§ 18. Their description of the extraordinary debasement of the Irish Currency	11
19. Exchange with Belfast favourable to Ireland, while that with Dublin adverse	13
20. Difference of 12 per cent. between Exchange with Dublin and with Belfast	14
21. The fact proved that a balance of payments was due to Ireland, while the Exchange was so depressed	14
22. First declaration of the opinion that gold had risen, and paper had not fallen	14
23. Opinion of Mr. Marshall that Irish Bank notes were depreciated	15
24. His evidence on the subject	16
25. The Theory of the Directors of the Bank of Ireland as to the regulation of the paper currency	17
26. Report of the Committee	18
27. The Committee report that the Directors should regulate their issues by the price of guineas and the foreign Exchanges	19
28. Very debased state of the coinage	19
29. The Committee do not discuss the new theory of paper currency	20
30. They recommend an assimilation of the English and Irish currencies	20
31. Mr. Fox declares it to be a fantastical opinion that paper was not depreciated, and that gold had risen	20
32. First declaration by a Parliamentary Committee that the paper currency should be regulated by the Foreign Exchanges	21
33. Renewal of the Bank's loan to Government	22
34. Circumstances which lead to the great depreciation of the British Currency	22
35. Perfidious conduct of Prussia in 1805	23

10. The Bill becomes law	157
11. Chief provisions of the Act	158
12. The Act authorises a violation of its own principle	160
13. Incorrect to say that the Act of 1844 is the complement of the Act of 1819	161
14. The Act of 1844 is a combination of two very erroneous theories of currency	161
15. Unusual accumulation of Capital in 1844	161
16. Great error of writers who think that prices must vary exactly with the amount of the Currency	162
17. Variations in the Bank rate of discount after the Act of 1844	162
18. Rapid drain of bullion in the Autumn of 1846 and Spring of 1847	163
19. The Bank Act shewn to be subject to the same radical vice as the bank principle of 1832	165
20. Monetary pressure in April, 1847	166
21. Passes off after the first week of May	167
22. Error of the Bank in keeping down the rate of discount too long	167

CHAPTER XIV

ON SOME THEORIES OF CURRENCY.

1. It is necessary not only to ascertain the true principles of monetary science, but to point out the fallacy of false theories	243
2. One of these may be called Lawism	243
3. Statement of the question	243
4. Peculiarity of Law's system	244
5. It is a violation of the fundamental conception of a Currency established in this work	245
6. Precursors of Law	245

12. The same continued	249
13. The same continued	249
14. The same continued	250
15. The same continued	250
16. The essence of Lawism is that money represents commodities, and that paper currency may be based upon commodities. Money does not represent Commodities, but only Debt, or Services Due, which have not yet received their equivalent in Commodities	251
17. The Theory of basing a paper currency upon commodities involves the palpable contradiction in terms that a person may buy commodities and keep his money as well	252
18. Law's idea	253
19. Law was no advocate of an unlimited inconvertible paper currency	253
20. The most celebrated examples of Lawism	254

30. Practical results of Law's Theory	263
31. Fourth example of Lawism—The Bank of Norway	263
32. Fifth example—The American banking convulsions of 1837-39	264
33. The principle of basing a paper currency on the public funds is identical with, and is as vicious as, basing it on land	266
34. Fundamental vice of the constitution of the Bank of England	267
35. The consequences of this vicious principle are prevented by its being limited to that single instance	268
36. On the Theory of basing a Paper Currency on the discount of mercantile bills	268
37. Refutation of this theory by the Bullion Committee	268
38. This refutation incomplete	271
39. Demonstration of the fallacy of this theory on the principles of this work	271
40. The same continued	273
41. Specific meaning of over-issue	274
42. Fallacy of the expression "good bills"	275
43. Adam Smith the parent of both these currency fallacies	275
44. Bullion as the representative of debt is the only proper basis upon which to found a paper currency	275
45. Bullion is only the regulator of its amount	276
46. Specie and credit form the only true circulating medium	276
47. Specie and credit must always increase and decrease together	277
48. Problem to discover the true mode of acting upon the paper currency	277
49. The rate of discount is the true mode of acting upon the paper currency	278
50. Arguments applicable to the case of wheat also apply to debt	278
51. Effects of the action of this principle	279
52. In all commercial crises production should be curbed	280
53. Consequences of violating this principle	280
54. The same continued	281
55. Perverse opposition to this law of nature	281
56. Error of a prevalent theory	281
57. Historical proof of the fallacy of this theory	282

§ 60. Consequences of adopting Sir A. Alison's plan	283
61. Absurdity of it	284
62. Other considerations which prove that the rate of discount is the true mode of acting on the paper currency	284
63. Advantages of a proper attention to the rate of discount	285
64. The truth of the preceding principles exemplified in England on various occasions	285
65. Conclusion	286
