PREFACE.

The Gaud Saraswat Bramhin Mitra Mandal embraces with great delight this opportunity presenting this first volume of the late s. Telang's Writings and Speeches to its subscribers, sympathisers as well as the public at large. We also hope that the delay in the proposed date of delivery will be excused by our kind friends whose anxious expectations must have, ere long, been taxed not a little.

We now beg to tender our best thanks, and express our sense of great reverence to Dr. Dadabhai Naorojee — India's Grand Old Man — for kindly permitting us to dedicate this work to him. It was, we feel, a great honour done us in the work as well.

Our next best thanks are due to the noble Mr Dinshaw. E. Wacha who in the midst of manifold and weighty engagements undertook to write a very interesting and instructive introduction every way befitting the contents of this volume. The inspiration to take up this work was all his own and his encouragement has crowned the effort.

We were also greatly obliged by our amiable and pains-taking friend Mr. Bhagwantrao

S. Palekar who very courteously kept at disposal all his materials very laboriously collected all these years past.

And last but not least our thanks are due many friends and sympathisers too numerous to mention here who assisted us most enthusiastically to get this volume published and patronised.

One personal word more and done. Commemorative of struggling souls like myself feel great relief when they are fortunate enough to secure contact with souls divinely blest. Such was my lot and similar must be the case of many. Jus. Telang's association and contact elevated our soul, cultured our mind and purified our life to a certain extent. May he rest in peace and may his sage counsel and saintly life guide the foot-steps of struggling young Indians for generations to come. I am thankful to Providence thus giving me the opportunity in my old age to pay, at least partially, my debt of gratitude to this great and good man—our revered Kashinathji. May the same Providence bless us one and all to carry on the mission we have placed before us—“Light of knowledge, and warmth of Sympathy.”
