. 12,500 on previous quotations. This will not hold if there is delay. The following is a copy of their telegram confirming their special offers:—

“ Bombay 16th, Forenger Dharwar.

Confirm offer 25 bogie-wagons two thousand each, six bolster bogies at five hundred each, six platform wagons 22 ft., at 15,000 each free on rails Calcutta Ex. stock 24 gauge all bogies identical as indicated in catalogue, but Calcutta asks for prompt order. Rails to-day's mail reports show slight rise will keep 28lbs. offer Rs. 8,255 per mile open subject confirmation. Will you not purchase now steel prices tend to rise owing to involved state affairs on Continent. Wagons offered subject being unsold.

RALETRUX.”

5. Estimate.—The estimate for the Dandeli-Potoli Railway has been completed in general and is submitted in abstract herewith.

6. Alignment.—You are acquainted with the general line of the Railway. From the Dandeli depôt, it crosses the Kalinadi making use of the existing causeway as far as possible. Some special work, however, will be required in the river portion. The Railway then follows roughly the direction of the Dandeli-Shamjoida road, crossing the Bavla Zarroo nala by means of the road bridge recently constructed.

The Potoli terminus is at the top of the Potoli ghat at the site of the present dastan depôt. Allowance has been made for extending the line so as to pass through the Dandeli depôt.

7. General description and details.—The total length including this extension is 9 miles and one furlong. The total length of tract, including sidings, however, is approximately $10\frac{1}{4}$ miles.

As the traffic is all in one direction advantage has been taken of this in the grading. The maximum gradient against the load is 1 in 60, while the maximum reverse grade on the return journey (for the empties) is 1 in 30. The line has been designed as a gravity one as far as is possible and practicable. The alignment has furthermore been arranged so as to necessitate the minimum of earth work. This, of course, is a most important point, since the cost of earth work is a dead loss having no realisable value when the railway is closed or removed. The railway will have four sidings, one at each terminus and two intermediate, one for loading fuel and another as a crossing point at the top of the Virampalghat. Three run-rounds for the locomotive are allowed one at each terminus and one at Perdhané fuel depôt. The rail gauge is 2'.

Appendices

tion of rail selected is 28lbs. per yard which is more than ample, wise extravagance. Sleepers will be chiefly of rejected teak and will be used at the rate of 2,000 per mile.

Ballast will consist of 1'ft. depth of murrum. The formation cross section is the minimum to permit of reliable drainage, which latter means cheap maintenance. The locomotive selected is well up to its work and the estimated individual loads average three-fourths of the capacities of the rolling stock. With slow running speed, light loads and ample rail section, the wear and tear on the rolling stock and tract will be reduced to a minimum.

8. The estimate which is attached is in six parts, viz.—

Part 1.—Estimate for section from chainage 0—1500' to 7—1650' includes clearing the line earth work, ballasting, 28lbs. section tract, sleepers, laying, etc. Very generous rates have been allowed for the earth work. The quantities are from actual survey and the latest quotations for rails.

Part 2.—Estimate for section 0—to 0—1500'. This is the portion from Dandeli depôt through the river portion. The details of the river portion have not been worked out, but the amount allowed is ample.

Part 3.—Estimate for the extra cost for siding, run-rounds for locomotives, etc :—These are from actual survey and recent quotations.

Part 4.—Estimate for cross drainage works :—These are taken from the approved standard type drainage works for roads, modified to suit railway purposes and with current local rates.

Part 5.—Estimate for water supply, buildings, tools, etc.

Part 6.—Estimate for extension of the line through the Dandeli depôt :—

Actual survey for this has not been completely carried out yet, but a rough alignment has been made and the figures allowed are ample.

Attached also is an abstract of the above six estimates—

Contingencies at 5 per cent. have been allowed giving a grand total for construction of the railway of Rs. 1,90,000. The total length of the railway including the 1500' fuel-siding at Dandeli is 9 miles and 1 furlong. This gives an average cost of Rs. 20,800 per mile of main line inclusive of sidings, buildings, extensions and other miscellaneous items.

9. The possibilities of this scheme have already been investigated and a preliminary estimate and project drawn up, vide my No. 44 dated 8th January 1922. This, however, has been revised in the light of actual survey, and recent quotations. The revised report is given in detail in the following pages.

