SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY'S LIBRARY
PUNE 411 004
FOR INTERNAL CIRCULATION
To be returned on or before the last date stamped below.

- 6 MAY 1989
KAYE'S AND MALLESON'S HISTORY

OF THE

INDIAN MUTINY

OF

1857-8.

EDITED BY COLONEL MALLESON, C.S.I.

VOL. IV.

BY COLONEL MALLESON, C.S.I.

CABINET EDITION.

LONDON:
W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.
1889;
[All Rights reserved.]
IN THE HOPE THAT THIS BOOK MAY LIVE,

I DEDICATE IT

TO THE MEMORY OF MY BROTHER-IN-LAW,

Quintin Battyse,

OF THE CORPS OF GUIDES,

ONE OF THE FIRST OF THE MANY GALLANT MEN WHO GAVE THEIR LIVES FOR THEIR COUNTRY ON THE RIDGE BEFORE DELHI.

THE WORDS WHICH HE UTTERED,
WHEN, ON THE 9TH JUNE, 1857, HE RECEIVED THE WOUND WHICH HE KNEW TO BE MORTAL,

DULCE ET DECORUM EST PRO PATRIA MORI,

WERE CHERISHED

AS A MOST PRECIOUS INHERITANCE BY HIS BROTHER,

Wigram Battyse,

WHO, ENTERING THE SERVICE AFTER HIS DEATH,

WAS APPOINTED TO THE SAME REGIMENT, THE CORPS OF GUIDES,

AND BY UNFLINCHING GALLANTRY AND DEVOTION

WON FROM THE Stern FRONTIER MEN WHO COMPOSED IT THE

Esteem and affection

Which they had borne to Quintin.

Following throughout his noble life

In the footsteps of his brother,

He emulated him in the manner of his death,

For he too died leading the guides in a gallant charge against the enemies of England,

At Fathabad, near Jallalabad, the 2nd April, 1879.

Similar as was their life,

Similar as was their death,

I would not separate in this dedication

The two gallant brothers.

PAR NOBILE FRATREUM.
PREFACE TO THE FOURTH VOLUME.

The present volume narrates the story of the storming of Dehli, the subsequent clearing of the country in the vicinity of that city, and the march to Agra and Kanhpur. It proceeds then to deal with Sir Colin Campbell's journey from Calcutta to Kanhpur; his relief of the garrison of Lakhnao; and his safe escort of the women and children of that garrison to Kanhpur. It devotes then a chapter to the attack of the Gwáliár contingent on that central point, and to Windham's consequent action; another, to Colin Campbell's reply to their daring aggression. Narrating, then, the movements of the several columns of Walpole and Seaton, and of the main body under Sir Colin, in the North-West; the action of the Nipal troops under Jang Bahádur; and of the columns under Rowcroft and Franks in the Ázamgarh district and in eastern Oudh; it proceeds to describe the four months' defence of the Álambágh by the illustrious Outram; then, the last movements which preceded Sir Colin's attack on Lakhnao; then, the storming of that city. From this point the narrative returns to the Bengal Presidency proper, and describes the outbreaks in eastern Bengal, in eastern Bihár, in Chutiá Nagpúr, and their repression; deals then with the difficulties caused mainly by the suicidal action of the Government in western Bihár; gives in full detail the splendid action of Lord Mark Kerr in the relief of Ázamgarh, one of the two instances* on record in which a surprised army defeated the surprisers; proceeds then to the campaign of Lugard, Douglas, and their lieutenants, against Kunwar Singh and his brother Amar Singh, in western Bihár; describes the gallantry of Middleton, and the fertility of resource of, and striking success achieved by, Sir Henry Havelock.

* The other was that of Clive at Káverípák, February 23, 1752.
Returning to the North-West, it describes the campaigns in Rohilkhand and north-western Oudh, detailing the skilful movements of Hope Grant, of John Coke, and of Jones; the fatal incapacity of Walpole; the useless sacrifice of life before Ruiyá, culminating in the death of Adrian Hope; the gallantry of Ross-Graves, of Cafe, of Willoughby, of Cureton, of Sam Browne, of Hanna, and of many others; the all but successful daring and the death of the famous Maulavi; and the untimely end of Venables and of the great William Peel. The last chapter deals with the manner in which George St. Patrick Lawrence, one of four noble brothers, succeeded, amid great difficulties, in retaining British hold upon Rájpútáná.

In the preface to the first edition to this volume, published nearly ten years ago (August 1879), I acknowledged the generous reception which its immediate predecessor had met with both in this country, in the Colonies, and in America. "It was not possible," I added, "writing of events, many actors in which survive, and to some of whom a record of their performances cannot be palatable, that I should absolutely escape hostile criticism." But the reception accorded to that volume did not surpass the welcome which the same generous public gave to that of which the present volume is something more than a reprint. Large as was the edition printed, within three weeks I was called upon to prepare a second, and I am informed that the demand for it has continued to the present day.

This new edition has been thoroughly revised. I have not only gone through it step by step with the original authorities, but I have compared the text with the information I have received since its first publication from several actors in the drama. In this way I have acquired additional information of a valuable character. The whole of this has been carefully utilised. I have, in consequence, not only made additions to the original text, but have re-written several portions of it. The result of the fresh information I have received has been, in almost every instance, to confirm the opinions regarding individuals recorded in the original edition. With respect to Hodson of Hodson's Horse, whilst I still hold to the views previously expressed, I have thought it only fair to the memory of that great soldier to present the other side of the shield. A distinguished officer who served throughout the siege of Dehlí, to whom I communicated my intention in this respect, thus wrote in reply: "I am glad to read what you tell me about Hodson's case. I can never understand why the other side should always make him out such a bloodthirsty character. We may have heard other things against his character; but I don't remember that at the time he was looked upon by us as more bloodthirsty than any one else. It should be remembered that it was a fight without quarter; there was no love lost on one side or the other. His shooting of the princes (who, if brought in alive at the time, were as safe to have been hung or shot as when I saw their dead bodies lying in front of the Kotwál), must, to say the least of it, have removed, very considerably, any chance of rising among thousands of discontented ruffians then around us."

I have dealt with this last argument in the text. It is unnecessary, therefore, to repeat it here. It would seem that, whilst the general consensus of opinion outside the camp of the force which assailed Dehli was, and is, against Hodson in the matter of the slaughter of the princes, his comrades on the spot saw in the deed only an additional security for a small body of men occupying but half of the city, the defences of which had been stormed with great loss of life.

I wish to say, before I conclude, that no one is so thoroughly aware as I am of the many imperfections and shortcomings of this volume. Distant myself from the scene of action, for I was at Calcutta attached to the Audit department of the Government of India throughout the period of the Mutiny, I have had but one desire, and that has been, to tell the truth, the whole truth, without respect of persons. I believe I have succeeded in unearthing some gallant deeds which no previous writer had recorded; which had not even found their way into the despatches; and, by dint of earnest and patient inquiry, accompanied by much sifting of evidence, I have also been able, in some instances, to transfer the credit for a gallant achievement from the wrong to the right man. How difficult this is, no one can know who has not attempted the task. I recollect well, that just before the first edition of this volume appeared, whilst, in fact, I was engaged in examining the last proofs in galleys, I met in the street a distinguished actor in the scenes I had attempted to describe. He asked me when the volume would appear. I replied that it was on the eve of publication, and I should be greatly pleased if he would come to my rooms and read the chapter in which his own gallant achievements were specially recorded. He acceded at once to the request, came to my rooms, and sat down to read the sheets, having first asked my permission to make pencil notes in the margin. He sat reading six hours that day and two of the day following. He then handed back the sheets, expressing his general approval, but adding that I should find in the margin a few notes which might be useful. When he had left me I looked at the notes. The chapter was one in which I had taken all the pains in my power to unearth the deeds of brave men. The reader will imagine my surprise when, on looking at the notes written by my visitor in the margin, I saw attached to my description of every one of the gallant deeds enumerated, these words: “This is a mistake: I did this.” For the contention to have been true my visitor must have been ubiquitous, for some of the deeds occurred on different parts of the field, almost at the same moment. Yet my visitor was an officer of the highest character, a great stickler for truth, and who would not knowingly have deviated from the straight line for a moment. But his imagination had overpowered him. The campaigns of 1857–8 had been the great event of his life. By degrees he had come to regard them as the only event. And, his mind constantly dwelling on the subject, he had come to regard himself as the only actor. This, I admit, is the worst case I met with; but I have had other experiences almost as curious.

Perhaps the reader will pardon me if I mention another fact personal to myself, which may perhaps serve to point a moral. Stationed as I have said, at Calcutta in 1857, I had viewed with the greatest indignation the tardy measures of repression adopted by the Government early in that year. I had but recently come down from Kânhpûr, where, as officer in charge of the commissariat department, I had witnessed the dissatisfaction of the sipáhis of the regiments there stationed, when, in the dead of night, Sir James Outram crossed the Ganges for the purpose of annexing Oudh. I stated, at the time, to the authorities all I had seen, and when the outbreak took place at Barbámpûr I did my best in my small way—for I was still only a subaltern—to convince them that the disaffection was general. But, apparently deaf to evidence, they pursued their own course, in the manner I have attempted to describe in the third volume. I kept my indignation within bounds until Lord Canning went down to the Legislative Council, and in two hours passed a Gagging Act for the press. Regarding this as a deliberate attempt to prevent the truth, hitherto well set forth by the Calcutta newspapers, from reaching England, I sat down to write a true record of the proceedings and events. A portion of this record appeared in England in, I think, August of the same year, in the form of a pamphlet, entitled, "The Mutiny of the Bengal Army." This pamphlet at once attracted attention; was quoted by the late Lord Derby in the House of Lords; and obtained, on that occasion, the, name of the “Red Pamphlet,” by which it is still remembered. I completed it up to the fall of Dehli the same year, and the second part had a sale almost equal to the first. I could not carry it on further because I was wrecked off the coast of Ceylon in February 1858, and lost all the materials I had collected. It happened that, many years later, in 1871, I made the acquaintance of the late Sir John Kaye. We speedily became intimate, and we had many discussions over the events of 1857-8. One day he told me that when my “Red Pamphlet” had appeared he had regarded it with horror; and that one of the secret objects he had in his mind when he undertook to write the history of the Mutiny, was to prove that the “Red Pamphlet was not to be trusted. “But,” he added, “having since gone over the same ground, I am bound to tell you, that, however I may still differ from some of your conclusions, I have found your facts accurate throughout, and I shall state the fact in my preface to my third volume.” I returned to India the following year, and I suppose Sir John forgot his intention, for in his third volume the promised testimony did not appear. I only mention it here to show how the truth of my narrative forced conviction even upon the mind of a man deeply prejudiced against my book the moment he himself had occasion to examine the sources whence its statements had been derived.

