“There was once a fairy who was so clever that she found out how to make butterflies. I don’t mean sham ones, no ; but real live ones, which would fly, and eat, and lay eggs, and do everything that they ought ; and she was so proud of her skill that she went flying straight off to the North Pole, to boast to Mother Carey how she could make butterflies. But Mother Carey laughed.

“‘Know, silly child,’ she said, ‘that anyone can make things, if they will take time and trouble enough ; but it is not every one who, like me, can make things make themselves.’” — The Water Babies.