10. The result of the estimate and investigation as regards the financial prospects may, however, be summarised here as follows:—

| | Rs. | a. | p. |
|--|----------|----|-----------------|
| Total capital outlay | 2,90,000 | 0 | 0 |
| Annual working expenses inclusive of interest, depreciation, etc. .. | 45,000 | 0 | 0 |
| Cost of haulage (logs and fuel) .. | 0 | 9 | 3 per ton-mile. |
| Net annual profit on the scheme .. | 48,600 | 0 | 0 |

This represents an investment bringing in interest at the rate of 17 per cent. per annum on the capital outlay.

It is pointed out that liberal rates of interest and depreciation have been allowed and all items including supervision and maintenance have been taken into account assuming the working to last 10 years. With improved methods of extraction, however, there is no reason why this railway should not become practically permanent.

In a scheme of this kind, there are two classes of expenditure one recoverable, e.g., rails, rolling stock, etc., and the other unrecoverable, e.g., earthwork, bridges, etc., and I wish to point out that the above net annual profit is arrived at after paying off annually one-tenth of the unrecoverable expenditure. The figures, therefore, are based on the assumption of 7 per cent. interest annually on the capital outlay and the paying off of all unrecoverable expenditure by the time of the supposed closing down of the scheme, viz., after 90 years' working: The figures throughout are fair, with a tendency always against the project.

11. In addition to the scheme as a whole, I give also an estimate (page 11) looking merely to the Pardhane fuel portion assuming that, that portion only might be carried out. It will be seen that the ton-mile rate is Re.0-10-9 as against Re. 0-9-3 for the entire railway including the logging portion Potoli.

12. Before proceeding to the details of this report, I have the honour to point out two things, viz., (1) that I have included in the projects the extension of the line through Dandeli depôt, an essential need which has been under contemplation for a long time and (2) that this railway enables us to tap an area of valueless forest (according to present conditions) which cannot be exploited without a railway or similar means of transport. These are both, in my opinion, very important points. The following pages give the details and calculations of the project.

13. Rolling Stock.

The material to be conveyed is as follows:—

19,000 tons of fuel from Pardhane.

4,000 tons of logs from Potoli.

The working season consists of 7 months of 25 days, i.e., 175 days per year.

| Fuel— | Rs. |
|-------------------------|--------|
| Total tonnage | 10,000 |
| Tonnage per day | 57 |

One locomotive can average three round trips per day.

One trip with logs and two trips with fuel will represent 36 miles per day which is a very reasonable allowance.

The type selected, viz., Fowler 60 I.H.P. six-wheel-coupled steam locomotive can negotiate :

- a grade of 1 in 60 with a gross load of 68 tons ;
- a grade of 1 in 50 with a gross load of 60 tons ;
- and a grade of 1 in 40 with a gross load of 50 tons.

The line has been designed with a maximum reverse grade of 1 in 60. It is therefore absolutely safe to figure on a gross train load of 50 tons. The wagon selected for this work is of the double-bogie box type with removable sides and ends and a capacity of 5 to 6 tons. The internal dimensions of the body are approximately 17' \times 5½' \times 2'. By loading up to a depth of 4', 4 tons of loosely stacked fuel can be accommodated. The tare weight of one of these wagons is 2½ tons. Loaded, therefore, one wagon will weigh 6½ tons, and 8 such loaded wagons can be hauled by the locomotive selected, i.e., net load of fuel per train is 32 tons. The average designed speed of the locomotive is 8½ miles per hour. To allow for slow and careful running on grades and curves, we may safely assume an average speed of 6½ miles per hour. To obviate loss of time, while loading and unloading operations are being carried out, 24 wagons will be required.

I therefore estimate for 25 for fuel traffic allowing one extra as spare which will be necessary.

Logs—

Total annual tonnage (weight) 4,000.

Average per day $\frac{4,000}{175}$, i.e., 23 tons.