The sons of Great Britain have, during the building up of their vast and magnificent empire, accomplished wonders. But of all the marvels they have achieved there is not one that can compare with the re-conquest, with small means, of the great inheritance which had suddenly, as if by the wave of a magician's wand, slipped from their grasp. They were called upon at a moment's notice, without any previous warning, that is rather, without any symptom which their clouded vision would accept as a warning, to attempt, on the instant, a task which it had taken the valour of Clive, the sagacity of Warren
Hastings, and the genius of Wellesley, half a century to accomplish. Not for a second did they flinch from the seemingly unequal struggle. They held out, they persevered, they pressed forward, they wore down their enemies, and they won. It was the greatest achievement the world has ever seen.

How did they do it? The one ambition of my life yet remaining to me is to answer that question; to tell who really were the men who thus conquered the impossible. I have spared no pains to relate the story clearly, truly, and without favour. Proud of being an Englishman, I desire to place on a record that shall be permanent the great deeds of my countrymen. Lord Beaconsfield never wrote more truly than when he said that everything depends on "race." Other races have accomplished great things under exceptional circumstances. They have been aided by the genius of their leader, by the inferiority of their opponents, by a combination of events in their favour. But the race which inhabits these islands has known how to triumph, not only unaided, but when heavily handicapped by Fortune. It has triumphed, often despite the mediocrity of its leaders; despite enormous superiority of numbers against it; and when circumstances around seemed combined to overwhelm its representatives. As these have triumphed before, so will they triumph again. Their invincibility is due to the fact that, never knowing when they are beaten, they persevere long after the period when races, less persistent, would have abandoned the contest in sheer despair.

G. B. Malleson.

27, West Cromwell Road.

May 1st, 1889.
SHORT DESCRIPTION OF PLACES.

CHITRAKOUT, incorrectly spelt Chittagong, is a hilly division in eastern Bengal, between the Phien and Nâp rivers. It comprises the districts of Chitragaon (called Isámâbâd by the Emperor Aurangzib), of Noâkhâlî, or Bhaluâ, and of Tiparah and Hill Tiparah. The district of Chitragaon is bounded to the west by the sea.

DHIKAH, strangely called Dacca by the early settlers, despite the fact that there's no letter "c," except in combination with an "h," in the language of the country of which it is a town, derives its name from Dhi, the Buteafrondosa. It lies on the Vurâ Gangâ river, and is the chief town of the district and division of the same name. The division is bounded on the north by the Garô hills, on the east by the Silhat district and Hill Tiparah, on the south by the Noâkhâlî district and the Bay of Bengal, and on the west by the Jasâr, Patna, Bogurâ, and Raupûr districts.

DARJILING, a mountain sanitarium in the division of Koch Bihâr, near Sikkim. The sanitarium lies about 7000 feet above the sea. The distance from Calcutta is 246 miles, the whole of which can be travelled on a rail and steam-tramway.

DILKUSHA, literally "the heart-expanding; the exhilarating," is a villa outside the city of Lakhnao, built by Saadat Ali Khan, in the centre of an extensive deer-park. It stands about three-quarters of a mile S.S.E. of the Martinière. The building is now used as a hospital.

FARHAT BAKHR PALACE, the, was the royal palace in Lakhnao from the time of Saadat Ali Khan II till 1850. It stands to the east of the Observatory and overlooks the river. The throne-room, known as the Kasr-i-Sultan, or Lâl Bârahdarî, was set apart for Royal Durbârs. The gaol, considered the healthiest gaol in India, adjoins this palace to the south.

GANDAK, The. There are three rivers of this name—the Great, the Lesser, and the Little. The Great Gandak rises in the Nipâl hills, and flows through the districts of Gorâkhpur, Champârân, Muzaffarpûr, Sarân, and Patna, near which city it falls into the Ganges. The Lesser Gandak rises also in the Nipâl hills, and flows through the districts of Gorâkhpur and Sarân, uniting in the latter district with the Ghâghâri. The Little Gandak rises on the northern boundary of the Sarân district, flows in a south-easterly direction for about 120 miles, then enters the Tirhut district, traverses it in the same direction for about seventy miles, where it joins the Bâghmatî, which, in its turn, falls into the Great Gandak.

GHÂSHRA, The, also called Gogra, the chief river of Oudh, rises in the Nipâl hills, traverses in Oudh the districts of Kherî, Bahârîch, Gondah, Bârah Bankî, and Faizabâd; then, in the north-west provinces, those of Bastî, Gorâkhpur, and Azamgarh; then, in western Bihâr, the district of Sarân. It falls into the Ganges at Châpâ, after a course of about 600 miles.

GHÂZIPUR, chief town of the district of the same name in the Banârâs division, so called after its founder, Mâlîk Saiyid Masûd Ghâzî, in A.D. 1330. Lord Cornwallis, who succeeded Marquess Wellesley as Governor-General of India, died here in 1805. The district is bounded on the north by the Ázamgarh and Sáran districts; on the west by those of Jaunpur and Banáras, on the south by that of Sháhábad. Its chief rivers are the Ganges, the Ghágrá, the Sárgú, and the Gúntí.

Gorakhpur. The division thus called is bounded to the north by Nipál, to the east by the Gandak, to the south by the Ghágrá, and to the west by Oudh. The capital, also called Gorakhpúr, is on the left bank of the Réptí. It has an imámbáráh (a kind of mosque) built by one of the rulers of Oudh, and near it is the temple of Gorákhnath, worshipped by the Jains. The means of communication in this district still leave much to be desired.

Gúntí. The, rises in the mountains north of the Sháhjáhánpur district. It flows through the districts of Kherí, Lakhnaó, and Sultánpur, in Oudh, and through those of Jaunpur and Banáras, in the North-West Provinces, falling into the Ganges seventeen miles north-east of Banáras. The length of its course is about 500 miles.

Gwalior, the capital of the dominions of Síndhiá. It lies on the Subanrékha river, sixty-six miles south of Agra. Within its limits may be comprehended the famous hill fort on an isolated rock 300 feet high, and about three miles in circumference; the Lashkár, or standing camp of the Máhárájá, extending several miles from the north-west end of the rock; the old town along its eastern base; and the cantonment of Morár, on the Chambal, to the north, occupied, before the Mutiny, by the Gwálíáár contingent, officered by British officers.

The dominions of Síndhiá, known under the generic term “Gwálíáár,” consist of several detached districts, covering an area of 29,067 square miles, and having a population of 3,115,857 souls. Of the districts so detached, the principal is bounded on the north-east by the Chambal, which divides it from the British districts of Agra and Itáwah; on the east, in a very tortuous line, by Bundelkhand and the Sárgú districts; on the south by the native states of Bhopál and Dhár; on the west by those of Rájágarh, Jháláwar, and Kota; and on the north-west by the Chambal, which separates it from the states of Karánlí and Dholpur.

The chief rivers are the Chambal, which receives the Chumáblé, the Síprí, the Chota Kálá Sínd, the Niwáj, and the Párvatí, the Narbadá, and the Sínd.

Imámbaráh. The great, in Lakhnaó, is a kind of mosque, built by one of the kings of Oudh, formerly contiguous to, now incorporated in, the Machhí Bháwan. Its central hall, 163 feet long, 53 feet broad, and 49½ feet high, has an arched roof without supports. The curve of the arch is 68 feet, and the wall is 16 feet thick. The Imámbaráh is 303 feet long from east to west, 160 feet broad, and 62½ feet high. The reader will find an admirable description of this building, and of the other buildings in the great northern cities of India, in Murray’s Handbook of the Bengal Presidency, compiled on the spot by Captain Edward Eastwick.

Itáwah, the chief town of the district of the same name, lies on the left bank of the Jannah. The district forms part of the Agra division. It is bounded to the north by the Mainpúr and Farrúkhábád districts; to the west by the Agra district, from which it is separated by the
SHORT DESCRIPTION OF PLACES.

Jamnah, and the Gwâliâr state; to the south by the Jamnah; and to the east by the Kânhpûr district. The town lies sixty-three miles south-east from Agra.

Jagdîspûr, a town in the Shâhâbâd district of the Patnâ division (western Bihâr), ninety miles east of Banâras. About it, in and prior to 1857, were the ancestral estates of Kûnwar Singh.

Jaiîpur, capital of the state of the same name in Râjpútâna. The state has an area of 15,250 square miles, and a population of two millions. It is bounded on the north by Bakânir and Hisâr; on the east by Alwar and Bhasalpûr; on the south by Kâraulî, Gwâliâr, Bûndî, Tonk, Mewâr, and Ajjârî; and on the west by Kishunâr, Mârwar and Bikânîr. The centre is an elevated tableland, 1500 feet above the sea. The capital of the same name was founded by Bâjah Jai Singh II. in 1723, and partially rebuilt and beautified by Bâjah Râm Singh in 1843-6. It lies 140 miles west from Agra, 150 south-west from Dehli, and 400 north-west from Allâhâbâd.

Jodhpûr, or Mârwar, is a native state in Râjpútâna, lying to the east of Jaisalmir and Bikanir, having an area of 37,000 square miles, and a population of a million and three quarters. Its principal river is the Lûnî. The capital, Jodhpûr, is a town surrounded by a wall, in which are seventy gates, each named after the place to which it leads. A fort, built on a rock 800 feet above the level of the court at its base, commands the city.

Kâdam Rasûl, a brick building in Lakhnao, about 300 yards to the east of the Shâh Najaf. The literal meaning of its name is “the foot of the prophet.”

Kaisârî, a palace in Lakhnao built by the last of the kings of Oudh, Wâjid Alî Shâh. It was begun in 1848 and finished in 1850, at a cost, including furniture and decorations, of £800,000. It includes the Bâdsâm Manzil, built by Saadât Ali II., previously the private residence of the King. The ladies used to occupy apartments round the magnificent square beyond the Lakhî gate, so called from having cost a lakh of rupees. For a detailed description vide Murray’s Bengal.

Kalîp, a town in the Jelûn district, N.W.P., on the right bank of the Jamnah, was a very important place under Muhammadan rule. It lies forty-five miles south-west of Kânhpûr.

