PREFACE

THESE dialogues for the most part explain themselves. They deal more with character and personality than with doctrine and history.

The first was part of a lecture given in the London School of Economics, 19th January, 1926, on Adam Smith and the Classical Economists.

The second was written for an Adam Smith club founded in the 'Tower Hamlets' in 1880 and now meeting in the Friends' Meeting House, Euston Road. It was read there on 14th October, 1930.

The third was a contribution to the volume of Economic Essays prepared in honour of the doyen of American economists, John Bates Clark, in 1927, and printed for the American Economic Association, who have kindly allowed republication.

The fourth may be taken as a sequel to the third. It was written in the present year.

The fifth was written in 1927, and appeared this year, 1930, in the April number of the Indian Journal of Economics, Vol. X. Part 4. It is republished by the courtesy of the Indian Economic Association, Allahabad.

The writer has made use of a similar form of dialogue, Shaftesbury taking the chief place, in Moral Sense (Library of Philosophy, Allen and Unwin, 1930, Appendix).