The wagons selected for fuel transport can be used as a platform type for logs, if the sides and ends are removed, as they are supplied with strong stanchions. An average sized log such as comes to the dastan depôt at Potoli will be 18' long 1½' diameter and ¾ to 1 ton in weight. One of these wagons therefore could comfortably accommodate 5 or 6 logs, i.e., 4 to 4½ tons weight. For longer logs, wagons with plain platforms 22' long will be used. For the longest logs, pairs of lumber bogie trucks with swivelling bolsters will be used. All rolling stock will be braked and the bogies are of standard type and can therefore be readily repaired and renewed. As it will take some time for the work to reach its maximum output, I recommend that we should purchase at the beginning :—

- 25 double bogie box wagons.
- 6 double bogie platform wagons 22' long.
- 3 pairs of lumber trucks for long logs.

I give below the comparative prices of surplus war and special material with ordinary rolling stock. All these figures are from the latest quotations in which I am up-to-date.

| Item No. | No. required. | Type of rolling stock. | Price of ordinary manufacture. | Total. | Price of surplus war and special stock. | Total. | Difference. |
|----------|---------------|--|--------------------------------|--------|---|--------|-------------|
| 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 |
| | | | Rs. | Rs. | Rs. | Rs. | Rs. |
| 1 | 25 | Double bogie box wagons 15½' × 5½' × 2½'. | 2,750 | 68,750 | 2,000 | 50,000 | 18,750 |
| 2 | 6 | Double bogie platform wagon 22' × 5'. | 2,650 | 15,900 | 1,500 | 9,000 | 6,900 |
| | | | without plate bottom. | | | | |
| 3 | 3 pairs. | Lumber trucks with swivelling bolsters and one bogie braked. | 1,600 | 4,800 | 500 | 3,000 | 1,800 |
| | | Total .. | | 89,450 | .. | 62,000 | 27,450 |

From the above figures it will be seen that by the purchase of the rolling stock at once a saving of Rs. 27,450 can be effected. I am therefore assuming that advantage be taken of the present favourable prices for surplus war and special stock.

|--------------|--------|

i.e. Rs. 0-10-9 per ton-mile 50,000.

Note.—This rate for haulage is greater than the rate when the fuel scheme is combined with logging operations from Potoli (viz., Rs. 0-9-3 per ton-mile).

16.—Fuel operation charge per ton.

| | Rs. | a. | p. |

| Transport by railway 5 miles at Rs. 0-9-3 per ton-mile | 2 | 14 | 3 |
| Total.. | 7 | 8 | 3 |

To show the true financial aspect of the scheme, the unrecoverable expenditures on earth work, etc., must be wiped off in 10 years. This will be at the rate of Rs. 7,000 per year. The sum spent on such unrecoverable works, viz., Rs. 70,000 has earned interest at 7 per cent. each year, i.e., Rs. 4,900. This leaves a sum of Rs. 2,100 to be wiped off each year.

Total estimated annual profit is Rs. 48,600.

Deducting Rs. 2,100 (the annual share of the unrecoverable expenditure) we have a true annual profit of Rs. 46,500. This net true profit of Rs. 46,500 is equivalent to interest on the capital outlay (Rs. 2,90,000) of 17 per cent. approximately.

In presenting the above estimates and the accompanying estimates, I beg to point out that every detail has been very carefully considered and figures are based on information obtained from every available source.

20. I have the honour to attach herewith the estimate for the Dandeli-Potoli Light Railway and again to draw your attention to paragraph 4 above, and to be, Sir,

HOME DEPARTMENT (POLITICAL).

Resolution No. 2157-Poll.

Bombay Castle, 11th October 1924.

RESOLUTION OF GOVERNMENT.

The attention of the Governor in Council has been drawn to numerous articles in the public press and to pamphlets, which appear to be designed deliberately to accentuate the unfortunate differences which have arisen between Hindus and Mussalmans. The political sanity and moderation of the people of this Presidency have so far restricted the untoward consequences of such differences to comparatively unimportant incidents, but the Governor in Council cannot neglect the possibility that a campaign of wild accusations, of vulgar and even obscene abuse and of incitements to meet force with force may lead to outbreaks of bloodshed and murder such as have occurred in other parts of India. A perusal of these articles and pamphlets leads to only one conclusion, that the writers are deliberately and with full consciousness of what they are doing endeavouring to stir up religious hatred between the two great communities of India. Both sides are equally to blame, and for months past the baser journals—both Hindu and Mahomedan—have been vieing one with another in inflammatory attacks on the morals and religious beliefs of their opponents.