Kânâuj, a town on the Kâlî Nâdi, near its confluence with the Ganges, in the Furrukhabâd district. Before the Muhammadan invasion it was the most famous city in India. It is now too ruined for the ordinary geographer to do it reverence. Yet it was mentioned by Ptolemy (A.D. 140). Here Humayûn was finally defeated by Sher Shâh, in May, 1540.

Kâtak, a town and district in Orisâ, strangely miscalled by the barbarians who first visited it “Cuttack,” which misnomer has been as barbarously perpetuated and retained. The district, covering an area of 3178 square miles, and watered by the Mahânâdî, and its branch, the Kâtûrî; by the Brahmani, and its branch, the Kharsût; and by the Baitarnâî, is hilly in its western, and low and swampy in its eastern sections. The population is about a million and a half. The town of the same name, also called Katak Banáras, lies on the right bank of the Mahánadi. It was built, 1200 A.D., by Anang Bhím Deo, King of Oriśá.

Motí Mahál. The, includes three buildings in Lakhnao. That, properly called by the name, is at the north end of the enclosure. It was built by Saadat Ali Khán. Along the river face Gházi u'd dín built the Muhárak Manzil to the east of the old bridge of boats, and the Sháh Manzil close to the bridge. In this latter used to take place the wild beast fights so dear to the rulers of Oudh.

Mústán, the chief town and fortress of the district of the same name, lying between the Satlij, the Chináb, and the Ráyí, and having a population of over half a million. The town lies four miles from the left bank of the Chináb. It is one of the bulwarks of India.

Nípál, an independent state in the mountainous range to the north of Bihár and Oudh. It is 500 miles long from east to west, and about 160 broad. It is mostly mountainous; but behind the lower range of the Himálayas are long, narrow, fertile valleys, about 4000 feet above the level of the sea, well watered and cultivated. The population numbers two millions. Of these 270,000 are aboriginal, called Newás, Buddhists. The remainder are Gurkhás, who conquered the Newás about the year 1700 A.D.

Oriśá, once a kingdom, then a province; now a division, comprising the districts of Katak, Púrí, or Jagaunáth, Báléswar, sometimes, but incorrectly called Balasor, and nineteen tributary Mahálls. The division is bounded on the north and north-east by Chutiá Nágpur and Bengál; on the east and south-east by the Bay of Bengál; on the south by the Madras Presidency; and on the west by the Central Provinces. Exclusive of the Tributary Mahálls, it has an area of 9058 square miles, and a population of nearly four millions. Consult Murray's Handbook to Bengal for a graphic account of the journey from Calcutta to Púrí and Katak.

Púrniá, a district in Eastern Bihár (q. v.) between Bhágalpúr and Nípál, with an area of 4977 square miles, and a population of a million and three quarters. The chief station, also called Púrniá, lies on both banks of the Little Kuśí river, 78 miles to the north-east of Bhágalpúr; 233 miles north-west of Calcutta; and 98 miles south-west from Dárjiling.

Rájputáná, a tract of Western India, so called from its being inhabited mainly by Rájpúts. It is bounded on the north-east by the Panjab and North-Western Provinces; on the south-east by the Indúr and Gwálíár states; on the south-west by Barodáh and the districts of Bombay; on the west by Sindí; and on the north-west by the state of Baháwálpúr. It has an area of 129,750 square miles, and a population slightly in excess of ten millions. The states within it, all of which are under British protection, are, Bikánír, east of Baháwálpúr; Jaisalmír, south-west of Bikánír; Kishángarh, between Ajmír and Jaipúr; Karaulí, between Jaipúr and Dholpúr; Alwar, north of Jaipúr and west of Mathurá; Tonk; Dholpúr; Udaipúr or Mewár, south of Ajmír; Dongapúr; Bánswárá, south-east of Dongapúr; Partábgarh, north of Bánswárá; Jaipúr; Jodhpúr, or Márwár; Bharatpúr; Bundí; Kotá; Jháláwár; and Sirotí.
SHORT DESCRIPTION OF PLACES.

Rámgangá, the eastern, a river of the Kumáun district rising on the southern declivity of the main chain of the Himalayas, at an elevation of 9000 feet. It holds a course generally south-easterly for about fifty-five miles, to Ramésar (in the Kumáun district, 1500 feet above the sea-level), where it unites with the Surjá.

Rámgangá, the western, rises in the southern declivity of the slopes of the Himalayas, not far from the eastern river of the same name; runs for twenty miles in a south-easterly direction; then becomes south-westerly, and so continues to its exit from the hills, ninety miles from its source. Ten miles further on it takes a southerly direction, holds it for fifteen miles, then receives, on its right, the waters of the Koh, and a little further on, on its left, those of the Sunká. Sixty miles lower it is augmented by the waters of the Deobá or Gárah. Ten miles below this last confluence it falls into the Ganges nearly opposite the ancient city of Kanáuj (q. v.). Its whole course is about 373 miles.

Rohilkhand, a division of the North-West Provinces, bounded by the Ganges, by Oudh, and by Kumáun, and watered by the Rámgangá, the Koehá, the Ganges, and the Ghághrá. It has an area of 10,882 square miles and a population slightly in excess of five millions. It is divided into the districts of Bijnáur, Murádábád, Bázám, Báréf, Sháhjahanpúr, and the Tará Fargana. It includes also the territory of the Nawáb of Rámpúr.

Ráptí, The, rises in the sub-Himalayan ranges of Nipál, and, after many windings, enters the plains of Oudh, which it traverses in a south-easterly direction for ninety miles, passing through the Bahríc and Gondah districts. After running 400 miles it falls into the Ghághrá shortly before that river joins the Ganges. Its tributary, the Burhá Ráptí, has a course of 134 miles.

Sháh Najaf, The, a palace built in Lakhnáo by Gházi u'd dín Haidár, the first king of Oudh, in memory of a town in Arabia, where Ali, the successor of the Prophet, was buried. It stands about 350 yards to the east of the Moti Maháll, and 180 yards south of the west bank of the Gúntí. It is a white mosque of scanty elevation, with an enormous dome.

Silhat, sometimes but barbarously spelt “Sylhet,” is a district in the Dhákah division, having an area of 5440 square miles, and a population of over 1,700,000 souls. The northern, eastern, and southern parts of the district are hilly. Its principal river, on the banks of which lies the chief station, also called Silhat, is the Súrmá, which rises in Kaschár and falls into the Bráhmáputrá. Its chief products are lime, timber, oranges, ginger, and tea.

Son, The, rises in the elevated table-land of Amkautak in the Bilásír district of the central provinces, at about 3500 feet above the sea level, and flows northerly through an intricate chain of hills till it strikes the Kaimur range, the dividing range between the Jabalpúr and Sháhábád districts. From this point it takes an easterly course till it falls into the Ganges, about ten miles above Dánápúr, having meandered about 465 miles. In its lower section, of upwards of 160 miles, it first flows across the British district of Mírzápúr, and then, passing into western Bihár, separates Sháhábád from Gayá and Patná. The Són is crossed by the grand trunk road from Calcutta to the north-west on a stone causeway, and lower down, near Kœlná, the East India railway has been carried across it on a lattice girder bridge.

Tárá, or Táráwallá Kothi, the observatory, or star house, at Lakhnán, was built by Násir u’d dín Haidar under the superintendence of Colonel Wilcox, Astronomer Royal. In 1857 the famous Maulávi, Ahmad Ulláh, of Faizábád, had his head-quarters here, and here were held the councils of war.

Tirhút, a district in western Bihár, between Nipál and the Ganges, with an area of 6343 square miles and a population of four and a half millions. It is watered by the Ganges, the Gandak, and the Bághmáti. To the north of it are the swampy forests of the Táráí. It comprises the towns of Muzáfínpur, Hajípúr; near it, Sonpúr, famous for its fair, and Darbanghá, the seat of the Tirhút Rajáhs. The district produces indigo, cereals, sugar, tobacco, opium, and saltpetre.

Tístá. The, flows from the Chatámu Lake, Thibet, through Sikkim, for about ninety-seven miles, marking the boundary between the Sikkim and Darjiling districts for some distance till it receives the waters of the Great Ranjít. It then turns southward, and traverses the Darjiling and Jalpaiguri districts in a south-easterly direction, then the Rangpur district. In the two last-named districts it is navigable, though navigation is often difficult. Finally, after a tortuous course of 313 miles from its source, it falls into the Bráhmaputrá. The Tístá is noted for frequent and violent changes in its course.
CONTENTS OF VOL. IV.

Preface • vii

List and short Description of Places mentioned in this Volume • xiii

CHAPTER I.

THE STORMING OF DEHLI.

The Siege of Dehli • 1
General Wilson doubts the Success of an Assault • 1
The Chief Engineer, Major Baird Smith • 3
Baird Smith's Arguments in favour of an Assault • 4
General Wilson yields to those Arguments • 4
Description of the Fortifications of Dehli • 5
Plan of the Attack • 6
Effective Strength of the Besiegers • 7
General Wilson's Order to his Army • 7
The Tracing of the Batteries begins on the 7th • 8
Brind's Battery (No. 1) opens fire • 9
And renders the Moré harmless • 10
Gallantry of Lieutenant Lockhart • 11
No. 2 Battery is traced and opens fire • 12
Medley traces No. 3 Battery • 13
The Enemy are alive to the Opportunities they had neglected • 14
The Great Artillery Duel • 15
Splendid Conduct of the Bengal Artillery • 16
The Engineers are sent to examine the Breaches • 17
They report them practicable • 18
The Columns of Assault detailed • 19
The Commanders of the Columns of Assault • 19
The Order of Assault • 22
Nicholson orders the Advance • 23
Storm of the First Column • 23
Storm of the Second Column • 24
The Explosion Party at the Kashmir Gate • 25
CONTENTS OF VOL. IV.

