THE author is much indebted to his fellow-townsmen, Mr. H. Kemball-Cook, M.A., who has been good enough to go through the MS. of the following pages. Mr. Kemball-Cook's wide knowledge, experience, and literary taste have been the means of weeding out some of the ranker growths among the author's tares of style.

The whole of this book was written during General Smuts' absence in East Africa. For its political complexion, the facts selected, and treatment of the subject generally, the author is solely responsible.