2. The Governor in Council is of opinion that the time has come for a public pronouncement in this matter and desires to give warning that, while he does not wish to interfere in any way with reasoned discussion, he will be compelled, if the campaign above described does not forthwith cease, to use all the powers entrusted to him by law to guard the feelings and religious susceptibilities of all sections of the public of the Presidency. He appeals confidently to the wise and respectable of both communities to take their share publicly in repudiating and eliminating from controversy bitter expressions and vulgar abuse which may result in actions which will bring disgrace on the whole Presidency.

ORDER.—Ordered that the above Resolution be published in a Press Note by the Director of Information, and also be published in the Bombay Government Gazette in English, Gujarati, Marathi, Kanarese and Urdu. The vernacular translations should be furnished to the Manager, Government Central Press, by the Oriental Translator to Government.

2. Ordered further that the Commissioner in Sind should take steps to have the Resolution published in Sind both in English and Sindhi.

Compensatory Allowances.

Grant of — to officers at expensive places.

GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT.

Resolution No. 2837.

Bombay Castle, 5th December 1923.

RESOLUTION.

The Secretary of State ordered in his despatch No. 187-Public, dated 25th December 1919, that the question of special allowances for officers in stations where the cost of living is abnormally high should be taken into consideration by the Government of India in consultation with local Governments and that all reasonable grievances in respect of the heavy cost of living at such places should be removed as completely as possible and without delay.

2. The matter has been under the detailed consideration of the Government of Bombay during the last four years. In the meantime the power of passing orders relating to compensatory allowances has been delegated to the Government of Bombay by the Fundamental Rules, and it has been decided to grant compensatory allowances to officers stationed in the following expensive places, viz., Bombay and Salsette, and Poona and Karachi. The scheme now approved by Government is intended to meet the case of all officers who do not already receive, in some form or other, compensation for the high cost of living in these centres; but in view of the difficulties involved in calculating the compensation already enjoyed by officers recruited on rates of pay fixed heretofore with reference to local conditions then existing at those places, the scheme is being applied in the first instance and pending further examination of the salaries of those particular posts, to officers on the mofussil time scale of pay.

3. In exercise of the powers conferred by rules 44 and 93 of the Fundamental Rules, the Governor in Council is pleased therefore to authorise the grant of compensatory allowances according to the appended rules to officers under his administrative control paid from provincial revenues on scales of pay fixed without special reference to the high cost of living in Bombay, Salsette, Karachi or Poona, who are posted for service in these places. The scheme will come into force with effect from 1st March 1923. In the meantime a list of the officers entitled under these rules is under preparation and will be issued with as little delay as possible, and a supplementary grant in respect of the current year and provision for the next year in respect of officers whose pay is votable will in due course be submitted to the Legislative Council.

By order of the Governor in Council.

Deputy Secretary to Government.

Proviso :

The following officers of the above services are excluded pending further orders :—

- (1) Officers holding posts above the time-scale :—
 Members of Council, High Court Judges,
 Judicial Commissioner,
 Additional Judicial Commissioners,
 Commissioners of Divisions,
 Commissioner in Sind,
 Commissioner of Excise,
 Secretaries to Government,
 Chief Engineers,
 Chief Conservator,
 Inspector General of Police,
 Inspector General of Prisons,
 Director of Public Health,
 Director of Public Instruction,
 Director of Agriculture,
 Surgeon General,
 Surgeon Superintendent, St. George's Hospital.
- (2) Also officers holding posts of which the pay is specially fixed, e.g. :—
 Director, Labour Office,
 Commissioner of Police,
 Bombay City Police,
 Director of Industries,
- (3) and those officers who have been given advance increment or enhanced starting pay in their time-scales on account of the cost of living in Bombay, Salsette, Poona or Karachi.

2. Under rule 3 of the Rules attached to the abovementioned Government Resolution officers who tour regularly will draw the allowance for six months only. All officers who tour should draw the allowance for six months only and Heads of Departments should report for orders of Government the circumstances of any touring officer who in their opinion should be permitted to draw the allowance for a longer period than six months.