Gallant Advance of the Third Column ........................................ 26
The Storm of the Fourth Column ............................................... 27
Reid is struck down and Lawrence assumes command ....................... 29
The Attack is repulsed ................................................................ 30
Disastrous Effect of this Repulse .............................................. 30
Nicholson determines to press on ............................................. 31
After losing many Officers, he leads the way, and is struck down ... 33
The Cavalry during the Storm ................................................... 33
The Third Column falls back on the Church .................................. 35
Services of the Artillery ......................................................... 36
The Results of the Day's Work .................................................. 37
The Losses of the Day .............................................................. 38
The Success does not correspond to the General's hopes ............... 38
Neville Chamberlain urges him to persevere ............................... 39
Baird Smith is not less peremptory ......................................... 40
On the 15th. Preparations are made to push on ......................... 41
Progress made on the 16th ...................................................... 41
And on the 17th .................................................................... 43
The Attack on the I'ahor Gate on the 18th fails ......................... 44
Despondency of General Wilson .............................................. 44
Great Progress made on the 19th ............................................. 45
The Jami Masjid and Palace occupied on the 20th ...................... 46
Lieutenant Aikman captures the Seilingarh ............................... 47
Dehli after the Capture .......................................................... 48
The King of Dehli, and the Influences about him ....................... 49
He takes refuge in the tomb of Humayun .................................. 51
Whilst the Rebel Army evacuates the City ................................. 51
Hodson of Hodson's Horse ...................................................... 52
Hodson induces the King to surrender ..................................... 53
Hodson induces the Princes to surrender ................................. 55
And murders them ................................................................ 55
Comments on the Deed ......................................................... 56
The Gates of the City are secured ............................................ 57
Major Brind clears the City of the Scum of the Population ....... 57
Death and Character of Nicholson ........................................... 58
Remarks on the Siege ............................................................. 59

CHAPTER II.

THE AGRA SURPRISE AND THE DUAH.

A Column is despatched south-eastwards under Greathed ............ 61
Greathed moves on Balandshahr ............................................... 62
Attacks and defeats the Rebels at that place ............................. 63
Death of Lieutenant Home ..................................................... 64
Greathed receives Letters from Agra imploring Aid .................... 65
The Condition of Agra subsequent to the 9th September ............ 66
Difficulties of its Position increased by the storming of Dehli ... 67
Greathed reaches Agra on the 10th October ............................. 68
Encamps on the Parade Ground ............................................. 69
His Camp is suddenly attacked by the Rebels ......................... 70
Battle of Agra and Defeat of the Enemy ................................................................. 71
The "Surprise" greater to the Rebels than to the British ........................................... 73
Greeathed is superseded by Hope Grant ........................................................................ 74
Who takes the Column to Kahunpur, and thence to the Banni Bridge .......................... 74
Van Cortlandt re-establishes Order north of Dehli ..................................................... 75
Showers is sent with a Column to the Districts west and south-west of Dehli ............... 75
On his return another Column, under Gerrard, is sent in the same direction .............. 76
Combat of Narmul ........................................................................................................... 77
Splendid Feast of Colin Cookworthy ............................................................................ 81
Gerrard beats the Rebels, and, while pursuing, is killed ............................................ 82
Seaton succeeds Gerrard, and returns to Dehli, preparatory to escorting a Convoy towards Kahunpur .......................................................... 83

BOOK XI.—THE RECONQUEST OF OUDH.

CHAPTER I.

PREPARATIONS AND ACTION IN BENGAL.

State of Affairs in India on the Arrival of Sir Colin Campbell ............................... 84
The Enormous Difficulties by which he is beset ......................................................... 85
His Manner of "Organising Victory" ............................................................................ 86
The China Troops begin to arrive .................................................................................. 89
Captain William Peel and the Naval Brigade ............................................................... 89
Character of William Peel ............................................................................................. 90
Troops begin to arrive from England ............................................................................ 91
Sketch of the Districts intervening between Sir Colin Campbell’s Base of Operations at Allahabad and Calcutta ................................................................. 91
Mr. George Yule and Eastern Bihar ............................................................................. 92
Captain Dalton and Chutia Nagpur ............................................................................... 95
The Madras Army ......................................................................................................... 97
How that Army lent its Aid to Bengal .......................................................................... 98
Major English defeats the Rebels at Chatra ............................................................... 100

CHAPTER II.

THE SECOND RELIEF OF LAKHNAO (NOVEMBER, 1857).

Sir Colin Campbell starts for the Seat of War ............................................................. 101
Colonel Powell and William Peel march towards Kahunpur ....................................... 102
Powell hears of the Enemy at Kajwa. .......................................................................... 102
Battle of Kajwa, and Death of Powell ......................................................................... 103
William Peel, succeeding to the Command, completes the Victory ......................... 104
How the Fall of Dehli drove the Gwalior Contingent into the Field against the British ........................................................................................................ 105
Consideration of Sir Colin’s Position at Kahunpur, and of the Reasons which prompted him to relieve Lakhnao before crushing the Gwalior Troops ................................................................. 105
He leaves a Force at Kâhnpúr under Windham ........................................ 106
And joins Hope Grant in the Plain beyond Banni .............................. 107
Outram and Havelock at the Residency .................................................. 107
How Outram provided fresh quarters for his Troops ................................. 108
The Sorties at Lakhnâo ............................................................................ 109
Outram fails to open out the Kâhnpúr Road ................................................. 110
The Mining and Countermining ............................................................... 112
Altered Tactics of the Rebels .................................................................... 113
Some Casualties of the Siege ...................................................................... 114
Outram improvises Telegraphic Communication with the Álambâgh .......... 115
Thomas Henry Kavanagh ......................................................................... 116
Kavanagh penetrates in disguise the Enemy’s Lines and reaches Sir Colin Campbell ........................................................... 117
Composition of Sir Colin’s Relieving Force ................................................. 117
Sir Colin inspects his Troops—the Effect ................................................. 118
His Plan of Operations .............................................................................. 118
He moves on, and encamps near the Álambâgh ........................................ 119
Adrian Hope carries the Fort of Jalâlsâb .................................................... 120
The several Brigades of the Relieving Force ............................................ 121
The Force carries the Dilkushâ and the Martinière ..................................... 122
Sir Colin holds his Position that Afternoon and the Night, repulsing several Attacks ................................................................. 123
The Rear-guard under Ewart, 93rd, reaches Camp .................................. 125
The 15th, and Preparations for the 16th ...................................................... 126
The Advance on the 16th .......................................................................... 127
On the Sikandarâbgh ............................................................................... 128
Splendid Gallantry of Blunt, Bengal Artillery ......................................... 128
The Storming of the Sikandarâbgh ............................................................. 129
Richard Cooper, Ewart, Lumsden, and a few Followers leap through the Breach ........................................................................................................ 129
The daring Gallantry of those Officers and their following ...................... 130
Sir Gallantry gives time to their Comrades to force the Gate and Window .............................................................................................................. 131
The Sikandarâbgh is gained ................................................................. 133
The “Barracks” are captured ................................................................. 133
The Shâh Najaf .......................................................................................... 133
The Attack on the Shâh Najaf .................................................................. 134
Its Obstinate Resistance ........................................................................... 135
Infantry, Artillery, and Naval Brigade are baffled .................................... 136
Till Sergeant Paton, 93rd, indicates a Way of which Adrian Hope takes Advantage, and the Place is gained ................................................................. 137
The Troops then bivouac for the Night ...................................................... 138
How the Merits of Officers cannot be discovered from the Mention of a few in the Despatches ................................................................. 139
Some of the Deserving Stormers ............................................................. 139
The Action of the Rebels during the 16th .................................................. 140
Sir Colin’s Plans for the 17th ..................................................................... 141
He sends Brigadier Russell to secure his Left Flank ................................. 141
Hopkins storms the Mess House ............................................................... 142
And Garnet Wolseley occupies the Moti Mahall ................................. 143
The Meeting of Outram and Havelock with Sir Colin ............................... 144
The Proceedings of Outram and Havelock to open out a Communication with Sir Colin .......................... 145
The Difficulties which still remained after the Communications had been opened under Russell and Hale .......................... 147
The Operations on the Left Rear .................................. 150
Withdrawal of the Women and Children ................................ 151
And of the Force .......................................................... 152
The Cavalry during the Siege ............................................ 153
Death of Havelock .......................................................... 153
His Character and Career ................................................ 153
Sir Colin reaches the Alam Bagh and reorganises his Force ............ 155
Leaves Outram with four thousand Men at the Alam Bagh, and moves towards Kanhpur .................................................. 155
Hears on the Road alarming Rumours, and receives more alarming Letters, regarding the State of Affairs at Kanhpur .......... 156
Leaving his Infantry to follow, he gallops to the Front with his Staff and Artillery ......................................................... 157
And discovers the Disaster by which Windham was threatened .......... 158

CHAPTER III.

THE GWALIAR CONTINGENT AND GENERAL WINDHAM AT KANHPUR.

Explicit Instructions sent to Windham at Kanhpur ........................................ 159
Description of the Ground between Kalpi and Kanhpur ........................................ 160
Tantia Topi crosses the Jamnah at Kalpi, and occupies that Ground ................ 161
Windham asks for and obtains permission to detain the Troops arriving at Kanhpur ................................................................. 162
He marches beyond the Town and displays his Force ................................. 163
Increasing Difficulties of his Position ....................................................... 164
Solicits Sir Colin’s Sanction to a Plan of Offensive Defence ...................... 164
Communication with Lakhnao having ceased, he takes up a Position on the Kalpi Road covered by the Canal ........................................ 165
The Rebels approaching him, he resolves to attack them ................................ 165
In the Battle Carthew and Kelly capture three Guns ................................. 166
Windham learns that Sir Colin is marching on Kanhpur ............................... 166
On the 27th he prepares to stand on the Defensive, when he is attacked .......... 167
Carthew, on the right, repulses the Enemy .................................................. 168
Windham is not so fortunate on the Left, but is forced by the superior Artillery Power of the Enemy to fall back ............................................. 169
He hopes to make a stand at the Brick-kilns .............................................. 169
His Injudicious Order, repeated, to Carthew to fall back exposes his Right ...................................................................................... 170
The Rebels attack the Intrenchments, but are driven back by Windham ....... 171
Carthew stems the Advancing Tide ............................................................. 171
And gallantly repulses for the Night the Attack on the Right ..................... 171
Remarks on the Maneuvres of the Day ......................................................... 172
Windham makes his Dispositions for the 27th ............................................. 173
CONTENTS OF VOL. IV.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Does not give Sufficient Strength to the Decisive Point</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cartewell gallantly and successfully defends the Right</td>
<td>174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Attack on the Left, not being the decisive Attack, is easily repulsed</td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Windham orders Cartewell and Wilson to advance</td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wilson's Repulse exposes Cartewell's Right</td>
<td>176</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Windham has no Supports on the Decisive Point</td>
<td>177</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Splendid Tenacity of Cartewell and the 34th</td>
<td>177</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cartewell is forced to fall back on the Intrenchment</td>
<td>178</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cartewell and Windham</td>
<td>179</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reinforcements are sent to Cartewell, too few, and too late</td>
<td>180</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Aggressive Action of Windham justified in Principle</td>
<td>180</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sir Colin Campbell arrives on the Scene</td>
<td>181</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CHAPTER IV.

