leading the Masses by Communalism and Caste Prejudice. Tenants as Pawns in the Game. The Victims of Illogical Fear. The Danger of Middle-Class Discontent. The Need for Educative Propaganda. The Futility and Danger of Premature Use of Force. The Role of the Middle Peasantry. The Inherent Vacillations of the Middle Peasantry. If Force is Bad, Inaction and Inertia are Worse. How Far the Class Constitution of Rural Society is Favourable to Radical Reforms.

CHAPTER X. The Practical Difficulties in the Abolition of Zamindari 176

The Need for Executive Strength. The Role of the Indian National Congress. The Short-Sightedness of the Agrarian Upper Classes in the Congress.

CHAPTER XI. Peasant Proprietorship and Ryotwari Land Tenure 182

The Universal Popularity of the Idea of Small Holdings. Advantages Claimed in Europe for this System. Arguments of the Indian Champions of Peasant Proprietorship. Advantages of Peasant Proprietorship are not For All Countries and At All Times. There is not Enough Land in India For the Success of Peasant Proprietorship. The Increase in Total Population. Provincial Figures of Man--Land Ratio. World's Highest Rural Density Records. Are Zamindari Estates Large Enough for Proper Redistribution of Land? The Advantages of Small Holdings Have No Meaning for Us in India. Dwarf Holdings Must Not be Mistaken for Small Farms. The Small and Dwarf Farms of Europe. Dwarf Farms can be Harbingers of Communism. The Causes of the Success and Failure of Peasant Farming Abroad. The Tendency to Ignore the Question of Uneconomic Holdings. The Supporters of Ryotwari Tenure and Peasant Proprietorship Have No Final Solution for Uneconomic Holdings. Peasant Proprietorship Encourages Sub-Division of Land. Why Consolidation of Holdings is No Real Solution. The Supporters of Peasant Proprietorship Are Not Very Logical. Peasant Proprietorship is No Solution For Fighting the Evils of Landlordism. Law Cannot Prevent the Evils of Rural Landlordism if it Continues to Protect Private Property in Land. Hidden Forms of Tenancy. Attitude of Willing To Wound but Afraid To Kill the Evil of Non-Cultivating Owners. The Support of Peasant Farming is More Sentimental than Scientific. Peasant Proprietorship As Salvation of Rural Labour. Peasant Proprietorship and Decentralisation. Peasant Proprietorship and Democratic Liberty. Peasant Proprietorship as the Means to to Self-Sufficiency.

CHAPTER XII. Peasant-Proprietorship and Ryotwari Land Tenure (Continued). 215

Prospects of a Check to Population Growth. Prospects of Cultivation of More Land. Prospects of Increase in Productivity per Acre. Low Productivity and Capitalisation of Small Farms. High Capitalisation and Accumulation of Farm Capital On Small Farms Depends On Animal Husbandry and Abundance on Land. Absurdity of the Belief that small Farming in India is Good For Intensive Production and Soil Fertility. The Necessity to Grasp the Implications of the Opinion of Mr. B. Seebohm Rowntree and Professor Marshall. Small Farming is the Enemy of Our National Goal of More Production. Where Population cannot be Reduced Production Must be Increased. The Real Solution Of Our Problem. The Question of Industrialisation.

CHAPTER XIII. Co-operative Farming and its Meaning and Possibilities 234

We Are Not Sure of What Exactly We Want. The Ideological Mutilation of Economic Concepts. Ambiguity About Co-operative Farming. The Essence of Co-operative Farming. 'Acceptance in Theory and Rejection in Practice. The Fundamentals of A Clear Policy. The Problem of the Farmer's Independence: Why Co-operative Theory Has to Move With the Times. Why Private Property and Competition Prevent the Progress of Co-operation in India. The Importance of State-Help Rather Than Individual Self-Interest in Co-operative Production. "Pure" Co-operation Follows Not Precedes State-Help. Extreme Poverty Requires State-Help More Than Co-operation. The Conflict About Voluntary and Compulsory Co-operation. Revolutionary Means For Evolutionary Ends.

CHAPTER XIV. Some Philosophic and Practical Aspects of Collectivisation. 254

The Unpractical Bias Against Collectivisation. The