3. In the case of officers whose present conveyance allowances exceed Rs. 200 per mensem the excess will be considered as local allowance and merged in this allowance.

4. House allowances granted in lieu of housing accommodation received as remuneration for extra duties and house allowances drawn under Government Resolution, Finance Department, No. 84, dated 22nd September 1923, will not merge in this allowance. All other house-rent allowances will be deemed local allowances under Rule 4 of Government Resolution No. 2837, dated 5th December 1923.

5. When Compensatory Allowances are already attached to posts admitted to the compensatory allowance now granted, officers who held the posts on or before 5th December 1923 will receive whichever allowance or sum of allowances is greater, and will draw the allowance now granted as soon as it exceeds the existing compensatory allowances. Officers appointed after 5th December 1923 to posts admitted to this allowance will receive this allowance only.

6. Compensatory allowances which merge in this allowance will be considered to cease from the date of the introduction of this allowance.

7. In modification of Rule 5 under Government Resolution, Finance Department, No. 2837, dated 5th December 1923, all medical officers admitted to this allowance, who are permitted private practice or who receive an allowance in lieu of private practice, will draw this allowance at half rates.

8. Government consider it necessary to re-examine the duty allowances attached to certain posts. The necessity for some of these allowances appears in part to have been based on the hardship caused by the heavy local cost of living to officers appointed to the posts and not solely on the arduousness or importance of the duties attached to the posts. These allowances have been defined by the Fundamental Rules as special pay, and the decision regarding them cannot therefore be made immediately. Except in those cases in which the duty allowance was clearly given for a specific addition to the work or responsibility of a post, the compensatory allowance drawn by an officer in receipt of special pay containing a duty allowance will be diminished by an amount equal to half the amount of such duty allowance, pending the decision on the re-examination now directed.

9. Officers entitled under the orders given in paragraph 1 may draw the allowance according to the scales in Government Resolution, Finance Department, No. 2837, dated 5th December 1923. Attention is however invited to Finance Department Circular No. 2920, dated 29th January 1924, and it is notified that amounts drawn irregularly will have to be refunded to Government and any case where it is doubtful to what if any allowance an officer is entitled under this Resolution should be immediately referred to Government.

By order of the Governor in Council,

H. F. KNIGHT,
Deputy Secretary to Government.

Subject to this condition the teacher will get, for the higher certificate that may be earned by him next year, such a rate of pay only as may be fixed, with the approval of Government, for the class of teachers by the Local Body which employs him.

The Compulsory Primary Education Bill and the Local Boards Bill are at present before the Legislative Council. If they are passed, the control of Primary Education will, as a result, be completely transferred from the Educational Department to District Local Boards and Municipalities. This new arrangement is likely to come into force from April 1923.

2. Government will guarantee that the rights in the matter of pay, promotion and pension of all V. F. and trained teachers who are in permanent Local Board or Municipal service on the date on which the said Acts take effect are safeguarded by the new Acts and that the scales of pay, rates of promotion and conditions of pension in force on that date are continued unaffected, subject to such modifications as may hereafter be ordered by Government from time to time.

3. In the case of those that are under training in the 1st, 2nd and 3rd year classes on the date of effect of the said Acts, as V. F., 1st year or 2nd year teachers respectively, holding permanent appointments, paragraph 2 above will be applicable in the matter of pay according to the nature of the certificate held on the said date, promotion and conditions of pension. But for the higher certificate earned by them after the said date, their rights in the matter of pay, promotion, etc., will be considered in accordance with the new rules that will be made by the local bodies under the new Acts with the sanction of Government.

4. Candidates under training in the 1st, 2nd and 3rd year classes on the date of effect of the said Acts, who hold no lien on a permanent post in the Educational Department will be subject to such rules

5. Candidates and teachers holding no lien on a permanent post in the Educational Department, that are under training in any class on the date of effect of the said Acts can neither be guaranteed employment nor, if employed, the application to them of the existing rules regarding pay, promotion and pension.

7. The number of admissions of candidates or teachers desiring to be trained on the above terms or of teachers permitted to appear for the examination for the purpose of earning a higher certificate from outside or from inside will be restricted as circumstances may render necessary. Hereafter, on no ground can anybody claim either entrance into a training institution or further training.