SIR COLIN CAMPBELL RETRIEVES WINDHAM'S DISASTER.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sir Colin has an Interview with Windham</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The Rebels plan the Destruction of the Bridge</td>
<td>182</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sir Colin battles them and crosses his Army</td>
<td>183</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Position occupied by the Enemy</td>
<td>184</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>They attempt to harass the British</td>
<td>185</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sir Colin despatches the Ladies and Children to Allahabad</td>
<td>185</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He detects the one weak Point in the Enemy's Position</td>
<td>186</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Strength of the Hostile Armies</td>
<td>187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sir Colin's Plan of Battle</td>
<td>188</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of Kanhpur. Greathed threatens the Centre</td>
<td>189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walpole employs the Right, whilst Adrian Hope turns the Right Flank</td>
<td>189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Desperate Struggle on the Canal is decided by William Peel's Dash</td>
<td>190</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Enemy are completely beaten</td>
<td>191</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mansfield is sent to cut them off at the Subahdâr's Tank</td>
<td>192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Character of General Mansfield</td>
<td>192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He allows the Enemy to escape</td>
<td>193</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hope Grant is then sent to pursue them</td>
<td>194</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He attacks and destroys them near Shirojpur</td>
<td>194</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Comments on Sir Colin Campbell's Tactics</td>
<td>196</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Part of the Programme remaining to be carried out</td>
<td>197</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CHAPTER V.

FURTHER OPERATIONS IN THE DUR.ÁB.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sir Colin's Further Movements are hampered by Want of Carriage</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>He detaches Walpole to Mainpûrî</td>
<td>199</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A few Fanatics bar his Way at Ítâwâh</td>
<td>200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bourchier clears them out, and Walpole reaches Mainpûrî</td>
<td>201</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seaton starts from Delhi with his Convoy for Mainpûrî</td>
<td>201</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Suddenly hears that the Rebels are marching against him</td>
<td>202</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
He attacks and completely defeats them
Finds the Rebels at Patiala
Where he again beats them
And to a great extent pacifies the Country
Again he defeats the Rebels near Mainpuri
Daring Exploit of Hodson and McDowell
Seaton unites with Walpole

CHAPTER VI.

MOVEMENTS PRELIMINARY TO THE RECONQUEST OF OUDH.

Sir Colin marches from Kanhpur towards Fathgarh
The Rebels lose their Opportunity of breaking down the Bridge over the Kafi Nad
Vaughan’s skilful Gun Practice
Gallant Dash of the 53rd
The Enemy are completely beaten
The Soldiers give an Ovation to Sir Colin
Gallant Conduct of Lieutenant Roberts
Reasons why the Commander-in-Chief advocated the Reduction of Rohilkhand prior to an Attack on Lakhnao
Reasons which actuated Lord Canning in deciding to attack Lakhnao in the First Instance
Lord Canning’s Action justified
The Military Position occupied by Sir Colin considered
He leaves Seaton to command at Fathgarh
Deceives the Rohilkhand Rebels
Adrian Hope attacks and defeats them at Sutia
The Final Preparations for an Attack on Lakhnao
The British Army is at last in the Plains between Kanhpur and Lakhnao. Its Composition

CHAPTER VII.

THE ADVANCE INTO EASTERN OUDH.

Jang Bahádúr of Nipál offers his Aid to Lord Canning
The Offer, after some delay, is accepted
The Nipal Troops are sent to Azamgarh and Jaunpur
They surprise and defeat the Rebels at Manduri
And pacify the District
Lieutenant-Colonel Longden is sent with a Detachment to co-operate with the Nipal Troops
Combat at Chandá
Longden drives the Rebels from Atraulia
The Governor-General concludes an Arrangement with Jang Bahádúr for a further Supply of Nipal Troops led by himself
Rowcroft defeats the Rebels at Sobanpur
Jang Bahádúr occupies Gorákhpur
He defeats the Rebels at Phulpur and enters Oudh
Description of General Franks's Column
Instructions given to Franks by Lord Canning
And by Mr. J. P. Grant
The Rebel Army opposed to Franks and its Positions
Nature of the Endeavours made to supply his Want of Cavalry
Franks attacks and beats the Rebels at Nasratpur
He returns to Badlapur and enters Oudh
He attacks and defeats Banda Husen at Chandé
And Mehndi Husen at Hamirpur
Manoeuvres between Franks and Mehndi Husen to gain Budháyan
Franks out-maneuvers his Rival, whereupon the Latter takes up a Position beyond Sultánpur
Strength and Weakness of the Position
Battle of Sultánpur
Gallantry of MacLeod Innes
Total Defeat of the Enemy
Franks is joined by the Jálándhar Cavalry under Aikman
Aikman's Splendid Daring
Franks is repulsed at Daurárá
Summary of the Results of his Campaign
Henry Havelock, Patrick Carnegy, and Venables
Franks joins Sir Colin Campbell

CHAPTER VIII

OUTRAM AT THE ÁLAMBÁGH.

Description of the Álambágh
Position taken up there by Outram
The Rebels in Lakhnáo recover Confidence and resolve to attack him
The Attack on the 22nd December
Outram drives them back on the Dilkushá
They make another Attack on the 12th January
Ophertes foils them on the Right, Down on the Centre
And Outram on the Left.
Religious Influences affecting the Natives.
The Maulví swears an Oath
Ophertes forces him to break it.
An Attack on the 16th January is repulsed
Discord in the Rebel Camp.
The Maulví attacks on the 15th February, and is repulsed
The Rebels resolve to make a Grand Assault on Sunday, 21st February
The Assault of Sunday, 21st February, is repulsed
They make another and Final Attack on the 25th
Battle of the 25th, and Repulse of the Rebels
Service rendered to England by Outram's Four Months' Defence of the Álambágh
The Men who aided Outram
Sir Colin Campbell reaches the Álambágh.
CHAPTER IX.

THE STORMING OF LAKHNÁO.

Force at the Disposal of Sir Colin Campbell .......................... 254
Defences of Lakhnao ..................................................... 255
The Weak Point of the Defence—detected by Sir Colin ............... 257
Sir Colin's Plan of Attack ................................................. 257
He advances on the Dilkushá, captures it, and establishes Batteries there and at the Muhammadbágh .............................. 258
He orders Bridges to be thrown across the Guñtí ...................... 259
And directs Outram to cross with a corps d'armée ................. 260
Outram establishes himself on the Left Bank ....................... 260
The Programme assigned to him ....................................... 260
Outram pushes forward to the Faizábád Road on the 8th, establishes himself there, and constructs Batteries ........ 261
He storms the Chákara Kothí, and occupies the Bádsháhábágh on the 9th .................................................. 262
Major Nicholson, R.E., establishes a Battery enfilading the Enemy's Works .................................................. 262
He observes that the Enemy's Lines seem abandoned ................ 263
Lieutenant Thomas Butler swims the Guñtí to ascertain the Fact, and occupies the Lines until relieved by the Highlanders 263
Sir Colin carries the Martinière ....................................... 264
The Line from the Guñtí to the Vicinity of Banks's House is occupied . 264
The British Position on the Evening of the 10th ...................... 265
Outram feels his Way to the Iron and Stone Bridges .............. 266
He occupies the Positions then taken up the four Days following the 11th .................................................. 267
The Sikandarbágh is occupied without Opposition ..................... 267
By the happy Audacity of three Engineer Officers the Kadam Rasúl and Sháh Najaf are gained ........................................... 268
Lugard effects a Break in the Begam Kothí ................................ 268
Adrian Hope's Brigade is ordered to storm it ......................... 269
Description of the Begam Kothí ....................................... 269
The Begam Kothí is stormed .......................................... 270
Death of Hodson ......................................................... 270
Position of the Assaultants on the Evening of the 11th ............... 271
The 12th and 13th are given to the Engineers ......................... 272
On the 14th Franks storms the Imámábárah .......................... 272
The Troops, excited by their Victory, push on ....................... 273
They turn the Enemy's third Line of Works ........................ 274
Splendid Behaviour of the Sikhs, 10th, 90th, of Havelock, of Brasyer 274
The Supports come up .................................................. 274
Franks and Napier resolve that the Advantage shall be pursued, and the Kaisarbágh is carried ........................................... 275
The Scene of Plunder ..................................................... 275
Result of the Day's Work on the Right Bank ......................... 276
Outram proposes to cross by the Iron Bridge and intercept the Rebels in their Flight. ........................................... 276
Sir Colin informs him that he may cross provided in doing so he does not lose a Single Man.

Reflections on the Reply

Useless Pursuit of the Rebels on the 15th

Outram crosses near the Sikandarbagh and pushes on to the Residency.

Contrast between the Defence of the Residency by Europeans and by Natives

Outram captures the Residency, the Great Imambārah, and the Machhi Bhawan.

The Retreating Rebels attack Walpole and are repulsed.

An Attack made on the Alambagh is repulsed.

Jang Bahadur advances, covering Sir Colin's Left.

Rescue of Miss Jackson and Mrs. Orr.

Outram occupies Sharif-ud-dālā's House.

Lamentable Accident by an Explosion.

Outram carries the Mīsā-bāgh.

Brigadier William Campbell allows the Rebels to escape.

Gallantry of Hargart and Wilkin.

Reflections on Brigadier Campbell's Conduct.

Lord Canning's Proclamation.

The City is cleared of the Rebels.

Remarks on the Campaign.

BOOK XII.—PROGRESS OF EVENTS IN ORĪSĀ, BIHĀR, OUDH, EASTERN BENGAL, ROHILKHAND, AND RĀJPUTĀNA.

CHAPTER I.

EASTERN BENGAL, EASTERN BIHĀR, ORĪSĀ, AND THE SOUTH-WESTERN PROVINCE.

The Narrative returns to Bengal.

Why the Interest of the History is now almost entirely with Sir Colin Campbell.

Lord Canning proceeds to Allahābād.

Panic in Calcutta on the 3rd March.

The 8th at Chitrāgaon Mutiny.

The Attempt to Disarm the 73rd at Dhākah results in a Conflict and the Flight of the Troops.

