COMRADES IN ARMS

An Indian Soldier defending a wounded British Comrade

PREFACE

I have read with great pleasure Comrades in Arms and am very pleased to contribute to it a few lines by way of preface.

The deeds of the Indian Army, both in past campaigns and in the present great struggle, are too well-known to need eulogy from me. The record which may be read in the pages that follow is one of glory and self-sacrifice, and present and future soldiers will find in it a source of pride.

The soldiers of India have in many a hard-fought fight stood shoulder to shoulder with their brother soldiers of other parts of the Empire—hence the title “Comrades in Arms” is most apposite.

May the history of their deeds, so vividly depicted by the authors of this little work, encourage others of the Empire to emulate their endurance and valour.

C. C. MONRO,

General,

Commander-in-Chief in India.