8. The above warning is given both to candidates and teachers whether stipendiary or non-stipendiary.

APPENDIX 63.

To,
The Editors,
"Times of India" and "Bombay Chronicle".

Sir,

I am sorry there should be any misapprehension as to my statement tendered in evidence on the 21st of November last to the Chairman of the Committee of Enquiry on the Reforms at Delhi as a Member of the Bombay Government.

The statement was my own statement prepared from my own information after a personal examination of the official records and was not submitted beforehand for opinion or perusal of any of the Ministers or other Executive Members. Indeed it would not have been practicable to have done so as the majority were at the time absent on tour out of Bombay.

Sir Chimanlal has courteously acknowledged in his statement published in your issue of to-day several of the inaccuracies in his evidence which it was my duty to point out. He has also dealt with several matters of interpretation and opinion. It is not my purpose further to pursue those questions as they have been included in the Enquiries of the Committee on the Reforms. It is my present purpose merely to explain that the statement published now upon receipt of the final proof of my evidence was my own statement tendered over a month ago in evidence to the Chairman of the Committee of Enquiry on the Reforms at Delhi as a Member of the Bombay Government. It was signed by me personally and not formally by a Secretary to Government and was not, and was not intended to be taken as, a formal pronouncement by the Bombay Government.

Yours truly,

(Signed) M. H. W. HAYWARD.

Secretariat, Bombay, December 24.

APPENDIX 64.

Letter from Mr. P. Lory, Director of Public Instruction, no. 96-D.
dated the 11th April 1924.

I have the honour to invite a reference to paragraph 2 of the Press Note, Educational Department, no. 206, dated the 19th February 1923, on the above subject, and to state that the Educational Inspectors were asked to report the names of schools managed by each Local Authority to which admission was refused to children of the depressed classes. They report as under :—

Educational Inspector, B.D.—No refusals or complaints regarding admissions of the children in question to any kind of schools in the Division have been reported except in the case of the following schools :—

| | | |
|-----------------|----|--|
| Kolaba District | .. | Local Board School, Nizampur. |
| Nasik District | .. | Local Board Schools at Nihal and Kalvan. |
| Thana District | .. | Local Board School, Nalla-Sopara (vide this office no. O—34-D, of 8th March 1924). |

The Deputy Educational Inspectors concerned have been instructed to explain the Government orders in the matter to the people of the above villages.

Educational Inspector, C.D.—No difficulty is reported to have been experienced in admitting the depressed class children except in a few cases where the Local Board Schools are held in temples. Objections are raised by the villages to seating such boys in the class among other boys. In such cases the boys are seated outside the temple with the consent of their parents. The Deputy Educational Inspectors have been instructed to provide other accommodation for such schools as early as possible, but it is reported that it is not always easy to find another building.

Educational Inspector, N.D.—In the following schools in the Surat District only people have protested against the seating of the depressed class children along with the other children in school buildings :—

In dealing with the villagers the Deputy Educational Inspector and his assistants noticed that the very idea of their children touching the depressed class ones was shocking to them from a religious stand-point. In such cases it has been arranged to seat the depressed class children inside the school building but a little apart from the other children. In some cases the parents of the depressed class children preferred that their children should not sit alongside the other pupils. They were afraid that the higher caste parents would trouble them, and said they would only send their children to school if they were allowed to sit in the verandah or outside as before. Another difficulty experienced is that in the National Schools which are working side by side with the District Local Board schools the depressed class children are not allowed to sit along with the other children. In such villages the Deputy Educational Inspector has been instructed to exercise due tact. The Educational Inspector is of opinion that it will take time to overcome the longstanding prejudices of the higher castes.

Educational Inspector, S.D.—In the following schools admission was refused to children of the depressed classes on account of the schools being held in temples :—

| | | |
|------------------|----|----------------------|
| Dharwar District | .. | Ugginkari, Shivalli. |
| Bijapur District | .. | Khed. |
| Belgaum District | .. | Shunpali, Badkihal. |

Satisfactory arrangements have, however, since been made for the admission of depressed class children to these schools by providing sheds in some cases.