Loyalty of the Rājāh of Tiparāh.

Prompt Action of the Government with Respect to Chitrāgaon and Dhākah.

The Chitrāgaon Mutineers enter Tiparāh.

They are pursued and beaten, after a forced March, by the Silliāt Light Infantry.

Splendid Conduct of the Silliāt Sīphāhis.

Death of Byng.

Ultimate Fate of the Chitrāgaon Mutineers.
The Difficulties in Eastern Bihar are aggravated by the Events in Dhsakah and Chitrágaoon .............................. 297
Mr. George Yule, perceiving this, marches on Purnia ........... 297
He arrives just in time, for the 11th Irregulars promptly mutiny 298
Gallant Conduct of Mr. Francis Anstruther Elphinstone-Dalrymple, C.S. .......................................................... 298
The Prompt and Daring Action of Yule saves Purnia ............. 299
The Dhsakah Rebels menace Jalpaiguri ................................ 300
Yule Marches against them ........................................... 301
His Foresight and Activity do not prevent them from escaping 301
Yule pursues and drives the Rebels into Nipal ........................ 302
Major J. F. Richardson ................................................ 302
Jang Bahadur orders his Lieutenant to co-operate with Yule ......... 303
The Nipal Commander, by his unwillingness to divide his Forces, spoils the Plans of Yule and Richardson, and the Rebels escape 303
State of Chutia Nagpur in November 1857 .. 304
Action of Lieutenant Graham in Fálámán ............................ 305
Action of Captain Leigh in Sambalpur ................................ 306
Dangerous Position of Mr. Lushington and his Companions ......... 306
Splendid Conduct of Mr. Cockburn, Commissioner of Katak ...... 308
He pours Troops into Sambalpur ..................................... 308
The Rebels are defeated in Singhbhúm and Sambalpur ............. 308
Tranquillity is gradually restored in Chutiah Nagpur .......... 308

CHAPTER II.
KUNWAR SINGH AND LORD MARK KERR.

Retrospect of Affairs in Western Bihar ................................. 310
That Province under Mr. Tayler's Successor .......................... 311
Kunwar Singh returns to it ........................................... 311
The Situation is aggravated by various Raising .................... 311
False Military Movement of Batteray and Alonzo Money .......... 312
They are out-manoeuvred by the Rebels, and Gaya is saved by the Gallantry of Skipwith Tayler ................................. 312
Mutiny of Two Companies of the 32nd Native Infantry ............. 312
Batteray Avenges his Disaster of the 8th September, and fights an indecisive Combat with the 32nd ............................... 312
The Narrative proceeds to the Line of Communication between Allahábád and Lakhnao ............................................. 313
Carthew at Fathpúr .................................................. 313
He clears the Country on the Left Bank of the Jamnáh ......... 313
Campbél clears the Country near Allahábád ........................... 313
Movable Columns are sent to keep open the Line .................. 314
The Effect being to secure Sir Colin's Operations against Lakhnao 315
Sothey defeats the Rebels at Chandipur .............................. 316
Rowcroft defeats the Rebels at Amóra and establishes himself there 317
Kunwar Singh makes a Diversion in Eastern Oudh ................. 318
Milman Attacks and drives back his Troops near Atraulia ...... 319
The Opportunity of cutting off Milman from his Base is seized by Kunwar Singh ....................................................... 323
He forces back Milman on Azamgarh ........................................ 320
Lord Canning, hearing of Milman's Disaster, sends Lord Mark Kerr to relieve him ........................................................................... 321
Character and Antecedents of Lord Mark Kerr .......................... 321
Lord Mark sets out with Four Hundred and Forty-four Men ........ 322
He encounters the Enemy, Four Thousand strong, near Azamgarh ... 322
Desperate Contest, and the Resolute Persistence of Lord Mark Kerr, who beats the Rebels, and relieves Azamgar ............................. 323
Great Credit due on every ground to Lord Mark Kerr ............... 325
His Victory probably saved Banaras from the Clutches of Kunwar
Singh .................................................................................. 326
Fatal Error in Kunwar Singh's Tactics ..................................... 327

CHAPTER III.
KUNWAR SINGH AND HIS SUCCESSORS AT BAY IN WESTERN BIHÁR.

Objects still remaining to Sir Colin to accomplish .................... 328
He orders a Brigade under Lugard to Azamgarh ....................... 328
Lugard defeats some Rebels near Tigra .................................... 329
State of the Azamgarh Garrison ............................................. 330
Wily Tactics of Kunwar Singh ................................................ 330
Lugard forces the Passage of the Tons .................................... 330
Death of Venables .................................................................. 331
The Rebels fall back unbeaten, and baffle their pursuers .......... 331
Douglas is sent to pursue Kunwar Singh ................................. 332
Kunwar Singh baffles him at Naghai by retreating ................... 332
He continues to evade a Decisive Action ............................... 333
But is caught and beaten at Manohar .................................... 333
Notwithstanding this, outwitting Cumberlege and baffling Douglas, he crosses the Ganges into Shahábd, and recaptures Jagdispur ........ 334
Le Grand attacks him there and is totally defeated ................. 335
Death of Kunwar Singh, and Succession of his Brother Amar Singh 336
Lugard crosses into Shahábd .................................................. 336
He repeatedly beats and disperses the Rebels, but they always reunite.
The Rebels harry the District and defy Pursuit ....................... 337
Lugard cuts Roads across the Jungles, and succeeds in driving the Rebels to a considerable Distance, when he is forced to resign his Command from ill-health ....................................................... 338
His Successor, Douglas, has not even taken up the Command, when the Rebels return and renew their Depredations ............................ 339
Douglas determines to converge Seven Columns on a Belt into which he proposes to drive the Rebels .............................................. 340
Reasons why he deferred the Execution of the Plan till the Conclusion of the Rainy Season ............................................................ 340
The Plan fails in consequence of the Delay of one of the Column
Commanders ......................................................................... 341
Sir Henry Havelock's Plan of Mounted Infantry is sanctioned .... 341
Great Success attends the Plan at the Outset ............................ 342
CONTENTS OF VOL. IV. xxxiii

On a Second Occasion Havelock drives the Rebels into a Position from which they escape only in consequence of the Mistake of the Infantry. 343
He again pursues them and drives them into the Kaimur Hills. 344
Where they are finally destroyed on the 24th November 344

CHAPTER IV.

THE PROGRESS IN OUDH AND ROHILKHAND—HOPE GRANT—PENNY—WALPOLE AT RUITYA—COKE—JOHN JONES—SAM BROWN—WILLIAM PELL—VENABLES.

Hope Grant is ordered from Lakhnao to the Districts watered by the Ghaghra. 346
The Rebels make a daring Reconnoitring Expedition into his Camp. 347
The Maulavi devises a Skilful Plan to surprise Hope Grant. 347
The Plan fails owing to the Inability of the Leaders of his Cavalry to withstand Temptation. 348
Hope Grant joins Jang Bahadur's Camp. 348
Satiated Condition in which he found the Gurkhas. 349
Sir Colin Campbell's Plans for the Reconquest of Rohilkhand 349
Seaton's Position at Fathgarh. 350
He attacks and, beating, foils the Plans of the Rebels, at Kankar. 350
General Penny marches towards Rohilkhand. 351
The Enemy attempt a Surprise, and Penny is killed. 351

The Column, commanded by Colonel Jones, joins the Commander-in-Chief. 351
Nature of the Task entrusted to Walpole. 352
Character of Walpole as a General. 352
Walpole learns that the fort of Ruitya is occupied by a Rebel Chief. 353
Though informed by a Trooper that the Rebel Chief intends to evacuate the place, Walpole determines to attack it. 354
He sends his Infantry in Skirwishing Order against the Walls. 355
Gallantry of Grove, Coke, and others. 355
Adrian Hope rides up to the Skirmishers and is killed. 356
Walpole orders a Retreat. 356
The Rebels evacuate the Fort. 356
Tributes to Adrian Hope. 357
Walpole drives the Rebels from Sirs, and joins the Commander-in-Chief. 357

A Brigade assembles at Rurki under the Command of Colonel John Coke. 358
Previous Service and Character of Colonel Coke. 358
Coke is able, by his Practical Knowledge of the Natives and their Customs, to supply his Force with Carriage, otherwise not procurable. 359
Coke is superseded by Brigadier-General John Jones; the change, however, not affecting the Working of the Force. 360
Coke crosses the Ganges and completely defeats the Rebels at Bhogniwala. 361

VOL. IV.
CONTENTS OF VOL. IV.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Cool and resolute Feat of Arms accomplished by the Native Officer</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Jámádár Imám Bahásh Khán</td>
<td>361</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Rebels are again defeated at Nághdíná.</td>
<td>362</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cureton, after greatly contributing to the first Defeat, administers a second the same Day</td>
<td>363</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Deed of Cureton still the Talk of the Indian Army'</td>
<td>363</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gallantry and Reward of Hanna</td>
<td>364</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The People of Murádábád greatly discontented with Native Rule</td>
<td>364</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coke, splendidly aided by Angelo and others, seizes several Rebel Chiefs in Murádábád.</td>
<td>365</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Commander-in-Chief, advancing on Shájahánpúr, is baffled by the Evasion of the Maulávi and his following</td>
<td>365</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He leaves a Garrison there under Hale, and marches on BarelÍ</td>
<td>366</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Khán Bahádúr Khán and BarelÍ</td>
<td>366</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sir Colin advances on BarelÍ and pushes back the Rebels across the Natí Nadí</td>
<td>367</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Gházís make a Tremendous Onslaught on the Highland Brigade</td>
<td>368</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After maltreating Cameron and Walpole, they are slain where they fought</td>
<td>369</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>On Account of the Suffering of the Troops from Heat, and for other reasons, Sir Colin halts for the Day</td>
<td>369</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Gházís attack a Company of the 93rd, commanded by Richard Cooper</td>
<td>370</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Halt ordered by Sir Colin enables Khán Bahádúr Khán to withdraw</td>
<td>370</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Rúríkí Column advances from Murádábád and effects a Junction with Sir Colin</td>
<td>371</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Maulávi designs a Raid on Shájahánpúr</td>
<td>372</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A Halt of Two Hours made on the Road enables a Spy to convey Intelligence of his Approach to Colonel Hale</td>
<td>372</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hale baffles the Maulávi, who occupies, and levies Contributions from the Town</td>
<td>373</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sir Colin sends General Jones to relieve Shájahánpúr</td>
<td>373</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jones penetrates to the Position occupied by Hale</td>
<td>374</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Then, finding himself not strong enough, applies for Assistance</td>
<td>375</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Maulávi, on his Side, receives Reinforcements from all Parts</td>
<td>375</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>On the 15th he attacks Jones and is repulsed</td>
<td>376</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sir Colin was on the Point of distributing his Forces when he receives Jones's Appeal</td>
<td>376</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He at once sets out for Shájahánpúr</td>
<td>377</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He skirmishes with the Rebels, but, owing to his weakness in Cavalry is unable to obtain decisive Success</td>
<td>377</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sir Colin sends for Coke's Brigade</td>
<td>378</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Rebels fall back into Oudh</td>
<td>378</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusion of the Rohilkhand Campaign</td>
<td>378</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Character and Previous Career of the Maulávi</td>
<td>379</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>His Influence in Causing the Mutiny</td>
<td>379</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Maulávi attempts to obtain Assistance from the Rajah of Powán</td>
<td>380</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He is shot dead by the Rajah's Brother</td>
<td>380</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Claim of the Maulávi to the Character of a Patriot established</td>
<td>381</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Peel gradually recovers from his Wound</td>
<td>381</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CONTENTS OF VOL. IV.

Cordial Reception prepared for him and for the Naval Brigade in Calcutta. ... 381
Honours conferred upon him ... 381
He dies of Small-pox. Universal Appreciation of his Noble Character. 382
Venables, "the brave, self-denying English Gentleman". 383

CHAPTER V.

GEORGE ST. PATRICK LAWRENCE IN RAJPÚTÁNA.

Rajputaná from July, 1857 ... 385
Effect on the Rajputs of the Suzerainty of the British as administered by General George Lawrence ... 385
The Disaffected Few—the Criminal Class and the Soldiery ... 386
An Outbreak in the Ajmir Gaol is suppressed ... 386
A slight Military Disturbance at Nasirabad is quelled ... 387
And Another at Nimach ... 387
Mount Abu and its Inhabitants ... 388
Some Mutineers of the Jodhpur Legion scale Mount Abu and fire on the English Soldiers as they sleep ... 389
The Mutineers are completely baffled and driven away ... 389
The Jodhpur Legion revolts at Erinopuram ... 390
Conolly shows a Daring Persistence in endeavouring to recall them to their Duty ... 391
At last a few Men rally round him ... 392
The strange Inconsistency of these loyal few ... 392
The Anádárá Mutineers arrive ... 392
After great Vicissitudes Conolly is allowed to go ... 393
The Case of Íabbás Ali and Monck-Mason ... 393
The Rájah of Jodhpur sends an Army against the Rebels ... 394
The Thákur of Áwah rebels against his Liege Lord ... 394
He offers to submit on certain Terms, which Monck-Mason does not accept ... 394
The Rebels defeat the Jodhpur Troops at Pálf ... 395
General Lawrence marches against Áwah ... 396
But is compelled to fall back on Ajmir ... 397
Death of Monck-Mason ... 397
The Affairs of Kotá ... 397
Major Burton denounces certain Men to the Maháráo, who repeats his Language to the Men denounced ... 398
The Kotá Troops rise and murder Burton and his Sons ... 398
Excuses of the Maháráo ... 399
The British are repulsed in an Attack on Jíran ... 399
Lawrence again attacks and captures Áwah ... 400
General Roberts arrives, and, marching on Kotá, completely defeats the Rebels ... 401
Pacification of Rajputaná ... 403
Reasons why Rajputaná so easily weathered the Storm of the Mutiny ... 403
George St. Patrick Lawrence ... 404
APPENDIX A. ................................................................. 405
APPENDIX B. ................................................................. 406
APPENDIX C. ................................................................. 410

LIST OF PLANS.

Plan to illustrate the Operations of the British Army before Delhi in the year 1857 to face page 18
Sketch of Operations for Relief and Withdrawal of Lakhnao Garrison to face page 120
Sketch of the City of Kâulhpûr to face page 160
Plan to illustrate the Operations of the British Army before Lakhnao in March 1858 to face page 256
APPENDIX A.

With reference to the common saying that Lord Lawrence saved the Panjáb, and thereby saved India, it may be fair to remark that this opinion was not supported by many of the officers who served with the Dehli Field Force during the siege: their views may be shown by the following extracts taken from a letter written by Lieut.-Colonel Turnbull (who served throughout the siege on the personal staff of Sir Henry Burnard, General Reed, and Sir Archdale Wilson) to Mr. Bosworth Smith, with reference to Lord Lawrence's share of credit for the work done at Dehli, as described in that Author's book:—

"The one figure which stands pre-eminently forward in this narrative" (Mr. Bosworth Smith's 'Life of Lord Lawrence') "of the siege of Dehli, is that of Sir John Lawrence. All others sink into insignificance. The terrible anxiety of our generals, receiving constant entreaties (if not more) from Láhor to do something; to take active measures to push on, &c., when it would have been ruinous, if not practically impossible, to do so; the fearful prostration of mind and body by such a strain in a climate reaching sometimes 133 degrees in a headquarters tent, the perpetual knowledge that if nothing were done they might be blamed, and, if anything were done and failed, the blame would be theirs also; more especially as the consequence of any such failure would be the rising of the Panjáb; all this does not seem to have been sufficiently taken into account. It was Sir John Lawrence who urged our instant move on Dehli. When we got there we found ourselves checked, surrounded, and outnumbered. He denuded the Panjáb of troops, and sent them to us, thus enabling us to hold our own, and thus to save the Panjáb, and India. It is hard to see how, with the original responsibility resting on him, he could have done anything less.

"The siege of Dehli has never been sufficiently estimated in England, and for several reasons. No one can know what really went on there except those who were there. The fall of Dehli took place in September. Sir Colin Campbell had arrived in Calcutta the 13th August. From that moment all attention was riveted on him; and, soon after, on Lakhnáo. Troops arrived from the Cape by October; the China expedition was directed to India; troops and officers, whose numbers and names had already become well known during the Crimean War, came out; full battalions, one thousand strong, took the place of attenuated regiments of two hundred and fifty; and last, not least, war-correspondents kept the English public well up in all the minor details of what was then occurring. The natural consequence was, that the recollection of things done at Dehli faded away. The terrible anxieties of the commanders, the gallantry and sufferings of the officers and men, were either passed over, or, if remembered, were soon obliterated by the newspaper descriptions of what was even then going on. One person could not be passed over, and that was Sir John Lawrence. From his constant correspondence with the Government at the Presidency, his work could not be forgotten. The centre of the work above the zone of the Mutiny was the taking of Dehli, so that his name was, in England, more immediately connected with it; and, in the opinion of some, he never used such opportunities as came to his lot afterwards as fully as he might have done in remembering those who were one of the stepping-stones to his advancement."

Colonel Turnbull was a most gallant officer. In his despatch after the battle of Badli-ki-Sarai, Sir Henry Barnard specially mentioned the "daring devotion" of his two aides-de-camp, Captain Turnbull and his own son. The praise was well merited, for both were to the front whenever service was to be rendered and danger to be encountered.

APPENDIX B.

(From Sir James Outram to the Officer Commanding the Relieving Force.)

[Along with the following important and deeply interesting letter, Sir James Outram forwarded a plan of the ground intervening between the Alambagh and the Residency, together with minute descriptions of every position and building capable of being held by the enemy. The plan was based on the surveys made by the late Captain Morrison prior to the outbreak, the only surveys that had been made of Lakhnao. The copy of this plan, which will be found at the end of the volume, should be consulted in the perusal of the following letter. It is Plan No. I.]

My communication of the 14th instant informed you I consider your first operation should be the occupation of the "Dilkushá" house and park, by a direct movement to that place from the Alambagh. The fort of Jalájabád, which is situated a mile or a mile and a half to the right of that route, is said to be occupied by the enemy, with two guns; but it is too distant to interrupt that line of communication, and it is not likely to be maintained after the Dilkushá, in addition to Alambagh, has been occupied in its rear. I think it hardly worth while, therefore, to waste time against that place, which at the commencement of the outbreak was little capable of defence, and is not likely since to have been repaired or stored sufficiently to admit of its retention. The guns now there appear to have been sent merely to interrupt the forage parties from Alam-bágh. (A description of Jalálábád, as it was just before the outbreak, is appended.) Yet it will be prudent, in afterwards communicating with Alam-bágh, to afford a strong escort until it is known whether or not Jalálábád is evacuated.

The direct advance from Alam-bágh vid Charbágh, and the main street marked (1) (1) (1) on the plan, should not be attempted, very formidable opposition being prepared on the opposite side of the Charbágh bridge, the bridge itself being destroyed, and the passage strongly fortified; besides which, there are two miles of street to pass through, in which every means of obstruction has been prepared, the houses loopholed, and guns in position at various points, with ditches, mines, and other obstacles. For the same reason I would depurate any attempt to force the street which runs from the junction of the Dilkushá and Martiniere roads to the Kaisar-bágh, marked (2) (2) (2).

At Dilkushá, it is stated, there are at present only some Rájwára matchlockmen, with cavalry at Bibipur village perhaps, and at the Martinière; but these are almost certain to decamp when you approach, and may perhaps suffer considerably ere they get across the canal, if followed up sharply by cavalry and horse artillery. Two guns were said to be at Dilkushá some days ago, probably those now at Jalálábád. If still there, they would have to be abandoned ere they could be crossed over the canal, if followed up.

It is possible that some of the so-called Regular Infantry may be sent over to the Dilkushá when they hear of your approach. If so, they will but add to their own confusion and panic flight when you attack, for never by any chance do they stand in the open. Two regiments of infantry and one of cavalry, sent out to oppose Major Barston’s convoy, fled at his approach without firing a shot; and on every occasion where whole hosts of them were opposed to ourselves it was just the same. The Dilkushá palace cannot be maintained under fire of our artillery, having large windows on every side. If any force of the enemy is assembled there, they must suffer awfully from your guns in escaping across the canal; or, should they fly to the Martinière, they will be in a similar predicament when you follow them up.