Educational Inspector in Sind.—In no school was admission refused to the children of the depressed classes except one Local Board school at Panwhar in the Sukkur District. The Hindu people of the village objected to sending their boys to the schools if the boys of the depressed classes were admitted to it. The Deputy Educational Inspector has instructed the headmaster to admit the depressed class boys to the school and to seat them at some distance from other boys in the class to avoid the difficulty.

Sir,

I am directed by the Government of Bombay (Transferred Departments) to request that, with the permission of the Government of Madras, you will be so good as to favour this Government with information regarding the course of study, syllabus and the staff of teachers employed at the School of Indian Medicine, which has already been opened by the Madras Government, and the salaries or honoraria paid to the staff.

I have, etc.,

(Sd.) H. D. (Baskerville),

Deputy Secretary to the Government of Bombay,
General Department.

Local Self-Government Department.

No. 34866-1 P.H.

Fort St. George, 15th January 1925.

From

P. L. MOORE, Esq., C.I.E., I.C.S., Secretary to the Government of Madras;

To

THE SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY,
General Department, Bombay.

Subject.—School of Indian Medicine, Madras.

Sir,

In reply to your letter No. 1480-B., dated 12th December 1924, I am directed to furnish the following information regarding the School of Indian Medicine, Madras.

2. The school consists of three sections corresponding to the three systems of Indian Medicine in vogue in this Presidency, namely, the Ayurveda, the Unani and the Siddha. The course of instruction extends over three years. The training given in the respective Indian systems will be supplemented by an elementary course in Anatomy and Physiology according to the Western system. Details of the course of study are given in the annexure.

3. The accommodation provided in the school includes a library, a museum and a herbarium in addition to the usual class rooms, office, etc. The intention is to open a dispensary in October 1925 and an inpatient hospital of 30 beds in April 1926.

4. The number of admissions to the school has been fixed at 120 a year, 60 for the Ayurveda section and 30 each for the other two sections. Candidates are expected to possess a knowledge of Sanskrit or Telugu, Hindustani or Tamil (for the three sections respectively) and in addition a working knowledge of English. Twenty free studentships are awarded annually, preference being given to members of backward communities. The other students have to pay fees at the same rates as in the existing Allopathic Medical Schools, namely, Rs. 60 a year in the case of students belonging to this Presidency and Rs. 100 a year in the case of others. Admissions are made by a Selection Committee appointed by the Government, consisting of the Principal of the School and two representatives of each of the three Indian systems.

5. The staff consists of a Principal (Pay Rs. 600—50—900), a lecturer in Anatomy and Physiology (medical graduate of the Madras University), two lecturers in Ayurveda, one in Unani and one in Siddha. An assistant lecturer will be appointed for each section from October 1925. With a view to economy, it has been decided that the lecturers and assistant lecturers need not be whole time Government servants but only part time officers receiving fixed honoraria of Rs. 100 and Rs. 50 per mensem respectively. A small clerical and menial staff is also provided; compounding and ward attendants will be appointed when the dispensary and the hospital are opened.

6. The school was formally opened by His Excellency the Governor on 24th November 1924. As the appointment of lecturers and the selection of candidates for admission took some time, actual working could be commenced only this month.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

(Signed) P. L. MOORE,
Secretary to Government.

Memorandum giving the information asked for in the question put by Mr. Hoosenally M. Rahimtoola on the subject of changes in the rules for Government Vernacular Training colleges, etc.

(1) (a) i The number of admissions has been regularised to meet the actual requirements of each district.

ii Rules have been made to provide for an adequate number of Intermediate and Backward class men being appointed.

(b) i To bring about greater uniformity in the proportion of trained teachers in each district.

ii To give non-Brahman classes a reasonable share of the vacancies.

(2) (a) The only change is that candidates are not allowed to appear for the Training College Examination without previous residence at a training institution.

(b) A teacher who has not actually attended a training institution ought not to be considered as a trained teacher.

(3) (a) No fees are charged for studying at Training Colleges or for the Training College Examinations.

The fees for the Vernacular Final Examination have been raised from Rs. 2 to Rs. 3, but all depressed class candidates now included under 'Backward' have been exempted from payment.

(b) The object was to enable more adequate remuneration to be paid to examiners. As expenditure under the head was not sanctioned by the Legislative Council, it is proposed to use the savings for prizes.