On seeing the Dilkushá occupied by your troops, the enemy would most probably occupy the Martinière. After lodging your baggage in the garden to the rear of, and commanded by, the Dilkushá house (and surrounded by walls without houses, something like Alam-bágh, and easily defensible), you would proceed against the Martinière through the road marked (3) (3) (3). But it would be well, ere getting within musket-range of the building, to throw a few shells and round shot into it, in case it should be occupied by the enemy, whose fire from the terraced roof might cause much loss ere you get near enough to rush up and blow open doors for entry. It would be well for you to have some one with you well acquainted with the Martinière building. And it may be a matter for your consideration whether it would not be better, if the place appears strongly fortified, to mask it by encamping your troops between the road (3) (3) and the canal, contenting yourself by bombarding the Martinière during the day and night, which will almost ensure its evacuation before morning. The mound marked (4)* would be a favourable site for a 24-pounder battery, which would command the opposite bank of the canal, where you purpose effecting your passage to protect the sappers in making a road for your guns.

It is possible the bridge leading to the Martinière may not be destroyed, and that you may prefer advancing over it. But, on reconnoitring, you will, I believe, find places where the canal may be crossed without much difficulty further down, towards (6), which would enable you to turn any defensive works the enemy may prepare on the main road (2) (2) (2). If you cross the bridge, therefore, I would recommend you turning to the right after passing it, and making your way through the mud huts (indicated by the brown colour on the plan) until you get into the road running from (6) to (W) (W) (W)—W denotes some deserted and destroyed infantry lines—leaving the houses, marked D D D, on your left, and thus making your way into the road (7) (7), which passes the open front of the enclosure in which the barracks are situated. Should the barracks be occupied (they were precipitately abandoned when we advanced from the same quarter), it may be prudent to throw a few shot and shell ere the infantry advances to the attack. Having large doors, open on both sides, as is customary in European barracks in India, I anticipate little difficulty in your effecting an entry. Staircases lead to the terraced roof from the interior of the centre room. The terrace is considerably raised above, and therefore commands the houses of the Hazratganj), and a few rifles placed there could keep down any musketry fire from thence (Hazratganj), which alone could disturb the party left in occupation of the barracks when you advance further. But it would be necessary to throw up a parapet of sand-bags, or screens of shutters, to protect the riflemen on the roof, as it has no parapet. The south wall of the enclosure is, however, sufficiently high to afford some protection against direct fire.

Should you cross by the bridge, your whole force would, I presume, come that way. And your next operation, after leaving an adequate guard for the barracks (say 300 or 400 infantry, some cavalry, and a couple of guns; or, probably, you might secure a gun, or two guns, which the enemy are said to have there), would be to proceed by the road (7) (7) to the Sikandrabâgh (G), which, if held, could easily be breached by 24-

* Sir J. Outram afterwards availed himself of this mound to plant a 24-pounder battery of the Shannon Brigade, which effectually kept down the enemy’s fire opened on the rear division under his command, when he finally retired to the Alambâgh.
or 18-pounders—the wall being only about 2½ feet thick—vide enclosed description.* It is said to be occupied by Man Singh, with some 200 or 300 Rajwars and two guns; the former are pretty sure to bolt when your guns open upon the place, and two or three shells are thrown into it.

If you cross the canal at (6), the main body of your force should proceed by the road from (6) to (W). A regiment and portion of artillery might, perhaps, make their way by the road which leads direct to the Sikandrabagh (8) (8); but as it is not well defined, it may be more prudent to keep all together till you occupy the barracks.†

Should you have met with opposition, or been delayed much in crossing the canal, the day will be pretty far advanced ere you have occupied the barracks and Sikandrabagh. These might be the limit of your operation that day—encamping your force between, and a little in advance of, those two points, with its right rear on Sikandrabagh, and the barracks on its left rear—thus obtaining a tolerably open plain to encamp on, with almost clear space in front, from which your guns would play upon the buildings which still intervene between your camp and our position, namely, the Shāh Nuja (H), Moti Mahall (K), Mess-house (M), and Tārā Kothi (N), which, if held, might be bombarded from both our positions prior to commencing combined operations next morning. You would then decide on the garrisons to occupy the barracks and Sikandrabagh, to maintain communication with Dilkushā, where your baggage would, I trust, be secure in the garden, protected by 200 men occupying the house, and a couple of guns. About the same strength (with convalescents) would suffice for Ālambagh, aided by the enemy's guns we have there. And, perhaps, two of our own guns, supported by 100 riflemen, would hold the Martinières, with a small body of cavalry to command the plain down to the canal. A strong picquet also should be placed in the nearest huts to the road by which you cross the canal. You would, perhaps, occupy the houses D D also, as further security for your communications.‡ Another point to which you should turn your attention while

---

* The Commander-in-Chief's force met with serious opposition at the Sikandrabagh, owing to their having approached it by a cross-road from the rear, whereas their breaching guns could not be brought up until the troops had been exposed for some time to a heavy fire. Had they come by the broad pakka (macadamised) road leading from the barracks, as suggested, their heavy guns could have opened upon the place while the infantry remained out of musketry fire. A practicable breach would then have been made, or the shelling would have driven the enemy out. As it was, however, the occupants, greatly more numerous than reported, had no means of egress, and were destroyed to a man; but our own troops also suffered severely in taking the place.

† Neither the roads (7) (7) or (8) (8) were followed by Sir Colin Campbell's force, which was taken by a more circuitous and intricate road than either, and suffered greatly before its guns could be brought to the front.

‡ All this was carried out, with the exception that the barracks and the delayed in breaching the Sikandrabágh is the destruction of the bridge of boats some few hundred yards thence.* If a troop of horse artillery and cavalry are sent off rapidly to any point commanding the boats, many men would be destroyed with the boats that would be sunk by your guns; and the destruction of the boats will prevent the enemy's force on the other side of the Gúntí coming over to molest you at night.

The signal that you are crossing the canal will be my notice to spring certain mines, and storm the posts now held by the enemy in my immediate front (9) (9); and, once in possession of these, I shall open my guns on the buildings above mentioned, and endeavour also to silence the fire of the Kaisarbágh, which commands the open space between us, to favour our junction next morning † when our united batteries could be turned upon the Kaisarbágh. And they would, I hope, in a day or two, effect its capture, which is necessary to ensure th entire submission of the city.

---

NOTE BY THE AUTHOR.—This extract has been taken from Sir James Outram's General Orders, Despatches, and Correspondence, published in 1860 (Smith, Elder, and Co.). All the notes attached to it were made by the editor of that volume.—G. B. M.

---

APPENDIX C.

Lieutenant Conolly thus wrote to Captain Black, regarding his escape:

"Such a scene of confusion I never saw; some Sipáhis firing at Bhíls, they shot seven poor wretches on the parade-ground, who, I declare were only looking at the novel scene. During the day we halted. The first day we marched to ——, and a greater rabble never crossed country than our once smart legion: not a Sipáhi hardly saluted me. I was taken to Abbas houses D D were refused in the advance to the Sikandrabágh, and had therefore, to be taken afterwards, and (it is believed) at a greater loss than had they been assailed in the first instance.

* The enemy's leaders themselves caused the bridge to be broken up to prevent the flight of their followers.

† This was done. Sir James Outram's troops stormed and took the buildings (9) (9) on the day Sir Colin took the Sikandrabágh. Sir James then opened his batteries on the Mess-house, Kaisarbagh, &c., exactly as here proposed, until the junction was effected; and the Kaisarbagh could have soon after been taken, had it not been determined to withdraw our forces for a time.—(See the despatches of General Havelock, Brigadier Eyre, Colonel Napier, &c., in reference to these operations.)
Ali's tent at —, and the infantry were a little behind, when a tremendous row commenced. Some Minás made a rush at the carts; the infantry thought it was an attack; away went the cavalry to see to matters, cut up a few Bhils, and, seeing no one else, pulled up to look about them. Another row, and rush towards where I was standing near my saddled horse. I can't say I was desperately alarmed, for all hope of life I had cast aside some hours before, when we marched. The rush towards me was caused by some amiable Sipáhis taking the opportunity to make a run at me. Abbáṣ Ali and his men saw it, and were soon between us; but I cannot enter into details of self; once again they attempted to get at me at Dúlā. What made them so mad was, that my strenuous attempts to seduce the cavalry had been made known to Mihrwán Singh, and he swore I should die. At Dúlā they had three or four rows—councils they called them—about me. At last, Mihrwán Singh and the other beauties, seeing Abbáṣ Ali would not give me up, said I might go solus. Next morning, they sent again to say, No, I should not go. However, Abbáṣ Ali and his men surrounded my chárpái* all night; we none of us slept, and on the morning of the 27th, when the force was ready, the guns were loaded, the infantry shouldered arms, and I was brought up. I was told to ride to the front; poor Dokal Singh the háwaldár-major, and some others, ran out blubbering; Abbáṣ Ali and Abdul Ali rode up on each side, made me low salaams, and told me to ride for it; that not a sawár should be allowed to interfere with my retreat. My three sawárs, who, I have forgotten to say, had stuck to me as if I had been their brother since the very beginning, by a preconcerted plan, were ordered to see me off a little way. I could not help giving a farewell wave of the hand to the infantry in irony; they shouted and laughed, the band struck up, and that is the last I saw of the legion. I rode right into Kripurum with three sawárs; I came straight here, and the people seemed ready to eat me with joy. The names of the three sawárs are, Nasir-ud-din, second troop; Ílábí Bakhsh, third troop (the man who used to ride my grey); and Momin Khán, first troop. They left everything behind, and, I must say, are three as fine fellows as I wish to see. By the bye, the cavalry said, if I would agree to turn Musalmán, to a man they would follow me. Very kind of them. They offered me money when I was coming away, and also on the march. I took twenty rupees from Abbáṣ Ali; now I wish I had taken my pay; they twice offered it. Now is our time, the legion is divided. Jawan Singh † golandáz, and his party, about seven other golandáz (gunners), will play the infantry a trick if they can. I have told Jawan Singh I will myself give him five hundred rupees if he breaks with the infantry. Abbáṣ Ali, the háwaldár-major, and Abdul Ali, are in danger on my account, and they are kept with their men under the guns night and day. I feel most glad to think I did

* Chárpái, a bedstead; literally, "of four feet."
† Golandáz, a gunner; literally, "a thrower of balls."
them as much harm as I could. Makhdúm Bakhsh had a musket put to his breast for letting me ride with my sword on. I was a bone of contention. I have this morning sent a sharp kásíd to Abbás Ali, telling him, for his own sake, to try and communicate with Mason, who, I believe, is at Páli, and to whom I have written to try and communicate with Abbás Ali."

Kásíd—a courier.

END OF VOL. IV.